IMAGE EVALUATION TEST TARGET (MT-3)

Photographic Sciences

23 WEST MAIN STREET
Corporation

CIHM/ICMH Microfiche Series.

CIHM/ICMH Collection de microfiches.

Canadian Institute for Historical Microraproductions / Institut canadien de microreproductions historiques

The Iristitute has attempted to obtain the best original copy available for filming. Features of this. copy which may be bibliographically unique. which may alter any of the images in the reproduction, or which may significantly change the usual method of filming, are checked below.

Coloured covers/
Couverture de couleur
Covers damaged/
Couverture endommagée

Covers restored and/or laminated/
Couverture restaurée et/ou pellicule

Cover title missing/
Le titre de couverture manque
Coloured maps/
Cartes géngraphiques en couleur
Coloured ink (i.e. other than blue or black)/
Encre de couleur (i.e. autre que bleue ou noire)
Coloured plates and/or illustrations/
Planches et/ou illustrations en couleur
Bound with other material/
Relid avec d'autres documents
Tight binding may cause shadows or distortion along interior margin/
La re liure serrée peut causer de l'ombre ou de la distorsion le long de la marge intérieure

Blank leaves added during restoration may appear within the text. Whenever possible, these have been omitted from filming/
II se peut que certaines pages blanches ajoutbes lors d'une restauration apparaissent duns le texte. mais, lorsque cela etait possible, ces pages n'ont pas été filmes.

Additional commi: nts:/
Commentaires supplémentaires:

L'Institut a microfilmé le meilleur exemplaire qu'il lui a dté possible de se procurer. Les dérails de cet exemplaire qui sont peut-dtre uniques du point de vue bibliographique, qui peuvent modifier une image reproduite, ou qui peuvent exiger une modification dans la móthode normale de filmage sont indiqués ci-dessous.

Coloured pages/
Pages de couleur
Pages damaged/
Pages endommagées
Pages restored and/or laminated/
Pages restaurées et/ou pelliculées
Pages discoloured, stained or foxed/
Pages décolorées, tachetées ou piquées
Pages detached/
Pages detachées
Showthrough/
TransparenceQuality of print varies/
Qualité indgale de l'impression
Includes supplementary material/
Comprend du matériel supplémentaire

Only edition available/  Seule édition disponible

Pages wholly or partially obscured by errata slips. tissues, etc.. have been refilmed to ensure the best possible image/ Les pages totalement ou partiellement obscurcies par un feuiliet d'errata, une pelure. etc., ont été filmées à nouveau de facon à obtenir la meilleure image possible.

This item is filmed at the reduction ratio checked below/
Ce document est filme au taux de reduction indiqué ci-dessous.

The copy filmed here has been reproducsd thanks to the generosity of:

L'exemplaire filmé fut reproduit grâce à la générosité de:

La bibliothèque des Archives publiques du Canada

Les images sulvantes ont 6tt reproduites avec le plus grand soin, compte tenu de la condition et de la netteté de l'exempiaire filmb, et on conformité avec les conditions du contrâ de filmage.

Les exemplaires originaux dont la couverture en papier est imprimee sont filmés en commençant par lo premier piat ot en terminant soit par la dernière page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration, soit par le second plat, seion io cas. Tous les autres oxempiaires originaux sont film6́ on commençant par la premidre page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'lliustration et en terminant par ia derniäre page qui comporte une telie empreinte.

Un des symboies suivants apparaitra sur la dernilre image de chaque microfiche, selon le cas: le symbole $\rightarrow$ signifie "A SUIVRE", ie symbole $\nabla$ signifie "FIN".

Les cartes, pianches, tabieaux, etc., peuvent être filmbs à des taux de réduction différents. Lorsque le document est trop grend pour être reproduit en un seui cliché, il est filmé à partir de l'angie supérieur gauche, de gauche à droite, et de haut en bas, en prenant le nombre d'images nécessaire. Les diagrammes suivants iliustrent la mbthode.

A TOUR

${ }^{2}$
THROUGH
THE THEATRE OF WAR.

PRICE THREE SHIELINGS.

A TOUR

 THROUGH
THE THEATRE OF WAR,

IN THI MONTHS OF
NOVEMBER and DECEMBER, 1792, And JANUART, 1793. INTERAPERSED WITH 1

A VARIETY OF CURIOUS, ENTERTAINING, AND MILITARY ANECDOTES.

TO WHICH ARE SURJOINED INTERESTING PARTICULARS OF THE DEATH or

LOUIS XVI.

BY AN EYE-WITNESS OF THE FACT.

LONDON:

PRINTED PORJ. OWEN, NO. 168, PICCADIILY; AND J. BEW, NO. 28, Paternostier-Row.
1793.

隹

$$
\begin{aligned}
& \text { TOU } \mathbf{O} \\
& \text { THE THEATRE OF WAR *. } \end{aligned}
$$

THE rapid fucceffion of interefting fcenes. acted in France within three or four months preceding this Tour, a period the moft critical, and moft decifive of the Revolution, had been exhibited with fuch a ftrange contraft of colour; there was fomething fo diffonant from common-fenfe, and the common courfe of events in the opinions vulgarly entertained concerning the ftate of that country; I had heard fo much of a petty faction lording it over a mighty nation; I had heard fo much of a band of ragamuffins driving before them the moft powerful, and beft difciplined armies in Europe; I had heard fo much of all retigion being deftroyed, becaufe all religions were tolerated, that I could not help feeling a wifh to vifit the feat of thefe fuppofed wonders, and to fee if fuch things really were. No Atranger to the manners, the language, and the cuftoms of the French, and not totatly deftitute of acquaintance in the provinces that have been fo lately the theatre of war, I thought I might be as good 2 juage of the fpirit, and refources of the French nation, as many who undertake to decide upon the fubject, without having ever fet a foot in France. My means of writing are certainly not equal to my means of obfervation ; but ftill I hope; that while "I extenuate nothing, nor fet down aught in malice," the honeft truth will in fome degree atone for poverty of diction, and the want of a polifhed ftyle. So much by way of preface.

* Part of the fubftance of this Tour has appeared in letters publighed in the Diary.

[ 2 ]

[ 3 ]

1 leave to famionable travellers, who ride and write poft; to relate the trifling occurrences of the road, the merits of the inns they put up at, and the quality of their fare. Nothing worth mine or my reader's notice happened on the way to Dover ; and I hould have left Dover alike unnoticed, had it been only what it ufually is, the refidence of inquifitorial cuftom-houfe officers, and impofing mariners. But there was a colony of French emigrants there. Their wan faces, and melancholy looks, befpoke the cares that preyed upon their minds, and their fqualid drefs betrayed their poverty. "Sharp mifery had wore them to the bone." 1 faw them ftand upon the beach, eying wifhfully the dear natal land, to which they dared not to return. All confideration of their deferts laid afide, my heart bled for them; and my imagination looking into pofterity, I thought I faw them here, as on the other borders of their country, pining in fufpenfe and doubt for many $B_{2} \quad 2$ tedious

[ 4 ]

a tedious day; uncertain whether they fhould ftay to farve abroad, or dare the vengeace of the laws at home; waiting in hopes of fome relaxation in the feverity of the decrees, or of fome fmall affiftance from the friends they might have left behind, till expectation, and their means of exiftence, worn out together, they fhould be driven to defpair. Then reverting to times paft, I compared them to the exiles in the factions that diftracted Italy fome centuries ago, who, left without any other refource, gave, by their depredations, to the term banifbed men * the fignification of robbers. . Is it not to be feared, that, from the fame caufe, the word emigrant may fuffer the fame perverfion $\dagger$ ?

Luckily for me, and for my readers, the mafter of the packet-boat came to ftop the courfe of thefe gloomy ideas, by telling me that the wind was fair. It was Atrong alfo, and our paffage was proportionably rough and fpeedy. I had ftepped on thore at Calais, ftill ftaggering with the effect of the fea-ficknefs, but pleafed at the fame time to find, that, like Anteas, I gained frefh frength from touching my mother earth, when I perceived a bayonet at my breaft. Arretez, faid a boy about fifteen years of age, who, as Mr. Shandy would have faid, was no higher than my leg. I fopped; and immediately fome more of the fame fmall infantry furrounded the whole of the living cargo unloaded from the packet-boat. Thus made prifoners, as foon as we got footing on the land of liberty, we were conducted firft to a fmall office, where we gave in our names; and from thence to the municipality. The examination of myfelf, and compagnon de voyage, was thort. The mayor, indeed, on finding himfelf an, fiwered in better French than he expected,

[^0]
[ 5 ]

$$
\text { B } 3 \quad \text { aiked }
$$

[ 6 ]

afked me what proofs I had about me of my being an Englifhman. None, faid I, but a few guineas. The mayor readily conceived the implication, that no emigrant would return with a guinea in his pocket, fmiled, faid our faces fufficiently a:tefted our country, and told us we might go.

Some of our fellow-travellers were not fa fortunate : three of them, reckoning without their boft, had added to their names that of the inn at which they were going to lodge, Unluckily, being real or fuppofed emigrants, their lodgings proved to be the gaol, where they found feven and twenty companions of both fexes, crowded indifcriminately into the fame room, and lying on fraw in a fituation truly pitiable. To confinement, to fevere treatment, and to fcanty fare, was joined the hourly dread of falling victims to popular fury. The very evening before we landed, a regiment of volunteers, lately levied on the coafts of Picardy, having received the order to march, fwore they would not leave the: Arifocrats behind them, but would carry. their heads to the frontiers. Like true Frenchmen, fudden in their refolves, and ftill more fudden in putting them into execution, they affembled, howling like favages, around the prifon, and with taunting threats began to affail the doors. But on the firft notice being given, the drums beat to arms, all the citizens of Calais affembled, and with great difficulty withdrow the ruffians from their prey. In the mean time, the wretches within were in the moft fearful trepidation. The poor women, in particular, mindful of the maffacres of Paris and Verfailles, thought their fate was certain, and were fo much affected, that their fright had nearly occafioned. what they feared. Bleeding and other medin cal affiftance were hardly fufficient to reftore two of them to their vital functions.

[ 7 ]

[ 8:]

We came to Calais in time to fee one battalion of this regiment march away, and to fay truth, their appearance accorded well with the bloody purpofe they had manifefted the evening before. There was no uniformity in their uniforms, nor any thing like equality in their fize. Their arms were rufty, their accoutrements dirty, and fome of them in the common drefs of peafants. But in their looks was much determination, and though only embodied a month before, they marched and performed a few military motions with tolerable precifion. The native allegrefle of the French was here exhibited in lively colours. Some were laughing; fome were finging in the ranks; fome had their ammunition bread ftuck upon their bayonets, and fome had fiddles tied to their knapfacksVive l'égalité-No regard to rank and dignity is here a check to the freedom of focial intercourfe. While the firft company was waiting on the fquare for the reft, the captain, who was mounted on one of the verieft jades I ever faw, amufed his men, by fhowing off the paces of his fteed, and his own horfe:manhip. They were worthy of one another. He was, however, the admiration of his foldiers. Parbleu, faid one, mais il monte bien-Sacre'bleu, comme il y va, faid another. This difplay might have lafted till his horfe would have been incapable of the march; but luckily the reft of the battalion foon came up, and the whole marched awray with moft characteriftic chearfulnefs, and unconcern. Many of them chaunted the Marfeilles hymn, and many of them bad the inhabitants of Ca lais farewel! Adieu, faid they, bons citoyens de Calais; nous allons woir s'ily a des ennemis.

[ 9 ]

At this moment an officer ftepped up to us, who, by the eafe and familiarity of his addrefs, feemed a true Frenchman of former times. Ces meffieurs font Anglais? faid he, and without waiting for our anfwer, continued: "I have much efteem for the Englifh; they are a generous nation ; they fend us muikets and knapfacks." The Englifh, faid I, have little claim to generofity on that account : they fend you mufkets for your money; a Jew or a Dutchman would do the fame: C'effégal, faid he. I thought, however, that one compliment deferved another, and foll began to praife the apparent confidence of the foldiers who had juft marched away. 'Tis true, faid he, the poor fellows have but juft put on the military harnefs; and yet they are abfolutely carelefs of life. All our volisnteers are the fame. Formerly a village was a fcene of defolation, when the fubdelegué wanted a man or two for the militia. But now myriads of men fpring up armed out of the earth. Infpired by the word liberty, they fight with an ardour unheard of before. 'Tis a perfect rage. They go foaming at the mouth to the attack of 2 battery, with as much contempt of the enemy's fire, as if they had been fed all their lives upon bullets. But I am forry to fay, that a lamentable fpirit of infubordination and cruelty prevails among them. It is a difgrace to the nation.

[ 10 ]

At dinner I thought I had difcovered one of the caufes of the latter propenfity. Some itinerant muficians came in, and played us Ca Ira and the Marfeilles hymn. After thefe they gave us a tune, which had at the conclufion a paffage of fuch peculiar expreffion, that I could not help afking its name. It is, faid a pretty little Savoyard girl, with the fofteft fmile imaginable, it is the favourite air Coupez lui le cou (off with his head.) The French officer's remark recurred to my mind. $'$ 'is a difgrace to the nation, faid I. Luckily? however, the French mufic has little influence over the paffions. If it were as powerful as that of the Greeks is faid to have been, it would be dangerous to come into a country, where the mational tunes fuggef no idens, but thofe of hanging. *and cutting of throats.

[ 12 ]

Here I cannot help recollecting, that at the moment I was preparing to fet off for the continent, one of my friends took me by the arm. But, faid he, you run a rifk of ftarving in the country you are going to. There is no fear of that, faid I, for if the French find they have too many mouths, they have nothing to do but to cut off a few more heads. True, faid he, fhaking bis; I did not think of that; you are fure of not wanting bread any way. I thought, however, that it was worth while to enquire, whether this prophecy of famine was likely to be realized. Queftions of this kind I never afk of the richer ranks. They are a barometer that affords very fallacious indications of national profperity. They are the top of the tree, that flourifhes while the trunk is hollow and decayed. I therefore addreffed myfelf to a poor woman, and alked her the price of bread. I do not know, faid fhe, I bake my own. My wheat cofts me 40 livres the raziere.* ; 'tis au unheard-of price; but yet it is of eafy purchafe. Unriddle me this, ma bonne, faid I. It is, anfwered the, becaufe every kinid of labour is well paid. One bleffing, at leaft, faid I to myfelf, has then refulted from the revolution.

[^1]> profperity.

