HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, January 4, 1973

FIRST SESSION—TWENTY-NINTH PARLIAMENT

The twenty-eighth parliament having been prorogued and dissolved by proclamation on the first day of September, 1972, and writs having been issued and returned, a new parliament was summoned to meet for the dispatch of business on Thursday, January 4, 1973, and did accordingly meet on that day.

Thursday, January 4, 1973

This being the day upon which parliament is convoked by proclamation of His Excellency the Governor General for the dispatch of business, and the members of the House being assembled:

Alistair Fraser, Esquire, the Clerk of the House, read to the House a letter from the administrative secretary to the Governor General informing him that the Right Honourable Gérald Fauteux, Chief Justice of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, would proceed to the Senate chamber to open the first session of the twenty-ninth parliament of Canada on Thursday, the fourth day of January, at ten thirty o'clock.

A message was delivered by Major A. G. Vandelac, gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Members of the House of Commons:

It is the desire of the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General that this honourable House attend him immediately in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, the House went up to the Senate chamber, when the Speaker of the Senate said:

Honourable Members of the Senate, and Members of the House of Commons:

I have it in command to let you know that His Excellency the Governor General does not see fit to declare the causes of his summoning the present parliament of Canada until the Speaker of the House of Commons shall have been chosen according to law, but this afternoon, at the hour of three o'clock, His Excellency will declare the cause of calling this parliament.

• (1040)

And the House being returned to the Commons chamber:

ELECTION OF SPEAKER

MR. LUCIEN LAMOUREUX, MEMBER FOR THE ELECTORAL DISTRICT OF STORMONT-DUNDAS

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Fraser, no more important task will be undertaken by hon. members throughout the life of this parliament than that which is now before us. The wise choice of a wise Speaker will be reflected in every activity of this institution in the days and weeks—assuming there are weeks—ahead.

The Speaker of the House of Commons is the only one of our number who can claim our attention as of right. That the nominee for this position can claim as well our respect in his own right is an indication of the high standard with which he discharged his onerous functions in previous parliaments. It also reveals the personal warmth and affection which he has generated as an understanding member of this very human place.

[Translation]

The hon. member for Stormont-Dundas, the Hon. Lucien Lamoureux, has been regarded for several years both by those who have sat before him and those who have observed him from the several galleries, or have met him at the head of our parliamentary delegations abroad as embodying all the necessary qualities of an outstanding Speaker: an encyclopedic knowledge of practise and precedent, a mastery of our official languages, the skills of a parliamentarian and a chairman. Because he embodies as well those other, desirable qualities of a sense of humour, an understanding of human nature, and the dignity so becoming to one in that office, he has long since proved that he is a great Speaker, in the view of many the greatest since Confederation. It is our immense good fortune to serve in a House over which he will preside.

[English]

The career of Mr. Lamoureux has been one of service to the public. His association with parliament was a distinguished one even before he became Speaker of the House of Commons. He was first elected in 1962 and has been re-elected in each succeeding election: in 1963, 1965, 1968 and 1972. He was Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Committees of the Whole in the 26th parliament before serving as Speaker of this chamber in each of the 27th and 28th parliaments. The independence which he properly displays within this House has extended outside as well. In each of 1968 and 1972 Mr. Lamoureux chose to stand for re-election as an independent candidate, a decision that I welcomed and respected.

The proper and effective conduct of the business of this House, especially in a period when the flexibility of the parliamentary system will be tested and, I sincerely hope, demonstrated, will depend on a number of factors. Of them all, the one in which none of us have the slightest doubt is the impartiality and wise experience of the man I am proposing to this House for election as Speaker.

[Translation]

I take great pleasure in moving, seconded by the hon. the Leader of the Opposition, that the Hon. Lucien Lamoureux, member for the electoral district of Stormont-Dundas, do take the Chair of this House as Speaker.

• (1050)

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Fraser, everybody seems happy today. This is the second time I have had the privilege of seconding the nomination of the hon. member for Stormont-Dundas to the high office of Speaker. I said in 1968 that the choice was a happy one, and I repeat that the choice of the hon. member for Stormont-Dundas to be Speaker of the House of Commons is a very happy choice.

As the Prime Minister has reminded us, I think it was seven years ago less two weeks, on January 18, 1966, that the hon. member was first elected as Speaker after serving for three years as Deputy Speaker. The Leader of the Opposition at that time, my distinguished colleague, the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), noted that as Deputy Speaker Mr. Lamoureux, had "discharged his responsibilities with tact, with wisdom, with humour, and above all with a sense of impartiality to which I am very happy to pay my tribute." Those words of the right hon. member for Prince Albert were true then and they certainly remain true today. Throughout long and sometimes difficult sessions the hon. member for Stormont-Dundas has displayed in the Chair qualities that we have all grown to respect and admire.

[Translation]

The duties of the Speaker of this House are difficult and essential. He must be an impartial referee of the debates in this House. He is also the protector of the rights and privileges of hon. members and more so of parliament itself. For all these reasons, the Speaker of the House has to be a dedicated man, a man respectful of parliamentary traditions, a man devoted to freedom.

[English]

I would not want this occasion to pass without reiterating my very strong feeling that this House needs and deserves a permanent Speaker. I have urged this before and I shall certainly be doing so again. It is my profound conviction that Mr. Lamoureux will exercise his judgment and his independence of mind just as he has in the past during the very interesting conditions which we will be facing here, particularly during the next few weeks. So, Sir, it is a great pleasure and honour to second the nomination by the right hon. Prime Minister.

[Translation]

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Fraser, on behalf of all my colleagues and myself, it is a real pleasure for me to second the nomination of Mr. Lucien Lamoureux as Speaker of the House.

[English]

Mr. Fraser, every time I hear praises sung for a person who is still with us I sympathize with him in the discomfort which he must feel. I merely want to say that all of us in the New Democratic Party have learned not only to admire and respect the way in which Mr. Lamoureux has presided over this chamber but have learned to have a very deep affection for him and for his very charming wife, particularly for the way both of them have lent dignity, humour and decency not only to events in this chamber but also in their functions as heads of the House of Commons outside the chamber.

It seems to me, Mr. Fraser, that Mr. Lamoureux can approach his job in this parliament with an ease of mind. This parliament is bound to be well behaved. There will not be any wrangling. There will not be any attempt to play politics.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: Every member of the House will see to it that the functions of this parliament are carried on with an ease that will make the life of the Speaker even more pleasant, I hope, than it was during the last two parliaments. We welcome the nomination, and with pleasure and deep admiration look forward to the presidence of Mr. Lamoureux over this chamber.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Fraser, my colleagues and myself take great pleasure in joining the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) as well as the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis), to approve the suggestion that the Hon. Lucien Lamoureux be re-elected as Speaker of this House.

You will notice, Mr. Fraser, that since the last session we have moved in this House. Indeed, we are getting closer and closer to the power.

Of course, it is primarily important that our Speaker be very qualfied, and we all know that the Hon. Lucien Lamoureux has always been so. Without reducing in any way the value of previous Speakers I knew in this House, that is about six of them at least, I believe that the hon. Lucien Lamoureux is probably the most qualified one to reach agreements and listen to the claims of hon. members of any party.

If it is advisable to recall a minister to order, the Speaker does not hesitate to do so and this with great impartiality. The Speaker's job is not easy: he must try to do justice to all hon. members but Mr. Lamoureux has always managed to do so with remarkable tact. Of course there were controversies because we are all humans, not angles, no more so than the Speaker himself. Yet agreement and understanding are always possible and I think that the Speaker in the House, resorting to humour or a little rigidity depending upon the moment's needs, has rendered wonderful services to the House, this Canadian democratic institution which enables hon. members to express their electors' will.

Mr. Fraser, we are very pleased to second the right hon. Prime Minister's proposal that the Hon. Lucien Lamoureux be again appointed Speaker of the House of Commons.

[English]

The Clerk of the House declared the motion carried in the affirmative, nemine contradicente, and Lucien Lamoureux, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Stormont-Dundas, duly elected to the Chair of the House.

Mr. Lamoureux was conducted from his seat in the House to the Speaker's chair by Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau and Hon. Robert L. Stanfield.

• (1100)

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members, I beg to return my humble acknowledgements to the House for the great honour you have been pleased to confer on me by choosing me to be your Speaker.

Humbly and very sincerely, may I thank the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), and the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) for their all too kind words. I am grateful also to the members of the House for their generosity in supporting the motion for my appointment to the high office of Speaker of this House.

Even in the best of circumstances the role of Speaker, though rewarding, of course, can also be very challenging. Most will agree that, from the Speaker's standpoint at least, the present situation can hardly be described as the best of circumstances. More than ever, therefore, the Speaker and those who share with him the responsibility of the office will have to rely upon the good will and co-operation of hon. members. Indeed, the work of the House will proceed with order and reasonable dispatch to the extent only that members endorse the rules of procedure and accept the usages, practices, customs and traditions of parliament as interpreted by the presiding officers elected for this very purpose by the House itself.

To deserve that co-operation from the members, the Speaker must certainly discharge his responsibilities, upholding parliamentary tradition with strict fair-mindedness. The members cannot expect less from those to whom they entrust the conduct of our proceedings. I hope that under all circumstances, it will be possible for me to justify the confidence of my colleagues. At all times, they may rely on my good faith and good will.

I again thank the House for the great honour bestowed upon me. It is an honour which I share not only with my wife and my family, but with all my constituents of Stormont-Dundas which I proudly represent in this parliament.

[English]

Again, with humility, I thank hon. members and wish them well in the dispatch of their reponsibilities in the House and in their endeavours on behalf of their constituents and the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SITTING SUSPENDED

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that this sitting be suspended until three o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion made by the right hon. the Prime Minister. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: This House stands suspended until three o'clock this afternoon.

At 11.08 a.m. the sitting was suspended until 3 p.m. this day.

Opening of Session

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at three o'clock.

OPENING OF THE SESSION

Mr. Speaker read a communication from the Governor General's secretary announcing that His Excellency the Governor General would proceed to the Senate chamber at three o'clock on this day, for the purpose of formally opening the session of the dominion parliament.

A message was delivered by Major A. G. Vandelac, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, it is the pleasure of His Excellency the Governor General that this honourable House attend him immediately in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber. Then the Hon. Lucien Lamoureux, Speaker of the House of Commons, said:

May it please Your Excellency,

The House of Commons have elected me their Speaker, though I am but little able to fulfil the important duties thus assigned to me.

If in the performance of those duties I should at any time fall into error, I pray that the fault may be imputed to me, and not to the Commons, whose servant I am, and who, through me, the better to enable them to discharge their duty to their Queen and country, humbly claim all their undoubted rights and privileges, especially that they may have freedom of speech in their debates, access to Your Excellency's person at all seasonable times, and that their proceedings may receive from Your Excellency the most favourable construction.

The Honourable the Speaker of the Senate, addressing the Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons, then said:

Mr. Speaker, I am commanded by His Excellency the Governor General to declare to you that he freely confides in the duty and attachment of the House of Commons to Her Majesty's person and government, and not doubting that their proceedings will be conducted with wisdom, temper and prudence, he grants and upon all occasions will recognize and allow their constitutional privileges.

I am commanded also to assure you that the Commons shall have ready access to His Excellency upon all seasonable occasions, and that their proceedings, as well as your words and actions, will constantly receive from him the most favourable construction.

Then His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to open parliament by a speech from the throne.

And the House being returned to the Commons Chamber:

• (1610)

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to report that, the House having attended on His Excellency the Governor General in the Senate Chamber, I informed His Excellency that the choice of Speaker had fallen upon me, and in your names, and on your behalf, I made the usual claim for your privileges, which His Excellency was pleased to confirm to you.

OATHS OF OFFICE

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-1, respecting the administration of oaths of office.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

• (1620)

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that when the House did attend his Excellency the Governor General this day in the Senate chamber, His Excellency was pleased to make a speech to both Houses of parliament. To prevent mistakes, I have obtained a copy which is as follows:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I have the honour to welcome you to the First Session of the 29th Parliament of Canada, with a special word of greeting to those who are entering for the first time upon their important duties as legislators.

The New Year promises much of special interest to all of you, in common with other Canadians. Her Majesty The Queen and His Royal Highness The Duke of Edinburgh will visit Canada twice. In late June and early July they will take part in celebrations marking the Centenary of the entry of Prince Edward Island into the Canadian Confederation, the Tercentenary of the City of Kingston, founded in 1673 by Le Comte de Frontenac, and the 100th anniversary of the founding of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I speak for Canadians generally when I say how pleased we shall all be to have Her Majesty and His Royal Highness with us for these national celebrations.

In August Canadians will again welcome Her Majesty, not only as their Queen but in her role as Head of the Commonwealth. She and the Duke of Edinburgh will be present in Ottawa for the Meeting of the Heads of Government of the Commonwealth. The Government, which will be host for the first time for these periodic meetings, attaches much importance to the Commonwealth and its common traditions, institutions and language. In this connection I note that not two years have passed since Canada was host to a Conference of l'Agence de Coopération culturelle et technique which brought together representatives of many countries of French expression. These two successive events illustrate the richness of Canada's linguistic duality and the special world associations that we derive from it.

Multilateral Preparatory Talks for the long-awaited Conference on European Security and Co-operation are now under way. Canada has urged that the main conference, to which Canada will be a party, give due weight to the questions of freedom of movement of people, of trade, of information and of technology between East and West.

Separate from the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, but closely connected with it, the second round of the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks between the United States and the Soviet Union is now under way, and talks on Mutual and Balanced Force Reductions between the nations of the North Atlantic Alliance and the Warsaw Pact are projected.

As one of the world's great trading nations Canada is sensitive to every development in world trading patterns and world monetary arrangements. The Government is participating actively in the Committee of Twenty established for the reform of the International Monetary System. For three years now the Government has been pressing upon the nations of the enlarged European Common Market the need to be outward-looking and is actively engaged in consultations aimed at strengthening trade and other relationships between Canada and the Common Market. This was a principal subject of discussion when the Prime Minister visited the Prime Minister of Britain last month. The Government has just announced the appointment of an ambassador solely accredited to the European Economic Communities.

As we set about strengthening our long-established economic, cultural and political ties with Europe we do not lose sight of our closest ally and our primary market beyond our borders, the United States. The Government will continue its discussions with the United States to settle certain difficulties that have arisen in our trading arrangements with that country, and to maintain and expand our trading opportunities there.

Access to foreign markets for exporters will receive particular emphasis. A new round of multilateral trade negotiations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade is planned for the fall of 1973. The Government will participate vigorously in these negotiations.

At home, the Government remains fully committed to two pre-eminent goals, national unity and equality of opportunity for all Canadians.

In pursuit of these goals, the Government assigns the highest priority to two policy areas:

—economic policy, to reduce unemployment, contain inflation and strengthen the economy generally —social policy, to bring about, in consultation with the Provinces, a re-organization of existing social security programs.

In the area of economic policy, the Government has four main objectives:

First, to expand job opportunities at a rate that will bring about as rapid as possible a decline in the numbers of unemployed
Second, to promote stable economic growth at a rate that will sustain rising standards of living for all our citizens and provide for more satisfactory realization of the potential of the economy
Third, to attain reasonable price stability
Fourth, to ensure that all regions of the country benefit from the prosperity brought about by the expanding economy.

To attain its economic objectives, the Government has set in motion a two-part program.

The first part consists of measures to provide more jobs immediately by strengthening and broadening existing programs. These measures have been announced and are already taking effect:

—increased funding for the Local Initiatives Program —increased funding for on the job training
—a substantial seasonal capital works project to be undertaken in co-operation with the Provinces and municipalities
—special funding to increase direct employment by the Federal Government in labour-intensive projects.

The second part consists of measures that will add to the fundamental strength of the economy, can be acted upon this session and can be expected to have effect with a minimum of delay:

—amendments to the Income Tax Act, the Excise Tax Act and the Customs Tariff, reintroducing measures announced earlier
—major revision of the General Adjustment Assistance Plan, to enable industry to take advantage of opportunities for increasing our foreign trade —aid to small businesses through new initiatives to strengthen management and consulting services and to improve access to financing facilities
—extension and improvement of the Industrial Development Bank
—measures to assist in the development of the tourist industry in Canada
—amendments to the Export Development Act, increasing the capital of the Export Development Corporation and raising the financial ceilings for lending, guarantees, export insurance and foreign insurance operations —assistance to cooperatives and credit unions —renewed measures to reduce deeply-entrenched regional economic disparities. The Department of Regional Economic Expansion will be decentralized to a greater degree to be in a better position to identify opportunities for economic development —review of research and development incentive programs to improve their effectiveness in promoting innovation in the private sector of the economy, including examination of patenting, licensing and other policies related to technology
—measures to ensure further control by Canadians over their economy by the screening of foreign takeovers of Canadian-owned business; measures respecting the transfer of technology from abroad and access to it by Canadian entrepreneurs; measures to increase Canadian participation in the ownership and control of resource projects; and, in consultation with the Provinces, measures dealing with new direct foreign investment and the sale of land to foreigners
—measures that will restructure the Canada Corporations Act, including a requirement that a majority of directors of federally incorporated companies be Canadians
—the Government will meet with the provincial governments in the five regions of the country, to examine the impact of freight rates on economic development and consumer prices. The railways have agreed to participate in these meetings.

Taken together these measures will contribute to the development and elaboration of a coherent set of industrial policies for Canada.

In the area of social policy, the Government considers that Canada's total social security system—including both federal and provincial elements—must be reconsidered and reorganized, and made more sensitive to the needs of people in different parts of the country.

The Government intends that this reorganization should be based on five principles which, taken together, comprise a statement of the Government's commitment in respect of social security.

First, the social security system must assure to people who cannot work, the aged, the blind and the disabled, a compassionate and equitable guaranteed annual income.

Second, the social security system as it applies to people who can work must contain incentives to work and a greater emphasis on the need to get people who are on social aid back to work.

Third, a fair and just relationship must be maintained between the incomes of people who are working at or near the minimum wage, the guaranteed incomes assured to people who cannot work, and the allowances paid to those who can work but are unemployed.

Fourth, it must be recognized that Provinces may wish to have the structures of social security vary in accordance with the social needs, income standards and the cost of living in different communities.

Finally, it must be accepted that the reconsideration of Canada's social security system must be conducted jointly by the Federal Government and the Provinces. A better social security system can only be realized if a reasonable consensus can be reached between the Governments of Canada and the Provinces. To this end, the Government will invite provincial representatives to a conference of welfare ministers in April.

Certain immediate steps will be taken by the Government, consistent with the principles proposed above. In respect of people who can work but are temporarily unemployed, legislation will be introduced to clarify certain aspects of the Unemployment Insurance Plan and to prevent abuses that have not been overcome by the administrative action already taken.

A fair and equitable regime of family allowances is fundamental to an efficient social security system. A new family income security program will be proposed that will particularly take into account the needs of the lower income families. Legislation will be introduced to improve the economic situation of old age pensioners.

Subject to the appropriate agreement being reached with the Provinces, changes to improve the Canada Pension Plan will be introduced to provide higher pensions for widows, widows with dependent children and the disabled and to make other needed amendments.

In another area of social policy, the field of housing and urban development, the Government proposes the following action, in co-operation with the Provinces:

—assistance in the provision of low-cost housing and other accommodation for senior citizens
—home-ownership assistance to low and moderate income families
—new incentives for housing provided by co-operatives and non-profit corporations —assistance in the rehabilitation of older neighbourhoods
—a land assembly program to assist in the creation of new communities and to check urban sprawl —encouragement to investors to make more money available to meet housing needs —a warranty system to protect the purchasers of new houses —assistance in the relocation of railway tracks and other facilities
—study of the Government's responsibilities with regard to urban transportation generally.

In response to the increasing importance of fitness for the well-being and health of Canadians and the need for greater opportunities for people to participate in sports activities, it is proposed over the next three fiscal years to more than double the current level of expenditures under the Fitness and Amateur Sport Program. Plans for a greatly expanded and a strengthened program will be announced.

Inflation is a world-wide problem. The Government is determined to contain inflation in Canada to protect the purchasing power of the Canadian dollar in the hands of the Canadian people and to protect Canada's position in world trade. While food prices in Canada have steadied slightly in the last month or so, the Government is concerned about possible future effects of the world-wide trend toward higher food prices and will propose the setting up of a Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons to make a special study of this problem.

Efficient communications between all parts of the country are essential to the unity and prosperity of Canada. Technological developments can have a pervasive effect on the social and economic well-being of all Canadians. The Government will, in the near future, submit to Parliament proposals for a national communications policy, and for resolving problems arising from the growing interaction between broadcasting and other forms of telecommunication, giving due weight to the interests and concerns of the Provinces.

The Government will introduce legislation establishing a competition policy to preserve and strengthen the market system upon which our economy is based. The new policy will be in harmony with industrial policies in general and foreign investment policy in particular.

World-wide demand for our agricultural products is strong, in particular for our wheat and other grains. The Government will concentrate its attention upon transportation, storage and handling problems to ensure efficient and timely movement and delivery of grain and other agricultural products.

You will be asked to amend the Crop Insurance Act to allow the Government to reimburse the Provinces to a maximum of fifty percent of premiums paid under contracts of insurance, thereby reducing costs of insurance to individual farmers.

The Government supports the principle of an equitable relationship of prices of feed grain to livestock feeders in various areas of Canada. It is the intention of the Government to implement before the next crop year, procedures that will ensure the optimum development of the feed grain and livestock industries within Canada.

Measures to protect the natural environment and to enhance the productivity of Canada's renewable resource industries will be laid before you. In addition to amendments to the Fisheries Development Act, you will be asked to consider an Environmental Contaminants Act and a Canada Wildlife Act.

To preserve the ecological integrity of Canada's coastal and maritime areas, further preparations will be made for the Third United Nations Law of the Sea Conference. The Ministry of State for Science and Technology, in co-operation with the Department of the Environment and other interested departments, will recommend a national program of research and development in the field of Marine Science and Technology.

The Government will continue its efforts through national, bilateral and multilateral measures to overcome the continuing menace posed by aerial hijacking. In particular, you will be asked to amend the Aeronautics Act to provide for strict security measures to be taken at airports, including the search of persons and property.

You will be asked to consider legislation amending the Immigration Act, to curb abuses including the exploitation of the provisions allowing visitors to apply for immigrant status while in Canada. You will also be asked to amend the Immigration Appeal Board Act to provide for the rapid and equitable disposition of outstanding immigration appeals and prevent the recurrence of large-scale appeal backlogs.

The growing complexity of our society calls for increasing coordination of federal and provincial government programs. The Prime Minister will propose a meeting in the spring with the provincial First Ministers to plan further steps in the harmonization of goals, policies and programs for the benefit of all Canadians, particularly in fields that bear on the responsibilities of both levels of government.

Federal-provincial meetings at the ministerial level are also projected on a range of urgent matters, including:

—financial and economic policy
—the Report of the Economic Council of Canada —health care programs
—post-secondary education
—housing
—restrictions upon foreign ownership of land —income security
—industrial policy.

The Government will propose to the Governments of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba that they join with it in the convening of a conference on western economic opportunities. Such a conference would be a unique venture in the history of federal-provincial relations in Canada. It could be jointly planned, and held in the West in the course of the summer. Its purpose would be to explore potentials for economic and social development and, specifically, to consider concrete programs for stimulating and broadening the economic and industrial base of western Canada.

Among such concrete programs, the Government would propose for discussion the possible establishment of new regionally-based financial institutions better able to serve the financing needs of business enterprise and industrial development in western Canada.

A second suggestion for joint study would be improvement in the total transportation system, so basic to overcoming the problems of distance: in the region, from other parts of Canada and from ocean ports. The development needs of the northern frontier areas in all four Provinces could also be explored.

The Government recognizes that western Canadians wish to build industrial strength on top of their region's great resource and energy base. As the whole economy continues to grow a greater measure of decentralization of industrial activity will be necessary to achieve this desired regional objective.

The Government believes these and other issues would rank high on an agenda for western development. It would seek as well views and suggestions with regard to the continuing mechanisms for federal-provincial consultations on policies for western expansion, within an over-all framework of national growth.

The Government intends to widen the area of service to Canada open to personnel in the Canadian Armed Forces. In addition to maintaining a high degree of military capability as the primary and most essential role of the Forces, new emphasis will be placed on the many areas in which the varied skills and training of this large number of dedicated Canadians can contribute to the achievement of national goals.

You will be asked to amend the Public Service Staff Relations Act and the Public Service Employment Act.

Parliament will be asked to confirm the basic principles of the Government's program for bilingualism in the Public Service.

The Government will continue to work in furtherance of the objectives of the Official Languages Act. Further assistance will be offered to the Provinces to help ensure that to the extent possible:

—Canadians can educate their children in the official language of their choice —Canadian students can learn, as a second language, the other official language —Provincial governments can develop an increased capacity to serve their citizens in both official languages, as may be required.

The Government will continue to encourage through its multicultural policy the development of a society in which individuals and groups can develop and express their own cultural identity. An Advisory Council to the Minister of State responsible for multiculturalism will be established.

Measures will be introduced directed at reform of the penal and parole systems to improve prisoner rehabilitation and the protection of the public.

The five-year trial period in which imposition of the death penalty has been limited to cases involving the killing of policemen and prison guards has come to an end. You will be asked to decide, by a free vote and as a matter of urgency, upon the future of the death penalty in the Canadian law enforcement system.

Proposals dealing with conflicts of interest as they may affect Members of Parliament, Ministers of the Crown and Public Servants will be laid before you.

You will be asked to consider an Election Expenses Bill.

The Government will recommend to the House of Commons the broadcasting, by radio and television, of all or a part of its proceedings and the proceedings of its Committees.

You will be asked to consider other legislative proposals.

Members of the House of Commons,

The Government intends to present a budget early in the session. It is timely to provide to Parliament a full report on Canada's financial and economic situation, and to propose fiscal and other measures for the effective management of the economy.

You will be asked to appropriate the funds required to carry on the services and expenditures authorized by Parliament.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Honourable Members of the Senate,
Members of the House of Commons,
May Divine Providence guide you in your deliberations.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister) moved:

That the speech of His Excellency the Governor General delivered this day from the throne to the two houses of parliament, be taken into consideration at the next sitting of the house.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I rise to raise a matter in relation to the traditional motion which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has just placed before the House. The debate on the Speech from the Throne, sir, is obviously important, particularly in this parliament. However, in the past few weeks the conscience of the world has been shocked by the resumption of the bombing of North Viet Nam by United States forces.

It is in this connection, Sir, that I wish to suggest to the Prime Minister, through you, that the first order of business tomorrow, before the mover and seconder of his motion speak, should be the presentation and adoption of a resolution on the Viet Nam situation. I would hope that the Prime Minister himself, or the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), would present it to the House. I offer him the full co-operation of this party in expediting the adoption of such a resolution with the least possible debate. I am encouraged to make this suggestion by news reports that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has expressed the hope or intention that an appropriate resolution may come before parliament.

We believe, Mr. Speaker, as we said in a statement yesterday, that it is the duty of this parliament, at the earliest possible moment to express its abhorrence of the destruction already produced and to appeal to the President and Congress of the United States to end unconditionally all bombing in North and South Viet Nam, to sign the treaty negotiated last fall and to bring an end to all military action on both sides. I urge, Mr. Speaker, that precisely because of our country's long-standing friendship with the United States we have a duty to speak out. The recent bombing was barbaric in its severity and in its inhuman destruction of heavily populated urban centres in Viet Nam. I suggest that this parliament cannot in conscience ignore the misery and destruction to which the Vietnamese people have been subjected.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I draw the attention of members of this House to the fact that last fall the hopes of the world for peace in Indo-China were raised and then were brutally shattered by the bombing. I urge on behalf of my colleagues and myself that we add the voice of this parliament to those of the many nations, and indeed to the voices of the growing numbers in the Congress as well as among the people of the United States itself, in a demand that the senseless and cruel war in Indo-China be brought to an end immediately.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the government, of course, is aware of the very deep importance of this question and has already made its views known to some of the people at various levels engaged in the peace negotiations. It is the intention of the government to have this matter debated in the House and, indeed, a motion has been presented on behalf of the government by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), notice of which has already been given to the table. We, of course, are very agreeable that this motion be debated at a time found opportune by all parties in this House. Our suggestion, Mr. Speaker, would be that this matter could be discussed between the House leaders of the various parties. It would seem that we might make progress on both fronts if we could, for instance, proceed tomorrow with the speeches by the mover and seconder and subsequently, later in the day, proceed with the discussion on this motion if the House wants to give its consent. I repeat, we have already given notice to the table but the usual rules would apply unless there were consent to proceed at once.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire whether we could see a copy of the motion to which the Prime Minister has referred today, although it may not be printed, so that our House leaders may try to assist in the expedition of the discussion of that motion. It really makes no difference to us whether it is before or after the mover and seconder to the address have spoken.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Before I call on the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), who I see wants to rise on this matter, perhaps I could advise the hon. member for York South that it would be quite easy to have copies made of the said notice and have them distributed through the usual distribution service of the House of Commons later today.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say that we would like to look at the motion and review our position in light of this apparently well prepared and well orchestrated duet to which we have listened today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The motion has been put to the House. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Carried.

Motion agreed to.

The Late Right Hon. L. B. Pearson

[English]

THE LATE RIGHT HON. LESTER BOWLES PEARSON

TRIBUTES TO FORMER PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, within the past week Canadians and millions of persons around the world were grieved by the death of the Right Honourable Lester B. Pearson. It is my sad duty today to pay tribute to his memory and to a remarkable lifetime of service. Part of that life was devoted to a distinguished career in this House, as the member for Algoma East from 1948 to 1968, contesting in that period eight separate elections, as Secretary of State for External Affairs, as Leader of the Opposition and as Prime Minister. In this place he was the initiator and guide of many measures that have contributed to the strength and purpose of Canada—our flag, some of our most outstanding social legislation, the recognition in various ways of the diversity of Canada and of the historic rights of its peoples.

[Translation]

The great prestige Mr. Pearson had earned for himself was due, in great part, to his activities on the international scene. But it was in his own country that he found his deepest concern as well as his most genuine commitment. To the fulfillment of national unity, he devoted most of his energies. He worked steadfastly for the creation of real ties between federal and provincial governments and to that end he opened, in 1968, the Conference on the Constitution and emphasized the partnership existing between our two great language communities through the establishment of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism and legislation following its recommendations.

[English]

In the world beyond our borders he worked increasingly for an international community which respected the rights of the smaller countries, of the less developed countries, of the individual. His energy and skill and imagination in the quest for peace brought him many honours, among them the Nobel Peace prize and Her Majesty the Queen's Order of Merit.

• (1630)

Mr. Pearson's effectiveness in the institution of Parliament and in world councils was largely the result of the same human qualities which endeared him to all who were fortunate enough to make his acquaintance, the qualities of humility, of friendliness, of humour. These attributes made him at once a figure inspiring both attention and affection. Those of us who had the privilege to serve in his ministry will forever remain indebted to him for the increased love of Canada and Canadians which he cultivated in us.

The Nobel Prize citation described Mike Pearson—the statesman, the diplomat, the man—as one who had a "strong faith in the final victory of the good forces of life". There can be no finer tribute to a man whose loss makes Canada and the world a poorer place. To Mr. Pearson's family I offer, on behalf of us all, our sincere condolences.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to associate myself with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in paying tribute to the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson, a very distinguished son of Canada. Many tributes have been paid to Mr. Pearson with respect to his contribution to this country and many tributes have been paid to him abroad. He was a man who inspired human warmth and affection in those who knew him, whether they agreed with him politically or found themselves in opposition to him. He was a warmhearted man. I know that hundreds and hundreds of tributes have been paid to him, and they have truly come from the heart.

He had many accomplishments, but I like to think of his principal accomplishments, his principal efforts, as attempts at bringing people together. He understood and respected the differences in people and the different attitudes of various people. I believe Mr. Pearson wanted others in Canada and in the world to understand and respect the differences in other people and, understanding the differences in others, work them out or, failing that, live together and respect other people's differences.

[Translation]

To him, Canada was a country to love and to build. He worked sincerely and at great length for the cause of unity in this country.

[English]

As the Prime Minister said, all who worked with him and knew him liked and revered him. He was a man who spent his life in the service of his country and in the service of world peace. He spent it with zest and good humour. I am proud and pleased to associate myself and the party I have the honour to lead in the tribute paid to that great Canadian statesman, Mike Pearson. May I also, on my behalf and on behalf of my party, add my expressions of sympathy to Mrs. Pearson and the family.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, there is not much that one can add after the eloquent tributes which have just been paid. My colleagues and I would feel remiss in our duty if our appreciation of Mr. Pearson's life and work were not on the record. Mike Pearson was a world statesman and, as such, was mainly responsible for easing the Suez crisis in 1956 and for introducing the peacekeeping force in the Middle East. For those international activities he received, as everyone knows, the Nobel Prize.

I was always struck by the fact that his concern for peace and international understanding never ceased. He had the courage of his convictions. I recall in 1965, in a speech in the United States on the eve of talks with former President Johnson, he made an outspoken appeal for the cessation of air strikes against North Viet Nam, knowing, as was borne out by what eventually happened, that President Johnson would not appreciate his gesture very much.

No sooner had he given up his duties as prime minister of this country than he undertook a heavy international duty involving a study and a report in the realm of international economic aid to developing nations of the world. The report which was produced under his guidance will remain for long an important and inspiring guide to those concerned with this urgent international problem.

At home, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Pearson's two minority governments of 1963 and 1965 produced important social measures, the Canada Pension Plan, Medicare and the Canada Assistance Plan. Also, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) indicated, it was during his regime that we witnessed the debate on—and it was not always a happy debate—the acceptance of a distinctive Canadian flag.

[Translation]

Mr. Pearson was well aware of the problem of national unity. It was he, an Anglophone Prime Minister, who introduced a policy of bilingualism within the public service, expressing the wish that the careers of employees be protected. He also proposed a review of the Canadian constitution in an effort to find answers to the problems that make federal-provincial relations difficult and bitter. He sought to achieve within Canada the peace and co-operation which were his objectives in the international field.

I remember that in his inaugural speech on the occasion of the First Constitutional Conference in 1968 Mr. Pearson stated:

> Everything that is possible in the world is possible here.

He recognized Canada's immense wealth and the possibility for the people of Canada to achieve social justice and equality for all, given the required courage and imagination. He had confidence in Canada and the Canadian people, and was proud of them.

[English]

Yet it is really as a man, as a human being, that I will best remember Mr. Pearson. I will remember him, as many Canadians will, for his personal qualities of warmth, humanity, deep compassion, and for that humility which is rare in men who wield great power. I always believed that under his easy going exterior there was firm resolve and great courage. I am confident that the history of Canada will record Lester B. Pearson as one of the great prime ministers and leaders of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I wish to join the members from the other parties and extend to Mrs. Pearson and her family our deepest sympathy on the occasion of Mr. Pearson's passing.

I have known Mr. Pearson as far back as 1946, under the administration of the late Right Honourable Mackenzie King, a little later under that of the Right Honourable Louis St. Laurent and still later when he moved into politics. He always was as we have all known him: a great Canadian, a man having at heart his country's interests and working with all his energy towards peace between nations.

In addition to his efforts aimed at reconciling conflicting views between nations, Mr. Pearson has given Canada the best of himself. Before being a politician he was a diplomat, a man of peace forever advocating good will. Even in this House, Mr. Pearson has always been a smiling, kind and available man.

And I would like to add in English:

• (1640)

[English]

Mr. Pearson worked for national unity in Canada. He never said anything in the west against the east or in the east against the west. He always tried to convince the Canadian people, whether they spoke French, Ukrainian, Italian, English or any other language, that their first duty was to be genuine Canadians. Everyone admits the important and vast role played by Mr. Pearson while Prime Minister of this country and while working for peace in the whole world.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we wish to extend to Mrs. Pearson and her family our most sincere condolences. We have lost a true Canadian.

[English]

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words in tribute to Lester B. Pearson, especially on behalf of the people of Algoma East whom he represented in the House of Commons. He represented this constituency for some 20 years, from the fall of 1948 to the spring of 1968. Although he carried the responsibilities at various times during this period of Secretary of State for External Affairs, Leader of the Opposition and finally Prime Minister, he looked after the needs of his constituents well.

He came to Algoma East in 1948 as a professional in diplomacy but as an amateur in politics. He proved to be a capable politician as well by handily winning the Algoma riding and going on to the highest elected office in our land. However, it was his humility, compassion and personal interest in his constituents which won the hearts of the people of Algoma. This interest in people and their problems was extended to communities throughout Manitoulin Island and the North Shore area. When communities such as Elliot Lake faced serious economic problems, they were helped by Mr. Pearson. He took a personal interest, as well, in native people and their problems in the several Indian reserves located in the riding.

Mr. Pearson had a special interest in and appeal to young people. When he was Prime Minister he regularly sponsored several senior high school students to visit the nation's capital and to have dinner at 24 Sussex Drive. People of my generation who were in high school in the late 1940s and early 1950s were thrilled by his leadership internationally at the United Nations. He made us proud to be Canadians. I am told that of the thousands of people who visited the Hall of Honour last Saturday and Sunday to pay their last respects, at least one-third were young people. This is so fitting for a man who had such a special interest in youth.

I want to express the gratitude of the people of Algoma for his representation of us in this chamber for so many years. I wish to express our sympathy to Mrs. Pearson and the family.

When I was first elected to the House of Commons, many people told me that if I were to represent the constituency that Lester B. Pearson had represented, I would have big shoes to fill. I consider it a great honour to have walked where he walked. We mourn the passing of this great Canadian.

THE LATE HON. GEORGE DREW

TRIBUTES TO FORMER LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this day has been further saddened by the death just a few hours ago of the Hon. George Drew. His service to Canada and to parliament was so outstanding that all members would wish to join with me today in paying tribute to him. Mr. Drew came to this House from the legislature of Ontario where he had served as member and premier. He was first elected to parliament in 1948 and was re-elected in two subsequent elections. His record as leader of the opposition was an outstanding one for he brought to the debates in this chamber experience gained in a number of areas—as a soldier, as an author and as a barrister.

His public service career did not conclude with his resignation as leader of his party but was furthered during his term in office as Canadian High Commissioner in London and through his immense contribution to the Geneva Law of the Sea Conferences.

Mr. Drew's sense of honour and his devotion to Canada were matched only by the warmth of his personality and the courtesy which he exhibited in his relations with all who were fortunate enough to know him. His loss is a great one, and I extend condolences to his family.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I join the tribute to the Hon. George Drew who served our country with such distinction in peace and in war. He had a distinguished record in World War I and was invalided home.

Many of my generation who during the 1920s were boys first learned of George Drew in connection with his writings, in particular his book about Canada's fighting airmen. This created great pride in all of us for the skills and courage of Canadians, and did much to create pride among all Canadians in the accomplishments of these brave men.

George Drew was active in many aspects of public life. He was an alderman and mayor of his native city of Guelph. He became the leader of the Ontario Conservative Party and the premier of that province in a minority position in 1943. He moved into the leadership of a strong provincial government and entered federal politics in the fall of 1948, about the same time that Mr. Pearson entered this House as the member for Algoma East and Secretary of State for External Affairs. Mr. Drew was a vigorous man and a vigorous leader, a man of great energy, courage and devotion to duty. In fact, I think of him particularly in terms of courage and integrity.

If I may speak personally, Mr. Drew was a very kind friend to me. I became the party leader in the province of Nova Scotia a short time after Mr. Drew became the national leader of the Conservative party. He was a constant source of encouragement and good advice. I would like to pay tribute to his kindness and friendship to me.

[Mr. Foster.]

Because of distinguished service to his native city, his province and this country as a statesman, diplomat and soldier, I am pleased to associate myself with the tribute paid by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I join him, on behalf of my party, in extending sympathy to Mrs. Drew and the members of the family.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, it is a sad day when members of this House have to mourn the death of two leaders of Canada's major parties. I did not know Mr. Drew as well as I knew Mr. Pearson, but I did know him personally. No one who knew him could fail to be impressed by his great human kindness and friendship toward people. As the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has said, he had a great reputation for courage and integrity.

If my memory serves me correctly, Mr. Drew became premier of Ontario in 1943. I think he was mainly responsible for laying the foundation for the continuing success of the Conservative party in the province of Ontario to this date. Although I was not a Member of Parliament at the time, I remember reading the debates of this House in connection with the pipeline argument in 1956. I was impressed by his parliamentary expertise and his determination to fight what many people at the time thought was a dangerous undertaking of the then government.

On behalf of my colleagues and myself, I join the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Leader of the Opposition in extending condolences to Mrs. Drew and the family.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Drew's death has taken everybody by surprise, even if the former statesman was already hospitalized. Mr. Drew was a Canadian citizen whom I had the privilege to know during the years 1946, 1947 and 1948.

I first met him when he was the Ontario premier and then when he succeeded the Hon. John Bracken as Leader of the Opposition in 1948 under Mr. St. Laurent's government.

Mr. Drew, we must admit, lived up to his convictions. He was a true Canadian, but since he had the courage of his convictions, we did not always agree on certain points, nevertheless he had Canada's interests at heart and he wanted to see it develop and reach as soon as possible its present status.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and myself join with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the other members to extend to Mrs. Drew and his family our heart-felt sympathy.

• (1650)

[English]

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may say a word or two as the member for Wellington, the constituency in which the city of Guelph, the birthplace of the late Colonel George Drew, is situated. It is rather significant that we in North America should now be mourning the loss of three great contemporary men in the persons of Mr. Truman, Mr. Pearson and Mr. Drew who have passed away within the last two weeks.

Mr. Drew was born in Guelph. He received his education there and was one of the youngest mayors of that city. He will be greatly missed in Guelph, as he will be missed throughout the country, for the part he has played as a great Canadian. He was a great soldier, having joined the militia at the earliest possible age. I think he was 60 years in the militia and served as active and as honorary colonel of the 11th Field Regiment.

He was an author of renown and a diplomat of great repute, having been, as was stated earlier, Canadian High Commissioner to the United Kingdom. Therefore, on behalf of the people of the area, and in particular of the city of Guelph, I am pleased to add my words to those already spoken. I close simply by saying that the light he leaves behind will shine upon the paths of men.

INTERNAL ECONOMY COMMISSION

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister) presented the following message from His Excellency the Governor General:

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons a certified copy of an order in council appointing the Hon. Allan Joseph MacEachen, President of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, the Hon. Charles Mills Drury, President of the Treasury Board, the Hon. Jean Chrétien, Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and the Hon. Donald Stovel Macdonald, Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, to act with the Speaker of the House of Commons as commissioners for the purposes and under the provisions of chapter H-9 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, intituled: An act respecting the House of Commons.

STANDING COMMITTEES

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister) moved:

That, according to the provisions of Standing Order 65, a Striking Committee be appointed to prepare and report list of members to compose the standing committees of this house and that such committee be composed of Messrs. Baldwin, Bell, Fortin, Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre), Lefebvre and MacEachen; and that the provisions of Standing Order 65(1) not apply with regard to the number of members on such committee.

Motion agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

APPOINTMENT OF CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEES OF THE WHOLE

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasant duty to recommend to the House a candidate to the position of Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Committees of the Whole House. Under different circumstances, Mr. Speaker, this motion would have been put without comments, but, with your kind permission, I would like to make a few this time. As a matter of fact, I would blame myself if I failed today to draw the attention of the House not only to the qualifications of the candidate, but also to the exceptional character of the occasion.

[English]

The qualities which I mentioned earlier this day as being necessary in the occupant of the office of Speaker are, of course, equally necessary in the person of his deputy. We are fortunate that the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) displays these qualities in large measure. Mr. Robert McCleave is a veteran member of this House, having come here first in 1957 and having been successful in seeking re-election on five subsequent occasions. He is no stranger either to this House or to adjudicating its business.

Only once before in the history of this place has a member of the opposition been Deputy Speaker. That was more than half a century ago and the occasion was made necessary by circumstances quite different from those which prompt me to move Mr. McCleave's name for this important office. I wish only to add that those of us on this side of the House have every confidence in the wisdom and impartiality of Mr. McCleave and intend to support his nomination and his tenure without hesitation.

[Translation]

Therefore, I move, seconded by the Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), that Mr. Robert McCleave, member for the electoral district of Halifax East Hants, be appointed Chairman of Committees of the Whole House.

[English]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the nomination of Mr. McCleave as Deputy Speaker. I expressed the hope, in a similar situation back in 1968, that some time in the future the deputy speaker might be selected from the opposition side of the House. It gives me particular pleasure to second the nomination of a member of my own party who has grown continuously in stature since he first entered this chamber in 1957.

• (1700)

He is experienced on both sides of the House: on the government side as a member, as chairman of the miscellaneous private bills committee and as a parliamentary secretary; on the opposition side he has had a series of posts in which it has been his duty to cast his eye over various governments.

He has, as well, had professional experience as a lawyer and as a broadcaster, and perhaps he will now be involved in the hottest "hot line" he has ever had. His reputation, then, is fully justified and I know it will be appreciated by all members of the House. He will be fair and he will bring great distinction to his office. I take great pleasure in seconding the motion.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. I want to say on behalf of my colleagues and myself that we enthusiastically support the well-orchestrated arrangement that has been come to between the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). I have had the pleasure of working with the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) and have found him a decent human being, very fair and very gentle, and emphasizing the first word of his party's name I therefore welcome him.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the motion that the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (M. McCleave) be appointed Chairman of Committees of the Whole House and Deputy Speaker, is agreeable to us. We have known the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants for many years and we know that he has taken an active part in all debates in this House. Therefore all the members of my group and myself will be happy to co-operate with him in all circumstances. We hope that like Mr. Speaker he will be impartial towards all hon. members.

So we wish him good luck and we support the motion of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

Motion agreed to.

APPOINTMENT OF DEPUTY CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEES OF THE WHOLE

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move yet another resolution for the appointment of the Deputy Chairman of the Committees of the Whole. Being suspected by everybody of having orchestrated an arrangement with the Progressive Conservative and the New Democratic Parties, I would readily agree to have the motion seconded by the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) if he wishes to do so; if not, I will withdraw it and amend its content. I see that he accepts; very well then, the orchestration is complete.

I therefore move, seconded by Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue), that the member for Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Gérard Laniel) be appointed Deputy Chairman of the Committees of the Whole.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

APPOINTMENT OF ASSISTANT DEPUTY CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEES OF THE WHOLE

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen):

That Prosper Boulanger, Esq., member for the electoral district of Mercier, be appointed Assistant Deputy Chairman of Committees of the Whole House.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think this is the last item of business for today. So I move, seconded by Mr. MacEachen:

That the House do now adjourn.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: This House will stand adjourned until eleven o'clock tomorrow morning.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned, at 5.08 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, January 5, 1973

The House met at 11 a.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. REILLY—DISTRIBUTION OF SPEECH FROM THE THRONE PRIOR TO DELIVERY

Mr. Peter Reilly (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege affecting all members of the House. Yesterday Your Honour admonished members of the House to co-operate with you by observing, among other things, the traditions of the House. Within minutes of that admonition, "flacks" from the Prime Minister's office were distributing in the press gallery copies of the Speech from the Throne fully four hours before the members of this House were to be apprised of its contents. Indeed, the contents of that speech were in print in at least one Ottawa newspaper fully one hour before the appointed time at which members of the House gathered in the other place to hear its contents.

I suggest to Your Honour that, far from reflecting a chastened or different attitude on the part of the government, this is evidence of the most palpable kind that the government continues to hold this House in contempt.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reilly: In the last parliament members had to walk at least 50 paces off the Hill before becoming nobodies. Now they can achieve nonentity by staying in their appointed places. I believe that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) owes the members of this House an explanation and an apology.

Mr. Speaker: Of course, the hon. member has not proposed a motion and so the matter cannot be pursued further. According to tradition and custom, certainly the Prime Minister or a minister or a member of the House who is particularly involved in the proposed question of privilege is given the right to reply briefly. I believe that the right hon. Prime Minister is seeking the floor for this purpose. However, I have to repeat that since there is no motion before the House the matter cannot be discussed further.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, anything I say would be mainly by way of seeking guidance. I understand that this practice has been going on—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Never.

An hon. Member: It's the same old bunch.

Mr. Trudeau: —for at least 20 years, so we did not initiate anything new here. It has been the frequent policy of various succeeding governments to inform the press of certain documents. I know it is done with the budget on a lock-up basis.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not at all. That statement is false; that is not the practice.

Mr. Hees: It is done on a lock-up basis only, and the Prime Minister knows it.

Mr. Trudeau: I wish the hon. members would get together.

Mr. Hees: We are talking about the budget, and you know that.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. gentleman on a point of order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, we do not have to get together because the statement made by the Prime Minister has no basis in truth whatsoever.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

AGRICULTURE

CROP DAMAGE, NORTHERN ALBERTA AND BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, in this new year I wish to move the first motion under Standing Order 43. The urgent and pressing necessity that impels me to make this application for unanimous consent relates to the situation in parts of northern Alberta and British Columbia where extraordinary weather conditions led to approximately one million acres of crop being under snow before the harvest was completed. If unanimous consent is given I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle):

That this House does not regard federal assistance to farmers of northern Alberta and British Columbia as adequate and urges the government to review its program and provide immediate cash acreage payments and rearrange mortgage payments and interest.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be proceeded with.

THE LATE HARRY S. TRUMAN

TRIBUTES TO FORMER PRESIDENT OF UNITED STATES

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the past few days have witnessed the death of three men whose public contributions have made them well known to Canadians. Yesterday this House paid tribute to the memory of two of them, the former Prime Minister Pearson and the Honourable George Drew. It is appropriate today, however, to mourn the passing of another important figure, the late President Harry S. Truman of the United States.

The years in which President Truman occupied his office were among the most turbulent and eventful in recent history. We are all in his debt for the calmness, decisiveness and spirit of generosity with which he approached problems of immense importance, and for the friendliness with which he regarded this country. Few heads of government have faced such momentous decisions as those that were required of President Truman during his tenure. Some of them will be debated by historians for many years. Others rank without question among the most enlightened acts of modern statesmen. In this latter category falls the inception of the Marshall Plan which brought such remarkable restoration to the war-stricken countries of western Europe.

As a measure of Canadian respect for President Truman, and to convey Canadian condolences to the Truman family, Senator Paul Martin is attending the memorial services which are in progress at this moment in the Washington National Cathedral in Washington, D.C.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to associate myself and the members of the Official Opposition with the tribute proposed by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to the memory of President Truman. President Truman had grave decisions to make. As the Prime Minister has said, historians may discuss the pros and cons of some of those decisions, but he certainly was a man who talked frankly and acted energetically and courageously for his country when he thought the situation warranted such words or deeds. He was most courageous. He rose from a relatively minor position in the life of his country to the highest office of that nation and achieved universal respect.

President Truman was a vital president and a friend of Canada and all Canadians. As president he was able to identify himself with what we might call the ordinary man of his own country. I think it is very fitting for us to honour the memory of President Truman on the same day that he is being honoured in a memorial service by the people of his native country.

I should like to take this opportunity to join with the Prime Minister in offering my sympathy to Mr. Truman's family and to all our good friends and neighbours, the people of the United States.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I and my colleagues want to join in paying tribute to the late President Truman. There are some things for which his presidency was responsible that have shaken the world and its future and about which there will be great and serious argument in the future. I refer, of course, to the use of the atomic bomb to end the second world war. There are other things for which President Truman was responsible about which there is undoubtedly universal agreement and admiration, particularly the introduction of the Marshall Plan which did so much to rebuild a devastated Europe.

Therefore it is my pleasure on behalf of the New Democratic Party to extend sympathy to Mr. Truman's family and to the people of the United States, and to join with those who have already spoken in paying tribute to a man who started as practically an unknown and surprised the world with his capacity for decisiveness and leadership.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and myself join with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to extend our sympathy to the family of the former President of the United States, Mr. Truman.

Mr. Truman was President of the United States during difficult years, yet he managed to lead that country to some unexpected heights not only in wartime, but also in peacetime.

We are therefore pleased to join with the other members to extend our heartfelt sympathy to the Truman family.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROCEDURE FOR MOTION ON VIET NAM WAR

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer, if I may, to a matter raised yesterday in respect of proposing the resolution having to do with hostilities in Viet Nam.

Hon. members will have noticed that on the notice paper today there is notice of a motion by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp). It is to be found on almost the last page of the Order of Business and Notices.

Under the rules of the House the motion cannot be proceeded with, without unanimous consent, in the absence of 48 hours' notice. It would not be my intention to interrupt the debate on the Speech From the Throne in order to deal with this matter.

However, it may be possible by consent of members to deal with this item of business now on motions without debate or to reach some other agreement by which we can deal with it briefly this afternoon following the speeches of the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. I have not been able, because of the number of meetings House leaders have had to attend this morning, to consolidate an agreement. So I raise the matter now in the hope that we may be able to find some common ground upon which we can deal with this resolution quickly.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to have to interrupt the hon. member but the hon. member for Lotbinière has a question of privilege.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of the subject raised by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), I should like to point out to him that the simultaneous interpretation system is not working, which complicates matters since we are unable to understand what is being said concerning this question of procedure.

[English]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, like the government House leader, I have been engaged for two hours in a number of discussions mainly dealing with the serious economic problems of the country. The government House leader was kind enough to telephone me and I received the message just before the House met. I have not had an opportunity to have the fullest and widest consultation that normally might take place. However, if a motion of this kind is to be of any value it must be disposed of in the same way as the House disposed of the motion dealing with the Amchitka matter. When the parliament of one country contemplates dealing with the affairs of another country, I think the degree to which there is unanimity and swiftness of passage of any motion has much to do with its effectiveness. If there is a disposition in the House at this time to accept the suggestion of the government House leader to bring this motion forward for disposition without debate as an indication of the views of the House, I personally think that is all right. As far as I know, it would, hopefully, be acceptable to all members of the House.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are anxious that this motion be dealt with by the House and we would like to see it dealt with today. We feel, however, it would be useful to have a brief statement by at least one spokesman from each party. We would be prepared to agree to such a limitation and we would even be prepared to agree to a special time limitation on their speeches, such as 10 or 15 minutes, but we feel the issue is so important that the motion should not be passed without anything at all being said. If we could agree now or before the Orders of the Day are reached, the House would know what the schedule is to be. At any rate, our suggestion is that some time during the morning there be consultation among the House leaders in the hope that we can deal with this matter this afternoon on the basis of one speaker for each party.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I shall go along with the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that there should be a meeting of the House parliamentary leaders in order that this priority subject may be debated today with only a limited delay.

[English]

Mr. Baldwin: As I understand it, the position of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is that there should be a discussion among the House leaders. He has imposed some additional conditions in respect of speeches, but his suggestion is that the House leaders might discuss this matter and see what, if anything, might come out of this meeting of men of wisdom.

Mr. Speaker: Obviously we cannot arrive at a conclusion without further consultation. It appears to be the consensus of the House that there should be consultation between the House leaders, following which a decision might be taken by the House concerning how and when this matter might be considered.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR LIST OF BILLS AND INDICATION OF LEGISLATIVE PRIORITIES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it was my impression and I expected that, as in recent years, the government would present a list of proposed bills along with the Speech from the Throne. Will the Prime Minister inform the House whether it is the government's intention to present such a list of proposed bills for the session and, if so, when we may expect to receive such a list?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe that this practice was initiated by our government four years ago. It is not more ancient than that. We did it at the time because the throne speech itself was couched in slightly different terms than the present one.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: That is the understatement of the week. You did not write it with such a trembling hand in those days.

Mr. Trudeau: So I think the reasons are obvious.

Mr. Stanfield: In the absence of such a list and any over-all statement with regard to the legislative priorities of the government in this session, will the Prime Minister indicate to the House the first four or five legislative items in terms of the government's legislative timetable and priorities and also indicate whether he can now give us the date when we may expect to receive a budget?

Mr. Trudeau: It will be our intention to indicate, through the House leader, as many bills as are necessary in the coming week to permit the House to see the business ahead of it.

Mr. Hees: Be specific.

Mr. Trudeau: As to the second part of the question, we expect that the Minister of Finance will be announcing the date of the budget—

Mr. Hees: In due course.

Mr. Trudeau: —in due course.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Same old gang. No change.

INCOME TAX

GOVERNMENT POSITION RESPECTING INCREASE EFFECTIVE JANUARY 1, 1973

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): In view of the answers given by the Prime Minister to previous questions and in view of the confusion that exists in the country with regard to what the government proposes to recommend, if it is in a position to make a recommendation, with regard to the 3 per cent increase in personal income tax that became effective on the first day of this year, will the Prime Minister now clarify this matter and tell the House definitely that the government is prepared to recommend to the House that the 3 per cent increase that has gone into effect will be eliminated?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that this is obviously a statement which will be made in the context of a budget, and we have said in the Speech from the Throne that the budget will be brought in at a much earlier date than usual.

INCREASE EFFECTIVE JANUARY 1, 1973—INSTRUCTION TO EMPLOYERS NOT TO DEDUCT FROM EMPLOYEES' PAY

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I follow up the last question asked by the Leader of the Opposition and ask the Minister of Finance whether he and the Minister of National Revenue discussed and was the Department of National Revenue instructed to inform employers across the country that the 3 per cent cut which was to end at the end of last year was to continue in the deductions which employers make from the pay of employees?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we did, and of course the Minister of National revenue had to make some administrative decisions quite apart from whatever policy may or may not be decided by the government later on.

Mr. Lewis: In view of the fact—and I really bristle at the minister's answer—that this cannot be an administrative decision and in view of the fact that, so far as the law is concerned, the 3 per cent cut was to end on December 31, 1972, will the minister tell the House—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition could tell his yahoo friends to be quiet for a minute.

[Mr. Hees.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: You are getting mad, Dave.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance on what authority he and the Minister of National Revenue decided to make this change in the law, particularly by the end of last year, unless it is his intention to change that law as soon as possible this year in this session?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept the preamble to the hon. member's question. When it comes to the matter of the administrative responsibility for collection of taxes, that lies within the jurisdiction of my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue. If the hon. member wants to pursue the administrative aspects of that a little more closely, perhaps he might direct the question to my colleague.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance a related question. Was the Economic Council of Canada given a reference by him, by the Governor in Council, or by the Prime Minister to make a study of unemployment and, if so, can he inform the House what progress has been made?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member will recognize that that is not a supplementary question. He himself said he was asking a related question. He can ask a supplementary question, but it seems to me that we have now gone quite far away from the first question asked by the Leader of the Opposition. In fact, I have some doubts whether the hon. gentleman's second or third question was supplementary to the first one. I suggest that we might continue the first round of questioning, and return to this important issue after we have heard the first question from the representative of the other party to my extreme right.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I said I was sure all hon. members would want to co-operate with you. I cannot do other than that myself.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

CLOSING OF CIP PLANT IN TEMISCAMING—DISCUSSION WITH QUEBEC AUTHORITIES RESPECTING REOPENING

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Is his department now negotiating with the government of the province of Quebec concerning reopening of the CIP plant in the town of Temiscaming? If so, what is the nature of these negotiations?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, initial negotiations with my counterpart in the province of Quebec were held this morning. I anticipate that there will be meetings with him early next week, and in the interim I am undertaking a detailed study of the proposals in question to see whether or not anything can be done about this particular industry.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BOMBING OF NORTH VIET NAM—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF NOTES SENT TO UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, in view of the most unusual nature of the resolution in connection with the bombing of North Viet Nam that the government has in mind to introduce, and in which this parliament will be asked to criticize our great neighbours to the south, would the government table this morning the notes, if any, that have been sent either to the President or the State Department of the United States so that we may have some appreciation of what the government has done in this connection?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the right hon. gentleman has said, we have made representations to the United States at all levels on this question. Of course, it is not customary in exchanges of this kind between governments to publish such communications except with the consent of the other government. This is not what we contemplate doing in any event, but we will be quite happy to inform the House, perhaps during today's debate or otherwise, of the nature of the representations we have made.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, it is no more unusual than the unusual course being suggested, which in my opinion represents the first time that this nation has chosen to criticize another nation in a resolution of parliament.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has not been here long enough to be dry behind the ears. If the minister, during the course of the discussion later, is prepared to give a summary of the exchanges, why can he not do it now?

Mr. Speaker: Is there a supplementary?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I have asked that question, and there should be no pussyfooting about it either.

• (1130)

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be more appropriate to give the answers during the debate on the resolution.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A pussyfooting statement was made.

Oral Questions

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

COST FOR 1972—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT AND EARLY INVESTIGATION BY STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration responsible for unemployment insurance. Has he had an opportunity to delve into the actual cost of this scheme in view of the fact that the figures bandied about have reached some $2 billion? This matter must be clarified. Can he let the nation know just what the scheme cost Canadian taxpayers and the private sector last year? Can the minister make that statement right now?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the final benefit payments made to claimants in 1972 as of the end of December amounted to $1,879 million. The portion chargeable to the employer-employee account is estimated at $1,000,100,000 and the administrative cost to be charged to the employer-employee account is estimated at $120 million. These figures are very close to those I released about a month ago.

Mr. Baldwin: How about the maladministration costs?

Mr. Alexander: I am pleased that the minister did not say that it is only a drop in the bucket. I should like now to ask the minister when he will be in a position to give the House a definitive statement on why the government was so wrong in its initial statement regarding the cost of the scheme?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure whether the suggestion of the hon. member is that the minister should make a statement now but if he is to make a statement it should be done on motions.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I hope the minister has taken that as notice and I trust he will make a statement in the near future. In view of the importance of this matter, would the minister consult with the government House leader and see that the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration is struck immediately in order that this whole matter may be probed in an effort to find answers to the problems and in order that the Canadian people may be aware of the mess we are in right now?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Trinity on a supplementary question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NUMBER RECEIVING BENEFITS IN DECEMBER, 1972, IN RELATION TO NUMBER OF UNEMPLOYED

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, it is a related question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hellyer: It is also supplementary as I am sure you will agree, Mr. Speaker, after you have heard it. Can the minister give the House an indication of the number of people who actually drew unemployment insurance benefits last month and can he tell the House whether that number exceeded the total number of unemployed in the country as was the case in the first five months of the year?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members know that they cannot ask questions that require the giving of statistics. I allowed the first question because it was perhaps general. It is always difficult to judge, until the question is asked, whether statistical information is required from a minister. Perhaps the question might be allowed and if the minister will reply we will then go on to the next supplementary question.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the hon. member's question and your remarks I would prefer and would ask to be given an opportunity to obtain precise figures which I will be very pleased to give the House at the earliest opportunity. I do not have the exact figures for that month available right now.

Mr. Hellyer: At the same time would the minister give an explanation to the House of how it is possible for more people in fact to be drawing unemployment insurance than Statistics Canada lists as being unemployed?

TIME OF INTRODUCTION OF AMENDMENTS TO ACT

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Could I ask the Minister of Labour to tell the House precisely when he will be introducing proposals to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, on those amendments—

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I chose the wrong minister. The shuffling of that deck of jokers makes it difficult to remember. May I ask that question of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, if he is the appropriate minister?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, without accepting the premise of the hon. member's comment about jokers or decks, I hope to offer to the House the views of the government on amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act in the very near future, and I think that will be a subject for immediate discussion with the House leader with regard to timing and procedures.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Fundy-Royal rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, may I say through you how unusual and pleasant it is to have the ministers grace us with their presence today. I hope it is a resolution that will be maintained.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Hellyer.]

PROVISION OF ASSISTANCE TO CLAIMANTS AT LOCAL LEVEL

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of nation-wide concern, can the minister inform the House what steps are being taken to provide the type of assistance on the local level to UIC claimants that used to be available and which is sadly lacking at the present time?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to describe the measures that have been taken but I think the reply would exceed the time limit for an answer to a question. However, I believe that early in this session we will have an opportunity to examine all aspects of unemployment insurance including those questions already raised about the cost of the scheme and measures taken to improve the services as well to eliminate abuses.

MEASURES TO ELIMINATE DELAY IN PAYMENT OF BENEFITS

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Since the minister has just announced that he will as soon as possible introduce amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act, could he state whether, meanwhile, steps will be taken to improve the administration of the act so as to avoid undue delays and unjustifiable errors which now occur?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied that there is an increasing improvement in the administration of the commission's activities although unquestionably it leaves a lot to be desired yet.

REQUEST FOR MORE LOCAL OFFICES TO EXPEDITE PAYMENT OF CLAIMS

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Will the minister open more local UIC offices in order to speed up payment of legitimate claims and to at least stop the drain on the fund?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, without accepting the premise of the question I might say that we are opening additional offices and providing facilities in manpower offices to deal with unemployment insurance matters. We have many more arrangements that I will be glad to detail to the House.

Mr. Grafftey: Is the minister aware of the cruel hardships that current delays are imposing on many Canadians? They are going on welfare.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

TIME OF SETTING UP OF JOINT SENATE-COMMONS COMMITTEE TO INQUIRE INTO FOOD PRICES

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the pre-new year jump in beef prices to the consumer, rising as high as 11 per cent in British Columbia, what is the earliest date at which the government can set up its announced Senate-Commons committee to inquire into food prices?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that this is a matter on which the House leaders will want to consult and I am sure they will look upon it as a matter of urgency with regard to the legislative program.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In view of the government's oft-repeated claim that it wants more communication with the Canadian public, what is the reason for keeping secret the possible date of the setting up of this committee?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, this is a decision for the House, not for the government, and I hope that the House will make such a decision at an early date.

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I have supplementary question. I really cannot believe that this House, in the critical situation that we have—

Some hon. Members: Order, please!

Mr. Lawrence: —can the minister—

Some hon. Members: Order, please!

Mr. Lawrence: Can the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member kindly resume his seat?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member resume his seat? The hon. member may ask a question but he should not argue.

Mr. Lawrence: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell the House what action the government has taken since the election, what action it is taking today and what action it is going to take tomorrow other than this dillydallying manoeuvre of a parliamentary inquiry—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville.

An hon. Member: You have no respect for parliament.

Mr. Lawrence: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member rises on a point of order.

Mr. Lawrence: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, there was a reference earlier to yahoos and I did not hear the minister's reply.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair did not allow the minister to reply because the hon. member, I suggest, did not ask a question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville has a supplementary.

• (1140)

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, may I rephrase the question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville. I will return to the hon. member in a moment.

FOOD PRICES—SCOPE OF TERMS OF REFERENCE OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the government's expressed intention to set up a joint committee to study the prices of food in this country, can the minister say whether or not the government will be giving that committee terms of reference that will require it to recommend action as well as study the increase in the prices of food?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position yet to outline the terms of reference that will be in the proposed motion. I hope they will be wide enough to permit the committee to do a useful job for the parliament of this country and the population as a whole.

Mr. Nystrom: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister say whether there will be any interim action or any immediate action before the committee is established?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, the government is continuously keeping these matters under review and I am sure will be prepared to take appropriate action.

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): My question is still a supplementary one, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister, or the Minister of Finance, or perhaps even the Prime Minister, indicate whether the government's position has changed since the Minister of Finance, during the election, announced that the government could do nothing with respect to price escalation in this country?

Mr. Alexander: Surely one of the three can answer.

FOOD PRICES—SUGGESTED TIME LIMIT ON DELIBERATIONS OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell the House whether he will be agreeable to putting a time limit on how long the joint committee may sit, such as two or three weeks, even though they have to sit all day so that we can get some action?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think that is a decision for the House.

TAXATION

POSSIBILITY OF REPEAL OF TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS TO LOWER COST OF HOUSES

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister responsible for housing and urban affairs, or maybe the question ought to be answered by the Minister of Finance, whether, as it is stated in the Speech from the Throne that one of the problems of the government is that of supplying low cost housing, it is the government's intention to repeal the 11 per cent sales tax which is keeping houses at such high prices that few people can afford to buy them?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that is properly a budgetary question and is within the purview of my colleague the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, may I address my question to the Minister of Finance. He has heard the question in reference to the 11 per cent sales tax. I am sure he is aware that the provision of low cost housing is referred to in the Speech from the Throne. Has there been a discussion about this tax, will it be considered and will it be repealed?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there was no implication in the Speech from the Throne relating to the 11 per cent sales tax.

HOUSING

WHITSON GARDENS SUBDIVISION, CHELMSFORD, ONT.—ACTION TO MAINTAIN VALUE OF HOUSES NOT SUBJECT TO FORECLOSURE

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Is the minister aware of the problems facing the purchasers of homes in the Whitson Gardens subdivision in Chelmsford, Ontario? Is the minister prepared to take steps to ensure that those homeowners in the subdivision who are not directly affected will be guaranteed by CMHC that the houses foreclosed by the Toronto-Dominion Bank will be used so as to maintain the former value of houses in the subdivision?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the problem and have asked for a full report from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I have instructed the corporation to co-operate fully in the investigation being carried on by the Department of Consumer Affairs of the government of Ontario. When I have all these reports I will take note of the hon. member's representation to assure that people, in so far as it is within the power of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to do so, are not adversely affected.

Mr. Rodriguez: Will the minister consider discussing with the Ontario Housing Corporation the best possible use of the houses foreclosed by the Toronto-Dominion Bank so that the former value of the other houses in the subdivision may be maintained?

Mr. Basford: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to do so.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY RESPECTING DIFFICULTIES OF AN ANNOUNCER IN EUROPE

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State.

Is he aware of representations made by friends of Mr. Gaétan Barrette, an announcer employed by the CBC, who is now encountering some difficulties in Europe? If so, would the minister state what he proposes to do concerning this case?

INCOME TAX

SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF DEADLINE FOR FILING RETURNS IN LIGHT OF NEW FORMS

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my question to the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the very difficult, complex and comprehensive new income tax forms that must be filled out by Canadian taxpayers, is the minister giving consideration to extending the time by which those returns must be completed and returned?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, from the experience with preliminary forms which have already been filed by many people leaving the country or on behalf of estates—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanbury: There will be many more people filing who will be coming into the country.

An hon. Member: Illegally.

Mr. Stanbury: There appears to be no unusual difficulty in completing these forms and there has been no representation on any wide-scale basis for an extension of time. Perhaps hon. members will want to stimulate it, but I do not think it will be necessary. We will certainly keep our minds open—

Mr. Baldwin: That will be a change.

Mr. Stanbury: —so that citizens will have every opportunity to take advantage of the excellent benefits that are available under the new income tax law.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

AGRICULTURE

CROP DAMAGE IN NORTHERN ALBERTA AND BRITISH COLUMBIA—ADDITIONAL ASSISTANCE TO FARMERS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. I think he knows the nature of the question. In light of the extraordinarily heavy incidence of damage sustained by thousands of farmers in northern British Columbia and Alberta as a result of unique weather conditions, is the government giving consideration to providing assistance over and above to what has already been announced in the form of cash acreage payments and protection against foreclosure in order to assist the farmers? I know the minister has been there and is aware of the very grave situation that exists.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Speech, speech!

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, after I say what we have done or intend to do, perhaps the applause will not be all that great.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: We have made the announcement that we are going to assist farmers in the transportation of the forage and feed that they need for their cattle. We will assist both British Columbia and Alberta with respect to those frozen out areas with vegetable crops, those areas which have suffered from drought, hail, rain and snow, with 50 per cent based on the grant that the provinces are going to give. We are going to give the farmers 50 per cent also. We announced this yesterday, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Baldwin: I saw the announcement. That is why I asked the question.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I read the announcement the minister made. May I ask whether the amount of payment referred to in the statement has been decided upon after agreement with the two provinces, British Columbia and Alberta? Second, since it appears that the acreage payment is contingent upon those provinces making a payment, if they decide not to make an acreage payment will no payment be made?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I am being presumptuous but, as a result of the proposal that was made by both the Minister of Agriculture of British Columbia and the Minister of Agriculture of Alberta, I feel quite sure that they are going to make payments. Our payments will be made according to the claim forms submitted by those people in those provinces to the provincial Minister of Agriculture in each province. We will work from that—how do you say it—

An hon. Member: Hypothesis.

Mr. Whelan: —that claim basis.

Mr. Gleave: Am I to take from the statement of the minister that he had not reached agreement with those provinces as to the amount of acreage payment to be made prior to making this announcement? Has he any agreement? Does he not know what they are going to do?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I am pretty sure I know what they are going to do. They are going to make acreage payments, I think up to $4 per acre, and we have agreed to make payments up to $400 or 50 per cent of the payments that the provinces are going to make.

• (1150)

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Gleave: A supplementary question.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If there are to be further supplementaries, I will first recognize the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar and then go to the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, I return to the question I would like the minister to answer. Does he or does he not have an agreement with those two provinces as to the amount of the acreage payments that are going to be made?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, we had proposals from them that were submitted to us for our consideration. We worked from the proposals that were made to us by each province.

CROP DAMAGE IN NORTHERN ALBERTA AND BRITISH COLUMBIA—ACTION TO FORESTALL FORECLOSURES BECAUSE OF FARM CREDIT CORPORATION LOANS

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabaska): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Is the minister contemplating any action to forestall foreclosures in respect of Farm Credit Corporation loans and things of that nature?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, my understanding, and I am quite sure it is right, is that we have stopped all foreclosures on any farm credit loans in that area that are behind in payment.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. I wish to ask him whether he is now prepared—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Quiet, please.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Is he now prepared to give a rendition of the theme song of this new parliament entitled "Those nobodies are somebodies now"?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Sing it.

Mr. Hees: I will sing it with him.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

SPORTS

MONTREAL OLYMPIC GAMES, 1976—CIRCUMSTANCE OF SALE OF TELEVISION RIGHTS TO AMERICAN BROADCASTING COMPANY

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to destroy the harmony, but I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare whose transition from the black to the green chamber I congratulate and welcome. Has the minister investigated the reasons for and the circumstances of the sale of United States television rights for the 1976 Montreal Olympic Games to the American Broadcasting Company whereas a seemingly better proposal from Bobby Orr Enterprises was not even considered?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker, as this is not a matter under my administrative responsibilities.

TRANSPORT

SUGGESTED FREEZE ON RAILWAY FREIGHT RATES PENDING REGIONAL CONFERENCES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Is it the intention of the minister to place an immediate freeze on freight rates until such time as the regional conferences on freight rates, proposed in the Speech from the Throne, can take place?

[Mr. Whelan.]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member will have to tell me under what authority or law I can do that.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister and the member know that that question cannot be asked. Perhaps the hon. member has a supplementary.

Mr. McGrath: Can the minister give an undertaking to the House that he will take this up with his colleagues in cabinet in order to have an order in council placing an immediate freeze on freight rates because of the devastating effect that freight rates are having on the cost of living in Canada?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think this is a very important problem.

Mr. McGrath: Then why don't you do something about it?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): We are following very closely what is being done. We hope the railways will understand—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): They have the authority to increase their freight rates. I hope they will not.

INCOME TAX

TIME OF CONSIDERATION OF BILLS NOT DISPOSED OF AND TO BE REINTRODUCED

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the indication that the bills left over from his old budget relating to income tax, corporation income tax and so on will be reintroduced, is it the intention of the minister that the House consider these bills immediately or that they should be considered at the time he presents his new budget in 1973?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have every intention of bringing in an early budget, subject to looking for House time in consultation with the Prime Minister and the House leader and after obtaining the views of the provinces at the meeting with the provincial Ministers of Finance on January 18 and 19. Subject to those qualifications, I hope to have an opportunity to bring in an early budget for the consideration of the House. At that time we are committed to reintroducing the substance of the budget bills that followed my budget of May 8. The form and timing of the reintroduction of the substance of those bills will be discussed by me with the House leader. In view of the fact that I anticipate an early budget, I think it may make sense to combine all the bills after consultation with the House leader.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—DISCUSSIONS WITH INDUSTRY ON PRICE INCREASES ON 1973 MODELS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the new Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that after the existence for seven years of the auto pact Canadian consumers are still paying an average of about $300 more per car than they should be paying, can the minister report to the House on the success of his talks with General Motors and the Ford Corporation concerning their unjustified price increases for the 1973 models?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will be very pleased to do that. The first point that has to be emphasized is the government's commitment to the whole question of narrowing that price differential. There are two aspects of the pricing that should be understood. They are important.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gillespie: If you want an answer to the question, you will have to give me time to reply. There are two aspects, those that are associated with safety and emission controls and those that are associated with economics. I think the second point is the one that is important to the House. The United States has a price commission. The United States price commission—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the minister for interrupting. I have to take into account the nature of the question asked by the hon. member, which was very general in nature. I assume it would be somewhat difficult for the minister to answer that question without making a statement on motions. I hope the minister can reply briefly because we will be running short of time very soon. The minister might indicate whether he proposes to give the information on motions on some other occasion.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I think I can give a quick answer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillespie: In my speech during the debate on the Speech from the Throne I can elaborate on this. The point is that the United States okayed an increase with respect to costs of safety and emission controls for the United States. This was followed by the United States companies' subsidiaries in Canada announcing an increase. The second application for a price increase in the United States is with respect to economics. This has been made to the United States Price Commission. Three per cent has been requested.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the minister's short reply.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I have a supplementary question. I see that the spirit of the Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin remains in the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: In view of the minister's failure to get any concessions from the companies, can he inform the House whether the cabinet discussion on the removal of the duty between Canada and the United States for importing cars has led to a final rejection of that proposal as one means of bringing down prices or is the government still considering that as one means?

Mr. Gillespie: On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, we did get a commitment. That is the point I was making. The two Canadian companies, General Motors and Ford, have given me a commitment that there will not be any increase with respect to economics regardless of how much that increase may be in the United States. That is a firm commitment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The minister has misinformed the House. My question concerns the announced increases which have already taken place. They have not gone back on that. My understanding is they told the minister they were going to maintain the prices they announced some weeks ago.

• (1200)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is hardly a point of order. It is a point of debate between the minister and the hon. member. As I said, we are running short of time and we should try to get in a few brief questions and brief replies. I recognize the hon. member for South Shore.

ENERGY

GAS AND OIL RESERVES OFF EAST COAST—INQUIRY AS TO AGREEMENT WITH ATLANTIC PREMIERS ON DIVISION OF REVENUES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether I should direct my question to the Prime Minister or to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources but possibly one or the other might reply. In view of increased evidence that reserves of gas and oil off the east coast are larger than originally anticipated, has the federal government reached any formal agreement with the premiers of Atlantic Canada concerning an equitable division of royalties between the provinces and the federal government?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The House will recall that in August of last year a committee of officials was established by the federal government and the four Atlantic provinces and Quebec to explore this and related complex questions. The committee has met several times but the final report has not yet been completed. We anticipate there will be further meetings for that purpose.

Oral Questions

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

INTENTION RESPECTING AGREEMENTS TO ASSIST CAPE BRETON MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the new Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. I trust he will show his usual energetic enthusiasm in this field during the short period of time he will be here. May I ask the hon. gentleman whether it is the intention of the Cape Breton Development Corporation to enter into agreements to render assistance, both financial and otherwise, to municipalities on Cape Breton Island similar to the assistance provided in other parts of the country through DREE? Here, I refer to that overworked word "infrastructure".

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): I would have to ask the president of Devco where he has any plans in that connection. I will be glad to do so and convey the information to the hon. member.

Mr. Muir: In view of the fact the president of the Cape Breton Development Corporation has already stated that he has no part in this, and in view of the fact the former minister responsible for Devco stated that the legislation is indeed flexible enough to encompass anything DREE might do, would the minister give serious attention to this question?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have already indicated we are examining the various implications of the DREE program but if this is one which commends itself to the hon. member, to the area and to myself, perhaps we could work something out.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Would the minister mind answering the note I sent over to him at the beginning of the question period?

Mr. Jamieson: Could I see you as soon as possible? Of course. Any time you wish.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Is the hon. gentleman not aware that ministers are not allowed to ask questions of backbenchers?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baldwin: Would the government House leader mind my asking at this time what is to be the course of business next week?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am happy to advise the House that we shall continue with the debate on the address.

Mr. Bell: May I address a supplementary question to the Prime Minister in the interest of getting things done? May we be assured that the roster system has now been finally scrapped? If not, we want our copy so we may know when the ministers are going to be here.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

ADDRESS IN REPLY, MOVED BY MR. J. J. BLAIS AND SECONDED BY MR. ROD BLAKER

The House proceeded to the consideration of the speech delivered by His Excellency the Governor General at the opening of the session.

Mr. J. J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I have been told that I did not have to speak too loud this morning because the interpretation facilities are available. However, I would like to say that I am a young Canadian, at least I think I am, and I have asked myself more than once what led the kind people of Nipissing to send me here to sit in on the proceedings of the House. I am indebted to the right hon. Prime Minister who has confirmed their choice by asking me to move the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. Such an honour reflects first of all on my constituency and I wish to thank him most sincerely.

I wish also, Mr. Speaker, to congratulate you on your reelection which was a foregone conclusion due to the expertise you have shown in the past and also due to the confidence which your impartiality and good judgement have initiated. I am sure that all Canadians join with me to congratulate you because they have been made aware of your qualifications during discussions in the national media in connection with the appointment of a permanent Speaker.

I would also like to congratulate the new ministers who have no doubt been chosen for a most difficult task. In fact, it will involve not only the administration of government measures initiated by the twenty-eighth parliament but also the adoption of the bills which will be introduced during this session.

Yesterday's Speech from the Throne includes an enormous amount of legislation to be passed and I think the ministers will have to realize the scope of their responsibilities.

[English]

I would also pray, Mr. Speaker, that when presenting the Address to His Excellency you convey my personal feelings of affection and loyalty, and, I am sure, those of Canadian citizens wherever they may be. I would also ask Your Honour to convey to him my thanks, even at this belated date, for having so graciously, in the summer of 1965, received my wife, Maureen Ahearn as she then was, in New Delhi, while he was Canadian High Commissioner to India. She assures me that this occasion remains among her most cherished memories.

Canada is indeed blessed in having as head of state, not merely a typical Canadian but, indeed, an ideal Canadian. In an age in which human imperfection is constantly brought to our attention by the retelling in the press of stories in which intolerance, jealousy, hatred, violence and man's inhumanity to man are the principle actors, the Governor General, because of his office, because of his strength of character and of limb, has been divested by the Canadian people of all these human imperfections; he has been idealized as a Canadian par excellence. As an institution, the Governor General, as was stated by His Excellency in his inaugural address, has come to represent the Canadian people as a whole and now symbolizes for Canadians the stability and the continuity of their national life and institutions. In a House divided, as this House finds itself, we must be constantly aware of the importance of these institutions. We must remind ourselves that we are here not to achieve power and to exercise it wisely, but to assure the stability and the continuity of Canadian national life and Canadian institutions. We must preserve them, cherish and ensure them. Mr. Speaker, I wish you to convey to His Excellency the fact that each member of this House recognizes his obligation to the body politic of which His Excellency is the head.

[Translation]

May we ask you, Mr. Speaker, to convey our sympathy to His Excellency on the passing away of a friend and one of his most distinguished Prime Ministers. Lester Bowles Pearson will be remembered as the father of the new Canadian era. The praise bestowed upon him both by the national and international communities will not change what is recorded. He was the man of his time. His experience of international conciliation and his awareness of the viability of the Canadian entity, as well as his acknowledgment of the principle of unity in diversity, have impelled a strong and tolerant Canada and a country which is sure of its future.

Also, I am positive that when he was my own age he certainly did not intend becoming the leader or head of a minority government.

In his book entitled The Prime Ministers of Canada Bruce Hutchison had this to say about Mr. Pearson:

• (1210)

[English]

He had no plan for his life but his professors noticed that whatever he undertook was pushed to a conclusion, and perhaps a few of them detected here the makings of a philosophy. Not to plan ahead but to accept every task as it appeared and to do it as well as possible; not to shine in competition but never to fail if he could possibly succeed; not to violate his moral code but not to quarrel with anyone either if he could help it. Such were the instincts of the boy and the methods of the man.

He took office at a time when Canada, in its entity, was becoming aware of its identity. It was a period of intense analysis, when history, the cultural background and the inheritance made our country unique in the world. Everybody was looking for a precedent; nobody found it. This has been the source of often heated debates on the viability of Canada. He himself took part in these debates. And then, finally, we witnessed the birth of a Canadian awareness which resulted in the adoption of the flag which is the symbol of unity, and in the celebration of a centennial which has been unequalled so far.

We are therefore assured of Canada's fate, Mr. Speaker. Through his good-fellowship, his good humour, the flexibility of his dispositions and the firmness of his principles Mr. Pearson has assured us our second century.

[English]

Those are the qualities which, if practiced in this House, will make this parliament a memorable, indeed a fruitful, one. I cannot be deemed to be optimistic if I reflect upon the longevity of the twenty-ninth parliament. Just judging from the questions asked this morning, if the same number need to be answered from day to day we are bound to be here eternally.

October 30, 1972 provided us with a full House, jokers included. This House has received 264 men and women who represent all parts of Canada. There is no need to hedge since we have received a legislative program through the Speech from the Throne which indeed is massive in content. There is meat in that particular document for constructive deliberation of the type in which the people of Nipissing elected me to participate when, through their ballot, they indicated that I should attend this particular assembly. They instructed me to come here to participate in the debate and in the passage of legislation. I am sure that no member of this House was directed by his or her constituents to come to the House to squelch debate. If one were to hold such a statement to be true one would be going directly against the type of parliamentary debate which I have been led to believe honours this House and which is at the basis of the existence of this House. Some members have indicated that they were going to defeat Her Majesty's loyal government immediately upon coming to the House, even before they saw the throne speech or received any information as to what it contained. Surely, to adopt such an attitude is to defeat the purpose of this honourable institution.

I have spoken of my constituents and I now wish to speak of my constituency. My constituency is named Nipissing, and if that offers some difficulty, then for the enlightenment of the members of the House I should like to spell it out for them. It has one "n", an "i", one "p", another "i", two "s's", a third "i" and an "ng". It is a riding that is 240 miles northwest of here and is the southernmost riding of what we refer to as "glorious northern Ontario".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blais: The word "Nipissing" is neither French nor English but was coined by the Indians long before Europeans of whatever background came to these shores. It was in 1615 that Samuel de Champlain, known to all, visited my riding, and lo and behold he made notes along his particular vein. If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to the words of Samuel de Champlain as they have been related to me at this late date. As I have said, this was in 1615, on July 25, so it was not yesterday.

Pursuing our way by land and leaving the said Algonquin river—

[English]

That is "the Ottawa river" for those who are not too familiar with this historical background.

[Translation]

—we crossed several lakes, the savages carrying their canoes, until we entered the lake of the Nipisierinj—

[English]

The first time it was used as a written word.

[Translation]

—at a latitude of forty-six degrees and a fourth. And on the twenty-sixth day of the said month, after travelling both over land and through the lakes twenty-five leagues, or therebouts, we reached the huts of the savages, where we stayed with them two days. They received us very well and were in a goodly number; they are people who till the earth very little.

[English]

I should like to make a little comment on that. Perhaps that was the best way of dealing with government in those days. Certainly, we would not need a minister of agriculture and would be able to save ourselves a great deal of trouble, I suspect.

The said people were seven to eight hundred in number, who ordinarily live on the lake, where there is a great number of very pleasant islands. The north side of the said lake is very attractive, with fine meadows for the grazing of cattle and several small rivers flowing into the lake.

They did their fishing in a lake abounding in a variety of fish, among which one is excellent, having a length of one foot—

[English]

I take it he is referring to the very popular northern Ontario pickerel which abound in Lake Nipissing.

The lake is some eight leagues in width—

[English]

That is approximately 24 miles.

—and twenty-five in length—

[English]

He was overshooting by about 10 miles; it is not 75 but only 65 miles long.

—and into it flows a river coming from the north west—

[English]

That is the Sturgeon River.

—which they take to barter the goods which we give them in exchange for pelts, and that with the inhabitants who make a living out of hunting and fishing in a country abundantly stocked with wildlife, birds as well as fish.

This is what he said.

• (1220)

I should like to indicate that he was well received when he returned, but we do not have any record of what he said then. I would advise you all to do as Champlain did, as shown by history, and visit Nipissing, each and every one of you individually, not all at the same time.

The period from 1881 to 1891 was a period of railway construction. Another thing that never ceases to amaze me about the ignorance that is manifested concerning my riding, is the lack of knowledge that Nipissing was the jumping off place for the transcontinental railroad. It was in Nipissing that the great ribbon that tied British Columbia to the rest of the country was commenced. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that there was debate as to whether the railroad should go through a portion of the United States to gain access to the great northwest or whether it should take a northerly route. The hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome) and the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), along with everybody in northern Ontario, are very thankful for this decision to follow the northerly route, otherwise we might not even exist there.

At any rate, as the railroad proceeded, it touched North Bay which is now a city of 50,000 people. It proceeded west through the western regions of my riding and in its path it created many small, charming villages including Cache Bay, which is on the lake, Verner, which straddles the Veuve River, one of the lake's tributaries, and the village of Warren. It also created the town of Sturgeon Falls, that town closest to my heart. I mention this town because I am sure that name has not been mentioned too often in the debates in this assembly. The town of Sturgeon Falls is the town in which I was born, and also the town which saw the birth of my parents. It is a lively town on the banks of the Sturgeon River. It was at one time one of the major posts of the Hudson's Bay Company in that particular area, and I speak now of the early 1800's.

Throughout the history of Canada, Nipissing has been a point of reference. At the time of that faux pas, which in the history books is referred to commonly as the battle of the Plains of Abraham, all of that area including the southern reaches of Lake Nipissing was ceded to England. The rest was kept by France.

The next reference to Nipissing in the history books occurs after the revolutionary war, when the Americans decided they wanted to establish the boundaries of the United States at the southern limit of my riding. The British commissioner of that time agreed, indicating the depth of his interest in York. However, the British Parliament refused to ratify that agreement. I often wonder whether that was not an error on their part, because if that agreement had been ratified we might have been rid of that pesky York area which has now reached Torontonian proportions. We would, of course, have lost something in tourist revenues as a result of the absorption of Niagara Falls by the United States, although the advantages might have greatly outweighed the disadvantages. Perhaps we would now have more attention paid to us, as North Bay might then have become the major port of entry into Canada. Of course, we would not have the problem of redistribution we are now facing.

As an aside, if I might speak to redistribution at this time, the commissioners have indicated that northern Ontario will lose two seats and Ontario will gain five because, as we speak of it, Ontario is everything south of North Bay. I suggest that this is something of a paradox.

At a time when we are speaking of a country which wishes to evolve and gain more importance through increased population and occupation of territory, instead of giving that particular region, which needs attention, greater representation, we are reversing the trend and taking away representation. We do not need fewer northerners in this House, we need more. Perhaps I have taken too long to bring to this House the true meaning of Nipissing.

If I have taken so much time to show everyone that the Nipissing area is, historically, an integral part of Canada essential in fact to its life, it is because I firmly believe that if we want it to continue to grow as an autonomous country, we must develop our northern areas. The scenery in the North is spectacular and I refer not only to Northern Ontario, but to Northern Canada.

We must change our attitude towards those areas. It is not good enough to introduce merely a few measures meant to please those hon. members who clap on their desks. We must change the whole attitude of the country. I do not merely refer to a vision of the North—such is not my purpose—but rather, we must realize that this is an emergent area fit to live in and in need of incentives. This is the reason why I have devoted so much time to describe my dearly beloved country.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like to refer to the past servants of this House who came from Nipissing. Hon. members will remember Jack Garland, who died in 1964 and who was at that time the Minister of National Revenue. His death necessitated the by-election which saw the admission into this House of Carl Legault who retired last year. Both gentlemen devoted their entire time to the service of their constituents and their adequate representation in this House. I am sure this House will bear witness to their presence and the competence they manifested.

[Translation]

On the occasion of my maiden speech and heartened by the experience of my predecessors, I would like to undertake, Mr. Speaker, to always endorse pieces of legislation which will seem to me most likely to promote justice, social welfare, prosperity and peace, for every citizen and the country itself.

Therefore, with this purpose in mind—

[English]

It is in that spirit that I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lachine (Mr. Blaker), that an Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General of Canada, the text of which is as follows:

To His Excellency the Right Hon. Roland Michener, Chancellor and Commander of the Order of Military Merit upon whom has been conferred the Canadian Forces' Decoration, Governor General and Commander-in-Chief of Canada.

May it please Your Excellency:

We, Her Majesty's most loyal and dutiful subjects, the House of Commons of Canada, in parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Excellency for the gracious speech which Your Excellency has addressed to both Houses of Parliament.

• (1230)

Mr. Rod Blaker (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, may I join my colleague the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) in paying respect to the family of Mr. Pearson.

[Translation]

He and many others both from Canada and abroad have, over the past few days, expressed their sympathies to the family of Mike Pearson, and their admiration for the life of the former Prime Minister of Canada. I would add only a single personal thought—that Mike Pearson was probably the personification of Canada as we know it—gentle, humourous, patient and tough. He left us a legacy of pride in him, of commitment to public service, and of concern not only for his fellow citizens but for all the peoples of the world.

[English]

It has been a custom of those who move and second the Speech from the Throne to, with the patience of this House, say a few words with respect to their ridings. I should like to observe that custom only briefly, and largely because it relates to another matter which has a great deal of importance for Canada at large. Each member of this House carries with him, of course, a certain pride in the history and geography, the people and the cultures he represents. It is a singular pleasure to represent the riding of Lachine for a number of reasons.

Historically, this House will recognize in Lachine the origins of our nation; the headquarters of the Hudson Bay Trading Company; the canal itself; the days of the voyageurs, when seven and eight hundred of those incredibly tough and adverturesome men headed out by canoe in the spring, for the waterways of Canada, to return months later laden with furs which were the original basis of the colony's economy.

The famous adverturer and explorer LaSalle was granted the seigniory in 1666, and rumour has it that some of his men, with a view to teasing him a bit about his determination to find the route to China, established the name of the seigniory as Lachine.

[English]

Members of this House who may be sticklers about translation may therefore choose to refer to the member for Lachine as a member of parliament for China. Four years later in 1670 the Sulpicians built a fort some distance away, the Fort de la Presentation. The area is now the modern city of Dorval and its airport. The present-day area of Pointe Claire began its existence in the late 17th century. Canada has been good to these three cities; today Lachine is said to be the most highly industrialized city on earth. Dorval and Pointe Claire combine with Lachine to form a remarkable trio of cities, containing 700 corporations doing extensive business as well as residential areas of calm and beauty. I have described this riding as a prelude to a subject which should never have become an issue in this past election, but which did in fact become an issue and I believe to the regret of many people.

In Lachine we are a bilingual community. Side by side and interspersed with one another, in combination with other ethnic groups which form the mosaic of Canada, the two official languages of Canada meet and intertwine.

[English]

It will not have escaped the notice of members of this House that the hon. member for Nipissing, who has just moved the acceptance of the throne speech, is a Francophone from Ontario. He is, therefore, a member of a minority language group in his own province. I, too, am a member of a minority in the province of my residence, the Province of Quebec. However, together we agree that our nation is built of two founding language groups; that each linguistic group must be able to deal with the federal government in the language of its choice. In view of the results of the past election, I should like to go even further.

My colleagues and I from the Province of Quebec have not come to this House of Commons to preside over or take part in any discussion as to the right of either language group to address itself to and to communicate with its federal government in the language of his choice. It is not a matter to be discussed. It is a matter of right.

It is not a privilege to be accorded by one government or another, it is an absolute moral and legal right on the part of French Canadians, just as it is on the part of English Canadians, to make use of their language when communicating with this government.

[English]

There are those who claim that the bilingualization of the public service has gone too far too fast. May I say with great respect to the members of this House that it has proceeded not too quickly, but altogether too slowly. None the less, the government in its wisdom has seen fit to stress, again because of the confusion,—and I sometimes wonder if the confusion has not been deliberately cultivated and exploited by those opposed to bilingualization—that the process of bilingualization of the Public Service of Canada is limited in scope and absolutely protective of the rights of all members of the public service.

In due course a number of positions—a relatively small number, some 25,000 out of a total of 300,000 public service positions—will be designated as being of a bilingual character. Approximately half of those 25,000 positions are occupied by people who are bilingual. Those holding such positions will have the option of learning a second language or of transferring laterally into positions of equal pay and status and equal opportunity for advancement.

I take this matter to be of the utmost seriousness. Many of us had thought that the great debate on Canadian unity was over; that the issue was at least settled in the sense that Canadians from one coast to another, had accepted the fact that we are a bilingual bicultural nation. It is quite apparent that the subject is not settled, that in the minds of some people there are grounds for further discussion and delay.

My colleagues and I from the Province of Quebec do not come to ask this privilege of the government of Canada; we are not here to debate this principle; we shall not debate it. It is an absolute right without which there is no meaning to the word Canada as we know it now.

[English]

Bilingualism in the federal government is the primary requisite to the unity of Canada. If there are those in our nation who believe that accessibility to government service in both languages is too much of a problem, then permit me as a Quebec Anglophone to assure those of you who feel that way that you shall soon be presiding over the redrawing of the map of Canada.

The people of Canada recently, through the last election, made a statement. That statement has been interpreted in many ways, more often to suit the needs of the interpreters than to suit the needs and the message of the people. A government today is faced with the obligation of assisting those who need assistance, and giving the widest latitude to those who, not hindered by ill health or economic disaster, can handle their own problems and wish to do so. The programs of this government over the past four years have in many cases been designed to assist those in need. Canadians, I think, are sufficiently charitable and solicitous of their neighbour that they would encourage parliament to provide every opportunity for less fortunate Canadians to overcome obstacles not of their own creation.

The abuse of any program of public assistance must be stopped without delay, lest those without conscience misuse the generosity of the nation. Steps have been taken already to cure such abuse, not by denying our less fortunate citizens the right to our assistance but by ensuring that the few—and there are a very few—cannot abuse the generosity of the Canadian people.

Canadians have also underlined another right, namely the right of every individual to succeed; the right to expect the maximum possible benefits from his work, whether intellectual or physical; the right to assume that agressiveness in the market place is and remains in Canada a talent to be rewarded by success and material comfort. The problem of government is to assure a sense of moral justice that we, as Canadians, help our less fortunate neighbours in every way possible while at the same time assuring the entrepeneur and the employee that their efforts and ingenuity will result in increasing material comfort.

To assist those who have a moral claim upon all of us, the Speech from the Throne proposes a modified guaranteed annual income to assist the unemployed, the aged, the blind, and the disabled.

[English]

It is of particular gratification, I think, to every member of this House that the elderly, the people who worked to put this country together so that the younger generation might enjoy it and its benefits, shall be further recognized and compensated for their lives of contribution to Canada.

[Translation]

Recognizing that there are regional disparities, it is proposed that various provinces shall have the right to impose variations within the social programs set forth, to better assist those in need in their respective areas of jurisdiction. In matters of urban affairs, those who—and they are the majority of Canadians—pass their lives in cities and metropolitan areas are recognized as having special problems.

[English]

With land assembly programs and rehabilitation of older neighbourhoods, we should be able to assure Canada that its cities will not be desecrated as have so many others throughout the rest of the world by unplanned expansion. With co-operation between the federal government and the provinces in matters economic, the recommendations of the Economic Council, proposals in the fields of health and education, the foreign ownership of land, together with a suggested western Canada conference on the economic future of the area as well as an extensive set of programs to assist business and the Canadian private entrepreneur, there is every reason to expect that Canadians will enjoy an economy which leaves no man downtrodden by ill luck or disadvantage occurring through no fault of his own and, at the same time, an economy which encourages the businessman, both extensive and small, to develop his business and to show a profit for his ingenuity and capacity.

Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to have been given this opportunity to second the motion of the hon. member for Nipissing. May I thank the Prime Minister and his cabinet, as well as yourself, for your courteous patience with a freshman Member of Parliament.

I take pleasure in seconding the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne.

On motion of Mr. Stanfield the debate was adjourned.

PROCEDURE FOR MOTION ON VIET NAM WAR

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, may I turn now to the question of the resolution standing in the name of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp). Our consultations have resulted in an agreement that would permit the House to deal with this resolution at 2 p.m. and that the debate be confined to one spokesman per party with a time limit of 15 minutes. We could then complete that debate at the end of an hour and dispose of the question. I should like to suggest that this agreement be put in the form of a House order and that we resume at two o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is agreed and so ordered. Is it the wish of the House that I call it one o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

[Translation]

The House will resume at 2 p.m.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM WAR—CONTINUATION OF HOSTILITIES

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs) moved:

That this House

1. Has noted with grave concern the continuation of hostilities in North and South Viet Nam as well as in Cambodia and Laos, and deplores the recent large-scale bombing in the Hanoi-Haiphong area;

2. Is aware of the possibility that Canada will be called upon to play some new supervisory role following cessation of hostilities in Viet Nam;

3. Welcomes the resumption of the negotiations for a cessation of hostilities in Viet Nam;

4. Welcomes the cessation of the bombing of the Hanoi-Haiphong area;

5. Requests all the parties involved in the conflict to refrain from acts of a warlike nature that could jeopardize the success of the present negotiations;

6. Requests the government of the United States to refrain from a resumption of the aerial bombardment of the Hanoi-Haiphong area;

7. Requests the Government to convey the text of this resolution to the participants in the Paris negotiations on Viet Nam.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people, this House and the government have for many years now been distressed by the continuation of hostilities in Indo-China and by the suffering that events there have wrought upon all those concerned. As I said on December 17 last, when the negotiations between the United States and North Viet Nam appeared to have broken down, the Canadian government deeply regretted that the negotiations had not yet reached a successful conclusion. We welcome the fact that those negotiations have resumed this week.

In the interval, however, we were shaken by the large scale bombing in the Hanoi-Haiphong area. We found it very difficult to understand the reasons for that bombing or the purpose which it was intended to serve. We deplore that action and we have communicated our view of it to the United States authorities.

When at the end of December the United States government decided to stop the bombing in the Hanoi-Haiphong area, we welcomed that. We said so to the government of the United States and we expressed our hope, as friends and neighbours, that the bombing would not resume. That bombing, terrible as it is, is only part of a larger situation which deeply troubles the Canadian people and which equally concerns the government. There continues to be a high level of hostility and violence on both sides in Viet Nam, and we deplore that as well.

We have not lost sight of North Viet Nam's continued military intervention in the affairs of Cambodia, Laos and South Viet Nam, and in particular the abhorrent disregard for innocent human life displayed in the almost routine attacks against the civilian populations of those countries.

It is, I think, more than a pious hope to say that the issues which have led to a generation of conflict in Viet Nam, and indeed in all of Indo-China, should not be resolved by violence; they should be resolved by negotiations. To all those who believe that, it is distressing to observe the violence which continues while negotiations take place and to contemplate the possibility that the continuation of such violence could endanger the progress of negotiations. Since 1965 when the bombing of North Viet Nam began, Canadian governments have consistently taken the view that resort to force in this form was counter productive in the Viet Nam context.

Canada has a special interest in this matter, and not only because we are close neighbours of the United States. We have been involved in the past 18 years in the thankless task of supervising an earlier settlement and of trying, without success, to make that supervision effective. Beyond that we have been given clear indications of the possibility of our being asked to accept a further role.

It has been indicated to us that Canada would be acceptable to all the parties as one of the members of a new international body which it is expected the present negotiations will create when, and if, they are successful. Canada has not yet been formally invited to participate in this new international presence; indeed, I anticipate that no such invitation will be addressed to any of the potential members until an agreement is concluded. We have, however, been asked to consider the possibility and we have done so most carefully.

Canada would, of course, wish to play a constructive role in assisting a peaceful political settlement if the parties wished it to do so, if that role were within Canada's capabilities and resources and if it held the promise of success. The government has long wished to see military violence end in Viet Nam and to see its friend and neighbour, the United States, disengage itself from that military conflict.

If the parties to that conflict invite Canada to play a role in which we could effectively contribute to a cessation of hostilities there and which would help the United States to end its military involvement in Viet Nam, we would of course consider the invitation sympathetically and constructively. There is no question, however, of Canada, as a part of a new commission, attempting to maintain peace through the use of arms. The implementation of the ceasefire would be the responsibility of the belligerents, and the role being contemplated for a new international commission would be to observe and report on the implementation of those parts of the ceasefire agreement which the commission is asked to supervise.

In considering the invitation to participate in a new commission, however, we would have an obligation to the people of Canada, to this House and to those Canadians who would be asked to go to Viet Nam to implement our role there which, I should emphasize once again, would not be a military role but would involve only observation and reporting, to ensure that Canada's contribution could be a real and effective one and to ensure that Canada's attempt to contribute to peace not be reduced once again to impotence as it has been in the supervisory arrangements in Indo-China that emerged from the 1954 and 1962 Geneva Conferences.

Having our past experience very much in mind, in our discussions with the American authorities and in communications with the other parties to the Paris negotiations, as well as in public statements, the government has developed a number of conditions and criteria on which it would base its judgment on whether Canada should participate in a new international commission for Viet Nam. The first condition, and indeed the ultimate one, is that the provisions for the operation of the new organization, when taken as a whole, should be workable and offer real prospects of being effective.

Moving from the general to the particular, we have also stipulated that all the present belligerent parties, the United States, the Republic of Viet Nam, North Viet Nam and the Viet Cong, should be bound by the agreement the implementation of which the new commission would observe and report upon. In this same category we have required that there would be a "continuing political authority" which would assume responsibility for the settlement as a whole and to which the commission or any of its members would have access through reports or consultations. We would prefer it if such an authority could be provided for in the original agreements, but failing that we consider that it could be established by the international conference which, as we understand it, will be convened 30 days after the ceasefire.

We also have insisted that the proposed new commission should have the freedom of movement and observation within the demilitarized zone and in South Viet Nam necessary to achieve a proper exercise of its functions. Moreover, we have required that Canada should be invited to be a member of the new commission by all of the parties concerned.

In addition to these specific and essential considerations we have, from our broad experience in Viet Nam, put forward a number of other suggestions and requests. The extent to which they were met would also constitute elements in our assessment of the viability of the operation as a whole. As an additional condition we have stated that if all the essential criteria I have already mentioned were satisfied except that which relates to the existence of a "continuing political authority", we would be prepared to consider serving on the commission for a minimum of 60 days during which we would assess the outcome of the international conference with particular reference to the establishment of a "continuing political authority". If no such authority was created or if, once created, it ceased to exist, Canada would have to reserve the right to withdraw at any time, even after the initial two-month period. In any event, the government would not accept a commitment beyond two years, although some other formula for opting out on shorter notice might be acceptable.

We have also said that we assumed that the necessary logistic support for the new commission would be available from the outset to make its operation substantive and effective or even possible. The government has also urged that unrealistic demands should not be placed upon the new commission in the initial stages particularly, and that no unrealistic expectations should be vested in it. For example, the commission should not be expected to begin functioning in any part of Viet Nam before a ceasefire has been established locally by the belligerents themselves.

In respect of the international conference, it has been our view that it should be free to establish its own relationship with the commission or indeed with other provisions of the agreement or its protocols. The government has also taken the view that participants in the new commission should pay the salary and allowances for their own personnel but should not otherwise be expected to contribute to the general overhead and expenses of the organization. This was an idea originally put forward, that the members of the commission should also pay part of the infrastructure. We took the strongest exception to it.

Should Canada decide to participate, it would signify its acceptance by a formal unilateral communication to the parties. At the same time, the government would also communicate any reservations it may have in respect of the documents embodying the settlement or in respect of the commission or Canada's participation in it.

When all the texts are available, the government will examine them in the light of these criteria, conditions and viewpoints and make its own determination on the viability of the operation and on the existence of a suitable role for Canada. The government is conscious of the fact that there are several possible forms of response open to it between a simple refusal to take part at all to a full and unconditional involvement. The government's assessment of the relevant texts will also take into account the importance of contributing to a scaling-down of hostilities in Viet Nam and to the disengagement of American forces and the return of their prisoners of war. It is conceivable that the result of this examination might suggest a participation limited to certain aspects of the agreement or a participation for a limited period of time rather than an outright refusal or an unqualified undertaking to serve. If so, the parties concerned will be so advised, and if they found this acceptable Canada could take part on a limited basis.

Also drawing on our experience, we are conscious of the dangers of allowing ourselves to be frustrated as a member of the new international organization through the possible application of a rule of unanimity. One way in which this risk could be minimized would be by regarding the new body not as a diplomatic conference held under the normal rules of confidentiality but as an international forum where the proceedings are normally open to the public. Consequently, we would not regard the new commission's proceedings as confidential or privileged in any way unless there was in any particular instance a unanimous decision of all the members to the contrary. We would, instead, consider ourselves free to publicize the proceedings in any way we saw fit to ensure that our view of events and, if necessary, the difference between our view and that of others were publicly available.

In putting forward our conditions it was, of course, not our desire or intention to raise unnecessary difficulties or to seek any special position for ourselves. The fact is that Canada is in an excellent position to judge, from its own experience, what is necessary to a successful operation in international supervision, whether or not we become members of the proposed commission. Some of Canada's experience has been positive. Some of it, notably in Viet Nam, Laos and Cambodia where for 18 years we have tried to make international supervision work, has been profoundly disappointing. From that disappointment we have learned a good deal, and it is the light of what we have learned there that we have arrived at the position I have just described which we believe essential to the success of the operation in which we may be invited to participate.

Because of the possibility that we will be invited to accept a new supervisory role in Viet Nam and because of our long involvement in the Viet Nam problem, Canada, apart from the fact that it shares the interest of the whole world in the settlement of the Viet Nam war, has a particular interest in current developments there and in the negotiations which we all hope will bring an end to the conflict. This House embodies that interest, and I think it would be fitting that the House make known its view of the situation. For that reason we have proposed the motion which appears on the order paper. It is in terms which I believe deserve the support of all sides of the House. I conclude by saying, Mr. Speaker, that it is directed to all the parties in the Viet Nam conflict.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, you can well imagine that it is not without genuine emotion that, as the representative of the people of Saint-Hyacinthe, I rise for the first time in this House, in the company of such distinguished colleagues and facing colleagues no less distinguished. Mr. Speaker, that emotion is all the greater because of the profound importance of the resolution we are concerned with, in regard to which I have the honour to speak on behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and of all members of our caucus.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I should have much preferred, and I know my colleagues would have much preferred, that our first speech in this House should deal immediately with urgent problems, the economic problems that are besetting the people of Canada because we are most anxious to deal as soon as possible with unemployment, cost of living, old age pensions. We were elected to alleviate the anxiety of the Canadian people. Mentioning this anxiety may make our friends across the room laugh, but it certainly does not make the people laugh.

Mr. Speaker, despite our national problems, we are not indifferent to what is taking place elsewhere. We have no right to be. We identify with all our fellow humans, those who are suffering and we must remember that. Therefore, on behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition, on behalf of all my colleagues, I am anxious to support the resolution before us. We are aware of the importance of the war in Viet Nam, in Indochina. Human and ecological damages inflicted by air raids are terrifying. To date, there have been over six million casualties of all kinds: killed, wounded, refugees or homeless. This number is said to include at least, some four and half million civilians.

Studies have established that from 1968 to 1972 more tons of bombs have been dropped over Viet Nam than during the Second World War and the Korean War together, four million tons of bombs or the equivalent, it is said, of an atom bomb every five days. Immense areas have been sprinkled with bombs, rockets and mines, tto such an extent that their capacity to sustain a population is jeopardized. So the economic and social structures have disintegrated in a great many villages.

With such facts and many others there is reason to worry and to publicly intervene on behalf of the whole population. Fundamentally, the Viet Nam war is raising a moral issue for all men. How can we as human beings go peacefully to sleep every night with a clear conscience while so many of our brothers have to suffer the pangs of war? How can we be proud of ourselves if we fail to attempt to put an end to this holocaust probably the greatest in the world history?

[English]

There can be no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that Canada would gain little from a position adopted by this parliament that tended in a disproportionate way to side with one or the other sides of the conflict. My party is concurring in the motion because we want to side with humanity.

While there may be those in this House who relish any opportunity to attack our neighbours to the south—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wagner: —that is not a pastime in which we should indulge, and it is not a pastime that is either productive or necessary.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wagner: One thing, Mr. Speaker, must be clear. There is never a good side in war for the civilians affected by the conflict. Some wars may be necessary, some may even be just; but for the innocent civilian, war means inhuman suffering and pain. It means incalculable loss.

With regard to Viet Nam I prefer to avoid making distinctions between the North Vietnamese civilians suffering under heavy bombings and the South Vietnamese civilians being victimized by terrorism of the worst order. Vietnamese on both sides of the demilitarized zone have suffered for too long. Their crops have gone unharvested; children have gone without education: indeed, their education has been that of war and suffering for too long. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we concur in the motion. We concur because we believe that both sides have the capacity to bring about a just peace and, indeed, a lasting one.

We happen to believe that as friends of the United States we have a duty to make our humanitarian concerns known and understood as clearly as possible. No friendship, even between two countries, can thrive if one of the partners in that friendship is anything less than honest about those things that are important to its people.

We believe, as well, as a nation that began under the stewardship of my colleagues, the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), the type of trade partnership with members of the communist bloc from which both sides have benefited, that we can articulate to the communist bloc our desire that it bring its full weight to bear so that the suffering in Indo-China can come to an end.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that all Canadians desire the suffering in Indo-China to halt. I believe it is in Canada's national and quite selfish interest for long drawn-out wars anywhere in the world to be ended quickly and with no more bloodshed. It is in that frame of mind, and with the desire to have parliament move on to the pressing and important domestic problems that threaten the quality of life of Canadians from coast to coast, that I express my party's support for this motion.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, having in mind the solidarity of our oppressed fellow human beings and a true humanitarian feeling, and not because of any anti-Americanism, we second the motion which does provide that all parties to the conflict refrain from military operations which are likely to be prejudicial to the actual and complete success of the negotiations now taking place.

Mr. Speaker, this position taken by our party is an answer to an invitation which was given to men two thousand years ago and which said: "Peace to men of good will".

• (1430)

[English]

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to express my congratulations to the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) for his impressive maiden speech in this House and to say that we in this party welcome him as a colleague in the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party will support the motion moved by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp). We do so, not because we would have drafted a resolution in the same language or indeed in the same tone; we feel so passionately about the immense tragedy of the war in Viet Nam and its barbarities that we would like the language to be more emphatic. However, we think it important that the people of Canada through their elected representatives should speak as far as possible with one voice on this matter which is affecting the conscience of the world. We do not propose to move any amendments to the resolution.

It is entirely appropriate that Canadians, who by their proximity to the United States have a special and friendly relationship with that country, should speak out at a time when the senseless and cruel destruction of heavily populated urban centres of North Viet Nam by American aircraft has caused horror and revulsion throughout the civilized world, and not least on the part of many Americans.

It is not the enemies of the United States who feel most strongly on this subject. The good name of the United States of America is involved, and it is the friends of the United States who have believed that the United States is a great and generous nation who most deeply regret seeing the good name of that country besmirched by the action we are discussing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: We in this party have consistently expressed our vigorous opposition to the American intervention in southeast Asia. We have done so when it has not been politically expedient to do so. We have from time to time condemned the silence and the evasion of our own government on this issue; therefore, all the more we welcome the fact that this resolution has been brought forward by the government.

We have felt that intervention was totally unjustified by international law. It flew in the teeth of the Geneva agreement of 1954 accepted by the community of nations. Its professed purpose was the defence of the right of self-determination for South Viet Nam. In fact, its result has been the imposition of an increasingly repressive dictatorship. The war has had disastrous consequences, not only through massive loss of life and devastation of a whole country but in its implications for the people of the United States itself and, indeed, people throughout the world.

It is fitting that Canada should join leaders of countries such as Sweden and, happily, our fellow members of the Commonwealth, Australia and New Zealand, in expressing what we do today and what has been stated by the Secretary General of the United Nations and religious leaders throughout the world. The leader of the British Labour Party, who is by no means unfriendly to the United States, has seen fit to cancel a lecture tour in that country, to try to impress upon them the feelings of other people on this subject.

We call upon the Congress of the United States to exercise to the full its powers to end the conflict. Just a few weeks ago an official American spokesman used the expression "peace is at hand", yet in a futile effort to influence these negotiations, massive terror has been directed at the civilian population of North Viet Nam. What a Canadian described as "carpet bombing" has been rained down on residential areas, hospitals and embassies. There has been no serious pretence that the bombing has been confined to military targets.

James Reston, the editor of the New York Times, a distinguished American writer, has called what happened "power without pity". Even a Republican senator, Senator Saxbe, has said that the U.S. administration has taken leave of its senses. I do not expect the government to make any such statement but I think we in this House are entitled to echo what has been stated by a Republican senator.

Some years ago a famous U.S. general, General Curtis Lemay, said that American policy should be to bomb North Viet Nam back into the Stone Age. At the time, this was thought to be the mere ranting of an extremist but it now appears to have become the policy of the American administration. We, therefore, welcome the clause in the resolution that deplores the recent large-scale bombing. In our view, however, the resolution would be improved if it called for the cessation of bombing altogether. The present resolution limits this to welcoming the cessation of the bombing of the Hanoi-Haiphong area. We think all the bombing should stop, and we would prefer to see the resolution amended in that light. As I have explained, we do not propose to make any formal amendment but we suggest that the resolution could be strengthened in this way. While we welcome the resolution, we wish it dealt with the question of signing the treaty negotiated in October, thus bringing hostilities to an end.

I do not wish to comment on internal political affairs of the United States, but the confidence expressed before November 4 that peace was at hand and the subsequent actions of the administration seem, to say the least, strangely inconsistent. As far as this party is concerned, we wish to state that all military action should be brought to an end and all U.S. troops and military personnel withdrawn from Indo-China. In our view they should never have been there in the first place, and after these many years of savage and barbaric war the only effective answer is complete withdrawal. The President of the United States has spoken of "peace with honour". There can be no honour without peace.

We hope, although the resolution does not mention it, that our government will raise this matter at the United Nations. It is our view that the United Nations is used too infrequently: it is the conscience of mankind and is an instrument that should be used by mankind in crises of this sort. The Secretary General has expressed his deep concern about the situation, and no doubt an overwhelming majority of the nations of the world deeply deplore the continuation of this war and the barbaric way in which it is being conducted. Surely an expression of world conscience, through the United Nations, would have a powerful impact upon the United States where, as I have said, fortunately a number of powerful voices have been raised against the policy that has been adopted by the administration.

I do not wish to delay the vote by making a lengthy speech on the subject; the sooner this resolution is passed, the better. I conclude by repeating the conclusion of a statement on Viet Nam made by our caucus a few days ago: in the name of humanity, the killing must stop.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): It is a great pleasure for me to take part in this important debate. I must immediately inform the House that our group support this motion in view of the useless massacres taking place every day in that part of the world. We believe it is important to end this killing which has lasted far too long.

Viet Nam War

However, on reading yesterday's Hansard, I was surprised to find the following statement made by the member for York South (Mr. Lewis), in the next to the last paragraph, left column, page 7:

> We believe, Mr. Speaker, as we said in a statement yesterday, that it is the duty of this parliament, at the earliest possible moment to express its abhorence of the destruction already produced and to appeal to the President and Congress of the United States to end unconditionally—

—and I underline "unconditionally"—

> —all bombing in North and South Viet Nam, to sign the treaty negotiated last fall and to bring an end to all military action on both sides.

Mr. Speaker, I was greatly surprised by this statement, because whether it be a simple scuffle, a street brawl or a war, it takes at least two to fight, and I am yet to be convinced that the United States of America were the only country thrusting itself upon Viet Nam.

I am sure that there is a third party in that war. And when I see demonstrations and hear dissenters like the hon. member for York South shouting in the streets, everywhere: "Yankees go home", I think they should also add "Russia go home, China go home".

I cannot believe that a country as weak as North Viet Nam is said to be can stand up alone to a military power as strong as the combined forces of the U.S. and South Viet Nam. That is impossible.

There has been ample evidence that Russian or Chinese armaments have been found on battlefields. This is an indication that the North Viet Nam communists are having strong support in this war which aims at establishing communism in the whole of Indochina.

• (1440)

Mr. Speaker, in the past wars were often waged for the love of a woman. The ladies will excuse me but this is a fact. On the other hand our modern wars are rather wars for nylon, polyethylene or oil and the Indochina war is an oil war itself and those who will benefit from the huge oil deposits which exist there will have their say since they will control this part of the world.

Mr. Speaker, this nation is composed of seven separate sections and, in my opinion, an additional section should have been inserted between sections six and seven and should read as follows:

> That this House requests North Viet Nam to put an end to subversion by guerilla warfare and requests the U.S.S.R. and Communist China to withdraw from this conflict simultaneously with the U.S.A.

Any war is obviously terrible and if we want this war to end soon each party involved should show enough goodwill in their negotiations and actions to prove that it is possible to grant the Vietnamese people, whether from North or South Viet Nam, complete liberty to choose their own government. Thus the neighbouring countries will be reassured, mainly Laos and Cambodia which are quite aware that as soon as the American forces withdraw from Indo-China, communism will extend to their own territory.

Mr. Speaker, as a member country of the International Control Commission in Vietnam, we are not quite sure until now of the importance of our participation as was the case for about all our previous participations of this kind and Canada, through the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), has stated that, if required, we were prepared to provide a control commission with all possible assistance to see that cease-fire is enforced.

Mr. Speaker, this control commission of which Canada would be a member should have free access to all information. After the cease-fire, it should have carte blanche to have it respected by the parties concerned, otherwise it will not be able to fulfil its task.

So, Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that, for humanitarian reasons, we must make the necessary recommendations and accept this resolution so as to stress, not only to the Americans but also to the other party concerned, the necessity, the urgency and the wish that this war cease as soon as possible.

Motion agreed to.

On motion of Mr. MacEachen the House adjourned at 2.50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, January 8, 1973

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

MISCELLANEOUS ESTIMATES

PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF STRIKING COMMITTEE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the first report of the Striking Committee. As I would like to move concurrence in this report on motions I should like to read it. It is very brief and reads as follows:

Your committee recommends that the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates be composed of the following members: Messrs. Alexander, Balfour, Caouette (Charlevoix), Clermont, Comtois, Demers, Gauthier (Ottawa East), Grafftey, Langlois, Leblanc (Laurier), Lundrigan, Mather, McGrath, Nielsen, Orlikow, Poulin, Reilly, Roy (Laval) and Woolliams.

CONCURRENCE IN REPORT OF STRIKING COMMITTEE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council) moved that the first report of the Striking Committee, presented this day, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES(A), 1972-73

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting Supplementary Estimates(A) for the financial year ending March 31, 1973, was presented by Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board) and read by Mr. Speaker to the House.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 59 I move:

That the Supplementary Estimates(A), 1972-73, tabled this day, be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, of course this is not a debatable motion, but on a point of order I should like to say that while we accept this motion we do so without prejudice to our right to assert when the estimates are considered by the committee that they include Governor General's warrants. In accepting the motion now we reserve the right, if necessary, to take exception to the use of Governor General's warrants which are payments urgently required for the public good. Our acceptance now is without prejudice to that right being asserted later.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

TRADE

IMPOSITION BY UNITED STATES OF DUTY ON MICHELIN TIRES IMPORTED FROM CANADA—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask leave of the House to move a motion on a subject of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the wide repercussions of the recent duties imposed by United States authorities on Michelin tires manufactured in Canada, raising consequent questions about our regional economic development policies, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion meet immediately with their United States counterparts for the purpose of ascertaining whether the Americans would rescind these duties until multilateral trade talks between our two nations take place.

Mr. Speaker: Motions under Standing Order 43 require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity so the motion cannot be put and debated at this time.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

TRADE

IMPOSITION BY UNITED STATES OF DUTY ON MICHELIN TIRES IMPORTED FROM CANADA

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the worrisome precedent set by United States authorities in imposing a duty on Michelin tires, with possible international repercussions and a direct effect on Canadian regional development policies, will the minister now say whether this in fact is an isolated case as he indicated earlier?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I did not make any such direct assertion that it was an isolated case. I said at that time I hoped it would be, and that continues to be the case.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, is the minister now aware that two of seven Canadian pulp companies which were recently hit by United States tariffs in respect of their products were also in receipt of DREE aid, and how does he propose to deal with this situation in the general context of regional development policies?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I think that question is so broad in scope it would be impossible for me to answer it in terms that you would permit. I would be glad, however, to discuss it with the hon. member, obtain more specific data from him and try to give him an answer.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Since both the federal and provincial governments have large sums of money committed in the form of grants or loans to Michelin, is any co-ordinated action being undertaken by the federal government and the premier and government of Nova Scotia toward having the special import duty on Michelin tires reviewed or rescinded?

Mr. Jamieson: The answer is yes, but perhaps my colleague the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who is more directly concerned with what I might describe as foreign trade matters, might be able to amplify.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce should be allowed to reply to my question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member for York South might be recognized now. The minister might be allowed to reply to the question on this subject asked by the hon. member for South Shore, but I have recognized the hon. member for York South. We might allow him to ask his question and then come back to the other question.

MICHELIN TIRE COMPANY—PROPOSED PLANT IN UNITED STATES—MAINTENANCE OF CANADIAN PRODUCTION

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce on this same subject. In view of the fact, as already stated, that both the federal and provincial governments have made large grants to Michelin and in view of the company's announcement that it intends to build a plant in the United States, will the minister inform the House whether the government has obtained assurances from Michelin that it will continue to produce and export the number of tires it undertook to produce and export at the time the DREE grant was applied for and received by the company?

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in replying to this question might at the same time reply to the question of the hon. member for South Shore which I believe was substantially the same.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, on the first question, representations will be made to the United States authorities—

Mr. Baldwin: Will be made or have been made?

Mr. Gillespie: Representations have been made, but additional representations will be made in view of the finding now made by the United States administration. On the second point of the hon. member for York South, the question of assurances, so far as I am concerned the commitment stands.

Mr. Lewis: I have a further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the minister whether in any representations made to the government of the United States the minister or any other member of the government is seeking assurances from Washington that this unilateral action in the case of Michelin tires and in the case of some other products will not be continued in respect of any other exports from other firms receiving government grants in this country?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes.

Mr. Lewis: Is that part of the trade negotiations continuing with the United States government? Are those negotiations in fact continuing and is the auto pact part of those negotiations as well as this problem?

Mr. Gillespie: The question of negotiations with the United States will after confidence is given to the government by the House. I would expect discussions to start shortly thereafter. With regard to the particular point of Michelin, we would hope it is an isolated situation. I think it is worth pointing out to the House that this was not an initiative of the United States government but was in response to a complaint by the United States rubber manufacturers.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of the minister's statement that he does not intend to do anything about this matter until there is a vote of confidence I should like to ask him whether he believes a government that sits back and does nothing about this matter deserves a vote of confidence?

MICHELIN TIRE COMPANY—INQUIRY AS TO REMISSION OF DUTIES ON IMPORTS INTO CANADA

Mr. Lewis: I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, this time to the Minister of Finance. In view of the statement made by Michelin to the United States Commissioner of Customs that the company had been promised by the previous Minister of Finance, Mr. Benson, that there would be tariff remissions on Michelin tires imported into Canada, will the Minister of Finance inform the House whether such a promise was in fact made and whether that promise is still in effect or whether, as I hope is the case, the government has had enough sense to rescind it?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept the preamble to the question because I was not party to any negotiations that might have taken place between my predecessor and Michelin Tire, but I can assure the hon. member that there has been no remission of duty.

CANADA-UNITED STATES—INCLUSION OF MICHELIN TIRE PROBLEM IN DISCUSSIONS

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can he tell the House whether the question of countervailing duties and our regional economic policies is one of the irritants in the continuing negotiations that will evidently resume after the vote in the House?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Not as far as I am aware, Mr. Speaker. As my colleague said, this action arose out of a complaint by a United States manufacturer; it was not instituted by the government of the United States.

Mr. Nowlan: Does the Secretary of State for External Affairs intend to add this matter to the list of subjects for discussion between the United States and this country when and if he decides to enter into such discussions again?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Like all members of the House, we hope that the question of assistance to various regions in this country will not be frustrated by action of that kind.

AGRICULTURE

DAIRYING—SUGGESTED INCREASE IN SUBSIDIES

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture?

Since there is an increased demand for dairy products, will the minister advise the Canadian Dairy Commission to increase subsidies for the next dairy year?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we are having a meeting with the Dairy Commission one day this week, at which time this will be discussed.

QUEBEC—LOANS TO FARMERS—INQUIRY AS TO AGREEMENT WITH PROVINCE TO PAY HALF OF LENDERS' LOSSES

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Can he inform the House whether he has signed an agreement with the Quebec government whereby the federal government will pay half of the losses that financial institutions suffer in making loans to farmers in that province.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): I would have to check, Mr. Speaker, to see what papers I did sign. I have no recollection of such a document.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Murta: While the minister is checking to see what papers he has signed, I wonder if he could indicate whether a similar program would be available to other farmers in other provinces of Canada?

Mr. Whelan: I can say as Minister of Agriculture that any programs under my signature that apply to one part of Canada will apply to farmers in other parts of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): What about Peace River?

FEED GRAIN—REQUEST FOR PAYMENT OF SUBSIDIES

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Does he intend to take immediate steps in order to do justice to the Canadian or Quebec farmers, especially those from the Saint-Hyacinthe constituency, who have been waiting months for the $400 subsidy which has been refused or unduly delayed for administrative reasons?

I see that the matter makes the government members sneer—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member having asked his question, the minister could perhaps reply.

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): I know that you, Sir, are personally aware of some of these problems in other parts of Canada than Saint-Hyacinthe. I am sure the Chair is aware of how just the Department of Agriculture has been and will be in dealing with them, and you can be sure we will deal with them in a just and fair manner.

• (1420)

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Until such time as an adequate bill is passed, does the minister intend to take steps to help the Quebec farmers, specially those of Saint-Hyacinthe, who face an unbelievable high increase in the cost of feed grains in the province?

[English]

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I think we have made the picture as clear as possible. We are reviewing the whole topic of how to supply feed grain equitably all across the nation. If the hon. member has any suggestions on how we can act any better or any faster, I would be pleased to hear them.

OLD AGE SECURITY

INQUIRY AS TO INCREASE IN BASIC AMOUNT AND LOWERING OF AGE OF ELIGIBILITY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the general reference in the throne speech to the taking of steps to improve the economic conditions of old age pensioners, may I ask the minister if those steps will include an increase in the basic amount of the old age security pension? Will they also include a lowering of the eligibility age?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I expect to be able to make a statement in the House on this subject later on.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): When is "later on"? Could it be this week?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ELIGIBILITY OF LOCAL INITIATIVE PROJECT ORGANIZERS FOR BENEFITS

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Is the government about to notify all local initiative project organizers that they are no longer eligible for unemployment insurance benefits?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this kind of ruling emanates from the Department of National Revenue. In light of the story that appeared in the press this morning I have asked my officials to review that aspect of it, and I shall be able to advise the House further after discussions have been completed.

Mr. Fraser: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, can the government assure this House that organizers of local initiative projects who are contributing to the unemployment insurance fund will remain eligible for unemployment insurance benefits?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I would not give that assurance until I have completed the examination to which I have referred. I can, of course, assure the hon. member, and through him those people affected, that if they are not eligible for benefits all the premiums they have paid into the fund will be refunded to them. But until this examination is completed I would not go further at this stage.

Mr. Fraser: Can the minister tell us if the reports that have appeared in the newspapers today, to which he alluded, indicate a change of policy on behalf of the government?

Mr. Andras: No, Mr. Speaker, they do not indicate a change of policy. As I indicated in my earlier answer, that decision was made by the Department of National Revenue ruling whether the person involved was an employer or not for the purpose of getting unemployment insurance benefits. What I am saying is that we are reviewing that decision with the various departments involved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—PROPOSED PEACEKEEPING FORCE—INQUIRY AS TO MEETING BETWEEN CANADA AND OTHER SUGGESTED MEMBERS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the Canadian government proposed a meeting with the other three countries that have been proposed for a peacekeeping role in Viet Nam—Hungary, Indonesia and Poland—to work out satisfactory conditions for carrying out such a role and, if not, does the Canadian government intend to propose such a meeting in the very near future?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question is simply no. However, we have been in touch with representatives of these countries. Since we have not made a decision to participate, of course it would not be appropriate for us to have meetings on the basis of which we would be committed.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, since we all hope that the time is coming very close when such a peacekeeping role will be necessary, is the government simply going to allow itself to drift along once again into a situation of this kind without doing any preparatory work—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: —as has often been the case in the past?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member realizes that a question in those terms is not in order.

INCOME TAX

TIME OF REINTRODUCTION OF AMENDMENTS TO ACT

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In elaboration on the reply given by the Prime Minister to the Leader of the Opposition the other day, would the minister advise the House if it is the intention of the government to reintroduce what was known as Bill C-222 immediately or within the next few days rather than wait for the budget that may come in the weeks ahead?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I thought I dealt with that in some detail on Friday. I am having consultations with the House leader as to the best way of reintroducing the substance of Bill C-222.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Without waiting for the budget?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the issue is open until I have had a full opportunity to canvass this with my colleagues.

PROVISION OF FORMS FOR 1972 RETURNS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary either to the Minister of Finance or the Minister of National Revenue. Will the minister's decision have any effect on when taxpayers will be able to secure the proper forms for tax returns for last year?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no. Preparation of the tax return forms takes about three and a half months. The decision was made in the middle of last September to prepare them so that they could go out starting this week, I hope, in order that people entitled to refunds could file and have their returns processed as quickly as possible.

Mr. Baldwin: Have you got enough trucks to send them out?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton West.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member, on a point of order.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I can understand why you are used to seeing me sit on the other side of the House but I must point out to you that I am here now.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): I got up at least half a dozen times.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I did not see the hon. member but I did hear him. I shall recognize him in a moment.

[English]

For the moment I recognize the hon. member for Hamilton West.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVE PROGRAMS—APPROVAL OF PROJECTS AND DISTRIBUTION OF FUNDS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In light of the fact the minister indicated on December 6 that he would direct his officials to process LIP programs in order that the new funds in the sum of some $80 million could be allocated immediately and since we are now in January, can the minister inform the House whether all the funds have now been distributed? I understand that some $50 million worth of projects are sitting on his desk awaiting approval.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, they are not sitting on my desk awaiting my approval but about $50 million of the fund is still being examined in terms of the some 11,000 project applications we have had and we are processing these just as quickly as possible.

An hon. Member: Are they for summer employment?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A number of members would like to ask supplementaries but perhaps in fairness the Chair should recognize the hon. member for Témiscamingue. I recognize that he should have been called before. I realize that there are a number of supplementaries on the subject raised by the hon. member for Hamilton West, but I now recognize the hon. member for Témiscamingue and we will take the supplementaries later.

CLOSING OF CIP PLANT IN TEMISCAMING—DISCUSSION WITH QUEBEC AUTHORITIES RESPECTING REOPENING

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I am afraid of over here is the questions of the Progressive Conservatives.

Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

I apologize for coming back to this matter, but since Friday has his department had further communications with the provincial authorities of Quebec in connection with the CIP plant in Temiscaming?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): No, Mr. Speaker, not specifically with regard to that particular project. The consultation to which I referred on Friday was with the minister, my counterpart in the province of Quebec, and it related to a meeting which we are proposing to hold later this week and at which I have no doubt the Temiscaming question as well as a number of others will be discussed.

POSSIBILITY OF DECLARING TEMISCAMING SPECIAL AREA

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Is it the intention of the minister or his department to designate the town of Temiscaming as a "special area"?

[English]

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, this would be part of any proposal that we might be able to work out in order to assist this particular project. As the hon. member knows, it is quite complex from a variety of angles and this is what we are looking at now not only in consultation with Quebec; I hope also to talk with the promoters of the project.

LOCAL INITIATIVE PROGRAMS—APPROVAL OF PROJECTS AND DISTRIBUTION OF FUNDS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a short supplementary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration in view of the enlightening statement he just made in regard to the $50 million which apparently means some 50,000 jobs. Can the minister inform the House when he intends to have the balance of this money allocated? Can he give us some indication of when this money will be distributed?

• (1430)

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I could not give a precise date, but in all sincerity, it will be done just as quickly as it can be done wisely.

COMMUNICATIONS

BELL CANADA RATE INCREASE APPLICATION—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Communications. In view of the concern about inflation and price increases expressed in the Speech from the Throne, will the Minister of Communications make a statement on motions concerning the government's attitude toward Bell Canada's imminent application for a rate increase?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I do not deem it necessary to make a statement on this subject at the moment. The hon. member knows that hearings before the Transport Commission have begun today or will in a day or two. Therefore, I do not think it would be appropriate to make a statement at this time. However, if it became clear that such a declaration were needed, I would not hesitate to do so.

[Mr. Jamieson.]

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary North.

Mr. Grier: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member for Calgary North. Perhaps we might allow a supplementary to the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore.

Mr. Grier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister assure the House that he will at least draw the attention of the Canadian Transport Commission to the fact that two of Bell's subsidiaries in the fiscal year 1971-72 received $8.8 million in federal grants, according to the public accounts released today?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member will appreciate that that is a representation. The hon. member for Calgary North.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

DATE OF CONFERENCE WITH WESTERN PROVINCES—AGENDA

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the date has been set for the proposed conference between the federal government and British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba and whether a statement will be made to the House as to the priorities that will be discussed in reference to the economic opportunities as mentioned in the Speech from the Throne at that western conference?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as to the date, none has been set. The announcement, of course, was only made last week in the Speech from the Throne and exchanges are now taking place between the provinces and myself to try to find a date and place for that conference as well as a proper agenda. On the second part of the question, the hon. member will see that in the Speech from the Throne itself several examples of things that we think should be discussed are given there.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, may I ask one supplementary following what the Prime Minister said. Is the Prime Minister considering discussing with the western provinces in particular that phase of the change in taxation under which the estate tax was abolished and replaced by a capital gains tax so that those provinces will share, as they did in the previous tax provisions, to the extent of 75 per cent of the national revenue?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we will refuse to discuss no subject which is placed on the agenda by the provinces themselves. I would hope that at this particular conference we would especially consider items which have to do particularly with the economic development of the western provinces and not necessarily with subjects that are common to all provinces, or a multitude of provinces, and which can be discussed at other forums such as the finance ministers' meetings.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVE PROGRAMS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PROGRESS IN APPROVING PROJECTS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Hamilton West of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the deep concern on the part of organizations, particularly in areas of high unemployment, over the delays in having their local initiatives projects approved, would the minister investigate the reasons for the delays and make a statement on motions at the earliest possible opportunity outlining the reasons for the difficulties, the state of progress at present and the expected date of final approvals?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will give that request consideration.

ACTION TO EXPEDITE DEPARTMENTAL LABOUR-INTENSIVE PROJECTS

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. Under the $60 million federal labour-intensive program to bring forward departmental projects contemplated for future years, what action has the minister taken to put this program into effect and what criteria are being used as to the allocation of funds among the various departments and regions?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I assume the hon. member would expect the minister to give that information by way of a statement on motions.

LOCAL INITIATIVE PROGRAMS—ALLEGED DELAY IN CONSIDERING APPLICATIONS FROM BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. Could the Minister of Manpower and Immigration explain to the House why it was, particularly in British Columbia, according to my personal knowledge, that all LIP applications for municipalities were postponed and given the last possible consideration for approval, thus preventing many municipalities from implementing programs before Christmas?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I was most certainly not aware of that condition. If the hon. member can give me details, I will be glad to investigate. As it stands now, I was not aware of that situation.

TRANSPORT

INQUIRY AS TO ACTION TO PREVENT CLOSING OF RAILWAY STATIONS IN WESTERN CANADA

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Does the minister propose any particular action to forestall the closing of many railway stations in western Canada, many of which are revenue producing?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the question is somewhat of a general nature and I would like to know the names of the stations referred to by the hon. member. I shall then be in a position to give him an answer.

[English]

Mr. Korchinski: Does the minister plan to have any meetings with the provincial authorities on this whole question, at which time all those names will be placed before him?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I say, Mr. Speaker, that I will meet the provinces not only on this but on the freight rate problem and many other problems as well.

Mr. Korchinski: When?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): After the throne speech debate.

Mr. Baldwin: Which one?

Mr. Korchinski: The minister is on record, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. Can the minister inform the House whether his department is looking into the possibility of postponing the 1975 date for rail line abandonment, in conjunction with the problem raised by the hon. member for Mackenzie?

Some hon. Members: Answer!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I asked the minister a question relating to the abandonment of rail lines by 1975 under applications by the railways to the Canadian Transport Commission. I hope the minister will inform himself about this major problem facing western Canada. I ask the minister again if there will be—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has already asked his question.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF AMENDMENTS TO STAFF RELATIONS ACT

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Can the minister give the House some information as to when he intends to bring in amendments to the Public Service Staff Relations Act and whether we can anticipate legislation before the end of January?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, I am not in control of the House timetable. I will discuss this with the House leader.

[Later:]

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a brief supplementary to the government House leader. Can he indicate what priority the government attaches at present to amending the Public Service Staff Relations Act and other related acts of the parliament of this country?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in reply to that point, while we attach importance to changes to be made in that piece of legislation, I would not think that we could expect to see any bill for some time yet, certainly not in January.

LABOUR RELATIONS

WEST COAST LONGSHOREMEN—ACTION TO BRING ABOUT SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTE WITH MANAGEMENT

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Labour. Can he assure the House and country that his department is making every effort to keep management and labour at the bargaining table in the B.C. dock workers labour dispute?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would advise the hon. member that the parties had a ten-hour session on Friday. Much was accomplished. I think the parties intend to meet again to endeavour to resolve this dispute.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Is management prepared to go back to the bargaining table after the session on Friday?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have had no indication to the contrary yet.

PENITENTIARIES

INMATES' SUICIDES AND DRUG TRAFFIC—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Solicitor General.

Since several prisoners committed suicide lately in many penitentiaries and since a sixteen-year-old inmate of St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary hanged himself in his cell last Friday, will the hon. minister do something about that matter?

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I was informed about this unfortunate incident last Friday and asked for a full report. It seems that the unfortunate young man was seen in his cell at 11.30 p.m. and was found dead half an hour later. I have asked for a full report and will provide details to the House as soon as possible.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Will the inquiry the minister intends to hold also touch upon the suspected drug traffic in federal penal institutions?

[English]

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I have asked for another report on the drug problem arising from another incident that took place at the Leclair Institute on the weekend. I hope to have a full report on that as well, but that is a separate inquiry.

AIR TRANSPORT

INQUIRY AS TO ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW CHARTER FLIGHT REGULATIONS

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister inform the House when the new regulations affecting new air charter flights will be officially announced by the Canadian Transport Commission?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not know exactly when it will be. I know it is under study and as soon as I have any information I will be happy to communicate it to the hon. member.

Mr. Mazankowski: As the regulations have not been officially released at this time, would the minister be prepared to investigate why some airlines and some air charter firms are advertising and indeed promoting new charter flight schedules based on the new rules?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I will look into this.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

INQUIRY AS TO AGREEMENT WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA RAILWAY ON CONNECTING LINE IN SQUAMISH-LILLOOET AREA OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Harry Olaussen (Coast Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister inform the House whether Canadian National Railways has yet decided to commit itself to some agreement with the British Columbia Railway with regard to a possible connecting line in the Squamish-Lillooet area of British Columbia in order to provide an alternate route to Vancouver?

• (1440)

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I do not think an agreement has yet been reached but I believe that many meetings have been held between the two railways and I am hopeful that within a very short while—it may be a matter of days—an agreement can be reached by them.

Mr. Olaussen: Would the minister undertake to make a statement on motions at the conclusion of these discussions?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I do not think it would be necessary if an agreement should be reached. The hon. gentleman would only have to read the agreement.

POST OFFICE

INQUIRY AS TO CONCILIATION REPORT ON POSTMASTERS IN SMALL TOWNS AND RURAL COMMUNITIES

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General. Can the Postmaster General inform the House when the conciliation report providing a fair deal for the 8,000 members of the Canadian Postmasters Association serving small town and rural communities will be brought down?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I think that the report has already been made public. It has been given to the employees who have considered it and are now voting on it. I think that the hon. member can easily get a copy of this report.

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: I am referring to the conciliation report dealing with the 8,000 members of the Canadian Postmasters Association in small town and rural communities. The reason my question is urgent is that the last contract expired in September and the present rates are altogether inequitable. Could the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member will allow the minister to reply.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: I am going to check, Mr. Speaker—

INQUIRY RESPECTING DELEGATION OF OBSERVERS TO POSTAL WORKERS' MEETINGS

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Could the minister state whether, when meetings do take place to consider the pros and cons of the vote concerning going on strike or not, at the Post Office Department, his department intends to send observers in order to find out exactly what is going on?

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): The vote ends today, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

INQUIRY AS TO ACCEPTANCE BY GOVERNMENT OF CONCILIATION BOARD REPORTS ON DISPUTE WITH POSTAL WORKERS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I have a supplementary for the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that balloting has concluded, can the hon. gentleman inform us whether or not the government intends to accept the report from the conciliation board on the postal situation?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): I do not think the result of the balloting is yet known.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister and it is really supplementary to a question asked of him earlier. Will the right hon. gentleman tell the House whether he is planning any further federal-provincial conferences for other areas of the country when economic conditions reach the same deplorable state there as they have reached in the west?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's question is hypothetical.

AIRPORTS

VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL—ROAD BUILDING AND RUNWAY EXPANSION—INTENTION AS TO MEETING WITH SEA ISLAND RESIDENTS CONCERNING COMPLAINTS

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the numerous pleas which were made to the Prime Minister and to the Minister of Transport, requesting their personal intervention concerning the problems inflicted on the residents of Sea island by the proposed road building and runway expansion at Vancouver International Airport, may I ask whether it is the intention of the Prime Minister or the Minister of Transport to meet personally with the people involved and investigate their charges of injustice and discrimination?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I have had some exchanges with these people by way of correspondence, and so has the previous Minister of Transport. My recollection of the matter is that the representations made in their last letter to me had been sufficiently answered by the then Minister of Transport. A copy of the letter was sent to myself. I will check whether there has been any further arrival of representations to myself or to the Minister of Transport in recent weeks.

Mr. Reynolds: Would the Minister of Transport see fit to meet with these people before the meeting which is to be held on January 17 regarding access to the bridge, and would he also discuss at that time the meeting being held today in Vancouver concerning the airport?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): If there are any complaints and anybody wishes to meet with me I will look into the file and be ready to arrange such a meeting if it seems useful.

Oral Questions

FISHERIES

EAST COAST SALMON FISHING BAN—PROVISION OF APPEAL PROCEDURE RESPECTING COMPENSATION TO FISHERMEN

Mr. G. A. Percy Smith (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and it relates to the ban on salmon fishing on the east coast of Canada. Having in mind the widespread concern expressed by salmon fishermen over the amount of the final payment in respect of compensation for loss of income, will the minister consider immediately an appeal procedure for the fishermen who feel they were treated unfairly by his department?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): The answer, of course, Mr. Speaker, is yes. I will personally take an interest in any appeal under this unique program. If the hon. member knows of individual cases where I can be of assistance I shall be glad to review them personally.

Mr. Tom Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Since there is evidently an appeal procedure, will the minister show some interest in the fisheries, back up the promises which were made and investigate from an Ottawa standpoint this whole sorry mess?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—MAINTENANCE OF EMPLOYMENT FOR INDIANS ON CLEARING OF RIGHT OF WAY

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the high unemployment in the Northwest Territories and in view of the concern felt by a number of people who were working on the Hire North project—the clearing of a right of way in the Northwest Territories—that they will be laid off, would the minister be willing to make a statement at this time to alleviate their anxiety?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, following representations we received, work resumed this morning on the work site and all the Indians who were working on this project and who report for duty in the coming days will be hired and we hope to start a new project that will be carried on later during the year.

[English]

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Could the minister give the House his assurance that the Mackenzie corridor, sometimes called highway or road, has not, in fact, been abandoned but will be a continuing project?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we did not decide to stop the construction of the Mackenzie Highway, we are proceeding with it. But, as we should, we must take into account both the interests of the Indians and those of ecology, and that is why we are proceeding at a speed that allows for the hiring of Indians and the protection of the environment.

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed from Friday, January 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. J. J. Blais for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

• (1450)

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, first of all may I say how pleased we are to see you in what has become to us your accustomed place, and to give you my renewed assurance of our co-operation and confidence in you in the discharge of your arduous duties and responsibilities.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I wish also to extend my personal best wishes and, if I may, cordial welcome to the new members among us, approximately 60 of whom sit on this side of the House in this party. I think they have all sensed, as I have, that this may well be one of the most interesting and challenging parliaments in our history. I share with them a sense of deep responsibility, and the hope that what we do here during this parliament will add to the distinction of this honoured place as well as bring benefit to the people of Canada whose interests we serve and whose needs and aspirations we must represent.

Hon. members will be well aware of the steady and persistent encroachment upon the rights of parliament, a process that has accelerated in the immediate past. We now have the opportunity to arrest this process and begin the reclamation of the rights and responsibilities of the role of parliament, and I am confident that the majority of members will seize upon this opportunity.

I wish, of course, to congratulate the mover and seconder of the address in reply for their contributions to these proceedings. Both members were faithful to the high standards set by their many predecessors and both of them I listened to with great pleasure.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, bilingualism is a rather vital aspect of Canadian reality, as is the existence of a variety of cultures and geographic areas; there is no reason why English-speaking Canadians or Canadians of French origin, or any other ethnic origin cannot live and work in harmony and mutual respect. There is no reason why the Altantic provinces, Quebec, Ontario, cannot join efforts with the Prairies and British Columbia to build a country of which they can all be even prouder than they are now.

Can anyone honestly claim, Mr. Speaker, that in their last four and one-half years in power the present government has helped unite Canadians in the pursuit of a common goal? Can anyone honestly claim in this House that Quebec and the Atlantic provinces are happier now? Can anyone claim that a last minute effort to make the western provinces believe that their needs will at last be met was enough to mislead them? And does anyone really believe that Ontario and other provinces will be pleased with the way in which their money was spent on inefficient programs, total failures, intended to reduce regional disparities?

[English]

We need a new alliance—an alliance of English and French-speaking Canadians along with those of other cultures; an alliance of provinces and regions; an alliance of all Canadians determined to work out their own future in association with each other. We have the human resources, we have the natural resources, and with determination and good will we can move ahead.

We must start by restoring confidence in the government and in the economy of this country. We must start by committing ourselves never again to permit a government deliberately to slow down our economy and thus create suspicion and frustration from one end of our great country to the other. We must go on from there in association with each other to build up Canada in all its elements and aspects, and in all its human and physical diversities.

No one could be more pleased than the members of my party to note the prominence given to the Crown in the Speech from the Throne. On the occasion of the opening of the twenty-eighth parliament some members may recall that the Crown was not mentioned in the Speech from the Throne; perhaps hon. members recall my comment at that time. Whatever else may transpire this year, all Canadians will be pleased by the presence of Her Majesty the Queen and His Highness the Duke of Edinburgh in Canada not only on one occasion but on two occasions.

to the hon. gentlemen opposite on the front benches including, of course, my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). Even while he may not be entirely comfortable in his present circumstances—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): He is more comfortable than you are.

Mr. Stanfield: I want to assure my hon. friend from St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) that I never felt better in my life. I am happy to see that my right hon. friend appears to be in good health even though, perhaps, he has not fully recovered from the experience of the last election. He seems to have had a good rest and to be ready for the rigours of this session.

I listened to the language of the Speech from the Throne with very keen and considerable interest. With respect to much of the language in the throne speech, many of the words in it and a good deal of the policy proposed, suggested or hinted at, I would have to say only that I could have done better. I cannot commend the Prime Minister either for originality or for innovation, but I do congratulate him on a very considerable effort at plagiarism. What this speech represents is an abject confession of failure, a more or less contrite admission of incompetence, an astonishing lack of commitment and a bankruptcy of original thought.

It might be difficult for a compassionate man to read that speech and not feel sorry for its author if he did not know that the speech represents monumental cynicism rather than an act of repentence. One would have to be either naïve or simple-minded, or perhaps both, to accept at face value what appears to be this miracle of conversion. Of course, Sir, this government has always been noted for its style. Style was the essence of its policy, or lack of it, and it was a grand style. Its rhetoric ranged from high blown generalities, such as the declaration that Canada stood at the threshold of greatness, to premature and pious proclamations, such as the announcement that the war upon inflation had been won and inflation had been licked. This was a grand style made grander by the expressed conviction that parliamentarians, at least those on this side of the House, were nobodies. It was a style of utter sophistication punctuated by four letter words.

Now, after four and a half years, this government produces an epic failure in economic management, yet during that time joblessness and welfare became a way of life for hundreds of thousands of Canadians; a term of office actually described as wasted years by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis). After all this, the government comes limping back to parliament, its ranks riddled by casualties, disguised in sack cloth and ashes with that old arrogance recycled into something that is almost obsequious humility.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: We are looking at a government that has not only lost its style, not only lost its majority, but has lost its credibility just as surely as it has lost the trust of the Canadian people and just as surely as it does not have the confidence of this House.

The question of trust and confidence is part and parcel of the question of credibility. What can be said of a government which has presided for four and a half years over folly and failure; four and half wasted years during which it squandered its mandate? What can be said of a government which comes before parliament today advocating policies that it opposed yesterday and abandoning policies today that it championed yesterday? Virtually every paragraph in this Speech from the Throne represents either a retreat from its own policy or an attempt to retrieve something from somebody else's policies. After the wasted years in which the battle to contain inflation was fought by the unemployed, by pensioners and those on fixed income, all of whom bore the brunt of the failure of that effort, the government proposes now, in the Speech from the Throne as we read, to have a committee sit on this problem. Of course, not even that meagre response originated within the ministry. Giving credit where credit is due, the proposal to establish a parliamentary committee to make a special study of the problem of rising food prices was taken from the leader of the New Democratic Party. Apparently the hon. member for York South finds in this proposal, and this feeble gesture, sufficient recognition of his terms for his party's support of this government.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Stanfield: Apparently this is what he meant when he said he did not expect to get a whole loaf but would settle for half a loaf. None of us could have believed that he would settle not only for less than half a loaf but for these crumbs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Members of this House will recall that the wasted years, as described by the hon. member for York South, were marked by an increasing deterioration of relations between the federal government and the provinces. They will recall the federal government's quarrels with the Atlantic provinces in respect of offshore oil development and rights. They will recall the federal government's quarrel with British Columbia and the beligerent and uncooperative attitude of this government toward the government of Ontario. Hon. members will also remember the deaf ear that this government has always turned to the west, until this sudden conversion, and they will recall the complaints expressed by every provincial premier of Canada that this government simply refused to consult or co-operate in such mutually important matters as winter works programs. That was before the election.

During the last election campaign if a leader of a federal opposition party was seen in the company of a provincial premier the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) considered that to be something sinister. Our party proposed during the last campaign to end this unhappy period of alienation and hostility. Speaking in Calgary in the company of three provincial premiers I said:

> The commitment I make to the people of Canada in return for their support is to restore the spirit of Confederation and the spirit of co-operation, the recognition of the need for consultation and the recognition of the need for coordination of federal policies with provincial priorities.

I went on to state:

> The first action of a Progressive Conservative government toward fulfilling all the promise of Confederation would be to convene a federal-provincial meeting on Priorities for Tomorrow.

The response of the government at that time was silence. Now, mark this miracle of repentence and conversion as we see it in the throne speech. "Finally" in the words of the throne speech, and "finally" is the operative word, is to the effect that "it must be accepted that a reconsideration of Canadian social services must be conducted jointly by the federal government and the provinces".

Again, when the government introduced its policy with regard to foreign takeovers of Canadian-owned businesses we made the point, and we were joined by quite a few others in this, that this proposal of the government had been developed and presented to parliament without any consultation whatever with the provinces. The Premier of Ontario said repeatedly that no effective policy could be introduced in this regard until and unless effectie coordination and co-operation between the federal and provincial jurisdictions had been worked out. The response of this government at that time to what was obviously a commonsense statement was silence.

There is a final recognition of the principle of the need for consultation in this area. The Prime Minister has proposed to meet with provincial first ministers in order to harmonize goals, policies and programs for the benefit of all Canadians. In short, he has caved in. It has occurred to him that there is a need for the conference for which we have been calling for so long. In fact, Sir, as I read the throne speech, there seems to be a frenzy of consultation, and the only conclusion I can draw is that it is a long way from October 30 to Damascus.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Perhaps as striking as the Prime Minister's sudden embracing of federal-provincial co-operation and consultation is the government's sudden and swift concern for small business. We recognize the problems of Canadian small business and the need for incentives in the interest of the economy generally, with the specific intention of creating employment. It is our belief that by providing growth incentives through tax credits to small business more can be done to stimulate private initiative, more can be done to create new job opportunities and to stimulate the demand for goods and services than through the direct government loans, concessions and programs which are now in effect. On October 19, we put forward this argument and supported it by specific policy proposals. The response of the government was completely negative. The Prime Minister, of course, had little or nothing to say because that was his campaign style. Instead, the matter was left to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). I quote him.

• (1510)

> It would provide an opportunity for some individuals to reap a rich bonanza without any demonstrated need of small business for funds.

This in spite of the fact that small business failures in August of this year reached record levels, and from then on represented the worst record of small business failures since the days of the depression. Yet the response of this government through the mouth of the Minister of Finance was that the need has not been demonstrated.

Something has happened since October 30 to change the mind of the government. They have promised aid to small business through the provision of management and consulting services, which I suspect perhaps means the provision of some of the consultants left over from among all the consultants who are now consulting the government. They have promised to improve access to finance facilities, whatever that might mean, and I suspect not even the government itself knows what it might mean. The government proposes the extension and improvement of the Industrial Development Bank which might mean that the IDB will be encouraged to make collateral loans directly, or it might mean something else, or it might mean nothing. Mention is made in the Throne Speech of decentralization of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion which, long before the election, the provinces had urged the government to do, as had such organizations as the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council. I had said myself:

I do not think we can make enough progress by administering a regional development policy through a bureaucracy a thousand miles away. One way we can improve upon it is to decentralize these activities so that we can increase the contribution and make better use of the resources of those directly involved.

There was nothing but the silence of rejection from the government. We also said we could not do anything effective about fighting regional disparity until there was a sensible attack made on transportation problems. We on this side of the House are pleased, for whatever it may count, that the government has adopted our own proposal with respect to conducting a fresh examination, in co-operation with the provincial governments, of the freight rates structure in this country and its impact on regional economic interests and prospects. It would be comforting to believe that all this represents some change of mind, some change of heart, some new found wisdom on the part of the government. But I am unconvinced. The real difference, Mr. Speaker, between the government's mentality as of October 30 and their attitude as of today is not that they have gained some fresh wisdom, but that they have lost 40 seats. There is no real difference between the Prime Minister who dissolved this House last summer to go dialoguing with the Canadian people, and the Prime Minister who sits across from us today. He is the same Prime Minister, seasonally adjusted.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: This is the same Prime Minister, and nearly the same government, which asks us to believe in their genuine conversion to the cause of Canada's economic independence. I do not know whether the Minister of National Health and Welfare ever got to the Toronto Star for his rendezvous and briefing. In any event, the message got to him and his colleagues. In their rush to placate their friends and pacify their critics, we have a new façade erected, made up from a grab bag of proposals, borrowed from any source they could find. After the exhaustive analysis which produced the Gray Report, after all the drafting and re-drafting and after the ultimate rejection of it, this incredible government has now at least confessed to see the need to do something. We said we would require that Canadian citizens, residents in Canada, constitute a majority on the boards of all companies operating in Canada under federal charter. The throne speech proclaims that there will be a requirement that a majority of directors of federally incorporated companies be Canadians. We said if any policy is to be effective in this regard it must be worked out in co-operation with the provinces. According to the throne speech, there will be consultation—although this was ridiculed previously—with the provinces with respect to developing measures dealing with new direct foreign investment.

We said that a Conservative government would insist that Canadians be given maximum opportunity to develop and apply their own entrepreneurial and managerial skills so as to ensure their increased participation in the business and industry of their own land. The throne speech indicates there will be measures introduced to increase Canadian participation in the ownership and control of resource projects and respecting the transfer of technology from abroad and access to it by Canadian entrepreneurs. I could go on enumerating other proposals in the Speech from the Throne which have been culled from the Conservative manifesto by a government empty of its own initiatives, barren of its own policy and without an original idea in its head.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: With reference to the government's proposal to review, reorganize and reconsider the social security system in this country, we find still another hand-wringing confession. According to the throne speech, the social security system, as it applies to people who can work, must contain incentives to work and a greater emphasis on the need to get people who are on social aid back to work. Mr. Speaker, that discovery ranks with John Cabot's discovery of Newfoundland, Christopher Columbus' discovery of America and the Prime Minister's discovery of western Canada. Only a few weeks ago this kind of sentiment was characterized by the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) as reactionary. Anyone who talked about incentives to work was no fitting apostle for the leisure society. After four and one half wasted years, now they tell us about incentives and now they talk about the need to get Canada back to work. Well, it is interesting to see how they run. But we have, I think, a somewhat novel circumstance. It could be said of that circumstance that we have a lame duck Liberal government, bargaining with the New Democratic Party to keep it in office so that it may attempt to implement some Progressive Conservative policy.

Mr. Stanfield: On the face of it, this might well appear to be true. But it is not only interesting, in reading the Speech from the Throne, to see those policies which, for example, have been borrowed from us in order for the government to avoid complete political bankruptcy but to notice what has been left out. A great newspaper in this country which is ordinarily quite friendly toward this government in its editorial columns made the comment, I believe, that there is less in the Speech from the Throne than meets the eye.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is not the only one in this country who is in his winter of discontent. After all, he has nothing to lose but his job and, as he has told the whole country on television, he even has certain options there: he can either resign from the office or he can be kicked out, but the choice is his to some extent. This is really a winter of discontent for many Canadians whose options are running out. I refer, of course, to what has become a standing army of unemployed Canadians, some one half million of our fellow citizens, half of whom are young people and many of whom have not had a job for several years under this government. This government has a responsibility to them which it failed to discharge and, more important, Sir, this parliament has a responsibility to them which it can discharge.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: But it cannot discharge this responsibility by keeping in office a government that has not only failed to respond to this human tragedy but, worse than that, has even failed to see the tragedy. I am sure that the hon. member for York South must recognize this as a crucial weakness in the government's posture as revealed in the Speech from the Throne. The government's first priority, as revealed by the Throne Speech, is to reduce unemployment, contain inflation and strengthen the economy—words which have a familiar ring. As we read on, only the gullible and the cynical could convince themselves that this government has either the competence or the creative capacity to do anything about this problem.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Some months ago I said that our first priority is full employment, by which I mean a rate of unemployment of 4 per cent or less, not the 7 per cent which existed at that time and the well over 6 per cent which it still seems to be. I am interested in hearing from the Prime Minister what his objective is with respect to unemployment which the Speech from the Throne of course is very careful not to mention. When this government came to office there were about 375,000 Canadians out of work, and that is plenty. In the past year, the average has been some 560,000 Canadians out of work. During the recent campaign, before the votes were counted, spokesmen for the government were preparing the way for a campaign to convince Canadians that the present level of unemployment is an acceptable level and that all we need to do is to get used to it. One way of getting used to it, Sir, is to accept the cost to the taxpayer of financing that level of unemployment. I say that that rate of unemployment is unacceptable, the cost of it is unacceptable, and the government responsible for both the rate and the cost of unemployment is also unacceptable.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The only way that the government can reduce the cost of unemployment sufficiently is to reduce the number of unemployed. The only way in which the number of unemployed can be reduced is for the government to identify its priorities and its objectives, and to place before the country a combination of policies, including an economic policy, a taxation policy and a social policy, designed to bring about the result we want.

