The Romance OF A Marriage.

CHAPTER XXIV.

"It doesn't matter whether it's long or short," he retorts, sullenly. "I am in love with you, and I want you to be my wife—there!" and he nods his head with a self-assured smile. After all, she cannot refuse him—him, the heir to Powis Court and the Palmer wealth.

Paula looks at the colt's head, looks at the whip, then, at last, looks down at the sultor.

"Mr. Stancy, I'm very sorry," she says. "You have evidently been labouring under a mistake."

"A mistake?" he echoes, with a smile of surprise.

"Yes," says Paula, nodding. "Quite a mistake. I see, by your tone, that you thought I should be glad to—to accept your offer. But it is not so. Permit me, respectfully—and she inclines her head almost to the colt's neck—"to decline."

He stands for a moment speechless, staring at her; then all his mean nature shines in his colourless eyes, and lurks about his mouth.

"Do you mean that you say 'No'?" he asks, insolently.

"I mean 'No!' the plainest of 'Noes!' says Paula, stung by his tone.

"Do you—do you understand what it is you are doing?" asks Stancy.

"I thought I was declining the honour of Mr. Stancy de Palmer's hand!" says Paula, with keen sarcasm. "Was I mistaken?"

"You—you refuse me—the heir to Powis Court?" he says, his voice thick and heavy.

Paula draws herself up, and gathers the reins in her hand preparatory to riding off.

"Stop!" he says, flushed and agitated. "There must be some mistake."

"There is a very great one," says Paula, her eyes flashing. "And it is this: that Mr. Stancy de Palmer considers that he has only to ask and to have anything that he has set his heart on."

He forces his surprise and indignation down, and stares up at her.

"Don't be in such a hurry. Listen to me, Miss Paula. There must be some reason for your refusing me, you know?"

"There is," says Paula, with grim irony. "And it is because I am not desirous of becoming—Mrs. Stancy de Palmer."

The tone of irony rouses what little spirit Stancy de Palmer possesses.

"It isn't that," he says, between his clenched teeth. "That isn't the reason. It's that stuck-up beast, Sir Herrick—that's the reason! You were pleasant and friendly enough till he came, and—and turned you from me."

Paula laughs an ominous laugh.

"I never was turned towards you," she says. "Why, Mr. Stancy de Palmer, you never addressed a word, scarcely to me until the other day."

"I don't care," he says, sullenly. "It's all his fault. If it wasn't for him you wouldn't treat me like this."

"But I should," says Paula, firmly.

"If you had come and said what you say now a month ago, I would have said the same. No, no, a thousand times no."

"I don't believe it," he retorts, his ugly, commonplace face distorted with evil passion. "I'm Stancy de Palmer, of the Court, and it isn't likely that you would have refused to be the mistress of Powis Court."

The name "Powis" moves her, and her lips quiver.

"Mr. Stancy," she says, almost meekly, "listen to me. If you had come a month ago and told me what you tell me now, I should have made the same reply, simply because I do not love you."

"That will come in time," he growls.

Paula smiles. "I think not," says Paula, with a still more pronounced smile and a shake of the head.

"Yes, it would," he says, doggedly. "It is only this fine swell, this Sir Herrick, who—"

"Take care, Mr. Stancy!" breaks in Paula with a smile, half-contemptuous, half-defiant. "You force me to give you the real reason for my response to your generous offer. I am engaged to Sir Herrick Powis."

Stancy de Palmer looks up at her, his face crimson, and then white with jealous envy.

"Oh," he says, "that's it, is it? Well, I wish you joy."

"Thanks," says Paula, with a smile, as if the wish were genuine.

"I wish you joy," he repeated. "I thought that was it. Engaged to him. To a penniless beggar."

"Has he ever begged of you, Mr. Stancy?" demands Paula, with suspicious sweetness.

"It doesn't matter," he retorts, sullenly. "He hasn't got a penny to bless himself with. And besides—"

"Besides what?" demands Paula.

"Besides that," she says, holding her whip ready to urge the colt onwards.

"Besides, he's no better than he should be," says Stancy, desperately. "Better take me than a fellow like that, that can't be depended upon for two days together. Why, he's like a sailor, got a wife in every town."

"Has he?" retorts Paula, her gentle eyes all ablaze. "Then listen to me, Mr. Stancy. I'd sooner take my chance with Sir Herrick, the beggar, than marry Mr. Stancy de Palmer, the millionaire. Is that plain enough? If I have been hard and unkind, that is your fault; you forced me to it. Let go my horse's head, please, and she raises her whip, her eyes sparkling.

"Stop! stop!" gasps Stancy. "Let us part friends."

"Friends—by all means," said Paula, with a smile. "Good-bye," and she bites her lip.

"Sir Herrick doesn't think so," he says, sullenly.

The crimson floods Paula's face, and she bites her lip.

"Friends—by all means," said Paula, with a smile. "Good-bye," and she bites her lip.

the whip comes down within an inch or two of Stancy's fingers, and the colt leaps forward at a gallop. But suddenly compunction seizes her, and the gentle, forgiving mood, which waits hard upon all Paula's little outbursts, takes the place of the anger and indignation which have overwhelmed Mr. Stancy. With a firm hand she pulls up the colt, and, swinging round, comes back at a trot to where Stancy still stands staring after her.

Seeing her turn, a sudden, swift crimson suffuses his plain face, and his lack-lustre eyes dilate. She is going to change her mind—she has come to her senses, he thinks; but his face falls again as she came up and he sees the expression in her eyes.

"Mr. Stancy," she says, slowly, falteringly, "that was a forgiving request you made just now, and I'm afraid I didn't meet it as I ought. But indeed I want to be friends, as we used to say at school. I'm afraid we both lost our temper, didn't we?" and a bright smile breaks on the sweet face.

"After all, it was a great compliment you have paid me—I mean asking me to be your wife; and if I can't be—which I can't—there is no reason why we should quarrel. Let us be friends and forget anything that has been said on either side," and she holds out her little, gloved hand with a persuasive smile that would melt the heart of a stone.

Stancy de Palmer looks up at her with a sullen, shifty glance.

"Oh, yes, just so," he says, trying to speak easily. "I'm quite willing, I'm sure—ah. Er—er—I suppose you won't mention this—I mean there's no occasion—" and he breaks off stammeringly.

Paula's eyes lighten down upon him with a smile of scornful amusement.

"No, I shall not mention it, Mr. Stancy. I am not one to trumpet my conquests abroad, however proud I may be of them; and of course I am awfully proud of this particular one."

He glances up at her askance, but breathes a sigh of relief.

"Thanks," he says, with an affectation of languid melancholy. "Awfully cut up, and all that; but suppose I shall get over it."

"You will 'get over it' easier than if it were—the measles," says Paula, with a good-humoured laugh. "Believe me, I'm not worth caring for."

He glances up at her.

"Sir Herrick doesn't think so," he says, sullenly.

The crimson floods Paula's face, and she bites her lip.

"Friends—by all means," said Paula, with a smile. "Good-bye," and she bites her lip.

THERE IS ONLY ONE GENUINE ASPIRIN

Only Tablets with "Bayer Cross" are Aspirin—No others!

If you don't see the "Bayer Cross" on the tablets, refuse them—they are not Aspirin at all. Your druggist gladly will give you the genuine "Bayer Tablets of Aspirin" because genuine Aspirin now is made by Americans and owned by an American Company.

There is not a cent's worth of German interest in Aspirin, all rights being purchased from the U. S. Government.