[ 13 ]

Nor is this the only one, for, unlefs I am much deceived, it has already effaced a part of the prejudices, which, like our Englifh channel, formed a barrier between the two nations. The name of Englifhman commands refpect. Every body we met with at their publis tables were eager to treat us with

[^2]diftinguifhed

[ 14 ]

diftinguifhed attention. It feemed as if our sellow claim to freedom, and our honourable neutrality, had made us brothers. And, indeed, I foon found myl $?$ dubbed a citizen. Calais having nothing to detain our attention, I went to the municipality for a paffport, and finding myself in a public office with many other perfons whofe heads were covered, I kept mine covered alfo. Pleafe to take off your hat, faid the Grefier. I did fo. He then led me to a ftandard, and meafured me with the greateft care and precifion. From thence returning to his detk, he began to furvey my face, as if drawing my portrait. Take off your hat, faid the Greffier again. I thought this rather too much; but I complied. It was to examine the height of my forehead. But my nofe was the featur that gave the Greffier the greateft trouble. Par tous les diables, faid the Greffier, I do not know what to make of this nofe. Mon camarade, added he, addrefing himfelf to a

[ 15 ]

Frenchman who was ftanding by, what do you call that nofe? It is not aquiline? Ma foi, son, anfwered he, it is not aquiline. This curious difcuffion continued fome time longer, and I began to think it ridiculoufly tirefome; but my lofs of patience was compeufated by the gratification of my vanity, when I found, that for want of an appropriate epithet for my nofe, it was Atyled in general terms bien-fait. At laft I obtained my paffport, containing a very paricular defcription of my perfon, with the title citoyen prefixed to my name.

This title citoyen is the only one now in ufe, and is interchanged between people of every degree. It is the touchftone, the $/ b i b-$ boleth as it were of the enemies of the revolution. They feem to be choaking when they pronounce it ; nor does it ever fail to be accompanied by fome infidious obfervation. At the table d'loôte at Calais there was a gentleman, tleman, who had been pointed out to me as one of thofe Ari/locrats, that wander about the country, to avoid the ill-will and moleftation to which they might be expofed by the publicity of their principles at home. Finding the eyes of the company drawn upon him by his addreffing every body in the old diferiminating ftyle, he determined that if he fhould make ufe of the new one, he would at lent have his jeft, and faid to the waiter, whether would you with me to call you citoyen-gargon, or garcon-citoyen. Such petulant imprudence, and fuch ufelefs fcoffs, have brought ruir upon many friends of the old government. It was fuch conduct that occafioned the denth of him who is called the innocent prifoner, murdered on the 2d of September. When his barbarous felf-created judges had abfolved him from all blame, and ordered him to be conducted home, the crowd, as was their cuftom, defired him to cry, Vive la nation.

[ $1 /$ ]

A fig * for the nation, exclaimed he, and was inmediately torn to pieces.

The diligence with which we faw them working at fuch parts of the fortifications of Calais as flood in need of repairs, convinced us that they are determined to be prepared for an attack from any quarter whatever ; and that the patriotic gifts of individenals do not trancquilize them as to the intentions of our government, and the fipirit of the nation at large. Timent Danaos © dona forentes.

The next morning, Nov. 23, we hired a carriage, and fet off for Dunkirk. The Englifh newfpapers had foretold a famine in France with ftill more affurance than my friend had done: they faid that one crop had fpoiled upon the ground, and that the want of hands had denied the culture that could alone infure a future one. Our eyes contradicted the latter part of this information, and the inhabitants univerfally concurred in deftroying the credit of the former. The harveft they faid, had been abundant, and the corn well houfed. How hard that the French nation fhould bc thus doomed to ftarve, that a few needy garretteers may live!

[^3]
[ 13 ]

The high fate of tillage that we had obferved near Calais foon difappeared; for we foon reached a country that does not admit of cultivation. A barren fandy wafte extends, I was going to fay, all along the reft of the road; but road there is none. When one track over the common is too much worn, the driver is obliged to feek another, at the riik of overturning the carriage, or of being obliged to turn back. No fuch accident however happened to us. We paffed through Gravelines, and reached Dunkirk in fafety.

[ 19 ]

The fortifications of both thefe towns are in exccllent order, and round the whole of the latter two rows of palifadoes, one in the covered way, the other on the tabes or flope into the ditch, have been lately fet up, to prevent the poffibility of infult. Within the ramparts, two cavaliers have alfo been ereeted, that overlook and command the country towards the Auftrian Netherlands, to a confiderable diftance.

In the gaol at Dunkirk were eighty-nine emigrants, who were no better lodged than the poor wretches at Calais, and among whom yas the Duchefs of Choifeul-Stainville. Being ftrongly fufpected of having contributed large fums to the common ftock at Coblentz, fhe was treated with great feverity ; nor was it till after fome time, and much folicitation, that fhe obtained rather better accommodations in a kind of Magdalen Horpital, called the Filles Penitentes. When $\mathrm{C}_{2}$ Lewis Lewis the Fourteenth's Queen propofed fending the celebrated Ninon de l'Enclos to the fame place, the was tola by the French wit, Malherbe, that Ninon was neither fille nor penitentc. This faving will not altogether apply to the Duchefs. Fille the certainly is not ; but by this time fhe may reafonably be fufpected to be penitente.

While moft people in England are accufing the French of a difregard to all laws, human and divine, and of invading all property without fcruple or remorfe, their conduct in regard to our nation feems to prove the contrary. Both at Gravelines and Dunkirk, we found the Englifh nuns excepted from the general profcription, living unmolefted, and in the enjoyment of their ufual revenue.

The only perfon we were acquainted with at Dunkirk being abfent, we enquired of our landlord at the Hôtel d'Angleterre, whether there there was any one in the houfe who might choofe to confolidate his fupper with ours, and were told that there were feveral gentlemen who would not be forry to fup in company. We fat down, and politics, as ufual, were the topic, on which a Frenchman was defcanting, according to his own national expreffion, à tort $\mathcal{E}$ à travers, with equal fhallownefs and felf-fufficiency. There was another at table to whom nobody feemed to attend ; for his drefs was fo plain, that it might almoft be called mean. His appearance, in a word, was that of a quaker, but of a quaker in difhabille. The firft objections he modeftly made were anfwered with words and looks ftrongly fignificunt of contempt; but his triumphant adverfary foon perceived much meaning under the fimplicity of his fpeech, as he might have obferved the finert linen beneath his ruftic coat. In proportion as one funk, the other rofe, till both found their proper level. The flippant Fronchman

[ 21 ]

$$
\mathrm{C}_{3} \quad \text { Mara- }
$$

$\left[\begin{array}{ll}22\end{array}\right]$

(Maraviglie diro) was abafhed, while the other gave him a leffon of profound philofophy, delivered with all the eloquence of an orator. But as generous as he was powerful, he did not purfue his conqueft far; for breaking the chain of his reafoning, he condefcended to give us fome anecdotes of himfelf, highly characteriftic of his difpofition. He faid, that fome time before a friend had introduced an. African Captain to him. As I neither knew him nor his crrand, added he, I made him ftay and dine; but when I found that he was come to propofe my being an adventurer in his infamous expedition, I told him, that as he was at dinner, till dinner fhould be over, I was his humble fervant; but I begged him never to come within my doors again. Captain, faid I, I am the tendereft hearted man alive : I fhould weep if my little kitten s'étoit feulement fait mal à la patte; and yet I fhould like to fee you hanged. Heavens ! how happy I fhould be to feee you hanged.

[ 23 ]

hanged. The captain did not know how to take it ; but I ran no rifk; the feclings of a dealer in human flefh are not eafily offended.

Oh ! but I had a better adventure than this the other day, continued he; I converted a capuchin friar. Ob! le grand miracle! The whole order of St. Francis never performed fo great a one. He had been in Africa too. I began by telling him he was a villain. Ho ! ho ! at firf he feemed inclined to be angry; but he was as poor as a mendicant, and I was giving him a good dinner ; fo that I had time to prove my affertion, and at laft I made him confers that he was indeed a very great fcoundrel. When I had thus obtained his confidence, he told me his ftory. He had taken the oath, he faid ; but his parifhioners were fo much attached to fuperftition, and their nonjuring prieft, that they ftoned him whenever he made his appearance among them. I told him to advance to meet their blows, and to prefent his back fair to their cudgels, and that not a man in the village would have the heart to ftrike him. He took my advice, and I find it fucceeded; for I have not loft fight of him ; I am proud of my profelyte. O le grand miracle! que d'avoir converti un capucin!

$$
\mathrm{C}_{4} \quad \text { blows }
$$

The perfon who was entertaining us with thefe, and many a curious tale befide, proved to be a gentleman of independent fortune, and a member of the National Convention. And a noble and an excellent original he ir, The fimplicity of his drefs is contrafted with the moft eafy and refined politenefs, while his leffons of philofophy are delivered with a kind of childifh fportivenefs, that difarms envy, and conceals his fuperiority even from thofe who liften to him with admiration. Indifferent as to his own eafe and accommodation, he endeavours, with the moft extenfive philanth:opy to accommodate and gratify every with a farms from ration. modaenfive ratify everyevery body about him ; and while avowing himfelf an atheift *, he expreffes his hearty regret at being fo. Many of his political opinions would aftonifh our countrymen, who, as the refpectable Burke very truly fays, che. rifh their prejudices; but will it be very eafy to refute them ?-Of that I am no judge.

[ 25 ]

He contends, that there is a vice in the civil polity of almoft every ftate in Europe, that is neceffarily the parent of revolution, creating all the mifery and crimes that afflict the great mafs of mankind, and driving them to infurrection as a laft refource. The go-

Abstract

* I am aware, that any praife beftowed upon a man of metaphyfical opinions fo erroneous, may expofe me to cenfure in an age, in which uncharitable inferences are drawn with fo wide a latitude. I therefore think it neceffary to fay, that I fincerely lament this gentleman's unfortunate error; but I pity him at the fame time, becaufe I do not think that a man's belief depends upon his will ; nor do I choofe to damn him in this world, becaufe I am not certain, that the Great Deity, whofe exiftence he cannot conceive, will damn him in the next.

vernment

vernment draws the money out of the pockets of the poor, to give it, under the denomination of places and peufions, to the rich. The rich avail themfelves of this to accumulate property, till at laft their Coloffal ftride reaches from province to province, and the whole land, that feems the birth-right of the community, is monopolized by a few individuals. The reft of the nation is then left at their mercy ; and both the knowledge of mankind and experience prove, that the reft of the nation have nothing to hope for at their hands, but what they can obtain by making their own fubfervient to the fupport, the luxury, and the pleafure of their lordly mafters, who always take care that the falary of their day's labour fhall be precifely enought to fupply reft and ftrength for the labours of the next. Thus are they reduced to mere working automata, with neither the means nor leifure neceffary to acquire inftruction, or to foften their manners to focial intercourfe and enjoyckets ninaThe ulate aches hole comluals. their kind the their king the mafy of to the brk-enjoyments; and thus is the human fpecies degraded. The evil, by a neceffary progreffion, grows greater; for the number of rich growing fmaller, in proportion as the moft wealthy fwallow up the reft, the demand for labour becomes lefs, while the competition for employment increafes. A harder bargain is confequently made, till at laft the point of fufferance is paft; the beaft of burden kicks. the load off his back, turns to a beaft of prey, tears every thing he meets with to pieces, and takes a blind and furious vengeance for all the oppreffion he has fuffered. Of this, continued the Frenchman with a figh, my country is a lamentable example.

[ 27 ]

If we want an example of what a more equitable allotment of fhares would produce, let us look towards the American United States, and the Swifs cantoons, the two mort popular governments in the wide world. In thefe two countries, local circumftances and political political inftitutions have difcouraged the too great accumulation of landed property. In thefe two countrics, though many are very rich, there is nobody without a fmall eftate in poffeflion or perfpective, or without the eafy means of acquiring one. The confequence is, that in the firli you may fleep in peace with your doors and windows open, and that in the fecond * you may with equalfecurity leave your effects on the highway. In both, the government has no ftanding armies, the King bas no cafles, you hear of no malcontents, and you fee no beggars. Crimes and mifery, in a word, are equally unheard of. It is then evidently the duty of all good governors to provide for the diffemination of propenty; not by an equal Agrarian law, that would leave induftry without a motive, and ftifte the arts at their birth; but by proper laws of fuccefiion and other equitable means. If they do not, they may, like vampires, feed for a time upon the blood of the people; but the day will come when their own will be fpilt. This, faid the Frenchman again, has been wofully exemplified by iny country, and by many a one before.

[ 28 ]

[^4]
[ 29 ]

After this monopoly of landed property, the grand fource of human vices and misfortuncs, the greateft fcourge that can afflict a people is an extenfive foreign commerce. If by the nation be underftood a few merchants, thip-owners, thip's hufbands, brokers, bankers, manufacturers, and fifcal officers, the mation is indeed profperous when trade is in a thriving fate. But if by the nation we may be allowed to underfand all thofe not comprized in the above defcription, that is to fay at leaft nine-tenths of the community, the cafe is the reverfe. It is felf-evident that foreign commerce can only confift of exportation and importation, unlefs indeed where a people fhould be merely brokers and carriers for others. It is equally evident, that a country can only export what is produced by the labour of its inhabitants on the foil, or by their drudgery in manufactories. If then no part of what is imported comes to the fhare of thofe who drudge and toil, can it be denied, that they give up eafe, plenty, and leifure, for nothing; that the neceffaries of life, the enjoyments, and repofe of the many, are fi:crificed to feed the luxury of the few? What a noble export-trade does Ireland carry on in beef, pork, butter, and flour!-Well, what does the nation at large that live in that fertile country get in return? The advantage of never tafting meat, bread, or butter; of feeding on potatoes and butter milk, and fleeping among the litter of their pigs: all which their noble landlords, while drinking French wines, and wearing French filks, affure us is vafly conducive to their health !-Oh!

[ $3^{1}$ ]

but in fome other countries, thofe who furnifh all the exports, obtain a fmall portion of the returns. Yes : from America a noxious and intoxicating weed, an enervating drink from Afia, and from the other parts of Europe liquid poifons, that do indeed for a moment make them forget the facrifice they coft.

This evil is the offspring of the former ; for if property were divided with any tolerable equality, a man would begin by providing amply for his fupport, comfort, and enjoyment ; and would only fuffer the furplus to be exchanged for foreign fuperfluities; nor would he for fuperfluities condemn himfelf to inceffant labour. I have made an exact calculation, continued he, and I find that four hours of work in a day, in our temperate climates, would fuffice for the fubfintence and happinefs of a man and his family. Thofe that remain would afford him leifure for inftruction and reflection; and it would then become impofible for fuch men to be impofed upon by the cant of a few interefted individuals, who affure them that the nation has reached the higheft pitch of profperity, becaufe they themfelves have obtained every gratification of riot and luxury that they can devife. But to keep men ignorant, you muft make them work, and to make them work, you muft kcep them ignorant. This is the eternal circle in which rolls the torrent of abufe. I have often heard it faid, that heaven made fome for enjoyment, and fome fer toil. $I$ leave to thofe who believe in the exiftence of a God to juftify him on that head; but I confefs that I cannot myfelf fee why thofe who do nothing thould have all, and why thofe who do all fhould hare nothing.