In this clutch of rhetoric in the Speech from the Throne, we find no coherent program that offers either an assurance to this House or hope to the unemployed, and yet you can obviously see what is happening: the government is trying to put off its program on unemployment until the budget is presented. I say to my friends in the New Democratic Party and to other members of the House that on the basis of its record on economic policy, and of its record on unemployment, this government is not entitled to anybody in the House assuming that in some weeks' time it might produce in a budget something helpful and useful with regard to creating jobs in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Stanfield: I say we are entitled to hear now what the government's program is to reduce unemployment. Apparently they cannot even make up their minds on so basic a consideration as to whether or not they intend to proceed with the 3 per cent additional levy on the Canadian taxpayer on personal income tax. The working men and women of this country begin this year with their wages and incomes further reduced by increases in their payments to support the unemployment insurance program, by increased prices and, as far as they now know, by increased personal income taxes. At the same time, the taxpayer, the farmer, the small businessman and the wage earning Canadian are confronted with a new tax form which they do not understand and which even high class chartered accountants find confusing. I doubt whether the government itself, including the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Stanbury), understands this form. This misunderstanding will lead to confusion and confusion will lead to chaos, unless and until the people are given a clear indication of what demands are to be made upon them in terms of taxation and at least until some considerable effort is made to assist the taxpayer. He needs to understand not only how much he has to pay but, with that form in front of him, how he is going to go about it.

Then we have the older people, our senior citizens, those who are retired and unable to work even if they wished to work, those who exist on old age security benefits. The throne speech indicates that legislation will be introduced on the subject as an immediate step. What legislation, Mr. Speaker, and when? Considering the record of this government over the past couple of years in this area, is anybody in the House going to give this government a vote of confidence without being told what it is the government intends to propose with regard to old age pensions?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Stanfield: I hope I am not getting too much static from over there yet because we are only getting started.

Mr. Crouse: They are all bluster; they will not act.

Mr. Stanfield: Any good society, any compassionate people and any worthy parliament would not abandon or neglect these people. The cost of food in this country increased last year by almost 10 per cent and the cost of living has gone up by over 5 per cent. These same older people are now faced by the harsh realities of the Canadian winter. I think it is incumbent upon this parliament to determine where the government stands on this and what, if anything, the government is prepared to do.

• (1530)

We in this party, Mr. Speaker, made a commitment to the older people of this country. It was not a commitment to be honoured at some time in the future, at some distant date. It was not something to be done after prolonged study and analysis. It was not something to wait to do until after April 1. It was to be the first order of business in the next parliament of Canada, which ought to have been called in December, and this matter ought to have been dealt with in December.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: We are not going to retreat from that commitment, from that responsibility, from that obligation. Anybody who wants to run for cover can run. We are going to stand and fight for the principle that when a government fails a nation, the result of that failure will not be that the government survives while the weak and the helpless pay the penalties for that failure. We want to know where the government stands on pensions, and we want that matter dealt with immediately.

There is no element of surprise in the situation that prevails here today. The government may not have the trust and the confidence of the country, but apparently it has the trust and the confidence of the New Democratic Party. A marriage of convenience has been arranged between the two parties, a union achieved by cynicism on the one hand and by sheer fright on the other.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The rest of us have to watch this mating ritual which moves about in strange and complementary ways, each ensuring the preservation of the other, each dependent upon the other, and each counting upon the other in order to survive.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Stanfield: Sir, who would have thought that our hon. friend, the member for York South, after all his ardent declamations upon and against the party of the corporate welfare bums, would have volunteered to become one?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: Who would have thought that having declaimed upon four and a half wasted years, the hon. member would now be advocating still more of them?

Sir, I think I have to commend you on the way in which the various parties have been placed in this chamber. I think it appropriate that the government's true majority, the Prime Minister's personal bull pen, has been tucked away in the corner to the left underneath the public gallery. This party of Woodsworth and M. J. Coldwell, this party of intellectuals and ideology, of firm principles and lofty idealism, can now blush unseen—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: —and at least, so far as the matter now before the House is concerned, can remain unheard. This seems to be their disposition. Apparently they have no amendments to offer. They have no vote to cast in these present proceedings. They have assumed a new responsibility and a new role in this parliament, namely, to guarantee the continued existence of a truncated, repudiated government.

All of us recall the past orations of members of that party to my left, who described the Conservative and Liberal parties as old line parties, who described them as Tweedle Dee and Tweedle Dum. Sir, that was before the courtship and the marriage. Now, we have got the same old Tweedle Dee, but a brand new Tweedle Dum!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Who wrote that, Bob?

Mr. Stanfield: The hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) will get a credit if he would like to have me give him one.

Mr. Muir: That's about all he will ever get.

Mr. Stanfield: This party, the NDP, no longer profess to lead public opinion. Indeed, Sir, I understand they have taken polls and they are going to follow those polls. This is the situation of a party that once prided itself on having its own position, of accepting whatever the consequences were of that position. A party that once professed itself to be a party of principle, now has become the party of polls, procrastination and pontification.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Our venerable friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), a little over a week ago was asked if the government had done anything since October 30 to merit his confidence and support. I would like to quote his reply. What the hon. member says is usually worth quoting. He said:

> I don't think so. I don't think any of the announcements have done anything more than give the impression of a government that is anxious to stay there. In terms of actual substance we have had nothing from the government that meets our views on taxation policy, nothing that meets our views on social security, nothing that meets our views on foreign ownership . . . so we don't see any great difference in the stance of the government today from what it was just before the election.

I agree with that statement. I am only sorry that the hon. member for York South no longer agrees with it. The fact is that there is nothing of substance in the throne speech that meets his views or mine on taxation policy. There is nothing tangible in the throne speech with respect to social security. And if there is anything in it that meets the hon. member's views on foreign ownership, I can only express my surprise at his newly limited objectives in that field.

The hon. member for York South cannot possibly be satisfied with the indications in the throne speech of government intentions with respect to taxation policy. He cannot possibly be satisfied with the Prime Minister's answer the other day which clearly indicated the government cannot even make up its mind whether or not to proceed with its earlier declared intentions to let the increase in income tax go into effect and stay in effect. Indeed, a month after the election, speaking to a business audience in Toronto the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) said that it was his intention to seek the early approval of legislation to implement the tax measures announced in the budget of May 8. Of course, the 3 per cent income tax increase was part of the budget of May, 1972. Indeed, Sir, although the Minister of Finance may show neither compassion nor concern for the taxpayer, consistency has been his virtue. He alone can claim to be consistent among all the gentlemen in the front seats.

As I have said, we have been concerned with the urgent plight of our citizens living on fixed incomes, especially those who are retired and whose survival depends upon old age security benefits. We have said, and the hon. gentlemen to my left have said, that these pensions have been seriously eroded or depreciated by inflation, particularly in view of the increased cost of food and shelter. We have proposed immediate provision for increased assistance and we still propose this, but where are my hon. friends on my left now? Where is their concern? What are their intentions? Sir, they did not even wait to ask the government what it proposed to do about old age pensions, what it proposed to do about assistance to the blind or what it proposed to do by way of changing the Unemployment Insurance Act. They did not even wait to find out what the government proposed to do before rushing off and declaring public support for the government on this motion.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

[Translation]

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, if they do not follow the dictates of their conscience, they cannot avoid the logical conclusion which the Canadian people will draw. It is not a legitimate excuse to suggest, as they have done, that they cannot overthrow the government before spring. Why wait until spring? Since when has democracy become a sport to be practiced in warm weather? The crucial decision which rests with this House is to determine if this government is humane enough and has the necessary ability to govern this country.

[English]

The question before the House is whether the government has the trust of the majority of members assembled here and obviously it has not. I have a feeling that the people of Canada do not really expect very much from this government but they do expect something from this parliament. They must be perplexed and puzzled to read that the principal consideration of many hon. members here is for how long and at what price the government can beg or buy support in order to stay in office. The disposition of the parties in the House and the decision of the government to meet parliament has been a matter of fact for more than two months. The Minister of Finance was sent on some kind of search and destroy mission in the guise of seeking organic union. We do not know the result of his efforts or negotiations. We do not know whether, as a result, we will have another and second great Canadian "otto" pact.

Some hon. Members: Hear, Hear!

Mr. Stanfield: However, he has tried and apparently others have, too. Now, we are given to understand that the New Democratic Party, although it is no doubt still interested in the guaranteed annual income, is particularly interested in a guaranteed minimum wait.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I want to say to my hon. friend the leader of the New Democratic Party that his interest and anxiety to see the government's legislation could not possibly be any greater than mine. I do not want to misrepresent my hon. friend's position—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Stanfield:—but from what he said I assume that he is prepared to sit here for the time being at least, benevolent and benign and apparently motionless, until such time as he has seen the legislation and formed an opinion of it.

I have a series of proposals to express to my hon. friend which I think he cannot very well refuse.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: Point no. 1—

Mr. Lewis: Are you pointing at me now, Bob?

Mr. Stanfield: I am pointing at everybody now. Point no. 1, the Prime Minister should tell the House today what he proposes to do to reduce unemployment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: There is no concrete indication of this in the Speech from the Throne and, as I said, the record of the government on this subject cannot be supported on this motion on the basis that it may produce a satisfactory program when it produces its budget. The hon. member for York South knows as well as I do that there is nothing in the record of this government to justify any such assumption. The Prime Minister cannot make the excuse that he has to wait for the budget; he did not wait for the budget when he announced the pre-Christmas package which the members of the New Democratic Party criticized as earnestly and heartily as did I. Point no. 1 is that the Prime Minister should tell the House today, in concrete terms, what the government proposes to do to increase employment and reduce unemployment.

Point no. 2; the Prime Minister should indicate today what the government proposes to do about reducing income tax rates for 1973.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Jot these down, Pierre.

Mr. Stanfield: Is the 3 per cent increase to stay in effect? The Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and the government have told us very precisely what their intentions are with respect to the rate of corporation income tax during 1973. I ask my hon. friend from York South whether he thinks that individuals are entitled to less information about their tax rates than our Canadian corporations?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Point no. 3 is in regard to legislation in general. The Prime Minister has refused to give a list of the bills that he intends to introduce during this session. I can understand that in a way because he is not sure how long he is going to have the responsibility, but he has given us no idea of the priorities of the government with regard to legislation.

I say that the Prime Minister should tell the House today what the six pieces of legislation are that are highest on the government's list of priorities and which it wants to see introduced and passed. This would give us some idea of the legislative priorities of the government. This is necessary if any member of the House, or at least of an opposition party, is to have a clear idea of the legislative objectives of the government which would enable a member to reach a considered opinion on whether to support the government on the motion that is now before the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Point no. 4; whether or not the Prime Minister gives the information I have requested about employment policies, income tax policies or legislative priorities, we wish to see this debate adjourned after the other party leaders have had their say, at least until first thing in the morning. After all, we should have had this speech and we should have had some urgent legislation in December. We should have had this debate in December.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: The government has had ample time to prepare. I am sure the bill on old age pensions must be ready. It must be ready for introduction today so that we could discuss it tomorrow. I should like to see the House start consideration of the government's legislation on old age pensions tomorrow.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I do not want to see the old people kept waiting a day longer than necessary. It may be the legislation will be so unsatisfactory that nobody can support it. Yet, surely it is ready and surely the government could introduce it today. We would consent to reverting to introduction of bills and waiving any notice required for the introduction of this bill in order that it may be introduced, say, a few minutes before six o'clock. Also, we would waive any notice required for second reading tomorrow. After all, we read in the Speech from the Throne that legislation will be introduced to improve the economic condition of old age pensioners and that this will be an immediate step.

• (1550)

An hon. Member: Where is the bill?

An hon. Member: Let us get at it.

Mr. Stanfield: Surely, it is ready now. We have no desire whatever to obstruct the government while it is here and I hope the government does not intend, while it is there, to obstruct parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The government ought to start producing important legislation right away. I want tomorrow to discontinue this debate for one purpose, namely, to get on with the consideration of legislation for providing aid to the old age pensioners. Tomorrow, at the appropriate time, the government could introduce some other legislation that it must have ready. Surely, it is reasonable to ask the government to introduce the legislation alluded to today. The bill must be ready because, as I say, the government says it will introduce that legislation as an immediate step. I do not see why the government and all parties in the House would not welcome this initiative. Then, we could take whatever length of time is necessary tomorrow and on subsequent days to get this bill under way. Of course, whether it is one that is worth supporting or whether the details will need to be changed we will find out. Afterwards, after the government has introduced some other legislation, we could come back in a reasonably short time to this debate and continue it.

An hon. Member: Or the cancellation of this debate.

Mr. Stanfield: We will not cancel this debate, and I do not think my friends opposite will. They are not willing to cancel this debate. They are looking forward to a vote of confidence and hope to obtain it. I am bringing forward some proposals that will provide some long delayed aid to our older people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: We want to see other legislation introduced which, according to the Speech from the Throne, is ready. The Speech from the Throne contains this statement:

> . . . legislation will be introduced to clarify certain aspects of the Unemployment Insurance plan and to prevent abuses that have not been overcome by the administrative action already taken.

That is described as an immediate step. Clearly, that legislation must be ready and the government could introduce a bill relating to that matter tomorrow. I am not saying it needs to be discussed right away. However, the bill I want to see introduced right away relates to old age pensions. Surely, a bill relating to unemployment insurance is as important to my friends in the NDP as it is to me; surely, those hon. members would want to see such legislation before they make up their minds as to what they think about this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The government has put forward its proposals. Since the Prime Minister stated clearly and concretely what he proposes to do about unemployment and taxation and since he gave us half a dozen legislative priorities and objectives I say, why not introduce a bill today. The bill relating to old age pensions must be ready. It could be introduced so that we could proceed with second reading tomorrow and, as well, promptly introduce other legislation such as that relating to unemployment insurance. In any event, the government has said that it will introduce such legislation immediately. I think that the government's actions will give us a clearer idea of how much there is behind the façade of the Speech from the Throne.

The hon. member for York South may not wish to support our amendment; but he will not be required to take that decision until such time as he has been able to form his own judgment as to the quality and character of the government's program regarding employment, other legislation and the degree to which it satisfies the House in meeting the genuine needs of the country.

I wish to propose an amendment to the motion before the House, because the evidence makes it even more clear that this government is deserving neither of the country's confidence nor its trust. I put it forward, aware of the critical condition of the Canadian economy and the personal crisis being faced by so many individual Canadians as a result of conditions in the country. It will be tragic for the people and tragic for the country generally if this Parliament were to maintain in office a government so lacking in conviction, proper attitude and credibility. We in this country need a government that stands for something. We do not need a government that has no mind of its own, a government apparently in full retreat from many of its own principles and beliefs, a government that has done nothing since October 30 but back and apologize. So, Sir, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) I move that the following be added to the address:

We respectfully affirm to Your Excellency that Your Excellency's advisers do not possess the confidence of this House.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, first I wish to express my real pleasure at seeing you in the chair and that you accepted the urgent request of your colleagues of this House to preside over their debates. All of us take pleasure in expecting this session to be very tumultuous, and I think that everyone must be happy to see you in the Chair, Mr. Speaker. In the past, you have proved several times to be very qualified to preside over our debates.

I wish to say as well that one of the pleasures—and there were not many—brought to us by the election was to see the quality and competence of elected members. As for me, when I listened, last Friday to the mover and the seconder of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, I was happy to see, as the leader of the Liberal party, that we had among us two young men, alike in various ways: both are married and fathers of two children, both have studied law, both have worked for the community as a whole, and for their riding in particular. As the leader of the Liberal party, I was very grateful to see that these two men had another common characteristic: both belong to a linguistic minority within the province where they come from, both have learned the two official languages well enough to be able to speak them eloquently and accurately. The hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) and the hon. member for Lachine (Mr. Blaker) have both reminded us by their presence in this House that we have in Canada many great figures, and that our country is lucky to welcome in its parliament people of this quality, who are ready to work in the interest of our country.

Mr. Speaker, at the outset of his remarks, the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) sae fit to recall that I had undertaken the last election campaign by proposing to the Canadian voters a form of dialogue, a dialogue between the people and the candidates, a dialogue which would allow us to ask ourselves questions, to learn from one another what were our projects, our aspirations, our dreams, our successes and our failures, a dialogue on which I intended to meditate with my colleagues following the election in order to try and determine in a somewhat more accurate way the sort of Canada the Canadian people would like to see in the '70s and the sort of government it would like to be led by.

Several lessons must be drawn from the October 30 election, some of them pleasant, others less. I think it must be said in all humility that the first lesson to be learned as a government is that the population was not satisfied with our administration. It is a lesson we accepted in all due humility and which was followed by a second one, and I suggest to hon. members of the opposition—some of whom I hear grumble—that they also draw the same lesson with humility, that the Canadian population although it did not indicate great enthusiasm about our party indicated that it did not want any other party than ours to lead this country.

Mr. Speaker, it must be recognized that our party although it lost a great number of seats still has a plurality of seats in this parliament and obtained a plurality of votes in the last election. When I was listening to the speech of the Leader of the Opposition I could not help think that he felt rejected by the population. Twice, as the leader of his party, he offered himself as an alternative to the government. In two general elections, he came before the Canadian people to lead the destiny of the country, but on those two occasions, he was rejected. His entire speech was stamped with bad humour as a result of that double snub, but quite surprisingly, he attempted at length to explain that he was thrice annoyed, since in a large part of his speech, he took the members of the New Democratic Party to task for supporting us instead of him. He dwelt extensively in his speech on how he would have conducted the proceedings of this House had he not been effectively rejected by the people and the members of the New Democratic Party.

Now, we drew one conclusion: that we should accept the verdict of the electorate, form the government, correct the errors which, of course, we made in our administration and introduce to the House of Commons a program on which it would not, at the least at the start, deny us its confidence. That was our intention in the Speech from the Throne. That is my intention in making my remarks, this afternoon; which will be completed by those of the ministers and members who will speak during the debate on the Address in reply. That is what we started to do as early as on the day following the elections when we took administrative steps—of which I shall give a few examples later on—in an attempt to remedy some of the administrative errors we might have made.

[English]

There has been some criticism of this decision—criticism of the fact that we decided to form a government—not so much on constitutional grounds as for other reasons. I think there are so many precedents, and these are so clear, that the question was not really whether we had a right to form a government; the question asked by some constitutional experts was whether we did not have a duty to meet the House of Commons and to seek its confidence. I repeat, I have seen no serious proposition on constitutional grounds contesting the right of this government to stay in office and to meet the House of Commons. There have, however, been some political arguments put forward to deny us this right and I think these might be categorized in two ways.

• (1600)

The first, I suppose, should be called the theory of momentum. It appears that a certain number of academics, aided and abetted in some cases by the media, state that this government had lost momentum in the elections whereas the Conservative party had gained momentum, and that therefore, having lost momentum this party should resign. My only comment by way of advice to those academics is that if the theory of momentum were to apply to university life those professors should go back to growing radishes.

Mr. Baldwin: You have not lost momentum; you are going backwards.

Mr. Trudeau: The other argument of a political nature which was put forward to deny this government the right to meet the House of Commons is difficult to characterize. It appeared in some circles, but I suppose the clearest characterization of it is in an editorial called "Clinging to Power is a great mistake" which appeared in the Vancouver Sun for November 3, 1972.

Mr. Hellyer: Hear, hear!

• (1610)

Mr. Trudeau: I see that the hon. member agrees with the editorial, but perhaps he had better wait until I read a few phrases from it. The editorial indicates that the Prime Minister undoubtedly has the constitutional right to face parliament, but then it goes on in this way:

—frustrated English-speaking Canadians will feel that their wishes as expressed at the polls last Monday are being thwarted on a constitutional technicality by a party that owes fundamental political allegiance to Quebec.

This feeling is only too likely to be a positive incitement of an intensified anti-Quebec backlash of the kind that was an admitted factor in the fall of the Trudeau government from majority power.

The editorial continues:

—Mr. Trudeau now finds himself and his party with a majority of seats in only one province—the one from which he comes. He has a minority of parliamentary seats throughout Canada, and a majority of his minority represents the French-speaking minority of Canada's two major races and cultures.

In these circumstances, we think it a very grave mistake for Mr. Trudeau to try to perpetuate a government that has been overwhelmingly repudiated by the English-speaking majority.

Those are words, Mr. Speaker, which one would have preferred not to be written in a responsible paper. Unfortunately, they were written and I can only hope it is a very small minority of people who entertain such thoughts. It is very important for this government not to dwell on any answer to this kind of editorial except in so far as to say—

Some hon. Members: Then why raise it?

Mr. Trudeau: Hon. members want to know why I raised this. I raised it because I know there are members sitting in the Conservative ranks who, during the election, tried to divide Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Trudeau: I hear them cry "Shame". The shame is theirs, Mr. Speaker. I see that they remember with not very much pleasure the kind of campaign some of them conducted.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Just let me say that as far as we are concerned we do not count members by their ethnic origins, and we do not count votes according to whether they were cast by English or French-speaking Canadians.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): You never heard all your Liberal candidates.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) will have the chance to make his speech.

Mr. Speaker: May we have order to allow the right hon. Prime Minister to continue his remarks.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I quoted from an article in a newspaper which is widely read in this country. However, I see the displeasure of hon. members opposite.

Mr. Hees: We don't like lies.

Mr. Fairweather: Try your Rosedale colleague on election night.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member will have a chance to make a speech and then he can talk about my Rosedale colleague. If he wants to quote specific Members of Parliament, I think I could name quite a few from his own party.

Mr. Crouse: Name them.

Mr. Trudeau: At a later point in my speech I shall be talking about national unity, and if hon. members wish me to name names I shall do so with pleasure. Perhaps I should not say with pleasure but, rather, with regret, Mr. Speaker. I think that this kind of reaction is a sign of a very guilty conscience.

Mr. Alexander: I have no guilty conscience.

Mr. Trudeau: The conclusion, then, that we drew from this electoral contest was that we had a political and a legal right to govern until this House withdrew its confidence from us. We had a right to do so, but we also had a duty to show to this House what we proposed to do in the session that is opening.

I repeat, the Speech from the Throne was a first attempt to lay down the general lines of our action. Speeches by various ministers in the days to come will, I hope, spell out in greater detail some of these courses of action. My own speech will largely be based on the reasons for deciding to form a government and on the two broad categories of reasons for wanting to come before this House of Commons.

An hon. Member: The first being divine right.

Mr. Trudeau: Divine right in a democratic country, I suppose, is something that is translated by the electorate. If I could quote Latin, contrary to the advice of Disraeli, to the members of the House of Commons, Vox populi, vox dei. The first reason, I repeat, was to try and correct those areas in our administration where we had been incompetent, or where we had appeared to be incompetent.

• (1620)

I hasten to say that in my opinion there were sins committed by this government, although very few of them were sins of omission. Whether we look at our legislation or our policies having to do with the assertion of our sovereignty in the Arctic, with our extension of our territorial seas and fishing rights and two policies concerning people, such as our Indian policy and our multi-cultural policy; whether we go through foreign affairs, that whole area where we took steps which anteceded by some time some steps which were going to be taken by the President of the United States and which I think it is fair to say benefited this country, particularly in the area of trade and of wheat sales, or whether we go from that to our policy and legislation in the area of quality of life having to do with our numerous anti-pollution policies and legislation and the creation of national parks throughout Canada, I think it is fair to say that this government swept no problems under the carpet. It did not solve them all, by a long shot, but it did not try to escape any. It met them head on, and because of that we did make some mistakes; it is those mistakes which we propose to correct.

Before I give some examples of that, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make the point that we propose to correct these mistakes without in any way turning back on our Liberal principles and without in any way withdrawing from the faith that we, as Liberals, have in the land or the fact that we, as Liberals, always tend to err on the side of liberty rather than on the side of gain.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) spent some time attempting to show that we were plagiarizing and borrowing policies of his own, and that we were turning back on our principles. I even read a silly statement by someone that this is a "U-turn" government. I must say that what puzzled me, after his long recital of the measures that we have plagiarized and borrowed from him, was the statement that all these measures are such that he has now decided to vote against them. I think it will be important in giving some examples to indicate where we will try to redress some of the administrative mistakes or incompetencies, but I will show, in so far as I will give the examples, that in no case do they entail an abandonment of principle and in no case do they indicate a reversal of any of our Liberal policies.

One example can be given in the area of penal reform. A great deal was made during the election and before the election of the mistakes, and sometimes sorry ones, which had been made by those who in our penal system have been favoured by the government in an attempt to rehabilitate them. We are just now in possession of the Hugessen report on penal reform, the penal system and the matter of parole and bail. I think it is fair to say that we will ensure that these reforms are, and I repeat, in the spirit of liberalism, because we think that Canada is fortunate enough a country, is rich enough a country, is educated enough a country and is peaceful enough a country to be able to seek new ways of rehabilitation and seek new ways of bringing back into the mainstream of humanity those people who have been punished by our penal system. What will be evident from the position taken by our Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) is that this will be done in such a way as to protect the public, and it is this reconciliation of these two things which this government will attempt to achieve.

In the field of immigration, again a Liberal policy of non-quota admission of people to this land who wanted to come and establish themselves here, resulted in a certain number of abuses. These abuses once again followed from the spirit in which we interpreted the laws, a spirit of trust and confidence in mankind. These abuses did happen, and in November we indicated how we would begin to eradicate them by taking action, for instance, against those who come as tourists and then decide to apply for landed immigrant status. We have already reversed that policy. We have already indicated to those who do come as tourists, and this was announced in December, that they will need work permits in order to work in Canada.

The third example of Liberal policy, which we in no sense renege on, and which is fundamental to the unity of this country but which did cause some difficulty in application, is the whole area of bilingual policy. We referred again in December, thankful that we had at least enough members to have a claim to form the government and to have occasion to carry into practice, to the pledge that had been made by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) some months before that he would, before the year's end, announce the principles whereby we would be able to pursue the policy of bilingualism in the civil service, yet do it in a way which would be completely respectful of the Pearson pledge of 1966 and of my own pledge some years later. We have made those principles public.

It was amusing, by the way, Mr. Speaker, to note that the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) and the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) had obviously not got together in their reaction to these pledges and these principles. I understand that the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe found that the principles represented a withdrawal from our move toward bilingualism and that the hon. member for Peace River felt they were indeed meaningless. I hope the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe will have, in the weeks and months to come, a number of occasions to educate his fellow members of the Conservative party and caucus about some of these principles.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I, for one, welcome his entry into the Conservative party, although I must say I should have preferred that our good Liberal member had won in Saint-Hyacinthe. I do say his entry into the Conservative party is a good thing because it is important that Quebecers with reputation and prestige enter the ranks of the Conservative party as that is the only way we can ensure that all our parties represent a good cross-section of Canada. I only hope he will not have to follow the course of the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) who some years ago gave up any hope he had of explaining policies of bilingualism to his colleagues on that side.

Unemployment insurance was also a subject which was much discussed during the election, and on which we had some lessons to learn. I am always surprised to hear the criticism which those who are not in our party level at us when we seek to draw from the lessons of the election, correct what mistakes we might have made and apply what conclusions we might have drawn from the electoral results. Had we decided not to make any changes they would have said it was typical Liberal arrogance, that we did not listen to the electorate and that we intended to go on forever not mending our ways. When we do decide to mend our ways, we are chided by members opposite for mending our ways and therefore for being hypocritical about it. Unemployment insurance is another example of where we can mend our ways by ensuring that the spirit and the letter of the law is applied. The Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) has made some public statements. In due course, he will be announcing the policies which will be brought in by administration and legislation. The essence of them, however, is that in order to qualify for unemployment insurance one will really have to be available and will really have to be willing to work. In this way, we will certainly be disqualifying from unemployment insurance people who just draw the insurance and really do not attempt to find a job or who disqualify themselves because they quit a job when they are working.

A fifth example has to do with the LIP grants and the Opportunities for Youth grants. It is true that these programs were recognized, even by members opposite, as imaginative ways to ensure that useful work could be done by the community, ways which were unusual and ways which were outside the normal industrial sector. Indeed, I believe most members of every party complain when certain LIP grants or certain Opportunities for Youth grants which they judge to be valuable are not recognized and admitted into the program. But there is no doubt that here, too, there have been some abuses. That is why in the future we will tie these programs to the manpower offices themselves to ensure that the people who are qualified for these grants are hired through the manpower offices and that preference is given to those who are unemployed or on welfare.

As was indicated in the Speech from the Throne, the field of welfare is one which generally is under the administration of the provinces. It is also one to which Canada contributes handsomely through the Canada Assistance Plan. It would be impossible to change the administration of welfare and eradicate abuse of it single-handedly, but it is our intention to discuss with the provinces a way of administering these welfare programs so that incentives to work are contained in the program. Work incentives must be built into our welfare system so that everyone who works retains substantially greater amounts of income than those who can work but who do not.

A further example of Liberal policies which must be adjusted without abandonment of the Liberal principle of helping all those parts of the country which need assistance in attaining faster growth is in the changes which must be brought into the DREE program. This was a department with little more than three years existence and it had always been the intention of the minister to bring a review of that department's work in front of the government. Already some announcements have been made that the DREE program will be decentralized. The operations will be decentralized in such a way as to obtain greater integration with other levels of government and with the private sector.

In the field of the economy, no doubt we did not attain the results that this country and ourselves would have liked to have attained. During the election—and I think it was a mistake on our part—we did indicate that in comparison to other industrialized countries Canada had really not done badly. We quoted expert advice from the OECD countries, from the London Times and from various financial journals. We indicated that really, by comparison, Canada was performing rather well in economic terms. However, we recognize that that was not an approach which the Canadian people found satisfactory. They do not want to be told that in historic terms or in terms of comparison with other countries our economy is not a dismal one. They want to be assured that Canada will do everything it can to fulfil its high potential. That is why in the Speech from the Throne we chose words to indicate we wanted to bring about the most rapid decline possible in unemployment and wanted to bring about a more satisfactory exploitation of the economy's potential. Much more will be said on this by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) when he participates in this debate and, of course, when he brings in his budget.

But it is certain that the Canadian people in their decision of October 30 felt that a high growth rate was not enough, and that it should be high enough to fulfil the economy's potential. That is why the Speech from the Throne indicates quite clearly the high priority the government attaches to achieving better performance in the economy, both immediately and in the long run. We know the expectations and forecasts for 1973 all point in the direction of a rate of growth in excess of the economy's potential, a potential of about 5½ per cent as I believe the Economic Council of Canada mentions. But in view of the rate of growth in the labour force and the need to reduce unemployment from the unacceptable high levels which prevailed over the past few years, it is necessary for the economy to grow to the maximum of its potential if all people willing to work can find work. That is why it will be the objective of the government to ensure that a rapid and real economic growth will in fact take place.

Mr. Speaker, the second set of reasons why we decided to form the government and meet Parliament has to do with all the goals we want to propose to the country for the 70's, for the immediate and remote future. Those are goals which were identified by the Liberals during their convention and have been accepted by the people. We are aware that it will not always be easy to achieve them but as Liberals we believe they will be better pursued by a Liberal government than by a government made up of the opposition parties. I should like to discuss those goals under four headings, Mr. Speaker.

The first covers the place the individual should occupy in society, the second involved economic facts, the third groups a series of programs and objectives concerning political rights and the rights of Parliament and the fourth is related to national unity.

Let us start first with the rights of the individual—economic as well as social rights—which constitute a kind of charter of economic rights that is outlined in the Speech from the Throne and is based on this liberal philosophy according to which, in an orderly society, we are each other's co-insurers, all required to come to the aid of other members of the society who are in need, who are less favored. We are co-insurers, by way of taxation or otherwise, of certain fundamental rights that we want to make available to all individuals in our society. Without getting into details, Mr. Speaker, I think it would be fair to state that one of the most fundamental rights is the entitlement to hospital and health care, and in this field, projects and programs have already been well outlined in the past, mostly by Liberal governments.

In future, since such rights are being exercised jointly with the provinces, the aim will be to make sure that the costs remain under control and, above all, that such rights generate a situation where health services prove more accessible, more efficient and less costly. Already the Speech from the Throne points to appropriate meetings and no doubt we shall have policies to announce to parliament during this session.

Another basic right in a society that believes in equality for individuals is the right to an education. Mr. Speaker, people know that the matter fundamentally comes under provincial jurisdiction, but this did not prevent a federal government, and a Liberal government, that of the late Right Hon. Lester Pearson—and I believe that this happened essentially when the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) was Minister of Finance—found a formula which allowed the federal government to massively contribute to post-secondary and post-graduate education. In 1967-68, that contribution was about $420 million; in 1972-73, the figure will reach about $1 billion.

And there again, Mr. Speaker, the point will be to come to an understanding with the provinces in order to ensure that in a society that has faith in equality of opportunity, such right pertaining to the individual be set forth both with due respect to our constitution and expected to benefit those who seek an education.

A third area where our government is providing initiatives is that of legal aid, and I believe that hon. members have witnessed the fact only a few days ago on announcement of some agreements being signed by the federal government and the provincial governments of Quebec and British Columbia aimed at finding a formula that would allow the federal government to share the costs of legal aid in criminal proceedings, in order to ease the burden of the provinces in that area and encourage them in the field of civil law—which falls under their jurisdiction—to take the necessary steps to ensure that all individuals have equal access to legal aid.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Housing is another area, Mr. Speaker, where our record is commendable. In fact, the building of over one million housing units was undertaken in the last five years, which is considerably more than those built in the previous five years. However, the point which should attract our attention, Mr. Speaker, is that 85 per cent of the federal funds are spent on housing for the aged and low income people. I think this is a revolutionary re-alignment of our priorities and that, here again, the Liberal government intends to indicate at a federal-provincial conference to be held very soon how it wants to set new structures in the field of housing, preservation of urban communities, restoration of that sense of the community. Here is another reason, Mr. Speaker, why this government wanted to meet the deadline, wanted to set up a policy to the benefit of the individual.

The last of the examples I wanted to give has to do with income security. Several paragraphs of the Speech from the Throne indicate how we want to approach this problem. There is, Mr. Speaker, a concern not only to co-operate with the provinces but also to get a new rationale, a new cohesion behind this mass of programs dealing with the issue of income security. Generally speaking, Mr. Speaker, it is a question of ensuring that the two kinds of programs are well integrated, those dealing with individuals able to work and those dealing with individuals unable to work. And by maintaining the differentiation between those two groups through logical and coherent programs, we hope to finally evolve a society in which those who can actually work within the framework of minimum-wage schemes, unemployment insurance plans, LIP and Opportunities for Youth programs may prove to be useful to society and thus earn a profitable income, whereas, with regard to those who cannot work, programs such as family allowances, old age pensions, additional benefits to needy senior citizens and social welfare programs are integrated in such a way, like I said earlier, as to encourage those able to work to stay in employment while making sure that those who cannot will not be forsaken by this society.

[English]

The second group of policies which have to do with our goals for the 1970's are those which can be described under the general heading of the national economy. The Minister of Finance and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) will be speaking on these subjects. Indeed, there are about a dozen measures enumerated in the Speech from the Throne which, "will contribute to the development and elaboration of a coherent set of industrial policies for Canada." I will not elaborate on them now, Mr. Speaker. The ministers will have occasion to do so.

• (1650)

I just want to repeat that it has been this government's practice in the past not merely to bring in policies which would increase growth, increase the quantity of goods in our society, but to have policies which would co-ordinate other priorities, priorities in the area of equality, of the quality of life, preservation of the environment, domestic control of the economic environment, the necessity for regionalism, the strengthening of less developed regions, and so on. This will be the essence of our thrust in that area.

Mr. Fairweather: I did not hear that.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member did not hear the word "thrust"? Perhaps if he returned to his seat I could direct my remarks more to him.

[Translation]

The third category I announced is in the area of political rights and in the area of parliamentary proceedings. There again, opposition members will be tempted to say that there has been a swift turning round, that all of a sudden the government will be concerned with parliamentary issues.

Mr. Speaker, let me simply outline the government's achievements during the last four and a half years. This government has attached a great deal of importance to the members' work, and in several ways, namely by increasing the working facilities, the available space, the number of secretaries, machines, telephones, and in giving hon. members the necessary access to documents to enable them to perform their work efficiently. The government also set up the Beaupré Commission which, as is known, recommended an increase in the salaries and allowances of members of Parliament. The government unhesitatingly had these increases adopted. It also substantially improved the Pension Plan. It also introduced, I believe, a fairly new piece of legislation in Parliament whereby members, first those belonging to the opposition and later on government members were granted the funds required for research bureaux, precisely so that they may do their work and have access to the information required for criticism of government policies and in-depth studies of government proposals.

The Throne Speech indicates that our interest in parliamentary proceedings will lead to several new legislative measures. The Throne Speech mentions the field of conflict of interests.

The government intends to establish regulations for three possible categories of conflicts of interest. I would readily say, Mr. Speaker, that there has not been too much cause for alarm in this field at the federal level because, very fortunately, there are very few cases of conflict of interest. Nevertheless, considering the proper administration of Parliament and for more insurance for electors in this field, we intend to introduce regulations on this subject. We shall do so in the case of members, senators, ministers and bureaucrats as well.

In the case of election expenses, we shall reintroduce the legislation proposed during the last session, but incorporating several amendments which have been suggested by the committee and the public. There will be amendments which in particular will provide that the origin of financial contributions to political parties be better known.

We have also proposed that the meetings of the House and of the parliamentary committees be transmitted by radio and television. This is a measure that was discussed during the last session by a parliamentary committee. To my mind, opinions were divided on the matter at the time and the government is prepared to introduce this measure and hopes to gain the co-operation of the opposition parties.

I wish to discuss another matter, Mr. Speaker, the question of information media. I do not know what will be our conduct toward the advance briefings to members of the press gallery. The issue was raised as a question of privilege last Friday by the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Reilly). He was complaining about a custom which dates back to a number of years—and let me say that he himself was aware of it when he was a member of the press gallery and certainly took advantage of it. He complained that we used to give advance briefings to the members of the press gallery.

[English]

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Reilly) state his question of privilege?

Mr. Reilly: The question of privilege is, (a) I did not take advantage of pre-releases or documents of this kind when I was a journalist and, (b) the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) knows very well it has never been the practice to release documents of this nature four hours in advance of the time that hon. members were to hear their contents.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I heard the exchange. I heard the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Ottawa West the other day, and I now rule that the remarks of the right hon. Prime Minister do not give him a question of privilege at this time.

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, as I said on Friday, I seek nothing but guidance from the House today. The government thought it was doing the right thing when it allowed the members of the press gallery to do their job as they did in the past. The government has often been accused of secrecy. In this case we tried to follow a practice dating back at least 20 years I am told and it seems that the members opposite and particularly the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) are not happy about it.

I repeat that if the House wants this practice to be stopped in the future, I will be the very first to request the members of the cabinet to comply, but I would like this to be made quite clear. I have had this checked with members of the press gallery and also with people who were with the office of the right hon. member for Prince Albert and as far as I have been able to gather from witnesses still alive this has been common practice over the last 20 years. Therefore we have only followed a most common procedure. It is not quite clear to me yet what the member is upset about. If he would speak clearly and have the House set a guideline for the government, I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I would be the first to abide by it. But I am inclined to believe that the hon. member merely wanted to call the attention of the House on himself. The kindest thing I can say about him is that he played a sick joke.

In another field, Mr. Speaker, namely that of the Queen's visits, I would like to state, as did the Leader of the Official Opposition, that I was happy to hear that in 1973 Her Majesty the Queen and her husband Prince Philip will come twice to Canada. I take this opportunity to say that following requests from the governments of Alberta and Saskatchewan that Her Majesty and His Royal Highness visit those provinces on the occasion of the RCMP centennial, it is my pleasure to announce that Her Majesty and the Duke of Edinburgh agreed to visit Regina and another city in Alberta which has not yet been chosen but which is intimately connected with the RCMP's past. They will do so during the first week of July 1973.

Mr. Hees: How was it in Damascus?

Mr. Trudeau: I have a lot more to say, Mr. Speaker, but I need some water.

An hon. Member: Put some octane in it.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): It is not heavy water.

Mr. Hees: Come on, get the wheels rolling again.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Hees: Here it comes.

Mr. Trudeau: —if the member for Prince Edward-Hastings does not behave a bit better than that, I will not let him have his photograph taken with me the next time I go there.

Mr. Speaker, the last subject that I said I wanted to include in the reasons for deciding to stay on in the form of government concern the whole subject of national unity. I must confess, probably to the delight of some members opposite, that I think it is clear that I was optimistic and probably a bit naïve to use, during the last campaign, the theme, "The Land is Strong". It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that the question of national unity has not been solved in this country. It is obvious that not speaking about it during the campaign, and letting this field be occupied by many people who were not working to make this country any more united,—

An hon. Member: Who are they? Name them.

Mr. Trudeau: —was a mistaken tactic on my part, whereas in 1968—

Mr. Stanfield: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I hesitate to interrupt my hon. friend because he did not interrupt me, so I apologize. I was the Leader of the Opposition and I was fairly active in working against my hon. friend. Is he suggesting that I said anything that would militate against national unity? I would just like to be clear on that point.

An hon. Member: That is it; you never said a word.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I was not going to—

An hon. Member: He was just making smear remarks.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. Trudeau: I was not going to name the Leader of the Opposition as having contributed to that thrust of disunity. I think it is fair to say that, as a leader of a party, he has shown responsibility in the area of national unity and that he was one of those who tried to talk his own members into voting, without complete success I would say, for the Official Languages Act. I am sure that he has done his utmost to contribute to national unity in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Since the Leader of the Opposition asks the question, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask him one that he might want to answer at some later date or perhaps even now. I was informed that in the last stages of the campaign or thereabouts he accused the former minister of regional economic expansion of being a "Père Noël", I think were his words, because he had been too generous to Quebec. I see that the hon. Leader of the Opposition acknowledges that he did that. Mr. Speaker, this suggestion is not conducive to national unity.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Muir: You are still as smart as ever.

An hon. Member: Turner, you might as well take over.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I certainly accused the hon. gentleman of lavishing funds in the form of a Father Christmas. I think I mentioned the sum that he spent, though I have forgotten what it was.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I remember; you will have the answer now.

Mr. Stanfield: I want to make it very clear that I said this in the province of Quebec; I said this in Quebec City.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I say, Sir, that if the Leader of the Opposition is prevented from criticizing a minister such as the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) for wasting money on the grounds that by so doing he is anti-Quebec, then we have reached a pretty sorry state.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Why don't you resign? You have discredited yourself as leader.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I suppose we are all sensitive to different things and it is perhaps a fact that I have been overly sensitive to this type of divisiveness. Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition is justified in feeling that there was nothing divisive about speaking in that way. It so happens, though, that if we are sensitive to this kind of talk it is because in Quebec no federalist would try to blame the federal government for being too favourable to any one province. The Separatistes speak like that in Quebec—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: I was not accusing—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Three ministers spoke like that on a television program.

Mr. Stewart (Marquette): Is that what you meant when you said you had a lot more goodies?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is talking of a lot more goodies—

An hon. Member: You were talking of it.

• (1710)

Mr. Trudeau: This reminds me of a headline in a responsible newspaper during the campaign. It will be recalled that at the time I had been talking about the "Highways and Byways" program which applied to all Canada. There was a headline in a reputable English Canadian newspaper on the first page which read, "PM promises more goodies to Quebec".

An hon. Member: Was that wrong?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, there was not a French paper of which I know—and if it happened, I am sure it was not in any paper but a separatist one—which mentioned more goodies being given to the west when we decided to buy 2,000 hopper cars or to bring in two price wheat, something which would bring $57 million more to the west. There was not a paper in Quebec that had for its headline, "More goodies for Toronto" when we decided to expropriate there for the purposes of an urban park.

An hon. Member: Oh, boy!

Mr. Trudeau: Nobody in Quebec, I repeat, except the separatists, say that the federal government has been too favourable to Ontario or too favourable to the west. Indeed, the separatists do say that. One of their recent publications tried to establish that Quebec has been "done in" because there are fewer miles of railway in Quebec than there are in Ontario and that Quebec has a larger territory, without taking into account the density of population and so on. A separatist publication establishes that the federal government gives more money to the western farmer than to the Quebec farmer, without making the necessary examinations regarding the importance of agriculture to the west as compared to Quebec. But these are separatist publications, Mr. Speaker. These are not publications which support the cause of federalism. I repeat the same is true of the politicians themselves. Sure, there are separatist politicians in Quebec who spend their time saying that the federal government is a government which colonizes Quebec and has nothing but generosity for English Canada. Sure, there are separatist publications which try to turn the people of Quebec against the government of Ottawa, because there is too much English power in Ottawa. Sure, there are publications in Quebec which try every day to convince the people of Quebec that they cannot get a square deal from the federal government, because that government is dominated by an English speaking majority. But these are separatists, Mr. Speaker; these are not people who believe in federalism. I cannot understand why the Leader of the Opposition and his supporters were not sensitized to this reality—

Mr. Stanfield: Come on!

Mr. Trudeau: —when many of them exploited the theme of French power.

An hon. Member: Who did?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Name one.

Mr. Hees: Name one.

Mr. Forrestall: The Prime Minister was the one who was exploiting it.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, let there not be hypocrisy. I have seen material by Conservative candidates—

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Name them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Forrestall: I was being as good a Canadian as the Prime Minister is. Cut out this nonsense.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I will not be silenced on this subject. I can understand—

An hon. Member: Name one.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, when I was in Saskatchewan five weeks ago I made a speech and I named in that particular case—

An hon. Member: Name one.

Mr. Trudeau: I named the premier of that province and I quoted many instances in which he reviled the government because it had been too favourable to Quebec; and I think that hon. members opposite in their own consciences know—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: What are you trying to do?

An hon. Member: Lewis had better think of that one.

Mr. Trudeau: Lewis does not have to think of that one, because those are not sentiments which are shared by the Leader of the NDP. I have heard him in Quebec and elsewhere stand up for Canadian unity in a way which I do not think has been emulated by other members of the Conservative party.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: What are you trying to do?

An hon. Member: Name names.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) asks what I am trying to do.

Mr. Alexander: The Prime Minister is making me nervous.

Mr. Trudeau: And he should be nervous, Mr. Speaker, because this is a very important matter. I would like members of his party to realize that one of the reasons historically why they have not enjoyed as much support in Quebec as they would have liked, and why they do not enjoy that success now, has little to do with the problem of organization about which the Leader of Opposition spoke, I believe in Alberta and Quebec after the election. It seems that the only thing needed for strengthening their support in Quebec is a better organization and getting their message through a little better.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): What do you lack in Alberta?

Mr. Trudeau: I am suggesting that more than that is needed.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): What do you lack in Alberta?

Mr. Trudeau: More than that is needed. I am answering the hon. member for Hamilton West. I am speaking of the kind of sensitivity I have alluded to and talked about this afternoon. It is the kind which is obviously not shared by the members of the hon. member's party—

Mr. Alexander: The Prime Minister is alluding to race relations.

Mr. Trudeau: —and without it they will not make inroads in Quebec.

An hon. Member: You have said enough on this subject.

Mr. Trudeau: As the hon. member says, I have said enough on this subject.

An hon. Member: Too much.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): There is enough innuendo, certainly.

Mr. Trudeau: Too much has been said, I am sure, for the easiness of hon. members opposite, or to put them at ease, but not too much to remind them of some truths which it is important to hear in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: What about the names?

Mr. Trudeau: At any rate, Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Names.

Mr. Trudeau: It is strange how some of the members who are the worst offenders in this case have not asked me to name names. Generally, it is those who feel innocent who have asked.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Trudeau: The Leader of the Opposition asked me if I was including him, and I answered at some length. If any other member wants to know if I am thinking of him, I will tell him if I have any evidence on such matters relating to him.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Smear!

Mr. Fairweather: Oh, yes, I have 130 names.

Mr. Trudeau: In any event, Mr. Speaker, we have included in the Speech from the Throne the following phrase:

> Parliament will be asked to confirm the basic principles of the government's program for bilingualism in the public service.

That is an occasion to which we are looking forward, when members of the opposition with unanimity, I hope, will support not only the Official Languages Act, which is the law of the land, but the principle which underlies our faith in that act, and apply this Official Languages Act in many other areas where it is workable.

As in other areas, we will accept amendments if they are improvements. We will not accept them if they are contrary to the principle of the Official Languages Act, without which we do not think this country can continue to remain united.

An hon. Member: We will decide.

Mr. Trudeau: It will be an excellent occasion for individual members opposite who feel offended to stand up and be counted, and to say that in fact they do or do not support the principles and theory of the Official Languages Act.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1720)

Mr. Lawrence: Does the Prime Minister think that that act is synonymous with national unity?

Mr. Trudeau: The answer is a very simple yes. I am suprised the hon. member should have asked—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I hope to introduce the hon. member one of these days to the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) and perhaps, to the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle). Perhaps he will then be placed in a position to understand why the principle of two official languages is, indeed, fundamental to the unity of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The fact that the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham asked that question seems to me to prove the point I was trying to make. Perhaps he will want to tell us whether during the election campaign he did suggest that this government had mainly regard for the province of Quebec. I see the hon. member is seeking the floor to answer my question. I will gladly be seated to enable him to reply.

Mr. Lawrence: In a word, Mr. Speaker, no.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I hope the hon. gentleman will not accept the invitation of the Prime Minister. I trust that the debate will proceed on traditional lines.

Mr. Trudeau: I think the time has come for me to draw my remarks to a conclusion.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I thank the hon. gentleman for his applause, but I have a few more minutes in which I can talk and then he can applaud for longer.

The essence is that we do accept the responsibility of minority government. We realize that the verdict of the electorate was to the effect that no party was given an absolute mandate to govern alone. We believe that much can be achieved by a minority parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I would be less than candid if I said I would not have preferred a somewhat different verdict. But the people of Canada did express their views in the election. They sent us here as we are, no party having an absolute majority. Nevertheless, they did send us here with instructions to act as a legislative body, for the government to formulate positions and policy, and bring forward bills, for the opposition to question them and debate, but also to produce. We were sent here to ensure that Canada would have a strong government, that Canada would have a government able to govern, a legislative body able to produce. And I think we must follow the rules of the game as they were laid out by the Canadian people.

Some things for us will be questions of confidence. Some things would mean the demise of the government. If, for instance, there should be a clear vote of no confidence in the government, if the government should be defeated on fundamentals, on basic principles—and I do not mind repeating, Mr. Speaker, that the Official Languages Act and its application to the public service of Canada is an example of such an area—we shall go to the people. If the opposition wish to defeat us on such a question and on other fundamental questions, they will have that opportunity. But I hasten to add that other questions, if they go against us, will not be interpreted by the government as a defeat of the government. We shall accept amendments—

An hon. Member: You make the rules.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member said we are making the rules. Let me remind him that even when we had a majority government we did not feel obliged to resign because some of our legislation—I am thinking of the national marketing act legislation—which was only passed after years of debate—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): How about the tax measure?

Mr. Trudeau: Other measures, such as the grain stabilization bill, were withdrawn by the government because they failed to obtain passage. But we did not consider that to be a cause for resignation or for going to the people.

The logic of the government's position is not one of our making. It is one which follows from the result of the election. I know the temptation will be great, when the government accepts any modification of its priorities or its legislation, to say that the government is clinging to power. But if we pursue this logic further, I take it the same reasoning would apply also if we were to give our place to the Conservative opposition and if they were to form a government. Either they, too, would have to act as a minority government or else they would be obliged to ask for the dissolution of the House. So, it would seem to me that the logic which we accept is that which was given to us by the Canadian people when they voted on October 30. If it is an election that is desired, if we wish to reject that verdict of the Canadian people, we should say so clearly. That is not our position. It is our position to accept the responsibilities of governing, to try to place before the House of Commons a program which will as best as possible seek to respond to the lessons we learned in the election and to the priorities as we perceive them as a result of that vote.

The history behind our decision is a long-standing one. I have some notes here which I compiled with the help of Senator Forsey. I have an article by Eugene Forsey, as he then was, published in the month of August, 1963 in the Canadian Journal of Economics and Political Science. It is interesting to read in that article and others that Sir John A. Macdonald remained in office despite several defeats between 1867 and 1873, sometimes on some very major issues. And if any precedents were needed by my friends in the New Democratic Party, I would suggest the precedent by Mr. Ramsay MacDonald.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: Find a better one!

• (1730)

Mr. Trudeau: The minority Labour government of 1924 announced that it would consider decisive, defeats on direct votes of no confidence by the responsible leader of any party but it would not consider decisive, defeats on any other motions unless they went to the roots of the government's policies. There is even a precedent for my hon. friends on this side, taken from Mr. Gladstone's government of 1894 when he was actually defeated on an amendment to the address, which was passed by a snap vote, and he neither resigned nor asked for dissolution.

I do not think that anyone should be under any misapprehension: this government is not going to cling to office for the sake of clinging to office, swallowing everything and anything so long as it is still permitted to occupy the treasury benches. But we are not going to give up simply because we are defeated on some motion or bill, or some part of a bill or some amendment unless we feel that that defeat goes to the roots of our policy.

We want to see this parliament work. We want to see it work for the good of the country. We want to see it work under the leadership that we are prepared to give it. We are not going to abdicate our responsibilities or to bring this parliament to a premature end just because this House, in the exercise of its judgment, defeats us on some matter that is not a matter of principle, some matter that does not go to the roots of our policy.

I began my speech—

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, would the right hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I have only a few moments before finishing my speech.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) does not wish to permit a question. The right hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I am sorry the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will not permit a question on such an important issue as the matter of voting.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am sure on other days the hon. member will have an opportunity to ask questions. I have been speaking for an hour and a half now and I should like an opportunity to conclude my remarks, for the benefit of people in the gallery.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, such is the program we wished to put before parliament and such are the reasons that made us realize it was imperative for us to come before the House with a plan for action. Such is also the spirit in which we shall try to interpret the lesson the Canadian parliament learned from the electorate through the latter's vote on October 30. What remains now, Mr. Speaker, is in the hands of the men and women who are gathered here.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I did not wish to interrupt the previous speech, but at five o'clock it was my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom)—Consumer Affairs—Food prices—Scope of terms of reference of joint committee; the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie)—Sports—Montreal Olympic Games, 1976—Circumstances of sale of television rights to American Broadcasting Company; the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez)—Housing—Whitson Gardens subdivision, Chelmsford, Ont.—Action to maintain value of houses not subject to foreclosure.

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. J. J. Blais for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I do not have unlimited time; in fact, the rules give me only 30 minutes. I hope I can confine myself within that time, but I am sure the House will grant me additional minutes if I require them.

May I first join others in expressing our party's pleasure that both the Speaker and the Deputy Speaker occupy the positions they now have. I also join in congratulating the mover and the seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, both of whom presented to this House addresses that won for them and their constituents a great deal of respect.

I want to start with something the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said in his final words. If I understood them, he said that the government would decide whether or not defeat on a certain piece of legislation was a matter of no confidence. I want to tell him that as far as we are concerned, it will be parliament that will make that decision. If in our view defeat of a piece of legislation is important to parliament and to this country, but the government does not consider this a motion of no confidence, then we will make certain that this House votes no confidence in the government on a special motion.

Secondly, I want to say to the Prime Minister that I agree with him—

—that the Official Languages Act is important for Canada's unity, but I wish to tell him that to speak about it the way he did this afternoon cannot help Canada's unity.

[English]

He does not serve the unity of Canada by permitting in Quebec a film boasting of a certain power in parliament and in the government. He does not promote the unity of Canada by saying the kind of thing he said this afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Above all, I say to him that although the question of bilingualism in the federal civil service is a crucial matter for the unity of Canada, it has always been his mistake to consider it as the only thing that mattered in Canada. There are economic and social questions in this country of equal importance to the maintenance of unity in Canada.

Before passing to my main speech I want to say a few words to my new suitor this afternoon, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). I read somewhere the other day that the Leader of the Opposition had said that his tongue was not hanging out for office. From the speech that he made this afternoon I suggest to him that his tongue is not only hanging out, it is tearing at the roots. He said that on the basis of its past performance, the government does not deserve the confidence of this House to deal with employment, unemployment and other matters. I fully agree. If there were an alternative in this parliament that deserved our confidence, the situation would be indeed different. There is nothing in the record of this government in four and a half years that deserves the confidence of the members of the New Democratic Party. But there is nothing in the record of the Conservative Party in this country, with a majority government or a minority government, or in the record of the Leader of the Opposition while premier of Nova Scotia, that warrants our confidence.

• (1740)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Will you tell that to the people of Nova Scotia?

Mr. Lewis: I have said that to the people of Nova Scotia, and I will say it again.

A newspaper man, Bruce Little, wrote these words. I did not check his arithmetic, but I think this passage is very interesting:

> Nova Scotia has spent more money for every Nova Scotian on heavy water than the U.S. spent for every American on its moon program.
> The difference is that the U.S. got a man on the moon and Nova Scotia did not get heavy water.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: I could spend the next 15 minutes indicating the record of the Leader of the Opposition and the Conservative Party, but I have no intention of doing so. I intend only to underline the following. The Leader of the Opposition chides me about having declaimed against the party of the corporate welfare bums which sits opposite. I want to remind him that I declaimed just as loudly against his party as a party of the corporate welfare bums.

Why did I do so? It was not because I accused the Leader of the Opposition of something he did not say. Let me read to him what he is reported to have said in Toronto, not years ago but on October 19, 1972, in the context of dealing with the subject I dealt with during the campaign:

> I am not opposed to the established practices of providing incentives to corporations through the various devices of accelerated depreciation write-offs, deferred profits and the like. My experience in government persuades me that these are not only acceptable but they are, in many instances, essential.

On that basis, what right has he to say to me that I am following someone else in respect of corporate welfare bums? But if I have, I am in the very good company of the Leader of the Official Opposition.

He wants to know what the government will do about pensions, and he says to us in the New Democratic Party that we should not even give the government an opportunity to tell us what it has in mind because we cannot trust it to do anything. I waited to hear what he had to say about pensions, but the only thing my assistants were able to find was the policies and commitments of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada, dated September, 1972. On page 52 there is a heading, "The Stanfield Alternative", dealing with poverty. All it says about old age pensions is that his party would maintain the present old age security and guaranteed income plan and remove the 2 per cent ceiling on the cost of living adjustment.

That gentleman wants me to assist him immediately; not one month, two months, three months or four months from now, but next Thursday. He wants me to assist him to take the position of the Prime Minister. I say to him that if we had a real alternative that we could feel in our hearts and in our minds, neither of those gentlemen who are tied to the corporate system of this country would be prime minister of Canada. But that is not in our hands. I say to the Leader of the Opposition, who has a great deal of patience, "Just be patient, Bob, your day may come; but I doubt very much whether you will do any better than Pierre". I must add that even the Conservative party would find it difficult to do worse.

Let me say one more thing in that regard, and I say it seriously to the hon. gentleman. There were some things which he and I, on behalf of our respective parties, demanded during the election campaign. We may have differed as to the method and as to the amount for old age pensioners and the like, but there were some things that we demanded from the government and said the people of Canada ought to have. We both agreed on these things.

With all the earnestness I have, I would ask him to lay aside for a few weeks this hunger for office and show in this parliament the concern for Canada and Canadians that he tried so hard to show, for obvious reasons, during the election campaign. I also ask that he and his colleagues join us in the New Democratic Party in making this parliament work and making this government produce on its promises. If it does not, then out it will go.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: I would expect the Leader of the Opposition to then be given an opportunity to show what he can do, and we will make exactly the same offer to him and his party: they will stay in office as long as they produce, but when they fail to do so they will go out the same way, no matter when the election may be. This is what parliament is all about. It is precisely because this kind of sequence is possible to this parliament that our party and caucus made the decision it did, to avoid this sort of frustration of dropping one government on Thursday of this week, and dropping another government three or four Thursdays hence and going to the people without result.

The Leader of the Opposition reminded Members of Parliament that at the opening of the last session of the previous parliament I said that the Trudeau years had been wasted years; that the people of Canada would show their frustration and anger when they next had an opportunity at the polls. On October 30, the Liberal party reaped what it deserved for its dismal performance from 1968 to 1972. The result is that there now sits a humbled government.

Mr. Alexander: I don't know about that.

Mr. Lewis: I did not say it was humble; I said it was humbled.

Mr. Alexander: That is different.

Mr. Lewis: Gone is its complacent and reckless majority, and what we still have to find out is what has taken its place. Is the throne speech a genuine recognition of problems which had previously been ignored, or is it merely clever political window-dressing in order to hang on to office? At the very opening of my remarks I want to tell the government clearly and emphatically that if the throne speech is merely window-dressing, it will not hang on to office: we will bring it down to defeat if its legislative proposals fail to live up to the promises in the throne speech.

We in the New Democratic Party believe it is our responsibilty, indeed that it is the responsibility of all members, to behave constructively in any parliament, particularly in a parliament with a minority government. We believe it is our responsibility to give parliament an opportunity to find out precisely what the government proposes. During his speech the Leader of the Opposition said he wanted the government to have that opportunity. I suggest to him that if he is berating us for deciding to give the government a chance to tell us what it intends to do, this is really inconsistent with much of what he said.

We believe we must give parliament an opportunity to solve at least some of the urgent problems facing our country and our people. I want to make clear, however, that it is not a blank cheque we offer the government. We in the New Democratic Party offer the government an opportunity to deliver. Ours is a c.o.d. policy; our votes can be collected only on delivery. Do not forget that. I want to make that very clear to hon. members on the treasury benches so there is no doubt about it.

In an attempt to demonstrate the breadth and depth of the government's conversion, the Speech from the Throne covers every area of national and international concern. I could almost see every ministry and every minister vying for space in the confessional.

Mr. Jamieson: I could not get in.

Mr. Lewis: The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) says he could not get in. It is therefore necessary, because of the array of subjects in the throne speech, to seek priorities for action by this parliament in this session. I say that the prime concern remains the unacceptable level of unemployment. The immeasurable costs of the ill-conceived and futile policy on inflation, initiated in the prideful early days of this government, are still with us. Only the pride has gone.

Although the Speech from the Throne contains a commitment to "expand job opportunities at a rate that will bring about as rapid as possible a decline in the numbers of unemployed," details are still lacking. They should be provided quickly, and I want to suggest action on a number of fronts.

Mr. Speaker, although it is only five minutes to six, since I am about to enter into a discussion which I would not like to have interrupted perhaps you would allow me to call it six o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is it the wish of the House that we call it six o'clock?

[Mr. Alexander.]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Before recognizing the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) may I point out that I know, from being present at the beginning of the hon. member's speech, that he intended to request the unanimous consent of the House to an extension of time. I wonder whether we could not settle this question immediately. I would ask hon. members whether there would be a disposition to allow the hon. member to go beyond his time.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lewis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and hon. members.

At six o'clock, Sir, I suggested that it was important for us to indicate some of the lines of action that this session ought to take in view of the absence of details in the throne speech. I want to say, first, that measures which were announced late last year should be strengthened even at this late date. In fact, I want to urge parliament to put the seasonal capital works program on a permanent footing so that it may be planned over the long term; thus, delays in getting it going every year may be avoided.

Every member of the House knows that municipal governments are chronically underfinanced and that the municipalities invariably have long shopping lists of capital projects and of services urgently needed. I underline that these are not temporary or short term, they are not make-work projects; they touch the basic needs of our people and they affect the quality of life of Canadians. I urge that at this session we undertake an imaginative and well planned program in this area. This would create employment to a progressively increasing extent.

Furthermore, I am confident that the provinces and municipalities will welcome more federal initiative so long as they retain the opportunity of developing and establishing their own local priorities.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, the budget expected this month or early in February must provide for an important tax reduction. Besides the maintenance of the 3 per cent tax cut provision which has expired, at least in principle and according to the letter of the Act, on December 31, we are also counting on a substantial tax decrease in favour of taxpayers in the lower or medium income brackets. In spite of the fancies which rove in the minds of some financial advisers in Ottawa, an increase in consumer demand will doubtless help create jobs. There is no excuse for not increasing consumer demand when, during the last couple of years, an unemployment level of 6 per cent or more has been experienced. In the present situation, a personal income tax reduction is not only desirable but practical. The revenues of the government have greatly increased, much more than anticipated in the government estimates. For example, in his budget last May, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) expected a deficit of $450 million, but during the eight months previous to December, the government had a surplus of $759 million, a mistake of more than a thousand million.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, when we realize to what extent public revenues have been underestimated and to what unbelievable degree the expenditure of the unemployment insurance scheme were undervalued, we are inclined to ask ourselves if the Department of Finance is competent enough to use a slide-rule, let alone a computer.

Thirdly, the budget must propose some selective reductions in the sales tax to manufacturers on items on which the tax becomes regressive, since it applies to families with low or average income. Such a measure would give rise to an immediate increase in consumer demand and employment.

[English]

Fourthly, to the extent that investment needs to be stimulated, it should be encouraged in small and Canadian-owned business through a redesigned Canada Development Corporation. I point out that these smaller, Canadian-owned firms are labour—rather than capital—intensive and would indeed open new job opportunities.

The marketing and management services referred to in the throne speech would also help. But what we do not need, and what we in the New Democratic Party will continue to oppose, is a continuation of the corporate rip-off at the expense of the ordinary Canadian taxpayer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: This has not worked to produce commensurate employment in the past and will not do so in the future.

The commitments in the throne speech to more action in the fields of housing and anti-pollution, if the government means it and if they are properly and energetically implemented, would be of immense value in the fight against unemployment, for these areas create jobs directly and immediately. In our view, the billions of dollars granted to large and mostly foreign-owned corporations in tax concessions and tax deferrals over the last number of years with the intention, assumption or excuse that they would produce jobs, have not done so. They have served only to increase the tax burden on the individual Canadian, to distort our economic development, to expand foreign control of our economy, particularly in the resource industries, and to swell the profits and power of large corporations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: The NDP continues to oppose, and is determined to oppose, this policy. I hasten to remind the Leader of the Opposition that this is a policy supported and promoted by his party as well as by the party opposite him. I say simply—I hope that those on the government benches understand this—that therefore much depends on the fiscal policies which the promised budget unveils.

I can say now that we oppose today, as we opposed last May, the corporate tax cut and the accelerated write-off proposals contained in that month's budget. We do not believe they will result in significant job creation. Indeed, the accelerated write-off provisions for new machinery and equipment make it relatively more attractive to use machines instead of people and may well result in fewer rather than more jobs. Furthermore, I think that all members of the House, members of the government party, members of the official opposition, and my colleagues, ought to know that a disproportionate share of the lost revenues through these rip-offs to the corporations will be captured as windfall gains by foreign-owned corporations.

Look at the facts. It is true that in the manufacturing sector, 75 per cent of Canadian companies are Canadian controlled; but it is also true that 25 per cent of foreign-controlled companies own 58 per cent of the assets and receive 64 per cent of the profits. It is, therefore, obvious that most of the additional $500 million which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) hoped to give away last May will be a direct contribution to the coffers of the foreign-owned and foreign-controlled firms in this country. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, please note that some of this money will find its way from our treasury into the treasury of the United States government, due to a reduction in the credit which U.S. subsidiaries would otherwise receive or be allowed for taxes paid in Canada.

What concerns us equally about this attitude of the Liberal party and the Conservative party toward this subject is that the benefits of the accelerated depreciation—the accelerated rip-off, I should call it—and tax cuts will go mainly to the large corporations. The Minister of Finance has justified his gift on the grounds that these companies need the money to finance their expansion. Yet it is well known that it is the small and medium sized, Canadian-owned firm which has the greatest difficulty in borrowing for expansion from our regular financial institutions. It is these firms that the government should be trying to help. It is usually because of their limited equity position that such firms are unable to borrow in conventional money markets. Our major financial institutions prefer to lend to large firms whose equity and cash flow positions are large enough to guarantee security.

The New Democratic Party feels strongly that the $500 million which the government proposes to give away in its forthcoming budget, if it carries out its intention of bringing back the May proposals, and some of the DREE incentives should be used to provide equity to small and medium sized, Canadian-owned companies in the service and manufacturing sectors. I suggest to you that strengthened by this additional equity, these firms would be able to obtain the funds they need for expansion from our banks and other lending institutions.

The result would be both a strengthening of the Canadian-owned sector of the private economy and, if the equity were provided through the Canada Development Corporation, as it should be, a sharing of the benefits by the Canadian people generally. Further, if we did that it would be possible to ensure that the money was actually used for expansion and job creation rather than simply fattening the assets of the corporate giants in this country.

I refer hon. members of the House to the Gray report. They ought to read it and reread it. I say this to members of both the government party and of the official opposition. I refer them to that part of the report which states that 44 per cent of the funds used for the expansion of foreign-controlled firms in Canada from 1960 to 1967 was obtained through accelerated capital cost allowances. I ask, how much longer are we going to offer foreign-controlled firms the means to buy us out with our own money?

At last, the government has indicated a long overdue concern about the rising price of food. Last fall the Prime Minister said rising food prices were good for the farmers. Apparently the farmers, along with millions of other Canadians, were unimpressed by this argument. The government's decision to establish a parliamentary committee to study food prices indicates that although the Prime Minister may not know what is good for the farmer, he knows what is good for his government.

Mr. Speaker, I am always surprised at the extent of the research the government devotes to the food industry. It has always washed its hands of it. Even last summer, the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs blamed the higher prices on the producer while the Department of Agriculture published a newsrelease according to which the processors and retailers—and not the farmers—were to blame.

Every week, Mr. Speaker, full page advertisements in all the newspapers across the land claim that the supermarkets make modest profits, such as 0.6, 1 or 1.5 per cent on their sales. Only when one studies their profits as compared to their investments, that is according to the method used by the other industries in calculating their profits, do we see their miserable profits of 0.6 per cent, as in the case of Dominion Stores Limited, for instance, become in reality 11 per cent, that is, a far more reasonable income, whatever the point of view. It could well be that it is——"mainly because of the meat," Mr. Speaker!

We do not believe that the proposed parliamentary committee is an adequate substitute for a prices review board with power to roll back and control food prices. We do not fool ourselves about that. However, this parliamentary committee might be a useful start, but only if it is set up without delay and if it is given wide and full powers to call witnesses, to require the production of documents and to examine the books of processors and distributors. We call upon the government to establish the committee immediately and to give it the necessary powers.

Food is an important part of the cost of living, particularly for Canadians on pensions, on welfare and on low incomes generally. These people deserve better. The action proposed in the throne speech is minimal. Delay would be inexcusable. In our view, the committee should not be burdened with members from the other place except, Mr. Speaker, for those Senators who may wish to testify in their capacity as directors of various corporations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, somebody a little less kind than I am has said that perhaps the Senators might be interested in doing something about the increasing price of Geritol.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: The other major factor in the cost of living of the average Canadian family is that of shelter. There are some brave words in the throne speech on the subject of housing, but what exactly will they mean in practice? If they mean no more than the proposals we received in the last parliament, then the government and CMHC are still failing to tackle adequately this urgent problem.

I note particularly the omission of any reference to lower interest rates, and the gentleness of the appeal for more mortgage money from investors. In our view, parliament has the authority and should act to require banks and other institutions to invest a certain proportion of their reserves in housing and to lower interest rates on mortgages. The need for decent homes grows greater every passing year. I plead with the government to use its opportunity to make a bold and effective start now.

A careful study of the Speech from the Throne shows some very important and desirable suggestions in the field of social policy. But it also contains some wording and some aspects which arouse doubts and worries. For many years our party has advocated a floor, under income, for all Canadians or, as it is now called, a guaranteed annual income. We are, therefore, pleased to see the acceptance of this principle, at least as far as concerns those who cannot work, the aged and the incapacitated. But I wonder what the somewhat unusual language with respect to pensioners is meant to convey. The throne speech says, "legislation will be introduced to improve the economic situation of old age pensioners". We will wait anxiously to see precisely what these words mean. All I want to say at this point is that failure to increase basic pensions, or the government merely presenting a token increase, will not be acceptable to members of the New Democratic Party. I am sure that such action will not be acceptable to many other members of this House nor to the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: We shall also watch carefully the proposed changes in the unemployment insurance plan. We appreciate that there has been some abuse of the program, and we do not condone such abuse any more than any other section of this House does; nor do we oppose appropriate measures to tighten the administration, so long as they do not hurt the innocent.

What we regret, Mr. Speaker, is that already, as a result of the measures taken by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) in tightening some of the rules, we have received complaints, indeed cries for help from unemployed Canadians clearly entitled to benefit who have been caught in the tightened net. I know it is now thought politically wise to join in the various reactionary backlashes which were evident in some quarters during the campaign, but I want to say to you, Sir, and to members of this House that we in the New Democratic Party refuse to join in the backlash against social welfare and against such essential measures of social security as a humane and generous system of unemployment insurance. We simply will not support any attempt to emasculate our unemployment insurance program. The real problem is the unacceptable level of unemployment. The remedy is not to hound the unemployed; the remedy is to end unemployment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, we still consider the matter of economic independence crucial for the future of Canada as a distinct entity capable of establishing its own destiny.

One of the main aspects which we envisage in this field is the proposed Mackenzie Valley pipeline project. The bill on foreign ownership was denied adoption by the last Parliament because we felt that that project, considered separately, was a far-fetched way to deal with an urgent problem.

Therefore, we shall await with interest details of those other measures indicated in the Speech from the Throne. Nobody is in a position to estimate their value before their exact nature is known.

I cannot discuss other important aspects of the Speech from the Throne because of the time limit set by the Standing Orders. Some of my colleagues will deal with them later—especially in the field of agriculture—which leads us to believe that the government has finally agreed to decentralize the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, to re-examine that hodgepodge of giveaway programs in the field of research and development, election expenses, the new orientation of federal-provincial relations and the giving up of rigid positions. Those are subjects which we talked about during the election campaign. We are glad to see that the government intends at least to take a few steps in the right direction.

[English]

But I cannot resume my seat without congratulating the Prime Minister and his colleagues on their rediscovery of the west. What a thrill of revelation they must have felt! If there is anybody who has doubts about our democratic process, let him note anew the power of the ballot: at the right time, marked the right way, it maketh hearts to feel and eyes to see. Miracle of miracles, as the song goes.

I can tell the Prime Minister that I have spoken to the offices of the three New Democratic Party premiers in the west. They are fully ready to co-operate. The meeting of the Prairie Economic Council to be held in Winnipeg in a couple of months may present an opportunity to begin preparations for the proposed conference, especially since I understand that British Columbia will attend and that the economic council will become a western one rather than merely a prairie one. I cannot speak for them, but I am sure that the western premiers will not be satisfied with gestures, any more than we in this chamber would or will be.

Mr. Speaker, what I have been trying to convey to members of this House and, through the press gallery, to the people of Canada is that we in the New Democratic Party ask for solid accomplishments in this parliament. We have reason to believe that our campaign and our position in this House have influenced the content of the Speech from the Throne. This we welcome. There are important proposals in the speech which deserve a chance to be presented in legislation and we believe it would be unreasonable not to provide that chance. This is the reason for the policy which I have enunciated this afternoon and this evening and the policy which I made public the other day. I suggest, again, that it is as important for the Leader of the Opposition and his party to give this government a chance to bring its throne speech into legislation as it is for us, and he should wait patiently before he crosses the aisle—if he does.

As a result of the Prime Minister's speech this afternoon I hope that in the next three days, tomorrow, Wednesday and Thursday, the ministers and members of the government who speak will give us some details of their proposals. Parliament and the people of Canada are entitled to this. The generalities with which the Prime Minister was satisfied this afternoon do not satisfy us, Mr. Speaker. Members of the government have a duty to tell parliament during this debate what the proposals in the Speech from the Throne mean in the various areas I have mentioned and other areas which other people will discuss.

I say, Sir, that all of us were elected to serve the people of Canada, as the Leader of the Opposition said. In his speech he said that he feels this parliament has a great opportunity, that he feels responsible for it and that he hoped this parliament would add to its distinction. I say to him, as I said earlier, that his attitude this afternoon does not add to the distinction of this House nor, indeed, to the distinction of his party.

We in the New Democratic Party believe that whatever the complexion of the government, whether Liberal, as it is now, or Progressive Conservative as it may become at some future date, parliament should function constructively to serve the people of Canada. The government in place should be given a reasonable opportunity by all members of the House to present its program in detail, to present its legislation and its policies. This, Mr. Speaker, is our position, which we believe to be both reasonable and responsible and I am confident that the people of Canada will applaud it.

• (2030)

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) tells me that we are close to the party in power, which is somewhat true.

My first words will be to congratulate Mr. Speaker, as well as his Deputy, on their appointment to the elevated offices of Speaker and Deputy Speaker of the House of Commons.

I shall also take this opportunity to congratulate the mover and seconder of the Address in reply to the Throne Speech, who expressed themselves well, although their primary function was to praise the government: that is quite natural on the occasion of the opening of a session.

Mr. Speaker, I listened to the leader of the Progressive Conservative party and of the official opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and also to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) who spoke to us, first of all, of the October 30 general election where we received 737,000 votes, 638,000 of which in the province of Quebec. And those votes were not intended to divide Canada. Indeed, we did not preach one program in one area of the country and another in the other regions.

Today, I heard the Prime Minister blame the opposition for having stirred the Anglophones against the Francophones; a while ago, the leader of the New Democratic Party said the Prime Minister was not serving the interests of Canadian unity in speaking of those matters.

Mr. Lewis: In the words he used!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Yes, if you wish.

Mr. Lewis: There is a difference.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I believe it is time to tell the truth even if it hurts. Among the members of the New Democratic Party, I noticed, during the election campaign, the strength of their leader's statements. He was consistent with himself. I give him credit for this. He did not say in Montreal the opposite of what he said in Vancouver. He said in Vancouver that the "French fact" was a real fact in Canada and that one had to accept it.

Mr. Lewis: Even in Port Alberni.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Yes, even in Port Alberni. It does not mean that all his followers agreed with him and this is noticeable among all political parties. In Montreal or elsewhere within the province of Quebec, for instance, I have met a few members of the New Democratic Party who are as close to separatists as René Levesque may be.

An hon. Member: What about your party?

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Some of our members may feel the same, but our position remains logical in any case, Mr. Speaker, not only in the province of Quebec but throughout Canada.

This afternoon, I heard the members of the Conservative party grumble when the Prime Minister said that in a few regions, they had taken advantage of the French power in order to get rid of the other candidates who opposed the Progressive Conservatives, and we could hear them say no, no, no. I went through western Canada myself—not in a jet or a helicopter—to hold meetings and in Saskatchewan I was told to my face that a Catholic French Canadian was not welcome in western Canada. And today the members of the Conservative party deny this fact.

[Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue).]

Mr. Speaker, some of the Progressive Conservative members who are with us tonight were elected thanks to the French power in Ottawa. One may grumble as much as he wants to, but how is it that in the province of Quebec the Conservatives have been badly received? Because of inconsistency. They sang one song in the west and another one in the east. That is why only two Conservative members were elected in Quebec, one in Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner), with a slim majority, and another in Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey), who got a good majority because he said publicly: I do not want to see Wagner in my riding.

Mr. Speaker, when I say that the Progressive Conservatives acted like hypocrites, it is true. The day before yesterday, I was on a radio hot-line in Regina from my Parliament office and I stated that some Progressive Conservative members were elected on the back of French Canadians. A lady from Swift Current wrote me since then; I think that constituency is represented by a Conservative member. What did she say?

Just listened to you on the "Harrison Line"—

An hon. Member: That's the Tories.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): There's the same old gang.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): And the lady told me the following:

[English]

Just listened to you on the "Harrison Line," Regina, and I wholeheartedly agree with you.

The English here in this province (not saying all, but a great many) are decidedly anti-French. My own very friends are anti-French (they are English and Scotch); have had many arguments with them. I am of Dutch descent.

Thank you,

It is signed "Mrs. M. Wall," Swift Current.

And then, Mr. Speaker, they will come and tell us that they worked for national unity.

During the election campaign I heard the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe promise old age pensions of $200 a month at 60. His leader never spoke of that anywhere in Canada. The hon. leader of Her Majesty's very loyal opposition said today, stop the debate immediately to vote better old age pensions. Now he is beginning to like Canada's older people.

Mr. Speaker not so long ago—on October 13, 1970—the House voted on a sub-amendment moved by the New Democratic Party in the debate on the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. Both the Liberals and the Progressive Conservatives voted against it.

We were asking for an increase in family allowances through a sub-amendment moved by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin). The Liberals and the Progressive Conservatives voted against it. The leader of the opposition was there; 150 members in all voted against it. For the younger people, the hon. member for Lotbinière moved a motion on the compensated dividend discount to increase the purchasing power—what the leader of the New Democratic Party just talked about—in order to fight unemployment. The Liberals, the Progressive Conservatives and the NDP voted against it by 188 votes. Only 11 Creditistes voted for it.

Mr. Speaker, this prompts me to say that the Progressive Conservative party is not any better than the Liberal party. The motion of the opposition leader states that the government does not possess the confidence of this House. The Progressive Conservatives lost it in 1963. Why? Because they were inactive. And today, instead of bringing in positive measures they say: The government does not possess the confidence of this House. The government is a French power.

Mr. Speaker, in good English I shall say this: In Ottawa we the Créditistes:

• (2040)

[English]

We do not want French power or English power: we want real Canadian power for the whole of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): That is providing our economic system will allow us to be what we are in a free province. It is only then that we will have national unity, and never otherwise.

Getting funds from British Columbia for distribution in the Maritime provinces and in Quebec, or getting them from Ontario—a province that also needs its money—for distribution to other provinces, will not satisfy anyone. We displease those from whom we take that money and we do not please all that much those who get it, as shown by the fact that the government is accused of giving too much to Quebec, and if Quebec is asked whether it is getting too much, it will say: No, this is still not enough. If you go out West, you will hear the same criticism, and so on from one end of Canada to the other. Why? Because the economic system is such that it cannot please all the provinces.

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne states some nice things. I said, the day when this speech was given, that it promised a lot.

Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Official Opposition and his right hand man, who is actually on his left, are agreed now, I think, to recognize the soundness of the suggestions that we offer.

I was saying that the Speech from the Throne deals with things that are not usually mentioned in it: the guaranteed annual income, assistance to small industry, the creation of new industries and the aid required for this purpose.

Mr. Speaker, all this is very nice. It is also nice to hear the leader of the New Democratic Party say: Cut taxes, increase pensions, get rid of the corporate welfare bums, get rid of all that. But where and how can the purchasing power be increased under the present financial system? By robbing Peter to pay Paul? By taking away from the haves to give to the have-nots?

[English]

Take away from the haves to give to the have-nots, and at the end you will have all kinds of have-nots and no more haves.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, we have been talking about the Bank of Canada for a long time—we have been here for at least 11 years, and I sat in the House from 1946 to 1949—and nobody has yet understood.

An hon. Member: You were a Liberal then?

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): No, I was a Creditiste. It was when I was a Liberal that I could not see clearly.

Mr. Speaker, we talked and we are still talking about the Bank of Canada. Many laughed as they did two years ago when we talked about guaranteed annual income and the hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) was always on his feet saying that the Creditistes were crazy. This year, however, the speech from the throne advocates a guaranteed annual income for part of the population. This comes from the Liberals! It is true that fear is the beginning of wisdom; the government is afraid of being overthrown, so it gets wiser. This can easily be seen from the fact that the hon. ministers are less arrogant than they used to be six months ago. They answer questions more readily. In fact, they seem to be more talkative than before. They understand our questions better, and it is a good thing. This is why I am telling the population that a minority government is more efficient than a majority government.

We had another example of this in 1958 when the Conservatives had 208 members. Since there was not enough room on this side of the House, several members sat on the other side. In fact, they were so many that the place was packed with Tories.

In 1961 there were one million unemployed in Canada. Those who blame the government for maintaining a system which tolerates 560,000 unemployed should think about the one million we had in 1961.

Mr. Grafftey: No, no.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi says no, no. This is why the Progressive Conservatives were defeated in 1962, because there were one million unemployed in Canada. In spite of its large majority, the government was helpless. The same thing happened with the Liberal majority government and you will see an improvement in the coming months with the minority government, as in 1963, 1965 and 1968.

• (2050)

However, again I refer to our suggestion concerning the resort to the Bank of Canada, a suggestion which was considered rather funny.

I have before me the 1970 Revised Statutes of Canada, that is 1970 of the Christian era, for those who would not know it!

Section 14 of the Bank of Canada Act sets the powers of the Bank and appropriate government directive. I quote:

14. (1) The Minister and the Governor shall consult regularly on monetary policy and on its relation to general economic policy.

When economy is lagging, the Minister of Finance must meet with the governor of the Bank of Canada and discuss with him the utilization of the Bank of Canada. Again I quote the same excerpt:

... consult regularly on monetary policy and on its relation to general economic policy.

(2) If, notwithstanding the consultations provided for in subsection (1), there should emerge a difference of opinion . . .

In the past, we have witnessed a difference of opinion emerging between a minister of Finance and the governor of the Bank of Canada.

... concerning the monetary policy to be followed, the Minister may, . . .

. . . in case the minister did not know that he might, now he will . . .

... after consultation with the Governor and with the approval of the Governor in Council, give to the Governor a written directive concerning monetary policy, in specific terms and applicable for a specified period, and the Bank shall comply with such directive.

When the purchasing power is inadequate, the minister has the right to write a letter to the governor of the Bank of Canada and tell him to get down to business in order to make the purchasing power commensurate to the goods on sale in Canada, to the Canadian production.

I continue the quotation:

(3) A directive given under this section shall be published forthwith in the Canada Gazette and shall be laid before Parliament

. . . because the Parliament has to decide . . .

within fifteen days after the giving thereof, or, if Parliament is not then sitting, on any of the first fifteen days next thereafter that Parliament is sitting.

This act was passed during the 1966-1967 session. I am speaking about the Act to amend the Bank of Canada Act, and about Section 14 of the Bank of Canada Act which grants to the minister the power of giving directives to the Bank of Canada.

Section 18 which deals with the Business and Powers of the Bank, powers granted by Parliament to the Bank, reads as follows, and I believe the minister will understand:

(1) The Bank may

(i) make loans or advances for periods not exceeding six months to the Government of Canada or the government of any province on the pledge or hypothecation of readily marketable securities issued or guaranteed by Canada or any province;

(j) make loans to the Government of Canada or the government of any province, but such loans outstanding at any one time shall not, in the case of the Government of Canada, exceed one-third . . . of its budget, of its national revenue and . . .

. . . one fourth . . .

. . . in the case of the provinces.

If the province of Quebec has a budget of 4 billion dollars, it is entitled, according to the Act, to borrow directly from the Bank of Canada up to 1 billion dollars a year, but for periods not exceeding six months. This means putting a lock on the door of the Bank of Canada. What can a province to in six months?

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, that is the most essential problem, which prevents the provincial governments to agree with Ottawa. If Ottawa make use of the Bank of Canada! The minister can do it, the government can do it; the Bank of Canada has the responsibility, and the law allows it to grant loans.

It is only a simple matter of replacing the words "six months" by "sixty years" as it is done for banks and as it is done for loans granted to India, Algeria, Tunisia, South America, Central Africa or South Africa.

Why not do so for Canadians, provinces and municipalities, through provincial governments? No, the government does not want to. We listen to a Speech from the Throne. We are told to wait for the introduction of bills. We are told forever to take away from the "haves" and to give to the "have nots". This does not increase the global purchasing power of the people by one half cent or a cent. The government is still holding on to its principles.

Mr. Speaker, during the election campaign we advocated three things for a global policy for Canada. First, the guaranteed annual income which we can afford and maintain. Instead of paying unemployment insurance benefits, social welfare allowances and all kinds of other things, through an overly costly bureaucracy as we have now, we say that everybody must be granted a guaranteed annual income whether they work or not. The difference is that the one who works gets a salary in addition to his guaranteed annual income whereas now people are compelled not to work so that they may receive unemployment insurance benefits, social welfare allowances or any other kind of social security.

Mr. Speaker, this is why many people say: I am not going to work; it is more profitable to be unemployed. Last fall for instance it was hard to find people for apple picking in Rougemont or in other areas of the Eastern townships. Why? People were receiving $80.00 or $85.00 a week in unemployment insurance benefits. As they were offered $60.00 to go to work, they invariably said: Let us stay at home, we are not going. If we could find a way to encourage men to work by assuring them of a guaranteed annual income which nobody could touch, every Canadian would be seeking employment at the present time. And we have been suggesting if for a long time. Here again we do not wonder if we have the production to warrant it; no. We keep on wondering if we have the money required for it. It will cost that much. It is always the money problem.

But, for instance, as soon as a war is declared nobody is ever heard saying that there is not enough money to manufacture guns or bombs: money is plentiful. We have never failed to finish off assembling a gun for lack of a quarter.

During World War II when bombs were being dropped on Hitler's head in Germany, were there memos delivered to him before releasing the bombs warning him that they would not be dropped unless he paid cash? No. He was attended to free of charge during the entire war.

Everyone understood and nobody objected to it. But when it comes to setting up a salary scheme which would enable citizens to live a decent life in peace and unity, it so happens that we cannot afford it even though we can afford to displease provinces and municipalities. Currently, everyone is cursing the government.

Mr. Speaker, we advocated the guaranteed annual income throughout the election campaign. You will say: Yes, but everyone in Canada did not vote Créditiste. Quite true, and if anyone knows it, we certainly do. Still, we had surprises in store for some people even in Montreal, where we reaped 157,000 votes, that is as many as the NDP in all of Quebec. In fact we had 100,000 more votes that the PCs and the NDPs combined in the province of Quebec. People will say: Yes, but that may be a trend peculiar to Quebec. How could that be, seeing that I said the same things in Quebec as in the other areas. I went to the Maritimes and said exactly the same thing. I stated that the differences of opinion with regard to linguistic matters did not constitute a real problem but that it was made to look like a problem because of a sad lack of purchasing power in all of the provinces.

In Quebec you hear people say, even economists like Mr. Parizeau, for instance, we don't have enough because Ottawa gives too much to the West. You go West and meet economists who tell you quite the opposite: we don't have enough because the Trudeau government gives too much to his "pea-soupers" from the province of Quebec. You hear provinces rearing up against each other. Although it is not a matter of language, it had been made into a matter of language.

You hear people talk about those Frenchmen from Quebec, then in Quebec you hear people berating the Anglo-Saxons in the other provinces, but in the meantime the financiers are having a ball. Has it ever been noticed that the monetary system has no language? It speaks neither French, nor English, nor Ukrainian, nor Japanese, nor Chinese. It is peculiar how everyone understands the language of the monetary system. There is no one who does not know the difference between a ten dollar bill and a twenty dollar bill, whether English, French, or Ukrainian. And that is the system they dare not touch. Let us fight one another, in French and in English.

Some are praising the government's policy on the official languages, others criticize it, while some others commend it, but as soon as our backs are turned, they violently object to it. Frankness is not much in honour. And then, someone will say: It is all the fault of the French or the English, and then we go on fighting one another with great spirit.

Mr. Speaker, the policy on the two official languages of Canada does not mean that the English-speaking from British Columbia have to learn French. This is where the government is now seriously at fault. To tell a 55 year old man that he has to learn French or English, I find, is a bit stupid. There are people who try to learn the second language and I congratulate them. This afternoon, I heard the Leader of the official Opposition speak French. There were some passages that I did not understand too well, but, at least, he made a commendable effort, and I congratulate him. The other night, on the TV program "Bye Bye 72", he was not introduced in this perspective ... However, those who learn the second official language, deserve to be congratulated. To those who learn English at the age of 50, the same applies. Therefore, I say to the government, let the two official languages be recognized, yes, but to implement this, there is only one way: give the provinces the grants they need to be able, in their jurisdictional area, to teach the two official languages starting with the first year in grade school and there you will have—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member for Témiscamingue, but the time allowed to him has expired. Unless he gets the consent of the House he cannot continue. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed. The hon. member for Témiscamingue may continue his remarks.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I thank very sincerely all my colleagues for allowing me to keep on with my remarks, but I will not overtax their generosity.

Mr. Speaker, I was saying that the only way to get people from sea to sea to know the two official languages, is to teach them at school—not in Grade 13, not at university level, for it is too late then, but when the child is in primary school, in first or second grade; at this stage he will easily learn any language.

I had a personal experience of this. I have two sons, one of whom is sitting with me in this House. When my two sons were but little fellows of five or six, one of my neighbours back home in Rouyn was Ukrainian. He also had a little boy of the same age. The three children played together. One night at dinner, my two boys came to the table talking to one another. I could not make out a word of what they were saying; they were speaking Ukrainian. They had not learned the language at school; they had taken it up while playing with their little friend.

Mr. Speaker, the Ukrainian boy also was speaking French at that age. This only shows how easy it is for children to learn a foreign language.

And in Canada, if we view the problem on the national level, we find the same thing. I do not think that a single province would refuse federal grants designed specifically to promote the teaching of the two official languages in Canadian schools, be it in Vancouver, Halifax or Montreal. It would be the end of the fights now going on in Montreal for instance where it is ordered: You shall learn French, only French, nothing but French. It is no good to tolerate such views and the Quebecers who contend that the French fact is about to disappear are dreaming in colour. They are having the wrong dreams, they are happy heads.

Mr. Speaker, while 100 years ago, there was not one million French Canadians in Canada, today, there are six or seven million of us. What is more, the French language is better spoken today than it was 40 years ago. There has been an improvement. But there will always be prophets of gloom, pessimists. We have some in Quebec, and there are some outside the province who, as out West or in Ontario, say "Speak White". That is not much better than those who in Montreal also say "Speak white" in French in one place, in English in another.

Mr. Speaker, the way we go about it now will not solve the language problem in Canada. Even though the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism was set up at a cost of I know not how many millions of dollars to inform us that French is spoken in Quebec and English outside its borders, it did not solve much. But no one trusts the official languages act because everyone feels compelled to learn a second language. But such is not the case. As far as I am concerned, I have not been compelled to learn English. I learned it because I wanted to, and in order to understand what the English-speaking people had to say. I do not regret it today. If I go to United States, England or anywhere else where English is spoken, I understand what people are talking about. If an English-speaking Canadian does not want to learn French, he is free to do as he likes; he is not compelled to do so. Nobody will stop anyone from remaining a moron all of his life.

As far as the French-speaking Montrealers are concerned, the same remark applies to them.

It has been brought to my attention that the interpreters are having a hard time trying to translate the word "Gnochon" (moron). I could say then a "simpleton", for instance, it is just about the same thing.

The second point that we made during the electoral campaign concerns the interest free loans granted by the Bank of Canada. While referring to them a short while ago, I mentioned Mr. Bourassa, the premier of Quebec, who went and borrowed, under the circumstances, 100 million dollars in the United States to ensure the development of James Bay. He went and borrowed 100 millions at 9¼ per cent, for 25 years. In 25 years from now—

An hon. Member: That is not expensive!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): No, that is not expensive. In 25 years from now, Quebec will have paid 233 million in interest alone, then it will still owe 100 million. Come now, that is not expensive! Very sensible indeed! We shall owe all of James Bay! The development of James Bay will cost at least 25 billion to the province of Quebec! The Canadian government has already begun to invest $8 million; more millions will follow and before long billions of dollars will have been secured.

• (2110)

Mr. Speaker, earlier, I heard the Leader of the New Democratic Party state that we are selling out to the Americans. It is true, and not only the federal government but also the Quebec government is doing so. The Leader of the New Democratic Party must be aware of that fact. His friend, the NDP Premier of Manitoba also borrowed $50 million from the Americans at 9.5 per cent for 25 years to enable the Manitoba Hydro to carry out a project. What will be paid? Interest totalling $100 million. The Leader of the New Democratic Party did not mention it. We beg the corporate welfare bums to finance a hydro-electric project in Manitoba.

Mr. Lewis: They are everywhere.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): They are everywhere and the hon. member for York South admits it. They are everywhere. In fact, we want to get them out from everywhere so that Canadians can be masters in their own house through the Bank of Canada.

Premier Bourassa did not come back from the United States with a wheelbarrow filled with $100 million in U.S. currency. He came back with a little piece of paper which is called a promissory note that said "$100 million", bearing interest at 9¼% over 25 years, signed Bob Bourassa, endorsed by the province of Quebec, meaning myself and other Quebecers.

The James Bay development is then undertaken. If that project were not profitable, Mr. Speaker, and I call on the Prime Minister, on all hon. members and ministers to disagree, Premier Bourassa would not come back from the United States with as much as a nickel. Is that clear? The Americans wonder whether the project is profitable? It is. Let us write down those figures. What would be the difference between having the figure "$100 million" written in the United States and having them written in the Bank of Canada here in Ottawa? Figures written in the United States belong to the people of America, that is obvious and everyone knows it. Why not have the same figures written in the Bank of Canada, based on the same resources, not on the moon, but on the James Bay resources.

Mr. Speaker, we can use the same kind of ink, the same type of pen and write the figures here in Canada, instead of having them written in the United States. Then we would own James Bay. In this way, we are giving them James Bay and then, later, you will hear people like the hon. member for York-South tell us about the "corporate welfare bums". That is exactly how it comes about.

We therefore suggest resorting to the Bank of Canada and not to set up "dollar machines"—such as were heard about—to print dollar bills inconsiderately. No, the figures should correspond to the facts.

Let us take another example. The right hon. Prime Minister boasted during the election campaign that our gross national product had reached $102 billion for the first time in the history of this country. But while our production increases in a staggering way, unemployment increases also and we say to ourselves: Let us fight unemployment in Canada. If, in order to fight unemployment, we employed all the unemployed people so as to produce more, our gross national product could easily reach $125 billion a year. It is not production that is failing, but distribution. Therefore, we must find a way to distribute production among consumers.

That is why we propose the establishment of a guaranteed annual income based on Canadian production. Our national revenue will reach $71 billion this year according to statistics. There is a $31 million gap between the purchasing power and Canadian production, namely $1,490 for each Canadian. The government is always saying: Where shall we find credit? Where shall we find money? We have the production. Why not monetize it through the Bank of Canada and give each Canadian his share through the establishment of a guaranteed annual income? Call it a national dividend if you prefer.

A while ago, the leader of the New Democratic Party spoke about the increasing demand in Canada. We are all for it. But if "demand" is removed from those who now enjoy it and given to those who are short of it, this will not increase the overall demand. Why is the NDP leader unable to suggest means of increasing the overall buying power in Canada?

During the campaign we were suggesting a compensated retail discount of 20 per cent. When you buy a $100 item after, of course, an agreement has been passed between the retailers and the federal government, you are assured of a 20 per cent discount. The retailers are at liberty to enter into this agreement or not. But once they have endorsed it they are committed not to increase their prices and to receive the compensated discount from the government. Then, on a $100 item the retailer would apply the $20 discount, the consumer would pay only $80 and the $20 difference would be paid by the federal government.

This government grant would be much more significant than those paid to major companies because it would enable industries to distribute their production and hire workers. Thus through an agreement between the retailers and the government we could fight non only inflation but also unemployment.

This compensated discount is an integral part of the social credit theory. This theory respects private enterprise and individual initiative. We are all for helping individuals give the best of themselves to develop their country. Contrary to socialism under which government should grab everything, we Créditistes say: Give more and more freedom to private enterprise to allow it to develop because initiative is private. If you cast everybody in the same mould you turn them into a herd as do certain European and Asiatic Communist countries. That is not the kind of system we want in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, these three points have served my colleagues from the Social Credit Party during the whole election campaign. We did not waste our time trying to throw discredit on any given party; we have acted objectively and in this House, my colleagues and myself will continue to be objective. We want to put an end to this sense of divisiveness in Canada; the remedy which will promote a better understanding and a better cooperation and the best cooperation is still the economic reform, because our crucial problem, which has to be solved as soon as possible, is the economic problem. We must put the economy in the human being's service.

As Pope Pius XI used to say in 1931, that is 42 years ago: the economic goal will be fully achieved and will reach its real end only when it provides all of us with the part of assets that nature and industry are able to provide, and that part has to be sufficient to enable each of us to be well off.

It is to ensure this decent comfort that we are working seriously, objectively and positively. I call upon all hon. members of this House, whatever party they may be with, to cooperate and not think only in terms of defeating the government and preparing the next election but to give Canadians a regime which would respect the human being, a regime which we allow them to become satisfied human beings in a country as rich as ours.

As I have said earlier, Mr. Speaker, the Créditistes will continue to make objective suggestions. We will not play games deciding whether or not the government should be overthrown.

I am telling you, formally and quite sincerely, that when the government introduces a piece of legislation, if it is beneficial to the Canadian people as a whole, we shall support it; otherwise, we shall fight it, no matter whether this should bring about elections or not. We have no ties, we are free, even though we have been ignored since the last election. I am saying that for the information of those who might not know it.

Based on the media, one might swear that only three political parties now exist in the House: the Grits, the Tories and the New Democrats. The others are of no consequence. Oblivion sets in. However, we enjoy the consolidation and the satisfaction of not being forgotten, in due course, outside the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker, this afternoon, the Prime Minister seemed in an excellent mood to seriously study the proposals put forward by the Official Opposition or the other parties.

Therefore, I hope, as I said before, that the Canadian economy may appropriately serve the Canadian people.

[English]

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I think we were all surprised to find that the leader of the Social Credit Party (Mr. Caouette) did not introduce an amendment. Judging from the election campaign platform of the Social Credit Party, the government would have been hard-pressed not to vote in favour of it as they did in 1963. The guaranteed minimum wage, the guaranteed annual income that they urged so loudly during their campaign, failed to materialize in the speech of the leader of the Social Credit Party (Mr. Caouette).

• (2120)

My first comments are directed to the remarks of the leader of the NDP (Mr. Lewis). I took exception when he said—I think I quote him pretty accurately—that there was nothing in the record of the Conservative party, whether in majority or in minority, and therefore nothing in the record of the leader of this party, that would merit greater confidence than in those opposite. It seems to me he is overlooking a rather impressive record of social legislation that was enacted during the years 1957 to 1963 and which his party not only voted for but lauded at the time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: I speak of the progress that was made in on-the-job training, the progressive legislation that was passed under the then minister of labour, the former member for Ontario, the setting up of vocational schools across the country, improvements made in the unemployment insurance legislation and many others of which he is well aware. He is trying to duck the legitimate accusation that he is in bed with the Liberals as is, it seems, another party in the House. It sounds almost like the story of Bob and Carol and Ted and Alice. Only one of the parties, namely the official opposition, fails to join that common bed.

The leader of this party has made a very sensible suggestion to the government, which I do not think the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will accept and which I believe the NDP will not accept either, because I think they are afraid to accept it; and judging by the conduct of the leader of the Créditiste party they, too, will reject it.

Much was said by the leader of the NDP, in his remarks on the throne speech, about the urgency of dealing with old age pensions. Again, judging from the number of questions on this subject placed on the order paper by the party to my left, and the number of times it has been raised by members of the Créditiste party, one would think this would be an urgent problem, one with which this government should deal immediately.

We have heard many suggestions regarding amendments that are required in order to improve the unemployment insurance legislation. Indeed, the NDP issued a table of priorities before this parliament convened and in that list of seven priorities they stipulated these to be matters deserving immediate attention. Quoting from an article which appeared in the current press, they wanted action to minimize the effects of winter unemployment, a close watch on the operations of the Unemployment Insurance Commission to prevent inefficiency and delay in issuing cheques, an immediate ban on job elimination, tax cuts for the ordinary citizen, and so on.

Our leader has suggested that this debate should be adjourned today or tomorrow and that the government should bring forward immediately legislation which has been prepared and which will increase old age pensions and deal equitably with old age pensioners. If the NDP does not accept that position, if they do not concur in that suggestion, it means that they are not acting in the best interests of those for whom they purported to act during the election campaign. It is the most shallow hypocrisy for the leader of that party to go carousing across the country expressing his great concern for our old people, advocating increases in the old age pension, and then to stand up in the House and say that his party will not support the suggestion that we deal with it immediately because they want to carry on a debate on the throne speech, which will delay immediate action for the old age pensioners.

The same argument applies to the unemployment insurance changes that are necessary. For members of the Créditiste party and members of the NDP, who went through two months of campaigning stating all the ills that must be cured in these fields, not to support the suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) to deal with these matters immediately is not only hypocrisy but it is a betrayal of their duty to their party supporters and to the so-called principles that they purport to support.

They said, in a decision that was made long before the throne speech, that they were going to wait and see what legislation came forward. They said that immediately after the throne speech they would hold a press conference, which they did. At that press conference they said exactly that which they had already determined they would say, that is, that they would wait and see the legislation. They said they would keep this government in power until such time as they saw whether their legislation merited support, but they would oppose anything the government brought forward that did not agree with the list of priorities that they had presented.

What a phony position to take! They will support the government in power, without seeing the amendments to the old age pension legislation; they will support the government in power, without seeing the amendments to the unemployment insurance legislation; they will support the government in power, without any idea of how they will create new jobs; they will support the government in power, on the strength of a vague promise by the government to set up a committee to study the high cost of food and the increased cost of living.

Mr. Alexander: It's a love affair.

Mr. Nielsen: They love them; they are in bed with them. It is what one of my colleagues called, during the speech of the leader of the NDP, a marriage between consenting adults: that is precisely what it is. That is the most shallow of hypocrisies, the most shallow position for any party purporting to espouse any principles at all to be taking. If these matters are so urgent as the members of the NDP have been wanting us to believe they are, why do we not deal with them tomorrow? Why should not the government bring forward their UIC legislation, their legislation to deal with increases in old age pensions, and let us adjourn this debate and deal with those matters tomorrow?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: I accuse the leader of the NDP and his followers, if they are going to say the same things that he said, of fear. They will not go along with the suggestion of the leader of our party because they do not want the information before they vote. They do not care about having the information before they vote, because they will vote for the government regardless.

When the leader of the NDP says that the leader of this party has nothing in his record as premier of the province of Nova Scotia to merit his confidence, I do not wonder at all why his party has not held a seat in that province since the defeat of Mr. Gillis in 1957. The leader of the NDP just does not understand the Atlantic provinces. He does not realize that the expertise of the leader of this party resides in the creation of jobs and in economic policy. If there was one thing that the leader of this party did in the province of Nova Scotia, it was to reform the economic fabric of the province and create jobs.

An hon. Member: Tell us some more.

Mr. Nielsen: If the hon. member wants to interject, let him not do it cowardly, from his seat; let him ask for the floor and I will gladly give it to him. I do not mind reciting the fact that I lived in the province of Nova Scotia for six years while I studied; I am very proud of that. I understand that province, and maritimers generally. I am just sorry that more members opposite and to my left dit not have the same opportunity.

I need only cite the accomplishments in Nova Scotia of the leader of this party in the creation of Industrial Estates Limited, which created and maintained 5,000 jobs in that province. Not a single aspect of that plan has been changed by the present Liberal premier of the province. The leader of this party revised the system of education there and restructured the economic environment of the province into the form which has been continued to this day by a Liberal premier.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Are you preaching for a call, Erik?

Mr. Nielsen: With respect to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) who, some say, has been consistent, although I fail to find any consistency in his conduct while in office—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Your leader said it.

Mr. Nielsen: —I invite him also to rise and take part in this debate. One thing I am concerned about is the introduction into this debate of rather racial overtones by the Prime Minister. The same course, to a lesser degree, has been followed by the leader of the NDP and by the leader of the Créditiste party. I am very concerned about this as a Canadian.

This is a personal viewpoint, Mr. Speaker; I do not speak for my party when I express it. With respect to the Prime Minister, after reading what I have been able to read about his past writings, and listening to him on the three or four occasions since 1968 when he has taken the opportunity to participate in debates in the House of Commons, I believe he has done more to encourage disunity in this country than any other prime minister in our history.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: And he did not improve matters today at all. If the Prime Minister had his way, he would allow this debate to degenerate into some kind of racist harangue, to divert the debate from the real issues, and from the real reasons that the election left him and his party in the sorry state in which they now find themselves. No one can overlook the fact that in the city of Montreal and the islands surrounding Montreal something in excess of one million English Canadians voted for the Liberal party. That certainly tends to go against what the Prime Minister was saying today.

I saw hon. members opposite, particularly the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) who has the good fortune to be bilingual and I have not, laugh when the leader of the Créditistes said that only two members on this side of the House were from the province of Quebec. That is no laughing matter, Mr. Speaker. Our leader has said time and time again since the election that we want to improve that situation. We believe it is important for Canada that it be improved.

I hear more snickers and laughter opposite, Mr. Speaker. I suggest there would not be any laughter if they had any true regard for having at least two healthy, viable political parties in Canada. It is no more a laughing matter that that happened to us in Quebec than it is that it happened in Alberta to those opposite. It is just as vital that there be representation throughout the country for those opposite as it is for those on this side of the House. Trying to shift the real reasons for the result of the election into this area does a real disservice to unity in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): How are you going to get away with this?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I notice that the new Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) is very uncomfortable in his new portfolio. I am saying these things sincerely. He says I am not going to get away with it. I do not know what he means by that. I am being just as sincere as I am sure he thought his leader was when he was speaking.

It is essential that this kind of thing does not happen, if we are all concerned about national unity. I come from a part of the country that is fighting its way to get into confederation, not out of it. The truth is that the prime minister and his party came to this sad state of affairs in the election, primarily for economic reasons and secondarily for social reasons. They had a total disregard for the human decisions that were necessary in such areas as unemployment insurance, curing inflation and the high cost of living. The Prime Minister felt that as a mathematician he could work out a paper formula and impose it upon the people without regard to the human qualities that must be considered in making such decisions. The idea of deliberately creating huge unemployment for the purpose of curing inflation was unacceptable to the electorate.

Now the Prime Minister speaks of goodies. He accuses the Leader of the Opposition of contributing to national disunity by mentioning in Quebec City certain facts concerning the allotment of funds to particular provinces. I suggest that we have reached a very sorry state of affairs if we cannot discuss the facts concerning the administration of the minister's previous department, whether in connection with funds allotted to the province of Quebec, to the territory of the Yukon or the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Stanfield: They were not all from his department. Mostly these were election goodies.

Mr. Nielsen: Not only did we criticize the national parks that were announced by the minister of northern affairs (Mr. Chrétien) on the eve of the election in the province of Quebec; we also criticized the waterfront parks mentioned by the ex-minister of energy, mines and resources who hails from Toronto. We criticized announcements by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) concerning dock development in British Columbia. Why single out one province on which to criticize the Leader of the Opposition?

We criticized the "byways and special places" $50 million program announced by the minister of indian affairs. We criticized Sharp's waterfront park in Toronto, estimated to cost $30 million, and Basford's railway relocation program, costing $25 million. We criticized Pepin's boost to STOL planes, to cost $60 million, and we criticized the Minister of Finance's model city in Ottawa, estimated to cost $400 million. We criticized the minister of indian affairs—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I have known the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) for a long time and I know he would not want to misstate the facts. The program announced for Ottawa during the election would not cost a cent, because the federal government already owns the land.

Mr. Nielsen: All I can say is that if we have that kind of project going on in the city of Ottawa, we would sure like to have some of them going on in the Yukon. Last but not least, we criticized the project of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development for the national historic park in Quebec City, to cost $16 million, making a total of $581 million, if I am correct in my figures. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) may wish to correct me.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): You are not correct.

Mr. Nielsen: I could be incorrect. I am not mentioning the $2 billion of the unemployment insurance fund, or the "big rip-off", after the book of the same name, LIP or the OFY grants in the city of Toronto. I am just citing these instances to illustrate that we are not zeroing in with criticism in one particular province. It is not fair, it is not correct and it contributes to national disunity to charge this party with zeroing in on one particular province.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: I say that to announce this kind of thing six days before the vote is taken is a deliberate, preplanned effort by the Liberal party to get votes. The people of Canada were not snowed; they were not snowed in Toronto and they were not snowed in British Columbia where the announcements were made. The people reacted like honest Canadian citizens and rejected the Liberals, but not for racial reasons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: They are just no good.

Mr. Baldwin: They are incompetent, that's all.

Mr. Nielsen: The new Minister of Transport says that the people of Quebec did not understand. But the English speaking people of Montreal island understood and voted heavily in favour of the minister's party, so this cannot be attributed to them. Hon. members on this side of the House take a back seat to no one as strong supporters of national unity in this country. The Prime Minister smiles and takes his Buddha stance now. But I do not want to get holier than thou—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The halo is slipping down over your nose.

Mr. Nielsen: I did not serve my country from 1942 to 1952 in the armed forces to listen to somebody accuse me of being against national unity. I did not fight to see that happen in this country, and I will exert every ounce of my energy to see that it does not happen. That is one of the reasons I am here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: I am not here to see the Prime Minister stand as he did today and lecture us on constitutional law. I remember another occasion when he trotted out the same precedents. He was a freshman minister of justice when the government was defeated on a tax measure in 1968.

Mr. Trudeau: In February.

Mr. Nielsen: I remember it very vividly because I had to leave in haste to attend a PTA meeting at Vincent Massey school in Ottawa. It was one of the two votes that defeated the government of that day.

The Prime Minister, as the then minister of justice, maintained the position that he does today, that really a tax measure is unimportant with respect to whether or not the government is defeated. What he said then, he says today—that it is up to the government to decide when it is defeated. If I may paraphrase his remarks, he says that if the government is defeated on basic principles it will go to the people, but if other questions go against them it will not be deemed a defeat. Who is the Prime Minister to decide what will be a question of principle?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: There are some who say that hon. members on the other side of the House have lost their arrogance, that they are now humble, yet we have the Prime Minister saying the same thing that he said in 1968. At that time he said, in effect, "We are the masters. We will decide what issues will defeat us. We will decide when the government steps down". What supreme arrogance, Sir.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) had a good deal to say during that debate and it will be interesting to see how he now stomachs the following remark which the Prime Minister made in 1968. During the debate on February 27, 1968, as reported at page 7040 of Hansard the Prime Minister said:

> A general election is an instrument given to the government to demonstrate that it has control over and the confidence of the Houses.

I say, Sir, that a general election is not an instrument given to the government; a general election is an instrument given to the majority of the members of this House, and if the government is defeated on a matter, our constitution requires that the government should step down. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre intervened in the debate at that point as follows:

> May I ask the minister a question? Was I not asking for that position to be stated before the vote was taken, not after the vote had been taken and the government had lost?

He was cheered for that. The then minister of justice answered:

> Mr. Speaker, I submit that this is not the case. These are the rules of parliament. They have been quoted at length by the hon. member and they are quite clear. The difference between the argument put forward by the hon. member and my own position is that the hon. member wishes to be on the side of those who decide if the defeat of a specific bill is the defeat of the government. That is the difference. We say we will decide if the defeat of a specific bill is the defeat of the government.

According to the Prime Minister, that applies today as it did then, whether the decision is taken before or after the vote will be decided by the government. What supreme arrogance. Here is what he said on that occasion, as reported at page 7042 of Hansard:

I am answering the question. We are masters of the House in the sense that we have to conduct the affairs of government. That is what it means to assume the power.

Mr. Hees: How things have changed today.

Mr. Nielsen: They are the same old bunch, Sir, and they have the same views. They are taking the position that they are not going to be unstuck, they are not going to step down until they decide to do so.

Mr. Trudeau: Just get support for your motion.

Mr. Nielsen: This is why the New Democratic Party is going along with them. The Prime Minister says, with the supreme confidence borne of that intimacy which can exist only between bedfellows, that we should get support for our motion of nonconfidence. He knows we are not going to get it because of those to my left.

Mr. Hees: He has already seduced the NDP.

Mr. Baldwin: Seduction with no promise of marriage.

Mr. Nielsen: He says that the matter must be one going to the roots of their policy. What policy? They went across this country for two months spouting policy that has been rejected by the people of Canada, and now they have shifted into an entirely different field.

Mr. Nielsen: Talk about U-turn governments! This is the most flip-flop government I have ever seen in this House, or read about.

Before my time expires, I want to return to the innuendoes and inferences left by the Prime Minister, which are beneath the dignity of any prime minister of this country, to the effect that certain unspecified, unnamed members of this House were guilty of some kind of racism in the campaign. What bothers me is not that unsupported charge, not the innuendoes that he left, so much as something else he said. Again, I copied down his remarks. He said that if hon. members want to know, "I will tell them what evidence I have." This bothers me—

Mr. Jamieson: Like wiretapping.

Mr. Nielsen: —because there is a new security force and because there is a propensity on the part of the government to compile dossiers on everybody.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Jamieson: Continue.

Mr. Speaker: Only if the hon. member has the unanimous consent of the House may he continue his remarks.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart).

[Translation]

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I could start my speech now and conclude it tomorrow morning if I am permitted to do so, or still agree that it is ten o'clock as it does not make any difference to me.

Some hon. Members: Go on.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, before the end of the last parliament we were told that you would not be with us at the next session and we are all quite happy, myself included, to see that you have been re-elected and I congratulate you as well as the three hon. members respectively elected to the positions of Chairman, Deputy Chairman and Assistant Deputy Chairman of Committees of the Whole House (Messrs. McCleave, Laniel and Boulanger).

I want to congratulate the two hon. members, the mover (Mr. Blais) and the seconder (Mr. Blaker) of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne who have spoken on the first day of the session. I wish to mention in particular the mover, not only because he is a remarkable man but also because he comes from Northern Ontario. I am pleased to see that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has decided to choose someone from that place, thus proving that we have many gifted people in the North.

[English]

We have had an election and the people of Canada sent 264 of us to this House to look after the affairs of the country. They did their duty on election day; now it is our duty to give service for as long as possible in order to carry out what the people have already asked us to do. Can we sit here and say that there should be collusion between one part of the country and another in trying to arrange for the right number of seats in this House so that the people will not need to go back to the polls and make the same kind of decision before four more years have passed?

I suggest, Sir, that there is obviously some kind of deficiency in our system and that the time has come for changes to be made in our basic system. Unfortunately, whenever we mention any change that involves the constitution, we hear the same kind of answer, particularly if it has to do with fixed dates for elections: some people say, "We do not want to be like the United States." That reminds me a little of some people around Ottawa. When you suggest that Ottawa and the surrounding area should be a national capital region, some people say, "Oh, but we do not want to be like Washington."

There is no reason in the world why we have to be like anybody else. There are ways of changing things by using methods that would be to our advantage, without our needing to change our whole system and without our needing to be like anybody else. There is no more reason for Ottawa to be like Washington than there is for us to be Americans. This applies equally in the case of a fixed day for elections.

I do not always agree with the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), but this is one point on which I agree with him wholeheartedly. I remember that in the previous parliament he submitted a private member's bill relating to specific and fixed days for elections. Certainly, when the people of Canada sent us here they did not intend to choose again in a matter of months a new group to govern them. They sent us here with the idea of our serving their interests for the next few years. This is the way it ought to be.

If we are to play the kind of games that have been played up to now, I can see no possible advantage for the people of Canada. I certainly cannot buy a system under which a minority group such as the NDP in this parliament, with fewer than 12 per cent of the seats in this House, shall decide what legislation shall be brought down and keep one or other party in power. It seems to me that in that situation the tail wags the dog.

Mr. Alexander: Oh!

Mr. Baldwin: Some tail; some dog.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): That is not democracy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: It is a son of a dog.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I do not say this because it involves the NDP; I would say the same if the Créditistes or anybody else were involved. Under a democracy, the majority should rule. In this case we are trying to operate under a two-party system with four parties. It seems to me that the people of Canada cannot help but suffer as a result. I think that is the only thing that can happen. On one hand you have a group which has power tentatively and is afraid of losing it; on the other hand there is a group that wants it. Then on the third hand there is a group that wants to use its position of balance of power in order to get the kind of legislation passed that it has in mind.

The people of Canada did not elect fewer than 12 per cent of the members of this House in order for those members to decide the legislation of this House. Therefore, I cannot see why this kind of system should last any longer. If we go back to the country in the next few years, there is no guarantee that we will be returned to this House with any one party holding an absolute majority.

Mr. Nielsen: Want to take any bets?

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): It seems to me that the time has come to change that tradition. We are great on traditions which are not our own. One tradition which I have abhorred in the past, and I will mention it again since it involves the traditions of this House, is the tradition of traipsing down the hall to the Senate to listen to the Speech from the Throne. Most of us have to watch it on TV because we cannot get in the door. If that is not ludicrous, I do not know what is.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the government House leader what the business of the House will be tomorrow.

[Mr. Stewart (Cochrane).]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, we will continue with this debate tomorrow.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS—FOOD PRICES—SCOPE OF TERMS OF REFERENCE OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight to pursue a question that I put to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray), on Friday last regarding the reference in the Speech from the Throne to the establishment of a special joint committee of this House and the other place to study the price of food. I wish to take a few moments this evening to enunciate some of my ideas as to what I think this House should consider in the establishment of such a committee. I want to mention some of the terms of reference that are important with regard to the committee, if it is to study food prices and recommend action on legislation which has teeth in it and is effective.

The first point I wish to make is this. I do not think it is necessary to include members of the other place on a committee of this nature. My leader referred to this point. He said that if they wish to appear as directors of certain companies to which they belong, that would be fine. A committee of this sort could and should be made up of members of this House and this House alone.

The announcement in the Speech from the Throne is welcome to me. I do not know why the government waited so long before introducing a measure of this sort. The price of food has been increasing sharply for the past 12 months. In the last year it amounted to more than 10 per cent. But it was not until October 30, when the government found out that the land was not strong, that action was taken; until then hon. members opposite shrugged off this important question.

I recall, in recent months, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) suggesting that an increase in food prices might not be bad because higher farm prices would benefit from it. I wish to remind hon. members through you, Mr. Speaker, that farmers are not reaping the benefits of the increase. Net farm income has declined over the last five years and the farmers' share of the food dollar has dropped drastically in the last 20 years. In 1949 the farmer received 57 per cent of the food dollar; in 1972 he received only 38 per cent.

This is the time, therefore, for a thorough investigation into the increase in the price of food. We must find out who is getting the benefit of this increase for which the consumer is paying. I believe the House should move immediately, tomorrow, to the formation of the committee. I urge the minister to contact the House leaders of all parties with a view to forming the committee tomorrow in order that we can take action without delay. I also urge the minister to recommend to the House that we give the committee more than simply power to study the rise in the price of food. For too long we have established task forces, royal commissions, and so on, to study major problems; then all we have done is file away the results in the garbage can, forgotten about them and let the dust gather on them, while the people reap no benefit.

I wish now to make a few suggestions which I hope the minister will take seriously. I believe the committee should be given power, in its terms of reference, to examine the financial records of the various companies and associations which are relevant to its study. It should also have the power to examine all relevant documents.

I believe the committee should take account of all aspects of food prices and look into the activities of all companies engaged in this field. I have in mind five or six broad items, things such as the basic profits of food companies engaged in the production, processing and packaging of food. Third, the committee should look carefully into the distribution of food; this includes transportation by rail and by other means. Fourth, the committee should study the aspects of advertising and promotion; fifth, the conglomerate structures, vertical integration, chain stores, and so on. Here I refer to companies such as Garfield-Weston and all their subsidiaries.

At all levels of the food industry, what we must look for is the profit on equity investment. It is misleading when some of the chain stores say they have only made one half per cent profit, or one per cent profit, on sales. I will use one example. We find firms such as Dominion Stores saying they showed a profit of only .6 per cent on food sales in Canada. But if we look closely at the records we find that the company actually showed a profit of 11 per cent on investment in Dominion Stores across the country. These are some of the aspects of the question which the committee should study as it considers the increase in the price of food and recommends action to roll back these increases.

We must act now because this is an important issue to very many Canadians in my riding, such as those on fixed incomes and poor people on welfare, people who are unemployed and others who do not reap the benefits of our so-called affluent society.

We must act as countries such as Sweden have acted. Sweden announced recently the establishment of price controls on some basic commodities. Similarly, we must have a prices review board that has teeth, that is not afraid to investigate increases in the price of food. If the increase is not justified, parliament has a moral obligation to control the price of food, rolling the price back on behalf of the average consumer.

These are a few of the ideas that I should like the minister to comment on briefly tonight when he responds to my question.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has made a number of interesting observations on the composition of and terms of reference for a parliamentary inquiry into food prices. I should remind the hon. member that the committee in question will not be formed by the government or the House leaders but, instead, will come into existence as a result of debate and decision in parliament. I expect we will see a notice of motion on the order paper to establish a parliamentary committee to study food prices very soon. I hope that once this motion appears on the order paper the House leaders will agree to have it called as soon as possible so a decision can be made on it shortly thereafter.

In the course of debate on the motion to establish the committee we will be able to go into the suggestions made by the hon. member this evening, as well as other suggestions that will come from all sides of the House in some further detail. There is no question that a committee on food prices is important at this time and I look forward to its early creation.

HOUSING—WHITSON GARDENS SUBDIVISION, CHELMSFORD, ONT.—ACTION TO MAINTAIN VALUE OF HOUSE NOT SUBJECT TO FORECLOSURE.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, the situation that I raised in my question on Friday of last week was precipitated by the housing shortage in my constituency of Nickel Belt. This shortage of homes at a price our people could afford led to a great deal of land speculation and the building of homes with inferior materials and cheap workmanship, homes that were then sold by questionable methods.

Both levels of government, provincial and federal, consistently refused to pass the kind of legislation that would protect the consumer from scandals such as Whitson Gardens. But how could one expect the old line parties to pass legislation against their staunchest financial backers? In this case it happens to be a Tory bagman and former candidate for the Progressive Conservative nomination for the Nickel Belt riding in 1968, Ross Shouldice. It was his company which built the homes in Whitson Gardens and put them up for sale at an average price of $21,000.

He then established Silhouette Developments Limited and Trasco Realty Limited to sell the houses. Some of the buyers obtained a lawyer of their own and, having their necessary down payment, bought homes. Others, coerced by Trasco Realty Limited, entered into what they thought was a home purchase but later turned out to be a rental agreement. They had been making their payments to Silhouette, which never made the first mortgage payments to the Toronto-Dominion Bank. In the meantime, Ross Shouldice had gone to Blind River, Ontario, and obtained $49,000 in DREE grants and manpower retraining grants to open up Wholesale Homes Limited, which suddenly ceased operations after about one year.

Why is it that when a very small minority of people rip off welfare and unemployment insurance schemes these old line rednecks label them as "freeloaders", but when shysters like Shouldice and Company can bilk the people of Canada for all they can get they are called "free enterprisers"? The way this person ripped off the society makes Moby Dick look like a minnow.

CMHC had and still has a grave responsibility to the home buyers. How is it that CMHC guaranteed loans for homes built by Shouldice and his various front organizations without doing a performance check on this developer? How could such poor workmanship pass inspection by CMHC appraisers?

I call for a complete investigation of the CMHC and the manner in which it operates and underwrites mortgage loans. CMHC has a responsibility to those persons whose homes are not being foreclosed, and that is to rehabilitate the foreclosed homes to CMHC standards and possibly sell them to the Ontario Housing Corporation. Moreover, the government has a responsibility to legislate a national building code and put some teeth into it, and also to introduce legislation to protect the purchasers of new homes in respect of defects, inferior material and unscrupulous marketing techniques.

Indeed, there is nothing new in what I have suggested. As a matter of fact, in Great Britain, where builders are registered with a national housing bureau, they have to offer the following protection to home buyers: inspection in the interests of buyers, that is, to quality and appearance and not just strength and safety, give a two-year guarantee with an arbitration system to settle disputes, provide ten-year coverage against major structural damage, and provide insurance to protect a buyer if a builder should go bankrupt. There must also be an undertaking by the council to implement any arbitration award should a builder default.

I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that if our constituents in the Nickel Belt, in Whitson Gardens in particular, had this kind of protection under the law I would not have had to direct the question to the minister last Friday and I would not be standing here making a speech tonight. It seems to me that the interests of our people are completely ignored by this kind of government. Surely this is a situation which cries for justice, and I ask for justice for the people who have invested their savings and earnings in this operation.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) in his remarks this evening has ranged somewhat further than his question on Friday. Let me say to him in a general way that I welcome his remarks. In respect of what he has said about housing policy, I am pleased to inform him that there are a number of proposals in the Speech from the Throne which I will be enunciating further in the course of this debate, in the course of a federal-provincial conference to be held in Ottawa on January 22 and 23, and in administrative changes under study in respect of CMHC, all of which will answer some of the problems he has enunciated.

May I also say to him, in relation to his general remarks about the kind of things he has observed in the particular sub-division to which his question relates, that we have seen instances across Canada of bad workmanship and non-completion of houses which have created great hardship for purchasers. Because of my past experience and outlook as Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs for three and a half years, I can say that the throne speech indicates our desire and willingness to set up a system of warranties for new home purchasers. I think this is very much needed in this country, and when these proposals are laid before parliament and the country I feel I can look forward to the support of the hon. member for Nickel Belt.

May I say, in respect of this particular sub-division and the difficulties that have been created there, that the practice of that particular selling organization is a matter of investigation by the department of consumer affairs of Ontario. I have told my officials to co-operate with them to the fullest extent. Where there has been wrongdoing and breach of the law, I have no doubt those people should be prosecuted if the investigation should show that. I am sure the hon. member agrees with that position. We will be as helpful as possible.

The hon. member expressed concern about the people within the subdivision, and their investment being protected. He mentioned that unoccupied houses and those subject to foreclosure denigrate the value of other properties in the area and take away from those who are making their payments. May I make clear the legal position of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. We assure payment of the mortgages to the extent they are being foreclosed by the Toronto Dominion Bank, the mortgage holder. We have no legal position until the bank in fact forecloses and comes to us, at which time we acquire the property.

I give the hon. member our assurance that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation acts in such a manner as to endeavour to manage that property, deals with it in such a way as to ensure not only recovery of the investment but also tries to avoid impairment of the value of adjoining properties. That is the practice the corporation has followed and will follow here.

On Friday last the hon. member asked whether I would have negotiations with the Ontario Housing Corporation concerning property in this subdivision. I have instructed my officials to do so. I have not yet had a report on that. Whether or not it will lead to anything remains to be seen, because the Ontario Housing Corporation, while it owns and purchases houses, purchases them for a limited purpose. I am not sure that the residents of the subdivision would want the Ontario Housing Corporation to turn these houses, for example, into rental houses or public housing developments of one sort or another. That is a matter for discussion among the people in the subdivision and the Ontario Housing Corporation. I have asked my people to discuss those possibilities with OHC.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.18 p.m.

FUEL OIL PRICE INCREASE—POSSIBLE SHORTAGE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in view of the recently announced increase in the price of fuel oil by Shell Canada Limited, the cut-back in fuel oil deliveries in the United States, and the estimate by the responsible minister in the province of Alberta that Canada may face a shortage of oil in a matter of months, I ask unanimous consent under Standing Order 43 to move the following motion:

That the government ask the National Energy Board of Canada to make an immediate report on this critical situation, along with its recommendations to safeguard the Canadian users of fuel oil and related petroleum products against unwarranted price increases and the possible shortage of supplies.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. Under Standing Order 43 this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion therefore cannot be put.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR LIST OF GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO REDUCE LEVEL

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, while yesterday the Prime Minister ignored my request that he state the policy of his government to increase employment I should like to ask him today whether he is prepared through this House to tell the 580,000 unemployed Canadians, as reported for the month of December—6.8 per cent of the working force—what his program is to reduce unemployment?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer would be in terms which were already mentioned in the Speech from the Throne about measures which have been taken and, of course, measures which will be taken in the industrial sector, plus an answer in terms of the budget speech which we expect will be fairly soon and which will announce a whole series of measures to stimulate the economy and reduce unemployment.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, we have had these budgets before. Will the Prime Minister give the House the assurance that his Minister of Finance will list fully today and in a very concrete fashion the measures the government proposes to take to reduce unemployment?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance will be participating in the debate on the Speech from the Throne. He will be answering in part the questions of the Leader of the Opposition. I am sure he will not be able to make a statement of a budgetary nature but I repeat that he will repeat his commitment to make a budgetary speech in the early future.

Mr. Stanfield: Indeed he will do that, but I should like to ask whether the Prime Minister can give us the assurance today that at least the 3 per cent increase in personal income tax which came into effect as of January 1, with its effects on employment, the economy and inflation, will be repealed, or does he feel that the corporations are entitled to more information concerning the taxes they will have to pay this year than individual Canadians?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR IMMEDIATE INCREASE IN FUNDS AVAILABLE TO MUNICIPALITIES AND OTHER ORGANIZATIONS TO CREATE JOBS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask some supplementary questions on the same subject. Perhaps I will direct them to start with to the Minister of Finance. In view of the very considerable surplus that the increasing revenues in the federal treasury have created, contrary to his estimate last May that there would be a deficit, is the minister now prepared to make an immediate increase in the funds available to municipalities and other organizations to speed up the creation of jobs without any delay?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I said recently that the cash requirements of the government, which I forecast in my budget of May 8 as $2 billion, remain, on the basis of the revenue and expenditure picture, still at roughly $2,200 million. On the question of aid to municipalities, the government has announced a $350 million federal-provincial-municipal loan and grant project. The arrangements with the provinces have now virtually been concluded and I expect, as I said on December 6, that the total cash flow available against winter unemployment this year will be in the range of $375 million compared with $300 million last year.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the $350 million—the minister will correct me if I am wrong—to which he referred was for a period of three years and that only about $50 million of that amount—I am stating this from memory—is to be spent this winter, and in view of the continuing rise in unemployment and the fact that the policies so far adopted have simply not worked, is he not prepared now to take immediate steps to increase the amounts which he proposed last December and to make them available immediately to the municipalities and other organizations?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is right in the sense that the $350 million program for provincial and municipal loans, with a forgiveness feature, is a three-year program and we expect the cash flow from that to be about $60 million to $75 million this winter, but he neglected to draw to the attention of the House the fact that there is the local initiatives program of over $125 million as a direct intervention by a federal department, $60 million for on the job training and so on, amounting, as I have said, to a total cash flow this winter of $375 million.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Obviously there are a number of members seeking supplementaries on this subject. In fairness, perhaps the hon. member for York South might ask a further supplementary question and then I will go to the hon. member for Don Valley.

UNEMPLOYMENT—FUNDS ALLOCATED UNDER LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—PROCESSSING OF APPLICATIONS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, in view of the minister's reference to the local initiatives program, may I ask him how much of that money has already been allocated? Is it not true that a large number of applications have not yet been dealt with? If he is not the minister who can give that information, perhaps the Minister of Manpower and Immigration could do so. Is it not a fact that a good many of the applications have not yet been dealt with?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member ask the question. I think he will agree that he is now getting into the field of argument.

Mr. Lewis: May I rephrase the question and ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether he can speed up the approval of applications which, I believe he mentioned the other day, total 11,000, so that this disastrous unemployment situation may be improved at least a little by more local initiative programs being put into effect immediately?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in fact we have approved about $110 million of the $165 million allocated to the local initiatives program. That amounts to the creation of approximately 70,000 jobs or, more precisely, 231,000 man-months of work.

With respect to the speed with which this is being done, I can only draw to the attention of the House the fact that this is considerably ahead of the same program last year, that the first $80 million was allocated in October, a month earlier than in the previous year, and that the second allocation of $85 million was made in December. We are now into the second allocation. But having said that may I add that I sympathize with the hon. member's suggestion, and we are putting all pressure possible on those in charge of the program to get projects approved and the applicants advised.

UNEMPLOYMENT—INQUIRY AS TO SETTING UP OF SHORT-TERM ECONOMIC FORECASTING UNIT

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In light of the variation in the unemployment figures released today from those anticipated in the minister's budget speech, can the minister tell the House whether the government is now going to introduce legislation to set up an independent short-term forecasting unit?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): The hon. member is referring to a short-term forecasting unit?

Mr. Gillies: An independent agency.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): But for short-term forecasting as opposed to medium and long-term undertaken by the Economic Council of Canada?

Mr. Gillies: Yes.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gillies: Is the minister prepared to introduce legislation permitting the Economic Council of Canada to enter into this field of economic activity?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gillies: Does this mean that the minister is content with the economic forecasting he is getting from the Department of Finance at the present time?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question is out of order.

UNEMPLOYMENT—USE OF EMPLOYMENT-INFLATION TRADE-OFF APPROACH TO ECONOMIC MANAGEMENT

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance if he can advise the House whether the government has rejected the employment-inflation trade-off approach to economic management?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that is something I would like to deal with in debate. It is a little hard to deal with in reply to a question at this time.

Mr. Hellyer: Can the minister advise the House of the figure he had in mind or that the government had in mind when the Speech from the Throne was written, when they indicated that their third priority was to attain reasonable price stability? In order that we may know what it is, Mr. Speaker, can the minister tell us the figure that the government has in mind with regard to price stability?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, reasonable price stability means the type of price stability that does not unduly erode incomes, particularly fixed incomes, of Canadians.

Mr. Hellyer: Would the minister be good enough to tell us what that figure is?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

UNEMPLOYMENT—WINTER CAPITAL PROJECTS FUND—AVAILABILITY OF APPLICATION FORMS TO ONTARIO MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, this is supplementary to the question originally put by the hon. member for York South to the Minister of Finance. Can the minister indicate when the province of Ontario will be in a position to make application forms available to municipalities for loans and grants under the $350 million provincial-municipal winter capital projects fund?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Almost immediately, Mr. Speaker. Very thorough negotiations have been taking place between the federal government and the province of Ontario, indeed between the federal government and all the provinces, to ensure that the criteria for loans under the fund are uniformly applied all across the country. I expect a reply very shortly to the letter I sent to Mr. MacNaughton of Ontario. It is a matter of imminence.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the statement made by Dr. W. R. Diamond, the recently retired assistant deputy minister of the Department of Manpower and Immigration, that job vacancies in Canada are at a minimum, does the government now intend to stop trying to pretend that there are plenty of job vacancies available?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that that kind of question is not in order.

HOUSING

SUGGESTED PROVISION OF ADDITIONAL FUNDS FOR LOW-INCOME HOUSING

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the minister in charge of housing. When he takes part in the throne speech debate—I assume he is going to—can he assure the House he intends to indicate that there will be provision for a significant allocation of funds for average and low-income housing immediately in order to meet the housing need and also to provide jobs?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there already is a very significant allocation of funds for that purpose, but we will be introducing amendments to the National Housing Act to increase and make the flow of money into low-income housing more readily available to those who want to take advantage of it.

Mr. Broadbent: Can the minister assure the House that the amendments he just referred to will be introduced in the early days of this session and, more specifically, within the next ten days?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I hope to introduce them—and here I may get into trouble—before the federal-provincial conference that I announced yesterday. In any event, they will be introduced during the course of this month.

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION TO AMEND NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I take it from the minister's answer that nothing will be done, no legislation will be brought in or any plans laid before the House in reference to housing needs and unemployment, until the conclusion of the federal-provincial conference that I understand is to be held on January 20 or 21?

• (1120)

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, there are ongoing programs of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. For example, there is the sewer construction program which is an ongoing program and one on which vast sums of money are being spent. I hope the hon. member does not think that program should be cut back until other funds are available. That program is going forward with as much money as I can get for it from the Treasury Board.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I never suggested that any program be cut back. In the press conference and the Speech from the Throne the question of housing was of top priority with reference to employment and other economic matters affecting the nation. I am asking the minister if the amendments to the National Housing Act and plans for housing changes will be implemented and brought before the House after the conference in question, with a further delay?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I am hopeful of introducing the amendments to the National Housing Act before the conference, but they will, of course, be discussed in parliament and at the federal-provincial conference. There have already been two rounds of consultations with the provinces with reference to this matter, but the program envisaged in those amendments cannot be got under way until the legislation is passed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are obviously a number of supplementaries. I will return to the hon. members in a moment. If the hon. member for Calgary North will ask his supplementary, in fairness I will then recognize the hon. member for Champlain.

Mr. Woolliams: Do I take it that this conference is basically superfluous in view of the fact that all changes are to be brought before the House before the conference commences?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question as asked is debate. The hon. member for Champlain.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST THAT MEMBERS PARTICIPATE IN PREPARATION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the particular circumstances resulting from the last federal election, has the Prime Minister explored the possibility of asking each of the political parties represented in the House to participate in the drafting of the different pieces of legislation he wishes to bring down during this session?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): It would seem such a measure would be hard to implement, Mr. Speaker. The co-operation to which the hon. member alludes should normally take place at the time the bills are discussed, I think. I already indicated in the speech that we would welcome amendments which, in our opinion, would strengthen the fabric of the bills. However much we desire this co-operation I fail to see where a decision on a bill itself, normally taken at the cabinet level, could be shared with the different parties, unless of course, members of those parties accepted to be part of the cabinet.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT IN QUEBEC—SUGGESTION THAT FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE BE HELD

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

In the light of alarming statistics indicating that the unemployment rate in Quebec is almost twice as high as in the west, is the right hon. Prime Minister considering calling a conference on economic problems and possibilities in Quebec?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I think that if the Quebec Conservative leader looked at the figures he would see that the unemployment rate has decreased in Quebec since last month as compared with the rest of the country.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Would the Prime Minister kindly reply to my question and tell this House whether he intends to convene a conference on the economic problems of Quebec?

Mr. Trudeau: If the hon. member wants me to reply to his questions, he should not preface them as he does.

Mr. Wagner: The Prime Minister might wish to reply to my question.

[English]

UNEMPLOYMENT IN PRAIRIE PROVINCES—SUGGESTED MEETING WITH PROVINCIAL FINANCE MINISTERS TO DISCUSS CREATION OF JOBS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that unemployment increased last month in the prairie provinces and in view of the expressed concern of this government, will the minister undertake to meet immediately with his provincial counterparts, the Ministers of Finance of the prairie provinces, to discuss job creation in that region?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am meeting with the Ministers of Finance of the prairie provinces next week, on January 18 and 19, as well as the ministers from the other provinces and that subject will undoubtedly be on the agenda.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES—INQUIRY AS TO MEETING WITH PROVINCIAL MINISTERS OF FINANCE

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker, and the latter part of his previous answer may have covered part of the question. In view of the tragic unemployment figures in Atlantic Canada, is the minister recommending to his colleagues that they consult or does he intend to consult with the Ministers of Finance in Atlantic Canada in order to discuss the tragic unemployment situation in that region?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Atlantic ministers will be at the meeting next week.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES—POSITION OF GOVERNMENT ON 1971 REPORT OF ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT COUNCIL

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, perhaps to assist the Minister of Finance in discussions with his provincial colleagues. Has the minister had time to read and assess the report of the Atlantic Development Council of January, 1971, which sets out its conclusions and recommendations for the development of Atlantic Canada? If so, when can he tell the House how much of that report will be a government objective?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I certainly have read it. It is an excellent report and I agree with a good deal of it. As for consultation, it has begun with three of the four Atlantic province premiers and two out of the three prairies province premiers and I am hoping to consult with the remainder within the next few weeks and that there will be some disclosure. I will be taking part in the debate on the address and will give the hon. member some details at that time, I trust.

UNEMPLOYMENT—SUGGESTED PRESENTATION OF NEW ECONOMIC STRATEGY TO MEET PROBLEM

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. As present indications would lead us to believe that unemployment for January will exceed the 650,000 in January of last year, which certainly makes this an emergency situation is the minister prepared to participate in the current debate before the House and take advantage of that occasion to present to the House a new economic strategy to meet the critical situation in the country?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I hope the hon. gentleman's preamble does not turn out to be the case. In any event, I will be participating in the debate and, as I said earlier and as the Prime Minister repeated earlier this morning, I want to bring down a budget at the earliest opportunity.

UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT DEFINITION OF FULL EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance a question about the unemployment situation. Can he inform the House what the government's definition is, for its own policy-making purposes, of full employment? Even now we do not know what that definition is.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to try to do that. The hon. member for Trinity and the hon. member for Don Valley were talking about targets. The Economic Council of Canada suggested, when speaking in terms of targets, that the targets for prices and unemployment needed to be supplemented by 13 or 14 other indicators. My own definition of full employment is a situation in the economy in which every able man or woman legitimately seeking a job can find work.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members will agree that this type of question and that type of answer are more in the debate field than belonging to the question period. Having said that, the hon. member may ask a supplementary.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary simply is: what is that definition in percentage terms? Is it 1 per cent, 2 per cent or 3 per cent? What is it?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman does not understand that the definition of full employment is not a statistical target; it is a human target.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the minister. Did he say human or inhuman?

An hon. Member: Inhuman, as far as this government is concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

POST OFFICE

VOTE ON CONCILIATION BOARD REPORT—DELEGATION OF OBSERVERS TO MEETINGS OF POSTAL WORKERS

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to that which I directed yesterday to the Postmaster General.

Does he know that meetings will be held in large urban areas following the completion of the postal workers' vote apparently to explain to the union members the real contents of the resolutions on which the vote was held and the steps expected to be taken on their behalf. Could the Postmaster General tell us whether his department will send some observers to those meetings?

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, my answer to the first part of the question is yes and it is the same for the second part of the question, if we are invited to those meetings.

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Can the minister tell us whether he has expressed the wish to be invited to those meetings to the union leaders?

[English]

INQUIRY AS TO CONCILIATION REPORT ON POSTMASTERS IN SMALL TOWNS AND RURAL COMMUNITIES

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, arising out of the question I directed to the Postmaster General yesterday. Is he now in a position to indicate when the report will be tabled on the other important discussions going on with reference to the Canadian Postmasters Association?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in his comments concerning a conciliation report about postmasters, I think the hon. member was confusing two series of negotiations now taking place. Insofar as the postmasters are concerned, I know there is no conciliation report and we hope to reach an agreement without conciliation proceedings.

[Later:]

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, may I raise a point of order?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Brandon-Souris on a point of order.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, in replying to my earlier question the Postmaster General indicated that I was confused about two conciliation board reports. If he would read Hansard for yesterday he would see that the shoe is on the other foot and that he is the one who is confused. May I ask the minister this supplementary. Will he deal more expeditiously with the negotiations that are going on with the Canadian Postmasters Association than he has with the current negotiations on the other conciliation board report?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: I hope so, Mr. Speaker.

CONCILIATION BOARD REPORT—RESULT OF STRIKE VOTE BY POSTAL WORKERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON ACCEPTANCE OF REPORT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. Has he been informed of the results of the strike vote by the postal workers and is he now prepared to give the government's reaction to the conciliation board report in that dispute?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I missed the question.

• (1130)

Mr. McGrath: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for St. John's East should be given an opportunity to repeat his question.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I understand from the minister's reply that he missed my question. Has the minister been informed of the results of the voting in the postal workers, dispute with the government? Also, is the minister now prepared to tell the House and the country what the government's attitude or reaction is to the conciliation board report in that dispute?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I think this is more appropriately a question for the President of the Treasury Board inasmuch as that board deals directly with these matters.

Mr. McGrath: Then I will refer the matter to the President of the Treasury Board and I hope he will be more informative than he was yesterday.

[Mr. Ouellet.]

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I should like to be more informative but unfortunately I am ill-informed. The results of the strike vote are not yet known to us and it may not be until tomorrow that we learn anything further.

Mr. McGrath: Since the strike vote has now been concluded, surely the minister is prepared to tell the House and the country whether or not the government is prepared to accept the recommendations of the conciliation board?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, as I said yesterday, the results of the referendum or the current vote are not yet known to us but we are endeavouring to find out.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I realize that the results of the voting are not known but the voting has been concluded, which surely leaves the minister in a position to tell the House whether or not the government accepts or rejects the report of the conciliation board.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is repeating the question he first asked. I appreciate that he did not receive a reply from the minister.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I cannot help it if the minister does not seem to understand the question, which surely is an important one. All I am saying is that the minister should now tell the House whether or not the government is prepared to accept or reject the report of the conciliation board in the postal dispute. That is a very simple question.

Mr. Speaker: It is very simple but it is the question that was asked in the first instance. The minister chose not to reply, as is his right. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

ENERGY

FUEL OIL PRICE INCREASE—POSSIBLE SHORTAGE OF SUPPLIES—INQUIRY AS TO IMPOSITION OF CONTROLS ON EXPORT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources arising out of the shortage of oil supplies in the United States and the tendency for Canadian oil to go south to a higher priced market, resulting in increased prices in Canada and a possible shortage of oil supplies in this country. Does the government intend to impose any system of controls on the export of Canadian oil supplies in the same manner as it has with natural gas?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, this question has been the subject of study by the National Energy Board as well as the subject of conversations with both the government of Alberta and the industry itself. At the present time we have no intention of imposing a form of regulation or export control. We have the assurance of the industry that requirements for refinery feed stocks of existing Canadian refineries will continue to be met. In the short term, at least, there is apparently no problem in continuing supplies for refinery feed stocks.

Mr. Douglas: In view of the fact that prices in Canada are already increasing, may I ask what steps the government is taking to ensure that increased demand for Canadian oil in the United States is not used as an excuse for increasing the price to Canadian consumers to an unjustifiable level?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I think that the government of Alberta would take the view that this commodity should continue to increase in value along with other products in our community. At the present time we are not proposing any action with regard to price, although we will be watching very closely the impact of United States demand on Canadian prices in the Canadian market.

Mr. Douglas: Is the government making or has it made any study of the growth rate of crude oil reserves, and is the government satisfied that they are adequate in order to prevent an oil shortage in Canada in the immediate future?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, this question has been under assessment. Leaving out for the moment the question of the tar sands, I think I am correct in saying that conventional oil reserves in the central plains have not been growing in recent years. Obviously future Canadian demand will, I think, have to be met by the tar sands and by frontier oil. The question of supply is one of the questions that the board has under study and on which we reported last week. This is being given very careful attention in order to make sure that Canadian refineries have priority with regard to Canadian production.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM WAR—UNITED STATES' RESPONSE TO MOTION PASSED BY HOUSE AND MINISTERIAL REPRESENTATIONS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. What response has the government of Canada received from the administration of the United States or from the Secretary of State of the United States to the motion passed by this House last Friday in connection with Viet Nam?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the text of this resolution was handed to the Secretary of State of the United States by Senator Martin when he was attending the memorial service for former President Truman. The embassy has also passed it on to the State Department. There has not yet been a reply.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Has there been any communication by the administration of the United States with the Canadian embassy in this connection? When the minister is answering that question, will he also say whether or not there has been any reply from the United States to the several representations alleged to have been made by the Prime Minister and other members of the government to the United States during the two weeks prior to the motion passed by the House?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker, we have not yet received any replies.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have one other question, Mr. Speaker. I asked the other day whether the minister would produce to the House the various representations alleged to have been made by the government and he said it was necessary to secure the permission of the administration of the United States, with which I agree. Has the minister asked for that permission so these illusory things can be produced?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman omitted one part of my answer the other day; I said that it was not our intention to ask the United States government to reveal these messages. We feel it is important to retain confidentiality in diplomatic exchanges between the two governments. However, I shall be quite prepared to answer questions about the general substance of these representations.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I have never known the minister to be so completely oblivious to the facts. He said the other day that he would, if he could, get the consent of the United States, and I have now asked him whether he had. Is it because there were no such representations that the minister is displaying such reluctance to answer?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear from the newspapers this morning that the United States has received such representations and has said so.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF BRYDEN COMMISSION REPORT

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board following the line of questions that prompted him to say earlier that he wanted to be more informative. That being the case, would he inform the House when he intends to produce for the examination of members of the House the report of the Bryden Commission?

• (1140)

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of Treasury Board): I believe the so-called Bryden Commission report does not lie within my jurisdiction.

Oral Questions

SPORTS

MONTREAL OLYMPIC GAMES, 1976—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON PROVISION OF FUNDS

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question concerning the Olympic games to my namesake, the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the government yet reached a decision in connection with federal financial participation in the Montreal Olympics in 1976 and, if so, what will be the extent of such participation?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in answer to a previous question, I have already indicated that the Montreal Olympics are not under my administrative jurisdiction.

[English]

Mr. Rose: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I address my question to the appropriate minister?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the federal position has not changed from that stated by the Prime Minister in the House some time ago.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY RESPECTING DIFFICULTIES OF AN ANNOUNCER IN EUROPE

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs concerning the representations made by the Canadian government on behalf of CBC announcer Gaëtan Barrette who is now in Europe. Could the minister advise us of the nature of those representations and their results, if any?

Mr. Speaker: Some of those questions could easily by put on the order paper. In this instance I shall allow the minister to answer the question, if he so wishes, but I invite hon. members to consider this other means provided by the Standing Orders of the House.

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if I understand the question correctly, it refers to the case of Mr. Gaetan Barrette, a Canadian citizen employed by the CBC who was arrested in Greece on October 6 and charged with possession of one half gram of hashish. His trial took place on December 21 at which time he was sentenced to seven months from the date of his arrest. His lawyer is filing an appeal. The Department of External Affairs and our embassy in Greece have kept in close touch with Mr. Barrette, his lawyer, his family and colleagues in the CBC and have provided all possible assistance.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DISABILITY PENSIONS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON STEPS TO EXPEDITE DECISIONS ON APPLICATIONS

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Perhaps I could preface it by congratulating him on his appointment to his high office. Many veterans who are applying for disability pensions are faced with long waiting periods between the date of application and the date upon which a decision is reached. Would the minister discuss this matter with the Pension Commission and make a statement on motions outlining the steps already taken and the steps to be taken in order to expedite such decisions?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, certain steps have already been taken. We are aware that some of the requests for pensions have met with considerable delays. This situation has been brought about as a result of the new legislation approved about a year ago in the House, which enabled many veterans who were previously unable to apply for pensions to do so. I believe a great deal of progress is being made by the Pension Commission in this respect. I have held discussions with the commission, and in the not too distant future I hope to be able to make a report to the House which will be very encouraging as far as this situation is concerned.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): In view of the fact that applications now total 9,400 which indicates that the backlog is growing rather than declining, may I ask what immediate steps the minister is taking to deal with this problem? I might add that the veterans are, of course, getting older and that it seems to be taking a considerable time to deal with their applications.

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): As to the backlog increasing, I think it will be pointed out in a matter of days, when I make my report, that it is not, in fact, increasing, and that certain steps have already been taken to remedy the situation. I might point out that the legislation passed by the House provided for the addition of seven new members to the commission. These people have been appointed. Hon. members will, I know, appreciate that learning to interpret the act from a legal and medical point of view is a tedious job. Those recently appointed are now in a position to do their work very efficiently, and I feel that great progress is being made. I met yesterday with the president of the Canadian Legion and others from the War Amputees' Association. They are also very keen that we should process these applications as rapidly as possible—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think we might go on to the next question.

REFERENCE OF REPORT ON BASIC RATE OF DISABILITY PENSION TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Will the report of the group which studied the basic rate of the disability pension that is paid under the Pension Act be acted upon by the government at an early date or, if not, will it be referred as soon as possible to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Just as soon as the committee has been formed I shall be referring that report to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs for study as the first order.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—PRIORITY OF APPLICATIONS BY MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration in charge of the local initiatives program. Has the hon. gentleman given a directive to the officials in charge of this program that applications from municipalities should receive a lower priority than those from individuals? Why does this seem to be the case?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): They have not received such a directive. Applications from municipalities compete with applications from private organizations.

CANADA LABOUR RELATIONS BOARD

REQUEST THAT REPRESENTATIVE OF WESTERN CANADA BE APPOINTED

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Can the Prime Minister or the Minister of Labour please advise us why no western Canadian was appointed to the new Canada Labour Relations Board?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): I shall be pleased to check into that matter and report back to the hon. member.

Mr. Hees: You know why.

Mr. Reynolds: Will the minister undertake to make sure that a representative of western Canada is appointed to that board should an oversight have taken place?

MANPOWER

NUMBER OF PEOPLE IN RETRAINING PROGRAMS IN 1972

Mr. Reg. Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Can the minister tell the House how many people received the benefit of federally-funded retraining programs in 1972, or any part of that year—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I respectfully suggest to the hon. member that this question should be placed upon the order paper.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT—INQUIRY AS TO ACCEPTANCE OF ECONOMIC COUNCIL TARGET BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It relates to his concern about unemployment in human terms. As the hon. gentleman is aware, the Economic Council of Canada has set a target of 4.5 per cent with respect to maximum acceptable unemployment. Would the minister advise the House and the people of Canada whether he has accepted this direction from the Economic Council as being the target upon which the government should set its sights?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): That is one of 15 targets the Economic Council recommended as subjects for discussion between the federal and provincial governments. The hon. gentleman's leader has already said he does not accept that figure.

Mr. Alexander: I appreciate the speech which the minister has made to me but I just want an answer to a simple question in order that we can determine in which direction the government is going. Does the minister accept the target for unemployment of 4.5 per cent, I believe, set by the Economic Council of Canada? That is all I am asking. Yes or no?

• (1150)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have already dealt with that subject in human terms rather than in statistical terms.

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed, from Monday, January 8, consideration of the motion of Mr. J. J. Blais for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield (p. 52).

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I did not expect the complete attention of the House but I expected that at least my loudspeaker would be on.

When the clock struck ten last evening I was attempting to point out that the present system of non-specific election dates is a tradition we can no longer afford. Like so many other traditions, we have maintained it simply because it is traditional. I do not believe it is fair to the people of Canada and it is something the House could easily change.

I mentioned also another tradition, that of the House of Commons going to the other place to hear the Speech from the Throne and not even being able to enter that chamber. Most of us have to watch television in order to find out what legislation is to be placed before us. This is completely ludicrous and has no place in our modern parliament.

It seems to me that these things, with some imagination, could be changed and that it would be possible to have a nice ceremony for the opening of parliament. If we were to have fixed dates and a new ceremony for the opening of parliament there is no reason why we could not take advantage of our best weather and combine it with our national day. It just takes a little bit of imagination to plan these things. There are those who say there are too many lawyers in the House. If that is the case, perhaps lawyers are not noted for their imagination or creativity. In any case, there could be many beautiful ceremonies attached to our parliament covering such things as the display of our flag and the singing of our national anthem. If the ceremony were held outside, taking advantage of our good weather on July 1, we could have the national band of the armed forces and that sort of thing and perhaps 100,000 Canadians would be able to assist.

I want to say a few words about the redistribution being proposed for northern Ontario. I usually describe my present riding of Cochrane as being almost the size of France because this illustrates the vastness of northern Ontario. In fact, the riding of Cochrane is slightly smaller than France. Those who are deciding the changes and these new boundaries have undoubtedly said to themselves that this fellow in Cochrane does not have enough with an area the size of France but should be given an area as big as Europe.

The commissioners have decided that the new riding should begin slightly north of North Bay and extend all the way up to Hudson Bay, a distance of almost 1,000 miles. Obviously the individuals making these decisions do not know very much about northern Ontario. This is not unusual as the people of Toronto, generally speaking, do not know much about anything beyond Barrie.

The point that should be made and which is of extreme importance is that we cannot divide up areas that are culturally and socially linked. The new boundary on the western side of Cochrane would be somewhere between Kapuskasing and Hearst, cutting off the area of Hearst, which is 90 per cent French-speaking, and throwing it in with another riding that is almost completely English-speaking, with the closest community of any size being some 200 miles to the west. Anyone who has travelled in that region obviously knows that the town of Hearst belongs within the district of Cochrane because it is linked culturally and socially to that area of northern Ontario which includes Timmins, Cochrane, Kapuskasing and Hearst.

That is one of the things which have been poorly done by the commissioners in their desire to create a riding almost 1,000 miles long. I object to the way things have been done by this commission. I do not know who chose these commissioners, but it is more than I can understand why they all have to be from southern Ontario when northern Ontario is five times the size. There is not one member from northern Ontario on that commission.

If you want to divide up a province you must have people who know about the area involved. The last redistribution was conducted in a similar way with the result that the riding of Cochrane has parts in the western end which really should not have been included because they more properly belong to the area of Sault Ste. Marie. However, they were thrown in with the rest of the riding of Cochrane. That situation is being rectified under the new proposals, but they are even worse because of these other things I have mentioned.

I object to the fact that there has been no consultation with any of the elected representatives in the north, municipal, provincial or federal. Consultation comes only after the fact, and from past experience of what these commissions do I know it is very difficult to get the boundaries changed after the recommendations have been made. Consultations should take place with the people who know the area. I could understand such a situation when the matter was solely in the hands of federal politicians and there were those who tried to divide areas to their own personal advantage, but that is quite different from putting redistribution into the hands of officials who know nothing about the areas and do not seem to want to consult with anyone prior to drawing the boundaries. These are matters which should properly be brought before the commission, and you can be sure that we from northern Ontario will do so.

I was extremely pleased to note in the Speech from the Throne that finally there is to be a special discussion regarding freight rates. This is a matter I dealt with in my maiden speech in the House four and a half years ago. It is a matter that we in northern Ontario have been pursuing over the years, particularly in the past few years, because it affects our whole economy and prevents new industry from coming into the area. It is of great importance to northern Ontario. Of course it is important to other parts of the country as well, but it is of particular importance to northern Ontario because we have had so little consideration in respect of freight rates. I welcomed this reference in the Speech from the Throne and I was particularly happy to note that the railroads have agreed to participate fully.

Our difficulty in the past has not been in getting committees here in Ottawa to listen to us but rather in getting the railroads to come to some realistic agreement. There has been a passing of the buck. They say it is not for them to decide, it is for the Canadian Transport Commission or some other body to consider, and it cannot be done at the governmental level without full consultation with the railroads.

I wish to say just a word regarding trade not only because I was a member of the Department of Trade and Commerce but because I believe the posture of Canada's trade should change somewhat for the future. I have always felt we have our own common market in this hemisphere. Our largest customer immediately to the south is a country with a population of over 200 million people. However, there are also the countries of Latin America, the Caribbean and South America. Although we do a good deal of trade with them it seems to me this trade could increase. A few years ago five different ministers went on amission to South America and Latin America. I had hoped that as a result of that mission there would have been an intensified effort to establish our own large group of trading partners here in this hemisphere. But I am afraid that has not come about. I would encourage the Minister of Industry, Trade, and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) to follow that course a little more assiduously.

Two of my parliamentary colleagues and I recently made a trip to Cuba. At the invitation of Cuba the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie), the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) and I had an opportunity to look at the trade in that particular country at first hand. I believe we could have more trade with that country. As trade is a two-way street, of course we would also have to be willing to buy a little more from them. Since this could affect our trade with some other countries it poses many problems. We have the commonwealth trade preference which is a good thing. So long as it remains a good thing I think we should maintain it. It is supposed to be to our advantage to have the commonwealth preference. If it should be a disadvantage to us, then I believe we should take another look at the whole system.

We have not been able to buy sugar from Cuba, for example, to any great extent because of the existing tariff, whereas the Commonwealth countries enjoy preferential treatment. We in this country buy sugar at present throughout the world, from South Africa, Australia and the Island of Mauritius. Sugar has to be transported back and forth across the Pacific Ocean. It seems silly that Australia should sell sugar to us while Cuba sells it to Japan, Malaya and so on. It seems to me there should be a change in that system so that we could buy more sugar from Cuba and perhaps the Australians could sell more of their sugar to other countries. South Africa sells a good deal of sugar to Canada and enjoys the lack of tariff as a result of its former membership in the commonwealth. It no longer is a part of the commonwealth but still enjoys preferential treatment. I believe that, where it would be to our advantage, other countries should enjoy that kind of treatment. This does not apply only to Cuba. We should take a careful look at all trade in this hemisphere. I hope the minister will adopt that posture in the future.

Before finishing I should like to mention something else which is close to my heart. I refer to the control of Crown corporations by the elected representatives of the people. More and more there are bodies which are independent of parliament and therefore independent of the elected Members of Parliament. This is always done under the guise of the suggestion that there should not be any political interference. Political interference is supposed to be a bad thing. Yet we have something much worse. We have people who do not have a mandate from anyone making serious decisions and ignoring the wishes of those of us who have been sent here by the people of Canada. The people of Canada do not understand that. They say their representatives are powerless to say anything about a body created by the federal government. This is why once again I have submitted for the order paper a notice of motion asking the government to present to the House a proposal whereby Members of Parliament would serve on boards and agencies of the Crown. I do not think we would act necessarily as great experts, but at least we would have a watchdog effect on the spending of the government. That is why the people of Canada sent us here. I believe we would also be able to keep an eye on the bureaucracy which is taking the form of an inverse pyramid as the years go by.

I note that my time is just about up and therefore I shall terminate on that note. Once again, I would like to congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, and your colleagues on your election.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, let me first congratulate Your Honour. I think I should also congratulate the House on the fact that Your Honour occupies the place you do at this particular time. I congratulate as well the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) who, as your deputy, I am sure will bring to the House good judgment, common sense and a knowledge of the rules. I pause here for a moment to say that we appear to be slowly reaching toward a point where there will be in the chair the independence, the objectivity and the capacity to deal with the most difficult problems, not in the form of persons who inhabit the chair but in the sense in which the Chair is regarded. It has been a very difficult problem. My hon. friend, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), took a very innovative course before the election of 1968. He made a valiant effort during the course of that election to try to attach to the Chair an attitude of independence of a permanent nature.