During the war, acid imitations were sold as Aspirin in pill boxes and various other containers. But now you can get genuine Aspirin, plainly stamped with the safety "Bayer Cross"—Aspirin proved safe by millions for Headache, Toothache, Earache, Rheumatism, Lumbago, Colds, Neuritis, and Pain generally.

Handy tin boxes of 12 tablets—also larger "Bayer" packages.

Aspirin is the trade mark (Newfoundland Registration No. 761), of Bayer Manufacturing of Monocaceticacid of Salicylicacid. The Bayer Co., Sue, U.S.A.

"We agreed, didn't we, not to mention Sir Herrick's name? Better not, if we are to remain friends, Mr. Stancy. Good-bye," and with a nod and a smile she turns the colt and rides away for good this time.

CHAPTER XXV.

"He's like a sailor; got a wife in every port."

These words flash across Paula's mind as she gallops the colt away from the corner where Stancy de Palmer stands looking after her.

It is just the vulgar, backbiting kind of slander that might be expected to fall from that exquisite gentleman's lips, and surely should be the last of all his callidish impudence to stick to her.

But it does stick; and even as she laughs scornfully, and tosses her head with amused contempt at the recollection of the taunt, it sticks to her and rings in her ears.

"Some day," she thinks, with a sudden flush on her sweet face, and a gleam of mischief in her eyes—"some day in the far future, she will tell Rick what was said of him, and they will have a good laugh over it."

The colt trots up to the door, and Paula looks eagerly at the chair under the verandah; she feels sure that if Sir Herrick has arrived, he will be there waiting for her; but the chair is occupied by Alice, leaning back, with her feet luxuriously perched on a stool, and a yellow-covered novel hanging listlessly in her white fingers.

"Well, my dear," she says, glancing up curiously through her half-closed lids at the little figure in its close-fitting habit and the bright, flushed face, "have you enjoyed your scamper?"

"Very much," says Paula. "Is there—is there any letter for me?" she asks, with affected carelessness, which doesn't impose upon Alice for a moment.

"Not one," she answers, with a slight curve of the thin lips. "I'm afraid Sir Herrick is not much of a correspondent, my dear."

Paula laughs rather ruefully.

"I suppose he isn't; very few men are, are they?"

"Don't appeal to me," responds Alice, with a shrug. "My experience of the other sex is no more extensive than your own; in fact, less so. It seems to me, dear child, that yours threatens to be almost too extensive."

"What do you mean?" asks Paula, absently.

Alice laughs softly.

"I mean that your conquests are thickening. Like Alexander, you will be complaining that there are no more worlds to conquer. Did you meet Mr. Stancy?"

"Oh, I see," says Paula, a quick flush of annoyance tingeing her face. "Has he—did he? What an absurd creature he is!"

"Has he told me in so many words that he has surrendered to your all-powerful charms?" says Alice, still smiling, but with rather an unpleasant curve on her lips. "Not in so many words; but seeing that he has haunted the place like a ghost or a bullfinch, and asked for you at least half a dozen times in half-an-hour, I have been able to make a shrewd guess at the state of his mind. Upon my word, dear, I congratulate you."

Holy War Threatened.

Young Turks and Reds Favor Jihad Against Britain -- Black List of German Officials Mounting Up -- Toronto Reports Ten Thousand Influenza Cases -- Illinois Topers Die of Indulgence in Face Lotions -- English Pound Sterling Now Worth $3.19 in New York.

HOLY WAR THREATENED.

LONDON, Feb. 4. A despatch to the Exchange Telegraph Company from Constantinople to-day says: "The young Turks red army will in the near future reach Constantinople to throw out the Turkish enemies. Turkish Bolshevik announce that a Holy War against Great Britain will be undertaken in the spring."

POLAND AND RUSSIA.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 4. The Polish Diet will sign the Peace Treaty offered by the Russian Soviet Government if guarantees are given that propaganda will not be carried on in Poland and other European countries. It is said by Prince Lubomirski, Polish Minister to the United States.

THE EXTRADITION TANGLE.

PARIS, Feb. 4. Kurt Von Lersner, German Charge D'Affaires here has returned to Premier Millerand the list containing the names of the Germans whose extradition is demanded by the allies, which was handed to him last night, and has informed the Premier that he has resigned, and is leaving by the first train for Berlin. He told the Associated Press that his decision was in line with the attitude that he had maintained throughout regarding the question of extradition. He declared that he held that no German officials could be instrumental in carrying out the extradition clauses of the treaty and consequently the matter having come up in a definite and final form, there was nothing left for him to do but to resign and go home. The allied council of ambassadors was called into extraordinary session this morning to discuss the situation created by the resignation of Baron Von Lersner. The session was held in the French Foreign Office. Extradition of 896 Germans, accused of violations of laws of war, is demanded in the list handed to Von Lersner. England demands 87, France and Belgium, 334 each, Italy 29, Poland 57, Rumania 41 and Serbia 4. The names of Germans comprised in the first list against whom charges are preferred by all allied nations are included in the above figures. An official view of the situation arising from Lersner's refusal to transmit the list to his Government is lacking. The general impression among observers of the peace proceedings, however, was that Lersner's action would not influence the determination of the allies to demand extradition.

NOT FOR PUBLICATION.

LONDON, Feb. 4. The understanding in diplomatic circles here is that the official list of German war criminals will not be published before despatch of their names to the German Government. The question as to whether they should be published immediately is said to have raised considerable debate at Paris since one of the allies desired this course to be followed.

BERLIN GETTING THE LIST.

BERLIN, Feb. 4. The list of Germans whose extradition is demanded by the Allied Governments began to arrive here over the official wire from Paris at eleven o'clock to-day. The first name on the ticket was that of Duke Albrecht of Wurtemberg, Baron Kurt Von Lersner's refusal to accept the Allied note regarding extradition of the accused Germans was not in accordance with instructions he had received from Berlin. The German Government has requested him to receive it, but he asked by telegraph for permission to retire and his resignation was immediately accepted.

A PARTIAL LIST.

PARIS, Feb. 4. The Council of Ambassadors, after its meeting to-night, issued a statement saying that the decision of the Allies with regard to those Germans whose extradition is demanded for war crimes, would be communicated direct to Berlin. The text of the statement follows:—The list of war criminals having been presented to Baron Von Lersner for transmission by him to his Government, the President of the German delegation to the President of the Conference that he had submitted his resignation to his Government and was leaving Paris. The decision of the Allies will be communicated direct to the Government at Berlin. While the Ambassadors' Council has confirmed its decision not to publish the names of those Germans who will be asked to surrender, it is possible to say that in addition to those already reported as being on the list, the following are included:—Prince Rupprecht, of Bavaria, who is charged with deportations from the Lillie district; the Duke of Wurtemberg, who is charged with massacres at Namur; Field Marshal Von Kluck, with the assassination of hostages at Soule, and thefts and pillage in Rumania; Baron Von der Lancken, with the murders of Captain Charles Fryatt, British sea captain, executed by the Germans, and Miss Edith Cavell, the English nurse, who was executed on the charge of hiding prisoners to escape; Admiral Von Capelle, with submarine outrages; Field Marshal Limon Von Sanders, with the massacre of Armenians and Syrians; General Stenger, with issuing orders to take no prisoners; Nelmeyer brothers, with cruelties at Magdebourg camp; Lieut. Rodiger, with cruelties at Ruhleben camp; General Von Gussel, with cruelties to prisoners at Holmunden camp; Major Von Goerts, with cruelties at Magdebourg camp; Lieut. Roiger, with cruelties at Ruhleben camp; General Von Gussel, with cruelties at Dohertiz camp; General Von Mantoufel, with sack of Louvain; Lieut. Werner, Captain Valentiner and Captain Forstner with submarine outrages; General Von Teoma, with the execution of 113 civilians at Allen; General Von Ostrowsky, with the pillage of Deynse and the execution of 103 civilians, and Major Von Bulow with destruction and murder at Arrschot.