[ $3^{2}$ ]

He held a number of political tenets more extraordinary ftill. He faid when wars were declared by the caprice, or for the interefts of Kings, that Kiugs alone fhould fight the battles ; battles ; that if nations at Marge were confulted, hoftilities would "rarely octeur'; 'thate a country ahbuld never engege in a wat itt defence of a flate, on which it is ffund it cannot depend for defence ; riphat a minifter, who fhould attempe to embloil hiss country for futile or infufficient reafons, fhould be fent abroad, to fulfil in perfonthe digagements he might have made; that the beft way to prevent wars would be for every one to underftand the ufe of arms, whieh is indeed the bounden duty of every freeman; for Without the means of refffing oppreifion, who can flatter himfelf that he is free : large fate would then be unattackable, and the fee fimple of a fmall one would not be worth the conqueft.

[33 ${ }^{1}$

He faid, that magiftrates who thould af: fume no improper power, could never be afraid of its being wrefted out of their hands; and that the majority of a nation has a-right to a bad government, upon the abfurd fuppofition of its choofing fuch a one, in preference to a: goad one's being thruft down their throats. But thefe and many other of his Atrange opinigns ${ }^{\top}$ forbear to mention, left, I hould expofe my new acquaintance to the cenfure of

$[34]$

- צyec Thofe wholefale critics, that in coffeHoufes cry down all philofophy.

Among the fingularities of this man's character was his inconfiftent mode of travelling. Sometimes rolling rapidly along in an elegant carriage, fometimes flumbering in a diligence, and fometimes trudging with his bag upon his back. This time he chofe the public conveyance; and to enjoy his company, we chofe it likewife. His greateft fault ${ }^{*}$, at leaft the greateft I could obferve in we fupped at the table d'hôte, with a great number of officers of volunteer battalions. Their converfationiturned upon the contemptible behaviour of the Auftrians, who, faid they, never fhawed themfelves in the open field ; but always fired from behind entrenchments, houfes, hedges; and trees. You cannor, faid one, accufe the emigrant regiment of Dillon of this fort of Mynefs. : You muft remember their obftinate courage at Commines, where it was my good fortune to take one of them prifoner. When he faw himfelf furrounded, he called out to me, Bone Fran-gentleman's infidelity, to bring a general accufation of atheifm againft the National Convention, becaufe calumny, and bearing falfe witnefs againft one's neighbour, are diteetly contrary to the firit of the religion we profefs.

[^5]
[ 35 ]

cíes, and I gave him quarter. My men wanted to kill him; but I made him a rampart of my body. Now, would you believe it? When I had conducted him hither, he had the infolence to tell me, that as foon as exchanged, he would go and fight again for his King. Clest un brave bomme, faid another. Yes, an* fwered my Dunkirk friend, but one of thofe brave men qu'il faudroit affafiner. Such!is the difpofition of many patriots, in other réfipects humane and charitable men. They deem their caufe fo facred, and are fo exafperated at feeing it unprovokedly attacked, that they think it ought to be fupported per fas 8 nefas. This error is no doubt lamentable, but it admits of fome excufe.

The officers in whofe company we were fupping were very different from thofe I had been ufed to live with in France. Oh! what a falling off was there! When I heard how profanely vulgar was their converfation, and faw the coarfenefs of their manners, I could not help regretting, for a moment, with Mr. Burke, that the days of chivalry were over, that the unbought grace of life was gone. But when I. reflected that they had been chofen by their comrades for their good con? , and military qualities; when I had noticed the honourable marks of bravery many of them bore about their perfons, and had liftened to their relations of fome well fought days, I thought that the brilliant tinfel of outward fhow, was well compenfated by this folid merit. In a few years, faid I to myfelf, when thoic educated for officers fhall no longer de weir pofts, the French army will not want caiefs of equal politenefs and bravery. I faid in a few years, and in a few days I found my expectation anticipated; for I foon perceived that fome of the batalions were officesed by men of excellent education, and refined manners, though fome, as may be gathered from what I have faid above, were D 3 quite quite the reverfe. Nor was it unworthy of remark, that the fame leaven feemed almoft always to run through a whole regiment.

[ 37 ]

$\left[\begin{array}{ll}38\end{array}\right]$

As we were azerly defirous of feeing the havock done by $\quad$ fiege, or rather by the bombardment of Lifle, we rofe the next morning no later than the fun. It fhone' upon a difmal fcene indeed: befides a great part of the Fauxbourg de Fives, behind which the enemy had mafked themfelves, and their batteries, and which was confequently deftroyed by the fire of the place, feven huindred houfes were levelled with the ground. They were all in the quarter of St. Sauveur, Nor was it without meaning that the attack was directed againft that part of the town; for being almoft entirely inhabited by poor people, the affailants hoped that, to fave the little all they poffeffed, they would infift upon the Governor's giving up the sown. Befides, by thefe means the Ariftocrats without fpared the

[ 39 ]

the Arifocrats within, and did little injury to any but the ci-devant canaille, whofe lives and properties are naturally held in cheap eftimation by perfonages of fuch elevated rank, as thofe that directed the attack. This charitable experiment, made according to the old maxim, in animal vile, did not however fucceed. The poor people, although four hundred of them were killed, were neither difcouraged nor terrified into fedition. For nine whole days the fhower of fhot and fhells was inceffant, no lefs than thirty thoufand red-hot balls, and feven thoufand bombs, being thrown into the city within that period. Nothing could equal the terror of the women : fome who fought fafety in their cellars, could hardly be kept alive by the adminiftration of cordials ; and feveral others affured me, that they paffed eight nights and days without clofing their eyes, and yet without feeling any other inconvenience than laf$D_{4}$ fitude, the fitude. I think I have often heard medical men affirm, that human nature could hardly fupport fuch a long abience of the kind refettion, flecp.

[ 4: ]

This timidity of the women was not withe out exceptions; and as to the hardier fex, they began at lat to hold the fire of the ellemy in perfés contempt. On the ninth morning, a fhell falling in the fter ealled La Rua体 vicux Marcbé aux Moutuks, a large fragment of the globular mafs was picked up by a barber. He filled it with water, and taking his walh-ball, alked who would be thaved? Though the Freuch are feldom ferupuloufly attentive to the cleanlinefs of their faces, their beards were now more than ufually long, their endeavours to prevent the mifchief the red balls might do, having given them full occupation for the eight preceding days. A number of them therefore fubmit-ted to the operation in the middle of the ftreet, though the fire was at that moment uncommonly fevero,

[ 4i ]

This was the laft effort of the Auftrians, Immediately after they began to prepare for a retreat, the more fhameful as they had ex, pected it the lefs. When the officer that brought the fummons to furrender was con, ducted to the council of war, and the bandage was removed from his cyes, he caft them around him with a look moft ftrongly expreffive of contempt and compaffion ; fo much was he convinced that the town and its dofenders were either devoted to captura or deftruction *. This confidence muft, no doubt,
> * This, and moft of the preceding particulars, wosecommunicated to us by a veteran officer, who lias commanded the whole body of the national guards of Lifle, fince its firt formation, and to whom we had letters of introduction, He was himfelf a member of the council of war.

[ 42 ]

doubt, have arifen as much from the eafy conqueft of Longwy and Verdun, as from their opinion of their own ftrength. Formidable as was the Duke of Saxe-Tefchen's artillery, his army did not exceed eighteen thoufand men.

While I was viewing the quarter of St, Saveur, that I had formerly feen fo well inhabited, and that was now reduced to a fcene of defolation and ruin, and reflecting that thefe heavy calamities were often brought upan a people by the caprice, or for the interefts of a fingle man, I could not reprefs my indignation. Thefe defpotic kings of the continent, faid I, would fain be thought God's vicegerents ; but, furely, they rather bring with them blafts from hell, to undo the work of creation. At a diftance from the wars they ordain, or if there, sither hid among the reft of the baggage, or herding with the futtlers, they fit as it were in anothers other atmofphere, contemplating the mifchief they occafion. Will no avenging fiend rife from out of the bowels of the earth ? I had hardly formed the wifh, when I thought it was realized. From the midft of a heap of bricks on which my eyes were fixed, I faw a black head, and then a ghaftly face flowly afcending. The feectre continued to rife; and I at laft perceived that it was a poor man, who for want of better fhelter, had buried himfelf in the cellar of the houfe he had formerly inhabited. A little trap-door afforded an entrance to his fubterraneous abode, of which the unhealthy humidity, joined to his feclufion from the air, and to his ftate of mifery, had, no doubt, given him the corpfelike look that had at firft furprized me. On exploring more of the ruins, I found that feyeral other inhabitants had been reduced to take up with fimilar lodgings.

[ 43 ]

We thould have been glad to fee what mifchief had been done to the ramparts; but the fentinels forbad all approach to the part that was oppofite the point of attack. As far, however, as we could judge from a diftant view, the damage was fmall, as muft indeed have ineceffarily been the cafe; for it not being the intention of the Auftrians to make a breach, their approaches were never brought within paint-blank fhot of the place. The ground occupied by their entrenchments we were free to vifit, and there we found fuffiv cient proof of the lofs they muft have furs tained, and of the fkill of the French gun. ners, all the holes made by the bombs of the befieged in their fall, being confined within a few paces of the trenches. Nor was their zeal inferior to their fkill. Some of the mont able among them, who could ill be fpared, ftood by their pieces of ordnance for eight and forty fucceffive hours.

Befides

[ 46 ]

Befides the houfes levelled with the ground, about fifteen hundred were more or lefs daw maged, the random thot flying to the further 1 extremity of the town. Only one reached the citadei, but that was an unfucky one indeod. It carried away both the legs of an officer, who, deeming himfelf in perfeet fed curity, was talking with his wife at the doot of his barrack. He died two hours after.

I Was hardly more ftruck by the ravages of war, than by the abfence of the dronifi monks, with which the Preets of lifle were formerly fo much infefted. The ${ }^{6}$ black, white, and grey, with all their trumpery;" had totally difappeared. This change rejoiced me the more; as I had been witnefs at that place to a cruel abufe of monaftic inftitutions. Though not perfectly in its place here, I can* not forbear relating it, left any of my readers fhould chance to regret the abolition of religious orders.

In the fevere froft with which the year 1783 ended, and 1784 began, the younger monks at the convent of Carmelite Friars, (les Grands, Garmes) who had long noticed the myfterious vifits of their elders to a particular, room, whither they were forbid to go themfelves; theie younger monks, I fay, felt their fufpicions, and their jealoufy ftill more excited, by overhearing a nightly conveyance from the fame apartment to the infirmary, which happened at that time to be empty. Enraged at not being thought worthy to partake of the fecret, they determined it fhould no longer be one, and went to tell their tale to the King's attorney. He repaired immediately to the convent, and defired to be conducted to the room in queftion; but when there he was affured by the Superior, that it had long been uninhabited, and that the key was loft. His threats of breaking open the door, however, brought forth the key; he went in, and finding that the room was indeed perfectly empty, he was beginning to regret his trouble and his credulity, when he perceived a fecond door. The key was again obftinately with-held, and produced with fill. more reluctance than before. At length he obtained admiffion, and faw in a cage of wood fomething of human fhape. It whs a poor old man, covered with rags and vermin, and overgrown with hair. His beard reached down to his middle, and his whole perfon exhibited a complete picture of long fufferings and inyeterate defpair. Who are you, faid the King's attorney. I am a father of this order, anfwered the miferable man. And how long have you been here? I do not know exactly; but I am fure it cannot be lefs than a century fince $I$ was firft confined. A man lefs wretched might eafily mifcount time, and fo did he ; for upon inveftigation it appeared that he had been in that fituation only thirty-five years. During that period he had never feen an human face, unlefs that appellation mriay be given to thofe of his inhtua mian gaolers; nor has he ever been semtrow ed from his cage, but in that winter, when the uncommor cold, and fome fmall remainis of pity, induced the monks to carry him now and then to thaw his blood before the fire of the infirmary, They accufed him, as it was natural to expect, of a number of erimes, but his own report, and probably the truth; wás, that he had been overtaken in his waty to Holland with a women, whom his vows had not prevented him from loving. The King's attorney ordered him to be reinoved to another convent, whither every one that could get an introduction went to fee him.

[ 47 ]

White he wis a living inftance of fucla barbarity, it was to be feared that the horror and detoffation it muft infpire, might leffer the alms and benefactions beftowed on the holy fathers; and hence ir was that feveral perforss foretold, that after living fo long in confiement,

[ 49 ]

Eonfinement, he would not long furvive his liberty. Their predictions were verified. He died in at.sut a fortnight; it being univerfally reported and believed at LiAe; that he had been poifoned for the intereft of religion ; pour etouffer le : : candales.

As the fate often made gaolers of feveral kinds of frizis, it could not blame them for being their own on this occafion: No pusifhment; therefore, followed his detention, nor was any enquiry made into the convenient promptitude of his death. So happy *vas the concord that prevailod between church and king in thofe blest days, before the abominable rights of man we invented, and fuch was the reciprocal fuppeit they afo forded to each other. Many initances of this kind have occurred; but as they got little vent abroad; the report being' generally fifiled in the filence of the cloittet, few have been fo well authenticated as the above one.

Asit am no well-wifher to the arms of the defpots; whid have brought on France moft of the mifehiefs of which they complain, who by the violent means with which they attempted to reinftate Lewis XVI. on his throne, tumbled him from thence; and who, by their bloody manifeftocs, drove a few defperate Parifians to lay the fcenes of blood that have finhonoured the nation, and made fo many others hug their chains, I was forry to hear feveral officers complain of the want of difcipline among the volunteers.

A captain of the eighth battalion, of what department I forget, quartered in the Auftrian Netherlands; at fix or feven leagues diftance from Lifle, told us, that in defiance of the remonitrances of their officers, the wen freque ${ }^{-1}$ ly took their mulkets and ammunition to hill the poultry of the farmers, and that he had hirafelf found fourteen dead fowls lying on the table of a fingle mefs, (chaimbrée). Nay, added he, I was itruck the other day by a private volunteer, without daring to complain. The misfortune is, that though they behave with the greateft decility while under the eye of the General, no fooner are they fent on detachment duty, or into fe parate quarters; than they begin to treat the officers of their own choice with contempt.

When I expreffed my fuiprize at this total forgetfulnefs of all fubordination, why this is nothing, faid another officer, to the behayiour of the fifth battalion at Soiffons. A let cutting off their Colonel's head, they had the audacity to go to the commanding officer of the camp, to alk for ftraw and faggots to burn the body.

On the $3^{0 \text { th, }}$, in our way from tifle to Valenciennes, we had an opportunity of learning alfo what was the conduct of the oppofite party. All along the road, as well E. 2 as in the fuburbs of the former place, we heard nothing but complaints of the firit of plunder that animated the Auftrians; and if faith may be placed in the concurrence of a variety of reports, there was not a woman that had not reafon to blame or to praife them, according to the way in which the received their careffes or their infults. This, however, we remarked, that the fair fex was univerfally thy of giving us any information of the latter kind, in which their own chaftity might fuffer by implication. The old women faid that the foldiers had laid violent court to the young; and the young lamented the excefles that had been committed in every village but their own.

