The funny writer obtained a popularity wider probably than he had expected. His words reached Mrs. Stantiloup, as well as the Doctor, and were read even in the Bishop's palace. They were quoted even in the Bishop's palace. They were quoted even in the Broughton Gazette, not with approbation, but in a high tone of moral severity. "See the nature of the language to which Dr. Wortle's conduct has subjected the whole of the diocese!" That was the tone of the criticism made by the Broughton Gazette, in the minds of people unless and had declared that offence would be created in the minds of people unless and the word in its proper sense—and had declared that offence would be created in the minds of people unless and the word in its proper sense—and had declared that offence would be created in the minds of people unless and the word in its proper sense—and had declared that offence would be created in the minds of people unless and the word in its proper sense—and had declared that offence would be created in the minds of people unless and the word in its proper sense—and had declared in the minds of people unless and the word in its proper sense—and had declared in the minds of people unless and the word in its proper sense—and had declared in the minds of people unless and the word in its proper sense—and had declared in the minds of people unless and the word in its proper sense—and had declared in the minds of people unless and the word in its proper sense—and had declared in the minds of people unless and the word in its proper sense—and had declared in the minds of people unless and the word in its proper sense—and had declared in the minds of people unless and the word in its proper sense—and had declared in the minds of people unless and the word in its proper sense—and had declared in the minds of people unless and the word in its proper sense—and had declared in the minds of people unless and the word in its proper sense—and had declared in the word in its proper sense—and had declared in the word in its p in the 'Broughton Gazette,' not with approbation, but in a high tone of moral severity. "See the nature of the language to which Dr. Wortle's conduct has subjected the whole of the diocese!" That was the tone of the oriticism made by the 'Broughton Gazetto' on the article in 'Everybody's Business." "What else has he a right to expect?" said Mrs. Stantloup to Mrs. Rolland, having made quite a journey into Broughton for the sake of discussing it at the palace. There she explained it all to Mrs. Rolland, having herself studied the passage so as fully to appreciate the virus contained in it. "He passes all the morning in the school whipping the boys himself because he has sent Mrs. Peacocke away, and then amuses

plained it all to Mrs. Rolland, having herself studied the passage so as fully to appreciate the virus contained in it. "He passes all the morning in the school whipping the boys himself because he has sent Mr. Peacocke away, and then amuses himself in the evening by making love to Mr. Peacocke's wife as he calls her. Of course they will say that,—and a great deal worse." Dr. Wortle, when he read and re-read the article, and when the joks which were made upon it reached his ears, as they were sure to do, was nearly maddened by what he called the heartless iniquity of the world; but his state became still worse whon he regived an affectionate letter from the Bishop warning him of his danger. An affectionate letter from a bishop must surely be the most disagreeable missive which a parish clergyman can receive. Affection from one man to another is not natural in letters. A bishop nover writes affectionately unless he means to reprove severely. When he calls a clargyman "his dear letter from a bashop nover writes affectionate letter from a bashop mover writes affectionate letters. A bishop nover writes affectionate letter from a bashop mover writes affectionate letter from the Bishop mover writes affectionate letter from a bashop mover writes affectionate letter from the Bishop mover writes affectionate letter from ately unless he means to reprove severely.

But the Doctor was obdurate. "I seek no redress," he said, "aga ast my bishop: I seek redress against a newspaper which has caluminated me. It is your good opinion, my lord,—your good opinion, my lord,—your good opinion, which is the breath of my nostrils. I have to refer to you in order that I may show that this paper, which I should otherwise have despised, has been strong enough to influence that opinion."

doing so I will endeavor to prove that I have done neither. This I can only do by publishing in a count of law all the circumstances in reference to my connection with Mr. and Mrs. Peacocke. As regards mysels, this, though necessary, will be very painful. As regards them, I am inclined to think that the more the truth is known, the more general and the more genera describing the man's character to his wife, as he had done in the fury of his in dignation, he had acquitted the man of malice. He was sure now in his calmer noment, that the man had not in Stantiloup in the teeling that had prevai ed at the palage. JAS. G. MILLER,

THE MYSTERY OF MR. AND MRS. PEACOCKE.

"As for the paper," he said to himsell, walking quicker as his mind turned to this side of the subject, "as for the paper itself, it is beneath my notice. What is it to me what such a publication, or even the readers of it, may think of me? As for damages, I would rather starve than soil my hands wish their money. Though it should succeed in ruining me, I could not accept redress in that shape." And thus having thought the matter fully over, he returned home, still wrathful, but with mitigated wrath.