It is not my intention to talk about a permanent Speaker, although I have my views on that. But at least by the presence of Your Honour here again and by the presence of the deputy to Your Honour I think we are reaching toward a stage where in my view and in my hope—and I believe in the hope of most members of the House—we will be able to attach to the Chair permanently and forever those qualities which are so essential. The giving up of the right to appeal from rulings—there have been times when I have had some doubts about that—basically was a sound judgment if we are to keep that independence. However, I should like to make the suggestion that while this minority parliament subsists it might well provide an opportunity for the House to review the changes made in the rules to ascertain the defects, imbalances and difficulties which have been created—and we have created them—as a result of those changes.

Your Honour was good enough at different times during the last session to make a fairly lengthy list up to the end of parliament of items that should be considered by the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization. I hope that before this minority parliament runs its course, in light of the proportion of members on both sides of the House, there will be an opportunity to review what we have done and to make those changes which have to be made. One of them which I would like to see, Sir, would be at least the right to have in the form of a stated case from Your Honour from time to time a review of some of the decisions that have been made so that we will not dig ourselves into the pit of permanency with regard to some of the decisions under which we operate.

I congratulate the mover and the seconder of the address in reply. They lived up to the high traditions and standards of this House. It was a particularly difficult task this year in light of the contents of the Speech from the Throne, but they managed to surmount this monumental obstacle in doing their job. I congratulate the new ministers and the old ministers who have moved sideways as well as those who have moved upwards. I congratulate the parliamentary secretaries, some of whom have moved down and some of whom have moved out. I think there is one very substantial member of the government who will be moving out completely before too long. I say this to the hon. gentlemen opposite who inhabit the treasury benches: make the most of your time because you may not be there too long.

Yesterday the leader of this party, in a very statesmanlike, rational and objective speech devoid of partisanship, made four suggestions to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I will repeat them because I think that at the stage at which we find ourselves it is very important to reinforce the proposals made by my hon. friend. They appear at page 50 of yesterday's Hansard. In case there were some hon. members who did not listen or who did not understand or who were too busy dealing with complaints from their constituents to have had a chance to read Hansard, I will read what my hon. friend said.

> Point No. 1 is that the Prime Minister should tell the House today, in concrete terms, what the government proposes to do to increase employment and reduce unemployment.

That was pursued again today, not only by the Leader of the Opposition but by other hon. members, and brushed off in the same way as it was brushed off yesterday.

> Point No. 2. The Prime Minister should indicate today what the government proposes to do about reducing income tax rates for 1973.

This does not involve any breach of budget secrecy. This is a major government decision. We pressed the government on this and we pressed the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) on it last May. At that time we were met with a stonewall rejection. The Minister of Finance, supported by the Prime Minister, said "in no way are we going to do that". Surely, Sir, at this time when we are into the new year we would not be discharging our duty if we did not continue to press the government, as my leader did yesterday, on this issue. We got nowhere. We got no reply and no indication.

> Point No. 3 . . . I say that the Prime Minister should tell the House today what the six pieces of legislation are that are highest on the government's list of priorities and which it wants to see introduced and passed. This would give us some idea of the legislative priorities of the government.

This is a very reasonable request in light of the rather peculiar and extraordinary situation in which the House now finds itself. In light of what happened yesterday and what has happened before, for the Leader of the Opposition to ask the Prime Minister for a list of the six most important pieces of legislation and their priority is a reasonable request and I am deeply sorry that the Prime Minister either did not know what it was or did not want to give it or simply brushed the request aside. After all, we have the practice of the last three years. For the last three sessions the Prime Minister saw fit to introduce a detailed list of legislative proposals related to the Speech from the Throne. In a few minutes I will deal very briefly with what happened to the last one, but in light of the government's record in this respect in the last three sessions surely we are entitled to that information which we are not getting.

My leader went on to say:

> Point No. 4. Whether or not the Prime Minister give the information I have requested about employment policies, income tax policies or legislative priorities, we wish to see this debate adjourned after the other party leaders have had their say, at least until first thing in the morning. After all, we should have had this speech and we should have had some urgent legislation in December.

To that there was no reply in the House although outside the House the Prime Minister scoffed at it and said that in his view we should proceed with this debate in the usual way because he wants a vote of confidence. I say through you, Sir, to the members of the House that if the Prime Minister felt that way, why did he not call the House together in December? Why did he not summon parliament in December?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: It is now six months since the House adjourned. We did have two days, one at the end of August and the first day of September to deal with a very special matter, the strike at Vancouver. In December it was five months since the House adjourned. The House should have been called together; there are pressing and urgent problems with which it is imperative that we deal. If the Prime Minister feels so keenly about a vote of confidence as being essential to carrying on his government's activities—possibly there is a case to be made although not a very strong one—why did he not call us together in December and say, "I want this vote of confidence"?

I would like to finish my comments on what the Leader of the Opposition said yesterday. The final request he made was that the government should introduce the bill with respect to old age pensions. We are in the middle of a severe and difficult winter, not only with regard to physical but with regard to economic conditions. These are the people who are the first victims of inflation, of the problem which lies squarely at the door of this government. Surely the government must have available—if it does not then it is delinquent in its duty—legislation to deal immediately with this very pressing and serious problem. My hon. friend, the Leader of the Opposition, said yesterday that we will waive the necessary notice required to bring the legislation on the order paper and we will waive the notice required to let it be debated on second reading today. I look at the order paper and I find it blank. It is just as barren as the minds of the government when they come to deal with the problems of this country. On compassionate and humanitarian grounds, I think it is a shocking indictment of their disregard of the plight of the unfortunate victims of the government's inhuman programs in the face of the economic conditions in this country.

Now we come to the question of what we can do and what we must do. I am going to assume that the government has some legislation. Maybe that is a wrong assumption, but I note that on Friday last in response to a question the Prime Minister said:

> It will be our intention to indicate, through the House leader, as many bills as are necessary in the coming week—

That is this week.

> —to permit the House to see the business ahead of it.

That is an implicit statement that the government has legislation ready. Despite the past conduct of the government I will resolve my doubts at this time and hope that the Prime Minister really meant what he said, that he has legislation ready that the House can deal with, and that the government House leader will list the legislation for us.

Presumably the bills that are ready will be introduced for first reading. Why can we not have one of those bills before us today? Why can we not have the bill dealing with old age pension problems before us today? Why is that bill not before the House at this time?

We are prepared to give up our opportunities to challenge the government on several occasions in this debate. We are prepared to waive those opportunities, to postpone them, so that we can get on with the urgent business of the country. I think that the attitude of the Prime Minister and of the government in response to this reasonable request is shameful.

Apart from the very precise reason I have already given, another reason we are so anxious to get started is the past legislative record of the government. There is not enough time available to me to deal with that, but it is an appalling indictment of the government that it has the worst legislative record of any government in at least the last 50 or 60 years. Even if I went back 100 years I would probably find the same to be true, but I was charitable to hon. gentlemen opposite and only went back 60 years.

I point out that in 1968, 1969 and 1970 only about one-third of the legislative proposals which were put forward were passed. In the first of those years 17 of the bills proposed in the legislative list attached to the Speech from the Throne never saw the light of day. Either those bills were not in legislative form or they ran into the rigidity of the cumbersome cabinet structure the Prime Minister has introduced which constitutes such a barrier to the legislative process. I suggest that an examination of the succeeding year shows almost the same record, and in the last session of the preceding parliament less than a third of the bills listed, I think about 12 or 13, were passed. I do not have the precise records with me now.

My hon. friends in the New Democratic Party are aware of this situation. My hon. friends in the Social Credit party are aware of it. Are they prepared to sit quietly by and accept the continuation in office of the government on the basis of its legislative record, and give to the government a vote of confidence before they have seen the colour of the government's money and the kind of legislation it intends to introduce? If they are, then they are showing a great deal more naïveté and innocence than I ever thought they possessed, and my past experience with hon. gentlemen in those parties makes me believe they are neither innocent nor naïve. They may be other things but those things they are not.

Could it be a fact that the government has not got the legislation ready? Is that possible? We need to find out. I may move a motion before I conclude which I hope will give us an opportunity to find out. Indeed, based on the past record of the government it is likely that the legislation may not be ready, but I will give members of the government credit and will believe that some bills are ready, including the old age pension legislation, simply on the basis of what the Prime Minister said.

Under those conditions was the Leader of the Opposition not justified in making his request for a postponement of this debate? We must bear in mind the stumbling, bumbling record of the government in the legislative sense. Here I am reminded of the story so well told by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). I cannot tell it quite as well as he; in fact I do not think anyone can. No doubt he will have a lot to say later in this debate, but if one regards the government's legislative record as a 500-acre pasture, then if one cow passed through that pasture leaving a memorial behind it, in the legislative sense the Prime Minister and the government would be sure to land on that face down. That is the way I apprehend their legislative approach, their bumbling, stumbling ineptness, incapacity and incompetence. It is just tragic, Mr. Speaker.

With a minority House it may well be that we could improve on the legislative programs of this inept and incompetent government. Today we find that the government has not got all the answers. I do not pretend that our party has all the answers, but I believe that the answers are to be found in the totality of all the people of this country and that this House of 264 members is the institution most fitted and best equipped to ascertain the needs of the people of Canada and to respond to those needs in terms of legislation.

We, Mr. Speaker, are not able to initiate legislation. Nor can the House do it. Under our system of government it is the responsibility of the government. It is the government's responsibility to secure the essential financial recommendations from His Excellency and then introduce bills in the House and let the House deal with them.

In the previous majority House we found a great degree of incompetence in providing the type of legislation that was so essential for the good of the country. If any other proof is required, surely what we found out today with regard to the unemployment statistics is the best answer to this question.

If the government would introduce its legislation there would be an opportunity for the House to deal with it and make the legislation responsive to the true needs of the people of Canada. That is what we are asking the government to do. This is a minority House of Commons. The government ought to be prepared to introduce its legislation at once so that we can look at it, so that we can start dealing with it and so that we can start to improve it. This is imperative at this stage.

Yesterday the right hon. Prime Minister sought to evade this issue. I am not going to deal with his speech in detail. I am not going to go into the same channels as he entered in his attempt to evade the questions which were asked by the Leader of the Opposition. I think he would have been much better advised as a true leader of a political movement in this country not to have spoken as he did yesterday but to have responded to my hon. friend by dealing with the questions he asked. Unfortunately, he did not see fit to do so. Like some of his colleagues he whined, whimpered and bellyached about some of the reasons for losing the election. Even the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald), that rare, blithe and kindly spirit, murmured some cross words after the election about red necks, I am told. Even that hon. gentleman was seeking alibis for the election results.

I only deal with the Prime Minister's statement, Mr. Speaker, to say that this party will not be deflected from its duty and responsibility to deal with the economic issues and economic evils that plague this country. That is what we were sent here to do and that is what we intend to do. That is what we want to get started on as soon as the government can be persuaded.

To achieve this we will need the assistance of my hon. friends on my left and across on the other side. I suggest to them that they should review the position they have taken. I suggest to them that they should consider whether, under these circumstances, they are prepared to continue their support of the government. In light of what the Prime Minister said yesterday and in light of his refusal to bring forward legislation—and I believe this is legislation in which they are as interested as we are—are they prepared to sit back and allow him to have his way in delaying those steps which need to be taken for the good of the country? This has been called a House of minorities. If what I saw yesterday is to be repeated, if my friends in the New Democratic Party and in the Social Credit party are to yield up their virture so easily, I think that in a political sense this House might well be called a House of easy virtue.

It is my intention, Mr. Speaker, to suggest that this debate should be adjourned. I seconded the amendment of the hon. the Leader of the Opposition and it may well be that I am thus prevented from making this motion. However, I suggest that the government be given one more opportunity to proceed in an orderly way for the good of the people of Canada. They should bring forward a copy of the bill to deal with old age pensions today and should table their other legislative proposals. We are prepared to waive all notices required in order to commence debate at once. We are not dispensing entirely with this debate, Mr. Speaker, but what can be said today can well be said a month from now and maybe even better. Let us proceed at once with these measures and let us postpone this debate until a month from now. By that time we could have dealt with the important bills and could have had a budget. Also, my friends to the left could reassess their position and decide whether under the circumstances they still want to support the government. This is the last chance the government will get to make this decision.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Baldwin: Yes, of course.

Mr. MacEachen: Is the hon. gentleman suggesting that the government ought to introduce legislation and place legislative proposals before the House before the question of confidence has been resolved by the House? Is he suggesting that we ought to call the amendment immediately, dispose of all the motions and thus clarify the question of confidence and then proceed to legislation or is he suggesting that the government should advance proposals for legislation to the House while a motion of non-confidence is still unresolved?

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I think we should see what the government is going to do to find out whether it is entitled to confidence. In any event it now has 109 members and 46 auxiliaries.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi.

Mr. G. A. Percy Smith (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, since the throne speech debate apparently is to continue—I think we all agree that the rules of long standing should not be broken without very serious cause—in opening my remarks I should like to join with other members who have already spoken in extending to you, Sir, my sincere congratulations on your re-election to the high office of Speaker of this House. During my comparatively short experience here, I have come to appreciate the dignity, the ability and the impartiality with which you have discharged the duties of your high office. I am also appreciative of the courteous assistance you provided me as a new member, and I am sure the new members of this 29th parliament will also soon come to appreciate your unfailing good humour and your helpfulness to all members of the House.

I wish also to extend to Mr. Deputy Speaker my sincere congratulations on his election to this high office. His courteous conduct in the House during the time I have been a member, as well as his ability in debate, make me feel sure that the House has made an excellent choice. Although his riding is Halifax-East Hants in the province of Nova Scotia, he was born in New Brunswick. His connections with the county of Kent, part of which forms part of Northumberland-Miramichi, leads me to hope that I may see him there more frequently in the years ahead.

I should like also, Mr. Speaker, to congratulate both the mover and the seconder of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. Both the mover, the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais), and the seconder, the hon. member for Lachine (Mr. Blaker), both new members of the House, both speaking in both official languages, performed their traditional roles in a manner in which we can all take pride.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank the electors of Northumberland-Miramichi for the confidence they have shown in electing me to represent them for a second time. I assure them that it is a great honour to represent them in this House, and I hope I can justify the confidence they have shown.

It is customary in the throne speech debate for a member to speak about his own constituency and to extol its beauty and other merits, and as well to sing the praises of the Canadians who are fortunate enough to live there. About the riding of Northumberland-Miramichi, I can do this with the utmost sincerity. The Miramichi River intersects it from east to west for over 100 miles. This, together with its many branches leading north and south, serves to make the river the dominant geographical factor as well as a leading economic consideration in the riding. Almost 90 per cent of its population lives within a few miles of its shores. Our people have settled along its banks not only because of its beauty, and it is a beautiful river, but because their livelihood either directly or indirectly depends upon it.

While economic conditions are relatively good on the Miramichi, I would be remiss in my duty to my constituency if I did not bring up certain economic problems that we face. I will confine myself, Mr. Speaker, and rather briefly, to two of these problems before coming to my main remarks on the Speech from the Throne. We are fortunate in having two pulp mills located at Newcastle and Nelson-Miramichi. We also have a plywood manufacturing plant and a chipboard plant. All of these wood-using industries depend to a large extent on water transportation to market their product, chiefly in the European markets. Transportation and the cost of transportation are perhaps the most serious problems these pulp mills face.

There is, of course, the cost of transportation of the raw material to the mills. The source of supply is yearly becoming more distant as the closer stands of timber are depleted. This, however, is a problem faced by all pulp mills in Canada to a greater or lesser degree. But the most costly transportation problem is that of water transportation to market. This cost on the Miramichi is greatly increased by the shallow draft of the bay and river. This means that only small ships are able to enter the river and proceed upstream to the wharves at Newcastle and Chatham. The cost per ton to move the product in small ships is of course much higher. Moreover, such small ships are becoming scarce and difficult and expensive to charter.

At this time pulp mills throughout Canada, as I think hon. members know, are suffering economically. The problem results from the higher cost of raw materials and wages coupled with the lower price for their product as a result of the strength of the Canadian dollar in comparison with that of the U.S. dollar. My concern is that the high cost of water transportation for the pulp mills in my region may mean the difference between those pulp mills in my constituency being viable operations which will continue or uneconomic operations forced to close.

You may ask, Mr. Speaker, what concern this is of the government of Canada, or in what way the federal government ought to be involved in this problem. The answer is simple. For many years shippers and those depending directly or indirectly on our resource industries have been requesting the Department of Public Works to do a proper dredging job and to open up a shipping channel to a depth of 26 feet. The cost is considerable, cost estimates in excess of $5 million having been made. This cost, however, would be small compared with the economic dislocation and unemployment that would be consequent upon the closure of these industries. Ore concentrates are also shipped to European markets by water through the port of Miramichi and the shippers involved are also experiencing difficulties as a result of lack of adequate depth in the bay and river. Many studies have been made by the Department of Public Works, and lately my constituents and I have been trying to enlist the support of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to go ahead with the dredging. I ask both departments I have mentioned to give the project top priority for 1973.

The other problem that I want to touch on briefly which has caused considerable economic hardship is the ban on commercial salmon fishing in eastern Canada. The imposition of this ban was a serious step affecting, as it did, the livelihood of hundreds of fishermen and their families. Nevertheless, I agreed with the minister when he announced the closure of the fishery. He was acting on the best scientific evidence available which indicated that the ban was necessary to preserve this wonderful and valuable species. Runs had been declining steadily and rapidly since 1967, aspecially the runs of large adult salmon. During the summer of 1972 salmon runs were much improved over those of 1971. This led many fishermen to feel that the ban had been unnecessary. I am personally convinced that the 1972 improvement in runs reflects the normal five-year salmon cycle. The 1972 runs represent the return of the salmon hatched in 1967. That run, also, of course, must reflect the effects of the ban on the Port aux Basques fishery which historically took many fish destined for New Brunswick rivers.

During the election campaign the Leader of the New Democratic Party visited Newcastle in my riding, where he participated in an open line radio program. During this program he was asked what he thought of the ban on commercial fishing for salmon. He replied to the effect that he believed there should be a ban on the sport fishery if there was to be one on the commercial fishery. I feel sure, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. gentleman did not realize the economic benefits brought to the province of New Brunswick by the sports fishery and did not realize that hundreds of guides and outfitters would be out of work if a ban on the sport fishery were imposed. I am sure the government of New Brunswick could ill afford the considerable loss of revenue that would be entailed in such ban. I feel that such a complete ban would not be justified in view of the relatively small percentage of total runs taken by anglers. This percentage was estimated by the former department of fisheries, now the Department of the Environment, at about 5 per cent. This contrasts with 86 per cent, again estimated by the department, as taken by fisheries of all kinds, including the Greenland fishery, the Port aux Basques fishery and the drift and set fisheries of the Miramichi. This left, if the figures are correct, an escapement of only 9 per cent for spawning purposes. A general rule cited by conservationists is that an escapement for spawning in the order of 30 or 40 per cent is required and is essential to ensure the perpetuation of any species.

If these figures are correct—and they are the best obtainable—the fishery, and consequently the future livelihood of those engaged in the salmon fishery, was in grave danger. For the ban to have any noticeable effect, it should be continued for one complete salmon life cycle, namely, for about five years.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) was in New Brunswick during the course of the election campaign, and particularly in my riding though in other ridings in New Brunswick as well, the commercial salmon fishing ban was quite an election topic. The Leader of the Opposition was questioned on his position with regard to the salmon ban and he replied to the effect that in view of the better run in 1972 the ban should be reconsidered. This does not make sense to me from a conservation viewpoint. Neither does it make any economic sense to the fishermen in view of the generous compensation formula announced by the minister to be in effect during this ban.

If any member wonders why the government of Canada should be involved in paying compensation as the result of declining stocks of a certain species of fish, I would agree that this is the first time that this has been done in similar circumstances. The compensation with respect to swordfish which were found to have an unacceptable mercury content was a different situation. The sale of that species was prohibited by regulation of a government of another jurisdiction. In the case of salmon the decline was due to various factors, notably the high seas fishery on the part chiefly of the Danes, and to some extent pollution of spawning rivers.

These are factors over which the fishermen had absolutely no control. But they were matters over which the government of Canada could or should have some control or jurisdiction either by persuasion or by legal means. Hence the principle of compensation was agreed upon. It is a tribute to members from all parts of Canada that not one dissenting voice was heard when the government of Canada decided to spend an as yet unknown sum amounting to millions of dollars in order to save this valuable species of fish on the east coast of Canada. Salmon have long since disappeared from the rivers of the eastern United States, at least for all practical purposes.

The Minister of Fisheries is also to be congratulated for his efforts in convincing the government that measures should be taken to relieve the economic hardship on fishermen during the ban. I feel I should offer this word of congratulation to him in view of the roasting he is being given by officers of various commercial fishermen's associations, as published in the daily papers in New Brunswick during the last two weeks or so.

It is also a tribute to our federal system of government that the nation as a whole can come to the rescue of an area or a group or industry that is in difficulty. It is obvious that the province of New Brunswick with its limited financial resources could never have provided the millions of dollars required to avert the disaster, which is what it would be, of the decline and possible demise of the Atlantic salmon.

I regret, Mr. Speaker, the time I have taken in pursuing this subject but I make no apology for it. All members have listened with great interest and patience to problems in other parts of this wide country far removed from the immediate concerns of their own region or constituency.

I have said that a generous formula of compensation was offered to those salmon fishermen, so hon. members may ask what is the probelm—and I indicated that there was a problem. The compensation formula provided for payment annually during the ban, up to five years, of an amount equal to the average of each fisherman's best three consecutive years' gross income catch in recent years. The best years chosen varied in different areas. In the case of the Miramichi set net fishermen, the years 1965-66-67 inclusive were chosen by the fishermen. As I have said, the formula was generous and the intention of the minister was obviously to be generous. The problem that now arises is that his departmental officers, either at the regional office at Halifax or here in Ottawa, or both, apparently thought that the formula was too generous and have taken it upon themselves to set arbitrary figures for the catch of individual fishermen, mailing them a cheque marked "final payment".

This is why I asked the minister in the House yesterday whether he would provide an appeal procedure. This he said he would do and indicated that he would undertake the task himself. I wish him success, but it will require a long time to delve into the details of individual claims by those who wish to appeal. I doubt whether the minister has the time to spend hearing appeals in the province or on the east coast from fishermen in the Saint John area and the Miramichi area, and it would be unrealistic to require the fishermen to come to Ottawa with their records and other evidence, including witnesses. I therefore feel than an appeal committee comprised of some person or persons acceptable both to the department and to the fishermen will have to be established.

The question is complicated because many of the fishermen, being small operators mostly earning below the level that would require them to pay income tax, did not keep adequate records of their catch. The payments made to them by the department indicate that they are being severely, and I feel unjustly, penalized for this. Many of the compensation payments appear ridiculous to me, and I have a considerable knowledge of this fishery. They bear no relationship to the claims filed, even those which were supported by adequate records.

In this connection I should mention that because of a policy set out by the minister in 1971 several salmon fishermen lost their licences by the operation of a section that disqualified them if they held a full-time job in an industry other than fishing. However, the minister at that time set up a licence review committee to relieve hardship where extenuating circumstances existed. This would apply, for example, to a fisherman with a large family who, although holding steady employment, had an income from such employment in the $3,000 to $4,000 range. The appeal committee, acting as it was meant to act, reinstated about ten fishermen, but in these cases no compensation was paid or offered by the department. I feel that these reinstated fishermen should be treated in the same manner as others.

I have talked for a long time about fishermen and salmon but I shall conclude this part of my remarks by saying that even full compensation in terms of dollars cannot recompense these people for the loss of a way of life. They are rugged individuals who compete with nature, the winds and the tides, often at their personal peril, to go out to sea in order to earn a living. Neither are they afraid of work. They spend days, even months, during the winter and spring preparing their nets and gear to be ready to undertake this precarious operation. With the optimism that all fishermen must have in great measure these men prepare for the fishing season, and I have a soft spot in my heart for them.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair to resume same at 2 p.m.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, the old saying goes that adversity produces strange bedfellows. Here in this House we see the spectacle of two parties and two leaders who, in all other circumstances and until the present time, have been at each other's throats, and who fought each other tooth and nail in the past general election and criticized each other in every way possible, desperately clutching each to the other's bosom, engaging in a marriage of convenience designed to make it possible for the government to cling to power for as long as possible and to enable the New Democratic Party to avoid for as long as possible a general election in which, as they well know, they would be squeezed between the present government and the next government to be elected very soon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: While this is going on, we hear pleas from the government benches, in particular from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), urging that the country and parliament be reasonable, asking the Members of Parliament to allow him to stay in office and deal with the economy of the country despite the fact that for several years the government has proved over and over again that it is completely unable to deal with the economy in a satisfactory way.

But, Mr. Speaker, we are a fair party. We wish to give every proposition a fair and reasonable examination, and consistent with this outlook we intend to take a look at the way in which the government has handled the economy in the months since its last budget was presented. Mr. Speaker, in the eight months since the government presented its last budget, a budget which was the sixth of six budgets brought down over a period of three and a half years, each with the assurance that it would stimulate the economy and materially reduce unemployment, the economy has not improved. Indeed, output has declined, as I intend to show.

The best way in which one can present a fair and accurate assessment of the way in which the economy has evolved since the last budget was brought down would be to look at the government's own record of what has gone on in those months. This record is produced from time to time, as we all know, by the government's own statistics bureau, Statistics Canada, formerly the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. The latest of these reports dealing with the economy as a whole is a report having to do with the third quarter of the year just completed. These are the latest figures on the basis of which we are able to make an assessment, and these figures, from which I shall quote in a few moments, show very clearly the direction of the economy of the country since budget night, May 8, when the budget was brought down with such a fanfare by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner).

The report to which I have referred, produced by the government's own agency, contains several very interesting statements. I quote:

> The volume of goods and services (real output) produced in Canada during the third quarter declined below the real output of the second quarter. This is the first time in nearly three years in which real output has declined from one quarter to another.
> Business outlays on plant, equipment and inventories during this quarter declined below their second quarter level.
> The advance in the over-all Gross National Product during the third quarter was the smallest to have taken place in any quarter during the past five years.

These are very strange results to be derived from a budget which was brought down with such fanfare on May 8 by the Minister of Finance as one which he promised the House and the country would stimulate the economy and start unemployment on a downward trend. On the night the budget was presented, unemployment in this country stood at 5.2 per cent of the work force, seasonally adjusted. Eight months later, today, we are told by the government's statistics agency that unemployment has risen to 6.8 per cent of the work force. It is very interesting but rather sad to note that during the same period unemployment in the United States was lowered from 5.5 per cent to 5.2 per cent of the work force. All of the figures I have quoted are, of course, seasonally adjusted.

A re-reading of the budget makes it very clear that if the credibility of this government were plotted on a graph it would just about match the decline in the economy that has taken place since the Minister of Finance introduced his last budget some eight months ago. What has caused this very sharp reverse of the upsurge the minister predicted with such confidence on budget night? To get the answer let us take a look at what the minister proposed to do.

His plan was based primarily on a reduction on January 1, 1973 in corporate income taxes for manufacturers and producers, which together comprise 34.2 per cent of the total economy. We were told by the minister with great confidence as he came into the Chamber that night in his shining armour that this would be a new wave. This was the man who could do it when Ben Benson had failed so badly. This was the new man who was going to show that party how he could do this when everybody else had failed. He told us that these things would stimulate the whole economy to such an extent the economy would move on to higher ground.

During that debate we voiced some scepticism. We pointed out some of the things we thought were wrong and some of the things that would not come true, and we pointed out why they would not come true. We were laughed and scoffed at by this new champion of the Department of Finance, this new wave, this new brain, this new man and leader who was just about ready to take over. For eight long months we have had to endure the downgrading of the economy which has taken place since that budget was produced.

The government's plan was to reduce taxes on manufacturing and processing which together make up 34.2 per cent of the economy. The government neglected one very important fact in presenting that budget, and that was that also on January 1, 1973, on exactly the same day this tax reduction for manufacturing and processing would come into effect, all other businesses in this country and the whole economy would have corporate income taxes substantially increased as a result of a previous budget of October 20, 1971. Therefore, we can see that the government's plan for stimulating the economy was simply a promise to lower taxes for one-third of the economy, on exactly the same day taxes increased for the other two-thirds of the economy. Any child taking public school mathematics could tell you that this type of arithmetic does not add up to a stimulus for the economy as a whole.

The government is run by a lot of impractical theorists who have had little or no business experience, who know little of what is needed to stimulate the economy and get it moving. They do not understand business problems. These impractical theorists thought this kind of arithmetic would stimulate the economy as a whole. Surely, this kind of cloudy-minded thinking cannot be allowed to continue any longer with its misdirection of the economy of this country. This country simply cannot afford this kind of thing.

As though that was not enough of a deterrent to a business expansion in this country which would lift us up out of the decline we have been in for so long, the businessmen of this country knew very well that on the same day taxes would be lowered for one-third of the business community, taxes would be raised for the other two-thirds and that all of the people of Canada would have their personal income taxes increased by 3 per cent. All the businessmen of Canada, in whom the minister was so confidently relying to create this great upsurge in business by going out and buying machinery and expanding their operations, knew perfectly well that taxes would be raised for two-thirds of them.

All these men knew that the buying public in Canada would have their purchasing power diminished substantially on January 1 as a result of this 3 per cent increase in income tax. They knew this would substantially reduce the purchasing power available to Canadians with a resultant substantial slow down in business. Yet the Prime Minister said during the election that he was puzzled by the reason for unemployment remaining so high. If this Prime Minister had any business experience whatever he would know that the reason unemployment remained high was that there was no continuing, effective stimulus to the economy. This Prime Minister does not seem to realize that in order for industry to absorb our steadily growing work force the economy must increase as a result of a substantial and continuing stimulus which would keep the economy expanding at the necessary pace to absorb that steady growth in the work force year by year.

What kind of a stimulus will do the necessary job? It is very obvious to anybody who understands business that to employ more you must first produce more, and you must sell more both in Canada and in the export market. Let us take a look at what is needed to sell more in Canada. The quickest and most effective way is to put more money in the hands of the Canadian buying public by means of a substantial cut in personal income taxes. That is what the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) told the people of Canada during the general election a Conservative government would do. This Liberal government laughed at that. This government has not done that and that is one of the main reasons unemployment is at 6.8 per cent of the working force today. If we made a substantial cut in income taxes, as the Leader of the Opposition assured the Canadian people a Conservative government would do, this would enable the Canadian buying public to go out and buy the things they needed for some time but could not afford.

By putting people to work producing the additional volume of goods required to fill this additional demand this tax cut would pay for itself. First of all, it would reduce unemployment insurance payments which are mainly paid today by the federal government. The additional people at work would be paying income tax and the additional commodities being sold would generate additional commodity tax. The greater volume of goods would result in a lower unit cost of production and make available greater business profit subject to taxation.

Let us look at what could be done to increase sales in the export market. To increase exports we must do two things. First of all, we must slow down the rapid increase in costs of Canadian production and make it more competitive. During the 12 months—these are the latest figures available to us—between November 1971 and November 1972 wholesale prices in Canada rose by no less than 9.8 per cent. This is the largest rise in wholesale prices in the country during the past 25 years. It has, therefore, become painfully obvious that many Canadian products are simply pricing themselves out of the market. It will be difficult to hold the present volume of sales let alone increase that volume if these price increases continue at the present rate. In a few moments I intend to outline what I believe must be done to control the rapid rise in prices so that we can both increase exports, which produce jobs for Canadians, and slow down imports which take away jobs from Canadian workers.

The second thing which must be done to increase exports is to initiate a massive trade drive to include, first, a greatly expanded number of trade missions to the markets of the world where our trade commissioners indicate increased sales can be made if the proper selling effort is put behind them; second, a doubling of the number of trade fairs participated in by Canadian producers in the markets of the world; third, a greatly expanded program of export credits and export insurance, and, fourth, "fly and buy" missions to bring the most important buyers from world markets to see Canadian products displayed in trade shows in our major industrial cities right across this country.

These and other techniques were used by a previous government—of course it was a Conservative government under the leadership of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker)—to reverse, in one year, ten years of trade deficits and lay the foundation for the prosperity of the 1960's. Such a program can be just as effective today. Because of our already far too heavy reliance on the United States market, our greatest potential for trade expansion lies in the European Common Market. During the past year, only 5.7 per cent of our total exports went to the ECM. These were broken down as follows: 48.9 per cent, raw materials; 33.4 per cent, semi-processed; 17.7 per cent, finished products. From these figures it is obvious that there is a very large potential market in the ECM for our finished products if we will get our prices down. Recognizing this, and also that on January 1 Canada will lose the Commonwealth preference which has been of great assistance to this country in selling three quarters of a billion dollars worth of products to Great Britain each year, the Prime Minister made a hurried trip to Great Britain to try to persuade Mr. Heath to try to persuade the member countries of the ECM to include Canada in some kind of special membership.

Anyone in touch with any person in the governments of the European Common Market knows perfectly well that under the present circumstances, because of the coolness which has developed between the members of the ECM and this country, there is very little if any chance of this being done. The reason for the resentment felt by these countries is Canada's unilateral reduction in its contribution to NATO. We reduced our contribution unilaterally by 50 per cent four years ago. This sentiment is still very strong indeed. There is very little inclination on the part of the members of the ECM to make any concessions to Canada in matters to trade or anything else for that matter.

Why is NATO so important to the members of the ECM? Simply because they believe it is their best guarantee that they will not become embroiled in a third world war. It was to provide this kind of collective security that 14 countries of the western world joined together after the conclusion of the Second World War. Each of these member countries agreed to provide and maintain certain parts of a composite force calculated to deter any potential aggressor from the kind of adventures which precipitated the first two world wars. When one country reduces its contribution, this provides a temptation to follow suit with the possible result being the reduction of the strength of the composite force to a point where no real deterrent to aggressive action is provided. I think it has become obvious that if we are to play our full part in providing a practical deterrent to action which could lead to a third world war, and if we are to regain the respect and co-operation of the NATO allies we should now restore the strength and effectiveness of the NATO contribution which this country pledged to make and did make. It did this for many years and should be doing so today.

Finally, what can be done to control the rapid rise in prices of Canadian products which has made possible the increase in imports of more than 20 per cent during the past year and which is making it increasingly difficult to sell Canadian manufactured products abroad in any satisfactory volume? Imports which of course take jobs away from Canadians have been gaining ground because Canadian prices have been rising too quickly to allow many of our products to remain competitive. It is all too clear that Canadians are not willing to pay more for a Canadian made product than they are required to pay for a similar article made in some other country. With wholesale prices of products made in Canada rising at a rate of nearly 10 per cent during the past year the switch to foreign-made products has now become very serious indeed.

What is to be done about it? Price rises must obviously be controlled, but how? Although President Nixon has recently announced that price controls in the United States will be continued for another year, I do not believe that we have to take the full step to price, wage, rent and income controls at this time, because I am convinced that another step will be more effective. I have been told by top leaders of management and labour right across the country that if the government introduces guidelines designed to keep the annual rise in prices to between 2½ per cent a year, and 3 per cent a year, and makes it very clear that mandatory controls will be introduced if these guidelines, backed by a flat statement by the government will have no alternative but to obey these guidelines. The reason is that they know that mandatory controls will put their operations into a straitjacket from which it may take years to emerge. I think it has become obvious that such suidelines, backed by a flat statement by the government that non- compliance will be followed by mandatory controls, are long overdue and should be introduced without further delay. So it is clear there are straightforward steps which this government should and must take now to stimulate the economy, to get it moving again and to bring it out of the lethargy in which it exists at the present time.

Unfortunately the Speech from the Throne does not contain any specific steps the government proposes to take to stimulate the economy and get it moving at this satisfactory pace. That speech is simply a public relations document designed to lull the people to sleep and make them believe that something will be done. But it will not be done. This government did nothing in four and a half years and, unfortunately, it is no better today than it has been during that time.

• (1430)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: It has become obvious that the woolly-minded theorists who run this government must be replaced by practical men, men who have had some experience in the practical aspects of business, who understand business, understand the economy and understand what has to be done to revive it and to get it moving again. It has become obvious that the only men who are available to this parliament to do that job are the members of the Conservative party.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hees: It has become more and more obvious that the Conservative party is going to take over the reins of government in the very near future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: I have arrived at the conclusion of my remarks and I am sure my friends opposite are sorry to hear that. Under the present program of the government for operating the House there is no way in which any legislation can be dealt with before at least one month has passed. There are a great many people in this country who cannot wait for one more month. Those are the people who did so much to make this country the great country it is today. They are the senior citizens, the people who receive the old age pension. But, as we know, the old age pension is far too low to meet their needs today. These people have had to tighten their belts for the past seven years. This must stop. A Conservative government would stop it. The only way that this problem can be dealt with is to bring in the legislation dealing with the old age pension right now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: We call on this government to stop this debate temporarily and bring in their old age pension legislation which will be dealt with quickly and effectively. Let the old people of this country have the benefit of what has been long overdue. Let the government bring in that legislation and present it to the House for inspection, as well as legislation that the government claims to have to deal with the economy to get it moving forward so that something can be done to cure unemployment, to halt inflation and to deal with the other economic problems that exist in the country. We do not need to hold up the House, but we want to look at the legislation so that the NDP and the Creditiste party know why they should be voting non-confidence in the government when the vote comes.

Therefore, on behalf of the party for which I am speaking, I suggest that we should adjourn this debate and get on with the old age pension legislation. Therefore I move:

That the debate be adjourned.

Mr. Gray: You want to muzzle parliament.

Mr. Hees: May I bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that the seconder of the motion is the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of adopting the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Hees) which was negatived on the following division:

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, before we were interrupted by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees)—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I want to say I always enjoy listening to him and following him. His speeches are refreshing in tone if, sometimes, not as refreshing in substance. I remember when he was playing football for the Toronto Argonauts he got the ball to the ten-yard line but he never quite succeeded in getting it over.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Your Honour!

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings rising on a question of football privilege?

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Hees: I would simply remind the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner) that we did happen to win the Grey Cup. And you do that by getting the ball over the line.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I don't know whether or not in that game the hon. member was picking up slivers on the bench. In any event, it was a novel gimmick this afternoon, attempting to adjourn the House, suggesting the government should be bringing in legislation before it had secured the confidence of this chamber, which, after all, is the important question now before the House constitutionally under the British parliamentary system which calls upon the representatives of the people in parliament to decide whether the government has their support. That is the first step any government must take before bringing in any legislation at all.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: What about that billion dollars in the supplementary estimates?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The supplementary estimates contain a legislation item.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): If I may turn to a matter on which the constitutional experts on the other side are a little less sensitive, let me say, Mr. Speaker, that I welcome your re-election to the chair of this House over which you have presided during two former parliaments. To add a personal note, I trace our friendship back to your nomination at the old county seat at Finch in Stormont in 1962. I echo the praise which has been accorded you by my leader and others in acknowledgement of your good judgment, your fairness, your courage, and, above all, of your sustaining sense of humour. May I say, too, that we on this side feel the nomination of the Deputy Speaker to his high office to be a handsome innovation. Those of us who have known him over the years respect his impartial tact. We respect his understanding of this House of Commons. We want to assure him he has friends on both sides of the House, and I doubt very much if he will lose one of them.

May I say to the mover and seconder, through you, Mr. Speaker, that I thought they acquitted themselves with competence, flair and dispatch in the traditional rewarding task they were given by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of moving and seconding the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

Before I address myself to the economic situation I should like to deal briefly with the political scene, if I may. The last election did result in, I suppose from our side, an unfortunate polarization of votes, and I want to suggest, in a certain respect, an unfortunate polarization of votes as reflected in this House of Commons. I think it is not necessarily an unhappy circumstance, but not a circumstance to be wished for by any member of the House of whatever political persuasion, culture or linguistic attribution, that so many members having as their mother tongue the French language sit on your right. I think that places a special burden on every member of the House of both languages in order that anything we say here enhances the unity of this country. I do not believe that any political party has a monopoly on national unity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): All members of this House are deeply sensitive to the problems of making bilingualism in the public service a working reality in this country. All members and, I am sure, Your Honour, will recognize that nothing is more central to the unity of Canada, which we all seek to maintain, and nothing is more essential to the enduring partnership of the two founding peoples of this country. By now I think we all recognize that it is not enough for anyone in this House merely to assent to institutional bilingualism as a noble ideal and as a principle in support of the abstract. I make the point "institutional bilingualism" because what I am talking about now refers to bilingualism in the public service of Canada. It is that institutional bilingualism which should not be confused with individual bilingualism, the ability of any Canadian to speak either language.

Institutional bilingualism refers to the public service being conducted in either language, available to the people of Canada in either language, and the opportunity for any citizen to work in the public service of Canada in either language, thus preserving the right of any Canadian to remain unilingual if he wants. It is that distinction between individual and institutional bilingualism that I think must be made very carefully.

There is nothing abstract about the objectives of the Official Languages Act. I had some responsibility for introducing that piece of legislation in this House and I had some responsibility for negotiating its provisions with the western attorneys-general, with the attorneys-general of Ontario and Quebec and those in the Atlantic provinces, and there is nothing abstract about its objectives. It gives the authority of law for making the federal institution of Canada reflect the linguistic realities of this country. Surely, it is fundamental to the continuing unity of Canada that Canadians of either language be able to deal with the government and agencies of Canada in their own language. Surely, it is also fundamental to the unity of Canada that we should work toward Canadians being able to work in the public service of our country in the official language of their choice.

I do not think we need disguise the underlying motivations behind the policy of bilingualism. These were stated by the late Mr. Pearson in 1966 when he introduced his resolution in the House of Commons. It is to ensure that French-speaking Canadians have in reality in this country an equal opportunity and, just as important, that they be made to feel that they have an equal opportunity. It is an invitation particularly to young French-speaking Canadians in Quebec and elsewhere to exercise their option for Canada rather than to flirt with the dream of a separate nation state.

I have said on many occasions that nowhere is Canadian unity more important than in the National Capital. This city does not make any sense without a country and it is absolutely crucial for the prosperity of the people of Ottawa, the people of Hull and the people of the whole national capital region, that the policy of institutional bilingualism succeed.

It is a sign of the commitment of this House of Commons in principle and in practice that the Official Languages Act was supported by all parties when it was passed by the last parliament. Implementing the goals of that act has been a massive undertaking. A great task and great challenge has been to move toward the creation of a public service which truly serves both languages of Canada and the citizens of either language in this country; moving forward with speed and determination, responsive to the will of parliament, yet moving forward with the sense of equity and justice which was also within the collective mind of parliament. There were no charts, no guidelines. There were no paths well trodden. No nation in the world ever attempted this type of program on so large a scale. No body of experience has been revealed and only experience can reveal how the fundamental principles can be refined and developed in order to make the implementation of bilingualism more effective, more rational and more acceptable.

The guidelines which my colleague the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) enunciated last month represent a welcome and even, perhaps, overdue set of basic principles which will immeasurably aid the Public Service Commission and reassure public servants whether they be French-speaking, English-speaking or bilingual. The positive way in which these principles were accepted by all public service staff associations has, I believe, been most encouraging. The staff associations asked for a say in the identification and designation of bilingual positions. They will now have that say. New flexibility has been introduced into the whole program, a flexibility which at the same time protects careers, yet provides an opportunity for all civil servants.

Leaders of staff associations were forthcoming in their expression of willingness to try to make it work. In this latter connection, it is crucial that consultation and negotiation between the Treasury Board on the one hand and staff associations on the other be meaningful and genuine.

Mr. Lewis: And the Public Service Commission.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, and the Public Service Commission, as the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) has interjected.

I am not going to attempt any exposition of the nine principles which the President of the Treasury Board has enunciated. I think there will be another occasion for the House to pronounce itself on this issue, and at that time I would like to intervene with an exposition of what I believe the principles mean in practice.

It is my privilege to be the representative of a constituency in this national capital region and a Member of Parliament for thousands of public servants both French and English-speaking. I happen to know in an intensely personal way how important it is to press ahead humanely and steadily, yet flexibly, toward the goal of making the public service of Canada an institution in which Canadians can work easily in the official language of their choice and through which citizens can deal with their government in either French or English.

I do not for a moment underestimate the human difficulties that will be encountered in trying to make this policy work, but the government is determined to make the policy work. We are also determined to make it fair. It has to be done in a way that takes into account the careers of men and women who work for the people of Canada in the public service. It must be done because the stakes for the future of this country are so high. I have little patience with those who insist they are in favour of bilingualism in principle, but then proceed to engage in destructive criticism of almost anything beyond token efforts to put this into practice. I think Members of Parliament should welcome the opportunity to engage in debate and to examine the policy in principle and practice on the floor of this House of Commons. Members of this House should welcome the opportunity to affirm the policies which the government has developed. I think hon. members should use such an opportunity to reaffirm their commitment, one expressed in the last parliament, to the Official Languages Act, to its principles and its provisions.

I think such a reaffirmation in this House, and particularly in this House, would go far toward reassuring both those who fear that bilingualism in the public service of Canada is going ahead too fast and those who are concerned that it is not going ahead fast enough. No one has ever claimed that bilingualism would be easy. No one has ever claimed that it would not arouse apprehension or would not add to the cost of government, but Canadians calculate such difficulties small beside the goal of national unity. For me, I believe it is a very small price for being and remaining a Canadian. I think Canadians want to do more than pay lip service to such an ideal. I believe they will approve the effort of the public service, above all places, to show that the ideal in Canada can become a proud reality, increasing the richness of being a Canadian and the dimensions of their mutual understanding.

Having said that, I want to deal with some of the issues in the country which received the proper attention of this House early in its reassembly and this morning in particular. I look at some of the musketeers on the other side. I want to start by saying that in the budget of last May, which the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) referred to in such generous terms, I placed before the House on behalf of the government a number of major proposals for strengthening the economic and social fabric of the country. In terms of the social fabric, there was some immediate relief for those on fixed incomes caught in the escalating cost of living. In terms of the industrial front, those measures were medium and long term and structural in their effect in order to make the Canadian economy more competitive on a medium and long-term basis with our competitors both abroad and within our own market. The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings knows this well enough. He knows that the prime industrial thrust of that budget was structural and not meant in terms of immediate stimulus. Foremost among my concerns at that time, and those of the government then and now, was and is, to bring about a rapid increase in the number of available jobs so as to substantially reduce the number of Canadians out of work. Unemployment is a serious economic problem. It is too serious to play politics with, I want to suggest to some hon. members. However, it is much more than an economic problem. It is a deeply and gravely serious social problem and a gravely serious human problem, a problem, as I suggested this morning, which cannot be solved merely by theoretical abstraction or by statistics.

I say it is a deeply social problem because for those who really want and need work, and their families, unemployment can be a bitter and deeply frustrating experience which warps and wastes lives perhaps forever. An essential prerequisite for the maintenance of a strong and healthy economy—an economy strong enough to give us rapid growth in job opportunities and thereby reducing unemployment—is the maintenance of reasonable price stability in Canada. It is essential to contain the forces of inflation and protect the competitive position of Canadian producers both in our own domestic markets and in markets abroad. Here my friend from Prince Edward-Hastings and I are at one. But the containing of inflation is also important in reducing the squeeze on the rising prices of family budgets, particularly family budgets of those on fixed incomes, and in preventing the erosion of the hard earned savings of Canadians. That again is a human problem which is affecting every Canadian, particularly on shopping days.

Over the past few years Canada's competitive price position generally has improved in respect of other industrial competitive structures. I submit that is true. Even during the period from November 1971 when the United States adopted the second phase of its price and income control program until mid-1972, the end of the second quarter of this year, the rate of increase in Canadian consumer prices was the same as that of the United States and considerably lower than that of any other industrial country. During the summer months, however, there was a substantial increase in Canadian consumer prices, primarily due, if hon. members will carefully and thoroughly look at the statistics, to the sharp rise in food costs. As members are aware and as Canadians are only too painfully aware, sharply rising food prices have become a world-wide phenomenon, a problem for which no country has found a quick and easy answer. The countries which now apply price and wage controls, Britain and the United States in particular, have had to make exceptions for food products. In any event, the experience of other nations today and the experience of Canada have indicated that price and income restrictions offer no ready-made solutions since this is an area which is perhaps least amenable to controls, particularly in the absence of some form of rationing.

While we in the government have been giving, and will continue to give, intensive consideration to the whole question, I very much hope that the House will approve of the resolution to establish the joint Senate-House of Commons inquiry proposed in the throne speech. I hope that the inquiry will be able to shed some new light and provide useful additional education both for the producers and consumers concerning the nature of the problem and recommend means to resolve it. Also, I hope that parliament will pronounce itself upon that in a fair, equitable and effective way.

Mr. Speaker, the budget I brought down in the House last May had two basic objectives and also, to a great extent, was meant to spur the economy in order to stimulate a strong and continuous upsurge in production and employment.

It aimed at bringing about greater social justice by alleviating the immediate financial burden of pensioners, of the blind and the disabled, of students, and of all those who are faced with heavy medical expenses. It contributed to the strengthening of our economic structure at medium and long term, improving the competitive position at home and abroad in our highly important manufacturing and processing field in order to supply our rapidly expanding labour force with an increasing number of productive jobs directly, or indirectly in service firms.

The last parliament approved the proposals embodied in the budget in view of increasing the guaranteed income supplement of pensioners and allowing for subsequent increases of this supplement and of benefits under the old-age security and veterans allowances plans in order to fully compensate for increases in the cost of living since the beginning of 1972.

As of January last, the total amount for old age security pension and maximum income supplement went from $135 to $150 a month for single people, and $255 to $285 for married couples. As a result of the cost of living adjustment provided for by the act, the old age security pension will go up to $86.61 from $82.88 in coming April. Together, the old age security income pension and maximum guaranteed income supplement will go up from $150 to $156.75 a month for single people and $285 to $297.82 for a couple.

It is imperative that the House approve as soon as possible the financial measures contained in last May's budget so that the taxpayers can know where they stand.

[English]

As I indicated at that time, the corporate measures included in the budget represent a first major step in the development of a coherent set of new industrial policies for Canada—and there are other steps contained in the throne speech which will be expanded upon before this House by my colleague the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie)—to strengthen the foundations of our economy and its job-creating capacity. While the pace of employment growth in Canada for several years has far exceeded that of any other industrial nation in the world, it is clear that we must create new job opportunities at a still faster rate to deal with the problem of unemployment. To contribute further to the strength of our economy, the Speech from the Throne outlines a number of other measures that are planned by the government to bring about basic structural changes that are required to increase the efficiency and competitiveness of Canadian industry. Hon. members will recall that in the budget speech last May, I expressed my belief that the economy would continue to grow strongly during 1972 under the stimulus of expansionary fiscal and monetary policies at home and of accelerating economic growth abroad. This was my forecast then; this was a forecast shared by the Institute of Quantitative Analysis at the University of Toronto and shared by virtually every forecaster in the country from labour, management and the universities.

During the first half of 1972, the economy grew very strongly indeed. Real national input increased at an annual rate of 6.1 per cent, and in the second quarter alone it rose at an annual rate of 8.3 per cent. Employment expanded sharply during the first six months and unemployment was on a downward trend. As I indicated previously, Canada's price performance matched that of the United States and was better than that of any other major industrial country.

It is now evident, based on data which came to hand well after the events, that the economy suffered a setback during the third quarter. What was the nature of that setback? In my judgment, and this seems to be confirmed by nearly everybody, the cause was temporary and the result of a series of unforeseeable and uncontrollable developments at home and abroad, unforeseeable even by forecasters.

An outburst of strikes both at home and abroad crippled production in a number of important Canadian industries and hampered exports of many commodities. During the five month period from April to August, the number of man days lost as a result of domestic industrial disputes came to more than 5,750,000. This was more than twice the total amount of time lost through strikes in the whole of the previous year and, in fact, was also greater than the total for all but two of the 11 years before that. Frost and heavy rain in different parts of the country drastically reduced the production of a number of crops, which in turn had an adverse impact on employment in agriculture and in the food processing industries.

Mr. Stanfield: Too much "snow" in the election campaign.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): In August, for example, agricultural employment was down 54,000 from the level of a year ago. If agricultural employment had been maintained at the same level as in 1971, actual unemployment in August would have been 10 per cent less and the rate of unemployment would have fallen to 4.9 per cent from 5.4 per cent. In addition to the adverse impact on production and employment, the poor weather also seriously aggravated the price problem already confronting us as a result of the worldwide upsurge in food costs and a shortage in a number of food supplies. Primarily as a result of these factors, the growth of employment in the third quarter was seriously retarded, unemployment climbed sharply upwards, our trade balance deteriorated, and there was a levelling off in real national output from the high level reached in the previous quarter.

The setback suffered by the economy during the summer months had serious consequences in terms of rising unemployment and prices. As I said before, however, all the evidence indicates that the slowdown was the result of special and temporary factors rather than of any underlying weakness in the economy. But it has forced the government to readjust its fiscal stance. That is reflected in the additional winter employment measures that were announced during the course of the fall. It is also reflected in the urgent tone of the throne speech, and it will be reflected also in the budget which I hope to introduce at an early opportunity.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): But the land was strong at that time.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I want to acknowledge very frankly to the House—I always try to lay my cards on the table in their place—

Mr. Stanfield: Face down.

An hon. Member: A marked deck.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): —that I am disturbed and disappointed that the figures published today by Statistics Canada show that the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate rose moderately in December after declining during the two previous months. Certainly, this development underlines again the difficult problem we face in this country because of the rapid growth of our labour force.

In actual fact, Mr. Speaker, there were 250,000 new jobs created in Canada during 1972, which is more than the number in any previous year since 1966. In December alone, employment in seasonally adjusted terms rose by nearly 60,000 which was the second highest increase in any month during 1972. Over the year, however, the labour force rose by 260,000 and in December alone it increased by 77,000, which was the largest increase in any month last year.

For reasons that are not readily apparent, the problem in December centred mainly in British Columbia where the labour force increased substantially on a seasonally adjusted basis and employment declined moderately. In every other region in Canada there was an increase in employment during December.

To return to the review of more recent economic developments, let me point out that the sharp upward climb in food prices experienced between July and September came to a halt in the following two months,—although the threat of continuing upward pressure on consumer prices generally still remains a matter for concern. After levelling out during the summer, industrial production rebounded sharply in September and October, rising at an annual rate of more than 20 per cent. Labour income has continued to grow strongly and in October was up 11 per cent over the level a year ago.

Consumer spending has also continued to provide a major impetus to economic growth. Total retail sales in October were 11.8 per cent over the same month a year before and total sales during the first ten months of 1972 were also up by more than 11 per cent over the same period in 1971.

The fall months also brought a dramatic improvement in the trade picture. Merchandise exports in October were up 27 per cent over the level a year ago and in November they were up 24 per cent.

Mr. Peters: You told us that during the election campaign but the electorate did not buy it.

[Translation]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Our economy has really picked up in the last few months but there is no denying that the recession felt last summer has left problems in its wake. Of these, the most acute is unemployment which is higher than it would have been otherwise, bearing in mind the basic strength of our economic progress.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the minister but the time allotted to him has expired. Is there a disposition in the House to let the minister continue his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I want to thank hon. members for their courtesy, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: Why don't you speak about the present and the future instead of the past?

[Translation]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Therefore, the government came to the conclusion that more incentives were needed quickly to take up the economic slack and to combat unemployment which reaches its highest level in our country during the winter months.

In early fall, the government announced its intention to invest $125 million to renew the Local Initiatives and Training on the Job programs to relieve once again this winter seasonal unemployment. However, when the full impact of the events that occurred during the summer months was felt this fall on the performance of the economy, the government decided to strengthen already existing programs by setting up a new $500 million program to create jobs this winter, which will help reduce unemployment, not only this year, but also during the next two.

The new program, as well as those announced earlier, will increase federal expenditures for new job creating activities to about $325 million this winter and will supply jobs for almost 140,000 people. To those expenditures should be added $50 million carried forward from last year and covering expenditures for the related loan program which brings the total expenditures for job creating activities this winter to about $375 million. Comparatively, actual expenditures last year were about $300 million.

The basic item in the new program is the establishment of a winter capital projects fund totalling $350 million and intended to make loans and grants available to other government levels for the financing of job creating projects this winter and over the next two years.

A new major incentive has been provided and is intended not only to encourage the provinces and municipalities to undertake job intensive new projects but also to have them carried out during the winter months. Half the total labour costs incurred at work sites, before the end of the program, will be deducted or not subject to reimbursement. But, in fact, the federal government will pay all the labour costs incurred on sites from December 1 to May 31.

We have been criticized for not launching sooner this new extended program. Had we been able to forecast the events which occurred during the third quarter we would certainly have implemented sooner the additional program. It is very easy to criticize economic policies when all the facts are known. However, those responsible for establishing policies must bear in mind indicators of economic performance which lag far behind the facts.

[English]

As I have said, I think anyone who has had even a glimpse or made a professional study of economics would realize that one of the problems in achieving stabilization today is estimating the time lag for fiscal and economic policies to take effect.

Mr. Lawrence: The premiers told you in August what would happen.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am confident that the new plan can be very effectively utilized to create jobs this winter. The Local Initiatives and Training on the Job programs are already in operation and can quickly be expanded to absorb more of the many applications already on hand. The $60 million put into additional job creating activities by federal departments will all be directed to types of activity that can be launched with little or no delay.

As I have stressed on many occasions since becoming Minister of Finance nearly a year ago, my first and most urgent priority is jobs, and the economic thrust of the government has to be in that direction. The goal of the government is to bring about the creation of a sufficient number of jobs to provide productive employment for every Canadian who wants to work, who is able to work, and who is prepared to make a reasonable effort to find work.

No one should be under any illusion that this goal will be easily or quickly reached. We in this country face unique and extraordinary problems in achieving this objective because of the fact that our labour force is growing much more rapidly than that of any other industrialized country in the world, because of the chronic disparities of economic opportunity that have confronted a number of regions across Canada, because of unusually large cut backs in production and employment during the rigorous winter months, and because of our exceptional vulnerability to developments abroad. The substantial job creating programs that I outlined earlier will play an important part in helping to alleviate the problem of seasonal unemployment this winter and during the next two years.

The Speech from the Throne outlined a number of new proposals designed to reinforce the structure of our economy. Because of my particular responsibilities in this portfolio, I am very much interested in those measures that are aimed at strengthening the position of small business in this country. One of the prime aspects of the economic thrust of the throne speech is the health of small business in Canada. The government intends to aid independent entrepreneurs by strengthening and coordinating its management and consulting services across the country, and by improving access for the small businessman to financing facilities. This will involve, among other things, a fundamental review of the role of the Industrial Development Bank.

I have been concerned ever since I took on this portfolio, and have said so often, and not by way of plagiaristic exercise, about new policies and new programs to strengthen small and medium sized business in this country. It seemed to me then, and it seems to me now that much of our industrial dialogue is among big business, big labour and big government. It is all too easy to overlook the vital role played by the thousands and thousands of small businesses in Canada.

An indication of the importance of that role is provided by the fact that an estimated 30 per cent of all Canadians are employed in businesses with 100 workers or less. But small business is more than just a significant source of employment in Canada. It is also a major and dynamic creative element in the economy, playing a large part in generating new inventions, new technologies, new products and new marketing methods. For all these reasons I am determined, as Minister of Finance, that not only should the vital role being played by small business in Canada not be overlooked, but that we in the federal government should do everything that is reasonably possible and practical to reinforce it. My colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie), will elaborate on that.

Maintenance of the strong and balanced growth of our economy, that is a fundamental prerequisite for the achievement of so many of our other objectives, depends to a considerable extent on the proper exercise of monetary and fiscal policies. Both of these policies have been highly expansionary over a period of many months, and have played a major role in stimulating strong economic growth.

Sir, I believe that there is widespread confidence in Canada that production, employment and real incomes will continue to grow strongly during 1973. In its recently published Economic Outlook for December, the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development forecast that real economic growth in Canada in 1973 would again exceed that of every other major industrial nation except Japan. A few months ago the Institute for Quantitative Analysis at the University of Toronto, one of the foremost independent short-term forecasting groups in this country, projected that the economy would grow by nearly 7½ per cent in 1973, following an increase of around 6½ per cent last year.

I do not want to indulge in any forecasting of my own at the present time. Economic forecasting is not an exact science, and it has never been my policy to get into the forecasting game. But, as the throne speech said, and as I have already told the House, it is my intention to bring down a budget at the earliest opportunity, to report to the House fully on the state of our economy and of government finances. I can assure hon. members that this budget will put forward major new fiscal and other measures to deal responsibly and effectively with our most pressing economic and social problem, our most pressing human problem, the problem of jobs, and ensure that strong and balanced economic growth, accompanied by reasonable price stability, is achieved in Canada during the year ahead. Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank hon. members for their courtesy.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I would like to say it is somewhat of an honour to follow the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). Since coming here in 1970, I have watched his career with some interest. Today it seems that basically what he has done has been to throw a smokescreen of figures over the whole unemployment situation in Canada. Those people who are unemployed must realize that a smokescreen of figures is very unpalatable. To coin an old phrase, it is still the same old gang sitting across from us. They have not changed very much.

It is indeed a pleasure for me to take my seat in this House once again as the Member of Parliament for Lisgar. I would like to devote a portion of my speech this afternoon to what I believe are the major agricultural concerns that face the country at the present time. Agriculture is the principal interest of many people in my constituency, just as it is of people in may other parts of Canada. It is my principal interest here in the House of Commons. While it is heartening to see that agriculture is once again in a relatively buoyant condition, the agricultural community must guard against a false sense of security. A slight fluctuation in world markets could result in a return to over supply in basic commodities, a situation which the agricultural community must always guard against.

I am sorry that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) left the chamber part way through the speech by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Stanfield: You can't blame him for that.

Mr. Murta: No, you can't blame him for that, but I had hoped he would be in the chamber to take note of what we in this party will be saying about agriculture. However, I wish him good luck in his new portfolio because I am sure he will need all the luck he can muster during the next few weeks. I believe that in the Conservative party at the present time we have the best collection of people from all across Canada to represent agriculture and devise an agricultural policy that will more fully benefit all areas and segments of Canada. I do not believe this was the situation in the last parliament from 1968 onwards, and I think that resulted, during the last election, in the defeat of the former minister of agriculture. I believe he is now a Liberal organizer in that province and his job is almost as large as the job he had in 1968.

• (1610)

The buoyancy that our grain sales are experiencing at the present time comes from the misfortune of other countries and not necessarily from aggressive marketing approaches instituted by the present Liberal government. While the situation in agriculture is relatively buoyant, we must not overlook the fact that realized net income of farmers across Canada is decreasing at the present time. Costs have been rising at a very fast rate. All agricultural inputs such as land, buildings, machinery, fertilizer and chemical controls, have been increasing in price and the cost-price squeeze that has affected farmers over the past few years has not lessened to any great extent.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the government is faced with some very serious questions and problems in the agriculture industry. With the great process of review and re-examination which the government has been forced to undertake following the election, I hope that it will be asking some very serious questions about agriculture and the people who will be involved in agriculture, over the next few weeks.

Above all, I believe that the government must question its use of what I would like to call band-aid and patch-work solutions, with their constant emphasis on the short-term view of things that affect agriculture. I believe that the agricultural community must opt for the longer view of things; they must plan for more than the immediate future and those plans must be concrete. Programs such as Lift are a good example of the short-term thinking I am talking about. The Lower Inventory for Tomorrow program has come back in the last few months to haunt the government. The main purpose of that program was to relieve the government of the political embarrassment of a huge wheat surplus which they had failed to move. If they had not been so short-sighted in their point of view and had the interest of the farmers at heart they would not have introduced the program called Operation Lift. Because of that program, Canada does not now have the inventories necessary to take advantage of record prices in international grain markets, so millions of dollars have been lost to the western economy.

Mr. Speaker, the government must examine its attitude toward grain storage. It has to ask itself whether the present system is adequate and if it is providing for the farmers' needs? Should additional grain storage be built, not only in Canada but in countries with which we trade? Should Canada help finance the construction of that grain storage to provide a necessary source of inventory for a very valuable commodity?

We also have to look very closely at the feed grains aspect of our policy in Canada. I believe we must have an equitable feed grains pricing system for supplies to all parts of Canada, and not only to certain areas.

Mr. Speaker, it is also my belief that the government must take a long, hard look at the dairy industry in Canada. I believe that in consultation with people at all levels of the dairy industry some very basic questions must be asked. I refer to such questions as: what kind of an industry do we really need in Canada and, is the dairy industry more efficient now than in 1965 prior to the creation of the Canadian Dairy Commission? One very basic question is whether supply-management will work, and another is whether limiting production and entry into an industry really helps it in the long run. It is my belief that the Canadian Dairy Commission has set national policy without stating, in specific operational terms, where the industry will be in two, three or five years.

Like many other people, Mr. Speaker, I believe that planning has its limitations but plans arrived at by people whose future economic welfare is at stake are far more relevant than ad hoc programs developed and administered by non-elected bureaucrats. I think it is clearly the role of the politician to provide leadership, but it is the responsibility and the right of the people in industry to provide the ideas and the spark needed. The present legislative framework does not provide the dairy industry with the adequate long range approach which I believe it needs so desperately.

In another area, with regard to pricing in the grain industry, I believe that the government must again ask itself if what it has done in the past is good enough for the future. Here I come back to the two-price system for wheat which was introduced some time ago and it is my contention that it has not been working satisfactorily. Some economists who have looked into the matter have stated that most of the money is not getting to the farmers. It is evident that the system is unfair because non-wheat producers receive benefit from it in the same way as wheat producers. It is plain that by making the payments only to wheat farmers, the government would be encouraging more farmers to go into wheat production. I believe the government must challenge this assumption. The two-price system is a two-price system of payments to all western farmers. Western agriculture would be better served, I believe, by a more realistic pricing mechanism. The two-price system was basically brought in as a political gimmick or a sham, to try to entice western Canada's support for the Liberal government. Of course, it failed.

This brings me to another suggestion, Mr. Speaker. If the government truly desires a stable economy in western agriculture, I believe they should consider a system of floor prices for grain. Such a system would ensure that the price for a particular grain would never fall below a minimum established by consultation with the agriculture department, producers organizations and grain interests—the grain industry itself. Farmers would be guaranteed a certain amount for their products and if the world demand was such that their products could be sold at a higher price, then they could profit. If prices fell below this level, the government could ensure that the farmer still received a fair return for his production. I am thinking in this instance of our so-called Wheat Board grains. I believe that such a concept would ensure more rational planning in our economy. A floor price for grains would do more for farmers than any of the short-term, hastily conceived plans put forward by this government and, in the long run, ensure more valuable results.

It is apparent that a crisis is facing the farming community which will deepen if more young farmers are not attracted to the industry. To this end, I suggest that more and easier credit be made available to young people wishing to enter farming. I believe that emphasis must be placed on people entering agriculture rather than on speeding up their exit from agriculture. At the same time, several departments of government must concern themselves with improving the quality of life in rural areas. The departments that would be concerned, I suggest, are those involved in transport, agriculture, fisheries, regional development, health and welfare, urban affairs and housing. These departments ought to establish a decentralized authority for the various regions of Canada and they should be responsible for ensuring the continued maintenance of services as well as the high quality of life in rural areas. There are many people in urban areas of Canada who are becoming increasingly interested in such advantages of rural life as clean air and water and an abundance of recreational space, to say nothing of plain room for moving around. I think we must make sure that there is adequate planning to support these objectives.

Where possible new industries should be set up in a rural area. Such development should capitalize on the advantages of that area. The best opportunity for this type of development is in the field of food processing. When these products are processed near their source they take on an added value, hence returning more money to the grain farmer and livestock feeder. There is an added benefit, that of starting an important and natural secondary industry in our rural areas, namely, processing. I think that this is within our grasp.

It would also be wise at this time to examine the government's policy respecting the Canadian Wheat Board. The Board has tended to be under the thumb or jurisdiction of the federal government, which has not made it as responsive as it ought to be to the needs of those people it was designed to serve, our agricultural producers. The government should act in a way which would increase the involvement of the producer in those decisions which affect them. I am talking of decisions the Wheat Board might make. And government should consider not only the Wheat Board; it should re-examine its basic philosophy regarding supply management.

It is my understanding, Mr. Speaker, that the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is a strong advocate of marketing boards. I believe most members in this House would agree that marketing boards are fine if used exclusively for the promotion and sale of our agricultural products. I do not know of any product that could not benefit from a more aggressive marketing approach. Yet all too often these boards fall into traps created by inward-looking, protectionist politicians and bureaucrats, and become burdened under quotas and controls. From the minister's past history, it is clear that he could easily fall into this trap. Only time and legislation will tell, assuming that the members of the NDP, my hon. friends to my left, allow him enough time to remain as Minister of Agriculture to enable him to consider some of the questions I have asked today.

One of the most important areas that the Canadian agricultural industry must consider today is the area involving the selling or exporting of its products in world markets. I said earlier that our present sales are buoyant because we are benefiting from someone else's misfortunes. At the same time remember that the people in the United States are talking about increasing their total exports of agricultural produce this coming year by 28 per cent. Great Britain has entered the Common Market, so we shall lose some of our preferential status. If we look at Pacific rim countries to which we sell oil seeds, rapeseed, grain and other products, we can see that the continued prosperity of our agricultural industry rests on very, very aggressive selling approaches in those countries. You can be sure, Mr. Speaker, that if we do not pursue markets aggressively, our good friends to the south, the Americans, will. They have demonstrated over and over again that they will do so.

At the same time, we must display a good deal of caution when we talk about marketing and the marketing board approach for agriculture. The basic philosophy behind all agricultural legislation must be that the agricultural producer shall be able to function with the greatest freedom possible in the market place. The government's main obligation ought to be creating a climate in which all segments of the agricultural industry can work together, and in which government and the industry can complement each other.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, it is my hope that in the weeks ahead, however short or long that time may be, my colleagues and I will be able to outline more fully our advice to the government on its agricultural policies, and advise this House of the clear alternatives which we will offer in this field in the months to come.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to preface my remarks by congratulating you on your election and by observing that because of the seating arrangement I find myself so far from Mr. Speaker that at one point I wondered whether I should send him a copy of my speech by telegram. I have reconsidered and, although I am last, so to speak, as a result of the seating arrangement, I take great solace in being a member of a generous party which has given me the honour of being the second member of our caucus to speak on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. It is with great pride that I stand before you as the first New Democratic Member of Parliament for the riding of Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario. I consider it a great honour to be the first socialist ever elected to the House of Commons by the citizens of this great riding.

It is traditional, Mr. Speaker, that many members, in their maiden speech, devote most of their time praising their constituency and discussing parochial matters. I intend to depart somewhat from this tradition in my speech. I shall naturally make reference to my constituency, but I also want to discuss two issues which I consider vital to the nation as a whole, namely, the state of the economy, with particular reference to economic independence and national unity in the context of French-English relations. Unfortunately, the time-limit prevents me from discussing the social legislation proposed in the Speech from the Throne. I am sure my colleagues will give it its due attention in subsequent speeches.

Sault Ste. Marie, whose history may be traced back to the seventeenth century and the days of the early French explorers, lies at the juncture of three Great Lakes, Superior, Michigan and Huron. Geographically, it is a part of what the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) referred to the other day as "glorious northern Ontario". Visitors from the earliest times have remarked on the scenic beauty of the area and the hospitality of its citizens.

Yet I would be remiss in my duty if I did not temper my laudatory comments for the area I love with an analysis of the special problems and needs of my constituency and its environs. "Glorious" northern Ontario is also neglected northern Ontario. This neglect has been manifest time and time again in the policies and attitudes of Liberal and Conservative governments. Northern Ontario is coveted for its abundance of natural resources, so much so that our economy is resource oriented, with the consequence that we have become reduced to hewers of wood, and drawers of water. Where is the manufacturing? Where is the secondary industry? Where are the jobs? The people of northern Ontario have the choice of digging up the minerals or cutting down the forests, but little else. In the case of my constituency, workers are dependent on one large industry, namely the Algoma Steel Corporation. Let there be a slump in the nickel, gold, uranium, pulp and paper or steel markets, and disaster strikes such a one industry town. Indeed, it would appear that certain members of the Liberal front bench would prefer to keep things this way so that when an election is called they can threaten the inhabitants of northern Ontario with the spectre of ghost towns if they dare to challenge government tax policy.

The Speech from the Throne mentions the government's intention to decentralize the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to better identify opportunities for economic development. I want to see the department pay particular attention to promoting secondary industry in Sault Ste. Marie and northern Ontario, and with more good sense in its decision making than was evidenced by the Michelin Tire Company fiasco in Nova Scotia. The neglect of the north is evident in the lack of an over-all economic policy for this area of Canada which is so rich in resources. But this neglect is also apparent in the attitude of the government toward the citizens of this area. Because the population of northern Ontario is relatively small and scattered, northerners all too often fail to get the ear of government. It is essential that they, who have so much in common, have strong representation in Ottawa.

Yet what has just recently been proposed? Through re-distribution, northern Ontario will lose two seats in this House. I cannot think of a more retrograde step than this denial of the right of the citizens of this region to have an effective voice in Ottawa. Further, I deplore the attitude of the hon. member for Port Arthur and Minister of the Crown (Mr. Andras) when he stated recently that to protest would do no good, that the decision on redistribution had been made. That kind of attitude, that indifference, we can do without. Northern Ontario in general, and Sault Ste. Marie in particular, deserve a better deal. The area is rich—rich in resources, rich in potential. Here we find an energetic, talented and generous people, a people who given the proper leadership and, above all, the opportunity can and will do great things for their country. I call upon the government, through sound economic planning, to give them this opportunity.

Mr. Speaker, I should like now to turn my attention to a matter which concerns all Canadians, namely, the state of the country's economy. It is most encouraging to hear in the throne speech that the government intends to reduce unemployment and contain inflation. What an about-face from the position taken by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in 1969 when he stated:

> "I'm afraid there are a lot of people in this country who are bargaining . . . this country can't hang tough (on inflation) too long because it will be frightened when it sees unemployment go up to 6 per cent . . . . But if the people think we are going to lose our nerve because of that, they should think again; we're not".

Well, Mr. Speaker, unemployment surpassed 6 per cent, prices skyrocketed, the Liberals kept their nerve and lost their majority. The people of Canada have spoken. A truly just society means that people have the right to live with dignity, self-esteem and in reasonable comfort. To deny them this by denying them jobs in order to combat inflation is heartless, cruel, outdated and unnecessary.

Inflation can be controlled not by creating unemployment but by controlling price increases. I welcome the government's intention to set up a joint committee to make a special study of rising food prices. But let this committee not merely investigate the problem; give it the power to take action, because action is needed now.

Action is also needed in the area of corporate tax reform. However, the Speech from the Throne indicates that the government will pursue its earlier policy of more tax concessions and write-offs to large corporations, mostly foreign-owned. How in the name of social justice can this government rationalize examples such as International Nickel which, despite a clear profit of $94,200,000 in 1971, paid not one cent of federal income tax and laid off 2,000 workers? When INCO, in the period 1966-1971 did pay income tax, it did so at a rate of 17.2 per cent while the average citizen of Sudbury was paying at a rate of 25 per cent. Such inequities cannot be rationalized on economic grounds but only on the basis of political expediency, for in the words of a Liberal fund raiser the Liberal party for many years has depended upon Canada's 95 largest corporations for meeting its election expenses. It would seem that if there is one lesson the Liberals have yet to learn it is that the Canadian electorate wants, and deserves, a fair tax system.

The throne speech indicates that the government intends to give aid to small businesses. This is needed and timely legislation, especially with the current trend toward monopolistic and unfair competition practices by big business. On the other hand, I search in vain for any indication of the government's intention to institute a comprehensive labour policy to cope with future problems of technological change and automation. It is bad enough that Canadians cannot find jobs, but what future does the working man have when technological change replaces him by a machine? Long range study and planning among government, business and labour is required if our economy is to have a healthy future.

It is to the future of the economy and Canada that I now wish to turn. I would caution this House that we do not become so engrossed with contemporary problems that we ignore the two-fold crisis that is descending upon us as a nation. Canada is faced with the threat of external control and internal break-up. We lament Canada's perennial problem of unemployment, and governments take short-term measures to try and reduce it. Yet I submit, Mr. Speaker, that we shall never rid this country of high unemployment until we retain control of our national economy.

I need not detail the degree of foreign domination of our economy, as I am sure the members of this House are familiar with the statistics on foreign ownership, which vary anywhere from 50 per cent to 99 per cent, as in the case of the petroleum industry. Earlier, Mr. Speaker, you heard me declare that northern Ontario has a "hewer of wood and drawer of water" economy. Much of Canada's economy can be described in such a manner. Foreign controlled companies have perpetuated the resource-based nature of our economy. Our resources—oil, gas, minerals, forest and water—are exploited, in the process of creating jobs. But the greatest number of jobs are found where the raw materials are processed and manufactured, and that is now outside the country. To make jobs in Canada the processing must be done in Canada.

[Mr. Symes.]

As long as foreign interests make the decisions we will never get these jobs.

Royal commissions have recognized this. Government reports have recognized this. Indeed, even the Prime Minister has recognized this. If only he would practice what he has preached. I quote from the May 1958 edition of Cité Libre, wherein the Prime Minister stated:

> Even if this government—

That is the United States government.

> —had been well disposed towards our industries, that would change nothing in the decisions taken abroad by mother-companies, in accordance with their own profits and not with the welfare of the Canadian worker ... in the key sectors of the Canadian economy, non-residents are in a position to take decisions contrary to the well-being of Canadians.
> Foreigners will decide if our oil wells are to be worked or closed, if our ore is to be transformed here or elsewhere, if our factories are to be automated or not, if our products are to be put on the world market or not, or if our workers are to be free to exercise their right of association or not. Foreigners will decide ... and will collect the profits.

• (1640)

Yet to this day foreigners are still making the decisions and collecting the profits. Time after time the government has examined the problem but failed to act in a significant manner—witness the fate of the Watkins and Gray reports. The legislation referred to in the Speech from the Throne is only a token gesture which will do little to bring Canada's economy back to Canadians.

The time has come, on this issue, not for political expediency, but for political courage. What is at stake is the very future of Canada, her survival as a sovereign nation. In the words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) himself, "political domination and economic domination are inextricably tied together".

The future of Canada is also threatened by internal pressures. French and English speaking Canadians seem to be drifting farther apart. The English-speaking majority grow resentful at Quebec asserting her rights, and the French-speaking segment of the population grows increasingly sceptical that English Canadians are serious about supporting bilingualism and biculturalism.

The roots of our misunderstanding lie in our past. The fall of Quebec in 1760 is referred to by English Canadians as the conquest, but this term is a misnomer. The French may have been defeated, but they were never conquered. The British, after their attempts to assimilate the French in 1763 and 1840, finally learned this. It would seem that many English-speaking Canadians, with their majority versus minority syndrome, have yet to learn this lesson.

When we strive to analyze the origins of our confederation we find that it was a reluctant union. This reluctance was based not only on linguistic and cultural differences, but regional ones as well—as witnessed by Prince Edward Island celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of its entry into confederation this year and not in 1967.

Professor J. C. Bonenfant has observed the following:

> The great majority of nations have been formed not by people who desired intensely to live together, but rather by people who could not live separately.

This observation fits our confederation, and it fits Canada today. If Quebec were to separate, she would be doomed to become a cultural and economic ghetto; English Canada would be assimilated first culturally and then economically and politically by the United States.

Professor Jean Hamelin of Laval makes this penetrating comment on the events of 1867:

Confederation came as a challenge to Quebec, for the province would now have to co-operate in building a unified Canada as well as develop its own tradition. Moreover, the presence of Quebec was a challenge to the other provinces which now had to accept with all of its problems an alien community whose geographical extent would not be limited to Quebec. The general refusal to accept these responsibilities is at the root of the great political crises which have shaken the Dominion ever since.

Both French and English must accept these responsibilities if Canada is to survive. Both cultures must realize that they cannot survive separately. What does the government intend to do to promote this realization?

We read in the Speech from the Throne that the government is committed to the goal of national unity and to furthering the objectives of the Official Languages Act. Commendable objectives, but the crucial factor is the manner of their implementation. During the past four years we have witnessed the rise in popularity of the Parti Quebecois, the FLQ crisis and a backlash among English-speaking Canadians in the civil service—not an enviable record. The government must learn that the diplomatic approach in instituting bilingualism and biculturalism is the only approach likely to succeed. And I would think the performance of the Prime Minister yesterday—I have in mind the barbs he directed at certain unnamed members of the opposition—shows he should be the first to learn the necessity for this diplomatic approach.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Symes: I think we would all do well to heed the message of the late Governor General Georges P. Vanier. He said, in part, in his 1967 New Year message:

The measure of our unity has been the measure of our success in the past . . .

If we imagine that we can now go our separate ways within our country, if we think that selfish interests can now take precedence over the national good, if we exaggerate our differences or revel in contention, if we do any of these things, we will promote our own destruction.

Canada owed it to the world, he maintained, to remain united because——no lesson is more badly needed than the one our unity can supply, the lesson that diversity need not be the cause for conflict but, on the contrary, may lead to richer and nobler living.

Let us open the windows and the doors of the provinces. Let us look over the walls and see what is on the other side. Let us know one another and that will lead to understanding . . .

I pray God that we may all go forward hand in hand. We can't run the risk of this great country falling into pieces.

Mr. Speaker, Canada is faced with immediate social, economic and political problems. She is also faced with the question of national survival. This twenty-ninth parliament must face these issues squarely, with a sense of immediacy and in a spirit of co-operation. Only with such determination can we build the true north, strong and free.

• (1650)

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Verdun): Mr. Speaker, my first duty, a very pleasant one, is to congratulate the Speaker on his reappointment and the Deputy Speaker, on his appointment. They are both wonderful Members of Parliament and I suspect they will be badly needed in the weeks to come.

I congratulate also the mover and seconder of the address. I had the pleasure of meeting both members before their election, having worked in their particular ridings. I was very impressed by their degree of bilingualism.

I was also impressed by the remarks of the hon. gentleman who just sat down. I could not help but note when we voted earlier the number of new faces in the House which, I suspect, is close to 100. Noticeable among them are several ladies. I am sure they will make the House more pleasant, but I must confess that my favourite still remains the very young lady from British Columbia who has graced this House now for several sessions.

I should like as well to thank the people of Verdun who, for five consecutive elections over a period of 10 years, have seen fit to return me to office. Let me tell the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) that something went wrong with our machinery, since I lost my first poll in four elections, but I have not had time to do much about finding out just where we went wrong. For a while I had hopes that the hon. gentleman might have selected Verdun for his maiden attempt. I am sure this would have been quite a battle as I am afraid we would have had an awful time dividing up the same machinery. I welcome the hon. gentleman to the House as a personal friend. This is a friendship which goes back over many years. Having said that, he can rest assured that he will not necessarily be clear of any barbs I might throw in the future.

Mr. Wagner: Likewise.

Mr. Mackasey: However, he knows that my nature is such I will never resort to personalities.

When one is here for 10 years, he begins to realize that this represents a lengthy period in his life. Perhaps it is not as long as the time spent here by some hon. members, but it is longer than most. These have been 10 very eventful years. I began, naturally, as a backbencher and then became the leader of the national caucus, a parliamentary secretary, a minister without portfolio, the minister of labour and the minister of manpower. The significant thing about each one of these changes was that I moved each and every time from one seat to another. This is the closest I have been placed to the back door of the House of Commons. I almost think that someone has a Pavlovian wish or Freudian desire that my next move will be out the back door. When that happens I can assure you it will be of my own volition, and when I go I will take with me my sense of integrity intact as well as my own concern and feelings for the people of Verdun in particular, and for the people of Canada in general.

I do not intend to talk too long about the throne speech because I may unintentionally be familiar with some of the legislation contained in it. I should have liked to have seen the very persuasive Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), and I assure you he is a persuasive gentleman, include some reference to the daycare centres which are so badly needed in this country.

I am glad there are to be some changes in industrial relations that pertain to civil servants, because I think that some of the adverse reaction our party felt in this general area was due to the fact that we have not in the last few years been the best employers in Canada, as the government should be. I am hopeful that new legislation in that particular area will be more consistent with the type of legislation one sees in respect of private industry.

Let me say very briefly in passing that we should not react quite so readily to the reactionary forces in this country. It is interesting to note that we have cut back on immigration from about 260,000 people to less than 125,000 people in the last couple of years, in spite of the fact that we had a unique method of permitting visitors to become landed immigrants in this country under certain conditions. I made the decision to cut this particular feature, not because I was against that concept, but because I realized that the appeal system was being very badly abused and could not be rectified without a change in the Immigration Appeal Board legislation. I am pleased that the new minister, a very excellent man, has indicated in the throne speech that he will change this piece of legislation. I hope when he does so he will enlarge the overworked and underpaid board and thereby rectify these issues as well.

I was hoping that the throne speech might finally give recognition to the moral obligation the House of Commons has to the retired pensioners of our major railways. It seems to me that both the CPR and the CNR could well afford to increase their pension plans to at least equal what any other decent employer in this country feels is adequate for those people who have given the better part of their lives to the service of their employers.

I was struck by the speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) today. It was a very good speech. I want to make it very clear that in no way can he be held responsible for the present level of unemployment. This is something he has inherited, but he has a responsibility to reduce it. I stand as guilty or as innocent as the rest of the Cabinet under the rules of Cabinet solidarity for the present level of unemployment. That minister spoke of the difficulty of forecasting. The only suggestion I can make is that there are some forecasters in his department he would be better off without. I can assure the hon. gentleman that if they had been in the Department of Labour they would have departed 15 minutes after I took over that department.

Back in 1970 when I was Minister of Labour I said the following, and I stand by it. This statement has a strange similarity to that of the Minister of Finance. Let me quote from page 1860 of the Commons Debates of December 8, 1970:

> I might sound rather like a heretic if I were to suggest that a country as rich as Canada should never again be faced with this degree of unemployment. People today are interested in the quality of life rather than quantity of life. A better educated work force and, paradoxically, a better educated non-working force will no longer tolerate the booms and busts of our economy. They have been synonymous with most of the economies of what is loosely known as the western world.

• (1700)

> The targets of this and all future governments should at all times be full employment. I think I am really echoing the sentiments of the cabinet in general, and certainly those of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in saying that, everything being equal, this government is dedicated to the concept of full employment.

An hon. Member: What happened?

Mr. Mackasey: Further, for the benefit of the gentleman who just shouted "what happened", I shall quote something I said in reference to the former leader of the socialist party:

> Big business does generate jobs and the opposition must realize that if we are to have the social policies this country needs, and if we are to create the jobs we need for perhaps the fastest growing force in the world, we will have to encourage Canadian investors, multinational and international corporations to invest in this country, preferably along guidelines that will protect the Canadian economy and prevent further erosion of Canadianism. Nevertheless, I think the suggestion of the hon. gentleman who leads the New Democratic Party that we should be prepared to introduce selective controls might very well be the answer to the next round of inflation. The point I am getting at is that this country can no longer afford the type of unemployment that faces us this winter.

I might suggest that I was talking about the winter of 1970.

An hon. Member: Things have not improved a bit.

Mr. Mackasey: I think things are worse now which is nothing to boast about. I will agree with you. Having suggested that perhaps some improvement is needed in the method of forecasting, I have taken the trouble to list some of the excuses that these Mandarins have been using in recent months to excuse their forecasting inability. The first was the greater number of women in the work force. I realize that this began in 1949. Then, they switched to the growth in the work force as pointed out by the Economic Council some years ago. Then they moved to what is called the participation rate. That lost favour when it became obvious that there could be an increase in the participation rate and a decrease in unemployment, if you look up the figures say of 1956. Then, they coined the phrase, "the welfare bums"—not corporate welfare bums, just people. Then, when that got tiresome they swung to, "work ethic". Now, the Mandarins in Ottawa have discovered a new word, "disincentive". The disincentive has to be the result of unemployment insurance, particularly the increased level of benefits.

As long as you can keep the problem of unemployment insurance, and the alleged abuse of unemployment insurance in the headlines of newspapers which all too frequently are happy to co-operate in this regard rather than perhaps answer the arguments of the New Democratic Party, then you take the spotlight off the unemployment figures of this particular country. We have heard a lot about abuses. In recent months we have heard a lot about unemployment insurance. I have waited a long time to speak on this subject. I will have another opportunity in a couple of weeks to speak about unemployment insurance when the amendments proposed in the throne speech come forward. I am not apologizing for the so-called generosity of a plan which pays $66 average to the workers of this country for a period of 16 or 17 weeks of the year as opposed to what they would have received three years ago, which was $35. I have looked up the results of polls, not only the Gallup poll but private polls which people were kind enough to place at my disposal after the election. I find that 51 per cent of the people who voted against the government voted because of unemployment, that 13 per cent voted because of inflation and 6 per cent because they thought old age pensions needed improvement.

The grouping together of welfare, baby bonus, need to help poor families, poor administration of the unemployment insurance fund and abuses of unemployment insurance made the sum total of 5 per cent. Only 5 per cent of the electors of this country voted against the government because we increased unemployment insurance. That did not prevent people jumping off the bandwagon or moving from the traditional humanitarian approach to one of extreme reactionaryism. The tragedy is not that it affected me. The tragedy is that we have temporarily placed a stigma on one of the most progressive pieces of legislation in any country in the western world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: I am not a graduate economist, but I remember when I took the subject getting "D's" instead of "A's". Someone asked me why I did not switch classes until I found a professor who agreed with me. This I did, and I received "A's" for the rest of the course. This is an old trick with which I suppose many hon. members are familiar. However, I see very little difference between distributing $2 billion through unemployment insurance payments, which leads to consumer spending in the regions where the unemployed live, and cutting personal income taxes which has been suggested by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and by other famed economists in the front row. I see very little difference between putting that $2 billion in the hands of unemployed people who have a propensity to spend the money in the region where they are unemployed and cutting personal income tax, thus putting that $2 billion in the hands of everybody, the rich and the poor. Under the latter method, those who are so poor they pay no income tax receive nothing. Those who work and receive it will place it in savings, and the rich perhaps will use it for a trip to Europe.

I wonder whether we quite appreciate the beneficial side of unemployment insurance as an economic instrument. I do not have the figures precisely to the end of December, but I do have them for the first six months of this year. I hate reading statistics because they bore people, but I think it is interesting to note that in Newfoundland—the members from that beautiful province will be interested in this—$42 million was distributed through unemployment insurance in the first six months of 1972 as opposed to $20 million in the previous year. In Prince Edward Island, the figure was $7½ million as opposed to $3.6 million in the previous year. I am using round figures. The poverty in Nova Scotia is certainly something about which the Leader of the Opposition should know. If one looks up the unemployment figures for the period when he was premier of that province, one finds they were shocking.

Those figures may not necessarily have been the hon. gentleman's fault. He enjoyed my use of the phrase "a drop in the bucket". I might remind him that the people of Nova Scotia are still waiting for the first opportunity to have a drop of heavy water in their bucket. It was $42 million in the first six months, for Nova Scotia, as opposed to $22 million the previous year. Even in wealthy Ontario it was $327 million, as opposed to $107 million; and in Alberta it was $61 million, as opposed to $30 million. I could go on and on.

I do not know what is wrong with the concept of providing sufficient income to the unemployed in this country, people who are unemployed through no fault of their own. What is wrong with providing them with sufficient money to at least live with dignity, and not in poverty, while they vainly seek for jobs that do not exist?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: Much has been made of the 75,000 jobs that are not filled. The following are the words, not of a politician but of Dr. Kliman of the economics department at McMaster—and we are all used to academics being quoted, as did the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) earlier, almost as if they were gospel:

> It has been shown before that the numbers of unemployed and the numbers of job vacancies have been misused in statements by the candidates. It suffices to say that it is just as unrealistic to talk of an economy with a zero job vacancy rate as it is to talk of one with a zero unemployment rate. The other side of the frictional unemployment coin is the existence of frictional job vacancies.
> The filling of a job takes time. No realistic employer can expect a worker to be standing by waiting to take up a job the moment it becomes available. The mere communication process regarding job opportunities is time consuming. This and other important "frictions" in labour markets mean there will exist at any time a pool of unfilled jobs, even in a period of high unemployment. Each day some are filled; each day new ones become available.
> More efficiency in the job search process and changes on the part of the unemployed as to what kind of work is acceptable could have an effect on the jobless total, but likely it would be a minor one.

This comes, not from a Liberal or a Tory apologist but from an academic who has approached this matter in a very clinical manner.

We have heard much said about abuses, and I can make a very good case of the fact that there are less abuses of the unemployment insurance fund now than there were a year ago, because a year ago I recall going to hospital from sheer exhaustion. At that time the problem was one of administration, of efficiency, of getting cheques out on time in spite of poor mail service and in spite of the breakdown of computers. I apologized for it every day. We do not have that problem any more.

An hon. Member: Yes, we do.

Mr. Mackasey: You will hear about the individual case, but you do not have the questions and the telephone calls that cannot be answered. You do not have the problems which existed in Toronto, because now we have placed in at least 144 Manpower offices a representative of the Unemployment Insurance Commission in order that people can be helped to fill out that all-important computer card which starts the process. It is a fact that we have set up permanent facilities in Newfoundland in order to help with the administration of cheques; the winter there made the system very vulnerable as their cheques came from as far away as Moncton.

The following are some of the abuses that were removed from the act: the seasonal benefits which, in the eyes of some people, were abused because, theoretically, anybody who gets something for nothing is abusing the fund. So seasonal benefits have been eliminated. Another concerns the rules for retired people, people over 65; the rules are much more restrictive than they were. Now these people cannot draw at the same time unemployment insurance and benefits under the Canada Pension Plan.

What seems to have escaped the notice of critics is the change in the basic entitlement. It used to be limited to 52 weeks and is now limited to 25 weeks. At the end of the twenty-fifth week the plight of the unemployed person is assessed and the period is extended depending on the rate of unemployment in the country generally and in whichever of the 16 regions he happens to lives. The 25 weeks can, theoretically, be extended to 51 in Newfoundland, but not in Alberta simply because we are now assessing the probability of a person finding work rather than rewarding him for his past labour attachment. So people should look at this problem in that light.

What about the high benefit level, about which there is much dissent? This question really concerns me. Ten years ago the Gill report recommended benefits of 60 per cent non-taxable. Today 66 2/3 per cent is taxable, consistent with the Carter report. In Holland it is 80 per cent. Of $100, the average that we are paying out is $66 to $67. Although these "bums," these people with maximum disincentive, these Canadians who do not want to work in jobs that do not exist, could theoretically stay unemployed for 51 weeks, the average time of unemployment allowed is only 17, a fact that has been consistently ignored by people who do not appreciate the moral obligation of the government to the unemployed of this country, and by members of the opposition who thought they could ride into power by being as reactionary as some of the newspaper headlines with which we had to put up last September or October.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: I am not saying that the plan is not being abused. There have been abuses of it for 30 years; the average rate is about 3 per cent. Two weeks ago I read an issue of the Globe and Mail which reported on a survey of the medical profession in Toronto, carried out by the doctors' own critic. It said that over 10 per cent of the doctors in Toronto abuse medicare. Their average income is $77,000. Yet when Canadians are broken down into classifications of who is most concerned about abuses of welfare measures, heading the list are professionals, including doctors.

Yesterday I read an article by James Gray, written in Alberta. What is everybody in Alberta so upset about? They have discovered that once women become pregnant they run out and get a job, work for eight weeks, then get laid off, go home and draw maternity benefits. That is the story by Mr. Gray. The slightest bit of research on his part would have indicated that maternity benefits are paid only to women who have at least 20 weeks attachment to the work force, not eight, and who had been working at the time of conception—not conceived on the job, but working. When you translate this section of the act into plain English, it means that in order to draw maternity benefits one must be in the work force for 40 weeks. As the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle) and the new minister would tell you, this is one month longer than is necessary to carry a child, even in Alberta.

• (1720)

I could go on, but I have a little more confidence in people than some members of the opposition, and more than some members in my own party have shown.

An hon. Member: Name them.

Mr. Mackasey: The other day I was hurt when a colleague said publicly that the reason for our defeat was that we went forward too fast with social measures. I was here ten years ago when it was argued that medicare was greatly needed but, of course, not just then. I was here five years ago when the argument was made that the Canada Pension Plan was badly needed but, of course, we should not proceed with it too quickly. Apparently it is never the right time to worry about people. Mr. Speaker, I can tell you who speaks for this group and for that group, but sometimes I have a hard time finding out who speaks for the poor of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I must inform him that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mackasey: I have almost finished, Mr. Speaker. Because I do have a degree of affection for the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield)—we never get down to personalities, and I am no longer what he described as the hatchet-man; that honour has been transferred to the minister of health and welfare—for him I have prepared a list of amendments that he can propose when the Unemployment Insurance Act comes before the House for amendment within a couple of weeks, and if he can get the support of the House for them he can bring down the government.

For instance, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition can move to extend the eight-week period to 12 weeks. This will affect 72,000 people across Canada, according to the statistics available at the end of November. But the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) and other Conservative members from Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, P.E.I. and Quebec should know that of those 72,000 people, about 50,000 live in the Atlantic provinces.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mackasey: I do not know how this will sit with the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner), who during the election promised the fishermen more generous benefits, but at least it is one suggestion that would reduce the cost about which the Leader of the Opposition worries so much. Here I speak about the cost of financing the unemployed. Of course, the ultimate is to bring an end to the act entirely. In that way you will provide maximum incentive to work for the "lazy bums" who live on unemployment insurance.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, we could go all the way back to the 1930s when we had maximum incentive to work. We had riots in Winnipeg, we had to split up families, we had men riding the rails, we had bread lines: all of these were maximum incentives to work. That is one alternative, if the Conservative party is not concerned about finding an additional 72,000 jobs, and it would be very easy to do, if that party ever became the government.

As I have already said, the official opposition could move to broaden the definition with respect to a worker from eight weeks to 12 weeks, even though—and this is the shame of the suggestion—there are only 19,000 people in Canada today who are on unemployment with only eight weeks labour force attachment. Where is the abuse there? Where is the incentive to scheme and cheat to draw unemployment insurance, when it is a fact that there are only 19,000 collecting unemployment insurance who have as little as eight weeks attachment to the labour force?

A further interesting statistic is that people who are on unemployment insurance, with eight to 11 weeks attachment to the labour force, remain on unemployment insurance an average of 15.8 weeks, ranging from 18.2 weeks in Newfoundland—this emphasizes the regional disparity involved—to 13.3 weeks in Alberta. Further, those who qualify for unemployment insurance and who have more than 12 weeks attachment to the labour force remain on unemployment insurance for an average of 17 weeks, not 50 weeks.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, we can eliminate unemployment insurance and save a lot of money. In that way we can give more money to the corporations, we can reduce personal income taxes. But we will also have to set up the bread lines once again. Or we can reduce benefits from 66 per cent taxable to 50 per cent. This would also save a lot of money. The only trouble is that people would then be drawing what they drew under the old act. They would have to supplement their unemployment insurance benefits with welfare and we would be adding $100 million to the welfare bills of the provinces and the municipalities. In Toronto alone we would be adding 7,800 people to the welfare rolls if we did that. It was stated that was the number taken off the welfare rolls as a result of the new schedule of unemployment insurance benefits.

Further, we could save a lot of money by increasing the waiting period from two to four weeks. Would that be very consistent, coming from a party that once suggested we reduce it to one week, at a cost of $176 million? I remember that party's amendment on that occasion. It was a humanitarian and a good one, if only we had had the extra $176 million at the time.

Now we can go the other way and save money. We can shift the 4 per cent level at which the government takes over the financial obligation for the plan, thus assuming its responsibility for the level of unemployment reached as a result of the fiscal, monetary and other policies resorted to by the Department of Finance in an attempt to keep unemployment at its lowest possible level. We could change that to 5 per cent, thus shifting more of the burden on to the employers. Alternatively, we could shift it from 4 per cent to 3 per cent, placing more of the burden on the government and less on the employers. I think that would please some of my hon. friends in the far corner, Mr. Speaker.

Another very legitimate amendment which the Leader of the Opposition could propose is the elimination from the plan of fishermen who are self-employed. Would hon. members from Newfoundland get very upset if we changed the regulations to eliminate self-employed fishermen from qualifying for unemployment insurance? After all, this would be perfectly legal and consistent with the act; you pay unemployment insurance only to those people who are employed. But I do not think that would be very popular in the Atlantic region. The hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) has talked about the fisherman who earns $43,000 and spends the winter in Mexico. Mr. Speaker, 20 years ago the same fisherman used to go to the Bahamas.

Another amendment which the Leader of the Opposition could move would propose the elimination of the woodworkers who are self-employed and who are included in the act by regulation. That would reduce the number of people receiving unemployment insurance. That would save all kinds of money, but it would affect a lot of people in New Brunswick who are self-employed. In his terms, it might eliminate a lot of abuses; there may be a lot of abuses in woodworking. According to the Financial Post, one of the leading lumber companies laid off 287 people and a month later called the unemployment insurance office to get them back, but nobody showed up for work. The company promptly did what any good, red-blooded employer would do; they went running to the press, talking about the 287 lazy people who refused to turn out for work, having decided to live on unemployment insurance. I got their social insurance numbers and names and addresses and ran it all through the computer. I found that 14 of them were drawing unemployment insurance and the remaining 273 were working for the competitor, with better working conditions and better pay.

• (1730)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: Another category is the truck owner-operator.

An hon. Member: Why don't you bring these forward?

Mr. Mackasey: The hon. member can move a motion when we bring forward the amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act. That will eliminate a few more people from the rolls and save money.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, because I am a little over my time, let me say that when I resigned from the cabinet, one of the reasons I did not resign from the House of Commons was that I was determined to stay here and see that the reactionary forces in this House did not destroy some of the decent things in our system.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: I do not profess to have ever suffered poverty, but I can remember the hungry thirties. On Friday nights my father would give me a $5 bill to change into dimes, and every night my mother would make sandwiches to be handed out to people who knocked on our door the next day. I remember that as vividly as yesterday. What stands between that type of existence and the affluence of 1972 is the unemployment insurance program which provides the worker with some income so that he can retain his dignity and not have to hide in shame from his children who expect to be properly fed and clothed in a country as wealthy as Canada.

Mr. Speaker, as long as I remain in the House of Commons, which may be one more day or one more week or one more month, I will remain a Liberal—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: —and I will pledge my loyalty to the Prime Minister, Pierre Elliott Trudeau, because I know no other way of being a House of Commons man. In conclusion, may I say to the new members that they should learn to appreciate the House of Commons; it is the only thing that really guarantees democracy in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, it is a distinct honour and privilege to take part in this throne speech debate and to do so under your distinguished guidance and direction. It is also an honour to follow the distinguished member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey). I congratulate him on parts of his speech, but with other parts I intend to take issue.

Just as this promises to be an interesting year, an interesting parliamentary session, so the Speech from the Throne reflects an increased awareness of the importance of parliament and heightened interest in this great institution by Canadians generally.

Before making my modest contribution, may I, on behalf of myself and my constituents, place on record the respect we had for the late Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson. He was held in great esteem and affection in Nova Scotia, as indeed he was in the entire nation and the international community of nations.

When a junior member such as I looks at the contents of this Speech from the Throne, he is perhaps—at least I am—in doubt as to whether he should be more concerned with its direct effect on Canada as a whole or the very real concern it has for his constituency. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, in perusing this Speech from the Throne, and indeed having listened to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) expound upon it, there does not at this stage appear to be much rejoicing to be done, for me at least, on either the constituency or national aspect.

I commend the government for finally recognizing, at least by implication, that freight rates do have an impact on economic development and consumer prices. What a penetrating look at the obvious, Mr. Speaker! I find it ironic that the government permitted so much time to expire during its previous term in office without having come up with any national transportation policy, only now evidencing concern. It is high time that railways were examined, and not only freight policies but maintenance policies. Roadbeds are becoming unsafe because of unsatisfactory maintenance. Pensions for railway employees need examination as well, as the distinguished member for Verdun has just said.

With reference to the hon. gentleman, I should like in passing to comment that he is still dragging the heavy water red herring into the House of Commons.

An hon. Member: It is no red herring.

Mr. MacKay: I should like to refer him and hon. members opposite to a speech made by a former colleague of his, the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer), last spring. He knows where most of the blame lies; it lies on this government which is trying to place this unjust and unfair aspect on the leader of this party. Mr. Speaker, this does not say much for their sense of fairness or accuracy.

There is in the throne speech more high-handed philosophy, and statements such as this:

> To preserve the ecological integrity of Canada's coastal and maritime areas, further presentation will be made for the third United Nations Law of the Sea Conference.

Laudable and overdue as this stated objective may be, what our hard-pressed fishermen want is some direct, practical help. To repay them to some extent for the neglect of the past they want protection from encroachment by foreign fishing fleets, they want adequate compensation for being forced out of their livelihood, and they want treatment to make up for their loss of sick mariner benefits and their fishing bounty.

In agriculture, the farmer in eastern Canada has little to rejoice about either in terms of actual or promised aid by this government. No plans for a regional approach for problems peculiar to eastern Canadian farmers are evidenced in this Speech from the Throne.

There is nothing to indicate that, pursuant to its announced intention to assist home owners, the government intends to remove one of the greatest direct costs to prospective home owners, the 11 per cent federal sales tax on building materials. The government can do all it likes to make it easier to buy a house, but what about the cost and the unfortunate fact that between interest, taxes, etc., the buyer will be saddled with a mortgage for the rest of his life because so few young Canadians can afford the price of a new home? Please, let us attack the initial cost for houses, and let us take this inequitable tax away, as a beginning.

One of the most intriguing and promising statements in the Speech from the Throne was the reference to the much heralded Department of Regional Economic Expansion. This is a good program, or could be. It is an equitable concept following the bipartisan line of thought that results in the sort of benevolent federalism that was responsible over the years for equalization payments, the recognition that the richer provinces should help the poorer and recognizing there should be equality of opportunity, economically as well as linguistically. However, somehow the government has in its familiar way failed to co-ordinate and develop its philosophy and in a practical or meaningful way to develop a comprehensive industrial strategy and policy for Canada.

At this point I want to stress that I agree with the recent announcement by the minister concerning decentralization. Our party has consistently advocated this since the inception of DREE. I agree with the Prime Minister when he stated, as he did in western Canada before going to England, that it makes him sad to see DREE used as a divisive issue by people making comparisons between one area and another. Some of us, perhaps, have done this not out of malice but as representatives of our constituencies, fighting for what we hoped was a fair share for our own areas. However, the Prime Minister, in his usual obtuse style, in the next breath proceeded to make comparisons. He compared Quebec with Nova Scotia, to show that Nova Scotia receives more per capita. As usual, he was saying one thing and proceeding to do another.

The feeling of our party is that these grants should be accorded on the basis of economic feasibility and need. Perhaps DREE should be used as an instrument of industrial development and as a social welfare program as well. But it has been badly mismanaged. The statistics and results generally relating to its policies have been hard to evaluate simply because the government has not made them available.

In a recent column, Charles Lynch dwelt at length on the type of information that the Prime Minister and government officials were releasing concerning DREE programs and the comparisons the Prime Minister was making in the areas that I have described. Charles Lynch wrote:

> My own impression was that Quebec got the most because it needed the most.
> Is it really true, as Trudeau says, that half of all DREE's outflow has gone to the maritimes and that "Quebec only comes later, ahead of some western provinces and behind some others"? Ahead of what western provinces, and behind what others?
> Statistics can be made to prove anything, and Trudeau must have been working from a specially concocted set that we have been unable to get DREE to cough up. We're still trying, but it's easier to get a grant from DREE than to get province-by-province comparative figures on per capita grants and total DREE expenditures to back up the Prime Minister's claim.

I agree with Charles Lynch and I hope that comparisons between regions will only be made from the point of view of statistical information and not to establish innuendos or excite paranoiacs who seek to read into those comparisons anything but normal competitiveness as between recipient areas.

One of the commitments made by our party in the recent election campaign was that of decentralizing DREE. I am interested to see that now the government concurs in this, as it concurs, indeed, in many other areas of our policy. Interesting statistics indicating the degree of centralization in DREE and DREE-related agencies show as follows. There are approximately 1,700 employees, as near as I can discover, working in DREE and allied agencies, and 730 of those individuals apparently are centralized in Ottawa.

In Newfoundland, where there are more special areas than in any other part of Canada, there are 15 employees. There are seven in Prince Edward Island, which incidentally is a related area in the sense that the province is totally designated under the so-called FRED program, the fund for rural economic development. There are 14 employees in Nova Scotia, 13 in New Brunswick, 90 in Quebec, 17 in Manitoba, 12 in Saskatchewan, 10 in Alberta and 6 in British Columbia. One wonders what those six lonely souls are doing in British Columbia. Are they doing useful work? Are they setting up some petty bureaucracy which does not need supervising?

Why can we not have a more frank and comprehensive set of DREE statistics published every month whether parliament sits or not? These ought to be published in the same way as unemployment statistics are published. Statistics from DREE would give us the basis for valuable economic analysis with regard to what is going on in our country and would be useful in the compiling of data for the study of our unemployment difficulties.

It is to be hoped that the minister will realize that it is imperative for DREE to be more closely associated with the aims and aspirations of provincial development agencies, that he will examine infrastructure programs and that he will check into funding procedures vis-à-vis federal, provincial and municipal governments. He should move cautiously but, I trust, progressively to explore with the provinces better ways of dealing more directly with the often neglected third level of government, that of civic and municipal administrations, in processing DREE grants and loans. At present, Mr. Speaker, some recipient municipalities must pay service charges of a quarter of one per cent on considerable sums of money. They can ill afford to pay these charges.

There is obviously not enough co-ordination between DREE objectives and the efforts of other federal and provincial development agencies. These bodies often compete and work at cross-purposes. For example, while the former minister responsible for DREE tried earnestly to tackle regional disparities, his friends in the Department of Finance were introducing policies to fight inflation. Those policies increased the gap between the wealthy provinces and those less fortunate. Departments of governments like DREE tend to be hermetically sealed. There is not enough concern about what goes on in other departments; the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce should have greater input, so should the Department of Transport.

I feel, as do hon. friends to my left in the NDP, that DREE often promotes inequity. I do not go as far as they do in their philosophy, but I do feel that large corporations which have money to expand often take what is available from DREE. However, because of existing marketing organizations, branch plants, economies of scale, capital cost allowances, depreciation provisions, and so on, they are often already in a pretty good competitive position. It is small businesses in the formative stages which often need help to a much greater degree than older businesses which may be a bit shopworn, a bit obsolete but still viable. Those types of businesses may need an economic blood transfusion; perhaps their priorities should be looked at more closely by the new minister. Like the Industrial Development Bank, DREE should be oriented more toward assisting small industries. For example, 80 per cent of IDB loans are for less than $50,000. I would be interested in seeing statistical information of this type concerning DREE.

Perhaps there is merit, as I said before, in some of the allegations made by the leader of the NDP. However, as usual, he goes too far, overstates his basic position and minimizes the very real and essential contributions made to the Canadian economy by large corporations. He is certainly remiss in his thinking if he feels that he or his party have a monopoly on concern for the welfare of small Canadian businesses, farms or, indeed, average Canadians.

We need more information about DREE. One would like to know which provincial and federal policies have been successful, which have failed, why, and what lessons can be drawn from different plans, procedures and administrative arrangements. Evaluation in recorded form seems to be one of the most neglected aspects of government policy. There are enough bodies working in DREE to do this in an exhaustive way.

I feel that the Regional Development Incentives Act must be amended, specifically section 16 which allows the minister and the government to refrain from submitting a monthly report when parliament is not sitting. How ridiculous, Sir! Hundreds of millions of dollars have been spent, and there has been no report since last spring. These moneys are actually trust funds and the Canadian people are entitled to an accounting. They are also entitled to better administration. A more efficient advisory board must be constituted so that DREE grants can be better evaluated.

There must be a better way to run DREE. There is little point in locking the stable door once the horse is stolen, complaining of the many instances where DREE grants have been misused, about companies that have gone bankrupt and citing other failures of the program when in my opinion it is more constructive to have a better advisory board and to find a more efficient way of placing surveillance on the granting of funds and on expediting the disposal of grants, thus eliminating the sorry spectacle of companies depending on DREE funds that they thought were committed, only to find that they were not committed after all.

This department officially came into existence on April Fools' Day, 1969, according to my information. Since then those who have been affected by it must at times have felt that this date was indeed significant. In some instances, instead of being called the Department of Regional Economic Expansion it could have been better referred to, as the "department of ridiculous economic expectations". However, it remains, in our opinion, basically a good program and, like the legendary bird of Greek mythology, the Phoenix, I hope it can regenerate itself and go on refurbished, revitalized and regenerated under its new minister.

The concept of DREE, and indeed our national policy in economic development, has been shaken to some extent by recent developments, one of which affects my constituency. The United States treasury authorities have recently seen fit to impose countervailing duties on Michelin Tires manufactured in Nova Scotia. This is a very unfortunate and worrisome precedent since, as far as I am aware, it is the first time this type of action has been taken against Canada. It has been invoked against other nations but never against us. At the same time, a duty has been levied against some of our pulp and paper companies, two of which are Domtar and the Eddy Company of Pembroke. The two firms I mention, as well as Michelin, are in receipt of assistance from DREE. The Michelin countervailing duty could have direct and international implications so far as our regional development plans are concerned.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) plays this down, and the minister in charge of DREE says that he hopes the Michelin case is an isolated instance. It is only natural that the ministers would say that because, after all, it was under their inept stewardship that this precedent was set. I charge the government with not placing sufficient priority on ongoing and high-level negotiations with the United States, and as a result we are now faced with a very unfortunate precedent. I trust that there will be continuing high-level negotiations with the United States in an effort to get the United States to rescind their course of action, at least until we have some far reaching, multilateral trade negotiations.

In closing, may I make a submission to the minister. I trust that he and the minister responsible for Devco will immediately explore the contentions of so many members, notably the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. MacInnis), to the effect that all appropriate provisions of the legislation setting up this unique Crown corporation have not yet been implemented to the benefit of unemployed miners and their dependants. It is my contention that these miners and their dependants are not treated equitably in accordance with the real intent of the legislation. Neither are the approximately 200 miners on the mainland now in receipt of less than the Devco miners, though many of them were part of the same operation.

Lastly, I would ask the minister in charge of regional economic expansion, along with his counterpart, the Nova Scotia minister of development, to take every possible action to benefit a very neglected area of Nova Scotia, the region known as the eastern shore. There is a great need for some initiative to be taken and for some form of development assistance. As I said on another occasion, I am looking forward to a constructive association with the minister in charge of regional economic expansion in exploring and suggesting ways to expedite in a co-operative fashion the operations of his department, which has such potential to attack the all too obvious economic problems that are facing the nation.

Finally, I trust that the Prime Minister will put aside his paranoiac preoccupations with the last campaign and stop brooding about why his "philosopher king approach" failed with the Canadian public. Then he, too, will attempt to do something constructive to attack all this nation's problems.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis)—Consumer Affairs; the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie)—Sports; the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell)—Fisheries.

Shall I call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned till eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. J. J. Blais for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and of the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield (page 52).

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, may I first congratulate you on being called upon for the third time to sit as Speaker of this House. You have been chosen unanimously by hon. members because your fairness of judgment and your competence qualify you to fill this position with dignity.

I should like also to congratulate the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) who has been appointed Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Committees of the Whole House.

It is the first time, Mr. Speaker, that I have the honour of sitting in this House. I am not familiar with the Standing Orders. I shall try, nevertheless, to learn the rules of procedure and should I ever depart from them, will you be kind enough to excuse me for it.

I also want to thank the people from the riding of Rimouski who showed me their confidence when they elected me member of the Canadian Parliament. The people of the riding of Rimouski include workmen, farmers, businessmen, industrialists, travellers and a lot of teachers. The city of Rimouski is in a way the academic capital of the Lower St. Lawrence since it holds many institutions of learning which are attended by eastern Quebec students.

In this riding, information is of very poor quality. For a few months I have been trying to determine needs and to find means to solve the many information problems from which my riding suffers.

Rimouski and its surroundings are not getting adequate television service, as I said earlier. It is appropriate to remind you, Sir, that there is but one T.V. station in Rimouski, namely station CJBR.

Mr. Speaker, we learned from newspaper reports that on a beautiful star-lit night on November 9, 1972, a satellite called Anik was launched 22,000 miles into space. As pre-arranged, Anik will keep a geostationary position, that is a fixed position over the Equator in relation to the earth's rotation. From this select spot, Anik will be able, 24 hours a day, to lend an eye and an ear to all of our land. For once, Canada has reached the top in the communication field. Anik will simultaneously rebroadcast ten colour television programs and will include over 9,000 telephone channels.

We from the Gaspé Peninsula were pleased to hear about that development in the scientific field, but unfortunately we were soon disillusioned, because Anik seems to have forgotten us. This deplorable condition of poor relatives has lasted too long and I would therefore ask the government to alter it as soon as possible.

If my memory is correct, during the summer of 1970 the present Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier), then Secretary of State and minister responsible for the CBC, had been quite sympathetic during a tour of the Gaspé Peninsula to the grievances of its inhabitants, finding first hand how deplorable was the condition of information in that area. Always conscious of our problems, the minister has apparently stated that Anik carried in its flanks the solution and would give birth to it in the fall of 1972.

Mr. Speaker, Anik is in orbit, but where are the projects aiming at properly serving Gaspesians?

We also know that everything is ready to serve our Eskimo citizens, in the course of February 1973. We know that the CBC has rented from Telesat the services of at least three television channels for $9 million a year. We know that in three of four places, there will be some automatic relays connected with a transmitter for local broadcasting. Frobisher Bay and Resolute Bay will also be able to communicate both ways with the outside. I feel very happy for our northern citizens, but what about us from the Lower St. Lawrence?

Yes, and what about us? Mr. Speaker, what plans are being made to bring in the CBC in this part of Quebec, one of the major Canadian provinces in which information services should be available just as freely as anywhere else in the land? I did believe in the minister's sympathy, and I would like to continue to believe in it.

The people in the riding of Rimouski, who used to live almost exclusively from farming and lumbering, have, like everybody else, undergone many changes. Industries have settled there, and when economic conditions are normal and they operate to full capacity, they provide a living for part of the population. Farming operations in this riding used to be carried on a large scale but they also have declined, because they are no longer profitable.

Some citizens of my riding are fishermen, although because of pollution that industry has become less profitable. The government should take special steps to safeguard the industry and protect the sources of income of those who are involved in this field.

As for existing industries, in order to develop normally they would require financing at very low interest rates, in order to bring down their production cost and become competitive.

The Throne Speech mentions this problem. I hope that bills and legislation to be introduced in the House will be drafted in the same spirit and that the Throne Speech will not have merely raised false hopes.

For several years, we have been hearing about industrial decentralization but unfortunately, because of lack of adequate services in several towns in eastern Quebec, inadequate communications and high cost of transportation, those who are interested in opening new industries still go to the major centres and we, of the Lower St. Lawrence are missing the bus. This explains the ever increasing number of unemployed in remote areas.

The Throne Speech states that further steps will also be taken to reduce regional disparities persisting in spite of the action already announced in previous Throne Speeches.

The government says that additional funds will be assigned to LIP. I hope it does so soon to enable the officials of the Department of Manpower and Immigration to approve a greater number of applications because, to date, we have witnessed a real disaster in that many worthy projects have been turned down for lack of funds. How can a program intended to create jobs do so when most of the projects are turned down? The government is only bluffing which I think is not very wise on its part.

In any event, I ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration to see to it that the state pay some attention to my riding and show enough understanding to create jobs if it cannot manage to convince industries to move in. The Social Credit party of Canada, of which I am an elected member, presented the people with an economic security program comprising a guaranteed annual income for all.

I must say that voters in my constituency have given a majority vote to this program. Therefore, it is my duty to tell the government that they will have to introduce good legislation in order to reach this goal and to eradicate as much as possible this unbearable situation where poverty exists in the midst of affluence. So, I can hardly wait for the tabling of bills intended for the realization of objectives mentioned in the speech from the Throne to this effect.

Senior citizens, disabled and unemployed people are worried by the constant increase in the cost of living as they cannot benefit from corresponding increases in their income.

On behalf of all the people of my constituency and of the Gaspé region, I ask the government to take immediate steps to insure security and freedom to the labour force, the farmers and every family, as well as more stable employment for our fine youth who ask nothing more than to work for our beautiful and great country.

[Mr. Allard.]

In conclusion, I wish to raise the subject of abortion which is getting to be a real problem in Canada. The government should take a different attitude in this regard and should be more concerned with education. It should try to open a greater number of family planning clinics for consultation so as to try and stop the action of those who kill instead of facing the real problems of life.

Finally, family allowances should be raised substantially and distributed better, so that the mothers and couples in financial difficulty could keep and raise their children.

• (2010)

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Sir, may I at the outset join all members of the House in extending to you and to the Speaker of the House our congratulations—condolences might be the appropriate word—on your unanimous election to these high posts. I hope you will forgive me, Sir, if I say in passing that I am particularly pleased with your appointment because, as you well know, our association goes back a great many years and I think it can be said that since the 1950s we have shared a genuine and deep concern for maximum communication with the people of Canada and for the proper utilization of the media in this country.

I should like to tell my colleagues in all parts of this House that the Deputy Speaker of this chamber is a man who has a profound wisdom and knowledge about the media and who has, to a very rare and unusual extent, a comprehension of both the positive and dangerous sides of the new developments that are occurring in communications. I can think of no one more suited than yourself, Sir, to hold the high and honoured post which you now occupy, which has been given to you with the unanimous consent of all members of this House. I am happy to endorse that election.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: I should also like to convey to Mr. Speaker the congratulations of all members upon his elevation, if that is the correct word. I notice that he is in the chamber. I have found him, in my several years in this chamber, to be not only a man of sagacity and wisdom but a man of profound common sense. There is a difference, sometimes, between sagacity and wisdom and common sense, but he employs them with a rare combination and blending of which we are all very proud. We are happy to have him back as our Speaker in this particular assembly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: For a particular reason I also wish to compliment the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. I suppose one tends to get into something of a rut in this connection after one has been here a reasonable period of time, but I keep saying during each throne speech debate that I did have the honour of moving the address in reply in our centennial year. I say that now with a rather special significance but with no apology for having repeated it, as I said, before because I remember with vividness and unabashed and unashamed sentimentality, when sitting, as I was then, in the back row of this House, the gentleman who occupied the seat of the Prime Minister, a man for whom I had a tremendous affection and endearment, along with the then leader of the opposition, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), who together gave a new and "wet behind the ears" member a compliment on that speech. I refer, of course, to the late Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson.

• (2020)

To me, tonight there is both a sense of continuity and discontinuity in this respect because I think we all realize, regardless of party affiliation and what we may feel as individuals in the sense of our philosophy, that there is in this House not only a sense of continuity, not only the fact that the business of government goes on, but also there are those tragic moments when we realize that men who have served their country, perhaps at the expense of their health and welfare, are no longer with us. It was my privilege not merely to have expressed the sentiments I did in the address in reply in 1967, our centennial year, but to have done it in the presence of the Right Hon. Lester Pearson whom we all think about with such fondness and such affection tonight.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: So I wish very much to compliment the mover and seconder, because this ritual, if it can be called that, is rather important. It not only emphasizes the importance of the so-called individual Member of Parliament, the Member of Parliament who does not occupy either the treasury benches or the front or second-row benches of the opposition; it symbolizes, it seems to me, the importance of the ordinary Member of Parliament, a man who is here because the people of his constituency have sent him here.

That is one of the things that is important about being the mover and seconder of the address in reply. The second thing is that traditionally the role has always been given to new members of this House. That, to me, too is something that is quite important because it illustrates that while there is a continuity in this House, it is not a moribund cure-all. It is tradition, if you wish, that new members of this House in this way can, and have the opportunity to do so, speak out on behalf of their constituencies. This, of course, is another aspect about moving and seconding the address in reply which is important. There is the fact that it polarizes, more than any other event in the whole parliamentary spectrum, the right and the duty of the individual Member of Parliament to speak out for the people whom he represents and to talk about his constituency.

Mr. Alexander: Right. That is what we want from you.

Mr. Jamieson: Believe me, there is no argument between myself and the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander).

Mr. Lawrence: In that regard.

Mr. Jamieson: In that regard. Incidentally, in any other regard.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: You got carried away there.

Mr. Jamieson: I will explain. However, I want to say something to the hon. member opposite. I am sorry, but I do not know his constituency.

An hon. Member: Northumberland-Durham.

Mr. Jamieson: I wish that, coming from the minor leagues, he would spend a little time learning what the batting order is in this House before he starts trying to be the star of the show, because it will not work in that way.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You are getting nasty now.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, the usual word from the opposition when one hits a raw nerve is that one is being "nasty". The fact of the matter is that the hon. member has succeeded in the first two or three days of this league in batting out on each occasion. I simply suggest he learn a little first.

An hon. Member: You do not learn by sitting here, either.

Mr. Jamieson: I want to speak in a non-partisan sense. Members will understand, of course, that I am always non-partisan in these matters. The hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) and a number of his colleagues would be wise to heed, as I did, the advice of the right hon. member for Prince Albert. I remember it well because it made so much sense, as do so many of the things he says.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: The right hon. member for Prince Albert told me when I entered this House, having had a close association with him in the broadcasting field for many years before that, "If you have any sense at all, you will sit and listen and keep your mouth shut until you know what it is all about". That has not happened, I fear, in the last two or three days in respect of many recruits of the party opposite. However, that is aside from the point.

Mr. Alexander: That is right. Get on with the job.

Mr. Jamieson: It is not my intention to spend the limited time I have talking about the past.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: Thank you very much. I really appreciate the fact that many of these gentlemen are contributing to what we call in the media a clack. When everything is dead on your side, you hire those on the other side to start the applause.

Mr. Paproski: We wanted to make sure that you look good this evening.

Mr. Jamieson: Thank you very much. At least I am doing better with my dieting program than you are. Mr. Speaker, I am not really worried about the political balance of this House, but I am disturbed that the hon.

member and myself have been put at the same end of the room; I think there is a real problem there.

In all seriousness, I do intend to talk about the future. The leader of the New Democratic Party this afternoon said, "Tell us what you are going to do".

Mr. Nielsen: He is your leader, too.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: I am pleased my hon. friend said that the leader of the New Democratic Party is my leader, too; it gives me an opportunity to talk about something to which I believe we all ought to pay a little attention in this House.

Mr. Alexander: Are you going to be serious now?

Mr. Jamieson: Very serious. Do you want to sit back and listen?

An hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Jamieson: Relax. It is interesting to note that we have been talking a good deal—of course the media has been engaged in this to the maximum extent possible, and as someone who lived in the media for many years, I understand it—about majority and minority governments and the like. This particular parliament, of course, is one in which there is a so-called minority government. But it is an oversimplification to talk in those terms and simply speak of the number of seats and whether that establishes either a majority or a minority. I did a little arithmetic this afternoon and it is interesting to note the result. I hope hon. members will accept the fact that this is a totally non-partisan comment.

• (2030)

Mr. Nielsen: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jamieson: I see the hon. member of the opposition, who is completely incapable of non-partisan comment, does not agree with me; but that is beside the point. In any event, I do say with all sincerity that having looked over the results of the election, I begin to wonder what really constitutes a majority or a minority government in this country, in terms of any group being able to say that it speaks for the majority of the people. For instance, there are 151 members of this House—they exist on this side and they exist in all parties—who are here despite the fact that far more than 50 per cent of the voters in their constituencies opposed them.

An hon. Member: What about the highlanders?

Mr. Jamieson: I have been reading constituency reports from Nova Scotia as well as from other parts of the country.

In any event, what I am saying and what I am seeking to do, as I said, in an objective fashion, is to point out that if one looks at the statistics and goes beyond simply the first set of those statistics, that is, the number of seats that a party controls or does not control in the House or who sits on Mr. Speaker's right or Mr. Speaker's left, one finds that substantially more than half of us are here with substantially more than half of the voters in our constituencies saying that they did not want us. I use the word "us" and not "you"; I am talking about it in a general sense. In other words, the truth of the matter is that historically in this country—and I think the exceptions probably prove the rule—we have had a situation where it has been very rare when any party has had a true majority.

The hon. member will find the boy's room on the right, if he has not discovered it already.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jamieson: I made that remark, Mr. Speaker, because I was here for six months before anybody bothered to tell me where it was.

But really, Mr. Speaker, without spending a great deal of time upon this particular matter and without being partisan in any sense, let me say that it has been very rare in the history of this country when any government could honestly say that it was a majority government. I will not quote statistics, because they are available to anybody who wants to look them up and it would suggest that I was being partisan. The fact of the matter is that in a great majority of cases members are in the House with less than half of the citizens in their constituencies voting for them. Therefore, I thoroughly agree—and perhaps it is a terrible piece of presumption on my part to agree with Winston Churchill, but I see from the statistics that he was so right—with Winston Churchill when he said that democracy is the worst possible form of government except for all of the others.

There is a lesson in this for us, surely, in recognizing that there is a difference between what happened in the democratic electoral process, with which of course I am in full agreement, and how we act during the electoral process and how we act once we become members of the House, because in the House, constitutionally and in every other respect indeed, there are no parties, and when people talk about about power, when people talk about the acquisition or the relinquishing of power and they talk about it in the penny-ante sense of whether half a dozen or more people move from one side of the House to the other, what they are doing is playing the kind of games which in fact the press, the media and the public have come to recognize as being one of the faults of our whole parliamentary system because we are incapable of rising above them. This has been evident in the last two or three days in the House.

Mr. Grafftey: But you have been in power for a whole generation and a half.

Mr. Jamieson: I do not particularly care whether or not my friend thinks of it in terms of a generation and a half. All I am saying is that we have a multiparty system with which we are prepared to carry on.

Mr. Grafftey: Poppycock!

Mr. Jamieson: So the hon. member opposite is becoming highly indignant. He has had his chance. What I am saying is that when one talks in terms of who should exercise power in this country, the answer surely has to be that it is the people of this country; and it is the people of this country who have sent us here to decide what is going to be done and what we are going to do about the immediate and pressing problems of this country, not to play the kind of games that have been evident here in the last two or three days and which, I suspect, will go on for some time to come.

Mr. Grafftey: I had a better professor in my freshman year.

Mr. Jamieson: The hon. member said he had a better professor in his freshman year. Thank God I was never a professor. Thank God I never made it to my freshman year, because I had enough gut common sense to understand that what the public is telling us is to get on with the business of this country.

Mr. Alexander: Let us hear about your ministry, Sir.

Mr. Jamieson: We will get to that. Mr. Speaker, All I am seeking to say—and perhaps the jibes of the members opposite have prompted me to go beyond what I might otherwise have said—

Mr. Alexander: Don't do us any favours.

Mr. Jamieson: A fellow needs what we used to call, in show business, a straight man; the hon. member is pretty good at it.

Mr. Alexander: I am doing all right.

Mr. Jamieson: What I am trying to say is that the important thing at the moment is not who occupies the benches on the right or the left of Mr. Speaker. For my part, I do not particularly care what happens in those terms because, believe me, anybody in this House who thinks that he has some potential claim to immortality because he is here, he is there or he wants to move from there to here, has only to go out to the back of this building and see the statues of the men who have been forgotten for 100 years, 20 years and even 10 years and he will realize that all this is not important.

Mr. Alexander: Tell your leader that, don't tell us.

Mr. Nielsen: Methinks thou doth protest too much.

Mr. Jamieson: May I say to the hon. member that his brother does it better on the ads for the Bank of Montreal.

All I am seeking to say—

An hon. Member: Then say it.

Mr. Jamieson: Give me time. All I am saying is that it is about time we realized that we have to come to grips with the important problems and not just play games and not just, as the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) or someone, said, have one's tongue hanging out, anxious for office. To me that is singularly unimportant. The point is that I find it rather difficult to accept—

Mr. Paproski: Lately?

Mr. Jamieson: I will not answer that remark of the hon. member because in Hansard it will not look half as funny as it should. However, Mr. Speaker, I find it very difficult to accept that the total solution to this country's problems, as complex as they are, can be simply achieved by transferring one group of individuals from one side of the House to the other. I find it very hard, in looking over, not only the individuals who now occupy the front benches of the official opposition but in examining some of the things they have said over the years, to believe that at the very moment there was a change of government in this country the clouds would open and the Leader of the Opposition would be delivered of tablets of stone on which every problem of the country would be resolved in a split second.

• (2040)

I say that because I find it hard to understand how the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer), who might become the minister under those circumstances, having spent some 20 years establishing the kind of reputation that he now deplores in this government, could suddenly transform this country into some magical Shangrila.

Mr. Nielsen: Have you got an embassy there?

Mr. Jamieson: We don't have an embassy in Shangrila at the moment, but I can assure the hon. member that if he gives us a vote of confidence and he would like the job, I will see that he is first on the list. And I am not at all sure that he would not accept it, Mr. Speaker.

Let us look at what this miraculous group is going to achieve. I wonder how the hon. member for Trinity feels, seated as he is within shooting distance—I use that word advisedly—or those people who tried to destroy him a few years ago, who said he was a total disaster, who damned him into the ground in this House. I am speaking of members who are here now and members who are no longer here. Now he finds it possible to make common cause with them. Is this the man who is going to lead us into the new Jerusalem?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jamieson: I have my doubts. Now we come to the pièce de résistance, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner). Great Liberal principles? He stands up for them until the time comes when he is no longer the leader and then he switches over to something else. Is this the man who is going to lead us into the new Jerusalem? Is this the party to which we ought to give confidence in this House?

I sympathize with hon. members in the second and third rows opposite, Mr. Speaker. They fought their own battles. They are the ones in this House who tried to keep the real spirit of conservatism going throughout a long period of dreary, arid years. Where do they find themselves now? They find themselves in the third-row; new, "wet behind the ears" members, to quote the right hon. member for Prince Albert. Among them is the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham. Then the Leader of the Opposition says it is terrible to change one's policy. He has changed everything.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I just want to ask how much the minister charges for a ticket to this show.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I have the highest priced ticket this side of Broadway, with not one nickel going to any corporate welfare bum in the theatrical business.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I made a conscientious decision that I was not going to talk about the NDP this evening.

Mr. Lewis: I don't care whether you do or not.

Mr. Jamieson: Don't feel offended if I have not done so.

An hon. Member: It won't hurt, if that's all the harm you can do.

Mr. Jamieson: All I want to say to the hon. gentleman who made that interjection is that he really synthesizes what I was saying earlier. I do not say this in any bootlicking fashion—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jamieson: Hon. members can laugh if they choose, but if they, particularly those who have not been here before, would take a little time to read the record they would know I have consistently said there are many things, not only about the leader of the NDP, but about his followers and his policies, that I admire. Of course I do, and it did not take an election to make that kind of determination on my part. I ask hon. members to refer back to the last throne speech debate in which I said precisely the same thing. I see that somebody else in the audience wishes to ask a question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Yewchuk: Would the minister mind if I asked him a question?

Mr. Jamieson: Not at all.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, he has only a few minutes left. Would he care to tell us what action he intends to take in the Department of Regional Economic Expansion in order to solve the unemployment problem of this country?

Mr. Jamieson: I thank the hon. member for bringing me back to earth. One of the happy things, and also one of the unfortunate things about this House is that one gets into this kind of argument, or debate, if one wants to call it that, and I readily admit I have not devoted as much time in my speech as I ought to the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. But to end on a serious note, Mr. Speaker, judging from the mood of the House I think all members have taken what I have said in reasonably good grace.

On this subject, the other day I came across something which was written many thousands of years ago. It was by a critic who was writing about the fallings of Peloponesian policy-making. That was a long time ago, in Greece.

An hon. Member: What about today?

[Mr. Jamieson.]

Mr. Jamieson: We will come to today in a moment. You haven't been here long enough to know about today. In the position in which the country finds itself now I would like to commend these words, in all seriousness, to hon. members:

> Each member presses his own ends which generally results in no action at all. They devote more time to the prosecution of their own purposes than to the consideration of the general welfare. Each supposes that no harm will come of his own neglect, that it is the business of another to do this or that. And so, as each separately entertains the same illusion, the common cause imperceptibly decays.

All I have been trying to say, and perhaps I have been doing it in a little too humorous and dramatic form, is that the important point is for us now to get on with the business of Canada.

In the time I have left I wish to say, with respect to the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, that there are a number of things which I can specifically commit to the House at this time. The first is that there will be substantial provincial-federal consultation; that first of all it is important that we as a federal government understand and comprehend what are the philosophies and objectives of individual provinces, and it is not in the first instance our responsibility as a federal government to impose our priorities on the provinces.

Therefore, I commit to the House that we will consult with the provinces. Indeed, the process has already started. We are trying to help them in every conceivable way that we can, to determine what their economic objectives are and, more than that, what it is they want for themselves in its totality, that is, in terms of a life style, in terms of what they want for their citizens. This is something that has been undertaken and which we will carry through to the extreme. We very much want to have that kind of co-operation with the provinces.

Mr. Nielsen: But what have you been doing?

Mr. Jamieson: I have not been doing anything, because I have not been in this particular portfolio.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the minister, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The minister may continue if there is unanimous consent.

• (2050)

An hon. Member: He has just started.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is agreed?

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, on this business of extra time, I should point out that I have a long list of members who wish to speak in this debate. We gave extra time to the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) because he resigned from the cabinet; he was being used as a scapegoat and we wanted to hear the story. The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) had an opportunity to be serious, but he did not deal with serious things. I may not be very popular, but I really think we have to stick to the time limit.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Reilly).

Mr. Peter Reilly (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, it is a profound honour to address this chamber. I shall be always grateful for it regardless of the length of my political career, which I am sure hon. members opposite will try to shorten as much as possible: that is their job.

It is always entertaining to listen to the minister who just finished speaking and swept out. He was, in an earlier incarnation, as many hon. members know, a broadcaster and his prowess was lengendary in that industry.

An hon. Member: You are not in television now.

Mr. Reilly: I must congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), Mr. Speaker. In four short days he has managed to bring into total thralldom his brand new shipment of seals.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reilly: Many times during his career as a broadcaster it was said of the minister that when he was rushed for time he could memorize a three-minute commercial with no notes at all. I am sure we all believe that, as he has just run off a 30-minute commercial without any reference to notes at all, as far as I could see.

He mentioned the presence on this side of the House of the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) who resigned from the Liberal cabinet, as most of us know, when his rather simple and decent proposals regarding housing for Canadians went to the bottom of the priority list and were studiously ignored by the Prime Minister's office. I think the minister ought also to have mentioned the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) and the former hon. member for Duvernay, both of whom resigned cabinet posts because of humanitarian concern.

I congratulate the mover (Mr. Blais) and the seconder (Mr. Blaker) of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. For their sake I hope their observations prove more worthy of retrospective scrutiny than the remarks of the mover in the last session of the last parliament, the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher). During the course of his remarks he did me the honour of referring to me when he said, in part, "even the Tories would not accept a man like that around here". He said a lot of other things, too, Mr. Speaker, but I shall not bore the House with them. As it turned out, my party did want me and so did the voters of Ottawa West.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reilly: Unhappily for the Liberal party, that is the case with a great many seats formerly occupied by Liberals; they have switched to this side of the House. There are a great many reasons for this change, Mr. Speaker, many reasons why the people of Canada, in every region except Quebec, turned away from the Liberal Party and chose instead the party led by the man I am proud to call my leader. I shall list them, as the government so often puts it, in the fullness of time.

Yesterday the Prime Minister called me a joker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: "Sinistre farceur".

Mr. Reilly: It is true, Mr. Speaker, that I inherited from my parents a lively sense of fun and a keen appreciation of the ridiculous. Those qualities have stood me in good stead upon many occasions when the only logical alternative to laughter was to burst into tears at the sights and sounds that were unfolding before my eyes. Never have they served me better than in this House yesterday afternoon when I sat here for more than two hours and listened to the discursive, disputatious and often didactic diatribe from the Prime Minister of my country.

In a forlorn and shabby attempt to explain to this House and to the people of this country his party's dismal showing on October 30, the Prime Minister established what must surely be a new low in gutter politics. He tried to smear the Progressive Conservative party by blaming its so-called anti-French campaign for his party's defeat. He flailed wildly around him looking for reasons to justify his party's failure, and he even tried at one stage to link the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield)—a man of unquestioned integrity and responsibility—with this anti-French fantasy. The last time I saw this used was in the United States by a man named McCarthy, and I do not mean Eugene.

It was an irresponsible performance. It was irresponsible because it was a smear on all members of this party; it was contemptible because it called into question the good faith of Canadian voters who quite properly turned away from the Prime Minister and his party and, finally, it was irresponsible because it encouraged the very bigotry that I assume all of us wish to stamp out and to avoid.

[Translation]

As I said, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's remarks yesterday in the House were just poppycock and nothing else. The problems of bilingualism, national unity had nothing to do with his party's defeat at the polls.

[English]

No, Mr. Speaker, it was a good deal more basic than that, and because he cannot bring himself to believe that his marvellous schemes and his multiplicity of rationales were unacceptable to the Canadian people, he hides behind a phony charge of racism by this party. He reminds me of nothing so much as the beleaguered politician who was caught up in a fierce election battle and who found himself facing an opponent about whom it was impossible to say one rotten thing. So, at the biggest public meeting in the campaign, he got up and said this:

> Some little known and disturbing facts about my opponent have come to my attention and I feel you should know about them. He subscribes to several all-male societies whose members regularly practise the most flagrant philanthropic activities on young boys from poor families. His sister is a well-known thespian and his aging aunt was forced to withdraw from her church activities because she is a self-confessed octogenarian. Not only that, my opponent has been observed performing the piscatorial act from a boat flying the Canadian flag. He and his wife have lived for more than 20 years in open and notorious monogamy. He has masticated regularly since childhood, often in public.

Mr. Speaker, the remarks of the Prime Minister yesterday afternoon had about as much force and effect as that mythical story.

Mr. Trudeau: Did you say you were not a joker?

An hon. Member: He is listening.

Mr. Reilly: I have never denied it. No, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people did not turn away from that gaggle of incompetents over there because of any anti-French campaign. The Canadian people turned away from a government that did not trust them and so did not merit their trust in return.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reilly: The Canadian people turned away from a government that lurched for four years from one economic crisis to the next like an entire platoon of Walter Gordons.

• (2100)

Mr. Reilly: The Canadian people turned away from a bunch of ministers whose collective philosophy was best expressed by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) during his earlier incarnation as l'eminance grise; that philosophy was, if the people do not accept your plan, it is not the plan that is at fault, it is the public relations.

The Canadian people turned away from a government that ignored the advice of the best economists of the country, and visited upon the poor, the weak and the old a time of disaster and travail from which they have still not recovered; and today's unemployment figures bear that out.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: Oh, you friends of the working man.

Mr. Reilly: I will get to you weak-kneed, bleeding-hearts in a moment. The Canadian people turned away in disgust from a political campaign full of flatulent slogans and totally devoid of specific policies.

An hon. Member: That's pretty weak.

Mr. Reilly: The game is up. No, Mr. Speaker, neither bilingualism nor unity was the reason for the rejection of that tatty ineptitude of Grits. What happened was that the so-called Liberals, whose pre-emption of that otherwise honourable word really ought to be investigated by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray) as a giant fraud on the public, these so-called Liberals made the same mistake that old and tired politicians always make. They assumed that the Canadian people could not be trusted with the inconvenient facts. They were afraid to tell the people the truth, Mr. Speaker, so they tried to lull the people with a campaign whose main point was the curious assumption that, despite the steadily mounting evidence before our very eyes that they had wickedly and wilfully mismanaged this country for four years, they still had some kind of divine franchise on wisdom and leadership. Never mind the sad little war on inflation which according to the Prime Minister was being waged on behalf of the poor and the old—

An hon. Member: Let's have facts.

Mr. Reilly: —and in which the same poor and old became the foot soldiers, the cannon-fodder and, eventually, the victims. Never mind the prime ministerial assurance that he did not care if unemployment went as high as 6 per cent, which it promptly did, paused briefly and then moved ever onward and upward. Pay no attention, they told us, to the fact that the government had clear advance warning from the Economic Council of Canada that if it pursued its announced course, unemployment would rise and so would inflation. Never mind the Prime Minister's declaration that inflation was licked, when actually it was poised for still another leap. They went about the country neighing and braying and telling us "the land is strong", to which one of my constituents replied, "and a good thing it is, too, or else it couldn't have withstood four years of those louts."

This afternoon, Mr. Speaker, we heard from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). It was indeed touching to hear him so well defended by the hon. member for Verdun, but on the strength of what he told us today he does not deserve such tender treatment. What did he tell us of the government's plans to reduce unemployment, the latest figures on which make poignantly plain to those hundreds of thousands of Canadians without jobs precisely how much his government cares for them? Nothing.

What good news did he bring to this House about his government's plans for relieving the plight of old people? None. Did he have anything of even passing interest to say to the members of this House about the distressing problem of inflation? There was nothing there, either. Actually, Mr. Speaker, I asked myself, after he sat down, why he had ever got up. He came before this House with no plans, no help and no information on the problems which daily plague the lives of millions of Canadians and which cry out for attention today as they have on every day of every week for the past three years.

The only reason for his intervention that I can conceive is that perhaps conventional wisdom dictates that the resolute refusal to act is the necessary prerequisite to even higher office than the one he now adorns. But that does not help the unemployed; that does not help the old people; that does not help the millions of Canadians whose incomes steadily recede before the relentless onslaught of inflation.

It was also interesting to listen to the speech made by the hon. member for Verdun, particularly his obviously sincere defence of his unemployment insurance plan. I thought, Mr. Speaker, he seemed more defensive than necessary about the plan. I happen to think it is a good plan, a progressive plan and, certainly, to judge from the monthly accumulation of human misery caused deliberately by his colleagues in government, and from the evidence presented every month by Statistics Canada, it is a necessary plan. My only quarrel with it is that it was sold to the people on the basis of faulty figures and we are now faced with an unexpected and astronomical bill to pay.

The difficulty is that the money for paying that bill does not come from the housekeeping budget at 24 Sussex Drive; it comes from the pockets of Canadian taxpayers who are already hard-pressed to meet their regular obligations. Of course, one has to temper one's enthusiasm for the plan with the realization that the bill would not be so high were it not for the breathtaking incompetence of the government. It would not be close to as high if it had not been that the government chose deliberately the cruel course of setting off employment against inflation. This afternoon, Mr. Speaker, the president of one of the chartered banks told a meeting in Toronto that Canada's unemployment rate was the highest in the industrialized world, and he described this as a national shame.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Reilly: When bank presidents begin describing unemployment as a national shame—

An hon. Member: —the Tories had better listen.

Mr. Reilly: —I think we can take it as certain, all things being considered, that it has become a national shame.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday, as I said earlier, the Prime Minister attributed racist motives to every member of my caucus. I could scarcely credit the evidence of my senses as I beheld the Prime Minister of my country trying to establish this irresponsible line of argument in his opening speech to this Parliament. When he spoke here yesterday he did a grave disservice to the cause he espoused so earnestly. His grip on reality has grown so tenuous that, although he probably doesn't realize it, there are in this country, in every province and city and town people who will fasten on his unfortunate remarks and fashion from them weapons to use against other people.

There are bigots in this country; some are French-Canadian and others spring from different beginnings. What the Prime Minister ought to know, and if he doesn't know he should be made forcefully aware of it, is that he has encouraged them, all of them. He has made still another of his many contributions to a political situation in which it is already hard enough to be responsive to the legitimate aspirations of your constituents and remain a responsible Canadian.

I represent a riding in which a large proportion of the voters work for the federal government or its agencies. There has been a good deal of speculation by people more expert than I about whether my election was due to the so-called backlash against French-Canadians. The only thing I know is that the only talk of racism during the election came from the Liberal candidate, who accused me of being anti-French because I opposed the government's implementation of the Official Languages Act. The Prime Minister claims he has seen literature of a racist character put out by this party. I can show him literature put out in Ottawa West by Liberals which came close to qualifying as hate literature and which ought to make the party which published it blush with shame.

The National Liberal Federation over on Bank Street sent paid agitators to meetings to make it plain to all the voters of French-Canadian origin that I am not articulate in French. They baited me regularly and persistently when I spoke in English, which surely was my right in a bilingual country. The truly sad thing about this is that every time this vicious little cabal opened up on me, they encouraged the bigots, whose support I did not want and whose importunings I regularly turned aside. Not only that, but decent and fair-minded people in the riding were moved to ask themselves some searching questions which might better have been left unasked.

If the Prime Minister wants racism, I can shown him racism among the members of his own party, sponsored by his own national office. I happen to believe that my election was not due to any backlash but that it was due in part to the government's wrong-headed and relentlessly-stupid policies regarding the implementation of the Official Languages Act. It is characteristic of this government and its Prime Minister that they are able to equate, without any mental gymnastics at all, opposition to their way of doing things with opposition to the principle of bilingualism per se.

The fact is that after the election, with all the haste that they could decently muster, the government sent the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) scurrying across the street to the national press building with a list of amendments to their program which paralleled in almost every respect the recommendations that I had made on behalf of the public servants in Ottawa West.

If the Prime Minister wants a second and, in his opinion, perhaps a less biased view, he should have recourse to the long article in one of the local newspapers written by my defeated Liberal opponent. Shortly after the election he wrote of his and the defeat of other candidates in this area and said it could be blamed largely on the government's wrong-headed and short-sighted policy in the implementation of the Official Languages Act in the public service.

Despite all their billing and cooing via the electronic letter-writing machine in New York, the Liberals do not have the franchise for love of country. I suspect that every member in this House loves this country, and I imagine, all partisan cracks aside, that all of them decided to run for office because of a true concern about their country and the direction in which it is going. But because some of us differ on precisely how to achieve the objectives of national harmony and unity, it does not do to dismiss us as bigots, or as obstructionists, or as nobodies or, for that matter, as "sinistres farceurs," though I suppose it might be better to be called a sinister joker than to be a sinister joke.

The people who elected me did so because they wanted me to oppose the record of the last four years and to do my best to make certain that we were not in for more of the same. And I propose to do precisely that. I might suggest to my hon. friends in the socialist party that they were elected for the same reason. I shall make no further allusion to what has been described as the marriage between the NDP and the Liberals because I should like, if possible, to block that connubial metaphor before we have any ugly offspring. I simply put it to them that they are betraying the people who voted for them, and I doubt whether the dimensions of that betrayal will ever be brought more sharply into focus than they were this afternoon when they stood in opposition to immediate relief for the old people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reilly: It is a sad thing to see men and women who stood courageously, to their everlasting credit, against the repression and suspension of civil liberties imposed by this government in October, 1970—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchand: Is that what you stand for over there?

Mr. Reilly: It is a shame to see people like that turn their coats and support a government whose members, on their record, do not deserve to shine shoes of men such as the hon. members for York South (Mr. Lewis) and Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—and I regret that.

Ironically, Mr. Speaker, it was an NDP spokesman who predicted that Messrs. Trudeau, Marchand and Pelletier would soon become the three most disillusioned men in Ottawa when they took Liberal orders in Ottawa some years ago. I suggest to the NDP that they will soon experience within their own ranks disillusionment on a scale so grand as to rival that of the disappointed and defeated Liberal candidates scattered from coast to coast. At least, disillusion is rampant among those who have not been smuggled up to the public trough to assuage their election wounds.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, are they barking over there because it is time for a herring? I and the members of my party are not interested in any further condition of psychopathology of a political party that has been overtaken by inertia. I am not interested in delving any further into the impediments that hobble the development of my country. What I am interested in seeing, and what my constituents and my colleagues want to see, is a Canada in which it is possible for people to lead happy and productive lives.

An hon. Member: That is what we have now.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, I hope I will be given extra time in view of all these interruptions. I want to see a country in which it is possible for all people to lead happy and productive lives, to find work, to live in dignity and to raise their children in decent surroundings. I want to see a country in which freedom of movement and expression are guaranteed rights, a country in which young people can plan for the future and in which old people can rest in serenity, free from material want. We want to see a united country, one in which all parts of society are treated with concern for their legitimate aspirations.

This kind of Canada is really now within our reach. But we will not achieve it by the kind of performance that we witnessed here yesterday. We will never achieve it by name-calling or by appeals to the uglier side of human nature. We have been invited, along with the new gaggle of Liberal backbenchers that sprung up, as it were, like mushrooms in the nether-most corner of the House, to co-operate in producing some legislation in this parliament. I suppose it is possible. But we will only achieve it if we face the facts, when we become honest with each other and, more importantly, with the people of Canada, when we cannot only identify our problems but can pursue solutions without bitterness or rancour. If we can accomplish this kind of rapport, this parliament could be one of the most productive in history. Despite the remarks of the minister, which I may not accept but which I will note, I still hope that is possible.

Mr. Ed Nelson (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for the opportunity to speak to this assembly so early in the session. As a new Member of Parliament and being new to active politics, I am honoured to represent the people of Burnaby-Seymour, and particularly honoured to have been the one to regain for the New Democratic Party this seat. There is now unanimous representation in the riding, comprised of four New Democratic MLA's and one New Democratic Member of Parliament.

As a new Member of Parliament it will be difficult for me to follow the variety show that we have experienced tonight, robust good humour and bitter acrimony, with the humility, modesty and gentle good nature that characterizes my own nature, but I will attempt to do so.

• (2120)

I would be remiss, Mr. Speaker, if I did not join previous speakers in complimenting you on your appointment and on your conduct of our proceedings. In the words of Oliver Goldsmith—

> And still they gazed and still the wonder grew
> That one small head could carry all he knew

It is a source of great satisfaction to me to note that it was we few, we happy, happy few, we 31 New Democrats, through our esteemed leader, my hon. friend from York South (Mr. Lewis), who spoke first and most unequivocally of the revulsion felt throughout the world at the recent bombing in Viet Nam by United States aircraft. It was most fitting that parliament not be allowed to proceed with its regular business until the feelings of the Canadian people respecting the ruthless slaughter of innocent people were conveyed in no uncertain terms not only to the United States government but to the entire world. I compliment the government on the swiftness of its reply in the form of the resolution presented by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

A European writer, Malinowski, wrote this:

> I once spoke to an old cannibal who, having heard of the great war raging then in Europe, was most curious to know how Europeans managed to eat such enormous quantities of human flesh. When I told him that Europeans do not eat their slain foes, he looked at me in shocked horror and asked what sort of barbarians we were, to kill without any real object.

The old man was right. In these days of modern warfare, the indiscriminate slaughter of innocent people is worse than cannibalism. It was particularly gratifying to me that the motion was supported so eloquently by another new member from the second largest group in the House. On one point, though, I would take exception to the remarks of the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr.

Wagner). His reference to anti-American bias, obviously directed toward our party, was completely unjustified, particularly within the context of the topic embraced by the resolution.

As Canadian citizens who prize Canada's long and honourable world reputation as a country of non-aggression, a country without territorial ambitions, we in the New Democratic Party side only with humanity, as did all parties in the House during the debate on this resolution. I can, however, easily forgive this slight to my hon. friends and to myself on the grounds that the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe is also a new member and, therefore, probably extremely inexperienced.

Mention of anti-Americanism leads me to the consideration of relations within our own country. There are those in my own province of British Columbia who have expressed antipathy toward French-Canadians just as there are, no doubt, those in the French parts of Canada who harbour similar feelings toward English-Canadians. Without going into the historical, cultural or political reasons for such feelings, let me simply say that I, along with hundreds of thousands of other people west of the Rockies, reach out a hand of friendship to our fellow Canadians and invite a reciprocal response. For I believe that the ties which bind us as Canadians are stronger than the differences which separate us.

If I may speak personally for a moment, may I mention that my own family has participated in exchange programs with French families, and I know we are all the richer for the experience. I am pleased to note the signs of increased co-operation among some of the western provinces and Quebec, as evidenced by the talks between the welfare ministers of British Columbia, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Quebec in connection with social welfare problems. Any measure or action which strengthens the unity of the Canadian people is a welcome one to me, for, if I may quote the first Canadian born Governor General of Canada, Vincent Massey;

> I believe that Canada is one, and that if our minds dwell on those things which its hearts have in common, we can find the unity as a whole.

Now I wish to revert to the affairs of my province and particularly to my own riding of Burnaby-Seymour. Most Canadians will have watched the BBC series "The Forsyte Saga" in which the Forsyte family dominated the financial scene in England throughout the fictional generations of John Galsworthy's series, just as western Canada has for years been dominated by the financial might of eastern interests. The main character in the series, Soames Forsyte, drew great comfort in his old age from reflecting that by then all his enemies were dead, had gone bankrupt or were living in British Columbia—the latter, in his view, being a fate worse than death.

Throughout the decades a similar attitude of contempt for the legitimate aspirations of British Columbia has been displayed by successive Liberal and Tory governments. There is, however, a new spirit in the west and increasing evidence that western provinces are determined to seize the initiative in order to bring about much needed social and economic development.

There is also, Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne. In common with other members of my party and with all British Columbians, I shall watch with cautious optimism for the enactment of those measures which appear to hold some promise that British Columbia will, in fact, eventually become a part of Canada. I have in mind the proposals for an improved national communications policy, for increased co-ordination of provincial and federal programs, the conference on western economic opportunities and, in fact, all those measures which are designed, in the words of the speech itself, "to rank high on an agenda for western development". Perhaps I should use the word "scepticism" rather than the term "cautious optimism", in view of the fact that of the 29 bills promised in the last Speech from the Throne, six were passed, 15 were introduced but not passed, and eight were not touched at all.

One of my constituents—not a supporter of my party, incidentally—expressed the feelings of many British Columbians when he wrote:

> If they (the present government) act responsibly and are put out of office on some minor issue it will not bode well for the party which does it, for there are people like me who, though they have taken no part in party politics, are apt to be fighting mad.

He went on to say:

> This is no time for petty issues and minor differences. The country is in bad shape, and we need co-operation in parliament.

I have no doubt that similar sentiments have been expressed by thousands of Canadians to all ministers of the House. The position taken by our party in respect of our conditional support of the present government has been derided by speakers of the official opposition, yet this body has displayed an almost indecent willingness to adopt insiduous measures to bring down the government and would gladly engage in a marriage of convenience or any other kind of marriage in order to gain the power they lust after. They may in time get that opportunity, but let them be patient yet a while.

Anyone with a rudimentary knowledge of British Columbia will see Vancouver as the spout of a funnel through which most of the goods and services are distributed throughout the rest of the province. My riding, Burnaby-Seymour, is a suburb of Vancouver and has a population of approximately 88,000. It is of the inevitable expansion into and through Burnaby-Seymour that I wish to touch on first. The entire lower mainland region, and particularly Burnaby-Seymour, is vulnerable to the unrestrained and opportunistic development of those who would put profit ahead of the quality of life when, indeed, it is possible with proper planning to have both.

Our municipal planning departments are well aware of the problems and have made designs for the planned growth of the entire lower mainland area. In pursuit of planning they have formed the greater Vancouver regional district council which studies such matters as regional planning, transportation, pollution control, financing and public housing. This group recognizes that no one municipality can establish the goal of creating what it terms a "liveable region". There must be a comprehensive transportation system throughout the entire metropolitan area, for one example and, for another, the creation of banks of large areas of undeveloped land in order that there be scope for long-range planning.

Experience has demonstrated that economic and social development on a large scale may be planned by local governments, but without the full and cordial support of both provincial and federal governments they are often, in the words of a well known television hillbilly character, "tossing their hooks into a dry creek bed".

The lower mainland region is rated by those who profess to know such things as the third or fourth most beautiful spot in the world in terms of city, setting and climate. On a clear day one can see the majesty of the mountains which form the ramparts of this strikingly attractive setting. Yet it requires very little vision to foresee the day, perhaps within a decade, when the very mountains and the delta lowlands will, like the Los Angeles area, become the repository of a thick, poisonous and choking smog which will lie like a pall over the highly-populated lower mainland region.

The problem of urban growth and its attendant implications of pollution of the environment is one that should transcend partisan politics. It is a problem that must be the concern of every thinking citizen, for it must be obvious to all who are familiar with the region that time is running out, just as it is running out in other major population centres in Canada.

In 1971, the Science Council of Canada in its report pointed out that cities have only two sources of income, the municipal property tax which is resented by many low income and elderly people, and grants from provincial governments—grants which often have strings attached which prevent innovational development.

Even if the money were available, it is virtually impossible to co-ordinate attempts at co-operative development among cities, towns and villages, some of which have a strong tax base and others of which have virtually none. This government has a unique opportunity to provide the kind of leadership envisioned by the Science Council of Canada when it meets with the governments of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba at the conference mentioned in the Speech from the Throne.

So far, Mr. Speaker, I have spoken broadly of the long-term problem of urban development because of the susceptibility of Burnaby-Seymour to urban sprawl. The residents of Burnaby, and particularly those of North Vancouver, moved to these areas precisely to avoid the congestion of urban life. I believe they are realistic enough to recognize that expansion of the region is inevitable and in many cases desirable so long as it is a planned development, but I am bound to mar the sweet reasonableness of my speech at this point to say that this government has until now shown very little evidence and inclination or an ability to plan, for if one thinks of an economy as a man-made thing rather than as a natural phenomena, then surely it is possible to plan programs that will overcome the abuses of which the government has freely admitted its guilt.

The people of my riding will watch with interest any increase in the port facilities west of the Second Narrows bridge, for it is of great concern to us all that much of our shipping is being diverted to Seattle or Portland. At the same time, many of our residents would frown on unsightly industrial development of the foreshore extending east of the Second Narrows bridge, preferring to develop the natural beauty of the region into parks and carefully planned residential areas. I mention the inadequacy of our port facilities only in passing, because I am certain that this topic will be pursued at greater length by the member for Vancouver East (Mr. Neale) and others.

I should like, before my time runs out, to mention the topic on which I have received the greatest number of representations from my constituents. By far the greatest concern has been expressed over the administration of the Unemployment Insurance Commission. That concern was reflected, you will recall, during the first question period in this House. It seems most strange and wonderful to me that during the election campaign the central issue regarding unemployment insurance was the inconvenience imposed on the subscribers by the unwieldly administration of the plan. I see no change in this emphasis from the individual complaints that I receive or from the group representations. Yet almost overnight it seems that the emphasis has been shifted to the cost of the plan, and additional delays have been imposed through the establishment of section 107 of the act which provides for interrogation by what are euphemistically called "benefit control officers" whose skilled questioning may unwittingly jeopardize the claims of the unskilled applicant.

One would hope that the reference to clarifying certain aspects of the unemployment insurance plan made in the Speech from the Throne would refer to steps designed to simplify and expedite its administration. It seems a fundamental law of human nature that the more safeguards one institutes to prevent abuses, the more methods will the minority of freeloaders find to circumvent those safeguards. Skilled interviewers, not interrogators, abolition of the waiting period and lengthening of the eligibility period could probably speed up payments and lessen administration costs. So far as the much publicized cost of the plan is concerned, critics often neglect to mention that a large portion of that cost is retrieved through the payment of taxes in any case. In this connection I compliment the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) for his humanitarian approach to the plan in his speech this afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nelson: We are all concerned with the problem of retirement, both in the area of the Old Age Security Act and of the private pension plans of companies like the CNR and CPR, and I have no doubt that the government will be hearing more from our side of the House on the inequities that exist in the administration and funding of private pension schemes. Whatever influence I can bring to bear on the improvement of pensions will be based on a deep-seated conviction that any person, man or woman, who has served society for a stated number of years deserves to live out the remainder of his or her life in reasonable comfort, with special consideration for the disabled, the blind, the retarded and, indeed anyone who suffers any handicap for which he requires special attention.