COPENHAGEN, Feb. 4. William E. Johnson of the American Anti-Saloon League, and Rev. David Oestlund yesterday inaugurated a prohibition campaign at a public meeting here. ## KEEP YOUR MOUTH HEALTHY

You Will Then Run Small Risk of Getting Serious Illness.

(By Dr. ROBERTSON WALLACE, in Pearson's Weekly.)

The mouth is one of the most easily infected of all the bodily channels that lead into the interior, since every morsel of food we swallow may be the bearer of one or more of those millions of microscopic enemies that are always around and about us, and always on the look-out for some weakness in our bodily defences.

To the unhealthy mouth the lurking little imps of mischief find just those very conditions in which they desire to revel, flourish and multiply. They find conditions that suit their perverted taste to a nicety.

Even in a healthy mouth they have a fairly good time, and are able to establish colonies in out of the way corners and crevices not always easily reached by the tooth-brush or a mouth wash.

As many as fifty different kinds of these minute foes of humanity have been found established in colonies in what would pass for a healthy mouth. To the uninitiated it seems incredible that millions of active and malignant creatures should take up lodgings in our mouths without our knowledge, and live well at our expense.

The Danger of Bad Teeth.

They must remember, however, that the smallest of these pests are barely visible specks even when magnified a thousand times their natural size. A man similarly magnified would appear more than a mile high! So small indeed are the units of those disease armies that cause small-pox, scarlet fever and hydrophobia that they escape detection even by the most powerful microscope.

If the healthy mouth is often a hunting ground for our invisible foes, the unhealthy mouth is a perfect paradise. Now, the commonest cause of an unhealthy mouth is bad teeth or diseased gums. A decaying tooth is equivalent to an ulcerating sore on the body, but situated where it is, it is in a position to poison the springs of life--air and food--at their source. The amount of poison-gas manufactured and the number of death-dealing armies raised in such a mouth are not difficult to imagine. The poison-gas is rapidly absorbed by the blood through the lungs, while the invading armies find their way to the most distant parts of the body by more devious routes.

On their way thither they may attack the jaws, to begin with, setting up abscesses, or causing enlargement of the glands at the angle of the jaw or in the neck, and preparing a camping ground for later armies, that cause tubercular diseases. These armies, moving along the main roads of the body, naturally cause in the owner thereof considerable lassitude, depression and disinclination for exertion.

They also destroy the red corpuscles of the blood and prevent the development of new ones, causing pernicious anaemia. They may also be the cause of acne, nettle-rash, eczema, eye and ear troubles, and all sorts of nervous disorders.

Decaying and decayed teeth and unhealthy gums are always a very grave source of danger. Decayed stumps must be extracted and decaying teeth either stopped or removed.

You must brush your teeth, using a good dentifrice, at least once a day--preferably before you go to bed at night. And rinse your mouth out with a mouth-wash every morning.

Roumanians Are Superstitious.

One of the chief homes of superstition is Roumania, says a writer in the 'New York Herald.'

"Superstitions accompany life literally from the cradle to the grave. When a child is born the parents invariably turn their eyes anxiously toward the window, for just outside it are the three Uztoars, the Parcae, or Fates, spinning the thread of the child's life, or weaving the web of its destiny.

"Before the child is christened it must undergo the important ceremony of its first bath. This is administered in a huge wooden bowl, called an albia or copae, which serves both as bath tub and cradle, and also, it is said, a kneading bowl when bread is made. The bath is given at the house of the infant's godmother, whither the little one is carried, together with a gift of coffee and sugar. If it is a boy the bath must contain feathers from the wings of a dove and petals of a rose, which serve as a prayer to the Three Spinners that her footsteps through life may be soft as down and her face as fair as a flower.

"It is a common practice to offer a child a loaf of bread, a book, and a rod. If he chooses the bread he will be a thrifty, practical, successful man of affairs; if he chooses the book he will become a scholar; but if he chooses the rod he will be a ne'er-do-well.

"Many are the romantic traditions and superstitions of the age of love. Just as Roman maidens centuries ago invoked Diana, the Moon Goddess, so Roumanian maids of to-day take that "orbed maiden" for their chief confidante. On seeing a new moon a Roumanian girl exclaims: "New Queen! In health thou hast found me; in health leave me. Thou has found me unwed; leave me with a handsome husband by my side."

"There is a resemblance to our own Halloween practices in some Roumanian customs. Probably few young women in that land have the courage to follow the classic example of going to the forest by moonlight, stripping off their clothing and looking for the faces of their future husbands in the waters of a spring. But it is a common practice to sleep with a sprig of basil under the pillow on the night of the Epiphany, when the fair sleeper will see her lover in her dream.

"If she be in haste to wed all she has to do is to wear a bit of basil in her corsage or in her hair, and a lover will infallibly be attracted to her.

"If she wishes to know if she is to wed within a year she goes in the dark to the garden hedge and with a ribbon from her hair binds together two branches. In the morning she finds that she has thus united the branches of two different shrubs her marriage will speedily occur.

"When a girl is engaged she gives to her lover a saah as a formal acknowledgment of her betrothal. If she hears a dove coo or a cuckoo sing at her right side her marriage will prove happy. But if the pair on their wedding day cross the path of another wedding party coming out of church, either bride or groom will die before the year is out. Ghosts are plentiful in Roumania. The Strigoi are evil spirits which on St. Andrew's night make their way for mischief into every house whose doors are not windowed are not anointed with garlic, the scent of that plant being intolerable to the ghostly nostrils.

"Finally, when a man dies, there must be placed in his coffin a comb, a piece of soap, and a coin with which to pay the fee due to Charon, the ferryman of the world in shades."

Ladies May Propose.

The origin of the privilege by which ever single woman may propose to the man of her choice in Leap Year is always put down to St. Patrick, the patron saint of Ireland.

While walking by the shores of Lough Neagh he was accosted by St. Brigid, who tearfully told him that there was trouble among the nuns over whom she ruled owing to the fact that a woman might not propose to a man. In those days nuns might marry if they wished, though now, of course, it is against the rules.

Moved by her tears St. Patrick offered to concede the privilege to women, one year in seven. But St. Brigid declared that this would never satisfy her discontented charges, and pleaded for at least one year in four, enforcing her argument by throwing her arms round St. Patrick's neck.

"Then I'll give you a leap year, the longest year of the lot," was the Saint's reply, and emboldened by her success St. Brigid straightway proposed. St. Patrick, however, being under a strict vow never to marry, was obliged to refuse, but he gave St. Brigid a present of a silk dress to lessen her disappointment.

Ever since then it has been recognized in Leap Year that in the event of a man declining a proposal of marriage he should give to the lady whom he has refused a present of a silk dress.

Wonderful Mnemonic Feats.

There is probably much that is mythical, and more that is exaggeration, in many of the commonly accepted records of feats of memory; but one need not go outside the limits of the world's greatest men to find evidence of feats that are sufficiently astonishing.

Niebuhr, the great historian of Ancient Rome, had a memory which has been aptly described as "prodigious," for he practically never forgot anything he had once seen. When, in 1799, he was an official of the Board of Trade, he gave a remarkable proof of his powers of memory.