A Saurday was fixed on which he should again go up to London to see the lawyer. He was obliged now to be particular about his days, as, in the absence of Mr. Peacocke, the school required his was intended."

"I dare say. It seems innocent enough to them. If you throw soot at a chimney sweeper the joke is innocent, but very offensive when it is thrown at you."

"They are quite aware that you have ground to complain. Of course you can go on if you like. The fact that they have affered to apologise will no doubt be a point in their favour. Nevertheless you would probably get a verdict."

"We could bring the Bishop into court?"

"I think so. You have got his letter posking of the 'metropolitah press'?" "Oh yes."
"It is for you to think, Dr. Wortle, thether there would not be a feeling gainst you among clergymen."
"Of course there will. Men in author-

"Of course there will. Men in authority always have public sympathy with them in this country. No man more rejcless that it should be so than I do. But not the less is it necessary that now and again a man shall make a stand in his own defence. He should never have sent me that paper."

"Here," said the lawyer, "is the apolony they propose to insert if you approve of it. They will also pay my bill,—which, however, will not, I am sorry to say, be very heavy." Then the lawyer handed to the Doctor a slip of paper on which the following words were written:—

The absence of Dr. and Mrs. Wortle was peculiarly unfortunate on that afternoon, as a visitor rode over from a distance to make a cail,—a visitor whom they both would have been very glad to welcome, but of whose coming Mrs. Wortle was not so delighted to hear when she was told by Mary that he had spent two or three hours at the rectory. Mrs. Wortle began to think whether the visitor could have known of her intended absence and the Dector's. That Mary had not known that the visitor was coming she was quite certain. Indeed, she did not really suspect the visitor, who was one too ingenues in his nature to pre-concert so subtle and so we call a scheme. The visitor, of course, had been Lord Carstairs.

"Was he here long?" asked Mrs. Woytle, anxiously. The absence of Dr. and Mrs. Wortle was

"Two or three hours, mamma. He rode over fram Buttercup, where he is staying for a cricket match, and of course I got in some lunch,"

"I should hope so," said the Doctor.
"But I didn't think that Castairs was so I nd of the Monson lot as all that,"
"Mrs. Wortle at once doubted the declared purpose of this visit to Butteroup. Buttercup was more than half-way between Carstairs and Bowick.

They were now standing on the middle of the lawn, and Mary-had assumed a look which intended to signify that she expected him to go. He knew the place well enough to get his own horse, or to order the groom to get it for him. But instead of that, he stood his ground, and now declared his purpose.

"To see me, Lord Carstairs!"

"Yes, Miss Wortle. And if the Doctor had been here, or your mother, I should have told them."

"Have told them what?" she asked. She knew; she felt sure that she knew; and yet she could not refrain from the question.

with mitigated wrath.

A Saturday was fixed on which he should again go up to London to see the lawyer. He was obliged now to be particular about his days, as, in the absence of Mr. Peacocke, the school required his time. Saturday was a half-holiday, and an that day he could be absent on condition of remitting the classical lessons in the morning. As he thought of it all he began to be almost tired of Mr. Peacocke. Nevertheless, on the Saturday morning, before he started, he called on Mrs. Peacocke, in company with his wife,—and treated her with all his usual cordial kindness. "Mrs. Wortie," he said, "is going up to town with me; but we shall be home to-night, and we will see you on Monday if not to-morrow."

Alrs. Wortie was going with him, not with the view of being present at his interview with the lawyer, which she knew would not be allowed, but on the pretext of shopping. Her real reason for making the request to be taken up to town was, that she might use the last moment possible in mitigating her husband's wrath against the Bishop.

"I have seen one of the proprietors and the editor." said the lawyer, "and they are quite willing to apologise. I really believe they are very sorry. The words had been allowed to pass without being weighed. Nothing beyond an innocent joke was intended."

"I dare say. It seems innocent enough to them. If you throw soot at a chimney" is that all you can say to me?"

"Is that all you can say to me?"
"I think it is. You know you oughtn't to talk to me like that. Your own papa and mamma would be angry if they knew the" "Why should they be angry? Do you think that I shall not tell them?" "I am sure they would disapprove it altogether," said Mary. "In fact it is all nonsense, and you reality must go away."
Then she made a decided attempt to enter the house by the drawing-room win dow, which opened out on a gravel terace.

