MR. H. R. STEVENS—Dear Sir: I have lately witnessed decidedly good and striking effects of your FAMILINE in case of Erusipelas of nearly three years standing. When I first saw my patient, a lady of some 50 years of age, she was complaining of a severe swollen condition of her feet; the skin was tense and angry-looking painful on the slightest metion and likely to burst at any moment. She had tried many remedies without relief, and my first treatment failed in its effect. I suggested that the feet be painted with FAMILINE morning and night, and then enclosed in soft cotton dressing. When I saw her last about three days ago, the pain had wholly vanished, the swelling reduced to almost the normal condition and the information sub-liked. With

Were it not for your Family Balsain, I should hardly dare close my eyes in sleep. It instantly relieves Croup; also is an excellent medicine for Comple and Sore Throat. Too much cannot be said in praise of it. I have recommended it to many others, who have tried it with equal good results.

CHATHAM, N. B.

"How delightful! Do tell me about the ghost!" cried the young lady who had followed her into the great room which covered half the large house.

'The ghost, Miss Walker, is a soldier, an officer who was killed by a jealous husband in a duel, which took place here. He walks up and down, trailing his sword after him, and is said to be as pale as death; however, he hasn't been seen for ten years, though the servants are terribly afraid of him

"They sleep," said Miss Pettigrew, "in that half of the garret which is partitioned off, and use the back stairs They wouldn't come here for the world, so I make a sort of store closet of those shelves there, and feel perfectly safe

It is said that that idiotic lady who caused the duel had them built without discovery. It may be true. It's evident that they were never built in the original house. Nobody ever uses them now; and they are actually eyes, that glared about them.

With some difficulty she moved down the rickety stairs. "I can fancy the ghost coming up," she said, with a little, soft shriek, as she drew back. "How romantic!" Descending the large, well-carpeted stairs that ran down the middle of the house, the two ladies entered the parlor, where an elderly gentleman sat waiting. The young lady then address-

The police force of-was not large, but that night two of its members stood concealed behind the largest apple trees in the orchard at the east of Miss Pettigrew's house. They were No. 12 and No. 14. These figures glittered on their cap-bands.

Within, on the other side of the garret door, Miss Pettigrew, in a flowered dressing-gown, stood listening intently. The moonlight flooded the old garret. Stern and strong of mind as she was, Miss Pettigrew felt a cold shudder run up her spine. It was now a quarter to eleven. Soon the old clock in the hall below croaked, rolled, and struck the was heard. A door opened-not the stair door, the one into the hall-and a figure, all in white, stole in and sat down on a great box. It was very ghostly. "Ugh!" shuddered Miss Pettigrew. "I declare I feel scary." Hark! another faint creaking. The door to the mysterious stairway opened softly and a figure entered. It was dressed in a soldier's uniform. It wore that her lover might come to the garret a sword, but its face—its awful face, though it bore the features of a man, was of an awful ghostly white, lips and all, enlivened only by two great black
