A December Sale.
 Many people when they hear the words "special sale" shrug their shoulders with incredulity. Perhaps they are not to blame. The "great clearing sale regardless of prices" and the "selling under cost" business has been over-done.

Our Position is This:
 The season has been unusually warm—too warm to create much of a demand for heavy goods, and we have a very large stock of this class of goods on hand. It will pay us better to make some sacrifice of profit than to carry them over; therefore, we are prepared to make generous reductions in all departments of winter goods.

A Bit of Counsel.
 Don't buy Flannels, Underwear, Dress Goods, Mantle Cloths, Ready-made Mantles, Etc., until you see our stock and get our reduced prices. It will mean money in your pocket.

MONDAY, JAN. 18.—Last Friday night our correspondent was thrown into a state of amazement by seeing the boys getting out their best turn-outs. On inquiry it was discovered that they and their fair ones were going to a party at the home of the Mutual Glycerine Factory, Mr. T. H. Crawford. After the party had assembled, the evening was spent in games and plays, interspersed with excellent music rendered by Messrs. Morrison and Washburn. When they were tired of this, they refreshed themselves by a luncheon which did justice to the judgment and skill of the hostess. But when old Father Time got around to the wee sma' hours, they took their respective leave, all despondently minded with the evening spent, hoping to meet again some day at a pleasant gathering.

DEER HUNTING OUT NORTH.
 To scribe of the Reporter accounts this Many and Varied Experiences While Hunting for Game in the Wilderness.
 In order to keep the thread of our narrative complete, it will be necessary to go back a few days anterior to those recorded in last week's Reporter. On the party reaching camp one evening they found that the Fox Hunter had met with a very severe accident, and had to be assisted to camp by the Butcher who was in the vicinity where the hunter was stationed for the day. It seemed from the story told by the Fox Hunter that he had heard the deer leading towards a hill on which he knew was a runway, and hoping to cut across and intercept the game he started down towards the spot on a half run. He suddenly came to an abrupt descent down which he attempted to clamber. When about half way down he slipped and in his effort to save himself from pitching headlong down the cliff, he fell on a sharp rock, striking his leg just below the knee cap. On attempting to rise he found himself hors de combat. He was fully a mile from any of the party, and he put forth all his energies and managed to partly walk and crawl over the intervening hills and valleys and was fortunate in striking the trail only a few minutes in advance of his companion of the morning. The Butcher boy earned the gun and lent him the aid of his strong arm where the ground permitted, and at length they reached camp. By this time the wounded leg had swollen considerably and the historian was laid on more than one occasion been dubbed "Doc" was called upon to give his professional services to alleviate the pain experienced by his patient. On examination he was satisfied that no bones were broken and he at once set to work to reduce the swelling and take out the soreness. The first thing was to put on a large pan of water on the stove and while the water was heating he assisted in reducing the swelling from the injured limb. The water was brought to a near boiling heat, as possible and then a vigorous bathing of the bruised parts was resorted to. Fully half an hour was spent in this work and then from the capacious navy of the Historian's trunk was brought forth a bottle of L. L. L. Nearly one third of the contents of the bottle was rubbed on and then a liberal supply of bandages was applied and the patient rolled up in blankets and stowed away in one corner of the tent. By the time supper was ready he was able to eat a good supply of the delicacies tendered him, and after winding up with a good smoke he was allowed to occupy the privileged side of the camp bed, which happened to be alongside of his medical adviser who was under the necessity of giving him an occasional vigorous poke in the ribs when his sores, (not groans) were felt.

NEXT morning a second application of Lamb's Lubricating Liniment helped to reduce the swelling and soreness, and that afternoon the patient was able to hobble out and set the wood for the camp fire. The next day he was able to go in the boat to the Narrows, and on the following day he resumed his old place as one of the most active hunters.