$\left[\begin{array}{lll}52\end{array}\right]$

At Orchies, where we dined, we were waited upon by the landlady's daughter, a girl whofe beauty and delicate appearance made het as likely as the was unfit to be the prey of fome rude German gronadier. Were you not alarmed, Mademoifelle, fid my companion, at the vifit of the enemy? I was gone out, Sir, faid the. This anfwer, of the truth of which I had my doubts, made us apply for information to her mother. Alas ! faid the, they plundered every thing they could lay their hands on, and, to complete my misfortune, they murdered my fon. He was an inn-keeper, as well as myfelf. They went to his houfe, and as they aiked him for wine and money, he gave them the former, and rofe to reach a key, that he might be able to comply with the latter part of their demand, when one of the villains bafely fhot him from behind. They killed three other citizens with as little provocation. And your daughter, faid I, was the not terribly frightened and afflicted? Alas! poor girl, faid the mother, I felt more for ber than I did for myfelf,

[ 53 ]

[ $3+]$

That their officers, however, did not al. ways tolerate thefe atrocious exceffes, was proved by the fhooting of a foldier, who committed a rape on a child of ten or twelvo years old in the heighbourhood of Orchies.

All along the road from Calais to Dunkirk, from Dunkirk to Lifle, and from Lifle to Valenciennes, we hardly faiw a man, that had not affumed fomething of a military garb and appearance. Some had a fword and belt thrown over their fhoulders, fome had a feather in their hats, and fome were fully accoutred. In a word, or rather in the words of Shakefpeare, we found them

All furnifh'd, all in arms,
All plum'd like eftridges.

The diligence with which they were practifing the military excrcife in many places, and the heartinefs in the caufe that they expreffed in all, would have fufficed to convince us, that the idea many people in England affect to entertain, of a fmall faction dominoering it over the whole nation, was totally deftitute of foundation, had any proof been wanting to overthrow an opinion fo indefenfible. How is it pofible for a fmall part to opprefs the whole, when all are armed? $\rightarrow$ Yes: but the party averfe to the revolutionifts, though the moft numerous, are afraid to fhow themfelves.-Why, then, what a wretched opinion muft they have of their caufe, or what forry daftards muft they be ! However, to " make affurance double fure," I converfed with numbers of peaple, of all ranks, on my way, and found them, with very few exceptions, agreed upon the great principles of liberty. They frequently lamented that many unwife fteps had been taken by their reprefentatives, and reprobated the infamous crimes of particular factions; but they confidered them, at the fame time, as partial and accidental abufes of a fyftem generally and effentially good. Here and there I met with a man, who openly regretted the old government; nor was it a little remarkable, that the greateft Arifocrats I heard fpeak of politics were employed by the new government in the civil and military line. Let it however be remembered, that the department of the North is one of thofe the moft fufpected of Ariftocracy.

[ 55 ]

[ $5^{6}$ ]

As I had fome acquaintance at Valenciennes, I was in hopes of gathering ufeful information there, and of obtaining additional letters to the army ; but I was difappointed in both refpeets. Finding nothing there to detain my reader's attention, any more than my own, I thall proceed to Mons with what fpeed I may. I would not indeed ftop an inftant on the road; but when accidents happen there is no help for delay.

$\left[\begin{array}{ll}{[7]}\end{array}\right]$

Pof-horfes are not to be got at Valen; ciennes, nor any other cattle, nor any other conveyance, except the moft wretched onc-horfe-chaife, drawn by the verieft beaft in Chriftendom; for which we paid double the fum that travelling poft would have coft us. Our vehicle was fo crazy, that we thought it neceflary to fend off the heavieft part of our baggage; but even this precaution was not fufficient ; for fcarcely were we out of the town when it broke down. We left the man who attended us for the purpofe of driving it back, to get it mended, and to follow us to Quiévrain, where wemade a dinner almoft as bad, and as dear as our conveyance. We got into it again, and drove off as fuccefffully as before. It had broke down firft on the left fide, and now it broke down on the right. Our vexation was great ; but it was nothing in comparifon of that of our conductor. There is not an obfcene word in the French language that he did not utter.

$\left[\begin{array}{ll}88\end{array}\right]$

More than twenty times he cailed the chaife a bordel.

It is Atrange that a mation fo famed for its politenefs, and fo proud of its refinement, fhould go to that plice for every oath, every term of abufe, and every angry exclamation. We walked on again, and left him to fwear, and to follow us to Mons, having paid rather dearly for going feven long Flemifh langues on foot.

Mons, as the name denotes, is fituated on a hill of unufual elevation, in the Netherlands, and till its fortifications were difmantled, was a place of confiderable ftrength The plough now paffes over the ground where the outworks ftond; but the rampart and ditch that furround the body of the place remain tolorably entire; and palifadoes, and other halty works of defence, have been added to the flreagth of the gates. General

Chisfayt,

[ 59 ]

Clairfayt, however, did not choofe to fhut himfelf up in a town, from whence his retreat might have been cut off, rather preferring to remove the cannon from the walls to a chain of fimall forts thrown up upon the heights without,

Such of the French officers as had been at the battle of Gemappe, and indulged the leaft in the figures of amplification, had reprefented them to us, as rifing in three rows above one another, like the feats of an amphitheatre. When we came to the ground, we could difcover no fuch regularity. Some of them were, indeed, more advanced towards the plain than the reft, and were commanded by thofe behind. The former confifted of two fides of a triangle, while the latter were either conftrufted like the faces and flanks of a bafion, with the gorge left open behind, or elfe in a fquare form, that if the flank of the army mould be turned, it might have a defence defence for its rear. The heavy rain while we were on the ground, and the occupation given to our minds, by refiecting that it was the fcene of fuch a bloody and well contefted action, prevented us from numbering there redoubts. The French officers faid they were upwards of thirty; but this I believe was a little exaggeration. Be it as it may, art and nature had confpired to make the pofition uncommonly ftrong, and fo it was efteemed by General Clairfayt himfelf. When the emigrants in Mons expreffed their fears of his being obliged to retreat, he bad them be under no apprehenfions. "If the French enter Mons," faid he, "I will eat my horfe."

[ 60 ]

This confidence of the Auftrian Chief is 2 fufficient anfwer to thofe detractors from the glory of General Dumourier and his army, who afcribe his victory to the fuperiority of numbers alone. When other circumftances are nearly equal, Marfhal Saxe's obfervation, that * le bon Diek ef toujours du cbté des gros battaillons, is generally well founded; but with fuch vantage of ground as that enjoyed by the Germans, a multitude of men without valour would be of little avail.

[ 6i j

The action began early in the morning by a heavy canonade, which continued till the French General, perceiving that his artillery made little impreffion on the works of the Aufrians, gave orders to the different regiments to form for the attack. The enemy obferving fome of them doing fo, under cover of the village of Quaregnor, fet it on fire with thot and thells. The effect did not anfwer their expectations; for the wind blowing the fmoke towards them, favoured the approach of the French much more than the village itfelf tould have done. It required, however, no fmall effort of cou-

[^6]trige to advance along an open plain, expofed to a range of batteries, and redoubts thunder 4 ing from above, and to the regular and inceffant fire of eighteen thoufand of the beft difciplined troops in Europe.

General Dumourier's two lines mighe colfift of about thirty thoufand men, independent of a referve of a third part of that number. Every ftep they advanced, they receded from that eftimate. The flower of the youth of France was. mowed down rank after rank; till impatient of the galling fire, and hoping to make the danger lefs by clofing with it; they rufhed on with fixed bayonets, and fwud in hand; both of them weapons, in the ufe of which the French are accuftomed to claim a preference. The moft forward battailon was that of the national volunteers of la Vendée. They leaped boldly into the firft redoubt, and driving out its defenders, were advanciry with equal courage along the field, which

$\left[\begin{array}{lll}63\end{array}\right]$

which they deemed their own, when they faw another fortification of the fame kind before them, felt a heavier fire than before, and perceived that all their work was to begin over again. This cooled their ardour : they ftopped: they gave way; till at length they found themfelves behind the hundred and fourth regiment, that had advanced to their fupport. Dreffed like the Germans, and involved in fmoke, it was miftakea for the enemy by the battalion of la Vendée, which kept up a heavy fire on its rear, while the Auftrian infantry attacked it in front, and the huffars and hullans charged it on the flanks; fo that this unfortunate regiment would have been totally deftroyed, if the national volun:teers had not difcovered their miftake, and the French light cavalry had not come to its affiftance. In feveral other places the French were repulfed, and returned to the charge, till by degrees, and arter an obftinate refiftance, all the foremoft of the redoubts were carried, the neceffity of a retreat making the enemy abandon thofe in the rear with lefs reluctance.

[ 64 ]

The linie of attack began at the village of Gemappe, fituated at a league from Mons; on the Valenciemes road, and extended to the right along a femi-circular range of hills approximating the town: A little wood near the centre was the feene of the greateft car: nage. There ftood the famous Hungarian grenadiers, and there the greateft part of them fell. It fo happened that the fame fpot where death was moft bufy; afforded a ready bury: ing-place: Clofe at hand were three old coalpits, of no lefs than fix hundred toifes it depth, which were fo entirely filled if with the bodies of horfes and men, that we walked over them. The cominon report that made the number of dead on both fides amount to ten thoufand, could not then be charged with much exaggeration. The greateft part of the lofs, as might naturally be expected, fell upon the French.

[ 65 ]

The van of the army, commanded by General Dampierre, with whom I was formerly acquainted, attacked the village of Germappe, and the neighbouring redoubts, and behaved with fignal bravery, as did the huffars of Chamborand and Lauzun, infpiring dread and admination by the vigour of their chatge, The whole army concurs in beftowing equal praife on the national gendarmerie. This is a numerous body of chofen men, ferving part on foot and part on horfeback, into which no one can be admitted, that has not at leaft ferved what is called a conge, or term of eight years. The fearlefs and irrefiftible fury with which they fell upon the enemy, fwerd in hand, was furprizing even in veterans. If any thing could furpafs their intrepidity, it was the blind rage of the Belgians, who on that day vindicated the praife peftowed on them of old by Julius Cæfar.*. The French, by no means remarkable themfelves for the coolnefs and temperance of their courage, call that of thefe people hair-brained temerity. Their mode of fighting is peculiar, Carelefs of any difparity of numbers, they featter themfelves clofe along: the enemies line, and keep up an irregular fire, until their officers, who remain in the rear, thinking it time for them to retire, put their fingers in their mouth, and whiftle them back. At other times they maintain, an infidious kind of Indian warfare, creeping on their hands and feet through the ftanding corn to the very muzzles of their enemies guns, to fingle out their victim; nay, fuch is their audacity, that more than once a Belgian has been knowis ta fteal in the night to an Auftrian out-poft, and carry off the piles of arms from-the midff of the men to whom they belonged.

[ $6 \dot{0}$ ]

[^7]
[ 67 ]

The infiabitants of the Low Countries are accufed of being thick-witted by their more fprightly neighbours the French, and I have heard it afked, if this total abfence of all fentiment of fear, and all fenfe of danger, be not owing to dullinefs of intellect? If fo, four hundred of them were fools enough to get their brains knocked out at the battle of Gemappe.

Event in the corps that diftinguifhed themfelves the moft, fome individuals outwent their fellows: An officer of the huffars of Chamborrand led his troop to the affault of a tedoubt. Allons, braves camarades, faid he, vaincre ou mourir, and immediately leaped his horfe over the ditch and parapet. His men not being fo excellently mounted could not follow him ; and when by a circuitous courfe they had forced their way through rhe parfage in the rear of the redoubt, they found him lying in the midft of four Auftrians he had killed, with no lefs than thirty-three wounds in different parts of his body. When we were at Mons great hopes were entertained of this brave man's recovery. It would, indeed, be a pity that he fhould both conquer. and die.

[ 68 ]

A private foldier of the vanguard received a ball in the forehead. I am a dead man, faid he, but I have ftill a thot left for the defpot's mercenaries. He difcharged his piece, and inftantly expired *.

Nor is the courageous prefence of mind of the youthful General Egalité, heretofore Duke of Chartres, unworthy of mention. In the thickeft of the action, he met with a number of men of different regiments, thrown into confufion, and looking for their refpective fandards. There is your battalion, faid he, pointing to a pair of colours that was advancing fuccefffully towards the city, that is the battalion of Mons. Then putting himfelf at their head, he led them back to the charge.

> * Vide Relation de la conduite de l'avant garde, par le Maiecchal de Camp Dampierre:

[ 69 ]

The celebrated Voltaire, in what part of his works I forget, enters into a defence of Taffo, and fome other heroic bards, who have introduced female warriors in their battles, and goes back a number of centuries to the fiege of Damafcus, to prove that facts have taken place which juftify the fictions of the poet. The French wit little thought that in the lapfe of a few years fuch inftances of female courage would be frequent. Befides the two Mefdemoifelles Fernig, who are now General Dumourier's Aid-de-camps, there $\mathrm{F}_{3}$ was was another heroine at the battle of Gemappe, She was the miftrefs of the Colonel of Cobourg's huffars, and ferved as Lieutenant in the regiment. When the faw her lover killed, fhe rode into the midft of the French horfemen to revenge his death, was made prifoner, and is ftill confined to the limits of the town of Mons. A French Colonel, like a true Frenchman, affured me he had tried her courage corps-à-corps:

[ 70 ]

At Lifle, and feveral other places in Flanders, I had feen carriages drawn by dogs, but never till I came to Mons did I fee a dog in the fhafts, and a horfe harneffed before him as leader. There I faw it repeatedly. Determined to derive all poffible utility from the canine fpecies, they make them beafts of burthen alfo, On the road we met with men driving a number of them, with loads upon their backs, as in England we fee a fandman drive his affes.

On December 6 we fet off for Braflels ${ }_{8}$. Defirous of not meeting with the fame difficulties in our way that we had experienced in coming from Valenciennes, we hired 24 excellent carriage, with four horfes, This was the more neceffary, as we did not leave Mons till the morning was far advanced. We found the road entirely covered with convoys going to the army, with detachments of troops, and with ftraggling foldiers trudging on to join their refpective regiments.