But he stopped her, standing boldly by "I think you ought to a give me an an-"I think you ought to a give me an answer, Mary." he said.
"I have; and I cannot say anything more You must let me go in."
"If they say that it's all right at Carstair; then will you love me?"
"They won't say that it's all right; and papa won't think that it's right. It's very wrong. You haven't been to Oxford yet and you'll have to remain there for three years. I think it's very ill-natured of you to come and talk to me like this. Course it means nothing. You are only boy, but yet you ought to know better gether.

"Yes, mamma; it was."

"And so odd. I haven't been away from home any day all the summer before."

"He expected to find you."

"Of course he did. Had he anything particular to say?"

"Yes, mamma."

"He had? What was it, my dear?"

"I was very much surprised, mamma,

"He had?" What was it, my dear?"
"I was very much surprised, mamma,
but I couldn't help it. He asked me——"
'Asked you what, Mary?"
"Oh, mamma!" Here she kneit down and hid her face in her mother's lap.
"Oh, my dear, this is very bad;—very bad indeed."
"It needn't be bad for you, mamma; or for nan."

"It needs to be dad for you, mamma; or for pape."

'Is it bad for you, my child?"

"No, mamma,—except of gourse that I am sorry that is should be so."

"What did you say to him?"

"If course I bold him that it was impossible. He is only a boy, and I told him so."

"You made him no promise."

"You made him no promise."

"No, mamma; no! A promise! Oh dear no! Of course it is impossible. I knew that. I never dreamed of anything of the kind; but he said it all out there on the laws."

"Had he come on purpose?"

"Yes:—so he said. I think he had. But he will go to Oxford, and will of course
forget it."

"He is such a nice boy," said Mrs.
Wortle, who, in all her anxiety, could not

"And then we had a game of lawntennis. Taibot and Monk came through to make sides." So much Mary told at ouce, but she did not sell more till she was alone with her mother.

Young Carstairs had certainly not come ever on the six, as we may sall it, but nevertheless there had been a project in his mind, and fortune had favored him. He was now shout nineteen, and had been treated for the last welve months almost as though he had been a man. It had seemed to him that there was no possible reason why he should not fall in love as well as another. Nothing more sweet, nothing more lovely, nothing

"Carstairs was here."
"Oh yes, he was here. He came on purpose to make a regular declaration of love to Mary."
"Nonsense."
"But he did, Jeffrey."
"How do you know he came on purpose?''

"He told her so.'

"He told her so."
"I did not think the boy had so much spirit in him," said the Doctor. This was a way of looking at it which Mrs. Wortie had not expected. Her husband seemed rather to approve than otherwise of what had been done. At any rate, he had expressed none of that loud horror which she had expected. "Nevertheless," continued the Doctor, "he's a stupid fool for his pains." pains."
"I don't know that he is a fool," said he has all Oxford before him. How did Mary behave?"

"Like an angel," said Mary's mother what did she say?"
"She told him that it was simply im possible."
"So it is, --I'm afraid. She at any rate

"She gave him none. She feels quite strongly that it is altogether impossible. What would Lord Bracy say?"

"If Carstairs were but three or four years older," said the Doctor, proudly, "Lord Bracy would have much to be thankful for in the attachment on the part of his son, if it were met by a return of faction on the part of my dauchter affection on the part of my daughter What petter could he want?" "But he is only a boy," said Mrs. Wortle.
"No; that's where it is. And Mary wo

"No; that's where it is. And Mary was quite right to tell him that it is impossible. It is impossible. And I trust, for her sake, that his words have not toushed her young heart."

"Oh no," said Mrs. Wortle.

"Had it been otherwise, how could we have been angry with the child?"

Now this did seem to the mother to be very much in contradiction to that which the Doctor had himself said when she had whispered to him that Lord Carstairs's coming might be dangerous. "I was afcaid of it, as you know," said she.

"His character has altered during the last twelve months."

"I suppose when boys grow into men it is so with them."

"Not so quickly. A boy when he laves Reon is not generally thinking of these. Eton is not generally thinking of thes things."