One of the account-books had in some strange way disappeared, and the Department was in a state of consternation. Happily, the book had come under Niebuhr's eyes, and he was able from memory to reproduce every figure in the missing accounts, a feat which borders on the miraculous.

One of the most wonderful of authentic feats of memory is credited to Magliabechi, a Florentine man of letters, who was librarian to a former Grand Duke of Tuscany. It is said that Magliabechi could instantly verify any quotation from any book in the library, given even the right page.

Remembering Whole Books.

On one occasion one of his friends lost the manuscript of a book he was about to publish, and was in terrible distress at thus losing the fruits of years of work. Happily for him, he had shown the M.S. to Magliabechi, who was able to reproduce practically every word of it for his astonished and delighted friend.

Perhaps no one ever knew Homer more intimately than Mr. Gladstone, whose memory was as vast as his intellect, and it has been said that if every copy of the "Iliad" had been destroyed he could have supplied every line of it from memory.

Side Talks by Ruth Cameron

A CHAT ON HATS.

RUTH CAMERON

I have a confession to make this morning. My mind is so full of the adventure of finally landing a reasonably satisfactory hat that there is no room in it for more serious observation than a talk about hats.

What a little mind, someone is probably saying. Please put it this way instead—what a big subject: Of all the forms of feminine self-expression, it seems to me that none is more difficult and more delicate than the choosing of a hat.

In a hat more than anything, and a last year's suit, any woman can queen it over her neighbor in a brand new suit and an unbecoming, styleless hat.

A Hat Must Have Style.

In a hat more than anything, style is the essence of the contract. And by style I do not mean the following of any particular fashion so much as a certain chicness of outline utterly undefinable and equally unmistakable.

Of course, becomingness of outline is equally necessary. These are the first two qualities every woman wants her hat to have. Next, it must be of the right color to suit her complexion and to match her clothes. It must have sufficient durability to last at least the season and preferably longer. It must be (I am thinking of the "one-hat" woman) neither too tailored to wear with her afternoon frocks nor too dressy to wear, to town with her suit. On top of all this, it must please her husband! And last, but very far from least, it must fit her purse.

What Wonder It Takes Her Some Time.

All this, mind you, she must find in one hat.

Naturally, in the course of her hunt, she comes across plenty of hats that fulfill two, or three, or even all but one, of these qualifications, but have to be rejected because of what they lack.

Fancy finding a smart, becoming hat within the reach of one's purse, and the right color, and having to give it up because one's husband took a violent dislike to it!

The Authorman, who has been impatiently reading my notes, brings up the old saw that women do not dress to please their husbands but to impress other women.

Nothing the Average Woman Hates More Than This.

That may be true of the women who makes dressing a vocation, but not of those to whom living is a vocation and dressing just an avocation.

There's nothing the average woman hates more than to have a hat of which her husband always says, "What makes you wear that hat tonight? Why don't you wear that little brown one?" naming your summer one or the one you had last year.

I hope the confession at the beginning did not scare away my male readers, for it is to them to whom this is particularly addressed. And especially to the man who fumes because his wife has such a time getting the right hat, and tells her that it never takes him more than five minutes to get a hat and he does not see why it should take her any longer.

The Mathematical Fisher

The morning faded into afternoon, which in turn was shadowed by the coming of night. It was cold and grey.

But the angler moved not, save to readjust his bait. He had been there for many weary hours, when a friend chanced to stroll along the river bank.

"Halloo, George!" he cried. "How many have you got?"

George looked up rather vacantly and responded:—

"When I get this one I'm after and four more I'll have five."

A Gross Libel.

Sandy had been staying with some friends for about a month, and while he and his host were out for a walk one day they called at a wayside inn for a drink.

As his host was about to pay for it, Sandy stopped him.

"Na, na," he said, "I'll not allow it. You've been keeping me in everything at yer house for a month, and you've treated me to the theatres, and cab fares, and paid for all the drinks. I tell ye, I'll have na mair of it, we'll toss for this one."

Teetotal Wine-Taster.

One of the strangest occupations for women is that of professional wine-taster, a post held by Mill Collinere, a young French girl, who earns about £5,000 a year, in California.

Strange as it may seem, she is a teetotaler. She cares nothing for wine and never swallows it. The testing is all done by taste in the mouth.

If she were to drink wine she would lose her subtle taste, which is so marvelously developed that she can discern from the first taste of a wine just where the grapes grew from which it was made, and whether they were raised in California or in the vineyards of France or Germany. She can even tell the vineyards in which the grapes grew, and whether they were raised on a hillside or in a valley.

Mill Collinere can instantly detect an adulteration of any sort. She has often found so-called wines with not a particle of grape juice in them, being made up of cheap alcohol, sugar, dyes, and cheap fruit juices. The age of a wine is told almost to a day.

The professional wine-taster never eats chocolates, rich puddings, pastry, raw onions, lemons, curry, or pineapple. She uses no salt, does not drink tea or coffee, and lives on the simplest and most wholesome diet. She is rewarded in two ways, for not only does it preserve her wonderful taste, but it gives her a remarkable complexion.

His Affliction.

He had been dining well, but not too wisely, and as he was staggering homeward a friend met him and suggested that perhaps it would be better if he were to sit quietly in a picture show for a time.

They accordingly went in together, but in a little while the friend found the inebriated one sobbing quietly to himself, although the picture then flickering across the screen was certainly not a pathetic one.

"What's the matter?" he hissed. "Why can't you sit quiet and look at the picture?"

"No good, ol' man," sobbed the other. "I've gone stone deaf. I can't hear a single word they are saying."

ALL THAT MATTERS.

There's no gladness like the gladness of the children at their play. There's no sadness like the sadness of a loved one called away. There's no richness like the richness of a home with love complete, and no quiet like the quiet of an old familiar street.

Oh, I don't know how to say it, but the best life has to give isn't on the distant hill tops, but it's centered where you live.

The glory of the conquest isn't on the battlefield. It's in keeping faith with loved ones who were sure you'd never yield; The thrill that is the finest doesn't come from strangers' cheers, But from loved ones who have waited for your victory through the years.

And the only things that matter, when you view the world aright, Are the laughter of the children and a happy home at night.

Strip the glitter and the jewels from the prizes that you win. Take the time to find the meaning of the gold you gather in. And you'll find the for they bring you isn't in the things themselves— Not in coins that can be counted, or in treasures kept on shelves. But in smiles they bring to others—for their only worth is had in the thought that you possess them just to make your loved ones glad.

So I reckon all that matters on this good old world of ours Is the little home we're keeping, and the garden with its flowers, It's the laughter of our children and the mother's gentle smile That make gold a thing worth getting and our victories worth while.

He "Clicked."

Tom: "Halloo, John, you look downhearted. What's the matter?"

John: "I don't know. I can't get a girl to speak to me at all. When I see you with yours, I feel jealous. You might tell me how I might fall in with one?"

Tom: "Yes, old man, it's easy. Go out on a dark night, and the first bit o' skirt you come across, 'click' with it."

"Righto! I'll remember."

"Halloo, John, who gave you that black eye?"

"Oh, I followed your instructions last night and 'clicked' with a Gordon Highlander!"

Flour.

At a meeting this morning of flour importers the Chairman of the Food Board was able to announce that arrangements had practically been finalized under which the surcharge of two dollars imposed by the Canadian Wheat Board on flour exported from Canada is lifted as far as Newfoundland is concerned. Newfoundland is also able to get pre-war patents, or as we call it, white flour, just as we have since the war ended. This will be good news to most people. The Food Board will be glad to give all the information required by flour importers. There is no indication whatever that supplies of flour will be restricted.