Abstract

A thaw had lately taken place, the carriages deprived them of the benefit of the pavement, and they were obliged to wade through the mud half way up their legs. Yet ftill their native gaiety fupported them, and on they went, finging $\mathfrak{c} a$ ira, and other patriotic tunes. We took up behind us two of thore that feemed the moft tired. It is only giving a florin or two more to the coachman, faid my companion, and fleeping in the fuburbs F 4 infteqd inftead of the town. A little further on, as we were going flowly up a hill, I faw a young lad walking very lame, and lofing his fhoe at cvery moment in the mud. As ho did not call upon pettilence, and the devil to fun away them, and the road into the bargain, I was fure he could not be a Frenchman, although he had the national uniform on his back. We afked him if he alfo would get up behind, and he joyfully accepted our offer. But as the weather was cold, and he feemed weakly, we foon after found means to make room for him in our carriage. I then afked him if he had been wounded.-Diew merci, he had only been cut down at the battle of Gemappe, and then wounded in the foot while lying on the ground, which was the reafon of his walking fo lame. I told him he was too young to run fuch hazards, and bear the fatigues of a military life. Too young! faid he, with a proud fmile, that ill concealed a little indignation, too young!

[ 72 ]

$\left[\begin{array}{ll}73\end{array}\right]$

why, I am now nineteen, and near three years ago was thot through the body in the Belgic war. He added, that at the beginning of the prefent campaign he had been ill of a fever; that he had been fent to the hofpital at Maubeuge ; that in the time of his convalefcence, he had walked out with fome of his comrades; that they had fallen in with a party of French, who were engaged with the enemy at Grifoelle; that he had taken up a dead man's mufket to have his thot, tout comme un autre and that a ball from the rifle gun of a Tyrolian chaffeur had hit him in the neck.

When I enquired into the motives of his taking up arms, he faid he had been on the fide of the patriots before, and had heard that they were up again, and fo he had left his home at Namur, where he had a father, a mother, and a little fifter afferaimable, and he would leave them again as foon as it fhould pleafe pleafe God and the bleffed Virgin to cure the lamenefs of his foot; for a patriot fhould ale ways fight for his country, and fhould not mind a wound or two, or a little pain in a good caufe. I am now going to Bruffels, faid he, to fee fome relations I have there, Go where thou wilt, faid I to myfelf, thou art a brave youth, and not only a patriot, but a philofopher, although I verily believe thou doft not know the meaning of the word.

[ 94 ]

But for fome devaftation among the trees, the great number of dead horfes on the fide of the road, and the moving picture of men and carriages that covered it, we fhould have had no reafon to think we were in the theatre of war. The farmers were as quietly and diligently engaged in their rural occupations, as in a time of profound peace; the rifing crop was uninjured by military contention, and the peafantry were dancing in their guingettes with the fame grotefque gaiety as when they were the fubjects of Teniers defigns. Nor had the prefence of fo many armies appasently leffened the abundance that fprings from the fertile foil of the Netherlands, or enhanced the price of the neceffaries of life,

[76]

The face of the country, the perfons of the inhabitants, their neat and convenient buildings, their coal fires, and the unvarnifhed fimplicity of their manners, reminded us of our own, This refemblance, no doubt, ftruck us the more forcibly, as we had fo lately left the territory of France. The lower claffes feemed well clothed and well fed, and wore a look of content upon their faces, which feemed to prove, that if their old government was not a good one, it was not at any rate intolerably oppreifive. This is an obfervation that can hardly be fallacious, as on the other hand it may be inferred, that when a country is fufficiently fruitfulin proportion to its population, and the body of the peopie are condemned to hard labour for a fcanty pittance of food; when in fuch a country, the work-houfes, the hofpitals, and the prifons are full, it may be inferred, 1 fay, that there is a radical vice in its political inftitutions; nor can all the cant of ftate quacks, or the equivocation of falfe patriots, leffen the forie of this eternal truth,

[ 76 ]

: By what I have faid above, I do not mean to infer, that there are no beggars in the Belgic States. Beggars there are, but they are few in number, and lefs miferable in appearance than in moft other countries. While our horfes were drinking in an inn-yard, two full-grown girls, of pleafing perfon, and very decent dreis, furprized us by afking alms. From uur carriage they went to that of fome French officers wives, who were on their way to join their hufbands. What, faid one of the laughing dames, fuch pretty girls as you obliged to afk charity, when there is an army of a hundred thoufand men in the country! This is truly a great reflection on the gallantry of our countrymen. True, faid another, but it fpeaks much in favour of the fidelity of our huibands. The girls repeated their prayer, aud were beginning to rehearfe a Pater nofter. Allons! faid the French lady, virtue ought to be recompenfed. Then taking out. her pocket-book, turned over a number of afignats, and at laft finding a fmall one, offered it to the girls. Though this bill was not current, it was of a ready value, much greater than that of ufual benefaction, and one of the girls accordingly held out her hand with eagernefs to receive it, when at the very moment fhe thought it her own, the French lady drew back her's. But no, faid fhe, with an arch look, and feeming to recollect herfelf, nobody takes paper in this country. The beggar girls, who perceived that this long and ceremonious thow of charity was only meant to convey a refufal, coupled coupled with a reproach of their countrymen's want of faith in the French money, were tickled by the fancy, went laughing away, and left me laughing too; for I had never heard a denial fo whimfically given, nor feen one fo merriity received.

[ 77 ]

$\left[\begin{array}{ll} \\ 8\end{array}\right]$

Not thinking the report I had heard at Lifle of the diforderly behaviour of a fingle battalion in Auftrian Flanders fufficient to afford a fair comparifon with the conduct of the Ïmperial troops in France, I was careful to enquire, as we travelled along, into the difcipline obferved by the troops of the new republic: As an army that plunders is fure to produce an artificill, if not a real sarcity; the plenty we had already met with bore witnefs in their favour. This teftimiony coincided with that of the inhabitants, who did not everi feem furprized, or to hold themfelves in any manner obliged for it to the Fremch. I. atked a woman if. they behaved in an orderly manner.-Yes. If they never plundered. No, anfwered fhe, it is not their duty to plunder.

Though we reached Bruffels at a late hour, our fears of being thut out were ill founded, the neceffity of keeping the gates open for the convoys, that were arriving every moment, favouring our entrance. It was not equally eafy to obtain admiffion at the inns, We drove fo long from houfe to houfe, conftantly difappointed in our hope of finding accommodations, that we began to fear we fhould be obliged to take up with a lodging in the freet. At length, however, we met with a very tolerable one, that was almof empty, becaufe it had the misfortune to be called the Hotel of Saxe-Tefchen.

Obferving that our coachman; wherever he carried us, enquired if they had room for Englifhmen, we alked him why he had been

[ 80 ]

beeit fo carcful to announce our country He told us he had done it, becaufe the innkeepers were averfe to giving entertainment to the French. At firft, I fuppofed that this diflike to their deliverers muft proceed from a fear of their tendering $a /$ fignats in payment ; but when I came to enquire at the inn, I was informed that it arofe from their feldom being fatisfied either with the fare, the lodging, or the bill.

As Bruffels has been defcribed by fo many travellers, I fhall not remark how ill the meannefs of a great part of the city accords with the grandeur of the environs of the park; nor fhall I fay any thing of the fate of politics. In an age fo pregnant with unexampled events, the fcene fhifts at every inftant. I will only venture to predict, that the Belgians will not eafily eftablifh a government founded upon liberal principles, fo infatuated are they with their old conttitution, fuch fanatics in defence of the faith of their anceftors, and fuch humble flaves of their priefts. The holy fathers pretend to be alarmed for the fafety of the Chriftian religion; but, like Shylock in the play, their outcry arifes from their folicitude for their Chriftian ducats ; and no doubt they will fet all hell to work, rather than lofe the facred privilege of cheating in the name of heaven.

[ 81 ]

After a ftay of three days at Bruffels, we, Fet off for Liege, and flept that night at Tirlemont. As the veracity of the Frensh accounts of their battles has been mucis ibted, even in France, becaufe their lofs has been generally reprefented as incomparably inferior to that of their enemies, as often, at leaft, as the cannon have had the principal fhare in the action, we thought we had now a good opportunity of afcertaining the truth; for at this place the difproportion was faid to be greater than elfewhere.

[ 82 ]

A long ftand was made by the Auftrians without the town, and they afterwards paffed through it in open day. The inhabitants muft confequently have been able to form a judgment of their lofs. On this prefumption, I afked our landlady to what the thought it might amount ? No doubt, to fome hundreds, anfwered fhe, at leaft if any idea may be formed from the number of waggons that carried off the wounded, and from the foldiers going round to all the houfes to ank for linen to drefs the mangled limbs of their comrades.-No, I fhall never forget my fright.-I was in the ftreet, and hearing a terrible howling, I thought I was in the midft of a multitude of dogs, when turning round my head, I perceived that thefe difmal founds came from a waggon full of wounded men.-What a horrid fight!-There was not an agonizing wretch among them that had not loft at leaft one of his limbs. Whenever the idea reverts to my mind, it makes the

[ $\mathrm{s}_{3}$ ]

the current of my blood run back. The ftrong manner in which the woman expreffed herrelf had almoft the fame effect on mine, and made me give my curfes freely to the authors of the war.

It remained to afcertain the lofs on the other fide. For that purpofe I queftioned at leaft thirty French officers; and if their concurrent teftimony be worthy credit, they had only a horfe or two killed, and a man or two wounded. Their veracity is certainly the lefs to be fufpected, as they fated the lofs at Gemappe to be infinitely greater than it was prefumed to be in General Dumourier's hafty letter, though they fpoke of the effect of the Auftrian cannon, even in that affair, as of little account. Their fhot generally fly over the heads of the French, the greater part of the few that take place, though meant for the firft line, killing the men in the fecond; fo that, contrary to all experience and opiG 2 nion, nion, the troops neareft the enemy are the leaft in danger.

[ 84 ]

If it were poffible to believe that the Imperialifts would make ufe of artillery without firft proving its accuracy, one might be led to fufpect, that the difference in the thicknefs of the metal at the breech, and at the muzzle of the gun, which ferves to compenfate the gravitation of the fhot within point-blank diftance, is greater than it ought to be. I have heard French officers account for it otherwife. They fay that the German gunners, after once pointing a piece of ordnance, difcharge it 10 or 12 times without further attention; whereas the French revife the direction of their's at every fhot they fire. But if fuch were the cafe, it fhould feem that the balls of their enemy would as often fly below as above the mark, which is difcordant with their own report. Be it as it may, they are great gainers by this over-figbt of the Auftrians.

The

[ 85 ]

The fecond day after our leaving Bruffels brought us to Liege, where we found General Dumourier and his army : a gallant army and a noble chief. The patient fortitude with which the foldiers endured the hardthips of a winter campaign, was equal to the active courage with which they ftormed the redoubts of Gemappe. Encamped in the middle of the month of December in a cold northern latitude, they only feemed to regret the rigour of the feafon, becaufe it prevented them from marching after the enemy. Yet thefe troops of a nation fo generally branded with effeminacy, were ill provided againft the bleaknefs of the weather, and the endlefs continuance of the rain,

The national volunteers, the chief ftrength of the army, were bare of clothes, and ftraw was as fcarce as it was neceffary in the camp: The fmall quantity they had was no fooner fpread in the tents, than it was compleatly G3. drenchet, drenched, and by a natural confequence it foon after rotted; fo that the foldier lay with half his body in the water, and if he fet his foot out of the tent, he funk up to his knees in the mud. This was their fituation when encamped ; but what was it when the neceffity of the fervice required whole divifions of the army to fleep on their arms, with no other cover than the inclement $\mathbf{i k y}$. Frequently, when the rain was pouring in a torrent from heaven, and lying ftagnant on, the faturated earth, fome of them repofed their weary limbs in the water, fome flept erect, girt to a tree, while others danced away the lingering hours; and not unfrequently after fuch a night as this, they have been feen to march away laughing, and finging their patriotic fongs.

[ 86 ]

Gaiety was ever the Frenchman's birthright, but never was it fo ftrongly exhibited as fince they have been animated by the firit of patriotifm. This chearfulnefs is always accompanied by another characteriftic of the nation; an uncommon degree of careleffnefs and difregard of danger. In the plains of Champaign, the two armies were often within fight, and almoft within fhot of each other. At fuch times, there ftood the Pruffians menacing a charge, in regular array, with fupported arms, and motionlefs as ftatues; and bere were the French, dancing in rings around their fires, and broiling their meat on the points of their bayonets.

[ 87 ]

On a march, woe to the game that gets up before them; a hundred foldiers are fure to fend after it the contents of their mufkets, not without danger of fhooting their com. rades. Even the prefence of the enemy is infufficient to correct this deviation from difcipline. It once happened, as a battalion of volunteers was zdrancing to the attack, in the momentary expectation of receiving and returniing
G 4

IMAGE EVALUATION TEST TARGET (MT-3)

[ 88 ]

returning the enemy's fire, that they trod up a folitary hare. As the ran along the line fhe was faluted with a univerfal fhout, and with a fhot or tẉo at leaft from every com: pany the paffed. The fugitive however efcaped, it being no eafy matter to kill fo fimall an animal with a fingle ball.

The old animofity, and falfe point of honour, that ufed to fet regiment againft regiment, and man againt man, and that were fuppofed every year to coft the State the lives of five hundred foldiers, are fo much forgot, that a duel is now a thing of very unfrequent occurrence. It was predicted that endlefs diffenfions and jealoufies would embroil the regular troops with the national guards; but there fears were fo ill founded, that it is impoffible to conceive an army living in more univerfal harrmony than that of Dumourier. At public and private tables, nothing is more common than to fee the fhoulder-knot of a grenadier grenadier touching the epaulet of a colonel ; nor does this vicinage feem to furprize either party. The one fhows no haughtinefs, the other no fervility, and both interchange upon equal terms the falutation of citizen, or comrade. Though a franger may be ftartled at it at firf, his wonder diminifhes when he finds that not a few of the common national volunteers are men of property, fome of them poffeffing ten, twenty, and thirty thoufand liyres a year. Many of thofe I fpoke with fupported well the national character of politenefs, but they had difcarded the frivolous flippancy that was but too frequently its companion. They affumed no credit for their copurage, fpoke of their giving up eafe and comfort to encounter the danger and hardThips of a military life as only difcharging a debt they owed to their country; lamented its being defolated by war and faction; and yowed to fee their enemies humbled, or to fleep in the duft: I liftened to them with admiration, admiration, and, God and Mr. Burke forgive me, I thought I hould have difgraced them by a comparifon with the defunct chivalry of France.

[ 90 ]

Many of the officers, many even of the fuperior ranks, have been raifed from that of private foldier. In a ball or a drawingroom, they would, no doubt, make an aukward figure; but furely after a long apprenticeehip to war, they are as fit to lead a company or a battalion into the fire, as a giddy and beardlefs boy, juft broke loofe from the military fchool.

Republican feverity is by degrees removing that foppifhnefs in drefs and manners that fprung from the example of a frivolous court. The fmall fword, that formerly dangled at the fide of the French officers and foldiers, has refigned its place to a weighty fabre. The three-cornered hat, that fheltered them neither from rain, fun, nor blows, is very gene. rally changed into a helmet. Their hair, for the moft part cut fhort, is in the ftate nature gave it ; and many of their whifkers grow unchecked by the razor. The whole of their drefs, in thort, befpeaks more attention to utility than fhow. Some of their new corps muft however be excepted, particularly the legion of the celebrated St. George. This is a body of reven hundred men, compored of creoles, negroes, and mulattoes, and is dreffed and accoutred in the richeft and moft brilliant manner.