Legislators are prone to attach a number to the age at which a person is allowed to retire, the present number generally being thought of as age 65. Many people begin work at the age of 18, which means that they must work for 47 years before enjoying the fruits of retirement. Little wonder that we have an unemployment problem when people work to age 65 and over and are forced to begin work while still attending school. One would hope that the Canadian people could look forward to the day when a person who has given as many as 35 productive years of service to his country would be given the right to retire with full benefits, whatever his age.

There are many other social and economic problems mentioned in the Speech from the Throne on which I could touch, but let me refer directly to this phrase from the speech: "The social sucurity system must contain incentives to work". In that one phrase, the government has hit directly at a basic problem that confronts so many Canadians who have lost the desire to contribute their efforts toward any government whose sole concern appears to be to worship at the shrine of corporate profits and the great god, gross national product.

The best incentive that this government can display is a basic concern for people, an honest attempt to remove the stigma attached to those who are forced to accept welfare, unemployment insurance and other forms of assistance. Canada is a rich and productive nation, but as rich and productive as it is, it simply cannot afford to support the continuing burden of costs that have resulted from past Tweedledum and Tweedledee administrations.

The Speech from the Throne is couched in vague generalities, but it does at least provide some room for the government to manoeuver within the confines of its outmoded philosophy to provide some redress of the grievances expressed by the Canadian people on October 30. No one expects Valhalla overnight. I do not expect a complete levelling-off of incomes in Canada, nor do my colleagues. Neither do I expect a complete reversal from the haves to the have-nots, as was lightly suggested by the hon. member for Témiscamigue (Mr. Caouette) yesterday. But I do expect, and my colleagues expect—and I believe the people of Canada expect—a fairer distribution of the wealth of this country. In a democratic country such as ours, surely the word "democracy" embodies, besides the freedoms usually associated with it, the freedom from want. The staggering costs of maintaining poverty are surely no greater than the costs of eliminating it, and I urge that the government operate from this premise when and if it considers amendments to the tax structure and the economic and social reforms hinted at in the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. John Campbell (LaSalle): Mr. Speaker, it is truly an honour for me as a junior member to have the opportunity to address such a distinguished group of men and women. May I take this opportunity to congratulate you, sir, and your associates on your election, as well as all those who have been appointed or elected to various posts. I certainly want to congratulate the hon. member for North Bay (Mr. Blais) and the hon. member for Lachine (Mr. Blaker) for a job well done.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I should like at this time to pay homage to my predecessor, Mr. H. Pit Lessard, a man totally devoted to his constituents, well liked and respected by all. Hon. members who have been sitting in the House for some time will remember him. Unfortunately, for reasons of health, Mr. Lessard had to retire and take a well deserved rest. I am sure that for a long time, all those who have known and worked with him will keep a fond memory of him.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, the county of LaSalle is relatively new. It has been in existence since 1968. It comprises LaSalle, Ville Emard and Côte St. Paul. The city of LaSalle forms the largest part. LaSalle has a population of 75,000, 90 miles of city roads, and ranks as the sixth largest industrial city in the province of Quebec. This is the first time a resident of LaSalle has represented the city.

The hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Jamieson) in his words a short time ago said that one is better off to shut up, sit back and listen so that when he does get up to speak he can speak factually and intelligently. That is exactly what I intend to do. At this time I should like to express my most sincere thanks to all the people of LaSalle, Ville Emard and Côte St. Paul who gave me their support and confidence during the last election campaign. I shall do my utmost to work ardently for their benefit and for the benefit of all Canadians.

PROCEEDING ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS—TIME OF SETTING UP OF JOINT SENATE-COMMONS COMMITTEE TO INQUIRE INTO FOOD PRICES

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, among the promises set forth in the Speech from the Throne, one which has most interested us in this group is the one promising that a committee will be set up very shortly to go into the matter of rising food prices. We feel that this measure is long overdue. As a matter of fact, on June 1 last year I had the honour to make such a demand in the House on behalf of this group. I said that because of the way in which food prices were spiralling such an investigation should be set up. At that time we were told by the government that such an inquiry was unnecessary and that Canadian food prices were in line with food prices in other countries.

We were also told by the then minister of consumer and corporate affairs that this might be a temporary phenomenon and that we should watch what happened before anything was done. Later, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) and other ministers indicated that the rise in food prices was due to poor weather conditions. All this was a postponement, but as late as September the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) had not been converted to any change in ideas. In my own city of Vancouver, on an open-line program a woman caller asked him how he could justify his negative and apparently callous attitude to the rising food prices. He replied in the following words:

So if prices are going through the roof, you have a very low roof.

Shades of Marie Antoinette! I may say, Mr. Speaker, that this was one of the reasons the present government met defeat in our province. It was not because of bilingualism but because of high food prices and the high cost of living for people in low income groups. This is why I am concerned about the setting up of a committee to study this problem, and I hope that the message reached the government.

I know there was some gossip that when this committee was formed it was the intention of the government to form it merely to prove to Canadian consumers that they were not being ripped-off. If there is a disposition to set up such a committee for the purpose of proving that the Canadian consumers are living in the best of possible worlds so far as food prices are concerned, and that weather and market conditions will combine to set everything to rights very shortly should there be a temporary aberration, I say that our party will not support that kind of thing.

We are convinced that rising food prices should be investigated. What we need this time is a probe with a purpose, and that purpose must be action. In the four years since the Trudeau government took office, the cost of living has gone up by 20 per cent. A very large part of that rise in the cost of living was due to food prices. Last year alone, food prices went up by 7.4 per cent, and other prices comprising the consumer cost of living index went up by 3.7 per cent.

As a member of the former committee which studied prices, I want to say that almost six years—it will be six years in April—have passed since the tabling of the report of the committee. It is true that certain recommendations of the committee have been met, but some of the most serious questions which were raised at that time have not yet been dealt with. Not all of them were raised in the form of a recommendation.

At the end of our time in that committee certain startling discoveries came to light. I should like to quote part of the committee's report as follows:

Your committee uncovered specific evidence of great concentration of market power. It came to public attention as a result of questions by your committee and disclosed more particularly the so-called Weston empire.

This disclosure was an astonishing revelation and the enormity of the Weston complex surprised even the sophisticated. The far-reaching implications will take some time to assess. The Weston empire reveals for the first time vast holdings and control over food and other related aspects of the economy which will need further investigation to reveal all the implications and to do this, more specific information will of course, be required.

We also pointed out that advertising and promotion had not received our attention in the measure that was required. We said:

The domination of a few large corporations in some sectors of the Canadian economy is clearly evident and gives rise to the question, "is this in the public interest?" Your committee feels that the implications of this question must be fully examined.

[Mrs. MacInnis.]

Our recommendation was as follows:

That the Joint Committee on Consumer Credit (Prices) continue with its investigation of concentration in the food industry.

So far as we in this party are concerned, this is where this committee will begin, with a continuation of the investigation. We in the committee did not get very far with regard to the concentration of monopoly power in the food industry. I want to echo what my colleague pointed out last night, namely, that in our opinion this committee should be established as a special committee of the House. We do not believe in naming people to the committee who are not subject to the control of the electors of this country. We want a House of Commons committee. We believe we in this House could do a better job and better study the concentration of monopoly power. If members in the other place want to be active on the committee, let them come as witnesses, as my leader said, with the concentration of power which a great many of them bring from the corporations they represent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please.

Mrs. MacInnis: I believe I have made my point, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the House that late this afternoon I submitted to the Clerk a notice of motion for the setting up of a parliamentary committee to inquire into food prices. Assuming that this was done within the proper time period, the notice of motion should appear on the order paper tomorrow. I hope it will be possible to call the motion in question for debate very soon after the conclusion of the debate on the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

During the debate on this motion it will be possible to go into the matter of the composition of the committee and its terms of reference in great detail, and if the House supports the motion the committee will be created, and once organized it can begin its important work.

I am sure that all members of the House, and Canadian people generally, look forward to this work being undertaken soon in the interests of Canada generally.

SPORTS—MONTREAL OLYMPIC GAMES, 1976—CIRCUMSTANCE OF SALE OF TELEVISION RIGHTS TO AMERICAN BROADCASTING COMPANY

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I am not at all sure who is going to pronounce the benediction to my nocturnal sermonette, because when I asked a question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) regarding this matter he said it was not his responsibility, and I do not see the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) here.

I should like to say first that I rarely make corrections to Hansard, but I did not say of the minister that he has moved from the black to the green chamber; I said that I welcome him from the back room to the green chamber. I was not trying to be more colourful than those who call him a grey eminence.

Somewhere along the line I may have made a mistake as to which minister was involved, not because the subject is unimportant, not because either minister is unimportant but perhaps because I am advised that this change in responsibilities was made at the time of the cabinet shuffle. Mr. Speaker, that was one thing I did not think very important, because it is highly temporary. The most succinct and perceptive comment upon that particular event, I believe, was that of the Ottawa Journal, which compared the cabinet shuffle with the shifting of the deck chairs on the Titanic. I am also confused about how the transfer was made without a change in the Fitness and Amateur Sports Act, and perhaps tonight or at some later date we will hear more about the reasons for the move.

It is extremely important that somebody accept responsibility for the public interest in the Olympic Games because the Canadian people are very concerned about athletics. They are especially concerned about those international competitions which mean so much to our national morale. I understand that some very important people in the world of sport have communicated with the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and presumably their communications have been passed on to other ministers.

I was appalled to note that in the Ottawa Citizen of January 4 nearly half a page was devoted to anxious expressions about the way one aspect of the Olympic Games was handled, namely, the television rights. I quote from that newspaper as follows:

> Roger Rousseau, commissioner-general of the summer Olympics ... announced Wednesday an agreement awarding United States television rights to the American Broadcasting Co. for $25 million ...
> Shortly after the announcement was made, a spokesman for the rival National Broadcasting Co. in New York criticized the ABC award.
> "NBC continues to believe that the procedures used to award American television rights to the 1976 Olympic Games are contrary to the best interests of the people of Canada, the American TV audience and the Games themselves.
> "The organizing committee's unwillingness to follow the procedure of open bidding raises serious questions which still are unanswered," the network executive charged.

That is a comment by a very prominent media man in the United States, but I was much more interested and much more disturbed by the statement of Alan Eagleson, whom no one could ignore as one of the leaders in the athletic field in this country, who brought sharply to the attention of the minister the way in which Bobby Orr Enterprises had not been given a chance to bid for the television rights. Mr. Eagleson said:

> "We had offered to buy these rights through Bobby Orr Enterprises ... The transaction with the American Broadcasting Company seems a little bit suspicious to me."

> The games rights would have been sold without a promoter, said Eagleson, who is secretary of Bobby Orr Enterprises, executive director of the National Hockey League Players Association, a lawyer, and a representative of numerous NHL players.
> He said that since Canadian taxpayers will have to bear the cost of staging the Olympics "I hate to see $700,000 given away so easily and so needlessly to an American promoter."
> Eagleson said everyone should have a chance to bid.

I call upon the minister to investigate the matter thoroughly. I think it would be extremely serious if a matter so evocative of Canadian interest and pleasure as international competition should get under way under a cloud of misapprehension, and that it should be further clouded by a lack of willingness to communicate with the Canadian people as to what is going on in this particular aspect of the Olympic Games. I should be glad for such elucidation as the minister is able to give with his unlimited knowledge but his limited time tonight.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) and his enunciation of the problem he raised the other day during the question period. I want to confine my remarks not to what he said this evening but to the question he asked the other day, which related solely to the matter of television rights sold by the organizing committee for the 1976 Olympic Games in Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, the organizing committee for the Olympics in Montreal in 1976 has, I am informed, entrusted its negotiations for these TV rights to a committee headed by Paul Desroches, who is otherwise a financial adviser to the premier of the province, which includes Gerry Snyder, the vice-president in charge of finances for the organizing committee, Louis Chantigny, the vice-president in charge of communications for the organization, and the commissioner-general, M. Roger Rousseau, who was mentioned by the hon. member for Hillsborough.

The matter of the sale of the United States television rights to the olympic games, which is the subject of his question, is internal to the organizing committee whose job it is to negotiate these rights. There is no federal agency involved in the sale of those rights and there is no federal agency involved in the negotiation of these rights.

The approval of the contract and the approval of the sale of these rights is subject to the approval of the international Olympic organization. If there are some problems or allegations on the question of the sale of these rights or the contract relating to them, I believe it is the responsibility of the organizing committee and of the international Olympic organization.

FISHERIES—EAST COAST SALMON FISHING BAN—PROVISION OF APPEAL PROCEDURE RESPECTING COMPENSATION TO FISHERMEN

Mr. Tom Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, as reported at page 44 of Hansard, the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Smith) asked the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) about the appeal procedure that there might be for fishermen who were not satisfied with their compensation payments under the salmon ban. I asked a supplementary question, knowing that the minister had written me and assured me that there was an appeal procedure. I asked whether the minister would personally investigate the method that was used under this whole compensation matter.

I am thinking more in terms of Saint John harbour, the Saint John river and the Bay of Fundy, but the minister may wish to say something about the Miramichi and other parts. I am pleased to see him in his place and I appreciate that he wrote me a comprehensive letter about it. For the record, Mr. Speaker, he had his own crest as Minister of Fisheries on the letterhead, which delighted me as one who has often complained that fisheries is downgraded, alongside environment. Other members, particularly the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) and the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather), also have an interest in the area around the mouth of the Saint John River.

There is an interesting history to salmon fishing and the problem surrounding it, Mr. Speaker. It is pointed out that the government should have been taking action on this matter years ago but has only entered the picture on a piecemeal basis. Fishing was restricted, which caused fishermen to increase their investment. Then when they became professionals and should have been making plans for the long term, the minister brought the axe down on April 24, 1972, with a complete ban on salmon fishing in this area and most other areas of Atlantic Canada.

These fishermen lost their livelihood. They were not asking for compensation, but their privilege was taken from them. Consultation was promised but there is not much record of it. We have a situation of extreme dissatisfaction amongst these fishermen. Meetings were held which some of the minister's staff in the Maritimes attended. The fishermen were very worried and objected to the manner in which initial compensation payments were handled. They are puzzled over the further proof that the department is asking in order to get the additional instalment. An atmosphere of confusion now exists between the fishermen and the department.

I do not know whether the civil servants in the field are doing the dirty work of Ottawa or whether they are completely isolated from Ottawa. That is why I raise this question. In addition to all these appeals I have one or two that I will send to the minister. I know the minister will try to look after them in one way or another and that some remedy will result. I think the whole matter needs looking into, because these fishermen were told, "get your documentation in and we will make a 50 per cent instalment payment." That was done early in the fall, and in nearly every case, after payment, the fishermen expected the other 50 per cent of their claims. After all, if you get 50 per cent of something you naturally think you will get the other 50 per cent at some time.

They hoped that they would be paid before Christmas. Then problems arose and they received nothing extra by Christmas eve. The joker was that if total payments exceeded 125 per cent for the area, reductions would take place accordingly. These fishermen acted in good faith. Having lost their livelihood and having been told they would be compensated generously, they found by Christmas eve that, substantially, they would not get the other 50 per cent. That is how the matter rests now.

I am confident that the minister will look into this question and personally cause an investigation to be made. The way this was handled needs to be examined. I believe he should look into it at the earliest opportunity.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment and Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I have no hesitation in saying to the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell) that I will personally look into individual cases which he or other members bring to my attention. I will also review the methods we have used in compensating or in providing a form of adjustment assistance to the east coast salmon fishermen. This situation is unique in that we are helping fishermen financially and, I add and repeat, generously inasmuch as the general practice across the country when closures occur is not to make payments to fishermen who do not fish. The decline in salmon runs on the east coast has been dramatic and we have moved in to assist fishermen. We want to help them over a difficult period and help them to re-establish themselves in other industries as long as they are not fishing.

Basically, the fisherman has been offered one of two alternatives. He can sell out all his assets. If they are valuable, he may choose that route. The assets are appraised by an individual appraiser and payment is made on that basis. I remember that in the Saint John River case, 64 fishermen chose that route and received compensation in the order of $41,000. Another 173 fishermen chose the other alternative, that of being paid annually for a sequence of five years on the gross value of their catch. They can chose the years to be assessed—they can chose any three years in the last half dozen years—and they selected the best years from their records. They received a payment initially and I asked that they be paid as promptly as possible. They sent in an unaudited claim and received 50 per cent of that claim.

Many of them were somewhat generous in the assessment of their catch, at least according to the records which they produced later, and they received, instead of another equal amount, somewhat less than 50 per cent. All of those who were eligible for initial payments received the supplementary amount, whatever it was, on the basis of records, by December 20.

A number of fishermen believe, even though they were given the opportunity to take the three best years in the past and despite the fact that they incurred no expenses because they did not go fishing, that they have a claim. They may believe that they can produce records, supporting vouchers or testimony from witnesses as to sales on the side, and so on, which gives them a claim to further payments. I will personally look into that. I believe in this case we have been both expeditious and generous in our treatment of the fishermen involved.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.15 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, January 10, 1973

The House met at 2 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. REILLY—DISTRIBUTION OF SPEECH FROM THE THRONE PRIOR TO DELIVERY

Mr. Peter Reilly (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter affecting the privileges of the members of this House and of very great importance to Canadians. Last Friday I rose on a question of privilege concerning the advance publication of the Speech from the Throne. I rise on essentially the same matter today but with the addition of some new information which I believe will be of interest to members of the House. I should like to refer to the Toronto Star of Friday, January 5, and read from a column by Jack McArthur, financial editor of that paper and one of the most effective financial critics in this country, in which he says the following:

Investors and investment officials have a multi-million dollar reason today to be deeply disturbed by yesterday's Speech from the Throne in Ottawa.

Their misgivings will have less to do with the content of the speech—by tradition, a general statement of government intentions—than with how it was released and what had been happening in the stock market in the two sessions prior to the address.

Unlike a budget address, the throne speech is usually felt to have little potential for shaking stock prices. The secrecy which surrounds its release is not as intense as when a budget is coming.

That was all too obvious yesterday. Many people knew of its contents several hours before it was delivered. And this time it did have meaning for the market.

Words like "disgraceful" or "scandalous" may be too strong. But nasty phrases are appropriate.

The fact is that before the speech, during Toronto Stock Exchange trading on Wednesday and Thursday, oil and natural gas stocks were battered lower. Analysts said it was because of a rumour that the throne speech somehow would indicate unfriendliness toward exports of Arctic natural gas to the U.S., or toward the building of a $6 billion gas pipeline from the Mackenzie delta in the far northwest.

These are big ticket concerns. They involve some of the biggest tickets Canadians have ever seen. Hundreds of millions of dollars are already being spent to find northern gas reserves which can only be developed soon if gas is sold to the Americans.

There had been a recent drumming of criticism of large resource development in itself; of selling non-renewable resources to the not-so-well-loved Americans; of environmental and social damage which may go with northern development.

The Liberals found themselves running a minority government. Would they try to sidestep these controversies by stalling? It suddenly dawned on Bay Street early this week that this was possible, and that it might be indicated in the throne speech.

This made oil and natural gas stocks look less attractive to some investors. They bailed out, knocking down prices in chunks which shaved many hundreds of millions of dollars from the total value of affected shares.

By late morning yesterday, the stocks of companies like Imperial Oil, Shell Canada and Gulf Canada were disaster areas.

And then began a brisk comeback. Losses were sharply reduced in afternoon trading.

Something else happened about mid-day yesterday. Information on what was in the throne speech began to pour into newspaper offices across the country.

It was arriving by wire with the admonition that it could not be publicized before its release, expected to be around 3.30 p.m. That happens to be the time the Toronto market closes.

Given this indication of relatively slack security, and given that markets were open, it is inevitable that some of the more alert people in the investment community and elsewhere would have known something of the speech's contents before the market closed; that is, before the official release time.

And it was precisely in this period that some petroleum stocks were rising strongly after their earlier collapse.

We may ask these questions:

—were some people buying the stocks because they had discovered, or felt they had discovered, that the speech contained no terrible news about gas, oil and pipelines?

—if so, were they buying from investors who had no pre-knowledge of the throne speech? Were those uninformed investors victimized by a situation—

• (1410)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member and I would ask him to kindly resume his seat. I have doubts as to the procedure being followed by the hon. member. I think he knows, or should know, that the rules do not allow him to make a speech of substance at this time. He should indicate briefly what his question of privilege is. I do not think it is quite in order, and it is certainly not in accordance with the practices of the House, for a member to come before the House and read a long newspaper article or editorial to support the proposed question of privilege.

I am not saying that the matter is one that should not be considered seriously, but I suggest to the hon. member that there are certain limits within which he must stay according to the practices of the House. I would invite him to indicate as soon as possible what the question of privilege is so that the Chair may be given the opportunity to rule as required by the Standing Orders.

Mr. Reilly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will try to be as brief as I can. The question of privilege is, on the one hand, much the same as I indicated last week. It was, in my opinion, an affront to members of this House and to the dignity of this chamber to release the Speech from the Throne so far in advance. Second, it was a breach of privilege and an affront to the Governor General to have the contents of his speech on the street, as it were, before the man even began to read it. Third, Mr. Speaker, this procedure could have bilked investors out of their savings.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Reilly: I have been called a joker for raising this issue, but this farceur, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), moves that the subject matter of my question of privilege be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has indicated that this is substantially, or essentially, to use his word, the same matter as he raised last Friday. Since I received notice of the motion from the hon. member, I had thought that this might provide an opportunity for the Chair, for my own benefit and the benefit of hon. members generally, to review the practice relating to parliamentary privilege. Perhaps this is not the occasion and I should wait for another opportunity to do so.

I really feel that the hon. member raised this matter last Friday. There was a ruling made upon it at that time. He now brings it before the House a second time. In fact, I think it was raised a second time in the debate yesterday by the hon. member, so he now comes before the House a third time and tries to revive the matter by way of a question of privilege.

The hon. member knows that, essentially, parliamentary privilege is raised in the House for the purpose of asking that a debate take place giving priority to a specific motion; in other words, the matter is so important that it should take precedence over other business that the House is supposed to consider on a certain day. The proposition of the hon. member in this instance is that we should debate the motion he has proposed and then it would be up to the House to determine whether the matter should be referred to a committee as he suggests, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River.

My ruling is that the matter was considered last Friday and a ruling was made then. I suggest to the hon. member that it is not sufficient to come back to the House and say new evidence has been unearthed, so that he may raise the matter a second or perhaps a third time by way of privilege. I have made a ruling, and I do not consider that the motion should be put to the House for debate at the present time.

Having said all this, I certainly do not suggest that this is not an important matter. I do consider that it is a very important matter and one which ought to be of interest to hon. members. But that type of question can indeed be discussed in many ways in the House, either in the Speech from the Throne debate or by way of private member's motion. I repeat that it can be considered by the House and debated by hon. members in so many ways other than a question of privilege which would take priority over all other business of the House in this sitting.

I am not ruling that it is not an important matter, that it is not of interest to hon. members, but simply that it should not be debated at this time by way of a question of parliamentary privilege.

[Mr. Reilly.]

MR. BEAUDOIN—PROTESTS RESPECTING CALENDAR PUBLISHED BY POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege concerning a personal attack on the feelings of the French Canadian members and the entire population, especially in Quebec as a result of the publication of a nice red calendar of which I recently received a copy from the Post Office Department.

Mr. Speaker, I bitterly note that St. Valentine, St. Patrick, Mother's Day, Father's Day, Dominion Day, Thanksgiving Day and Remembrance Day are indicated, even Hallow'een. But the feast-day of French Canadians recognized by the House a few years ago and which is always observed on June 24, that is St. John the Baptist, does not appear thereon.

Mr. Speaker, I raise a question of privilege because my rights as a French Canadian and Member of Parliament are slighted by this unfortunate omission of the Post Office Department, and I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That the said calendar of the Post Office Department ceases to be circulated and a new calendar be printed so as to take into account these representations in order to truly respect all cultural groups in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: With the greatest respect, I suggest to the hon. member for Richmond that his motion is one of substance much more than a question of privilege. He suggests that his privileges as a Member of Parliament have been slighted in the circumstances that he refers to. I cannot accept this claim. Other prerogatives or privileges of the hon. member may perhaps have been slighted, but I do not feel that the said motion can be submitted to the House under the Standing Order concerning breaches of parliamentary privileges.

I suggest to the hon. member, somewhat like I did to the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Reilly) a moment ago, that even if this question is of interest to all members of the House, it could be considered under other circumstancer rather than by way of a question of privilege.

ENERGY

OIL PRICE INCREASES—POSITION OF GOVERNMENT—NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the appropriate minister whether it be the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs or the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the increase in oil prices announced by a couple of companies and in view of the significance of these increases for the national economy and the people of the country, has either minister been in touch with the companies concerned and can either minister report to the House on any such conversations or any proposals the government intends to make?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can report that another of the major companies has indicated that it will follow the increases. As far as the eastern market is concerned, the indication from the companies is that the cost reflects the increase in the international price of oil of about 20 cents. In western Canada the cost not only reflects the competitive value of oil but also the cost increase in refinery operations. On that basis we are accepting that these increases will hold.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the end of the minister's reply. Did he say that the government is accepting this explanation?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, we are accepting the fact that costs have increased in the refinery operations and that in due course these costs will have to be reflected in the price of the product.

Mr. Stanfield: May I ask the minister when he is going to announce his national energy policy so that others outside the government and the Canadian people generally can have a context in which to assess this type of price increase? I ask this question particularly because my recollection is that he promised the announcement of such policy by the end of 1971 and again by June, 1972.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. gentleman that I became minister in January, 1972—

An hon. Member: We know it, don't we?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): —so his statement is not correct. However, I expect to be able to put some documents before parliament some time during the course of the spring.

INQUIRY AS TO COMMUNICATION FROM BIOMASS ENERGY INSTITUTE ON ENERGY DEVELOPMENT ON RENEWABLE BASIS

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on this subject. Has he received any communication from the Biomass Energy Institute requesting an answer to their offer to enter into a research and development program for the development of energy on a renewable basis?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I shall have to make an inquiry in that regard and respond to the hon. gentleman.

• (1420)

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, would the minister also inquire of his colleague the Minister of Agriculture and ask him to free this correspondence from the civil service level and bring it up to the ministerial level for decision?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I will make that inquiry.

GASOLINE AND FUEL OIL PRICE INCREASES—INVESTIGATION OF REASONS BY DEPARTMENT OR NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD—ADEQUACY OF SUPPLIES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As three major oil companies have now raised the price of gasoline one cent a gallon and the price of home heating fuel oil by two cents a gallon, while at the same time paying to their producing companies an increase of 20 cents a barrel on top of the 10 cents a barrel increase of last November, has the minister's department or the National Energy Board investigated this matter to see whether or not these price increases are warranted or whether they are based entirely on the fact that there is a shortage in the United States and a more attractive market in that area so that, consequently, Canadians are being asked to pay for the increased price in the United States?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as I just indicated to the Leader of the Opposition, approximately just under half the Canadian market is not supplied by Canadian oil but by offshore supplies. As I indicated, the price increases, I am advised, are principally for the recovery of the increased cost of the raw material coming from offshore. With regard to the increases in the market west of the Ottawa Valley, it is true that the price there is affected by the increased price for western Canadian oil production, in part arising from the markets for this product in the United States.

Mr. Douglas: In view of the widespread hardship in some parts of the United States because of the shortage of home heating fuel oil, in view of the fact that the Alberta authorities estimate that the consumer demand for February will exceed by 15,000 barrels a day the productive capacity of the Alberta fields and the fact that the province is shipping daily to the United States at present over a million barrels of crude oil and condensates, what steps are the minister's department and the government taking to ensure that there will be no shortage of home heating fuel in Canada this winter?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I point out to the hon. gentleman that the source he referred to indicated that the Alberta authorities expected no difficulty whatsoever in meeting Canadian demand despite very high shipments to the United States. I made it clear to the Alberta authorities and the industry, as I indicated yesterday, that the priority so far as the government of Canada is concerned is that existing Canadian refineries should continue to have feed stocks. If the industry fails to take steps to assure this, then, of course, it is faced with the prospect of regulations with regard to oil, as it is now faced with regard to gas.

Mr. Douglas: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A number of hon. members wish to ask supplementaries on this subject. I would at this point invite hon. members, if they can, to limit the number of supplementaries. I have noticed with some unhappiness that in recent days not too many opportunities have been given to members in the back rows to participate in the question period. If the front benches of the several parties, on one side or the other of the Chair, take up most of the time in asking their questions and putting supplementaries, we know who the victims are. It is those who responded so sympathetically to my admonition. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands on a further supplementary.

Mr. Douglas: One final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister has told the House that he has been advised about the reason for these price increases. I assume he means he has been advised by the oil companies. What investigation is the government itself making with respect to these price increases in view of the fact that three oil companies within a matter of hours instituted these price increases? Is any investigation being conducted? Second, is any consideration being given to investigating this matter under the Combines Investigation Act to see if there has been any collusion in these price increases by the three major oil companies of this country?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the advice I referred to was that of the National Energy Board. As to whether or not there may be an investigation under the Combines Investigation Act, the hon. member knows that under the law the director of investigation and research has the responsibility for doing so. I will make certain through my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, that this matter is brought to his attention if he has not already noticed it.

GAS AND OIL RESERVES OFF EAST COAST—ESTABLISHMENT OF GOVERNMENT BODY TO CONTROL DEVELOPMENT, PRODUCTION AND MARKETING

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, in view of the serious situation that exists off the coast of Atlantic Canada, particularly Nova Scotia, brought about by the discovery of oil and gas reserves, will the oil companies be left to decide for themselves how these resources should be developed, at what rate, where production would be marketed and at what price, or does the government intend to establish some authority over the industry to manage both the rate and type of development that will ensue offshore?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I do not understand whether the hon. member is talking about refinery operations that might occur in Canada from foreign feed-stock or the development of offshore fields. If he is talking about the former, there is, of course, the present jurisdiction exercised by the National Energy Board under the National Energy Board Act in respect of the importation and marketing of oil products. If he is talking about the development of the offshore fields, as I mentioned to the hon. gentleman the other day there have been intensive discussions between officials of this government and officials of the governments of the four Atlantic provinces and Quebec in respect of the possible mutual development of that area. I would hope that these discussions could be brought to early fruition in order that co-operative development of the offshore fields can continue.

GASOLINE AND OIL PRICE INCREASES—INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION TO REDUCE TAX CONCESSIONS TO COMPANIES

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the outrageous behaviour of the oil companies in increasing their prices and their profits, is the minister now prepared to bring in legislation to remove some of their very sizeable tax concessions?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think my colleague the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources set out the answer to that question quite clearly.

Mr. Baldwin: You are a little more humble than he is.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—CRITERIA FOR APPROVAL OF PROJECTS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

When his officers are looking into a local initiative project, must they before approving or disapproving it take into account the unemployment existing in the locality from where the project under study has been submitted?

[English]

Hon. Robert Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, one of the criteria for approval of Local Initiative projects is the degree of unemployment. Another criterion is that the people hired by the project sponsors are to be drawn first from the manpower offices in terms of those people on unemployment insurance or welfare. So the answer is yes, the degree of local or regional unemployment is a major consideration in judging these projects as to their merits.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question.

Since the minister says that it is one of the criteria, could he tell the House what the others are which are essential to guide the civil servants when they have to take the decision to approve or disapprove such a project?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. minister might perhaps answer this question briefly, but this information should normally be supplied on motions.

[English]

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, the current criteria have not essentially changed from those that applied last year. It is my understanding that they were released during the period when the House was not in session. I think that information was sent to all members but I will certainly look into the matter and make sure, if that was not the case, that it is done forthwith.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—ALLEGED REFUSAL OF REGIONAL MANPOWER OFFICES TO GIVE INFORMATION TO MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT ABOUT APPLICATIONS

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the new Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Can he say whether any orders or instructions were issued to the local regional manpower offices that they were not to divulge any information to Members of Parliament on LIP applications?

Hon. Robert Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, I have asked the manpower offices to co-operate to the fullest with Members of Parliament from all parties. There has been no directive to the contrary.

• (1430)

Mr. Lundrigan: Would the minister inquire why officers at the top levels in the regional offices are advising Members of Parliament that they are not permitted to discuss LIP applications with M.P.s and that if they are found doing so they will be severely reprimanded?

Mr. Andras: I will certainly investigate that matter because there is no intention on the part of the minister's office or of senior people in the department, as far as I am aware, to convey such an instruction.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT REPRESENTATION AT INJUNCTION PROCEEDINGS UNDERTAKEN BY INDIANS AGAINST JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC POWER PROJECT

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Can the minister inform the House whether the government is represented at the interlocutory injunction hearing in connection with the James Bay hydro project and, if so, by whom?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): We were initially represented as a party named in the initial proceedings, but we have not been formally represented since the situation changed and we are no longer a party to the proceedings.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and The Islands): Does the government intend to arrange for a senior official, a person at deputy minister level, to continuously attend the hearings, and will that person be presenting a brief at the hearings outlining the position of the government?

Mr. Lang: I shall need to check to determine the extent to which officials of the department at a fairly senior level who have been involved in the case have in fact been following the proceedings from day to day. I have not received a report recently but I shall be glad to get the information for the hon. member.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and The Islands): In light of the government's constitutional responsibility toward the rights of Indians and Inuits, has the government formulated a position with respect to the issue before the hearing and, if so, will that position be outlined to the House or to the hearing immediately?

Mr. Lang: The Department of Justice is, of course, in the position of advising other departments of government with regard to the legal aspect of the government's responsibilities and we are in constant touch with the departments concerned in that regard, but it is not the custom of the department to inform other persons of the advice we are giving.

INQUIRY AS TO STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT POSITION RESPECTING ABORIGINAL RIGHTS—REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): May I address a related question, Mr. Speaker, to one of the unchangeables in the cabinet, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howard: If the applauders had known what I meant by "unchangeable" they would not have applauded. Inasmuch as the fundamental question involved in the James Bay affair is that of aboriginal rights, is the minister in a position to make any announcement which differs from that made in the past, namely, a declaration that the government will respect the aboriginal rights of these people not only in the James Bay area but elsewhere in Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I might be given the opportunity at this time to answer a question asked earlier by the hon. member for Kingston and The Islands (Miss MacDonald). Regarding the cases that are before the court, we are not present there because, according to the new government policy, we do not want to substitute ourselves to the Indians who are quite able to defend their rights. As it has been realized, we have made available to the Indians and Inuits all the documents needed and some officials of my department have even gone to court yesterday as witnesses.

[English]

Mr. Howard: I should like to address a supplementary question to the Prime Minister with respect to the response just made by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development who has obviously denied and abnegated the constitutional responsibility of the federal government—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the hon. member wish to ask a supplementary question? He knows he cannot present an argument or enter into a debate.

Mr. Howard: I simply noted, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister was picking up his earphone and I wanted to wait until he had it on.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Howard: And he is now putting it away, which obviously indicates he is turning a deaf ear to the plight of the Indian people in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Howard: I want to ask the Prime Minister whether the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development was indicating government policy when he said, as I took it, that he and the government had no interest in protecting the rights of the Indian people?

Mr. Chrétien: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the minister on his question of privilege, but obviously we could spend the rest of the question period debating the issue. I think the 40 minutes should be reserved as much as possible for questions and answers and not debate. The minister has the floor.

Mr. Chrétien: The hon. member for Skeena implied that we do not have the interest of the Indians at heart. I must protest that he cannot say so. If we are not at the hearing it is because we are no longer paternalistic, as he would be if he were in charge. We let the Indians do what they want to do.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure that all hon. members, including the hon. member for Skeena and the minister, will appreciate that this is a matter of debate between the minister and the hon. member which could go on for a long time. My hope is that we can move on to further questions. However, if the hon. member has a further supplementary he will be recognized for the purpose of asking it and then the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Yukon. After that, we will go on to the next question.

Mr. Howard: May I ask a supplementary question which probably will prompt a reasonable response, and inquire of the minister whether he would be prepared to refer the question of aboriginal rights to a special committee of the House of Commons in order that all aspects of it might be examined?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, in all circumstances the committee can agree with any procedure and if it wishes to set the moment when it will study appropriations for the department on that question, it will be a pleasure to discuss the matter with the committee members.

[English]

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): In the absence of concurrence on the part of the minister in the suggestion made by the hon. member for Skeena, and in the total absence of any mention of the Indian people in the Speech from the Throne, can the minister tell the House today what the intention of the government is with respect to the settlement of aboriginal land claims in this country?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we are always in communication with Indian peoples. On many occasions, we have stated that we will abide by the provisions of the law which the government must assume in favour of the first citizens in Canada. We intend to pursue discussions of those questions with them. I think we would be ill advised to mingle politics with that problem.

AGRICULTURE

CROP DAMAGE, NORTHERN ALBERTA AND BRITISH COLUMBIA—MANNER AND TIME OF PAYMENTS TO FARMERS

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Would the hon. gentleman tell us today in what manner and when he intends to make his token payment to the disaster-stricken farmers in northern British Columbia and Alberta?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the payment to the farmers in Alberta and British Columbia will be as large as any payment we have made to farmers in any other part of Canada. As soon as we receive the claim forms and submissions from the provinces concerned we shall act accordingly.

Mr. Oberle: May I ask the minister whether he is considering further payments to these farmers, because the payment he is suggesting is obviously only a token payment and these people have suffered—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is now making a speech.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): In light of the drastic decline in farm population as a result of deliberate government policies—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Baldwin: —I should like to ask the minister whether it is his intention to change those policies?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

TERMS OF LOAN FROM PENSION FUND TO FIDINAM (ONTARIO) LIMITED—INQUIRY AS TO LEASING BY RAILWAY OF PART OF UPPER CANADA PLACE

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Will the minister inform the House of the terms under which the Canadian National Railways pension fund made a loan to the Swiss-based, foreign-owned corporation, Fidinam (Ontario) Limited, amounting to $33 million?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I was not aware of this. I will take the question as notice and inform the hon. member as to the situation.

Mr. Harney: While the minister has that question under notice would he look into the following matter as well? Has the CNR pension fund contracted to lease back part of Upper Canada Place in Toronto, the building in question, in a manner similar to that arranged between the Workmen's Compensation Board of Ontario and Fidinam (Ontario) Limited?

• (1440)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that this question should be placed on the order paper. The minister having been advised, at the same time he looks into the first matter perhaps he will look into the second.

POST OFFICE

INQUIRY RESPECTING CALENDAR PUBLISHED BY DEPARTMENT

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General.

Since the calendar just published by his department makes no reference to the national day of French Canadians, does the minister intend to have a new calendar printed?

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, for the information of the hon. member, I wish to indicate that already some representatives of the government party have made the same request. I shall simply remind the hon. member that this calendar is not an ordinary one, but rather a document designed to help the Post Office customers to better use the services offered by the department and to offer them guidance with regard to their mailings.

It is true that no mention is made either of the feast of St. John the Baptist, or of St. Joseph, or of the Queen's birthday in that calendar. But can the hon. member give me the assurance that the Canadian people will start sending greeting cards for St. John the Baptist day—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question.

I am happy to see that the minister has been sensitized to the question after the event. However, can he tell the House whether he was aware of the fact before the publication of the calendar and why he did not act then in order to have the French culture get as much respect as the others?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think that the hon. member's question is in order.

MANPOWER

ON-THE-JOB TRAINING PROGRAM—REQUEST BY MUNICIPALITIES TO PARTICIPATE

Mr. William C. Frank (Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In light of the fact that municipalities throughout Canada and in particular the city of London have expressed an interest in and a desire to be included in the on-the-job training program, has the minister given this any consideration?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we are giving consideration to the possibility of public bodies participating in the on-the-job training program. The final answer is not yet available but I will advise the House when that decision is made.

Mr. Frank: In view of the fact that large municipalities such as the city of London are major employers and the fact that the same municipalities are eligible for local improvement grants, this request should be worthy of more consideration—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Hamilton West on a supplementary.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—APPROVAL OF PROJECTS AND DISTRIBUTION OF FUNDS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, in view of the serious unemployment situation, can the minister now bring us up to date in respect of approval of projects in the amount of $50 million under the Local Initiatives Program?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, approvals to date represent, I think, some 70 per cent of the funds which were made available. I really am repeating myself in this answer in view of the details I gave yesterday. I can only undertake to do our very best to have all approvals finalized by January 19. This will represent a situation where applications were held open deliberately and announced as such until December 31. It would have been both unfair and impossible to deal with all the applications prior to that date.

Oral Questions

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—PERCENTAGE OF APPLICATIONS REFUSED FOR LACK OF FUNDS—PROVISION OF REASONS TO APPLICANTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the minister. Is the minister in a position to tell the House what percentage of the applications now received will have to be turned down because of lack of funds? Also, in respect of those that are turned down can he assure us that the applicants will receive word concerning the reason their projects were not accepted?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we will do our best to advise all applicants whose applications are not going to be approved. We will first advise the sponsors involved in projects where approvals are going to be forthcoming. In fact, we are doing this by telephone now because the contracts have been negotiated and the formalities will have to follow. As to the percentage of applications that will not be granted approval, at the present time I cannot give an accurate figure but I think we have on hand applications which could amount to in excess of $400 million whereas the total applied to LIP is about $165 million.

INQUIRY AS TO LOCAL IMPROVEMENT ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, would the minister advise the House, in view of the fact that so many local initiative applications will not be approved, whether he intends to announce a program to supplement LIP called the local improvement assistance program?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): It has been leaked to the press through sources I cannot yet identify that there is some consideration being given to such a program. When and if such a program has been finalized I will be happy to advise the House.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

CLOSING OF CIP PLANT IN TEMISCAMING—APPLICATION BY TEMBEC TO TAKE OVER MILL AND FOR SPECIAL AREA DESIGNATION

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, assuming that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion has recovered from his stirring, if not informative, performance last night, may I ask him whether he is aware of the application by TEMBEC, the community group in Temiscaming which is seeking to take over the CIP mill that was closed down, the application for designation as a special area and for a grant from DREE, an application that was made some weeks ago? Can he inform the House whether he is aware of the application and its status now?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The status is that it is still being examined but I have a wire among my papers which arrived today asking for an appointment. This was also supported by the hon. member for Témiscamingue, the leader of the Social Credit party. I have agreed to meet them. It is simply a question of whether it will be tomorrow or on Friday. We will discuss the whole matter in detail at that time.

Mr. Lewis: I have a very short supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister indicate briefly whether there are any difficulties in the road to making the grant and enabling this community group to continue the plant and the employment that would be available?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, there are considerable difficulties. It would take too long to list all of them. Pollution happens to be one. There is a very serious and costly potential pollution problem. There is also some question of the viability of the project. This is why I would like to obtain more figures from those promoting this venture.

PENITENTIARIES

INMATES' SUICIDES AND DRUG TRAFFIC—REQUEST FOR REPORT BY MINISTER

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the hon. Solicitor General.

Is he in a position to report to the House on the drug affair which would be at the origin of the event that occurred last weekend at the Leclerc Institute?

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, we have learned there were, without any doubt, drugs used at the Leclerc institution in the incident which took place last Saturday night, but to this date the authorities have not found how the drugs were brought into the institution. The penitentiary authorities have been working closely with the RCMP during the last year in an effort to stop the traffic in drugs at penitentiaries. Several new methods have been introduced but in this particular instance we do not yet have all the facts.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege affecting the privileges of members of the House and the use or abuse of the question period. I can understand members on the back benches opposite being given an opportunity to make inquiries of the ministry when they cannot obtain answers to questions during the ordinary course of business, but for a parliamentary secretary to be communicating with another department seems to be stretching the abuse a little too far, especially in view of the obviously prepared answer.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member on a question of privilege.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I wish to remind the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), who has been a member of this House longer than I have, that according to the Standing Orders a parliamentary secretary is allowed to ask questions. Unless the Chair informs me that it is against one Standing Order, I intend to continue doing my duty, which is as important as that of the hon. member for Yukon.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nielsen: On the question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hope it will be a different question of privilege. The hon. member raised a question of privilege which was perhaps more a point of order and the hon. member who asked the question has responded. I doubt that any purpose would be served if we were to use the remaining minutes of the question period in debating the question of privilege.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

ALLEGED REQUEST BY DEPARTMENTAL OFFICES THAT MEMBERS STATE POLITICAL AFFILIATION WHEN SEEKING APPLICATION FORMS

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Is the minister aware that when inquiries are made at his departmental offices for a simple blank application form for DREE the caller is asked whether he is a member of the government side or a member of the opposition? That happened this morning. Can he assure us that all members will be treated equally?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

• (1450)

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am appalled that such a question should be asked, if indeed the implication is what it appears to be. Certainly my suspicion is that it is a matter of becoming acquainted with new members and just asking—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jamieson: However, whether or not that is the case, it is an entirely unnecessary question and I will see that it does not happen again. Perhaps the hon. member will give me the information.

BANKRUPTCY OF VALEWOOD PRODUCTS LIMITED—INQUIRY AS TO INVESTIGATION BY RCMP FRAUD BUREAU

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, in view of fact that a DREE promoted industry, Valewood Products Limited in Renfrew, Ontario, has gone into bankruptcy and that the president and major stock owner had two previous business failures before obtaining a DREE grant, I wish to ask the minister whether or not, in view of the fact that he has just built a new apartment building in Palm Springs, Florida, the minister is recommending that the RCMP fraud investigation bureau investigate this bankruptcy?

Mr. Jamieson: If it were to be a question of investigating the bankruptcy it would be a matter, I would imagine, either for the Solicitor General or some other minister. But I will be glad to look into the details that the hon. member has outlined.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—INQUIRY AS TO ELIGIBILITY OF LOCAL GOVERNMENT DISTRICTS FOR GRANTS

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): I should like to direct a question, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Has a decision in fact been made by his department disqualifying local government districts from being eligible for LIP grants?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I did not quite catch the question. Would the hon. member kindly repeat it?

Mr. Epp: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I wish to ask the minister whether the minister or officials of his department have made a decision which disqualifies local government districts as they exist in Manitoba from being eligible for LIP grants, as they were last year?

Mr. Andras: Off the cuff I would say the answer to that is no. I certainly know of no directive or policy decision that has been made to exclude such organizations. Most certainly municipal organizations are eligible. However, rather than give the hon. member a final answer today I would appreciate an opportunity to doublecheck that information.

HISTORIC SITES

IMPLEMENTATION OF PROGRAM, HERITAGE CANADA—AMOUNT OF FUNDS ALLOCATED

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the fact that last year the government announced a new program called Heritage Canada, which was to be used primarily for the preservation of historic sites and buildings, when will this new program start functioning and what sum has been allocated to it?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, this corporation has not been set up yet. I had announced our proposal to establish this corporation and we hope that during the weeks to come, directors will be appointed and will set the program into motion.

AIRPORTS

PICKERING TOWNSHIP SITE—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF OFFICER APPOINTED TO CONSIDER OBJECTIONS TO EXPROPRIATIONS

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. Has he received the report of the hearing officer appointed on November 9 to consider objections to the expropriations for the Pickering airport?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I received the report last Friday. It consists mostly of a digest of all the objections that were put forward. We will look at the report and make our decision before February 4.

Mr. Atkey: Would the minister be so good as to advise us whether that report will be made available to members of the House and to the public?

Mr. Dubé: I have no basic objection, Mr. Speaker, but I shall confer with my colleagues.

VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL—ROAD BUILDING AND RUNWAY EXPANSION—AWARDING OF TENDERS FOR BRIDGE WHILE HEARING IN PROGRESS

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport following my question to him on Monday. It concerns the Sea Island ratepayers and the public hearing that is taking place on the Hudson Street bridge. Today the minister's department awarded tenders for the Hudson Street bridge. I should like to ask the minister how the department can award tenders before the public have had a chance to be heard?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question, of course, is posed in the form of an argument and it certainly is not in order.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

RECOVERY OF INCOME TAX FROM EMPLOYEES STATIONED IN UNITED STATES

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State who is responsible for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. It is based upon a report made to the House by the Standing Committee on Public Accounts which recommended that the CBC should immediately take steps to attempt to recover $134,573.99 from the 17 employees who were employed in the United States and did not pay income tax. Has the minister asked the CBC to take these steps, have they been taken, and if not, why?

[Mr. Chrétien.]

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, that preceded my appointment. I shall have to check the history of this matter and refer it to the CBC for a report.

CANADIAN CULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS OF BOARD ON MULTICULTURALISM

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the right hon. Prime Minister. Would he please advise the House when he plans to name the advisory board on multiculturalism?

Hon. Stanley Haidasz (Minister of State): Mr. Speaker, may I answer this question? I should like to assure the hon. member that active consideration is being given to this matter and a decision will be made as soon as possible.

Mr. Paproski: The same question was asked of the Prime Minister last year in June or July and we received the same answer. There are seven million people, the silent minority, who would like to know a little more about what is happening.

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Paproski: If the minister wants, I can handle this for him.

TRANSPORT

ASSURANCE OF NO RAILWAY FREIGHT RATE INCREASE APPLICATIONS BEFORE MEETINGS WITH WESTERN PROVINCES CONCLUDED

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. First, I wish to congratulate him on his appointment. I hope he knows one end of a boxcar from another.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): What's the difference? You tell us.

Mr. Benjamin: The difference is that there is a brake end and a non-brake end.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: In view of the minister's discussions with the railways regarding freight rate increases, what assurances, if any, does he have that the railways will not file increases with the Canadian Transport Commission before the completion of the meetings with the four western provinces on this matter?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there has been no formal undertaking in this regard.

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member for Joliette excuse me. I shall give him the floor in a moment, another hon. member wishes to ask a supplementary.

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I lost something in the translation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No, you did not.

Mr. Benjamin: Since the minister did not have formal engagements and has no assurances, may I ask him whether, in view of the proposal in the throne speech to up meetings on this subject with the four western provinces and in view of all the briefs and submissions that have been made by farm organizations and the four western provinces on this subject for over 40 years, he or his department has prepared alternative proposals of any nature for presentation to these meetings?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I know that my department is making a detailed study on this problem, and when we meet with the provinces we shall be in a position to discuss this matter with them.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have just about reached the end of the question period but since it is the special responsibility of the Chair to look after independent members I will recognize the hon. member for Joliette.

SOCIAL SECURITY

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—STATE OF DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN OTTAWA AND QUEBEC

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): I thank you, Mr. Speaker. I bear the Chair similar interest.

I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Referring to the Speech from the Throne, the Quebec minister of social affairs stated that he thought it would now be possible to make progress in family allowances matters.

Could the minister tell us whether he has received new proposals from the Quebec government or whether he at least intends to meet in the near future the minister in charge of social affairs in Quebec?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have received no recent communication from the Quebec minister of social affairs. I have had the opportunity of meeting him and getting in touch with him on various occasions, and I am sure I shall do so again in coming weeks and months.

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed, from Tuesday, January 9, consideration of the motion of Mr. J. J. Blais for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield (p. 52).

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is natural that I should be very deeply touched by the warmth of the reception that I have received from the government benches. They are ringing bells at the moment. They may be wringing their hands before I have finished.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I at once want to say that I never rise in this House without that feeling of diffidence that binds us all. There is a deep relationship of friendship between members sitting in different parts of the House. Always at the beginning of a new parliament it is a matter of pleasure to be able to join in welcoming the members who enter this chamber for the first time, and to realize that these new members have an idealism and a desire to serve that are of so high a quality that everything that we can do to assist them, we who have been here longer periods of time, should be done.

I speak as one who has seen eight Speakers chosen to the chair you again honour, Sir. I have been here a very long period of time, and I can say to you, Sir, what I have repeated on other occasions, that the ability and the capacity that you have displayed make your name one that will always live in the record of great Speakers of this House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: At the same time, I must refer to something that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has done to make it possible for a member of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition to be Deputy Speaker of this chamber. That hon. member is a man who has given himself in devoted service, and has become recognized as one of those members who, when he speaks in the House, has something to say. His knowledge of the rules will be of tremendous benefit to him.

I mentioned a moment ago the relationship between members sitting opposite one another, and I am going to say something at the moment that I have not said on any other occasion. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) has just suffered the loss of his mother, a woman whom I knew through the years, whose philanthropy and service earned for her tremendous credit in the hearts of all who knew her, and to him I extend my deepest sympathy.

Now, Sir, having said those things, I want to say something about the new members. You have been a great Speaker but, in my opinion, you have been hampered by rule changes that were made, one or other of them, under closure, which have had the effect of throttling the membership of this House during the question period. Only recently I was in the United Kingdom and spent several days in the gallery of the House of Commons at Westminster. Ministers there give answers. The first questions to them are questions on the order paper, but the supplementary questions are of a nature most devastating to ministers who are endeavouring to delude—I did not say deceive—endeavouring to delude by using a volume of words to conceal the facts. No matter how short a period or how long a period this House lasts, I would like to see a committee set up for the purpose of reviewing the rules of the House because, Sir, as I look back over a period of almost 33 years in this chamber and think of the greats throughout those years, I can only say that parliament lived before the changed rules so mangled the rights of members as to render the question period an innocuous exercise.

One learns. I think that every day I learn, even now in the autumn, in the golden autumn of my life. This institution is a great teacher. Through the years I followed the course of listening to the maiden speeches of hon. members. I could mention two or three. I have sent them messages after their speeches were delivered, regardless of party politics, for this institution will only be the cathedral of freedom it should be when members express themselves with that capacity and ability that were apparent in the mover and the seconder of the Address in Reply and will, I know, become even more apparent as numbers of these young men and women make the most difficult speech that any of them will ever make in their lives, their maiden speech.

I think, too, of the two youngest members of the House of Commons. Thanks to the legislation introduced by the government we have a member in the House, the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. O'Sullivan), who became a Member of Parliament at the age of twenty.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: May he ultimately become another William Pitt the Younger. I think, too, of another hon. member who represents a constituency with a quadruple name, Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo (Mr. Beatty), who is brilliant and able. It is a great thing when those who have been here over the years see coming into this institution those in their youth who, in the years ahead, will make their contribution to this country. I cannot fail either to mention that for the first time in all its history we have the third brother of a distinguished parliamentary family in our midst. The late Senator Horner has already had two sons in the House of Commons, another elected recently, and they tell me that there are three more coming on!

• (1510)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Up to the present time, there has been no break in the high standard of their political objectives.

Circumstances made it impossible for me to be here the other day to listen to the speech of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). However, I read that speech, a thoroughly statesmanlike one. As I entered the House on that occasion the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was in the penultimate paragraph of what had apparently been a very long speech. Were he here now, but he has left as he so often does, I would refer to that speech. I realize all the difficulties of a prime minister, Sir, and with the greatest sincerity I say to you that there were portions of that speech unworthy of a prime minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Our relationship has always been of a friendly nature, but I must say that for him to drag up that petty, shrewish and niggling suggestion the other day that has won elections in Quebec in the past, was something that I would not have expected to fall from his lips. I thought there was a new reform, that he was a penitent following the election. I have reason to believe that. He explained the reason for the outcome of the election as being the result of an incomplete communication. Well, I wonder what sort of information that million dollar menagerie of his gave him? Desks, subdesks and top desks, and yet he was not getting the feeling of the Canadian people. I hope that one of the first things he will do will be to demobilize that group.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I said that I thought he was a penitent. How many of you saw the picture of him going to Government House to advise His Excellency on the outcome of the election? He was dressed in a leather jacket, with no tie; the nearest approach to being in sackcloth without the ashes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: In the face of all this, he produced that speech the other day. It has been a strange thing to watch the performance since then. In Saskatchewan we used to have bush pilots who flew by the seat of their pants and when they were in difficulty they threw some of the cargo overboard. I am glad the Prime Minister has thrown away some of the cabinet cargo and put others in small containers.

Mr. Speaker, it is a serious matter when the Prime Minister pretends that he has seen the error of his ways. There has been a part reformation in the House. Today, we see some of these ministers! There were weeks and months on end when we could not identify them because they were not here. That was the first lesson that we endeavoured to inculcate throughout the past four years, that ministers should be here and now they are. The quality of the answers they give, however, has not materially improved.

It is interesting that he who condemned the monarchy and ridiculed it has, in the twinkling of an eye, become a monarchist.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am going to establish what he did over a period of time in that connection.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): What is—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, any time anybody wants to ask a question, I will be only too happy.

Mr. Paproski: Get up, Joe, go ahead.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am talking about responsible members. Mr. Speaker, this great transition reminds me of a quadruplet which goes:

The Devil ill
The Devil a Saint would be;
The Devil well
The Devil a Saint was he.

What has happened? While all this has been going on the Queen has been invited to go here, there and everywhere. She was not referred to in speeches from the throne on one or two occasions and while this new approval of the monarchy takes place various departments of government, including the Department of National Defence, have abolished the heading "On Her Majesty's Service" or "O.H.M.S." from their letters. No longer does that appear, but at the same time there is this pretended devotion to the monarchy. I am going to come back to that in the days ahead, Mr. Speaker.

What of the Speech from the Throne? Well, Sir, it was a remarkable speech, different from the grandiloquent parade of platitudes that characterized some of these speeches in the past. It must have been written by someone other than "I am ahead" or Ivan Head. You recall that he published the Prime Minister's speeches or at least wrote the foreword. He said, with approval, "He speaks like poetry". There is nobody more objective than the man who wrote the speeches.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: What was the Speech from the Throne? Mind you, when you take it in the composite it is attractive. I have had something to do with writing the Speech from the Throne on occasion and I admire a piece of work like that. What does it provide? A rehash of the things of the past, an assorted mixture of a survival kit and soothing syrup, but it does not deal with the problems facing Canadians today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1520)

Mr. Diefenbaker: It promises to do so in the future. Mr. Speaker, you judge a Speech from the Throne on the basis of past experience. Without reading at length, may I be permitted to read part of the Speech from the Throne of September 12, 1968. In the speech we are presently considering there is not a word about the just society. In the speech of 1968 we read this:

My Government is deeply and irrecovably committed to the objectives of a just society . . .

On the next page of Hansard I find words to the effect that a just society is vital to the future of our country. Then, the following again mentions the just society. Where has it gone now? What happened? There is now the highest taxation in Canada's history, the highest cost of living, and the highest level of salaries ever paid to senior civil servants.

Mr. Hees: And the highest unemployment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Where has the just society gone? The Prime Minister was asked in Regina on an open line show, "What happened to the just society?" I think it is only proper that the answer should go in Hansard. The answer was:

The next time you see Jesus Christ, ask Him what happened to the just society He promised 2,000 years ago.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Diefenbaker: The listener could not understand that. I thought it might be one of those loose statements you hear about. A few days later the Prime Minister was asked in Wingham, Ontario, what he meant. He was asked if what he said was intellectual and Christian. He said that as far as its being intellectual was concerned, he thought it was, and as to its being Christian he said, "I can talk to Him in a familiar way and He hasn't objected so far." Where is this nation going? I will not deal in particular with the Speech from the Throne except, as I conclude, to refer to some things that must be established and for which there can be no excuse for not establishing. Of course, that remark has to do with western Canada. I am coming to that matter now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: You took a long time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The response from the NDP indicates that the party realizes that sooner or later truth must come out. I am not here to criticize them in any way.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I think they are a very fine group. I congratulate them on the numbers they elected this time. In 1945 they elected 28, and 27 years later they have increased that number by three. Mr. Speaker, I am not a mathematician, but at that rate of growth they should be able to form a minority government by 2048. Even I do not expect to be around then.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am always greatly impressed by the eloquence of the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis). He came to my constituency and spoke. I heard him and admired greatly his speech. I have so told him. I have been greatly interested in following the peregrinations that the NDP has followed since the election. I am thinking of that meeting that took place between the last of the Mohicans from the western slopes of the Rocky Mountains to the city of Winnipeg and the leader of the NDP. These two Oxonians got together and discussed things in general. According to news reports the hon. member for York South said he was telephoned by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) and invited to the minister's office. There, he said, the minister in effect proposed some kind of alliance or coalition between the Liberals and the NDP. Then the Minister of Justice was asked whether he had made a proposal for an "organic understanding"—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: —whatever that is. This process, Sir, used to be called bundling.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: In the early days of the New England states, young men and women could not get together when they first engaged in a courtship, so they occupied the same bed, with a board between them. That was bundling. This is modern bundling, or "an organic understanding". Mark you, I want to be fair to the Minister of Justice, because a minister of justice knows the meaning of words. He said that it was not so much that he wanted to talk about the current situation, oh, no; he just wanted to look into the recesses of the mind of the hon. member for York South and see if he could find out what he thought. Was that not a delightful exercise? There was the Minister of Justice, a political phrenologist.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will not read these reports. A headline says, "Lang on carpet". That is no place for the Minister of Justice. Anyway, he was communicated with.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lewis: Never mind, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South was seeking the floor on a question of privilege, but he has now withdrawn his request. The right hon. gentleman has the floor.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to interfere with a point of order from anybody on the subject of the study of phrenology. Anyway, those two got together and they talked. They shuffled and juggled and jiggled, apparently just short of marriage, and the hon. member for York South decided not to accept any "organic understanding". Well, this was one of the most unusual gatherings that ever took place. On the one hand there was the suppliant, and on the other one who was like Warwick. After all, Mr. Speaker, those who sit opposite live by the grace of the NDP.

• (1530)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not criticize in any way the vote on the motion to adjourn, but I do want to point out something to the members of the NDP and it is this! The leader of the NDP said that as far as he was concerned he wanted to assure that parliament would live, and that is admirable. He wanted to assure that the Liberals should have an opportunity of bringing in their legislation. While I disagree with that, none the less, there is nothing improper about that whatsoever. I do want to point out that the leader of the NDP on November 16 said this:

> It would be improper for Mr. Trudeau to ask for dissolution if he's defeated.

He agrees that he said that, and as a constitutional authority I accept his view.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He went on to state:

> It's his duty to advise the Governor General to call on Mr. Stanfield to form a government.

There can be no argument about that, but what happened when the Prime Minister stood here the other day? He produced a monstrous doctrine that in the event the government was defeated on anything of importance, and he referred to one or two matters, then he would go to the country. There was not one suggestion that if the defeat were within the first couple of weeks, the first month or the first two or three months, as one or two members of the NDP had mentioned outside the House, that then the Governor General would call upon the Leader of the Opposition. There was nothing of the kind. The Prime Minister threw overboard any suggestion that the Leader of the Opposition could become Prime Minister as a result of the defeat of the government.

Mr. Nielsen: Shame.

Mr. Diefenbaker: On the original motion that is now before the House, if the government gets a vote of confidence then as far as the Prime Minister is concerned that is the end of the ball game here. He will stay on and on until defeated and then will go to the country. The Leader of the NDP stipulated this, and rightly so, that if the defeat came within a short time after parliament opened, then the Governor General should call upon the Leader of the Opposition. On the basis of that, I can understand the vote on the adjournment, but today that has been changed and Caesar says: If I am defeated I will go the country. Mr. Speaker, that proposition is one that is a denial of democratic government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The time allotted to the right hon. member has expired. He can continue with the consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I again ask members of the NDP to give reconsideration to their stand in that the Prime Minister has departed from the initial premise that was declared by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis). What is going to happen here is this: the Prime Minister will get his vote of confidence, that is clear now after the vote on the adjournment motion, and whatever he does, more or less, or little or more, if at any time defeated he will do one of two things. First, he may resurrect that monstrous doctrine of 1968 which I opposed to the limit, the right of the government after defeat on a budget item to come back to parliament after three days of grace and ask parliament to vote confidence. He has already indicated that I said that is what he would do when I spoke three days after the election. After all, I have not the time to read Machiavelli today, but I have heard the Prime Minister say over and over again what a great politician Machiavelli was. Machiavelli said, among other things:

> Hence it is necessary for a prince wishing to hold his own to know how to do wrong, and to make use of it or not according to necessity.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He also said:

He knew well how to counterfeit the fox and the lion, which natures, it is necessary for a prince to imitate.

I have many more quotes, but I will use them on another occasion.

This proposition is one that is a negation of parliament. If the Prime Minister would accept the proposition of the leader of the NDP it would all be understandable. If he is defeated within the next two or three months, will somebody acting for the Prime Minister, if any member of the cabinet dares speak, advice that the Prime Minister not then make it possible for the Governor General to call on the Leader of the Opposition? The leader of the NDP put forward a proposition that was thoroughly statesmanlike and constitutional, and the Prime Minister took and threw it overboard when he spoke the other day. What he said was: "I do not care—";

An hon. Member: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not know what word he would use.

An hon. Member: A four-letter word.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He said: When I am defeated, if it is on a matter of legislation which I believe is necessary, then we will go to the country.

I want to conclude by a reference to policies. I note that Radisson and Grossiliers now have company. The Prime Minister has suddenly discovered what they found so many years ago—Western Canada. While I do not like to give special attention to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), he was responsible for one of the finest billboards in Saskatoon.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I cannot put it on Hansard but it was a large billboard which showed the Minister of Justice whispering to the Prime Minister these words, "They listen", but beside it there was a sign which read, "Yield".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What did the Minister of Justice whisper to the Prime Minister? Well, two days before in Vancouver an individual was speaking to the Prime Minister in a most disrespectful and improper way. The Prime Minister was shown speaking to him with his hand up to his mouth, very much in the same way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: What did the Minister of Justice whisper? He may have said: Don't use those words you used in Vancouver to that fellow because that is what the farmers feel you think of them. I am speaking of a four-letter word followed by a three-letter word being "you". That must have been what the Minister of Justice whispered to him.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, do you think the use of that word is restricted only to the Prime Minister?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I mentioned western Canada and I am going to make two or three suggestions. The Minister of Justice has endeavoured to the best of his ability to do something for western Canada, but what will be done? As I read that throne speech, it reminds me of my boyhood on the Prairies when one would see great castles in the air in the far distance; a mirage. There was not one definite promise. I am telling you that you are not going to fool the farmers with mirages. They have been ignored and forgotten in the past few years. What are some of the things that will have to be done? The western farmer has taken a terrible beating. The situation improved in the last few months because of world conditions, but the western farmer has lost from $350 million to $500 million as a result of the policies of this government.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You know, Mr. Speaker, it is music to the gambler's ear to hear the suckers roar.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Lift program was a complete farce. If that program had not been brought in there would have been available to the western farmer at least 100 million more bushels of wheat than they are going to be able to sell. The time has come to put an end to those gentlemen in their ivory towers in Ottawa who tell the farmer what he should do rather than take the advice of the farmer and farm organizations.

I hope I have some support from the Minister of Justice in the following matter. Our province and the province of Manitoba are losing their populations, and they are losing their representation in this House. When I was Prime Minister I think Saskatchewan had 17; we are down to 13 now and in the next redistribution we shall lose another. I think the time has come for an amendment to the British North America Act similar to those amendments which were passed, I think, in 1949 and 1952, to provide that an increase in membership will be provided and furthermore that, regardless of population, our representation shall not go below a set base.

• (1540)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I ask this House and the government to do that which was done in consequence of the representations made by the late Right Hon. James G. Gardiner, providing for an increase in the membership of the House, if necessary, so as to assure that members from constituencies in Manitoba and Saskatchewan will not represent areas so large as to make it impossible for them to properly carry out their duties.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: In that connection, I must say I was one of those who was opposed to the Victoria Charter. If the Victoria Charter had been accepted, as it was by Liberal, Conservative and NDP governments, and had come into effect, Saskatchewan and Manitoba would have been eternally second class provinces because they would never have sufficient population to equal 50 per cent of the total of the four western provinces. In other words, they would have to take whatever was given to them. I never fail to express my thanks and appreciation to Premier Bourassa for what he did to put an end to the Victoria Charter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Now, I shall say a word on the subject of freight rates. They are destroying us. I have listened to the Minister of Justice on this subject. At the end of the war we were discriminated against to the extent of about 15 per cent. There have been increases regularly—horizontal ones—since then. The result is that today the discrimination against western Canada amounts to some 45 per cent. I, therefore, suggest that one of the first things which should be done should be to pass legislation in parliament to roll back, for a period of five years, the general rate structure so that the present discrimination which prevents the kind of industrialization which the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion endeavoured to bring about could be achieved in larger measure in western Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am glad to see reformation, even if it comes awfully late, because deathbed repentance does secure salvation in Heaven. I am glad to see that the winter works program, which was ditched, has been brought back. We brought it in. And I should like to see the Roads to Resources program, which my government undertook, restored.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I speak, now, for myself on the subject of multi-culturalism. The hon. Minister of State (Mr. Haidasz) is a bit tough. The sum of $91 million is being spent this year on bilingualism and $3 million on multi-culturalism.

Mr. Paproski: Shame!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I think the first thing that should be done is to endeavour to restore the ethnic language press in this country which was practically wiped out of existence in consequence of the higher postal rates which came into effect several years ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I know the problem of government. Ministers carry a terrific load. As for the office of Prime Minister, no one who has not occupied that position has any idea of the burden it entails. It takes away that freedom and those holidays which ordinarily one would enjoy.

The subject of inflation was mentioned by my hon. friend from—

An hon. Member: Prince Edward-Hastings.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Two years ago the Prime Minister announced with the greatest of glee that inflation had been licked. Since then, of course, the new Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), who was formerly Minister of National Health and Welfare, said there was going to be higher taxation which would hit the middle classes harder. He did not get any good marks for that from the Prime Minister. But that has been the course—soak the middle classes. I have always been opposed to unnecessary government interference with the operations of the free market. I believe today, on the basis of the experience of the United States, that there should be brought into effect immediately price and wage controls so as to meet the problem of inflation which is today worsening at a rate almost beyond comprehension.

• (1550)

Sir, I shall conclude now and thank all members of the House for the courtesy they have shown me in remaining here through a rather lengthy speech, and for the fact that they permitted me to speak beyond the 30 minutes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to start by extending my congratulations to you on your election as Speaker of this House. Your eloquent turn of phrase, your wit, your patience and your wisdom are well known to us. These are qualities which are known here and well beyond the four corners of this House. I should like also to take this opportunity to congratulate the Deputy Speaker, a man who has a distinguished parliamentary career, a man who I know will serve us well. I suppose really one might put it in these terms: as a House we are to be congratulated on our good fortune. I should like to also take this opportunity to congratulate the mover, the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais), and the seconder, the hon. member for Lachine (Mr. Blaker), for their eloquent statements in leading off this debate. I know their constituents will be proud to learn of the fine progress they have made and the early recognition they have gained from this House for their abilities.

I have listened to most of the speeches made by hon. members and have read some others. I have been impressed by the quality and the seriousness of the speeches. I have been impressed also by the good will and I think the good sense already displayed by this twenty-ninth parliament. For this is a crucial parliament. The pace of events outside these hallowed halls will not wait for us. The particular perspective—and I should like to emphasize this this afternoon—is that as an industrialized nation, as a nation depending quite uniquely on foreign trade and our ability to compete in international markets for our standard of living, nothing could be more damaging than if we were to become the victims of bickering and petty politics, if we were to become preoccupied in an inward-looking way while the rest of the industrialized world went about pursuing its interests and maximizing its competitive position. This would be complacency in default. This would be a mistake of monumental proportions and one for which the future generations of Canadians would properly hold us accountable.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, this is a crucial parliament. It is a time to move on, not to look back. It is a time to seek solutions for the fundamental problems facing the people of Canada, not expedients. It is above all not a time for stop-gap measures. It is a time when the people of Canada are looking to the judgment and the energies of calm men, not to the frantic antics of ambitious men. It is for that reason that I think the perspective and content of the Speech from the Throne are so important at this time.

In my remarks this afternoon, I would like to touch upon that perspective and those measures for which I am responsible. Quite simply, the government's economic objectives are aimed at jobs now and in the future. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), in his remarks yesterday, has already referred to the special measures which the government has taken to alleviate the very special seasonal problems that we, as Canadians, have always had to contend with, and probably will have to contend with for many years to come—those caused by the very nature of Canada, the harshness of our winters, the enormous influence of the seasons on many of our enterprises, the vastness of our land and the isolation of many of our communities. Our situation in Canada is different. It is different from the United States and it is different from Europe or Japan, with their population densities, their large numbers of large cities close together, and the greater mobility of the working man and woman in those large cities and between those large cities.

I do not intend to recite all the measures the Minister of Finance has already dealt with in respect of the special programs. The point I should like to underline today is the future perspective. My colleague, the Minister of Finance, has already indicated on a number of occasions the programs of support. I think the right word is "support"—programs to support the ongoing health and competitiveness of the private sector, the major creator of new jobs for Canadians. I should like to emphasize three aspects of the government's program to strengthen and build a healthy, growing, job-creating industrial base for Canada. The first area is exports and access to markets. There are our forthcoming negotiations on a multilateral basis under GATT which we expect to get underway this year. Second, our bilateral negotiations will continue with the EEC, with Japan and with our great trading partner to the south. Then, third there will be amendments to the Export Development Act to increase the capital of the Export Development Corporation and to raise the financial ceilings for lending and for guaranteed export insurance in foreign operations.

The second set of measures I should like to deal with are designed to assist small business. I want to discuss and elaborate on these, and particularly the new initiatives to strengthen management and consulting services and to improve the access of small business to financial facilities to finance the growth of small business.

The third section of my remarks will deal with the question of foreign control and ownership measures mentioned in the Speech from the Throne to ensure further control by Canadians over their economy by the screening of foreign takeovers of Canadian owned business; measures respecting the transfer of technology from abroad and access to it by Canadian entrepreneurs; measures to increase Canadian participation in the ownership and control of resource projects and, in consultation with the provinces, measures dealing with new direct foreign investment and the sale of land to foreigners.

The Speech from the Throne went on to mention that when these and other measures are taken together they will contribute to the development and elaboration of a coherent set of industrial policies for Canada. I want to emphasize that phrase "a coherent set of industrial policies for Canada". There has been a good deal of discussion in the press and in this House about the industrial strategy question. To me, it is a confusing label. I believe it is also a confusing label to most people. I shall indicate to you the reason. I think most people have gained the expectation that all we have to do to solve everything is to produce some sort of all-purpose grandiose government game plan called, "an industrial strategy for Canada". I think this expectation has caused confusion in the business community and among members of the public at large.

A recent article in the Financial Times of Canada for November 27 makes this point quite clear. It indicates that it means different things to different people. For instance, it raises all sorts of questions with regard to the definition of an industrial strategy for Canada. For example, it raised these sorts of questions with respect to possible definitions of an industrial strategy for Canada: some sort of an all embracing, once in a lifetime statement of a national economic policy; a blueprint for the development of secondary manufacture; a plan to control foreign ownership; some scheme for government intervention to influence the structure of industry; a manifesto for the allocation of industrial resources by government; a policy for encouraging industrial research and development; a system of industrial priorities; and a policy for the development of energy resources. All these particular descriptions have been used at one time or another by one speaker or another to indicate what he means by "an industrial strategy for Canada". I would prefer a somewhat different way of designating our evolving set of industrial policies.

This is not to suggest in any way that the government does not intend to continue and accelerate its work to plan ahead for the future of the Canadian economy and the Canadian business community. I am simply being a little more realistic when I talk about the government's so-called industrial strategy as being directed more toward the development and elaboration of a coherent set of industrial policies for Canada rather than the almost impossible task of producing a master plan.

When talking on this subject, my predecessor, the Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin, spoke about:

—the need for an ensemble of co-ordinated objectives and instruments, i.e., policies, programs and institutions.

This ensemble or set of industrial policies is an evolving and continuing process. It is a process which is going to be flexible enough to meet changing domestic situations and changing international situations. It is important that these policies have a long-term perspective as well as the ability to meet short-term challenges, and I shall have more to say about the industrial strategy for Canada, a coherent set of economic policies, of industrial policies, on another occasion. I want to lay that sort of background to my remarks.

I should like to say as well that my predecessor has undertaken a great deal of consultation with representatives of all elements of the Canadian community, and I certainly hope to continue this dialogue and this kind of discussion.

Now, I should like to turn to the three areas which I have mentioned earlier in my remarks. I will have to abbreviate to some extent what I would like to say on all of them. If I have time, I am also prepared to state a position or an elaboration of the recent initiatives in my discussions with respect to the auto companies regarding their pricing policy, something which I mentioned to the House earlier this week.

The three areas which I would like to emphasize are, first, that of expanding trade. I have already alluded to the trade negotiations. We will be entering, I hope this year, what might be described as round seven of GATT. The Kennedy round, which was concluded five years ago, was round six. We are well engaged in the preparatory phase of round 7. Second, the Export Development Corporation is a particular institution to which I think this House should pay some attention because it has been so successful in moving Canadian goods into the export market. As I have indicated, I will be proposing some amendments with respect to the Export Development Corporation.

In little less than three years, the Export Development Corporation has made loans in support of capital goods totalling over $700 million. This translates into the equivalent of about 100,000 jobs. Indications are that this could increase by another half a billion dollars in 1973 alone—the equivalent of another 70,000 jobs. This phenomenal growth is, of course, a reflection of the growing competitiveness in world markets of Canadian goods, particularly high technology equipment and engineering services. Therefore, in order to ensure that, as our export markets expand, the corporation can continue to provide such an important assistance, I will be proposing substantial increases in the corporation's authorized capitalization and the financial ceilings for the various lending, guaranteed and export credit insurance operations.

I will now turn to the area of small business, and in the course of my remarks I want to emphasize six specific new initiatives in this area. First, I would like to say something about the importance of small business in Canada. Hon. members may know that about 60 per cent of the Canadian labour force is working for establishments having the essential characteristics of a small business. Over 3,500,000 Canadians or 40 per cent of all working Canadians are employed by businesses with 15 or fewer employees.

Small business provides Canadians with many advantages, in addition to the goods and services they produce. I want to emphasize several of them. First, I should say that I regard it as our greatest source of entrepreneurial potential. It strengthens factors of fundamental importance, such as personal independence and private initiative, technical and commercial innovation, and Canadian business autonomy. It is an essential element in regional economic expansion because it has a lasting quality, a growing quality. As the previous figures indicate, small business provides the economic livelihood of the majority of working Canadians.

Generally speaking, the most far-reaching federal consideration shown to small business over the past 25 years has been in the field of taxation and financing, and I would like to review these briefly so as to set the other measures in context. Successive governments have made special income tax provisions for small business. As you know, current provisions are that a tax rate of 25 per cent applies on the first $50,000 of taxable income, of business profits of Canadian controlled private companies. This applies up to an accumulated level of $400,000 of taxable income. The presently outstanding budget proposal is that in the case of manufacturing and processing profits earned in Canada, this tax rate of 25 per cent will be reduced to 20 per cent, effective January 1, 1973.

Regarding small business financing; in the past, the two most familiar to the House since world war II would be the Industrial Development Bank and the Small Business Loans Act. I would just like to emphasize something which perhaps is not generally known about the Industrial Development Bank. I think that it has had a success far greater than most Canadians realize. Its outstanding loans have been increasing at a rate of better than 20 per cent per year. In other words, it has been doubling its outstanding loans about every three years. It is estimated that by 1975 its outstanding loans should be significantly over $1 billion. Neither do I think that most Canadians realize that the bank has 46 branches across the nation, and has been expanding its branch operations.

There is also a wide range of other federal financing programs for assisting both large and small incorporated businesses in specific industries; for example, the automotive industry, shipbuilding, textiles and pharmaceuticals, and for assisting in specific phases of operation such as research and development, export marketing and financing, and the improvement of efficiency.

Most of these programs are administered by my department. They include the program for the advancement of industrial technology known as PAIT, the industrial design assistance program, the program to enhance productivity, the defence industry productivity program, and the general adjustment assistance program, about which I will have more to say in a moment. I am sure hon. members will be pleased to note in the latter case that close to one-third of the approved applications were for companies with annual sales of less than $1 million, and two-thirds were for those companies with sales of less than $5 million. The programs of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion have also been a useful source of financing assistance for small businesses.

But despite the existence of these forms of federal assistance for small business, there is still, in many areas, a need for greater access to capital, and although the situation is being continually improved there are new measures which I would like to refer to at this time. In particular, the Minister of Finance mentioned the Industrial Development Bank in his speech, with respect to which there will be new initiatives. New initiatives might be in such areas as the financing of inventories, and also with respect to greater equity financing. The specific details will be announced shortly.

One major initiative to assist the financing of small business is the extension of the general adjustment assistance program, to which I referred a moment ago. I would like to emphasize that this will be given a different cast. It will be given the opportunity to help firms restructure so that they can take advantage of new opportunities, or improve their international competitive position.

As hon. members may know, the general adjustment assistance program is designed to facilitate access to last resort financing. It was put together to ease the transitional phase for Canadian industry following the Kennedy Round tariff reductions. It was modified at a later date to include textile manufacturing firms. Now, the new shift in direction will make that program available to all manufacturing firms, and to their service industries which significantly affect international costs of those manufacturing industries, an improvement I believe which will be greeted by all hon. members of the House.

There are many other factors in addition to financing which influence the course of small business. I refer particularly to the question of management, and to management consulting services. It is probably true that the management problem is a far greater problem for most small businesses than the financial one, and indeed sophistication in management practices in a small business, in contrast to a big company, marks the fundamental difference between the small and the large firm.

With respect to managerial assistance, about eight months ago my department started a pilot project known as counselling assistance to small enterprises, or CASE. This pilot project was started in Montreal. It uses the services of retired businessmen. I think it has been uniquely successful. CASE's assistance to small business has grown from a slow start in March to 26 man-days of counselling in June and about 109 man-days in November. Since its inception, the Montreal CASE office alone has provided a total of 430 man-days of counselling, including the completion of some 70 projects. A second office has been started in Winnipeg, and we intend to extend the service as a national program. Five new centres will be opened in the fiscal year 1973-74.

The fourth point I want to make deals with the extension of regional offices. We have already restructured the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to give the regional offices much more importance. This change reflects a fundamental shift to local service—a new emphasis on an integrated one-stop shopping service for small businesses. As you know, Mr. Speaker, my department now has eight such regional offices in operation in every province with the exception of Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island. Our intention is to strengthen these offices and to increase their number.

Perhaps it might be of interest to the House if I were to mention that my departmental officials are meeting today, as part of a three-day seminar, with provincial industrial sector experts to discuss present and future problems and possibilities, and I intend to follow up that meeting with a federal-provincial meeting of ministers of trade and commerce as soon as possible. I want to emphasize co-ordination, and our wish to co-operate with the provincial governments in this area.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, we are looking at ways to accelerate the transfer of technology to small businesses, with the assistance of such agencies as the National Research Council's technical information service and, in particular, a beefing up of Canadian Patents and Development Limited.

In connection with small business, the sixth area that I would like to mention this afternoon is tourism. I think most hon. members are aware that tourism is one of the most rapidly growing industries in the country, and one which traditionally is associated with small business. The government has recently inaugurated a new travel industry development program. A major part of the program will provide productivity improvement assistance designed to help the smaller businesses in the industry. This, in turn, will facilitate financing, in which the Industrial Development Bank is playing an important role.

In the final analysis the efforts to assist further any particular sector of the economy, including small business, will only meet the desired result if they are part of a coherent set of measures for increased industrial growth and employment and, secondly, if such measures are complemented by continued initiative in the private sector in all aspects of business operation, such as technical innovation, improving efficiency, financing, and export marketing.

I would like now to deal with the foreign direct investment area. I think the reference to it in the throne speech indicates the importance that the government attaches to it. I might even go so far as to say that it is a key area in the Speech from the Throne. I consider it an area of fundamental importance to the present and future development of Canada. As indicated in the throne speech, the government intends to introduce measures to give Canadians greater control over the development of their country.

The foreign takeovers review bill is to be introduced with appropriate amendments. The new legislation will cover additional aspects of foreign control of the economy. Proposals will be brought forward for: one, the registration and screening of the establishment of new foreign-controlled businesses in Canada; two, measures will also be introduced to provide for the registration of new licensing arrangements and other similar agreements under which a Canadian business obtains the right from a foreigner to produce and sell goods and services and, three, I should like to emphasize in the takeover bill the greater identity of the screening agency itself. In the proposals that will be placed before the House, members will see a different kind of screening agency, one headed by a senior official reporting directly to the minister. In proposing these new measures the government will—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The time allotted to the hon. minister has expired. Is it the wish of the House that the minister complete his speech?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gillespie: In proposing these new measures, the government will not be moving into totally uncharted waters. A number of other countries control the establishment of new, foreign-controlled businesses. Still others, such as Japan, India and Mexico, are concerned about the terms under which domestic firms obtain access to foreign technology.

We must learn from their experience. But our situation is different and this is what I want to emphasize. We have to find our own solution. We have to recognize that as the neighbour of the great country to the south, one which has produced more technology than any other, our legislative programs have to be tailored to our own specific needs. I do not need to emphasize the fact that we have regional interests and strong provincial governments with their own interests. Because our situation is unique, we do not intend to propose to parliament a process whereby we will rush into this thing headlong. In that way, I think we would only end up with a Roman circus, It is far more important to introduce the measures in this important and sensitive area, which is of immense importance to the development of this country, in an orderly way. Therefore, the approach which I shall be proposing is as follows.

First, the foreign takeover legislation. We will set up a review agency and gain some experience in the screening of takeovers. This would be the first step. The second and third aspects would follow. That is to say, that building on our experience and after consultation with the provinces, we will proceed with the registration and ultimately the screening of new investment. I would hope that the third aspect, the registration of licensing arrangements affecting Canadian business, would follow promptly.

My learned predecessor was fond of Latin maxims. Let me quote one which is appropriate to the present circumstances: "Aut Caesar, aut nihil"—all or nothing. This approach has no place in formulating sound foreign investment policy.

The reasons for proposing the registration and screening of new foreign-controlled business are straightforward. A great many Canadians, including a number of provincial premiers, stated that the government's decision to review foreign takeovers did not go far enough. There was some concern that the proposed Foreign Takeovers Review Act could be easily circumvented by a foreigner wishing to do business in Canada by simply opening up a new business.

There are also a number of reasons for seeking more information about Canadian licensing of foreign technology. Technological advance is an important contributor to economic growth. In the United States it is estimated that technological innovation accounts for around 40 per cent of industrial growth; the estimate for Canada is a more modest figure, probably around 30 per cent in terms of the gross national product. Therefore, new technology is one of the most important determinants of competitiveness and export performance.

Canada is, and is likely to remain, a large net importer of technology. Dependence on foreign technology is difficult to measure but various indicators show much the same pattern: some 95 per cent, some say as high as 99 per cent, of patents issued in Canada are registered to foreign owners; among industrialized countries, Canada is first in the percentage of patents which are foreign owned and last in the percentage of patents owned by nationals of the issuing country; an OECD study based on four performance indicators of technological innovation suggests that Canada has the worst performance amongst the ten most advanced industrial countries.

Mr. Speaker, there are three basic ways in which we can import technology: through finished products, through licensing arrangements and through foreign direct investment. That is why I have emphasized in my remarks this afternoon that the licensing arrangement is an important part of this whole package. Licensing agreements are important because under certain circumstances they may restrict markets or they may affect the procurement of goods and services or they may require that any improvements in the product be ceded to the licensor, effectively discouraging research and development on the licensed product. They may also involve dictating prices in a way which would affect the Canadian company's ability to earn a profit or transfer profits. These are the same sorts of restrictions that concern the government in the area of foreign direct investment.

Mr. Speaker, a number of other measures have been taken in this area, but referring to the Speech from the Throne I should like to mention the following points. When the revised Canada Corporations Act is introduced in parliament it will contain a provision to require that a majority of directors of any company incorporated under that act be resident Canadians. This is not a substitute for a general policy on foreign direct investment but will constitute a useful supplement to the review process. It would give Canadians a greater voice in management decisions and make the management of foreign-controlled companies, as well as their foreign parents, more sensitive to Canadian interests.

There is also a good deal of concern in the country about the increasing rate of sales of recreational and other land to non-Canadians. Several provincial governments have introduced or are contemplating legislation in this area. At the next meeting of first ministers, the government will consult the provinces about the feasibility of federal measures to control the sale of land to foreigners. This package of measures constitutes one aspect of the government's efforts to increase Canadian control over our economy. The other important strand comes from efforts to support the development of strong Canadian controlled businesses, such as the program designed to support the development of small business which was referred to above; a reduced tax rate of 20 per cent on the first $50,000 of income available only to Canadian corporations; the deductibility as an expense of interest paid on funds borrowed to finance the purchase of shares of other corporations—to put Canadians on an equal footing with would-be foreign buyers; elimination of federal estate taxes, and the provisions in the present Income Tax Act to help keep savings in Canada. There are other programs such as PAIT and GAAP to which I have already referred, and the IDB. The latter two have been used almost exclusively by Canadian controlled firms.

Let me sum up, Mr. Speaker, and I must say I appreciate the indulgence of the House. The policy measures I have discussed are part of the government's ongoing response to the large volume of foreign direct investment in the country. I do not have to remind hon. members of past steps affecting the major sectors, such as the control of foreign investment in financial institutions, broadcasting, newspapers and periodicals; the establishment of the Canada Development Corporation or the provisions in the tax system to support Canadian controlled business. These measures are not against foreign direct investment in any absolute sense, but seek to recognize the existence of costs and benefits in particular projects, and to maximize the advantages for Canada.

• (1630)

There is no retroactivity or narrow nationalism reflected in this approach, an approach that looks ahead to the future and not backward to the past. The review process is complemented by positive steps to support the development of strong Canadian-controlled business. Better performance from the Canadian business sector will reduce our dependence on foreign investment. These measures, Mr. Speaker, are part of the government's attempt to frame a coherent set of industrial policies which will give to Canadians greater control over their economic future and rising standards of living in all areas of the country.

I would close by repeating that these governmental initiatives in the area of economic policies and programs are designed to bring continued expansion of the economy and further creation of employment along with a greater role for Canadians in their own economic life. They are only one aspect of a throne speech which recognizes the needs of this country and reflects the government's determination to act on those needs.

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I need not tell the House how honoured I feel and what a great privilege it is to be here, in the presence of such eminent Canadians as the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) and great political leaders such as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) and the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette). Not only is it an honour, but it is also my great good fortune to be serving in a house presided over by you, Mr. Speaker. Long before I came to Ottawa I was told of the distinguished way in which you conducted this house, of your courtesy, your friendliness, your good humour and, particularly, of your great abilities under stress and tension. Of course, I am particularly proud to rise as a member of the party led by that distinguished Canadian, that man of courage, great determination and wisdom, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillies: I also want to add my congratulations to the mover and seconder to the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne and only hope that my remarks will approach theirs in eloquence and substance.

I am also proud to be a Member of Parliament representing the riding of Don Valley, a relatively new riding. Only one member has represented it previously. It is an urban riding in the city of Toronto, a riding with all the problems of any metropolitan riding in this country at this time.

May I bring to the attention of hon. members on the government side a particular institution which is located in Don Valley. I am speaking of Glendon College, part of York University. Although I realize fully that education is under provincial responsibility, Glendon College is perhaps unique in Canada in that it is a totally bilingual college. Knowing of the government's great interest in developing bilingual programs in Canada, I hope it will see fit to be responsive to the goals of that college.

The problems besetting Don Valley riding are the problems of Canadians in urban areas; the problems of housing, transportation, and, more particularly, those of economics which are plaguing all Canadians today. It is to these issues I wish to turn my attention this afternoon; to those aspects of the Speech from the Throne that are concerned with the economic situation.

I am always surprised so many people believe that the type of economic performance found in any country, province or town is the result of some sort of magic and that they cannot do anything about it. This may have been true 100 years ago, perhaps even 50 years ago, but it has certainly not been true at any time since 1936 when Lord Keynes published his great book, "The General Theory of Employment, Interest and Money."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillies: It certainly is not true today. The economic position of our country is the result of economic policies we have followed and the economic measures we have enacted; and certainly no one in Canada can say today that our present policies are anything but less than satisfactory. Unemployment, as we learned yesterday, now stands at 6.8 per cent, and will possibly go as high as 7 per cent before the winter is over. Although I am not keen to make international comparisons, the fact is that during the past few years Canada's level of unemployment has been the highest among the industrialized countries of the world. This situation was described by an eminent economist at a recent meeting in Toronto of economists from all over the world as perhaps the most shocking unemployment situation to be seen in any industrialized country of the world.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Gillies: As I said, I do not like international comparisons; they are often spurious, but the fact of the matter is that the unemployment rate in Canada is close to 7 per cent while the unemployment rate in the United States seems to be going down to 5 per cent. This is one comparison one can make with a high degree of confidence, because it is well known that the definition of unemployment in the United States is much the same as ours and the way in which unemployment figures are collected in the United States is similar to the way in which they are collected in Canada.

I need not dwell on the cost to Canada of this unemployment. There is the cost in terms of human misery, as we were told so eloquently yesterday by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). The fact is that there are almost 600,000 Canadians who are not working now and many of them were not working a year ago. That is a national shame. The other cost to the country and to the government, is the cost entailed in the lost production that we can never recover. No one knows exactly what that loss may be. According to present estimates, it probably lies between $7 billion and $8 billion a year. In addition, of course, because of this high level of unemployment, many Canadians are not paying taxes who otherwise would pay them and the tax burden on Canadians fortunate enough to work is that much higher, because they must support the various schemes for helping those who are unfortunate enough to be unemployed.

As if our unemployment rate was not sufficiently shocking, we are also faced with the problem of inflation. We will not see the new inflation figures for another two days, yet it appears that the inflation rate in Canada this year will probably be at about 5 per cent and that it is apparently rising. Again, there is a cost to Canadians in terms of the erosion of their savings, and the suffering of those on fixed incomes is practically incalculable. What is also devastating is that our present inflation rate is higher than the inflation rate of the United States. There, the rate of inflation appears to be about 3 per cent, while ours will be at about 5 per cent. That differential may be of enormous and serious consequence to the future development of the Canadian economy. We all know that about 25 per cent of the Gross National Product of this country is generated through foreign trade and about 75 per cent of our foreign trade is with the United States. If we are priced out of the American market because of the rise in prices in this country as compared to those in the United States, the effects on unemployment could be enormous.

In short, the performance of our economy is perhaps as poor as that of any industrialized country in the world. We suffer from a high level of unemployment and a high level of inflation.

How did we reach this situation? Clearly by following wrong policies. The first great mistake made in Canada was in accepting the proposition that there is some sort of trade-off between unemployment and inflation; that the way to solve inflation is to create unemployment in our economy. This is a proposition that is based on the idea that the reason you have inflation is that you have an excess demand in your economy. One could argue for some time the morality of accepting the idea that you are going to cure inflation by having high levels of unemployment. Aside from that, the fact of the matter is that over any extended period of time it just does not work. The analysis is wrong, the application was wrong and the results have been disastrous. Inflation in this country is not the result of excess demand. In fact, even though inflation could be the result of excess demand, when you have a 6.5 to 7 per cent unemployment rate it makes no sense at all to think that the way you will solve the inflation problem is by cutting down demand. Such a view is simply preposterous.

The cause of inflation in this country is a cost-push situation, and we have to attack the problem on that side if we are to have any sort of success. We can see today the results of accepting the trade-off proposition as a basis for economic policy. We now have in our country rising prices and rising unemployment. We have both inflation and unemployment at the same time, and this is a new phenomena for Canada as it is for most industrialized countries. It is a great mistake to think that we can solve this new type of problem through the traditional use of monetary, fiscal and exchange rate policies.

The second mistake we made in the last few years, a mistake which the Minister of Finance alluded to the other day, was in respect of the time it takes economic policy to work in Canada and what the lags actually are. There is no question but that the government waited far too long to move from a policy of restraint to a policy of expansion after it was clear that the unemployment rate was not going down in the way the government hoped it would. Even today, with an inflationary rate of 6.8 per cent, there is still some debate as to just how expansionary the economy is at the present time. There is a debate as to whether or not we still have some fiscal drag in the economy.

If you take the budgetary surplus for the first eight months of 1972-1973 on a public accounts basis we find it is $759 million. A year ago it was $172 million. I realize there is a difference between public accounts and general accounts, but even so, the fact that there could be any sort of debate as to whether or not there is a budgetary surplus when we are operating in an economy with 6.8 per cent unemployment seems almost incredible. It seems to me we must find ways in order to interpret much more intelligently what the lags in the economy are and how we are going to be able to overcome them.

The third mistake was a failure to recognize the great structural changes taking place in our economy over the past few years. I have heard, as I am sure everyone in this House has heard, that the reason we have high unemployment in Canada is the great rate of growth in the labour force. We have a great rate of growth in the labour force, but it was very apparent in the 1960's that in the 1970's we were going to have this growth. People were already born, so it was very evident they were coming into the labour force. Moreover, we have known that in the past few years we have become a society of cities. We are one of the most rapidly urbanizing nations in the world. We knew the type of jobs people would need in the 1970's would be a great deal different from the type they needed in the sixties. We knew the labour force being developed for the 1970's would be one with a great deal more education than in the past. All of these things should have been recognized and something should have been done about them, but nothing was.

Similarly, we certainly should have seen by 1970, or even before, that we had to consider the impact of foreign investment in this economy and what its impact on employment opportunities was. We certainly should have recognized the role of subsidiary corporations in the Canadian economy and what they were contributing as far as employment was concerned. We have had, and did have, several reports, but little action taken.

There is little chance that we are going to be able to absorb the people coming into the labour force in the future unless we can find ways of increasing our export trade in manufacturing. We cannot increase our trade in exportation in the manufacturing sector of the country unless we have meaningful programs in respect of foreign investment and foreign subsidiaries. Similarly, we cannot increase employment as we must unless we examine the situation in the service trades. But all this is in the past. I would be the first to say that hindsight is always 20-20. The important questions are, where are we going and what is going to happen in the future? All we can go on in that respect is what was said in the Speech from the Throne and what the Minister of Finance said yesterday. It seems apparent from what was said that we are to have some expansionary forces in the economy and expansionary fiscal policies, although we do not know to what extent.

I notice that the Minister of Finance in his May 8th budget referred to the fact that he was worried about injecting too much fuel into the economy; so how much expansion there will be we do not know. We will have to wait and see. The Speech from the Throne did not indicate that the government had rejected totally the trade-off principle, although it did indicate that the emphasis was being put on employment. There was almost no mention in the speech of inflation, other than that it is a world-wide problem, and then immediately there is a reference to a conference on food prices. It certainly seems to me to be naivety to the extreme to think that inflation in Canada is going to be solved by a conference on food prices. I do not believe it is unimportant to have such a conference, but at the same time if this is our major approach to dealing with the problem of rising prices, I assure you it will be doomed to failure.

It has been said there will be a new industrial strategy, and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) dealt with that for a few minutes this afternoon. There has been some suggestion about increasing employment in the service trades. Apparently great emphasis is being put on expansion of winter works programs, which the provincial premiers said as long ago as last August would be too late. Apparently, we are going to see more LIP programs in an attempt to create jobs.

I know that the Speech from the Throne is not a budget speech and one cannot expect to have a detailed outline of what is going to happen in respect of economic policy, but it seems to me that surely in the face of the economic problems this nation faces, problems that are uppermost in the minds of all Canadians, we could have expected and should have obtained in the Speech from the Throne a much stronger statement about the direction this country is going to move in terms of fiscal and monetary policy and in terms of exchange rate policy. If we are going to make any progress in solving the basic problems of unemployment and inflation in this country, we must have a completely new approach to our monetary and fiscal policies. To even pretend to believe that by the sorts of things mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, such as the expansion of LIP programs, winter works programs and so on, we will solve our fundamental economic problems seems to me to be an act of faith which most people cannot accept.

• (1650)

Think of what was left out of that speech. Nothing whatever was said about monetary policy; nothing about interest rate policy or foreign exchange rates. Then, there is nothing in the speech about goals for the Canadian economy, and absolutely nothing about the reorganization for making economic policy. Every Speech from the Throne I have read indicated it was the objective of the government to secure full employment and price stability. These are the kinds of statements one always expects. But at a time when the economy has the amount of unemployment and inflation we are witnessing today, the Canadian people surely deserve more positive statements regarding the methods by which the government intends to achieve the goals they so platitudinously put forward. For several years we have been in a situation in which most forecasts made in those speeches have failed to come true. In spite of this, I do not see anything in that speech about the reorganization of the policy making process to meet the current circumstances.

We have failed to establish an independent short-term economic forecasting unit in this country responsible to parliament, although the projection on which the Minister of Finance based his budget last May turned out to be wrong. He said in his speech then that he expected the unemployment rate to be lower at the end of the year. It was a wrong forecast.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): What about the institute at York.

Mr. Gillies: Surely, it is the University of Toronto.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): How about the forecasting institute at York?

Mr. Gillies: Very good. All I would do is refer the minister to some of my columns in the Star at that time. At any rate, it seems to me that the short-term forecasts have been wrong, and it is not possible to make policy successfully in the absence of accurate information.

The first thing that must be done is to reorganize federal policy making structures immediately so that we might be in a position to have better decisions.

There is nothing in the Speech from the Throne to suggest that the Minister of Finance intends to move to full employment budgeting. Without doing so, it is extremely difficult to develop successfully economic policy. The Minister of Finance says a great deal about the rate of change in the gross national product. When one is dealing with short term economic situations, forecasts of changes in the gross national product are not particularly helpful in terms of the unemployment situation. The very fact that the gross national product has varied so much this year with only marginal effects on the rate of unemployment shows it is not an effective instrument to be used on a short-term basis. What is needed is a projection on the basis of full employment estimates in order that we may determine what deficit or surplus we should be running, so we could be in a position to make immediate changes from time to time to deal with problems of unemployment and inflation.

I fully agreed with the Minister of Finance when he said that solving problems of unemployment and inflation would not be easy. It will certainly not be easy. But this is precisely why the methods described in the Speech from the Throne are unsound. Mere declarations will not do the job. What we need is a whole new approach to economic policy making. We have stumbled along with high unemployment and high inflation. We must be willing to accept new ideas, to approach the concepts of price and wage controls if they should be necessary, to look at the whole question of capital flows and their effect upon exchange rates, to take account of the fact that the structure of the economy is changing drastically. The economy is very different in the 'seventies in its structure from what it was in the 'fifties or in the 'sixties; the Canadian economy will not respond to-day to the conventional use of monetary and fiscal policies as it did in the 'fifties and 'sixties. If we fail to recognize this we are doomed to live for years with unemployment running at 6 or 7 per cent, something which is totally unnecessary.

It seems to me there was nothing in the Speech from the Throne to indicate that the government had changed its mind about the way in which to deal with the problems of the economy. For this reason, I urge every member of the House, particularly members of the New Democratic Party to my left, to join with me and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) in supporting the motion of non-confidence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, at the very opening of my remarks, I should like to join those who have spoken here in this House during the past few days and express my sincere congratulations on the great confidence which all members of this new House have displayed in the hon. member for Stormont-Dundas (Mr. Lamoureux) by electing him for the third time, which I believe is a record, to the high office of Speaker.

I remember with pleasure that when I arrived here in the federal parliament in 1962, it already seemed apparent to all that his ability would soon be recognized.

[English]

My congratulations are also directed to the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) on his appointment to the high office of Deputy Speaker. Certainly, he enjoys the confidence of all members of the chamber, and I wish him well.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I also wish to congratulate the hon. members who have also been elected Chairman (Mr. McCleave), Deputy Chairman (Mr. Laniel) and Assistant Deputy Chairman (Mr. Boulanger) of committees of the Whole House.

As customary, I add my congratulations to the mover (Mr. Blais) and the seconder (Mr. Blaker) of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne for the skill and ability they displayed on the occasion of their maiden speeches and I am sure that their contribution to the proceedings of the House was, on this occasion, and will be in future highly appreciated by all. I wish them a long and fruitful political career.

Mr. Speaker, it is not so easy to achieve a long career in this House, since there are 99 new faces in this twenty-ninth parliament and there were 104 in the twenty-eighth. At that rate it soon becomes evident that the office of Member of Parliament does not carry great stability.

However, I welcome all these newcomers and congratulate them on the confidence they have deserved from their fellow citizens.

• (1700)

A new parliament has just started and the Speech from the Throne brought down by the government is in the opinion of all the best we have had in several years. Of course, it does not give the details of the legislation which will be introduced but practically every subject is dealt with. The document indicates what steps the government intends to take to correct the shortcomings and the errors brought to its attention during the election of October 30 last.

I thank specially the cabinet on behalf of all my constituents for the concern the ministers showed in respect of all classes of the society.

I would like first of all to make a short review of the agricultural situation and you will easily understand why.

To me, Canadian agriculture is more than an industry. It has been and it will continue to be in the years to come a way of life for hundreds of Canadians. Although a lot of things have changed in the organization and production techniques the fact remains that the very large majority of those involved in that occupation are in it because they like it and for them as well as for their families it is a way of life they would not want to give up and that we as legislators must protect.

We, Canadians, are privileged to have a country with a very fertile soil. We are also privileged to have enough men, women and children who choose this difficult occupation the value of which is not always recognized by city people. We must therefore examine seriously the adverse consequences that some of our decisions could have on agriculture in the immediate future and particularly for the years to come. If one refers to the information provided by the 1971 census, one sees that the total number of cultivated acres, as compared to 1966, has again fallen from 174,124,828 to 169,668,614, a decrease of 2.6 p. cent. Furthermore—and this should really worry us—the number of farms and farmers has registered a further reduction during the same period. In 1966, we had 430,522 farms in Canada, and now, in 1971, that is five years later, we can find only 366,128. More alarming yet is the decrease of the rural population, now totalling only 1,489,-565 people, which means a startling reduction of 24 per cent within five years. In Canada the farm population in 1971 represents only seven per cent of the total, whereas it amounted to 10 per cent in 1966 and 12 per cent in 1961.

Mr. Speaker, such statistics should give us pause.

For me, it is clear that we should increase our aid to agriculture, if we intend to check the exodus to the larger centres and counter all the social problems involved.

I am happy with the mention of feed grain in the Speech from the Throne. For four years, we in the province of Quebec notably campaigned to have the injustices suffered by the eastern farmers corrected. The fight is not over, but there is now hope, for the text of the Speech from the Throne is very clear to me, and I trust it is clear also to others.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to quote those lines once more:

The Government supports the principle of an equitable relationship of prices of feed grain to livestock feeders in various areas of Canada—

And this includes eastern Canada.

—It is the intention of the Government to implement before the next crop year, procedures that will ensure the optimum development of the feed grain and livestock industries within Canada.

However, Mr. Speaker, I want to caution the cabinet against a half measure now being developed by officials and which, should my information prove accurate, would be unacceptable to the Quebec farmers. I warn the House that after four years of struggle, I shall accept nothing less than an equitable solution. By taking this definite position, Mr. Speaker, I am speaking on behalf of all eastern farmers who are exasperated by administrative delays and shufflings of all kinds.

If we do not soon get justice, I shall regretfully support the thesis of the Quebec Minister of Agriculture which aims at self-sufficiency, even though I know that it will be very difficult to apply and that it even has a certain percentage of irrational use of resources and energy.

I am now giving a severe warning. Our lack of action in this matter of feed grain has perpetuated an obvious injustice that cannot be further tolerated. This is why we shall not put up with half measures, and I trust that I have been clearly understood.

Obviously, I should have liked to speak about the marketing of farm products, the dairy industry which is very important for agriculture in Quebec, but time is running very short and I would like to deal with several subjects equally of concern for my fellow citizens. I will certainly have the opportunity to come back to this great subject of agriculture.

Mr. Speaker, during the last election campaign the various welfare measures as well as their application and consequences were warmly discussed throughout Canada. Some contend that they are too generous and that they encourage laziness, social irresponsibility while others would want to get more assistance.

Very briefly I would say that people in my constituency are also worried about the sharp increase in social measures and, in particular, they have serious doubts about the relevance of the last amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act. It seems evident that the recognition of illness as an eligibility criterion as well as the reduction of the number of weeks required to receive benefits has disturbed the labour market and made the application of the legislation difficult if not impossible.

The minister in charge seems to have been misinformed as to the future consequences of that legislation as well as the civil servants' ability to administer it. Delays up to five months and a great number of errors lead me to believe that we went too far and too fast in amending the former legislation. The harm is done and it will not be easy to go back, as those who are getting the benefit of the present situation will not see things in the same light. But with a few minor amendments to the legislation and especially a more efficient administration, somewhat decentralized—I emphasize that—things should improve. The administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act should be decentralized. It is too far from people who need it and has become inhuman. It has become the toy of technocrats.

I am sure we could easily correct the abuses and iron out the difficulties we have known during the first year the new act was in force. And those amendments should be adequate in order to improve the situation and make the law and its administration more consistent with the sound objectives the legislation aimed at.

The question of family allowances has also been of concern to my fellow citizens and that is why, Mr. Speaker, they are unanimously asking for the increase contemplated during the last session. However, we strongly oppose the measure whereby the amount allowed to each child would depend upon the family's income. That proposal is absolutely inapplicable. It would lead to abuses and costly and ineffective administrative complications and I totally agree with my fellow citizens on that matter.

They suggest rather that family allowances be included in the taxable income of taxpayers. Overpayments will be reimbursed according to the size of the family and its income. Without being perfect, this formula would seem equitable and very easy to apply. Furthermore, it is a means to achieve the intended goal which is to assist large families with low incomes.

The old age security program has also been the target of harsh criticism. Older citizens 65 years and over and without any income are still experiencing difficulties, especially in cases where one spouse has not yet reached the age of 65. Mr. Speaker, consideration should be given to the advisability of lowering the minimum age of eligibility to 60 for the spouse whose mate has reached age 65. Of course, there might be some requirements in order to avoid abuses. For instance, there could be a requirement that the recipients have been married for at least five years so that older people would not marry younger women, because there might be cases where 40-year-old women would be receiving old age security payments and this would not be acceptable.

I very often receive complaints about the annual guaranteed income supplement. In fact, each year, when people file requests to have adjustments made according to their income for the preceding year, we hear of grievances by people who did not obtain the desired adjustments or what they were hoping for. It is always the same thing and we must intervene. Even though people agree that those who have no other income should receive the guaranteed income supplement, this system discriminates against others who have saved and done without some luxury in order to contribute to a private pension fund.

Afterwhile, they realize that they are being penalized in a way by not being eligible for this supplementary income.

I admit it is not easy to solve that dilemma in a satisfactory manner. On the one hand, we must help those in need and, on the other hand, we must encourage those who are able to do so to fill their needs. There are a few contradictions to it. So we must rely on the pride of people and unfortunately that has a tendency to disappear nowadays.

Of course, the Canada and Quebec compulsory pension plans will produce a long time result that fewer and fewer people will need the old age guaranteed supplement.

Until then, however, we will have to try and improve the present system while at the same time keeping the normal cost of this program and other social security programs within reasonable limits for the Canadian taxpayer who already finds the bill he has to pay too high.

As can be seen, nothing is easy in politics; we are always looking for a right balance. This is what various governments who led this country tried to do and, in the case of social legislation, it is certainly an area where the Liberal governments were particularly active in the past and they will still be in the future.

A lot of work on our part and understanding on the part of all sectors of our society will still be necessary before we reach a reasonable level of guaranteed income for all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, the tradition in this House is that during the debate on the Speech from the Throne, particularly at the first session of a new parliament, the members go over the characteristics of the riding and the population they represent.

So it will be a pleasure and an honour for me to speak about my region of Saguenay Lac-Saint-Jean and particularly the riding of Lac-Saint-Jean.

First of all I would like to thank sincerely all the population of my riding for the trust they have shown once again by re-electing me for a fourth term to the parliament of Canada.

It is with mixed feelings of pride and humility that I shall endeavour to represent them. With humility because I am aware of my weaknesses faced with such a difficult task, but with pride when I think of the beauty and the dynamism of the riding I have the honour to represent for the fourth term.

The magnificent area I represent in this House, with three colleagues, is located 140 miles north of Quebec City. Discovered right at the beginning of the colony, the first homesteaders settled there permanently only in 1836.

Forestry, agriculture and later the development of hydroelectric power, have been and continue to be the basis of the regional economy. These resources have been responsible for the establishment of cities, towns and numerous villages along the Saguenay River and around beautiful Lake St. John. The last census of 1971 showed the total population of the area had reached 265,000 people.

Today, however, we worry in my area. In the last five years we have lost over 60,000 citizens, most of whom were young people looking for work which they could not find locally. Indeed, our large regional industries seem to have reached their peak; they no longer create the jobs required by an ever increasing labour force. The exodus of those young people is a tragedy; if it lasts many more years it will cause serious problems.

The senior governments must at all cost help stem that bleeding away and multiply the job opportunities. Of course DREE gives some assistance but that is not enough. The areas in the vicinity also need additional help. I therefore hope that the decentralization of the DREE administration, as mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, will result in this extra help being given to foster economic growth throughout my riding.

Mr. Speaker, my area is experiencing difficult times. It seems to me that some people would like to cause more trouble. Indeed, it is not by reducing the number of spokesmen in rural areas that we will contribute to solve those problems. However, this is what will happen if the report of the committee responsible for electoral boundaries readjustment is carried out as proposed.

It is especially delicate for me to discuss the matter since my constituency happens to be the one which will disappear if the proposal concerning my area is passed. One might think that I want to save my job by objecting to fewer constituencies, but under the circumstances, the constituents of the entire Lac-Saint-Jean area have unanimously asked me to object to the recommendations of the committee.

Of course I am interested in continuing to represent the people of Lac-Saint-Jean riding, since that is exactly the mission they devolved upon me by a strong majority on October 30 last. But what I want above all, Mr. Speaker, is that the region should continue to be represented by four Members of Parliament and not by three. Whether I or someone else is here after the next election is not my present concern. In fact, it will be up to the people to decide who will represent the area after the next election.

Mr. Speaker, if the proposal of the commission is adopted as it stands, the three ridings of my region will have the highest average population of all regions of Quebec, an average even higher than that of Metropolitan Montreal. When you consider the scope and variety of problems, that is rank, unacceptable discrimination.

That is why I strongly object on behalf of all my fellow-citizens to the reduction in number of ridings in my region and also to the suppression of the name "Lac-Saint-Jean" which has identified the region so well for over three centuries.

I would like to conclude—the time allotted to me is nearly expired—by making a few comments on the results of the election of October 30 last as well as on the membership of this parliament.

Many Canadians have been worrying about the problems facing the economy and the unity of Canada. This concern and the attendant uncertainty were revealed on voting day since the duration of this parliament which is meeting early in 1973 is rather speculative.

I think that the result shows that we failed—in fact all parties failed—to bring in a program for the future which could have put an end to the people's concern.

[English]

Now, Mr. Speaker, if I may, I would like to say a few words in the other official language of my country and tell my colleagues that although I come from a region where the population speaks practically only French, I am pleased to assure each of you here that you will always be welcome in my region. It is a beautiful region and you will certainly enjoy your visit to my riding.

On the other hand, I hope, as a French speaking Canadian, that we will also always be accepted by others in the rest of Canada, and that the long battle fought for the recognition of our rights in this country will finally come to an end for the good of all of us as Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join my colleagues in congratulating you and your colleague on being chosen to the high office of Deputy Speaker and Speaker, very difficult and most respected offices. I congratulate you, and may the Great Spirit guide you in your work.

• (1720)

Before I begin my comments on the Speech from the Throne I should like to give you a little of the background of my family. My purpose is not so much to brag, but to give credibility to what I have to say here today and to what I will be saying here in the future.

My grandfather on my mother's side was a famous Shandalar Indian from Arctic Village. When he was a little boy there were no white people in his part of the country. He was a peacemaker with the people during the surveying of the boundary lines between Alaska, the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. That was in the very early part of this century. He was born about 1850.

My grandfather on my father's side was a Scotsman from the Orkney Islands. He worked for 52 years as a chief factor for the Hudson's Bay Company in the Mackenzie district, in the Peel River country. He also was a peacemaker between the Indian, the Eskimo and the white man. Both of my grandfathers were very good friends and they did much for this country in the early times. My grandfather, John Firth, financed Vilhjalmur Steffanson's first expedition in exploring the High Arctic. He was also one of the first J.P.'s and honourary constable to work in the Peel River country. I hold up these handcuffs to show you Mr. Speaker. They were his, but he never once had to use them because he had the respect of the people, the Indian, the Eskimo and the white man.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Firth: Up in that part of the country my paternal grandfather John Firth, and my maternal grandfather Dinji Cho, were big men for many years. They died only about 25 or 30 years ago. I think they did very valuable work for the good of Canada and for the good of mankind in that part of the country. As a Member of Parliament representing the Northwest Territories and representing the native peoples of that part of the country, I will try to do my best to work for mankind and for Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Firth: I stand here very proudly as a Métis and representing the largest constituency in Canada. And, if I am not mistaken, I believe I may be representing the largest electoral constituency in all the world. I speak of course of the Northwest Territories which has an area of 1.3 million square miles. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that any government in any other part of the world would allow such a stupid situation to exist.

The Commissioner of the Northwest Territories, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) have travelled parts of my country, and they can vouch for what I have to say in that respect. It is an almost physical impossibility for one man to give good representation to that very important part of Canada. You must take into consideration not only the vastness of the land, the harshness of the climate, the difficulty of travel up there, and the extreme high cost of travel, but also the lack of a good communications network, and the fact that there is not only a diversity of languages but also great differences between east and west in the Northwest Territories. I mean cultural differences.

As I say, there are several languages spoken in that part of the world, and today there is still a very high rate of illiteracy. I was indeed most disappointed not to learn from the Speech from the Throne that that situation would be changed. Another omission in the Speech from the Throne that I was not very happy about was that the Inuit, the Indian and the Métis people, the very first citizens of this land were not even mentioned.

In my constituency approximately two-thirds of the population are people of native ancestry. They were at one time some of the richest people in this land. Today they are some of the very poorest people in this land. This is especially so in terms of very bad and dangerous housing conditions, the extreme shortage of housing, and the lack of good community services. As long as this situation continues to exist with the very first citizens of this land being the very poorest in their homeland, I fail to understand how one in this country can say, "I am proud to be a Canadian." That is a disgrace to this nation. That is the truth, and I am sure you all know it. I would suggest that it is especially a disgrace when this country can spend millions of dollars for a pie in the sky, or for something better known as Anik.

If the present trend continues, as it now seems likely it will, with the government and large companies in the south continuing their exploitation of the beautiful north, and with the south trying to make the north into something like the south, with big ugly cities, and all the pollution and other things that go along with civilization, without the people of the north having any meaningful say in the whole matter, then I am sure this country will be in great trouble.

A few months ago Reverend Father Adams of Inuvik, who spent 30 years up in that part of the world, who learned the language of the people and who lived with them, mentioned that if oil and gas lines are built in the north, particularly in the Mackenzie corridor of the Northwest Territories, there was a danger some people up there just might blow up the pipelines, particularly if those people did not derive any long-term benefits from them. I would like to add my warning that that danger does indeed exist.

It was only a few months ago that a hint of this situation was given when the court house, the seat of justice, at Hay River in the Northwest Territories was blown up. Give us six more years of a colonial type of government in the Northwest Territories, give us a few more years of school and job training without any jobs at the end of the schooling or training, give us five or six more years of people from the southern part of the country running our lives by remote control, give us a few more years of insufficient federal representation and I, or anyone else who knows the north as I do, can guarantee that this country will be in deep trouble in the north.

I do not advocate that the Northwest Territories should not be developed; I do not say that at all. I want to make that very clear. I do want to mention two priorities at this time, and only briefly. The first is that the aboriginal rights and native land claims for that part of Canada must be settled, and settled soon. When I talk about aboriginal rights sometimes I wonder about a land deal made back in 1871 between the Hudson's Bay Company and the Canadian government. I do not know who was guilty of the misdemeanor, but some deal took place between three parties without the fourth party involved having any say in it.

We should be allowed to have a more fully elected government in the Northwest Territories, a more responsible and fully elected government. Then, and only then, can orderly development begin. In the meantime, I believe it is important that a good prospectors program, a good incentive program for exploration and prospecting work, should be encouraged at this time in the north. But it should be carried out very carefully, and the people of the Northwest Territories should have some say about where such work can take place. I say this because I think we should find out once and for all if we do have a big storehouse of oil, gas and minerals in that part of the world, to be developed by Canadians for Canadians. On the subject of oil and gas pipelines, I think it might be wise at this time to take a more careful look at the situation and abandon the idea of building a large pipeline, possibly two pipelines, before talking with the people in that area. I think the people of that part of the country should be consulted before such work or such study is undertaken.

I also think we should look at the feasibility of building a railway line rather than a pipeline, and of course, Mr. Speaker, this all would be done only after the settlement of aboriginal rights and the native land claims of the people up there. I do not think the idea of a pipeline is wise at this time, but to some extent I would go along with the idea of building a railway. Canadians are good at building railways, I think, but pipelines are so specialized in nature. There are many arguments in favour of a railway.

I should like now to mention a few pressing needs of the Northwest Territories. One is in the area of housing. I should like to see some funds made available as soon as possible to the Northwest Territories government in order to fully implement the report of the Northwest Territories Council task force on housing. This report was adopted by the territorial council in October of last year in Frobisher Bay, but I understand it has become hung up somewhere along the line.

To point out the desperate need for housing in many parts of the Northwest Territories, I should like to read an open letter addressed to the Commissioner of the Northwest Territories which was printed in a recent issue of "News of the North" which is published in Yellowknife. This letter reads as follows:

Dear Sir:

I feel compelled as both a social worker and a resident of the Northwest Territories to bring to your attention a matter which is causing me great concern. You have no doubt been aware for some time of the critical shortage of low cost housing in Frobisher Bay as well as the terrible substandard conditions of some of our present housing. However, in the event that this matter has not been brought to your attention, I would like to share some of my observations with you.

As a growing community of 2,500 people and a reported growth centre in the Baffin region, I do not understand why there have been no new houses built in Frobisher Bay this year. In fact we have lost six houses to fire this year and these have not been replaced or repaired and now stand empty. People are continually moving to Frobisher from the outlying settlements and yet there is no housing for them. It is not unusual to find new families of eight or nine people forced to move into the already crowded homes of residents where they must live in the hope that a house will become vacant. In the last little while there has been a large influx of young single people coming here looking for jobs; not only are they not finding jobs, but they are forced to sleep wherever they find room.

Not only is there a critical need for new housing merely to accommodate our expanding population, but the existing housing situation is a disaster. A great many people live in condemned substandard housing. In one matchbox which is certainly no larger than ten feet by twelve feet there resides a 70-year old lady, here two grandchildren; and three other related adults. In another one of these units which should have been destroyed years ago, a mother and her two children live with plywood over the windows and very poor heating. In all these units there is only one exit which is separated from the rest of the house by the stove creating a serious fire hazard. In many units plastic of plywood covers the windows and doors to keep out the bitter wind.

Maintenance is almost non-existent. People must wait weeks and even months to have a door or window fixed. Even in some of the larger homes the residents must use gas stoves and patchwork to keep out the wind and cold. One older fellow had to leave the shack which was his home after a storm left six inches of snow in his room. In some houses I have visited, the temperature is in the fifties and people must wear coats to keep warm. Contrary to what many people might think these are not isolated situations, at least not in Frobisher.

The implication from this lack of adequate housing is reflected in the life of the community. One of the highest T.B. rates in the world; seven serious fires this year involving three deaths, drinking is rampant, and past the critical point; family problems have compounded and dissatisfaction among the young people is growing like a cancer. And yet—no one appears to care.

We are constantly hearing about all the positive growth in Frobisher. We receive a one million dollar ice arena. Someone is building a $20,000 royal suite in the apartment complex for visiting dignitaries complete with $900 tea settings and $3,000 dining room suites. Yet the local people must live in dehumanizing, degrading and dangerous housing. Is this somebody's master plan for Frobisher?

I know you get a large number of invitations for tours, but next time you are in Frobisher give me one hour of your time and I will give you a tour which will leave you with a sick feeling in your stomach. I know it gives me that feeling. Along with anger and frustration because nobody is doing anything about it.

I understand you are a sensitive person and one that cares for the native people. It is for these reasons, I am writing this letter in the hope you will use your influence to do something about this tragic situation.

Yours sincerely,
L. H. Thompson, M.S.W.
Frobisher Bay, N.W.T.

Mr. Speaker, I can vouch for the accuracy of these statements. I made my rounds to almost every home in Frobisher and everything the writer has to say is true. There is even a lot more to tell. Therefore, I ask that funds be made available as soon as possible to the Northwest Territories government for the implementation of their housing program.

Regarding the Local Initiatives Program, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the rules leave a lot to be desired, especially where the program pertains to the Northwest Territories. The cut-off date of May 31 is totally unrealistic for the north. I should like to see some allowance made for the fact that many programs cannot be started there until after breakup, usually at the end of May. Ice on the rivers and lakes prevents such projects as airstrips for communities and docking facilities from getting under way. I think this matter should be given consideration.

Another topic that has been making the news almost every fall in the Northwest Territories and many other parts of the country is the matter of search and rescue, a very important topic indeed. Millions of dollars have been spent in years past in searches for lost aircraft, particularly in the Northwest Territories. These millions have been spent in many ways looking for people who were lost. I think a lot of that is rather foolish. It should not be necessary to spend millions of dollars in searches if the money were spent properly in the first place to provide navigational aids, good weather reporting—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Firth: These searches would not be necessary if such services were provided. I know whereof I speak because I have flown commercially in the Northwest Territories for a few years. The flying industry is very important to the people of the Northwest Territories because of the vastness of the country and the lack of roads. We accept aircraft as a means of transportation to a greater extent than most people in other parts of this country. But we do not have sufficient navigational aids or sufficient good weather reporting stations, Mr. Speaker. This situation must not be allowed to continue. We are losing too many lives and losing a lot of the taxpayers' money on searches instead of using it to prevent people and planes from getting lost in the first place.

Another program which would prevent aircraft and people from being lost in the Northwest Territories is in the area of pilot training. I suggest that we could use a good pilot training program in the Northwest Territories through which the native people in that part of the world could be used. I think it has been proven that this would work because of the success of the native pilots we have up there already. The program would not cost too much money as it could be run as a student loan program where some of the money is recovered when the trainee goes to work as a commercial pilot, an aircraft mechanic or mechanic pilot. This is something that should be looked into very soon, Mr. Speaker, as the program we have at the moment is not working out.

To fill another need in the north, a trappers assistance program should be initiated as soon as possible. The trapping industry could be a big industry, as it was before, but certain events have taken the trapper away from his trap lines, such as the building of the DEW Line which provided high wages at a time of depressed fur prices. Fur prices are good now and game is available, but there is no program to help the trapper get back on the trap line. I suggest that the cost to outfit one trapper and help him get back to the trapline would be in the neighbourhood of $3,000 to $4,000. I suggest that some sort of trappers' loan program should be set up to help these people who are unemployed in the Northwest Territories.

Reverting to the subject of roads and highways, Mr. Speaker, I should like to mention the need for a highway in northern Alberta. This is not part of my constituency but such a highway would tie in with the Mackenzie highway system.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Firth: The road that I am talking about would benefit the towns of Fort McMurray, Fort Chipewyan, Fort Smith, Pine Point, Hay River and that area. The road would be an all-weather highway from Fort McMurray to Fort Chipewyan and Fort Smith. It would, as I say, tie in with the Mackenzie Highway system. There is a great need for this road. I do not think it would be difficult to do, and ought to be done as soon as possible. I think it would be a wise move if either the Alberta government or the federal government were to build that road, since it would help to bring down the high cost of living in certain areas and also contribute to the tourist industry.

• (1740)

To sum up my remarks, Mr. Speaker, what I should like to see done for the Northwest Territories and its people is as follows: I should like to see the aboriginal rights and land claims of the native peoples of that part of the country settled. As I said earlier, this is important and in the next few days I hope to be introducing bills on this subject. Then, I should like to see one or two more constituencies created in the Northwest Territories so that the area could be represented by two or possibly three Members of Parliament. Finally, I should like the government to consider giving us more responsibility in governing our own affairs by replacing our colonial type of administration with a fully elected territorial council.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Firth: Then, we could move forward to a well planned, orderly, industrial, social and economic development of the Northwest Territories and, possibly, to provincial status.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, despite what my father may have said in his last speech, you will forgive me for not speaking to you in Ukranian. Unhappily, years have gone by and I have lost practice of this language.

Nevertheless, you will understand how excited I am to take the floor for the first time in this House, knowing the qualities and the competence of all my colleagues. One feels very small and nervous when one has to take the floor.

Mr. Speaker, like those who spoke before me, I wish to take advantage of the first opportunity to congratulate you as well as your deputies. I wish you had been beside me, like at the opening of the session, in order to benefit from your advice about Standing Orders and the procedures of this House. However, I know your fairness and I understand that, even from your chair, you will be able if not to advise me at least to show tolerance towards me and all the new members.

Mr. Speaker, given the very special circumstances which make me sit in this House during the same session and at the same time as my father, I wish to take advantage of this opportunity to thank him for all he has done for me. Without his efforts, both physical and intellectual, I should certainly not be here today to represent the people from Charlevoix. His determination, his work and his earnestness have been and continue to be a source of inspiration for all of us, especially for me. If a politician was able to defend and represent the essence of Canadian unity, I think he is the most outstanding example in Canada and that he still has a lot to teach, especially to the Progressive Conservative members.

I note with pleasure that, according to his habits, he can still criticize his opponents' actions, but unlike the other leaders of opposition parties, I must admit that his criticism is always followed by positive suggestions designed to improve situations. Therefore, I hope, Mr. Speaker, to be in a position to follow his example and that I will be given an opportunity to remain as deeply humane as he was.

Mr. Speaker, what strikes me particularly in the Speech from the Throne is the ease with which the party in office can write something and act in a thoroughly opposite way. Mention is made of equality of opportunities for all Canadians, of social justice. However, if ever one party acted dishonestly during the last election that party was indeed the Liberal party. At the very moment speeches mentioned justice, respect for the individual, respect for the law, mayors in parishes and provincial civil servants were being used to implement campaign patronage.

For instance, in La Malbaie, the social welfare cheques were delivered from door to door, on Sunday night, on the eve of the vote. And in Saint-Féréol, on voting day the mayor was driving the electors in his car, while providing liquor. Of course, I will admit that to vote Liberal, one has to be somewhat intoxicated, but this cannot be called justice.

Mr. Speaker, when people have money, they think they are allowed to do anything. They will even offer $50 per family to get votes. Then, on the opening of parliament, equality of opportunities is being extolled. Mr. Speaker, I must confess that in the Speech from the Throne I should have like to see the government pledging itself to give up all electoral gangsterism and to promote once for all a sound and honest democracy. But, on the contrary, the election is hardly over that the defeated Liberal candidate travels through the constituency and tells the people, and I quote his words:

> If you do not get on our bandwagon, your local initiative project will be rejected, and I will see to it personally.

• (1750)

Mr. Speaker, these things happen in Charlevoix. The guilty ones are the Liberals who are now promising equality for all. I must say that as far as honesty and respect for democracy are concerned, I have seen better.

Mr. Speaker, I would hope that the Speech from the Throne will not be, as usual, a screen of hypocrisy, but the indication of a new government orientation. Whatever is being said by some experts, I think there is always room for rehabilitation as long as the brain is not too badly affected.

Mr. Speaker, on the subject of the Speech from the Throne, I can detect the likelihood of a conference between Quebec and Ottawa as the government wishes to, and I quote:

—increase employment opportunities in Canada.

And the only genuine expert in the matter is in Quebec. I therefore hope that the federal experience will not end up as that of Quebec with "Bob the job".

However, I would like to point out to the government that in a society such as ours, it would be high time for the authorities to refrain from hoodwinking the people and admitting that we have reached cross-roads. Either automation is encouraged and administration is planned so as to enable the individuals to profit by the technique used as a substitute for work through additional social measures, or automation is restricted and the individuals remain enslaved to manual labour.

It is quite well to promise jobs, but it would be proper to recognize the human genius and consider the drastic change due to machinery. It rests with the government to make possible changes, but instead of thinking it delights in the electoral demagogy of irresponsible promises. They promise an expanding economy, but they deny to the citizens of a whole riding even the right to live. They talk about aid to tourism, while at Pointe-au-Pic, a port in my riding—a natural oasis for tourists—they refuse access to this place to tourists. They spend millions to create parks and they forget to develop natural tourist attractions on the shores of the St. Lawrence.

In order to get votes, at Rivière-du-Loup, they invest—or rather I should say that they sink—$12 million in a place where sardines are stranded, while on the other shore of the river, the mere fact of improving a wharf would facilitate the development of a sea port to accommodate the biggest ships, as well as smaller ones.

For the past 15 years, they abandon wharfs in Charlevoix. Some are cut in half, others are breaking down at the bottom, under the action of erosion and sink into the river, a situation that has been experienced for the past 15 years. But finally here we have the government undertaking in the Speech from the Throne to encourage tourism. So we hope that, contrary to his wont, the leader of the government will accept to visit the riding of Charlevoix to become aware of the already existing but undeveloped touristic possibilities and the amount of investment needed to make this area of the country profitable for the population which has now been reduced to asking for the designation of special area.

Mr. Speaker, reducing regional disparities, checking excessive urban development, those are reasons that lead me to suggest to the government that it become aware of the possibilities offered by the riding of Charlevoix so that it may keep its promises.

Now that they have put an end to the ferry service at Les Escoumins, which is unfair to forest producers, they are not sure whether they will provide the grants needed for the maintenance of the Forestville airport, thus depriving citizens of transportation in case of emergency. They let the sea invade the land in Portneuf because they would rather study erosion than prevent landslides by merely building a retaining wall. People like the inhabitants of Île-aux-Coudres are left without emergency transportation service, because the authorities will not repair the piers so as to enable ships to dock along the island at night. Should an emergency arise, people are left to die because they are not important, or so it seems. Such was the attitude of the government in the past. Those are all examples, Mr. Speaker, of opportunities for the government to create jobs for people and to reduce regional disparities.

Mr. Speaker, the present state of mind of the minority government and the good will it demonstrated in the Speech from the Throne make me feel optimistic about the development of my riding but only the future will prove the seriousness of the government and its will to help the people, in particular those of Charlevoix.

In closing, I should like to remind my colleagues that, if before October 30 we were all candidates for a party, on the night of October 30 we were elected, by democratic process, members of a riding; but, and this I stress, once elected we not only represent those who voted for us but all Canadians. I trust that each one of us will remember, during the debates, when votes are taken, that parliament represents every single elector in each of our ridings.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the voters of the riding of Charlevoix for electing me and I hope to prove to them that they made the right decision by offering my services to each and every one, whether they vote for me or not. As member for Charlevoix I intend to serve all the people.

[English]

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is my turn to speak but in view of the time perhaps I might be permitted to call it six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is it agreed that we call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It being six o'clock this House stands adjourned until eleven o'clock tomorrow morning.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, January 11, 1973

The House met at 11 a.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

ENERGY

SECURITY OF CANADIAN OIL AND GAS SUPPLIES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in view of the mounting energy crisis in the United States, with its wide-ranging implications for Canadians in terms of fuel prices and fuel supplies, and having in mind the negotiations being conducted at present regarding commitments of Canadian oil to the United States market, it is imperative to assure the people of Canada of the security of Canadian supplies of oil and natural gas. I therefore ask for unanimous consent under Standing Order 43 to move the following motion:

That the matter of the security of Canadian oil and gas supplies be referred to a special committee of this House for investigation and report, and that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Chairman of the National Energy Board be required to appear and provide the committee with all relevant information.

Mr. Speaker: This motion is proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43. It requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The hon. member's motion cannot be put.

CRIMINAL CODE

REINSTATEMENT OF LAW RELATING TO CAPITAL PUNISHMENT THAT EXISTED PRIOR TO DECEMBER 30, 1972

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-2, to amend the Criminal Code.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

FOOD PRICES

MOTION TO APPOINT SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE OF SENATE AND HOUSE

On the order: Government Notices of Motions:

January 9, 1973—the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs:

That a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons be appointed to inquire into and make recommendations upon the trends in food prices in Canada and factors domestic and foreign which account for these trends;

That 20 members of the House of Commons to be designated by the House at a later date be the members of the Special Joint Committee and that Standing Order 65(5) of the House of Commons be suspended in relation thereto;

That the said committee have power to send for persons, papers and records and examine witnesses; to sit during periods when the House stands adjourned; to report from time to time and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be deemed advisable; to delegate to subcommittees all or any of their powers except the power to report direct to the House; to engage the services of counsel, accountants and such other clerical and technical personnel as may be deemed necessary; and

That a message be sent to the Senate requesting that House to unite with this House for the above purpose, and to select, if the Senate deems it advisable, some of its members to act on the proposed Special Joint Committee.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of Standing Order 21 this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the House.

ENERGY

OIL AND GAS—POSITION OF GOVERNMENT ON INTEGRATED CONTINENTAL POLICY SUGGESTED BY U.S. OFFICIAL

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources what response the government plans to make to the suggestion by Mr. Rogers Morton that an integrated continental policy for North America is essential if fuel shortages are to be avoided in certain regions of the United States?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it has been the custom of successive governments of Canada to follow a policy of reserving supplies against the present and future needs of Canada and then selling any surplus of either of the two commodities into the American or any other markets that might be interested. We have no intention of changing that policy. If Secretary Morton is suggesting in reference to a continental energy policy that we should enter into an arrangement whereby there would be not only a pooling of the assets of the continent but a pooling of the shortages as well, clearly that is a policy which this government would not intend to follow.

Mr. Stanfield: Is the government of Canada making any proposals to the United States at this time with regard to energy, and has the minister any comment to make on the remark of a senior U.S. official, as reported on CBC radio last evening, that some people in the Canadian government are saying one thing in private and quite a different thing in public?

• (1110)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I had not heard that comment but I do not consider it to be a just comment. The only discussion we have going at the present time in the energy field is with regard to the question of security of supply for the eastern Canadian market in the event of a crisis in the international oil market cutting off supplies to eastern Canadian refineries. Otherwise we have no discussions on a general energy policy going on with the United States at this time.

SECURITY OF SUPPLY FOR MONTREAL AND DISTRICT MARKET—CONSULTATION WITH QUEBEC ON RATIONING PLAN IN CASE OF EMERGENCY

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, on security of supply for Montreal and the surrounding marketing district. In view of the panic that has hit the United States in the last two days and the rationing of fuel in the northeastern United States, has the minister reached the conclusion that it would be a wise policy to warn the people of Montreal and the marketing district of Montreal that if there is any cut-off in the Portland pipeline to help the Americans out of their emergency the people would have only about 60 days supply?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the shortage in the United States is related to the mid-continental rather than the northeastern market. We see no prospect of the Portland to Montreal pipeline being cut off. We are confident that there will be adequate supplies not only in the Montreal refinery area but elsewhere in Canada for Canadian consumption.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): In prefacing my next question I should like to say to the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member cannot preface the question; he should ask the question.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I will rephrase my question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister seen fit to consult with the government of Quebec in order to arrange a rationing plan in case there is such an emergency?

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, we have had discussions with both the office of emergency preparedness in the United States and with other interested parties in this regard. Rationing is certainly one of the possibilities that could occur if, I might emphasize in this regard, that would be if the offshore feed stock was cut off because of an international oil crisis, not because of any crisis in the United States. As I say, at the moment we do not anticipate any difficulty in the Montreal refining area arising from this winter's problem in the United States.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Is the minister aware of the precedent that was set in 1942 when the Americans broke contracts under which they were supplying electrical energy to Ontario during the war when we needed it?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, it is an interesting precedent but I do not see the relevance to the present situation.

OIL—NATURE AND PROGRESS OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES AND COMMITMENTS, IF ANY—REQUEST FOR SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, Mr. Speaker. In view of the statement of Mr. George Lincoln, director of the White House office of emergency preparedness before a congressional committee that while the Canadian government was not prepared to discuss a continental energy policy at the moment it was discussing individual energy items, and particularly that discussions with respect to oil have been going on since last December, and in view of Mr. Lincoln's statement that these discussions to use his words, "have achieved significant progress" will the minister tell the House the nature of these negotiations, what stage these negotiations have reached and what commitments, if any, have been made by the Canadian government with respect to oil supplies from Canada to the United States?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the negotiation the hon. member is questioning is the one I have already referred to, namely, the problem of insecurity of supply for the eastern Canadian market arising from a cut-off, say, due to a mid-east crisis or economic action by the mid-eastern or other OPEC countries. No commitments of any kind have been made in this regard, but basically there have been these discussions related to a contingency plan in case there is an international shortage imposed either for political or economic reasons.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, that is not the context in which Mr. Lincoln made the statement to the congressional committee. Having in mind the experience of the past in regard to the Columbia River Treaty and other agreements which were signed by the government and only sent to parliament for ratification afterwards, is the minister prepared to give the House the assurance that no commitments will be made with respect to the energy resources of Canada and their export to the United States or any other country until the matter has first been submitted to the House of Commons for consideration?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I think it is fair to point out, if the hon. member is referring to General Lincoln's remarks, that he said precisely what I have just said to the House. The discussion is with regard to security of supply. I would be quite prepared to discuss the security of supply question, as, indeed, I would all energy questions, in the House or, more appropriately, in the relevant committee as these questions arise.

Mr. Douglas: A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for one last supplementary and then recognize the hon. member for Calgary North.

Mr. Douglas: Having in mind that we have been waiting some four years for a statement on the government's national energy policy and having in mind that the crisis in the United States has now brought this matter to a head, may I ask the minister whether the government would be prepared to reconsider the motion I moved a few minutes ago, which the government vetoed, and set up a special committee of the House to look into this matter to which the minister and the chairman of the National Energy Board could give further information in order to assuage the fears and concerns of the people of Canada?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted to assuage those fears by repeating, as I have for the last several days, that we are of the opinion that there is no danger to Canadian energy supplies, either oil or natural gas, arising from either the short-run problem in the United States or on a longer term basis. Therefore I would make the point that I do not think it is helpful to the Canadian viewpoint to keep repeating that this is a danger to us. In our opinion there is no danger, and the actions of the National Energy Board in reserving against present and future needs have been effective.I would be quite prepared to discuss this matter in the standing committee that deals with it under the appropriate framework provided by the estimates.

ASSESSMENT OF RESERVES OF OIL AND NATURAL GAS BY NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the chairman of the National Energy Board came before the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee in reference to the matter of energy he said there was no assessment as to reserves of crude petroleum and natural gas. Has there been any change in that data? Has there been any study in order to bring forward the reserves of the Arctic so that the facts may be made known to the people in charge of this matter?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. gentleman is quoting the chairman correctly. As he knows, in its decision of November, 1971 the board specifically made an assessment of natural gas reserves and arrived at the conclusion that there should be no further exports to the United States. I would think it would be fair to say with regard to both oil and natural gas that there is an informed and precise assessment by the board and the board has acted on this in dealing with natural gas. At the moment, of course it does not control exports of oil.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to argue with the minister but if he will check volume five or six of the committee reports I think he will find exactly what I have said. As this matter has been raised by other members today and as there is some question about the nation's reserves of crude petroleum and natural gas, will the minister now say to the House that he will get the committee together so that the officials and the chairman of the National Energy Board can be brought before that committee in order that we may see what data exists at present regarding reserves and be able to know what we are talking about?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I will repeat for the third time that I would be delighted to meet the committee and discuss this matter just as soon as it is established and the estimates are before it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before recognizing hon. members for additional supplementaries on this question the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Portneuf and then perhaps have three or four additional supplementaries on this subject.

TRANSPORT

QUEBEC—REPRESENTATIONS BY UNION LOCAL TO AVOID LAYOFFS

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Could he tell us whether the leaders of the Quebec local of the Canadian Transportation Employees Union have made representations to avoid dismissals as a result of a burdened budget and if so, is he in a position to tell us whether steps have been taken so that workers who have been in the employment of the Department of Transport for three years will not be out of work?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question is yes. The department is now considering the problem.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair recognizes the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North on a supplementary to the previous question.

POWER

FUNDY TIDES—REQUEST FOR INFORMATION ON RECONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF BOARD

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources tell us where the re-examination of the report of the board on the Fundy tidal power project stands at present, and can he give some indication—

• (1120)

Mr. Speaker: Order please. I am not sure that is really a supplementary. However, the question has been asked and as it may move us on to the next subject perhaps the minister might reply.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to get the hon. member a progress report on that re-examination.

ENERGY

OIL PRICE INCREASE—INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBILITY OF PIPELINE FROM WESTERN CANADA TO MONTREAL

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact that the oil price increase seems to be have been based on the fact that offshore oil producers have set their landed price at Montreal at a higher figure, and in order to get around the jacking up of oil prices in the rest of Canada, can the minister indicate whether the government has any plans to promote the building of a pipeline to Montreal for Canadian crude?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Not at the present time, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRY AS TO DECISION ON PROPOSED MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. What is the present status of the proposed Mackenzie pipeline and has the government reached any decision on the undesirability of building that pipeline?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, with regard to any pipeline in the Mackenzie Valley the initiative would have to rest, as is always the case in pipeline applications, with the private group, the consortium that has been formed for this purpose. I am advised that possibly there will be an application coming forward in September of this year for a natural gas pipeline in the Mackenzie Valley but, of course, that would go to the National Energy Board for public hearings and discussion. As I say, the initiative in such an application rests with the private group.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members will notice there are quite a few members who are suggesting there should be further supplementaries. We have spent close to 20 minutes on this subject. I realize at the same time that other members have questions to ask. There will be another two or three supplementaries and then I suggest we should go on to the next subject and, if there is time, return to this matter later.

INCOME TAX

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENTS TO ACT TO PLACE CANADIANS ON EQUAL FOOTING WITH U.S. INVESTORS IN OUR OIL AND GAS INDUSTRY

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. As a result of our concern and his concern for security of supplies in the oil industry and his concern for Canadian ownership, does he intend to introduce amendments to the Income Tax Act in his budget which would have the effect of encouraging Canadians and placing them on an equal footing with United States investors in the oil and gas industry in Canada?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will take note of the hon. gentleman's representation but he will appreciate it would be difficult for me to answer that question before budget night.

COPPER

TIMING OF PRICE INCREASES—INVESTIGATION OF POSSIBILITY OF COLLUSION BY COMPANIES

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs if he can inform the House whether he has discussed with officials of the Canadian copper producing companies the unusual coincidence of copper price increases being announced by several companies within minutes of each other?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not had such a discussion but I will see that the hon. gentleman's question is directed to the attention of the appropriate officials in my department.

Mr. Peters: Will the minister direct this matter to the attention of the Director of Research and Investigation under the Combines Investigation Act to determine whether there was collusion and whether the copper price increases were unjustified?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I intended to imply in my previous answer that I would see that the matter was drawn to the attention of the Director of Investigation and Research.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REDISTRIBUTION OF RIDINGS—SUGGESTED AMENDMENT OF BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT TO MAINTAIN PRESENT LEVEL OF MEMBERSHIP IN CERTAIN PROVINCES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It has to do with the redistribution that is now being considered by committees which I understand are meeting in the various provinces. In view of the fact that several provinces—Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Quebec, Manitoba and Saskatchewan—will be losing membership unless there is an amendment to the British North America Act, has consideration been given by the government to bringing in an address to the end that membership in these various provinces will not fall below the present level and to achieve that either by a directive or by increasing the size of the membership in the House as I believe was done in the forties?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, some thought has been given within the government to such a matter. I would be prepared to pursue that thought. I feel that unless the legislation or the amendment were retroactive it would probably be impossible to do anything about the electoral reform action which is now in process. But I will look into that aspect of the matter, too. I do know that this is an important problem for many provinces in Canada. It does involve an amendment to the British North America Act, and that is no easy undertaking.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thank the Prime Minister. Now I should like, in a supplementary, to refer particularly to the position of Saskatchewan and Manitoba whose rural areas are being depopulated. Both provinces are to lose members. Knowing of the Prime Minister's interest in the west I wonder whether he would look into this question particularly to the end that depopulation will not result in members having to represent constituencies so large as to make it virtually impossible for them to do so.

Mr. Trudeau: The right hon. gentleman must not forget that my interest in the west is paired with interest in other parts of the country and that redistribution does have an effect on other provinces than those in the west. Some provinces, as he will know, are protected by the provision relating to Senate seats, when a decline in population would otherwise affect them adversely.

An hon. Member: Let the Senate deal with that.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member may ask a supplementary if he wishes. The only solution which can be envisaged, therefore, is one of enlarging considerably the membership of the House. We would also have to consult the architects about that aspect.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister certainly realizes that the provision respecting Senate membership does not help us at all.

Mr. Trudeau: As Canadians or as Saskatchewans?

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Can the Prime Minister tell us what the target date is for establishing the new electoral boundaries?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will realize he is now asking the Prime Minister to give an opinion on a matter of law. I do not think a question in those terms is in order.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INQUIRY AS TO INCOME TAX REDUCTION TO CREATE JOBS AND PRESENTATION OF PROGRAM FOR STIMULATION TO PROVINCIAL FINANCE MINISTERS

Mr. Joe Hueglin (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, may I address my question to the Minister of Finance. Can the minister tell the House, as urged by the president of the Canadian Labour Congress yesterday, whether the government intends to introduce a substantial reduction in personal income taxes as a major means of creating more jobs at the present time?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I shall certainly take seriously the hon. gentleman's representation.

Mr. Hueglin: Can the minister tell us whether he will be outlining a specific and comprehensive economic program at the meeting with the finance ministers of the provinces in order to stimulate the economy in co-ordination with them?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The discussion at those meetings next week will be very comprehensive.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Harney: I defer to my hon. friend from Lakeshore.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PAYMENT OF GRANTS TO COMPANIES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the fact that, according to statistics released by his department yesterday, as of the end of November 811 firms or only 37.5 per cent of those that have been offered and have accepted DREE grants since the inception of this program have actually received partial payment, will the minister undertake to make a statement on motions in the near future explaining why such a small number have actually received funds and begun projects compared with the very substantially larger number of firms his department has announced to the press and Members of Parliament would actually receive them?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I will be very pleased to do so in the appropriate forum, either by a statement on motions or by discussion in detail with hon. members during an appearance before the committee. I am delighted to have heard the hon. member's comment that indeed there is this relatively small percentage because it indicates we are not handing out funds indiscriminately but are making sure that they are darn good programs before anybody gets anything.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF DISAPPEARANCE OF CERTAIN JOBS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister in charge of regional economic expansion. In light of the release of the monthly reports of DREE, dating back six months, which indicate that approximately 3,800 jobs have been lost for which the government previously claimed credit, is the minister going to table in the House a more detailed explanation of why these jobs suddenly disappeared?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Yes, Mr. Speaker, this is part of the reorganization I am hoping to undertake.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jamieson: As the hon. member will know, Mr. Speaker, on a projection basis it is impossible to be precise as to the number of jobs, but I think we owe it to the House and to the public to explain what happened in cases such as this.

Mr. Baldwin: Particularly to the public.

AIRPORTS

HIJACKING—SUGGESTED TRANSFER OF JURISDICTION OVER POLICE OPERATIONS FROM CRIMINAL CODE TO AERONAUTICS ACT—INTRODUCTION OF SPECIAL FORCE

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport but I would first like to congratulate him on assuming one of the two most important portfolios in the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: As police operations at our international airports come under the jurisdiction of the police forces of the municipalities in which the airports operate, which makes it very difficult to deal adequately with potential hijackers and hijacked planes, is the government giving consideration to transferring jurisdiction over these police operations from the Criminal Code to the Aeronautics Act so these matters can be handled by the RCMP?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for—what riding?

Mr. Baldwin: Prince Edward-Hastings.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): As hon. members have heard, there is a reference in the Speech from the Throne to the Aeronautics Act. We intend to amend this act so that we will have more power, and you will see, of course—

Mr. Baldwin: More power to the minister.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Pardon me?

Mr. Baldwin: More power to the minister.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes. We know that we have to reinforce security at airports. This is being done in the United States and we intend to do it here, but it is very difficult to give details at this moment.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Justice. Is he doing everything possible to facilitate the transfer of this jurisdiction from the Criminal Code to the Aeronautics Act, and will he advise the House when he expects to have the special force being trained by the RCMP to operate at our airports ready?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think at least part of that question would be more properly directed to the Solicitor General. I can assure the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings that this matter is receiving high priority within the Department of Justice so far as the drafting of legislation is concerned.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I have a final supplementary question for the Solicitor General. Will he advise the House when he expects that the special force which is being trained will be in operation at our airports?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the force is being recruited right now and some of the men will be trained very shortly. I do not have an exact date when they will be ready for work.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—CRITERIA FOR APPROVAL OF PROJECTS

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Has he checked whether officials of his department do apply the major standards in the approval of local initiatives projects, including the one concerning the regional unemployment rate?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I did attempt to answer this question yesterday, but in a nutshell that certainly is the prime criteria which is being applied in the selection of projects for approval.

YOUTH

INQUIRY AS TO 1973 OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, because of the high unemployment figures among young Canadians as announced this week, I should like to ask the Secretary of State whether he will soon be announcing an amendment to the Opportunities for Youth program to take effect in the early spring months when there will be an even greater influx of younger people on the labour market?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I hope to be announcing early next week the summer 1973 program.

PROVISION OF SPECIAL COUNSELLING IN MANPOWER OFFICES FOR YOUNG CANADIANS SEEKING WORK

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question I should like to address to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. It is also based on the unemployment figures in respect of young Canadians announced this week. Is the minister making special provision in the manpower offices to counsel young Canadians seeking employment and will this provision be made soon enough to deal with the anticipated influx of young Canadians on the labour market in the spring months?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—ELIGIBILITY FOR GRANTS OF PERSONS ILLEGALLY IN CANADA

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State. Will persons who are illegally in Canada be eligible for grants under the Opportunities for Youth program as proved to be the case last year?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER INDICATE BEFORE DEBATE ON ITEMS OF GOVERNMENT BUSINESS WHETHER CONFIDENCE IS INVOLVED

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, in light of the very unique and interesting constitutional doctrine enunciated by the Prime Minister in the debate on the Speech from the Throne, would he be kind enough before debate on any item of government business commences in the House to indicate whether in the view of the government it involves a question of confidence?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will be glad to attempt to do that, Mr. Speaker, if the hon member can refer precisely to what novel constitutional doctrine I enunciated.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the right hon. gentleman that he read the speech of the right hon. member for Prince Albert who dealt with this matter. If the Prime Minister agrees to accept this very reasonable suggestion, would he indicate the source of his authority so we will know whether it is constitutional or celestial?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Peace River will appreciate he is suggesting that we have a constitutional debate at this time. I do not think this is the place, the time or the occasion for that.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that is a problem we are now considering and perhaps in a few weeks we will be in a position to find a solution.

[English]

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this question has been under consideration for many years, can the Minister of Finance assure us that there will be an item in his budget to provide funds for the greater utilization of the port of Churchill?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take that as a representation.

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, in view of the high level of water in the Great Lakes, particularly Lake Erie, which has resulted in considerable damage to farm land, cottages and marinas, would the Minister of Public Works have his engineers advise the people in the area of Long Point on the north shore of Lake Erie how they may get temporary relief in the form of either advice or financial assistance?

POST OFFICE

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENT OF PUBLIC SERVICE STAFF RELATIONS ACT IN LIGHT OF DIFFICULTY IN CONTRACT NEGOTIATIONS WITH EMPLOYEES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the problems related to the recently concluded postal negotiations arising out of what appears to be deficiencies in the Public Service Staff Relations Act, does the minister propose to introduce amendments to that legislation and, specifically, what are these amendments which will cope with the problem?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think it was stated in the throne speech that amendments to that act would be introduced at a later stage.

Mr. McGrath: In view of the continuing problems in this department with regard to the recently concluded agreement and the indication that a very small majority of the postal workers accepted the conciliation report, may I ask the minister when the government proposes to introduce amendments to this legislation since this matter does have a great deal of urgency?

Mr. Drury: I will consult with the House leader about the timing.

CONSIDERATION OF PAY SCALE FOR CODE OPERATORS IN FURTHER NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNIONS

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I have a supplementary question for the President of the Treasury Board, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the arbitrary low pay scale laid down by the Treasury Board for the new job classification of code operator has been a major concern in the long drawn-out contract negotiations, will this item be given priority consideration in the renewed negotiations?

INCREASE IN PRICES OF GASOLINE AND AUTOMOBILES—INVESTIGATION OF JUSTIFICATION

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It is really subsequent to several questions on this subject in recent days. It has to do with the double burden recently put on the millions of Canadian motorists by the increase in the price of certain major automobile company products and the recent increase in the price of gasoline. Are the minister and his department satisfied that these increases, which are a burden to millions of Canadians, are justified or is his office still investigating to find out whether action can be taken to protect this body of Canadian consumers?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is referring to possible action under the Combines Investigation Act, I am advised that the practice followed by successive governments is not to allude to the possible existence of an inquiry under the act unless such an inquiry has been terminated, unless the matter goes to the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission or unless there is some court proceeding.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as the House was informed yesterday, we have just received the report following the hearings on expropriations. We had promised that when we would receive this report a commission would be formed, which would enable those who want to make representations to do so.

We shall therefore give this new opportunity to the people of the area who want to make representations

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR DECISION ON CERTAIN VANCOUVER THEATRE PROJECTS

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that seven LIP theatre projects in the Vancouver area have been recommended to him and are still in limbo, leaving personnel, material and locations idle for weeks at this time of high unemployment, can the minister give a firm date when a decision will be made on these projects?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I am in a position to give a precise date other than the indication I gave yesterday that we will be issuing all approvals by approximately January 19. I might say that some of those particular projects are difficult to decide upon because this will be the second or third time that one or two of them have been financed. This raises the question of when such a project becomes viable to operate on its own or whether it should receive continued public financing if the general public does not support it.

Mr. Leggatt: In view of the answer, can the minister explain why seven similar projects have already been approved in the Toronto area, and does he believe that Toronto—

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I will have to check into what might happen to the commissionaires who are at present doing the work. I know we are now recruiting special constables, but I will have to obtain a proper answer to this question.

Mr. Lundrigan: In view of the fact thousands of these dedicated people have been providing this service for years, and as the minister certainly should have made a decision by now, will he give an undertaking to report to the House tomorrow with the assurance that these people will not lose their jobs?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I shall look into that matter and be pleased to inform the hon. member. LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—REQUEST THAT LOCAL IMPROVEMENT DISTRICTS BE MADE ELIGIBLE FOR GRANTS

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that local improvement districts in Saskatchewan apparently are not eligible for grants under the LIP program and yet they are in effect municipal bodies—they are governed locally and they already get provincial grants—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member ask a question and not present an argument?

Mr. Nesdoly: Has the minister given some consideration to changing this policy to include local improvement districts as entities eligible for these grants?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this question was asked by another hon. member yesterday and I have just sent him a note with the information that I received last night. I find contrary to what I thought was the case yesterday, that local improvement districts are in fact not eligible because they are considered to be part of the provincial government. This criterion was discussed and approved by the provincial government before the terms were established for the making of LIP grants.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, just prior to Christmas I received a report from the Hugessen task force which dealt with the whole matter of parole, temporary absences, sentences and so on. CONSUMER AFFAIRS

POTATOES—MEASURES TO CONTROL PRICES

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

In view of the fact that towards the end of 1971 the government guaranteed a minimum support price of $1.50 per bushel of potatoes, and that the opposite trend is now manifesting itself in that potatoes are selling for $3.50 per 50 lbs. and, according to my information, might sell as high as $5 to $6 by April 1973—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I suggest to him, and to all other hon. members, that many more could take part in the period if questions were shorter—and I must add, answers as well. In any event, I invite the hon. member to put his question as quickly as possible, as we have reached the end of the oral question period.

Mr. Beaudoin: Can the minister tell us whether or not he intends to take steps to protect the consumer?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I feel that the matter of the cost of potatoes really falls within the jurisdiction of the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Beaudoin: I would therefore ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he can answer my question.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, on the usual Thursday point of order I would like to ask the government House leader about the business for the rest of this week and for next week?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, we will continue with the throne speech debate today and tomorrow and next week until it comes to its conclusion. Following the conclusion of that debate I will be calling one of the items at present on the order paper. Whether it will be the resolution on food prices or the debate on capital punishment is something I have not finally determined. I would be happy to hear from the other House leaders as to what order of business they would prefer.

Mr. Baldwin: In light of the fact that there have been a number of references to the budget, can the government House leader or the Minister of Finance make a very visible effort to indicate when we are likely to have the budget?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to discuss that further with the government House leader to see just what his panorama or timetable of business is.

POST OFFICE

CONSIDERATION OF PAY SCALE FOR CODE OPERATORS IN FURTHER NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNIONS

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a point of order arising from your recommendation that the President of the Treasury Board ponder my supplementary question. Could the President of the Treasury Board or the Postmaster General now reply because I feel that this matter is of basic importance in restoring efficiency in the Post Office, which has suffered a serious decline?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is not quite a point of order, as I am sure the hon. member will recognize. However, in view of the fact there was some difficulty or noise in the House when his question was asked, perhaps the minister might be allowed to reply to it now.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): You are correct about there being noise in the House, Mr. Speaker. I am not sure what the question was. I will have a word with the hon. gentleman after the question period.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member wants to ask his question again, perhaps by consent we could allow it, but after that we will move on to orders of the day.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, it is an important supplementary. In view of the fact the arbitrary low pay scale laid down by the Treasury Board for the new job classification of code operator has been a major concern in the long drawn-out contract negotiations, will this item be given priority consideration in the renewed negotiations?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member would not like me to issue an ultimatum. As the hon. gentleman knows, there was consideration of this point by a conciliation board which formulated a report and we expressed our views before it. I am quite sure that the scales of pay and classifications will be examined, or re-examined, in the negotiations which are now taking place.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not think we should miss the opportunity to offer the Minister of Communications our best wishes when he makes a telephone call at four o'clock this afternoon to northern Canada to Mr. Ludi Pudlik at Resolute in the Arctic. I wonder if I could prevail on the minister to ask Ludi to call northern Newfoundland for me because that part of northern Canada still has a most unreliable telephone service—I cannot get through to them—and the television service is also terrible.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is not a point of order. Orders of the day.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed, from Wednesday, January 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. J. J. Blais for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield (p. 52).

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure to be able to congratulate you on your successful re-election not only to the House of Commons but also to the Speakership of this House. This is the third parliament in which you will have been the Speaker. I think this has created a rather valuable precedent in our affairs, in that we have now made a series of decisions with respect to you, Sir, which have led, perhaps, to the creation of a permanent Speaker in the House of Commons. Your attainment of the office is well deserved because with your sense of humour and abilities you are able to break up tense moments in the House with a word of humour, thus making Members of Parliament who have never been particularly cognizant of the authority of the Chair, they being carried away in the battles of the moment, aware that they should pay more attention to the rules than otherwise might be the case.

At the same time I would like to comment on the election of Mr. Deputy Speaker. I think it is high time that the practice of sharing high positions in the House of Commons between parties was adopted and continued. I hope that in succeeding parliaments this precedent that we have begun will be continued. I think that the person who now holds the position of Deputy Speaker has been particularly well chosen.

Further, Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss if I did not congratulate the Deputy Chairman of Committees and the Assistant Deputy Chairman of Committees, both of whom served well in the last House of Commons, on their re-election to those positions.

This brings me to an important point which has to do with the committee system as it will operate in this House of Commons in which there is no majority. It has been the practice since the committee system was revamped under the government of the late Lester B. Pearson that, with the exception of the Public Accounts Committee, chairmen of committees have been drawn from the party with the largest numbers in the House. It was always my feeling that this was an undesirable precedent, because the role of a chairman of a committee is analogous to that of yours, Sir, in the House of Commons, in that the committees are microcosms of the House of Commons with the parties represented on them in proportion to their strength in the House. The role the chairman of a committee ought to play should be that of Mr. Speaker in the House of Commons. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it seems that, given the standings in the House of Commons, we have an opportunity to try to revise the way in which chairmen have been selected.