"A boy at Eton is not thrown into such society," said Mrs. Wortle "I suppose his being here and seeing Mary every day has "Poor Mary!"
"I don't think she is poor at all," said Mary's mother.
"I am afraid she must not dream of her young lover."
"Of course she will not dream of him.
She has never entertained any idea of the kind. There never was a girl with less monsense of that kind than Mary. When Lord Carstairs spoke to her to-day, I do not suppose she had thought about him more than any other boy that has been say, be very heavy." Then the lawyer handed to the Doctor a slip of paper on which the following words were written:—

"Our attention has been called to a notice which was made in our impression of the ultim on the conduct of a clergyman in the diocese of Broughton. A joke was perpetrated which, we are sorry to find, has given offence where extainly no offence was intended. We have since heard all the details of the case to which reference was made, and are able to say that the conduct of the clergyman in question has deserved neither censure nor ridicule. Actuated by the purest charity he has proved himself a sincese friend to persons in great trouble."

"They'll put in your name if you wish it," said the lawyer, "or alter it in any way you like, so that they be not made to eat too much dirt."

"I do not want them to alter it," said the loveor, sitting thoughfully. "Their eating dirt will do no good to me. They are nothing to me. It is the Bishop."

Then, as though he were not thinking of what he did, he tore the paper and threw the fragments down on the floor. "They designed to the conversation in the world was very high. Not for a mothing to me. It is the Bishop."

Then, as though he were not thinking of what he did, he tore the paper and threw the fragments down on the floor. "It on will not accept their apology?"
"You will not accept their apology?"
"Oh yes;—or resher, it is unnecessary."
"On may tell them that I have changed my mind, and that I will sake for no apology. As far as the paper is concerned, it was no reason why the son of a peer should not marry the daughter of a clergyman. The peer and the clergyman might have should not be encouraged to fail in low thin he seed the Bishop had sent it, and thought little or nothing of it, A mais will after their kind. The wasp states and the polecast shinks, and the lion tears its proy saunder. Such a paper as that of courses follows its own bent. One would have done the same."

"I may tell them that the action is withdrawn."

"I may tell the bishop would have chonge the probable in the bishop would have chonge the bishop would have been so sweet had it been possible; but then it was so evidently impossible.

With the Doctor the feeling was some what different. It was not quite so manifest to him that this special brick was altogether unattainable, nor even that it was quite the top of the oblimney. There was no reason why his daughter should not marry an earl's son and heir. No doubt it would have been his cuty to have prevented anything of the kind, had anything of the kind seemed to him to be probable. Hai there been any moment in which the duty had seemed to him to be a duty, he would have done it, even though it had been necessary to caution the Earl to take his son away from Bowick. But there had been nothing of the kind. He had acted in the simplicity of his heart, and this had been she result. Of course it was impossible. He acknowledged it himself that it was so, because and those long years which would be fequired for the taking of the degree. But to his thinking there was no other ground for saying that it was impossible. The thing must stand as it was. If this youth should show himself to be more constant than other youths,—which was not probable,—and if, at the end of three or four should show himself to be more constant than other youths,—which was not probable,—and if, at the end of three or four years, Mary should not have given her heart to any other lover,—which was also improbable,—why then, it might come to pass that he should a me day find himself father-in-law to the future Earl Bracy Though Mary did not think of it nor Mrs Wortle, he thought of it,—so as to give an additional interest to these disturbed days.

Shanty, Camp and Boat Stove.

[From Miramichi Advance of Oct 11.]

Mr George Marquis of Chatham will be looked upon as a benefactor of smell fishermen, sportsmen and others who may have the good fortune to procure stoves of the new pattern designed by him the first sample of which was put together at his well known shop at "hatham on Tuesday afternoon and shipped yesterday to Negune Its to be used in a coos-shooter's cump at Tabusintac and for high purpose as yell as for peating and cooking in smelt-fisherments shantigs it is just the thing it is about 20 inches long, 14 inches from front to back and the sane from bottom to top. The bottom, top, door and dampers, etc are of cast fron and the sides and ends are composed of a sheet of 16 graps sheet steel I will hold nearly twice as much wood as a star stove while owing to a new and peculiar form adopted in the bottom, it will burn either a annal or jarge cuantity of fuel, as may be destred It may also be sitted to jurn only. There is a draft for forcing the tire and a damper for lessenting the least at will. The top has two poth-sles and these may, by the removal of the dividing centre-piece, which is of the usual form, be converted into an oblong hole for a big boiler or oblong pan. Alto-gether, the new shanty-stove seems to meet a requirement that is more than local, and the cost, places it within almost everbody's ability to buy it Mr Marquis has just begin to ill orders, and it will be well for those who intend to fash same the same time, have a stove on which they can do quite a range of cooking to place their orders with lin, as carry as possible.