[91]

I dined one day in company with a black captain of herfe, and judged this new Othello to be worthy of his occupation. His eafy and polite manners deferved, and met with the refpect and attention of a great number of officers that were prefent. As for me, it did me good to fee the general fraternity of mankind fo nọbly eftablifhed, and convinced me, that all the worthlefs parts of the human race are only fo becaufe debafed by their political inftitutions.

[ 92 ]

Till I came to Liege, I never could give entire belief to the wonderful effects faid to have been produced by the mufic of the ancients. How is it poffible, I ufed to fay, that among the multitude of our inftruments, and the endlefs variety of our compofitions, one of thefe moving founds, or powerful paffages, fhould never yet have been hit upon. But when I came to Liege, the ftruggle between my faith and my reafon was at an end. I thought I diicovered, that thefe enthufiaftic emotions were not excited in the Greeks by the mechanical operation of "a concord of fweet founds," but by the fubject of their lays, the circumftances they ftood in, and the difpofition of their minds. In their old popular governments, glory and duty went hand in hand, and the perfeccution of their liberty,

[ 93 ]

liberty, called forth the fanaticifm of freedom. Such is the fituation of the French, and fuch are their feelings,' as I had an opportunity of obferving at the dinner I have juft mentioned. While we were at table, fome itinerant muficians were admitted. I need not fay, that their mufic, vocal and inftrumental, was far from being of an excellent kind. It was, neverthelefs, aftonifhing to fee the effect the Marfeilles hymn produced upon the company. When they came to the paffage cux armes citoyens, all the French officers joined them in concert, mort unttineable indeed, but with very forcible expreffion. Some of them ftood up ereat in military attitude, grafping their fwords; and I faw tears trickle down faces as hard as iron. In my early youth I had felt much of the martial mania myfelf; but my long vacancy from warlike occupation, fince the laft peace, had given time to reafon to take the place of fentiment ; and cold calculations of fafety and repofe had damped, if not extinguifhed, ali military ardor. The contagion however reached me; I repeated anx armes with the reft, and felt that I was again become a foldier.

[ 94 ]

This valour at table is well maintained in the field. If I had only the bare word of the French for it, 1 hhould not fail to make a large abatement for this felf-praife. Credit, however, cannot be refufed to the univerfal teftimony of the natives of the country, who fpeak with artlefs wonder of what they call the rage of the new republicans. This bravery is the more meritorious, as a large proportion of their foldiers are boys. But they are boys, according to the words of our favourite dramatift, " with ladies faces and fierce dragons fpleen."

The conduct of the Auftrians is a proof that they are of the fame opinion, and that they

[ 95 ]

 the only ones that' could fave the French, and that the latter were expected to melt away to nothing before the regular fire of the Germans, if ever they fhould truft themfelves in the open field.After having faid thus much in favour of the French foldiery, my regard to truth, and the engagement I took at the beginuing of my tour, oblige me to add, that this army did not behave with fo much regularity in the Pays de Liege as in the Auftrian Netherlands. 'Chough received by the inhabitants like bro: thers, they were fo far from being thankful for their entertainment, that they often committed much needlefs mifchief.

[^8]
$\left[\begin{array}{ll} \\ 96\end{array}\right]$

In fipite of their patriotic principles, the country people could not help regretting the departure of the lmperial troops, whofe conduct was very different here from what it was in France. The honeft Germans, fiid they, ate, drank, paid, and went away quietly. Our friends, the French, plunder and moleft us. This behaviour was, however, far from being general; nor was it either encouraged or tolerated by the chicfs. Several examples were made, and I faw myfelf a French officer weep, while relating the difhonourable dilhonourable exceffes of his countrymenis Such is the army of Dumourier.

[ 97 ]

I am happy to have it in my power to fubjoin fome particulars relative to the illuftrious General himfelf.

General Dumourier is now fifty-five years of age, and is the fon of a commiffary of war (Commifaire de Guerre). His father was a man of confiderable literary talents, and tranif. lated from the Italian the celebrated poem, La Seccbia Rapita, of Ricciardetto; better known by the name of Il Tafoni. As his birth was not equal to his merit, it is no wonder that his fon thould be the enemy of the old government, which limited the hapes, and cramped the genius of all who could not boaft a long feries of noble anceftors. He began his military career at a very early period in life, and foon diftinguifhed himfelf fo much by the active intrepidity of his Spirit, that in a club to which he then belonged, he was known by the appellation of Tbe Little Tiger.

[ 98 ]

At the battle of Clofter-camp, he received a defperate wound in each wrift, and two deep cuts on each fide of the head, befides fome others of fmaller account in different parts of his body. Bleffed with the privilege of great minds, which look upon misfortune witheut aftonifhment, he jefted even when in this diftrefsful fituation; and as Cæfar threatened to hang the pirates that took him at fea, fo Dumourier with menaces ordered the Hanoverian foldier, whofe prifoner he was, to perform for him the mglt fervile offices.

In 17 ; when an Emperor, an Emprefs; and a King, confpired to opprefs the people of Poland, divided their dominions, and drove off the inhabitants like herds of cattle, Dumourier mourier was there in the fervice of the republic, at the head of four hundred French volunteers. Judging it in his power to Atrike an advantageous ftroke, he called together his principal officers, and fubmitted his plan to their confideration. It appeared defperate to all, and all, as with one voice, exprefled their diffent.

[99]

So, gentlemen, faid Dumourier, you will not fight? Well, I fay you thall.- -Then arfembling his men, he told them, that thofe who were not ready to go to hell with him immediately might retire. Nor was this advertifement fuperfluous; for leading them to the attack of the enemy at Cracow, near two hundred of them were killed upon the fpot, and fixty more difabled for life. Succefs, however, crowned his enterprize.

Equally fit for the cabinet and the field, the verfatility of his talents recommended $\mathrm{H}_{2} \quad \mathrm{him}$ him to the notice of Louis XV. Accordingingly, in the year 1772, when that Monarch, wifhing for good information refpecting the revolution in Sweden, fent thither, without the knowledge of his Minifters, four perfons in whom he could confide: Dumourier was one of the number. The diligence of himfelf and his colleagues was feconded by the difpatch of thei- couriers. The King afked his Miniters, if they had any news from Sweden, and was told they had none. Why then, faid he, I have, and communicated to them the contents of his difpatches. The Minifters, provoked at finding that men not immediately under their command had interfered in the affairs of fate, prevailed upon the weak Monarch to facrifice the emiffaries that had ferved him too well ; and both Dumourier and a M. Favier were put into the Baftille on their return.

[ 100 ]

[ ior ]

No man knows better than the commander of the Belgic army how to infpire his troops with confidence and courage. His liberal praife, often beftowed before it has been deferved, makes them eager to earn the reputation they have received in advance; and that he may teach them not to fpare their perfons, he is ever at their head, and in the hotteft of the fire. His activity is equal to his courage : he defpifes a foft bed and a luxurious table, and can content himfelf upon occafion with the fcanty fare of a foot foldier. In the moft urgent preffure of the moft multiplied affairs, he gives his orders with the quieknefs of intuition, and with mathematical precifion. Above the affectation of gravity, that is generally the mark of a fhallow mind, he difcovers infinite humour in the midft of the moft ferious occupation, fill finds time for his jetr; and always greater than the occaion that calls for his care, he feems to make bufinefs his fport, and fport his bufinefs: poffeffed at the $\mathrm{H}_{3}$ fare fame time of a comprehenfive underfanding a forefight almoft more than human, and immeafurable ambition, he appears born to uphold, or to overturn an empire.

To thefe qualifications of a foldier ano a general, he joins the liberal endowments of a fcholar. The Latin, the Spanifh, the Italian, and the Englinh languages, are familiar to him ; nor is he a ftranger to ancient, or modern literature.

The temper of his foul entitles him to fill higher praife. He unites the milden and moft fociable difpofition to the firmnefs of a ftoic ; and fuch is the inflexibility of his principles, that his word is better than the bond of ordinary men.

His perfon is uncommonly diminutive and emaciated, and little anfworable to fuch magnitude of mind; but his fallow vifage is brightened brightened by a look highly expreffive of vivacity and intelligence. In a word, it may be faid, that the moft extraordinary events this age has feen have been brought about by the moft extraordinary man of the age.

[ 103 ]

From Liege it was our intention to turs our fteps to the eaftward, and vifit the army of Gene-al Cuftine; but a rumour reaching our ears of an impending war between England and France, we thought it moft advifeable to repair to Paris, to be ready to return home, in cafe an event fo deplorable for both countries fhould really take place,

When we were about three leagues on our way, our horfes ftopping to reft and cait, we thought we could not do better than to eat likewife.-You are in the right, Gentlemen, faid a man, who pulled off his nightcap as he came in, and whom, from the humility of his addrefs, I took at firft for the $\mathrm{H}_{4}$. landlord, landlord, you are in the right, gentlemen, faid he, to make a repalt here, for you will not find fo much as a glafs of water on the road. How fo, faid I $i$-Threc leagues further on, anfwered he, you will meet with the aimy of Valence, which has been in that part of the country thefe five or fix days, and has abfolutely eaten it up. In what fate is the army ? faid I.-In high health and fpirits : they are like fo many enrages *; and if Beaulieu had not got out of their way with his troops, I verily believe not a man of them would have efcaped. My brother, continued he, is Burgomafter of Pai, a fmall place at four or five leagues diftance from hence; and as he is gone to Liege on bufinefs, I am obliged to act as his fubftitute. I have quartered the foldiers in every corner of every houfe; there are forty-feven in our own, though it confifts only of three rooms. More, however, are continually arriving, and no

[ 104 ]

[^9]\[

\left[$$ \begin{array}{ll}
105
\end{array}
$$\right]
\]

longer ago than yefterday, fome officers of the national volunteers, when I told them I had no lodgings to give them, threatened to hang me. I obferved to them, that they would get very little room by putting me out of the way, as I only occupied a corner of the floor in the fame clofet with my mother and fifter: You fhould complain, faid I, interrupting him, of this intolerable infolence to the General. Que voulez vous, faid he, after a long day's march in fuch cold wenther? It is no wonder they fhould be vexed, when they find no fire to warm their frozen hands, or room to reft their weary limbs. I am, however,' fo tired of all this, that I was going to put my mother and fifter on the horfe, to walk myfelf to Liege by their fide, and to abandon the hpufe to the difcretion of our vifitors; but General de la Marche, who commands the vanguard, hearing of my intention, fent me a polite meffage, requefting me not to fir, under pain of military execution. It is hard, indeed, faid I, after being forced to give up your houfe, that you fhould be fhot for wifhing to leave it. Confider, re-' plied he, that the exigencies of the war oblige them to be fevere, and that ordinary rules will not apply to thefe extraordinary cafes. I am now ordered to fuperintend a convoy of bombs and cannon-balls, and am collecting waggons for that purpofe-Yes.-Here he fuddenly paufed, took off his night-cap, laid it on the table, put up his hand again, and began to rub his head, which I now perceived to be topfured. Then, as if fatisfied of his own identity, he refumed with a Sardonic fmile : Yes : I, a minifter of the gofpel, and a preacher of peace and univerfal benevalence, am fent upon this murderous miffion. It relieves me, however, from their importu-nity.-They muft have ten thọufand weight of fraw, and we have not a trufs in the vil-lage.-They muft have more bread is one day than we have flour remaining. Firft we had the

$\left[\begin{array}{lll}l & 106\end{array}\right]$

[ 807$]$

the emigrants with us, then the Auftrians, and now we have the French. The French are a brave nation; I was once in the fervice of the Fiench, and 1 am a friend to their: caufe. I admire their noble fyftem of liberty and equality, and I make no doubt but we fhall all be perfectly happy, by the time that, between them and their enemies, we are all entirely undone.

I exhorted him to patience-You are an Englifhman, faid he, your kingdom paffed through fix centuries of revolutions; you are in your element; but our little country has been whole ages without any political convulfion, and thefe are diftreffing novelties to us. I am determined not to ftay-I will go to England, where every thing at prefent is quiet. To England! faid I, why the King's Minifters themfelves have expreffed their fears of an infurrection.-I will go to Holland then.-As foon as England declares war, faid

1, to ferve the Dutch, Holland will be overrun by the French troops; and the patriots will take up arms again.-I will go to Switzerland then : I have . fmall eftate in the canton of Berne.-The worfhipful Senate of Berne, faid I, are obliged already to have recourfe to means of extraordinary feverity to keep the profane vulgar in order, and may very foon meet with the fate of his Moft High Highnefs the Prince Bifhop of Liege *. I declare to heaven, exclaimed the charitable prieft, that I believe a univerfal phrenzy has feized upon all mankind. There will foon be no corner of the world for a peaceable man to hide his head in. What can be the caufe of all this contention between the people and their governors !-l'll tell you, faid my companion :-When a man has got, io matter how, a fnug, warm, and comfortable houfe over his head, has been long in poffefion of it, and has fitted it up to fuit his own convenience, he will not turn himfelf out, nor will the right owner get in again without a law-fuit.

[^10]
[ 109 ]

Our converfation lafted as long as our ftay. The honeft fimplicity of his mind, joined to many marks of fhrewdnefs, and of folid fenfe, his univerfal philanthropy, and the charitable confruction he put upon affronts and offences offered to himfelf, endeared the man to me; and I could perceive, that the attention which I paid to his lamentations, and my feeming to feel for his embarraffments, had procured me his good will. We parted like cld friends; he fhook me affectionately by the hand, gave me his benediction, wifhed me fafe out of the war that threatened my country, and faid he hoped on fome future day to fee me there; for in fpite of the revolutionary rumours I objected, he feemed fill to have a ftrong defire to pay Eugland a vifit.

[ ito ]

We had not gone far, when we found the villages full of foldiers, and when we hadadvanced a little further fill, we met with bodies of horfe and foot, with their cainnon and ammunition, proceeding towards Liege.

Valence's army, without doubt, was the flower of the French foldiery, being principally compofed of dragoons, huffars, and grenadiers; nor have I often feen a finer fet of fellows. The regular troops were perfectly well clothed; their appearance was truly martial ; and the infults of the bleak horthwind, that called up the blood into their cheeks, heightened their look of health. I regretted much that fome of my prejudiced countrymen were not there, who carry their contempt of our Gallic neighbours to an excefs as unjuftifiable, as many of the French do their efteem of the Englifh. As to the national guards, their drefs was as tattered as their colours, which bore right honourable marks of fervice.