Portia's Stormy Trip.

The S. S. Portia which arrived yesterday reports a very stormy round trip. The ship left here three weeks ago and encountered violent weather and had to harbor at Trepassay for two days. After crossing Placentia Bay storms were again met and the steamer had to anchor at St. Lawrence for four days. All the way to Port aux Basques there was little change in weather conditions. Owing to ice in the Gulf the steamer did not go to Sydney for bunker coal. Seven cars of freight from the Reid Co. were taken on board at Port aux Basques. A number of fishing schooners and several foreign going vessels which were frozen in at various ports were freed during the trip. Capt. Connors says the trip was the worst in his experience the frost sometimes being intense, the mercury dropping to from 15 to 20 below zero. The ship will be ready to sail again on Saturday.

At the Majestic.

Ethel Clayton in the Leaky Production, "Women's Weapons", starred at the Majestic Theatre last evening, when a full house greeted her appearance on the screen. This is a picture of love, and was seen with unflagging interest. An author, although married, becomes infatuated by a lady artist, who is illustrator for one of his books. The lady returns the affection and the result is that Ethel Clayton, who is the wife, takes a second place in his heart. From here begins the story proper and the way in which she recaptures him and his affections will be of great interest to those who see the picture to-night, when it will be repeated. In addition to the feature a Mutt and Jeff cartoon was shown. This cartoon, which is the first Mutt and Jeff one to be seen at the Majestic provokes continuous laughter.

DOESN'T FEAR BOLSHIEVISM IN INDIA.

DELHI, India, Feb. 4.
 (Via Reuter's "Ottawa-Agency"). Lord Chelmsford, the Viceroy, in opening the Legislative Council, paid a high tribute to Sir E. S. Montague, Secretary of State for India, and others associated with the passage of the Reform Act and matters incident thereto. He outlined, in elaborate detail, the preliminary steps as regards the introduction of the Act, and said that the economic situation, which had been critical last year, had immensely improved. Lord Chelmsford pleaded for further calmness as regards the position of Indians in South Africa, and said that Sir Edwin Montague had been called on to see that Indian interests were fully represented at the Mount Milner, Secretary of State for forthcoming discussions between the Colonies, and the Governor of East Africa. The Viceroy suggested that a committee of non-official Indian members meet a deputation from the Fiji Islands and British Guiana and that the Government be guided by their findings.

 The Viceroy alluded to the appointment of a committee of the Council to study the complex and difficult question of imperial preference and arrive at a conclusion whether the adoption of a system of preferential tariffs would likely be of advantage to the country as a whole. While not wishing to minimise the dangers arising from the situation in the Middle East, and the Bolshevik movement, he was confident that things were not so bad as represented. The real danger of Bolshevism in India was the penetration by propaganda and secret agitation. This development was being carefully watched and a special staff had been appointed to deal with it. Referring to the turmoil in Russia, Lord Chelmsford said that he was confident that the people of India would never open their hearts to abhorrent doctrines of murder and anarchy and atheism. He saw no grounds for pessimism in India. In conclusion the Viceroy referred to the forthcoming visit of H. R. H. the Prince of Wales, whose reception in India, he said, would equal that of any other country and whose gracious presence would forge anew the links of Empire (cheers).

Notes From Brigus.

Several of our citizens have reported seeing an unusual winter visitor around during the past week. They claim it to be a wood-pecker of an uncommonly large size. Such birds are rare here at any time, but more especially so at this inclement season.

Notes From Brigus.

We learn that Mrs. Treaise has hired the business premises formerly occupied by the late Nathaniel Rabbits, where she intends laying in a stock of goods. She will likely obtain a full share of the public patronage.

For some time past there has been a scarcity of flour, but Thursday's train brought some two hundred and fifty barrels. The price has "generally" risen to suit the occasion.

Sugar has also been a scarce commodity with us of late. At present there is no white in the place. The price has gradually increased so that brown sells for 20c. per pound. It costs something to be "sweet" these days.

In the spring of 1919, when aeroplanes were hovering around our island, we were treated to persistent rumours of Aerial-Mail Service. Whilst we looked upon it as a future possibility, we of course, conceived it to be but an object of fanciful imagination for the present. However, we would have been incredulous, had we been told that a few months hence, would see the greater part of the island, with but an occasional mail and insufficient food-stuffs.

On Thursday, the 29th ult., there passed peacefully away at her residence, in Riverhead, a highly respected resident in the person of Mrs. Robert Clarke. The end was not unexpected, as the deceased lady had been ill for months previously. She leaves to mourn besides her husband, two sons, Robert, who had been serving with the Royal Navy in the North Sea since the commencement of the war; William, who resides at Riverhead, also two daughters; Louisa, a trained nurse, at present residing in Boston, and Gertrude who is at home. Her remains, which were enclosed in a beautiful casket, were laid to rest on Saturday at 3 p.m. A large and representative gathering attended to pay their respects to the memory of the deceased.

Had Professor Porta, instead of prophesying for us all the horrors on December 17th, said we were in for an old-fashioned winter, he would have been favoured with more of the public faith, and at the present time be more famous.

If any faith can be placed in the old adage:—
 "If Candlemas day be fair and clear,
 The worst of the winter is yet to appear."
 we have some stormy weather in store for us, since yesterday—"Candlemas"—was one of the finest days we had for some time. During the fore noon the frost was not nearly so great as on preceding days.

Mr. Fred Bartlett of the Heart's Content Cable office, arrived by train on Sunday to visit his parents.

Mr. John Brien went out by yesterday's train for St. John's.

The Romance of Lace.

The earliest fabric which deserves the name of lace was probably made in Egypt.
 Most of the "lace" mentioned in the early Bible ages was in reality a sort of embroidery, and not lace in the ordinary sense of the word.
 "Very charming is the derivation of the word lace, coming as it does through the old French las, from the Latin laqueus, a snare, allied to lacerare, to entice. Hence lace really means something that allures or entices."

So writes Mr. Thomas Wright in his interesting book, "The Romance of the Lace Pillow," describing the rise of the lace industry in this country. "It is in the Egyptian lace that we find the origin of bobbin work. A specimen taken from a mummy case is preserved in the Victoria and Albert Museum, South Kensington.

"This primitive work was made on a frame consisting of two vertical rods which were kept rigid on two horizontal bars. Two foundation cords were fastened across from one vertical bar to the other, one being near the top and the other near the bottom. The thread to be plaited was wound upon these cords. After one end had been tied to the top foundation cord, the thread was wound over and under both cords in such a manner as to allow the fingers of the worker's left hand to be slipped in between the thread coming in from the front of the top cord and the thread coming from the back.

"By this means and by using the fingers only, the threads were twisted and plaited, the front threads dropping back and the back threads being pulled forward. This plaiting was performed in the middle of the work. Upon the completion of each row a stick was inserted, and the work pushed up and down into position. The plaiting finished, the work could either be secured firmly in the middle or cut across and the ends tied, when there would, of course, be two articles."

Other Days, Other Ways.

The next step towards modern lace making was to use several shorter lengths of thread instead of one continuous one; and to fasten small handles, now called bobbins, to the ends of these cut lengths with which to plait the threads. Later the frame was discarded and the work placed on a pillow.

The Venetians claim that lace making, as we understand it, originated with them. They produce documents dated 1476 in which are passages mentioning fabrics made with bobbins. It is probable, however, that "lace" made its way to Venice from Egypt, taking many centuries to do so, and from Venice to Flanders.