For a number of days the arrangements for hunting had not seemed to please Joseph. He said he liked anything but starting for home. So a private council of war was held and the Machine Agent deputized to offer on behalf of the assembled hunters that Joseph should be commander-in-chief for the next day and "have the say" as to how the hunt should be conducted. Accordingly, after supper, when the pipes (of those who smoked) had been lighted the hunter was carefully and delicately broached to him. He demurred a little at first, but the persuasive eloquence of the Smith, and a little taffy thrown in occasionally by the Rabbit Hunter and Butcher, produced the desired effect and Joseph was seen smiling in token of approval. Seating himself cross-legged on a chunk of wood, he merrily laid out the plan of campaign for the morrow. He was a fair earlier than usual next morning and soon had everything in readiness for a start on the trail. The Narrows was also pointed for the day and the Rabbit Hunter assigned to the Lake of the Woods, while the Historian and Butcher took up stations on runways in that vicinity. The Smith was sent to the east, the Agent to the north, and Josiah slung his rifle under his arm, and loped off to a place he alone knew of. The Fox Hunter put out the dogs which scooped off in a wrong direction and a couple of sharp rifle reports told the party that some prowling sneak had shot their game, as the dogs soon returned to their master. He succeeded in shortly getting another start and in a few minutes the deep snoring report of Josiah's heavy rifle told plain that words that he was in luck, by getting a shot, at least. Soon a halloo was heard from a hill top away to the north and the information given that Josiah had brought down his game and wanted a boat brought across the portage to carry the carcass out to camp. After a lot of tramping and showing the Rabbit Hunter was told to row the boat down one of the bays in the direction of another lake that lay in the direction of where the deer was killed. The Historian, and Butcher shouldered the boat and the Rabbit Hunter carried the oars and his gun. The path lay along an old Indian trail for a short distance when it was blocked with fallen trees and underbrush. To stand on the mountains above and look down on the Indians separating the two lakes, it did not seem to be more than forty or fifty rods, but the boys felt in their bones before the shore of the lake was reached that it was nearer a mile. All things, even to carrying a boat over rocks, logs and underbrush, must have an ending, and the shore was reached after a full hour of rough and tumble progress was made. The boat was quickly launched and while the Butcher and Josiah crossed the Historian to clear a passage for the return across the portage, armed with his large hunting knife he proceeded to clear a road by heading over the poplar and white birch saplings and slashing them until they broke off. In many places burned logs, ten or twelve feet long, would be rolled out of the path and a fairly good track made for the return journey. When the Butcher returned with the boat on the carcass of the deer, he gave the not very pleasing information that Josiah and the Agent, after removing the entrails and drawing the deer down to the shore, had started off for the lake landing, leaving the portaging at the Narrows to be done by the party who took the boat over. Knowing there was no use of whining, the three men set to work to get the loads to the other lake and so on towards camp. As they were twisted and fatigued around the neck of the carcass, which was that of a fine three year old buck, weighing about 150 lbs., and the task of dragging it across the half-mile space begun. The Rabbit Hunter was inclined to pool at the idea of a return trip had to be made the road as done by the Historian, but he soon felt compelled to acknowledge that the work of portaging was lessened one-half. When the carcass was deposited on the shore of the other lake, a return trip had to be made for the boat and oars and about the middle of the afternoon the frail craft was launched, and the deer dropped in the stern, and while the Rabbit Hunter pulled across to the other shore, the others made a detour around the shore for the same spot. The party all gathered at the shore and making a rude litter for the carcass of the deer and occasionally changing place the load was taken across to the stern of the boat previously described when the canoe was called into requisition and soon all were in camp.

And now, kind reader, our story is about being brought to a close. We might go on relating the adventures of individual members of the party, and run the story out for several columns more. We could tell of how on nearly half a dozen occasions the Smith allowed deer to come up to within a stone's throw of him and then gallop away unharmed; how the Fox Hunter trailed the woods, put out the dogs, sat for days on runways and still never saw the flop of a deer's tail; how Josiah in his wanderings over the hills saw many chances to kill game but something always intervened to prevent him shooting "to kill"; we could tell, too, of the Historian's adventures, how he saw quite a number of fine bucks and does, but at no time was he able to get a shot, although he shot at several but only succeeded in bringing down one, as already described. The Butcher boy's forte seemed to be small game, for he kept the larder well supplied with rabbit, partridge and duck, and it was no uncommon thing to see from eight to ten partridge hanging from the boughs of the trees surrounding the camp. Every one enjoyed the best of health and spirits and all went merry as a marriage bell. The merry four weeks spent in the woods were like one grand picnic, in which all felt at home and free to eat and speak for himself. No jangling or unkind words was indulged in, and everything was conducted with becoming decorum. Should you ever have the privilege of participating in another outing, his only hope is that if through any cause any of the old party is unable to go along, he will have the pleasure of being associated with a jolly party who have souled a lot of men as on his former trips.

I am determined to reduce my stock of Overcoats if prices will do it and it's the low prices that I am holding out as an inducement to the public. I have too many goods, no room for them.

When King James the first wrote his "counterblast to tobacco" the royal pedant knew nothing of the "Myrtle Navy." If he had, instead of wasting his brains over his curious production, he would have filled his royal pipe with it, and would have taken a royal smoke, he would then have been prepared to admit that with regard to the injurious effects of tobacco, it all depends on what tobacco you smoked.

FROM MANITOBA.

A Former Resident of Leeds County Writes of the Present Progress of Snowfalls, Man., Jan. 11, 1892.