[111]

We had made a large allowance for the prieft's prediction of bad fare upon the road. We fhould have done better, if in this cafe we had placed greater faith in the church: for we found all he had told us almoft literally verified.

- At a place where our horfes were eating their corn, we afked the landlord, if he could give us a bottle of wine ? - Wine ! Gaid he, there is not a bottle of wine left in the country. Had he any room where we could warm ourfelves ? -My houre, faid he, is full of huffars; but I make no doubt that they will afford you a place near the fire. We went in; the appearance of Englifhmen, as ufual, occafioned a difplay of French urbanity, and we were forced to accept the moft comfortable feats. Next to mine was an officer, whofe whofe opinion I afked of the Auftrian troopss: They ftand fire very well, faid he; but wo can never perfuade them to meet us hand to hand. At Malliens*, no fooner did they hear our Commanders give the word, à la bayonnettc, à l'arme blancbe, than they ran from their entrenchments; while the men of the main-guard, finding they could not efcape, fell upon their knees, and begged for quarter.

[ 112 ]

When we went to pay for the only refrefhment we could procure, a glafs of bad fmall beer, we found the whole family huddled together in a little fmoky hole, hardly more than fix feet fquare. In this unpleafant fitu* ation, I was furprized at their good humour, and at the content pictured in their countenances, which was much at variance with the tears drawh from their eyes by the fmoke of the wood fire. We are very well fatisfied, faid the woman, with our guefts, the huffars ; they are honeft, civil, and orderly ; but the little footmen in blue (meaning the national volunteers) pilfer every thing that comes in their way.

[^11]the

[ 1 is ]

Sinet was the place at which we had purpofed Aleeping. Our provident coachman, however, fearing it might not afford enterzainment for man and bote $f$, determined to uifs no accommodations he might meet with on the road. His wife intentions were of no rivail. At fome places there was room for the horfes, but none for us; at others there were beds, but no ftabling; at Sinet there was neither one nor the other. We were therefore obliged to drive to the next village, a league and a half further on. It was midnight when we reached it, our cattle tired with the length of time they had been upon their legs, and we almoft frozen ftiff by our long expofure to the fevere nocturnal cold in an open carriage.

$\left[\begin{array}{ll}114\end{array}\right]$

This villa e was one of the moft miferable in Europe; and the only inn, or rather pothoufe, it contained, was worthy of fuch a village. We knocked firft at the door, and then at the window, and were at length anfwered by the landlord, who did not find our. being in the cold a fufficient reafon for his getting out of a warm bed. There was no contefting the propriety of this calculation,' of which his feelings were the fupreme judge. Ours, however, that were very painful, fet us to calculating too, and we thought it demonftrabie, that the only way for us to get any reft, was to deprive every body in the houfe of theirs.

At the end of about three quarters of an hour's rapping and roaring, we convinced the landlord landlord of the inverfe of our propofition : that the only way for him to get any, was not to deny it to us. He rofe, and opened the door, with fomewhat of a fullen demeanour. By degrees he grew more civil, and gave us every thing his houfe afforded; that is to fay, a little dry bread, a glafs of cold water, and a fcanty bed of ftraw fpread upon the fones of the apartment, that was at once the kitchen and the public room.

[ 115 ]

A man mult know what it is to be farving with cold and hunger in the middle of the night, after a journey of fifteen hours, to conceive the pleafure we felt at obtaining fuch wretched accommodations, in fo wretched a hovel. My co.npanion, indeed, was little the better for his bed. He did not clofe his eyes during the whole night; but as in " eight years wandering, and eight years war," I had fometimes wanted even ftraw; I I 2 did not, during the whole night, open mine. The next day brought us to Givet.

[ 116 ]

Givet can boaft of nothing fufficiently remarkable to detain a traveller; and thefortifications of Charlemont adjoining to it, and rendered almoft impregnable by its lofty fituation on a rock, overlooking the Maefe, might have been vifited in an hour. Thirty-fix, however, elapfed before we could get away; fuch was the difficulty we met with in procuring horfes, or a carriage of any kind. Hopelefs of getting any thing better, we at laft agreed to give forty-five livres for a cart to carry us and our baggage to Rocroi, which was double what travelling poft would have coft us, the diftance being only eight leagues. The greater part of the firft three, when our fpeed could match that of our vehicle, we walked on foot; but as foon as we left Fumay, and entered the foreft of the Ardennes, the depth of the

[ 117 ]

the mud reconciled us to our humble conveyance.

It is hardly poffible to imagine a wilder country. From the place laft mentioned to the poft-houfe without the gates of Rocroi, a fpace of five long leagues, there is not even the fhadow of a habitation. One dreary mountain follows another, and heath and wood, in alternate fucceffion, prefent a change of fcenery indeed, but give no relief to the difappointed vifion. In the dead feafon, the ruffet of the caks add to the tedious gloom of the landfcape, which the verdure of the fpring muft, no doubt render fomewhat more tolerable, Before the vigilance of the Marechauffec*, and the feverity of the laws, had cleared the country of robbers, thefe roads were the theatre of many a murder. The poftillion and the horfes were involved in the misfortune, and dragged into the foreft, which lent a cover to the crime, and often hid the fate of the haplefs traveller from the knowledge of his anxious relations.

[^12]
[ 118 ]

Sometimes the banditti, either from a want of time, or of folicitude, left the bodies unconcealed, and here and there a crofs erected on the fpot, ftill tells the tale of murdered paffengers.

At prefent nothing is to be apprehended; and if our lives weie in danger, it could only be from the overturning of our vehicle. Though the cart was hung fo low, that this feemed impoffible, the inconceivable badnefs of the roads, more than once very nearly proved the contrary. The fame caufe made our rate of travelling fomething lefs than a league an hour, and gave the rain time to make its way through our great coats, while the unevennefs nefs of the road confpired with the nature of the carriage to jolt us in a moft horrible manner. We might literally be faid to be broke upan the wheel.

[ 119 ]

Coming in fuch a queftionable thape to Rocroi, the better inns refufed to receive us. So relative, however, is human happinefs, that a bad bottle of wine, an indifferent fupper, a fhabby room, and hard beds, made us two of the moft contented men in the univerfe,

It is needlefs to fay, how we fet off the next morning from thence in a chaife with poft-horfes; how at the next fage we found carriage horfes without a carriage, and faddle horfes without a faddle; how we were in confequence obliged to pay extravagantly dear for fuch an equipage as that of the preceding day to carry our baggage to Mezieres; and how we walked three leagucs with our boot.

[ 120 ]

tops in the mud. The new fyftem of equality forbad us to complain; for great numbers of foldiers were travelling merriily in both directions, though as deep in the mire as ourfelves.

Mezieres was the term of thefe petty misfortunes. There for three louis-d'ors we hired a tolerable chaife, with a pair of horfes, to convey us in two days to Rheims. The diftance is only eighteen leagues; but the firft half of it, to Rhotel, is not a journey of cafy performance. I defy an Englifhman, who has never been out of his country, to conceive the poffible exiftence of fuch roads, or an Englifh carriage to advance a hundred yards along them without overturning.Wanting a good foundation, and being compofed of matcrials of a very friable nature, they have not been able to refift the conftant paflage of heavy artillery and ftores to the army, and are become no better than one contiṇued tinued flough. The great fones that have lately been thrown in at random, have not rendered them more folid, but have made them more dangerous.

[ 121] ]

We had not gone far before we difcovered that our driver was a wit. Meffieurs, faid he, vous voilà à Verfailles. How at Verfailles, faid we, feeing no appearance of a town, and wondering by what magic this might be.Yes, gentlemen, replied he, pointing with his whip, you are at Verfailles. We looked a little onward, and faw a loaded waggon lying on its fide, which had given occafion to this bad pun on the French word verfer, to overturn.

A little farther on, we met feveral others with teams of fourteen, fixteen, and nineteen horfes, and were affured, heaven knows with what truth, that one very heavily laden had been drawn through the worft of the road road by no lefs than fifty; and that the diligence with twelve had been nine hours travelling the five leagues between Mezieres and l'Aunoy, the village at.which we flept.

[. 122 ]

Arrivirg very early, and purpofing a very early departure the nex. morning, we told the landlord we fhould be glad to fup at half paft eight. At half paft eight ! faid he with aftonifhment. If, faid I, fo early an hour puts you to any inconvenience, let it be half paft nine. Is not half paft eight, anfwered he, a very late hour for fupper ?-Why, at what hour do you generally fup yourfelves? -About five, faid the landlord.

The appellation of la Cbampagne Pouilleufe * emphatically befpeaks the poverty of the country, which having preferved the inhabitants from much intercourfe with ftran-

$$
\because \text { Loury. }
$$

[ 123 ]

gers, has alfo preferved the regular hours, and fimplicity of manners of ancient times.

Of all the provinces we had travelled through, this was the only one that feemed in a bad ftate of cultivation, rather owing, I prefume, to the notorious fterility of the foil, than to the want of hands, or to the ravages of war. Some were, no doubt, committed by the mercenaries of Pruffia, and fome by the outcafts of France. If credit may be given to the report of the inhabitants of the country, the exploits of the latter may be reduced to the burning of Vaux, and feveral other villages, the ravifhing of children, the mutilating of women, and the murdering of defencelefs men. Yet thefe high and puiffant lords boafted, that they fhould ever be found fur le chemin de l'bonneur*. Such was por-

[^13]\[

\left[$$ \begin{array}{lll}
124 & ]
\end{array}
$$\right.
\]

fibly their intention; but fomehow or other they have certainly loft their way.

We continued ours, and arrived at Rheims on the evening of the 23 d of December. As the King was to go to the Convention to make his defence on the 26th, we fent off our baggage by the diligence, and took faddlehorfes at the poft-houfe. Owing to the conftant paffage of couriers, the bidets were worfe than French bidets generally are; and more than once we were difmounted by the falling of our fteeds, or by their being incapable of reaching the end of the ftage.

During the whole of the journey we remarked, that the apprehenfion of a war with England was peculiarly painful to the French. Though flufhed with their late fucceffes, and "confident againft a world in arms," it was evident there was nothing they dreaded more than fuch an event; not merely on account of the mifchief that might enfue, but becaule it would force them to regard as enemies the only nation in Europe they confidered as their friends.

All along the road, they anxioully alked us what we thought would be the confequence of the armament in England. We frankly told them we prefumed it would be war, and generally obferved a moment of filence and dejection follow the delivery of our opinion. But foon briftling up at the afpect of new dangers, feveral of them faid" Well! if all the world be determined to fight with us, we will fight with all the world. We can be killed but once."

The imminence of hoftilities, however, diminifhed in no degree the refpect they fhewed us as Englifhmen; and not only we did not meet with any thing like an infult in the whole of our tour ; but, on the contrary, we experienced every where particular kindnefs and attention. They feemed engerly to court our good opinion ; and frequently begged us not to afcribe to a whole nation the faults of individuals, and not to charge their government with diforders its prefent ftate of vacillation rendered it incompetent to reprefs. If there were any difputing fuch high authoritics as Mr . Burke, and the collective wifdom of the Kings of the continent, I confers I fhould never have fufpected, that I was travelling among a nation of favages, madmen, and affiffins. I fhould rather have wifhed with Shakefpeare,

[ 126 ]

- that thefe contending kingdoms, Enghand and France, whofe very fhores look pale With envy of each other's happinefs, May ceafe their hatred_
-that never war advance
Her bleeding fword'twixt England and fair FranceThat Englifh may as French, French Englifhmen, Reccive each other.

[ 127 ]

We reached Paris the day before the King's defence came on. The fad cataftrophe of the unfortunate Monarch was, no doubt, an event of mighty magnitude, and teeming with a multitude of otisers. It was probably the laft groan of royalty in France, and the laft great convulfion of all thofe that have di-. fracted the country for four years paft. It cannot be juftified ; nor is it the feafon for extenuation, now that the fream of prejudice flows ftrong, and the phantafm of a murdered King ftalks before our frighted imagination, and makes
_We fools of nature
So horridly to flake our difpofition, With thoughts beyond the reaches of our fouls.

Confident, however, in truth, and my good intentions, I fhall brave the extreme. opinion of the times, the ready cenfure of cither party, and the finifter interpretations of illiberal minds ; and thall hazard a few reflections and remarks, that a very long refidence in the country qualifies me, in fome degree to make.

The King's confpiring dgainft the new government has been made a queftion in Enggland, but it never was one in France, at leaft with any perfon of good faith or candour. A number of minute facts, that were loft in the diftance, formed an aggregate fufficiently evident on the fpct, and carried three-fold convidion to every mind. The frontiers no better guarded, after fourteen weeks declaration of war, than at the firf moment of hoitilities, though Lewis XVI. was invefted with full powers to augment and difpofe of the military force, and though hundreds of thoufands ftood panting for the fignal to fly to the defence of their country, might alone fuffice, and will alone juftify the fatal tenth of Auguf.

$$
\left[\begin{array}{lll}
129 & 1
\end{array}\right]
$$

Before that period, there was but one opin-1 nion on the futject, and the faunchert foyalifts in France, with their ufual imprudence, ufed to difcharge the emigrant printes and niobles from all blame of rebellion, by affert-3 ing that the King was acting in concert: with: them, and by appealing to the evidence of his conduct:

It is often afked if the King had not a right to defend himfelf in his own houfe?-But had not the people a right to employ the only means left to preferve the herenty they had purchafed at the expence of fuch a ftruggle ? And does not the Monarch fand in the culpable predicament of a man who, in hiss own defence, kills another, while he himfelf is engaged in the commiffion of fome illegal act? It is afked, if the Affembly had not the power to declare the forfeiture of the crown ?-Yes : but there was a ftrong pafty of members under the influence, or in the K pay
pay of the civil lift, and a ftill fronger one of the faction, called Feuillants, who dreaded the prevalence of the republicans more than that of the King. Befides, allowing them all to have been unbiaffed, a grave affembly could not have hurled him from his throne in an inftant. Too prudent to be guilty of any overt act, a vis inertia was the only means he ufed to bring the nation again under the yoke; and while the legiflative body, in preparation for judgment, would have been inveftigating facts invalidating excufes, and tearing away the pretexts with which he veiled his neglect, the Duke of Brunfwick would have executed judgment on them according to his threat.

In fifteen days after the attack of the Thuilleries, the executive council raifed a force fufficient to repel the enemy : in fifteen days more it would have been too late.