In 1568 a number of lace makers arrived in Kent from Flanders, driven from their own country by Philip the Second. From all accounts they were mostly women, and very industrious. "The lace they brought with them was regarded with wonder and admiration. At first, they settled in the coast towns of Kent and Sussex. These among them, however, who came from the Mechlin (Mélines) country made their way, in 1568, to Cranfield, in Bedfordshire. A little later others found their way into Buckinghamshire."

After the massacre of Saint Bartholomew, in 1572, many Huguenots escaped to England. There were many lace makers, mostly from Lille, among them, and they settled down with the Flemish colony over here. As a natural result, many of the old designs of these parts are a combination of the two laces, Mechlin and Lille.

When Queen Elizabeth ascended the throne, the lace industry in this country advanced by leaps and bounds. Mary Queen of Scots was also a great lover of lace, and she is said to have made much herself during her captivity.

Cold Means Less Will Power.

The Effect of Weather on the Brain.—Cold has a remarkable effect on will power. It lessens it to such an extent that, in cases of extreme cold, men of strong determination in normal weather lose their power of decision.

In all Polar expeditions this effect of temperature on the power of the brain has been noted, and men for these expeditions are chosen not only for their knowledge and usefulness, but also for their power of resisting cold.

(Selected.)
To live according to your convictions.
To be what you are not pretend to be what you are not.
To say "No" squarely and firmly when those around you say "Yes."
To live honestly within your means and not dishonestly upon the means of others.
To refuse to knuckle down to and bend the knee to the wealthy, even though you are poor.
When mortified and embarrassed by humiliating disaster, to seek in your ruins the elements of future success.

To refuse to do a thing which is wrong because others do it, or because it is customary and done in trade.
To stay home evenings and try to improve yourself when your comrades spend their evenings having a good time.
To remain in honest poverty while others grow rich by questionable methods, which you could easily use yourself.
To refrain from gossip when others about you delight in it, and to stand up for an absent person who is being abused.

Not to bend the knee to popular prejudice, but to stand firmly erect while others are bowing and fawning for praise and power.

The Romance of a Great Business.

It is just 140 years ago since Mr. William Bass, owner of a small carrying business (since famous as Pickford's), opened a brewery at Burton. There were, of course, no railways in those days. The beer went by river or canal, and Mr. Bass found it cheaper to send it abroad by sea than to dispatch it to London.

In twenty years time the output was 2,000 barrels a year, which were nearly all sold in Russia. Then came an ugly blow. Russia decided to make her own beer, and put on a tariff which cut off all imports. Mr. Bass was not dismayed. He began to brew for India, and Bass's India Pale Ale soon obtained a big reputation in the Far East.

Why is Bass at Burton? Why is Burton the great brewing centre of the United Kingdom? The answer is in one word, "gypsum." Gypsum, which chemists call sulphate of lime, is a sort of rock which underlies the high ground above Burton. The rain falling on this catchment area percolates slowly down through the gypsum, dissolving it as it goes, until it reaches the level of the great wells from which it is pumped, when each gallon contains about seventy-eight grains of this mineral in solution. This water, which is what we should call extremely hard, is the very best for influencing the ferments which take place during the brewing of malt liquor.

Rapid Rise.

Brewing has gone on at Burton for centuries. The monks made good beer there in the fifteenth century. What they could not consume they sold, marking the casks with a cross as an emblem that the contents were good and sound.

In 1823 a sailing ship with a cargo of pale ale was wrecked in the Irish Sea. Three hundred barrels were salvaged, brought ashore at Liverpool, and sold by auction. A week later, everyone in Liverpool was asking where that wonderful ale came from. The firm of Bass was not slow to take the hint, and by 1827 were selling 2,000 barrels a year—most of it in the North of England.

Two years later the Midland Railway reached Burton and the boom began in earnest. Within the next ten years Bass's output trebled; by 1847 the firm was making 60,000 barrels a year; and in 1850 the second brewery was built. This is known as the "Middle" or White Brewery, the old one (since rebuilt) is the Red, and the third, the biggest of the three, was begun in 1863 and finished within a year. The latter is called the Blue Brewery, as the three together represent the national colours.

A Million a Day.

The stout vats are at the new brewery. They are so big it makes you ache to look at them. Gigantic casks bound with massive iron hoops, each is large enough, if partitioned inside, for a family to live in.

It takes eighty people working 911 day and every day just to print the labels used by the House of Bass.

This, I think, is the one small fact which helped me more than anything else to understand the immensity of this gigantic brewing business.

A million of these labels are turned out daily, most of them bearing that red triangle which is the familiar trade-mark of the biggest beer firm in the world.

That trade mark, by the by, is No. 1 on the roll of British trade marks. On the night before the Trade Mark act of 1875 became law an employe of the firm sat all night on the steps of the Registrar's office in order to secure for his employers this proud position.

The City of London covers just a square mile. The works of Messrs. Bass at Burton-on-Trent are a quarter as large again. They cover 750 acres.

The torrent of beer poured out yearly requires a stock of 414,000 barrels. These, remember, are for the United Kingdom alone, and, of course, come back as soon as empty to be refilled. The actual output in the year 1914 was 1,500,000 barrels. It is nothing out of the way for the firm to send out 6,000 barrels in a day. They once dispatched 9,250 in one day, which, between them, held enough beer to supply a good glassful to every householder in England, Scotland, Wales, and Ireland.

In beer duty alone Bass's pay the Government nearly £2,000 a day. To make the beer, the first thing needful is barley for conversion into malt. The twenty-two Bass malting-houses in Burton hold 2,000,000 bushels of malt, and there are a score of malting-houses elsewhere. The total capacity is 3,000,000 bushels, or roughly speaking—the produce of 100,000 acres of land. This would be a field 4,000 acres, larger than the whole country of Huntingdon.

To carry Bass's beer about the kingdom means a bill of £300,000 a year, a sum more than sufficient to pay the salaries of the whole House of Commons. To make the beer, the casks, etc., requires the services of 3,500 men and boys, while to cook the malt, to boil the beer, and to carry on the other operations of the works, a little matter of 85,000 tons of coal

Mons to Care for Soldiers' Graves.

The French mairaine, who, during the war, chose a friendless soldier for godson so that she might send him comforts and soften his lot in a score of other little ways, is to be perpetuated in peace. But she will choose her godson, not from the living, but among the ranks of the dead, and her duty will be to attend his grave. The sacrifice of the Canadian soldiers who fell before Mons in the eleven-hour struggle of the war is not to be forgotten by those whom they liberated. The Canadian military authorities have notified that the association has been formed by the people of the district of Mons to care for the graves. Each grave will be allotted to a family to be tended and beautified. If possible, the next of kin of the dead soldiers will be communicated with and will be informed of the reverent charge, and if they propose to visit Belgium, they will be the guests of the family. The owners of the ground in which soldiers have been buried have given free titles to each plot to the families interested. On the anniversaries of the two battles of Mons, homage will be paid to the glorious dead, and wreaths will be placed on their graves. The population of Mons has also expressed the hope that a monument will be erected there to commemorate the heroism of the Canadian troops.

LONDON GOSSIP.