• (1200)

The suggestion I would put forward is that Mr. Speaker, in conjunction with either the whips of the various parties or the House leaders, should develop a panel of chairmen from both sides of the House, including all groups in the House of Commons, who would serve as chairmen of these committees. I think this would be a valuable precedent. It would give experience to a variety of members in the functions of the House of Commons; it would provide a valuable training ground for individual members to learn the rules and to train for important positions such as the role you now play, Mr. Speaker, the role of Mr. Deputy Speaker, Chairman of Committees and Deputy Chairman of Committees. I think that this kind of precedent could only strengthen the House of Commons particularly at a time when the role of the Chair and the role of the chairmen of committees are going to be of particular importance to the smooth functioning of the House. I think it would also be a happy advance toward building on the precedent which has led, I would hope, to the continuing development of a permanent Speakership of the House of Commons and the bipartisanship of the office of Speaker of the House of Commons with the inclusion of Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Recently the redistribution commission for Ontario made a series of recommendations regarding that province. The riding I represent, Kenora-Rainy River, is one of the largest in Canada. Unfortunately, under the recommendation of the boundary commission that riding would expand by approximately one-third even though, if one looks at the population figures for northern and northwestern Ontario, it would be possible to have the same number of seats available instead of the present recommendations under which we will now lose two seats, one for northern Ontario and one for northwestern Ontario. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the rural ridings in Canada, not only of northern and northwestern Ontario but all across Canada, are too large.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reid: The workload for rural Members of Parliament is simply becoming far too great for them to handle and for them to exercise all the responsibilities they must when they become members. The reason is quite simple. By their very nature rural ridings do not have large centres which can provide the government services so badly needed. That means that the people depend more on their Member of Parliament than do those in larger communities with a variety of government services. The workload is different and I would say that the workload of a rural Member of Parliament is far in excess of that of an urban member.

This development is unfortunate. It seems to me that the redistribution commission has gone a step further in the way in which it has attempted to divide Ontario by creating urban ridings and has left vast rural ridings without any natural communication centres through which the people can contact their member. In my own case I would have to work out of both Winnipeg and Thunder Bay in order to provide proper communication with my constituency. There is no large centre in my constituency which means that the scattered population does not receive that kind of representation to which they are entitled to receive from their member. More important, Mr. Speaker, they do not reap the full benefit of the services of either the federal government or the provincial government because of their isolation and the distance from the larger centres of communication from which government operates. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that they do not receive proper value for their tax dollars because of this diminution of services.

I think the way in which the redistribution commissions have been operating works against the rural areas and makes it difficult for them to benefit from the development programs of the government, for example, regional development expansion. It makes it almost impossible for Members of Parliament representing such areas to participate fully in the work of the House and to provide national representation in their areas. The Member of Parliament is responsible for being the linchpin between the federal government agencies, provincial government agencies and his constituents. The workload becomes very heavy.

Parts of the Speech from the Throne could be entitled "What I have learned from the last election". I think we all learned a great deal about how people feel about government, not partisan politics, but the way in which government is carried on. One of the things which has bothered me is the expansion of governments into areas in which they were not before. There has been a tremendous feeling of uneasiness in that what the government says it can do is not in fact being done. The people feel that government decides to do things, makes promises and sets up a bureaucracy, but the results of that bureaucracy and those promises fall far short of what was originally intended. They feel that the bureaucracy which has been established to do certain things does not benefit them but only the members of the bureaucracy who hold jobs. They feel that the bureaucracy is not sufficiently sensitive to the needs of the people, that administrative procedures, decisions, interpretations of regulations and even acts of parliament are designed not to assist the people who have selected Members of Parliament to vote these laws into effect but to assist only those people who are administering them.

It is my feeling, Mr. Speaker, that there have to be new ways of solving the problems other than the traditional ones of identifying the problem, identifying a solution and then creating the bureaucracy to solve it. That mode of action is no longer successful. I am encouraged by experiments such as the opportunities for youth and local initiatives programs which have given people an opportunity to use their own ideas and to work on solutions to their own problems.

Because of this distrust, if you will, of the governmental process, it strikes me that we must be prepared to consider another proposition. In the early 1960s there was considerable debate in the House of Commons, in the provinces and in the country at large about the possibility of appointing an ombudsman for Canada. I know the idea was canvassed in the House and the former member for Red Deer presented a bill to the House of Commons. I am in the process of preparing a bill for consideration of the House about the creation of the office of ombudsman.

Because of the situation in which we now find ourselves with a minority parliament, the government will not have the energies to cope with the growing power of the bureaucracy; it means that the energies of the government will be concentrated in the House of Commons; it means that we as Members of Parliament will not have the energy to try to cope with the growth of bureaucracy; it means that we must find some other agency to deal with this growing problem. Therefore it seems to me that the creation of the office of ombudsman would be beneficial not only in terms of dissipating the uneasiness of so many of our constituents over the development and exercise of bureaucratic power, but that it would be beneficial for the bureaucracy itself to know that there was a means by which people who felt they were being discriminated against by that bureaucracy could have an adequate hearing of their grievances. It seems to me that this role can no longer be played to the fullest extent by the Member of Parliament if government continues penetration into a variety of areas of Canadian society.

In the Speech from the Throne I was delighted to see concentration on the needs of western Canada. As a member from Ontario whose constituency is significantly affected by developments in the west, I feel there is a caveat I must enter on behalf of my constituents. That caveat is that if and when the meeting with the four western provinces is held to consider their economic intentions, there must be provision for representation from northwestern Ontario. Our area is affected directly by what goes on in the west and is dependent on decisions taken in the west. I am referring to federal government decisions in response to the desires of the west. While it may be convenient for the federal government to divide the country and to operate on the basis of provincial consultations, it is also important for the federal government to deal adequately with the northwestern Ontario region that abuts on the western region, and to provide us with representation to permit us to make our own case at conferences involving the government of Canada and the West. We in northern Ontario have a separate personality, if you will, and we need representation to speak for northwestern Ontario. We do not merely need representation from the province of Ontario which we feel has never been able to speak adequately for us at Queen's Park, let alone at federal-provincial conferences.

I was also pleased to see the reference to the Department of Regional Economic Expansion in the speech and the promise that there would be more decentralization and closer co-operation with provinces. I wish to make only one comment concerning regional economic expansion. I say to hon. members who come from Toronto and from what we in the north call the golden horseshoe that if there is any sense in the existence of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion in Canada it means that growth must be limited in those particular areas and diverted to the fringe areas of Canada. Perhaps a certain amount of growth will need to be taken away from the golden horseshoe area. It will not do for Members of Parliament on this or the other side of the House to speak piously of the aims of regional economic expansion without being prepared to make the necessary sacrifices to limit their own growth and to take active steps to divert growth, that is, existing industries, to areas in need.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reid: If that basic principle is not accepted by the House the Department of Regional Economic Expansion might as well be eliminated, because it will not have any long-term effect. It will not bring any significant long-term benefit to those fringe areas of Canada that want to grow but have been unable to grow because of the way in which policy until now has been designed in Canada. It has been designed to protect and develop secondary industry in central Canada, which I interpret as being Ontario and Quebec.

I now return to a serious problem existing in my constituency at present. The provincial and federal governments have determined that one of the growth industries in northwestern Ontario that must be developed is the tourist industry. Camp owners have been urged to winterize their operations and to try to keep open, where possible, for 12 months instead of concentrating on the two summer months as some do. Some have accepted this challenge. The province, in addition, has been stepping up its advertising campaign. The federal government has been co-operating through the Canadian travel bureau in attracting more tourists to the area.

In the area I represent a considerable cloud overhangs the development of the tourist industry, that cloud being mercury pollution. That pollution has hampered, hurt and restricted the development of our tourist industry which at present is probably the second largest employer of people in northwestern Ontario. In 1970 mercury was discovered in the English and Wabigoon River systems and the provincial government, acting in concert with the federal government, issued a series of directives. I wish to put these directives on record because they are interesting.

On April 6, 1970, Hon. Rene Brunelle, Minister of Lands and Forests, closed down all fishing, commercial and sport, in the Wabigoon River below Dryden up to and including Clay Lake. On May 1, 1970 Mr. Burnelle issued a statement which reads as follows:

I have initiated action which will close certain fisheries today. They are as follows: All commercial fishing in the following lakes in the territorial district of Kenora, Ball, Indian, Grassy Narrows, Lount, Seperation, Umfreville, Tetu, Swan and Eaglenest. In so far as sport fishing is concerned, action is being withheld pending consultation by our health dept. Pending further advice, anglers are cautioned to refrain from eating fish from the lakes named in the Kenora district.

On May 14, 1970, Mr. Brunelle issued a further bulletin:

The sport fishing ban established in early April will be lifted immediately. Fish caught by anglers from these waters should not be eaten in the opinion of the health authorities in Canada and the U.S. The mercury in them makes them unfit for human consumption.

This was known as the fish for fun program. Anglers were encouraged to fish for sport, that is, to catch fish but not to eat them. They were to throw them back into the water.

On May 15, 1970, Mr. Colin Myles received a telephone call from the Ontario fish and wildlife department stating that fish from the river system must not be eaten. Then Hon. James Auld, Minister of Tourism in those days, is reported as having said:

In these designated areas fishing will be strictly for fun. This means no shore lunches or take-home stringers.

On May 22, 1970, Bulletin No. 1 issued by the provincial Department of Lands and Forests dealt with Ontario waters affected by mercury. It said there was no longer a ban on sport fishing in certain Ontario waters recently found to be contaminated by mercury but that all fish caught in these designated areas should not be eaten but returned to the water. In a letter of July 14, 1971, Dr. Sutherland, chief of the health studies department, said:

I have no hesitation in stating as my opinion that the fish from these waters should not be eaten.

In a further letter of November 16, 1971, Dr. Sutherland said.

I am informed by our Department of Lands and Forests that there is no evidence that mercury contamination in the fish has decreased significantly. We will recommend strongly that fish from these waters should not be eaten.

On February 28, 1972, Dr. Stopps, also of the health studies branch of the Ontario Department of Health, said:

With calculations such as these, it is quite obvious that eating fish from the English River system would be hazardous to the health of camp guests.

This conclusion was confirmed by letter shortly afterwards by Dr. Richard Potter, the present Minister of Health.

[Mr. Reid.]

In yesterday's Ottawa Citizen, dated January 10, 1973, at page 36 there appears a report of an interview with Dr. D. G. Chapman, director of the food advisory bureau in the federal department of health. The report in part reads:

Mercury is extremely toxic in fish and any legal maximum levels for other foods probably will be "considerably lower" than the present 0.5 parts per million (ppm) guide now used for levels in fish, Dr. D. G. Chapman says.

It goes on to say:

"All evidence points to the desirability, from a health hazard standpoint, of reducing this level as soon as possible," he told the Ontario Council of Commercial Fisheries last year. . . .

"We're never too happy about a chemical as toxic as this in any food product and therefore we wouldn't want to establish even this level too firmly. We might want to see it reduced."

Dr. Chapman says in the article that there has been a series of experiments by the department of National Health and Welfare with cats. The animals have been fed regulated amounts of mercury in order to discover how much mercury is necessary to kill a cat, or at least to cause symptoms of disorder. They are now beginning to make important findings. According to the report Dr. Chapman says:

The symptoms, which come on gradually, include: Numbness in the hands, arms, lips and tongue; gradual loss of hearing leading to deafness; gradual blindness with loss of vision from the periphery or edges of the visual area leading to tunnel vision and eventual blindness; deterioration of speech; unsteady gait and general inco-ordination of limbs.

In cats, it has led to almost paralysis of the hind legs.

The point I am trying to make is that mercury pollution constitutes a serious problem in my area. Indian people, who habitually have obtained a great part of their living from the waters of the region through commercial fishing, still fish. Such fish still form a considerable part of their diet. Those Indians who were active in providing services to the camp owners as guides and workers in the camps and the camp owners are concerned because until this matter is cleared up satisfactorily the whole of the tourist business in my part of northwestern Ontario is under a cloud. Up till now we have been unable to get the provincial government, which has the primary responsibility for the fisheries and for the tourist industry, to take any action at all even though they recognize it is a serious problem. They have been unable to provide the kind of assistance and leadership which is required to deal with this problem fairly and equitably from the point of view of everyone.

• (1220)

The Indians from the reserves of Grassy Narrows and Islington are most concerned about the situation. A great part of the diet of these people still is fish because it is all they can afford. They have been petitioning the Ontario government for some time to provide assistance and advice. The only thing they were told by the provincial government authorities is that women at a child-bearing age ought not eat any fish because of the potential damage to any child they might be carrying or which they might in future be prepared to carry.

In the Kenora district death by violence of the Indian people is one of the highest in Canada. There has been some suspicion that part of this has been caused by the build-up of the mercury in their systems. It has only been in the past two or three months, after a great deal of pressure brought by the Indian reserves in the area, the provincial government has agreed to hold an inquest into the deaths of a number of people who died under what can only be termed as unusual circumstances. That inquest, the first, will be held some time later this month. The Indians themselves, their Indian organizations—Grand Council Treaty No. 3—have been most active, most concerned and most worried about the fact that the effect of the mercury build-up in the body may have something to do with some of the diseases and difficulties these people have been suffering.

It is not good enough for us to say we should compensate these Indian people because something more important is at stake. What has happened as a result of this mercury contamination is that not only have we destroyed the livelihood of these people in terms of the commercial fishery and the tourist industry but, more important, we have also destroyed what the Indians feel most keenly, their way of life. It is now no longer possible for these poeple to live off the land and supplement their diet and income by living off the land as they did in the past. So the hurt to these people goes far beyond anything we might be able to compensate in terms of money. When these people appeal to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) I hope he will be as generous in providing assistance to them as he has been to the Cree from James Bay in giving them the funds or the means by which to fight their battle in the courts of Quebec against the massive power diversion project.

There is one final point on this problem. The tourist industry represented through its association, the Kenora District Camp Owners' Association, has been petitioning the Ontario government to provide assistance, help and guidance. Their problem is simple. The tourist industry in my area at the present time is based to a large degree on fishing. The commercial fisherman perhaps sells his catch at an average price of 50 or 60 cents a pound while the tourist who comes and catches fish, which he takes home to show his friends, finds that the fish cost him about $10 a pound. This valuable industry is based upon the eating of fish, shore lunches and the taking back of fish to the homes of the tourists in the United States. Sports fishing is permitted by the Ontario government but not for eating. The federal government does not permit the sale of fish caught containing over .5 parts per million, while the Ontario government permits fish caught under Tourist Auspices above that scale to be eaten. This is also a commercial transaction. It seems to me it involves a moral question which must be faced.

I feel that governments cannot allow double standards of this nature to develop. It is a question of moral responsibility. It seems to me that the area ought to be closed to all fishing until the Ontario government or the federal government is prepared to say that the rate of mercury contamination in the fish is low enough for it to be eaten by individuals without any harm to their health. Now, the situation is ambiguous and unusual. It seems to me it is morally indefensible. The camp owners and the Indians have been working on this.

My last point concerns the responsibility of the federal government in dealing with this case. I believe that under the constitution fishing is a matter of federal responsibility although in the case of the provinces they have responsibility over the waterways and I understand responsibility for the fishery has been delegated to the provinces. Nevertheless there is a clear federal responsibility because fish basically are a federal responsibility even though it has been delegated to the provinces which have primary responsibility.

The second point is that the waterway in which this has happened is an interprovincial waterway. The Wabigoon River and the English River system flow into the province of Manitoba and Lake Winnipeg. Here it has caused a considerable problem of mercury pollution. It seems to me the federal government, if it is requested by the provinces concerned, cannot refuse to participate in any program of rehabilitation and/or compensation if that is requested. The federal government ought to be prepared to provide assistance to these people when it is required because in my opinion there is a definite federal interest involved.

In the throne speech the government announced it has a number of measures with which it wanted to deal. One that caught my attention was the provision of a series of regional conferences to deal with transportation problems in Canada. Transportation is very important in my constituency and in all of northwestern Ontario. I know the federal proposition is to meet with the provinces in terms of regions. That would mean that the prairie provinces would be a region and that Ontario would be a region. Northern Ontario, however, is a bridge between the heartland of Ontario, or the golden horseshoe, and the Prairies. The problem is that transportation rates have been calculated in a way that has discriminated against those communities which have their existence on this bridge. Transportation rates have not been calculated to provide those communities in northern and northwestern Ontario proper consideration and proper rates in proportion to other communities in Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired. He may continue if there is unanimous agreement. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Bell: No.

• (1230)

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I hasten to extend my respectful greetings to you, not merely in keeping with etiquette and established usage, but because I have already recognized that you possess the intellectual and moral qualifications that make an impartial and respected mediator.

I also extend these sentiments to the Deputy Speaker of the House (Mr. McCleave), an unanimously esteemed and appreciated colleague. I congratulate the government on its non-partisan action and hcpe the precedent set will be followed. If the Speaker and the Deputy Speaker can be so readily replaced, why could this not apply also to the head of the government and the leader of the official opposition? I also extend greetings to the mover (Mr. Blais), and the seconder (Mr. Blaker).

Mr. Speaker, I realize that I am sitting in the Canadian Parliament at a time when parliamentary government is living through a unique period of its history where it must serve the prime interests of the Canadian people rather than the electoral designs of political parties.

Mr. Speaker, I feel it is a privilege for me, as member for Saint-Hyacinthe, to represent with my Quebec colleagues the aspirations of that province in the Canadian Parliament and this when all Canadians, from whatever province or region, are precisely yearning for unity in diversity, common ideals which respect the characteristics of all partners.

I would have liked so much, Mr. Speaker, to speak today about the position of our party concerning the government platform. However, the generalities of the Speech from the Throne, stamped with fine intents and pious hopes, do not prompt me to improve upon the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I do not have to apologize for what I am going to say this morning. Truth has its own rights and so has justice.

I am not very proud of the behaviour shown by some hon. members in this House. Last Monday, I was surprised by the nature and the tone of the speech of the Prime Minister. He was not the man I knew before nor the writer I read once. Listening to him and embarrassed by his words, I remembered an article he wrote earlier in his career in the 56th issue of Cité Libre, in April 1963. This article is entitled:

Pearson or the abdication of the mind.

The head of the government said then:

The political philosophy of the Liberal party is quite simple: say anything, think of anything or, better still, do not think of anything at all, but bring us into power because we are the ones who can govern you best.

Ten years later, we hear the echo: "Say anything, but bring us into power".

Mr. Speaker, unaware of what was in store for him, the hon. member for Mount Royal wrote concerning those who did not dare criticize the then Liberal leader, and I quote:

They recognize that the leader of the Liberal party was a little rash about changing the platform of the party, but they feel that this is not the time . . . to condemn the leader and divide the party.

Further on, one can read:

The Liberals believe that power is their own property.

Mr. Speaker, this is how the Liberal party had been stigmatized by its present leader. So I say, with reason, the more it changes, the more it remains unchanged.

This desire of the present government to hang on to power at all cost makes me say that its minority position uncovers its political immorality.

Mr. Speaker, the incredible remarks that the head of this government and the leader of the Social Credit party (Mr. Caouette) have made last Monday have simply made me sick.

[Mr. Wagner.]

Why did we have to listen to these two awkward and ridiculous representations about Canadian unity, so called by some people, awkward and ridiculous representations according to the most objective observers, to editorialists and even to the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis)? They were made to conceal their ineptness to deal with and solve now the real problems, that is economic inequalities which affect the Canadian people.

It was not even clever to resort to such tactics of diversion, Mr. Speaker. I want to state clearly that I had to control myself not to intervene and rise on a question of privilege. Today, I appeal to the pride of the people from Quebec and to the dignity of all Canadians so that they no longer tolerate such situations and I shall keep on doing it.

[English]

As a member of this House from the province of Quebec, I note how often and with what ease the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) readily employs distortion to make debating points which could not otherwise stand on their own. Might I give one illustration? On Monday, the Prime Minister referred to an editorial published in the Vancouver Sun of November 3, 1972. The section from which he quoted was put this way in the original editorial:

A minority government headed by Mr. Trudeau is almost certain to be defeated in parliament within a matter of months with a further loss of party prestige. The most important prospect, however, is that in the meantime frustrated English-speaking Canadians will feel that their wishes as expressed at the polls last Monday are being thwarted on a constitutional technicality by a party that owes fundamental political allegiance to Quebec.

• (1240)

The editorial writer puts that particular view forward as a prospect, and that is the precise word he uses, "prospect". The Prime Minister, in quoting from the editorial on Monday, did not include that part about the prospect.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Wagner: He began his quotation in this way, and I quote this time from Hansard of January 8 at page 53:

—frustrated English-speaking Canadians will feel that their wishes as expressed—

It is abundantly clear, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister, by taking this sentence out of its original context as a prospect, has changed the whole meaning of that section of the editorial. The newspaper assesses this as a mischievous reading of its real position, and I agree with that assessment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wagner: Of course, my purpose in covering this matter is not to defend the editorial integrity of the Vancouver Sun. I use it as an illustration, I think a particularly emphatic illustration, of how the Prime Minister is prepared to distort material that is unfavourable to his position.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wagner: One has to ask why the Prime Minister indulges in this kind of distortion. The Vancouver Sun thinks it is mischief, but in view of the serious stakes in terms of national unity I consider it to be much more serious than mischief.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wagner: I consider it to be a tragic and destructive act, particularly when it is done by a man holding a position of high office with the solemn obligation he has to help Canadians understand each other.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wagner: What the Prime Minister did on Monday constitutes an act of blowing up bridges, and there is no justification for that, politically or morally.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Wagner: Of course, the right hon. Prime Minister wanted us to forget the weaknesses of his administration, and in turn the leader of the Social Credit party wanted, us to forget how barren and fruitless his monetary theories were.

Mr. Speaker, during the next months the Creditistes of Quebec, the real ones, those who have been deceived too long, those who like us both outside and inside this House believe in the same principles, the same values, will know at last that their leader has taken them into a blind alley.

And now, the Liberals, those whom the Prime Minister described in such a sweet way in 1963 in Cité Libre. who are they? They are the ones who last October in Quebec, and in Saint-Hyacinthe in particular, led a campaign designed to tarnish the Conservative party and my own reputation. They are the ones who did not say a word when they saw some of their friends resorting to discriminatory and reprehensible tactics. They are the ones who spread or allowed people to spread most slanderous rumors regarding myself. However, Mr. Speaker, the voters of Saint-Hyacinthe had the last word and, as the Prime Minister most appropriately said, Vox populi vox Dei.

And today, these people come up to us to lecture us, to make repeated innuendos and do so with the greatest of ease.

Mr. Speaker, they played with feelings, worked on racial prejudices, and one has only to remember what they did on television during the election campaign. They used the French Power theme on television where one could see the three doves and one or two common birds gobbling away well garnished plates while exchanging empty words, as they did during this debate, on the problems of today. I challenged them to translate and present the same trailer to English Canada.

Mr. Grafftey: Never!

Mr. Wagner: They refused to do it. They did not dare do it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1250)

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry but I do not have much time left. I will discuss this matter later on.

Mr. Speaker, here they are—

Some hon. Members: There has been a point of order.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): There is no call for rising on a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Do I understand that the Minister of Transport was rising on a point of order? If he was, would he please state it?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I never received any request of that kind and for the hon. member's guidance as well as to save him time, I add that the film will be in the hands of the Conservative party at one o'clock this afternoon and there will be a letter with it.

Mr. Wagner: Now that October 30 is gone they are going to translate what is said in the film. I am surprised because the present Minister of Transport is the only one who does not know that we had dared them to produce that picture in English, because it was mentioned by all newspapers and all radio stations in this country as well as by all the members, and the Minister of Transport is the only one—maybe he was attending to something else at the time—who did not know about our request.

Mr. Speaker, there they are those who have two ways of speaking throughout this country.

And I should like to say something that the Minister of Transport will understand: when we attacked certain ministers of this temporary government during the last election campaign, it had nothing to do with race, language or ethnic origin, but it was on account of their incompetence, their arrogance, their lack of judgment which the people condemned and which the right hon. Prime Minister corroborated by appointing them elsewhere.

Mr. Speaker, I should also say here—and I am proud to recall it—that it was under the Progressive Conservative government, headed by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) that Canada got its first bilingual cheques, simultaneous translation in the House of Commons and the appointment of its first French-speaking Governor General.

The House must know also how kind and understanding the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has been and always is towards Quebec. My colleague for Brôme-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) and myself have nothing but congratulations and thanks to address to our hon. colleagues and our leader for the way in which they welcomed and always welcome us to the House, to the caucus and to the party committees.

Mr. Speaker, as far as I know and as far as the people's wishes are concerned, there are and must only be Canadian parties in this House, parties capable of meeting the aspirations of the two founding peoples of our country.

Mr. Speaker, we must find answers to the problems of the day and even now prepare to meet the challenges of the '80s. However our friends of the government are not ready yet.

How can they anticipate solutions for tomorrow when they cannot in a Speech from the Throne in 1973 clearly offer remedies to current problems; there has been a change of style certainly but the status quo remains as far as inspiration and efficiency are concerned.

The government would rather cling to power in complicity with the New Democratic Party. In the meantime, Mr. Speaker, the elderly who are fed up with having to barely survive from one election to the other are waiting for what would allow them to live decently and with dignity. In the meantime also, Canadians in general, literally crushed by excessive taxes, are faced with darly increases in the cost of living especially the cost of food whose control is constantly delayed. Yet, from month to month, the humiliation of unemployment or its ghost keeps haunting thousands of Canadian families. The government has disgracefully underestimated this human and social problem, satisfied as it was with an insignificant winter works program which was announced so late that nothing can be done for this winter.

However, during this time, small businessmen are putting aside their planning programs because they are unable to find out where the government is going.

During this time also, the farmers—especially in eastern Canada and Quebec, such as the farmers in Saint-Hyacinthe for instance—are being penalized by quotas for industrial milk and by the cost of feed grain.

A word of warning to the government: Quebec is tired of being considered by this government as a poor relative within the federal Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Speaker, these are practical problems for which the Speech from the Throne offers no definite solution nor a priority list.

People are asking for more!

Mr. Speaker, that is the reason for our lack of confidence in this government.

The failures this government has experienced from 1968 to 1972 are still prevailing under a marketing approach which can only last as long as a coat of cheap but glossy paint.

From now on, how can the Canadian people, especially the young people, believe more deeply in public affairs and public men, in our institutions, when they are bound soon to find out that political parties, such as the Liberal party and the New Democratic Party, change their style according to the mood of the moment or the circumstances surrounding an election?

Where is that public honesty that should constantly preside over the actions and behaviour of those in public life? Certainly not on the government side!

[Mr. Wagner.]

This government is losing its credibility, for it is showing a lack of competence when confronted with alarming problems, and probably also a lack of principle.

As the member for the Saint-Hyacinthe constituency, my duty is to hasten the defeat of this government.

[English]

Yes, Mr. Speaker, the land is strong but to keep it strong we need a direction for Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will call upon the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) at two o'clock. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, many distinguished members of this House have spoken in this debate already. I am honoured to participate in it at this point, and honoured to follow the distinguished member on the other side, the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner), who had the floor just before the luncheon hour, and whom I welcome to this House.

Like all others who have participated in the debate I would like to extend congratulations to you, Mr. Speaker, and I would also like to congratulate the House for its wisdom in again electing you to the office you hold. I think this House will require all of your abilities, particularly one of your most marked abilities, that of displaying a delightful sense of humour, something which I hope you never lose. May I also congratulate your constituents, Mr. Speaker, for giving us the opportunity to re-elect you so that you may serve your country and parliament. In passing may I say that I have always found, in the two departments with which I have been associated, that in order to get civil servants to act more quickly it was useful to tell them, "This is something Mr. Speaker wants." Somehow when they are told that they snap to it in ways in which they otherwise might not.

May I also congratulate the two new members who moved and seconded the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. The hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais), in moving the motion, expressed very well his concerns for his riding and his country. I recall having had the same honour as he some years ago, and I know his feeling and that of all new members, the feeling of pride, of hope and of promise, when first they come to parliament. I can assure them, at least from my own experience, that they are entering upon a career for which they will have no regret, the most honourable and rewarding career to which any Canadian can aspire.

The hon. member for Lachine (Mr. Blaker), is to be thanked, especially from my point of view, for expressing the recognition that urban Canadians have special problems, not to mention special opportunities. In his speech he came down advisedly against the kind of unplanned expansion that has blighted cities and nations across the world. He suggested the kind of co-operation between the federal government and the provinces and, I would like to add, the municipalities, that is needed to pull urban programs and strategies together. I applaud the speech he made.

I would like, as a British Columbia member, to devote part of my speech to the conference that was announced in the throne speech on western economic opportunities. May I say to the Premier of British Columbia, who said he hoped the conference would not be a reason to delay action on various matters, that that is not the intention. The purpose of such a conference is to assure, in a co-operative way, that we will be expanding and developing the potential economic resources and opportunities of western Canadians. The three agenda items suggested in the throne speech are, of course, preliminary ideas. Action will be taken quickly to follow up with an agreement on the kind of agenda that we should have. I am glad that the western premiers as a group have welcomed these plans that we have put forward, and are anxious that the conference be as productive of results as possible.

The hon. member for Lachine quite properly noted a crystal clear emphasis in the Speech from the Throne. That emphasis is the federal government's urban commitment. This commitment, this major sense of direction on behalf of the great majority of Canadians who live in towns and cities, is an activist commitment spelled out in some detail in the throne speech. This urban commitment will be spelled out further in more detail in my speech this afternoon, and will be spelled out in totally new legislation regarding housing, the building of new communities, land banking, and measures relating to neighbourhood improvement and rehabilitation. It will be illustrated in initiatives to be introduced at an early date allowing the federal government to assist the revitalization and rebirth of city cores through the relocation of railway tracks and yards. It will be spelled out in the urban commitment to Canada that will be the subject of a federal-provincial conference to be held in this city on January 22 and 23, and in policy and budgetary initiatives to be taken by CMHC which are to be announced as they are taken.

The kind of life that Canadians have in our cities and towns is the kind of national life we have. This country is rapidly heading toward being 90 per cent urbanized, or more. That unconstrained urbanization, and so far really unmanaged urbanization, is being concentrated in a relative handful of larger cities and metropolitan areas. It can, conceivably, lead to congested chaos in some areas and isolated rustic poverty in others. The British, who have been attempting to cope with heavy urbanizing trends for a long time, know this. I quote the Chairman of the Greater London Council:

> Cities are indeed national assets, but they are not permanent assets.
> Like all assets, they need to be preserved and developed, and it is time that central governments recognized more clearly that investment in the future of their cities is as vital to national prosperity as it is to the well being of the cities themselves.

The federal government appreciates that national investments are required for the future of urban Canada and for the future of the nation. We are talking here of investments of planning and co-operation, and setting of priorities, as well as investments of money. We have made major moves in these directions.

I have been Minister of State for Urban Affairs, and the minister responsible for federal housing policy and for the National Capital Commission during a year of great activity and change in our cities. Much more activity and much more change—not only physical change but social change, and change in what people find important to them—are upon us. Canada, to cope with this change, is on the threshold of developing urban policy in new ways, ways that accept that urban Canada is too complex to plan and work for without radically new forms of sharing knowledge, planning and application of resources.

I do not want to dwell on the past, but I do wish to report on the tri-level conference on urban affairs held in Toronto last November, the first such conference with federal, provincial and municipal representation. It was an important breakthrough, and I am happy to take this opportunity to report its success to the House. It was the first gathering by the three levels of government to discuss specifically urban issues—how to cope with the pressures and challenges of urban Canada.

The federal government was successful in winning support at that conference for the three main goals that I expressed there. I said that the consultative process should be joint and involve all levels, that it should be continuous and an on-going process, but not a process of constitutional change, rather one of discussing priorities and fitting them in with the proper jurisdiction. All of these goals were attained and we are now in the process of organizing the next conference for 1973. I have already suggested, when discussing the national tri-level conference, that its agenda could be. It should set down issues such as provincial development strategies and regional plans so that the federal government could be supportive of those plans, such as the Toronto centred regional plan which is a provincial plan. We could sit down and discuss those policies and be supportive of them in our federal policies. I have said and I suggest that we should consider in this process problems of municipal finance, problems of housing, of social change, of transportation and the more specific issues such as land cost and sewerage treatment. The Toronto conference affirmed the principle of a national forum for all the three governments to examine major issues and to take representations back to governments which retain all their powers and jurisdictions.

• (1410)

Mr. Speaker, it is not a method of amending the constitution and it is not a method of interfering with the proper jurisdictions and responsibilities of governments but it is, it seems to me, a way of assuring that the constitution is not used as an excuse for inaction; in urban Canada it is a process of consulting on objectives, on goals, on priorities and on strategies.

As was agreed at that conference, Mr. Speaker, we are proceeding, with considerable success, to set up regional tri-level consultative processes involving the federal government, all provinces or groups of provinces and local governments. We are also setting up, and have working, action committees in such cities as Winnipeg, Montreal and Vancouver to deal with specific urban issues that are of particular concern to particular areas; issues such as housing, community rehabilitation, federal buildings and land use, transportation, harbour and airport activities. The many strands of federal urban concern include transportation—airports, harbours, urban transportation systems and, in a program to be introduced into this House shortly, the relocation of railway tracks away from downtown areas except for tracks and facilities which can be used for new or improved modes of urban transportation.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) and I jointly announced the federal intention for this new program and we saw it as a major contribution to the rebirth and revitalization of cities and towns alike. The legislation in essence, Mr. Speaker, will enable the federal government to come to the assistance of local governments and provinces by requiring—and up until now we have had no power to so require—the railways to move their yards, tracks, stations, etc. if that is in the best over-all urban interests of the city or area concerned. There is no federal or any other power at the moment to require anything of the railroads in this respect. The preparation, introduction and passage of such legislation is, in my view, a matter of urgency and priority. Since our announcement, widespread interest has been expressed in cities from one end of Canada to the other, in letters to me and applications to the Canadian Transport Commission in Edmonton, Calgary, Winnipeg, St. Thomas, Ontario, White Rock, Moncton, Montreal and many others.

The amendments to the Railway Act which parliament will be asked to approve with regard to railroad relocation will also provide for expenditures on building and improving grade crossings across the country to be almost doubled. From my experience in this House, I know that many hon. members worry about this both from the point of view of urban development and safety. The strands of urban concern include housing and community planning programs of this government, administered through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

I should like now to devote the rest of my remarks to the programs of that corporation. Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has been one of the great institutions of the federal government since the Second World War; it has been the builder, the facilitator, the catalyst and often the goad in assuring for Canada a supply of housing that has put this country in a far better position regarding homes for its citizens than most other countries. It is moving now onto new ground and, as I have made very clear to the corporation, it cannot any longer be simply a banking institution or a lending institution for the building industry. It has moved far from concentrating on supporting the building of middle class housing. In recent years, it has moved from having to treat housing as an economic commodity and housing policy as an economic stimulus to be turned up or turned down according to prevailing economic winds in the country.

The corporation, under this government, is the instrument of federal social policy in the field of housing and community planning. This changing role—the process of adapting itself to the changing needs of the country—has not been an easy one. A major reorganization of the corporation's management structure, which will involve the appointment of new senior personnel, is now well under way. In terms of the activity of the corporation, its outlook, and its views, it must as a matter of social policy, be on the lead edge of development.

The new direction of the corporation—and of federal policy—puts housing within its community context and that community context within a philosophy that says adequate homes in a good environment are a social right of Canadians. We have adopted a basic principle that says it is a fundamental right of Canadians, regardless of where they live or their economic circumstances, to enjoy adequate shelter at reasonable cost.

This fundamental right may be self-evident to some, but no Canadian government has yet explicitly and publicly accepted it, with all that it implies, as the cornerstone of federal housing policy. I have said this since I have been minister and I repeat it now because I think it is important. I must add that the realization of that right—the enforcement of that right—cannot be achieved by the federal government alone or any local government alone; to assure the enforcibility of that right will require the combined resources of all governments in Canada working in concert with the industry and with individual Canadians.

The new amendments to the National Housing Act, which I shall be introducing in this House very shortly, are an affirmation of this principle. Our first goal is that there be enough new units and improved and repaired units, in sufficient variety, for Canadians. Toward that end, we are building houses in record numbers of units. In 1971, more than 233,000 units were started in Canada, a record to that time. For 1972, the number will leap to about 250,000 and we foresee a strong pace of construction through 1973.

The unprecedented volume of house construction in the past two years assures that we will far exceed the target of one million new units set for the five-year period ending in 1974. Related to the matter of availability of housing is the question of land prices and planned urban development. It is apparent that the private market does not always function well in the development and opening up of new land. The federal government will provide the initiative and assistance to allow all levels of government to participate in the land market in a concerted way. Through the public assembly of land and the development of new communities, pressure will be exerted to reduce the cost of residential land. For this purpose the federal government, and I will be setting this out at the federal-provincial conference in a few days time, under agreed guidelines for urban development will make a commitment at that conference to make available to provinces and municipalities not less than $100 million a year for at least the next five years for purposes of land assembly and new communities.

Before I leave the subject of the availability of housing, I ought to mention that it is our intention to re-introduce the new financial mechanisms legislation that was introduced in the previous parliament. Hon. members who were here are familiar with that legislation. There will be some minor amendments to it. The original provisions were for the establishment of a federal mortgage bank and for the support of private mortgage investment companies. Their purpose is to improve the flow of private capital into the residential mortgage market, which essentially helps the middle and higher income home buyers, while leaving the government and taxpayer free to concentrate on housing for lower income Canadians.

The second goal is accessibility of housing. Houses must not only be available; they must be within everyone's reach. Private markets, no matter how well they may work, cannot give everyone the assurance that they can obtain housing they can afford. Where this kind of help is needed, it is the role of governments to provide the help. Under the federal government's programs twice as many housing units have been created for low-income people during the last four years than in all the years since the end of the second world war. That does not mean that there is not more to be done. Nevertheless, I think that indicates the thrust we have been following and will follow in the new amendments that we shall introduce.

Apart from measures initiated by my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), we will be introducing amendments to improve access to housing for people who could not otherwise afford it. The federal government will offer in its legislation a number of alternatives providing a range of choice in the type of housing and forms of tenure. There will be, first, an assistance program to help low income people purchase their own homes rather than reside as tenants in public housing developments. They will be assisted by subsidies towards payments of principle, interest and taxes. The government is giving them the right to purchase their homes as an alternative to living in public housing units.

Second, there will be assistance for improvements to existing houses under the repair and rehabilitation sections of the legislation to be introduced. Those proposals enjoy the support of municipal and local governments. The program promises to assist in improving existing but deteriorating houses in neighbourhoods in the downtown core areas of our cities. In the past we have bulldozed such areas. In future, we will be providing this kind of program in order to stabilize, preserve and conserve those areas for the people who live in them. This sort of program was emphasized in the speech of the newly elected mayor of Toronto. I look forward to introducing this kind of legislation which supports the objectives that he outlined in his speech on housing policy for Toronto.

Further, Mr. Speaker, there will be assistance to co-operatives and other non-profit corporations to build or acquire housing for low-income and elderly people. I have spoken to some in the co-operative movement and they are responding. I said, "Go out, please, and build as many houses as you can." I also told them that I do not want the National Housing Act in any way to be an impediment in their particular decision to build.

The amendments to be introduced will contain, for the first time, a special section relating to co-operative housing and to the special structure, organization and ownership provisions dealing with the co-operative movement, so that there will be no impediment in the legislation which will prevent those people from going ahead with programs they want to carry out. All these measures, to some degree, offer an alternative to public housing which, nevertheless in my view, continues to be a useful instrument for providing good, affordable housing to some sectors of the population. I can assure the House that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation funds for low income housing certainly will not fall below the high 1972 level of commitment. Actually, that commitment can be expected to increase.

The third goal deals with the quality of housing. In addition to making housing available and accessible, we must be concerned with the quality of housing and ensure that people get what they pay for. The resources of the corporation for research and development will be enhanced, and the government proposes to take the initiative in a series of systematic developmental projects which may be taken indirectly by CMHC or supported by CMHC or undertaken jointly by CMHC, the local government and the private sector. I will be putting before a number of provinces a proposal in which we propose to undertake a precise study of the specific needs in the major regions of Canada. We will shortly receive the 1971 census data and will use comprehensive on the ground housing figures. I think we need much more information than is presently available to us in terms of the housing needs of our communities, the income levels of different neighbourhoods and the age of the people in order that our programs may work effectively. We want to fulfil the real housing needs of the five major regions of this country.

In addition, as mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, I shall introduce amendments to the National Housing Act dealing with warranties and I will outline this legislation in more detail later. One of the proposed amendments will provide that where a builder fails to complete a dwelling which he has sold, CMHC may advance the purchaser money out of the Mortgage Insurance Fund to have the dwelling completed. It is advanced on behalf of that purchaser. In addition, as the National Housing Act applies to less than half the houses built in this country, there is a need for a comprehensive purchaser protection plan. This, as well, is being developed by the corporation and will be announced in due course. It would provide for all housing built in Canada and not only that covered by the National Housing Act. I think all hon. members who were here previously will respect the vigour with which I discharged my former portfolio as minister of consumer and corporate affairs. I want to afford the same sort of protection to the house purchaser.

Mr. Paproski: Promises, promises. Do it now.

Mr. Basford: The final goal, and I am rushing to finish, deals with the community; not just with housing, but with the community in which that housing stands, whether it be urban, rural or remote. The government, with the co-operation of the provinces and municipalities, proposes to make new kinds of assistance available to preserve and improve neighbourhoods and small communities which are a vital strand in the social fabric of Canada, but which are threatened by deterioration and decay.

The throne speech mentions new communities. It does so because an urgent requirement is developing to provide alternative ways of coping with urban growth, alternative to what we have now, under which, simply, cities sprawl ever bigger and, in many instances, our best agricultural land surrounding those cities is paved over. New communities taking the pressure off the old are one way in which the federal government, in co-operation with provinces and local governments, can bring some shape and direction to the inevitable and rapid growth of urban living in Canada.

More than just the relieving of pressure on existing cities and neighbouring farm lands is involved, important though those considerations are. New or expanded existing communities, chosen within provincial planning strategies, can be a means of economic buildup for regions. They can be developed within a metropolitan region or on a resource frontier, to give two popular examples. The federal government is prepared, by amendments to be introduced to the National Housing Act and by involvement in federal-provincial conferences, to take the lead in creating some viable alternatives to the uncontrolled and unplanned expansion of our great cities. Some existing provisions of the National Housing Act and some new provisions which are contemplated can be of great assistance to provinces and municipalities in planning and developing new communities which will meet the anticipated needs of our growing urban populations.

• (1430)

This assistance can be made available for the acquisition and planning of the land which may be needed for many purposes related to the creation of new communities. For example, on the subject of new communities, I might take this opportunity to inform the House that the Ontario Housing Corporation, on behalf of the federal government and the Ontario government, is optioning some 5,000 acres near Ottawa for a new community. This land, the acquisition of which is to be announced this afternoon, has been designated a potential new growth area by the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton. The action of the senior government in acquiring the land is to complement the far-seeing initiative of the local governments concerned. The new community ultimately will have a population of 100,000 people.

Mr. Baker: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister would accept a question now or prefer that I wait until the end of his speech.

Mr. Basford: I am quite happy to answer a question now.

Mr. Baker: A few moments ago the minister mentioned the announcement of a super-city outside Ottawa. Could he tell us whether or not he has had any consultation with the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton with respect to its location, and whether or not he has had any consultation with the township in which it is to be located concerning its location.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I must bring to the attention of the hon. member that the point he is raising is not a point of order, a point which concerns the rules and the operation of this House, but is merely a question he wishes to ask of the minister. If the minister should reply to the question, it would take away from the time allotted to him. It would be very difficult at this time to allow the question to be answered because we have reached the point where the time allotted to the minister has expired. Unless hon. members of the House would agree that the minister be allowed to go beyond his allotted time, I could not allow the question. It is agreed that the minister be allowed to reply to the question and complete his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Bell: Apart from the fact that ministers have been receiving an extra five or 10 minutes in order to finish very important speeches, we do have a tight schedule to follow.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that point. First of all, if the House is giving its consent that I continue, may I say I thank them. I appreciate the comments of the whip of the opposition party and will be very brief indeed. In reply to the question asked by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), there has been a long series of negotiations and discussions with the chairman of the regional district and, of course, the plan is in accordance with a planning study commissioned by the regional district, by the Ontario Housing Corporation and by the two agencies of the federal government, the National Capital Commission and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, if the minister would permit a question, I should like to ask him if it will take as long to develop the new city outside Ottawa as it has taken to develop the Malvern development outside Toronto which started in 1951.

Mr. Basford: I would hope not. I think the Malvern development has shown what has been wrong in respect of land assembly in the past. I believe its operation is serving a useful purpose. One of the things I will be discussing with the provinces in particular is how better to manage provincial land assembly schemes in order to ensure they are placed on the market when needed and have a desirable effect on prices. What I am talking about now is total planning in terms of a growth plan for the region, which is a regional and provincial plan. This is very important for future growth.

In conclusion, and bearing in mind the statement of my friend in the opposition, may I say that in proposing amendments to the National Housing Act there were in the changes introduced in Bill C-213 a number of programs including assisted home ownership, repair and rehabilitation of neighbourhoods and support by the federal government of loans and grants to non-profit organizations, both municipal and private. The provisions required a matching provincial grant in all the three programs and it would be my proposal to delete the requirement for cost sharing in those programs in order to make federal grants available regardless of the extent of provincial and municipal contributions. In all those areas, there is always provincial and municipal support. It only adds to the red tape if they are required to be matching. I shall be discussing that kind of proposal with the provinces. We will also be considering with the provinces funding arrangements which would assist them in extending their forward planning beyond a one-year time frame. This would involve the commitment of federal housing funds to the provinces for longer periods of time than is currently provided. I think this would be a vast improvement, permitting federal, provincial and municipal governments, to plan what their housing programs would be.

One of my own most urgent priorities for the immediate future is to strengthen the federal-provincial partnership in the field of housing and community building, to improve the quality of communication between the federal and provincial governments and, through the provinces, with the municipalities. I am hoping, beginning with the federal-provincial conference sheduled for January 22 and 23, to develop new techniques for joint planning in the areas of policy development, program planning, allocation of resources, and particularly joint efforts in research and development which will rapidly expand our common knowledge about the character and dimensions of the problems which we face together.

I would hope that at that conference—and I have suggested to my provincial colleagues that this be the case—local governments and municipalities would be invited by the provincial representatives because I think we all realize there will not be a home building or community program in this country without the involvement of local government. I would hope the federal government through the National Housing Act would respond to local government needs as effectively as it possibly can.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister where that conference is to be held.

Mr. Paproski: Is it to be held in Edmonton?

Mr. Basford: No. It is to be held in the national capital area, I might reply to my large friend from the Conservative party.

Mr. Paproski: Larger than you.

Mr. Basford: I am fast catching up with the hon. member.

Before this conference takes place, I expect I will have placed before the House of Commons the proposed amendments to the National Housing Act, so that delegates to the conference will have before them an explicit statement, for their consideration, of the government's proposals. The proposed legislation and other policy proposals which do not involve legislation, can be modified and improved through discussion and debate in this House and outside, with the provinces and through them the municipalities, before being put into effect.

Mr. Speaker, in the time allowed I have endeavoured to set out the thrust of the federal housing policy and the thrust of federal urban policy. I suggest with deference that it is a thrust worthy of the confidence of all members of this House regardless of party.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising for the purpose of asking a question?

Mr. Marshall: Yes, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that there will be isolated parts of Canada which will get the advantage of the thrust of national housing policies, particularly in respect of the rehabilitation program to which $4 million was allocated and which the Council of Social Development said was not enough. What is the minister's recommendation in that regard?

• (1440)

Mr. Basford: There are several provisions in the amendment which relate to rural Canada and several policy initiatives. With regard to the other matter the hon. member raised, I accept the suggestion of the development council that $4 million was inadequate, in the sense they put it forward, but it was solely an estimate of the amount we considered that municipalities and provinces could absorb in a year under the program. If they can absorb more, I can assure the hon. member there will be more money available.

Mr. Gilbert: A further question—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I am, of course, at the service of the House, but I might point out that the minister has already received an extension of the time allotted to him and that we must be fair to other hon. members who wish to take part in the debate.

Mr. Gilbert: It is only a short question. Can I ask the minister why he did not touch on one of the most important factors relating to the cost of housing, that is, high interest rates? Am I to believe he does not intend to do anything about the high interest rates which constitute one of the main factors in the cost of housing?

Mr. Basford: I would refer the hon. member to my remarks a few moments ago about the residential mortgage bank in the proposed legislation.

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is for me, as for other new members, a great privilege to speak in this House. It is well known, though it bears repeating, that election to the House of Commons is the highest honour our fellow citizens can bestow. Progress within the House is gratifying, I suppose, but it is not bestowed by one's own neighbours.

I take this opportunity to add my felicitations to Mr. Speaker upon his reappointment to the high office he holds, as well as to the Deputy Speaker. I support all that has been said about the eloquence and grace with which the affairs of this House are handled. In this connection, I am rather reminded of the cavalry general who had not participated to any extent in a battle and was asked to describe the role of cavalry in the battle. His answer was that it lent dignity and distinction to what would otherwise be merely a vulgar brawl.

This has been, for me, a surprising week, beginning with the unfortunate speech of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau)—I shall say no more about that—followed by the New Democratic Party voting against consideration of old age pensions at this time, followed by the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) launching what was, I suggest, the most scathing attack on the government yet heard, particularly as it came from a former member of the cabinet. The hon. member for Verdun said he might leave this House tomorrow, next week, or next month. I would regret to see him go. I believe him to be a man of high principle and one with the courage of his convictions, and such people are not easily found. He follows a long line of distinguished people who have been squeezed out of the Liberal government in similar circumstances. I think of Mr. Winters, of Miss LaMarsh, of the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer), of Mr. Kierans and others, substantiating the claim made by a well-known columnist that in this cabinet only the weak can survive.

I should like to add my congratulations to the mover and seconder of the motion in reply to the address. I was impressed by their sincerity and eloquence. I should also like to compliment the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) on the speech he made in this House yesterday.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKinnon: I found that speech to be most informative and I regret that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) was not present to hear what might prove to be the most knowledgeable speech we shall hear on this subject during the present session.

It is customary on occasions such as this to refer to one's own constituency, to its natural benefits and to its man-made problems. I do not propose to depart too greatly from that custom. I suppose no two constituencies are alike, but I do believe that Victoria is a constituency truly different from the others.

It is particularly gratifying for me to be speaking here this afternoon on the birthday of a former member for Victoria, Sir John A. Macdonald.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKinnon: Victoria, Mr. Speaker, is noted throughout Canada for the beauty of its environment. I suppose this is well known to all hon. members; if it is not, I extend to them an invitation to visit us at their earliest opportunity. We shall be glad to see them and I am sure they will receive the usual Victorian welcome.

I should like to mention one important difference between Victoria and other constituencies, namely, the sociological make-up of its people. Over 30 per cent of the eligible voters are old age pensioners. There were at last count 19,600 residents of the age of 65 or over. These people are in many cases entirely dependent upon the financial arrangements that our society makes for the care of its elderly.

Perhaps the next largest identifiable group in my constituency is that of active government employees. Many of the employees of the defence installations in Esquimalt live in the constituency of Victoria; this group includes both military and civilian employees but again their livelihood depends on the decisions taken in this House. Another sizeable group is made up of those who have retired from the armed services. During their service, most of these men and women, have been posted to and fro across the Dominion, and having once seen Victoria they naturally select it as a place of retirement. Their decision is usually based on a desire to live in a liveable climate and the Victorian way of life. Financially, though, their decision is often hard to support. Victoria, as hon. members will have gathered, operates on a very narrow economic base and the retired serviceman in Victoria is almost always under-employed. The three categories I have mentioned are all dependent upon financial arrangements made by the federal government, and I shall have a few words to say about those arrangements later.

In addition to the three groups noted, many Victorians are employed by the provincial governments and by our educational facilities, which are becoming noted for their academic excellence. The University of Victoria has been able to engage some lecturers of international reputation, attracted again, I believe, by our climate and our way of life. Hon. members will note that all the people I have mentioned are employed in the public sector, and in truth this describes Victoria. The private sector of our economy is narrow indeed. We have tourism in the summer, a small and dwindling but efficient ship-building industry, a couple of sawmills. So it can be readily seen that the public sector outweighs the private sector to a greater degree than in almost any other city in Canada, with the possible exception of Ottawa itself.

I should now like to speak about the effects that government action, or inaction, have had on the various segments of the economy of Victoria. In the private sector we suffer from three disadvantages which are difficult to overcome: the extra cost of handling and shipping to and from the mainland; the distances to markets, particularly Canadian markets, and finally our higher labour costs. For these reasons, it is sometimes difficult for us to bid competitively on a dollars and cents basis for federal contracts such as shipbuilding. It is my contention, however, that we are entitled to a reasonable share of such contracts. We pay taxes but we do not believe that paying taxes should be our only type of participation in the federal economy.

In a flatulent press release about a year ago, the government announced that defence contracts were to be allotted henceforth on a zonal basis. To my knowledge there has been no indication of this reasonable concept being put into effect. I should like to point out to the government that Victoria shipyards are second to none in efficiency. Our yards have never burned a ship on the ways; our yards have never subjected a ship to the acid test given the Restigouche; our shipyards have never submitted a bill for two and a half times the estimate for a refit.

The plight of the pensioner is very close to anyone representing Victoria whether on the local, provincial or national level. The federal government has shown itself to be remarkably indifferent to the disastrous effects to inflation on those on fixed incomes.

A rise in the cost of living is immediately reflected in a lowering of the living standards of approximately half my constituents. For those living on the old age pension and supplement only, it means less food or meaner shelter. For those with a fixed income of their own, it means having to give up some things for which they had worked and saved to enjoy in their old age. They feel tricked and cheated by society and that is what your inflationary policies do to them. I could go on but hope to have another opportunity to speak on what I would consider to be an equitable basic old age pension. I have accordingly placed on the order paper a notice of motion recommending a basic old age pension of $150 per month. I find myself in support of the increased income supplement instituted by the British Columbia government and deplore the legalistic quibbling of the federal government as to the obligation to share under the Canadian Assistance Plan.

Perhaps a few words about our place in confederation might not be amiss at this time. During the recent election campaign the touring media fell into a recurring habit, when in British Columbia, of searching for B.C. separatists. As far as I am concerned, separatism in British Columbia is a figment of the imagination of eastern writers. The central government, and particularly the present one, give us sufficient provocation, but our hearts are loyal and will remain so. We do, however, reserve the right to point out the inequities of the federal government. We look for an even-handedness by the central authority and recently have felt that it has been lacking.

A recent example of this is the government policy or lack of policy regarding federal properties in urban areas. Thirteen days before the last election, the government found itself able to purchase some $30 million worth of privately held land in the city of Toronto to be used for the enjoyment of the people of that city. In June the city of Victoria had been treated quite differently. A parcel of land wanted by the city for use as a waterfront park but owned by the federal government was sold, not given to the city by the federal government, at $50,000 an acre, $20,000 cash, the remainder on a mortgage at 9 per cent interest. I would not want you to be under any misapprehension. We do not wish the people of Toronto to be deprived of a park if it is the policy of this government to give parks to cities, and we do not mind the government refusing us if it is government policy to refuse people when they ask for Crown land for parks, but to give land on the one hand and refuse it on the other while charging our taxpayers usurious interest rates offends our sense of fairness.

When I suggested to the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) that we would like to be treated in the same fashion as Toronto, the answer was that the Toronto land was to be a national park. To me this conjures up visions of "Smokey the Bear" patrolling the southern end of Bay Street, but to the overburdened taxpayers of Victoria paying high interest rates to their own government it is not funny.

I think this uneven-handedness has been exemplified by the operations of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. It was our understanding that regions having serious unemployment problems might reasonably expect to qualify for economic expansion. British Columbia had 61,000 unemployed in September, 1972, as against a comparable national figure of 459,000; that is, B.C. had 13½ per cent of the nation's unemployed. To alleviate the distress, DREE had at that time allotted 1.4 per cent of its funds to British Columbia. The figures speak for themselves. We had 13½ per cent of the illness and received 1.4 per cent of the medicine. The patient can hardly be blamed for feeling neglected.

I should like to point out as well that recent figures show that the metropolitan region of Vancouver has for eight months of the last 12 had the highest unemployment rate in all of Canada, and again this month it is the highest. Why, in B.C., we are only to be allowed to have a designated region several hundred miles away from this great pool of unemployment is beyond me. I spoke of 13½ per cent unemployment in September and the treatment we got. I believe that it was just about the time of the release of these figures that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) made his contribution to the national debate by announcing that henceforth the sale of firecrackers would be prohibited. The script appeared to have been written by T. S. Eliot and the establishment had apparently decided that the government would go out, not with a bang, but with a whimper. Perhaps the hon. member for Verdun supplies the second half of the quotation, which is from what could be the litany of the present regime, the Hollow Men: "We are the hollow men, we are the stuffed men, leaning together."

I hope that my remarks may have explained to this House why and how British Columbia, particularly Vancouver Island and specifically Victoria, has come to a state of disenchantment with this government. As I said at the beginning, each constituency is different and each constituency has its problems. The problem is not that the majority have been silent but that this government has not been listening.

So, here we are in this House, at a crucial time in our history. The other day we heard the leader of the New Democratic Party give his familiar criticism of corporations. It was like old times for me. In British Columbia we have not heard much about corporate welfare bums since the NDP became owners of a railway, a hydro monopoly, one of the largest ferry fleets in the world and other corporations. This appears not only to qualify them as corporate owners, but even worse, as conglomerate owners, and the word "conglomerate" is even worse than the word "Corporation" in the NDP lexicon, I believe. At the same time, Mr. Barrett announced that he was providing government funds to pay for up to one-third of the cost of building an automobile plant if the foreign corporation would build it in British Columbia. On top of their other acquisitions, of course, they have $500 million in the bank. The silence on the subject out there has become defeaning since the B.C. NDP government decided to practice a little ideological nepotism by granting a contract to a Manitoba corporation, NDP sponsored, to supply buses to their corporation, B.C. Hydro.

The interesting part is that apparently public tendering is passé with the NDP when in office. The Minister of Municipal Affairs in British Columbia was in a hurry and said; "I'm not going to horse around with tendering." In British Columbia, the taxpayers will never know how much these two NDP corporations have ripped off them. So I wish to thank the member for York South (Mr. Lewis) for his nostalgic trip down memory lane, back to the high ideals and piety of the NDP when out of office.

The election results have transformed the Prime Minister into a modern day Uriah Heep, and the leader of the New Democratic Party has enjoyed a position of kingmaker for the last two months. If he now makes the wrong decision they may be the last enjoyable months he will have for a long time. Perhaps I might quote what Uriah Heep said to another David:

Now come, I have got some of you under the harrow. Think twice before it goes over you.

Then, he continues:

I will be a friend to you, in spite of you. So now you know what you've got to expect.

The other David, speaking to his Uriah Heep, said:

I have shown you often enough that I despise you. Why should I dread your doing your worst to all about you? What else do you ever do?

A couple of days ago the hon. member for York South suggested we wait and give this government yet another chance to bring forward legislation before voting it out. My reply is: Why wait for spring, do it now.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa East): Mr. Speaker, I should like first to congratulate you and your colleagues for your appointment to these high posts. I am proud to see that the role of Speaker belongs to a dedicated Franco-Ontarian who is doing honour to his province and to his country.

I should like also, Mr. Speaker, to congratulate and to thank the mover (Mr. Blais), and the seconder (Mr. Blaker) of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. It is a pleasure for me to see that like myself they are members of a minority in their respective province.

Also, Mr. Speaker, may I express my gratefulness to the Ottawa East electors who kindly elected me as their respresentative. I accept the honour and I shall endeavour to carry on my duties with all the dignity of that post and with all the ability I have.

During 27 years, from 1945 to 1972, Ottawa East was represented by Mr. Jean Thomas Richard. He was a man of action, a man of the people, and his voters and his country are obliged to him for 27 years of devoted service.

He acquired in those years as a servant of the Canadian people and his riding an enviable reputation as a lawyer and as a member of Parliament. He managed to prove that he was a serious man, a man who could listen to and serve the people of Canada. The people of his riding came to visit him in his office, in the House of Commons, and he always had time to see and help them.

During his long career in Parliament, Mr. Richard served as chairman of the Canadian section of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association in 1965 and as chairman of the public service parliamentary committee in 1966-1967. A former whip of Ontario Liberals, Mr. Jean Thomas Richard also had the honor of acting as Deputy Speaker, in 1971. My predecessor served his country and the constituency he represented in Parliament and I should like, on behalf of the electors of Ottawa East, to extend to him our sincere thanks and to wish him long life and happiness.

Franco-Ontarian by birth, Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few remarks about the importance, for all of us, of bilingualism and above all of the ever growing recognition, in the English-speaking provinces, of the French fact which represents over one million Canadians living outside Quebec.

I want to be the spokesman for a people who unhappily have been too often in limbs, namely the Franco-Ontarians. They do exist and I belong to that group of people who are competent and who want and can render great services to their country if they are given the opportunity of doing so. They proved that they were perseverant and steadfast, while respecting the rights of others. They fought for their country, they overcame a law which prevented them from studying in their own language. They lived with the fact that until very recently they were refused education in their own language, financed by public funds. They fought with persistance and today, anxious for better understanding, they continue to fight for the implementation of a legislation which is supposed to do them justice.

Even if this falls under provincial jurisdiction, the present government as well as the previous one, under the late Lester B. Pearson, recognized more than others that it was necessary to do justice to minorities through legislation, in the fields under federal jurisdiction, where necessary.

This Franco-Ontarian nation of which I am part was severely put to the test but survived and its future is very promising. What is more surprising is that this nation in spite of its problems of survival, the battles it had to fight, still has to fight and win without revolution and hatred. It is through persuasion and perseverance and by recognizing the rights of the majority that it succeeds in convincing more and more the members of the majority of the rightness of its claims and thereby improving its position without however infringing upon the rights of others.

It is only by giving justice to the minorities and through understanding of that fact by the majorities that this country will survive. In spite of the immense progress made in that field, Mr. Speaker, it happens too often that the authorities and even this government, no matter how sympathetic and understanding it may be, act as if "francophone" and "Quebecer" were synonyms. People are unaware of the fact that there are francophones outside of the province of Quebec and if we want a fair representation of francophones in important positions we will have to look outside of the province of Quebec to get them.

I would like this government to recognize in a practical way that francophones outside the province of Quebec constitute a nation with which dialogue is necessary, or the only thing that will be left will still be a silent minority. Francophones exist independently from their brothers of the province of Quebec but they are as francophone as they are and because of their qualities it is their intention to demand to be recognized as such in the allocation of positions and duties in the service of their country.

I repeat, no other government has been as appreciative of the development of French-speaking minorities outside the province of Quebec. As a matter of fact, it was the right hon. L. B. Pearson's governement that gave us the report of the B & B Commission. This royal commission prompted noticeable changes in provinces that have met the hopes of the French-speaking minorities in matters of education. Well informed Canadians will never forget the important role played by the federal government in giving its support to the education of minorities. In provinces where people are still struggling for the recognition of minorities' rights in education in their own language, those who speak French know and greatly appreciate the important contribution made by the Liberal government towards the solution of their just claims.

• (1500)

[English]

The objectives of the French speaking minorities still pertain mainly to the life of this country as a whole. Some would have us believe that over a 100 years of relative peace guarantees confederation. But I would like to remark that the last 10 years with mounting tensions have shown that confederation is still on trial. The unrest is somewhat related to language; it is therefore natural for minority groups to turn to governments, especially the federal government, for legislation and for solutions to their problems.

[Translation]

As for education, Mr. Speaker, after the publication of Volume II of the Report of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism, the federal government stated its acceptance of the principles underlying the recommendations of the commission and suggested a very broad program of co-operation with the provinces in order to stimulate the teaching of the language of the minority and the study of the second language. An amount of about $300 million, spread over a four year period, was allocated to the program which was to result from this co-operation.

Having worked for 11 years in the school field in Ontario, I would like to stress the importance of these programs on the education of French-speaking minorities outside Quebec. In fact, the objectives to which the federal and provincial governments have subscribed are that we should enable Canadians to have their children educated in the official language of their choice and that children should be provided with an opportunity to learn the other official language as their second language.

We are pleased to note that young people are much more receptive to bilingualism. The major recommendation of the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism in favour of an equal partnership between the two major cultural groups will fall in fertile soil, since our young people are receptive to the idea of bilingualism. Obviously, this will take some time, but will eventually result in fewer tensions and a united Canada.

A bilingual education system is not the final answer to the major problems of national unity. I suggest that education systems should make every effort to teach both languages, but one should be wary of the attitude of some parents who, having transferred this responsibility to the school system, exonerate themselves from all risks and all blame for the example they set in not themselves practicing what they teach their children. Many parents confine the important problem of bilingualism to the school system while they do not exercise tolerance in the adult world to prove that they too are willing to make the effort. Let us not rest the problem of national unity on our children's shoulders. We are facing a communication problem, and human communication is greatly influenced by the attitudes of the people involved.

Mr. Speaker, I should also like to emphasize the major contribution of the federal government to the teaching of the second language in provinces with a strong English-speaking majority. I am aware that federal-provincial agreements will be negotiated again soon and I hope that our national contribution will be adequate in view of ever-increasing needs.

Nevertheless, because education comes under the sole jurisdiction of the provinces, serious consideration should be given to distribution of amounts contributed by the federal government for elementary and secondary education. It should be ensured that in the course of future federal-provincial negotiations we obtain a report from the provinces covering distribution of these amounts to achieve the specific objective for which they are meant, which is education of minorities. School systems are anxious to broaden their programs and they need manuals. Only through fair distribution of federal funds can the deep-rooted determination of both Francophones and Anglophones to study in their mother tongue be met.

At the same time, those young Anglophones wanting to learn French will be able to study under teaching conditions designed for their needs. It is only through the development of dynamic and modern language programs that we we will be able to satisfy those many people who wish to enrich the Canadian nation, not only in working together as a nation, but in knowing each other in our hearts and mind through the appreciation of both the main cultures of our country.

It is through the support and the recognition of all Canada that minorities will be able to realize their rightful ambition. Some Quebec separatists suggest that we have been assimilated. We are not so and much less separatists as some badly informed Anglophones believe. I cannot help but being proud in saying that we are all convinced federalists.

It is the utmost desire of Francophone minorities outside Quebec to live and let live. We want to live as we please, according to our character and state of mind, as free and responsible citizens with the assurance that in working together we will assure the progress and development of our country. We want to live while maintaining our language, our faith and our traditions, but at the same time respecting other people as we want them to respect us.

• (1510)

[English]

The French speaking minorities outside Quebec are at the forefront of bilingualism in Canada. They have fought to preserve their cultural and linguistic heritage, and in so doing are an example to their country.

[Translation]

Through federal contributions, francophone minorities are contributing to promote a Canadian way of life which is advantageously reflected on our country.

As they obtain funds from the federal government, francophone minorities are not ashamed nor indebted to anyone. They are rather doing the country a tremendous service by ensuring the survival of bilingualism and endeavouring, for instance, to obtain what we all want—a united Canada where both official languages and both cultures will thrive in peace, brotherhood and, above all, the respect for individuals.

[English]

Representing a riding which, by historical associations within our capital, has a rich heritage of architectural and educational values, it pleases me to note in the Speech from the Throne that, in co-operation with the provinces, we will provide assistance for the rehabilitation of older neighbourhoods. We must preserve our cherished neighbourhoods where a certain type of life has been created, and where tradition has helped shape the eventual national capital and, indeed, reflected itself on to the whole of Canada.

The people of my riding are most appreciative of and attentive to the social security measures which will be reconsidered and reorganized. With a large population of senior citizens who have contributed so much to this country, it is indeed warming to their hearts to see that they will be treated with compassion and equity with a guaranteed annual income.

[Translation]

A large number of citizens of my riding have low incomes. The opportunity for them to buy and live in their own house, with the help of the federal and provincial governments, will give them another opportunity of finding family atmosphere and benefitting from an economic factor in real estate which they could not have hoped for otherwise.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, allow me to remind you of a passage in Saint-Exupéry's "The Little Prince". You will recall that when the little prince met the fox, he hoped to befriend him, for he was sad. But then the fox replied that he could not play with him because he was not tame. Thereupon the little prince asked what the word "tame" meant. "It means," replied the fox, "to create ties".

Of course, said the fox. To me, you are still just one little boy out of hundreds of thousands of little boys. I do not need you. And you don't need me either. To you, I am just a fox similar to hundreds of thousands of other foxes. But, if you tame me, we will need each other. You will become unique in the world for me. I shall become unique in the world for you . . .

That is what Canada means to me, Mr. Speaker: the close ties between two great peoples who are part of a country that is unique in the world.

[English]

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and The Islands): I should like to add my sincere congratulations to the many already expressed on your election to the high office you hold, Mr. Speaker. Two days ago in the House, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), mentioned his participation in Mr. Speaker's first nominating convention. Sir, I remember participating in an equally auspicious occasion, the recounting of votes that followed Mr. Speaker's first election campaign. And I maintain, Sir, that throughout those tense days you displayed the same impartial and objective approach, to those of all political persuasions who were involved in that recount, that has since earned for you the high regard and respect in which you are held in this House and beyond.

[Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa East).]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and The Islands): It is a great privilege and honour to rise in this House today as the representative for the historic riding of Kingston and The Islands which has contributed so much to the development of this great country. This year we celebrate the 300th anniversary of the founding of Kingston in 1673 by Frontenac, and today, January 11, is the anniversary of the birth of Kingston's first Member of Parliament, Sir John A. Macdonald.

• (1520)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and The Islands): While I do not mind sharing him with the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon), I would remind him that he is uniquely and distinctly Kingston's.

Sir John A. popularized many things in his time, not the least of which was to encourage hon. members to be born on his birthday. I am sure you will understand, Sir, if I take time to express my greetings to the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell) the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan), the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) and the hon. member for Lafontaine (Mr. Lachance) on their special occasions.

What Frontenac in his time, and Macdonald in his, built on this continent they had to defend against military threat, political intrigue and the scepticism or the selfishness of men whose vision was small. Frontenac in the 17th century, and Macdonald in the 19th, had ambitions for Canada that transcended the times they lived in and the territory they occupied. Both men looked west. Frontenac extended the power of the King of France into the heart of North America. Macdonald's breathtaking concept of achievement was to secure half the continent to hand on to succeeding generations of Canadians.

I will not belabour the parallel between Frontenac and Macdonald. Their legacy belongs to each of us as Canadians and will be shared by many millions of Canadians to come. The House will understand if on this day especially I claim that special part of the Frontenac and Macdonald heritage which belongs uniquely to the people of Kingston and the Islands. Over the years the constituency of Kingston and the Islands has been represented in this House by many distinguished and remarkably gifted members. I assure the House that I am acutely aware of the exceptionally high standard of service to Canada that they have set.

And none more so than Sir John A. Macdonald—who first spelled out for this country a national policy—as we in our time are engaged in developing a new national policy. It is on several aspects of a new national policy that I wish to speak this afternoon. It is impossible—and indeed foolish—to try to escape the hand of the past in a place like Kingston. It was here that the parliament of the United Canadas sat in 1841. It was here, in the words of Kingston's motto, where the confederation dream began.

The cornerstone of Macdonald's dream—of his national policy—was a partnership between English and French speaking Canadians, making the best of the vast geographic challenge confronting them. This goal is as pertinent today as it was then but, like virtually all other things, the nature of the partnership and the details of the arrangements between the partners have changed substantially since the days of Macdonald.

They have been changed, redefined, in some respects even reversed, partly through informal means, partly even by changing the British North America Act. All these changes were necessary and, in the long run, no doubt advisable and desirable. But they have not brought us perfection nor a lastingly satisfactory solution to the kinds of tensions which are inevitable and can even be rewarding, in a multi-ethnic federal state. It is the very fact that we have not reached a lasting solution in the partnership that makes it imperative for each to find a mode of life with and alongside the other, while at the same time not so weakening the joint enterprise as to lay it open to further erosions of Canada's independence of action—economically, culturally, diplomatically—in relation to its powerful southern neighbour.

It is not unfair to say that although much has been achieved in the past in working out arrangements which seemed satisfactory at the time, there is at present clearly much discontent on the part, not only of provincial governments, and particularly that of Quebec, but also of various private groups within the provinces.

Important steps may have to be taken toward a redefinition of the partnership. In so doing, we at the federal level must remember that creative co-operation and interdependence in these fields, as in others, requires continuous consultation, not merely the presenting of proposals for comment. In devising new departures, alternative ways of doing things and compromises aiming at the mutually least disturbing arrangements we must, above all, maintain an open mind and a flexible stance. Nothing can be debarred from discussion and no approach should be ruled out as unthinkable. I am among those Canadians who are convinced that the long-run interests of both English and French speaking Canadians can best be met if we update our partnership in such a way that both come to feel strongly that our respective goals are being served and aided by the presence of the other.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and The Islands): This partnership has been strengthened by the presence of other groups and cultures. In addressing ourselves to the needs of the developing multi-culturalism of Canada I should like to pay particular attention to our native peoples.

The new national policy must spare no effort to provide full partnership to the native peoples. Although the numbers of these Canadians are smaller than those of some of the other main groups making up the country, the resources needed to be applied to achieve this end will have to be enormous—quite beyond what one would arrive at if one attempted to apply some sort of national per capita formula. The reasons are many, and relate to the nature and difficulty of the problem; our neglect of it over the years, and, let us admit it, the moral redress Canadians owe those they have so shamefully treated in the past.

More perhaps even than money, or at least equally, what is needed is the intellectual and creative effort to evolve new solutions and the moral and ethical courage to assign the problems of the native peoples the highest possible priority.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and The Islands): I must stress that I found the throne speech shockingly inadequate—in fact abysmally silent in this respect. There was not one single word about the native peoples, and yet there are complex and difficult problems associated with efforts to create conditions under which the native peoples can participate on a footing of complete equality with others, whose values they may not share and which they may not wish to adopt. But whatever the size of the challenge, or because of it, we must assign it the highest priority: the nature of the problems requires it, our past neglect imposes it and the human suffering and injustice involved cry for it.

• (1530)

This is not the time or place in which to become involved in the details of this revision of the national policy, but one fact is utterly beyond dispute. In coping with the problems, in all their varied manifestations and at whatever level, the full, free and vigorous participation of the people most affected must be sought and assured. It is no longer good enough to fashion policies and possible solutions, no matter how well-intentioned and, after they have been thought out, written up and congealed, present them for discussion to their "victims". The total involvement of the native peoples themselves, in the evolution of adequate policies must be the top priority and it must be accompanied by an important psychological adjustment on the part of those with previous experience in the field. There are those, Mr. Speaker, who, having spent many years following a paternalistic approach in their work with native peoples, may find the premise difficult to accept, but accept it they must, that even some false starts and potential errors may be valuable beginnings if they are made by a people working out their own difficult problems. In any event, a new national policy must rest on a vast and urgent attack on the inequalities and handicaps affecting Canada's native peoples and this attack must be centred on the full participation, from the beginning to the end, of those most affected.

There is another facet of national policy that is achieving a growing awareness in Canada—national independence. I venture to say that every national parliament that has ever assembled in our country has had to face in one way or another the three great issues of Canadian political history, national unity, national independence and national development. These three issues confront every generation of Canadians with new and different responsibilities; and from every generation of Canadians new policies are needed. But the underlining challenges to our continued life together as one nationality are in this twenty-ninth parliament, as they were in the first, national unity, national independence and national development. It is sometimes difficult to articulate these questions in terms of the every day concerns of the Canadian citizen. But I am certain that there is running not far below the surface in this country a strong current of Canadian nationalism, a consciousness of our identity and an awareness of the need to strengthen our economic and political independence.

Sir John A. Macdonald believed that there were certain distinctive values which the people of British North America had in common, values which were worth the effort of developing a strong independent state. In that sense, Macdonald was a nationalist. In that sense, too, I am a nationalist. Macdonald recognized that confederation could not work if Canada did not have a strong, independent national economy. That is no less true today than it was in 1867. Canadian nationalism is considered by some not to be of primary importance, because there is not one concrete incident or issue to crystalize it. The cause of Canadian nationalism is too complex and important to be wrapped up in one issue; it is all pervasive. It relates not only to foreign investment but to many other areas: the extent to which we are producing Canadian textbooks for our schools, the extent to which we have available films produced by the National Film Board, and many other areas.

I believe there is a danger that, if focussed on one issue, nationalism can become negative or chauvinistic or anti-American and the good, essential cause of Canadian nationalism is thereby degraded. Rather than attempt to harness this current of Canadian nationalism to one passing issue, surely it is for parliament to give it a creative and constructive explanation in many different ways. I gladly acknowledge the imaginative and positive efforts that are already being made in this direction, such as assistance to the publishing industry in Ontario and the good work of the CRTC, among several federal bodies that I can mention.

The time has come to reinforce our control over our economic and political destiny. I believe this parliament can do so by joining with the provinces in an effective means of examining present and proposed foreign investment in Canada. We can do it by re-examining our resource policies, not by being stampeded into precipitate action by others. We can do it by adopting an industrial strategy to ensure that Canadian resources are processed in Canada. We must provide support for the development of an independent Canadian technological capability. We must adopt measures to encourage foreign owned companies to re-invest their profits in Canada and to ensure that Canadian borrowers are not deprived of capital because our lending institutions have chosen to give preferred status to the larger multi-national corporations. I firmly believe that such measures would strengthen and stimulate our national economy.

A new national policy must commit Canada to the elimination of poverty. There are probably as many as 6 million men, women and children in this country today who are compelled to live on incomes which are below the poverty line. I have seen poverty in this country. I grew up with it in Cape Breton. I have seen it in rural Saskatchewan. I have seen it in the outports of Newfoundland, and I have seen it in my own constituency. Until we have solved this problem, no government can dare feel self-satisfied, no politician can be allowed to indulge in complacency.

Economic development means, first of all, real solutions to unemployment and the resulting poverty. We know that poverty causes irreversibly destructive effects on individual character. Isolation and despair have risen in vast numbers of Canadians who are confronted by the cruel realization that they cannot attain the self-respect that comes from a secure livelihood. This is the realistic human side of economic issues. In this post election period, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his colleagues say they have discovered the unemployed and the old age pensioners. But it is not enough to offer palliatives after the fact. This government has no comprehensive social policy, no policy which seeks to offer enduring solutions.

I cannot have confidence in a government which has allowed soaring food prices to hurt hundreds of thousands of Canadians on limited budgets and yet has taken no action. I cannot have confidence in a government which fails to provide sufficient expansionary economic policies while a record number of Canadians are without jobs. I cannot have confidence in a government which has resolved merely to do a better job of selling its policies while failing to tackle the maze of incompetently administered programs. These things have happened because this is a government which has become remote from the people and insensitive to individual human concerns, a government whose vision is limited by its isolation from the people.

I believe that the success of any policy is related to the responsiveness of government and I would argue further that the responsiveness of government is related to the sensitivity, understanding and interest of those who hold power. But this has been notoriously lacking in the recent years. I think there is an urgent need for government to recognize, not just pay lip service, to the need for greater involvement, wider participation, more thorough consultation and understanding. I would see this as basic to the evolution of the new national policies I have been discussing. If this should not materialize, I fear the result will be the alienation of more and more Canadians from a political system that fails to respond to their needs.

• (1540)

The maintenance of our political system is of special interest to me because most of my adult life has been spent as an organizer for my political party, as an officer, or as an active worker. It is a matter not just of my personal observation of many Canadians but confirmed by every scientific study of the subject I have seen, that there is a substantial number of Canadians who are convinced that nothing they say or do, including the exercise of their right to vote, has the slightest impact on the governmental or parliamentary process. To many, the machinery of government seems to operate in its own way for its own purpose, and while it closely affects their lives, they feel powerless to influence it.

The House is aware of the numerous methods that have been proposed or experimented with to give the citizens a greater degree of influence on decisions that affect their lives, and the kind of country they live in, but none of this—not the ombudsman, not the regional desk, not information in, not information out—can have anything but a marginal effect. What is essential is that we build up a credibility in our party process, increase the influence and responsibility of the individual Member of Parliament, and secure the integrity and legitimacy of the electoral system, for these are at issue.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and The Islands): We, as Members of Parliament and as members of political parties, have a personal responsibility to combat the alienation that afflicts the political system. There is a growing danger to political parties that pressure groups, protest movements, student activists, social planning councils, will so establish themselves as agents of social change that parties will have little room to manoeuvre. Many people already feel there is so little genuine radicalism inside the party system that anyone wishing change must look elsewhere. Yet we cannot function without political parties. It was Lord Bryce, a great scholar and a great politician, who said:

> Political parties are far older than democracy. No free large country has ever been without them. No one has shown how representative government could be worked without them.

Sir John A. Macdonald was not only the father of this country, he was the father of his party. I am sure he would be the first to recognize the changes that are necessary in our political and electoral processes to ensure a viable party system and thereby a viable parliamentary system. It is with that reference to Sir John A. Macdonald that I return to Kingston and The Islands. Many important functions and occasions will be taking place in my constituency in this tercentenary year, none more important than the visit of Her Majesty the Queen which His Excellency the Governor General so graciously observed in the Speech from the Throne.

I should like to take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to extend to you and to all hon. members an invitation to come to Kingston to participate in our tercentenary celebrations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it is not only with apprehension and anxiety but with a deep feeling of respect and pride that I deliver today my first speech in the House of Commons.

I have already had the privilege, Mr. Speaker, of serving the Canadian people for a few years in other capacities. It is however a great honour for me to take my place in this assembly as elected representative of the constituency of Outremont.

I have been for a long time an observer and admirer of our parliamentary institutions. Those institutions are closely related to the Canadian context and they have appeared quite sensitive to the problems encountered by the government as the result of the complex developments in the world.

Now if the successive Canadian governments have remained mindful of the needs of the people that ability is mostly due to the fact that it is made up of individuals sitting in this House who heed the advice of the 264 delegates of the Canadian people who are sharing that task.

[English]

This House certainly has known many outstanding parliamentarians. I believe the highest honour that can be conferred on one of its members is that of being recognized by his colleagues as a true House of Commons man. As I begin my parliamentary career, I can only express the hope that one day my colleagues will be kind enough to give me such an honour.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: The profound respect that both you, Mr. Speaker, and your distinguished colleague the Deputy Speaker have inspired in all hon. members of the House will set up an ideal which I shall strive to emulate.

I am also flattered by my nomination as Minister of National Health and Welfare. However, my pride is tinged with a substantial dose of humility and the awareness of the challenge so ably met by my predecessors, among them the Hon. Brooke Claxton and Paul Martin, J. Waldo Monteith, Judy LaMarsh and also the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), all of whom successively gave shape to the social security policy of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to inform the House of the approach envisaged by the government for its social security policy as outlined a few days ago in the Speech from the Throne.

As indicated in that document, that aspect of policy is one of this government's first two priorities, and there are two excellent reasons therefor.

First of all, our study of the social security system has revealed that income security plans in Canada are inadequate for attainment of the objectives set. They were created for several purposes; first to provide protection for those who normally would have adequate incomes, whose incomes were, on the average, adequate during their lifetime, against the risk of lost earning capacity during a relatively short period and also to assist them in regulating their income flow along the years. In the second place, the plans aimed at ensuring adequate and equitable incomes to people normally unable to be self-supporting and finally to contribute an income supplement, with due consideration to appropriate work incentives, to those who, during a given period, are unable to earn sufficient amounts.

Now, during that study, we clearly saw that a reform of the Canadian social security programs was not possible solely through amendments to federal legislation; instead, a concerted global approach of all the social security programs, at the federal and provincial levels, was in order.

A second reason for the high priority accorded the Canadian social security policy is the fact that the Canadian people have clearly indicated to the House of Commons, and through the House of Commons to the government, that the social security system which the federal and provincial authorities built over the years as a patchwork job no longer meets their wishes. They see in fact in that system some elements that do not correspond to their own attitudes and their own values. They also see in it contradictions and even some confusion and, moreover, weakspots unequal to the needs the system is supposed to meet.

Therefore, we suggest that social security be acknowledged by parliament as one of the two main national priorities and that the federal and provincial governments now assume the task of studying and revising the system in a way that truly reflects the values and aims of the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out that the government suggested that such a study should follow five main guidelines. Such guidelines, I feel, issue from what I take to be two of the main characteristics of the Canadian people.

First of all, as pioneers and settlers in a new country, Canadians learned long ago that they were interdependent and, above all, that they had to be so in order to survive. That basic fact in the life of the first settlers bluntly confirmed the moral principle generally admitted that each individual has and must accept some responsibility as concerns the well-being of his fellow-men. Therefore in all communities, parishes and constituencies of Canada, a tradition of mutual assistance developed very early, whenever such assistance was necessary.

Along the years, this sense of community brotherhood broadened, and the Canadian people came to recognize their responsibility as regards welfare, not only of their neighbors within the community, but also of their fellowmen in the province where they lived as well as their fellowmen throughout the country. Therefore, there appeared a complex system of redistribution of resources, of federal-provincial equalization payments, of medicare and hospitalization plans, etc., thanks to which Canadians could contribute to a satisfying level of social welfare as well as a fair distribution of personnal incomes throughout Canada.

Another characteristic of the Canadian people, I believe, is independance, that is to say, on the surface, a characteristic which seems to be opposed to the first one, but only on the surface, since independence and interdependence are basically complementary notions. No country, no nation can hope to survive without one or the other. The Canadian people as a whole are independent people. They expect to meet their own needs thanks to their own efforts. They expect as well that others will do the same. And whenever they have an opportunity to help others, they expect that everyone will bear a fair share of the burden. In modern terms, this truth means simply that Canadians expect that every person able to work will do so. They expect the government to create an economic climate that will lead to the creation of a maximum number of job opportunities. As economic productivity increases, Canadians expect also profits there of, namely increased incomes and more leisure opportunities, to be distributed fairly rather than being monopolized by a small number whose power enables them to do it, or by only a few people who are prepared to remain idle while others work.

I think those particular points constitute values accepted by Canadian society and they must therefore be reflected in our legislation on social security. We are quite prepared to propose to the House the reforms which may be necessary to allow the federal income security programs to reach that goal. Mr. Speaker, I am purposely using the word "reforms" because the principles mentioned in the Speech from the Throne do not mean a complete break with the past. They are compatible with what the present and previous governments hoped to accomplish, that is to say a higher degree of social justice.

However, we recognize at the same time that it would not be enough, or even acceptable to the provinces, for the Parliament of Canada to take the initiative regarding the programs and act on its own because the fact still remains that our system of social security is a responsibility shared by both the federal and provincial governments and it has always been so, with the municipalities also playing an important role in the application of the programs. Why will you ask me is it so? Why do the federal and provincial governments have major responsibilities in that field of policy? I think members of this House know very well the answer to those questions. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has already given the answer when he published the working paper on the constitution entitled "Income Security and Social Services".

So it would seem that because of that participation of federal and provincial governments in the field of social security no reform of the Canadian social security plan could be accomplished unless all components, the federal government, provincial and municipal governments, are included in the reform and the architects of the plan, the federal government and all ten provincial governments, participate equally in the development of those reforms. And it is precisely what we wish to suggest today to the House and the provinces.

It seems to me that five principles are implied, as already mentioned, in the abilities and the values of the Canadian people and they consequently should guide the federal and provincial governments throughout their study.

First, the social security scheme must ensure to the unemployable, the aged, the blind and the disabled a guaranteed annual income which is fair and human. That principle reasserts and strengthens an assumption of the social security scheme to which all governments and parties have been dedicated for half a century. Although they have different opinions on the degree of support to be provided, the Canadian people have long been conscious of their responsibilities toward those who are unable to work and gradually they have developed various pertinent programs so as to live up to those responsibilities. Old age pensions were initiated in 1927; veterans allowances in 1930; allowances to mothers without support and with dependents, that is those who at the time were called abandoned mothers, were introduced in most provinces during the thirties; pensions for the blind were introduced in 1937; the old age security system was instituted in 1951, whereas allowances to the invalid were implemented in 1954. The guaranteed income supplement for aged people was created in 1966, while the Canada and Quebec pension plans date back to 1965.

While drawing this list, Mr. Speaker, I could not help but note that most of these legislative measures had been the work of Liberal governments, over the past 50 years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: The people who contribute to the pension plans are entitled to pensions as soon as they retire or become incapacitated, and payment of benefits to their survivors is provided. Elderly people who find it difficult to live on their personal savings and their pension benefits receive a minimum annual guaranteed income by way of the old age pension and the supplement. Furthermore, the provinces grant welfare benefits to those who are unable to make both ends meet because of insufficient income.

Each of these programs has been set up to correspond to specific needs, but they have never been entirely coordinated. Benefits paid to old people, for instance, are fixed, in a general way, by the Parliament of Canada, and are thus different from those set up by the provinces under the welfare plan for those who are blind or handicapped and for mothers with dependent children. These differences result from the fact that each program comes under a different jurisdiction and that the programs themselves were adopted at one time or another in view of purposes which were different and even sometimes conflicting.

Therefore, during this session we intend to strive to overcome these obstacles. The federal government feels that federal and provincial authorities should identify as explicitly as possible the groups of people who now are or should be considered unable to work, and set up a guaranteed plan to be implemented gradually over a given period, which would apply in the most rational way possible to all these groups.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1600)

[English]

Mr. Lalonde: The second principle is this; the social security system as it applies to people who can work must contain incentives to work and a greater emphasis on the need to get people who are on social aid back to work. Let me say here immediately, Mr. Speaker, that saying this is not advocating a return to poor laws. This is plain commonsense and good judgment. The first and most important requirement must be the opportunity for people to obtain work. However difficult the achievement of this goal may appear, this government, through the expansion of job opportunities in both the private and public sectors, is as committed as anyone else on the opposition benches to the creation of an environment in which jobs will be available for Canadians who are ready and able to work.

An important incentive is the assurance that a person will not be better off on social assistance than if he takes a job. This involves two separate problems. First, wages generally take no account of a worker's family responsibilities, whereas social assistance must be high enough to provide for all one's dependents. It was to help meet this problem that the family income security plan was originally proposed. Some means must be found to make sure a worker with a family is not penalized by going back to work. The second problem lies in the way assistance payments are calculated; apart from a small amount of exempt earnings, assistance payments are typically cut back by a dollar for every dollar earned. You are thus no farther ahead by taking on a part-time job. Assistance plans should be designed so as to encourage those who can work to take jobs and still receive whatever supplementary assistance is necessary.

It will not be easy to devise incentives that will provide assistance to those who need it, including the working poor; those who work full-time at low levels of earnings, and those who can only work part time, and yet assure the public that those who can support themselves do so. But there is clearly room for improvement in existing mechanisms. In recent months this government has made amendments in the administration of the unemployment insurance program to ensure that those who are getting the support which this program affords are in fact entitled to that support.

Our social assistance programs need similar attention. In this area almost all governments have indicated the need for special measures to help those temporarily on assistance to find jobs, and have recognized that there are obstacles to self-support which must be removed. The task of removing them is not a simple one, but the attention which this particular problem has received in recent years, by my predecessor in this portfolio, and by his provincial colleagues, provides a sound basis for a renewed effort to overcome the various obstacles. I have every hope this problem can now be successfully tackled in a joint federal-provincial forum.

The third principle which would, in our view, guide us in our review of social security problems is this: a fair and just relationship must be maintained between the incomes of people who are working at or near the minimum wage, the guaranteed incomes assured to people who cannot work, and the allowances paid to those who can work but are unemployed. This principle encompasses a basic problem that must be faced in the rationalization of the income security system. We want to develop a reasonable balance between income support available to the aged poor and to the non-aged poor. We also wish to structure benefits for people who can work, in a way that fully recognizes the levels of incomes normally earned through employment. Also, we need to ensure adequate recognition in all cases of the additional needs where there are dependents. Because there is no automatic relationship between what people are able to earn and what they need in order to maintain their families outside of poverty, we will need to supplement low incomes. Supplementation must be structured so as to preserve incentives to work, and also so as to recognize that larger family responsibilities involve larger income requirements. It was this last concern in particular that motivated the development of the family income security plan; and we intend to pursue this concern with legislation in this session. The proposals will be designed not only to meet this pressing need, but also to ensure that the plan can become an integral, consistent part of the total income security system which will result from our broader review.

The fourth principle we have enunciated is integrally related to the third, namely that it must be recognized that provinces may wish to have the structures of social security varied in accordance with the social needs, income standards and the cost of living in different communities.

Canada is a very large country, and the problems which particular categories of individuals face in relation to the satisfaction of social needs are often quite different. These differences are rooted in the differing demographic, geographic, social and economic circumstances in which individuals find themselves. These variations in immediate environmental circumstances of individuals are of special interest and concern to provincial and municipal governments. On the other hand, we in this House have been especially concerned, as we must be, with national standards. Whether national standards can really be achieved by providing uniform levels of benefits is an issue of major concern to provincial administrations and, I believe, to the community as a whole. There is much evidence that suggests that uniform benefits do not necessarily achieve standardized effects on the relief of social needs.

We must admit, I think, that parliament, despite its excellent record of social legislation, has not yet found a way of providing for variations in payments that would assure fair and equitable results in all situations. This paradox of uniformity which fails to achieve equality has long troubled all who have been involved in the administration of social welfare. In recent years provincial governments have criticized a national security system which is not integrated at the level of the beneficiaries and which does not take sufficient account of provincial resources, goals and priorities. What appears to be needed, if we are to resolve the unavoidable problems of conflicting objectives and priorities within income security systems, are mechanisms by which the issues can be fully discussed with the provinces so that provincial legislatures may play a fuller role in determining what patterns and priorities should prevail in the total social security program.

This is not a matter, I might say, of weakening the federal presence in this area of policy. In so doing, we are not seeking solutions that would involve setting up the federal government as a mere tax collection agency for the provinces, because the federal government, indeed the federal parliament, would not support such an arrangement. Members of this House do not regard themselves as mere representatives of their respective provincial governments for they were elected directly by the citizens of this country to legislate for the whole country, and members of the House are authorized to speak for the population they represent every bit as much as are provincial legislators.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: If the provinces are willing to be one-tenth as flexible as the federal government on this question, if they are prepared to show vis-à-vis our proposal a spirit of understanding similar to the one that we will show vis-à-vis theirs, if they are willing to admit that the concerns of the members of this House for the under privileged is just as great as that of members of provincial legislatures, then I am convinced that we can find some sensible way of adapting the programs to the needs of different areas and of achieving the integration of the programs which will mitigate if not wholly remove the anomalies which have been found to be unacceptable to so many Canadians.

[Translation]

The last principle derives from everything that has been stated so far. The review of the social security system in Canada has to be a joint achievement of the federal and provincial governments. A more rational system of social security could not be created eventually unless there is a reasonable measure of agreement between the government of Canada and the provincial governments. It is superfluous I hope to emphasize that the very nature of our country demands that our social security system be the result of consultations between the federal government and the provinces. Actually, it was the inefficacy of our efforts in that direction, as I mentioned earlier, that probably gave rise to the contradictions which appear today in the Canadian social security system, since Parliament and the legislative assemblies have a natural tendency to legislate on their own in fields that come under their constitutional jurisdictions.

So, if the provinces agree, it is our intention to re-examine with them the whole social security system. This is what we have done for the past few years within the Canadian government with respect to federal programs and I know that many provinces have done so as regards their own programs, but the time has come to review the whole social security system together and to work out a new approach involving the principles which we believe are generally supported by the population and the legislative bodies in Canada.

We must perform this review with due consideration for other federal and provincial measures. Many of these connected fields will obviously be involved. It is essential to keep in mind the impact of overall economic policies on economic incentives and j ·b creation. We must also recognize the occasional need for special measures to create jobs in areas where unemployment is highest. Finding jobs for those who are able to work is indeed one of the cornerstones of the social security policy.

Therefore it is important to understand the effects of legislation on minimum wages at all levels of social security. This is not meant to say that social security levels must be tied in with minimum wages or vice versa. It is rather a matter of properly understanding that—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret that I must interrupt the hon. minister as I must inform him that his time has run out. Unless he is given unanimous consent, he cannot continue his speech. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is it the wish of the House to allow the hon. minister to finish his speech?

[English]

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, may I say that we have been giving permission to the ministers to take an extra five or ten minutes, and this is certainly all right, but may I suggest that questions should not be put from this side following the extended time. So, we are agreeable to the minister having a few more minutes to complete his speech.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we, too, are agreeable to giving the minister a few more minutes to complete his interesting statement. We wish, however, that he would use some of that time to give us some precise information as to what the government intends to do within these broad principles.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is it agreed that the minister continue his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lalonde: I thank hon. members for their understanding and kindness in allowing me a little more time. I will try to complete my remarks in as little time as possible and answer all the points that have been raised, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Moreover, I said that there must be a link between the social security system and the taxation system. The basic hypotheses related to the possibility for single people and families of paying taxes on one hand and to their need for a supported income on the other hand should be considered as components of the same problem. Efforts should be made in order to set up income security programs reaching the objectives within a relationship of interdependence with the taxation system itself.

It is also important to recognize that there are numerous forms of redistribution of income in Canada and that the social security legislation must be approached in the context of the global system: taxation laws, redistribution of certain services such as medical and hospital care, equalization payments to the provinces, regional economic expansion programs and so on. If Canada wants to reach the goals it has set for itself in the realm of social security, it must find the best way of grouping these components.

Lastly, we must take into account the possibility of a conflict between, on one hand, the natural aversion of Canadians for an increase in the general level of taxation an on the other hand the concern that the various governments should have on behalf of all Canadians concerning the improvement of the help given to the poor. It is obvious that desirable goals whatever they may be, whether in the public or private sector, cannot be reached without the necessary resources. We have not discovered yet a magic wand or an alchemical formula allowing us to reach economical or social objectives effortlessly. We mean that the government must undertake a redistribution of resources and that it will take the necessary steps in order to carry out the desirable reforms in social programs. However, that redistribution of resources will only be undertaken after having carefully taken into account the present requirements in various fields and the main social priorities.

Having asserted the conviction of the government that the provinces, in co-operation with the federal government, should review the entire social security scheme in Canada, and having stated the principles which we feel should be adhered to while that review is under way, allow me to explain the procedure we propose to the provinces.

First of all, the principles that should govern the revision should be discussed with the provinces at a federal-provincial conference. We would also hope that those principles would also be discussed extensively by the public, as well as studied by the representatives of federal and provincial governments.

Secondly, the federal government would suggest, after consultation with the provinces, that it develop a theoretical model for a social security system towards which all efforts would be aimed. We would also welcome all alternative models proposed by the provinces, singly or collectively. In that way, we would be assured of seeking the best solution and those proposals would, of course, be debated during a series of federal-provincial conferences should several conferences be needed.

May I add that we will not suggest that, to achieve this revision, an independent semi-autonomous federal-provincial commission or secretariat be created which would be vaguely responsible to the federal and provincial governments.

Lastly, I am convinced that the provinces will agree on setting a time limit for this study. I shall suggest a maximum period of two years to the provincial social welfare ministers. The federal government would be willing to speed up the process if the provinces so wish. In any event, I feel it would be possible, in that period of time, to develop an objective or the prototype of a social security system, and elaborate specific plans to enable us to attain that objective or use that model.

However, this government wants to assure the Canadian people that this global review of the social security system will not bring everything to a standstill during that period. Indeed the pursuit of a better integration should not lead us to desregard, even temporarily, the citizens' welfare through the existing programs.

This government has committed itself to introduce a new guaranteed family income plan which would take particular care of the needs of low income families, because it recognizes that the institution of a just and equitable family allowance plan is a basic element of the social security system. Families whose breadwinner is unable to work need allowances to increase the income guaranteed by reason of their inability to work. Families whose breadwinner is able to work, as I said a moment ago, also need family allowances because their salary does not take into account their dependents.

Before the social welfare ministers' conference in April, we will introduce in the House measures to deal with the new guaranteed family income plan. When I shall have had discussions with my provincial counterparts and benefited from their suggestions, I will be able to introduce the new legislation concerning the guaranteed family income plan.

The government has also undertaken to improve the economic situation of the aged. The first leading principle of the social security system of the future, we stated, is that aged people who can no longer work must be provided with a guaranteed minimum annual income. A number of amendments have been made over the past years to improve the lot of pensioners and aged people in Canada.

Canada already has a guaranteed income plan for the aged. We must still find out to what extent pensions paid constitute a fair income.

I wish to ensure the House that I have considered all suggestions submitted for the improvement of old age security pensions, and that I have already discussed this matter with several of my provincial counterparts. I am confident that I shall complete this consultation with the provincial ministers well before the official formulation of a proposal to the House. However I can assure hon. members that a substantial old age pension increase will be announced soon, and I hasten to add that it will not be a mere token increase. We will bring forward other measures in order to improve the financial position of more elderly people, measures we must first discuss with the provinces in the light of the principles stated in the Speech from the Throne as to a complete review of the social security system. While making our decision, we must always bear in mind the opinion so often expressed by my provincial colleagues that increasing the gap between the pensions available to people over 65 leads to greater difficulties as regards people under 65. That is a question to which we should give great attention in our upcoming federal-provincial review of the overall income system.

Mr. Speaker, I also should like to point out to the House that officials met recently in order to improve the benefits provided under the Canada Pension Plan.

The 1970 white paper on income security recommended substantial increases in pensions for widows and disabled people.

Discussions took place this week and they will continue in March, then we will have the opportunity of discussing them with the ministers during the April meeting.

I should like also to inform the House of the very important meeting on health matters that will take place next Friday with the ministers of health in order to consider that question and, if possible, agree on a new and complete health care financing system in Canada. Under that proposal, new financial arrangements would be introduced to give greater scope to the provinces when they set their priorities within the national overall standards and follow the policy they deem the most efficient, considering such priorities.

Since I became interested in the affairs of the state, Mr. Speaker, I have been warned on occasion that a government should never venture on a road whose destination is more or less uncertain. For two reasons, I cannot accept such advice from timorous and conservative souls. First, if we perceive with enough vision the guidelines and if we have devoted sufficient time to the consideration of a problem—as we have certainly done within the government of Canada—we do have then a sufficiently clear notion of the road to take it with some confidence.

Still more important however, if we do not have the courage to revise the programs thoroughly we are unfailingly imposing on the taxpayer, even without knowing it, the high cost of temporary and incoherent solutions. If I understand the Canadian people well, the governments should put an end to the dispersion of efforts and participate instead in the entire revision of the system just as the government of Canada is suggesting today.

[English]

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I begin with my sincere congratulations to you and to all our presiding officers, but particularly to the Speaker of the House, who has again been acclaimed as the chief commoner among us. I am not one of these who believe in developing sophisticated techniques for securing for all time the position of permanent Speaker. I always believe that when the time comes Members of Parliament will choose from among themselves a Speaker whom they will want to have in office as long as he will stay, and this is what we have been able to do. We have chosen one of us. He is chief among us, primus inter pares. We honour his selection, and that is a fair way to have the whole matter dealt with. I congratulate our Speaker and I congratulate our corporate wisdom in time after time giving him the burdens of the high office, the functions of which he discharges with ease, grace and great impartiality.

• (1630)

I have as well to congratulate the hon. members who moved and seconded the address. I think they acquitted themselves very well.

This is a most interesting time to be in parliament, Mr. Speaker. It is my seventh parliament. I come from the cradle of confederation, the city of Charlottetown—sometimes I have to assure people that in spite of my appearance I am not a father of confederation! It is indeed a most interesting time. I look across at the truncated, traumatized and slightly tenderized government led by a swinger who has become a clinger. I look down to my left at those who were the mighty terrors in this House—my, how terrible they could be. They are now the handmaidens of the iniquitous of yesterday. The people across the way wear the cap of penitence and the cloak of humility. How different things are from four years ago when I took part in the Speech from the Throne. The whole place was supposed to tremble at the merest shrug then.

It is not of course for me to tell my erstwhile neighbours to the left, geographically that is, what they should do and how they should preserve themselves in the public life of Canada. I believe they have a role to play but because I used to sit near them, and I like a good many of them, I should just like to say that as they accept the embrace of the fervent and fevered party across the way they should just pay a little attention to history. When Ulysses saw the cave of the Cyclops he almost went in, but he noticed that all the tracks went in and none came out.

I am surprised that the hon. member, the scrapper from Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), with his great knowledge and love for the Prairies, did not think of a situation later than the one that faced Ulysses. I think of a period before my time, in 1921, when a party much larger than the New Democratic Party was in this House. There were 64 Progressives—64, Mr. Speaker. They were courted by the Liberal party, then as now determined to stay in power whether the people wanted them or not. What happened to the 64? In the next election there were 24, in the next election there was only half that number and so that once great party, an important party of idealism, disappeared, and there was very little left but a cabinet post or two and a few senators. I wonder if I am going to see the day when I will leave my duties in this green chamber, walk across to the red chamber and there see Senator Knowles and Senator Lewis being introduced by Senator Argue to those august gentlemen. For this advice there is no charge, Mr. Speaker.

I am happy to be taking part in the Speech from the Throne today, January 11, and to hear the fine speeches like the one of my good friend the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) in British Columbia. I call it "the other Victoria" because there is Victoria, Prince Edward Island, my home town, which is somewhat smaller than but just as beautiful as his fine city. I liked his literary style and the statesmanship of his utterances. I was delighted with the maiden speech of our maiden member for Kingston and The Islands (Miss MacDonald). She said things that should be said about people who really concurred in the ideals of Sir John A. Macdonald.

Sir John A. Macdonald was not regarded as one of the greatest orators of our public life. He would rank behind Howe, Laurier and Bourassa. The story is told of one occasion when at a great public meeting he was applauded for the great speech he had delivered. One of the poll chairmen told him that it was the greatest speech he had ever made. He replied, "Do you know why? That glass of water in front of me was straight gin". But the hon. member for Kingston and The Islands had straight water—I ordered it for her. She did not need anything else to deliver a fine and eloquent speech.

I was much impressed and moved by the fine address of my new colleague, the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner). This is the kind of wisdom, the kind of moderation, the kind of concept of the whole country that we need in these days. As I looked at him, I thought of Sir John A. Macdonald and came to the conclusion that we have a modern Cartier among us. I salute him and I predict for him great accomplishment for his province, for our party and, much more important, for our country.

Sometimes hon. members will make a mistake and in this debate refer to the Speech from the Throne. I am going to lapse just for a moment. I was impressed by some discoveries there and some continuing amnesia. I am glad that the west has been rediscovered. It needed to be found again by the people on the Treasury Benches, but I wondered why the Atlantic region still seems not to be visible. There is to be a conference with the four western premiers. Just because we have hardened to a situation where unemployment is chronic, where the cost of living is the highest, where these things become constant over the years, that is no reason some effort could not have been made to redress the imbalances of that part of Canada from which the whole country had its origins in the Charlottetown conference. Search as I could, I discovered very little that had a direct bearing upon the economic problems of my province or the other three provinces by the Atlantic.

I did note one item, Mr. Speaker. The government will meet with provincial governments in the five regions of the country to examine the impact of freight rates on economic growth and consumer prices. I can tell them that for one region they might as well save their time and the taxpayers' money. Surely to heaven, we do not need a top level conference to discover that nine freight rate increases in four years would not be a good thing for the economy of the Atlantic region. We have had studies up to our necks. We would like now a little remedial action. That is my suggestion on that matter.

I do not go in for partisanship in this House. I do not know whether that has increased my popularity or not, but I am impressed by the effort made by the present government at conversion. If it comes off, it will make that incident that befell St. Paul a very slight and casual undertaking! I am wondering if in fact we are seeing any repentance or a new form of arrogance.

I am troubled when it is suggested to the people of Canada that they should recant their judgment because they are bidden to do so and that those Canadian people who rejected the government's best thoughts on October 30 should some day in the future go all-out for them when their second best thoughts are put forward. Are the Canadian people to be bidden to give an accolade to this truncated cabinet and to the ministers who obviously could not have been first choice or they would have been put in the cabinet earlier?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: It comes close to suggesting that the people do not really know what they are doing after all; that if we can dress the thing up some way they will swallow this and come through with what was supposed to happen on October 30 anyway. I would not count on that if I were a member of the government.

We are impressed with some interesting changes, and I heard this suggestion in the speech of the minister who has just left the chamber. I remember that the provinces were likened to the opposition. The provinces and their premiers were terrible. Now we are overwhelmed with dominion-provincial co-operation and consultation. The provinces are almost as popular as the Queen.

• (1640)

Mr. Muir: They rediscovered her.

Mr. Macquarrie: I followed with close interest the minister's speech. I do not wish to critize the speech itself, because he obviously is a scholar of great distinction and is clearly used to writing speeches, although I suspect he may be used to writing speeches for members who have unlimited time in the chamber, since he went a good deal beyond his time. I appreciate the generosity of the two whips in donating my time and allowing him to continue. However, I am a man of great generosity and do not complain. My only reaction to the minister's speech was this: I had to go back to the Speech from the Throne to find something that was close to specific. It struck me that instead of telling us in specific detail what would happen, what the impoverished people of Canada can expect from this government, the minister delivered, rather, a position paper which was drawn up before the Speech from the Throne was delivered. I am now further from knowing, as I am sure other members are, what the government plans in this important field than on the day we heard His Excellency read the speech. Somehow there has been a reversal of priorities.

An hon. Member: Perhaps he read the wrong speech.

Mr. Macquarrie: My colleague suggests that perhaps the minister delivered the wrong speech. Perhaps he did.

As hon. members may know, I have been given special responsibility in the vast and important field of national health and welfare and I plan to discharge my duties as best I can, although I do not think even in the days of modern image makers I can pass as the epitome of physical fitness and become a household word to the youth of Canada in that regard. However, I can say that I kicked the smoking habit long before I heard of Judy LaMarsh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: Perhaps that is one of my attributes which qualifies me for my eminent position, in as much as I am following such an eminent minister as the Minister of National Health and Welfare, (Mr. Lalonde). This morning I was reading in the Montreal Gazette just how eminent he has become. We are told he is the architect of new social policy. Clearly, he is a very important man. What do they say about the Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier)? He is left on the beach. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) we are told is no longer vital, I assume they mean politically rather than otherwise. And, the former solicitor general (Mr. Goyer) has been overtaken by change. So, I am now given the responsibility of following one of the giants of the new administration. It makes you think.

I thought he would tell us something about the olympic games. There is some confusion over which minister is responsible for that important exercise. I thought he might tell us a bit about what happened to the Le Dain Commission which used to hold us so breathlessly attentive in the previous parliament. I want to know, particularly, what is to be done for our old age pensioners. I had the fearful sensation throughout his speech that what the impoverished and underprivileged of this land would get would be another series of consultations and studies. Perhaps, under the new dispensation, they may even be called royal commissions. That adjective is now acceptable. I do not know what is to happen. Has the White Paper of 1970 been completely discarded? Is there no federal initiative at all? What will this government do regarding those portions of the social welfare program which are solely its responsibility. What will be done about old age security? I remember, not long ago, that the payment was jacked up by 42 cents a month. Will the new benevolence double that? Will the extra payment be brought up to the six buck level of earlier days of Liberal munificence? I fear that, while many will be impressed by the minister's literary style, by the structure of his address, if the needy are looking for solace they will not find it in anything that has been said.

I want to be as positive as possible. I hope that there is on the part of this government, finally, a sincere withdrawal from the old politics of confrontation with provinces. Far too much of that went on. The dominion-provincial conference was a battle ground where you won your spurs by snapping back at the provinces. Of course, the entire realm of social welfare requires tremendous involvement on the part of provinces because our fathers, in their wisdom in 1867, gave to the provinces the burden of jurisdiction in this field but not the adequate taxation field. So, it has been a constant battle for them. There must be meaningful discussion with the provinces. It has been called for time and again by the leader of my party and others. Even if this were to be a deathbed conversion, and even if the newly converted were to be in office a short time only, it could be a positive good. I was disturbed by the frequent reference to words such as "further study, further examination". I jotted them down. Some are to start in April. Why? When in the world will benefits start to flow? The minister's speech, I think, was certainly no manifesto for action. I am afraid it was a highly literate stalling device. The government is stalling for time. There seems to be a good deal of that today.

It is interesting to note that people who are so "hepped up" in staying in office are so terribly slow in producing that legislation which will indicate where they are going.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: Last fall it was declared that the country could not afford to lose the services of such people as sit opposite. One would think that logic, and the minister used the word "logic" a good deal in his speech, would compel the government to act, would compel it to introduce piles and piles of legislation and would compel the government to tell us what it will do with its stay of execution. Yet, Mr. Speaker, alas, there is no indication from the government that it is poised for action, that it is composed of a group of people finally awake to the inequities and inequalities in this country, determined to do something meaningful about them and finally willing to show compassion for the hundreds of thousands of Canadians who find it difficult to get along day by day.

There are people in Atlantic Canada, actually in all parts of this nation, who just cannot cope with grim economic realities. Are there to be increased benefits for them? We do not know if the government will do something for those people, or when. I still do not know what it will do, and they do not know. Will we see any moves regarding the old age security pension? Are we finally to do something in this field. I know it is not the minister's department, yet it should be of concern to him, but are we to do something about the war veterans? We are burying gallant men who have died and not received pensions to which they were entitled—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: —because of lumbering, inefficient, careless and cold bureaucracy somewhere. I hope there will be action at the ministerial level finally to process the claims of these men and to give them their just deserts. It is simply criminal. I am sure there is not a member in this House who has not had personal experience with his constituents, especially the gallant old boys of World War I who are passing on. No amount of retroactivity will do those gallant sons any good.

• (1650)

It was interesting to hear about the minister's incentives. When he was reading about them I quickly looked up one of the policy statements of my party which pretty well contained all of them. So, for that part I liked the speech. As he read further, I concluded he had only read it and had not really determined what he would do with it. He still does not know what he is going to do with it. The provision of incentives can hardly be meaningfully put into effect by a government which month after month displays that it cannot find work for thousands and thousands of Canadian people. So, we get back again to this issue of the general incompetence of the government. I heard the minister say that the government was committed in this field. As one of my colleagues said, they may have the commitment but do they have the competence. This is the question we must ask and which our people must ask.

I think the time has come for us to look very carefully at the question of incentives. I believe a government has an obligation to provide the opportunity for people to work. Some of us Calvinists are often sneered at for what is called the old fashioned work ethic of people several generations ago. But when I look around the world and see country after country competing with Canada in the markets of the world with economic gain I wonder if the work "ethic" is so out of date after all. Nor can I believe that any but a very small group of Canadian people prefer the dole to meaningful work. No society should be placed in a position where government makes it easier and better economically to be on the dole than meaningfully and interestingly employed. These are the kinds of things I believe we must examine. To that part of the minister's speech, I take no exception. I think it is the kind of thing he should think more about and which we should think more about.

I look forward to something which might mean more hope and more confidence. Part of the problem of the government opposite is that it never really sensed the extremity of the problem. It never realized I am sure how much poverty stalked this rich land. The government never looked at what happened to the person who under the system is penalized because he did find work. I received a letter from a man 71 years of age who said he never drew a cent of unemployment insurance in his life because he had always found something to do. However, he said he now is idle and while his neighbour who is 31 years younger has been receiving unemployment insurance every winter he cannot receive a cent because he is over age 70. Is that just a statistic or just a little human tragedy about which we should be concerned?

The minister mentioned the FISP program. I profoundly hope, with his great intellectual capacity and agility, he will not recycle the administrative monstrosity that was before us in the last parliament. I hope he will correct the errors where the need is greatest but that we will not have the Canadian people required to abjectedly display their poverty before some emanation of the state. I think we have passed the stage of the rude means test which caused such agony to so many people for so long.

Finally, since I have had one good habit since I came to this House of never exceeding my time limit, I will resume my seat and say in a personal way that I wish the minister well. If all the things he produces will benefit the people of Canada he will find not carping criticism from this side of the House but rather as much thoughtful and helpful discussion as we can give him, because I believe in the field of social welfare there is no ground for partisan infighting and I for one do not intend to indulge in it.

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, might I join with other members of this House in congratulating you on your election to office. I should like also to extend my congratulations to the Deputy Speaker. Needless to say, after stomping through Meadow Lake constituency for several months the atmosphere here is somewhat different and therefore my knees are somewhat shaky. However, as time goes on I believe probably I shall warm up a little bit.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nesdoly: A number of references were made in this House, with a certain amount of derision, to the fact that only 10 per cent of the seats in this House are held by members of the New Democratic Party. I should like to remind members of this House that although we hold perhaps only 10 per cent or 12 per cent of the seats, if we include the Northwest Territories and some of the other far flung constituencies, we represent half of the land area of this great country. I think this is something the members of the Liberal and Conservative parties should note.

For too long a period the members of the old line parties have considered these far flung areas to be nothing but places from which to obtain the raw materials which provide jobs for people in their huge cities. Some reference was made to a socialist ripoff in British Columbia. We have had that ripoff in Saskatchewan for quite a number of years, but the people get right back to it again after experimenting with the other sort of thing. I have had an interesting experience since coming to Ottawa. Back home my telephone bill was something in the order of five dollars and a few cents. In Ottawa, my bill amounts to something over $6. This is a city which has a dense population in relation to that of Regina and yet the phone bill in Regina is lower. Let us not talk about a Socialist ripoff because I know something about the purposes of public utilities and the Crown corporations. Reference was made to some people going to bed with other people. I can assure hon. members who are concerned about our virtue that we intend to hang on pretty tightly to our pyjamas.

An hon. Member: You will be wanting to sleep with us one of these days, too.

An hon. Member: Never. We do not want to prostitute ourselves.

Mr. Nesdoly: I appreciated the remarks of the hon. member for Kingston and The Islands (Miss MacDonald). I believe she is the only speaker so far who has referred to principles. Perhaps we should speak a lot more in this House about principles. Perhaps I should turn now to the text of the speech I have here. I am not very good at speaking off the cuff, although I did not do too badly in that regard in my constituency. However, my knees are shaking a bit now.

• (1700)

First of all, I should like to point out that when I speak on behalf of the constituency of Meadow Lake, I speak in a very real sense on behalf of all Canada, because 84,000 square miles of the constituency I represent is in reality a microcosm of Canada. From farming and ranching areas in the south, we move into the lake and forest country toward the north, and lumbering, fishing, trapping; a natural gas field, some hardrock mining, and, in particular, uranium mines, one of them presently producing and another which will be producing next year. It is true we lack a city, a concrete jungle, but that is something we feel we can do without. The entire area is interspersed with 32 Indian reserves and inhabited by people who have come here from all parts of the world to make their homes.

A good deal has been said in this debate about national unity. To many people in my area, the entire question of national unity is a very remote one because they have already learned to live with each other and borrow the best from each other's cultures.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nesdoly: I have been a guest in English homes where they served Vareneyke; I have been in French homes where they have served Hungarian goulash. When I was in Arborfield, my wife learned to prepare all these dishes as well and she offered them gladly to all our neighbours who wanted to try some of her Ukrainian recipes. Today, we in Saskatchewan have solved a good many of our social problems. It has been a long history. History tells us about the northwest rebellion and the hanging of Louis Riel, as well as the bungling which was responsible for it. Nowadays, in Saskatchewan, our history books consider Riel to have been a patriot, not a rebel. History tells us about the Ku Klux Klan and some of the weird associations formed by it. There were cross-burning ceremonies in the Moose Jaw hills, and people telling men in the sheepskin coats to go back where they came from. This was rather like the immigration backlash which was supposed to have occurred during the last election. In my opinion, that is a somewhat shameful thing. Occasionally there are instances of discrimination against the so-called men in the sheepskin coats. In the past, there were a great many more.

There were many hard times. I can recall the relief measures of the 'thirties, along with the "Bennett Buggy" and the Anderson cart, low wheat prices, poor wheat sales, and the march to Ottawa which was stopped, not without some bloodshed, in Regina. It is because of these many hardships experienced that we in Saskatchewan attempted to develop a type of society just a little different from that in other parts of Canada. As a son of Saskatchewan, I am proud of the fact that we were in the forefront of the movement for hospitalization, medicare, compulsory auto insurance, better schools, and other social and much-needed reforms. We conceived the hospitalization legislation in 1948, and much to the credit of the administration of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), a national hospitalization scheme was introduced in the late 'fifties or the early 'sixties. Medicare followed in 1967, introduced by the Pearson government after a lot of birth pains and Liberal promises dating back to 1919.

Despite the fact that we have overcome many of our problems, many still remain at both provincial and federal levels. Here, I am mainly concerned about federal responsibilities. I should like to express a few ideas in relation to my constituency—and what applies to my constituency applies, also, to many other areas in my province and in Canada. To me, it seems that if the Liberal and Conservative parties had their way they would abandon something like 3,000 miles of Saskatchewan rail lines. It all started with the MacPherson Commission under the Conservatives and now it appears it will be finished by the Liberals hiding behind the Canada Grains Council. If those railway tracks are abandoned, Mr. Speaker, more than 300 communities in Saskatchewan will disappear. I heard someone say "Manitoba, too". Yes, this applies to Manitoba as well as to other western provinces. If these tracks are abandoned at least 800 elevators will close down and costs to farmers for shipping and handling will be greatly increased. No doubt the railways will save some money. But the cost will be borne by the producers and by the people who pay taxes in the Meadow Lake constituency.

These are some of the effects rail line abandonment will have on the constituency of Meadow Lake which were revealed by some research we did before the election: one, more than 253 miles of railway line will be abandoned. Two, in the past ten years, an average of 4.4 million bushels of grain have been carried over those tracks each year. That grain would have to be trucked. Three, more than 2.39 million bushels of grain elevator capacity would be closed down. Four, other farm services would disappear as elevators closed down, for example, supplies of fertilizer and lumber. Other services would soon move out of the community. People would lose their local stores, service stations, recreation facilities and other benefits. Five, more than 1,655 farmers in the constituency would have to haul their grain longer distances in large trucks. Six, the grid road and municipal systems, as well as other highways, would need to be totally rebuilt to handle the larger trucks, and higher taxes would be the result. Seven, tax revenue losses to municipalities would be extremely high. For example, on the basis of 1964 figures—and the situation has probably worsened since then—the Village of Shell Lake would lose 21.36 per cent of its total tax revenues. Spiritwood would lose 18.4 per cent of its tax revenues and Paradise Hill would lose 16.34 per cent.

Such losses, and those sustained in other communities, would have to be made up by local residents. The government has made some nebulous mention of transportation in the Speech from the Throne. Nevertheless, I should like to see spokesmen on the front bench opposite make a clear statement immediately concerning their attitude toward the planned abandonment of these railway lines by 1975, because we, in Saskatchewan, are not going to take the present situation lightly. We do not care who we may be accused of being in collusion with. We want to stop the abandonment of railroad lines in Saskatchewan.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nesdoly: Now, there is talk out west about a great plains project, or something of that kind. A bunch of easterners came out west to make proposals—there was not a westerner on the committee—and they came up with a great many ideas which were going to save the west. At a meeting we held several months ago the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) suggested that the only idea they had not come up with was to cross a boxcar with a goose so that it could fly by itself.

• (1710)

I was rather disappointed, in examining the Speech from the Throne, to note there was nothing said about native rights. I think I will leave that part of my speech because the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) covered the subject yesterday, and I agree with what he said. One thing I would mention is that we must remember that the Indians and Eskimos of Canada were the original Canadians. During this entire battle over bilingualism and multiculturalism not much has been said about native rights, and that is very disappointing.

It would be interesting to see what the implications are in the throne speech for the so-called western conference on development of the northern frontiers of the four western provinces. Because my constituency covers half the northern frontier of Saskatchewan, perhaps this statement represents just a tiny flicker of hope for the constituents of Meadow Lake. For too long the people of that constituency have been waiting for some sort of coherent transportation and communications policy for the north. People from Green Lake to La Loche want better radio service. Television service is something they just do not have. Toronto has 11 channels but the people of the north have none. They have been told there are some long-range plans in this respect.

Mail service in that area has to be improved. For example, a post office is required at Turnor Lake. This is a community that had 126 voters on the voters' list, with approximately 400 people living there. There is a road to this village which is 50 miles from the next community with a post office. Their mail and pay cheques are picked up by one resident and put on the store-counter in the village, but often they are lost. Surely these people are entitled to postal service.

An hon. Member: Not under this government.

Mr. Nesdoly: People throughout the north would like better roads. Many roads have been built, but we have to develop a better economic base there; the provincial government has had some difficulty finding the finances necessary. Roads are required to places like Pinehouse, Patuanak, Dillon, and a road to the south shore of Lake Athabasca is certainly something required in the long range because the people of Uranium City require access to the outside world. We do not want Edmonton to be the commencement of all transportation to the northern part of the province.

It is interesting to note that in the last seven years some $464 million has been spent by federal authorities on road construction and improvements. Some of these expenditures were under cost-sharing agreements with the provinces and covered roads to the frontier regions. Some of the money was spent on national parks and Indian reserves. It is interesting to note that Saskatchewan received only $2.17 million, or 0.6 per cent of the total expenditures, yet within the boundaries of our province there is just a little less than 5 per cent of the total population of this country, with 27 per cent of the nation's roads. That is something that members of this House may not be aware of. In my view this is not justice and equality of opportunity for the people of my constituency or the people of my native province.

Let me suggest that when we start talking about the development of the northern frontiers of the west, high on the agenda should be placed the whole matter of communications, transportation and aid to small industries. If Saskatchewan's north is to be developed, it must have roads, it must have communications facilities. Certainly, if we had had proper communications facilities the type of thing that happened on election night would not have happened. Nobody knew where he stood until at least a week after the election. I was one of those who was saved, by the grace of God, at the last minute.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Another John Wesley.

Mr. Nesdoly: The crash program to increase employment rather intrigues me. Some months before the election the western premiers asked the Prime Minister of Canada whether he would announce the winter works projects early in the season so that suitable plans could be formulated before the prairie winter set in. Some projects are just now being approved. It is pretty hard to start building something in certain parts of Saskatchewan where four days ago it was 40 below in the morning. I defy any hon. member to put on mitts and go out there and hammer nails.

In October, a few weeks before the election, the government announced a local initiatives program that was to be financed to the tune of $85 million. I understand this has now been increased to $165 million. From my constituency, up to the end of last December, approximately 40 local initiative project applications had been received. To date, seven have been approved, although information in this regard does not flow very quickly. I understand one more was approved this morning. I do not know what the dispensation of the rest of the money has been. I know that four or five applications have been rejected outright. It is interesting to note that seven of the 40 applications have been approved—perhaps now it is eight; I want to be fair. The total cost is $172,178.

Let us do some simple arithmetic and divide the $165 million approved for local initiative projects by 264, the number of constituencies in Canada. This gives us a figure of $625,000 per constituency. It appears to me that the constituency of Meadow Lake is not getting its fair share of the Local Initiatives Program grants that are available. Perhaps I should hasten to say, to be completely fair, that maybe we are not entitled to $625,000 because our population is so low and our unemployment rate is not as high as in some parts of Canada.

I believe that some formula could be developed so that areas, provinces or constituencies could know in advance what their allocation would be. In this way the people would know exactly where they stood and would not feel they were being discriminated against by the government. I feel it is imperative that the government come up with a formula which will take into account population and unemployment rates.

If there are problems of regional disparity in Canada, it is because the federal government has helped create them through its indefinite steps, its procrastination and its "pork-barrelmanship" on some occasions. I say pork-barrelmanship because I have ample reason to believe there have been occasions when grants have been assigned for certain projects and have gone into areas which the government thought would garner it votes. I have a strong suspicion this is what happened before the last federal election. It is quite evident that the manoeuvre did not work too well.

Not only should DREE programs be decentralized considerably; the whole question of providing jobs for Canadians in depressed areas and in high unemployment areas should be decentralized to a greater degree, because I feel the bureaucrats in Winnipeg should not be making the decisions for northwestern Saskatchewan. Decisions for Saskatchewan should be made in Saskatchewan and not in Winnipeg or Ottawa as has been the case in the past in respect of the Local Initiatives Program. Because of the high rate of welfare and unemployment, our areas should be getting special consideration in order to provide for a society of justice and equity, words that have been so glibly thrown about in this chamber.

There were two local initiative projects which were rejected and which I think are worthy of mention in this debate. One I should like to refer to is the Butte St. Pierre project. Some years ago in northwestern Saskatchewan we had a priest, Father Imhoff, who is perhaps one of the greatest painters of religious works of art the west has ever produced. He has painted the inside of many churches. Many of his paintings are in a church at Butte St. Pierre. Owing to increased farm size, and for other reasons, the church at Butte St. Pierre is no longer being used. People in the neighbouring town of Paradise Hill have raised a considerable sum of money for the purpose of moving the church at Butte St. Pierre to Paradise Hill. They have asked for a modest LIP grant, but their request has been turned down. This would also have provided a considerable amount of work for the unemployed people in the area.

Mr. Peters: There is no sex or marijuana in that project.

Mr. Nesdoly: The government rejected the project and said that funds were not available. The same is true of the Loon Lake recreation centre which was built by the people in the area. They raised thousands of dollars and originally provided much volunteer labour. Now they want to complete the recreation centre and have asked for a modest grant. This centre could also be used by the native people, because there is an Indian reserve adjacent to Loon Lake. Again, this project met with an outright rejection.

As I mentioned earlier, we do have a uranium mine in my constituency in a place called Uranium City. At one time it was a thriving city indeed. That was back in the 1950s when at its peak it had a population of 7,000 which later declined to 1,700. It was one of the original uranium mines in Canada. The mining company is a Crown corporation, Eldorado Nuclear Limited. It has been the cause of some concern in our area for the last year or two. For one thing, the current decline of jobs in Uranium City is creating hardship for many families.

I believe it is the duty of the federal government and Eldorado Nuclear to provide economic conditions that will be of benefit to the people who live in Uranium City. I think the government should have a more aggressive uranium sales and stockpiling policy which would assure throughout the year a reasonable level of employment in Uranium City.

While jobs are disappearing in Uranium City, the government has provided $29.5 million to Denison Mines Limited, one of the corporate welfare bums, to stockpile uranium. It would be interesting to know just what has been happening to uranium production in Uranium City. Is uranium production by a Crown-owned company being sacrificed in order to bolster the private sector of our uranium mining industry, namely, Denison Mines? I point out, by the way, that the former chairman of the board of Denison Mines is a man named Stephen Roman who was a Progressive Conservative candidate in a Toronto riding.

Furthermore, I feel that Eldorado should be purchasing high-grade ore from small claim owners. There are many small claim owners in Uranium City, and some very rich small veins of ore. Eldorado should be able to buy this high-grade ore from the small claim owners and process it on their behalf. This would provide employment to some people who are currently unemployed in Uranium City. It appears that perhaps the government is interested in protecting Denison Mines whose largest mine, I understand, is at Elliot Lake—and the Elliot Lake seat is presently held by a Liberal member.

In conclusion, I would simply state that for the last 23 years the Meadow Lake constituency has been held by "liberatives", meaning Liberal or Conservative members. These Members of Parliament stumped around the constituency saying that their government would build railroads in the area. That is what the people in my area have been told for the last 23 years. I am thinking particularly of the railroad from the town of Meadow Lake connecting up at Grand Centre, Alberta. In 23 years of railroad building not a single inch of track has been laid down, and now it is proposed to abandon another 250 miles of railroad. I want to add that some people in the Goodsoil-Pierceland area have to haul their grain to market 50 or 60 miles away.

For years the Liberals and the Conservatives have told the people, "We will try to provide you with television service in the far north". These people are still waiting for television. For years members of these two parties have been promising to build roads to Uranium City, but any roads that have been built to our far north have basically been provided with the assistance of provincial funds and the money of the people of Saskatchewan. In all justice, I should point out that the roads to resources program in the late fifties and early sixties was of some help.

The irony of our situation, also, is that in the last federal election my opponents went around the constituency, especially its northern areas, saying, "Look what we have done for you. We have provided you with medicare and hospitalization". I really became angry on hearing this, because the people of Saskatchewan know very well where medicare and hospitalization came from, who provided it and who opposed it. Millions of dollars were spent in trying to defeat it in 1962, and this effort succeeded for a while.

Federal funds went into hospitalization and medicare only when the government was forced into doing it by the weight of political pressure as well as for reasons of political expediency. They had to do this if they wanted to survive. They have been stealing a lot of our thunder, but we are still proud of being called the conscience of the nation. I know very well who financed the doctors, who tried to oppose medicare in Saskatchewan in 1962, who sent funds in order to defeat the government of the province, and who had integrity and belief in the basic goodness of human beings.

Mr. Speaker, I think we should give this parliament an opportunity to work and we should get away from some of the quibbling that has been going on—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired, unless there is unanimous consent to allow him to continue.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Drummond (Mr. Boisvert).

• (1730)

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Marie Boisvert (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, it is the first time I have the honour to speak to this noble assembly and, on behalf of my constituents in Drummond and of all the right-thinking citizens of this country, I am proud to be able to show how well-founded were their discontent and criticisms as regards the government and to inform the latter of their desires and hopes.

There have always been criticisms; but there is less and less hope among Canadians because they have less and less faith in the promises of this government, which used the same methods that were used by all previous governments to deal with the same problems. The government still considers taxpayers as suckers that can be fooled according to the same old recipe which everybody finds disgusting but which never changes because the head is always the same: high finance, the leader of the Grits or of the Tories who cooks for himself only without even wondering about the taxpayers or knowing whether they are starving or able to provide for themselves.

In the Speech from the Throne read by the Governor General, the government gives us a list of pious wishes. It is all bluff. The taxpayer follows from afar and sometimes absent-mindedly what goes on on the federal scene and hears false ringing comments from government members and the official opposition, not to mention the dreams of conquest on the part of the NDP.

Mr. Speaker, in the Speech from the Throne the government begins to consider the reforms advocated by the Social Credit party for more than 30 years. One must therefore conclude that in the case of the Liberals, the age of discretion is 30. Better late than never, however.

Mr. Speaker, there are problems in Canada and particularly in the constituency of Drummond.

Drummondville is a major town of the province of Quebec situated in the center of the riding of Drummond, whose taxpayers have chosen me to represent them; I want to thank them heartily and assure them of my dedicated service for the whole duration of my term of office.

Drummondville is a centre for textile industry, and its main employers pay below-average salaries. That is why Drummondville has one of the lowest average income in Canada. When workers are dismissed, they are perfectly entitled to receive welfare benefits, and there are a great many of them who have no other means of subsistence. All the other industries are also of secondary or tertiary importance. There is really no basic industry, on which secondary industries could be grafted.

Drummondville is situated at a crossroad in Quebec. In fact, it radiates towards all major centres of the province. Its highway system is excellent and adequate for the needs of any industry. The government deprived it of an excellent opportunity for extension recently when it was decided not to build the new airport in Drummondville but at Sainte-Scholastique. I mention the airport because for some time it was the greatest hope in the history of our town.

• (1740)

The location of Drummondville at the crossroads of Quebec, near large centres such as Trois-Rivières, Montreal, Granby, Sherbrooke, Victoriaville and Quebec had been praised. Thousands of citizens had signed petitions voicing their desire to see that project carried out. The unemployed and the recipients of social welfare were anticipating better days. The pride of all citizens had heightened with the hope that their town would be gaining importance. Our hope was based on the support of two ministers of the constituency, one at the provincial and the other the federal level. As it happened the airport was set up elsewhere in an unknown and remote area near the federal capital and Ontario in a hilly district which did not lend itself to speedy development.

It seems to us that the government could have made up for it by promoting the establishment of thriving and viable industries among us which could have contributed to bring new assets and stimulate the trade in order to enable the economy to operate more regularly and normally.

If, in our democratic system, the government is not free to ensure each citizen a fair distribution of resources, it could—and that is not asking for the moon because it also belongs to the Americans—ensure a fair distribution of industry throughout the country through genuine incentives which, while respecting free enterprise, would put all Canadians on an equal footing, thus eliminating underdevelopped areas in Canada and keeping Quebec from constantly lying in stagnation, having to do with crumbs. By that I mean industries in which Ontario or the western provinces show no interest and which pay low wages and prepare workers to spend winter drawing unemployment insurance benefits that they will in fact get in the spring only, all this thanks to the system we now have.

What is required is a true industrial policy based on short and long term planning, satisfying the requirements of the environment and respecting human dignity.

The existing legislation as well as those that are being proposed in the Speech from the Throne are nothing more than stop gap measures, an inconsistent policy of social welfare that will benefit only the rich companies.

Some industries have undertaken a real blackmail campaign against this government and the Canadian people while literally demanding to be paid for making profits. It is highway robbery to demand to be paid by those who, in a number of cases, are being exploited, and to demand from low income taxpayers that they pay taxes not for bridges, roads, schools or hospitals, but for dividends that directly fall into the shareholders' pockets.

If this government really wants to have a sound industrial policy, it will need a sound basis, one that will resist any pressures while providing the country with a modern, flexible monetary system based on respect for the community and intended to look after the interests of Canadians.

This industrial policy should include efficient measures on behalf of the unemployed.

Right now the Unemployment Insurance Commission is in a terrible mess. In fact, I am receiving complaints by mail, by phone and from people who come to my Drummondville office saying that their unemployment insurance benefits are not coming in or are late. People have not received anything for two, three or four months and this is called insurance.

It is a real joke because when you are out of work and thus deprived of income this is when you need money the most. The first objective of unemployment insurance is precisely to fill that need and I say that the Unemployment Insurance Commission will not give the service it was created for.

Yet, the Speech from the Throne says, and I quote:

> In respect of people who can work but are temporarily unemployed, legislation will be introduced to clarify certain aspects of the Unemployment Insurance Plan and to prevent abuses that have not been overcome by the administrative action already taken.

Mr. Speaker, it is precisely in the administrative measures and waiting periods that the abuses exist. There will be abuses as long as man will be considered to be at the service of computers and not computers at the service of man.

Mr. Speaker, people who have difficulty understanding or being understood by unemployment insurance officials have to leave Drummondville and drive 50 miles to go to the Sherbrooke office. When you are without a salary or benefits because the computer does not understand you, you cannot afford to make such trips.

This is why I would like to invite the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) to consider the possibility of opening an office in Drummondville to examine in that location the cases of people having difficulties. As Drummondville has a population of 45,000, I think this request is quite justified, especially in view of the large number of unemployed people in this town and the surrounding area.

This decentralization would get the Unemployment Insurance Commission nearer its first objective of helping the jobless and would put an end at the same time to a great deal of criticism about this service which is no longer worthy of the name.

When a man has stopped receiving the benefits to which he is entitled, he applies for welfare assistance and has to submit to a whole series of inquiries, indiscretions and intimidations because of rules and instructions which leave no latitude to the officers who deal with the poor, even though for many years we had two ministers in the constituency. It will be evident that the office which I have taken over is not an easy one to fulfill.

Mr. Speaker, people come to see me each week at my office to ask for help because they do not succeed in gaining satisfaction during various interviews they have with social welfare officials. Yet, there is a member of the National Assembly in the constituency, he is even a minister, but since he does not do anything, I try to deal with these cases. I am saying this, Mr. Speaker, to urge the federal Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) to closely control the situation in order to impose stricter conditions to his provincial counterpart if need be so that proper consideration will be given to the human being.

Presently in Quebec, the pride of the people is being annihilated by restrictive socializing measures which suppress all freedom of action and speech and could deprive him of an income that he cannot do without.

This phenomenon reaches even the farmers who have had a difficult year in 1972. Everyone knows that the rains of last summer destroyed the crops and caused huge losses to the farmers of the province. The farmers in the Drummond riding were not spared and many were so discouraged that they even thought of selling their property. It is at this point that they understood with an even greater shock that the federal government and the Department of Agriculture is very little concerned about them.

The Speech from the Throne advocates a fair relationship of prices of feed grain to livestock feeders in various regions of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I maintain that before we speak of a fair relationship of prices of feed grain used by western and eastern feeders, we should begin by paying the meager amount of $400 to those who have been waiting for it since last summer.

I protest against this situation. It is shocking to see that farmers are up against rain in the summer and red tape in the winter.

It makes one wonder whether there should not be a ghetto for eastern farmers, at least if the government keeps on treating them as second class citizens and showing some interest in them only when the time comes to consider their profits for income tax purposes.

Mr. Speaker, Social Credit demands respect for human beings. A case in point is that farmers, who are the back bone of our economy, are not appreciated at their true worth through snobbery or because it is not profitable for high finance.

Mr. Speaker, the government is now beginning to take seriously the reforms advocated by the Social Credit for over 30 years. When the government starts to talk about a minimum guaranteed income, I am all for it as well as the party of which I have the honour to be a member. Even though only part of the population is concerned, it is a start, and the government deserves praise for thinking at last of some of the people. Soon the monetary system will be placed at the disposal of the people, it will no longer serve only the big financiers.

Then and only then will we speak of true democracy because although we now have parliamentary democracy we do not really know economic democracy. Economic democracy will be a fact only when all Canadians are shareholders in their country, just at it goes in private industry.

Consequently, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard), the following sub-amendment:

That the main amendment be amended by deleting the words after "Your Excellency's advisers" and substituting therefor the following:

. . . did not introduce the social credit reforms required to guarantee a minimum annual income to all Canadians, for instance the old age pension at 60."

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member moved an amendment about which I have serious procedural doubts. But before ruling on the matter, I am willing to hear the comments, recommendations or advice of my hon. colleagues of the House. Here is the amendment:

That the main amendment be amended by deleting the words after "your Excellency's advisers" and substituting therefor the following:

. . . did not introduce the social credit reforms required to guarantee a minimum annual income to all Canadians, for instance the old age pension at 60.

The question before the House is therefore the following:

We respectfully affirm to Your Excellency that Your Excellency's advisers did not introduce the social credit reforms required to guarantee a minimum annual income—

To my mind, this is a new amendment and not a sub-amendment. As I said, I would be happy to hear the comments of hon. members to help me decide whether or not the proposed amendment is in order.

• (1750)

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, we moved a subamendment in order to bring something positive to the amendment moved by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), which is practically meaningless. It is something purely negative, while our sub-amendment brings in at least something positive.

Mr. Speaker: Any further comments? I suspect that the hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) is rising in order to suggest to the Chair that the amendment is out of order. Should he try to convince me that the motion is in order, I would be willing to listen to him. Otherwise, I am ready to make a ruling.

In my opinion, there is no doubt from a procedural view point that the hon. member's amendment raises an entirely new matter. It does not attempt to explain the substance of the amendment moved by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) but rather to substitute an entirely new proposal.

The hon. member's motion would have been in order as a main motion and not as a secondary motion appended to a motion already before the House. For this reason, I regret to say to the hon. member that his motion is not in order as a sub-amendment.

Mr. Arthur Portelance (Gamelin): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I should like to join with the other hon. members in congratulating Your Honour on your reelection as representative of the Stormont-Dundas constituency. I am sure that your constituents are as satisfied with your services and your ability to represent them for the fifth time in the House of Commons as are all the hon. members in finding that your reelection as Speaker was a unanimous decision. Your past experience, your sound judgment and your competence asserted during previous Parliaments fully justify your holding the Speaker's office.

I also wish to congratulate the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) for his appointment as chairman of the committee of the whole House. Such an important function will be occupied, I am convinced, by a man who deserves the confidence and the co-operation of all hon. members. The hon. member for Halifax-East Hants, to my knowledge, has always acted objectively, whether in the House of Commons or in committees, when speaking on behalf of his party.

Mr. Speaker, two other hon. members also deserve congratulations. I shall first congratulate the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais), the mover of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, who acquainted us with his constituency in such a vivid fashion that I shall be only too happy to accept his invitation and visit his riding.

I also wish to offer my congratulations to the hon. member for Lachine (Mr. Blaker), the seconder of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. He gave us the background of his constituency of Lachine. Although he did not mention the Lachine massacre, perhaps he could have referred to the massacre of October 30 last, when he gave a sound licking to his Progressive Conservative opponent.

Mr. Speaker, I also take pleasure in congratulating all the hon. members, both new ones and former ones, who have been elected to the House.

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne proposes several new measures, all equally important, whether it be in the social, economic, political or national unity fields. I am surprised to note that the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Stanfield) criticizes the content of this Speech only to turn around and take credit for the measures which are proposed. He is accusing the government of stealing the Progressive Conservative platform as if his party were the only one concerned with the well-being of Canadians. I think that it would be more honest to state that the Speech from the Throne contains rather the recommendations and suggestions of all parties, including those of the Social Credit party of Canada, the New Democratic party the Conservative party and the Liberal party.

During the recent election campaign, I have met a number of my fellow citizens, mostly mothers, who told me that the present family allowances did not meet needs any longer and would only be justifiable if they were adjusted to the needs of the people.

I was happy to listen to our Prime minister's New Year's message, in which he insisted upon the family, which is one of the foundations of society and I quote:

> The Christmas season gives us opportunity to be present with our families and our loved ones from whom at other times of the year we are too often separated by work and circumstances. We are able to conside how fortunate we are to live in a country which protects the family unit as a very precious element, which regards it as one of the cornerstones in our way of life. It is in a family setting that so many of our national characteristics are best understood, and best appreciated.

In 1973, the family is as important as it was in 1944. The right hon. Mackenzie King, who was the Prime Minister, said in this House and I quote:

> Family and home are the foundations of national life. In order to secure a minimum of welfare for the nation's children as well as to provide them as many equal opportunities as possible in the fight of life, you will have to approve a measure designed to establish family allowances.

Mr. Speaker, it was true in 1944 and it is even more so in 1973 that family is one of the foundations of the Canadian society. I hope that, very soon, the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) will give us all details as regards a piece of legislation in this very important field of family allowances.

Advantages brought by such a plan are obvious. In the first place, we must help the family and better abide by the principle of social justice. Of course, allowances are financed by the rich, those whose incomes are high enough to make them fall in the taxable brackets. Indeed, it is mostly to meet the expenses represented by all kinds of allowances that the federal government is compelled to maintain a high level of income tax. It is more fair this way: those who are more privileged and have more resources obviously benefit more than others from society and the general prosperity. Is it not fair that they contribute more to assist those who, by bringing up children, make possible the existence and prosperity of the nation?

Low income people, of course, are not assessed at the same tax rates. However, they pay indirect taxes, which the government collects on consumer goods. This is an ideal tax from the point of view of people within the government, because it is easy to collect and because taxpayers pay it and often do not notice it.

But although this indirect tax is advantageous to the government, it brings serious drawbacks to the taxpayer. For one thing, by its very nature, it prevents any deduction for dependents; secondly, and this is more serious, it makes heads of families poorer to the very extent that their dependent expenses are higher and decrease their ability to pay. For instance, the 12 percent tax on manufactured goods which is included in the selling price to the consumer is to be paid only once by the purchaser who is single. However, a man with dependents pays it once for himself, again because of his wife and as many times as he has children. This is the case for all indirect taxes going to the government.

This is a case of injustice for those with families. If the government is to maintain much longer this indirect taxation, it must make up for this injustice and has no way of reimbursing the taxpayers other than paying family allowances or a guaranteed annual income which will correct this situation.

It is often said: "Equal pay for equal work". It is true to a certain extent. However, responsibilities of single persons and of those with dependents are not the same and the matter of equal pay does not hold true.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the Chair.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Portelance: Mr. Speaker, since I began to speak shortly before recess, I will try to be as brief as possible.

I said before recess that we often hear the following saying: Equal pay for equal work. It is true up to some extent, but the responsibilities of the two individuals, a single person and a married person with children, are not the same and equal pay is unfair.

During the last election campaign, several mothers complained that family allowances had not been increased for many years. As early as 1951, they rightly complained that the amount of $5 per child up to 6 years of age, was inadequate. This fabulous amount of $5 was not enough to buy a quart of milk daily at 19 cents a quart for a month. Do we realize that in 1973, although the allowance for that age group has been raised to $6 per month up to 10 years of age, it is not even enough to buy a quart of milk a day for 30 days, because the milk is sold at 35 cents a quart? Milk costs have increased twofold, but family allowances are still at almost the same level.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the government and the Minister concerned to review this situation as early as possible and to increase once and for all family allowances in such a way as to allow the head of the family to discharge his responsibilities more readily. If family allowances were pegged on the cost of living, as the old age pensions are, they would truly be effective.

It is true that during the last Parliament a bill was introduced. Although it was not perfect, I am sure many Canadian families would have benefited from the amendment, even those of the riding of Toronto-Trinity whose representative (Mr. Hellyer) voted against adoption of the Bill.

We, of the Liberal Party, during the last Parliament, felt it would have been more equitable for some families to receive amounts of $15 and $20 monthly instead of the present $5 and $8.

The bill was introduced in the House and I believe a majority of hon. members were prepared to pass it. But since this did not take place, today, the new Minister of National Health and Welfare has already given us to understand that the Family Allowances Plan will definitely be reviewed and that it will all be done in co-operation with the provinces who are interested in improving such a plan. I hope that it will be possible to do all this quickly enough.

One of the responsibilities of members of this House is to make sure that family allowances are paid everywhere in Canada and that the amounts are not too different from one province to the other. I do not think it would be fair for a province to be able to pay $35 allowances while other provinces could only afford to pay $20 a month. It is advisable that these things be considered in future discussions between the Minister of National Health and Welfare and his colleagues from the various provinces.

The minister also dealt with the improvements that will be made to the old age security pension plan. Of course, in the last election campaign, many members certainly heard about the problems that exist in that field, particularly in the case of a married man who has reached the age of 65, who is deprived of his earnings and who has a younger wife.

In Quebec, a 65-year-old man is entitled to a pension of $150 a month. If his wife is younger, they both will have to live on that amount. In my opinion, there surely is room for improvement in such cases and I hope this Parliament will give this matter priority.

Much has been said about unemployment insurance during the election campaign. Several candidates of some parties accused the government of bad administration with regard to unemployment insurance. I think all those former members who voted for this legislation should be proud of themselves. I am convinced that Canada still has one of the best unemployment insurance programs in the world. On account of it, several fathers, mothers and children were able to have a better Christmas and New Year's because they were in receipt of unemployment insurance. It is true that there are several unemployed people in Canada. However, it must be remembered, before introducing such a program, that two thirds of the Canadian workers are not unionized. The last third which is unionized certainly has better working conditions than the two thirds which are not.

For the first time in this country, a worker was entitled to benefits in case of illness, which was not the case before, except for people with good jobs, such as federal, provincial or municipal public servants, and people working for big companies that could afford such benefits. But under the new unemployment insurance system, workers are entitled to such benefits in case of illness.

For the first time also, women, in case of maternity, will be able to receive their salary for a maximum period of 15 weeks, and they will also be eligible to unemployment insurance assistance after eight weeks of employment.

The drawing of maximum benefits after 20 weeks of employment has also been allowed. All this was beneficial to the economy.

During the holiday season, the department stores had one of the best years ever. And I am sure that the sales were not made only to people who are employed. A good number of unemployed people had happier holidays because of their unemployment benefits provided by insurance, this humane program introduced by the last Parliament.

Ninety-four per cent of the population of Canada is working while 6 per cent is unemployed. However, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the 94 per cent who are working have a responsibility towards the 6 per cent who are out of work.

I would like those who have a job to keep it as long as possible because I have faith in the Canadian worker. I am sure that among the unemployed 6 per cent many would also be working if it were as easy to find a job as it is claimed.

We constantly hear that there are problems in Canada. There are problems but we know that Canada has the second highest standard of living in the world. The only other position in which we could be is the first one. It is not all that bad. I hope that with the help of all our recently elected friends, we will succeed in reaching this first position. I am sure that this is the main goal of all my colleagues on this side of the House.

• (2010)

[English]

Mr. Norval Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to congratulate you on the appointment to your high office. I offer my congratulations, also, to the Deputy Speaker. I know this parliament will be the better for Your Honour's presence in the chair, and as a result Canada will be a better place. I am not sure we can say that about many of us.

It is with a great deal of satisfaction that I rise to speak for the first time representing the people of Battleford-Kindersley. They have bestowed upon me a great honour by choosing me to represent them in parliament, and I hope that during my time here I shall be deserving of their trust. For the benefit of hon. members who may not be familiar with the constituency of Battleford-Kindersley, I might mention a few of its attributes. The constituency borders the province of Alberta. The distance from north to south is about 230 miles, and it extends eastward into Saskatchewan for some 100 miles. It is a very large constituency and it is likely to become still larger when redistribution takes place.

It is a wonderful place in which to live, and there are a lot of very hard working people there. We do not have a high unemployment rate in Battleford-Kindersley; when the jobs are not there, it seems people just go and find them. As I say, they are a hard working, aggressive and progressive people. As for the principal cities, I have North Battleford and I share the city of Lloydminster with the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): Within the constituency are some of the finest ranches and some of the finest herds of breeding cattle in the world. Being so large, my constituency extends northward into the parkland and south into some of the best wheat growing land in western Canada. I might add that it lies in the flyway of the Canada goose. It is also on the migration route of many other species of geese and ducks. This attracts hundreds of people from all over the United States and Canada to visit the area during the fall. There are in Battleford-Kindersley a great many active and lively communities served by 12 weekly newspapers which do much to hold these communities together.

In my speech this evening I intend to deal mainly with agriculture, coming, as I do, from an agricultural constituency. I had a very interesting experience early in November. I attended a meeting in Kindersley at which about 150 mayors, reeves and other responsible leaders were present: they had come from within a radius of about 60 miles. For two days the problems facing rural Saskatchewan were examined and discussed. We followed a procedure whereby we listed problems in order of priority. The first, we agreed, was the depopulation of the rural areas. This, of course, is closely related to agricultural policies. We felt that the main cause of this depopulation was the inability of young men and women to get started in farming.

During my time in this House I hope to devote myself strenuously to policies which will help not only to maintain the population of rural Saskatchewan but to increase it. This is vital to the social life of the region and to the communities concerned. I do not intend to go into details now, but I have in mind amendments to the farm credit legislation, amendments long overdue, which would enable young men and women to get started. I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that in the city one can buy a $30,000 house by making a down payment of $500. One would need a lot more cash than that before the Farm Credit Corporation would look seriously at an application to acquire a half section of land.

Before I address myself more specifically to the subject of agriculture I wish to bring before the House a very serious social issue. On Monday we heard an hour and a half of whimpering about how the west was lost. I can tell the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and a number of his hon. friends who are absent from the chamber tonight that I was asked many times to state my position on the issue I am about to mention. In fact, it was raised more frequently than any other issue which was discussed during the campaign. Every day in hospitals across the country human beings are being slaughtered as a result of the legislation which was passed in 1969, a bad piece of legislation, poorly drafted, allowing therapeutic abortion to be carried out in hospitals. In the first month after its passage, September, 1969, there were 105 such abortions. In December, 1971, there were 3,090. How many will there be this month? Heaven only knows. In 1971 there were 30,944 therapeutic abortions.

Before long this House is expected to discuss the question of the death penalty, something which would affect relatively few people. What about the innocent human beings who are being murdered every day—and "murdered" is the term used by a great many very fine people who have approached me on the subject. I have committed myself to trying to do something about this problem in the hope that an amendment can be made to the legislation. I know members of all parties are most concerned about this question and I hope we will reconsider the legislation in the very near future.

I should now like to turn to some agricultural problems I feel must be dealt with immediately. In the last few years we have not appeared to be a very credible supplier of grain. Sure, we can sell it now because there is a shortage in the world and our customers will take it in spite of the inconvenience to and the harassment of them. This spring the United States will be increasing its wheat acreage and we will probably increase ours. We could very quickly be back in a similar situation to that which existed in 1969-70. We were not prepared for it then, but let us prepare for it this time.

The "build for a billion" minister is not in the House at the moment, but I advised him this morning I would be speaking on matters pertaining to the Wheat Board and would be critical of his position. Let me list four things that must be done immediately, some of which will take four or five years to complete. We can carry on no longer with a band-aid approach to agricutural problems, with the minister flying out in an attempt to give the farmers a lift.

We have no shipping facilities capable of handling large ships. In five or ten years' time wheat might be handled this way, with a saving of perhaps 10 or 20 cents a bushel, and the difference could well mean a sale. I can foresee the day when we will be loading our wheat through United States ports such as Seattle because we cannot handle large ships and the customers will want loading done that way. We have to get at this problem right away because it cannot be solved in a month.

We do not have sufficient storage from which to fill the ships now coming into port on the west coast, let alone the larger ships to which I have referred. We do not have enough storage to ensure that a proper supply of wheat is available of various qualities and grades for export. We cannot guarantee delivery on a regular basis because we cannot assure customers that there will not be hold-ups due to strikes. Of course, the previous government had a policy regarding grain strikes: they allowed them to continue for 50 days in the east and 21 days in the west, provided it was just before an election.

If we are to be a reliable supplier of grain we must realize that one of the first things our customers will ask is whether we can deliver when they want delivery. They do not want to store two years' supply of wheat in their countries: they want to buy wheat from somebody who can fill the ships and get the grain to them quickly; they cannot afford to wait days, weeks and months. Our acreage seeded to rape and barley fluctuates drastically. Our customers are aware of this and do not consider us a very credible supplier of grain when we do not seem to know how much we are going to seed from one year to the next.

There are a number of other things that should be done immediately. We should have storage facilities somewhere in Asia. Many countries there could use wheat. We could develop these markets by providing storage there to fill orders of 20,000 to 30,000 bushels at a time. This matter has been mentioned often and should have been looked after five or ten years ago. We should also begin immediately to develop as quickly as possible a number of varieties of feed wheat. Had we done this years ago I am sure we would now have markets and would be selling feed wheat. I realize that progress is slow; it took us five years to adopt protein grading.

We should improve facilities at Prince Rupert. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board made an announcement a long time ago that he was going to improve these facilities. He could not explain specifically what he was going to do then, and has not explained since. There is no reason in the world why we should not be using the port of Churchill to a greater extent. You will never convince people in western Canada that the reason for not using that port to a greater extent is something other than that related to political power in central Canada. These mistakes are academic ones for the ministers and civil servants to solve, but they make the difference between existing and making a living in western Canada.

Our storage policy is responsible for another problem in Canada. This problem has created a loss of hundreds of millions of dollars to western Canada in the last five years. The farmer has been expected to store his grain while the large companies were being paid for storage. The farmers stored it for nothing, and the federal government told them it was surplus, there was a glut on the market and they should get rid of it. They sold it for 40 cents to 50 cents a bushel in the area in which I live. The same wheat is selling today for $3 a bushel in Vancouver. Wheat sold seven months ago will not bring the western farmer more than $1.40 a bushel. I assume the minister in charge of the Wheat Board will have an opportunity to speak, although I know he is not at the top of the priority list. I should like to hear him emphasize once again, as he did during the campaign, that the Lift program was not a mistake.

I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt (Mr. Lang) on his tremendous feat of getting elected in western Canada. One would have to say this was entirely a personal victory; Liberal policies could in no way have helped him get elected in the riding of Saskatoon-Humboldt. In 11 of the 13 constituencies in Saskatchewan, the Liberals came third. With the union we now have in the House, I am not sure they will not be running candidates opposing each other in those constituencies.

The Minister of Justice said the Lift program was bad medicine but it was necessary. Speaking on behalf of the western farmer, the result of the election was also bad medicine but perhaps equally necessary for the Liberals. From what I have heard, the people of Saskatoon-Humboldt felt they had to get this hon. member elected because he could fight from the inside. I wish him lots of luck in that regard.

The Liberals' discovery of the west is nothing less than an admission of failure to handle the problems of western Canada in the past four and a half years. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board could perhaps learn something from the results of the election and be a little more honest, because he cannot fool the western farmer. There were headlines in the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix three inches high, to the effect that the minister had said the two-price system was permanent legislation. I did not see the bill, but it was neither permanent nor did it give any priority to wheat. This was a one-shot acreage payment. Had the minister been honest, the farmers would have thought better of him.

Wheat is now selling to flour mills at $1.95 a bushel. If a feeder wanted to buy it, it would be $3 per bushel. What we have is the wheat grower subsidizing other farmers. I am sure the minister in charge of the Wheat Board can explain this to the wheat producers. I hope he can also explain to the wheat growers what he means when he says the two-price system is a great breakthrough for the west. The $1.95 should have been a minimum price.

I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Whelan) on his appointment to the cabinet. I assure him I am looking forward to working on the agricultural committee. A long time has passed since the election and we have many problems to tackle. I urge the minister to make that committee active as soon as possible.

• (2030)

There does not seem to be any rush for legislation in the House. Let us have some agricultural legislation brought forward immediately. I am very anxious to see measures that would bring some sort of stability and confidence to the agricultural industry, and a move away from the Liberal band-aid approach. The new minister has been quoted very often with regard to national marketing boards. I say to him that the only marketing board legislation that is likely to get through the House is that which comes at the request of the producer, and then only that which leaves complete control in the hands of the farmer. So far as western agriculture is concerned, such control must be in the hands of the western farmer—and "control" is the key word here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): In this respect I want to mention briefly the Wheat Board. I think it would be an excellent idea if an active producer advisory board were set up to advise the Wheat Board. It is an odd thing that we hear voices in favour of the Wheat Board handling rapeseed, but not from rapeseed growers. The NDP are in favour of such a move. It is strange, since the producers and customers do not want the Wheat Board to handle rapeseed. When you are in business, it is the customer who counts. But, of course, business is something that the NDP do not understand.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): It is the belief of socialists that the farmer does not know anything and that the civil servant is the source of all wisdom. So it seems to me that a federal socialist Liberal government and a federal socialist New Democratic Party should get along very well: this is very interesting to me, having spent all my life in Saskatchewan and being subjected to the provincial authority of one or the other. Talk about Tweedledum and Tweedledee! Two years ago in Saskatchewan our government changed hands, but I did not notice any difference.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): I notice that the term "small businessman" is used in the Speech from the Throne. Not only has the government discovered the west, they have discovered the small businessman. I spoke to hundreds of small businessmen in my travels during the campaign and found them to be desperate and disenchanted with the socialist provincial and federal governments. I went to a store one day and the owner said to me, "I have an inspector downstairs looking into education tax and an inspector upstairs looking into income tax. If I could sell this place, I would be gone". If you want to do something for the small businessman, get off his back, I say; let him run the business.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Basford: They are all provincial inspectors.

Mr. Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): The throne speech also spoke of assistance to provinces with regard to secondary education. I am very interested in that question since I have had something to do with education in the last six years. Many mistakes have been made in the past in putting federal money into education which is under provincial jurisdiction, and I hope that we will move cautiously in this area. This assistance is certainly needed, but we should not move too quickly.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment and Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, may I first say that it is good to see you back in your place. There are not many of us from the class of 1962 who are still here, and still fewer from the influx of 1958. It is good to see you back in the chair exercising your usual wisdom and compassion.

I shall speak particularly about environmental and fisheries matters tonight and I shall dwell on two paragraphs which appear in the Speech from the Throne. They are important paragraphs and they describe new legislation designed to protect our national heritage. One relates to the management of our renewable resources, the other describes further initiatives which the government is taking in the twin fields of fisheries and oceanography off our coasts. The actual wording, to remind hon. members, is as follows:

> Measures to protect the natural environment and to enhance the productivity of Canada's renewable resource industries will be laid before you. In addition to amendments to the Fisheries Development Act, you will be asked to consider an environmental contaminants act and a Canada wildlife act.

The second paragraph in the throne speech which I should like to read is as follows:

> To preserve the ecological integrity of Canada's coastal and maritime areas, further preparations will be made for the Third United Nations Law of the Sea Conference. The Ministry of State for Science and Technology, in co-operation with the Department of the Environment and other interested departments, will recommend a national program of research and development in the field of marine science and technology.

In the first paragraph reference is made to three new pieces of legislation, amendments to the Fisheries Development Act, a new Canada wildlife act and a new environmental contaminants act. Passed by the House, they will form an integral part of Canada's growing arsenal of laws which are essentially environmental in character. Under this heading I would class the Canada Water Act, the Clean Air Act and Canada's Territorial Seas and Fishing Zones Act, among others.

This new legislation has much to recommend it to hon. members, beside helping us to cut down on pollution, help protect endangered species and help us to increase our national output. These pieces of legislation will generate more jobs. They will be most helpful in the disadvantaged parts of the country. By helping us to better manage our renewable resources it will also help us in the fight against inflation in this country.