DEAR SIR—Through your generosity I have been favored with a number of copies of your live paper, and, sir, I can assure you that I very much appreciate your kindness in enabling me to read through your columns so many of the land marks and the people whom I associated with, now nearly twenty years ago, and no doubt if I was to stoop to drink at the old school house spring, I could say with the author of "Twenty Years Ago" that my face has changed.

But there is something irresistible in this life that carries us out all along life's stream to our different situations, and how very important it is to have a steady hand at the helm to steer clear of the rocks and shoals that present themselves, whether it be in Ontario or Manitoba.

Well, Mr. Editor, I will now, with your permission, address a few words to your readers that may have their sympathy in the recent sudden death of our beloved brother and our devoted husband. We would deplore our mutual loss, in our case a worthy brother, faithful in all his duties, and as we know a husband and father who was untiring in seeking the welfare of his loved ones.

Human sympathy can do but little, but as a band of brothers whose duty it is to care for the widow and orphan, we extend our aid, first, by presenting you with the enclosed check for two thousand dollars, and, next, by offering at all times to give you such assistance and counsel as may be in our power and which you are free to command. Above all, we commend you to the care of the Divine Father who has promised to be a husband to the widow and a stay to the fatherless.

With warmest wishes for your future welfare, we remain in the bonds of Charity, Hope and Protection. (Sgd.) JAMES CUMMINGS, P. F. CLOW, A. H. McLENNAN, Com.

Mrs. Stewart in reply stated that she was unable to express her gratitude fully just then, but would do so later through the press.

The Lyn Lodge A.O.U.W. has since its institution paid in beneficiaries to widows and orphans over twelve thousand dollars.

DULBAMAIN.

SATURDAY, JAN. 9.—Who was the young man that had his buggy wheels changed last Sunday night?

The last of the pioneers of this neighborhood passed away Dec. 30th, in the person of Mr. Samuel Headly. For over forty years he has resided here and in that time has accumulated a fine property. He leaves two daughters and one son to mourn his loss, his wife and one son having preceded him to the better land. The funeral sermon was preached by the Rev. Mr. Fairlie, Presbyterian minister of Lansdowne, on New Year's Day. The remains were then placed in the vault.

Miss Minnie Mole, of Athens was this week the guest of Miss Chattie Sitter. Miss Ida Boyd of Almonte returned to Brockville on Friday, having spent a couple of weeks with her cousin Miss C. Sitter. Miss Sarah Rath of Malakoff was the guest of Mrs. James Patience this week.

The Xmas tree entertainment in connection with the Sunday school here on Xmas night was quite a success, in spite of the bad condition of the roads and the unfavorable weather. The audience were delighted with the Misses Richardson from near Gananoque, who so kindly consented to favor us with their talent, one as an elocutionist and the other as a singer. A pleasing feature of the evening's entertainment was a presentation by the members of her class of an address and a beautiful plush album to Miss C. Sitter. Mr. Cowan, the superintendent, read the address and made the presentation in behalf of the class. Miss Sitter replied.

FRANKVILLE.

FRIDAY, JAN. 15.—The Kitley Agricultural Society held their annual meeting at Frankville on the 14th of January, with a good attendance of members. The treasurer's report showed a balance on hand of $112.18 (with no outstanding debts), an increase of $71.13 over last year, which seemed to please the members well.

After receiving the reports of secretary and treasurer, the following officers were elected for the present year:—President, David Dowley; vice-president, William Ennis; directors, Robert Barlow, Vincent Judson, Wm. Lee, Samuel Hanston, Stewart Cross, A. H. Parker, P. Stewart, Wm. Mitchell, O. L. Munroe.

Immediately after the meeting the new Board met and appointed W. D. Livingstone secretary and Wm. Ennis treasurer. The following committees were appointed:—Robert Barlow, Wm. Mitchell, Wm. Lee, and D. Dowley to audit previous year's accounts. Wm. Ennis and A. H. Parker, with the assistance of two ladies were appointed to revise the ladies' department of the prize list.

It was decided to hold the exhibition on Wednesday and Thursday, 8th and 29th of September. The Executive Court met on the 15th with a large attendance. Rev. A. A. Badley is assisting Rev. J. B. Saunders in special services at Brockville this week.

LYN.

MONDAY, JAN. 11.—A deputation from Lyn Lodge A. O. U. W. waited on Mrs. A. W. Stewart on Saturday evening and presented her with a cheque for $2,000, amount of insurance policy held by her late husband, and the following letter of condolence: To Mrs. ARAX. W. STEWART.

Dear Madam,—By appointment of Leeds Lodge No. 179 A.O.U.W., we beg to tender you on behalf of the members of our lodge their heartfelt sympathy in the sudden death of our beloved brother and our devoted husband. We would deplore our mutual loss, in our case a worthy brother, faithful in all his duties, and as we know a husband and father who was untiring in seeking the welfare of his loved ones.