It is afked again, whother the National Affembly, and the armed force, had not fivorn' to obferve the conftitution ? Yes: but as the conftitution itfelf declared, that the nation had the imprefcriptible right of changing its government at plealure, that oath could only be binding as long as it was confiftent with the intereft, or agreeable to the wifhes of the people. Now the adhefion of all the departments to the King's depofition; and numberlefs fpontaneous addreffes of felicitation, have given room to fay, that the Parifian in-furgents on that day fpoke the fenfe of the nation. The good people of England, taking it upon the credit of good men, who have not been out of the ifland fince the revoluand, fay it was the fenfe of a faction. Ineves contend with revelation, or with men infpired; and, indeed, my own obfervation inclines me alfo to fay, that the defenders of the new fyftem are a facition : the petty, defperate, and defpicable faction of the eightyK 2
four

[ $\mathbf{r} \mathbf{3} \mathbf{2}$ ]

four departntents, fupported by feveral milllions of mein in arms.
ri. Ithas been faid in England, that the National Convention was not impowered to try Louis XVI. This is only true in part ; for a number of she departments, I know not how miany, gavc .vritten and exprefs directions to their deputies to try the Kiag, as well as to form a confitution. As none of the reft difavowed the declared intention of their reprefentatives, may they not be confidered as having given a tacit confent ?

It has been faid, that fome effential papers were kept back from the legal defenders of the Monarch. This affertion of a quondam French Minifter, now in England, was publicly difcuffed, and plainly proved to be falfe, in the Convention ; nor did Meffieurs Malefherbes, De Seze; and Tronchet, offer to avail themfelves of fuch a pretence. It has been cchoed, echoed; after the latter of thefe gentlemen, that the French penal code requires the concurrence of two-thirds of the judges or jurors to condemn a man accufed. It does fo, to give the verdict guilty, but not to pronounce the pemalty incurred by the offence. Now, the Convention was unanimous as to the criminality of the royal prifoner. Surely this opinion of more than three hundred of his judges, who wifhed to fave his life, muft re? move all doubt from the mind of the moft incredulous. If any had remained in mine, they would have yanifhed, when I heard a number of the King's friends fay, in the midft of their tears, that his attempts to recover his power were the natural effeet of his prejudices, and of his education : I believe fo too; and I heartily lament that a fate fo fevere fhould have attended a man, who was inferior in head and heart to few of the Prinees, of Europe: The general perfuafion of his imbecility was effectually done away by the

$\left[\begin{array}{lll}{[ } & 133\end{array}\right]$

$$
\mathrm{K}_{3} \quad \text { acutenefs }
$$

[ 134 ]

acutenefs of his anfwers at the bar of the Convention, and by the mafterly diction of that part of his laft will that did not relate to religion.

The above accufations brought againft his judges, feem then to admit of fome juftification; but what apology can be offered for the putting of a man to death, when no law determined fuch a penalty for his offence; when, on the contrary, iv only pre-cxifing law pronounced a different punifhment? Was the conftitution then, that was tendered to the King by the nation, no more than a fnare held out for his life? The laws of Na ture condemned him fay fome. But are we living in the woods? And does not every law of Nature forbid us to kill a captive in cold blood? No plea then remains but the abufive plea of neceffiy, which gives a changeable colour to fo much injuftice in many countries befides France.

[ 135 ]

Nor is it at all apparent that the dearh of Louis XVI. was neceffary to the fafety of the French republic. It is true indeed, that his name was the watch-word of parties, the declared enemies of the new government, as was proved by the late filly infurrection at Rouen, of priefts and nobles, affembled there from all quarters. This movement, perhaps, fealed the death-warrant of the King; for it is a fact, that many members, who had before determined to vote for the appeal to the people, changed their intentions on hearing of it, left the de- lay fhould be the occafion of other inteftine broils. It is curious that all the meafures taken, or pretended to be taken by thofe who called themfelves his friends, with a view of preferving his authority and his life, fhould have uniformly tended to pull him from the throne, and place him on the feaffold.

His behaviour on the day of execution difpelled the opinion that had been fo long en2 54 tertained

[ $13^{6}$ ]

oteit ned of his want of firmnefs and courage. The difficult circumftances he was in at the beginning of the revolution, when it was equally dangerous to adyance or to recede, and tho double part he acted during the formation and exiftence of the Thort-lived couftitution, gave to all his conduct an appearance of hefitation and timidity. When no longer King, Louis was himfelf again. Early on the fatal morning, the Queen expreffed a defire of bidding her unfortunate hufband a laft farewel. But the King, fearing probably to increafe the agitation of her mind, and to difturb the compofure of his own, declined the interview. The wretched Mary-Antoinette infifting, a meffenger was difpatched to confult the commons of Paris, wha prudently directed that her requeft thould be complied with, if not painful to the departing Monarch. Louis XVI. ftill refufed, and about half paft eight defcended from his apartment; and walked through the inner to the outer court-yard. When there he caft a lingering look upon the building, and heaving a deep figh, ftepped into the carriage.

Edgeworth, his weeping confeffor, keeping back out of refpect, the King, with a kind and dignified gefture, invited him to fit by his fide. During this preparation, he did not fhed a tear; but, on the contrary, difcovered fo much firmnefs in his demeanour, that a horfeman of the guard, commanded by Lieu-tenant-colonel Newton, an Englifhman, could not help exclaining, 2uel grand caractere !-On the way he was employed in converfation with the prieft; in reading the prayers appointed for departing fouls, and in looking anxioufly at the cavalry that formed his efcort, as if he ftill expected fome favourable event.

At about ten minutes paif ten he reached the foot of the fcaffold. The executioner and his affiftants offering to undrefs him, he rejected jected their help, with an apparent fenfe of his paft dignity, took off his coat himfelf, and meeting with fome difficulty in unbuckling his ftock, he thanked the perfon who affitted him in getting it off, with the fame unconcern, as if he had been preparing for bed. A momentary agitation, however, feized his mind, and he evidently thuddered, when he perceived that the hangman was cutting off his hair.

The delay that followed, and that was attributed to his reluctance to meet his fate was partly fpent in gazing upon the guillotinc, at the firft afpect of which he drew back with horror, in talking to thofe about him, and in fpeaking a few words to his confeffor. In this he was indulged; but when he afcended the fcaffold, not only the refpect due to a dying King, but even the common charity that fhould attend fo unfortunate a fituation, was forgotten. : In' a white waiftcont, and with his hands tied behind him, he made about half the circuit of the fatal theatre, with as firm a feep, and with the fame rolling gait, as when he ufed to pars between admiring crowds in the gallery of Verfailles. The Minifters of death hung all the time upon him, and being fternly ordered by General Santerre to do their duty, prevented him from proceeding further. Several times, actuated by a natural movement of indignation at finding himfelf fo roughly handled, and availing himhimfelf of an uncommon thare of ftrength, he fhook them rif, and feveral times he attempted to fpeak to the people: But the continual rolling of the drums hindered him from being heard, unlefs by thofe immediately about his perfon. fe pardonne a mes ennenis, faid he, © je foubaite que ma mort fafe le bonbeur de la France *. He would have have added more, but the executioners, with barbarous brutality, feized him by the ears; and tied him to the pillar that makes part of the fatal inftrument.

[ ${ }^{2} 39$ ]

[^14]
$\left[\begin{array}{ll}140]\end{array}\right.$

Sil le faut (if it murt te fo) faid the unfortunate Monarch, fubmitting to their violence, and feeming thereby to exprefs the hopes he had till then entertained of pardon : s'il le faut, repeated he. A moment after he was lowered down, and ere he could well pronounce the words, $\mathfrak{F} f$ meurs innocint (I die innocent) the weighty machine feparated his head from his body. The executioner held it up, freaming with blood, to the view of the furrounding multitude, who had looked upon the fcene in death-like filence. But as foon as it was over, the body of horfe, called the cavalry of the republic, that was placed latter particulars, are given upon the beft authority-the concurrent tellimony of the executiorier and his four affiftants, taken duwn feparately, and afterwards compared.

[ 141 ]

next to the fcaffold, putting their helmets upon the points of their fwords, and waving. them aloft in the air, cried out, Vive la na-i tion, vive la republique.

At the moment the King fet his foot upon the fcaffold, fix or feven perfons, placed upon: an elevated fpot, called out, Grace! grace! This cry occationed a fhort alarm among tho: military. No one, however, feconded it, nor: was it repeated by themfelves. The fear of fuch a wifh being more general, of the diffenfion that might follow, and of the attempt of a refcue, was the caufe of the fquare's * be's ing filled with cannon and troops, and of the: fad ceremony's being hurried fo precipitately to its end.

At the very inftant of execution, the corfeffor exclaimed, Monte au ciel, fils de St.

> * The Place de Louis XV.

Louis.

[ 142 ]

Louis *, and as foon as it was paft, a number of perfons gathered about the place of execution, to purchafe his hair, and dip their handkerchiefs in his blood. Some did fo out of devotion to his perfon, others with the view of poffeffing an object of curiofity, and others in the hope that it would prove a profitable fpeculation. Many of the national guards ftained the points of their bayonets, and the muzzles of their guns. This, faid they, we will fend to the enemy. Many of them danced round the fcaffold, finging the popular air called La Carmagnole; and a great majority of the fpectators of ali kinds thowed, on their return home, evident figns of joy.

They looked upon Louis XVI. as a tyrant and a traitor, who had brought a difaftrous war upon their country. Though a King, they confidered him as $n 0$ more than another man. And let us Britoins, penitus ab orbe diwif, who have a fpecial privilege for judging better of what paffes all over the world, than all the world befide, pity this iamentable miftake. Let us be the more indulgent, as the fuperior beings expreffed no particular concern. The heavens did not fhed a tear; no earthly convulfion rent the veil of the temple, nor did the thunder, rolling on the left of the guiliy city, reprobate the atrocity of the action.

[^15]man.

Nay, in proportion as our feelings are fennibly affected at the death of a King, we have fo few of us feen, let us make fome allowance for the feelings of othetc. The minds of the Parifians were peculiarly irritated. Thoufinds of them had loft their deareft friends, and their neareft relatives, in the bloody feenes of which the deceafed Monarch had been the wilful, or the occaional caufe ; and they all faw their country in /efted by cruel and innumerable merable foes, who were come with the declared intention of reinftating him in his former defpotifm, and who afferted that he was the infidious accomplice of their hoftile at-tack.

[ 144 ]

The fame deeds done in different circumftances may ftand as wide afunder as the poles. The killing of a man from whom we have received no offence, or upon frong provocation, conftitutes, in the firft cafe, a bortible crime; in the fecond, a fault that may admit of excufe. Confidered in this point of view, even the fanguinary feenes of the beginning of September may allow fome little extenuation. Let no man imagine, that I mean in any degree to juftify what I have never yet fuffered with patience a Frenchman to defend. My blood has ever been chilled by the hr id recital; nor have I a dearer wifh, than to fee the inftigators and performers of thefe bafe and atrocious actions punifhed nifhed as they deferve. But it is not the lefo true, that the Parifians were driven to defpair by the Duke of Brunfwick's approach to Pa ris, and by his infamous manifeftoes. Bouille's' threat of not leaving fone upon fone in the capital, was backed by the menaces of the emigrants. Their cruel conduct on the frontiers plainly fhowed the inhabitants of Paris what they had to expect. When the whole ftrength of the city rofe to repell the enemy, they feared that they fhould leave their aged fathers, and their defencelefs children, to the mercy of a band of confpirators, of which the part that was in the prifons was to be fet at liberty by their accomplices without.

[ 145 ]

Be this true or falfe, it is certain that fuch was their perfuafion; and I have been affured by a refpectable French merchant, who mixed, without participating in thefe horrid fcenes, that all the prifoners had received a day or two before fockings friped blue and white, to enable them to recognize each other. Their being in this uniform, he faid he could atteft from his own obfervation. The nobles and the priefts had alfo their diftinctive marks. If I could deubt the affertions of numbers who pretend to have feen thefe marks, I could not eafily reject the teftimony of a youth, too ingenuous to deceive, and too young to invent, who was prefent at the maffacre in the convent of Carmelite Friars. He fays that he faw cards taken from the breafts of the murdered priefts, on which were depicted a royal crowa, and a crown of thorns, with the words Regiment de Salomon written above, and below, miferere noftri. Why then fhould an event enchained with fo many incidents, and circumftances, be confidered as the natural confequence of the revolution? Thofe who affect to look upon it in this light, and who would fain make it an argument for the extermination of the new principles of liberty, are not aware, that while while the Saint Bartholomew in France, and the maffacre of Proteftants in Ireland (fcenes of blood far lefs provoked, and of much greater extent) are upon record; they are not aware, I fay, that their bold conclufion involves the condemnation of the Chriftian religion, and the profeription of all Kings.

$\left[\begin{array}{ll}146\end{array}\right]$

$\left[\begin{array}{ll}147\end{array}\right]$

But admitting that the page of hiftory was never fo foully ftained before, this is fo far from being a reafon for bringing the French under the yoke of their old defpotifm, that it is the ftrongeft argument that can be found for letting them try the experiment of a new government. As the cruelty with which they are reproached has marked their conduct from the firft day of the revolution, it is evident that their old government made them what they are; for who will believe that there is any thing in the kindly climate, or grateful foil of France, to render its inhabitants ferocious, or that the taking of the Baftille infilled this fuddei venom into thite fouls? It is indeed little to be wondered ath that a people treated like brutes for fo many centuries, fhould become like brutes when they broke their chain.

$\left[34^{9}\right]$

It may, pethaps, be fafer in this Chriftian land, for the man who rejoiced that there were prifons for the libellers of a Queen, to libel a whole nation, and to advire the cutting of his fellow creatures throats from generation to generation, than it is for another to inculcate charity to our neighbours, by a candid ftatement of facts, and demonftrable truth. But as my tcur induced me to relate the things I faw, and as thefe things led me natyrally to the reflections that accompany the mention of them, I defy reproach, and truft that my readers will fhow fome indulgence to tie hafty production of an unkilful pen4

[^0]:    * Banditti.
    + This fpeculation was not vain, for fince this was written, fome of the emigrants in Germany have been driven to the fe defperate courfes.

[^1]:    * The air ca ira recommends the taking of the Arifocrats to the lanthorin.

[^2]:    A meafure containing 240 French pounds.

[^3]:    * The expreffion made ufe of was too grafs for an cract trandation.

[^4]:    *This is only true of the cantoons, to which the preceding obfervations apply : the inference is evident.

[^5]:    * Except his want $\kappa^{f}$ faith. I beg to warn all good Chriftizns notito take adivantage of my mention of this gentleman's

[^6]:    - God is always on the fide of the ftrongeft battalions,

[^7]:    * Horum onniom fortiffime funt Belga.

[^8]:    * Oh ! if we could but once get hold of them in a plain.

[^9]:    *Malnen.

[^10]:    * Son Alteffe Celiffime.

[^11]:    * Having no map fufficiently minute to refer to, I am not fure of this orthography being the right. I can only follow the Frenchman's pronunciation. It is a place neir Namur.

[^12]:    * A body of guards on horfeback, employed folely jn the pretection of the highways, unlefs in time of war: They are now called the Gendarmeric Nationale:

[^13]:    * On the road of honour.

[^14]:    * "I forgive ny cnemics; and I wifh that my death may give happinefs to France." Thefe words, and the latter

[^15]:    * "Afcend to Heaven, fon of Saint Louis."