Hon. members will want me to be specific, and I will try to do so. Let me concentrate for a moment on our proposed amendments to the Fisheries Development Act. The scope of this particular bill will be broadened so that financial assistance can be provided to small inshore fishermen who require ice-making, ice storage and fish-chilling facilities.

Installations of this character are badly needed, especially in our outports. They are needed in order to cut our losses in the fisheries and to improve the quality of our fish. More of the small fisherman's catch, in other words, will reach the marketplace. Being first quality rather than second quality, it will fetch a higher price for fishermen. Now 20 per cent of all landings are rejected by our fisheries inspection service as unfit for human consumption. This is a monstrous waste which can be avoided if we have the right kinds of chilling and preservation facilities. Outright losses are one thing, but of the 80 per cent of our inshore fish which is actually sold, more than half is currently classed as second quality.

Remedying these two situations together will put another $25 million in the pockets of our inshore fishermen. The cost of this ice-making, ice storage and fish-chilling program is likely to be small compared to the benefits. The once-and-for-all investment of less than $10 million will produce an annual income increase in the pocket of the fishermen themselves in the order of $25 million. This is a high benefit cost ratio in anyone's language. Not only does it represent a marked increase in productivity, but it also means that thousands of fishermen in Newfoundland, the Maritimes, across the Prairies, in the Northwest Territories and on the west coast will have more money to spend because they are operating more efficiently and more of their fish is making its way, in good quality, to market. I would put the once-and-for-all cost to the federal treasury at $5 million, with grants being made on an individual basis. In total, this means that local co-ops and individual fishermen will be called upon to put up about another $5 million.

• (2040)

I might describe this increase in another way. As a result of this amendment of the act we should be able to increase the earnings of all our inshore fishermen and lake fishermen by about 30 per cent. We can do this at a cost of $5 million to the federal taxpayer and raise the income of 20,000 fishermen without killing any more fish than we do today.

The second piece of legislation to which I refer, and which was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, is the Canada wildlife act. A bill of this kind has never before been passed by parliament. True, Mr. Speaker, we have the Migratory Birds Convention Act, but we have never had legislation on our statute books dealing specifically with wildfowl and the establishment of wildlife sanctuaries.

This new legislation will require close co-operation with the provinces, all of which have important responsibilities in this area. This is one reason why I have consulted personally with all the provincial ministers who are concerned with wildlife, in general the ministers in charge of recreation and conservation. Without exception they have welcomed the government's initiative in this legislation. Also, they are high in their praise for the technical competence and managerial ability of the Canadian Wildlife Service. Under this legislation we will be able to obtain additional funds for the protection of individual species and for the acquisition of certain lands the ownership of which is essential if we are to manage our wildlife resources as we should.

The wildlife program we have in mind will cost the federal treasury something in the order of $10 million but, again, as with the fisheries scheme, the benefits are likely to be several times the cost. Many millions of dollars already accrue to our federal and provincial treasuries through the sale of hunting licences and the like. Ducks Unlimited spends more than three million U.S. dollars a year on the preservation of waterfowl alone. Our own tourist industry benefits in a major way from programs of this kind.

This afternoon the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Nesdoly) rather facetiously referred to geese and grain. He talked about geese being crossed with boxcars to fly grain out of the country. Last year we did much to develop a facsimile of such a scheme in the crop depredation program. It is a $1 million a year program, a joint program with the provinces. In effect, it feeds ducks and geese on their way north and south across the country. It feeds them at public expense and not the expense of the individual farmer. Lure crops are planted, and the prairie farmer is insured. Hence, my reference to geese and to their unique ability to pick up and move grain on the Prairies.

This brings me to the third piece of legislation in the Speech from the Throne with which I am concerned, the new environmental contaminants act. Here the emphasis will be on prevention rather than cure. We will be screening new man-made substances. New products like plastics and toxic chemicals will be the first to be vetted under the proposed law. They will be vetted essentially by the industries themselves. Of course, our specialists and engineers in Environment Canada will be drawing up the test procedures and protocols. They will be responsible for the guidelines, much as the officials in the Department of National Health and Welfare in the Food and Drugs Division are responsible for tests that apply to food additives, drugs and pesticides. But industry, basically, will be called upon to do its own testing and our officials in government will be keeping an eye on industry's performance in this regard.

There may be some hon. members among us who see this screening process as offensive to the private sector. I cannot agree with them. Most chemical companies would welcome a firm policy in this area, a set of environmental guidelines or protocols which would help them sort out the kind of products they can sell with impunity. At present they run a considerable risk that one of their products may be on the market for a number of years before environmentalists point out its dangers.

We will be looking out for chemicals that have four common characteristics. The first are those that only slowly degrade or break down in nature. The second characteristic is that they are taken up by living things and are concentrated as they pass up through the natural food chain. Third, they are rapidly and widely dispersed, often found hundreds, if not thousands, of miles from their source; and fourth, having entered the environment they may be irrecoverable and even with the expenditure of large amounts of money they can never be brought under control. The names of some of the offending substances are familiar; they include heavy metals such as lead, cadmium and mercury, and chemicals like the polychlorinated biphenyls, or PCBs. Unfortunately, some of these substances are already present in alarming quantities in our biosphere. Since their sources are many, and since their use has become worldwide, international co-operation is often essential if we are to keep these environmental contaminants under control not only in Canada but elsewhere.

I might mention in passing that similar legislation is being considered in the United States and that a toxic substances act is being drafted in Washington. Our legislation will be broader in scope. It will deal not only with substances toxic or poisonous in nature, that is, poisonous to all living things, but also with other pollutants that tend to suffocate because of their bulk volume or concentration in a single place.

I have used the word protocol, Mr. Speaker. Environmental protocols are tests that establish the safety of a new product. We have developed several for checking out substances. NTA, a substitute for phosphates in detergents, is a case in point. The protocol here has been developed with the assistance of the Department of National Health and Welfare. Environment Canada is also working with the Department of Agriculture on pesticides. We are already working with industry, with various companies, on other important new industrial products. The idea of containment is fundamental to our approach to pollution. Either we prevent a product from being manufactured in the first place or we insist that it be recycled within the factory premises. If possible, nothing should get out that is toxic or suffocating. This makes sense, because it is terribly expensive to gather it up again. Such a toxic substance could do irreversible damage if it got loose.

As I have said in the House on other occasions, Mr. Speaker, our national pollutant abatement standards are linked to the best possible technology. As new techniques are devised, our standards are continually tightened up. Every new plant in this country must make use of this new technology. Here I would emphasize the word "ideas". Already as a result of this technologically-oriented policy of ours we have developed a good deal of fresh and valuable Canadian know-how. Not only has this been beneficial, in environmental terms, in Canada, but it has an important dollar sign attached to it. It is a new industry which is selling its expertise not only to firms here but also widely in the United States, in Sweden and the USSR. With these multiple dividends to Canadian workers and to our scientific community in mind we have launched a number of research projects for broader programs. They are essentially co-operative with nature and industry. In our pulp and paper mill industry, the research is increasingly being undertaken on a dollar for dollar or 50-50 basis, the taxpayers putting up half of the money for this and industry the other half.

• (2050)

We have already scored a number of important breakthroughs. Here are a few which also show considerable promise and which may be highly successful not only from an environmental point of view but also from a financial point of view. The first is the use of oxygen to bleach wood pulp rather than using other chemical ingredients. Over a period of time this would make a pollution-free industry of one which is now largely responsible for much of our pollution. I have no doubt that the pollution outstream from those mills using the new process could be eliminated in its entirety. Preliminary estimates of cost benefits over a decade are interesting and show a benefit cost ratio of better than six to one.

Second is a new process for treating waste waters from mining operations. This would be invaluable for salmon rivers like the Miramichi and the Fraser. This technology, which is also transferable, is now in an advanced stage. I think it will be suitable not only for Canada but for other countries as well. It promises to have a benefit cost ratio in the area of ten to one.

Third, we are exploring a new process for controlling the emission of sulphur dioxide from smelter gases. By eliminating the expense of the limestone washing process, savings would result to both the smelter and the refinery. This process would have benefit both at home and abroad. It has an indicated benefit cost ratio of more than three to one.

Fourth, other investigations are under way in laboratories and more particularly in industry across the country. Many of them are in the chemical, food and allied industries. Others promise considerable savings to municipalities in respect of sewage collection and sewage treatment.

These are among the reasons, Mr. Speaker, why Environment Canada is entering into numerous contracts with industry and occasionally with universities, that is, to develop new technology which can not only create a pollution abatement industry in this country but can also provide meaningful and well paid jobs for many Canadians.

What I have described is clearly an integral part of our over-all industrial strategy. It turns losses into gain; it converts present day wastes into products of future value; it adds to our efficiency in a very material way; it will improve our earnings and at the same time it will help to clean up our national surroundings.

[Mr. Davis.]

I believe quite sincerely, Mr. Speaker, that it pays to be clean. It may cost some industries more than others to be clean, but the total Canadian community is bound to benefit. We will have to expend less effort in tidying up our surroundings. We will not have to use as much paint, to suffer as much wear and tear or feel as badly as we have at times. Indeed, we will be a lot healthier and depreciation of our assets will be slower. Our great Canadian outdoors, if we are careful and plan far enough ahead, will be preserved for all time.

In over-all national terms, the cost of an abatement pollution program is unlikely ever to exceed 2 per cent of our national income. It may have fallen to as little as 1 per cent by 1980. In narrow economic terms—which does not look insurmountable—the savings in dollars and cents to individual Canadians may be several times that amount. The over-all benefits accruing to the whole Canadian community may be several times the actual financial cost to industry and to individuals in this country.

As I have said before in this House and in other places, and I say it again now, we in Canada can have a substantial rate of economic growth and a clean environment. We can expand our industrial output as long as we do it intelligently and put into effect the best possible technology, particularly a technology to suit our own Canadian problems in our own industries and eventually by selling the results abroad in our own interests and in the interests of others.

Mr. Speaker, I have very little time left and I should like to deal, not with matters which are largely internal to Canada but with matters which relate to our coasts and the sea. Not only do we have the longest shoreline in the world but we have the largest continental shelf which adds roughly 40 per cent to the area of our nation. How we manage these seas and direct the quality of the living resources which they nourish is very important to us.

In their forthcoming review of our departmental estimates, hon. members will see that we are adding substantially to the surveillance of these waters. In the fisheries and marine services alone, we are adding three large ships and a dozen medium-sized patrol craft by 1975. We are adding other shipping capacity in the area of research. In co-operation with the Department of National Defence we are stepping up surveillance from the air. A number of scientific expeditions are being planned, some in co-operation with other nations, which will also let us know more about the continental shelf which joins our shores.

Hon. members will be glad to know that we have gained a greater measure of control over the dumping of oil and other wastes near our coasts. The strong position which Canada took at the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment in Stockholm in 1972, and again at the Conference of Maritime Nations in London last fall, led to a convention which gives the coastal state certain powers of intervention which it never had before. For instance, Canadians could take emergency action against ships not only coming and going from Canadian ports but also passing close to our shoreline.

In conjunction with other fishing nations we have also pioneered, and to a considerable degree succeeded, in bringing about management of our fishing resources, those out over our continental shelf and beyond our own exclusive fishing limits, onto a sustained yield basis. This is true particularly in the North Atlantic where there is raiding and indiscriminate fishing by long-distance fishing nations, which on other continents has been so destructive in the past.

Preparatory to the next Law of the Sea Conference we will be hosting a conference on fisheries management—a conference of the world fishing nations—in Vancouver, in February. This will deal primarily with management, not only to preserve the resources but to make sure our fisheries resources are in the best state possible.

Finally, let me say a word about the next Law of the Sea Conference. It will be first convened in New York in November, 1973; the subsequent meeting is scheduled for Santiago, Chile, in April, 1974. Not only have Canadians a great deal riding on the outcome of this very important conference, but so do many other countries where the people are becoming increasingly concerned about the viability of their fisheries and the quality of the waters which wash their shores.

Mr. Speaker, several important priorities were outlined in the Speech from the Throne, and I think I have touched on all of them in my remarks tonight. Pieces of legislation, and the program relating to our fishery areas, among other things, will expand job opportunities for Canadians. They can certainly help to increase the income of Canadians because they are highly productive. Because they add to our efficiency they should do something to ensure a greater measure of price stability in the country. This applies particularly in respect to fisheries legislation which does something about other areas of the country which are less fortunate from an income and employment point of view.

I hope that these pieces of legislation will be brought forward soon, Mr. Speaker, and that all hon. members will do their utmost not only to expedite their passage but to improve them during the course of debate here and in the standing committee on environment and fisheries.

• (2100)

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, may I first extend my congratulations to you and to the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, and immediately express my regret for having to bring to the House again a situation that detrimentally affects my own constituency.

As hon. members who were here during the previous parliament are aware, I have been putting forward certain objections and grievances. These finally culminated in a petition being placed before the House. It was accepted by Mr. Speaker and by the government, and referred to the justice and legal affairs committee for study. I and the people I represent, on whose behalf I put forward the petition, were delighted when the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs came down unanimously with a favourable report. In so saying, I remind the House that the committee was made up mainly of lawyers; there were 12 representatives from the government side of the House and eight members from the other parties.

In view of this favourable report it is regrettable that the Cape Breton Development Corporation, known as Devco, failed to act and implement, on behalf of the people of my area, the provisions of the legislation passed unanimously by this House in 1967.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I should like for a few moments to review the details. I realize that it may be somewhat difficult for all members of the House to follow this. This legislation was introduced because of an ailing coal industry. It affects a somewhat localized part of Cape Breton, and because of that I doubt if some hon. members are interested. It would make about as much sense for some hon. members to be concerned about this piece of legislation as it would if I were to get up and, in opposition to four or five western members, try to speak on wheat. Nevertheless, I especially ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and members of cabinet present in the House to pay particular attention to what I have to say.

I have prepared a 25-page brochure which I will make available to members of the House in order that they may become familiar with the facts. The evidence is documented. Most of it involves the corporation itself and the justice and legal affairs committee. There is evidence from other committees before which Devco officials appeared. Once they have looked at this material, I am sure hon. members will realize that the way Devco officials implemented the legislation passed by this House in 1967 was not what was intended by parliament. I am appealing to parliament to take a close look at this matter, because we want what was requested in the petition and what parliament intended originally in its legislation.

To begin with, Mr. Speaker, having undertaken to rehabilitate the mines in Cape Breton, the authorities completely ignored them. I will send a copy of these documents to the Prime Minister. In this situation, I think it would make sense for the government to act. This House passed the legislation and a committee of the House fully supported the people of my area. I would therefore be interested in listening to him on this matter and in his doing something about it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Briefly, the situation was this. The committee made certain recommendations which Devco failed to follow. They have not been followed to their full extent by any means. Instead of attempting to rehabilitate the mines the authorities in the area initiated a pre-retirement leave plan. The legislation was to make available $3,000 to a married man and $2,400 to a single man. Yet immediately afterwards Devco turned around, contravened section 48 of the Unemployment Insurance Act and told the men, "We will give you $3,000 but you must go down to the unemployment insurance office and pick up the money you are entitled to for the first 17½ months, and we will reduce or take that amount from the $3,000 we will allow you." As a result, as members of previous parliaments have seen, cheques for one cent were paid out twice a month by the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

Is this what the government intended? I am not asking that merely as a rhetorical question. Do not the members on the government side of the House feel that Devco was doing the wrong thing, especially as there was a unanimous report from the justice and legal affairs committee on the subject? Devco ignored the report.

Now the situation in Cape Breton is this: in addition to violating the Unemployment Insurance Act, the corporation has said that the pre-retirement leave moneys, so far as it is concerned, are not earnings which come under the unemployment insurance fund but are earnings so far as the Canada Pension Plan are concerned. As a result, those who have been forced to take pre-retirement have continued to make contributions until they have reached the age of 65. Devco has been using the 1923 standard of $75 pensions. Some men have worked in the collieries for 50 years. They will be paid $50 from the Canada Pension Plan and will obtain $25 from the corporation.

Is this what the government intended when it passed section 18 (a)(i) of the act? That section requires Devco to set up a pension plan for its employees. Section 18 (a)(ii) requires the setting up of pension arrangements for former employees and their dependants. In addition to the documentation which I can make available to hon. members, they can peruse that section of the legislation.

One will also find, on reading section 28 (e) of the legislation, how generous are the provisions respecting pensions for the officers of Devco. The criminal aspect of this is that the Devco officers have been brought under the civil service superannuation plan, yet nothing has been done for former employees who come under sections 18 (a)(i) and (ii).

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): What makes this even more hard to take is that in the five-year period some officials of Devco will contribute more than miners contribute in 45 years. In other words, it would take miners 45 years to catch up with the contribution the officers make in five years.

Although nothing has been done with respect to sections 18 (a)(i) and (ii) of the act, Devco is getting ready to sign a contract with its present employees. The arrangement is for a pension of $4 per year, as I understand it, up to a maximum of 20 years, making a total pension of $80, or $5 in excess of the standard set by the previous company in 1923. Surely that is not what the government intended. Surely that is not what the justice and legal affairs committee supported. Again I say there were 12 Liberal members on that committee. This is not what we were led to expect from the legislation passed in this House in 1967. What I say, I say without fear of contradiction. The documentary evidence is there for anybody to examine.

Having established the Cape Breton Development Corporation, the authorities then brought a man over from England, or from the U.K., I ought to say. When he came, he brought many of his buddies with him and then disregarded the wishes of the people of Cape Breton. His actions affected the livelihood of the entire Cape Breton area. He imposed on the people, and I have documentation to prove it.

What did he do after imposing on them? In his representations to the minister, he lied; and I say that advisedly. He lied to the minister on a number of occasions and that fact can be documented inasmuch as he appeared before a committee of this House. There he contradicted himself, and Devco officials appearing before the justice and legal affairs committee also contradicted him. In addition, you will find a note from the former minister, the meaning of which is plain. There is a letter verifying the fact that Blackmore lied to the minister on more than one occasion. This can be further verified by a perusal of the evidence placed before the justice and legal affairs committee. It can be shown that it happened on at least three different occasions.

The legislation required Devco to consult with all unions certified under the Nova Scotia labour act. Devco and Blackmore failed to do that. They imposed on the union, they imposed pretty well on everybody, and they made threats. They impose their will on everybody. They say the pre-retirement benefit must be taken this year and that it may not be available next year. They also tell the men their jobs may be gone. They used coercion, lies and threats. This matter has gone to court. The court did not do justice to the situation. This is fully documented for the benefit of everyone. In one instance the court said:

> Pension benefits will not be paid to the widows or other dependants following the death of an employee or retired employee, including the plaintiff.

It goes on to say that the plaintiffs would not be called. That is not in accordance with the facts, because some of the plaintiffs were called back. The matter went to the court and the court did nothing. I appeal to every member of this House, this House which is often referred to as the highest court in the land, for justice for the Cape Breton miners and their families, as well as the other people involved.

If we reflect on this situation at the time it began, we will recall that I have been raising the subject since 1967, as well as during the last parliament, in respect of what Mr. Blackmore, the import from the United Kingdom, has done in Cape Breton. It is interesting to note that he is no longer there. The people of Cape Breton, however, today are paying for the sins of Gerald Blackmore just because the House of Commons does not stand behind the legislation passed in 1967.

I appeal to hon. members, especially the government, to stand behind this legislation. In my petition before the House I did not ask for anything that was not in the legislation. I now ask the government to take a good, hard look at what has gone on and to see that what the legislation intended in the first instance is carried out.

I have a document here in respect of what Mr. Blackmore stated. I have a letter signed by the original president, along with the president of the former company. This, however, was dishonoured before the ink was dry. I will make this document available so that all members can check it with the preamble to the legislation, and also check it against sections 18(a)(i) and 18(a)(ii), and so on. Then they might ask, did we intend that the high-salaried principals would receive the protection that others have been denied?

The hon. members might go on and look at the different approaches taken by Devco and the former chairman of that board who is now running the National Capital Commission, much to the regret of many people in this area, I am sure. They might check out what the vice-president in charge of development had to say, and then turn to the evidence given before the committee, which indicates that they were entirely wrong in their statements before the committee.

Again I say there have been blatant lies, impositions and coercion. A man is made to subsidize his retirement by the use of his UIC benefits. He is also forced to subsidize his final retirement by using his Canada Pension Plan benefits. I might say that in addition to that, if a man finds employment with somebody else and makes a contribution to another employer, Devco in the end reduces his final retirement benefit. Despite the fact that some of these men paid both their own share and the employer's share of unemployment insurance, nevertheless Devco uses it to subsidize the retirement benefit.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) is here, and I would ask him to take a good look at the evidence placed before the committee. I appeal to him to see that the legislation passed in this House is fully supported by the House of Commons.

Mr. Lang: I read the court evidence, too.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): You should read section 18, which makes it mandatory for Devco to see that the pension scheme protects its employees and dependants. In other words, while the judge says there will be no benefit paid to widows or dependants, section 18(a)(i) of the act provides:

pension arrangements for the benefit of persons, and dependants of persons, employed by the Corporation—

Section 18(a)(ii) reads:

pension arrangements for the benefits of persons, and dependants of persons, formerly employed by the companies—

Today we have a situation where the judge comes down with a decision and says that no pensions will be paid. If the pensioner dies, the pension dies with him. Devco is getting ready for a big stunt; it is going to set up a pension scheme of $400 a year for a man who has worked 20 years. Then let us see what they intend to do for a dependant widow and other dependants of a miner. They may be protected for a five-year period, or if he lives over a year into his pension years they can look forward to a pension from the corporation for one year after the death of the husband.

I might also mention that I have documented evidence to the effect that in its own policy statements Devco has said that it will pay a widow for the month of the pensioner's death until the last day of the following month, but not thereafter. That is in contravention of section 18(a)(ii) of the act. I have another quotation here from Devco. It reads:

—make a single payment to her on the last day of the month in which the pensioner dies and again on the last day of the month following but not thereafter—

I submit that that is an absolute contradiction of section 18(a)(ii) of the act. Again I appeal to the members of this House and point out to them that the legislation passed by this highest court of the land is not being fulfilled. The judge said that none of these men would be recalled. That is not the fact. So far as the judge's finding is concerned, he expressed it in dollars and cents and not in accordance with right or wrong. He referred to the cost and also to the benefits to be paid. He referred to them as being substantial.

I ask anyone in this House if he would consider $75 a month after 50 years service substantial. Why did the judge refer to the dollar and cents aspect? We went into court on the recommendation of the committee, looking for a right and wrong finding. We did not ask for an opinion in respect of dollars and cents, but this is what we got. We want justice. We ask that there be a further examination of the legislation passed in this House, because if there is such an examination no one could come to any conclusion other than that these men are not protected under the civil service superannuation plan in the same way as members of Devco.

If there is any question about this, I can read a letter made available by the former minister who I am sorry to see has left the department because we were just about reaching a conclusion on this; I think he was sympathetically considering the matter and was reaching the understanding that he had for some years been listening to lies from Mr. Blackmore. I think he was prepared to do something about the matter, and this letter would indicate that the former minister of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion was prepared to do something. The new minister has also shown a sympathetic approach and has indicated to me he hopes something can be done to straighten things out.

Now where did the minister stand? I have a letter here addressed to Mr. D. V. McDuffe, assistant, Canadian legislative representative, United Transportation Union. It reads as follows:

Dear Mr. McDuffe:

Replying to your letter of February 1, 1971, I wish to advise that employees of the Devco Railway who were formerly in engine and train service of the Cumberland Railway Company Limited could be included in the public service superannuation plan but at the present time are not because the corporation has not applied to have employees in these categories (and in like categories) included in the plan.

This is the letter from the former minister of that department indicating that the employees of the Cape Breton Development Corporation can get the protection of the civil service superannuation plan if the Devco officials will look for it. They have not made any effort whatsoever to provide this protection for the men. But they have provided for themselves, and for four years they have been enjoying that protection.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): The legislation, and again I refer to section 28(e), is only a blanket coverage for those not covered in sections 18(a)(1) and 18(a)(2), and the same privileges are available, or should be available, and according to the minister's letter are available, should Devco officials such as Blackmore, who has finally been removed, make such an application on behalf of these employees. There has been no effort in this regard.

I could go on and on, Mr. Speaker. I could refer to the fact that the president of the Cape Breton Development Corporation has made the following statement:

Gentlemen, I recognize that the pre-retirement leave plan is wrong and I intend to do something about it.

That is from the responsible officer, the president of the Cape Breton Development Corporation. I will repeat it for the benefit of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) if he will just pay attention to me for a moment. Would the Minister of Finance please pay attention to this one statement by the present president of the Cape Breton Development Corporation? I quote:

Gentlemen, I recognize that the pre-retirement leave plan is wrong and I intend to do something about it.

Well, he did. A year ago last November he changed it around. It will be recalled that I said originally the Cape Breton Development Corporation leave moneys were not considered as earnings under the U.I.C. and that therefore they took 100 per cent of the men's U.I.C. benefits and subsidized their own retirement, in violation of section 48 of the Unemployment Insurance Act. So it has been changed around; Mr. Kent has changed it around. He said, "We are going to pay it all to you now and it is going to be considered as earnings."

I have had this out with the commissioner of U.I.C. and he said that it was part of the contract of service. He told me that they only get part of the U.I.C. benefits now, whereas they were getting it all when Devco was using it. Now they get only a portion. I ask you, why did they stop paying the men U.I.C. benefits? The answer I received was that they have a contract of service, and I suggested that they have a contract of service which is subject to recall. The commissioner agreed. He said they have to consider the merits. I am sure hon. members will agree that that is a strange thing. That contract of service has been in the retirement leave plan since its inception. It has been there ever since its inception, and I say they cannot now turn around and say it should be considered as earnings, because they took 100 per cent of the men's insurance benefits and used them.

I could go further and quote from page 29 of the sixth report of the justice and legal affairs committee in which a responsible officer of Devco admitted to the use of coercion. It is right there in the committee report. When questioned by a member of the committee, he responded by admitting they had used coercion. Is this the type of justice the government had in mind when they set up the Cape Breton Development Corporation Act?

I have said before—and I invite members to check this in Hansard by referring to the report of April 15, 1969; anybody is free to mark down the date and check it—that the plan was not legally set up. The House leader at that time reported that the government had approved the plan. At that time I brought to the attention of the Chair that I had been in contact with Treasury Board; on April 15, 1969, Treasury Board had not only not approved it, and on April 15 they had not even heard of it.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Yes; and this House was told that it had been approved. And Blackmore went about the country in Cape Breton and told the people that the government had approved this. He forced the plan down their throats. The effect was to put men on the street at the age of 60; in fact, it put men on the street before the age of 60, against their will.

Then on April 16, 1969, the minister then responsible for the department, in answer to a question by the leader of the New Democratic Party, reported to this House that Treasury Board would probably give approval the following day. So that would take it to at least April 17. They imposed; they used coercion; they lied. Yes, they lied. I think the government would be well advised to call Mr. Blackmore back from western Canada before he ruins the coal industry there. That is all he did in Cape Breton. He closed mines despite the fact that evidence was given before the committee that no mine would be closed until alternative work was provided outside the coal industry, a requirement in the preamble to the legislation. They put the men on the street but they failed to provide alternative employment. In fact, a report came to the House that on February 5, 1970, there were 1,200 miners working in the new mine at Lingan. For the benefit of hon. members I will tell them what was going on in that new mine on February 5. A construction crew was just removing sod. However, on that date they were on strike and there was not a wheel turning at the new mine at Lingan. So there were not 1,200 men working.

If further proof is required that Mr. Blackmore was doing a snow job at the expense of members of this House, documents are available to me. In addition, I have the evidence from the public accounts committee which will further support my statement. Then there is the evidence which was placed before the committee on regional economic expansion. This would further substantiate the fact that all Mr. Blackmore did was to impose his will upon the people of the area and lie to his minister. If he had not lied to his minister, the miners in the Cape Breton area would not be faced with the situation they face today. They would not be receiving one-cent cheques—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. It being 9.30 o'clock p.m., it is my duty in accordance with section 4 of Standing Order 41, to interrupt these proceedings and forthwith put the question to the House.

• (2130)

The question is on the amendment. Is the House ready for the question? Those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Those opposed to the amendment will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Stanfield) which was negatived on the following division.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

At 10.02 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, January 12, 1973

The House met at 11 a.m.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A), 1972-73

PROPRIETY OF INCLUSION OF ITEM L30a IN REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I sent to Your Honour today notice of my intention to raise what I consider to be an extremely important matter, a question not only of a grievance as a right of privilege but also involving the inherent jurisdiction of the House.

On Monday, January 8, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) introduced Supplementary Estimates(A) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1973. These estimates included an item of $454 million for the Department of Manpower and Immigration, headed vote L30a. This amount represented two special Governor General's warrants of $234 million and $220 million respectively which have been issued for the purpose of attempting to appropriate money during the period between the end of the last parliament and the calling of this parliament. The President of the Treasury Board subsequently moved that the supplementary estimates be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

At that time, Mr. Speaker, I raised a question about the legality of this particular appropriation, although I admit I was not as specific then as I can be now because I had not seen the supplementary estimates and so was not able to pursue the subject any further.

Mr. Speaker, on the order paper for today there appears in the name of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) a bill entitled "An Act to Amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 (No. 1)", accompanied by a recommendation which gives an indication of what will be contained in the legislation. That recommendation provides, inter alia,:

that the amount authorized under Manpower and Immigration Vote L30a of Supplementary Estimates (A) 1972-73—

That is the one I referred to, Mr. Speaker, —shall be deemed an advance under that section and not an appropriation described in paragraph 133(b) of that act.

In addition, the recommendation goes on to suggest that the measure will call for the removal of the $800 million ceiling in advances under section 137. It would therefore appear, Mr. Speaker, that I was correct in the suspicion I formed at that time and which prompted me to file the verbal caveat.

The recommendation is an indication of what will be in the legislation. I am not going to bother to read section 137 of the Unemployment Insurance Act which provides a statutory limitation of $800 million on moneys which may be lent by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) pursuant to a certain procedure for the purpose of implementing the provisions of the act.

It would now appear from this legislative proposal standing in the name of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration that the legislative ceiling has been exceeded. It appears almost certain—that is the best way I can put it until there has been a chance for examination—that this was done by means of a Governor General's warrant and not by legislation. What is now being proposed is an attempt apparently to legalize by legislation what was illegal and improper. I suggest, therefore, that there was no right on the part of the government to have so appropriated moneys, that this could only have been done by an amendment to the act.

When one reads the statute it appears to be possible that the appropriation and the Governor General's warrant might—and I use the word "might" advisedly—have been made under section 133. But it could never be made legally under section 137. That is where the grave issue lies. This is not simply a technical issue, Mr. Speaker. The money has been spent, the money is gone, but that is not the point. The question is this: if the money was appropriated or purported to be appropriated and spent under section 133 of the Unemployment Insurance Act it is an outright grant and the burden falls upon the taxpayers of Canada. If, on the other hand, it is a loan made under section 137, the burden is assumed by the contributors, the employers and employees and will be reflected by an increase in their contributions. That is the very important issue of substance.

I recognize that I cannot make a legal argument and ask Your Honour to make a finding on it. This may have to be a judicial finding or it may be a finding the House may have to make later if the motion I intend to move is accepted.

I suggest, however, that under those conditions it was highly improper for this item in the supplementary estimates to be sent to the committee. The proper procedure was for the government to have admitted its fault, to have admitted its irregularity, to have admitted its misappropriation, and have come here with a full statement and proceeded to secure or at least ask the House for legislation. If the legislation were passed and the illegality cured, then and then only should this item be sent to the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee to be considered.

The chairman of the standing committee admitted yesterday—he let it slip out—that there is a firm date, February 8, when the minister intends to bring the budget down. It is essential that this matter be settled. If it is an outright grant, it must be taken into consideration in the casting of the national accounts. There is an obvious difference between a grant and loan. That is the situation. I was not able to attend the committee proceedings this morning but I understand the issue was raised.

In these circumstances I wish to move a motion. I will read it so that Your Honour may determine whether I am entitled to put it. I would move:

That this House do recall from the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates the item in the Supplementary Estimate (A) for the fiscal year ending March 31st, 1973 listed under Manpower and Immigration as vote L30a in the sum of $454,000,000 and that the Auditor General be directed to examine the accounts of the unemployment insurance fund for 1972-73 and in particular Governor General's Warrants purporting to appropriate the said sum of $454,000,000 and to report his findings to the Standing Committee of Miscellaneous Estimates, and said committee to report back to this House on this matter no later than March 20th, 1973.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peace River has raised a very interesting point. He kindly gave me notice but his notice did not refer to a question of privilege. I have some doubts whether the matter should have been raised at this stage in view of the precedents on privilege, since the hon. member himself, either in his notice or in his presentation to the House, failed to refer to privilege.

He suggests that there is some impropriety or illegality in the procedure being proposed by the government. That may be so, but I do not think it is the responsibility of the Chair to rule on such questions. I respectfully suggest to the hon. member, and I am quite sure he will agree with me, that the motion which he proposes is a substantive motion. It is clearly that, and I fail to see how a substantive motion can be raised by the hon. member at this stage. There are provisions in the Standing Orders for motions of substance to be moved in certain circumstances by following certain procedures with notice. I suggest to the hon. member that perhaps he might look into this matter further and find some other way of having the matter debated in the House.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, in view of the very serious nature of the matter raised by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and in view of the validity of his observations, I wonder whether the House would be prone to give its consent to having that particular item in the supplementary estimates recalled from the committee and reconsidered by the government. If the hon. member for Peace River is found to be right in the eyes of the government, then it can be dealt with properly; if not, it can be returned to the committee.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as to the point of order that has been raised by the hon. member, there is no foundation whatever to the allegation of any impropriety or illegality in the—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the President of the Privy Council that if he wanted to discuss the matter raised by the hon. member for Peace River he should have presented earlier the arguments he is attempting to make now. According to my understanding, what we have before us now is, essentially, a motion under Standing Order 43 by the hon. member for Yukon suggesting that if there is unanimous consent the item could be recalled from the miscellaneous estimates committee. That is the only basis on which there can be discussion now. If the minister would direct his remarks to that point, it might be helpful.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, of course, I accept your ruling. I was not certain when the hon. member was making his submission whether it was on the basis of privilege. If we are to consider the hon. member's suggestion as a request for unanimous consent to withdraw the estimates—

Mr. Nielsen: Just one item.

Mr. MacEachen: —or any item from the committee, we cannot accept that because we have proceeded properly under the rules of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This again is debate. The hon. member is asking that under the terms of Standing Order 43 the motion be put to the House. I have to inquire whether there is unanimous consent. The minister has indicated there is not unanimous consent. Presenting reports—

Mr. Rowland: On motions, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before we get to that item I will call presentation of reports. Motions.

INCREASES IN COST OF LIVING AND UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I seek leave to move a motion in view of the urgent need for legislation to respond to the increases in the cost of living and in the high levels of unemployment. I propose to move with the unanimous consent of the House, seconded by the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies):

That this House call on the government to present to the House as its first and immediate priority its legislative and regulatory program on the current economic, inflationary and unemployment crisis of the country, instead of those items now appearing on the order paper, in response to the increased costs in the food, clothing, housing and transport sectors of our economy and the record-breaking level of unemployment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Northumberland-Durham proposes this motion under the terms of Standing Order 43 which requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

FISHERIES

OPERATIONS OF FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING CORPORATION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I wish to ask leave of the House to introduce a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. Yesterday the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation announced large layoffs of personnel in their Winnipeg and Selkirk plants. This action follows radical alterations to the marketing procedures pursued by the corporation, the dismissal or resignation of significant numbers of the corporation's most senior staff, allegations that the corporation is running a huge deficit and allegations that a part of the inventory of fish of the corporation cannot be accounted for. In light of the fact that the corporation is a public operation—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that under the perhaps unfortunate practice we have established in the House under Standing Order 43 the hon. member is limited, after a very brief indication of what the urgency is, to placing his proposed motion before the House. Under the terms of Standing Order 43 he cannot make a speech.

Mr. Rowland: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to indicate the importance of the motion by saying that the corporation is the key to the well-being of the fishermen of the western provinces and the Northwest Territories. I therefore move:

That the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry be immediately established and that the entire matter of the administration and operations of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation be referred to it for investigation and report.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

INCREASES IN AUTHORIZED SHARE CAPITAL AND IN CEILING ON LOANS AND GUARANTEES BY CORPORATION

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-3, to amend the Export Development Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

FISHERIES DEVELOPMENT ACT

AUTHORIZATION OF PAYMENTS FOR CONSTRUCTION AND EQUIPMENT OF CERTAIN FACILITIES

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-4, to amend the Fisheries Development Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

COST OF LIVING INCREASE—REQUEST FOR EMERGENCY MEASURES TO DEAL WITH PROBLEM

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have a question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, arising from the indication in the consumer price index today that Canada's cost of living continues to rise at a rate of more than 5 per cent a year. Has the Prime Minister instructed his ministers to prepare a series of interim emergency measures to halt or at least to reduce this erosion of Canada's purchasing power, particularly in light of the success of our neighbouring country below the border?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): If the Leader of the Opposition is thinking about price and wage controls, the government has already stated its position on that question, that we have contingency plans which we will bring into action if necessary but that we would give no advance notice if we were going to do so.

Mr. Stanfield: Is the government considering any emergency action with regard to the price of certain foods, coupled, perhaps, with a support program, in order to ensure that the drastic increase in food prices taking place now and which has been taking place for a number of months does not provoke a general inflationary psychology in the country? Does the government intend to take any interim emergency action to prevent such a situation from developing?

Mr. Trudeau: The Speech from the Throne and, indeed, the order paper, indicate that the government wants this question of the increase in food prices brought before parliament. A motion is on the order paper to enable this to be done.

Mr. Hees: That will take months and months.

Mr. Trudeau: No, it will not take months if the opposition has a clear position on it, which is doubtful.

Mr. Hees: We know the way you deal with all reports.

Mr. Stanfield: It is very clear the government is not prepared to face up to its responsibility. I again ask the Prime Minister whether in view of the serious increases in the prices of meat, fish and poultry, more than 14 per cent in the course of a year, and taking into account the figures published today showing the current tendency, the government is now prepared to act on an immediate supplementary cost of living payment to old age pensioners, the blind and others receiving such allowances?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I take it, Mr. Speaker, that a measure of that applause is directed to the position of the government as it was stated yesterday by the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INCREASE IN FOOD PRICES—DEPARTMENTAL INVESTIGATION OF REASONS—PLANS TO DEAL WITH PROBLEM

Mr. David Lewis (York South): May I follow up this subject, Mr. Speaker, and direct my questions to begin with, at least, to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Has his department been watching these increases in food prices, has it made any investigation or inquiry into the reasons for these increases and whether they are justified or whether the supermarkets and others are merely getting what the traffic will bear? I would also ask the hon. gentleman whether his department is engaged in making any plans to deal with this very serious food price situation?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the department has been watching developments with respect to prices. The basic jurisdiction of the department is under the Combines Investigation Act and, as I have pointed out to the House, the practice under succeeding governments has been not to indicate the existence of any inquiry under it unless such an inquiry is terminated, unless the matter is referred to the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission or unless some court proceedings are undertaken. So far as plans are concerned, I would refer the hon. member to the answer given by the Prime Minister a few moments ago.

INCREASE IN FOOD PRICES—SUGGESTED FREEZE PENDING REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could direct my next question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that any parliamentary committee or any other body investigating this matter is faced with a time period before any report is produced, let alone any action is taken, and in view of the very serious situation created by the increase in the price of foods, particularly for low income families, would the Prime Minister not seriously consider placing a freeze on the price of food and at the same time providing some support to the farmers who might be hurt by a freeze on the price of food—

[Mr. Hees.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will recognize that this is a rather long question. Questions should be stated as briefly as possible. Perhaps the minister or the Prime Minister might reply.

Mr. Lewis: I do not know whether the Prime Minister heard my last words—a freeze on the price of food pending the committee's deliberations and report.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the suggestion by the Leader of the New Democratic Party is not a very simple one. He wants to freeze prices on the one hand and subsidize farmers on the other. I would suggest that if his suggestion has merit it should be brought before the committee which has been instructed to recommend action and which can recommend action on an interim basis. It does not have to wait for a final report. If the suggestion has, indeed, any merit at all, I am sure this will be recognized immediately by all the hon. member's colleagues on the committee and the government would then be prepared to consider immediate action.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for York South for a supplementary followed by a further supplementary question from the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi.

INCREASE IN FOOD PRICES—SUGGESTED INCLUSION OF ACTION TO CONTROL ON AGENDA OF FINANCE MINISTERS' MEETING

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance a question in the same area based on my understanding that the Minister of Finance is meeting the provincial Ministers of Finance on the 18th of this month, I believe. Would the minister consider placing on the agenda of that meeting an item specifying the necessity of taking some action with regard to the control of food prices in this country, since it has been forecast that they will continue to go up, in order that the federal and provincial governments may collaborate in imposing necessary selective controls on food prices?

Hon. John. N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there is an item on the agenda relating to the general economic situation which is wide enough for that subject to be discussed. I rather doubt that a concensus could be obtained from the provinces on that subject since most of the provincial governments have pronounced themselves against that particular proposition.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND INFLATION—SUGGESTED EARLY INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO DEAL WITH PROBLEMS

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, because of the urgency accorded economic matters in the throne speech and because of the two announcements on inflation and unemployment this week, can the Prime Minister tell the House whether the government has drafted legislative measures to deal with unemployment and inflation so that the House can deal with these matters first thing next week—in fact, now?

Mr. Nowlan: Why wait for spring?

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister? Has at least one measure been decided upon and prepared for legislative action? If so, will it be introduced first thing next week according to the government's priorities? Will the Prime Minister, because of the urgency accorded economic measures in the throne speech, instruct his ministers to present this legislation to the House first thing next week so that we can get on with the job?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1130)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The answer is yes, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member will see some measures on the order paper, and he will see the order of priority in which the government calls them. It would be interesting to have the Conservative party decide on its own priorities. It is difficult to know—

An hon. Member: We have ours now.

Mr. Trudeau: —from this morning's questions—

Mr. Nowlan: The first priority is to get rid of you.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would hope we would not get into a debate.

INCREASE IN FOOD PRICES—REQUEST FOR ISSUING OF INFORMATION INDICATING PRICES RECEIVED BY FARMERS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Has the government given consideration to putting out a release, perhaps monthly, to indicate the increase in the cost of food as related to the price the producer receives in order to show that the producer is not at fault?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the bureau of statistics does put out a release on this subject. I do not know if there is any particular detail—

An hon. Member: We don't know about it.

Mr. Trudeau: On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, these releases are public. There was one made this morning and I am sure it is the basis of the questions of some of the hon. member's colleagues.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, does the Prime Minister feel that the information being issued to the public is adequate and put out in such a way that it tells the true story rather than putting the blame on the producer?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking for an expression of opinion. The Chair will now recognize the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings on a supplementary question.

INFLATION AND UNEMPLOYMENT—EFFECTIVENESS OF MEASURES IN FORTHCOMING BUDGET TO DEAL WITH PROBLEMS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. Does the minister have reason to believe that the measures to be introduced in the budget he has now prepared for presentation to the House in the very near future will be more effective in dealing with inflation and unemployment caused by inflation than the budget he presented on May 8 last and, if so, would he take the first opportunity on motions to explain what the reason is? Come on!

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member but the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, the minister owes an answer to the House so the people of the country can be prepared for more increases in inflation and unemployment similar to those that resulted from the last budget if the new budget is not going to do a better job.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INQUIRY INTO FOOD PRICES BY SPECIAL COMMITTEE—PLANS TO PROTECT LIVING STANDARD OF PERSONS ON LOW INCOMES IN THE INTERIM

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that if the committee inquiry into prices is to do anything worth while it will take some time, has the government any plans in the meantime to protect the living standard of low-income individuals and families from further erosion by higher prices?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, some measures were announced by the government in the last budget, notably the increase in pensions by escalation. Further measures were announced yesterday by the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We will return to these supplementary questions in a moment.

Mr. Hees: The Prime Minister is supposed to speak to the Speaker, not to the Hansard reporter.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. For the moment I will recognize the hon. member for Champlain.

SHIPPING

COASTING TRADE—PRESENTATION OF BILL BASED ON DARLING REPORT

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Does he intend to introduce a piece of legislation in order to implement the recommendations made in the Darling report of 1970 concerning the coasting trade in Canada which was to be reserved to ships flying the Canadian flag?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I hope the cabinet will shortly spell out the Canadian government policy on this matter.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO DEFICIT WHEN GOVERNOR GENERAL'S WARRANTS USED

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In light of the fact the Unemployment Insurance Act has a statutory limit of $800 million, can the minister advise the House whether or not he was running at a deficit in the months of September and October when he applied for the first Governor General's warrant?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would want legal advice as to what the definition of deficit is with regard to that question before I could answer.

An hon. Member: You sure need it.

Mr. Andras: I am not trying to evade answering, I am simply trying to understand exactly the terminology the hon. member is using so I can respond.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can help the minister. All I am trying to find out is whether in fact the government had spent the $800 million set out in the statute at the time the minister's department applied for a Governor General's warrant? That is a simple question.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, the $800 million ceiling was to apply to advances to the Unemployment Insurance Commission in order to fund it pending receipt of employer and employee contributions and pending the determination of the government's cost of unemployment insurance benefits in excess of 4 per cent. Those figures are not determinable in total until about April of the next year. The advances did in the end exceed the $800 million statutory ceiling and we sought Governor General's warrants for that purpose.

Mr. Baldwin: Illegally.

Mr. Alexander: I am glad the minister is now letting the secrets out of the bag. Will the minister advise now whether in fact the premiums set for employers and employees were sufficient to take up the cost of the program as of December 31?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that employee-employer premiums for last year were in fact insufficient to fund the employee-employer charges to that portion of the fund, and I announced that information in December.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Alexander: I have one last supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has asked three supplementary questions on the same subject. I will recognize him for a last supplementary and then recognize the hon. member for Yukon, but we will have to try to make some headway.

Mr. Alexander: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Because of the importance of the matter I know the House would want me to elicit all the information possible.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: Will the minister answer this question: Does the amount that he has requested by way of Governor General's warrants cover all costs up to December 31 or is he now preparing further estimates in respect of further costs?

Mr. Stanfield: He needs legal advice before he answers that.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I think I would like to examine that question—

Mr. Hees: I think you had better examine your whole department.

Mr. Andras: —extremely carefully and get expert advice and not attempt to offer information which may not be complete.

Mr. Alexander: Just let the record show that the fund is in terrible shape.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF GOVERNOR GENERAL'S WARRANTS PROVIDING ADDITIONAL FUNDS

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the President of the Treasury Board. Since the matter will perhaps be referred to the committee and since the warrants of which we have been speaking have not been tabled in the House—I realize the government has 15 days from the commencement of the session within which to do this—will the minister see to it that the warrants are tabled on Monday so members can have full information?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

LEGALITY OF GOVERNOR GENERAL'S WARRANTS USED TO PROVIDE FUNDS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice whether he was requested to give and did he give a legal opinion as to the legality of these Governor General's warrants? If so, would he table that legal opinion?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, we were certainly involved in the analysis of that action, and I can assure the hon. member that the action was legal and proper.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: It is not the practice, of course, to table legal opinions in the House.

COMMUNICATIONS

BELL CANADA RATE INCREASE APPLICATION—INQUIRY AS TO OPPOSITION BY GOVERNMENT—REQUEST FOR HEARINGS IN OTHER CENTRES THAN OTTAWA

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Communications. In view of the fact the governments of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec are appearing before the Canadian Transport Commission to state their opposition to Bell Canada's application for rate increases, will the minister indicate whether the government of Canada is now prepared to do the same?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, this matter was not looked into but I am prepared to consider it in the light of the question of the hon. member.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps we might allow the hon. member to ask a supplementary question and then I will recognize the hon. member for Don Valley.

Mr. Grier: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that at least at the present time the government does not intend to make such a statement, and because many individuals and groups, including municipalities, have indicated they would like to appear before the commission to state their opposition to this application but are unable to attend Ottawa hearings because of problems of cost and time, will the minister request the commission to hold hearings in centres other than the city of Ottawa?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, it is a matter we can look into, but I forgot to specify earlier that many representations are received by the department which not only passes them on to the commission but also insists that they be given careful attention.

BANK OF CANADA

INQUIRY AS TO RECOMMENDATION BY BOARD OF DIRECTORS CONCERNING NEXT GOVERNOR—REQUEST FOR PUBLISHING OF MINUTES

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Will the minister tell us whether or not the board of directors of the Bank of Canada has made a recommendation to the government as to whom the next governor should be and whether the government has accepted that recommendation?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gillies: When that decision is made, would the minister recommend to the governor that the minutes of the Bank of Canada be published on a delayed basis so we could have more information on how monetary policy is being made in this country?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is a useful recommendation. I do not know whether the hon. member is preaching for a call or not.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR REDUCTION OF SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS TO ABATE INFLATION

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In light of the increase in shelter costs of 1.2 points this month which, coupled with the past 12 months, means there has been about a 10 point increase, is the government considering reducing the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials to abate inflation in the housing sector?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for York Simcoe has a supplementary.

REQUEST THAT TERMS OF REFERENCE OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON FOOD PRICES BE ENLARGED TO INCLUDE HOUSING

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Secretary of State for Urban Affairs. In view of the continuing rise in the costs of housing and shelter generally in Canada, would the minister now agree to amend the motion before the House to appoint a committee to inquire into the trend in food prices so the committee may also inquire into the trend in shelter and housing costs as well?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this motion is in the name of my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who would be responsible for any amendment thereto. I am sure the committee will have sufficient work in front of it in dealing with the question contained in the reference, but that certainly would be a matter for debate when the motion is considered by the House.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, could I also have the same answer, if it is the same answer, from the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's suggestion is one that can be considered in the course of the debate on the motion once it is called.

INCLUSION OF REMOVAL OF SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS ON AGENDA OF CONFERENCE WITH PROVINCES

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Will the removal of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials be a subject on the agenda of the conference the minister has been telling us about which is to be held in order to consult with the provinces?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): The agenda is certainly wide enough to include any such representation that any provincial delegate may wish to make. However, I would caution such delegate that the decision would be made by the Minister of Finance who has the responsibility for tax measures.

Mr. Nesbitt: Who is responsible for making up the agenda for this consultation?

Mr. Basford: I have proposed an agenda to the provincial ministers. Most have indicated that the agenda suggested by me is totally satisfactory and provides a foundation for a complete discussion of housing policy. A few ministers have made a few suggestions which I am happy to accept as to agenda items. When we agree on a final agenda it will be published.

POST OFFICE

INQUIRY AS TO ACCEPTANCE BY GOVERNMENT OF CONCILIATION BOARD REPORT ON DISPUTE WITH POSTAL WORKERS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Now that the postal unions have voted to accept the recommendations of the conciliation board report and have in fact gone back to the negotiating table, is the minister prepared to indicate whether or not the federal government is prepared to accept the conciliation board report?

[Mr. Stevens.]

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with longstanding practice I do not think the hon. member would wish the government, for its side, to disclose what the course of negotiations is or the position being taken. I can say, however, that the negotiations were resumed on Thursday in a constructive and helpful way and are progressing satisfactorily.

Mr. McGrath: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister aware of the considerable discontent that has been generated within the postal unions by the failure of the government to respond to the recommendations of the conciliation board report?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps the responsibility for communicating the general situation to the members of the postal union lies with the negotiating committee. The negotiating committee is, I think, fully aware of the government's position.

TRADE

STEPS TO FIND ALTERNATIVE MARKETS FOR DAIRY PRODUCTS FOLLOWING BRITISH ENTRY INTO EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce or the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the statement by the chairman of the Milk Marketing Board of England and Wales that enlargement of the EEC will virtually eliminate the necessity for dairy imports, could the minister announce to the House at any early date what measures he proposes to take to find alternative markets for dairy products such as cheese, of which 85 per cent of our exports have gone to the United Kingdom?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, my officials have already been in contact with officials of the EEC. We have made representations to them with a view to reaching a satisfactory arrangement.

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East has a supplementary to a previous question.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO INTENTION OF GOVERNMENT CONCERNING BRYDEN REPORT—REQUEST FOR RELEASE

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, could I ask the appropriate minister to give us some indication concerning the government's intention in respect of the Bryden commission report. Can it be released and, if not, why?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if I may answer that question, a similar question was put during the last parliament. The answer I gave at that time was that the Bryden committee report had been submitted to the government for its advice. It was not intended upon the setting of the committee that the report would be made a public document. It was to be treated as advice as if it had been advice from servants of the government. I have noted the hon. member's representations today and earlier and I will be quite happy, when we come to the point where amendments are being proposed to the law, to consider whether it might be possible to make the Bryden report available. I am not in a position to make a commitment to my hon. friend that it will be made public, but I asssure him that the position will be considered.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, as the reply the other day was somewhat vague, can the minister give us some indication when we may expect these very necessary amendments to the act?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, my view at the moment is that we cannot expect these amendments in the early part of this session.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NORAD AGREEMENT—POSITION OF NEGOTIATIONS—OPPORTUNITY FOR DEBATE BEFORE DECISION MADE

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In light of the fact that the NORAD agreement is due to expire shortly, can the minister indicate to the House where negotiations stand now, if they are under way, at what level they are being conducted and at what point he expects to become directly involved himself?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there are no active negotiations going on at the present time so I am unable to state at what time I might be actively involved myself.

• (1150)

Mr. Rowland: Would the minister give his assurance that the House will have an opportunity to debate the question prior to any final agreement being reached between Canada and the United States?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am sure there will be plenty of opportunities when the standing committee is struck to discuss this and other issues. Of course the government itself will take responsibility for agreements of this kind.

MANPOWER

ALLEGED DOWNGRADING OF STUDENT MANPOWER OFFICES ON CAMPUSES

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the tragic level of unemployment across Canada and the particular difficulty students have in obtaining employment, will the minister reverse the decision of his department, to take effect on February 1, which downgrades and effectively emasculates student manpower offices on hundreds of campuses across this country?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of such downgrading. I shall look into it. The hon. member must have some evidence of it, but I do not have that evidence. I will look into it and report to him directly.

Mr. Nowlan: I thank the minister for his reply, Mr. Speaker. After he finds out what is going to take place with regard to these student manpower offices, will he make a statement on motions because this applies to campuses all across the country, and I know there are many students on these "campi" who are concerned?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, off the cuff it is my impression that we are in fact stepping up this service to the various students on all the different "campi", but I will make sure of this and get the information to the hon. members in one form or another.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO EXPANDED CREDIT PROGRAMS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the serious financial problems faced by young people trying to enter and remain in farming, can the minister say whether Canadian farmers are likely to see any expanded agricultural credit programs over the next few weeks?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Possibly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Murta: The minister says "possibly". I would like the minister to inform the House what form these agricultural programs will take and when we can expect them to be introduced, so that members of the House and also the Canadian people can have a look at them?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I have met with all my provincial counterparts and many farm organizations in Canada since accepting this portfolio, asking them for their input. As soon as I have all their submissions I will let the House know.

POSSIBLE REINTRODUCTION OF INCOME STABILIZATION PLAN

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question I would like to ask the minister whether, when he indicated on his recent trip to western Canada that the grain receipts income plan would be implemented, he had the concurrence of the Minister of Justice who speaks for the Wheat Board?

Mr. Murta: Income stabilization plan.

Mr. Korchinski: Yes. Did the minister get the concurrence of the Minister of Justice before making the statement that the stabilization plan, otherwise known as the grain receipts income plan, would be reintroduced?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wishes to listen to the tape recording of what I said he will find that I was slightly misquoted.

Mr. Korchinski: Then may I ask the Minister of Justice who reports for the Canadian Wheat Board whether, in view of the fact that he now has a crutch in the form of the NDP, which party was one of the stumbling blocks to that plan, he intends to reintroduce it even though there was no mention of it in the Speech from the Throne?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure how helpful that crutch will be at any given point in time. At present we are examining further suggestions from farm organizations in connection with stabilization. There is certainly a general reaction from farmers that they desire a stabilization program. It would be our intention to introduce one after these discussions are completed.

POSSIBILITY OF FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO SASKATCHEWAN LAND BANK PROGRAM

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is a follow-up to the question asked by the hon. member for Lisgar and I direct it to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the need for assistance faced by young people who start farming, and in view of the representations made to the minister by the government of Saskatchewan for financial assistance for its land bank program, can he say if any financial assistance for this program will be forthcoming?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): All I can say is that negotiations are still continuing with the province of Saskatchewan, with my provincial counterpart. I can say that we will make no different deal, no different agreement, no different arrangement with Saskatchewan than we have with any other province.

AIR TRANSPORT

NORTHERN CANADA—INQUIRY AS TO PROGRAM FOR INSTALLATION OF IMPROVED NAVIGATIONAL AIDS

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the increased frequency of lost aircraft in Canada's northern region and the growing amount of air traffic in that area, is his department actively considering a stepped-up program with respect to the installation of improved air navigational aids for traffic in that region?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, after talking with the hon. member previously I communicated with officials of the department, and I hope he and I will be able to discuss the matter further.

[Mr. Korchinski.]

Mr. Mazankowski: As a result of his discussions with his officials, Mr. Speaker, can the minister advise whether it is the intention of the department to establish specific air corridors into the northern region, hopefully with the installation of v.o.r. and distance measuring equipment along those routes?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, as soon as I have had further discussions on this I will communicate with the hon. member.

POLICY RESPECTING INSTALLATION OF CRASH POSITION INDICATORS IN AIRCRAFT

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. Would he indicate to the House the proposed policy of his department with regard to the installation of crash position indicators in Canadian aircraft?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take notice of this question.

Mr. Ellis: Would the minister indicate whether his department is prepared to develop a Canadian standard for crash position indicators?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I will answer this question as soon as I have discussed the matter with the departmental officials. It is a technical matter and I really do not know the answer.

SAFETY OF PLANE MOVEMENTS AT CALGARY AIRPORT—REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF CONSENT TO STOCKYARD CONSTRUCTION NEARBY

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have sent notice of a question along the same lines regarding air safety. I want to ask the Minister of Transport a very serious question in connection with the safety of commercial airline planes landing and taking off at the Calgary International Airport. Before there is a serious commercial aircraft accident caused by large flights of birds attracted by a project known as a stockyard or agrimart, the construction of which was consented to by his department prior to his being appointed minister, would the minister review this situation?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think it is a very serious question. I communicated with departmental officials after the hon. member sent me notice of his question. I am told by the technical people in my department that this has been under study but they do not see any danger because they are going to take certain precautions in order that aircraft will not suffer from the presence of this stockyard.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister if he had a chance to review the evidence presented to an admistrative board at the municipal level, where experts other than those in the Department of Transport stated quite emphatically that there was a serious chance that this stockyard might be the cause of an accident, and may I point out that recently we have had the evidence of a serious crash near Miami airport allegedly caused by birds?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, this is something I brought to the attention of the department. All new evidence will have to be considered. In the meantime, those responsible for the construction of the stockyard will have to put up a bond of $50,000 in order to give us a guarantee that they will take steps to see that birds attracted to it will not cause any danger for aircraft.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

INQUIRY AS TO REINTRODUCTION OF YOUNG OFFENDERS BILL

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Is it the intention of the Solicitor General to reintroduce the young offenders bill this session and, if so, will there be substantial changes in the philosophy and procedures it envisaged?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, as a result of the committee hearings in the last parliament my department is examining the young offenders bill in consultation with the Attorneys General of the different provinces. Once this consultation is completed we will announce our intention. Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I may answer a question that was put to me yesterday, since I am already on my feet.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I will recognize the minister at the end of the question period for that purpose.

Mr. Gilbert: In view of the fact that representatives of social agencies and government officials indicated at the committee hearings in the last session that there was an urgent need for diagnostic and related services for the treatment of young offenders, has the Solicitor General taken any steps to consult with provincial officials to try to remedy this situation?

• (1200)

Mr. Allmand: It is on that very point that we are progressing to discussions with the provinces, Mr. Speaker. These services are under the jurisdiction of the provinces and we want to do what we can with them to improve the situation.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

EFFECTS OF INCARCERATION ON PRISONERS OF WAR—POSSIBLE IMPLEMENTATION OF COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I draw to his attention the report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs of last June in which recommendations were made with regard to studies on the effects of incarceration on European theatre prisoners of war and also the question of the relaxation of some requirements of the War Veterans Allowance Act with regard to prisoners of war in the European theatre. Could the minister tell the House what has been done in this connection?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in reply may I say this question is now under study by my department.

PUBLIC SERVICE

WITHDRAWAL OF FORCED EARLY RETIREMENT REGULATION

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Has the government withdrawn the regulation which allowed deputy department heads to retire public servants prior to the normal retirement age of 65?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would have to take that question as notice and respond to the hon. member in due course.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order based on the fact that the President of the Treasury Board publicly stated that this regulation had been withdrawn. I should like to ask the President of the Treasury Board if that is not so and, if it is, why does the Minister of Justice not know about it?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it is correct that the regulation has been withdrawn, but I do not think that was the nature of the question directed to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to stand here and have the President of the Treasury Board imply that the question I asked him was not the same question I asked the Minister of Justice. It is the same question. Supplementary to that first question, is there authority which would allow for the forced early retirement of employees under federal jurisdiction? Is there such a provision still contained in any regulation or any legislation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure whether that is a point of order. The hon. member may be asking a supplementary—

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I indicated that it was a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. My impression was that the hon. member was asking a supplementary point of order. In any event, we might allow the minister to reply to the hon. member's supplementary question.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, there are provisions under which public servants can be retired prior to the customary retirement age of 65.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): A further supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have reached the end of the question period, but I shall allow the hon. member to ask a further supplementary and then allow the Solicitor General to reply to a question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate.

POSITION OF GOVERNMENT ON FEDERAL COURT DECISION THAT FORCED RETIREMENT TANTAMOUNT TO DISMISSAL

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I have a further supplementary, Mr. Speaker, this time to the Minister of Justice. If there are such regulations left, why is it that the federal government did not appeal the decision of the Federal Court of Canada that the cabinet of Canada was acting beyond its jurisdiction and its statement that retirement before the normal age of 65 was tantamount to dismissal without cause? Why is it that the federal government, and now the President of the Treasury Board, tries to push down my throat and the throats of the people of this House—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. Solicitor General.

AIRPORTS

SPECIAL SECURITY FORCE—PHASING OUT OF COMMISSIONAIRES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate and the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings asked certain questions about the new security forces at airports. The first training course for the new recruits in this force will commence in Regina on February 12, 1973 and will be completed on April 16, 1973. The people in that course will assume their duties immediately. New courses will be started after that and we hope to recruit 311 special constables in the year 1973-74 and 159 the following year. There are 180 commissionaires presently involved in work of this kind and they will be phased out over a three-year period. Some will be given other jobs in the service, some positions will be taken by attrition and others will be given a chance to apply for the job of special constable in the new force if they meet the standards.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister has given us all kinds of assurance that they will be enabled to move into the special security forces. Can he give us the assurance that none of these people, all of whom are veterans and many of them disabled veterans who are unable to get other employment, will not lose their jobs as a result of this move?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, it is my impression that none of them will be forced to lose their jobs. They will either retire in the usual course of events or be given other jobs or an opportunity to apply for the special force if they meet the standards.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day. The hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Bell: Oh, well, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair was trying to be helpful. The hon. member might be allowed to ask his question quickly provided he can get a quick answer.

INCOME TAX

ALLEGED PRINTING ERRORS ON FORMS—DISTRIBUTION OF FORMS TO TAXPAYERS

Mr. Tom Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, this matter is of interest to everybody and is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Have a very large number of income tax return forms been withdrawn because of printing errors and can the minister assure the House that the returns for individual taxpayers will go out on time?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is no and the answer to the second question is yes.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed, from Thursday, January 11, consideration of the motion of Mr. J. J. Blais for an address to his Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I gladly fall into step with all those who congratulated you and I also want to congratulate the mover (Mr. Blais) and the seconder (Mr. Blaker) of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

A song-writer who probably does not share my political views has written a very well-known song entitled "My contry is not a country, it's winter". Parodying Gilles Vigneault, I could say: "My country is not one country, it's five countries". But for those five countries to survive they must be integrated in such a way that they will make up what we call our country, Canada. However, it should never be forgotten—and it should be less and less so—that we actually have here five countries or five states.

• (1210)

More than ever, Mr. Speaker, the individual regions are becoming aware of their problems and difficulties and are seeking solutions not only at the regional but also at the national level. These economic difficulties prevailing in the various regions are aggravated by other problems with linguistic and cultural implications. Canada is therefore a country increasingly difficult to rule.

It is extremely easy, Mr. Speaker, to hurl one part of the country against another. People with the littlest bit of knowledge, in the government or in the opposition, can launch the people from one region against those of another. It has been done with regard to French-English relations. It can be done between the Western and the central provinces or between East and West. It can be done, as it has been said before, between British Columbia and the rest of the country with the best of reasons. Anyone may, on the spur of the moment, raise a serious grievance against the whole of the country.

Yesterday, I heard a member from British Columbia refer to some kind of potential separatism in British Columbia. It is quite possible, because if some day we all behave in such a way that British Columbia will feel completely isolated, there is no doubt that such a movement will emerge. I did not say that there would be—

An hon. Member: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I apologize to the minister.

[English]

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I must object to any such interpretation being placed upon the words I used yesterday.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McKinnon: I stated quite clearly that British Columbia has not, to my knowledge, a single separatist. I was trying to make that clear yesterday.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, there may be some interpretation problems, but I am not responsible for them. I did not say that there were separatists in British Columbia but that these people had problems and that if we did not recognize them, some day they would react just like citizens from another area, the Maritimes, for instance.

I heard it myself from Nova Scotians at the time I was a member of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism; I have just read that some people in Prince Edward Island are thinking of separation. Obviously I am not saying that they are prepared to separate nor that they will. However it must be admitted that the Canadians we represent are particularly sensitive about relations between their region and the rest of the country.

So, if that type of prejudice is to be exploited, one need only say that without a doubt that eastern Canada is poorer than central Canada. It must therefore be expected that the representatives of eastern Canada demand energetically that historical and permanent injustices be remedied. There is nothing abnormal in that; provided it is done without stirring one area against the rest of the country, I believe that is normal.

In Ontario, for instance, some people say: We pay most of the bill. Some of us out west or in the east could stir the citizens against Ontario. That province does not give only. The department I headed distributed considerable money to certain regions; that of Industry, Trade and Commerce gave a lot of money to the province of Ontario. I will never go to the trouble of adding it up because the day we start thinking of our country merely in terms of accounting with regard to the various areas, that day it will be threatened with disintegration.

We are together, Mr. Speaker, because we believe we can all benefit from the situation, even if we have reasons to complain, even if there are frictions. We believe it is preferable to be together rather than separated because it means greater advantages. No nation exists through divine right.

Nations such as ours are the results of historical accidents. Who could explain how Canada that we know is made up of French- and English-speaking communities? It is not because of a universal plan but because historical events have brought us together this way. Why the Flemish and the Walloons in Belgium? It is not because of divine right; it is a result of formation of groups throughout history. Therefore, these people must get along together.

This country is built up the very same way. Every one is aware that regional interests are becoming ever more important. There are certain things that policitical parties must not do on the national level. The government must not be praised at all times, and what they do must not be misinterpreted. Partisanship must continue to exist and the opposition are bound to criticize the government and prepare to replace it eventually; such is the normal game of politics. If that normal game is held up on the pretence that there are problems in Canada, then democracy is not for us.

So one must be much more careful when taking positions so as to avoid breaking up the country by resting on things that will not be changed.

I have been told, you should not talk about it so nothing will be said. This may be the best way. Because of their temperament or their culture some say when a problem comes up: Sweep it under the rug. This is not my way of doing things. I came to Ottawa a little over seven years ago with some colleagues for the very simple reason that we believed in federalism and we saw in our province a rising movement trying to convince our compatriots that belonging to a country such as Canada not only was not worth it but actually made us poorer, that we were not represented and that we played no part in Ottawa, that we were a French-speaking entity in a large English-speaking world which, of course, continuously steered the country according to its interests. That is what people were saying not in their living rooms but publicly and that is what was being suggested by a political party which enjoys freedom of existence in that province and particularly in the Quebec National Assembly. There is a problem in Quebec that has not necessarily been created by the other provinces, but it is there and we have tried to solve it. Furthermore, we were convinced—and I still am—that several injustices people were complaining about were real.

It would be naïve to think that here in Ottawa, for example, French Canadians enjoy fair play in the civil service. The fault is not necessarily with the English-speaking people, but, frankly, there was no fair play, and if you want statistics, I shall provide them. Let us just read the report of the commission on bilingualism and biculturalism—

Who is responsible? Mr. Speaker, I do not care to inquire into it. We were interested in correcting that situation step by step, and not by force just by saying: Now, gentlemen, we want to restore the balance. We wanted to proceed very gradually, in such a way that the French-speaking people in Ottawa, might feel at home.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The problem really existed. There was also the problem about Hull-Ottawa was developing very well. So much the better. I am the first to be proud of our beautiful capital city, which was erected for the main part with money coming from all the Canadian people, through the National Capital Commission. I am not jealous; I am happy to see that we possess a beautiful capital city. However, there was a problem: all the French-speaking Canadians were crowded in a neighbouring small town, across from Ottawa, by the name of Hull, and that town was not developing at all. One of our objectives was to try not to deprive Ottawa of its normal development, but to achieve in Hull things that would allow the French-speaking people also to be rather proud of their town.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1220)

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I will not tell you about the harassment I was subjected to because I was responsible for the National Capital Commission.

I expected that. Of course when I was elected to the House of Commons I did not think everybody would welcome us with open arms. It is obvious that some people do not understand but I was nevertheless happy because, all in all, I believe that the English-speaking people in Ottawa understood fairly well the contribution we wanted to make and they supported us. Not only did they support us, but they were very sympathetic.

We met with fanaticism, there is no doubt about that and it will happen again for, you see, it is in the nature of things not to understand everybody's problems, I know that. Besides, the same is true of each of our areas. Before I went to the Maritimes my idea of those provinces was entirely different from the one I have now. Now I can understand the people from those provinces, I can understand why some seem to push their demands more loudly than others, they have more serious problems than others. There are some outside Quebec who do not understand what is going on there and I am coming now to a more ticklish subject.

I will tell you quite simply about what happened during the last election campaign. War was declared upon us yesterday because of a film. In fact, it is the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) who put the finger on us—it seems that he is now the one who answers for the Progressive Conservative party in the province of Quebec. He did it because we made a film featuring four French-Canadian ministers. Now, two or three days ago, I met the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and told him I would send him the film with a letter and even the sound track.

An hon. Member: That was four days ago.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes, but anyway, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe said at six o'clock last night that he had not received it. Only the hon. member for Yukon—there never was any question of my sending that film to the member for Saint-Hyacinthe as I had said I would send it to the Progressive Conservative party. Would the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe by himself be the Progressive Conservative party?

Mr. Wagner: No.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): No? Well, anyway, we produced a film to show what? First—

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, forgive me for interrupting on a question of privilege. I think it ought to be explained that the film was sent to me at my request, a request made in conversation with the minister. The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) did not know this until about 20 minutes ago.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, at first we have been represented as those French-Canadian swindlers in Ottawa who were in quest of power. People have said that it was shown only in the province of Quebec and in French.

In the first place and for the information of former "Mr. Justice", this is not true. On October 3 last, between 10 and 10:15 in the evening, this film was shown on the entire French network, that is in Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Manitoba and Ontario. If it has been hidden, it must be far away.

Mr. Wagner: It was shown in French but not in English.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): It was indeed shown in French but not in English. I gave the hon. member a copy of it and it is up to him to have it translated. However, I will tell you why it was not shown in English.

Mr. Wagner: We are listening.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The hon. member has delivered his speech, he should now let me deliver mine.

I will mention the problem we had to face during the last election in the province of Quebec: the new Progressive Conservative star surely did not frighten us. In fact, it did not bother us a bit. Neither did the Social Credit Party which was, in our opinion, limited to some regions as far as the election was concerned and they nearly achieved what they intended to. I extend to them my congratulations for their success in the election.

In all event, what was our problem? It was to answer objections from another party which did not take part in the fight and said to everyone: These people do not represent anything in Ottawa. They are just pawns in the hands of the English-speaking people, they do not accomplish anything.

Therefore we wanted the film to show that French members from Quebec in Ottawa were useful, that they did achieve something, that we had a role to play there. That is not all. I also stated in that film—and you will agree if you watch the film and read the transcript published in the Toronto Star—that of course we did not take the power from the other ministers. In fact, the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner) and the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Sharp) were respectively Minister of Finance and Secretary of State for External Affairs, and they had as much power in their departments as we had in ours.

That was the purpose of the film. Not one time did we attack the Progressive Conservative party, the Social Credit party or the NDP. The purpose was to try to convince French Canadians that whenever we fight in Ottawa, we have a role to play and we can improve the situation.

Here is how it was interpreted by the Toronto Star: It was considered as a manoeuver of the "French Power" in Ottawa. Incidentally, a short article which is quite important and worthy of quoting for the very reason that its author is an intelligent man, the hon. Senator Eugene Forsey, stated, and I quote:

[English]

I notice that George Bain is raising the complaint that during the recent election campaign the government said a great deal in Quebec and little outside about Quebec power in Ottawa. Well, why not? In Quebec, the story was being constantly spread that Quebec had little or no power in Ottawa.

[Translation]

He understands the issue. He understands that it is through this issue that some people in Quebec are trying to demolish the country.

[English]

Mr. Bell: Senator Forsey is a Liberal.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): It does not matter if he is a Liberal or not. The important thing is whether it is the truth or not.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I will not quote any longer this article which is stating very simple things. It says for instance that when the western ministers travel through western Canada, whether they are from the Conservatives or NDP, they certainly do not say during an election compaign, that they have no influence on the contrary, they say they have a lot of influence and that it is important that they be in Ottawa. They do the same as we do! But why is it a scandal when French-speaking people are involved?

This is what the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was referring to when he said that we, from Quebec, have to defend ourselves everyday as well as the rest of Canada by telling the French-speaking people that the English people are not that bad. We could remain silent as many people did here in Ottawa. Not only did they not say one word but they did not fight back. And if English Canadians are not prepared to defend certain basic positions in this country let them not rely on us as we shall not defend them even in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I have always accepted criticism as Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and I still do. Why not? Nothing in the constitution stipulates that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion is a saint, that he never makes any mistakes because he is not infallible. But I cannot accept that during an election campaign, with the climate we all know, sensible people try to suggest that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion is using his department and his moneys for election purposes in the province of Quebec and giving more money to Quebec than to the other provinces. This is without any justification Mr. Speaker, bordering on racism and no doubt condemnable.

Besides, it is peculiar, to put it mildly, because in many cases they are undeniably impartial people and I am convinced that some of them do not realize the consequences of their utterances in Quebec. They don't do it out of sheer malice.

For instance I heard the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), whom I consider to be a man of utmost integrity and even a friend of Francophones. He said nothing obnoxious, except on election night when all he had to say about the changes in the cabinet was that Marchand, Goyer and Pelletier were being removed. Why, referring to a rearrangement involving some 15 ministers, single out three of them individually. As taken up by the English-speaking press, the interpretation was: the three French Canadians, of course. But why? And on top of that came a statement from the hon. Allan Blakeney, premier of Saskatchewan: Marchand uses his department in favour of his province.

Now, Anglophones, who already have a chip on their shoulder concerning bilingualism, want to make the most of the malaise, specially in Ontario, and they of course draw their own conclusions. They say: "It is quite evident that those fellows are trying to seize power". That is how things happen. I don't say there was a plot aiming at an anti-French-Canadian backlash.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The minister is attributing statements to me that I certainly did not make. He must be confusing me with someone else. Perhaps while I am on my feet I might ask the minister a question. Before his time runs out, will he tell us something about what he is going to do with the problems in the Department of Transport?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1230)

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): That is the situation, Mr. Speaker. Let's sweep the problem under the rug. I will not do it, Mr. Speaker. It is too serious for that.

[English]

Mr. Peters: All the members of the Cabinet cannot be ministers of social affairs. We must have something else in the cabinet besides social affairs. It is an important problem, but do not overdo it.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I merely say that—

[English]

Mr. Peters: So is every other major cabinet minister.

Some hon. Members: Shut up.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister has the floor.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I am merely trying to explain, Mr. Speaker, why we have been sensitive about that issue.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, I think I invested enough in Canadian politics—and it is quite difficult, in Quebec, to do what we are doing—not to accept that such a statement, which affects some people's reputation, be simply interrupted by someone who does not like it. We do not like it either, Mr. Speaker, to have to do this job and go and fight everyday. Just because the hon. member for St.-Hyacinthe makes a statement which is absolutely unfounded does not mean that we are going to keep quiet and say: Here is a French Canadian who knows his way around, but who simply confirms in their prejudice those people on the other side of this House who have never understood this problem. I had rather listen to another one than him. In any event, he decided to play this part, let him try, but he will perhaps be put up with the same fate as his predecessors, in a party which never had a French Canadian leader.

If the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe came here for the only purpose of destroying those who have been fighting for federalism in Quebec, I suggest that he may return to the bench for the third time.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Do you think you are the saviour of this country?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Now, wait a minute. Yesterday they had fun while the Prime Minister was under attack; now it is not funny anymore. Well, here is a little bit of a speech that is not funny at all.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe attacked the Prime Minister; he even went as far back as the days of Cité Libre. He went pretty far to show how the Prime Minister had changed. How terrible. That seems true to me. In any case this is now the fourth or fifth time that these excerpts are quoted in this House. They were distributed at all political meetings. Everybody knows that. But he did now know, so he read his quotation.

At any rate, let us try and find out about the intellectual or ideological continuity of the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe. His background is a nice one, undoubtedly that of an upright man who was on the Bench. Premier Jean Lesage got him from the Bench to appoint him minister in the Liberal cabinet. He came to the liberal convention and was defeated by Mr. Robert Bourassa. He did not like it and he left the party. He was appointed to the bench by the Union Nationale under Mr. Jean-Jacques Bertrand. Political parties later held conventions. I do not know if the Creditistes held theirs first or if it was another party, but the name of the member for Saint-Hyacinthe was in the papers for at least a month. "Is he going to go, or is he not going to go"? He was keeping quiet. It would have been easy for him to give an answer; all he had to do was make a statement and everything would have been over. The leadership was up for grabs and he was interested. It is frightening to see in the first row so many people interested in leadership.

When the Union Nationale and the Créditistes held their conventions his name was in the papers for a month. One could read, "The next leader of . . ." He finally said no. Later, the whole thing started all over again with the federal election. Newspapermen phoned him to ask him, is it true that this time you are going to Ottawa? Not a word. And when the election was called he decided that the country had to be saved, that the problems were too serious.

If we had waited for another year he would have waited another year on the bench, and it is not more serious than that. If the problems were that serious he could have stayed in politics to fight. We sought refuge on the bench. That is his business but he has no business criticizing those who change their positions because he is the perfect model of a guy who never knew exactly what he wanted in life, except to be the leader of something.

Mr. Speaker, the opposition has nothing to worry about: whatever our position in this House, we will not swallow all the nonsense that may be uttered nor the injustices that may be done. We will give them tit for tat and when we can no longer do it, we will go elsewhere; it will mean that our place is not here anymore.

Besides, Mr. Speaker, if I were a member of the Progressive Conservative party I would ask myself serious questions. How is it that in the province of Quebec the Progressive Conservative party does not succeed as well as a very young party, almost without money, the Social Credit Party of Canada which gets three times as many votes? How can that be? How is it that there are not more Progressive Conservatives? When the hon. Leon Balcer left the party, he said: There is no place for French Canadians in that party. It is a thing they will remember. They will remember also Mr. Maurice Allard who said that there was no place for French Canadians. They will remember what the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) said when he left that party. In any case, he told me about it and I hope he will say it: that there was no place for French Canadians in that party. I am not happy about that, Mr. Speaker. I do not like hearing that and I wish there was as much place for French Canadians in the Progesssive Conservative party as in all other parties.

However, I should like to comment the great statement from the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe: All parties are Canadian. They are Canadian but in what way? Who on the other side of the House is going to support seriously for instance our policy on bilingualism? That does not mean that all the regulations on it should be accepted. I know some people say there is discrimination. I agree but we are the first ones to correct them. I can say personally as a former trade unionist that there are English-speaking people for whom I would fight to death if they were to be unfairly treated under some of our programs. However, I know ever since I came to Ottawa and even before, that all the obstacles to the legislation aimed at making this country a little more bearable for the French-speaking people came from the opposite side of this House. I would not say that of everybody and I will not in the case of the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) but I could say it of a group I could very well identify if I absolutely wanted the subject I was referring to earlier to snowball.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Give us names! Look within your own party!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): This was the situation in connection with the Royal Commission on bilingualism and biculturalism. Some members of this party did not ask whether the problems were being settled but rather: "How much does it cost?" This was heard everyday. A member from the official opposition was worried about the cost of bilingualism and biculturalism instead of worrying about the future of the country and the welfare of all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, we will not ask for any favour. We are not asking for any preferential treatment because we are French-speaking. However, we shall not tolerate one instant being treated differently because we are from Quebec, even by the leader of the Quebec wing, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe supported by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey). We will not mind. That our policies be criticized is normal. We shall play the game and this will make for a healthy climate. We have no objection to this. However as regards gerrymandering and intriguing, they will have to do it alone but they will find the war tougher than expected.

If the atmosphere does not clear up, it will be quite simple. That is not the only thing one can do. I understand that parties have a role to play, I accept attacks, but I do not accept the kind of indictment attempted on us during the last election. I do not accept that pernicious and perfidious interpretation of the film, which had only one purpose. The film can be criticized by saying "They eat too much". That was one of the hon. member's criticisms: "They eat a lot". We were eating the same damned ham which is eaten here in the restaurant, Mr. Speaker. What Progressive Conservatives eat every day. That's all we were eating. "It is horrible to see them eating when some lack food", they commented. That is super politics, really super. And that is how they seek to achieve the unity of Canada. The film can be criticized. But I say Mr. Speaker, that if debates are to be normal, that kind of fighting should cease. We are going to do our part let them do theirs and there will be an opportunity to help Canada. Otherwise, if the battle is on another plane, we will fight and fight hard.

Mr. Speaker, I am ready to have a last try. We shall do our conscientious best and I hope that all together we will contribute to the unification of the country.

[English]

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I rise to take part in this debate. My first words will be of congratulation to Your Honour upon your elevation to the high office of Speaker of this House. It is a position which I know will be filled with dignity, with honour and with fairness to members in all parties. I also wish to congratulate my hon. friend, the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) upon his appointment to the position of Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Committees of the Whole House. His appointment indicates recognition by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of the hon. member's many years of service to this House, and I wish him well in his new office.

• (1240)

I join with others who have preceded me in congratulating the mover and seconder of the address for their contributions to this debate. In view of the time limit, I serve notice now that at the conclusion of my remarks I intend to move in English and in French an amendment to the motion presently before the House. The words of that amendment are as follows:

That the following be added to the Address:

"This House regrets that Your Excellency's advisers by their inertia, indifference and parliamentary incompetence, have chosen not to deal immediately with the problems affecting the Canadian people and particularly the aggravated situation resulting from the current simultaneous high rate of unemployment and rising living costs."

Those of us who were here in the previous parliament cannot help but notice the change in the seating arrangement and in the men who occupy these seats, especially on the government side of the House. We cannot help but notice as well that the air of uncertainty which seemed to hang over the Prime Minister and his colleagues following the events of October 30 pervades this chamber like a Fundy fog. I suppose this is due in part to the verbal whipping given the Prime Minister by the four western provincial Liberal leaders when they met in Regina on December 1, and the lack of discretion which was shown by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) following his organic discussions with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang). Obviously, following the election the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice remembered the words of the late President Kennedy who said in his inaugural address: "Let us never negotiate out of fear but let us never fear to negotiate".

We have now seen the fruits of these negotiations in the votes that have been taken in the House. We may never know all the details of the deal which has been made between the Minister of Justice on behalf of the Liberal party and the hon. member for York South on behalf of the NDP, but obviously a scheme was arranged whereby the present minority Liberal party will be kept in office by the voting strength of the NDP. No matter how much the Leader of the NDP may bluster and apologize, he and his supporters have been exposed as fakes and charlatans when it comes to adhering to stated policy and principles. Their attitude today seems to be: if you do not like our principles, Mr. Prime Minister, we will change them. The election is over and the results are here for all to see in the House of minorities.

Many are the reasons given for this situation, but I was surprised and somewhat appalled by the statements made by the right hon. Prime Minister when he made the charge that members of the Conservative party do not stand for Canadian unity. Today, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) stated somewhat the same views. Speaking as one who comes from Atlantic Canada, I only wish he had told us something of his plans to improve our transportation problems.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crouse: The right hon. Prime Minister tried to whitewash his own idiotic economic policies when he spoke, his idiotic policies which he presented over a four and a half year period, by laying the blame for the near defeat of his government on everyone else but himself where it rightfully belongs. I do not, I cannot and I will not, accept the Prime Minister's views on this matter and neither do some members of the Liberal party who are sitting in this chamber today. The hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) has publicly aired his dissatisfaction with the leadership of his party and most of the defeated Liberal candidates in Alberta have been demanding a national party policy conference.

The present minority government is the fifth in the last 15 years, and Canada is beginning to resemble the troubled French fourth republic which was almost continually going to the polls. In fact, we have had seven federal elections in Canada since 1957, and I foresee another one before the end of this year. I say this because the Liberal ship of state is somewhat like Bluenose II, Mr. Speaker, with which you are familiar. It has a bit of dry rot here and there, both spars removed, some holes in the planking, some weakened internal supports, and the whole outfit is in need of a complete refit to remove the encrusted barnacles from its hull.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Muir: There is a smell of decay.

Mr. Crouse: As one of my colleagues said, it needs a new skipper.

The throne speech has produced a philosophy from this government that is quite unique and that is a far cry from what it enunciated in 1968. The philosophy, as I read the throne speech today, seems to be: the best for the west and the least for the east. Since we who come from the east are obviously number 2, I suppose we shall have to try harder.

The Prime Minister stated that he and his government proposed to correct their mistakes without in any way turning their backs on Liberal principles, and then he went on to give the House some examples. He spoke of the penal system and its abuses, of the government's immigration policy and its abuses, of changes which are necessary in the DREE program and in the unemployment insurance program. Afetr four and a half years in office, I say to the Prime minister and his colleagues that it is high time they recognized that there was an obvious need for the federal government to deal with bread and butter issues such as unemployment, housing, and rising living costs. There is an obvious need for the federal government to deal with rising educational costs, rising medicare costs, declining fisheries resources, our agricultural markets, just to name but a few.

The throne speech deals in broad generalities with some of these problems, and while it sounds very promising it does not deal in specifics or tell us how the necessary improvements are to be accomplished. I suppose this is due to the fact that for the wedding between the Liberal party and the NDP the Prime Minister needed something old and something new, something borrowed and something blue. So he took the old NDP with its new lack of principles, and he borrowed quite heavily from the big blue book of Conservative campaign proposals. However, that action puts the Prime Minister in the position of the little boy who copied his answers for the exam. He knows the answers but he still does not know how to work out the problems.

What worries me now is that the Prime Minister obviously believes he dealt with our major problems, since he said in his speech that there were few sins of omission and that in his opinion the reason he lost the majority of his party was due to the lack of communication between the government and the people. This is nothing more than arrogant nonsense for this government is full of informers, advisers, regional desks, bureaucrats and planners who should have been quite capable of getting the Prime Minister's and his colleagues' viewpoint across to the electorate. If they did not, I would like to know what function was fulfilled at a cost of $10 million annually by Information Canada which was established by this government. I suppose it has never occurred to the Prime Minister or to the Minister of Transport, in light of his speech today, that the Canadian electorate understood only too well the information they were receiving from Ottawa, and since they had had enough of manipulation, meaningless slogans, fancy theories, instant election icings and all the other candy and nonsense that goes with image making they followed the only course open to them which was to attempt through the ballot box to rid this country of this heartless, arrogant and irresponsible Liberal government.

They almost succeeded and time alone will tell whether this whipped, sullen and frustrated administration will be any better or be any more responsive to the needs of the Canadians than was the previous one. Quite frankly, I have my doubts. I am concerned when I read in the Speech from the Throne that the government plans to submit proposals for a new national communications policy. This is a proposal which we on our side shall have to examine very carefully. In my opinion, the history of communication is in many ways the history of civilization. Much of man's progress can be measured by the state of his communications, and all of us are today much better informed, for example, about conditions on the moon as a result of improvements in our system of communication.

Some years ago Thomas Jefferson declared; "If a nation expects to be ignorant and free—It expects what never was, and never will be". He went on to say that "Where the press is free and every man able to read, all is safe". But, the written word and mass education did not bring an earthly paradise, for man can respond to the demagogue as well as to the philosopher and the capacity to read does not always guarantee that man will choose good over evil. In today's civilization there are only a few parts of the world where people are physically imprisoned and controlled by their governments. However, though the physical subjection of people is rare, we see today the struggles and tensions developing over control, not of man's body but his mind. This struggle is being waged with ever greater and more subtle intensity. I say this because every day we hear the expressions "brainwashing", "subconscious persuasion" or "imagine making". These are the tools of the ad men who use them to sell us new products, new ideas or tired, frustrated, old politicians.

Now, salesmanship is not new, for down through the years we have had traders and conmen. But what is new is that today we are in an electronic age where there are tremendous opportunities for manipulation of the media. In my opinion, the present situation puts a tremendous responsibility on what is still called the free democratic press of this country. We said during the campaign as Conservatives that in the event we formed the government we would abolish Information Canada and this wasteful extravagance. Quite frankly it is bad enough at times to receive inadequate news coverage, but in my opinion there is a far greater danger, and that is manipulated news by the government in power. Government diluted and directed information in this electronic age could so assail freedom of thought and opinion as to fatally undermine what is left of our free institutions.

I believe the salvation of our country and the solution to our problems lies where it always has, in the strength of the individual mind and character. It is the message which is the thing of value and, in my opinion, the men in the press gallery have a tremendous responsibility in this session to see that the message of the twenty-ninth parliament is clearly conveyed and portrayed to the Canadian people. That is the point I want to stress most clearly at this time.

In the time allotted to me it is not possible to deal with all the proposals put forth in the throne speech. In the wording of the speech, the government is fully committed to two prominent goals, namely national unity and equality of opportunity for all Canadians. These are high sounding ideals, and in my area of Canada one of the items contributing to disunity in this country and inequality of opportunity is the transportation policies of the federal government, and our problems in this area have intensified in recent years. We have had nine freight increases in two years.

Studies of this problem have been made, solutions have been proposed and, almost without exception, these have been deferred, watered down, shelved or ignored. As a result our agricultural industry, our fishing industry and all forms of our manufacturing industries operate at a tremendous disadvantage when compared to industries located in other parts of Canada. Unfortunately, recent policy statements by this government will only serve to compound our problems. Here I refer to the announcement to build four new icebreakers to break the ice on the St. Lawrence seaway in order to extend the shipping season on the Great Lakes. Obviously, this government is oblivious to the changes which have been brought about in the shipping industry, and apparently it plans to write off the total capital cost with interest amounting to some $700 million on the St. Lawrence seaway. I say this because the seaway cannot pay its way, and its operation to date has not justified its tremendous cost to the people of Canada. At the present time the trend toward larger ocean going ships, the establishment of seaside container shipping facilities and the introduction of rail developments that shorten the running time from ocean ports to inland centres, plus the shallow depth of the seaway, make the waterway obsolete even in the summertime. I suppose by raising this criticism it will be pointed out to me that I am anti-Quebec. This effects not only Quebec but Ontario as well. What I am saying is that we should not pursue and continue the waste of money on this obsolete facility.

Today the maritime provinces, especially Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, have the only natural deep-water ports north of Norfolk, Virginia. With 500,000 deadweight ton tankers now on the drawingboards, the shipping industry seems almost certain to come back into its own in Atlantic Canada. In my opinion, it would make sense to retain the seaway as a seasonal water route for the inland coastal trade and grain movements, while using our tax dollars to upgrade facilities in Nova Scotia which can be used on a year round basis, and are closer to overseas trading centres. I believe quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, that any dollars spent on expanding year round shipping on the seaway are dollars robbed from Atlantic Canada. I say this because we are told all our transportation services in Atlantic Canada must be kept on a paying basis. I ask this government, why are we in Atlantic Canada singled out? Why does this rule of thumb not apply to other parts of Canada?

Our natural business axis in Atlantic Canada is north and south, not east and west, but our natural growth has been hampered by unfair and unjust freight rate charges and by tariff changes which favoured central Canadian manufacturers to the detriment of industrialists in Atlantic Canada. Some 100 million inhabitants of the eastern United States seaboard are within easy shipping access from ports in Nova Scotia. These markets present new and even greater opportunities for our fishing industry, and there is a great potential in this area for expanding our agricultural economy through the increased sale of our agricultural products, especially quality pork products. Nova Scotian farmers have a good base of breeding stock, they have vast experienc in management and in feeding, and producers have proven that they can compete in quality pork products with anyone on this continent.

In my opinion, this industry could be expanded, but our agricultural industry, our Christmas tree shippers, our fishing industry and our industrialists are penalized and held back by an antiquated transportation policy. We need a change in present policy, and in my opinion the emphasis must be shifted from railway profits to development of the Atlantic region.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it one o'clock?

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, when the House rose at noon, I was addressing myself to the problem of transportation in Atlantic Canada. I would point out to you, Sir, that the industries of Atlantic Canada are not one inch closer to the markets of central Canada today than they were in 1867. What we need is not just freight rate subsidization. I believe the railways in Canada should be used as an instrument of national development rather than operating on a rate system designed to recover the cost of their operation in each area. In other words this is the first step, in my view, toward economically unifying Canada, which is a problem which seems to be of great concern to the Prime Minister and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand). By the government's own admission, the DREE program has failed. It is stated in the throne speech that it must be decentralized.

I submit there would be little or no problem in relocating industry in Canada when rail rates and the economic disparities they cause are equalized or brought into closer balance. An efficient transportation system may not guarantee economic expansion, but the lack of such a system is having a detrimental effect upon the growth of Atlantic Canada. The throne speech indicates that the government assigns the highest priority to an economic policy that will reduce unemployment, contain inflation and strengthen the economy generally. While no mention is made about restoring the shipbuilding industry in Canada, I believe this is one area that is worthy of consideration by the government. More than two years have passed since the report of the inquiry on the coasting trade of Canada was submitted to the Minister of Transport.

The Darling report recommends that Canadian coastal waters be reserved to Canadian flag vessels which is a practice common in every modern maritime nation. It recommends that the development of Canadian resources on our continental shelf and in the Arctic be combined with provisions requiring the use of Canadian shipping. Since this report was published, there has been extensive exploration without any commitment to use Canadian shipping or Canadian workers. In view of our present high level of unemployment which is expected to increase, I ask this government if it is concerned with developing our human resources, as well as our natural resources, why has it not taken action to provide more aid to the Canadian shipbuilding industry? The $2 billion, for example, spent on unemployment would have built a lot of ships. That is the point I want to make. Practically every maritime nation in the world has strong policies to keep a deepwater merchant marine under its registry. In some cases it is done by direct subsidy, and in others it is a preferential tax exemption.

In 1947, this country had 155 ocean-going vessels under Canadian registry. Since then our fleet has dropped to almost nil, with the operators claiming they were taxed out of business. Some may say the cost of building up a modest Canadian merchant marine would be excessive. But we must ask ourselves how many millions of dollars we are paying annually to foreign countries by chartering their ships to carry our cargo. If these hundreds of millions of dollars had been spent for Canadian vessels, they would inevitably have found their way back into the economy of our country instead of being completely lost.

At the same time such a course would have given thousands of Canadians in all walks of life, new jobs, new opportunities and new hopes for the future which are not now available. It is hard to realize that Japan for example, which built a very small percentage of the world's ships in 1950, is today building over 50 per cent of world tonnage. Today, we are providing a small subsidy toward the cost of building domestic service ships and those built to foreign order, but I believe this program ends in March so action is needed immediately if our shipyards are to be reactivated, and if employment is to be provided for the workers in those yards.

There is no other trading nation in the world that puts its overseas trade at the mercy of foreign carriers, and I believe we should immediately consider a subsidy program which would cover at least a ten year period so that the Canadian flag could once again sail the sea lanes, providing new opportunities for our people.

Finally, the Speech from the Throne promises further measures to control foreign ownership of Canadian owned business. In my opinion, speaking as one who comes from Nova Scotia, this is a very important matter in our province since it deals with the preservation of our inheritance and our birthright. However, I believe any debate over ownership and control of Canadian industry should also deal with the thorny problem of ownership and control of unions operating in Canada. Whatever one may think about the role of foreign capital in Canada, we cannot continue to ignore our foreign dominated unions which represent a factor more closely related to people than to capital. After all, people in my view are far more important than money, and I cannot help but wonder why capital and not people is receiving all the attention when this matter comes under discussion. We are told by interested and concerned people that foreign investment prohibits Canadians from developing an independent economic, cultural and political identity of their own. These people appear to have a point worth considering, but unions keep reminding us that they, too, play important economic, cultural and political roles in our society.

• (1410)

Since some 62 per cent of unionized Canadian workers are members of unions with headquarters in the United States, it would be interesting to know what the Canadian Labour Congress would think about a government controlled screening process for unions that want to operate in Canada. It would be also interesting to know how Canadian union members would proceed to acquire full control of unions presently operating in Canada. I, personally, think this would be quite difficult, and it is insufficient to say that Canadian union members can break away from their American dominated unions if they so desire. First of all, responsible union leadership would have to be found in this country. Another consideration would be the Canadian welfare, pension and strike funds in the United States. The federal government would have to move to assist Canadian union members in securing an equitable portion of these assets, or some adequate compensation.

To the best of my knowledge, Canada is the only industrialized nation in the world without a broad trade union movement of its own. I realize that the workers in Quebec have their own unions, and there is also a growing tendency for public servants at all three levels of government in Canada to form unions. But the fact remains that the vast portion of the primary and secondary industries in Canada are organized by arms of U.S. unions. I, for one, believe that legislation to redress this imbalance has been needed for a long time.

I say this because other countries seem to be doing very well on the labour front without American based unions. When it comes to hard decisions, Japanese or German workers make the decisions for their respective unions, and American workers always act in their own best interests. It is not surprising that American workers inspired United States laws which restrict imports from other countries, including Canada, at the cost of jobs for many of their Canadian counterparts. If we had a national Canadian union movement it would not solve all our problems, any more than Canadian ownership of all our own industries would solve all our economic problems, but I do believe that a truly Canadian trade union movement is a matter of great importance, and should receive equal consideration when the question of foreign ownership is under study.

For all the reasons I have given, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell), the following amendment to the motion:

That the following be added to the Address:

"This House regrets that your Excellency's advisors by their inertia, indifference and parliamentary incompetence have chosen not to deal immediately with the problems affecting the Canadian people, and particularly the aggravated situation resulting from the current simultaneous high rate of unemployment and rising living costs."

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, it is with very great pleasure that I take part in this debate which at least up to now has been quite interesting.

I should like first of all to congratulate the member for Stormont-Dundas on his re-election as Speaker of this House, as well as the Chairman, the Deputy Chairman and the Assistant Deputy Chairman of the committees of the whole (Messrs. McCleave, Laniel and Boulanger) who were elected to their present office.

Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to hear several speeches which were generally rather interesting. As for myself, I am returning to the House with a second mandate which seems to me quite clear, but I must not forget to congratulate, like several previous speakers, the mover and seconder of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne (Messrs. Blais and Blaker).

I do not wish to dwell at length on the last election campaign. On the contrary, I think that there are many matters to be discussed, considering the hopes to which the Speech from the Throne have given rise among all the Canadian people.

I would like to offer my sincere thanks to those people of my constituency who put their trust in me and who, in an overwhelming majority voted for the man first of all. I think they have understood the old saying that parliament or any other institution is as good as the men who make it up. I think that it is on this principle that, as members of this House, we must work in common. Like so many others I could, of course, remind you of several anecdotes about the last election campaign, but I do not feel this is the best place to do it. I would rather be tempted to look, on the whole, at the last election which took place in the country.

Evidently, it is easy for members of the opposition to say the party in power has lost the confidence of the people. I think it is important to underline that the ones who shout loudest about the deterioration of the party in power could at least admit that opposition parties did not get the confidence which all parties were looking for either.

As an independent member, I usually feel much at ease to discuss these problems.

• (1420)

Last night, during the vote on the amendment, I found out that no party had obtained the confidence of the majority. This is what had raised a doubt in my mind as to the value of the amendment proposed by the Progressive Conservative party, which could not allow me to favour its passing, since I was already aware of the fact that the objective that we must reach is that of the interest of the Canadian people.

The reasons of the election result of October 30 are numerous. Many people have thought that this could depend on an economic factor, others gave other reasons. I think that, in general, the government itself who, for four years, did not succeed in giving us this economic stability, has been one of the major factors of the decrease of its majority. But we should perhaps rejoice and yet entertain reservations as to what this government can achieve in the days or months to come.

The Speech from the Throne, as I said before, gave rise to some hope among the population. Can we entertain doubts? One can always have misgivings about an electoral program, about a speech like the one that was delivered. Should we already dally on taking the government to task for not having implemented some of the proposals put forward in the Speech from the Throne? We could also criticize the government for the present state of affairs.

For instance, why did the government wait until after October 30 to announce capital injections of the order of $500 million, where we must admit that they are quite justified? A year ago already, we experienced the same problems. There again, it is never too late to make amends and I believe that we, as legislators, must nevertheless welcome the decision. In his own constituency, each hon. member should inform the organizations concerned of those amounts being made available to the provinces and municipalities in order to achieve some projects still at the planning stage.

Mr. Speaker, many people are concerned about the consequences of a minority government, but considering the announcement made of the availability of $500 million and the excellent suggestions contained in the Speech from the Throne, we should rather discard worries and believe that a minority government may be beneficial to the population, since the various political parties will no doubt try to do more and better with the prospect of a forthcoming general election. The fact remains that Canadians will benefit from a government that will surely feel hard-pressed by the opposition, and I trust that the opposition in turn will endeavour to force the government to come up with some long overdue legislation.

Such is the state of mind in which we must work in this House.

I was listening to the leader of the Progressive Conservative party (Mr. Stanfield) speak of restoring the confidence of the Canadians. Is it possible? Only to the extent where we act as administrators, and not by applying ourselves to embarrassing the government and forgetting our prime responsibility as Members of Parliament. He also added that the government should assume its responsibilities. No statement could surpass this one, I feel; and I share the opinions of the leader of the Progressive Conservative party when he speaks in that fashion. Exactly what is the responsibility of a Member of Parliament? Does it depend on the fact that he is part of a group? Is it because he is of the opposition that he should oppose the government rightly or wrongly? Should he not instead, as elected member, behave as an administrator who respects the commitments made during the election campaign?

Personally, Mr. Speaker, since as far back as in 1968 I have felt that it was my duty to serve the interests of society way before those of my party.

No doubt that the system under its present form is causing us difficulties.

I have resisted the temptation to become too easily part of that system and of course I had to choose a course which will not be an easy one. But the people trusted me any way because I think I have met their expectations by telling parliament of my constituency's needs and by supporting unceasingly legislation which I felt would benefit society, and that, to my mind, is the responsibility of a Member of Parliament.

There is no doubt that all political parties are fascinated by power. It is easy to say to the government: You did not get the trust of the majority, so you must give up the reins of power. But it is too easily forgotten that those calling for such a move failed also to gain a majority. The new parliament is inviting us, I think, to discuss mutual problems and to support measures which seem to be the most favourable.

I think that the composition of this new parliament enables the opposition members to get together and force the government to do something, should it refuse to do it.

True, there is also a Speech from the Throne which offers, only on paper of course, a lot of things. I think that the role of each member is to bring the government to implement this program as soon as possible. In my opinion, such are the responsibilities of each hon. member. Unhappily, by habit or ambition, they will try to bring down the government and forget the major interests of our people.

During the last election campaign, my motto was: "Man first", and I believe that this motto was relevant.

In my view, every hon. member should think first of the interests of the people before those of a political party, without being concerned about whether the government will be led by the grits or the tories. I do not think that the Canadian people want their members to bring about a new election, but they certainly want the government to pass legislation that will benefit the country.

In the Speech from the Throne, many measures are mentioned and nothing can stop the opposition parties from forcing the government to improve present legislation and to introduce new legislation.

In my opinion, this is the real responsibility of each hon. member as well as of each political party. In fact, it would be dangerous if the only aim of a political party was to bring down the government. What the population needs is a Parliament working to safeguard the interests of the community.

Mr. Speaker, I was very happy to hear the new Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) state that it was not up to us to determine the priorities of the provinces and that he was making it his business to ensure that there would be major consultations with the provinces. This was in fact reflected in the Speech from the Throne and it is something quite new for the Speech from the Throne to give such importance to the provinces in the establishment of new legislation or new arrangements, fiscal or otherwise.

I am personally pleased to see that the government has decided to consult the provinces more than it ever did. This is good for the provinces and it gives an opportunity to establish a more decentralized federalism, which our federal governments have been looking forward to for a very long time. The Speech from the Throne meets the aspirations of a good number of provinces. I think we should believe as members of Parliament in the decentralization of power and in consultation with the provinces.

Much has been said about the outcome of the election, but the general agreement is, I think, that the major problem still is of an economic nature with all Canadians being affected. In spite of its financial incentives and other measures, the government has not even succeeded in checking unemployment, the rate of which has doubled between June 1968 and October 1972.

The measures taken were therefore inadequate. Now this economic problem troubles each and every Canadian. However, I would like to remind you that the province of Quebec, which I have always defended in this House, besides this economic problem is faced with a constitutional one.

An hon. Member: A Conservative problem!

Mr. La Salle: It is important, I think, that this federal government, as well as all the members, realize that the handing over of certain powers to Quebec is a must, and furthermore that the province wants it badly.

The major problem in Canada is the economic situation: but the second one especially where Quebec is concerned, is no doubt the recovery of some powers by the provinces, taking into account the special situation in which the people of Quebec find themselves. I feel that political parties ought to realize this situation if they want to curry favour with the province of Quebec. The problems of Quebec will not be solved merely by providing economic stability. Moreover, there is in the mind of the people of Quebec a basic wish of recovering certain powers which are absolutely essential to their own emancipation.

I am always eager to defend, in this house, the interests of Quebec, aware that it is my responsibility and that, with my friends, the liberals, we can manage to build a country in which a viable federalism is possible.

I should like, at this point, to quote a few excerpts from the Speech from the Throne which says many things, but I feel it is always dangerous to limit oneself to reading or listening to grand articles. It has been said: A man is judged not by what he says but by what he does. The people have judged the government and a whole group of members of parliament. Those who might be tempted to interfere with the proper functioning of the house will be judged in turn.

Mr. Speaker, I found the speech of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) very interesting. His open-mindedness with regard to certain social measures was obvious. He also indicated that the government would introduce measures favourable to the old, measures which I have been requesting for quite some time, one of which notably is the payment of old age security pensions at age 60.

Perhaps can we still hope that in the near future the minister will announce that persons of 60 years of age can receive that pension.

I feel it is my duty to remind the government that it has done much in this respect but, having in mind the present economic situation, it could have achieved more.

In my opinion, we would gain by lowering to 60 the eligibility for old age pensions. I think this would be one method of considerably decreasing unemployment, expecially when nearly 400,000 people aged between 60 and 65 belong to the labour force. We have tried for a few years to increase unemployment benefits. A rotten generation which is getting $100 a week is creating unemployed people who more often as not become revolutionaries. Why not spend this money somewhere else and give a rest to those aged 60 years who deserve it? Granting $100 a week to a couple instead of one person as it is the case with the social welfare and unemployment insurance, this goal could be realized.

I ask the minister to give serious consideration to this suggestion and to have the eligible age for pension established at 60. This would lead to extraordinary results in the creation of a better social environment. It would be more profitable to create happiness for a 60-year-old person by paying an adequate pension instead of compelling a young person to go and get his pittance at the social welfare office or to draw unemployment insurance benefits. In fact, the employer who would see his workers getting younger would not be unhappy either. His older employees, 60 years old or over, would understand and recognize that their government would have done something proper. In my opinion, it is the government's first responsibility to restore that social climate which is missing here. This is a way to do it and because of the evidence I often hear in my constituency I know that many 60 year olds would be happy to take well deserved holidays. There are more machines and fewer workers. All these reasons militate for reduction of the eligibility age at 60 for a pension. This would greatly reduce unemployment. I hope that the minister will once more consider my intervention on behalf of these persons who have been waiting for a long time for more income security.

They also mentioned benefits that would be granted to the blind, and considering the extra needs these people may have I really hope that the Minister of National Health and Welfare will act in the fairest way possible as regards this group of people.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak as well of the importance of the economic situation in my constituency. I know that in 1973 the minister of Regional Economic Expansion will change the boundaries of "special areas" and designated areas. My riding has had the advantage of being recognized as an average designated area. This is not the best designation. I know in my riding several people who complain about the establisment of new industries. Of course, supplementary benefits were bestowed on other regions, and I am very glad of it, but I wish to bring these reasons to the minister's attention, because I hope that he will consider the region that I represent, that of Joliette, when in 1973 he will appraise the needs of my region, and that he will take into account the wishes of all of the people who live in this riding. I shall certainly have the opportunity of making representations to his department, and I hope that I will be carefully listened to.

I was pleased as well, Mr. Speaker, to see our government taking an interest in amateur sports. Of course here again a lot has been said about it but very little has been done. And today, it seems that grants to amateur sports will be doubled. I wish to remind the minister once more that until the government spend adequate amounts to provide municipalities with basic tools to enable young people to organize, it will be ridiculous or stupid to speak of improved physical fitness for our youth. We need basic tools; therefore we need money. I mentioned last year a tripartite formula under which financing could be shared by municipalities, the Federal government and Provincial governments. I still believe this would be the best way to enable municipalities to obtain adequate arenas and public swimming pools, etc. But so long as money will be spent on writing fine writs which will remain on shelves, I don't think we shall improve the fitness of our young Canadians.

We shall have a unique opportunity of action at the occasion of the Montreal Olympics of 1976. What is the federal government financial assistance in this connection? No assistance has been announced to date. I request from the government that they grant the Olympic organization the financial assistance they are entitled to.

Mr. Cyr: Was it required?

Mr. La Salle: I cannot say whether that assistance was already required but I believe that rather secret negotiations have taken place. Anyway, I think parliament should admit the importance of those games. All Canadians willing to participate will be able to do so and not only Montrealers. Consequently, it would be disastrous if Montrealers were the only ones to support those games. I suppose that the Montreal members will find it their duty to meet my invitation and will request from the government the financial assistance required by those games since it has not yet been required by anybody here.

With a view to stimulating the competitive spirit of all young Canadians willing to participate in those games, I think it would be only fair if the whole country were to support the cost. I am all the more free to speak that I am not myself from Montreal and that the authorities of this city have made laudable efforts for this important project to succeed. And if these games took place in Toronto, I would say exactly the same thing.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like once more to urge the minister responsible for housing not to forget that serious matter that was often discussed and which seems to have been neglected up to now, the removal of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials. I think the matter has been in the air for three years now and many seem to have made an about-turn. The government has remained silent on the subject. Political parties, taking into account the composition of this parliament, would have a unique occasion to force the government to have that tax removed and the beneficial effects it might have are well known. The suggestion was made on many occasions and I repeat my request one more time.

I could not conclude my remarks without touching upon agriculture, an industry that holds an enviable place in my constituency. I was very pleased to hear some mention in the Speech from the Throne, for the first time, I believe, of amendments to Canada's feed grain policy in order to allow eastern producers to obtain that grain for the same price as western producers. My hope is that this year the amendments to the feed grain policy will retain the attention of all hon. members—both from eastern and from western Canada—because our policy should have a national scope if we want to show better justice toward the producers.

I recommend to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to lend an ear to the request of the dairy producers and to agree to a grant increase of 50 cents, since the production costs increase from year to year. In my view, the request of Canadian dairy producers is thoroughly justified and I intend to support that representation.

In my opinion, we forget something about farmers. I know that in my constituency there is an organization of young farmers who complain because they cannot take advantage of the management courses sponsored by the Department of Manpower and Immigration. A very substantial assistance could be offered to those young producers who would probably no longer have to ask for grants after a certain number of years, being more qualified and better businessmen. Those management courses are quite important for those young farmers and I hope that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) will remember that recommendation which I make on behalf of the young farmers of my constituency. I imagine that the same concern is felt in other parts of the country.

What about the buying back of small farms? I know that recently the Minister met his counterpart from Quebec; I also know that negotiations are still underway and that agreements have not yet been reached but I would invite the Minister of Agriculture to consider seriously the arguments submitted by his counterpart from Quebec in respect of the priorities chosen by that province.

I have heard ministers say how important the priorities of the provinces are to them and on that basis I must be more confident than ever that the hon. Minister of Agriculture will consider carefully the priorities established by Quebec so that the latter can benefit by the buying-back-of-small-farms program and so that no farmer will be penalized by an agreement that is late coming.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish the new members a lot of success in this house and I invite them to participate actively in its business. I caution them against a certain form of disappointment, as I experienced in 1968. It is important to keep in mind first the interests of society if one really wants to assume his responsibilities. This is an invitation I extend to several members and by meeting the needs of society we will allow the government, any government, to act and act quickly. Our responsibility is to force the government to act as quickly as possible but only in the interest of those who have long been waiting for help.

[English]

Mr. Jim Fleming (York West): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for recognizing me and thus giving me a chance for the first time in this chamber to speak on behalf of my constituents in Toronto-York West. I should like to refer to my constituency in the few minutes allotted to me under our rules. Although I am a new member of this House, I would like also to talk about what I consider the life and mental health of the twenty-ninth parliament to be. I want to make reference as well to the Speech from the Throne which is very important to my people. I hope to spend a moment or two discussing some personal interests of mine as a result of my 10 or 12 years in broadcasting. In addition, I want to make some reference, as have other members, to the death penalty and redistribution to both of which references are made in the throne speech.

Before I comment any further on these matters, I want to offer my congratulations to the mover and seconded who set a precedent and some measure of competence, especially for their colleagues on this side of the House, which it will be difficult for all of us freshmen in this House to equal. No matter what party we represent, we all listened to them with pride. I think they have challenged us to do as well as we continue in our debates in this parliament.

I take some exception to remarks made by my colleague, the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais). He referred to the fact that some years ago a commission was appointed, and there were many commissions appointed by this House, to consider the Canada-United States border. Coming from North Bay, he expressed regret that at that time North Bay was not made the main border point. I would obviously have had to object if that had happened. I would not want history to be different because Toronto and my constituency, of which I am very proud, would not be part of Canada. As someone who considers himself to be a moderate economic nationalist, I want to say that we now have enough problems without trying to buy back the golden horseshoe.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, before saying anything more, I should like to tell my French-Canadian friends that I very sincerely regret not being able to speak their mother tongue more fluently. If some day, one of my children has ever the honour of sitting in this chamber, I hope he, as well as all his colleagues, can discuss the future of our great nation in either one of the official languages and do so with pride.

Approaching with optimism the beginning of a long and fruitful twenty-ninth parliament, I hope I can express myself correctly in both official languages before it is ended.

I must add that one of my brothers teaches French and spends long hours correcting my English.

[English]

You can see the problem I have, Mr. Speaker, when I speak of family; we are a family. It is terribly important, especially under the present conditions of this parliament, that this not be forgotten. We are a great conglomerate of many peoples, especially the two founding groups in this country. We have many personalities. I have a view on some of the internal problems between our founding peoples. My view is optimistic. I believe that both sides are learning at last and meeting each other, no matter from what remote part of Canada we may come. We are starting to compare our different cultures and qualities. There are a few dissenters and they should never be encouraged. I think there are a few who are not capable of realizing the great strength and diversity that this kind of background gives to our nation. The personal maturing power, and I mean this most sincerely, of first, tolerance, and then respect, love and the full enjoyment together of this great nation makes this country greater.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fleming: I am convinced that our troubles, our fears and at times the spotty regressiveness, in fact, shows that we are getting there and the sooner the better.

As is traditional in this particular debate, and with Your Honour's indulgence, I want to speak of my constituency. It is enormous in size by population, 140,000. It consists of all races and nationalities. I understand that it is traditional in a maiden speech to discuss the history of one's constituency. I regret that Samuel de Champlain unfortunately travelled approximately 60 miles north-northeast and did not cross through my territory. The Pennsylvania Dutch eventually found their way to my birthplace of Kitchener. William Lyon Mackenzie was busy a little closer on Yonge Street having a few drinks in the tavern with the boys. Unfortunately we had some trouble finding easy access—or the people who lived in York West in that era had some trouble—because they had no means of proper transportation, or proper access. Many years have passed since then, and only in our quarter of metropolitan Toronto do we remain without rapid transit or a transportation system adequate to move us to that part of town should any crisis arise and should the establishment have to be fought. No, sir, we have no great historical monuments in York West except, perhaps, for the town of Weston, a small community now engulfed by suburbia but where you can still go on a Sunday afternoon and hear a band concert, where you can still go into a milk store when you are new in the community, as I was a month or two ago, having lately moved into my constituency, and be told, as my wife was told: "You are new around here; it's good to see you". It is this small town spirit which many of us who come to large cities so much miss.

• (1450)

I wish to refer, also, to the question of redistribution when I refer to the area of Weston. While the Commission, I am sure, and the gentlemen on it are doing their very best to organize and readjust so that there may be proper and fair representation for all parts of our great country, I feel that particularly in the division of my area serious damage has been done to the community of Weston, and I plan to present a brief to them on that subject. They have now decided that the leader of the New Democratic Party will pick up—I am sure we could not call it gerrymandering—will pick up an arm about a quarter of a mile wide and five miles long; he would pick up one half of the community of Weston from the CN rail tracks running northwest to the Humber River. This will divide the community. I do not believe there are that many votes involved, and trust some consideration can be given to drawing the southern boundary of the new riding of York-Lawrence straight across so as to include those people again as part of Weston, all of Weston being a full westerly third of that new riding of York-Lawrence.

I also hope, because I believe we must never forget conditions in the communities which began to build up and create the massive urban areas of today, that it would be appropriate for the riding not to be called York-Lawrence, because it is in a portion of York and that particular main thoroughfare goes through it, Lawrence, but to call it Weston-York-Lawrence. I plan to find another occasion on which to talk further on this subject.

Talking about the history of the riding and its make-up, almost 40 per cent of my constituency will now, with redistribution, become Etobicoke North, another new riding in metropolitan Toronto. Although I hate to see this kind of division it will make it much more manageable and allow the people in all sections—because I am divided three ways and then a little,—a chance to have closer communication. With 140,000 people you just cannot get to everyone, learn their problems, draw the correct conclusions and then express them in this chamber. I might say the same for the new riding of York West which will now take route 401 as the southern boundary, with the Humber River on the west, and allow that to be a much more homogenous riding, thereby allowing the member for that riding, in time, to cope more adequately with a smaller population and their problems.

York West and its constituents have tolerated a great deal in the name of technological development and advancement for our men and women. We have Highway 401 cutting our riding in half, to serve the greatest good of the greatest number; we have highway 400 plunging down from the north so that our people can escape to a healthier environment on weekends. We have the Humber River, once sweet and beautiful, running through our riding, now polluted and stagnant. We have many of those agonies of suburban sprawl. We find an old home where a family has lived for 50 or 60 years now having as a neighbour a 200-unit high-rise apartment. We have firms like Canadian Gypsum, if I can mention a company by name, which now claims to make an effort, at least, to clean up the pollution but which for many years brought suffering to the people of Weston in the absence of action at all levels of government, though at last something is being done. But this is the kind of agony which suburban community must suffer in the name of the greatest good, and so that all people can move back and forth and so that we can advance.

I believe there is a new mood, however. I think it was displayed in my own metropolitan area during our municipal elections last December—one which says it is not necessary to totally sacrifice a few for the greatest good of the greatest number; that solutions must be possible without unmerciful punishment of the few and that in the future the path of progress must always be smoothed by making sure that the environment remains acceptable for all and a pleasure.

The hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Nesdoly) said yesterday that he believed his constituency to be a microcosm. I guess we all, with our commitments to our own people, think our constituencies are a microcosm of what Canada is. I present the same argument. The English language and culture have been adopted by the majority in my constituency, but the English people are, in fact, a minority. They are a good and proud people and I have that same background. I share with them much of the history that we respect together. The second largest group is the Italian people, and I have come to know them as a warm, generous and gracious people. I think we must do more to help them recognize our system and our traditions, to help them communicate better so we can all live happily with our traditions in one united country. I am also proud that the third largest group in my riding is French-Canadian. They represent only 5 per cent, but I pledge to this House that I will work on getting to know both our languages. I hope that by the time the next campaign comes—and please don't rush me—I can speak to them in their own language.

Our Community is made up of all races, Mr. Speaker, something of a rainbow as I think of it—it is black and yellow and red and brown and white. I like to think that we are here and that many young people can come here just now when they are looking for that pot of gold beyond the rainbow. They are not just looking for monetary gain. They are looking for that feeling of pride, of security and safety, of being able to put down roots in the knowledge that one's children will be well educated and that in the final years of one's life one will be able to live with one's friends and neighbours about you. I believe that is why people come to Canada. As their member of parliament I am committed to seeing that their hopes are realized.

I would like to turn now, briefly, to the elderly. In my opinion, the record of the government with regard to senior citizen housing has in recent years been very good. Starts made on senior citizens housing have increased over the years and there have been more senior citizens' dwellings started since 1968 than in all the years since confederation. Nevertheless, there still remains much to be done. It was for this reason I was most pleased to hear the minister say the other day that there will be further action, and real action, taken to assist our senior citizens.

In my riding there is a large amount of Ontario housing, the funds for which, as I understand it, come in large measure from federal funds. Despite this it appears that the federal government does not have much to say as to the manner in which these dwellings are constructed. In my opinion, too often have ghettos been created in which people's pride has been denied them. I hope that in situations where we are contributing substantially to facilities to look after people who need care, we shall try to influence provincial and municipal governments to make sure that such people are made to feel part of the community. It is also important that we show concern about those who live in the buildings, concern that they should be proud of their ability to work, proud of earning their living, proud of, and satisfied with, the work they are doing.

I look forward, as I am sure we all do in this House, to the unravelling of the rest of the plans of the government and the debate over the issues we are all here to confront. I have mentioned the elderly, and the hardship they encounter in trying to live on fixed incomes; I have mentioned those who are unable to work, and their right to live with pride and to lead a meaningful life and to be encouraged to that end. The subject of inflation, as will certainly appear from the figures published this morning, is one of increasing seriousness. We cannot excuse ourselves on the ground that other people have failed to find a solution. I hope that in this parliament we will find new approaches and do what others have not managed to do.

On the issue of unemployment, let me say I look forward to the budget; I know it is coming down soon. And despite the fact that we have the fastest growing labour market in the western world, despite the fact that a great number of jobs have been found, as long as there is a problem, we must do better, and I look forward to our doing so.Let me say again, that we owe a commitment not just to the sick and the disabled or to the elderly; we owe it to all our people, health and happiness for those working and paying taxes as well.

I look forward to a more active role in modern transportation by the federal government. Also, when we talk about modern transportation I should like to make reference to rail services. It is my belief that within our urban areas communications are improving tremendously and we are becoming more and more innovative. However, in improving communications we must not forget the need for communications in our rural areas and perhaps the re-establishment of many rail lines the passenger services of which have been put out of use.

With regard to housing, I should like to make a brief comment on the fact that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has indeed had a commendable record over the past few years. In 1966 there were 134,474 housing starts, and five years later, in 1971, 233,653. This represents a tremendous increase which, translated into dollars, is from $1.6 billion to $4.6 billion. Nevertheless, much more must be done. I was encouraged when the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) said that further action would be taken in this area, and I look forward to hearing about that action from him particularly because of the need for improved benefits and the availability of lower interest loans to people in my constituency.

Having spoken on all the issues with reference to proposals which I find encouraging in the throne speech, there are a couple of personal interests to which I should like to refer briefly. I was employed as a broadcaster for almost 12 years until I had the privilege of becoming a member of the House last October 30. Over that period of time, although I have not fared badly at the hands of any employer, I have become aware of the fact that, incredibly enough, many people who, for the satisfaction of having their voice heard over the air or to bolster their ego, find themselves working a seven-day week, 16-hour day. Under the federal Labour Code this should not be permitted, but these provisions have not been applied to them as they should. At the appropriate time I will raise that matter.

I also have a real interest in the question of the death penalty and its abolition. I have been an abolitionist for a number of years and have been involved in the work of the Canadian Society for the Abolition of the Death Penalty. However, I also have a very real respect for the need of our people to feel secure on the streets, safe from harm. For that reason I intend at a later appropriate time, together with my colleague, the hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), to move an amendment to the legislation proposed by the government, which will call for the total abolition of capital punishment but will also call for a 25-year mandatory incarceration—and I am sure rehabilitationists in this House will rail at this—before any consideration is given to parole.

I think that our first priority at this time—after saying it is wrong, immoral and not a deterrent to take life in our society, and thus justify those who take it illegally—is to show our people that we believe in their security and we will remove their fear. However, I hope that in the not too distant future the House will consider statistics from across the world and from our own country and will perhaps be able to argue with the Canadian public and decide amongst ourselves whether that length of time, in fact and in experience when you become fully aware of all the involvements, is an unreasonable period. Rehabilitationists will argue that it is. However, right now we must allay the fears of our people, and I do not believe anybody wants to be party to putting a rope around a person's neck and taking a human life.

We have exciting days ahead and there is a very special responsibility upon us. Perhaps I do not have the right to say this when I am so new in the chamber, but we all are here to represent our constituencies, with full responsibility to do a job for our people and ultimately for Canada. I hope that we do act responsibly.

Finally, I should like to add my congratulations to those of other hon. members, Mr. Speaker, and I hope, as a freshman member in this arena of democracy, that I can learn from your example. My personal actions will not always be as unbiased or perhaps as unemotional, but I hope that I will be able to earn in this House, by my behaviour, even a small measure of the respect Your Honour has garnered.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak as the representative for York-Simcoe I do so with great humility. My riding covers an area that has sent many distinguished representatives to this House. I refer, for example, to the Right Hon. Sir William Mulock, the Hon. Sir Allen Aylesworth, to a man who became a legend in his own time, Herb Lennox. I would also remind those who now choose to form the government that the Right Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King represented a portion of my riding for a brief time in the 1920s, although he had difficulty holding the seat.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: From 1925 until 1963, the more northern portion of the riding which is in Simcoe County was represented by the Hon. W. Earl Rowe, former Lieutenant Governor of the province of Ontario. To follow in the steps of such gentlemen is indeed a great honour. It is not only a great honour, it is a great challenge.

It has been said that the proper functioning of the House and of any parliamentary system is heavily dependent upon the Speaker of that House. Having read Hansard and having witnessed the operation of this chamber in the last week, I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that in my opinion the House has made a wise choice in choosing you once again its Speaker. In selecting the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) as Deputy Speaker, I feel that an equally good choice has been made. I would also like to comment on certain other officials of the House. I refer of course to our able Clerk, Mr. Alistair Fraser, and to his deputy, Mr. Gordon Dubroy, whose facility to remember the names of members of the House is truly phenomenal.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Both men have been most courteous and helpful to me during these "orientation" days. With such gentleman to guide us and oversee our deliberations, this House will indeed perform smoothly.

I would be remiss if I did not indicate my pleasure at being able to sit in this parliament with so many colleagues form the Progressive Conservative party, in particular our leader, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), to whom we have had the opportunity to listen, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), and the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner). I believe I speak for my colleagues and for virtually the whole House when I say that their addresses were notable and of statesmanlike quality.

May I also add my congratulations to the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, and to members from all parties who have spoken for the first time in the House during this debate. The quality of their addresses was high and I only hope my remarks will approach theirs in eloquence and substance.

It may be helpful to the House if I described the riding which I have the honour to represent. It is a riding which contains some 100,000 people. It stretches for approximately 60 miles from a point north of Toronto to the outskirts of Barrie. Speaking generally, one may say that it lies on either side of Highway 400 going north from Toronto. It includes such urban areas as Stouffville, Aurora, Newmarket, Bradford and Tottenham. It has some of the most beautiful rural countryside in Ontario.

A little over two years ago a major portion of the riding was reconstituted municipally into the region of York. On average it is not a poor riding, nor is it a wealthy riding. In many ways it is an average constituency, reflecting an interesting cross-section of Ontario urban and rural life. Many people both live and work in the riding. There are many more, however, who work in other areas, particularly Toronto, who must commute to and from their place of work.

• (1510)

In the past four years the Trudeau Liberal government has failed in the Toronto-centred region to listen to the people. On behalf of those people, let me tell the government once again, we do not need a second airport at Pickering. We do need, however, federal assistance to facilitate urban transportation, and we desperately need federal action to help lower our housing costs, in particular our building land costs and mortgage interest costs.

Not only does the present government fail to listen to our problems but they appear, at least in the urban affairs field, to act in the most erratic way. They either do studies on studies or they act completely without research. Let me be specific. With no reference to municipal officials in my area, or even to the former Member of Parliament who was then Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), the Pickering airport site and proposal was suddenly announced one morning. It now appears that there was inadequate thought and study before the decision was made. But rather than hoist the whole proposal, the Trudeau government has been trying to cover their tracks by clever public relations.

After starting expropriation proceedings at the request of the former Minister of Transport, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Dubé) ordered a hearing, not on the question of need but, rather, in what way a second airport should be developed. It is proposed that when the expropriation is confirmed there will be a new study into southern Ontario transportation needs, which may or may not confirm that there is need for a second Toronto airport and that the most ideal site for it is Pickering. If the government were honest they would inform this House that the selection of the second airport at Pickering was a political decision. We now find that, having made that decision, they place themselves in a ridiculous position when they try to justify the earlier decision.

For example, while they were reviewing alternative sites for the airport they stated that they did not wish to put the airport in another location that had been mentioned because the noise area of the airport—which I remind hon. members is now proposed to be substantially in my riding—would, in the case of the other proposed site, be over a swamp and they felt that swamp life might be disturbed by the noise from the aircraft. They appear to be more concerned with swamp life than with human life.

The Trudeau government's other approach of studying studies is shown in connection with the institution of commuter rail service in my area and Toronto generally. There have been ten studies to date, including the last one, the Soberman study. For ten years Liberal representatives from my region stated that a commuter train service would be instituted on a permanent basis. As the past election drew near, pressure obviously grew to commence the service. We were informed in June of last year by the then minister of transport that he felt there was in fact a need for commuter train service into our area and that he had authorized the institution of an experimental train—not a permanent one, an experimental one—and he would subsidize the running of that train to the extent of $100,000. Then there was silence. Subsequently, after the election was called, we were advised the train would be starting November 1, two days after the election, but that it would run for approximately five weeks, not indefinitely as was first indicated.

This information was received by the residents of my riding for what it was, a wanton attempt by the present government to buy votes. It was not made clear at the time, however, that the $100,000 referred to by the then minister of transport was simply a numbers game. What he really proposed was that his department would underwrite the losses of the Crown-owned CNR in running the train, but that the extent of the losses would be determined and set by the CNR themselves. How nice a situation—out of one pocket and into another within the same department!

When I asked officials of the CNR how they determined the daily running loss for the train, one official was very explicit; he said, "Well, it is to be run for 28 days. We were to be underwritten to the extent of $100,000, so we simply divided the 28 days into $100,000. That worked out to about $3,600 per day, so that was the charge". It mattered little to the Department of Transport that a private group was able to rent a similar train to run between the same points for $1,800 a day. In any event, the train ran. It was well utilized. The Minister of Transport was asked to extend the service, but I suppose, the election being over, he felt: what is the point? They completed their double bookkeeping and ended the service. As a result, Aurora, which was the terminal point for the first railway in western Canada to run from Toronto—that was in the 1850s—found itself in the 1970s, 120 years later, without passenger train service.

I have dwelt on these two immediate problems in my riding because I feel that parliament should be aware of such specific ineptitudes of the present government, but I have also referred to these two matters because I feel that in Canada today one of the great weaknesses of the present government has been their lack of action on the urgent needs of our urban areas generally.

I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the present government's ineptitude, their lack of planning, their politicking, has not been restricted to my riding alone. It is typical of how this Trudeau Liberal government has ruled the nation for over four years. Their deficiences in handling Canada's inflationary trends, the unemployment crisis, and the maladministration of the unemployment insurance fund, have already been referred to by some of my colleagues. At a later date I hope to speak further on these matters and on the staggering personal income tax load that the Trudeau Liberal government has inflicted on Canadians. This is a load which, when we as individuals have finished paying our 1973 taxes, will mean that Canadians, in the aggregate, in the last five years that Trudeau has ruled this country will have paid more in personal income taxes than was paid in the previous 100 years by all Canadian individuals.

Today, however, I would like to go further in exploring the present government's activity with respect to urban affairs. This is an area where perhaps the Trudeau government is poorly fitted to serve, in that it is a field where people do not understand political orientations. They demand and expect results. The average person believes that he is entitled to adequate transportation to and from work. He believes he is entitled to a reasonably priced home in the type of community where he and his family will benefit from suitable educational, recreational and sociological facilities. In obtaining these objectives he is not interested in becoming bogged down in political foreplay. The legal red tape of federal, provincial and municipal jurisdictions in this area does not concern or affect the average man. He knows only what he sees. He respects concrete proof of government action rather than intangible, abstract promises. To date, however, the Liberal government has given us a large ration of such promises. It has shown little leadership in this field, and I am indeed fearful that the recent jockeying of cabinet posts, with two ministers new to their portfolios attempting to cope with the questions of urban affairs and urban transportation, does not augur well for the future urban dweller in our country.

This is a field of great challenge. It is a field where the federal government could take a lead and do dramatic things which would be well received in this country. The Department of Urban Affairs was formed in 1971 with great expectations. The cost of housing in Canada had become prohibitive. Between 1961 and 1971, lot values increased by 139 per cent in Toronto; in Ottawa they increased by 147 per cent, in Hamilton by 177 per cent, and in the metropolitan Toronto development fringe they shot up by 194 per cent.

No other area on this continent has suffered such an increase in land values. Translated into human terms, which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) says is all that he is concerned with, we find that the average new NHA bungalow in the Toronto area sold for $17,368 in 1961 and could be carried with a minimum annual income of $5,284. Today, however, the average new, detached house in the fringe area of metropolitan Toronto sells for $42,146 and requires an annual income of $16,623 to carry it. The Minister of Finance may not like to deal with statistics, but I assure him these rising shelter costs constitute a human tragedy in our country. The Ministry of State for Urban Affairs has not improved the matter to date. Based on this morning's Statistics Canada figures, we find shelter costs have risen by 6.3 per cent since December, 1971, and they rose by .7 per cent in December alone.

The throne speech itself, and the speech yesterday of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs were much better in form and presentation than in substance. The Minister of State for Urban Affairs is most eloquent when he deals with planning, with conferences and with matters which generally speaking are not wholly within his jurisdiction. But on matters more clearly within his jurisdiction, or those in the jurisdiction of the Minister of Transport, we find that both ministers and the throne speech are much less specific concerning what action is planned to improve urban conditions in this country

Therefore, let me be specific for the benefit of these two ministers and the government. The one-quarter to one-half billion dollars the government plans to spend on the second Toronto airport would be better spent improving urban transportation in the Toronto-centred region. To be more specific, one-quarter of a billion dollars would be the amount of money, roughly, required to cover the entire capital cost of bringing in sufficient commuter train equipment to service 200,000 commuters per day in the Toronto area. I would suggest this would be a much more worthwhile expenditure for the people who live in the Toronto area than the proposed Toronto airport expenditure.

I would also emphasize that if either of the two ministers to whom I have referred had to cope with traffic on the Don Valley expressway and sit for an hour or an hour and a half bumper-to-bumper with little to see other than the little used CNR trackage beside this expressway, there is no doubt that their priorities would change very quickly. There would be better co-operation in respect of the urban matters to which I have referred.

I suggest that the government should in due course appoint a standing committee on urban affairs and housing in order that these matters could be looked into in much greater depth. I would also suggest that innovative ideas should be brought in and an attempt made to try to break the traffic congestion which exists in so many of our urban areas. In this respect I would suggest they at least consider such things as self-drive taxis. This new, slightly unorthodox transit system was recently installed in Montpelier, southern France. The self-drive taxi is an extremely simple proposal to end traffic congestion in downtown areas. The motorist pays a joining fee of approximately $75; with this retainer fee he is entitled to use a fleet of computerized, self-drive cars.

The basic idea is that the motorist drives his car into the centre of town on a high-speed highway, such as Ottawa's Queensway. At each central exit is a parking lot, where he leaves his own car and drives to work in the self-drive taxi which he can later leave at any one of certain specified parking places. He goes home in the same manner. The great advantage to the motorist is the fact that, although the initial principle of self-drive cars is similar to that of a taxi, once the retainer fee is paid the service is cheaper than that of a taxi. The organizers estimate that one self-drive taxi replaces 15 or 20 cars, thus eliminating the major cause of downtown traffic congestion. I mention this simply as an example of the type of innovative measures the Department of Urban Affairs could take in an attempt to relieve traffic congestion in our urban areas.

To this end, I propose to introduce a private member's bill dealing with the establishment of a national urban transportation authority. We believe, and I certainly do, that such an authority is worth consideration by the government in that it would attempt, in all urban areas, to bring together under one authority the administration and operation of airports, harbours and railway facilities. In this way, I feel many of the problems which have been experienced in the Toronto region could be avoided and there would be a much more constructive approach to the needs of urban areas if such regional authorities were in existence.

In conclusion, I would emphasize that while we have great economic problems in this country—and I sincerely hope this House will deal with them at the earliest opportunity—we also have great urban problems. To this end, I would urge my colleagues and friends to the left, who so far have supported this government, to reconsider their position—

Mr. Peters: They are thinking about it.

Mr. Stevens: —because I can assure them that if they had walked the streets of my riding as I did during the past election campaign, they would have been impressed by the fact that voters in at least two out of three homes indicated they had no doubt about the way they intended to vote; they intended to vote against the Trudeau Liberal government. Their only indecision was whether to vote Conservative or NDP.

• (1530)

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, for the NDP now to lend support to the government is breaking trust with many voters who voted NDP in their earnest desire that the Trudeau government be removed from power. I noticed during certain of the NDP "justification" speeches with respect to the present axis between the Trudeau government and themselves that they indicated the Conservatives and Liberals are somehow alike. As a new member of this caucus, I would ask them to reconsider that belief. One day when I was in the chamber they referred to a previous government formed by the party to which I have the honour to belong, and indicated that in their opinion it was not unlike the present government. I would ask them to come up to the 1970s. For example, only 23 per cent of the present members of this caucus were in the caucus to which they referred. On the other hand, over 70 per cent of the members of the caucus across the floor from us were in the caucus of the government that was soundly defeated in the recent election. Ours is a new caucus. Give us a chance and we will produce results.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like, very briefly but most warmly, to underline the congratulations that have been extended to Your Honour on your election to the chair once again. It is good to have you presiding over the proceedings of this House.

Sir, from my point of view the most significant and most useful statement that has yet come to us in this session from the government side of the House was one that was uttered yesterday by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde). It is recorded on page 202 of Hansard for January 11. It reads as follows:

[Mr. Stevens.]

However I can assure hon. members that a substantial old age pension increase will be announced soon, and I hasten to add that it will not be a mere token increase.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, during this past week or so it has been extremely difficult to get precise statements out of the ministers opposite. It was a refreshing departure from that rule of non-disclosure for the Minister of National Health and Welfare to make it clear that there will soon be a measure to provide for a substantial increase in the old age pension.

I also want to commend the new minister on the speech that he made yesterday. I listened to it with interest, and I was pleased to note that he spent practically his entire time dealing with matters which come within the purview of his department. And I was also pleased that, whereas in the last four years we were told time and time again that proposals that we were making could not be considered, yesterday there seemed to be a willingness to listen, indeed a willingness to consider improvements in the whole field of social security.

This morning when I learned that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) was going to take part in this debate, I was naïve enough to hope that he would follow the pattern set by his colleague and that he would tell us of his plans for coping with the problems that come within the responsibility of the Department of Transport. They are many. Hon. members will not be surprised if I mention one in particular, namely, the problem of Canadian National pensions. I had hoped that the Minister of Transport would have something to say about this issue which is of wide concern across Canada today; but no, he chose to spend his entire time on matters completely removed from his own department; indeed, he spent his entire time on a speech which I suggest was a disaster for the party to which he belongs.

However, Sir, I return to the Minister of National Health and Welfare whose speech of yesterday I warmly welcome, and in particular I am glad to sense a willingness on the part of that minister, as revealed in his speech, to consider the problems in the field of social security that need to be dealt with just as soon as possible. With respect to the announced increase in old age pensions, I was pleased that although he said about certain other measures that they would have to wait until after certain federal-provincial conferences, or until after certain studies had been completed, that delay did not apply to the old age pension increase and that this is to be brought forward very soon.

It is because this attitude of greater receptiveness to ideas with regard to social security has been displayed by the Minister of National Health and Welfare that I think it is appropriate to set out in front of him, and in front of other ministers, a range of pension and other problems that are crying for solution. To a very large extent they are calling for solution because in the last four years the government thought they could be pushed under the rug, or pushed off till some date distant in the future.

First of all with respect to old age pensions, and in particular the Old Age Security Act, I want to say to the minister that we will hold him to that promise to make an increase that is substantial and not just a token. Our view—we stated this very clearly in the last parliament and we stated it very clearly in the course of the election campaign—is that the basic pension, the universal pension paid under the Old Age Security Act, should now be increased to $150 a month.

If the government wishes to retain its principle of a supplementary amount on top of that basic pension, we will go along with it, but we insist that there must be a substantial increase in the basic amount of the pension itself. We want it to be $150. We might give consideration to some figure between the present $82.88 and $150, but let the minister not try to fob us off with nothing being added to the basic pension and with simply trying to add an increase to the supplement.

A substantial increase, in our terms, means an increase in the basic monthly pension. And we want that increase to be substantial. And we want it now. As a matter of fact, we want a great deal more than members of the Conservative party were prepared to commit themselves to during the course of the election campaign. When the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) was in Vancouver he was asked, as were other party leaders, by representatives of various pension organizations out there if he would support a basic pension across the board of $150 a month. He said he was prepared to give an increase but he was not prepared to commit his party to an increase up to $150 a month, nor has he done so even yet. Until my friends in the Progressive Conservative party are prepared to state what figure they are prepared to give, I suggest they cease perpetrating their gimmicks that only mislead the pensioners of this country.

• (1540)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I say to the Minister of National Health and Welfare that a priority equal to the need to increase substantially the basic amount of the pension, is the need to lower the eligible age. If the government is not prepared in these few weeks or in this session to adopt completely the program that we have announced, namely, making pensions under both the Old Age Security Act and the Canada Pension Plan available At age 60 to all those who are not in the labour market, at least they should make a start on such a program. A few years ago the government found a way of lowering the pension age from 70 to 65 without doing it all at once. That is something it could do now. The old age security pension and retirement benefits under the Canada Pension Plan could be made available this year at age 64, next year at age 63 and so on until we get down to age 60.

Another move in that direction is to provide that the old age pension is payable to the spouse where the breadwinner is on pension, even if that spouse has not yet attained the age set out in the Old Age Security Act. I noticed yesterday that the Minister of National Health and Welfare referred to the problems of spouses not on pension and to the problems of persons just under the pension age. He did not make a commitment in that area as he did with respect to the amount of the proposed increase, but he referred to the subject and that gives me hope, to know that he is thinking about it. I say to the minister that this is one of the things that must be achieved before this parliament winds up.

Mr. Speaker, when we say that this parliament was sent here to do a job, when we say that we want to see this parliament work, we insist that one of the areas in which it must produce the goods is with respect to the lowering of the eligible age. We would like to see it brought down to age 60 right away under both the Old Age Security Act and the Canada Pension Plan, but at least the legislation must be put on the statute books to get that process started. We place that suggestion before the Minister of National Health and Welfare and before the government as a whole.

Another improvement that needs to be made in the Old Age Security Act concerns the escalation of pensions, which now takes place on an annual basis. Several years ago when Miss Judy LaMarsh, the then minister, first announced the proposal to increase the old age security pension on a basis related to the cost of living index, I complained right away. She tried to throw back at me that this was something we had been requesting for years. I pointed out that this was not the case; we had been asking for pensions to be related to the standard of living, the gross national product, to the wage index, not just to the cost of living index.

We are discovering that even though the government has removed the 2 per cent ceiling on the annual increase, the escalation according to the percentage rise in the cost of living index always leaves the old age pensioners behind. They are going to receive an increase in April, 1973, based on the percentage rise of the consumer price index in 1972 over what it was in 1971. They are behind, and every year as this happens they get further behind. One solution would be a quarterly or monthly escalation, although I do not believe that would really be a satisfactory solution. I think it would cause more complications than it is worth. The real solution is to relate the increase in the old age security pension to the gross national product, to the wage index or any such index that measures the rise in the standard of living, and not just the rise in the cost of living.

So, Mr. Speaker, I say to the Minister of National Health and Welfare that I welcome his attitude most warmly. It came as a pleasant surprise to me. I had thought that the minister was one of the Trudeau backroom boys and that when he got here on the front bench he would be as restrictive and niggardly as the Trudeau government has been in the last few years. For some reason or other there has been a change over there, Mr. Speaker. They are willing to look at things they would not look at last year at all.

When the minister is looking at the Old Age Security Act, I would ask him to look at all the features I have placed before him this afternoon. They are important to the people of Canada, for they do not want this parliament to wind up or get dissolved without action being taken on these important aspects of this important subject—Canada's Old Age Security Act.

By the same token, Mr. Speaker, I call upon the Minister of National Health and Welfare to bring before this parliament improvements in the Canada Pension Plan. Again, I feel that I can make this plea with some feeling of hope because the minister indicated yesterday that discussions are going on with the provinces about ways in which to improve the Canada Pension Plan. The Quebec government has already put the spurs to the federal government by making improvement in the Quebec plan with the result that its benefits are now better than those under the Canada Pension Plan.

I know that federal-provincial discussions are involved and this sort of thing can take time, but such discussion should not take too much time. I submit that one thing that can be done right away is to remove the 2 per cent ceiling from the annual escalation of pensions under the Canada Pension Plan. It should at least be put on a basis equal to that which now applies in the case of old age security, both the basic pension and the supplement. As I say, Mr. Speaker, many improvements can be made to the Canada Pension Plan and the government will have our co-operation in trying to get these improvements through. But right away let us have the removal of the 2 per cent ceiling on the annual escalation of all the benefits under that plan.

I turn now to another area, that of the pensions of retired public servants, including retired armed forces personnel, retired RCMP personnel and the many other categories that come under that general heading of retired public servants. That legislation also needs to be improved, and one of the first improvements that ought to be made—in fact I was hoping that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) would have announced it before now—is to remove the 2 per cent ceiling on the annual escalation.

In the last session of the last parliament the President of the Treasury Board assured me that this would be given consideration. I believe there have been discussions between the government and the staff associations, but nothing seems to have come of those discussions. Time is going on and nothing is being done. Mr. Speaker, it is utterly ridiculous for some pensions to be subject to escalation, at least to the extent that the cost of living goes up, but that other pensions, like those received by retired public servants, are limited to an annual escalation rate of 2 per cent.

May I remind the minister that there are improvements that need to be made with respect to the provisions for early retirement and that something should be done to remove the discrimination against retired members of the RCMP and armed forces personnel. They have to wait until age 60 to get their annual escalation even though, under the most recent legislation, it is possible for certain retired public servants who are under age 60 to get the annual escalation.

The formula respecting the Public Service Superannuation Act also needs to be improved. I think that we as members of this House should not be content with provisions in acts such as those which apply to retired public servants that provide for their widows a pension of only 50 per cent of what the pension of the public servant himself would have been, when in the case of Members of Parliament the pension for the widow is 60 per cent. In my view, the pension for the widow of the public servant should be a lot higher, for the first year or two anyway.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

But there is no defence for providing a 60 per cent pension for our own widows and only 50 per cent for widows of retired public servants.

Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the ear and the attention of the President of the Treasury Board. I know he is concerned about these matters, but I ask him to adopt the same attitude as his new colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare. He should admit that the pensions we are asking for are justified because, somehow or other, there has been a change in this parliament; somehow or other there is no longer in this House a situation in which an arrogant government with an overpowering majority can just say no. We have a government that is interested, as it has to be, in the views across the aisle. I can tell the minister that the views in this part of the House across the aisle are very strong with respect to these pension matters, and we feel that they should be improved right across the board.

• (1550)

I turn now to another facet of the pension question. Just as I was sorry that the Minister of Transport did not deal with matters coming under his purview this morning, so I am sorry that he is not here this afternoon. Whether his presence would make any difference, I do not know. I know, however, that the minister should face the seriousness of the situation regarding pensions affecting employees of Canadian National Railways.

Mr. Benjamin: And of the CPR.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If he does not know it now, he had better face up to the fact that there is a good deal of ferment among Canadian National personnel, both active and retired, about their pension plan. This ferment is evident in a number of areas. However, first, if I may, I wish to speak about those who are retired. There is real concern that the escalation of pensions for those who have retired has not been put on a permanent basis. Pensions have been escalated twice on an ad hoc basis for retired railway workers. In the case of retired public servants, the escalation is now a permanent arrangement. Canadian National pensioners and employees feel that the escalation of Canadian National Pensions after retirement should be put on a permanent basis. They also feel that there should not be a 2 per cent limit to that escalation, the limit imposed in the two ad hoc escalations that have thus far taken place. I think many things need to be done to bring the Canadian National pension arrangements into conformity with what the employees and pensioners feel they are entitled to.

There are some things that ought to be done without delay. The first thing that could be done next week would be to provide for the escalation of CNR pensions to be put on an annual basis and for that escalation to be based at least on actual increases in the cost of living rather than on any 2 per cent ceiling. Every time you hear me making reference to escalating pensions on a basis at least equal to the rise in the cost of living, you will hear me use those words "at least". So far as I am concerned, even that is not good enough, because the result, as I have already said, is that pensioners are always forced to lag behind.

Even at best, even if there were no time lag, all that you do by raising pensions in accordance with the increase in the cost of living is to enable pensioners to continue to exist on the same standard of living that they had at the beginning. In other words, you enable them to continue enjoying their poverty. In the meantime the standard of living of society as a whole has gone up, one of the reasons for that being that these same pensioners helped to bring society to the point it has reached. Because they have played their part they should share, in my view, in the rising standard of living. Therefore all pension escalation should be related to the rising standard of living. Certainly there are two indices that are better than the cost of living index; one is the wage index, the other the rise in the gross national product.

In addition to insisting that we do something for retired CNR pensioners, notably, that we put the escalation on a permanent and more satisfactory basis, we feel that something must be done about the pension plan itself with respect to those still working. The rates used in calculating pensions for those in parliament are out of this world, and I could talk about that—but why stir up hon. members this afternoon? I say that in light of the fact that federal civil servants obtain pension credits equivalent to 2 per cent per year of service and Air Canada employees, as well, get pension credits equivalent to 2 per cent for each year of service, so that an employee after 30 years of service is paid a pension of 60 per cent of the average he earned over a certain given number of years, this formula should also apply to CNR pensions.

At present, however, under the Canadian National scheme the highest figure that applies is 1¼ per cent. Even that does not apply to all present employees in Canadian National Railways. Those who have been there for a number of years still are given a credit of only 1 per cent or 1¼ per cent per year for their earlier years of service. The cry of many Canadian National employees in this country from coast to coast—the government is stone deaf if it has not heard this cry—is for Canadian National pensions to be determined on the basis of 2 per cent per year of service.

The government can give us the usual excuse by saying that the railway company is a Crown corporation and that the government does not interfere with such corporations. We know all the talk to that effect. But we know, too, that when on occasion we have refused to pass a certain bill providing money for the Canadian National, somehow something has happened. Therefore, we say that this government has the responsibility to see to it that this group of people who work for the government in just the same way as those who work for Air Canada work for the government, since Air Canada is a government-owned air line, and in the same way as federal public servants work for the government, is provided with decent pensions, with a pension plan that is similar to that provided to those other groups I have mentioned.

We should also make provision for a number of other changes. I am thinking of the provision for widows. Why is it that we have included 60 per cent in our own Members of Parliament's retirement plan but let 50 per cent widows' pensions be the rule in the case of public servants generally and employees of the Canadian National Railways?

During the past few months meetings have been held in various parts of the country at which certain management persons from the Canadian National Railways have tried to tell those employees that their pension is wonderful. They have even been told that the average pension of a retired CNR employee is higher than the average pension of a retired public servant. You know, that means nothing until you compare the salaries or wages they have been paid over the years, the length of service, and so on. The result has been not to convince those employees that they have the best plan in the country; the result has been to increase the ferment. The men and women who work for the CNR want justice in their pensions. They want the discrimination against them ended, and we insist that there must be action on this without delay.

A moment ago when I started to refer to Canadian National pensions one of my colleagues who used to work for the Canadian Pacific Railway made an interjection. I do not know if it was picked up by Hansard. I waved him down because it was my intention, once I had finished talking about Canadian National, to speak about CPR pensions as well. It is time for the government to start talking turkey with respect to this matter. Do not give us the line that the CPR, because it is a private company, is one we cannot touch. They are in a public business; its employees are serving the public of Canada. They are taking the same sort of raps under the aegis of their employer as are the employees of Canadian National.

It is time for the government to tell the CPR that it must at least match the provisions with regard to pensions that are available to employees of Canadian National Railways. The increase, in some cases 12 cents, 15 cents or 50 cents a month which the CPR paid a few years ago, was an utter disgrace for any company, public or private. This government has talking power with the CPR. So we in this parliament want action on behalf of Canadian Pacific Railway pensioners just as much as we want it on behalf of Canadian National pensioners.

I see my time is running out, Mr. Speaker. Most speeches include a sentence like that. The member hopes that he may persuade Mr. Speaker to be patient. I ask you to be patient for only a minute or two longer.

I am pleased to see the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) in his place this afternoon. I welcome him to this House and I congratulate him on his appointment to his important portfolio. I am one of the members of the House who had the great privilege in the previous parliament of serving on the Standing Committee of Veterans Affairs. Even though we may feel that there is still much to be done, I think it can be said that we did a pretty good job. It is a wonderful committee, in terms of its non-partisanship and its desire to achieve things, and I think we did a pretty good job. Yes, we did pretty well, Mr. Speaker, but there is still some unfinished business. The occupant of the chair at the present time is fully aware that this is so. Notably, there is the question of doing something about the basic rate of disability pensions paid under the Pension Act.

• (1600)

I thank the minister for the answer he gave me the other day, namely, that the report of the special committee that studied the basic rate will be referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs as soon as it is established. I hope this is something that will be dealt with before anything happens to this parliament. This is a piece of unfinished business that must not again go unfinished. The basic rate must be put on a basis consistent with what the plan was when the Pension Act was first set up many decades ago. It was set up on a basis that would be fair to the veterans of this country.

But, Mr. Speaker, I make a special plea to the new Minister of Veterans Affairs to take it as his responsibility in this parliament to see that something gets done by way of substantially improving the War Veterans Allowance Act. Most of the improvements we made in the last parliament with respect to veterans were improvements in the Pension Act and in one or two other pieces of legislation related thereto.

It is also true that we made some increases in the allowances paid under the War Veterans Allowance Act, but the basic approach of that act, that piece of welfare legislation, is that it has a means test which gives the veteran very little advantage over the civilian. This still stands. In fact, during the past four years the slight advantage that was there for the veteran has been narrowed. That is wrong. I do not think the people of Canada like it. If we were still a little closer to the time of the last war, I think there would be very strong opposition to it. I call upon this minister to ensure that improvements are made in the War Veterans Allowance Act, particularly in terms of raising the ceiling on the means test in that act.

I see that Your Honour is about to rise. I shall sit down without having to be told to do so. I simply want to thank the House for listening to me this afternoon. I thank the government for having so many ministers here. I plead with all of them to appreciate the seriousness of the whole pension situation, and to give their active attention to all aspects of the pension problem. I plead with the government, with other Liberal members and with all opposition members not to allow anything to happen to this parliament until we have solved many of the pension problems our people now face. In particular, let nothing happen to this parliament until we have achieved a substantial increase in the old age security pension and a lowering of the eligible age under both the Old Age Security Act and the Canada Pension Plan.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, on the opening of this twenty-ninth Parliament, I think it is proper to offer to you, in my own name and for those Gaspé people you were visiting during your holidays of 1969, our congratulations on the occasion of your re-election as Speaker of the House. The task of the Speaker is not an easy one. However, your talents, experience and knowledge of parliamentary procedure narrowed the choice of a Speaker and I understand why you were unanimously elected. I ask you to believe that we are very proud that you are still with us.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

On the subject of the House Speaker, may I be permitted to remind you of 1926, when the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, then Prime Minister and leader of the Conservative party, was heading the government. He then proposed to have a Liberal as Speaker. He was Sir Rodolphe Lemieux, the member for Gaspé. I wish to underline this fact since it was the first time since Confederation.

On the other hand, for the second time in the history of the House, we have elected a member of the opposition as Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Committees of the Whole. The first one was Mr. Georges H. Boivin who was the member for Shefford, in 1918. The election of the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) is a very happy choice.

I also wish to congratulate the mover and seconder of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne (Mr. Blais and Mr. Blaker). They certainly showed a remarkable ability in doing the task that the right hon. Prime Minister assigned to them.

In the speech which the Governor General pronounced on January 4, there is one excerpt which the Gaspé people will certainly appreciate. I quote:

—the Government will meet with the provincial governments in the five regions of the country, to examine the impact of freight rates on economic development and consumer prices. The railways have agreed to participate in these meetings.

I am grateful to the government for its concern, shared by the provinces, about the impact that freight rates can have on the economic development of some areas removed from the large centres of production and consumption.

In the past, the government has recognized that the very expensive services offered by the transportation industry constitute a real obstacle to the development of several parts of the country. Indeed, studies show that high transportation rates are a real problem because they do not allow for the shipment of goods from producer to consumer at a reasonable price. In order to correct this situation, subsidies are already paid to this industry for some classes of goods and in some areas of the country. As an example, I shall only mention the special subsidies paid for the movement of goods in the Atlantic area, which benefit the Gaspé peninsula.

• (1610)

An area like the Gaspé peninsula should be serviced by several means of transportation. We should therefore not limit ourseves to railroads: highways, air lines and boat services may also be used. By accepting those operations and in agreement with the provinces, we must find better solutions to that communications problem. Indeed, it must be recognized that without government assistance, transportation in the Gaspé peninsula is not very profitable.

In our area, there is not enough goods being moved at present, to provide services at a reasonable cost, the largest item being imported consumer goods.

Rates are one factor that affects transportation. They determine exactly what "economic" distance separates the producing area of a given item from its destination and provide for greater advantages for those areas that export the same items.

In compliance with the Canada-Quebec agreement for the development of the lower St. Lawrence area, Gaspé and Îles-de-la-Madeleine, signed in September 1971, funds amounting to $113,500,000, including a federal contribution of $61,300,000, will be provided for the implementation of an integrated transportation system to facilitate both regional and external exchanges. I can say, Mr. Speaker, that this is a major breakthrough for eastern Quebec.

The contribution of the federal and provincial governments to the improvement of the road network around the peninsula will enable us to kill two birds with one stone; not only it will expediate the transportation of goods by road but also accommodate 800,000 visitors after 1977 in the Forillon national park and the other tourism centres.

Mr. Speaker, while remaining in the field of transportation I wish to thank the Liberal government which, since 1963, showed a marked interest in the improvement of airports and landing strips in Gaspé and the lower St. Lawrence area. Much remains to be done and the future of air transportation in Gaspé will largely depend on government action. It is the responsibility of the department as well as of the Canadian Transport Commission, in co-operation with the province and the municipalities, not only to control the optimum use of grants in the building of airports and to rationalize permit deliveries but also to maintain travellers' safety and guarantee that carrier operations are economical.

Thus air transportation will be able to play its role which is to facilitate travels to people at a reasonable price while permitting a larger number of customers to enjoy the advantages of freight transportation, affording air mail transportation which is not done currently.

Moreover, air traffic can contribute to regional development by offering new outlets to certain products and by facilitating the exploitation of various parts of this region by air transportation and mainly by developing the tourism industry as mentioned in the Speech from the Throne.

The Gaspé Peninsula must constantly face not just the transportation problem, but also a broadcast problem. In fact, in some areas, television reception is far from being satisfactory.

I would therefore like to point out how important it is for the CBC to extend its television services so as to reach the people of the Gaspé Peninsula.

I congratulate the CBC for accepting to extend its services by increasing the number of its stations, and this has been done in Matane in the Gaspé Peninsula. However, it should consider as soon as possible establishing relays that would put at the disposal of the whole population of that region, especially in the difficult areas, an appropriate service. I refer particularly to the mountainous areas of northern Gaspé.

Under the provisions of the Broadcasting Act, the Canadian Broadcasting Company, as a national broadcasting agency, is responsible for providing all Canadians, in both official languages, with adequate television services, and I congratulate the Canadian Radio Television Commission on their having considered the Gaspé peninsula as a pilot area in the development of their program.

Undoubtedly, the CBC, in their master-plan, will exercise the vigilance required to remedy anomalies existing in some areas of the Gaspé peninsula and like the CRTC, the agency will recognize the Gaspé peninsula as a priority area.

The CBC seems to be experiencing financial difficulties it its efforts to fully implement its five-year plan. As mentioned in its 1971-1972 report, its budget is $27 million short. It is suitable, I feel, to suggest that CBC for a few years, should reduce the funds earmarked for programming in order to increase those covering capital investments and infrastructure in every area of Canada where television services are needed.

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne also specifies and I quote:

> In another area of social policy, the field of housing and urban development, the Government proposes the following action, in co-operation with the Provinces:
> —assistance in the provision of low-cost housing and other accommodation for senior citizens
> —home-ownership assistance to low and moderate income families
> —a land assembly program to assist in the creation of new communities and to check urban sprawl

The last paragraph should certainly be especially emphasized as it expresses a very bold attitude. Indeed, one can read in Chapter II of the report by Mr. J. W. MacNeill entitled "Environmental Management" and submitted to the government in 1971 the following excerpt on certain aspects of environmental management, and I quote:

> Throughout the world, value structures and institutions are being challenged as seldom before. A major challenge to both stems from the growing, global crisis of the environment. During the middle decades of the twentieth century mankind has become increasingly aware that life on planet Earth is seriously threatened. Man's exploitation of his natural environment to nurture his economic machine is resulting in unsustainable pressures on that environment. His utilization of artificial environments—the cities, office complexes, factories and homes in which he spends most of his time—is resulting in increasing stresses on him. Population growth, urbanization and industrialization are being propelled by an exploding and unregulated technology, The costs of this process in economic, social, ecological, esthetic and psychic terms are becoming increasingly intolerable.

In Chapter VIII, Mr. MacNeill goes on to say on Canadian Urban Growth, and I quote:

> The salient features of national population trends have been outlined. From this it is evident that Canada is already predominantly urban and will become increasingly more urban. By the year 2000, over 90 per cent of our population will inhabit less than two per cent of our land mass. Moreover, these Canadians will be concentrated into fewer and larger regions. In Part Three we take a more detailed look at the projected pace and polaziration of Canadian urban growth, the possible future dimensions of some urban environmental problems and their significance for the role of government in urban environmental management.

• (1620)

Mr. Speaker, in Table 5 of the book entitled "Environmental Management" are listed the largest urban regions where 90 per cent of Canada's people will reside: Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver, Ottawa-Hull, Edmonton, Hamilton, Quebec City, Calgary and Winnipeg. In order to check urban growth in these areas and in others just as big that are developing, governments should promote the creation of new cities where man's health will not be constantly endangered.