CHANGES IN THE STRAND.
Everyone who comes to London knows the Strand, but only those who have lived here a long time can properly weigh up the changes that have taken place in that historic thoroughfare even during the last fifteen years. Long ago we had the wiping out of a large part of the old Strand with the making of Aldwych and Kingsway, and later frontages have changed all the way along almost. The coming of the moving picture theatres and the passport photograph shops have also been features. Now I hear that the blocks of buildings between Simpson's restaurant and Wellington Street have just been purchased for something like a million and a half pounds, and the buildings will be cleared away and a big new hotel, a newspaper office, and shops set up. The widening of the Strand will be carried along from the Savoy Hotel. There is nothing of architectural and little of picturesque interest in the buildings to be demolished except that Burgess's old fish-sauce shop (now a cinema theatre) was one of the old London shops with a yard behind and a quay of its own on the river, where small ships discharged limes and oils from Italy. There is still a queer, narrow little entry near by, leading to steps that descend picturesquely to the Savoy churchyard. A large area touching the Strand on the other side is for sale. It extends north to Long Acre and Great Queen Street, and includes the thresholds of Drury Lane, the Aldwych, and the Strand Theatres, and Bow Street Police Court. It is part of the Covent Garden estate which was acquired by the Beauchamp Trust. The sale of the Aldwych site to the Bush Terminal Company will furnish the most picturesque change, but the Strand and its hinterlands from the Savoy Hotel to Australia House will soon begin to assume striking new shapes and look like a metropolitan street.

LONDON'S CRIMINALS' RETURN.
Not only the public but the people are perturbed over the extraordinary outburst of crime against both person and property which just now is sweeping over the country, and is especially marked in the Metropolis. Cases of Murderous violence are in the main popularly attributed to the lessened regard for human life, as such, which is the not unnatural sequel to a vast war, coupled with a greater facility in the use of dangerous weapons than was known in time of prolonged peace. The many burglaries are in a different category, and they cannot be put down in a lump to the return from abroad of impecunious men merely looking for loot. The special feature of them is that they are the work of skilled practitioners, often provided with motor cars, who cautiously prospect the places they intend to rob and work together with care and speed which betoken careful discipline and long preparation. One specially popular line of motor car robbery is the plundering of tailors' shops of their whole supplies of cloth. Entry is effected at a carefully chosen hour of the evening or early morning and the bales of cloth packed away one by one on the automobile and an escape secured. Hold-ups with the use of a revolver are, of course, now common. Formerly they were never seen in London except on the screens at the picture theatres. Trains, beach, and other murders are far too numerous. The police officers and the detective service are being worked to death, but they have more than they can handle at present in the way of mysteries to solve.

A WAR SECRET.

Admiral Sir Henry Jackson, who was First Sea Lord of the Admiralty during 1915-16, disclosed a very interesting little bit of secret history at a gathering of the Institute of Electrical Engineers which was discussing the remarkable war developments in direction finding. One morning, he said, it was reported to him that a German ship was indulging in great wireless activity. The position of the ship was plotted out at the Admiralty, and it was found to be in Wilhelmshaven harbour. The same afternoon he was informed that the same ship's wireless was still very active. Again the position was plotted, and this time the ship was found to have moved a degree and a half. It was, in fact, proceeding to sea. Conjecturing that the German Navy might be coming out, Admiral Jackson ordered the British Fleet to move. Much to their surprise the German met our fleet at sea. The result was the battle of Jutland. The battle was thus the outcome of a conjecture built up by a man working quietly in a room in Whitehall here from the flimsy evidence of a wireless direction-finder.

THE SUBMERSIBLE WARSHIP.

Considering the large number of friends Lord Fisher can count amongst naval architects and engineers, it has looked odd to find few of them coming out strongly in support of his plea for the submersible warship. The warship which can fire and duck has, of course, more or less always been the dream of naval officers, and the only difference in the fabric now is that its lines are more vivid in the trim Fisher way. I put it to several naval architects the other day that, as Lord Fisher had seldom been wide of the mark in his calculation of possibilities, he might be right about the future of the submersible warship. Summed up, the replies I got were, however—shall I say?—discouragingly practical. My friends did not distrust Lord Fisher's foresight, but they could not see, they said, how the dream was to be realised until some safe means had been discovered of making a gun turret of the type which a submersible warship would require watertight. The existence of a British submarine armed with a 12-inch gun may seem to suggest that the optimism of these naval architects is not very pronounced; but, without giving away any deep secret of the war period's new construction, I may point out that in the case of this experimental underwater vessel the turret is not quite what would be necessary in the case of the larger vessel.

THE KITCHENER STATUE.

Some time ago it was proposed to place the Kitchener memorial statue in St. James's Street opposite St. James's Palace. Owing to the police objections, however, on the theory that it would interfere with traffic, plans have been changed, and it is now proposed to set it up on Horse Guards Parade, in St. James's Park. The statue will not be an equestrian one, but a standing figure in khaki, probably with the field marshal's baton and a star. Lord Kitchener was the first soldier to wear a star with khaki. It came about in this way. In November, 1915, when he was a guest at the Guildhall, the Lord Mayor asked him to come in scarlet. Lord Kitchener wrote back that he could not do so, as there would be many Dominion officers present, and they might probably feel awkward if he went in full uniform when they had nothing but khaki. As the City people, however, were anxious for something stately, he wore the Star of the Bath—he had not then received the Garter—on his khaki.

LEGLESS WEAVERS.

The problem of training the seriously disabled man to ply a trade which, with the aid of his pension, will make him independent, has been tackled with practical success by a number of ladies near London. A hut has been erected and some half-dozen ex-soldiers are being instructed in weaving with hand looms. They are all men who have been prevented by their disabilities from following their pre-war occupations, but are now learning a trade which not only supplies an interest but is remunerative as well. It was feared that men wounded in the legs could not learn the work as the looms were operated by treadles, but one of the men who had lost the use of both legs has invented an adaptation so that he can, by a manipulation of weights, do all the work with his hands. When these men are fully trained they are to be supplied with similar looms in their homes, and other men, of whom there is a big waiting list, will take their places in the hut. The scheme was originally the idea of Lady Benson, who wanted to do something in memory of her husband, Sir Frederick Benson, a veteran soldier who died in Canada while in charge of remount arrangements there.

THE WOLLEN CRAZE.

Knitted wool is certainly holding its own this season in women's fashions, both as trimming and in jumpers, cosy wraps, and coats and skirts. Country suits closely knitted and ribbed are very attractive. These skirts have wide borders round the hem in a darker shade of wool, and this contrast is carried out as trimming for the neck and sleeves and round the edge of the coat. Woollen caps to match with a tassel or border of the contrasting shade, give an effective and trim finishing touch. For indoor wear the almost historic Nightingale cape is again in favour. Made of very soft, fine wool, in delicate colours—pink and lilac are special favourites—these capes are of two thicknesses, the inside thickness being of a contrasting color or else white.

IN OUTER DARKNESS.

We might as well be reconciled to Vital Truths, my fellow men; Old Boose is dead, and protests wild won't bring him from the dump again. Some sports with million dollars' thirats, have baseless hopes that he'll return; but every hope of that sort bursts; no more will grogshop bright lights burn. No more we'll seek the glaring booth to buy cold bottles from the ice; so let's accept the ghastly truth, and hit the hydrant once or twice. There's naught more futile than a hope that has no ground on which to stand; the courts have handed us the dope that Barleycorn is doubly canned. Then let's forget the bowl of gin, the forty drops we used to crave, the buck beer sign, the wayside inn—for Barleycorn is in his grave. No walls can ever raise the dead, the loved and lost is not reborn; the hydrant's standing, cool and red, inviting us to take a horn. John Barleycorn will never make return trip from the dim beyond; so let's forget his nob and take four fingers of the nearest pond.

Very Accommodating.