As concerns the building of homes for older citizens, I should like to bring to your attention a few considerations.

In fact, it can be seen that the provincial governments affect much larger credits to the construction of such homes in urban centres than in rural communities. From such a situation, it is clear that the older people called upon to live in these homes will end their lives in centres where pollution reigns supreme, not to mention all the other problems of urban life which they will have to face. No doubt there would be some advantage in building those homes in the countryside, near lakes, beaches, rivers or mountains.

If the governments responsible for the construction of centres for older people provided a more generous contribution, it would no doubt be possible, without getting too far from the hospital services older people require, to build those homes in tourist resorts; in so doing, we would ensure to the people concerned a more favourable environment, while offering them healthier recreation activities. In such places, the retired people could practice light sports, according to their physical condition, even do some gardening, things they could not do in larger centres.

At the present time, the government has to rely on programs such as New Horizons to keep busy the older people living in urban centres, whereas if they were properly settled in places far from the cities, they could work, find recreation and stroll in peaceful and beautiful surroundings, all things essential to the relaxation of the mind.

Mr. Speaker, I should now like to address myself to another subject. On December 27, Canada suffered the loss of a great Canadian. We were all saddened by the death of the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson.

At the opening of the twenty-ninth parliament, both Houses rightfully paid tribute to this former prime minister.

In the House of Commons, the right hon. Prime Minister stated the following:

> In this place he was the initiator and guide of many measures that have contributed to the strength and purpose of Canada—our flag, some of our most outstanding social legislation, the recognition in various ways of the diversity of Canada and of the historic rights of its peoples.

The hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) spoke in these terms:

> To him, Canada was a country to love and to build. He worked sincerely and at great length for the cause of unity in this country.

And the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) stated this:

> Also, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) indicated, it was during his regime that we witnessed the debate on—and it was not always a happy debate—the acceptance of a distinctive Canadian flag.

I shall now quote the leader of the Social Credit party of Canada (Mr. Caouette) who said:

> Mr. Pearson worked for national unity in Canada. He never said anything in the west against the east or in the east against the west. He always tried to convince the Canadian people, whether they spoke French, Ukrainian, Italian, English or any other language, that their first duty was to be genuine Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I knew Mr. Pearson personally, and everyone will agree that he knew how to listen to individual members and give them suitable advice. I remember that in November 1965, when I was defeated in the general election in Gaspé, the Prime Minister called me in his office and talked with me for almost 30 minutes. Needless to say that because of his warmth and his desire to help his colleagues, I have always considered him thereafter as a real father. If I remained in politics, it is as a result of his sound advice.

The Prime Minister who gave to the Canadian people a distinctive flag is no longer with us. All political parties paid a tribute to him, and rightly so for having given a flag to our country.

On February 15, 1965, by royal proclamation, the flag bearing a maple leaf was declared the national flag of Canada. That was eight years ago, and throughout Canada as in friendly countries, this flag is respected. As a matter of fact in 1965, six months after its proclamation, I was a member of the first Canadian parliamentary delegation to enter the Soviet Union. I can assure the house that when we got off the plane at Moscow airport and saw the Canadian flag waving above the air terminal, our hearts burst with excitement. Wherever we went, the Canadian flag was hoisted and we were proud of that gesture on the part of the Soviet authorities. The same thing happened when we visited the other countries of Eastern Europe.

The Department of Public Works spent thousands of dollars for setting up spotlights on Parliament Hill buildings so that Canadians as well as foreigners may see the Canadian flag by night as well as by day.

Mr. Speaker, it is highly regrettable to see that after eight years, Canada's national flag is still without a place of honour in the Senate and the House of Commons.

During the last parliament, the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) introduced, on three occasions, a bill calling for the display of the Canadian flag in both Houses of Parliament, but this bill was never passed. Moreover, several hon. members spoke about it, but the House never took any decision in this regard. I myself spoke to the House leader and to several ministers, but this matter has always been outstanding.

On February 2, 1972, I wrote a letter to the Speaker of the House, expressing our desire to see our flag displayed in the House of Commons and in all committee rooms. The Chairman answered as follows:

> Dear colleague,
> I received your letter of Febraury 2 and I read it with much interest.
>
> As you point out, many of our colleagues suggested that the Canadian flag be displayed not only in the House of Commons but in our committee rooms. This is an excellent suggestion; personally, I am prepared to accept it without reservations. However, such a decision should be taken by the House itself, . . .

... This matter could be dealt with by the Committee on Procedure. I hope that consideration of this matter will be undertaken very soon. Sincerely yours, Lucien Lamoureux.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest, that the Committee on Procedure and Organization introduce as soon as possible in this House a resolution to provide that the Canadian flag be displayed in the House of Commons, where and as determined by the Speaker. Such resolution will be passed without any debate and we shall always be pleased, after it being passed, to quote with pride:

[English]

Pledge of allegiance to the Canadian flag.

To my flag and to the country it represents, I pledge respect and loyalty.

Wave with pride from sea to sea and within your folds, keep us ever united.

Be for all a symbol of love, freedom and justice.

God keep our flag.

God protect our Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in all the legislative assemblies I have visited and that surely you have visited also, the flag of this country occupied a place of honour. Like several of my colleagues I hope that before the 8th anniversary of the proclamation of the Canadian flag the committee on procedure and organization will have introduced a resolution to that effect.

Since the members of that committee will be appointed very soon and so they will keep in mind my suggestion I would like on behalf of my voters in the constituency of Gaspé and on my personal behalf to unfold for the first time in this House the national flag of Canada with the hope that on February 15 next, the members of this House will approve unanimously the resolution to the effect that our flag be placed permanently in this House and in committee rooms.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows that it is irregular to unfold even the Canadian flag at this time.

[English]

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, as I rise on this first occasion to address the House in the throne speech debate I want to add my congratulations to those which have been heaped upon Your Honour by hon. members on all sides of the House. This is a double pleasure for me because, as you know, Sir, your constituency of Stormont-Dundas borders mine, and the distinguished townships of Matilda and Mountain which are in my constituency look to your city of Cornwall as their capital. I am naturally pleased, as well, to see the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) appointed Deputy Speaker. I have known him only a short time, but his reputation preceded him because other members of the House have told me of his wisdom, of his moderation and reason. I am satisfied that during the life of this parliament that will become apparent to all of us.

• (1630)

I do not have to address you, Sir on the subject of the beauties of Grenville-Carleton, the worth of its people and the variety of problems that face them, because as a distinguished member of the bar of Ontario, particularly eastern Ontario, for many years, all these matters will be familiar to you.

I am perhaps unique in this House in that I have very many distinguished hon. members as constituents of mine. I met today at lunch, for instance, the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), who tells me he lives there. I notice things are rather quiet in the constituency, so I imagine he is behaving himself. The minister of urban affairs is a constituent of mine; he lives along the Rideau River. On behalf of all those who live along the Rideau River in my constituency I would remind him that as the river goes by his door he has a great job of work in cleaning up that mess in order that it can be enjoyed by him and all others. The hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo (Mr. Marchand) and the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Poulin) are constituents of mine. I am pleased to say that on the street on which I live in Parkwood Hills there lives the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). In fact, on many occasions prior to entering this House I have pushed the car of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre out of the snow. When I hear of that organic understanding, I wonder if my action was wise.

I want to say that I thoroughly enjoyed the performance, and I must call it that, which took place in the House on Tuesday night by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson). I must confess I did not learn very much about economic expansion in this country, but I enjoyed his speech because it was laced with wit and wisdom. If any hon. member is prepared to move a motion that he be granted an Oscar for that performance, I am prepared to second the motion. For all of the good fun, there was one significant statement that lingered with me when I left the chamber. That was his statement about the right and, indeed, the duty of a member of this House to speak for the people he represents and for his constituency. So, Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak about these matters for a few moments.

In the southern part of my riding along the St. Lawrence there is an industrial belt, the prosperity of which depends to a great extent on the actions that are to be taken in this House by the government in fields of taxation, economic expansion and the national economy generally. In between that area there is a large urban area to the north; there is an agricultural community that suffers all the problems of marketing and diminishing income that plague the agricultural community everywhere in Canada. In addition to that, it was beset this year by weather problems of an adverse nature and it did, I am sorry to say, suffer from the inadequacies of remedies that this government and the present minister's predecessor were prepared to recommend to assist the farmers who were in need.

Throughout the whole area there are small businessmen in small towns who are waging their own war of attrition against shopping centres, chain stores and other huge operations, and only time will tell how they can fight that battle and whether or not it will be won.

In terms of influence, whether in Prescott, Nepean or along the Rideau River which I mentioned, the overriding influence on the lives of the majority of people in my riding is that of the federal government, which happens to be the largest employer. Whatever this government or any other government decides to do or not to do has a direct bearing on the quality of life of most of the people in the constituency.

In the throne speech the government has indicated that we will be asked to consider amendments to the Public Service Staff Relations Act and the Public Service Employment Act. I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the President of the Treasury Board, who is in the House, that I welcome that news. However the government may protest to the contrary, I am sorry to say it is a commonly held opinion that the government's record in this field is not without blemish. I join the staff associations in welcoming this intention of action that is long overdue. I hope when these amendments are presented to the House they will adequately deal with all the subjects these associations have laid before government on many occasions.

Without going into any detail at this time, I hope there is an expansion of those matters which can be the subject of negotiation and arbitration between employees and employer. I hope there will be reconsideration of the whole process of arbitration to ensure that it is expeditious, just and trusted. I hope this expansion will lead employees all over Canada to turn their backs upon the strike weapon and look to trusted tribunals for a way out of disputes between employers and employees.

I trust that the legislation will contain reconsideration of the whole field of managerial exclusions to ensure that they are reasonable and that to the greatest extent public servants in Canada will have access to their staff associations. I hope the areas of negotiation will be broadened to include matters in respect of pension plans, life and health insurance plans, rules on promotion, lay-off, transfer and probation. All these things are important to the people of Grenville-Carleton and to their families and, following the advice of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, I intend to speak on them at the appropriate time.

I am bound to say that with all other public service matters, the vast majority of the people of Grenville-Carleton are concerned about the policy of bilingualism as it applies to the public service. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) took pains in the opening of his speech on Tuesday night to remind us that institutional bilingualism is not to be confused with individual bilingualism. I was delighted to hear the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton vindicate me in the position I have taken with regard to the implementation of the Official Languages Act at every meeting throughout this past campaign.

I am pleased that the minister's remarks in respect of fair, humane and a new, flexible approach to the implementation of bilingualism in the public service are to be honoured. I was pleased to note that the Minister of Finance supported my view that the program should contain safeguards, and it does not contain them now, that would ensure that no career public servant of either language group would suffer penalty or hardship in our earnest efforts to implement a most difficult program.

I want to remind you and the members of the government, Mr. Speaker, that when a voice is raised against thoughtless and heavy-handed methods of implementation—and that is what we have in this country—that ought not to be twisted in the mind of any member of the cabinet into an implication that the voice is raised against the principles of the Official Languages Act. I ask the government not to confuse an attempt at a dialogue with destructive criticism.

Every public servant I met during the campaign—and I met thousands—supported the principles of the Official Languages Act. I met very few, however, who appreciated the attitude of the government in the matter of implementation—let that be clear. I heard about it, and I wager that the Minister of Finance heard about it. I wager that the President of the Treasury Board heard about it, and I wager that the Minister of Finance's ears are still burning over what he heard during that campaign. There was almost universal distrust, when there ought not to have been. There was anger, when the government could have fostered understanding. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), I am sorry to say, did nothing to allay that anger when he came into my riding at the invitation of my opponent and said, "If you don't like it, get out of the public service".

Mr. Speaker, I also heard another line, familiar to me, that came out of the speech of the Minister of Finance last Tuesday. He said:

• (1640)

I have little patience with those who insist they are in favour of bilingualism in principle but then proceed to engage in destructive criticism of almost anything beyond token efforts to put this into practice.

That is familiar, because the Prime Minister came into my riding and said he had no patience with those who merely paid lip service to the principle of the act. I ask the government not to confuse a request for reason, moderation and simple justice with lip service. I ask them to ensure that in whatever they do to cure any inequities for one group of Canadians, they do not begin to inflict inequities on another group. I say that because it is also within the true intent and spirit of the Official Languages Act. The act was meant to give equality of status to both our official languages. I am interested in ensuring that there is also equality for the people who work in those official languages in the public service of Canada.

I put the matter this way, Mr. Speaker, as simply as I can: public servants want to be hired and promoted on their own merit; public servants want a legal guarantee that the Pearson pledge will be honoured; public servants do not want favours, they want fair play.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: These are the basic principles that ought to be embodied in anything we are asked to confirm in this parliament.

The Minister of Finance also said that no party has a monopoly on national unity. I want all hon. members of the House to understand that I agree with him, but I also want to remind him and the House that national unity is a two-way street, and I suggest that he remind the Prime Minister.

The whole question of language training is important to Canada and I am glad to have the opportunity to speak on it in the throne speech debate. In the short time available to me, I want to say that I hope the government will reconsider the whole program of grants to the provinces for second language training. There is no doubt that the place to start language training is with the young, and there is equally no doubt that this will be much more effective than taking an older man or an older woman and attempting to teach them a second language. But the shot ought not to be scattered and perhaps we should consider, at least at the outset, the concentration of those funds within the bilingual districts of Canada, as a real beginning. There ought to be adequate research to identify real and realizeable targets, the measurement of the effectiveness of language training programs and the lowering of teacher-student ratios.

In this whole field, the stressing of impossible deadlines ought to be thrust aside and we ought to move in such a way that in a generation from now—I do not say 100 years from now, although the Prime Minister always talks about 100 years from now—those who are children now will be able to communicate with each other in both our official languages.

The whole question of the national capital of Canada is one with respect to which there was no reference in the throne speech. I regret that, because I believe it is of singular importance to the country, not only from the point of view of those things that I have been discussing but also from the point of view of people who live in the national capital area. There can be no doubt that there is no body of the federal government that has a more profound effect upon the life and growth of the Ottawa area.

I believe that the time has come to review the operations of the National Capital Commission in the development of this area and with respect to its relationship with other governments in the area. I hasten to point out that I do not intend us to embark on any grand inquisition of the National Capital Commission—far from it. But it is a fact that there has been no large-scale review of it since 1956.

In recent years the role of the NCC has changed. At one time its predecessor was the builder of highways, the maintainer of roads, and also the maintainer of flower gardens. Today the NCC has moved from that primitive stage to be a major force in the life of this area. In that same period of time the local municipal institutions have also changed; there are now large and powerful regional municipalities on both sides of the Ottawa River.

The NCC plans and arranges for the provision of large parkways and other works that affect the whole thrust of the planning and development of the area. It owns or administers government installations and buildings that affect the revenue picture of the local municipalities. It owns the largest tract of open land, the green belt, through and around the city of Ottawa and the townships of Nepean and Gloucester.

It has made commitments in sewer and sewage treatment installations, and in other matters, and thereby influences development both in the public and private sectors. It owns vast areas of parkland. In short, its influence on the Ottawa area, on the city of Ottawa, the townships of Nepean and Gloucester and the cities of Vanier, Hull and the Gatineau region, is immense. I believe the time has now come, in view of the changing operations of the commission, to examine thoroughly its structure and operations.

Perhaps now we ought to explore whether there should be representatives of the local or regional governments on the National Capital Commission. This is something that was tried at one time and abandoned. Perhaps it ought to be re-examined again in these new circumstances. Perhaps we ought to see if there are any consultative processes that will permit a closer relationship between the NCC as the municipal arm of the federal government and the local municipalities in this area.

What is the future of the green belt in the next 20 years and how will it affect development, if at all? Is there a green belt agricultural policy? Can we make it into a model agricultural area for the whole of Canada? How will it affect the development of single and multiple family dwellings, of commercial and industrial development and all the problems of servicing such development? Is there any way in which the multicultural nature of the country can be focused and emphasized in the national capital area? It is not now. It would be very healthy if it were emphasized.

What is the real role of the NCC in the development of a transportation system for the national capital area, which so far as my township alone is concerned has grown from a population of 2,000 to 70,000 in a period of 22 years? Ought the National Capital Commission to be represented on a national capital transportation commission to serve both sides of the river? I am sure there are many answers to these questions and, indeed, many more questions.

A review by a joint committee of this House and the Senate such as was undertaken previously, or by a committee of this House alone, would provide real answers, with an opportunity for public input, and input from the members of this House, from planning organizations, from farm organizations, from ratepayers' and community associations, from the municipalities generally and, indeed, from the government itself with respect to its role. I am satisfied that the commission and its staff would welcome such an inquiry and I urge the government to consider this matter among its priorities.

It is Friday evening, Mr. Speaker, and I have occupied the time of the House enough. I want to thank you, Sir, and through you my colleagues, for the attention given to this my maiden speech.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate you on your re-election as Speaker of the House of Commons. As it is just a few minutes to five o'clock, I wonder if the House would be disposed to call it five o'clock and allow me to retain my position in the debate. If that were done, I would be happy to call it five o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: The suggestion has been made that we now call it five o'clock. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday morning next at eleven o'clock.

At 4.51 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL—PROPOSED NEW RUNWAY—ENVIRONMENTAL STUDY—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask the unanimous consent of the House to move the following motion, under Standing Order 43, of urgent and pressing necessity, namely, the failure, as yet, of the government to make public any environmental impact study for consideration at the expropriation hearings commencing Wednesday, January 17, 1973, relating to the proposed new runway at the Vancouver International Airport. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Fraser East (Mr. Patterson):

That this House direct the Ministry of Transport to immediately file with the hearing officer any and all environmental impact studies relating to the effects of the proposed new runway at Vancouver International Airport and to make the same available to the objectors who are appearing at the said hearing commencing Wednesday, January 17, 1973.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion presented to the House. Under the terms of Standing Order 43 it requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put.

EFFECT OF COURT JUDGMENT ON RIGHT OF PROVINCES TO LEGISLATE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I seek leave to move a motion in view of a decision of a county court judge in Ontario which challenges the right of a provincial government to legislate aspects of environmental control. I propose to move, with the unanimous consent of the House, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser):

That this house requests the Attorney General of Canada to make a formal reference on this matter to the Supreme Court of Canada under the appropriate provision of the Supreme Court Act.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal. It requires the unanimous consent of the House under the terms of Standing Order 43.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROCEDURE RESPECTING INTRODUCTION OF PUBLIC BILLS ON ORDER PAPER

Mr. Speaker: May I refer to the practice which has arisen in recent years with regard to the introduction and first reading of public bills. On today's order paper there are listed some 120 bills for introduction by private members. It was not practical or possible for the Chair to review the provisions of each of those bills. May I therefore suggest to the House that we adopt the procedure which was agreed upon in recent sessions, namely, that we proceed to the introduction and first reading of those bills so that each may be scrutinized between now and its being called for second reading in order to allow the Chair to consider whether there is any defect in the bills in respect of the practices and usages of the House.

I suggest that by unanimous consent all the public bills listed in the names of private members for introduction on today's order paper be deemed to have been introduced, given first reading and ordered to be printed, and to stand for second reading at the next sitting of the House, subject of course to a subsequent examination as to the regularity of each bill. Is the procedure to which I have referred agreed to by the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

TABLING OF GOVERNOR GENERAL'S WARRANTS

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the unanimous consent of the House to revert to motions in order to table the Governor General's warrants as requested last Friday by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen).

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Speaker.]

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FINANCE

MEETING OF FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL MINISTERS—REQUEST FOR PUBLISHING OF AGENDA—PRIORITY ITEMS—CO-ORDINATION OF CAPITAL BORROWING

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance when he will be publishing or making public the agenda for the proposed meeting between himself and the provincial treasurers or ministers of finance. Would he also indicate to the House today what are his own priority items that he will propose to the meeting for discussion?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would be prepared to publish that agenda when I am satisfied that the provinces are willing to have that done and have agreed to the various items on the agenda. Speaking in terms of my own priorities for discussion, I would want a thorough canvassing of the economic situation of the country, of the fiscal position of the federal government as we see it, and of the provincial governments as they anticipate those positions to be during the course of the calendar year and next fiscal year. There will be an opportunity for the chairman of the Economic Council of Canada to appear and discuss the ninth annual review, with the 15 indicators that he sets as informal targets for the country. There will be an assessment of the winter works program announced by the federal government, with particular emphasis on capital projects. I could outline the whole matter, but my priorities are the economic and fiscal situation of the country.

Mr. Stanfield: I assume the minister will be discussing also the matter of co-ordination of borrowing abroad during the coming year. I ask the minister whether he proposes to go further than that and whether he will be canvassing the possibility of establishing guidelines or some actual terms of agreement or understanding with regard to the co-ordination or phasing of large capital projects over the next four or five-year period? I am speaking of such projects as James Bay and others that might involve large demands upon foreign markets and might have an important effect on the fluctuation in our dollar.

• (1110)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I understand the import of the hon. member's question. As a matter of fact, at the meetings I held with the provincial finance ministers during the month of June I impressed upon them the need to orchestrate and properly co-ordinate capital requirements across the country, coupled with an effort to persuade the provinces to seek their financial requirements within the Canadian capital market where possible. At that time I was able to obtain from the provincial governments an agreement to constitute a centralized information centre so that the federal government and the provinces will know at one central point the requirements of the provincial governments, preferably here and, if necessary, abroad. Maturing that information centre into a co-ordination centre is something I have not been able to achieve, but it might be well worth raising the matter again this Thursday and Friday.

Mr. Stanfield: Does the minister propose to go beyond the current year in terms of information and has he taken any steps yet or does he propose to take any steps at the upcoming meeting to establish an information centre, let alone a co-ordination centre, with regard to a longer phase period such as four or five years involving large upcoming capital projects?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, a rather thorough analysis is now being conducted within the Department of Finance and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources as to capital requirements, particularly for energy resources, during the next decade and thereafter. I am not sure whether at this stage I would want to bring that into its co-ordinated phase with the provinces.

MEETING OF FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL FINANCE MINISTERS—DISCUSSION OF MEANS TO RELIEVE TAX BURDEN ON RURAL RESIDENTS

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. Will the minister be seeking jointly with the provincial ministers of finance means of relieving the tax burden on rural people? I ask this in light of the fact that the number of people employed in agriculture dropped by 31,000 in the recent 12-month period.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that is certainly a relevant consideration. I would think the terms of reference of the meeting are wide enough for that to be brought up.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South on a supplementary.

Mr. Lewis: No, Mr. Speaker. My question is not supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we might have a few supplementaries and then recognize the hon. member for York South.

MEETING OF FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL FINANCE MINISTERS—INQUIRY AS TO PROPOSALS RESPECTING ESTATE AND CAPITAL GAINS TAXES

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Minister of Finance. Can the minister indicate whether he will be making any specific proposals at the impending federal provincial conference with regard to estate tax and capital gains taxes on farm lands and small businesses in order to promote some equity and consistency in these important matters?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I can be as specific as the hon. member would like.

MEETING OF FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL MINISTERS—POSSIBLE REDUCTION OF PERSONAL INCOME TAX IN RESPONSE TO QUEBEC REPRESENTATIONS

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance.

In the course of this federal provincial conference, does he intend to give a precise answer to the request that the Premier of Quebec has made to the federal government to set up a coordinated program of tax reductions so as to avoid an increase in personal income tax and in borrowing from external sources?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, of course I shall answer the letters from the Quebec Premier and the proposals from Quebec Finance Minister Raymond Garneau. Their argument is almost the same as that put forward by representatives of the Ontario government on the whole question of distribution of taxation sources. At any rate, this item will be formally put on the agenda.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put another supplementary to the Minister of Finance.

Does he feel that there should not be any increase in personal income tax this year?

COMMUNICATIONS

BELL CANADA RATE INCREASE APPLICATION—INQUIRY AS TO OPPOSITION BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. Last Friday my colleague, the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore, inquired of him whether the federal government was going to join the Ontario and Quebec governments in opposing the applications of Bell Canada for further increases in their rates. In view of the hon. member's question, may I ask the minister whether he has done so, and whether the federal government is now prepared to make representations to the Canadian Transport Commission against the Bell application for increases?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is yes and to the second part, no.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: I have a very short supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

—yes and no in the same answer, that is good.

[English]

May I ask the minister to tell the House whether the government has considered the matter of these gouging increases sought by Bell Canada, and is his decision not to make representations to the CTC the result of his agreeing with the Bell applications?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, since my answer was so brief, I realize the hon. member has not understood it. He asked me: Is the matter under consideration? I answered: yes. Then, he asked: Has the consideration of this matter been completed and what decision has been arrived at? To this last question the answer is no.

Mr. Lewis: I accept these answers, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

May I ask the minister whether he could, for the moment, cease being semantic and inform the House whether he is seriously considering making representations to the CTC on this important matter, or whether he is merely answering "yes", that he is considering, in order to have an answer to a question that may be uncomfortable?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga): I never give such answers, Mr. Speaker, because I never find a question uncomfortable; only answers can be so.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I believe there are a few supplementaries that hon. members wish to ask the Minister of Finance relating to the first matter raised.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO DIFFERENT APPROACH TO MONETARY AND FISCAL POLICY IN LIGHT OF PORTER COMMISSION FINDINGS

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'appelle-Moose Mountain): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question to the Minister of Finance is this. In view of the negative findings of the Porter Royal Commission in connection with advice submitted to ministers of finance by the financial advisers of the government, and in view of the consistent record of the government since that royal commission report was made, may I ask whether it is the intention of the government to adopt a completely different approach to monetary and fiscal policy in line with that negative report? I am referring specifically to the theory of potential budgeting as opposed to the restrictive budgeting which has been followed during the last 25 years.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): The hon. gentleman and I could engage in a debate at some time about the theory of the Porter Commission and full employment budgeting.

TARGET FOR RATE OF INFLATION

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is also to the Minister of Finance. Bearing in mind the close relationship between United States and Canadian economic policies, and the announcement last week by the United States government that they were going to aim at a 2½ per cent rate of inflation on a year to year basis in 1973, could the minister tell the House what rate of inflation is being aimed at in our policy making?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt that the question as asked by the hon. member is in order.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

EFFECT OF COURT JUDGMENT ON RIGHT OF PROVINCES TO LEGISLATE—REQUEST FOR REFERENCE TO SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice arising from my earlier intervention under Standing Order 43. Will the minister consider the implications of a decision by an Ontario county court judge, which challenges the constitutionally of environment legislation in Ontario and, of course, will have effects in other provinces, and will he consider making an immediate reference to the Supreme Court of Canada in order that the matter may be settled and the public concern alleviated?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it will certainly be my intention to consider the impact of this decision and to consult with my colleague, the Minister of the Environment, and with the provincial ministers. I also agree that if a vacuum were seen to exist in this extremely important field, such action as a reference might be desirable, although in the ordinary course the better practice would be to allow the case to proceed to the court of appeal. As I say, if a vacuum existed a different course of conduct might be required.

MEETING OF FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL MINISTERS—INQUIRY AS TO OUTLINING OF FEDERAL CONTINGENCY PLAN FOR WAGE AND PRICE CONTROLS

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. Can he tell the House whether he will be outlining to the finance ministers' meeting later this week the contingency plan on wage and price controls that the Prime Minister referred to last Friday?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

BANKRUPTCY ACT

PRESENTATION OF AMENDING

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

In view of the promise made to us in the House many years ago—I raised the matter on many occasions—of a thorough reform of the Bankruptcy Act, could the hon. minister tell us whether a really thorough reform will be carried out, and not merely "reformettes" such as we have had so far?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are working on such a reform in the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the government will decide when we can introduce this new bill in the House.

[English]

Mr. Baldwin: We have been waiting three years.

OLD AGE SECURITY

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO INCREASE BENEFITS

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare based on his speech last Thursday which I am still carefully analysing. Can he say whether the proposed "non-token" increase in the old age pension will be brought forward in the House before the dominion-provincial conference of welfare ministers, and can he indicate what "non-token" really means?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr.Speaker, the increase referred to will be put before the House long before the federal-provincial conference scheduled for April.

[English]

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, can the minister indicate whether the legislation is now ready and when he intends to put it on the order paper?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: This legislation will soon be brought before the House, Mr. Speaker. I think that pensioners and older people will be very happy with the results.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION TO INCREASE ALLOWANCES AND DISABILITY PENSIONS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the fact the increase in the cost of living has an effect on the fixed incomes of veterans receiving war veterans allowances and disability pensions, and in view of the fact there was no mention in the throne speech in respect of veterans, will the minister advise the House and the country what plans he has for legislation on behalf of this segment of our society?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can inform the hon. member that when we deal with the other legislative item in respect of pensions it will be related as well to veterans legislation and their pensions will be increased accordingly.

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCES—REQUEST THAT ANY INCREASE NOT BE CHARGED AGAINST SOCIAL ASSISTANCE PAYMENTS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question I should like to direct to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact some veterans with fixed incomes and large families have had to resort to social assistance to supplement their incomes, would the minister bring forth for consideration at the federal-provincial conference the suggestion that increases in war veterans allowances should not be charged against social assistance payments?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the whole question of social benefits will be reviewed. We are considering a complete review of the whole social security system with the provinces and I am sure the problem raised by the hon. member will be discussed at those conferences.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the hon. member for Calgary North for one or more supplementary questions and then the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST THAT PRIORITY BE GIVEN TO ECONOMIC MEASURES OVER CAPITAL PUNISHMENT DEBATE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, in light of the answers given by various ministers in respect of pension remedies to assist people at a time of high cost of living, continually increasing from day to day, would the Prime Minister consider setting aside the debate on capital punishment as a priority and take up the economic measures so important to the livelihood of Canadians?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I may have missed the meaning of the hon. member's request, but I will look at his question. For my own part, I would find it difficult to answer the question without knowing whether he wants to have the capital punishment debate first or the economic debate.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the Prime Minister did not understand my question. I know he was working on something and I do not object to that, but I did put the question very clearly to him. In light of the fact that a reading of the order paper would indicate that the capital punishment debate would appear to take priority over economic issues and measures such as pension legislation to assist people to cope with the high cost of living, will the Prime Minister set aside the priority of the debate on capital punishment in favour of economic measures to assist those people who need assistance?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, the hon. member knows that the order in which measures appear on the order paper is not necessarily that in which they will be called. We will let the House know in advance, through the House leader, in what order they will be proceeded with.

Mr. Woolliams: I am not getting the answer, Mr. Speaker, and I think I should have the right to put one further question. In light of the fact the Prime Minister is the head of the government, and no doubt plans are being laid as to what measures will have priority, would he not tell the House that the priority of the debate on capital punishment will take second place at least to those economic measures that have been discussed with his ministers today?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I certainly could not tell the House that because I do not know if, in conceptual terms, this is a correct way of putting it. The two questions are extremely important. I do not think that the issue of capital punishment is of lesser importance.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: That is the point; some of us do.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, the question of knowing whether a man should be hanged or not is not of lesser importance to this government.

GRAIN

AGREEMENT WITH RAILWAYS RESPECTING DEPRECIATION CHARGES AND MAINTENANCE COSTS FOR HOPPER CARS

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of the fact that a number of hopper cars for moving grain are now out of service, can he tell the House whether an agreement has been reached with the CPR and the CNR on depreciation charges and maintenance costs for these cars, whether the railway companies will bear these costs, and also inform the House of the type of contract agreed upon?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Yes, Mr. Speaker, an agreement was reached between the railways and the Canadian Wheat Board. I think the simplest thing would be for me to make that agreement available to the hon. member.

Mr. Gleave: Can the minister also inform the House whether he has an assurance that the CPR and the CNR will maintain their normal numbers of boxcars and other rolling stock in service so that the hopper cars will be in addition to what normally would be in service for the movement of grain?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member will find that there is a clause in the agreement covering this issue.

INQUIRY AS TO TRANSFERRING OF CANADIAN BOXCARS TO UNITED STATES TO FACILITATE U.S. SHIPMENTS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, can the minister tell us whether or not, during the recent crisis in the United States as a result of the shortage of U.S. boxcars to move all shipments of grain to ports for its overseas customers, Canada was requested to supply boxcars, and did Canada do so?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, so far as I know there was no question of Canadian boxcars being made available, although I would like to double-check that. What I can tell the hon. member is that for the purposes of grain movement the railways have been supplying cars at the times and in the volumes essentially required by the Canadian Wheat Board. That fact is demonstrated by the other fact that exports from this country this year are running ahead of last year, even though last year was an outstanding record year.

Mr. Korchinski: May I ask the minister whether, if there is no formal agreement, there is an understanding between the two countries that in the event that problems such as this arise each country will help the other in a crisis?

Mr. Lang: I know of no such agreement, Mr. Speaker.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON POSITION TO BE TAKEN BY CANADA AT LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of the Environment and Fisheries. In view of the importance, particularly to eastern Canada, of the forthcoming Law of the Sea Conference, can the minister tell the House whether he intends to make a statement shortly on the nature of the government's preparation and the positions to be taken by the government at that conference?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): I might say yes, Mr. Speaker. I might also add that there is a meeting in Vancouver where Canada is hosting discussions with all fishing nations on the basic policy approach that we might take at the next Law of the Sea Conference.

Mr. Carter: Can the minister tell the House whether representatives have been selected to attend the conference, and whether or not he will be consulting with the fishing industry in the various provinces on the selection of representatives?

Mr. Davis: The answer is yes to both questions, Mr. Speaker.

DATE OF LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the constantly declining fishing resources off the Atlantic coast, as evidenced by the recent ban on east coast whaling, can the minister indicate whether a firm date has as yet been set for the discussions which will be held at the Law of the Sea Conference?

• (1130)

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. My understanding is that there will be a meeting in 1973—I will get the date if it has been announced—followed by further meetings in 1974, but there is a definite agenda now agreed upon.

FOOD PRICES

REPORTED CONSULTATION WITH INDUSTRY EXECUTIVES ON FEASIBILITY OF STUDY PRIOR TO ESTABLISHMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Harry Olaussen (Coast Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Minister of Finance. In view of an article that appeared in the Financial Post on December 9, 1972, would the Minister of Finance inform the House whether he and officials of his staff sounded out food industry executives for opinions on the feasibility of a study of food prices in November and December of last year and, if so, could he inform the House of the outcome of those soundings?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would have to look into that.

Mr. Olaussen: Would the minister inform the House whether he considered that such an approach to the food industry well in advance of the announcement of the proposed establishment of the food prices committee in the Speech from the Throne would have the effect of accelerating industry decisions to increase prices?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will recognize that that question is debate.

DISCUSSION WITH LABOUR AND CONSUMER ORGANIZATIONS PRIOR TO ESTABLISHMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Could the minister inform the House whether, in addition to discussions with the food industry, the minister also had discussions with labour and consumer organizations regarding the establishment of a committee to look into food prices?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): So far as I know, Mr. Speaker, no advance notice was given to any sector of the economy, but I make it a practice to stay in touch with the Canadian Labour Congress and the Consumer Association of Canada on the general economic posture of the government.

IMMIGRATION

PROHIBITION OF APPLICATIONS FOR LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS BY VISITORS—TREATMENT OF THOSE ALREADY IN COUNTRY

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact it is becoming quite obvious that many people who sought a home in Canada are now undergoing severe hardship as a result of the department's announcement of the sudden cut-off date, which I believe was November 3, is the minister now prepared to indicate to the House and to those who are suffering unduly that he is prepared to approach this matter in a compassionate and humanitarian manner?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, if the question was addressed to me, I am sorry but I did not hear the opening comment. Would the hon. member kindly repeat it?

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I will put my question more briefly. Is the minister now approaching the problem of those who are suffering as a result of the cut-off date of November 3 in a compassionate and humanitarian way? I ask him this question because it appears to me that many people sold all their possessions in order to come to Canada and as a result of the department's edict they are now suffering unduly.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I would hope that I would approach any of these matters in that fashion. It is a very difficult problem that faced us. I cannot really offer a great deal of solace to the large number of people who came to Canada and were caught by the removal of section 34 of the act. We have indicated that in absolutely clearcut cases of undue hardship we will look at the problems of these people compassionately, but I do not think we can look at this matter in terms of thousands. Indeed, there is some contradiction in the approach in the case of those people who spent all their savings to come here as visitors in the first place and then applied for landed immigrant status.

Mr. Alexander: There may be a contradiction, but I would like to advise the minister that these people were taking advantage of the law that was in effect then. Notwithstanding that, may I approach the matter in another area of some concern. I refer to students who came to Canada on student visas and who will be graduating in June this year. Will they be affected by the edict that was handed down on November 3? In other words, are the students who have been here for the past four years going to be classed as visitors and therefore be caught in this trap?

Mr. Andras: I would have to examine the second question very carefully. It depends very much on the category in which they declared themselves to be when they came to Canada. If they came as visitors and are now applying for landed immigrant status, the revocation of section 34 is probably applicable.

PROHIBITION OF APPLICATIONS FOR LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS BY VISITORS—NUMBERS INVOLVED AND SUFFERING HARDSHIP

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether he has conducted any investigation to ascertain how many people who came here as visitors were caught in this way, to what extent actual hardship does exist, and how many of these people were brought here by so-called immigration consultants?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would suggest to the minister that perhaps this information should be given to the House by way of a statement on motions rather than by way of a reply to a question during the question period.

Mr. Stanfield: May I say with respect, Mr. Speaker, that I hope I did not ask for too much. May I ask the minister whether he has conducted an investigation into the numbers involved and how many are suffering hardship as a result of this new law?

Mr. Andras: We are receiving representations from organized groups now and I think that before too long we will have some indication of the numbers. Whether or not we will ever have a complete story in precise detail I cannot say, but we are certainly getting an indication of the size of the problem. As to the second part of the question, yes, I think there were some representations by organizations or people who call themselves immigration consultants.

PROHIBITION OF APPLICATIONS FOR LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS BY VISITORS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON SITUATION

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether he will take the suggestion contained in Mr. Speaker's comment a moment ago and make a statement, not necessarily in a day or two but in a week or so, about the situation he has found in his determination to respond to the Tory backlash against immigration?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest we are now in the field of argument and debate. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Egmont on a last supplementary question. Hon. members will appreciate that only ten minutes are left before the end of the question period and in view of the number of hon. members seeking the floor rather urgently and aggressively on other subjects, I think we should make an effort to give them an opportunity to put their questions.

PROHIBITION OF APPLICATIONS FOR LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS BY VISITORS—AID TO PERSONS POSSIBLY SUBJECT TO IMPRISONMENT IF RETURNED TO COUNTRY OF ORIGIN

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, can the minister indicate what steps his department is taking to assist people who find themselves in the position of possibly being forced to return to a country where, for political reasons, they may end up serving a long term of imprisonment in view of this new regulation? Is there a policy with regard to people in this category?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): In most cases people in that situation have entered an appeal to the Immigration Appeal Board, but most certainly, as a general principle, where there is clear evidence that there will be political retribution or political punishment when they return to their country of origin they would fit into what we call the refugee class, into a category of special hardship cases, and we would most certainly be in a position and want to be in a position to review their cases. I say that without committing myself in any particular case.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Mackenzie on a last supplementary question on this subject, but again I insist that an effort will have to be made by hon. members to limit the number of supplementary questions because we are certainly not making much headway when we have five, six or more supplementary questions to every question. If this is the way that hon. members wish that the question period should proceed, that every day we should choose four or five subjects and have a dozen supplementary questions on each of them, that would make it easier for the Chair but I do not think it would satisfy hon. members.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact there is a conference on hijacking under way at present I wish to ask the minister whether the statement he has just make is not in conflict with any criteria that may be set down for the negotiations at that conference or whether political implications may be involved here regarding whether or not a person wants to go to any particular country?

• (1140)

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any connection and if there was any implied in what I said I should like to make it clear that I do not have that in mind with regard to the hijacking problem.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAY PASSENGER SERVICE, SOUTHWESTERN ONTARIO—IMPLEMENTATION OF COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport regarding passenger service in southwestern Ontario. I believe representations have been made to him in this regard. Is the minister going to take early action on these reports?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have to meet with the government of Ontario before we reach any decision here.

Mr. McKinley: Will this meeting be in regard to setting up a joint study group with the province and municipalities as the committee report suggested?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult to give the results of a meeting before the meeting takes place.

DATE OF TOTAL TRANSPORTATION SYSTEM STUDY

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Thansport. Can the minister advise the House as to the date of the joint study on the total transportation system, referred to in the Speech from the Throne?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Does the hon. member mean for the whole country?

Mr. Manzankowski: That is right, Mr. Speaker. It was stated in the Speech from the Throne that a total transportation study would take place.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I have already mentioned that I intend to meet with provincial authorities on this matter before reaching any conclusion.

Mr. Mazankowski: Can the minister advise whether this study has any priority or will it be sloughed off until next year?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A question asked in those terms is irregular.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

DISCUSSIONS ON AMENDMENT OF PENSION PLAN TO PROVIDE PAYMENTS ON BASIS OF 2 PER CENT PER YEAR OF SERVICE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Is the minister having discussions with Canadian National Railways concerning the desirability of amending the Canadian National pension plan to provide for pensions on the basis of 2 per cent for each year of service as is the case for Air Canada employees and federal public servants?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific are now negotiating with the railway employees' unions and this is one of the items to be discussed. When I met the two presidents a few weeks ago, I indicated that I was certainly interested in the issue of the pension fund and I expressed hope that they would find a solution to this problem which has been pending too long already.

[Later:]

[English]

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the one asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. In the discussions about transport at the meeting with the western provinces, will security of tenure or job security for the employees and the subject of their pensions be included?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, this is certainly a problem which must be discussed with the provinces and the railway companies. For the time being, I am not in a position to decide on that question which is certainly an important one to be settled.

AIRPORT

VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL—RUNWAY EXPANSION—REQUEST THAT ENVIRONMENTAL IMPACT STUDY BE PROVIDED TO EXPROPRIATION HEARINGS

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Has the minister prepared any environmental impact study relating to the effects of the proposed new runway at Vancouver International Airport and, if so, will it be filed with the hearing officer and the objectors in time for consideration at the expropriation hearings which commence next Wednesday, January 17, 1973, in Vancouver?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, before a runway is built, the department examines all the aspects of such a project—the environmental aspects and the technical aspects. So, I cannot give a specific answer about the Vancouver case, but the study has certainly been made.

[English]

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for his answer but the point is that when these hearings close the expropriations will be confirmed. I want to know whether any environmental impact study is going to be put before these hearings before they are closed. Once they are closed it is too late; expropriation will take place.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making a speech. He can ask a question.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, the question is whether this environmental impact study will be put in front of this hearing before it is closed, not afterwards.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, we are making an inquiry about expropriations, which has nothing to do with the environment.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

DISCHARGE OF OBLIGATIONS BY UNITED STATES UNDER GREAT LAKES TREATY

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. Is the minister satisfied with the progress being made by the United States in discharging its obligations under the Great Lakes Treaty to date?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the minister could reply to the question in other terms. Would the hon. member resume his seat. The hon. member cannot ask whether the minister is satisfied. At this point he is asking for an expression of opinion. A question asked in those terms is irregular, but perhaps the minister might like to reply to the hon. member's question in some way.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, when the agreement was negotiated with the United States provision was made for follow-up procedures. Later this month there will be a meeting of Canadian and United States officials following which I shall have a more precise answer to that question.

AIRPORTS

ST JOHN'S, NFLD.—RENOVATION OF FACILITIES TO ENABLE AIR CANADA TO PROVIDE SERVICE WITH TRI-STAR AIRCRAFT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport, notice of which has been given. In view of the statement made in Halifax by the regional director of Air Canada to the effect that they would not be able to carry out the scheduled placing into service of the Lockheed Tri-Star at St. John's airport unless the Department of Transport is prepared to carry out immediately certain renovations of the airport facilities and in view of the urgency of this question, can the minister inform the House whether the renovation of the terminal and other facilities will be carried out in time?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, representatives of my department will meet with Air Canada tomorrow, January 16, and I hope that as a result the problem of space requirements for the Lockheed Tri-Star can be solved.

VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL—RUNWAY EXPANSION—REQUEST THAT ENVIRONMENTAL IMPACT STUDY BE PROVIDED TO EXPROPRIATION HEARINGS

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the one addressed to the Minister of Transport by the hon. member for Vancouver South but I should like to address it to the Minister of the Environment. Has the Department of Transport requested the Department of the Environment to do an environmental impact study on the expansion of Vancouver international airport and, if so, will this report be presented to the hearings which commence next Wednesday?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that it has but I believe it has. I will give an answer to that question to the hon. member tomorrow. Our basic policy is that we should prepare environmental impact studies and that they should be made available to the general public.

Mr. Reynolds: Have environmental impact studies also been done for the Pickering airport and the St. Scholastique airport and are they ready and available?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, studies have been carried out with respect to those airports.

AIR TRANSPORT

CANADIAN CARRIER TO BE AWARDED RECIPROCAL LANDING RIGHTS AT MILAN, ITALY

Mr. Terry O'Connor (Halton): My question is directed to the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister advise the House when the government will announce which of our international air carriers will be awarded reciprocal landing rights with Alitalia in Milan, Italy?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I hope that we will be in a position to announce that soon.

Mr. O'Connor: In view of the fact that last year the government said it would make this announcement by January 1, 1973, does the minister not feel that the government has been derelict in its duty to the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That, of course, is not a question and cannot be asked.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

EQUAL CONSIDERATION FOR FEMALE SCIENTISTS AND TECHNOLOGISTS IN MAKING DEPARTMENTAL APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the most attractive member of the Cabinet—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howard: —and ask the Minister of Science and Technology—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Howard: —whether steps have been taken within the minister's department to ensure that women scientists and technologists receive equal consideration with men for appointments, and, if so, what such steps are?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Yes, Mr. Speaker. In line with the instructions of this government to the Public Service Commission, my department is taking care to see if women can participate whenever nominations are made for tasks within the department.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ASSURANCE THAT ROYAL DESIGNATION NOT TO BE REMOVED FROM NAVAL VESSELS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence of which I have given short advance notice. If I might be permitted I should like to express my sympathy to the minister and his family. Can the minister give the assurance that the rumour suggesting removal of the royal designation of "Her Majesty's Canadian Ship" from our naval vessels is unfounded?

• (1150)

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to be able to reassure the hon. member that all our naval ships are designated HMCS, which of course stands for Her Majesty's Canadian Ship, and they will continue to be so designated.

SHIPPING

IMPLEMENTATION OF DARLING REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS—CONSULTATION WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the minister's reply to a question about the Darling report last week, found in Hansard at page 175, would he assure the House that his consultations with the premiers of the provinces on all matters stemming from that report will include consultation with the premier of British Columbia on matters of interest to British Columbia?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Questions

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Peter Reilly (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister arising from an answer he gave in the House earlier. Did I understand him to say that the academic question of capital punishment takes precedence in this government's list of priorities over the plight of the several hundreds of thousands of unemployed and pensioners on inadequate pensions? Is that the doctrine he now preaches to the House?

AGRICULTURE

INCREASE IN PRICE OF FERTILIZER—INQUIRY AS TO ACTION

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. As great concern has been expressed by a number of farm organizations in the past as well as at present over the increase in the price of fertilizer for the farming industry, and as fertilizer plants suggest that the increase results from a lack of potash and other ingredients which are in over-supply in Saskatchewan, can the minister inform us whether there will be action on this matter?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this has been reported to me. What the hon. member says is true, according to the representations which have been made to me, namely, that because of so-called shortages of nitrogen and potash it is proposed to increase prices. We are investigating this. We are contacting the premier of Saskatchewan to find out if it is true that there is a shortage of potash in Saskatchewan and investigating the other chemical companies that are responsible for the manufacture of nitrogen.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order involving the President of the Treasury Board. On Friday last I asked the minister, as reported at page 230 of Hansard, if he would see to it that the Governor General's warrants of which we were speaking at that time were tabled on Monday so that members might have full information. At page 231 he said yes, he would do that. What he tabled today is a copy of the statement of the special warrants issued under Section 23 of the Financial Administration Act which is not, as I am sure the minister will agree, a copy of the warrants themselves. In order to facilitate the provision of full information to members both here and in committee, would the minister see to it that the warrants themselves are tabled?

An hon. Member: Or exact copies of them.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. gentleman will not ask that the warrants be tabled but copies of them. The second document I tabled this morning, which was filed privately with the Clerk, is the one the hon. member has now. The other documents I tabled, and I think they are still on the table, are copies of the Governor General's warrants and the schedules thereto.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I checked with the distinguished officers at the table. The only document that was tabled was the statement. I am informed by the officers at the table that the warrants themselves or copies thereof were not tabled.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure this matter can be straightened out in due course.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, for some six days now the hon. member for Brant has been trying to get the Speaker's attention. Since he is neither a freshman member nor an old veteran, I wonder, before the emergency passes, whether Mr. Speaker could perhaps notice him tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed from Friday, January 12, consideration of the motion of Mr. J. J. Blais for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Crouse (p. 245).

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, in rising to continue my speech on the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne I wish, first of all, to extend my congratulations to you, Mr. Speaker, on your re-election as Speaker of this House. You have distinguished yourself in this position in the last two parliaments. You have shown courage and dedication by agreeing to accept this high office again. Whatever the difficulties of this parliament, and judging by the breakdown of the numbers in each party there will be many, your wisdom and firm hand will maintain the dignity and decorum of the House.

I also want to extend my congratulations to the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) on his election to the position of Deputy Speaker. I have confidence in him and count him as a friend. We spent several weeks together at an Interparliamentary Union conference in 1969. I believe that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the House have shown real wisdom in appointing him Deputy Speaker. It will require all the sagacity, good will, and humour that the Chair can muster to make this a productive House.

I consider it a great honour to be re-elected to represent Algoma in the House of Commons and I thank my constituents for this responsibility and the opportunity to serve them. Election campaigns bring a person in to close contact with many people in a compressed time frame, they are more effective than any other methods I know of. The excitement and celebration of winning an election campaign can only be justified by hard work both in this chamber and in the constituency.

I congratulate the mover and seconder of the address in reply. They have youth, vigour, and eloquence in both our official languages and show great promise of becoming competent Members of Parliament.

I am especially pleased that the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) was chosen because he comes from northern Ontario. We are often concerned that not enough attention is paid to northern Ontario. Part of this problem stems from the fact that we are from a "have-not" area of a "have" province. We have many problems similar to those of the western and eastern provinces, such as high transportation costs, declining population and slow economic growth. However, because we are part of a wealthy province our needs are not fully recognized either at the provincial or federal level in many instances.

This is brought home only too forcefully in the proposals of the Representation Commissioner which were published on December 27, 1972. These proposals suggest that there will be two fewer Members of Parliament to represent northern Ontario in the House of Commons. This means that ridings which are already too large will be larger. Members who now divide their time as carefully and fairly as possible between dozens of communities will have to add many more towns and villages. City Members of Parliament do not fully appreciate how much the smaller communities depend on their Member of Parliament to help them in making approaches to government with a maze of what might be considered small problems. In the totality of government expenditures they may be relatively small problems, but for these communities they are big and important matters concerning their progress and development. When I see the ridings enlarged in northern Ontario I am not concerned so much about the extra miles I will have to travel as with the fact that the members for such enlarged ridings will have relatively less time for each community. I am also concerned that the total impact of members from northern Ontario will be made by 10 members instead of the present 12. It seems to me that the Representation Commissioner in the final determination should consider these facts before reducing the total number of members in the north.

• (1200)

An important step was taken in 1969 to rectify the discrepancy between the north and south by the establishment of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and the designation of northern Ontario as an area where special assistance was available. It is strange that the provincial government, with all its wealth and power, does not have special assistance available to the slow growth areas of the north.

The DREE program has been criticized by many during the recent election campaign as being ineffective. I want to see the program strengthened, improved and made more flexible. I think that the minimum size for enterprises which can qualify for incentive grants should be reduced. I am pleased to see that the department is to be decentralized as this should bring it closer to the areas to be served. It will make personal consultation and discussion possible.

I was pleased to read in the Speech from the Throne as well that there will be improved assistance to strengthen management and consulting services for small businesses along with improved access to financing facilities. It is a constant problem for the small businesses in my riding to secure financing for their enterprises. It seems there should be increased management services available to recipients of DREE grants to ensure that these companies not only meet the equity and other requirements of the act and regulations to qualify for a grant, but also to continue to keep the project operating viably.

I would like to see DREE grants available to the tourist industry as well. In many areas of Canada which are now designated for these grants, such as northern Ontario, we have all the natural beauty for tourism. We have, in the Algoma riding alone, hundreds of miles of shoreline on Lake Huron and Lake Superior as well as a multitude of lakes and streams. However, the financial wherewithal is lacking to develop our tourist industry fully. The Speech from the Throne outlines help for the tourist industry. I hope this is help which will be beneficial at the local level and not just some national survey system which will have little effect.

I am looking forward with interest to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) introducing changes to extend and improve the Industrial Development Bank. This will be good news for the small businessmen who in the past have found it a hard-nosed organization with high interest rates and closed-end mortgages in which no one could get very interested. The rates should be lowered and the pay-off arrangement should be open-ended. I am told by businessmen in my riding that the funds available and the interest charged by the bank in making loans have increased in the past several months. This is encouraging. When the amendments are introduced I hope they will contain provisions to make the terms of the loans more attractive.

The Speech from the Throne proposes that the federal government will meet with the provinces to examine the impact of freight rates on economic development and consumer prices. There can be little doubt what the results of this examination will show. It will show that freight rates and transportation costs raise consumer prices in northern Ontario and inhibit economic development. The DREE program of incentive grants is designed to be a stimulus to overcome this effect on economic development, but it does not fully compensate for the transportation costs. The costs of transportation are likewise detrimental to consumer prices in the Algoma riding. This meeting of federal and provincial governments should produce a solution to this problem which is as old as confederation itself.

I suggest that when these discussions are held with the province of Ontario they be held in northern Ontario. We are the people who suffer from the high freight rates. We are the people most concerned in this province. The good will of both the federal and provincial governments in these discussions could be demonstrated by holding these meetings in northern Ontario.

The Speech from the Throne gives an outline of the measures to provide jobs on a direct employment basis to counteract the unemployment problem. These include the local initiatives program, the on-the-job-training program, direct employment by the federal government on labour-intensive projects and the winter capital projects fund.

I believe that the winter capital projects fund will be a most beneficial program to municipalities. It will be a loan fund of $350 million for community projects. As I understand the program, it will operate for two and a half years. One half of the on-site labour costs will be forgiven during the summer months and all of the labour costs forgiven during the winter months. The advantage to the local municipality is that it provides a source of loan funds in which labour costs are forgiven. However, all the construction does not have to be undertaken during the difficult winter months, although there is additional incentive if it is carried out then. I hope the Minister of Finance will be sending the information on this program in the very near future to the provincial governments who will administer it. There is interest in this program, but detailed information is just not available.

Likewise, with the local initiatives program the approvals are coming through so late this year that the total impact of the program is reduced. Henceforth, the program should be started with the approval of projects so that work can begin in November and, where projects are not completed by May 31, extensions should be made.

The Speech from the Throne outlines several measures concerning our social policy. The relationship between social aid, unemployment insurance and work in our society is one of the most complex because it involves all levels of government, the private sector of our economy and a person's ability to work and get a job. It is proposed that the blind, disabled and aged will receive an equitable guaranteed annual income, that there will be an incentive to work built into our social welfare system and a more equitable relationship between those who require social aid and those who work at the minimum wage level. There has been increasing criticism of these problems recently in my constituency. Good co-ordination between the welfare board and community local initiative programs has been beneficial in some areas of Algoma. However, this has only been helpful in the winter months. I hope these proposals contained in the Speech from the Throne will be useful in building a system which will utilize the employable recipient of welfare or unemployment insurance benefits for worth-while community projects when no work in the private sector of our economy is available.

The speech also outlines the intention of the government to increase the benefits of old age pensioners. This will be welcome news to the pensioners in my constituency. I am surprised that more people are not aware of the automatic escalator clause in the old age pensions which we passed last spring after the budget. it is my understanding that the basic old age security pension is now raised to $86.51 per month. The maximum benefit under the guaranteed income supplement and old age security is now $156.75 per month for a single pensioner and $297 per month for a couple. The Minister of Finance should immediately introduce the bill to increase the additional exemption for old age pensioners to $1,000. I have received many letters from constituents requesting that this provision of last June's budget be implemented.

We have seen some interesting politicking going on in the House this week. We see the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) hungry for power, ready to move any motion and pursue any strategy to achieve it. We have seen "Prince George" of Hastings try to adjourn the debate on the Speech from the Throne before the fundamental constitutional vote of confidence in the government was taken. I am glad to see that the other parties in the House are not buying this nonsense. It is interesting that the government won that vote 154 to 104, which is a larger majority than many of the votes in the last parliament. I do not believe the people of this country want this kind of politicking. I do not believe the people of this country want another election. I have talked in my constituency to voters from all political parties and they say: get on with the job of governing; bring in legislation to build a better economy and to build a better society, a better Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Foster: This should be our goal this session, utilizing the outline of legislation contained in the Speech from the Throne to ensure that the real winners as a result of our efforts are the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say how pleased I am that you have been unanimously chosen to preside over us once again. As your seatmate during part of the last parliament, I came to know your human qualities of understanding and compassion as well as your more public characteristics of a sense of justice and unfailing good humour. In the performance of your duties I know you will be supported and encouraged by your lovely and gracious wife.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: I should like to extend my congratulations also to the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) who will act as your deputy. Few members of this House are as universally regarded with both respect and affection as he.

[Translation]

I also wish to congratulate the hon. members for Nipissing and Lachine (Messrs. Blais and Blaker) on their being elected to the House of Commons, and on having had the honour of being chosen mover and seconder of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne which task they fulfilled with eloquence. They are fortunate in being able to speak with such ease both official languages of our country. I wish them much success in their parliamentary career.

[English]

Although the quality of this debate has been unusually high, Mr. Speaker, I must say I was disappointed in the speeches made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand). Fairly interpreted, their speeches have indicated that they have learned nothing from the election results. The people have spoken but the message has not been received by the government. The big three, now augmented by the incarnation of the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) to the big four, have not got the message. They did not listen to their colleagues in cabinet; they largely ignored the warnings of caucus; they totally ignored the most important policy decisions of the Liberal party and now they demonstrate by their attitude and by their intemperate language that the people, too, count for nothing.

Bilingualism was not a big issue in the election. It was important in the Ottawa area because the pledges given by Prime Minister Pearson and then by the present Prime Minister were not honoured. This created an atmosphere of suspicion and mistrust which was bound to be reflected in the vote. But in so far as the rest of the country is concerned, the issues were far more complex and represented, for the most part, a rejection of governmental incompetence and bungling in economic matters. This government failed to solve the ordinary issues of jobs and prices and housing as they affected many citizens, and the vote said so. It was an amalgam of unemployment, inflation, the abuse of unemployment insurance, the failure to take realistic steps to increase Canadian participation in the ownership and development of our own industries and resources, questionable LIP and OFY grants, failure to alleviate regional disparity, and a generally makeshift and amateurish approach to the solution of economic problems that destroyed the credibility of the government and its leaders.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: The unemployment rate in Canada is too high. It is the worst of any industrialized country in the western world. This is a shameful situation, and, and as one United States economist said in Toronto a few weeks ago, it is totally unacceptable—he could not understand how it could be tolerated. His view was typical of the view held by others. A couple of years ago when I travelled around the world talking to some of the best economists, labour leaders and bankers, I was asked from time to time what the unemployment rate was in Canada. My answer was received by them with disbelief. In several instances, the person to whom I was talking asked: how could any democratic government survive with an unemployment rate as high as that?

We do not need United States economists or others to tell us about unemployment. We know it is a totally unsatisfactory situation. We know it is totally unacceptable to many Canadians and that something must be done about it. On Sunday I interviewed a number of constituents who were passionately—and in some cases desperately—seeking work at a living wage. The fact that they cannot find employment at a living wage underlines the contention that our unemployment rate is the number one indicator of gross incompetence. It is also the number one indicator of moral failure. When we have such a high unemployment rate, is it not a strange anomaly that there are, at the same time in Canada, tens of thousands of unfilled jobs? Many reasons are cited for this paradox. Some suggest it is because the unemployed do not have the proper qualifications for the jobs being offered. Close scrutiny indicates this is not normally the case. It is also suggested that many unemployed persons do not really want to find work. While this may be true of a small minority, a more credible and accurate explanation lies in the fact that in many cases the wages being offered are not sufficient to live on, and that in tens of thousands of cases the relative advantage of working as against drawing unemployment insurance or welfare provides no incentive. Many individuals are financially better off not to work—or at least not to work full time.

The net result is business and moral chaos. Dress and garment manufacturers cannot hire needleworkers because potential employees can make more on unemployment insurance while doing piecework at home for cash. Tobacco growers could not get enough help to harvest the crop without hiring illegally, under assumed names, young people who were already in receipt of unemployment insurance. Tomato growers could not hire students at $20 a day to harvest their crops. Florists cannot hire workers to tend their greenhouses. Farmers are selling dairy herds because they cannot compete with unemployment insurance. These are some of the symptoms of distortions in our economy, Mr. Speaker. The root causes are deeper. Since 1970 there has been inadequate demand to provide enough jobs for everyone. The big powerful companies and their equally powerful unions have used their monopolistic or oligopolistic power to their own advantage and to the detriment of the weak. Small businesses and non-union labour have been unable to keep up. They, along with the old age pensioners and others living on fixed incomes, have been squeezed unmercifully. The maldistribution of income both regionally and vertically between citizens not only remains but has been exacerbated. Some people were so naïve as to believe that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion would achieve miracles. But with its subjective approach to decision making, how could it hope to succeed.

• (1220)

My makeshift lectern, Mr. Speaker, consists of nothing but press releases and reports from the Department of Regional Economic Expansion telling us how much money it has spent and how many jobs it has created, or so we are told. But the jobs have evaporated. In December 1968 there were 152,000 unemployed persons seeking work in Quebec. In December 1972 there were 206,000 unemployed persons seeking work in Quebec, 54,000 more unemployed people in that province than when the Department of Regional Economic Expansion was established. Hundreds of millions of dollars down the drain, and for what?

In some cases money was given to businesses to do what they had planned to do in any event. In other cases, the departmental assistance merely resulted in moving unemployment from one part of the country to another at the taxpayers' expense. In these circumstances, how dare the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) say that the criticism levelled at him and his former department was based on anything other than gross incompetence.

At the same time that the minister was doing his inadequate best to create a few new jobs through the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, the government wiped out a larger number of jobs with its restrictive monetary policy. It was this schizophrenic approach to economic policy which Eric Kierans, and others, could not stomach. The shortage of aggregate demand caused by the tight money policy persists to this moment in spite of the government's best efforts. This is not news. No reliable forecaster has suggested that full employment was just around the corner. No government spokesman has been so bold as to suggest that it is. But in spite of this, the government is still running a crisis operation without benefit of long-term planning.

As long ago as last June, the provincial premiers warned that policies to provide additional job opportunities would have to be launched at once to be effective in the winter months. Yet, notwithstanding this unanimous warning, the government procrastinated. Once again its makeshift programs were too late. The LIP program and the training on the job program were too late for efficient administration. The result is waste of precious funds, Mr. Speaker; inefficient, frustrating waste. I was interested to note that the Liberal speaker who preceded me agreed with my analysis.

On the more positive side, Mr. Speaker, it is somewhat encouraging to see the government's new-found interest in small business. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) reminds us that 60 per cent of the Canadian labour force is working for establishments having the essential characteristics of a small business. Under the circumstances, one might wonder why this sector has been so badly neglected until now.

The package of assistance outlined by the minister is quite impressive on paper. I hope it will produce results. Anyone who is experienced in small business is entitled to be a bit sceptical, however. It would take a tremendous boost to compensate small business for the hurdles which have been placed in its way. Our tax laws, especially death duties, discourage entrepreneurship. Our chartered banks are unduly concerned with potential losses from small business and consequently adequate financing is not readily available in many cases. And in this context, an uneven monetary policy and periodic reliance on monetary restriction have put thousands of small businesses into bankruptcy unnecessarily. On top of this, several levels of government are driving small businessmen up the proverbial wall with the number and complexity of laws and the paper work accompanying them.

I would just like to read one letter in support of that contention, Mr. Speaker. It is a letter addressed to the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), dated December 7, 1972, "Re: Statistics Canada". It is as follows:

Dear Sir:

I wish to register a complaint regarding the activities of the above agency.

Recognizing the need for providing our government with information concerning the operations of Canadian business and the wages paid, I have conscientiously endeavoured to comply with all requests of the above agency covering a period of some twenty-five years.

However, during the past two or three years, businesses have been deluged with an ever mounting variety of forms, many of which ask for the same information previously supplied.

The latest outrage is Form ES24 which calls for wage information covering the period August 1971 to July 1972, which has already been reported on a monthly basis on Form ES-1A for the past several years.

For your further information the following forms all relate to wage information demanded by the above agency:

JVS — 6B
ES — 2
LER40 —005
8003 — 73
8003 — 251

The manner in which information is requested suggests to me that the persons compiling these forms do not possess business experience, as some of the questions cannot be answered in any rational manner.

Compliance with these requests require the small business man to pay fees to have this work done and I submit that this is nothing more than taxation.

I have refused to file the Form ES-24 as records previously filed should provide the information requested.

Your early reply will be appreciated.

Yours very truly,
"C. S. Massey"

Anyone who has operated a small business will say "amen" to that complaint.

The lack of encouragement for Canadian small business and the constant harassment of officialdom has resulted in the sale of many businesses to foreign owners. The screening agency proposed by the government at the last session of parliament would accomplish little. Now the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce promises more.

But he did not explain how the present trend would be reversed. He did not say how Canadians would be encouraged to save more so that they could participate more fully in the ownership of Canadian resources and industry. He did not promise that the government would curtail its appetite for new programs. He did not explain how the combined effects of confiscatory tax laws and inflation would be overcome.

The consequences of the combined effects of taxation and inflation on savings are not well understood. Let us take last year's Canada Savings Bonds as a case in point. The coupon rate for the first year is 5.5 per cent. From that must be deducted the inflation for the year, namely 5.1 per cent. That leaves a net return before tax of four-tenths of one per cent. Now if a taxpayer had a 30 per cent tax rate he would have to pay 30 per cent tax, not on the four-tenths of one per cent but on 5½ per cent. That would be 1.65 per cent.

The net result is that anyone with a tax rate of 30 per cent who bought Canada Savings Bonds in 1972 and held them for one year only would not only be lending the government money with no return but would actually get back 1¼ per cent less purchasing power than he had at the outset. Only if he held the savings bond until maturity, and assuming that inflation will not rise above its present level, would the investor break even. In 1984, the poor sucker would get his money back without loss, once again, assuming that he did not have to pay to get his income tax forms and other accounting done for him. A grateful government would have the use of the taxpayer's money for 12 years without cost.

Unfortunately many other Canadian investments are equally discouraging. Many investors are hard pressed to place their savings where the purchasing power at the end of the year, after tax and inflation, will be as great as it was on New Year's day. Is this the climate of opportunity that will encourage Canadians to scrimp and save in order to invest in their own future? I doubt it. It is hardly a healthy climate for business of any kind, small or large.

As important as inflation is for the investor or potential investor, it is 10 times more important for people at the bottom end of the income scale who cannot afford to live, let alone invest. Prices are going up—up—up. There has been a total failure on the part of the government to cope. The 5.1 per cent increase in the consumer price index in 1972 is the largest increase in 22 years. The Canadian experience has become, as one OECD economist put it, "a classic example" of what to avoid in fighting inflation.

• (1230)

In human terms, inflation spells tragedy. A case which came to my attention Saturday is typical of many I know. A constituent, a married man with two children, one aged 11 the other an infant, earns $4,900 a year. This leaves him $80 a week, net, in his pay envelope. He pays $35 a week rent plus $5 a week for coal. That leaves $40 weekly for a family of four. The wife requires special medication costing $15 weekly, leaving $25 for food, clothing and all other necessities. Last week she did not have $6 to pay the hydro bill and was threatened with having the service disconnected. When this man looks at some of the makeshift government programs on which his money is spent, he is full of resentment. Can you blame him, Mr. Speaker? How is a family going to survive under such circumstances? It is a desperate situation. Something must be done, now, to alleviate the suffering, both physical and psychological. A lengthy investigation into food prices will not satisfy this family, Mr. Speaker. They want action now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: Although the nature of our cost-push inflation is not yet admitted by all economists, the consensus is shifting. The threadbare orthodoxies which have governed official thinking are coming into disrepute. A total revision in thinking is necessary to avoid total catastrophe. The ability of the strong to exploit the weak must be curbed. A fairer distribution of income is essential to offset the distortions created by monopoly power in the so-called market place. A system under which a construction union can get a 35.7 per cent increase in 18 months while the minimum wage in nine of the 10 provinces is less than $2 must be re-examined, not after a royal commission or a task force has studied the problem to death, but now.

In summation, then, Mr. Speaker, the present situation will not wash. We have the highest unemployment rate in the western world while tens of thousands of jobs go unfilled. Confiscatory tax rates discourage savings and encourage sell-out to foreigners. Makeshift programs that result in frustration and waste, distort priorities while undermining accepted values of prudence and administration. Some people have never had it so good while the underprivileged and disadvantaged are desperate. Rising prices are causing real hardship and eroding the savings of innocent and helpless citizens.

This sad catalogue more than justifies support of the amendment now before us, Mr. Speaker. In particular, the members of the New Democratic Party, if they have not lost their compassion, should support it vigorously. Their reticence is inexplicable.

The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) said in Toronto last week that members of this party would vote for the Communist manifesto in order to gain power. He is wrong, Mr. Speaker. We would not even vote for the Regina manifesto in order to gain power.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: This is not difficult to understand. More difficult to understand would be support by the hon. gentleman of reductions in corporation income tax in order to save, temporarily, his electoral skin while at the same time aiding some of his favourite corporate welfare bums. That would confirm the suspicion that the unholy alliance between the NDP and the government will be remembered as the most notorious fuddle-cuddle in Canadian political history.

When the vote is taken tonight, Mr. Speaker, I hope that all those members of this honourable House who really believe in their hearts that action is the handmaid of compassion will vote for the amendment.

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join with all the other honourable members of this House in saying how pleased I am to see you installed again as the Speaker of this Chamber. For you the burdens of office are particularly heavy, but we are all reassured that because you preside here our deliberations will be more orderly and, hopefully, more beneficial to those who sent us here. As well, I am personally very delighted with the choice of our new Deputy Speaker, a man who has the good reputation for both graciousness and fairness. I also know him to be a very hospitable person. This I discovered during a visit to Halifax in the summer of 1971 when I attended in that city an area conference of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association.

I also wish to commend the hon. members who moved and seconded the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. The excellent quality of their speeches has set a high standard for this debate.

As one who comes from northwestern Ontario, which is a developing region of Canada, I note with considerable satisfaction in the Speech from the Throne that in the area of economic policy the government remains committed to a program of regional economic expansion. Because of federal government assistance particularly since 1968, much has been achieved in this region which I am honoured to represent. That, of course, is quite contrary to what was just expressed by the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer). But we all recognize that a great deal more remains to be done. It was for that reason that I sought re-election, and it was for that reason that the electors in my contituency sent me here for another term. Indeed, I am most honoured to represent the people who live in that important area of Canada.

We in northwestern Ontario will be most interested to learn from the government how decentralizing the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and extending and improving the Industrial Development Bank will assist us in lessening the continual economic disparity which exists between us and the more affluent regions of Canada. We have every intention of sharing in the good life that Canada has to offer, and we will work very hard to accomplish this goal.

The people who live in northwestern Ontario share to some considerable degree the kinds of grievances which are often expressed by those who come from western Canada. Our region belongs to neither the east nor the west, but is is the vital land bridge between the two. In common with those who come from the west, we know that the present freight rate system works against us. Because of high freight rates, the goods that we require in northwestern Ontario cost us more than the price paid by other Canadians. The development of secondary industry is discouraged because of the high cost of getting our products to markets. Meanwhile, Toronto and district are choking in their own growth, but we remain underdeveloped and underpopulated. It often seems to us that if the gluttonous south has had too much of highway building, airport development and expansion of housing, then why not let the people there look towards the mid-north where we desperately need all of these things and, of course, much more besides?

We in northwestern Ontario welcome the promised conference to examine the impact of freight rates on economic development. I would just remind the government, Sir, that although we are part of the great province of Ontario, northern Ontario is also a distinct geographic and economic region of Canada. We will therefore insist very strongly on having regional representation at one or more of these meetings which will consider the economic impact of the present freight rate structure.

• (1240)

We in northwestern Ontario are just as concerned about national unity as are Canadians anywhere else, but for us the question of national unity has little to do with language. It has, however, a great deal to do with the equality of opportunity and the availability of services which are considered essential by most other Canadians. In our region, we speak many different languages, including English and French, but we speak with one voice, we speak in unison, when it comes to asking for what most other Canadians take for granted, namely, an adequate level of health services throughout the region, decent housing, hydro electric power at the rate paid by our fellow citizens elsewhere, and adequate accommodation for our senior citizens so that they do not have to go hundreds of miles from where they lived and worked. We ask as well for reasonably prompt mail service; good, clear, television reception with a choice of channels; a say in some of the decisions which directly affect us; and more job opportunities for our young people, which, undoubtedly can be brought about if we would do more of the processing of our natural resources on the site before we send them south or export them abroad.

Later in my remarks I hope to say more on the subject of resource development, but now I would like to make a brief comment about television in our area. Many of our communities still have very poor or no television reception at all. It is the CBC's stated objective to extend its television and radio service to every community of 500 persons or more. The government has authorized the CBC to extend its services in a comprehensive fashion, but we in northwestern Ontario feel that there is a great deal of foot dragging by the Corporation. The CBC loves to complain about its restricted budget, and yet there always seems to be money to send large crews abroad to cover sports extravaganzas such as the Olympics. Incidentally, the Olympics are one international sideshow which I hope does not come to Canada. The CBC has no difficulty in finding a large sum of money to produce an abortive drama series like the "Whiteoaks of Jalna"; the capital budget is never so restricted as to prevent the CBC from building huge broadcasting cathedrals to house the modern day priests of culture and communication. We in northwestern Ontario question the priorities of the CBC. We believe that the corporation is inefficient and wasteful, and we object to the CBC's expensive pampering to the prissy, over-sophisticated tastes of a mere handful of Canadians. It would certainly be refreshing if this corporation could rediscover the meaning and value of popular entertainment.

To go to another topic, let me say that during the recent election campaign many residents of northwestern Ontario raised the question with me and other candidates about the ownership of land in Canada by aliens or non-residents. I hasten here to define the meaning of non-resident in this context. By non-resident is meant an individual who does not have Canadian citizenship or landed immigrant status. The throne speech refers to measures dealing with the sale of land to foreigners. What is needed now is a moratorium on the sale or lease of private or public land to aliens until such time as suitable legislation can be prepared and enacted. The moratorium ought to take effect immediately.

I subscribe to the view of those who argue that Crown land, whether in the federal or provincial jurisdiction, should not be sold under any circumstances. Further, Crown land should not be leased to non-residents. Where non-residents now own land in Canada, they should be subject to double taxation, and certain areas of high recreational potential must be expropriated and returned to public ownership.

The Speech from the Throne mentions that steps will be taken to assist in the development of the tourist industry in Canada. One of the ways in which this can be done is to reduce the number of non-resident owners of recreational land in a tourist region. Since one of the main objectives in tourism is to maximize profits, we should consider the relative economic benefits of two groups of tourists. The first, and the largest group, consists of true tourists, those who are travelling through an area, eating in restaurants, staying at camps, campsites or motels, and possibly paying admission to certain attractions. The second type of tourist is the non-resident owner who makes directly for his or her own private spot of seclusion and remains there. As a group, the non-resident owners are smaller and much less economically important than the travelling visitor or "guest" type of tourist.

To help attract even more of these travelling tourists, governments should be doing much more. They should become much more active in the establishment and the running of local family-centred summer and winter tourist facilities. No subsidies should be given for the operation of tourist facilities by non-residents. Both levels of government should determine the requirements of the private tourist industry to help meet the growing pressures on facilities from the rapid increase in tourist traffic from the United States. Again, no subsidies should be given to non-resident tourist industry operators.

Northwestern Ontario is a vast area, and at present tourists are permitted to wander almost at will and without the help of qualified guides. This, of course, has reduced suitable employment for many of our native people and also results in many of these tourists becoming lost in the bush and sometimes dying there. Many of us are of the opinion that non-resident tourists should be restricted to the use of recognized campsites on Crown or private land, managed either by the government or by private enterprise. The non-resident should not have the privilege of placing his tent, camper or trailer in any unposted area and using the natural facilities at will, leaving nothing behind except his garbage. Non-resident canoeists should have a prepared route and alternate route designated by the provincial department of natural resources. Non-resident tourists flying in by private or chartered aircraft should have an approved destination. Areas open to use for "fly-in" tourists must be designated and controlled, and only in this way can we prevent the prevalent poaching which is presently going on throughout northwestern Ontario.

Provincial and National parks in Canada, particularly those which are close to the U.S. border, are under very intensive pressure. One of the ways in which we could increase the revenue for park maintenance would be to charge much larger park admission fees for non-residents than is paid by Canadians. This may sound discriminatory but remember that most United States jurisdictions do this, and we are certainly foolish not to follow their example.

Returning to the question of the sale of private land to non-residents, there are some who will argue that there are legal problems associated with measures which would restrict the sale of land to non-residents. The proposition is put forward that the Canadian citizen has the constitutional right to dispose of his property as he sees fit. I submit that this is not the case. Government has the inherent power to act in its social and material interest in laying down conditions respecting aliens. The ownership of our land by large numbers of aliens does have an adverse effect on our social and material well being. The federal and provincial governments not only have the right but also the duty, to enact legislation to deal with this growing and serious problem.

It is interesting to note in the Speech from the Throne, Mr. Speaker, reference to these three items: extending and improving the Industrial Development Bank; assistance to credit unions, and aid for small businesses by improving their access to financing facilities. I approve of all these proposals, Mr. Speaker. The Industrial Development Bank has helped entrepreneurs when there was no other place for them to turn. It is true, as the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), has mentioned, that they had to pay a rather high rate of interest to get the money, but at least they have been able to establish or expand their enterprises. There is no question about the fact that it is a matter of urgent concern that we help small businesses with their financing, and everything that we do to assist credit unions will certainly benefit Canada and Canadians. There are now 55,000 credit unions throughout the world with 38 million members. In Canada, every fourth person is a member of a credit union, and 5¾ million Canadians are enrolled in 4,500 credit unions. Ontario has over one million members in 1,400 credit unions. When the Speech from the Throne speaks of extending and improving the Industrial Development Bank, of improving financing facilities for small businesses, and of assisting credit unions, I certainly agree that these are necessary measures.

The question arises, however, as to what the chartered banks are doing in this country besides paying healthy dividends to their shareholders. Bank stocks are once again among the favourites this year, and no wonder. The combined after-tax profit of eight Canadian chartered banks was $229,956,000 in the year ending October 31, 1972, an increase of 23.2 per cent from the profits in the 1971 fiscal year. Banks are able to maximize their profits by depressing the rates of interest paid on deposits, by raising service charges as much as the market will bear, and by lending only to low risk projects.

It is obvious that projects sponsored by large United States companies will be preferred over ventures by smaller Canadian groups. Mr. Speaker, it is not right that our banks should be helping United States businesses buy out Canadian companies. It seems to me that our banks ought to reflect the national interest in their money lending policies. They ought to invest in Canada in proportion to the resources they derive from Canada. Recent studies have shown that there is no shortage of capital in Canada. New American capital that comes into this country is far exceeded by the export of capital to the United States by Canadians. One of the big failures of our banks is that they do not go far enough in allocating funds to specific regions of Canada, especially developing regions, and in permitting branches there to utilize the money in the best interests of that area.

The Speech from the Throne speaks of measures to increase Canadian participation in the ownership and control of resource projects. There may be some jurisdictional disputes in this regard, Mr. Speaker, but it is clear that action is required if our resource regions are to be truly Canadian rather than merely economic frontiers of the United States.

The rapid increase in the American demand for particular Canadian raw materials arising from the expansion of American industry and the progressive depletion of American domestic sources of supply, has placed Canada in an advantageous, and yet very dangerous position. In the short-term, the effects of this trend are obviously beneficial for Canadian producers, but this in turn leads to a potentially dangerous drain on the total Canadian resources in the long run. A good deal today can become a sell-out tomorrow.

The history of resource development in Canada includes varying degrees of emphasis at different times on exploitation, conservation and management. Today, as a basis for resource development and in the making of any new resource policy, the need for orderly management of our resources must be recognized. Although research has not indicated any short-term scarcity, the long-term outlook underlines the need for immediate action to prevent the rapid depletion of our non-renewable resources. Only a policy of orderly management will secure for future generations the optimum benefit from our resources; only a policy of orderly management will be able to rationally bring about a reconciliation of the goals of economic growth and environmental quality.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a brief word about water resources in northwestern Ontario. We have one of the most abundant supplies of fresh water of any region in the world. The government of Canada and the Ontario government are currently engaged in a jointly sponsored study to assess the extent of the water resources in this region. This activity makes us very nervous and just a little uncomfortable, Mr. Speaker. We have had repeated assurances from both the federal and the provincial governments that no massive diversion schemes for our northward flowing rivers are being contemplated. We want very much to believe that, but it is often difficult to trust the word of governments, as the citizens of Manitoba recently discovered with reference to a hydro project in that province. Mr. Speaker, I call on the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) to cease and desist from all studies of our water resources which include the possibility of river diversions. Instead, why not transfer these funds into archeological and ecological research and into economic development projects which will benefit our native people.

I would ask the Minister of the Environment to withdraw, on behalf of the federal government, from this agreement with Ontario, which we believe may be a first step toward another huge hydroelectric project involving damming, flooding and general environmental destruction on a terrifying scale. We in northwestern Ontario do not want something like the James Bay hydro project in Quebec or something like the proposed Churchill River diversion in Manitoba. We respectfully ask both levels of government to recall their engineers and hydrologists—to please get out and stay out. Any attempt to divert our great northward flowing rivers in northwestern Ontario will be met with well organized, lawful resistance. There is now in existence an active citizens group to watch carefully and closely all and any activities related to river diversion in our region. We ask the Minister of the Environment for yet another word of reassurance that diversion schemes are not being contemplated and that any studies of such a possibility will be terminated.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, may I join with other hon. members in offering you my congratulations on your election once again as Speaker of this House. I wish Your Honour the very best. I would like also to congratulate the House on its choice of Deputy Speaker. I feel that this choice is a good omen, since I understand that this is the second occasion in Canadian parliamentary history on which the Deputy Speaker has been chosen from the opposition side. This is an important deviation from custom, and we welcome it. In future, perhaps not only the official opposition but other opposition parties might have a representative in that important post.

I also wish to echo the sentiments of the hon. member who spoke just before lunch. I am at one with him in his comments on the CBC, as I come from a riding much the same as his which is served by only one television station. I think the CBC and CRTC have neglected in many ways the primary duty for which the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation was originally established, the duty of giving service to outlying areas which normally cannot expect to be served by commercial channels. The CBC and CRTC have been far too concerned about the content of programs available to that part of the population which is able to tune in to the American stations, and have forgotten about those portions of the country which can exercise little or no choice in the selection of television programs.

Having said that, may I now turn to the Speech from the Throne. On Monday last, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) launched into his reply to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr.Stanfield). During the course of his discursive and rambling dissertation, he attacked those who had brought his government to a minority position by suggesting that this result was achieved by a misguided group of candidates on my side of the House leading the electorate astray on various subjects, particularly his bilingualism program. Nevertheless, a short study of our recent history will disclose that this is not so.

A review of the past 12 elections will indicate, I suggest, that if the present party system is to continue, we shall be in a minority situation on many occasions to come. In the seven elections since 1957, as opposed to the five before 1957, the Conservative party has had strength in western Canada. In the five elections between 1935 and 1957 the party I support won an average of only eight seats west of Ontario. Since 1957, in seven elections the Conservatives won an average of 42 seats west of the Ontario-Manitoba border. The number of Tory seats in the present parliament is the average that the party has won in the past seven elections. That means that there is a great possibility of increasing Tory strength in western Canada. If present voting trends continue, it is apparent that there will be a good many minority governments.

It gives me great pleasure to note that the vote of Tuesday last found the NDP supporting the Liberal party. We have ample evidence in western Canada to indicate that the NDP is only a wing of the Liberal party, or else how could the minority government of the Pearson regime have withstood the many votes necessary to keep it in power for five years? I welcome this support of the NDP party for the Liberal cause, because it means there has been a polarization that will be good for the politics of Canada. In the last 50 years, western Canada has dissipated its political power in ideological groups supporting vague causes without any practical possibility of bringing their aims about. Perhaps we are witnessing merely a maturing of political thought in western Canada.

In the past seven elections the decision of western Canadians to give the preponderance of their seats to the Conservative party indicates that they are merely following the lead of Quebec. Quebec in the past 70 years has only deviated on two occasions from supporting the Liberal party. One was in 1958, a period of recent history well known; the other was during the 1920's, when agricultural problems so seriously upset the rural population of Quebec that they voted for a change. This polarization will almost certainly continue and will be a new factor in voting in Canada, particularly western Canada. After all, in our regional country western Canada is in conflict with Quebec on language and culture and with Ontario on economic matters.

The past 100 years of Canadian history show that there has always been a confrontation and compromise between the regions. The main added new factor will be that the compromises will have to take into account the third party, western Canada, and not just Ontario and Quebec. In the book "Pendulum of Power", written by James Beck, Mackenzie King was quoted as saying that during his years as Leader of the Liberal party, in the final analysis he always had to depend on Quebec for his political support.

The Prime Minister suggested that his bilingual program was misunderstood and used by his opponents in a bigoted and unfair way. Mr. Speaker, bilingualism was a factor in western Canada, in my experience at least, but there were many more long standing grievances against the government. Bilingualism was only one of many, many grievances that people expressed. The bilingualism program was an intellectual solution to a very difficult problem. Language is always a divisive force in any nation or group, as often as is religion. In the total population of our country, there are very few bilingual people. To pick out of this small group 25,000 of the 300,000 civil servants who, just because they are bilingual, are to make the executive decisions for this country, will cause intense resentment on the part of those who are unilingual.

It is small wonder the western Canadian voter feels he is largely shut out of the decision making process of the government and that there is little likelihood of any of his representatives attaining a place in this area. It might be said they should accept bilingualism as being necessary for Canadian unity, but I doubt whether most unilingual individuals are willing to accept a second class citizenship because they happen to be unilingual. The farther away from Ottawa these people are, the more unpleasant the policy of bilingualism appears.

The Prime Minister stated there would be some modifications. With a little imagination, the language problem could be solved in a more acceptable manner. If this is to be a two-language country, it is obvious that Canadians must belong to one or the other of these two language groups. The use of the two languages in the civil service will allow both languages to be represented in a way which will correspond to their statistical numbers in the population. This will prevent injustices and imbalances occurring. It would be particularly useful to the minority language group to prevent undue discrimination, an event that could easily happen in the future.

The Prime Minister suggested that many Conservatives and their supporters were not sensitive to the problems of language, particularly as it pertains to Quebec and the separatists. The opposite to sensitivity is allergy. Many people in other parts of Canada are becoming increasingly allergic to this Quebec issue. Perhaps herein lies much of the danger to Canadian unity, probably more so than any other area. It is time to examine other methods of federalism to cope with our linguistic and economic problems.

This government achieved its most abject failure when, with our high rate of unemployment and rapid increase in the labour force, it failed to resolve our trade differences with our neighbour to the south, our largest trading partner. We have always had good relations with the Americans, but in this past 10 years we have seen a diminishing of good will. We all foresee that in the not too distant future there will be restrictions on the easy passage of commerce and people back and forth across the border.

It is difficult to feel that the resolution presented to the House last Friday will not be construed as unilateral censorship of the American bombing of North Viet Nam. We did not register a similar complaint when An Loc and Quangtri, two large cities in South Viet Nam, were razed last fall by Communist artillery. We did not raise any protest whatsoever. We do not know why President Nixon ordered the resumption of bombing, but a captured document indicates that the Viet Cong intended to start a reign of terror as soon as the cease fire came into effect.

There are 14 regular Viet Nam divisions that are ready to give the Viet Cong a helping hand in their task of plunging South Viet Nam into chaos. It seems likely that the president's demand and Hanoi's refusal that these divisions return home was one of the main reasons for the breakdown of the Paris talks. Despite such resolutions by this parliament, Canadians still expect the Americans to have no ill-will and no question of our right to have all possible privileges, and on the most friendly basis, in our relations with the United States. However, it seems unlikely that this sort of behaviour can continue without some reaction.

In a recent situation, Australian seamen imposed a union ban on United States shipping. This was promptly lifted when longshoremen on the U.S. coast refused to unload nine Australian ships carrying meat and wool, even though only two United States ships were involved. Two parties are always involved, and we have to remember this in our dealings with the United States.

The on-again, off-again auto pact talks have been with us for months. This government has made no progress in resolving our trade differences in almost two years. The world is dividing into giant trading blocs, such as the European, the Japanese and the Communist which, surprisingly, is demanding goods and even food from the west. The post-war ideal of free trade is being threatened by these three separate blocs. The other blocs, particularly the European Common Market, seem determined to discriminate against the North American continent. Both Canada and the United States face a world market which is hedged and bedevilled by trade barriers. Within the next two or three years, we will be faced with the protectionist follies of the 1930's.

Canada has her own peculiar problems. We lack a vast domestic market at home and are dependent on the single American market. We are even now affected by high unemployment. How is Canada to maintain its prosperity if the American market is damaged by protectionism? That sentiment is already being exhibited by a frightened congress. As Canada increasingly nourishes manufacturing industries by particular devices of its own, how can it avoid retaliation from the United States? We certainly have an example of this in the Michelin tire case where a United States agency assessed duty on tires because they were built in a plant which was given a DREE grant.

There is also the matter of our natural resources, particularly energy, and how much we will sell to the United States market. There are those who say we should not sell any, but this seems impractical in view of the fact that Canada itself must import energy and other raw materials.

In the past year, Canadian manufacturers have suffered a deterioration in their competitive position because of the appreciation of the Canadian dollar and the introduction of the DISC program. There has been a more fundamental and longer run adverse trend in Canadian manufacturing as far as competitiveness is concerned. The Canada-United States wage differential has narrowed considerably since 1960. All this indicates that the manufacturing industry in Canada, which we have been told so often must provide needed jobs for this decade, is facing a rather bleak future. The cooling of relations with Washington can only mean that our task will be more difficult in the future and Washington will increasingly disregard its counterpart in Ottawa. In the field of relations with Washington, this government has been most derelict.

I now wish to turn to the part of the throne speech that deals with small business. I am very glad this parliament has discovered the small businessman. In the four years that I have been here, this government has not done anything but pass legislation which did not help small businesses in any way. The throne speech indicated that small business has a great place in Canadian life. If this is so, I am sure the small businessman will be one of the first to say he has not had much recognition in the past. The tax structures and the ways of the modern economic system are fast driving him out of existence, yet it is almost the only way in which much of the rural areas of our country can produce and provide a living for their people. In the past four years, this government has shown little or no awareness of the small business, the small businessman and the small entrepreneur.

When speaking about small business, we must also consider agriculture which is almost wholly carried on in the small business context. It is still the basic industry of Canada. It is significant that even with the rise of food prices, the next cash income of farmers in 1972 will be less than in the previous year, 1971. I think the same will hold true for most other small businesses. The problem of small business in the past few years has been its inability to adjust to rising costs and wages, both of which have been rising considerably faster than the ability of small business to cope. By the time it has been able to adjust either by raising prices or increasing productivity, wages and costs have moved on to a new plateau. In the case of the farming industry, the unit prices have not changed appreciably in 20 years. Farmers have had to adjust by increased productivity and, at the same time we have seen an exodus of people from the farm working force to other industry. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) suggested to us what a great thing it is that the corporation tax on small manufacturing businesses is to be lowered from 25 per cent to 20 per cent. But it was 20 per cent under the old tax law, and it will be appreciated that very few small businesses will fall into the manufacturing and processing category.

Recent tax changes dealt a heavy blow to small business. In agriculture, the loss of the basic herd, straightline depreciation on machinery and capital gains tax are especially onerous. The tax changes in the recent act affecting small corporations such as the wiping out of the low tax rate on investment income will prevent the accumulation of money in the corporation for expansion. Small corporations must save money for a period of time before expanding.

The small business entrepreneur starting out finds himself in formidable difficulties. As well as attempting to compete, and build his business, he must hire a tax accountant to keep him out of trouble with National Revenue, otherwise, through some tax misfortune, he may face severe penalties and the possible loss of what he has accumulated. He also must comply with numerous regulations, laws and special requirements in order to meet various standards. All this detracts from his ability to manage his business. But the government will remedy this, they say, because they will provide consultants. Mr. Speaker, I do not think any small businessman will be thanking the government for sending men around to tell him how to run his business better.

It is difficult for small businessmen to procure the necessary capital, and I doubt if the Industrial Development Bank will be particularly helpful. It is generally considered by many small business people that if the government has to finance them, it is hardly worth being in business. There is a great reluctance on the part of most small business entrepreneurs to rely on government loans and government handouts. The problem of financing for the small businessman is that the pools of capital normally available in the past have dried up or else are out of his reach. The introduction of the pension plan and registered retirement plans has meant that, at least in small communities, most capital is siphoned off to the large cities and it is not practical to invest it in the place it came from.

Pension plans are now the largest investment factor in the market at the present time. The government's interest in small business is laudable, but one has to face the fact that the individual entrepreneur is not faring very well in the present day business world. Generally, those who would be successful small business people can command a good salary in the wage structure of the commercial world. In the early years of his life and of his family, this is a very important consideration. In later years, the prospect of capital gains and estate tax at the end of his career, makes being a small business entrepreneur not particularly attractive. The government will have to do much more than to advise small business or to attempt to borrow it into existence before there will be significant improvement in the small business position.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a word about inflation. At this time, with the rapid rise in prices, I would advise that we look at all our options to achieve price stability. New policy options should be introduced to achieve a faster rate of real growth and lower unemployment rates and yet establish a climate of price stability so necessary for the future. There should be a reduction in all federal sales and excise taxes. This would exert downward pressure on the price levels because it would be passed on to the customer; a sales tax cut has an expansionary effect on real consumer demands as it lowers prices. Incidence of sales tax bears most heavily on the lower income group, so sales tax cuts are the best means of distributing purchasing power to those with low incomes; they are far more effective than an income tax cut.

Those with fixed incomes, the unemployed and those who have borne the brunt of the anti-inflationary program, would benefit more from sales tax cuts than from income tax reductions. The impact of the decline in prices would be more significant than a cut in income tax. A sales tax cut would reduce government revenues, but economic expansion would be stimulated and part of the tax revenue loss would be recovered. A sales tax cut increases real income, reduces wage demands and has the most deflationary effect of any tax cut. It would have the added advantage of helping the lowest income group more than an income tax cut would. Of course, many other things ought to be done in conjunction with a policy to contain inflation.

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne was full of vague generalities. It can be interpreted to mean almost anything. We shall have to wait for specific legislation to be brought down before we can make any reasonable assessment of what the speech really means.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the encomiums which have been heaped on the heads of the presiding officers since this debate began have been fulsome indeed, and at this stage the repetition of those words of praise, even though sincere, might be somewhat ritualistic. Nevertheless, this debate does give us an opportunity to pay our respects to the president officers and to proclaim our devotion to the institution of the Speakership in the Canadian House of Commons.

Today, the speakership is a strong, vital and valuable institution. Without it, the House of Commons could not operate. The standing of the Speakership at the moment is due in part to the qualities of those who now hold the office and of those who have held the office in the past. It also derives in part from the standing which the Speaker enjoys arising from the fact that he is an elected member of the House; he comes to this House through the same process of election as all other hon. members. It has been suggested from time to time that an institution be created called a permanent Speakership, something which would involve the creation of a special House of Commons seat.

The Speaker would thus be relieved of the necessity of seeking election in an ordinary constituency. For my part, if any such innovation involved a device which eliminated the necessity for a Speaker or a potential Speaker running for election like other commoners, then I would be entirely opposed to it. In this view I am supported by opinions of two former Prime Ministers, the late Mr. Pearson, and of the present right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). Mr. Pearson, speaking in a debate in this House in 1965, and referring to the possibility I have mentioned, stated:

> This device would certainly transform the Speaker from being an equal with his fellow members over whose deliberations he presides, into—and I say this in no derogatory sense—some type of parliamentary functionary, and I suggest that the change might even reduce the prestige of your office.

• (1430)

Later in the same debate, in fact the following day, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) said:

> I do not believe in the principle that a constituency should be set up for the purpose of providing a Speaker. He would then cease to be the first commoner that he is because he would be there by choice and not election.

I believe the very fact that so many hon. members have paid sincere tributes to the presiding officers indicates that at the present time the Canadian Speakership is working very well indeed, and any changes probably would be in the wrong direction.

Mr. Speaker, you do make a very imposing figure in the Chair. Your physical presence is very imposing, and no less imposing is your fair mindedness, your studiousness and your friendliness. I congratulate you as the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) for having become the Deputy Speaker of this House of Commons. Your selection as Deputy Speaker from the ranks of the official opposition underlines the simple reality that if this House of minorities is to produce and deliver for the people of Canada it will require the co-operation of all the parties in the House of Commons, and that reality will exist whether this party or the party opposite happens to sit in the treasury benches.

The mover and seconder of the address in reply performed exceedingly well, despite the fact that they were competing for attention in an atmosphere of concern and tension in respect of the fate of the twenty-ninth parliament. Other new members on all sides of the House made impressive contributions to the debate and I congratulate them most warmly, as I do congratulate them on their election to the House of Commons.

May I refer in particular to the maiden speech of the hon. member for Kingston and The Islands (Miss MacDonald) who pleased us all with her historical perception in a well delivered speech. She comes to the House of Commons well endowed. She is a Cape Bretoner and a MacDonald. As she pointed out, the first member for Kingston was a Macdonald, a Conservative like herself. In the intervening years, the Macdonald presence was further felt in Kingston by the representation of that historic city in the House of Commons by the late Angus L. Macdonald, a former Premier of Nova Scotia who, when he served Kingston, was the Minister of Naval Services in the Mackenzie King administration.

Of course, he succeeded the late Norman McLeod Rogers who represented Kingston, another distinguished Nova Scotian who met his untimely death in the service of his country. The late Angus L. was a great political figure in his day and a friend of a number of us presently in the House of Commons. He was certainly a friend and political competitor of the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). He had just about everything. He was a Cape Bretoner, a Macdonald and a Liberal.

The hon. member for Kingston and The Islands bears the name of a Scottish heroine whose memory still lives because of her bravery in several historic episodes, but especially for her ingenuity in planning the escape from the English searchers of Prince Charles Edward Stuart known in history as "Bonnie Prince Charlie". Dr. Johnson, and I am not referring to Dr. James Johnson, who will be well known to the hon. member for Kingston and The Islands, but Dr. Samuel Johnson wrote about the original Flora during his tour of the Hebrides in 1772 saying that "Flora MacDonald is a name that will be mentioned in history, and if courage and self-sacrifice be virtues, mentioned with honour." Of course, his prediction was fulfilled for, if you travel in Scotland today, you will find memorials in Inverness, Skye and Uist, dedicated to the original Flora MacDonald.

May I make a prediction today, Mr. Speaker, à la Samuel Johnson. My prediction is that the hon. member for Kingston and The Islands, the modern, perceptive Flora MacDonald, will bring in our day added lustre to the old name and the old clan, and will deserve a secure place in our political history, though I hasten to add that I doubt whether such an outcome will excite the enthusiasm of the right hon. member for Prince Albert.

Mr. Fairweather: Is this a proposal?

Mr. MacEachen: May I now turn to a less agreeable subject, namely the current parliamentary situation. I suppose parliamentary maturity, like personal maturity, is to accept what comes of an election and to make the best of circumstances as we find them. Certainly no member of the House of Commons wished that the election results would be just what they are. In fact, the results were not wished upon us by ourselves, they were imposed upon us by the will of the Canadian people. Our job, inconvenient as it may be for some or all of us, is to accept the situation and to work within it as well as we can.

The NDP, the Social Credit party and the government itself have all fully accepted the results of the election and have declared their intention of doing their best to work within this parliament in order that parliament itself can work on behalf of the people of Canada. The government has accepted its responsibility of presenting a legislative program and the NDP and the Social Credit party have accepted the responsibility of examining that program and accepting or rejecting it on its merits. Absent from this acceptance of the present situation is the official opposition.

I have examined the speeches of the Leader of the Opposition, the hon. member for Peace River and the right hon. member for Prince Albert and nowhere do I find any indication that either of those hon. gentlemen is ready to accept the results of the election, let alone decide to work constructively within this House for the welfare of the people of Canada. They who accused this government of arrogance on every possible occasion have shown the greatest possible arrogance themselves by saying the results of the election are not for them and the twenty-ninth parliament is not their bag at all. The result is, of course, displeasing to them. They have made no commitment to make parliament work. They have no desire to prolong the life of this parliament. In my opinion, they have no desire, even if they did form a government, to place a legislative program before the House of Commons. The plan of the official opposition is absolutely clear from their conduct, and from their speeches since the session began.

• (1440)

Mr. Fraser: Your plan is quite clear.

Mr. MacEachen: Their plan was to propose, as they did, a non-confidence motion against the government, in the fervent expectation that that motion would be accepted and the government would fall. But having put the non-confidence motion before the House, they then hesitated before the full effect of that motion could be dealt with, and proposed a motion that the House adjourn.

Mr. Stanfield: No, no—the debate.

Mr. MacEachen: That ham-handed effort—Mr. Speaker, I thank the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). The motion was that the debate adjourn. That was certainly a departure from the plan. We took the attitude that the first duty of the government was not to present a legislative program but to secure and test the confidence of the House. That was the attitude taken by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) when he faced a minority House in October, 1957.

At that time the then Leader of the Opposition refused to put a non-confidence motion. The then Prime Minister, now the right hon. member for Prince Albert, was so upset because it transgressed parliamentary propriety and might deny him the opportunity of seeking the confidence of the House, that he complained. Indeed, he complained in a number of ways. As a matter of fact, I find his comments on that day quite useful.

Mr. Hees: You will find them useful on a lot of other days, too.

Mr. MacEachen: Now, he has a changed attitude. At that time, speaking about Mr. St. Laurent, who was the Leader of the Opposition, he said, as recorded at page 48 of Hansard for October 16, 1957:

> I could not quite follow him in the attitude that he took all the way through his speech. It was an attitude of criticism—sometimes captious criticism—this was wrong, that was wrong—

Can you imagine how the right hon. gentleman has changed, from the moment that he found criticism was wrong, until the speech that he made in the House the other day?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: However, he went on to say, and this is the point I want to draw to the attention of hon. members opposite:

> If everything that is being presented is wrong or subject to criticism, why not do that which under ordinary circumstances would be the proper attitude to adopt? Why not permit a vote to take place regarding that matter which above all others is of the first consideration, whether or not we do enjoy the confidence of the House of Commons?

That sound principle, like many of the policies which the right hon. gentleman advocated, has been abandoned by the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). He sought to interrupt a debate on a non-confidence motion and asked the government to present legislation—a government in which he had no confidence. What parliamentary folly is that!

So frustrated were hon. members opposite when the House seized the opportunity to defeat the official opposition, that some of them interpreted that procedural vote as a vote against old age pensions.

Mr. Baldwin: So it was.

Mr. MacEachen: What frustration!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. MacEachen: One of them said, referring to the government, "They stood in opposition to immediate relief for the old people of Canada". Another hon. member said, "They are voting against the consideration of old age pensions at this time." What a strange interpretation to be made in that frenzy of disappointment. Of course, what drove them up the wall was that the House itself refused to co-operate with them in their objective of bringing this parliament to a quick end, because that was their purpose, to bring down the government, to move over here, and then dissolve and have a quick election.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. MacEachen: There is no sense to their speeches. The Leader of the Opposition made a long speech. He did not say, "We must make this parliament work". He did not say, "I have a program." He did not turn to the Social Credit or to the NDP and say, "Members of this House, I have a better program than the Speech from the Throne."

Mr. Hees: That was obvious in the election itself.

Mr. MacEachen: All he said was, "They stole my program. It's stolen goods. It's grand larceny". This government, Mr. Speaker, is in the wonderful position, the enviable position, of being accused by both the NDP and the Conservative party of having expropriated their programs. The only difference is that the NDP is honest enough to give the House an opportunity to deal with its expropriated program, while the official opposition has no alternative to offer. Up to the moment, it is asking for the confidence of all hon. members but it has not told us what program it wishes to bring forward.

The official opposition did not tell us its pension program. It only wanted to stop the House, stop the clock, stop parliament and deal with pensions. But, I repeat, no speaker in the ranks of the official opposition has yet stated what their position is on old age pensions. Where do they stand? Is it the position that the Leader of the Opposition took during the election campaign, or is it a new position? What is their program if it is better than the expropriated program in the Speech from the Throne? The House did not co-operate. Why should it co-operate with the political ambitions of the Conservative party to form a government, dissolve parliament, and hold a mid-winter election without putting any program before the House?

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Nowlan: That's hocus-pocus.

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member for Peace River has said in his speech, "Let us not listen to government proposals. Let us not find out what they have in mind. We know all about them because they have been in the government for a number of years." Mr. Speaker, in case any of the members of the Social Credit or the NDP are tempted to place the official opposition over here may I refer to a number of their accomplishments and achievements in the past.

Take the question of unemployment, now before the House in the form of a non-confidence motion moved by the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) who, in his statesmanlike appeal for support for his party, called the NDP fakers and charlatans. Are those the words of a party that wants the House of Commons to work, that wants to prolong the life of parliament?

Mr. Baldwin: Was he that moderate?

Mr. MacEachen: Today we are being asked by the hon. member for South Shore to deny confidence to the government because of its bad record on unemployment. We all know the facts about the present unemployment figures, and there really is not much consolation in telling the House that the performance of the government in the field of unemployment is much better than the performance of the last Conservative government under the leadership of the right hon. member for Prince Albert.

• (1450)

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Baldwin: You have the highest record of unemployment today.

Mr. MacEachen: The highest point of unemployment came in January, 1961. The highest absolute number of unemployed occurred in that month when it reached 690,000.

Mr. Nowlan: That was five elections ago.

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, five elections ago, and now the same crowd of people are asking to become the government of this country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacEachen: There were 690,000 unemployed persons at that time.

Mr. Baldwin: How about 1896?

Mr. MacEachen: I know my hon. friend has rejected the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), but I did not expect him to do it openly in the House of Commons. That number of unemployed, 690,000, was the highest in this country. It has never been reached under the administration of this government. Last month the figures were high enough at 584,000, but in the meantime the Canadian labour force has grown from six and a half million to almost nine million.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: How was inflation then, and what was the cost of living?

Mr. MacEachen: Our performance, on any comparison, is distinctly better than anything that could be offered by that group of persons opposite if they formed a government.

Mr. Baldwin: Why don't you say "nobodies"?

Mr. MacEachen: If the Leader of the Opposition formed the government, he would have about the same group of men around him, the same administrators. The former and potential minister of trade and commerce is right in front of us in potentia, and so is the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) who was associated with the former government. They might say that the Leader of the Opposition is new, that he was not part of that crowd. He was an acquiescent and quiescent supporter of the former right hon. gentleman in those years when unemployment in the Atlantic provinces ran consistently higher than it has done this year or in any year of Liberal administration. He did everything in the election of 1963 to put his "friend of high unemployment" back in office as the prime minister of Canada. Perhaps we have new blood in the person of the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) and new blood in the person of the hon. member for Saint Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner)—these recycled Grits who have now come to sit on the Conservative benches. I would suggest that if this House wants Liberalism it would prefer it in a pure rather than a corrupted form.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: The old group has the stench of decay.

Mr. MacEachen: They weep about pensions. It is hard to believe but when this crowd was in office the last time they left the old age security benefit at $65. They had been six years in office.

Mr. Hees: Tell us about six buck Harris.

Mr. MacEachen: That goes back seven elections.

Mr. Hees: Tell us all about the six buck boys.

Mr. MacEachen: They left the old age pension at $65, in April of 1973 the maximum GIS will be $156.75. Compare that performance, allowing the pensions to remain at such a low level, with the performance of the Liberal government under the former prime minister and under the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). The House of Commons is asked to vote for that crown and to put them in office in the light of that performance and in the light of their failure to tell us what they propose to do.

Mr. Hees: Tell us when six buck Harris raised it to $46.

Mr. MacEachen: I am sorry that the right hon. member for Prince Albert is not in his seat.

Mr. Forrestall: You should be glad that he is not.

Mr. MacEachen: He is familiar with those years about which I have been speaking because it was in those years that he became so familiar with the practice of bundling about which he showed such a complete grasp in his notable discourse last week. In the 1962-63 parliament we were all here and we watched the great bundling that occurred between the right hon. gentleman and the Social Credit group in the House of Commons. That was an honourable course, so the prime minister of the day told us. It was honourable to prolong the life of parliament, and in order to prolong it he sought and received the support of the Social Credit party.

Mr. Hees: He did not seek it and he did not receive it, and you know it. Tell the truth, Allan. It is a poor speech but at least tell the truth.

Mr. MacEachen: The Social Credit party prolonged the life of that government in every vote except on motions it moved itself, and it did so consistently until February 4, 1963.

Mr. Hees: Tell us about the time when you supported funny money.

Mr. MacEachen: It was on that fateful day—

Mr. Hees: Do you remember that day? That was a fine, honourable vote, was it not?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the minister but the time allotted to him has expired. It can be extended with unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, according to our previous practice the minister would be allowed another five or ten minutes to finish his remarks, and that would be agreeable at this time, but we would not want this to go on all day long.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The minister has been given extended time.

Mr. Hees: Give us five more minutes on six buck Harris and the funny money vote. You were so proud of them in those days.

Mr. MacEachen: I must say I have not been receiving very much co-operation from the opposition in making this address, but I did think it was important to mention that history just did not begin with the opening of the twenty-ninth parliament, that we have had a minority situation before. We had a minority situation in 1962 and 1963. The government of the right hon. member for Prince Albert survived with the support of the Social Credit group until February 4, 1963 when between six and eight o'clock, the then leader of the Social Credit party changed his mind. What happened? I will tell you what happened.

The right hon. member for Prince Albert let him fall out of bed between six and eight o'clock that night and he changed his vote. Before six o'clock he said, "An election in Canada precipitated at this time by the events of the last three days and carrying an anti-American overtone would be a tragedy for Canada". That was before six o'clock, Mr. Speaker. After eight o'clock he moved a subamendment.

• (1500)

Mr. Fairweather: That was before you got to him.

Mr. MacEachen: That brought down the government of the day and, mind you—

Mr. Hees: What is all this proving?

Mr. MacEachen: It is proving a number of things.

Mr. Hees: Just give me one. Come on, let's have one thing that this is proving. You know it is not proving anything except that you are on cloud nine.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, it simply proves that what was then honourable in the mind of the right hon. member for Prince Albert today is ignoble because he is not the beneficiary of the support of members of the House that kept him in office in those days. It is instructive in another way—

Mr. Hees: Watch your voice, Allan; you are getting excited. Don't let your voice break like that. Think of your health.

Mr. MacEachen: It is instructive in another way, Mr. Speaker, because the other day the right hon. member for Prince Albert talked about "monstrous constitutional doctrines".

Mr. Fairweather: They have been modified over the week-end.

Mr. MacEachen: He is obviously drawing a lot on his own career. He was defeated on that night of February 5. He had called parliament the preceding September but did not sit all those days because there was a fairly long adjournment and his government fell on February 5. He had been sustained on about eight substantive motions that involved confidence but as I recollect, he did not, when he lost, resign. He did not say, "I am through"; he went to Government House and got a dissolution. When the then Leader of the New Democratic Party spoke that night he ended by saying, "Let the people decide"; the then leader of the Social Credit party said, "Let the people decide" and the right hon. gentleman got his dissolution and went to the people.

The thought that any Prime Minister today would contemplate the possibility of dissolution sends the right hon. gentleman almost into hysterics.

Mr. Bell: You would not say that if he were here.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, they have talked about Sir John A. Macdonald. We heard in the dulcet tones of the hon. member for Kingston and The Islands (Miss MacDonald) that he was the father of our country and the father of the Conservative party. We know what happened from 1867 to 1873, or whatever the dates are. Sir John A. Macdonald lost nine votes in this House—he lost them on supply, he lost them on money bills, he lost them on important government legislation, including a tariff measure; he lost them on all these things but he did not resign. When it is suggested that the present government might accept a defeat and not resign it is called a "monstrous doctrine". That is the theology of the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert.

I remember reading at one time—

Mr. Hees: Are you going even farther back?

Mr. MacEachen: No. I am not. I remember reading at one time—

An hon. Member: King Charles lost his head.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the interruptions of the hon. gentleman are becoming offensive.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: I would like him to please refrain from further interruptions while I am making this speech.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: If you can't stand the heat, you had better get out of the kitchen.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, it is not the heat I am worried about it is the lack of light coming from the other side.

I remember reading a biography of Sir John A. Macdonald, the father of our country, in which it was stated that at one of his meetings a supporter, overcome with emotion, got up and said to him, "Sir John, you will never die". Mr. Speaker, he may still live in this House of Commons. As we quote some of these precedents created by the father of our country, as we find our way through this difficult minority government, we will not hesitate to lean on those precedents in order to meet situations as we find them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: There is nothing dishonourable or monstrous about that.

Mr. Hees: Allan, have you seen a doctor lately?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I noted the words of the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis). He said, "Our votes are available only upon delivery"; he said, "We take a COD policy". I interpret that to mean "confidence on delivery". In this world in which we live, I am prepared to accept the brutal consequences of that brutal statement.

In the Speech from the Throne we have put before the House a series of proposals that up to the present have enjoyed the confidence of the House. We intend to deliver on these proposals.

Mr. Forrestall: You had better. We will kick you out of bed if you don't.

Mr. MacEachen: We intend to deliver and bring forward our legislative program in a way that will continue to justify the confidence of a majority of members of this House of Commons. But remember this: we in this party represent a historic party. We have integrity, we have identity, and in seeking our way through this minority House we do not intend to deform the integrity or identity of our party position, nor do we expect any other party to deform its integrity or its identity. We will work through this House of Commons week by week, and day by day to introduce a legislative program.

I want to say especially to members of the Social Credit party and the New Democratic Party that we cannot be expected to waive the normal procedures of parliament and the normal procedures of government merely to stay in office. We will bring in a budget when it is possible and when it is normal. We cannot bring it in tomorrow or an hour before a demanded time simply because there is an atmosphere of tension and uncertainty in the House. We cannot do impossible things, but one of our major commitments to the House was that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) in his budget would bring forward major new fiscal and other measures to deal responsively and effectively with our most pressing economic and social problems.

Mr. Hees: Bully for you!

Mr. MacEachen: That budget will be brought forward and the House will have an opportunity, in due course, to deal with it and to decide whether it has the confidence of a majority of members. We have committed ourselves to bringing in new programs in the field of small business—alleged to be stolen goods! We have committed ourselves through managerial assistance and through amendments to the industrial development bank to assist with new programs for the business community. We have indicated our intention of bringing in an improved foreign takeovers bill and we have indicated our intention, through the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), to consider major directions in consultation with the provinces in our social security system. The minister has already committed himself to a substantial increase in old age pensions.

The Minister for Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) has indicated to the House that those programs will be changed and remodelled in certain ways in order to bring about the decentralization of decision-making and to improve co-ordination. The minister responsible for urban affairs and housing has brought before the House a very ambitious new program involving hundreds of millions of dollars. It projects changes to the National Housing Act that will provide more help for Canadians to buy houses.

Hon. members opposite are asking, "What is your legislative priority?" I have asked the opposition House leaders to make suggestions. We will bring forward a program just as quickly as we can complete the debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, which will be concluded tomorrow night hopefully, or Wednesday night. Then we will proceed with items on the order paper. We will try to deal responsibly with the conflicting demands on the time of the House. We shall deal with economic issues and other matters, including supply, which must be dealt with by the House. At least, the House must be given an opportunity to deal with that question. Then, there is the all-important issue of capital punishment. We will balance all this and present a program to the House. The government has declared its intention in the Speech from the Throne, and in speeches made by ministers, that it is prepared to produce a program to put before the House and to accept the consequences of a minority situation. We intend to live up to our side of the commitment. In this case, the government will pose and the House will dispose. Those are the rules of the game that I fully and enthusiastically accept and under which I wish to work.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I, as previous hon. members have done, express my appreciation of your election as Speaker of the House and say how glad I am to see Your Honour once again undertaking former duties. In my speech this afternoon I want to talk to some extent about farmers and agriculture. First, I want to make a few general comments about the Speech from the Throne which is, I suppose one might say, a declaration of intent on the part of the government. The government has laid out its view of the Canadian economy and of the situation of the Canadian people at this time. The throne speech refers to the needs of the Canadian people and of those things that need to be corrected. It covers much ground and much of that cannot be dealt with at once. I suppose, as is often the case in the affairs of man, we will need patience in the matter. I think that many in Canada may not have as much patience as some of us here have.

Let me note some of those items that are mentioned in the Speech. There is access to foreign markets. Grain exports are expected to grow. There is a commitment to job expansion. Capital works projects are mentioned. It is about time they were recognized. According to the throne speech special attention will be given to the four western provinces. There is a reference to a meeting to be held between the governments of those provinces and the federal government. That will be good for the medium and long term. There is also a proposal, already before the House, to examine food prices and how those prices are affecting the Canadian people. We are told that those prices have increased by 5 per cent in the past year. The one thing I want to do, Mr. Speaker, is keep a few things in perspective.

The other day the oil companies, that is those which refine our fuel, in concert announced a 2 cent per gallon increase in the price of diesel fuel. That represents an 8 per cent increase in one of the most important inputs affecting the operation of the grain farmer of western Canada and of the other farmers across Canada. I noticed that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) showed a good deal of equanimity when he was questioned in the House the other day on this subject. He did not seem to be bothered because this extra charge was to be visited on the food producers and, indeed, the general public of this country. It was no great concern of his.

I was first elected to this House in 1968. Between 1968 and 1972, Gulf Oil discontinued its refinery operations in Saskatoon. Imperial Oil is now about ready to completely discontinue the operation of its refinery in Regina. Perhaps that move has already been completed. Mr. Speaker, as a Member of Parliament representing Saskatoon, I protested against the discontinuance of the refinery operation there, partly because that action would take away from Saskatoon many relatively well paying jobs, because after all the petroleum industry is one of the better paying industries, and partly because that industry was developed in Saskatoon without any DREE grants, special assistance or anything like that. Like the co-operative refinery in Regina, it grew and developed by raising its own capital. When I and some officials in Saskatoon inquired why the Imperial oil operation was being discontinued, the answer we were given was that the move would result in greater efficiency. In so many words, the answer we were given was "Never mind, you small town boys; you do not know what this is all about. We will close down this operation and create a big refinery somewhere else, and the result will be greater efficiency." What is the result of that efficiency now, Mr. Speaker? The result is another 2 cents per gallon on the price of diesel fuel. That increase, as I said before, the minister responsible viewed with a good deal of equanimity. Let me tell him that the people in Saskatchewan do not view it with equanimity. There are people in Saskatchewan now who are saying that if the oil industry of Canada cannot do better than that, we had better nationalize it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gleave: You do not have to be an out and out socialist to find that the performance of the oil companies is entirely unacceptable. You need not be anything but an ordinary farmer who is getting doggone tired of being gouged. That is all. So, Mr. Speaker, I do not think you need look too far to fathom the reason for the shortage of fuel oil in the United States. Those in responsible positions have decided it is more important to bomb North Viet Nam than to heat the United States.

• (1520)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gleave: We in this country should not have to pay extra money for fuel oil for that reason. The people of the United States can decide their priorities. They are a sovereign nation as are we. They decide their priorities and we should decide our priorities. Our priorities should be an efficient refining system which passes on some of the benefits of increased productivity and increased efficiency to the consumers of this country. The farmers are a large part of the consuming public.

The fertilizer manufacturers have announced that they intend to get their pound of flesh shortly. In an article in the Globe and Mail, there is a report by Mr. R. R. Baxter informing the United Co-operatives of Ontario that there will not be sufficient fertilizer next spring. I am sure the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) knows of the United Co-operatives of Ontario. If there is any other message in that article except that the price of fertilizer will be increased, I would like to know it. The signals are out. The notice is being given.

The price of fertilizer was also increased last spring. I received correspondence from farmers at that time. I asked the then Minister of Agriculture if some action could be taken to deal with this increase in price and whether there was sone kind of combine or a monopoly administering prices. The answer I received was "No, there is nobody in this chicken-house except us chickens. There is nothing wrong here, boys. There is no combine and nobody is getting together to set prices. Everything is open and above board." I expect that the same reply will be given this time if anyone should ask. Anyone who expects the price of food to go down at a time when the oil companies are increasing the price of fuel to the farmer and the fertilizer companies are getting ready to increase their prices is just whistling "Dixie". You can bet your life the farm machinery companies will not be far behind.

An hon. Member: They are away out in front.

Mr. Gleave: They are probably away out in front. I am pleased that the federal government will be getting together with the governments of the western provinces to determine what can be done in western Canada. I would be even more pleased if the Minister of Agriculture or the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) could tell us in the very near future what they intend to do about these immediate problems. I would be pleased also if the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) could tell us what the government intends doing about a decent transportation system. He does not have to wait until the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) meets with the western provinces. All he has to do is talk to Mr. Benson, the man the government put in charge of the Canadian Transport Commission a short while ago. A better idea yet would be to pick up the phone, fire him, and put someone else in that position.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gleave: We in the grain business know that our ability to export is limited by the kind of transport made available to move grain. I referred to the article which mentioned the increase in the price of fertilizer. The limiting factor on the fertilizer companies' ability to supply will depend on their ability to receive shipments of potash and make shipments of fertilizer. We in this country are very dependent on transportation. We realize that our transportation facilities are not adequate to meet the needs of this country.

If there is one thing Canadians know how to do, it is to build railroads and rolling stock. We build and sell locomotives. Apparently no one in power is willing to tell the CNR and CPR to provide their services to the people who require them. It is about time somebody did this.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gleave: I received a letter from the Canadian Telecommunications Union. They complained that approximately 200 of their number were being laid off. They also noted that Saturday service in the city of Prince Albert will be cut. Apparently we can no longer afford to have telegraphic service on Saturdays in a city the size of Prince Albert. The government fouled up the Saturday delivery of mail, and now the railroads are fouling up Saturday service by the telegraphic system. In the same letter, it was pointed out that two jobs would be lost in the Saskatoon office. In due time there will probably be days when the offices in Saskatoon will be closed. What is the matter with Canadians that we permit this kind of nonsense. It is about time we became more realistic about looking at the needs of agriculture. I have referred to the cost side and also the fact that we need a more adequate transportation system.

It is stated in the throne speech that the government is going to set up an equitable pricing system for grain and livestock. I do not know what genius is at work on that. The government also says there will be an efficient and timely movement of grain. I am in favour of that. It is also stated in the throne speech, and I quote:

> The Government supports the principle of an equitable relationship of prices of feed grain to livestock feeders in various areas of Canada.

I suppose the government intends to take some action, but I want to make myself perfectly clear. As far as I am concerned, the Canadian Wheat Board is the bargaining agent for the western farmer for wheat, oats and barley. Anyone or any government that proposes to take away that bargaining power or interfere with the right of the Canadian Wheat Board to price those commodities as it sees fit in its day-to-day judgment will receive the undivided opposition of members in this party who represent farm areas. When I see the gobbledygook in that statement, I am rather suspicious. I would prefer to have the objectives set out in plain and simple language such as an ordinary farmer can understand.

• (1530)

We are not carried away by the present grain situation. At the present time, worldwide, we find a situation which one would have to go back a long while in history to match. We are at a period when drought has caused crop failure in Russia, next to China the largest wheat producer in the world, also in India and in Australia, which are the other major producers in addition to Canada and the United States. At the same time that drought has been experienced in Indonesia in the rice area, floods occurred in the Philippines. A world wide shortage of grain arises automatically from such a situation. There is, besides, pressure on other foodstuffs—oilseeds and proteins generally.

The biggest stress will always be on transportation. The farmer is a realist. He does not expect the present situation to last forever, anymore than he expected the situation where large amounts were in storage in the late sixties to last forever. About the only true thing one learns about the grain industry worldwide is that is is unpredictable.

Those who observe it for any length of time know they have to swing with the changes in productivity and demand. So, what we need is a policy which will meet such a situation. This hinges on transportation and storage just as much as on production. We hope that in the present session of parliament the government will come forward with a storage policy comprehensive enough that the farmer may look forward with confidence to adequate service in this field and in transportation. These are the areas in which we have suffered, mainly.

The government has also promised to take a look at storage policy in western Canada. If they were to rely to some extent on the advice given them by those who build and operate the co-operative systems they might be able to come up with a rational plan for change in the system without wrecking it in the process. I get scared when I hear some experts talking about collecting the grain in 80 elevators, trucking it into the terminals and then hauling it out again by rail.

An hon. Member: Better not try it.

Mr. Gleave: We must be concerned about preserving a viable farm industry. I do not think any nation has been better served than Canada when it comes to food production, in terms of both supply and price.

Mr. Whelan: Quality, too.

Mr. Gleave: The days of cheap land are over. We have occupied it all. The days of cheap labour for the farmer are over, and this House, as well as all those responsible for policy making, had better recognize that fact. The most valuable part of the farm scene at this time, next to the land itself, are the people who know how to operate a farm and how to use the land. And there are not too many of them. There are not enough. The small farm development legislation which the government devised last session is not properly designed to meet the needs of land transfer in this country. It is designed to enlarge farms, and within its limits, those who have managerial ability and who can gather together sufficient capital will be able to take advantage of it. But the real problem for farmers is in the area of labour, the cost of land and the cost of money. There is only one province which is trying to devise a means of transfer which will not keep the farm population permanently in hock, and that is Saskatchewan. I say this even though Saskatchewan is my own province. But the federal government has up to this point refused to co-operate with the province in implementing that scheme.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Gleave: They are willing to sign up as far as their own plan is concerned, but not with the Saskatchewan one. Yet this is an area which, if it is not dealt with today, will have to be met next year or the year after.

I wanted to put some of these views before the House this afternoon. There are other questions, too, which will have to be dealt with. We are trying, as a country, to feel our way through, for example, a new marketing plan for the marketing of poultry. We are striking out on somewhat new lines, finding new ways of doing things. And I suppose we will encounter certain pitfalls. But the only man I know who never succeeded in doing anything wrong was the man who never tried anything. As long as nothing new happens to him he is alright, but if anything new happens he is in serious trouble.

Finally, there is the whole question of transportation. I plead with all those who are responsible to take a fresh look at the proposals to abandon branch lines on the wholesale scale now proposed. I have looked at some of the plans—for example the one involving Rosthern at the north end of my constituency, the line from Langham to Laird and Carlton, and so on. If we let the railways take up the rails then we are looking at a different rail system from the one we have now. The thinking of the MacPherson Commission is out of date. I suggest it is hopelessly out of date. This commission sat for some time and then said to the people of Canada: "If you want to get the answer to the railways system, rely on competition". In western Canada competition between railways does not really exist. If it did exist in a pure economic sense, one or the other of the two railroads would be broke. This is a basic theory of competition. If competition goes on long enough the weakest competitor will be pushed to the wall. One system would go broke and the other would run the total rail system. This has not happened because full competition does not exist. The ideas of the MacPherson commission are out of date and they should be discarded.

What we should be looking at today is the use of energy. We are being told the amount of energy is limited. Energy, if it is wasted, will certainly run out but it is limited even if it is used properly. I am sure that if someone studied this whole question of transporting grain, he would find that in terms of energy the cheapest way to get grain out of these areas where branch lines exist is by rail. You need one locomotive and a string of boxcars, and this would require the least energy. If we disregard the desire of the CPR for profit, it can be established that this method of transportation is the cheapest per ton mile. If we are foolish enough to allow the railway companies to tear up lines, and we then build roads and buy trucks I suggest we are losing our marbles. If you want to help the people of western Canada I suggest that this whole matter be placed on the agenda for consideration at the meeting with the western provinces. These are the things we are concerned about in the west.

We could go on and refer to things like pollution. I suggest we would have less pollution if we hauled this grain by rail rather than by truck. The suggestion in the throne speech in respect of the government picking up half the cost of crop insurance is a good one. Up to now crop insurance has not been able to cope with disasters in areas such as the Peace River which is suffering a severe crop loss at this moment. Crop insurance has not been able to cope with such disasters because, in large areas of the country, the farmers have not bought it. One might ask why they have not bought it. The answer is that it did not pay enough in relation to the cost and they could not afford the premiums.

If there is to be an insurance scheme which will meet the needs of those involved in disasters, and they are bound to occur across the country, this is a start in the right direction. I do not know whether the new proposals will be adequate. I suppose we would have to obtain actuarial figures before we would know. Because of the nature of the climate in Canada, whether you are growing potatoes in Prince Edward Island or wheat in Saskatchewan, insurance has to be such that it can compensate for losses in times of major disasters. I suppose the only area in Canada which is not subject to these difficulties to a large degree is the area of southern or southwestern Ontario. The people in those areas enjoy the best climate and growing season in Canada. If this measure meets the requirements for an adequate crop insurance program, we will have made some progress.

[Translation]

Miss Monique Bégin (Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, in my turn, I wish to pay hommage to you as Speaker of this House and add my good wishes to those of my colleagues.

[English]

May I ask you to extend my sincere congratulations to the Deputy Speaker, the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) and the officers of the House, and I am not forgetting the hon. member for Stormont-Dundas (Mr. Lamoureux).

[Translation]

As a newcomer to parliamentary life, and if the old-timers do not scorn too much such newcomers as myself, perhaps they will be interested in the naïve observations of a woman who has yet to get used to the rather belligerent games which honorable members at times allow themselves to play. I was rather flabbergasted, during last week's debate on the resolution for peace in Viet Nam, by the calm assertion of the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) that women brought about the war in Vietnam just as they did many other wars. To my mind, if some would reflect on belligerence, which the dictionary defines as the love of war, they have a subject of reflection right at hand.

Indeed, instead of taking the House as the voters have seen fit to return it, and of making the best of it to govern the country, some members of the opposition, it seems to me, have nothing better to do than to seek to prove that this chamber is not perfect. Are we to believe that the Progressive Conservatives have invented new mathematics to reduce a value to a lower one?

• (1550)

[English]

As a neophyte, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that I feel closer to the simple Canadian citizen. I share the psychology of the man on the street rather than the habits and traditions of this very sophisticated assembly. I wish we would be practical. I wish we could leave aside sterile disputes and artificial debates in order to work for the betterment of the Canadian society in terms of social justice and economic prosperity.

[Translation]

In fact, all that work has to be done: administer $31 billion and manage a country that is young, vast and complex, on behalf of 21.5 million inhabitants. The office of Member of Parliament is not, as I have often heard it described, a more or less honorary one. It is a full-time job, with no overtime pay. I have the honour and the weighty responsibility to represent here the most densely populated riding in Quebec, the riding of Saint-Michel, for the sole purpose of participating in that work.

The men and women I represent here, Mr. Speaker, are ordinary people. I represent 150,000 of them. Some came to lose themselves in the anonymity of a big city from different parts of the province of Quebec. Others came from the heart of Montreal, pushing a little more to the north-east, and tens of thousands of others came and are still coming from Southern Europe and about every part of the world, to build a future for themselves and their families in Canada. They are those to whom I must render some account and they will not be satisfied with words. Concrete action will be necessary to prove to them that the $18 million paid each year by the treasury to enable Parliament to operate really serve the taxpayers. This is the joint responsibility and the work of each and every member.

In the legislative program proposed in the Speech from the Throne, the constituents of Saint-Michel will be pleased to note a number of corrective and improvements or new programs which answer their concern and their idea of a more just society where parents hope their children will be happy. Needless to say, I fully approve the two prime objectives stated in the Speech from the Throne. As a new member, allow me to point out in the second part of my speech certain points which seem important to me and about which I would like to make the following comments. I do not deny the extent of the economic problems; many of my colleagues have talked about them, and as we work as a team, I will talk about other matters.

The views of constituents of all ages about national unity have particularly impressed me during the many meetings and discussions of my first election campaign. The search and the need for a feeling of national unity are undeniable. Complaints of lack of tolerance and, indeed, of friendship between the various communities comprising our country, were voiced many, many times. But I do not despair about our common future, because I also witnessed in my constituency amazing examples of true mutual help.

Ignorance and fear of the unknown are at the root of many misunderstandings which sometimes degenerate into fierce struggles and shame us. Many exchange and work group programs for young people are now offered by various departments which allow for the formation of personal ties of friendship between the French and English communities in Canada.

But what better than radio and television can give each individual the idea of what he is, the wish to exist by himself and the emotion of having things in common? You may think that it is futile to refer to this paragraph in particular of the Speech from the Throne announcing a national communications policy. I do not think so because

I know, as do many other citizens, that the messages that wash over us, a little more each day, from the mass media, as they are called, have unsuspected consequences for the future of the country. Radio and television programs affect us in a sly way which we cannot control. For instance, everyone talks about pollution. Lakes, rivers, forests, towns, the air, everything is polluted, but what about mental pollution? Like the other forms of pollution, it is involuntary; it seems to be an unfortunate result of our economic production system of maximum profit at minimum cost. Two efforts appear to be urgent in the broadcasting industry: first, a coordinated effort to develop Canadian creative talent in all areas—records, books, films, the theater—that supply broadcasting as an industry which is worth $1.2 billion by a conservative estimate, and second, an effort to define responsibility to the public as regards freedom of expression. We in Canada are proud to treat freedom of expression with the greatest of respects but the people cannot accept this to be a one-way privilege. In other words, Canadians have access to an ever-increasing number of programs, but what is being offered to them?

We could, for instance, show them the House in action. But enough of this impertinence! I would now like to say, in passing, a word about showing our debates on television. Canadians might get the impression of taking a more active part in the federal government if they knew more about its machinery, and televising parliamentary proceedings would no doubt help to reach that objective.

[English]

Anxieties about the broadcasting of parliamentary proceedings fall into two categories. The first is that broadcasting will indirectly affect the internal functioning of parliament, and the second is that it will alter the relationship between parliament and the people. But the whole weight of experience in other countries shows these fears to be groundless. It is probably significant that no legislature, having once permitted broadcasting of its proceedings, has permanently abandoned the practice.

As Anthony Wedgewood Benn once remarked about the British legislature, "Parliament is either the grand forum of the nation, or it is nothing at all." The business of this grand forum is the public's business, and should be as widely known as possible.

[Translation]

But voices are still missing, so it seems to me, in this great forum of the nation: those of one third of the people of this country whose mother tongue is neither French nor English and who, often, have come from other countries with a cultural heritage of a particular richness and colour.

Dos Passos said, and I quote:

You can tear a man away from his country, but you cannot tear his country out of a man's heart.

I really wish, Mr. Speaker, that the multiculturalism policy, in a bilingual context, as introduced in this House on October 8, 1971 by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), will bring about the development of more community or cultural projects from which all Canadians could benefit.

National unity could not be better achieved than through real efforts to provide equal opportunities for all Canadians. Let me comment now on three points of the social policy as proposed by this government. I must admit that I shall speak here as a woman member of this House. Moreover, I am proud to be the first Quebec woman to take the floor in the House of Commons since the advent of Confederation. This will certainly bring a smile on the lips of the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe—he ran away, he is no longer here—who unfortunately voiced—everybody remembers it—on Oct 4, 1972—not 1872—in Rimouski, his deep concern about seeing a "woman being appointed minister or Member of Parliament". "She must stay—he said—with her children; her role is within the family". Let us speak then about the family, not through old line and barren clichés, but in the context of everyday's life events.

The guaranteed annual income for all is undoubtedly the dream of many people. As for its achievement—as far as cost and implementation are concerned—it is another problem. It will be introduced, during the 29th Parliament, in favour of, and I quote:

. . . people who cannot work . . .

Special mention is made for the blind, the aged and the disabled. Now, the most striking feature arising from the hearings and research held by the Royal Commission on the Status of Women in Canada is that the poorest among the poorest, in Canada are women. And the most vulnerable are undoubtedly women who are heads of families—widows, divorced, separated, abandoned women or unmarried mothers. If they decide to work, they often find it difficult to get a suitable salary since they generally have no or little vocational training or not enough education. Anyway, our society is not organized for them nor to assist them in the care of their children. The only solution to the dramatic problems of that group is a guaranteed annual income. Obviously, the same should be done for men alone who have dependent children and who are low wage earners. The commission's report states that there are 78,000 female heads of family whose income is totally insufficient and who have dependent children under sixteen; there are approximately 8,000 male heads of family in the same situation. We all should be ashamed of that social problem so inadequately covered by the welfare programs. It is the complete negation of equal opportunities not only for these women and men, but also for their children, thus perpetuating the poverty cycle.

Under family allowances there is a reference to low income families. May I be allowed to say that I support that proposition. I will however speak for all those who think that in a middle class industrial society such as ours it is very expensive to raise children, whatever the income may be. The traditional social organization allowed the families to "retrieve"—for want of a better word—the costs and hardships that they had imposed upon themselves to raise children because these integrated themselves relatively quickly into the family production system, be it on the farm, in trade or in the small entreprise. Particularly at the time when couples have yet to make any savings today's society imposes unlimited costs for parents whose children have left them very often before they had become productive. And they begin to earn money at the same time as they are getting married. This means that a ceiling, either direct or indirect, situated around $10,000 does not recognize society's responsibility towards the renewal of its own foundations. It seems to me that a family allowance system should be a part of a universal social security plan which should not be confused with measures intended to fight poverty.

In closing, I'll say a word about old age pension. I'll probably need it much sooner than anticipated, at the accelerated and tense rate with which our work whitens our hair.

Mr. Speaker, many voters are asking for the lowering of retirement age by five years. Some have worked all their life at hard jobs. Others put forward the fact that couples do not receive the two pensions at the same time on account of the traditional age gap between women and men at the time of marriage. But there is also the opposite point of view: that of women who already suffer from discrimination in industry, even at some levels of government. I am thinking here of the City of Montreal, for example, where women are pensioned off a few years before men, thus depriving them of their right to work. There is also the point of view of men who foresee with dread the time when their life pattern will change drastically leaving them and their wives dramatically maladjusted.

I will end my comments by pleading for flexibility in the programs to be proposed. It seems basic to me that the decision to retire at such or such an age should be optional and left to the individuals.

In conclusion, I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me the floor and I now leave it to others.

[English]

Mr. Ian Arrol (York East): Mr. Speaker, as a new member I noticed that there is always one area of quiet, dignified and gracious sanity in the House, and I would like first to give my commendation to those in the Speaker's Chair who make it so.

We in the Progressive Conservative party had hoped that by now this parliament would be attending to the problems of Canada with specific legislative proposals. Many of my constituents in York East are retired or semi-retired and live on fixed incomes, particularly in the borough of East York. I am acutely aware of their needs and had hoped that we could get on with help for our first citizens as our first business. The Liberals, NDP and Creditistes did not agree to our proposal last week that the debate on the Speech from the Throne be adjourned so that the House could immediately deal with such needs as an increase in the old age pension.

However, the continuation of the debate on the Speech from the Throne does give me an opportunity to say some things I would not otherwise have the opportunity to say. Those things which distinguish my riding are, the personalities who live there and the sense of community which still prevails despite our location within the giant megalopolis known as metro Toronto. The man who today more than any other in Canada personifies individualism, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), was a resident of the area I now represent in 1901, 1902 and 1903. The right hon. member's father, William Diefenbaker, was the principal of the one room local school in what was then the village of Todmorden. One of those who was a pupil of William Diefenbaker was R. H. McGregor who was to represent York East in the parliament of Canada for close to three decades until 1962. In 1972, the electors of York East decided to return to the faith of their fathers, and so today I find myself in parliament, a parliament where the dominant mood is, as it is in the country as a whole, a desire to cope with bread and butter issues.

I would like to observe, however, that even if all the economic problems of Canada could be solved at this session to the general satisfaction of most parties, there would still remain an unease in the land which has as its basis the fact that we do not know collectively what it means to be a Canadian. We as a nation suffer from what theologian Reinhold Niebuhr diagnosed as the general malaise of youth today—an unfocussed craving for affirmation. Despite our advancements in the economic and cultural fields, there is still this strange unease in the land, an unease which can probably only be settled through some project to which all Canadians can give their adherence and thus build up a sense of Canadianism. We will not create a healthy Canadianism on the foundation of criticizing our neighbours. We cannot effectively tell Russia what she should do, nor the U.S. what she should do, nor yet China or Britain. All we can effectively do as Canadians is to propose something that Canada can do.

I propose as a matter for discussion, as a possibility for the future, that in the name of peace, a field in which Canada has already made such significant contributions, Canada give up the right to use its armed forces for any national purpose whatsoever. Let one nation seek to establish peace by preparing absolutely for peace instead of preparing for war. Today in the name of truth, justice, honour, brotherhood and peace, each nation seeks to establish these ideals, and principally the ideal of peace, by preparing for war. Today, in the name of all that is most sacred, the big nations of the world are prepared collectively to kill off everybody—three billion people—in the matter of a few hours. Any survivors would have a horror worse than immediate death.

The world's only salvation may be a reconstituted and strengthened United Nations with the power to keep the peace between nations. And the only way the United Nations can be renewed, reconstituted and given the power to put its ideals into effect may be by a dramatic initiative by one nation. We could take a step all by ourselves, then invite other nations to join us in the name of humanity the world over.

Let us put the ideals of the United Nations—to which all nations say they subscribe—into practice, step by step, nation by nation, starting with Canada. This would be our affirmation, our cause, our way of asserting ourselves nationally in the service of an ideal that would go beyond our national borders, that would make us masters in our own house, subject to no other nation's foreign policy, but in service to all: I declare for peace, and I would have my nation so declare. I affirm that the use of armed force in the world is a world responsibility, and not that of any one nation. To this end, I ask of my government that the Department of National Defence be superseded and that in its place be instituted the Department for United Nations Co-operation. I ask that Canada immediately give up its right to use armed forces in aid of or against any other country in any manner whatsoever, unless at the direction of the United Nations.

We could invite the United Nations to pass a resolution to this effect: that whereas Canada has renounced forever the right to command unilaterally the use of her arms, the United Nations set up a peace force and an inspection system to effect the dismantling of all war-making potential in Canada, except that sanctioned by the United Nations, and to ascertain for the future that Canada has kept her pledge. The United Nations inspection force for Canadian disarmament will also be empowered, through the agency of the International Court of Justice, to inspect all treaties which may now be in effect or which might be initiated in the future to which Canada is signatory, to ensure that no treaty with other nations shall in any way obligate the nation to any warlike act under any circumstances. This would give an opportunity for the United Nations to function: Canada would be a laboratory for the development of United Nations peacekeeping functions. Canada could invite other nations to make a similar declaration and offer similar co-operation. Such Canadian action could offer an alternative to fear in the world.

While Communism would remain a menace, it has, in some countries which are still developing, provided the crusading initiative necessary to get into the twentieth century. Put another way, Communism inspires backward nations to pull themselves up by their own bootstraps. When a have-not nation becomes a have-nation, and this includes Communist countries, its basic self interest is for economic advancement, for trading goods and not ideas. It is mainly because the world is an armed camp, and each and every nation feels insecure, that the competition is more in ideology than in trade.

Communism, as we all know, survives best in a climate of hunger and unfulfilled national objectives of underdeveloped countries. The best antidote to Communism would be assistance by the United Nations, through the United Nations, for a united campaign against the common enemies of hunger and disease. To help bring about that ideal, we in Canada, through instituting a Department for United Nations Co-operation in place of a war department, could immediately launch an economic program for the underdeveloped nations of the world.

Canada could launch what eastern Canadian educator Alastair M. Taylor referred to a number of years ago as "A Peacetime British Commonwealth Air Training Plan". Mr. Taylor points out that the Air Training Plan graduated 113,553 airmen during its war years of operation at a cost of $1,281,000,000. The Department of National Defence now spends more in one year than was spent during all the years of the operation of the British Commonwealth Air Training Plan. A peacetime British Commonwealth air training plan could be a project lasting perhaps five years under which Canada would invite people from underdeveloped nations for special training in medicine, agriculture and industrial techniques. Apart from China, Southeast Asia and the Latin American countries, most other underdeveloped nations have as their national language French or English and Canada is bilingual.

This project shared by French and English speaking Canadians could have unifying qualities for Canada, drawing us together as we united the visiting nations on our soil in this educational undertaking. We could invite research scientists from other countries to join us in educational projects; scientists and technicians who would like to work for a constructive project instead of those for destruction. And as we developed instructors and facilities for this co-operative endeavour, we would be providing for our own industrial and trade expansion, although the basic idea would be a practical working out of United Nations ideals.

In many other ways Canada could be a laboratory, a workshop, a showcase for United Nations purposes. We could invite the United Nations to organize an inspection team for Arctic protection, to see that no Russian or United States or any other nation's missile-carrying submarines used our northwest passage, there to lurk under the ice and on an appropriate occasion blast through and release a missile. We could dismantle the Distant Early Warning System set up by the Americans in northern Canada—or we could make the system available to the United Nations, with inspectors looking south as well as north. We could even provide a few thousand square miles of our northern territory for experiments in the detection of underground nuclear explosions. We could make available our soil, our air space, our waters, as we made available our determination to do all in our power to bring peace on earth.

If Canada were to take a separate path from the other western nations, we of course would be opposed. A Canadian resolve to give up its right to use its armed forces for any national purpose whatsoever, and to put our military at the disposal of the United Nations through a Department for United Nations Co-operation, would take as much courage as going to war. It would indeed be the moral equivalent of going to war. But no matter what the price, we would have chartered the course for no less than a Made-in-Canada Declaration of Independence. It is ideals and not economic warfare which call forth a nation to life, to spirit. We would be opposed, but in being opposed our character would be strengthened. We would have a cause in Canada, a crusade which could unite the nation.

The Indians under Gandhi practised non-violence for the independence of their nation; the Negroes under Martin Luther King for recognition of a race. Our task would be non-violence for the recognition and fulfillment of the possibilities for good in all mankind, a first practical step to peace on earth. Some nation at some time soon must act as a catalyst to break the armed camps in which the nations of the world find themselves today; some nation must cause a revolution in thinking about war and its inevitability. I have suggested a course for Canada which I hope this House and the country will consider. It may be such a course could be a significant step towards our salvation and the world's.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, my opening words are to congratulate you on your success in the Stormont-Dundas constituency and on your re-election to the office of House Speaker. In the course of the twenty-eighth parliament, you won the admiration of all hon. members.

I also congratulate my colleagues who will assist you in the House.

I wish to congratulate the mover and the seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) and the hon. member for Lachine (Mr. Blaker), who are both excellent ambassadors for our policy of bilingualism, a fact that was taken into account by their constituents.

I should like also to welcome the four new members representing the female element, that is the Minister of State for Science and Technology and member for Ahuntsic (Mrs. Sauvé), the hon. member for Saint-Michel (Miss Bégin), the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) and the hon. member for Kingston and The Islands (Miss MacDonald).

To begin with and on the occasion of the opening of this twenty-ninth Parliament, I should like to make a few remarks on the man in public life and on Parliament and its importance.

Politics should be the concern of respectable men and women, aiming at using their mind and their skills to erect a city, a province, a country where peace and prosperity might prevail. Participation in the political life is a duty that social justice dictates, since every citizen must contribute as much as possible to the common good of his country.

The politician, because of his role and his duties, has always occupied a useful place within society, for, through his oath of office, he has chosen to serve this society, to work for the common good. There is need to create a public opinion which, without looking for scandal, will expose frankly and courageously persons and circumstances working against the law and the purposes of institutions.

These, Mr. Speaker, are the basic principles on which rest my short political life. The application of these principles allowed me to gain the confidence of 29,000 voters during the election of last October 30, in the constituency of Laval. I consider this responsibility not as a member of Parliament but rather as a citizen at the service of the constituency of Laval, and at the service of Canada. I agreed to serve my constituency, to defend the interests of my province and to work for the good of my country while contributing to improve the standard of living of Canadians and learning to better know the needs of the Canadian family, the various ethnic groups and the various social levels represented in all classes of our society.

Since my election of June 25, 1968 I have changed some of my views about Parliament which I considered a rather out of date and inefficient institution. Having been a member since then and participated in the exercise of democracy in this House or as a committee member, I have come to better understand the nature and role of this institution. Perhaps it is a normal beginner's reaction and probably the 100 new members will also have the same reaction. In spite of weaknesses that nobody denies Parliament is still the best system of government in this world even though it lends itself to criticism and could be improved upon.

Thanks to the freedom we enjoy in Canada, divergent opinions can be expressed without any other consequences than the risk of being scoffed at by one's opponents, a consequence which is quite bearable.

I am sometimes under the impression that we do not realize all the advantages we are enjoying. There are on earth every possible kind of government but I doubt that many Canadians would agree to exchange their own system of government for that of many other foreign countries where severe restrictions are imposed on people speaking too frankly and where political opponents are put into jail.

Even though sometimes Pamliament seems to move away from the people or people seem to lose interest in this institution let there be a crisis and they look to Parliament to act for the good of the country.

Let us recall the October 1970 crisis when all Canadians looked to Parliament. Let us recall the statement by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on television on the evening of October 17, 1970. Once that historical speech was over, the people felt reassured. It is not my intention to revive those circumstances, but having lived thro ugh those days in this House and having witnessed that situation, I thought that example would help convince those who might be apt to criticize too severely our democratic institution, the Canadian Parliament.

I thought I should present those observations at the outset of this 29th Parliament which includes more than 100 new members.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to state my views on the Speech from the Throne, which I fully support for it clearly indicates the government's unfaltering determination to carry on their program. The Speech from the Throne puts forward the following objectives: a better economic policy in order to reduce unemployment and reinforce the economy and stimulate the development of small businesses for, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) stated on January 10, about 60 per cent of the work force in Canada is active in firms having the essential particularities of small businesses; to reorganize, in consultation with the provinces, the policy governing family allowances, old age security pensions as well as housing, and to make a study on government responsibilities with regard to urban transportation generally. In the field of agriculture, the government has undertaken to solve the problem of feed grain, transportation and the handling of farm produce.

For all those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I therefore do not hesitate to support the Speech from the Th rone.

However, it seems to me that under the former government, during the 28th Parliament, we passed many legislative measures which, to my mind, were not sufficiently explained to the people during the last election campaign.

Last Tuesday, the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings brought forward a motion blaming the government for its failure to take action about the problems of unemployment and I wonder whether he is not really furthering his own ambitions at the expense of the unemployed.

Let us just ponder on the various pieces of legislation now in force dealing with tax reform, releasing a million taxpayers from personal income tax and reducing that tax in the case of 4.5 million Canadians. I wonder where is the sense of responsibility of opposition members who challenge the government about the unemployment situation with no heed for all the efforts and achievements in the field of job creation, in spite of the yearly increase of some 3 per cent in the labour force. Statistics confirm the results of the Liberal government's policies in this field.

Between 1965 and 1970, which is the latest period for which we have international figures, 1,440,000 Canadians joined the labour force, thus increasing it by more than 20 per cent.

The real growth of the labour force in Canada during that period exceeds by 100,000 units that of all the 15 major industrialized European countries which make up the European economic community and the European free trade zone although the total population of those countries is larger than that of Canada.

The relative growth of the labour force in Canada during those six years was almost 20 times that of all 15 major industrialized European countries, twice that of Japan and 58 per cent higher than that of the United States which ranks second in the world for the growth rate of its labour force.

What was the increase in the number of jobs? There were 1,300,000 new jobs created in Canada between 1965 and 1970. The increase in the number of jobs in Canada was 400,000, 50 per cent more than the real increase in the number of jobs in all the 15 major industrialized European countries and 505,000, or 66 per cent more than the total increase in the number of jobs in the seven major European countries, i.e. Great Britain, France, Germany, Italy, Belgium, Sweden and the Netherlands.

The relative rate of increase in the number of jobs in Canada was 50 per cent higher than in the United States, twice higher than in Japan, 7½ times higher than in Germany and 27 times higher than in all those 15 European countries.

During the years 1970 and 1971 the relative rate of increase in the number of jobs in Canada was three times higher than the corresponding rate in the United States.

Those figures are evidence of the extent to which the Liberal government concentrated on the problem of unemployment through various programs implemented, by the creation of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to create employment in areas where industries were not functioning normally, by the Department of Manpower and Immigration, and also by the economic incentives offered by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

When I hear the members of the opposition blame the government for its employment policy, I conclude that they are simply jealous of its performance, that they have forgotten their own when they were in power from 1958 to 1962 when, with a much smaller population, unemployment reached 7.15 per cent in 1961.

• (1630)

Mr. Speaker, I have before me a comparative statement showing the non-seasonally-adjusted labour figures for 1958 in Canada when there were 6,137,000 workers and 431,000 unemployed representing an unemployment rate of 7.02 per cent. My opponents will no doubt recall which government was in power then.

The 1960 figures indicate 6,411,000 workers and 446,000 unemployed or 6.95 per cent of the force, and this still under a Progressive Conservative government. The 1961 figures show 6,521,000 workers and 466,000 unemployed, a rate equal to 7.15 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, comparing present unemployment figures with those illustrating the past performance of our Progressive Conservative opponents, evidently we have 2 million more workers, but only 100,000 more unemployed, which means 2 million more jobs available, and an unemployment rate of 6.32 per cent, still lower than the rate of 7.15 per cent recorded under the Progressive Conservative government.

Nonetheless, of Mr. Speaker, they are those who tell us that we have lost the confidence of the Canadian people. And if they should forget their own past performance under their own Progressive Conservative government, I must remind them that the Canadian people have not.

In 1962 the Liberal party won 100 seats with 37.4 of the votes, and the Progressive Conservative party 116 seats. In the 1963, election, the Liberal party obtained 129 seats with 47 per cent of the votes, whereas the Progressive Conservative party got 95 seats with 33 per cent of the votes. In 1965, the Liberal party elected 131 members with 40 per cent of all the votes, whereas the Progressive Conservative party got 99 seats with 32 per cent of the votes. In 1968, the Liberals held 155 seats representing 45 per cent of the votes, while the Progressive Conservatives had 72 with 31 per cent of the votes. Finally in 1972, we still have 109 seats which have been gained with 38 per cent of the votes, while the Progressive Conservatives have 107 which they have obtained with 35 per cent of the votes.

I feel that the election represents a numerical rejection, in terms of both elected members and percentage of votes. The Canadian people have rejected the Progressive Conservative Party because it had neither forward-looking policies nor innovating programs, whereas we advocated some which appealed to the creative mind of Canadians by establishing manpower programs under the present legislation, such as the Local Initiatives and the Opportunity for Youth Programs. And when I refer to the Local Initiatives Program, I suggest that my hon. colleagues read the excellent article published on page 29 in The Gazette of today and I quote:

[English]

Canada's Local Initiatives Program has provided Marcel Ducharme with a second career—he dreams up LIP projects and makes them work.

[Translation]

This article is most interesting because it is stated in it that an amount of $112,000 has been allocated to this program for the year of its establishment and that a further amount of $184,000 has just been allocated to it precisely in order to improve the lot of the aged. In my opinion, all public servants working on this program—forty-odd people—were themselves registered with the unemployment insurance office or were drawing welfare benefits. They are now serving from 250 to 300 aged people. The efficiency of this program seems to have been proven.

I could now talk about a project initiated in the riding of Laval West, where we are providing the aged with a little bit of happiness by visiting them daily, taking them to a doctor or to the hospital. I think that this is part of the Liberal policy which is intended to be human with the aged people.

As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservatives have lost the confidence of the Canadian people since 1962, because they had no realistic social policy geared to the aspirations of the underprivileged, because they were conservatives with a small c, because they had a negative approach to problems.

Mr. Speaker, they are so used to criticism that they forget the positive aspect in their suggestions to the government with a wiew to solving the problems facing us.

At the present time, the Canadian people earn, spend and save more money than they ever did before. Salaries and wages of the Canadian people reached an annual level of $56 billion at the end of the first half of 1972, or an increase of $5 billion, that is 10 per cent, in one year, and 55 per cent since 1968.

The savings of Canadians have soared to $6,900 million in the middle of 1972, or an increase of $2 million over the corresponding period last year and almost three times the amount reached at the beginning of 1968.

Those are facts that members of the opposition do not take into account when they blame the government.

In the area of housing, we have reached an all-time record. In 1971, there were more than 233,000 starts, while in 1972, this figure reached almost 250,000, and a further increase is even expected for 1973, which will enable us to exceed our objective of one million new homes for the five years ending in 1974. Thanks to our low-cost housing program, we have built twice as many homes of that type in the last four years than during the previous 25 years.

Furthermore, as announced by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford), we contribute to the restoration of the existing houses and provisions are made for repairing and rehabilitating dwellings.

The Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is the instrument of the federal social policy in the field of housing and community planning as stated the minister of housing in his speech of January 11.

Because of the amendments to be brought to the National Housing Act, the federal government, in co-operation with the provinces, will assist in the provision of low-cost housing and other accommodation for senior citizens, will provide assistance in the rehabilitation of older neighbourhoods, a warranty system to protect the purchasers of new houses—and God knows it is needed right now—assistance in the relocation of railway tracks and a study of the government's responsibilities with regard to urban transportation generally.

As the representative from the second most important city in the province of Quebec, I can assure the House that these urban renewal policies will certainly be welcomed by the people of Laval.

Municipalities are facing increasing responsibilities and disproportionate obligations in view of the tax burden that they must impose on their residents. Considering that 75 per cent of Canadians live in urban centres and that our country will soon be 90 per cent urbanized, we must not only react to this trend but provide for financial aid at the three government levels to serve this population better. This approach will be reflected in a three-level conference that will be held this year on the initiative of the federal government.

In the field of agriculture, we must be as vigilant and imaginative as possible to secure an equal standard of living for rural people as for urban people.

In my first speech in this House in 1968 and in the meetings of the Standing Committee on Agriculture I have tried to make the government aware of the importance of a crucial factor of agricultural expansion in eastern Canada, particularly in Quebec and the maritime provinces. This is the situation of feed grains, on which we have already made representations. All Liberal members made representations to the minister, and an ad hoc committee was created, the National Grain Board, and a meeting was held with the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. We postponed the announcement of a change in the present situation precisely because we respected the associations and did not want to take unilateral decisions. We took some and we will continue to take them in co-operation with the farm associations.

I would like to add, Mr. Speaker, that we will not be satisfied with half measures regarding the situation of feed grains. I was very happy to hear in the Speech from the Throne that the feed grain problem would be solved in this very session. I am very happy now to support that request which is now the subject of discussions and has been the object of representations since 1968. I hope that when this new policy on feed grains is announced—I am now looking at the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner)—he will support it and that it will have more support from the Progressive Conservatives than when we tried to introduce the bill intended to better organize production, that is the bill creating national marketing agencies. It took two years of sittings, some of which kept us up all night, to get that bill passed because of the opposition of that party.

I therefore hope that when time comes to suggest changes in the price structure of feed grains, we will have the co-operation of the hon. members of the Progressive Conservative party.

My last sentence is one to which I refer every day. Give a man more than he can do, and he will do it. Give him less than he can do and he will not do it.

[Translation]

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, as a new member of the House and on behalf of my constituents of Burnaby-Richmond-Delta, I would like to congratulate you for having been re-elected to the Speakership and to congratulate also your Deputy (Mr. McCleave) for having been elected.

[English]

It is a privilege to follow the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy) in this debate. I shall leave my notes aside for a moment because he said something on which I should like to comment. He said he hoped hon. members in this party would be agreeable to changes and amendments which he and his hon. friends propose to bring forward. Well, I hope supporters of the Liberal party will, in turn, be agreeable to some of the things which supporters of the Conservative party will recommend from committees this time. Maybe we shall find more co-operation shown from the other side of the House. I do not believe in one-sided affairs.

Mr. Speaker, my riding borders on the Fraser River to the north, including South Burnaby the Pacific Ocean to the west and looks south, to the United States. With 123,-381 eligible voters, it is the largest riding in terms of people in British Columbia. Burnaby-Richmond-Delta not only represents a good cross section of our country, it also is a good example of the true meaning of multiculturalism as it is made up of those of German, Chinese, Japanese and Dutch descent, as well as many other cultural and language groups. Richmond is also the sister city of Pierrefont in the province of Quebec.

On January 8 in the House of Commons, the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) accused Progressive Conservatives of capitalizing on an anti-French sentiment during the last election. I submit, on behalf of the people of Burnaby-Richmond-Delta that the right hon. gentleman is making excuses with this kind of statement, making excuses and covering up the real reason his party did so poorly in the election. In my riding the incumbent Liberal member not only lost his seat, he came third in the race. He came third, and it was not because of an anti-French vote as the Prime Minister likes to believe. It was simply a vote against the sad state in which this country has been left by the Liberal government. It was a vote against the lack of leadership which caused this situation. Apparently the Liberal candidate in my riding recognized this because he was quoted as saying on election night that he expected to run again, but with the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner) as the leader of his party.

On October 27, 1972, during the election campaign, the Leader of the Conservative party (Mr. Stanfield) told a Kingston, Ontario, audience that the basic issue in the campaign was "the issue of confidence of Canadians in themselves". The issue, he said, is not whether a bigger government can do better things for Canadians, but whether or not we have a government that believes Canadians can do bigger and better things for themselves. That statement is particularly relevant today because we do not have a bigger government, which, because of its size, feels it can do better things for Canadians. What we do have is a government which has been severely reduced in size and is now hanging on to power with its fingernails. And, as evidenced by the throne speech, we do not have a government that believes Canadians can do bigger and better things for themselves, because the government that is presently in power, continues to refuse Canadians that opportunity.

Canadians have become aware over the past four and one half years that what this government says and what this government does are usually two very different things. Instead of the just society we were promised in 1968, we have in 1973, high unemployment, a high cost of living, and policies affecting poverty, taxation, manpower training, regional development and agriculture reforms which have discriminated against the unemployed, the working poor and the low-income groups who might have benefitted if government policies and programs had been designed to help, rather than hinder. This Liberal government, in four and one half short years, has destroyed the work ethic in this great country.

We have policies on pollution and environmental control that are ad hoc, incomplete and, seemingly, purposely confused. We have a Local Initiatives Program which has consumed almost $200 million in grants alone over the last 14 months with marginal, if any, success in providing employment. We have a new winter works program which is costing the taxpayer, the people of Canada, over $350 million but which was announced too late to be effective in alleviating peak winter unemployment, winter unemployment that affected 615,000 Canadians in December, the largest number for that month in the history of this country. We have a new Unemployment Insurance Plan which has cost the taxpayer approximately $2 billion since its inception on January 2, 1972.

We have a policy on foreign ownership which is so elusive that it is virtually non-existent. We have a policy on immigration that has caused only chaos. We have a policy on the post office which has reduced the mail service to something of negligible importance. The post office situation is a case in point. Six years ago the Delta to Toronto service cost a mere five cents and the post office delivered overnight. Now, we are lucky if we can have our mail delivered in anywhere from three to five days for the price of an eight cent stamp. Yet the government spent millions of dollars last year to tell Canadians how good the service is.

I received a note today from a Mr. Cranna of Ladner, B.C., who had a letter mailed to him on December 21 and received it on January 10. This letter was mailed in Vancouver addressed to Ladner, a distance of 13 miles and it took 20 days. I have many more letters in my files which illustrate the same lack of postal service in the city of Delta, which includes North Delta. With a population of 25,000, Delta is growing at the rate of 500 a month, yet there is not even a post office in North Delta its most populous area.

And now we have the Speech from the Throne; a Speech from the Throne which gives priority to everything, which promises everything, and yet ensures nothing in the form of concrete proposals. The throne speech promises a compassionate and equitable guaranteed annual income. It promises incentives to work and a greater emphasis on the need to get people who are on social aid back to work. It promises a fair and just relationship between the incomes of people who are working at, or near, the minimum wage and it indicates that recognition must be given to the provinces' wishes to have the structures of social security vary in accordance with the social needs, income standards and the cost of living in different communities. It also gives notice that the government accepts the principle that reconsideration of Canada's social security system must be conducted jointly by the federal government and the provinces.

The throne speech does not, however, tell us how all of this is going to be accomplished. In other words, the throne speech, like the just society concept, sounds very promising but, like the just society concept, the throne speech lacks substance and integrity. The government says it will reduce unemployment by providing increased funding for the Local Initiatives Program; increased funding for on-the-job training; a substantial seasonal capital works project and special funding to increase direct employment in labour-intensive projects. The government says that certain aspects of the Unemployment Insurance Plan will be clarified; that a new family income security program will be proposed and that legislation will be introduced to improve the economic situation of old age pensioners.

The economic situation of old age pensioners has been improved by this government before. That assistance came in the form of a mere 42 cent raise in pensions and a 2 per cent maximum increase in the guaranteed income supplement, at a time when the cost of living was rising at 4 or 5 per cent, annually. Only when the election was imminent did the government give consideration to increases in old age pensions according to annual increases in the cost of living. But the gap created by its lax attitude in the past has not been filled and those on fixed incomes still suffer. It seems they will continue to suffer at the hands of this government if it remains in power and if the NDP has anything to say about it, for their joint defeat of our motion in the House to bring some immediate relief to old age pensioners this winter was nothing but crass insensitivity.

The irony of the throne speech is that the government, in spite of the lesson it supposedly learned on October 30, has chosen to offer the same old programs as solutions to Canada's problems and those of her people. These are the same old programs that have proven to be ineffective, offered by the same old government that has proven itself incapable of dealing with the problems, and all of this aided and abetted by the New Democratic Party.

It is interesting to note that some of the press feel that the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is not as arrogant as before, that he has a new appreciation of parliament. Well, Mr. Speaker, at a time when we have some serious issues to bring before this House like old age pensions, unemployment and income tax cuts, the right hon. gentleman puts the capital punishment debate No. 1 on his list. I suppose as a further smokescreen to the real problems of Canada the language bill will be the second item for debate. Mr. Speaker, I say the government is stalling because it has not got positive new programs for this country.

Meanwhile, in British Columbia for example, people are asking for solutions to problems; solutions to problems like urban traffic congestion in Delta, Richmond and other lower mainland cities, for which residents are requesting federal assistance in developing a reasonable urban transit system. What is this government's response to this kind of request? The hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Basford) and the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Davis) are supporting construction of a second bridge across the first narrows in Vancouver. Of course, it does not matter to them that this bridge may not be wanted or needed or, for example, that the bridges in my riding handle more traffic than the Lions Gate bridge. Yet they push ahead with this project, despite the wishes of the people involved, in true Liberal government style. I say, Mr. Speaker, that we should use the money involved to build a rapid transit system for the lower mainland; that we should concentrate on construction for the future, on something really worthwhile and on something that will last.

People in my riding are seeking solutions to problems like pollution. For example, the residents are requesting federal government assistance in providing a tertiary sewage system to eliminate pollution from industrial and/or domestic sewage. But how long will it be, Mr. Speaker, before the federal government finally realizes its responsibility to clean up Canada's lakes and rivers? We, the people, Mr. Speaker, are tired of excuses and tired of non-action. The Fraser River is the recipient of hundreds of millions of gallons of raw sewage every day. Experts say they do not think pollution is affecting the salmon. The experts, Mr. Speaker, should know. This is too important to pass off so lightly.

And then there is penal reform and the great contribution the former Solicitor General (Mr. Goyer) made to that area of concern. I am not opposed to penal reform, but I am opposed to the negligence which accompanied Canada's recent effort in that regard; negligence which resulted in cases like the following: A man on a weekend pass murders a seven year old girl on the lower mainland of British Columbia; the government decides to transfer another man from an east coast maximum security cell to a west coast minimum security cell to testify at the trial of the murderer. He, too, escapes, kidnaps and rapes a woman.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that the only thing we need mention about penal reform is that it was a major contributor to the defeat of this government in British Columbia. And the right hon. Prime Minister's comments this morning that the capital punishment matter is at least as important as pensions does not leave me with much hope in this Liberal government. It is essential that the government take new, innovative approaches to Canada's problems, that people be involved in their solutions, and that people benefit from the legislation that is introduced and passed in the House of Commons.

This does not mean an outburst such as the one in which the Prime Minister was engaged in the House of Commons on January 8, 1973 when he said that some Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament had tried to divide the country. This does mean the formulation and application of policies that will reduce inflation and bring employment so that all Canadians will feel a part of this country. It means a definition of full employment in percentage terms and a commitment to reach that objective within a prescribed period of time. It means a promise of immediate and substantial cuts in personal income taxes as the basic means of stimulating the economy to full employment. It means a full employment budget which reveals to the House of Commons whether revenue and expenditure programs of the government are, in fact, designed to stimulate the economy to full employment. It means a willingness to use wage and price controls to abate further inflation as we stimulate the economy rather than holding down basic economic growth. It means a policy on bilingualism that starts in the elementary school system so that our future public servants will be prepared for a fully bilingual public service.

Canada does have much to offer. But the benefits of being Canadian should be a right of every citizen of this country. We cannot continue to forget our people—the people who elected us all. They had a message and we had better listen. Neither the Progressive Conservative party nor the Liberal party has a mandate from the election. However, parliament has a mandate to choose a government best able to get the economy back to full employment and to abate further inflation.

The throne speech debate is important because, 264 Members of Parliament have to reach the best decision on this question as soon as possible. Much time has been wasted. There are many other challenges to be faced. Therefore, a government must be chosen and given a mandate to put the economy in order swiftly and to get on with other frontiers for this decade. Poverty must be eliminated; regional disparity must be tangibly reduced; a new industrial strategy must be constructed; there must be urban reform, rural rehabilitation and environmental improvement. And, in all of this, people must count. People must be involved, and considerations, judgments and decisions must be based on their desires, expectations and needs. To do this, we must have a government that believes Canadians can do bigger and better things for themselves. Bob Stanfield would be that kind of Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reynolds: And when he is, and only when he is, will Canada and its people be truly strong.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, I think you very much for the privilege of giving me the opportunity to make this speech on behalf of the residents of Burnaby-Richmond-Delta who elected me to this House.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, my first words on rising in this debate must be of sincere congratulations to Your Honour on again assuming the important office of Speaker of this chamber. These past four years I have watched with admiration as you dealt with the interesting and difficult situations which came before you in the House, and at the manner in which you dealt with tempers and problems. I am confident that you will find it possible to maintain the order we require in this interesting and complicated House of Commons in which you preside now.

I was delighted to listen to the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) and the hon. member for Lachine (Mr. Blaker) as they began this debate on the Speech from the Throne, and I congratulate them on the manner in which they dealt with the interesting character of their own areas.

I am a representative of a broad expanse of the western Canadian region, with a significant distance of country between myself and Liberal colleagues both to the east and to the west. I have heard a good deal of comment on the causes of the results in the recent election campaign, but of course I come from an area which has been struggling for some time to gain additional Liberal representatives in the House of Commons, and we will continue that struggle most manfully.

I was interested to note the remarks of the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds) who preceded me, and who seemed to argue that it was in fact the basic economic issues that affect the country which could be said to be the whole or the main cause of the results in the recent election. In other words he tried to say this, yet when he turned to his own province, which presumably he knows best, he suggested it was the parole and penal system which contributed most greatly in British Columbia to the defeat of the government. I was surprised that, later in that context, he thought we ought not to give too much attention to that particular problem, and I would be glad to hear later his explanation for that logic.

Looking at the move from Liberal to Tory voting columns in the five western province, I deny that this represents significant evidence that there are Archie Bunkers in abundance in the western half of the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: It is true that there may be such characters here and there, in one region or other, and I particularly think such a person is probably to be found on the executive of the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). For instance, I notice that in the course of the recent campaign the present Conservative member for that riding chose to run an advertisement in which he introduced some elements that I, for one, regret to have found quite common in western Canada. In this advertisement in the Albertan on October 23 there is a picture of the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and of the candidate, now the hon. member for Crowfoot. The first of the four reasons given for supporting the hon. member is that, "He has fought over-expenditure of Canada's tax dollars in Quebec". Mr. Speaker, it is not unusual for opposition members to talk about over-expenditure by a government of the public's tax dollars. That I understand, but I think it is clear that here a particular appeal is involved when a particular province is singled out in this way, more especially when the evidence shows that the programs which could be related to that charge are equally or more beneficial to the Maritime region. One has to ask why that province is singled out rather than the maritimes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: I do not for a moment suggest that the hon. member for Crowfoot is a bigot in having an advertisement of this sort placed in a newspaper in the course of his campaign. But I suggest to you, Sir, and most sincerely to hon. members opposite, that it is at least very clear that he was appealing to people who may be so minded. This is the kind of thing that must be fought within their ranks, by their own leader, and also by the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe, to which subject the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) addressed himself the other day.

The Prime Minister did not suggest that it was the reason, or even a main reason, for the results in the five western provinces. I take that view as well. I have indicated that it was more the wealthier parts of the country that voted in this way against us, and I say it was not evidence of a swing towards right wingism or Archie Bunkerism.

It is true that we made ourselves vulnerable through the loss of support that was liberal in its inclination simply by operating certain programs in a certain way, which made it more difficult for those inclined to be liberal to continue their support of us. But looking at the position of this government with reference to the unemployment insurance plan,—a good plan but one which had administrative and structural difficulties—and looking at the problems of parole and prison reform, I say that we do not have to move either right or left, or look for wing support for the positions we should take. We must look to those liberals who were unhappy in their support of us because of these issues, and certainly we can look to those Liberals who voted against us because they were unhappy about the way some of these programs were being administered, or unhappy about the way in which their impact was being felt.

• (1710)

The important thing is that there were grounds for loss of support among this important element. And yet we do not have to throw out in basic cases the basic Liberal philosophy that was involved. We do not have to run away from the basic Liberal belief in immigration into this country of people who can make a great contribution to it. But, of course, we must and will free ourselves from the difficulties which are associated with an immigration program where control has been lost over those people we do not want to admit and do not want to admit on good, sound Canadian principles. These are the things we will put right. This is our determination. It is not a matter of running away from basis principles. But I emphasize again that it is these programs which cost votes from that particular region of the country, not any fundamental economic issues, important as those are. We will face that challenge because it is our desire to provide a growing, prosperous economy in which Canadians have an equal opportunity and a fair chance to a decent livelihood.

I must say that in this question of what issues disturbed the electorate or led to their decision, I feel I owe a special debt of thanks to my own constituents because I believe they helped to make clear that at least in the area of grain policies—that very important area to the prairie region—we were doing significant things right. That is the only explanation I can give for their great support, and particularly for the great support which I received from the rural area of my riding.

I do not think hon. members can deny that in the course of the last few years, through some very difficult years for the grain business, my name and position became associated with the grain industry, thanks in large measure to the gleeful participation in debate of hon. members opposite from the prairie region. I think, therefore, they must see that the particular result in my constituency is a separate and special commentary on our grain policies.

Hon. members opposite have noted that at present things are going very well indeed in the grain industry. They are apt to say that this is due at the moment to difficulties in the world situation, but of course the attitude of farm organizations and farm leaders toward our policies predate that most recent change in prices because of the demand picture in the world. We entered into the selling business in a vigorous way at a time when the world market in grain was declining. We set our first record year of exports in a year when actual trading of grain in the world was declining. We did so by vigorous selling policies, by credit policies and by the fairly simple but direct determination to get into the feed grain business of the world which had been neglected for so many years. Farmers responded by growing barley, and the Wheat Board by marketing it, until we are now an important distributor of barley in the world.

Hon. members opposite have commented from time to time about the Lift program, which was a difficult program, a tough program, the one program, If I may say so, of a disciplined or ordered nature which was designed to allow us to have greater freedom in the farm industry, freedom which has come in everything else we have done thereafter. It was a necessary program to get the elevator system into proper shape to handle barley for world markets. When we first began to look at expanding markets, experts doubted whether we could move as many as 700 million bushels of grain with our current handling and transportation systems. But we moved 700 million bushels that year and we moved over 800 million the following year, and it seems that we will be moving significantly more in this current year.

We have dealt with specific problems. We have given farmers information on their prospects for various crops by March 1 of each year, which has never been done before and which gives them knowledge and freedom to do the best possible job in their decision about what crops to grow. They face an interesting challenge, because prices have risen so rapidly in the world that wheat is now a most attractive crop to grow and one which they traditionally grew almost to the exclusion of other crops. Barley and rapeseed have now become extremely important to our over-all prairie agricultural position, and it will be our earnest endeavour to suggest to farmers that they remain in barley and rapeseed production to a significant level indeed because the wheat market of the world is more volatile while the barley market, which we had neglected, and the rapeseed market, which we are building, are the more permanent and sure markets in the world.

We have, of course, introduced a treasury contribution through the form of two-price wheat payments to farmers. The federal government has been willing to assist in the movement of grain by providing 2,000 hopper cars, about half of which are now on stream and available for use. We have witnessed important studies on the handling and transportation system, and here lies one of the real challenges ahead of us in the grain industry. In the very near future we must reach a conclusion on what changes should be made in the handling and transportation system, and I hope that the Canada Grains Council which is taking on this task will proceed with speed so that we can make changes, in co-operation with producers, farmers organizations and provincial governments, which are in the best interests of the grain industry.

We look forward to testing the will of farmers directly on the best ways of marketing rapeseed, rye and flax and we will be prepared to do what is their wish in this regard. We will also be continuing work on an international market insurance scheme, a stabilization program which is so needed because of the way in which the grain marketing opportunities in the world can fluctuate up and down.

The Speech from the Throne contains some exciting words for western Canadians in the proposal that a conference be held specifically to deal with the economic and other objectives of western Canada. The west has had an interesting history of opposition to much of what governments have done. Its Members of Parliament, especially from the prairie region, have more frequently been on the opposition side of the House than in government. I must say that this was hardly changed when the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was prime minister of this country because while he and many of his colleagues from the Prairies sat on the treasury benches, he sounded for all the world like a leader of the opposition in most of what he said and did about this country and who was controlling it.

What we now have is an opportunity to look at the aspirations of the west, of a region which has perhaps different needs from those where the greatest portion of the population is located. This conference provides us with the opportunity. It has taken a number of years to mature. I would like to pay tribute to the work of such persons as Dave Steuart, the Liberal leader in Saskatchewan, for his continuing work to bring together those who can and should be working on western objectives in total. We must come to some conclusion about our objectives, and here I think about objectives that favour growth for that region, even if the time has come when in some regions growth is no longer considered to be a significant or important matter.

In the Prairies and western Canada it is important to attempt to sustain and maintain our population and our activity. We have a very large infrastructure, a very large basic cost of operating our governments and our enterprises, and an increasing population can be a great advantage to us in this regard. Ways and means of developing the economy, the basic industries and the secondary industries that can logically flow from them, must be examined with this kind of objective in mind.

What we learn in the development of policies for western Canada will, I am sure hon. members appreciate, have full significance for other regions of the country because we do not have such different needs from the people who live in the eastern portion of our country, the eastern portion of the province of Quebec, the northern portion of Quebec and Ontario and the north of this country as a whole. What we learn as we develop programs to reach our objectives will carry over and have implications for the whole of this country.

The Speech from the Throne referred to several steps which may be necessary to accomplish our objectives: the decentralization of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and the concentration of its endeavours with other federal departments and provincial activities in the joint production of the techniques for accomplishing our objectives. We have gone far too long without this kind of concerted approach, with one federal policy moving in one direction and another provincial policy moving in a different direction. We have, therefore, not derived the best results from our efforts even when our objectives have been the same.

We will examine the tremendous and difficult question of transportation and freight rates. Members from all parts of the country will recognize the significance of this question, and of possible solutions, to their regions. Here we are looking at the need to examine transportation and freight rates questions in conjunction with a national policy as an instrument which has its effect upon the total development of this country. The west came into being in the heyday and following upon the acceptance in Canada of the national policy which depended upon the tariff structure and upon a railroad being built with government assistance from grants of land and other things. It was built on a theory of establishing a market for the central portion of the country. It is this fundamental policy which must be reviewed and which the Speech from the Throne now gives us an opportunity to do.

Mr. Speaker, the move toward a better society must take place not only in the economic sense but in the broad social sphere of the relation between person and person and persons and state. In the past, this government and its predecessor have been most active in areas which touch directly upon my jurisdiction in the Department of Justice in trying to move toward a society where equal opportunity and equal respect for rights was a reality as well as a theory. We have just recently begun the signing of agreements on legal aid and compensation for victims of crime, in another effort. This will ensure that throughout this country a right, in reality, exists for individuals who may be faced with criminal prosecution or who are the victims of criminal acts.

I consider these agreements to be important, not so much for sharing the cost of the burden in those provinces which already have moved into these fields but in the possibility they offer for the extension of legal aid in criminal matters to provinces which have not previously provided that service in a very extensive way. It is of fundamental importance that every individual be treated fairly in our courts; it is of fundamental importance to the respect for law and order in our society that this be so.

It was this belief that individuals should be treated fairly and equitably which led to the so-called bail reform in this country only a short time ago. That allowed for the release from imprisonment before trial of prisoners who did not have the money with which to post bail or to secure sureties in the old-fashioned way.

This was an important equalization of the position of people in different economic situations. It has come under some criticism, as such a program almost certainly will in its earliest days before administrators become used to it. It is a new program and we are prepared to make such changes as experience may show are required. So far, the reaction of the attorneys general of the provinces and the officials who know the system well has been very positive. The program has allowed the release of people who ought to be released and it does not seem to have created too much difficulty.

It is true, of course, that those who administer the program must learn to know it. Crown prosecutors must learn of the opportunity they have to urge the detention in jail of a person where it seems sensible and safe and the only sane course of action. This power is in the hands of our judges, particularly at the urging of Crown prosecutors, and perhaps it was somewhat neglected in the initial stages of this reform. I suggest to hon. members that in this, as in so many other areas, it is important to avoid criticizing the whole program because of the difficulty which may attach to it in the initial stages. It is better to correct these problems, if we can, than to deal in a destructive way with the program itself.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that in this parliament we will have time to return to the question of the bill on privacy, or wire-tapping or electronic eavesdropping. I believe this is an important additional step that we must take in this country. In the Department of Justice we will be continuing our work on other aspects of the protection of privacy, in such matters as the development of a commission on rights and interests, in order that we can better protect the rights of individuals who are not strong enough to protect themselves or who need assistance against the strength and complexities of a bureaucracy.

A law reform commission has been established in this country, and is active. I look forward to its reports and to consideration by the House of its proposals. I hope that we can deal on a regular, perhaps annual basis with its recommendations on changes in the criminal law, in procedure, in the rules of evidence, and so on, so that the problems which have been recognized but which no one has had time to deal with in the past are not left as open sores.

These are the things which I think we can deal with in this parliament, Mr. Speaker, given a spirit of good will. I look forward to the continued support of members on all sides of the House in dealing with these extremely important matters of law and justice in our society. The objective of a just society, whether in economic or legal terms, will always be before us. It is an ideal toward which we should continue to strive. This government will put before this House legislation which allows us to move our society in that direction.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1730)

Mr. Jim Balfour (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, as the newly elected Member of Parliament for Regina East, I am pleased and honoured to be able to participate in this debate. I wish at the outset to congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, on your re-election and the Deputy Speaker on his election. I am confident that the qualities of courtesy, tact and wisdom possessed in such large measure by you both will guide the House successfully through the difficult and challenging days ahead.

Regina East, Mr. Speaker, comprises approximately the eastern half of the city of Regina plus about 5,000 square miles of rural area, being a rectangle about 50 miles in width and 130 miles from south to north. Included within its boundaries is a portion of the beautiful and historical Qu'Appelle valley along which are situated four Indian reservations. An additional four reservations lie north of the valley in the Punnichy district. Seventy per cent of my constituents reside in the urban centre of Regina; the remaining 30 per cent reside in the towns, villages and farms of the rural area of the riding.

The population of both the rural and urban areas is truly multicultural in nature, incorporating Anglo-Saxon, European and Asian ethnic origins in addition to a significant proportion of Indian and Métis people. Needless to say, the variety of background of these various groups contributes in a positive way to the quality of Regina's social and cultural life. Regina has more than doubled in size since the end of World War II and now contains a population of 149,000. The last four years have seen a slackening in Regina's rate of growth, as Saskatchewan has suffered a population loss. Some of the implications of these facts I shall refer to later in my remarks.

The principal economic activity of the Regina East riding is, of course, related directly and indirectly to agriculture. Dairy, grain and livestock farming and the goods and services required to support these activities are the principal sources of income for those residing in the various centres of population scattered throughout the rural constituency; hence, the basic problems of agriculture in western Canada translate themselves into economic terms for most of those whom I represent in this House.

The government, Mr. Speaker, in its Speech from the Throne proposes a variety of measures as solutions to western Canada's problems. I must say I am pleased to hear that this government has finally recognized the existence of western Canada and has finally realized that western Canada is, in fact, experiencing problems. But on the basis of this government's record over the past four and a half years, I seriously question whether we are going to witness any monumental alterations in attitude, no matter what the throne speech says.

Western Canada, and Saskatchewan in particular, is suffering from increased and disastrous depopulation, a steady decline in farm income as a result of vulnerable markets and the cost price squeeze, and from a federal government that over the past four and a half years has wasted its energies on measures inherently hostile to the social, economic and individual goals of Canada's rural future.

In 1883, Mr. Speaker, my grandfather came to Saskatchewan from Ontario as a 16-year old youth seeking opportunity, which he found in full measure. In the economic environment of western Canada today, it seems to me almost inevitable that his great-grandsons, my sons, will leave their native province simply because no such opportunity or challenge now exists. Our largest single employer is the provincial government, and we are confronted with what could become an insoluble dilemma, that of an ever increasing bureaucracy living in large measure on the tax revenue generated by an ever decreasing private sector.

But, Mr. Speaker, I submit that what lies at the root of western Canadian problems is the hinterland philosophy with which, in varying degrees, central Canada and the federal government has regarded the west since confederation. A need to purchase consumer and capital goods in a protected market, while selling its products in a free world market, is one basic manifestation of its economic dilemma. This alone has constituted a hidden tax on western Canadians for as long as wheat and minerals have been produced there, a hidden tax which has never been compensated by government revenue sharing because it has created for the private sector of industrial Canada a built-in advantage over the private sector of western Canada. By reducing the profitability of the agricultural and mineral industries of the west, it has retarded capital formation, discouraged investment by the banks and reduced the buoyancy of the west economically.

The west is not the victim of lack of resources or productivity or a lazy work force; it is a victim of federal government policies that have loaded the dice against it. Transportation cost policies, tax laws which inhibit western development, a Customs tariff system which exacerbates the farmers' cost of production dilemma, the centralized banking system, immigration laws which at present create no impetus for settling in the west, and a host of other instruments of federal authority are responsible for the situation.

The hard fact is, Mr. Speaker, that western Canada has existed under a system of economic colonialism to central Canada since confederation, and the time for change is long overdue.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Balfour: I noted with interest the throne speech proposal to convene a conference of the governments of western Canada to study western economic opportunities. Such a conference could very well prove in the long term to be a constructive and productive step. But there are things that could be done and should be done immediately. Federal fiscal, monetary and spending policies should be designed and implemented to deal with a Canada which is composed of distinct and differing regions. Special tax exemptions should be considered for areas with high living costs, such as the north, the areas of western Canada and the Maritimes; and areas which do not contribute to inflationary pressures caused by rapid economic growth should be spared the pains of the battle against it. In short, we must design and implement policies which recognize the existence of differences of the various regions of Canada and which guarantee for these regions a substantial degree of sovereignty and political and economic equality.

I notice, Mr. Speaker, that the government, in the throne speech, devotes much of its time to social policy, to policy which is presumably designed to assist Canadians who are less fortunate than the majority, namely, the elderly, those who are unemployed, those on welfare, those who are living with conditions that are less than satisfactory.

I also notice that the throne speech fails to devote even a single sentence to the plight of Canada's native peoples. Perhaps this government would prefer not to remind itself or the rest of Canada about its total lack of concern for this sector of Canadian society which has an unemployment rate of about 90 per cent, a sector of Canadian society of which 70 per cent, in 1969, lived below the poverty line, a sector of Canadian society in which the high school drop-out rate reaches 95 per cent before grade 12, a sector of Canadian society which has, apparently, been forgotten by this government.

Mr. Speaker, there are approximately 3,000 registered Canadian Indians living in my riding. They occupy a total of eight reservations. In addition to this, there is in the city of Regina a substantial number of Indian and Métis people who have left the reservations and small rural communities seeking, presumably, greater opportunity. They, however, do not find greater opportunity. They find, usually because of lack of education, that opportunities for advancement are limited and they end up living in ghetto-like surroundings which are totally abysmal.

Under the terms of the Indian Act, registered Canadian Indians are the direct responsibility of the federal government. This government has abdicated that responsibility, because native peoples still suffer from inadequate housing and educational facilities, and poor health care. Native peoples living in Canada are still treated as second-class citizens and the government of Canada, instead of helping Indians to help themselves, is content to proceed with its narrow, legalistic policy of assimilation of native peoples into white society. Now we discover that the government is planning to phase-out funding for native organizations, in particular the core funding concept.

It appears as if the federal government expects that Indian associations will be able to correct all previous wrongs, grievances and injustices against Indian people and advance their standard of living to the point where they are no longer necessary within a period of less than 40 months. But, of course, this is the same government that has provided one school since 1968. It is the same government that has provided absolutely nothing in the way of new health care and educational concepts since 1968. It is the same government which chose to disregard the views of the Indian people in its 1969 Indian policy, and continues to ignore them in its 1973 Speech from the Throne. Canada's native peoples, Mr. Speaker, are not asking for the impossible. They only seek more control over their own affairs.

• (1740)

However, the biggest problems facing Canadians, whether they be from the west or the east, are unemployment and inflation—unemployment which affected 615,-

000 Canadians in December of this year, the largest number for that month in Canada's history, and inflation which is running at a rate of five per cent on a year to year basis.

The government in its Speech from the Throne said that it is giving top priority to finding a solution to Canada's economic problems. I contend, Mr. Speaker, that we would not have these problems now if the government had not chosen to pursue a bankrupt economic policy in the first place. Nevertheless, we are faced with finding a solution. The government's solutions, as usual, are too little, too late. I am speaking here of the new winter works program recently announced by the government, which will cost the Canadian taxpayer approximately $350 million.

The winter works program is supposed to alleviate peak periods of winter unemployment. Unfortunately, as in previous years, the government announced the program too late to accomplish its stated objectives. The result will be a winter of high unemployment and unnecessary misery for many Canadians. The throne speech says that the government is giving top priority to promoting——stable economic growth at a rate that will sustain rising standards of living for all our citizens and provide for more satisfactory realization of the potential of the economy.

Yet statistics released by the finance department on November 29 revealed that the government's present fiscal policy is becoming more restrictive rather than more expansionary, and that the June budget in fact contributed to rising inflation and rising unemployment.

We have been told that before too long the government intends to bring another of its endless series of budgets before this House. I can well imagine that this budget will try to tie up some or all of the loose ends left dangling by the throne speech. However, Mr. Speaker, what confidence can this House have in a government that says on the one hand its most urgent priority is jobs, when on the other hand the statistics compiled by Statistics Canada tell us a completely different story? These figures tell us that not only has job creation lagged behind growth of the labour force, but the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate has increased since the last budget. With what confidence can we treat the new budget, if and when it comes, when the first priority of the old budget has still to materialize?

Reasonable projections now show that real growth of the gross national product during the whole of 1972 will be approximately 5.3 per cent. To bring unemployment down to the 4.5 per cent recently recommended by the Economic Council of Canada will require real growth of our gross national product, between 6 and 7 per cent. Once again, the government has fallen short of its own objectives and one can only wonder how all this mismanagement will suddenly be changed in the new budget. This government has not produced over the past four years, and on the basis of its record I cannot really believe that its intentions are serious this time, either.

Much has been made of the lesson this government apparently learned during the election campaign and as a result of that contest, but I do not credit them with humility and I do not see any change in basic attitudes. We have a government which is still basically arrogant, which is still basically smug, which is still basically not a government of the people and which will, because of that, not be the government of the future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I wish first to express my congratulations to the four hon. members whom this House has selected to preside over its deliberations. Three of these hon. gentlemen previously occupied the posts to which they have been re-elected, and did so with dignity and distinction.

I think it will be understood if I make specific reference to my special pleasure at the re-election of the hon. member for Stormont-Dundas (Mr. Lamoureux) to the high position he occupied in the previous parliament. It is not enough that Mr. Speaker knows the rules and applies them with impartiality. To be truly effective, he must be able to sense the mood of the House and understand when a rigid application of the rules would not be in the best interests of the chamber. Mr. Speaker has consistently demonstrated just that sort of sensitivity in his judgment.

I must also add my expression of appreciation for the manner in which Mr. Speaker discharges his important duties outside this chamber. It always pleases me to learn that Mr. Speaker has hosted visiting foreign dignitaries, because I know that the hospitality he and his wife habitually extend to their guests can only result in adding lustre to the reputation of this country and its parliament. It is among my fondest hopes that this parliament will create a permanent speakership and that the present Mr. Speaker will be the first incumbent.

The hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) assumes the Chair for the first time this session. I am delighted at his selection. Few members have demonstrated for this institution a feeling to equal his. His interventions in procedural debates in the past have been invariably knowledgeable, designed to maintain decorum and expedite business. I am sure that he will bring distinction to his office. While I am giving out bouquets, I would like to associate myself with the remarks of hon. members who congratulated the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

A lot of nonsense is commonly heard in this place, but if some of the remarks of distinguished members of the Progressive Conservative Party during the past week are any indication, this will be a vintage year. Let me refer to two recurring themes. First, members of the party sitting to my right have argued, implicity and explicity, that in deciding to permit the Liberal government to present a legislative program before deciding upon its fate we in the New Democratic Party have somehow betrayed our mandate. I consider it no part of my mandate to express a preference for either the Conservatives or the Liberals.

Given the fact that my party cannot at the present time form a government, and given the fact that I was elected after running on the New Democratic Party platform I consider that my instructions from the electors in my constituency were to use all the means at my disposal to bring into effect the policies which I advocated during the campaign. To me, that means that the New Democratic Party should employ the somewhat strategic position it occupies in this House to persuade whatever party has formed the government of the merits of its program.

So long as the party in power shows a reasonable disposition to act upon our suggestions, I feel under no obligation to defeat it. However, should such a disposition not manifest itself I would have not a moment's hesitation in throwing it out. That kind of decision can hardly be made with any intelligence before one has had a chance to look at proposed legislation. What we are doing is providing the government with a chance to present legislation. If we like it, if we feel it is in the best interests of the Canadian people, we will vote for it. If we do not think it appropriate, we will vote against it.

It makes absolutely no difference to me whether we engage in this exercise with Liberals or Conservatives. As it happens, the election results gave the Liberals two seats more than the Conservatives, and the Prime Minister's decision means that we must deal with Liberals. Should the Liberals be defeated, I believe that under current conditions it is only proper that the Conservatives be given an opportunity to attempt to implement a legislative program. But it is no part of my mandate to say to either the Liberals or the Conservatives, "You have no right to attempt to introduce a program of legislation." If I had any reason to believe that the Conservative party would, in government, produce policies more in keeping with those I advocated during the election campaign than will the present government, I would have no doubt that it was my duty to assist the Conservatives in gaining office. However, since in relation to the principles of social justice, economic democracy and human dignity a change from Liberals to Conservatives means merely a change of faces to the right of Mr. Speaker, I feel under no compulsion to express preference for one party over the other.

An even more monumental piece of nonsense than that the NDP is somehow morally obligated to produce a Conservative government is the attempt of Conservative members to suggest that in voting against their motion of last Tuesday to adjourn the debate on the address in reply, the New Democratic Party was somehow voting against the well-being of old age pensioners. Well, that is an interesting game to play. It may even impress some people outside this chamber. But it is nothing more than a game, the kind of silly game which has helped to erode the reputation of parliament.

The motion had nothing whatever to do with pensions. All it asked was "that this debate be now adjourned." If it had passed, the House would have had nothing before it and we would merely have taken the rest of the day off. The Tories say the purpose was to bring on the government's pension legislation. There is no pension legislation on the order paper. Nothing at all would have happened, and such a course would have done nothing for the cause of pensioners. The move was a farce and an insult to Canada's pensioners.

The claim to be concerned about pensions being made by the Tories has a hollow ring. Their leader, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), has said no to a pension of $150 across the board. The Tories have refused to say by how much they would increase the basic pension. All they want is to gain power by any device. To use the old age pensioners as part of a power play was a disgrace exceeded only by those reporters who treated the gambit seriously at all. I would like to think that we in this chamber are capable of rising above that kind of nonsense. I know that the members of the Conservative party believe they can better govern this country than the Liberals. Given that conviction, they have every right to continue to seek office, but let them not ask me to share their conviction, and let them seek office honestly and straightforwardly. Playing games does not serve the interests of this House nor of the country.

• (1750)

There is not a party in this House that has reason to be satisfied with the results of the election. But like it or not, awkward or not, the composition of this House is the verdict of the Canadian electorate and I submit, to return again to the questions of mandates, that the electorate expect each of us to make a determined effort to see that this parliament deals with their problems, needs and aspirations. I recently polled my constituents by means of a questionnaire asking people to indicate whether or not they wanted another election. Over 90 per cent indicated that they did not. I asked them which party they would like to see form a government in the event that an election were held: some 30 per cent said Liberal, some 30 per cent said Conservative, some 30 per cent had no preference, and the remainder had other suggestions to make.

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Rowland: Some rather optimistic people suggested there should be a New Democratic government, and others argued for various forms of coalition. The point is the people in my constituency want us to try to make this parliament work.

There are some who regret the fact that once again we have a minority House. I do not share that regret, and I shall indicate why in a moment; but that consideration is not material to the point I am attempting to make. The fact is that we have a minority government. The fact is that if we were to have an election tomorrow, there is no guarantee we would not have another. Indeed, the experience of the last 15 years, in which seven elections have produced only two majority governments, would lead one to expect another minority government.

Parties have become regionalized; there is no truly national party at the moment. I believe the situation to be the result of the beginning of a profound political realignment in Canada which will ultimately produce a national party to the left of centre and a national party to the right of centre. One can see that process taking place at the provincial level in British Columbia and Manitoba where coalitions to oppose what are called "The socialists" are being proposed. Such a process is already complete in Saskatchewan. But the process is lengthy and difficult. In the interim, minority parliaments are more likely to be the rule than the exception. I think that as men and women elected to govern in the interest of Canadians we are obliged to seek ways and means to make minority parliaments work, ways and means which will meet the current situation without artificially perpetuating it. That means some alteration in both institutions and attitudes. It is for this reason I was so pleased by the decision of the House to elect a representative from the official opposition to the post of Deputy Speaker.

Surely the next logical step, and one which I would strongly urge the government to adopt, or at the very least refer to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization for immediate consideration and report, is that of having chairmen of committees selected from a panel of representatives of all parties in this House. With its current numbers, the government is going to encounter extreme difficulty finding a sufficient number of members with the background and experience necessary to chair each of our standing committees, joint standing committees and special committees. There are compelling reasons for moving to an all-party panel of chairmen even in a majority House. Surely those reasons are even more compelling when the party in power has only 109 members, the majority of whom occupy cabinet posts or parliamentary secretaryships.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Rowland: Mr. Speaker, when the House recessed at six o'clock I was in the midst of arguing that what is likely to happen in this country over the next number of years, because of the process of political realignment that is taking place, is that we will be confronted more often than not with the situation we now find ourselves in, that is, having a minority government. Because of that there is some fundamental reshaping of attitudes and of institutions which must take place, not for the purpose of artificially perpetuating the situation of minority governments but to accommodate this institution to the fact that we are likely to be encountering minority governments. This would allow the government of the country to carry on in spite of that fact.

Just prior to the House adjourning for supper I had argued that one of the immediate steps we could take in this direction would be to look to the device of having committee chairmen selected from opposition parties as well as the government party, something I understand the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) suggested last Thursday. I hope we will hear some similar expressions of opinion from representatives of the Conservative party as this debate progresses.

Another suggestion I wish to make is that now is the time for this House or one of its committees to take a good, hard look at one of the recommendations of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the Constitution, on which I had the honour to serve. In effect, the recommendation calls for a fixed-turn parliament with certain escape clauses. Recommendation 43 of that committee, to be found on page 37 of its report, reads as follows:

> Every House of Commons should continue for four years, from the day of the return of the writs for choosing the House and no longer, provided that, and notwithstanding any royal prerogative, the Governor General should have the power to dissolve parliament during that period:
> (1) when the government is defeated
>
> (a) on a motion expressing no confidence in the government; or
> (b) on a vote on a specific bill or portion of a bill which the government has previously declared should be construed as a motion of want of confidence; or
> (2) when the House of Commons passes a resolution requesting dissolution of parliament.

That recommendation duplicates a bill to amend the BNA Act which I had on the order paper during the last parliament and which I have resubmitted for consideration by this parliament. The recommended changes to the BNA Act have special relevance to a minority parliament because they would in at least two ways equip the House to introduce some stability into the situation, a situation which I have demonstrated is likely to be recurrent over the next number of years. Firstly, by requiring the government to indicate in advance of debate on any piece of legislation whether or not a vote against it would be construed as a motion of want of confidence, much unnecessary and disruptive squabbling about the significance of any particular vote, a problem referred to in the speech of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), could be avoided. Moreover, such declarations would assist the chamber, through consultations among House leaders, to intelligently plan the order in which legislation should be placed before it because we would know in advance on which pieces of legislation the vote would constitute a test of the government.

The second way in which this suggested amendment to the BNA Act would contribute to stability in a minority situation is less direct but equally profound. In effect, the bill which I placed on the order paper, and also the recommendation of the joint Senate-Commons committee, limits the royal power of dissolution by establishing that it is the House, and not the Governor General or the Prime Minister by way of the Governor General, that will determine whether parliament should dissolve short of its statutory time limit, which is suggested in both these recommendations as four years.

Thus, it would seem to me that the House would have the power to so word a motion of want of confidence, once that royal prerogative had been limited, as to determine whether it would result in dissolution of parliament and an election, or in the forming of a new government. Should the BNA Act be modified as suggested, it would be entirely proper for the House to move a motion couched in terms such as, "Your Excellency's advisers no longer possess the confidence of this House and we humbly request that (Mr. X) be called upon to form a government".

This procedure would not be proper now because the House would be attempting to usurp the royal prerogative; but if the amendment to the British North America Act, recommended by the joint committee on the constitution, were passed, that prerogative would be limited and such a motion would be in order. This would meet yet another of the points raised by the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert during his contribution to this debate.

I believe the fixed term for parliament, with escape clauses, provided for in the recommendation of the Commons-Senate committee and as inscribed in my bill is necessary for a number of reasons beyond those associated with a minority parliament. At present, under section 50 of the British North America Act the Commons can sit for a maximum of five years after an election unless its term is extended by a vote of two-thirds of the members; but it can be dissolved by the Governor General, who acts on the advice of the Prime Minister, at any time within the five-year term.

In practice, parliaments are usually dissolved after three and a half to four years in order to offset charges of government arrogance, to avoid the appearance of government clutching too tightly to the reins of power and to permit the government room to manoeuver and plan legislation so as to present itself to the electorate in the most favourable manner. Thus, at any time after the third year a parliament gets election fever, productivity drops off because members must begin electioneering, the game of guessing "will it be called or won't it" saps energies and diverts attention from legislation. Obviously, a set term would not completely eliminate such practices but it would at least ameliorate the situation.

The second reason apart from a minority situation for advocating a set, four-year term is that it would diminish slightly the power the Prime Minister wields over individual Members of Parliament, especially those in his own party, by taking away from him the ability to decide, on his own, when an election shall be called. The threat of an election can often whip into line rebelling members of a government caucus. Even the exceptions to the set term which my proposal would admit would ensure that the power to decide upon an election date rested with the whole House and not only on the Prime Minister.

The third reason for advocating a set term is that it would give individual Members of Parliament, especially government backbenchers, a greater say in policy formation. If there were a set term, the defeat of a piece of government legislation would not necessarily result in the defeat of the government, as custom would seem to dictate at the present, although that statement must be qualified in particular instances. Thus, a government backbencher would no longer necessarily be confronted with the choice of either voting for a piece of legislation with which he disagrees or having the government, which he probably supports on 90 per cent of its legislation, fall. In short, there would be more free votes. In this kind of situation the government would have to pay much greater attention to the views of its caucus and ensure that those views were reflected in its legislation if it were to be assured of passage.

• (2010)

Opposition influence would also increase because, if their arguments for change in legislation were to convince a number of government backbenchers, the legislation would again be in jeopardy. Thus, the government would have to pay some attention to opposition arguments, and the opposition, with a real chance to influence the course of events, would have to take greater pains to make their arguments responsible and convincing. Debate in the House would become more meaningful and less of a ritual.

[Mr. Rowland.]

The fourth reason for advocating a set-term parliament is very closely related to the third; the fact that there would be more free votes, and debat es in the House would become more meaningful. Such a situation would mean that a debate was once again a drama. The outcome would no longer always be known in advance. Debate would once again be genuinely worthy of the attention of the news media. News media coverage would serve to focus public attention upon developments in the House. Just why this change is so important to the democratic process is somewhat difficult to ex plain, but let me take a stab at it.

Parliament serves the purpose of foc using public attention upon matters of concern and of defining and delineating the considerations and the options involved. In so doing, parliament assists the public in coming to intelligent conclusions about the actions of government and helps individual members of the public to determine their own positions on questions of import. The better the media coverage, the more effective is this wholly desirable process. But beyond that, improved media coverage of improved parliamentary debate would mean a more rapid and a more effective focusing of public attention upon an issue, with the consequence that public opinion would more readily affect government actions.

Votes in the House are no longer the important control on the actions of the executive; rather, appeals by the opposition to the electorate are the important control. Even with a set-term parliament, this would remain the case. The only real sanction, the only real control on government action now is the prospect of defeat in the next election. With a majority government and the well established pattern of voting solidly by party—a pattern which a set-term parliament would soften but not end—votes are virtually meaningless and are useless as a means of effecting parliamentary control. Thus, what is important in the functioning of parliament is the quality of the discussion conducted. What is important in the functioning of parliament is that discussion be focused. What is important in the functioning of parliament is that its discussions be heard by the public, and news media attention would ensure that they were.

The constitution committee's proposal for a set-term parliament would permit the term to be shortened under certain conditions. Exceptions are required for two major reasons. The first is that public opinion, especially in this age of instant electronic communication, is highly subject to change. Thus, it is entirely conceivable that a parliament might not at all accurately reflect public opinion after it had been elected for a period of time but before its four-year term had expired. Therefore, any realistic proposal must permit the effective acknowledgement of such changes through an earlier election. It is for this reason that I suggest an election could be held before the expiry of four years if the government were defeated on a motion of want of confidence, or if the House voted to dissolve and have an election called.

The second major reason for permitting an early termination of parliament under certain conditions is the desire to avoid doing undue violence to one of the parliamentary system of government's greatest strengths—its ability to allow the public to easily assign responsibility for government action. Because it is the government which formulates policy and pilots it through the House, credit for success and blame for failure goes to the government. Moreover, governments seek office on the basis of a program of action, and once in office are expected to put that program into effect.

If a situation were created in which a government could find itself defeated again and again on major pieces of legislation and yet be forced to continue in office, as is sometimes the case with the United States president who is elected for a set term, our system of responsible government would be adversely affected if not entirely destroyed. Thus, I feel it necessary to suggest that a government be permitted to say of any piece of legislation, before debate on it begins, "This piece of legislation, or this portion of the bill before us is a matter of principle to us. If it suffers defeat, we will consider the defeat to be a vote of want of confidence and an election will be called even if the four-year term is not up." This latter qualification is obviously a major one, one which if abused, could severly reduce the advantages of a set-term parliament.

It is obviously possible, with this sort of exception available, for a government to make such a statement about every piece of legislation it brought forward and thus end the possibility of free votes. However, the likelihood of such action being taken is remote since institutions and laws have their own dynamics. Once the law made it possible for more free votes to take place, the expectation of the public would be that they take place and a government would ignore such expectations at its peril. I think that initially governments would use such a qualification very frequently but, as the system was demonstrated to work and as the public became accustomed to it, the use of such a rider on legislation would become less and less frequent.

I submit that these kinds of reform are necessary because they give greater weight to the individual Member of Parliament. At the moment parliament, except in a minority government situation, is lead around by the nose by members of cabinet, and especially the Prime Minister. So long as individual Members of Parliament are effectively excluded from having a reasonable amount of influence over policy formation and over the business which comes before the House, their constituents, individually and collectively, are similarly denied an influence unless they are members of well organized, well financed special interest groups capable of gaining the attention and affecting the judgment of the cabinet. That is not democracy; rather, it is a form of collective plutocracy.

In the interests of democracy, in the interests of making this chamber relevant to the people of Canada, we need to build into the system the necessity for a government to consult meaningfully with this House and its members when it occupies a majority position as well as during those times when there is government by minority. I suggest that in a small way a fixed-term parliament would assist in achieving that end.

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, it is a great honour for me to represent the constituency of York-Sunbury that has been represented by such great Canadians as J. Chester MacRae, the Hon. Milton F. Gregg, the Hon. R. B. Hanson, W. G. Clark and the Hon. Francis Bridges.

I would respectfully commend you, Mr. Speaker, on the fair, impartial and friendly way you conduct yourself in the performance of your exacting duties. You certainly merit your excellent reputation which extends across Canada. I wish also to commend the clerks at the table who serve this House with distinction. The Clerk of the Commons has been the instigator and mainstay of the organization of Clerks of all legislatures in Canada. The Clerks hold annual seminars, exchange information and improve the quality of service to all legislators in Canada. Our Clerk, the Clerk Assistants and parliamentary counsel have merited the praise and respect of all hon. members for their service to this House and to all the legislative bodies in Canada.

My constituency is one of the most beautiful in Canada. Intersected by the magnificent Saint John River, its rolling hills and green valleys are punctuated by evergreen forests, farms, towns, villages and the capital city of New Brunswick. Base Gagetown, the large army training area, the dominion research station, factories, government offices, recreation areas, the arts and points of historic and natural interest are all there. There is also poverty, hardship, anguish and frustration. I shall in a moment, Sir, ask your understanding and assistance in identifying and attempting to solve the difficult problems facing many people in my constituency.

The provincial university, the University of New Brunswick, Teacher's College and St. Thomas University, are located in my constituency on the same campus. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) and the former minister of transport all know this campus. They visited it during the election campaign. They are always welcome in York-Sunbury and I hope they return soon.

York-Sunbury also has within its boundaries the capital of the province of New Brunswick. Fredericton is the only capital city in Canada not served by rail passenger service. To visit Fredericton by rail you disembark at Fredericton junction and then travel over icy roads in a bus through the bitter cold New Brunswick winter for a considerable distance. It is not equal to the comfortable, safe rail service that helped develop and build part of this area. If you come by air, make your reservations early if you plan to visit during the busy season. Would you believe that last week I was on the waiting list to fly from Montreal to Fredericton on March 24? You have probably guessed by now why I welcome the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), particularly in the winter when I hope he comes by train.

I am vitally interested in the government's future plans for regional economic development. The disparity that exists between the Atlantic provinces and the rest of Canada has remained constant despite strong efforts made by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. One can only conclude that without DREE the situation may have been much worse but that some important studied changes are necessary. Unfortunately, neither the throne speech nor the speech of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) in this debate, although I enjoyed it very much, have thrown any meaningful light on this subject except for an oblique reference to the effect that DREE would be decentralized.

My conception of DREE is of a federally strong department backed by all the resources of Canada, such as the original Atlantic Development Board was to have been. It was my belief, shared by maritimers generally, that DREE was created expressly to help underdeveloped regions in their quest for national standards of living. If DREE had been used for that purpose, we would no doubt have far better conditions in the Atlantic provinces today. Unhappily, DREE has been used primarily to prop up the national economy in times of stress and strain and, heaven knows, there have been plenty of times like those in the last four years.

Practically every part of Canada has experienced the need for and been brought under the aegis of DREE. The concentration of funds needed in the Atlantic provinces for infrastructures and the provision of secondary industries has not been available in these areas in amounts necessary to combat the chronic depression, the seasonal unemployment and the low per capita incomes of the Maritimes. In short, it seems that the grievous errors made in national planning have cast DREE in a stopgap role instead of that of a facilitator for the economic recovery of Atlantic Canada.

In my view, DREE must develop policies which can have an enormous impact on regional development. It has to be a bold and vigorous DREE, to be sure, and one which is in close communion with the places it serves. But it has to be a DREE properly administered, with the outstanding goals of eliminating the disparities which it is attacking and focusing the combined efforts of all agencies on the problems before it.

After the fortunes of war had turned against the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) in 1963, successive Liberal governments failed to realize the magnitude of the task. To bring a whole region of Canada, depressed for generations, to economic, monetary and social parity with the rest of the country is a mountainous undertaking requiring massive infusions of funds and investments. Piecemeal doles, such as those handed out by the Liberal government after 1963 which played havoc with the Atlantic Development Board, and even those presided over by DREE, have been able to do nothing more than keep the region sliding backward.

The right hon. member for Prince Albert was thinking in terms of a billion dollars of federal investment in the Atlantic provinces when he created the Atlantic Development Board. This was to prime corporate investment of $3 billion more. He seized the nettle in 1962, introduced the principle of regionalism into federal politics and recognized the fact, glossed over during two decades of Liberal rule, that only federal assistance on a titanic scale could strengthen the weak Atlantic link in the chain of confederation. The Atlantic Development Board had no chance to function. The Diefenbaker government fell. The Atlantic Development Board was emasculated by the Liberals and given a fixed fund toally inadequate to the task. Where billions were needed, millions were distributed in bits and pieces.

The Department of Regional Economic Expansion performed the best it could within the scope of its policies and finances, but the great and crying needs of the Atlantic provinces, the basic problems, are still unanswered. DREE has been concentrating on industrial aspects with a reasonable degree of success, but the results are discouraging in Atlantic Canada when the magnitude of the task is considered. Also, the scale of its outlay for infrastructures has been puny in relation to the number and size of the projects in the Atlantic area waiting to be developed.

The Atlantic Development Board led by Michael Wardell, before the Liberals got at it, was poised to launch mighty undertakings which could have changed the face and fortune of this part of Canada. It had the blessing of the Conservative government of that day. The green light had been flashed. It was "Go" for the harnessing of the tides of Fundy, the building of the New Brunswick to Prince Edward Island causeway, the exploration of the corridor road across Maine, linking the Maritimes with Sherbrooke, Quebec, and even the much talked about Chignecto canal seemed a possibility.

Those were the infrastructures which the Atlantic provinces needed then, and which I believe are needed today as never before. But with the Liberals came the locusts and nothing was done. To be sure, the causeway was begun—during an election campaign—and stopped afterwards. When the government decided that it had to cut back on national spending, it thought first of the Maritimes just as its Liberal predecessors did. Out went the causeway concept, out went the possibility of developing the Bay of Fundy for electric power, and out went all interest in Chignecto and the corridor road.

The right hon. member for Prince Albert, Hugh John Flemming, Michael Wardell and K. C. Irving were on the right track when they said, "Invest first in the great infrastructures, and industrial expansion will follow as day follows night." The policies of the Liberal politicians, bureaucrats, economists and academics, while having some merit, were inadequate in attempting to pay industries to settle in the Maritimes and buy jobs.

The great need in Atlantic Canada is still for a massive program of self-liquidating public works and capital budgets financed out of loans. Investment on a massive scale can create production, employment and profits. It can cut those annual aids which the state of the Atlantic economy compels the other provinces to provide. If the infrastructure is set right—the power developments, the canals, the roads, the ports and the harbours—industry can do without the subsidies.

Transportation and regional development are inextricably linked. Thus, there should be constant consultation and communication between the Department of Transport and the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. In the past, so far as is known, there has been little of either. Now we have a strange situation in the House. The former minister of transport and the former minister of regional economic expansion have swapped seats in the cabinet. I hope they will put their heads together, as the times demand, to bring into effect the Atlantic transportation policy which must come if regional equality is ever to be attained.

I should now like to refer to a subject that has an important bearing on the future lives of a large segment of the people in my constituency, the servicemen and their families at base Gagetown. I refer to the defence establishment and its probable future commitments. Until a few years ago, a sizeable field formation was stationed at this important training establishment made up of highly trained and well disciplined soldiers. Their role was to reinforce, as necessary, the NATO commitment in Europe and to act as an immediately available resource of trained manpower if such were needed in a civil emergency.

They proved their worth in the latter responsibility most admirably and comported themselves well during the FLQ crisis. On several occasions they responded to requests from the New Brunswick government for assistance in fighting forest fires, flood control and such other emergencies. I hold these men in the highest regard, as do the people of New Brunswick. But I seriously doubt that the same capability is there today because of the change of organization and the serious depletion that has occurred in army unit strength.

It is not generally realized that when a drastic cutback is ordered by government, the personnel released are in most cases those in the junior ranks. In an emergency such as I mentioned earlier, our main requirement is for fully trained and well disciplined private soldiers—and they cannot be produced in a few weeks; in fact, I believe it requires at least 18 months to make a trained soldier out of a recruit.

The point I wish to make is that we cannot expect our armed forces properly to carry out their role unless they are made up of balanced and collectively trained units, capable immediately of undertaking present commitments and future commitments into which the government of this country enters, whether they be of a peacekeeping nature or related to emergencies that arise in this country. We must support our armed forces in achieving this posture.

• (2030)

Like other provinces, in varying degree, New Brunswick and the counties of York and Sunbury have the problem of inadequate support for the owners of small farms. We must make it possible for these holdings to pass from one generation to another without crippling tax penalties. We must make it less expensive for these people to purchase new equipment, to improve the efficiency of their operations and thus enable them and their successors to make a reasonable living off the land. Unless such measures are undertaken very soon, we and our children will be looking at vast areas of wasteland and abandoned farms on which the soil is fertile and capable of producing good food.

In the unique position in which we find ourselves in this House, Mr. Speaker, one cannot blame the smaller opposition parties for taking advantage of the present situation. However, they should bear in mind the words of the Prime Minister in regard to our relations with the United States, that one can never really be at ease when sleeping with an elephant, unless one wants to be a mouse.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howie: I have attempted to constructively place before this House proposals to improve the way of life of all those who live in the Atlantic provinces. Whether these or better suggestions are acted upon is not important. What is important is that we act decisively, and now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Stanley Haidasz (Minister of State): Mr. Speaker, in opening my remarks I should like to congratulate you on your re-election to this House, and to join those hon. members who during the course of the debate have paid well deserved tribute to your wisdom, fairness and many other skills. I am both proud and happy that you have been enthusiastically, and indeed unanimously selected again to guide the proceedings of this chamber during the twenty-ninth parliament. I congratulate the Deputy Speaker on his election, and I also congratulate, for their excellent performances, the mover and the seconder of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

I recall vividly my emotions, my excitement and feelings of humility, mixed with great satisfaction, when in 1957 I arrived in this House for the first time. Today, my feelings are no less intense. I stand here again with mixed feelings of humility and pride as the first Minister of State whose sole responsibility it is to implement and develop further the multicultural policy of the government.

Mr. Paproski: You had better do a good job, Stanley.

Mr. Haidasz: To these feelings I have to add, in all sincerity, my sense of gratitude to my parents, who immigrated to Canada from Poland many years ago, for their hard work, privations and guidance without which I would not have completed my education nor succeeded im my chosen career, to my teachers and friends in Toronto where I was born and educated, to my professors at the University of Ottawa, to the constituents of my multicultural riding of Parkdale for the clear mandate with which they sent me back to this House, and to the community of which I am a proud member, for their encouragement to enter into and to continue a role in the political life of this country.

I was deeply touched, Sir, by the reaction with which my appointment was greeted by the various ethnocultural communities across the country and their periodicals which, although in languages other than English or French are, nevertheless, Canadian in spirit. I was not surprised, of course, by the expression of warm, proud satisfaction by the Polish-Canadian press. I was, however, greatly moved by the sincere, spontaneous statements and congratulations flowing from other ethnocultural groups. I am grateful for their kindness and assure them of my continued support and receptiveness to their advice on how I and my dedicated officials can improve the efforts which have already begun in giving multiculturalism genuine substance in Canada.

All of us here are sensitive to the needs of ethnic groups and the richness they add to Canadian society, because the multicultural policy received support from all parties when it was announced by our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), on October 8, 1971.

Mr. Paproski: All we want is more money.

Mr. Haidasz: I rejoice at the enthusiastic response to this policy from all ethnocultural groups. It is a fitting testimony to the viability of the multicultural policy of the government and an example of the integrating spirit and natural adoptive forces of our country, where mistrust can be shed in a cordial atmosphere of mutual trust, replaced by togetherness and understanding directed toward a brighter future, and by preservation of what is best in the past. Without it, multiculturalism would remain only a beautiful theory.

The appointment of a minister of state responsible for multiculturalism illustrates the positive influence of the philosophical and moral basis of the policy of multiculturalism. How right was the Prime Minister, when announcing this policy on October 8, 1971, he said in his memorable statement on that historic occasion:

> A policy of multiculturalism within a bilingual framework commends itself to the government as the most suitable means of assuring the cultural freedom of Canadians. Such a policy should help to break down discriminatory attitudes and cultural jealousies.

Mr. Paproski: Where is the advisory board?

Mr. Haidasz:

> National unity, if it is to mean anything in the deeply personal sense, must be founded on confidence in one's own individual identity; out of this can grow respect for that of others and a willingness to share ideas, attitudes and assumptions. A vigorous policy of multiculturalism will help create this initial confidence. It can form the base of a society which is based on fair play for all.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, fair play for all is the principle guiding the implementation of this policy as outlined in the Prime Minister's document. I have not the least doubt that when the history of this time in our country's affairs is written, the Prime Minister's statement, making manifest his government's determination to provide all ethnocultural groups with a sense of belonging without first having to sacrifice their cultural heritage, will be regarded as one of the truly enlightened and just policies adopted by any administration.

Mr. Paproski: You don't believe that.

Mr. Haidasz: During the past 14 months of implementation, the citizenship branch of the Department of the Secretary of State and the federal cultural agencies have done an impressive job to launch new programs and to develop those which had already existed. It was only in January of last year, hardly a year ago, that $3 million were made available for the fiscal period ending March, 1973, to finance the initial stages of all these programs. The best known of these is the one for various cultural projects proposed and carried out by the cultural and ethnic groups themselves. Until now, out of $1 million earmarked for them, the citizenship branch has assisted a total of 229 projects with grants amounting to $826,772. Another granting session will commence next week.

These grants cover a wide range of activities, from traditional dance and song ensembles and other manifestations of folklore, to cable-TV presentations, anthologies of ethnic prose and poems written in Canada and published in English and French, theatrical performances, bibliographies of Canadian ethnic material, exhibitions and imaginative multicultural ventures in which many groups participate, including English and French speaking.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, if I were to cite the assistance which has been provided to various groups some better understanding of the government's role in promoting multiculturalism may be obtained. For example, the Estonian Canadians were assisted in staging an impressive world festival of their culture in Toronto last summer. Similar festivals, although on a smaller scale, were organized, with federal support, by Latvians in Vancouver and Lithuanians in Montreal.

• (2040)

A prominent Czech writer received a grant to enable him to publish, in French, his Czech novel depicting integration of an immigrant intellectual into the French-Canadian milieu in Montreal. A Hungarian researcher was helped in publishing, in English, a bibliography of Hungarian, English and French publications pertaining to Hungary and Hungarian Canadians. A number of amateur theatrical groups, Jewish, Latvian, Polish, Ukrainian, and others, in Montreal, Toronto and Edmonton were assisted in their productions. The East Indian community in Vancouver received help to present a Sikh cultural variety program which later toured other centres in British Columbia. Another grant enabled the Korean group to present their culture, modern and classical music, dance and theatre to the Toronto public.

A multi-ethnic group in remote Rouyn-Noranda received assistance to help their members to maintain their languages and cultures. A Cape Breton youth group, consisting of members of 11 racial strains, used a grant awarded by the citizenship branch to learn more about their own cultural heritage and to share this knowledge with other members of the community. In the same area, a Lebanese Canadian women's group received a grant to save the art of Lebanese cuisine and other homemaking traditions from disappearing. In another project, assisted by multicultural funds, two Montreal youth groups, Polish and French-Canadian, have been getting together to share each other's culture, concentrating on songs and dances. Although the project has not yet been completed, it has already yielded some happy results. The Polish group raised additional funds themselves to visit their country of origin last summer, and while performing there in an international festival won a coveted prize for their rendition of French-Canadian dances.

There have been numerous other projects, special conferences, colloquia and festivals, German, black, Maltese, Greek, Ukrainian, and many others. A particularly successful festival was the one held in St. Thomas, Ontario, where the grant received was minimal in proportion to the enthusiasm and spontaneous participation of the whole community which is proud of its multicultural heritage.

The Canadian past was also remembered and honoured. A grant to the Jewish Historical Society of western Canada was instrumental in organizing an impressive multi-media exhibition on "The History of the Jews in Western Canada" which opened in Winnipeg late last year. I saw this exhibit and found it most interesting and well presented. The one-hundredth anniversary of the settlement of the Danes in New Brunswick benefited from this granting program when the community of New Denmark celebrated their centennial. The German-speaking Amish Mennonites were the focus of attention when the Mennonite Historical Society of Ontario organized a series of uplifting celebrations to commemorate 150 years of the settlement of the Old Order of Amish in southern Ontario. Part of their commemoration, an oratorio which was presented in the Avon Theatre at Stratford, was assisted by a multicultural grant.

I believe the examples I have cited prove the viability of this government's policy to assist in the preservation and development of our cultural riches and to promote better understanding among Canadians. But in addition to the granting program there are other undertakings which are equally important. An extensive research program is being undertaken to produce information on language maintenance and cultural development.

Meaningful multiculturalism cannot ignore this complex problem. If we want to successfully develop programs outlined in the House document tabled by the Prime Minister, we have to understand all the linguistic and cultural phenomena. Some ethnic groups, those who manifest a "collective will to exist" as the B and B Commission had termed it, attach utmost importance to the retention of their languages, as witnessed by the considerable number of their evenings and Saturdays language schools. To other groups, language is of less importance. A special study is now in progress in Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg, Edmonton and Vancouver involving some of the largest ethnocultural groups. I hope that this study, which should be completed by late summer, will yield enough data to enable the government to assess where its further support could most effectively be directed.

I wish to stress, Mr. Speaker, this government's interest in the important role of Canadian ethnic publications. A great deal has already been done to assist them in carrying out their role, and even more will be done in the future. A part of the research program of our multicultural policy which I have just mentioned deals with the many problems of the ethnic press. The postal tariffs and insufficient income from advertising are not the only malaise which affects the many ethnic and other periodicals. There are many other factors, both internal and external, which also affect their content, readership, circulation, advertising, distribution and delivery and other operating costs.

While there are some papers which are self-sufficient, there are many others unable to solve their financial and other difficulties. Some of these were considered by the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism and by the special Senate Committee on Mass Media, and others. Our study should give a comprehensive picture as to which ethnic publishers and editors will contribute individually or through their Canada Ethnic Press Federation and its affiliate clubs in Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg and Vancouver, thus enabling the government to undertake proper measures. I would like to stress, however, that it is unlikely that the government would consider measures which would not also apply to ailing community weeklies across the country whose plight is very similar.

Under another program we have commissioned the writing of 20 ethnic histories by academics familiar with their respective groups. The purpose of this series on the peoples of Canada is to acquaint Canadians better with each other, to demonstrate that all groups have contributed to the growth and development of Canada's economic, social, cultural and political life. So far, contracts have been signed for 15 histories. The first volume will appear this year and the rest will be completed over the next three years. The problem of Canadian ethnic studies is also under consideration and prominent Canadian scholars are being consulted on the feasibility of establishing special centres of ethnic studies.

Mention should be made of multicultural centres where members of all groups can meet and share their cultural experiences and heritages. The only centres which have received substantial assistance to date are the International Institute of Metropolitan Toronto, L'Accord in Montreal, and the International Centre of Winnipeg. All three are considerably involved in immigrant-orientation work. There are, however, many smaller communities interested in the creation of multicultural centres, although on a smaller scale. Groups in such places are encouraged and assisted in their feasibility studies and preparation of suitable plans.

Four federal cultural agencies, apart from the citizenship branch of the Department of Secretary of State, are involved in the implementation of the multicultural policy and have their own programs. The National Film Board is making a series of films on ethnic groups. What is particularly important about these films is that they depart from the usual concept of folklore and depict the life of Canadians of ethnic groups, as it is lived today, among all other Canadians. The National Film Board has also completed extensive research preparatory to the launching of a program to show versions of existing films in other languages and distribute them to ethnic groups across Canada.

The National Museum of Man has created and put on tour two special exhibitions on ethnic groups in Canada and is developing its collection of multicultural artifacts. The public archives and the national library are also building up their collection of historical and current material relating to ethnic groups in our country. The CRTC is also involved. It has under way at the present time a major study on the use of other languages and is carrying out research of its own on ethnic broadcasting. The CBC has had a special committee studying the way in which that corporation can contribute to the realization of multicultural objectives and I hope it will be reporting to its president very shortly.

I regret that time does not permit me to describe all the multicultural programs of the federal government's cultural agencies in more detail, but there will be other opportunities to do so. At this time, Mr. Speaker, I would like to stress the spirit of co-operation and consultation underlying the formulation and implementation of the multicultural policy. All the programs I have mentioned were not conceived in an ivory tower; they were preceded by countless discussions and consultations between federal and provincial agencies, communities and groups they are to serve. My predecessors in the Department of Secretary of State played an important role in these community and group consultations, and I feel indebted to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier), the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Stanbury) and to the Hon. Martin O'Connell, former member for Scarborough East, for their excellent contributions.

I intend, Mr. Speaker, to continue this process of democratic consultation with all groups concerned in order to further develop and implement the multicultural policy of the government. One of the most important instruments of meaningful consultation will no doubt be the national advisory council of multiculturalism mentioned in the Speech from the Throne. The Prime Minister has already written to the leaders of national ethnocultural organizations about this council and many interesting and positive replies already have been received. We all would like to see an effective council, representative of the many ethnocultural groups and all regions of Canada. To ensure this, careful, time-consuming consultations are necessary. Nevertheless, I hope that I shall soon be in a position to present a report to the Prime Minister on this important matter.

I am aware of the interest of all members of the House in multiculturalism, not only as a matter of policy but also as a distinctly Canadian phenomenon of cultural equality, which makes us all proud. I am sure that the government will be fully supported in its measures to give effect to its programs implementing multiculturalism and to develop its policies further in light of the needs and desires of our ethnocultural groups.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that the government's agenda for action outlined in the Speech from the Throne contains many remedies to solve our socio-economic problems and to improve the quality of life for all our citizens. I hope that parliament will act responsibly and support the government's legislation which will be proposed soon.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to congratulate you quite sincerely for having been unanimously re-elected as Speaker of this House.

I was very pleased in recent years to take part in the proceedings under your speakership because you have always treated all members with much fairness and generosity. It happened sometimes, especially in my case, that we have unwillingly violated our standing orders—

An hon. Member: Often.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Someone said often but I know that he is joking. In all honesty he knows quite well that I have always tried, as do my colleagues, to respect the authority of the Speaker.

The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Dupras) is nodding yes because he knows that I am telling the truth.

I should also like to congratulate the Deputy Speaker for his election. He has truly deserved the confidence of the House and I am convinced that we shall be able to count on his understanding and generosity so that the proceedings of the House may be truly efficient.

[Mr. Haidasz.]

Also, I would like, at the beginning of my remarks, to thank very sincerily the voters of the riding of Bellechasse who have re-elected me at the last election and this despite pressure from promises and without hopes for a big election fund because third parties are without these advantages.

• (2100)

I should also like to say a word of praise for my chief, although he is not here now, because of his brave speech in the House last Monday when he took part on the debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. He kindly outlined what, during the coming weeks and months, will be the position of our party with regard to administration and to the debates in the House. I am particularly anxious to tell him and the whole nation how much I respect him for having used the same language both in the east and in the west of the country when addressing the Canadian people. It is a well-deserved homage and I must sincerely say tonight with pride that he is a great Canadian, a sincere Canadian and that of course the whole of Canada must recognize him as such.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to thank the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for having, during the last election campaign, visited the riding of Bellechasse which I represent. The right hon. Prime Minister has honoured me by his presence and I am convinced that he has done so as Prime Minister and not as a party leader; I must pay him tribute for that.

I must also thank the numerous ministers who paid me a visit during the electoral campaign. In all the areas where these ministers visited the Bellechasse population, my plurality has been increased; so, I invite them to come back again when the opportunity arises.

Many federal and provincial Liberal members also paid me a visit. Mr. Speaker, it is useless to say that on each and every occasion these hon. members did not ask the population to vote for me. They simply said to the people that if they wanted to be well represented, they should vote on the "right side".

Mr. Speaker, people from Bellechasse did indeed vote for the right side because they voted for a member representing the population first rather than a party's interests, for somebody who took the situation seriously and who, under any circumstances, can stand up and do his utmost to make the voice of the population heard within these precincts.

Mr. Speaker, of course if all Canadians had voted for the right side as many said, it would have meant voting for the Liberal party and there would not have been any opposition. One could imagine the ensuing disaster.

Mr. Speaker, I see the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Corriveau) applauding warmly. Yet I must say that he came to my riding and told the farmers: You know nothing about farming, but I do. I am a guy who climbs telephone and telegraph poles. I know about farming. In fact, he said this in Sainte-Germaine-de-Bellechasse: It is pointless for you to have stables and expensive buildings, you know nothing about them.

Mr. Speaker, during the election campaign we seriously proposed to the people right across Canada, and notably to those of the riding I represent, one single program based on the interests of each and everyone, the respect for human beings, family rights and the individual citizen. We wanted to introduce an honest program in order to bring about improvements.

Mr. Speaker, I was saying a few moments ago that my friends came to my riding and told people to vote "for the right side", meaning for the party in power, but at that time, nobody knew who would form the government. Was it to be a minority government or a majority government, would it be formed by my friends the Progressive Conservatives, by my friends the Liberals, by my friends the New Democrats or by the Social Credit party? The situation was so uncertain that no one could predict what was going to happen.

It was a question of voting for the "right side", according to one's conscience, to send to this Parliament members who would form this democratic assembly.

On October 30, 264 members were elected. Such was the responsibility of the people: to elect 264 parliamentarians to form the assembly of the nation. And now, we, the parliamentarians, must assume a very big responsibility in legislating for the common good. For once, parliament will have to be the supreme authority in this country, instead of submitting to the pressures of the executive. This executive, Liberal, Progressive Conservative, NDP or Créditiste, will have to carry out parliament's will. That is how I understand the role of a truly responsible parliament.

I am very happy to have been elected as a member of this House, which will eventually have to account to the people for its actions.

Mr. Speaker, I have listened very carefully to the speeches delivered by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), and all the other members who had the courage to express their views in this House, and I was most interested to find that we all have the same purpose: To give our country the best administration possible.

Mr. Speaker, as far as I am concerned, I am not here to indulge in politicking, to overthrow the government at every occasion, but to work with all the members of this House and pass any legislation required to reform what must be reformed in order to give justice to our senior citizens, our mothers, our handicaped and our children.

Mr. Speaker, we have often had the opportunity in this Parliament to propose measures having the same objective as the one referred to in the current Speech from the Throne. Personally, I am happy to see that finally wisdom seems to have caught the heart of the Prime Minister.

I remember, Mr. Speaker, that when I sat to your left, I used to say the same things as now and people used to laugh at me. There was even a minister who visited my constituency and made references to those people who thought along the same lines as Major Douglas, who had recommended financial reforms designed to ensure justice and liberty for all. The minister who is here tonight said: "All those who believe in the Social Credit party are psychiatric cases."

Let us think, Mr. Speaker, about how many psychiatric cases exist in Canada since October 30: more than 750,000 voters, and their number increases every day. I say that those who let men, women and children live in suffering and misery, in a country of abundance are more in need of psychiatric care than those who take steps to ensure a fair distribution of resources developed by Canadians for all Canadians. I am here tonight to defend those people and speak on their behalf so that, all together, as members of Parliament, leaving aside our political views, we can work to enact as soon as possible legislation in line with Canadian possibilities.

I also witnessed, Mr. Speaker, during this debate, quarrels, unjustified charges, which were hurled from both sides of this House, between French and English-speaking members. We are Canadians first, we live in a vast country full of resources of all kinds, and our people, full of energy, are quite prepared to transform all these resources so that all of us can benefit from them!

Mr. Speaker, I have here a report published by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce of the province of Quebec, which is very recent, and I believe that those who published the figures I will quote are just as honest as we are, so that we can trust them. This report states that the gross national product of the province of Quebec, in 1972, amounted to $25 billion, while personal income, in the same province, for the same period totalled $20 billion. This means, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians who live in Quebec did the best they could in order to produce in their province everyting that was possible for the benefit of the population.

I will quote from a report for the information of my English-speaking friends who blamed severely the former Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) for having done too much for the province of Quebec. We can say things among ourselves without hurting one another and examine the situation. I quote:

> To be on the right side you have to be on the Liberal side, and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion has given everything to the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, in 1972, the rate of unemployment in the province of Quebec was the highest in Canada; according to the report I have here it stood at 8.3 per cent. If that means being partial to a province at the expense of the others, distributive justice and administrative honesty do not make any sense to me anymore. And I will have to tell my Liberal friends that if in order to vote the "right way" one must vote Liberal, they managed well, but they mainly succeeded in giving the province of Quebec the highest rate of unemployment in Canadian history.

Is that voting the "right way"? I do not think so. I think that voting the "right way" is voting for a party that takes steps to put a stop to discrimination in this country and to understand that we must all together reach the objective set for us by the Canadian people on October 30.

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne suggests certain reforms that I approve of. It proposes solutions as well as the possibility for Parliament to administer more properly the commonweal and provide for a greater distribution of wealth with greater justice to all citizens.

However, we will have to look into the bills and analyze them. We will have to examine them from all angles in order to find out whether the government is really putting forward legislative measures in accordance with Canadian possibilities, so that we may reasonably increase the yearly income of the Canadian people, the purchasing power of those who need it, without taking money out of the pockets of those who already have not too much of it, in order to arrive at a certain levelling off in accordance with what has already been desired in other countries.

Mr. Speaker, as regards reforms, the bills that were announced, we should all together greet them with much satisfaction, so as to be able to assess them according to their real merit and to make decisions not in a collective way on the party level, but according to our personal responsibilities. This leads me, Mr. Speaker, to say that I am anxious to see the day when in parliament every member will be called upon to vote freely on any bill after examining it personally without having the party to which he belongs dictate his vote. It is time to change our habits. It is time we stopped voting according to party lines.

I think that in a truly democratic assembly each bill should be assessed on its own value and each member should vote according to his conscience without there being a chance of bringing down the government on it. It is a question of rejecting or passing a piece of legislation and not of approving or condemning a government.

In the Speech from the Throne the government admits I am right when it says it will introduce a bill on capital punishment. He will let each member decide on the bill by a free vote.

• (2120)

Mr. Speaker, if a free vote on capital punishment seems fair, it would also be fair to hold a free vote on the increase in old age pensions, eligibility for pension at 60, family allowances and any other subject. Then we would really be taken seriously by the Canadian people and could provide the best administration Canada ever enjoyed.

I have here an analysis of the 15 general elections held in Canada since May 1925, among which six led to minority governments—

An hon. Member: Seven.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Right, seven. And according to the information I also obtained, the best accomplishments of parliament are those of minority governments. Why? Because under a minority government everyone is aware of his responsibilities, of the fact that he should always be where he belongs and seriously study every bill before voting on them.

Such being the case, we could as of tonight carry on in this house truly worthwhile discussions. And I am not saying that for the sake of it. I have twelve dependent children, and as far as they are concerned, I know the consequences of my actions, for I love them as any other father loves his children. Altogether, and discarding partisanship, we want to be in a position to legislate in such a way as to bring high finance to heel.

What does that mean? To my mind it means that high finance has always been in control of Canadian economy and politics. For once, let the financiers defer to Parliament, just as the unemployed should abide by the Unemployment Insurance Act, the family mother by the Family Allowances Act and the senior citizen by the Old Age Security Act.

I hope that for once the newspapers will report that a member has had the courage to state in this House that high finance and those who control credit should obey the same laws and rules as any other Canadian citizen. This is the only way for us to succeed in giving Canada a truly fair administration that will respect the citizen's rights while respecting the freedom of each and everyone and that will enable us to live as brothers regardless of our language on this great North American territory, to use the huge wealth which Providence put at our disposal and finally enable our sons to live decently instead of remaining unemployed because of a devilish system which prevents them from giving the best of themselves while they are still able to do so. May we finally see the day when all those young unemployed people, whom we made every sacrifice to have educated, sometimes against their will, but in their best interest, will be accepted in the labour market and will no longer be asked: "Young man, how old are you?" "I am 22." "Do you have experience?" "No, I have just left school." "Well then, go back to school, because here we need experienced people."

Mr. Speaker, if they had waited for you to have the required experience in order to ask you to occupy the high office which is now yours, I believe you would not be there yet, and the same would be true of many of us.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say, in concluding my remarks—and without any reflection on anyone, of course—that I would like this session to be truly efficient and full of confidence. I would like the people to be able to see, and this, on several occasions, that if the members do not seem too serious at times, they know, when the situation becomes serious, how to fulfill their responsibilities, how to forget about partisanship and how to work together in the best interests of Canadian people.

Mr. Denis Éthier (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, due to the time, could we agree to call it 9.30 p.m.?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order! Can I obtain the unanimous consent of the House to call it 9.30?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. It being 9.30 o'clock p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to section 4 of Standing Order 38, to interrupt these proceedings and forthwith put the question on any amendment now before the House. The question is on the amendment. All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Crouse) which was negatived on the following division:

At 10 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, January 16, 1973

The House met at 11 a.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. ROSE—ANNOUNCEMENT OF SUMMER 73 YOUTH EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM OUTSIDE HOUSE

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege concerning the announcement made yesterday by the Secretary of State having to do with an $85.4 million youth package called Summer 73.

I feel that my privileges as an elected member of the House have been infringed because the announcement of this new program, involving a huge expenditure, was not made in the House. It was made to the press outside the House before any member possessed any information at all as to the scope and thrust of the program. This somewhat unparliamentary procedure on the part of the Secretary of State interfered with the privileges of hon. members inasmuch as by his action he effectively denied those who are interested in following the program the opportunity to make observations and comments in the House.

I call upon the Secretary of State to desist from this practice of issuing press releases on such occasions and to correct his initial insensitivity to the rights of parliament by making a statement on motions today, fully explaining to the House the nature of the program, Summer 73.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: A shocking affront to parliament.

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I note that the member for Trinity smiled when he made that remark. Perhaps I might comment briefly on what was said by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West. It seems Your Honour is not likely to rule that there is a question of privilege here, but there may be a question of propriety which I should like to clarify. I considered very carefully whether or not I should announce this program in a statement on motions. I would remind hon. members that this is the third year in which this program has been pursued and that no substantial changes have been made. Essentially, it is the same mix as in previous years. In these circumstances, I proceeded by way of an announcement.

The hon. member says he was not given notice. I went out of my way to provide him with notice two and a half hours before meeting with the press. At about 12.30 p.m. the documents were in his office, and at roughly the same time they were in the offices of the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi and of the spokesman for the Social Credit party in order that the spokesmen for all the political parties might have a chance to comment. There was no attempt made to affront parliament. The rationale was that this was the third year in which this program has been introduced and I felt that a statement on motions was not justified.

An hon. Member: And the third year the announcement was made outside the House.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

WATER RESOURCES

TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT OF PERMANENT ENGINEERING BOARD UNDER COLUMBIA RIVER TREATY

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2) I should like to lay on the table the annual report of the Permanent Engineering Board under the Columbia River Treaty.

FISHERIES

DOGFISH DEPREDATIONS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 to seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion in a case of urgent and pressing necessity, namely, the steady increase, one which has reached fantastic proportions, of the species of fish called dogfish off the west coast. If unanimous consent is given I would ask that we not engage in a debate on this motion, so we would not be cutting into the time otherwise available to hon. members to debate other matters.

The motion I seek to move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) is as follows:

> This House expresses its concern about the exceptionally large schools of dogfish in waters off the west coast and in an effort to control this predator and enhance the position of commercial fishermen we urge the establishment of an immediate dogfish control program implemented in consultation with all segments of the B.C. fishing industry.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Skeena. This motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. Therefore the motion cannot be put.

Mr. Howard: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I heard the "no" as well as you did. It was very faint and it was from that quarter. Inasmuch as the Minister of the Environment who deals with these matters is not in the House at the moment I wonder whether we might not allow the question to stand and raise it again tomorrow in order that we may have the benefit of his views.

Mr. Speaker: There is nothing in the rules to prevent the hon. member raising the question again tomorrow. I might add that the rules do not allow for a distinction between loud "noes" and faint "noes".

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—PROPOSED PEACEKEEPING FORCE—REACTION OF COMBATANTS TO CONDITIONS SET BY CANADA FOR PARTICIPATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs who some ten days ago, in a statement to the House, outlined the conditions and criteria which the government was setting in connection with Canadian involvement in any new international commitment or commission in Viet Nam. Can the minister now tell the House whether there is any indication that these conditions are satisfactory to the combatants, or to the belligerent parties as I think the minister described them, or whether Canada is being pressed to modify any of those conditions?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I assume the Leader of the Opposition is raising the question because of the progress that seems to be being made in the Viet Nam talks—progress which I am sure all members of the House welcome. However, we have received no further communication from any of the parties to the negotiations indicating whether or not we shall be asked to participate, or as to the condition.

VIET NAM—PROPOSED PEACEKEEPING FORCE—SIZE OF POSSIBLE CANADIAN ELEMENT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary question arising out of reports attributed to the Department of National Defence that some 400 officers and men are ready for duty in Viet Nam. Can the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicate whether this is the maximum force the government contemplates may be involved in Viet Nam, and has there been a condition laid down in this regard involving a maximum of some 400 officers and men?

[Mr. Speaker.]

• (1110)

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question is no. We have not had an indication yet of the numbers involved. We did agree, and I am very happy that the Minister of National Defence gave the necessary instructions, that a certain number of men should be innoculated in case they are required so there would be no unnecessary delay. If in fact we agree to participate we will be in a position to put people on the spot with a minimum of delay.

Mr. Stanfield: Do I understand from the minister that he has not on behalf of the government prescribed any maximum number of personnel that would be involved as a condition?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker, we have not prescribed any maximum. The numbers that were first suggested by the United States were known to us. We do not know whether these suggestions are acceptable to the North Vietnamese, for example, or to the other parties to a possible agreement. We are not yet aware of the numbers that might be involved.

VIET NAM—PROPOSED PEACEKEEPING FORCE—COMMUNICATION WITH BELLIGERENTS OTHER THAN UNITED STATES—PROVISION FOR REPORTING TO INTERNATIONAL BODY

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I ask one or two supplementary questions. Since the request first came from the United States, has the government been directly in touch with the other belligerents in the area or has it relied entirely on the request from one side?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we were informed by the Secretary of State of the United States during the election campaign that the name of Canada was being used in connection with a supervisory force or a supervisory commission. That was the first information we had. We understood that our name was acceptable to the other groups who were being consulted. Subsequently, we have been in touch with the North Vietnamese and they have said that Canada would be acceptable as a member of the commission. Needless to say, however, we have not been negotiating. We are not preaching for a call.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that previous peacekeeping operations in which Canada participated were performed under resolution of the United Nations and therefore there was an international body under which the peacekeeping operations were carried on, will the minister inform the House whether there has been any discussion as to some international supervisory body to which Canadians and others would report on their activities in the area?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The leader of the New Democratic Party may recall that in my statement at the opening of this session when we were dealing with the bombing of Viet Nam I set down a history of our statements and redefined our position. One of the conditions we consider absolutely essential is that there should be some international body, other than the contending parties, to which the peacekeeping force would report. This is an essential condition of our participation.

I also said, however, that it might not be possible to establish this international body until after the international conference which is contemplated had been held, and therefore we might agree to some interim arrangement pending the outcome of that international conference.

VIET NAM—PROPOSED PEACEKEEPING FORCE—CONSULTATION WITH OTHER SUGGESTED PARTIES TO WORK OUT ARRANGEMENTS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As Canada may be called on any day now to take part in a cease-fire supervisory force in Viet Nam, has the government now given consideration to getting in touch immediately with the three other countries that have been suggested for this role, namely, Indonesia, Hungary and Poland, to work out satisfactory arrangements for carrying out such a difficult task?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have been in touch with the governments of these countries but we do not know, of course, whether they intend to participate and they do not know whether we intend to participate. We cannot make that decision until an agreement has been signed between the United States and North Viet Nam and we can have a look at the agreement itself. So it would not be practical to follow the suggestion of my hon. friend. Moreover, it would involve us committing ourselves now in advance of knowledge of the agreement itself.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A number of hon. members wish to ask supplementary questions—the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe and the hon. member for York South. I suggest to hon. members that perhaps we might complete the first series of questions and then return to this very important matter for further supplementaries.

LABOUR RELATIONS

WARDAIR STEWARDESSES' STRIKE—STEPS TO MEDIATE DISPUTE—SUGGESTED APPOINTMENT OF INDUSTRIAL INQUIRY COMMISSION

Mr. Paddy Neale (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour arising out of the strike of Wardair stewardesses. In view of the fact one of the issues appears to be that the stewardesses are required to work as many as 32 hours at a time, is the minister taking steps to mediate the dispute so that a quick and just settlement may be reached?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker. An appropriate officer of my department is involved in an endeavour to assist the parties in coming to a settlement.

Mr. Neale: Is the minister investigating the situation to ensure that the Canada Labour Code is not being breached by the company?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): My information is that at the moment that is not a relevant consideration in this dispute, but I will check it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Neale: Will the minister immediately appoint an industrial inquiry commission to investigate and report on working conditions for stewardesses and others employed by Wardair?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I will certainly take that matter under consideration.

AIR CANADA

COMPLAINTS RESPECTING LACK OF BILINGUAL SERVICES ON AIRCRAFT TRAVELLING TO FLORIDA

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Taking into account the government's policy on bilingualism, could the minister inquire about complaints made by Canadian citizens now in Florida who were unsuccessful in trying to get services in French on board Air Canada aircraft between Toronto and Miami and Montreal and Miami?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I would be prepared to inquire provided complaints are sent to me.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: We will return now to the first matter, and I will recognize the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe on a supplementary.

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA'S ROLE IN PROPOSED PEACEKEEPING FORCE—REFERRAL TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Does the minister feel that Canada's role within the Viet Nam peacekeeping control commission should be considered immediately by the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence as soon as it is set up, that is in a few days?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if we are asked to participate on the basis of an agreement reached between the United States and North Viet Nam and we have to reach a decision on this matter quickly, it would be my intention to bring the matter before the House of Commons at least for debate.

VIET NAM—PROPOSED PEACEKEEPING FORCE—SOURCE OF FUNDS TO COVER COST OF CANADIAN PARTICIPATION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. Could he advise the House whether or not the cost of such a peacekeeping venture would come out of the current estimates or budget of the Department of National Defence or are other arrangements being worked out?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we have been involved in a number of contingency plans, but we do not know what will be required of the Department of National Defence. Generally speaking, the only expenditure that we would be involved with would be salaries of personnel; as far as I know there has been no talk of any other expenditure. However, as I say, until we know what the requirements are it is very difficult to be precise about the cost.

• (1120)

VIET NAM—PROPOSED PEACEKEEPING FORCE—REQUEST FOR DEBATE BEFORE CANADIAN TROOPS DISPATCHED

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I heard the answer of the Secretary of State for External Affairs about bringing the matter to parliament. Would he undertake to do so before any personnel are dispatched from Canada to Indochina so that parliament and the people of Canada may know the precise arrangements, the body to which these people will be responsible, and what our commitments and undertakings are?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as soon as the government had made a decision I would make it known in the House, and I would also hope there would be an opportunity for debate on the matter in the House. Whether it would be practical to hold back men who might be needed to implement the truce, which I am sure all of us would like to see successful, is a question I would not like to answer directly now. For example, it may be that all the parties would like to have a body of men available on the spot so that the truce is effective immediately. I am sure the House would want that to happen whether or not we are committed for a long or short period.

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—REASONS FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OUTSIDE HOUSE

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, the urgency of my question arises because yesterday the Secretary of State announced to the press the forthcoming summer programs in many divisions of his department, involving an expenditure of $85 million. I would specifically ask the minister why he proceeded by way of a press conference, since these programs are so all-embracing, and did not make his announcement in the House? Further, will the minister be announcing to the House the continuation of and changes in these programs that he announced to the press yesterday afternoon?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I think I partly answered that question in my earlier remarks. The details of the program, the various component parts of the Summer 73 program, are in the hands of every Member of Parliament. There was a certain difficulty yesterday and I apologize to the hon. member who was not well and did not arrive until later, although I had expected him to attend. I tried to get in touch with him two and a half hours before the meeting with the press so that he would have ample time to study the document. It was my understanding that the hon. member for Fraser Valley West would also have time to comment on the program as I did. It was not an attempt to affront parliament or to avoid their comments, because I would be most interested in having their support.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—CONSULTATION WITH LOCAL AUTHORITIES AND OTHERS—EVALUATION REPORT—EARLY APPROVAL OF PROJECTS

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question specifically involving the opportunities for youth program. Will there be more consultation with local authorities, more involvement of low income people, and the immediate publication of an evaluation of the program to date? Further, can the minister assure the House that approval of specific programs will be given early enough to encourage employment among students next spring when they start coming on the labour market?

Mr. Faulkner: On the latter point, Mr. Speaker, I can give that assurance. In answer to question Nos. 1 and 2, there will of course be consultation with local authorities. A letter will be going out from my office to all Members of Parliament inviting them to give us the names of people in their constituencies whom they feel we should consult, resource people with whom our field staff can work. Further, this year there will be an extension of the experiment we carried out last year with local advisory committees. Last year there were local advisory committees in Cornwall and Sault Ste. Marie. We are going to try to expand that to involve as many places as possible in the country so that we may get the views of local people.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, since the minister, rather uncharacteristically showing a certain contempt for parliament, made his statement outside the House, thereby depriving members of the House of the traditional opportunity to respond to his statement on a program which involves a substantial expenditure of public funds, will he undertake to make a statement on motions at the earliest possible opportunity? In fact, I am sure consent would be given to him today for that purpose.

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I certainly have no intention of making a statement on motions, having issued previously a press release. I did not conduct a press conference. I think the hon. member has misunderstood the facts. I made a statement to the press and well in advance of that I alerted members of the other political parties. I did not speak to the press until well after that and I did it by way of responding to their questions. If there are questions which the press would like to put to my hon. friends, I am sure they can do the same.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR INDICATION OF CRITERIA FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF LOCAL SELECTION COMMITTEES

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Without pursuing further the remarkable doctrine the minister is suggesting that a press release outside the House is somehow a substitute for a statement on motions, may I ask the minister whether he will table tomorrow some indication of the criteria that will be followed for establishing these local selection committees in order to assure some of the more suspicious members here that the only criteria will not be fealty to the Liberal party?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that a question asked in those terms is not in order.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF ANALYSIS FOR 1972—PROVISION FOR LOW INCOME AREAS

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the minister in rebuttal of my question of privilege was frank enough to admit that the program is pretty much the same old program. Arising from that, I wonder whether the minister has in his possession a document entitled "Analysis of the Opportunities for Youth Program 1972" and, if so, when he plans to make it available to members of the House and to the press, incidentally, for comment?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I do not have that document before me right now, Mr. Speaker, but I would be interested in seeing it.

Mr. Rose: In view of the fact the minister's press release mentioned programs for unemployed youth from low income areas as distinct from the student employment program, can the minister tell the House what specific programs he has in mind and when the details will be revealed?

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Speaker, full disclosure was made yesterday. The content of Summer 73 is before hon. members. It was before them yesterday. One of the reasons the amount for the opportunities for youth program was increased over last year was its success in getting at low income groups, particularly in remote areas. The flexibility of the program has enabled us to do that and is one of the reasons we are giving that program more support this year than in the past.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—ELIGIBILITY OF UNITED STATES DRAFT DODGERS

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I have a short supplementary for the Secretary of State. Will United States draft dodgers be eligible under the program?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, anyone who is legally admitted to Canada and is here under those terms is eligible regardless of whether or not he left the United States as a draft dodger. That is not a criterion and the hon. member knows it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—INQUIRY AS TO PROVISION OF STATUTORY BASIS

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Now that these programs are becoming habitual and in view of the fact that they will probably be needed as long as the miserable economic performance of the present government—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member resume his seat. The hon. member is an experienced member of the House and he knows that a question asked in those terms is not in order. I would invite him to consult the precedents. With respect, I suggest to the hon. member for Trinity that hon. members cannot make statements along those lines. I would invite the hon. member to ask a question.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that that phrase slipped in. Now that the program seems to be becoming a permanent part of the national scene, is the minister giving consideration to the possibility of introducing a statute for approval by parliament which would provide authorization for this sort of program in future?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am not trying to do that, Mr. Speaker. I would remind the hon. member that the reason these programs are becoming habitual is that it is the practice in this country for schools—CEGEPS, community colleges and universities—to close in May and recommence in September and the government, like the private sector and all other levels of government, has an obligation to find jobs for these students.

[Later:]

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to the Secretary of State which I have been rising for some time to ask. Is not the reason the program the minister has announced is much larger this year the greatly increased unemployment, and the program is to fill the gap?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): No, Mr. Speaker. It is because of the outstanding success—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

ENERGY

REPORT OF BOARD ON NEEDS AND REQUIREMENTS—RECOGNITION OF PROVINCIAL NEEDS IN NATIONAL POLICY

Mr. Keith Taylor (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In light of the recent report submitted to the Ontario government in which serious difficulties are forecast with respect to satisfying that province's growing energy needs, will the minister now advise the House when the updated report of the National Energy Board concerning energy needs and requirements will be received by him?

• (1130)

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I stated to the House earlier in the session that I expect to be putting some reports on the table of the House with regard to a national energy policy.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Recognizing the many problems inherent in the geographic distribution in this country of energy markets and energy supplies, and further recognizing that discussions are currently under way between this country's largest energy producer and energy markets, what assurance can the minister give the House that provincial needs will gain complete recognition in his national energy policy, if such a policy is ever to appear?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that the needs of both Alberta and Ontario will be closely regarded in this connection.

DISCUSSIONS WITH ALBERTA ON ACCELERATION OF DEVELOPMENT OF ATHABASCA TAR SANDS

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Has the minister had or is he contemplating the holding of any talks with the province of Alberta with a view to accelerating development of the Athabasca tar sands in view of a possible energy crisis developing?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have had a discussion with the responsible ministers of the government of Alberta at the commencement of this month. As the hon. member knows, the development of the Athabasca tar sands is under the jurisdiction of the province. I was advised at that meeting that the Alberta government would bring out its policy with regard to the tar sands in, I think, August of this year. Very naturally, those interested in the further development of that area have been waiting for a decision by the provincial government.

POSSIBILITY OF TAX AMENDMENTS TO ENCOURAGE DEVELOPMENT OF ATHABASCA TAR SANDS

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Minister of Finance. Will the minister consider making appropriate amendments to the tax structure which will have the effect of encouraging a more accelerated development of the Athabasca tar sands?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the amendments to the tax structure which followed the budget I had the honour to introduce last May would encourage the development of further processing of mineral resources in Alberta. I would hope the House would take that into consideration.

DATE OF STATEMENT ON NATIONAL POLICY

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Since both his predecessor and he have repeatedly promised a statement to the House on the government's national energy policy, may I ask the minister whether he can now be more specific and tell us when he intends to make that statement to the House outlining Canada's national energy policy?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Late winter, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRY AS TO COMMUNICATION FROM BIOMASS ENERGY INSTITUTE ON ENERGY DEVELOPMENT ON RENEWABLE BASIS

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has the minister been able to get the correspondence which I suggested last Wednesday was available from the Biomass Energy Institute about producing energy on a renewable basis?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, inquiries have been made. It has not yet come to my desk.

ROYAL VISIT

INQUIRY RESPECTING RECEPTION BY QUEBEC GOVERNMENT

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the right hon. Prime Minister.

Have the Quebec authorities made provisions to receive Her Majesty the Queen on her next visit to Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): To receive . . . I lost the words which followed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, as the right hon. Prime Minister did not quite understand my question I shall repeat it.

Have the Quebec authorities made provisions to receive Her Majesty the Queen on her next visit to Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

DUTIES IMPOSED BY UNITED STATES AFFECTING CERTAIN COMPANIES RECEIVING DREE GRANTS—DISCUSSION WITH PULP AND PAPER FIRMS, BRITISH AND EEC OFFICIALS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to either the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion or the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In light of the countervailing duties recently imposed by the United States on Michelin tires and the tariffs imposed on the products of other companies receiving DREE grants, has the government been in touch with the various pulp and paper companies in British Columbia which are receiving DREE grants and face a graduated tariff because of Britain's entry into the Common Market? Also, has the federal government been in touch with EEC or British officials to determine the stance on whether regional development subsidies are in fact a legitimate form of help to industry without fear of facing a countervailing tariff?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I will do my best to answer this rather complicated question. On the first portion of it with regard to the Michelin case and others flowing from it, steps have been taken and others are being contemplated about which I hope there will be more publicity within a few days. As to whether we have had discussions with specific companies in British Columbia, I will have to look at the record on that. I know we are discussing the matter with the pulp and paper industry in general along with other matters related to the industry. The last part of the question regarding the EEC might be more appropriately addressed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

IMPOSITION BY UNITED STATES OF DUTY ON MICHELIN TIRES IMPORTED FROM CANADA—REQUEST BY CANADA FOR EXPLANATION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Can the minister inform the House whether he has sent his request for an explanation of the special duty to the United States? If so, has he yet received a reply?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is yes. The answer to the second question is no.

IMPOSITION BY UNITED STATES OF DUTY ON MICHELIN TIRES IMPORTED FROM CANADA—INQUIRY AS TO MEETING WITH PROVINCIAL PREMIER

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister inform the House whether he will soon be meeting with one of the premiers of the Atlantic provinces on this question? If so, what action will he take or what proposals will he make to the premier? Also, is the Prime Minister considering sending a protest to GATT concerning the American action on the special duty they have imposed against Michelin?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no meeting scheduled with the premiers of the provinces collectively, but I do see them individually. As a matter of fact, I am seeing Premier Regan this afternoon. On the second question, we have, of course, protested to the United States. We made our views known before the action was taken and since.

PUBLIC SERVICE

AMENDMENT OF STATUTES AFFECTING EMPLOYMENT—LEGISLATIVE PRIORITY

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the submission made by the Public Service Staff Association for amendments to the two statutes respecting employment of public servants and that amendment was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, and in view of the statement of Mr. Claude Edwards and the concern of their membership about further delays, will the minister advise the House whether the amendments proposed in the Speech from the Throne will be introduced into the House by February 1, 1973?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I cannot do more than give assurance that amendments will be introduced this session. I will discuss the precise timing, with the House leader.

Mr. Baker: Will the minister undertake to consult with the government House leader to ascertain whether, with respect to priorities for legislative action, these amendments can be put in an improved position in relation to the position they apparently are in at this time?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I am not too sure of the impression the hon. member may have with regard to the position in which they are, but I will talk to the House leader.

Oral Questions

AUTHORITY FOR COMPULSORY RETIREMENT OF EMPLOYEES BEFORE AGE 65

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the President of the Treasury Board. Will the minister indicate to the House what authority the government has to retire employees compulsorily prior to the normal retirement age of 65?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated the other day, there are a number of provisions under which public servants can be retired in advance of age 65. To cite one example, it can be done on medical grounds. There are a great many. I will advise the hon. member by letter on the others.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): The minister missed the key word in my question. My question referred to compulsory retirement or arbitrary dismissal prior to the normal retirement age of 65. What authority has the government to do this?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the government has any authority to dismiss any public servant arbitrarily.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I understand from the minister's reply that the regulation under which people were retired compulsorily before the age of 65 has been completely withdrawn?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, the regulation permitting deputy heads of departments to retire public servants on the sole ground of age between the ages of 60 and 65 has been completely withdrawn.

• (1140)

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I direct my supplementary to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Inasmuch as the government no longer has the authority to retire employees compulsorily prior to the age of 65, on what ground can a man brought into this country who is here for two months pass a regulation, upheld by the government, requiring Cape Breton miners to retire before that age?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): I should like to look into all the details. The hon. member and I have had a number of discussions on this question. As soon as I have the answer I will let him know.

CANADA EVIDENCE ACT

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO COMPEL SPOUSES TO TESTIFY IN CHILD-BEATING CASES

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact that there has been an alarming increase in the incidence of child beating by parents, would the minister seek to amend the Canada Evidence Act to make spouses compellable and competent witnesses in trials involving this most heinous of crimes?

[Mr. Drury.]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the question of amendments to the Canada Evidence Act and the criminal law is under study at present by the law reform commission but in a broader context. I shall certainly study the report of the commission with interest and will perhaps bring amendments before the House at that time.

Mr. Woolliams: What is your own attitude?

HOUSING

PROVISION FOR MUNICIPAL OFFICIALS TO ATTEND FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In light of the growing need for municipalities to become involved in discussions on housing between the provincial and federal governments, does the minister intend to urge the provinces to invite municipal officials to attend the conference arranged for January 20 so that there may be tri-level discussion of housing legislation?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, when I wrote to the provincial ministers on December 14 and earlier, in September I suggested to them that municipal representation should be included in their delegations.

AMENDMENTS TO NATIONAL HOUSING ACT—TIME OF INTRODUCTION

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. On January 9 the minister indicated he would introduce certain amendments to the National Housing Act before the federal-provincial conference on housing scheduled for next week. Can the minister now tell us when these necessary amendments will be introduced?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I stated that I hoped to introduce such amendments. It still remains to be seen whether I am able to meet that deadline or not. If I am not, they will be introduced as soon as possible.

CAPACITY OF MUNICIPAL REPRESENTATIVES ATTENDING FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, would the minister tell us whether the representatives of the municipalities will be at the conference as observers or will have a meaningful role and able to express their views and take full part in the talks? I ask this question because they are so involved in public housing and very often projects are simply dumped on them and they are left with the expense.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I might quote the letter I wrote to the provinces in which I said: "... For this reason I would welcome any municipal representative which you may wish to have in attendance." To the extent that municipalities are represented, they would be part of provincial delegations. A number of provincial delegations have indicated that they will include municipal representation.

PARTICIPATION IN CONFERENCE BY DELEGATES FROM YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether he has made suitable arrangements for representation at, and participation in, these discussions by delegates from the Yukon and the Northwest Territories where housing problems are just as serious as they are elsewhere?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (St. Boniface): Can the minister tell us whether an invitation has been extended to the Federation of Mayors and Municipalities, which, after all, would certainly cover the entire question.

Mr. Basford: The invitations were extended by me to provincial ministers.

An hon. Member: That makes the whole thing a farce.

Mr. Sharp: It makes it constitutional, doesn't it?

HARBOURS

TRANSFER OF ADMINISTRATION OF SMALL CRAFT HARBOURS TO DEPARTMENT OF THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport arising from a press release issued by the Department of the Environment on December 15 last in which it is stated that a new principal component has been set up in that department entitled "Fisheries and Marine Services", headed by an assistant deputy minister who, among other things, will be responsible for the administration of small craft harbours. Has responsibility for the administration of small craft harbours been transferred from his department? If so, when, and under what authority?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I am not sure of the answer. I think it was transferred to the Department of the Environment five or six months ago, if my memory is faithful.

[Later:]

Mr. Barnett: I should like to address a supplementary question to the Minister of the Environment since the Minister of Transport seems to be so vague about the subject matter of my question. May I ask the Minister of Environment whether he can shed any light upon the subject matter to which I drew attention?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Responsibility for the administration of small craft harbours was transferred from the Department of Transport to the Department of the Environment in March of last year.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

DISABILITY PENSIONS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON DEFINITION OF "DISABLED"

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Would the minister undertake to make a statement on motions explaining exactly what is meant by the term "disabled" and the criteria to be fulfilled before a person is granted a pension on the grounds of disability? This is an urgent matter which has been causing a good deal of concern in the country.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I apologize to the hon. member; I missed the first part of his question. Would he mind repeating it?

Mr. Nesbitt: Certainly, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister undertake to make a statement on motions at the earliest opportunity describing the criteria to be fulfilled before a person can qualify for a disability pension under the Canada Pension Plan?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I should like to look into this matter further.

Mr. Nesbitt: I would appreciate it if the minister would give urgent consideration to this question because many problems are being created for a number of people. It seems that under the present criteria a person must have lost both legs and both arms in order to qualify as disabled.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

HEALTH

APPROVAL OF PILL TO CONTROL VENEREAL DISEASE

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of a report that street nurses are being used to dispense information on contraceptives, birth control pills and a pill advertised as being 98 per cent effective in rapidly curing venereal disease, would the minister tell us the name of this pill and whether it has been approved by the Food and Drug Directorate to be used in this fashion?

Mr. Speaker: Order please. It seems to me that this kind of question could very well be placed on the order paper. However, if the minister has the information readily available he might give it now.

Mr. Rynard: I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether this drug has been approved by the Food and Drug Directorate?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I will check into the matter.

ENERGY

ARCTIC OIL AND GAS—CONCLUSIONS OF CONFERENCE ON OFFSHORE DRILLING—COMPREHENSIVE REPORT

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the great concern felt in our country on the subject of energy, and in view of the fact that some 50 billion barrels of oil and as much as 300 trillion cubic feet of gas, some 25 per cent to 50 per cent of our country's total reserves may lie in the Arctic Islands, may I ask whether the conclusions of the secret conference which was held here in December on the question of offshore drilling in the Arctic will soon be published and whether the minister is now prepared to give the go-ahead and allow holders of permits to drill in offshore Arctic waters, particularly in the deeper waters of the Beaufort Sea? Will the minister also indicate to the House the last possible date when we can expect a comprehensive energy report?

• (1150)

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what secret conference the hon. gentleman is referring to. If he is referring to the discussions with United States officials, they were confined to the question of insecurity of offshore supplies.

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST THAT VISITORS BE EXAMINED BY EXPERIENCED OFFICERS—EFFICACY OF BONDS

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact that illegal immigrants are still pouring into the country, would the Minister of Manpower and Immigration indicate whether consideration is being given to having the primary examination of supposed visitors done by an experienced immigration officer rather than by a customs clerk?

An hon. Member: Och aye.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the advice of the hon. member and I will certainly take his representation into consideration. While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have just about reached the end of the question period. Perhaps we might allow the hon. member to ask his supplementary question. I might point out that the minister has been seeking the floor since the beginning of the question period and I will recognize him afterwards.

[Mr. Rynard.]

Mr. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to speak in neither of the official languages.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, is the minister satisfied that the present procedure whereby doubtful visitors put up cash or conditional bonds is the best system? I ask this question as it appears the illegal immigrants are forfeiting these bonds in very large numbers.

Mr. Speaker: The minister might like to comment briefly on the question. Perhaps the hon. member would allow me to suggest that a question asking for an opinion on the part of a member of the government is not quite regular. The minister might comment briefly and then he will have the floor for the purpose of raising the point of order he wants to bring to the attention of the House.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, the answer is no, I am not satisfied with all the procedures relating to this matter. We are contemplating some changes and we will be bringing before the House at an appropriate time some recommendations for improvement in the laws and administration which deals with the permission of visitors to come to the country.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—ELIGIBILITY OF LOCAL IMPROVEMENT DISTRICTS FOR GRANTS

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the other day in response to questions by the hon. member for Provencher and the hon. member for Meadow Lake I gave information which I now know, to my regret, was incorrect. I would like to remedy that error. It was in connection with the eligibility of local improvement districts for local initiative project grants. My information at that time was that they were considered to be extensions of provincial governments and therefore not eligible, and that this had been approved by all provinces in discussions before laying it down as a term. I am now informed that in both of the provinces of Saskatchewan and Manitoba by agreement between the federal government and the provincial governments local improvement districts are in fact eligible for local initiative project grants. I regret any inconvenience that this misinformation might have caused.

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the hon. member for Provencher is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, in light of the information just given the House by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration I should like to ask whether local improvement districts in Manitoba are now eligible, whether a public statement will be released to these local government districts that they are eligible and whether or not their applications for local initiative programs are to be reconsidered?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, in respect of the answer to the first part of the question, I have just indicated that they are eligible and I regret, as I say, that the information I gave the other day was wrong. With regard to the second part of the question, I have already communicated with the appropriate provincial ministers of Manitoba and Saskatchewan within the last 24 hours. In fact, that is where the information and the correction arose, so they know. If a public statement beyond this statement in the House today would be of service or of benefit I would certainly be glad to make one. On the third point, projects that are in stream from local improvement districts, while eligible, will have to take their chances with other LIP applications of which we have, as I told hon. members before, very many.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

CONSULTATION WITH EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET ON POSITION RESPECTING GRANTS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce was about to reply to a question of mine, pursuant to the suggestion of his colleague. Perhaps he might reply briefly to my question about the European Common Market and whether the government has been in touch with it and what their stance is in respect of DREE aid?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is hardly a point of order but with the consent of the House the minister might be allowed to reply briefly to the question.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, with regard to DREE grants in the Michelin case, there has not yet been a discussion that I know of between my department and officials of the Common Market.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wanted to wait until orders of the day were called as I did not want to interrupt the question period. My point of order relates to the answer given by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration in respect of local initiative programs. A number of days ago I asked him why it was that applications from municipalities in British Columbia were postponed, put off and given the least consideration of any applications for LIP programs and the minister said he was not aware of that situation. I am wondering why he has not inquired into it and has not been able to give that information to the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is hardly a point of order. I suggest to the hon. member that this is a question which might have been asked during the question period if the hon. member had been recognized, but because of the number of questions that were asked he did not have the opportunity of being recognized. I will note the matter and give the hon. member some kind of priority so he may pursue the matter further tomorrow. Orders of the day.

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed from Monday, January 15, consideration of the motion of Mr. J. J. Blais for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. Denis Éthier (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, let me congratulate you on your nomination to this high and distinguished post of our parliamentary system. The mover (Mr. Blais) and seconder (Mr. Blaker) of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne have no doubt recognized the wisdom and impartiality of your decisions for the last two sessions in proposing that you be entrusted with the chair again.

[English]

I also wish to congratulate the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) on his nomination as Deputy Speaker and compliment the hon. members for Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Laniel) and Mercier (Mr. Boulanger) on their reappointments.

[Translation]

I should be remiss, Mr. Speaker, should I fail to commend the mover and seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne.

I should also like to congratulate the new members of the cabinet and as agriculture in my constituency is very important I am very pleased with the nomination of the hon. member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Whelan) as Minister of Agriculture. I am convinced that he will discharge his duties so well that he will gain the respect and confidence of all Canadian farmers.

Mr. Speaker, it is an honour for me to represent a constituency that was once represented by one of our greatest prime ministers, the Right Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King.

I should like to take this opportunity to express once more to my fellow citizens of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell how grateful I am for the trust they put in me.

As I said, my riding is almost entirely rural, made up of family farms, several of which cover only 100 to 150 acres.

It is common knowledge that farmers find it difficult to survive. Whether they are in the dairy, agricultural or cattle-raising fields, their problem remains the same. We strongly believe that the prices they have to pay for feed grain are much too high.

I have even been told that the prices of concentrates for balanced feed have increased to the point where our farmers have to cut down on concentrates in those to the detriment of the quality of their cattle.

We believe that brokerage firms are taking advantage of our farmers whenever there is a strong demand for those products, particularly the concentrates.

I was pleased to hear in the Speech from the Throne that the government will be taking appropriate steps concerning feed grain which, I hope, will bring about better price control.

Concerning crop insurance, I also note that the government will assist provinces, which will allow farmers to benefit from a reduction in premiums.

I also appreciate that action will be taken to stimulate tourism in Canada. As my riding is situated between the St. Lawrence and Ottawa rivers and bordered by Quebec and the federal capital, space can readily be created there for development of tourist centres, in co-operation with the provincial government.

• (1200)

[English]

Mr. Speaker, with the present minimum wage it is almost impossible to bring welfare recipients back to work. In many cases they receive over and above what labour receives for a 40-hour week at the minimum wage. May I suggest as an incentive that the minimum wage be raised to $2.25 an hour.

[Translation]

Old age security pension plan improvements were announced and I hope that this will include a lowering of the retirement age to 60, especially for those who benefit from the guaranteed income supplement.

[English]

Since concern for the tourist industry was manifested in the throne speech, we would appreciate very much a helping hand for the organizers of the worldwide Glengarry highland games, for grants such as for the construction of additional seating capacity to accommodate the ever-increasing number of visitors at this annual event which takes place in Maxville, Ontario, either at the end of July or early in August and at which hundreds of pipe bands and athletes of Scottish culture from all over the world meet in competition. Record crowds of well over 25,000 witness this colourful event every year. May I take this opportunity to invite all of you to visit us at this great festival.

[Translation]

In short, I am amazed at the contents of the Speech from the Throne and I believe that all the other members of the House feel the same. Undoubtedly, some took the liberty of criticizing it, but I suggest that this is only from habit without even evaluating its contents and its beneficial effects for all Canadians.

I was under the impression that the duty of Her Majesty's loyal opposition was to criticize constructively, but I can only express my disappointment at seeing many members on the front benches notably the member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence), who dared speak without the approval of the Speaker, the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) who continuously interrupts members speaking to the House, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), with all his parliamentary practice and former Prime Minister, who likes to waste the time of the House by speaking of phrenology, and of how he is proud and happy to have amongs them a 20-year-old member.

[Mr. Éthier.]

Mr. Speaker, the behaviour of the official opposition's veterans sets a very bad example for these young members of the House. I am persuaded that if Her Majesty had witnessed the behaviour of her loyal opposition, she would have asked that the word loyal be omitted.

[English]

After having witnessed all the unparliamentary behaviour on the part of the official opposition front benches I was greatly surprised to hear a radio commentator say that the Conservatives were really effective at the beginning of this twenty-ninth parliament. Either this commentator was not serious or there are two meanings to the word "effective", or else this is just a cover-up for their real ineffectiveness. On the same station I even heard the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) using strong language and demanding that the government introduce legislation before taking the customary time to debate the throne speech. Is the hon. member suggesting that we do away with traditions?

[Translation]

On Sunday January 14, I heard the leader of the Quebec wing of the Progressive Conservative party, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner), repeat that Quebec more than any other province needed help from the federal government. During his election campaign, why then did he not object when candidates of his party made political hay outside Quebec saying that province had been privileged by the former minister of DREE (Mr. Marchand)? Why did the hon. member not reply to the question he was so eager to answer during the election campaign, namely what would his attitude be were Quebec to be given a separatist government? On television he replied that the question was hypothetical, but during the election campaign he did say that if Quebec demanded separatism, as a Quebecer, he would submit to whe will of the people. There is an example of irresponsible politics, for the guidance of the hon. member who claims to be a federalist, for a single amendment to the constitution would allow a province to separate. I ask the hon. members of the NDP and the Social Credit to beware of such irresponsible people.

I wish to congratulate the hon. leader of the official opposition (Mr. Stanfield) for having acquired the young MPs I have had the pleasure of meeting. To my mind, they are true gentlemen. Might I suggest that he make room, in front, for those gentlemen and room, at the back, for irresponsible members?

Mr. Speaker, I close by saying that I am proud of all the people in my riding especially because, back home, unity truly exists.

[English]

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of my speech I should like to congratulate you on having been elected to the high office which you hold. Having questioned your fairness in the past may I say now that at all times you were fair, that you honour your position, and that you lend great dignity and fairness to your rulings in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): I would also like to congratulate the Deputy Speaker, the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave). His respect for parliamentary debate and for this chamber will stand him in good stead in the difficult months ahead when he will have to preside over the House from time to time.

I would also like to congratulate the mover and the seconder, the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) and the hon. member for Lachine (Mr. Blaker). It is an honour to them and to their constituents that they should be given this task and they did an admirable job.

Having said all that, may I say at the outset that the kind of speech I will make is one I really do not wish to make. It is one that brings me no real pleasure and, in fact, a certain amount of sadness because in my speech I will deal with western Canada. Why should I deal with western Canada? The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made a number of references to western Canada in the Speech from the Throne. He spoke about having a conference with the four provincial governments, and he spoke about some kind of industrial growth that should and may take place in western Canada in the years ahead. He wondered in the Speech from the Throne why the Liberals lost the west. I will try to explain why they lost the west and how they could perhaps capture it if they rethought their whole policy.

• (1210)

During the campaign I said that with three major changes in the Liberal party program and policies they could succeed. None of them had anything to do with the Official Languages Act or the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is from Quebec. The surprising thing about the cabinet reshuffle, the Speech from the Throne, and remarks made by ministers in this debate is that they do not show any change of heart. The Liberals have really not learned anything about western Canada.

Shortly after the cabinet reshuffle there was an article in Time magazine on the Prime Minister, in which he was reported as saying that the government's policies were good but the salesmen were poor. Now they are bringing in better salesmen to sell the policies that they believe are good. Mr. Speaker, the west did not object to the salesmen, although indeed the Liberals did have poor salesmen. The policies were wrong.

The Prime Minister visited western Canada in 1970 and talked about a particular farm bill, one that he still seems to have on his mind. He said it was a good bill but "the problem out here is that you have been listening to false prophets." I did not like being called a false prophet and so I remember that remark.

Many times Canada is likened to a marriage between the French and the English, between Ontario and Quebec. Western Canada came along after 1867, and we are not the children of that marriage. We do not want to be treated like children, to be seen and not heard. We want to take our rightful place and have some say on the direction in which this country goes and should go. We believe that ours is the most vigorous growth area in Canada. We demand our right to have a say on the direction in which we should go. The change in salesmen will not help the Liberal party one bit.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): The Liberals must rethink their basic concepts of western Canada. They must rethink their policies, and they must do this before the provincial conference mentioned in the throne speech takes place.

Speaking about co-operation the Prime Minister once said, with reference to the government, that it should meet the obligation to consult and not merely to inform. I hope he remembers that when he goes to western Canada to attend that conference. But by his cabinet shuffle he has not demonstrated that he is learning or rethinking any of the three policies I will mention in a moment.

What are the three policies that ruined the Liberal party and caused them to lose the west? Mr. Speaker, western Canada is not too far away from the pioneer spirit. Many familes and young people in western Canada still have a great deal of admiration for their forefathers who came out west and fought nature and the other hazards of life. They are proud of their forefathers' fight to own their own land. What did the Liberal party do to cause them to lose votes all across the west? They brought in a capital gains tax which makes it pretty difficult for a farmer to hand down his land to the next generation.

The average farmer is proud of his father's work in harnessing nature for his benefit. He wants to pass on his land to the next generation. All kinds of warnings were given about the capital gains tax. It was pointed out that it would affect the cost of farm machinery, the transfer of land and the basic herd. But the government plowed ahead with that legislation. In fact it introduced closure. That legislation has hurt western Canada, a region which has a lot of land and few people, but those people are proud of their land. That was a mistake and it cost the Liberals thousands of votes all across the Prairies. Unless they rethink that concept they will be in for more difficult times in western Canada.

In case hon. members ask why I say this I suggest that they read the CCH Report entitled "Farmers and the White Paper on Tax Reform," in the foreword where it states:

> Perhaps the single taxpayer group most dramatically affected by the government's white paper on taxation are the farmers of Canada. Whether by design—or through inadvertence—the farming community as it exists today faces virtual extinction—

Those are pretty strong words.

In the October, 1972, issue of Country Guide the president of the Agricultural Economics Research Council of Canada issued this warning about the tax changes:

> Failure to become familiar with tax management generally, and to do some important things now, could result in a farmer's family farm being killed within ten years.

Those are not the words of idle politicians. They are the words of factual men who know what they are talking about. All this has caused great panic in western Canada.

The blame rests on the government, on the Prime Minister and the members of his cabinet from western Canada who did a poor job of convincing the Prime Minister that the capital gains tax was wrong. I may say that the electors did a lot better job on October 30.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): The other basic thing people must understand about western Canadians is that those engaged in the agricultural industry love to produce. But before dealing with that I wish to mention one other thing not connected with the famous Bill C-176. One other concept that the Liberals failed to understand was that their tax reform legislation was hard on the oil and gas industries, on the resource industries in general. Mr. Mahoney, the former member for Calgary South, insulted the very people who sent him here. It is no wonder he did not come back. Any member of this House who forgets the people who sent him here should not come back. His was one seat that I could bet would be lost by the Liberals.

Another seat lost through Liberal ignorance was that of the former member for Medicine Hat and former minister of agriculture, a friend of mine who has a ranch in my constituency. Where did he make his mistakes? At the wish of the Prime Minister he attempted to pilot the famous Bill C-176 through the House. At that time, Mr. Speaker, I was accused of being a terrible person, a false prophet and everything else.

Was it I alone who blocked the passage of that bill? Recently the Prime Minister admitted on a radio show that even having got it through the House the Liberals suffered a defeat. They did not get what they wanted. They did not get the rigidity and the controls they wanted. As I say, western Canadians love to produce. They know they can produce. They want the opportunity to produce. It is born and bred in them. Hon. members opposite must understand that.

Westerners saw in Bill C-176 an attempt by somebody to harness their production, to regulate and control it, and perhaps even to hinder the free flow of their goods into the thickly populated area of eastern Canada in order to serve the 12 million people in Ontario and Quebec who should be able to enjoy their produce. Bill C-176 was wrong.

Was it a political move on my part? Some people have accused me of opposing the bill for political gain. Was it Jack Horner alone who opposed it? Mr. Runciman, who has accepted appointments from the government to serve on a number of committees, had great fears about that bill. He said so in his brief to the agricultural committee. The Liberals should have harkened. The late William Parker, a strong westerner, a strong Liberal, a former president of the Manitoba Pool, said the bill was wrong and, if passed as proposed, western Canada would be hamstrung.

The Liberals should have harkened to men like that. Debate on the bill dragged on for a year and a half. Some 50,000 coupons, the greatest coupon mailing ever, more than those received in connection with the white paper on taxation, landed in Ottawa from the three prairie provinces. The people there must have been stirred up about the bill. The Liberals should have dropped that bill in order to set aside the fears of western Canada. The late premier of Saskatchewan and his minister of agriculture, both Liberals, expressed fears about what the bill would do but the Liberals plowed on with it. The Prime Minister said it was a good bill and that the children out there had been listening to false prophets. That is what he said and we did not like it, Mr. Speaker. We demonstrated that on October 30.

• (1220)

What about the former minister of agriculture? Can you imagine the possibility of his winning after having been elected at one time as a Social Crediter, that group which is supposed to be to the right in our political structure? In Winnipeg on March 13, 1972, he made a speech which was reported in the Regina Leader-Post under the heading "Market Structure Said Need". In the article the former minister is reported to have said:

> Free trade is a great thing when it works, but unfortunately there aren't enough constraints within the free trade system for us to accept that this is the way marketing will be.

The article then mentioned the minister's recommendations and suggestions. That smacks of socialism to western Canadians. In Alberta we live next door to Saskatchewan and so we know what socialism has done there. We want no part of it, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): How could a former Social Crediter make such a suggestion? Had his basic philosophy changed? No, Mr. Speaker, he was a servant of those above him in the Liberal party—the Prime Minister and the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt, our intellectual socialists.

Mr. Baldwin: With a lust for power.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Olson was merely their servant and the people of Medicine Hat knew that and did not like it. They wanted him to serve them, not his masters in the Liberal party, so they rejected him on October 30. There were editorials like the one which appeared in the Free Press Weekly of April 17, 1971 headed "Cattle Double-crossed". There is still a bit of the old pioneer spirit left in western Canada, Mr. Speaker. A handshake is a handshake and a man's word is good. The people do not like someone who is suspected of double-crossing them so the former minister of agriculture was rejected.

I am sure there are many Liberals who have been tearing out their hair, wondering why the sales of wheat did not help them. In the 15 years I have been in Ottawa I have heard many easterners say that the man who sells the wheat reaps the political benefit, that all you have to do in western Canada is sell wheat. But why did the Liberals not reap the benefit? Why is it that the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt came back from Saskatchewan alone, the only Liberal member representing the farmers there? One reason he came back was the $90,000 he spent; that sometimes helps. Part of his riding includes the city so perhaps those people were not aware of what was going on. What was wrong, Mr. Speaker? Surely this government want to know and is interested in changing its ways.

Two weeks before the election the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt announced an increase of 30 cents a bushel in the initial price for wheat. The farmers were insulted, Mr. Speaker; that was their own money and they were going to get it anyway in the final payment. They said, "Does he think we are so stupid that he can bribe us with our own money?" If the minister knew that the international price was about to increase—he should have known it three months before October 15 when he made that announcement—he should have had the courage and the confidence in the cabinet to take a stand and increase the initial price of wheat at that time. He lacked something; he certainly lacked any understanding of the farmers when he insulted them with an increase of 30 cents of their own money. Politically he would have been farther ahead to make the announcement after the election.

Mr. Stanfield: He was just imitating the Prime Minister.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Yes, he is an intellectual socialist just like the Prime Minister. In my definition a socialist believes that someone has to make decisions for the masses and the masses will follow. An intellectual socialist believes he is so far above the masses that he can make the decisions and the masses will follow. But sometimes one who considers himself so far above the ordinary people forgets, and that is exactly what happened with the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt and the Prime Minister in the last election.

What other mistakes did they make, Mr. Speaker? Yesterday the minister said that the Lift program had created freedom in agricultural marketing and that everything was now moving well because of it. In case anybody has forgotten what Lift is, it means "Lower Inventory For Tomorrow". When the election came along the price of grain was going up. At that time it was about $2.60 a bushel but the farmers did not have any wheat. Many of them had already delivered. During the campaign I drove to the elevators and the farmers told me that they had delivered the six-bushel quota and had nothing left to deliver except their seed for spring planting though they would have liked to be in a position to deliver wheat.

What did the Lift program cost the farmers? As the minister admitted yesterday, because of the restrictions placed upon them they grew 200 million bushels less wheat than previously. The price of wheat today is a little over $3 a bushel so any grade three student can calculate the loss to western Canada: it is $600 million through operation Lift.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Could the minister say that he did not know about the crop failures in Russia and China, that he thought Lift was a good program and now knows that he was wrong and ask for forgiveness? No, Mr. Speaker, he still says it was a good program. How can farmers be convinced of that when they have lost money on it? They are not so stupid, as the intellectual socialists found out on October 30.

What else did the minister do that was wrong? He attempted to bring in a grains stabilization bill. That was a failure and never got through the House. The whole concept was wrong; it began by trying to empty the elevators and to curb western Canada's desire to produce. The farmers did not like that at all. Operation Lift was a perfect example and they rejected it.

What does the Canadian Wheat Board have to say today? I have here a letter I received recently from the Canadian Wheat Board which was addressed to all grain producers. The letter inquires how much grain I will have for sale in the coming crop year and states:

> —every additional bushel of grain that can be made available will be needed.

The letter goes on to say that they do not have much confidence in the figures provided by Statistics Canada so they are approaching producers directly. I have been farming for 25 years but I never received a letter like this from the Canadian Wheat Board before. The letter states further:

> —we need a reliable figure before we can determine how much grain we can commit for forward sales to take advantage of the higher price levels.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, they are turning down sales today because they do not know how much grain they will have. That is an alarming letter, Mr. Speaker, and points out the fact that the concept of cutting off production in western Canada was wrong. We do not want the minister to go out to western Canada saying it was right. It was wrong and we will continue to reject it.

In a news release which I issued in December I said that the fixed price of $1.95½ should be the floor price and it should move upwards with the international price. I told the farmers that they were losing $30 million a year. The minister must have thought my statement was effective because the next day he issued a press release. It pointed out that the minister said the government is paying $57.5 million to assure that the farmer will receive $3 a bushel for his wheat. This was paid under an acreage payment.

• (1230)

There was a great deal of fanfare last January because the minister had finally made a tremendous breakthrough. This was suggested in an editorial in a western paper. The minister had now firmly established a two-price system for wheat and the farmers would get a fair return. What did this turn out to be? It turned out to be nothing more then an acreage payment. The minister fooled the weekly papers.

An editorial in the Western Producer headlined "Not Exactly A Reality" states:

> It appears we were somewhat hasty when we wrote the headline "Two-price system for wheat a reality" . . . in our February 3 issue. . . .
> What Mr. Lang did not say was that in an election year, there's a tendency to avoid any distribution of funds that takes in only part of a group, and that, we believe, would be the prime consideration when the decision was being made.

The minister fooled the wheat farmers. He did not help them at all. Another editorial was headlined "Two-price Or Two-face?". I said a while ago that in western Canada people still honour a man's word and a handshake. They cannot yet accept a doublecross or "two-price or two-face". We may be able to accept this some day, but not yet. I quote from this editorial:

> The Minister responsible for the Wheat Board happily proclaimed that the government "has finally faced up to an issue which confronted successive governments for 20 years." . . . This most recent announcement, however, shows that we are still following a policy of "Do nothing until you have to, then do anything to keep them quiet".

Is that not the way you treat children? We in western Canada no longer want to be treated as children.

The Speech from the Throne refers to two other matters which are going to be dealt with, crop insurance and an equitable price for feed grain. I wish to issue a word of caution and warning. I have thoroughly studied the Canada Grains Council report on the pricing of feed grain and what they refer to as the fair formula. This is not a saleable product in western Canada. If anyone wonders why it is not, I suggest he read page 9, chapter 3. It clearly explains how the fair formula will work. It sets up a great bureaucracy which the average farmer will not take time to understand or figure out. He will feel that the price of his grain is being subsidized and that it is not going to work to his advantage.

I also wish to refer to development at Vancouver. It is a well known fact that when the minister in charge of the Wheat Board was in Calgary he said that the government was going to spend money in Vancouver. He did not say how much or how they were going to do this.

I have an article which states that Mr. Hope of the Canadian Wheat Board suggests that something must be done in Vancouver as more storage is required. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board does not realize that in the past years the expenditures in Vancouver have been curtailed, not enlarged. The government must come up with a policy for the development of a port at Vancouver which will allow our grain to move freely through that port. There are continuing reports in western papers calling for improved facilities at the port of Vancouver. The Canadian Wheat Board is having difficulty moving grain through that port because of strikes, including one that is still not settled. This is certainly a disturbing factor in western Canada.

As I said at the beginning of my remarks, I regret that after being here 15 years I must make a speech dealing with one region of our country. I have outlined three basic policies which went wrong and I hope the government will correct its ways. Maybe people in western Canada will then vote Liberal again. If the government does not learn to understand this better than they have in the past four years and continues to treat us as children, we will continue to reject their party, no matter from what area the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) may come or what official language he may use. It will not really matter. We will continue to reject anyone who treats us as children. We want to be equal partners and play a part in this great country of ours.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I first want to take this opportunity to congratulate Your Honour on being re-elected Speaker of the House, not only because of your knowledge of House procedure but also because I have learned since accepting this office of your knowledge of agricultural problems in the constituency you represent.

I also want to take this opportunity to congratulate the Deputy Speaker. I have known him as a man's man in this House. I know he will do a good job. I have also known for quite some time the other officials who have been elected and the same goes for them.

[Mr. Horner (Crowfoot).]

I wish to thank hon. members for the good wishes they have sent me on my appointment to the portfolio of Minister of Agriculture for Canada. In those thanks I wish to include the members of the opposition. Some, even Members of Parliament, may be amazed at the number of letters, calls, visits, etc. that I received from many members of the opposition. I believe they were most sincere in their congratulations and offers of help to make this portfolio and department a successful venture. I also wish to thank the members on the government side for their good wishes, of which there were many.

I received letters from people I have known in agriculture and parliamentary organizations all over the world. I was utterly amazed to know that people all over the world watch to see who is going to be responsible for agriculture in Canada. Too often we take it for granted that agriculture is not all that important, but this has brought it closer to home for me and made me realize in a different way how much importance people in other parts of the world place on agriculture in Canada because of the great industry it is and the leadership it provides for agriculture in other parts of the world.

More especially, I wish to thank the electorate in my constituency for having placed their confidence in me once more in the past election. I shall try my best to keep their interests at heart while attending to the obligations of a minister of the Crown. I also wish to give special thanks to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for having had the confidence and, if I may say so, Mr. Speaker, the courage—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: —to entrust me with the task of Minister of Agriculture for Canada. I am still new enough to this portfolio to be able to think it is a big challenge and still new enough to thank the Prime Minister for giving me the opportunity to represent the farmers from one end of the country to the other. There may be some who may find it rather hard to accept the fact that the Minister of Agriculture does not come from western Canada. However, I must point out that I received messages from all across Canada, from farm leaders, provincial ministers of agriculture and some premiers. Only one premier, and I cannot remember which province he represents, was not complimentary.

• (1240)

An hon. Member: Who was he?

Mr. Crouse: That brother of yours?

Mr. Whelan: I think he migrated from Nova Scotia to Saskatchewan 14 years ago.

I have lived on the farm all my life and have been an active farmer for most of my life, certainly until I was elected to the House of Commons. Those who are engaged in agriculture and who are also Members of Parliament know that being a member is a full-time job. One has no time left in which to engage in actual agricultural production if one is really doing the job demanded of a representative here. The part of Canada from which I come is the most productive of any in Canada. This is a fact of which many people are unaware; possibly we ourselves are at fault for not yelling it loud and clear.

Many people think of Ontario as being strictly an industrialized giant. It is an agricultural giant as well; one might call it the giant of agricultural production in Canada. Farm cash receipts in 1972 in the province are likely to amount to almost $1.5 billion. Saskatchewan, this year, will be second highest in this respect. The situation is changing, if I understand it correctly; Saskatchewan is displacing Alberta, it seems, though there may be some Alberta members who will wish to disagree. However, these are the figures given to me.

Back in Roman days, Mr. Speaker, one of their old boys who had done a good deal of travelling round Europe came back to his capital and said "veni, vidi, vici". Well, I did some travelling around Canada at the end of last year. I did not conquer. I did something more. I listened and learned. Among the many things I learned was that farmers all across our land are basically the same. At the farm meetings I addressed in western Canada, when I said I was a minister of the Crown for Canadian agriculture, the Canadian Minister of Agriculture, they all responded in a more amazing fashion even than I had anticipated. They did not want me as an eastern Minister of Agriculture nor as a western Minister of Agriculture. They wanted me as a Canadian Minister of Agriculture working for the benefit of Canadian farm producers no matter in what part of the land they reside. They have more in common than the few differences which are continuously played up. They have more marketing problems in common, more production problems in common. They are competing, often, for the same domestic markets or for the same overseas markets. Differences which are brought about by circumstance or which are connected with historical habits have long since died, as far as I am concerned. All our farmers have the same desire for a stable income and they all face the same risks because of weather, disease and fluctuating markets. They are beginning to realize that some of their difficulties can best be solved by national planning, cooperation and mutual support through the assistance of their provincial governments and with the help of Ottawa.

I want to take this opportunity to thank my provincial counterparts for the courtesy they showed me on my first visit to them. I must say I found them extremely responsive and helpful, as I confirmed when I telephoned their offices to ask some of them for their opinions. It might surprise some hon. members to learn how many ministers in provincial governments answer their own telephones. I think it surprised the provincial people just as much when this minister dialed his own telephone to talk to them. I learned this from a businessman in control of a large corporation; he told me that when anyone got too big to dial his own telephone he was too big to hold the position he was occupying. As far as I am concerned, our calls in the future will be many. I intend to keep up this rapport with my provincial counterparts as long as I am Minister of Agriculture because I believe in working with them for the betterment of agriculture in Canada. Without exception they showed a good grasp of the agricultural situation in their own provinces. I feel we shall all be in a better position to improve the welfare of the farmer as a result of my having met not only the provincial ministers of agriculture but also a good number of representatives of farm organizations in the west, in central Canada and in the east.

I am pleased to report that the agricultural industry has experienced one of the most prosperous years on record. The trend began in 1970. It was strong in 1971, even stronger last year, and is continuing through 1973. I am also pleased to report that the farming community has made some gains in moving the industry closer to our goal of putting farm income on an equal footing with the rest of the economy over the past few years. We set a $2 billion trade export record in 1971; we set another record last year, and it looks as though we are going to set still another in 1973.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: Our agricultural industry has not only met the challenges of tougher competition, international monetary problems and stiff trade restrictions but it has actually improved on its own record.

We must recognize the importance of marketing and be bold enough to say so at a time when the industry sometimes tends to be inward-looking, paying most of its attention to domestic issues. The present government has begun this task with evident success. The statistics speak for themselves. The government has helped the industry to take advantage of new and expanding agricultural product markets abroad. The result has been a dramatic improvement in prospects for the success and maintenance of our family farms. Those who have charged the present administration with being too inactive should check the record; when they do, I think they will be forced to admit they are chasing non-existent ghosts. We have set records for exports. We are continuing to increase our exports. Further, we are continuing to add new products and new customers while negotiating better trade terms for our farmers. For example, as of January 1 last year we have added 10 per cent to the number of items which could enter the United States free of tariff, bringing the total up to 30 per cent. We have negotiated an important agreement with Australia which has already opened up a money-making market for cattle semen, and we have opened the door for imports of new blood lines for our beef producers. During my discussions with cattlemen's associations and others I have found them to be as happy a group of producers as I have found in any part of our nation.

• (1250)

New initiatives have also been taken to send specialists abroad to help the agricultural industry open new markets. The industry is making increased use of the $10 million market development fund available to it for extending markets abroad. I think they could take even more advantage of the money provided for these groups which want to develop their own markets under our guidance and assistance by taking part in this fund. There are many examples of success but I mention only these few as an indication of what has been taking place.

I must also point out, Mr. Speaker, that ever since I have become Minister of Agriculture prices to the farmers have improved considerably. I may not have had much to do with these changes in price but, as Billy Shakespeare said,

"There is a time and tide in the affairs of men, which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune".

Mr. Gleave: You got your boat off the beach at just about the right time.

Mr. Whelan: That is what I encourage farmers to do this spring. I urge them to produce grain to beat the band this year, all types of grains. There is a word of caution which I put in at this point. I am purposely asking western grain producers to produce all the wheat they can produce, conscious of all this implies, and at the same time to make sure they produce even larger quantities of feed grains than they grew in previous years. Except for that reservation, my theme to producers, Mr. Speaker, is to produce grain for all they are worth and, by the way, I hope money lenders both east and west are listening. There is a clear message for them. The message is to have faith in Canada's agricultural producers and give them the backing they deserve, because I intend to do this as long as I am Minister of Agriculture.

Knowing the capacity and urge of Canadian farmers to produce, I feel it in my bones, Mr. Speaker, that farmers will grow and deliver record quantities of grain, both in the east and west. The government will sell record amounts of grain again this year. And let no one belittle the efforts made by this government to improve the meteoric rise in cash income gains made from grain sales these past two years.

Some Lady Zistras have looked into their crystal balls backward and suggested the country may lose future sales because our grain supplies have been reduced to manageable proportions. In the first place Mr. Speaker, those clairvoyants did not usefully forecast, for anyone, the drop in grain production in various countries round the world or the disastrous weather conditions in the USSR and India, or the calamities that took place in other nations last year.

Second, if anything, transportation of grain to markets has been our bottleneck and the record of improvement brought about by the assistance of this government speaks for itself. We set a shipment record in 1970, smashed that record in 1971 in spite of weather difficulties, and we are well on the way to doing even better this year. I have the utmost confidence but, as I stated before, some may say I am over-optimistic that they will do even better.

Third, these latter-day soothsayers condemn themselves out of their own mouths. They are actually suggesting that Canadian grain growers will not, indeed these soothsayers imply Canadian grain growers cannot, rise to the occasion of a market opportunity that is placed before them. That, Mr. Speaker, shows an appalling lack of knowledge of the productive capacity, the large capitalization, or the real, effective, down-to-earth, export confidence and know-how our Canadian producers possess. But most important still, these people fail to recognize the strong urge within each farmer to produce for all he is worth, given the opportunity to do so.

I would point out here that there is hardly a nation in the world where one farm worker produces so much for his fellow man. We could make a comparison with one of the largest nations that buys so much grain from us. In Russia, for instance, one farm worker only produces enough food for two of his fellow men. In Canada, one farm worker produces enough food for 50 of his fellow men. We take this for granted and we accept it. Many of these countries that do not have the system we have, do not have the creative ability we have and do not have the incentives we have, only wish that they could create some of these in their own nations so they would be in a better position as far as food for their own people is concerned.

Indeed, a farmer is leery of believing in the dream he may never be able to realize. Well, it is here, Mr. Speaker; his dream has come true, the opportunity to produce all the grain he can produce for good markets at acceptable prices. I know as a farmer that I do not need to tell fellow farmers all this. They sense the opportunity when it comes. But farmers like to be reassured and that is the first reason I am going on at length about this situation. I am also stressing the point in the House now because the legislators of this land should be spared the humility of underestimating the drive, initiative, optimism and resourcefulness of Canadian producers. I take my hat off to my fellow farmers for their courage, their endurance, ability and productiveness. God willing, Mr. Speaker, the harvest of 1973 in Canada will confound the critics who have little understanding of the farmer's urge to produce, even if the critics hail from rural or rural-town Canada.

The government has done a number of things to improve the quality of life in rural Canada. The Farm Credit Corporation loans policy has been changed with the proclamation of amendments to the Farm Credit Act. Young farmers under the age of 35 have benefited substantially by being able to borrow under the new conditions of Part III of the Farm Credit Act. May I call it one o'clock?

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, when we adjourned I was speaking about the Farm Credit Corporation. Under the supervised loans program, young farmers may borrow up to 75 per cent of the appraised value of land and chattels up to $100,000, and if their managerial ability is considered to be above average, loans may be drawn up to 90 per cent of their farm assets. Those are realistic loan conditions repayable over 30 years. These conditions are a witness to the faith that this government has in the ability of our new breed of young farmers today. The effort made by the Farm Credit Corporation to make loans available to younger farmers has borne fruit in the last crop year. There has been a shift, an increase, of 1½ per cent in loans made to people under the age of 35 between 1970 and 1971, and 1971 and 1972. The shift is evident at the other end of the scale in that, out of a total number of loans made, there has also been a shift of 1½ per cent decline in the number of loans made to people over 55 years of age.

I have some very strong views on the Farm Credit Corporation, on what it can do and what it has done as well as on what it should be doing. If any hon. members have suggestions as to what they think the Farm Credit Corporation can and should be doing to help young farmers and farmers in general, I would appreciate hearing from them. The changes will help Canadian farmers to develop more profitable family farms and I have under active consideration, as I stated, methods to improve still further the corporation's loan policy to the advantage of our producers, but I am willing to listen and accept good suggestions as to how this can be achieved.

Another program, the exhibition loans program to help agricultural societies to borrow money at very attractive interest rates over a long term payment period, is being continued. This policy has been much appreciated by those who wish to put up buildings that can be used at fall fairs and exhibitions and, equally important, which can be used for functions right through the entire year. I might add, for those who are interested in what is being done in some parts of Canada, that I met a group from western Canada this morning. They are putting up one of the best exhibitions of livestock that I have ever seen a new young organization put up. I think we should do everything we can to encourage this type of program. It helps the urban people realize what the rural people are doing in Canada.

An important new program to improve life in rural Canada is the small farms development program. The last of the programs I have signed on behalf of the federal government has been with the province of Nova Scotia. Alberta and Ontario have already implemented the program and British Columbia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and now Nova Scotia, have signed agreements.

Mr. Stewart (Marquette): What about Manitoba?

Mr. Whelan: These programs may not be what everyone would desire, but again I am open to further suggestions on how we can improve them for all of Canada. I am hopeful that the remaining four provinces will join in the near future. If they do not, we have the authority to provide these benefits for those farmers under a federal program if their province does not wish to participate in the program. The discussions with the province of Quebec on this subject, which bogged down a little, have, I am pleased to say, been put back on the track with every indication that we will come to a mutual understanding. I might say that one of the best discussions I had on my trip across Canada was with my counterpart in the province of Quebec, Mr. Tuppin. He understood the problems, he presented his viewpoint in a factual way, and I am sure that we were not far apart in our positions on many issues that have confronted farmers in the province of Quebec.

The Canadian agriculture industry continues to become more specialized every year and, because of that, this government continues to support the industry and farmers through research programs in the Department of Agriculture which has the reputation for doing some of the finest research work in the agricultural world. I do not think that even our own citizens are aware of this. They are even some events taking place of which many members of the House are not aware, and every day I am learning something new that is going on in agricultural research, either in livestock, grains or horticulture. Many of us are not aware of what is going on because not enough is being said, and what is being said is not being said loudly and clearly enough.

As a result of our support, Canadians farmers have achieved a remarkable record of performance. They not only produce some of the best farm products in the world, but they do it more efficiently. All of us in the House, and hon. members from rural communities in particular, realize that it is not always smooth sailing and that in farming there are many problems which fall beyond the scope of any individual farmer, problems which can more properly be handled by government. It is for this reason that the government made hog deficiency payments of up to $1,000 per producer to offset the pork market glut of 18 months ago, caused mainly by heavy production in the United States.

Support for the dairy industry has been continued and was increased during this dairy year, taking into account the increasing cost of production and the improved market conditions. The leadership of the federal government, in stabilizing the dairy industry, has been very successful and this program has paid off both for Canada and for dairy farmers. It has held production and incomes at reasonable levels. Without this support, our industrial milk producing industry would have been bankrupt long ago, thus creating a severe loss not only for our dairy farmers but for all Canadian consumers. There are some who complain about the 17 days supply of butter that we will have to import this winter to supply the Canadian consumer, but I would remind those people that it is better to be in that position than to have a small surplus bearing down heavily on the price of all the dairy products and consequently on the total income of all producers across the country.

In my opinion, the National Dairy Commission is one of the most efficiently operated marketing organizations in Canada, and one of the things that I specifically like about it is its control over imports. I like the way it operates and the way in which it brings imports into Canada when they are needed and puts them on the market at a price that the consumers can afford to pay. At the same time, the actions of the Commission do not depress the price to the producers but provide stability to the industry. When one checks the price range of the dairy products in the last four years, one realizes that if all other parts of the agriculture industry were run in this fashion, inflation would not be as rampant as it is today.

• (1410)

The federal government intends to continue its support of the dairy industry. More than 90 per cent of our industrial milk production now comes from provinces which have entered the market sharing quota program because of the agreements with the prairie provinces this past year. I would also note, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian Dairy Commission has been quick on the draw to take advantage of the situation of skim milk powder shortage in the United States. This quick action has allowed Canada to supply part of the American requirement at favourable prices to our milk producers. This was done by tender.

The disaster aid program, put together jointly with Quebec and Ontario, has added up to one of the biggest aid programs ever for farmers experiencing losses due to wet weather. The farmers of the Peace River area of Alberta and of British Columbia have been offered a similar program of help through the co-operation of their provincial governments. The programs of assistance are not entirely alike because in western Canada there are already such programs as the PFAA, the Grassland Incentive Program, and advance payments on unharvested grain, programs tailored for different circumstances.

Crop losses and disasters due to weather are not new to agriculture. They are a part of the natural risk of farming, and I think most farmers accept that fact. But just the same they are disasters, and every government in every nation tries to plan to offset the difficulties that these create. In Canada the federal and provincial governments have worked for many years to develop a crop insurance program to overcome these problems, and to offer some level of security to farmers. We have had several years of experience with the crop insurance program, and we have had recent experience with the disasters in the Peace River area, eastern Ontario and western Quebec.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the minister but the time allotted to him has expired. He could continue with unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Bell: The minister can certainly take a few more minutes to finish. However, we are making an effort to have regular members finish in 20 minutes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Whelan: These problems concerning crop insurance are hard to overcome. In view of these difficulties I believe it is time to re-examine the entire crop insurance program, to set out goals firmly in mind, and to develop a better program. During my trip across Canada, there was not one provincial minister of agriculture who did not bring this to my attention. They want the real principle of insurance embodied in crop insurance. They feel it is not in the program at the present time.

Again, I am open to suggestions from anyone who has any ideas on how we can improve the crop insurance program. I have already received some ideas from hon. members, and I intend to use them when bringing forward new legislation. As indicated in the throne speech, Mr. Speaker, the House will be asked "to amend the crop insurance act to allow the government to reimburse provinces to a maximum of 50 per cent of premiums paid under contracts of insurance, thereby reducing costs of insurance to individual farmers." As I have stated, I, and I believe the farmers are willing to go further. I am hopeful that an acceptable proposal can be worked out with the provincial departments of agriculture and with farmers so that we can come up with a crop insurance scheme which will be popularly acceptable to the farming community and will be along true insurance lines.

Because we have kept our ear to the ground and acted to help producers across the country, the government implemented the fowl slaughter program which quickly brought egg production back in line with demand, and allowed the establishment of the first national farm products marketing agency. We have also brought about changes in the rates of feed freight assistance to offset changes in cost, introduced a potato support program which helped the Maritime growers to overcome a difficult period of surplus production, and continued the federal government support for the sugar beet industry.

In the grain and oil seeds marketing system the number of changes introduced since 1968 have culminated in the success of our marketing effort, and have proven the wisdom of the changes made in the regulations. But we do not plan to sit still in the coming year. Although we already have a new set of wheat grades, a new quota delivery system, a grassland incentive program, improved transportation records at the Lakehead and Vancouver, and many other improvements, still further improvements are being considered for the coming year.

Hon. members who may not be familiar with the subject should check their old agriculture committee reports and see what we recommended six years ago to improve grain handling facilities both on the coast and in the St. Lawrence Seaway. If they do, they will realize that hon. members at that time had futuristic ideas and attitudes.

When talking about the export records that have been set, I do not wish to leave the impression that it was the government that set these records on its own. It took a great deal of co-operation between government and the entire grain producing, transporting, insuring, shipping and exporting industries. It required gumption to find the weak spots, identify them, acknowledge them, and then move to make the changes that brought about the desired improvements. I hope this co-operation will continue. Indeed, recognition of the validity of this approach has been indicated by the establishment of a new branch within the Department of Agriculture to try the same formula with other commodities, commodity groups, and sections of the agriculture industry.

One of the major tasks of the new food systems branch concerns the feed grain industry. Right now we are talking with the industry about the new feed grains policy for Canada, taking into account the many changes made in production, transportation, international markets, and our own domestic livestock industry needs. Again, as indicated in the Speech from the Throne, the government supports the principle of an equitable relationship of prices of feed grain to livestock feeders in various areas of Canada. It is the intention of the government to implement, before the next crop year, procedures that will insure the optimum development of the feed grain and livestock industries within Canada.

There are many things I could say about the agriculture industry, Mr. Speaker, but I realize that if I said all that I have written here, I would take up more than my fair share of the time of the House. However, I do wish to take a few more minutes to complete a few points.

One of the biggest changes in agricultural policy introduced by the government has been the passage of the National Farm Products Marketing Act. I am convinced that national marketing agencies hold the key to major improvements within the agriculture industry, and will enable farmers to increase their income considerably. It is too early to judge the success of this legislation, but I am convinced that in years ahead we will look back and approve the persistence and foresight shown in having this idea put into the law of the land.

I want to take this opportunity to express my appreciation to the group of leaders who have been chosen to head the National Farm Products Marketing Council. Their leadership and tact have already done much to convince the doubters and sceptics that national marketing agencies can be a good thing and should be given a chance. The first national marketing agency, the one for eggs, is just now getting into operation. As this new group of men take up the challenge I am sure many farmers will find that national marketing agencies have a great deal to offer them, and that the trade as well as consumers will find these organizations to be to their advantage. I expect that we will have other national marketing agencies in operation before the end of the year. I have received notice from turkey and broiler producers that they wish to have a marketing plan, and before long they will want a national inquiry into the merits of such a plan.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, the agriculture industry is certainly in a much stronger position today than it was four years ago. The leadership, policies and programs initiated by my predecessors in this portfolio have had a great deal to do with the turn around, the better fortunes, and the good outlook for the industry and its producers. Problems and challenges remain to be tackled. I do not intend to rest on the achievements of my predecessors but will take up the challenge from here. There are great potentials for Canadian agriculture, and I am confident that we have the policies and programs which will help Canadian farmers to reach their full potential.

Because farming and the food industry form only part of the fabric of Canadian life, the Minister of Agriculture does not have a czar's influence even in his own area of jurisdiction. But I can assure hon. members that this minister will defend farmers' interests in this country with all the political skill that farmers are reputed to be able to muster, and as a member of the cabinet I will see to it that this is done within a framework of general conditions favourable to Canadian consumers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1420)

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, this is the first time that I have had the honour of addressing the House of Commons, an honour that I am sure all Canadians would prize. Like many other members who have spoken in this debate, I should like to begin by joining in an accolade to you and your associates for the way in which you are presiding over the affairs of this House.

We are here to debate the Speech from the Throne and I should like to begin by complimenting its authors, both seen and unseen, for they have produced a remarkable document. However, I am sure they would agree if I were to suggest to hon. members opposite, that with a little imagination we could think of ways in which it might have been improved. This afternoon I should like to suggest a few proposals which might have been included.

For example, Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne might have said something such as this: "The government will try to reduce unemployment in Canada by giving a job to every defeated Liberal candidate." Or, it might have said something such as this: "As a contribution to Canadian culture, the government will commission a national film board documentary on the election. It will be called "How the West was Lost". Or, "The government will authorize a CBC television serial: one part to be about the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in 1968. It will be called; "How to Succeed in Politics Without Really Trying." The second part will be on the Prime Minister in 1972 and it will be called: "How to Try in Politics Without Really Succeeding".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stackhouse: Or, "The government will attempt a bold innovation in politics: Liberal ministers and Conservative policies."

Instead of "fuddleduddle" we now have "flip-flop". In the throne speech the government "flipped", because in the election the government "flopped".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stackhouse: None the less, the throne speech is a remarkable document. It expresses the politics of "something for everybody"—or almost everybody.

It is not clear what the government intends for the kind of citizen about whom I want to speak mainly—the middle Canadians. I have the privilege of representing Scarborough East. With 87,000 electors it is one of the largest ridings in Canada and represents a "mix" of the great diversity one finds in the Canada of today. Scarborough East is totally within metropolitan Toronto, but it still has farms as well as high rise apartments and residential neighbourhoods. Most of its people are of British ancestry or origin, but it also has large numbers from every part of Europe, from Asia, from Africa, from the Middle East, from Latin America, from the Caribbean. Many of its people are young and over 25 per cent are in school, college or university. However, the riding includes a growing number of senior citizens.

With all this diversity, however, there is something that the people have in common. Most are what can be called "middle Canadians"; they are not affluent, not impoverished, but are earning enough to be self-supporting; they are not "fat-cats," not "bums," but are working people.

The Prime Minister has professed to be concerned, and rightly so, about alienation—alienation of the west—even as he has been about alienation of Quebec. I should like to put it to the House that we need to be equally concerned about another kind of alienation. There is in Canada today not only regional alienation but sociological alienation. For many middle Canadians there is a growing unease about the direction our society has been following and the direction this government has been leading.

I should like to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this kind of alienation which many people are experiencing is partly due to the way in which the government seems to have become removed from the people. Government in Canada has become of such behemoth proportions, and seems so complex in its proceedings, that the average person can say of the government it is his government in name only. One way in which the government of Canada might come closer to the people is by taking steps to open membership in this House of Commons to more and more Canadians.

One of the difficulties that people find when standing for election to the House of Commons is that they usually have to give up their jobs. This imposes upon their families a financial burden that most men and women do not feel justified in asking. I would suggest that we need to reform our election practices so that membership of this parliament can be sought by people of all occupations. If parliament is to be truly representative it must be the nation in small. It must be representative of all religions, races, ethnic origins, languages and so on, but it also must be representative of occupations. Parliament has been dominated too long by too few occupations. I suggest that we should consider a proposal that parliament enact legislation requiring all employers to permit employees with two years seniority to become candidates without fear of losing their jobs. Employers would be required to give such employees leave of absence during the election campaign, such leave to be without pay. Employers should be pledged to grant leave of absence without pay to any employee elected to the House of Commons. Should an employee seek re-election after one term he or she would be deemed to have resigned since it could be interpreted that he or she had begun a new career.

I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that this kind of obligation is comparable to what was required of employers during wartime when they were expected to keep jobs open for employees who served with the armed forces. If we can require employers to make this kind of commitment during the war to those who would serve their country, surely we can do it in peace. Parliament should not be primarily a place of privilege but a vocation of service open to many.

The alienation of middle Canadians is accented by the way social forces make the local community and single individual seem insignificant. Much is said in this House about participation, involvement, consultation, but often more is said than is done. It is frequently the tendency of government to announce first and consult later—maybe. For example, last week the construction of three limited dividend apartment projects in Scarborough was announced. They are to be funded by the federal government. Community associations are concerned about this, not because they reject their social responsibility to low income citizens but because they are concerned about the impact of high rise building on family neighbourhoods and about the ingress of large numbers of children in such areas with already limited recreational and service facilities. When one Ontario Housing corporation project was proposed early last spring, a protest meeting assembled 1,000 ratepayers to voice these concerns, and the federal government take them seriously. The Ontario government listened to these people and the project was stopped. The government of that province has also initiated a study of the future of public housing in Ontario.

[Mr. Stackhouse.]

Mr. Speaker, I propose that the federal government should initiate a study of public housing in Scarborough. This study should involve all three levels of government and aim at developing more effective ways of meeting these housing needs than having the people together in buildings that often soon come to be looked upon as ghettos. Scarborough has about 15 per cent of the population of metro Toronto but about 33 per cent of the Ontario housing located in metro plus the limited dividend apartments. These housing projects, being partially or wholly financed from federal funds, show the great federal involvement in public housing in this municipality. I put it to the House that before any more projects are undertaken in Scarborough the federal government should invite the province and municipality to co-operate in a study that would indicate the best direction to follow in future. Part of the value of this study would be the demonstration to the community that it has a voice which is heard and is taken seriously.

• (1430)

Another reason many middle income Canadians feel alienated from society results from the development of a permissive approach to life. There is a permissiveness abroad that they often seem to believe is encouraged by the government. What the middle income Canadian wants is the rule of law to be respected. Civilization demands this because a civilization is a society that has learned to live together under the rule of law. Western society has come to take that rule for granted, but one of the results of urbanization has been the decline of that rule. In the United States the streets of the city are emptied at night by fear. Fear turns a key in every door and people lock themselves in their homes as though they were prisoners in cells. That can happen in Canada, too. I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that we need a "firming up" in our administration of law.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stackhouse: A bail system that allows thugs to commit violence while awaiting trial, a parole system that permits offenders to obtain one parole after another, a criminal code that says the life of the victim may be taken but not the life of the murderer—this is not the way to build confidence in the law. Justice must be tempered by mercy, but mercy should not be confused with sentimentality.

The alienation of wide segments of middle income Canadians from the government is increased by certain economic factors as well; for example, taxation. The graduated income tax was based on the concept of distributive justice—the belief that the strong should bear more of the burden than the weak. However, in an inflationary economy the graduated income tax has become a way by which middle Canadians are being penalized for trying to keep abreast of inflation. When they are successful in raising their dollar income to meet the decline in the dollar's purchasing power, they find themselves taxed at a higher rate. This often means not only that they must pay more tax dollars but, also, that a higher percentage of their income must go to the government. They thus find themselves robbed of much they had gained. What they thought was progress turns out to be a penalty.

We need a tax reform, Mr. Speaker, that will put the graduated income tax on a constant dollar basis. This would be a reform that would restore initiative to middle Canadians who have begun to wonder if it makes sense any longer to work harder, to strive more and to climb higher. When I urge that, I am not pleading for concessions to an economic elite. I am urging justice for that great mass of Canadians whose pay deductions are mounting so high that they wonder if Canada has become a country where effort is penalized instead of rewarded.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stackhouse: For example, I am thinking of a small businessman with whom I discussed this entire question. He told me that on Saturdays he cannot persuade his employees to work for him except, and I use his words, "as an act of charity." They say to him that after they have paid their taxes for the overtime, it really does not pay them to work on Saturday. That is typical of what one hears from Canadians right across the land. It is clear that we need a tax reform that will save Canadians from the unjust, confiscatory, legalized exploitation that our income tax has become.

The same must be said about inflation. John Kenneth Galbraith claims that the modern industrial state has to choose between the two evils of unemployment and inflation. Our government, Mr. Speaker, has resolved the dilemma. It has opted for both. This holds true not only in the instance of food prices which are of concern to everybody but, as well and equally, in the instance of housing. Housing, which middle income Canadians at one time considered a right is now a luxury which many can never achieve. For example, for every six families in Toronto who could buy a house ten years ago, only one can do so today. In 1961, the average new house cost approximately $17,000 and almost 15 per cent of families in the area could qualify for a mortgage. In 1971 the cost of a new home has risen to a price in excess of $40,000 and slightly over 2 per cent of families can qualify. The high rise apartment offers no solution either, since whether a family is buying a home or renting an apartment the cost for that housing can take up between 30 and 40 per cent of income. Indeed, I have letters from people in my riding who claim they are paying almost half their take-home pay in rent. At the same time, the government persists in collecting a sales tax on every item of material used in housing. Thus, at a time when working people should have their load made lighter, they find the government of their own country adding to their burdens.

Concern about inflation in food prices and housing costs, however, should not divert us from being concerned about inflation in the cost of government. The cost of government is now growing at a rate that is 50 per cent higher than the rate of growth enjoyed by the gross national product. The cost of government is thus increasing at a rate greater than that which the economy can absorb. In 1965 the government's share of the gross national product was 30 per cent; in 1971 it had risen to 37 per cent. If this rate of increase is to keep up we can expect that out of every dollar's worth of goods and services produced by the Canadian people, 40 per cent will go to some level of government.

If we are committed to combatting inflation, we must combat the cost of government. We must avoid those pressures referred to by the proverb, "the appetite grows with eating." The more the government does, the more it intends to do. The more it spends, the more it will spend. When we consider the way in which middle income Canadians are being obliged to carry the heavy burden of confiscatory taxes and increased prices as a result of inflation, it is small wonder that so many of them find themselves feeling as the mythical Sisyphus must have felt.

According to the story, that mythical figure was sentenced by the gods of Hades to a unique punishment. He had to push a great rock up a hill. It was a big rock and took all his strength to push up; however, when it reached the top, it rolled back to the bottom and Sisyphus had to start all over again. Middle income Canadians are beginning to feel just like Sisyphus. They are in the same plight. Somehow, they just cannot reach the top and stay there; they just cannot keep ahead of the demands of taxation and the penalties of inflation. So, we find that along with feeling alienated from the government, and its policies which have made them unable to keep up with their commitments they find that they cannot meet the pressure of general economic forces upon them. As a result they are beginning to wonder if their society is worth while. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that in the kinds of policies and legislation that this parliament will enact we can say to those people who have done so much to build this country that we are with them, that we are on their side and that we will endeavour to meet their needs and fulfil their aspirations.