The little country inn was picturesque, but leaky. Late one night the solitary guest rang his bell urgently, and the landlord went upstairs to see what was the matter. "I say, look here!" snorted the indignant traveller, who was still in bed. "This roof's letting in the rain, and I'm drenched!" "Very good, sir!" remarked the landlord amiably, as he retired. A few minutes later he came back with a large wash-tub. "This will make things right, sir," he said, still amiably. "I'll just put this on your chest; then, when it's full, ring the bell, or shout out, and I'll have another empty one ready!"

Influenza.

Flash Disinfectant, recommended most highly by doctors. Lay in a supply immediately. Will kill the germs and prevent you from getting Spanish Influenza. Use freely in the homes, offices, stores and aboard ships. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. We can supply the demand. J. B. ORR CO., LTD., Importers. Feb 2, 51

Prohibition Falls in New Zealand.

By reason of the failure of the prohibitionists to secure a majority of the votes in the recent "no license" referendum, New Zealand will remain wet and the present license system will continue. The official vote showed that for continuance of the licensing system 240,898 votes were cast, for State purchase and control of liquors 82,148, and for prohibition 270,178. The prohibitionists, therefore, were 2,968 votes short of the absolute majority required to carry any issue. The votes of 868 soldiers who are returning on troopships cannot affect the result.

2000 Miles on a Derelict.

"Just a pack o' rotten plates putted up with tar. In we came, an' time enough, 'cross Bilbao Bar. Overloaded, undermanned, meant to founder, we Enochred God Almighty's storm, bluffed the Eternal Sea!"
 —Rudyard Kipling.

The adventure of the good ship Uldia, make a tale of the sea as thrilling as any in the proud record that stirs our island blood. After lying foundered for two years on the edge of the Polar regions, she was floated, and sailed away under the nose of the Bolsheviks. Rudderless, with a hasty patch over a huge hole in her hull, they brought her, half-sinking, through raging Arctic seas, pumping, pumping, pumping ceaselessly for more than two thousand miles, till they had towed her in triumph up the Tyne.

The first scene in that drama of the deep is a little fishing village over the way from Archangel. Although Soroka has stood there for eight hundred years, to-day it has a population of only eight hundred souls. They are simple folk, Bolsheviks for the most part, some of them in the grip of a queer passion for burning railway trucks.

Looted by the Villagers.

Besides winning a risky livelihood from the sea, the people of Soroka nowadays work in two timber mills, each with its yard attached, one belonging to a British firm, the other

"Cascarets" for Liver and Bowels bring back Smiles

Turn the "kill-joys" out—the headache, biliousness, indigestion, the sick, sour stomach and misery-making gases—turn them out to-night and keep them out with Cascarets.

Millions of men and women take a Cascaret now and then and never know the misery caused by a lazy liver, clogged bowels, or an upset stomach.

Don't put in another day of distress. Let Cascarets cleanse your stomach; remove the sour, fermenting food; take the excess bile from your liver and carry out all the constipated waste matter and poison in the bowels. Then you will feel great.

A Cascaret to-night straightens you out by morning. They work while you sleep.

that it did not have time to find its true level, and, dipping, passed underneath the engine-room and shot harmlessly away to port. A matter of inches, and neither the White nor any other sea would ever have beheld First-Lieutenant Grey again.

This is how he became Captain Gray, D.S.O., R.N.R. One summer morning they were making the Island of Guernsey when their concealed wireless picked up a message to the effect that a U-boat was working hereabouts. Unfortunately, two French seaplanes picked up the message, too, much to the annoyance of the Stock Force, whom they took for an ordinary collier, and chivalrously conveyed till late in the afternoon.

Under the White Ensign.

The mystery ship was, of course, unable to send them a message which would not at the same time have been received by the enemy below the waves.

At tea-time, when the seaplanes at last went home to France, a torpedo promptly rode towards the mystery ship. It hit her forward. Into the air went a cloud of odd objects, from live shells to the ship's cat—who lost only one of her nine lives. Down upon the hale and the maimed came a mountain of water, drenching all hands. Men told off for that duty now run arround in pretended terror, lowered a boat, pulled off, lay upon their oars to see the last of their ship.

The U-boat suspiciously watched them through her periscope, and then, slowly coming to the surface, she glided towards the boat's crew. They had tricked her into believing that the Stock Force really was abandoned. They could have cheered. Two minutes later they did cheer. They yelled themselves hoarse. Down went the flaps of the sinking ship. Up ran the White Ensign. Two guns swung into position.

Their first shot carried away the U-boat's periscope and wireless gear. The second sent the conning tower sky high, accompanied by the commander. The third brought clouds of steam from the hull which they had proceeded to riddle with four-inch shell.

In Search of Adventure.

The U-boat sank first. The mystery ship followed when she had got twenty miles nearer Devon. Trawlers and destroyers had steamed up and taken off her crew. When the captain and his first-lieutenant at last got into the dinghy, it was only to see her heel over and disappear seven miles from shore. The captain was rewarded with the Victoria Cross, his first-lieutenant was given the D.S.O., and went to Soroka as a captain, R.N.R.

For, when peace made the world more or less tame again, Captain Grey, in search of fresh adventures, attached himself to the All Seas Marine Salvage Company, of Leadenhall Street, in the City of London.

Adventure came to him in generous manner. He arrived in Soroka to find the end of June, with a tough little "Geordie," named Reay, who had been working with the Admiralty Salvage Section throughout the war.

The derelict was in a dreadful state. It is true they floated her; she floated too well. She floated to the edge of her tableland rock. The rock slung to her stern. Her bows nosed into the deep water beyond. She was threatening to sink in real earnest; but she had to reckon with that grim young man of twenty-three from the banks of the Tyne.

At four o'clock in the afternoon, Reay took charge of the Alcoa motor pump in No. 2 hold, where the worst damage was. He was up all that night. He was up all the next night. At ten o'clock on the third night, the Uldia was towed in safety to a pier in Soroka Bay. For fifty-four hours Reay had stuck it without a break.

Covered With a Patch.

Then, the pumps going all the way, the rescued derelict was towed for a day and a half to Archangel over the bay. At Archangel they put her into dry dock to be patched up for the great trip home. Anyone who knows anything about the sea will be agitated at the sheer impudence of these men. There was a great gash in the outer hull of the ship. They made a wooden patch to cover it, and held the thing on with chains. Once these were caught by a passing tug, and, for a breathless minute, patch and ship and crew were all in peril.

Between this patch and the actual break. Time and again the crew saluted death; time and again they leapt back to life.

Never did mariner greet the rugged North Cape with greater affection. Hugging the land, they now passed down the jagged coast into the quiet of Norway's fjords, on to Bergen, out across the North Sea to the Tyne.

And at North Shields they made the interesting discovery that their wooden patch would have been gone, and they with it, had that heroic voyage lasted for one other day!—Answers.

Spiders' Threads for Telescopes.

The threads of the garden spider are fixed by astronomers in their telescopes for the purpose of giving fine lines to the field of view, by which the relative positions of stars may be accurately measured.

For a century astronomers desired to make use of such lines of the greatest possible fineness, and procured at first silver wire drawn out to the extreme limit of tenuity attainable with that metal. They also tried hairs (1,500th of an inch thick), and threads of the silkworm's cocoon, which are split into two component threads, each only 1,200th of an inch thick. But in 1820 an English instrument maker named Troughton introduced the spider's line. This can be readily obtained three or four times smaller than the silkworm's thread, and has also advantages in its strength and freedom from twist.

In order to obtain the thread the spider is carefully fixed on a miniature "rack," and the thread, which at the moment of issue from the body is a viscid liquid, is made to adhere to
