Insofar as international trade proposals are concerned, the State Department officials thought that our proposed Agreement with the United Kingdom would cut right across the middle of the whole multilateral idea. I pointed out that they had largely themselves to blame for this because of the uncertainties and delays of their own policy. There was general appreciation of this, but it was nevertheless felt that a wheat contract of this kind would knock the props from under anything we all might hope eventually to accomplish. They were also worried about the effect of an arrangement of this kind on their own plans for food relief and feared that, notwithstanding escape clauses, it would be felt here that the United Kingdom were going ahead to safeguard their own position at any cost and that Canada was lending itself to this policy. They felt that an arrangement of this kind would make difficult and possibly impossible, United States plans for directing wheat in the future to high deficiency areas. I think their fears in this regard are exaggerated, but they are certainly not to be dismissed as completely groundless. I pointed out that price and other policies in this country were largely responsible for efforts being made by other countries to protect their own economic positions in the present difficult circumstances and that, if the United States had given a stronger and speedier lead in international economic policies, such contracts as the one under discussion might not have been necessary. The Americans, while recognizing the force of this, still remain highly disturbed at our proposed contract and feel that they should at least be given a chance to see if something could not be worked out which would make it unnecessary for us or the United Kingdom to proceed along these lines.

I am passing on this information to the United Kingdom authorities here.
Ends.

LONG-TERM WHEAT CONTRACT WITH THE UNITED KINGDOM

At the meeting of the Cabinet on June 19th, the conclusion reached by the Cabinet, when the Prime Minister read a message which had been received from the Canadian Ambassador in Washington (WA-2159 of June 19)<sup>1</sup> was as follows:

It was agreed that, in the circumstances, action upon the proposed U.K. contract be suspended temporarily, pending discussion in Washington between the U.K. Minister of Food and U.S. authorities of the considerations raised in Mr. Pearson's message; the government would be prepared to give consideration to any alternative proposals which might be worked out in such U.S.-U.K. discussions; if, on the other hand, no other course satisfactory to Canada were to be suggested, it was recognized that, before Mr. Strachey returned to Britain, Canada might have to conclude a contract with the United Kingdom along the lines proposed.

It was also agreed that Mr. Pearson should be instructed to get in touch with Mr. Strachey at once and inform him of the government's attitude and that the whole question would be considered again at a meeting early next week.

(The Secretary of the Cabinet has sent a teletype† to this effect to the Canadian Ambassador in Washington).

Ottawa, June 22, 1946

Dear Mr. MacKinnon,

I feel that in consequence of the turn of developments during the past week in regard to the proposed United Kingdom contract, you should have the Board's résumé† and their views on this subject.

On April 3rd, 1946, you wrote to Mr. Huntting asking for the views of the Board in regard to the proposed wheat contract with the United Kingdom.† After consideration and study on the part of the Board, we prepared a document† containing observations which the Board felt the Government should take into consideration in arriving at a decision in regard to the contract. In that document, copies of which were forwarded on April 28th, 1946, to the Wheat Committee of the Cabinet, and the inter-departmental committee established to consider the contract, we tried to weigh the pros and cons of the proposed contract. We felt that such a contract would provide a measure of price and market stability for the wheat farmers during the uncertain years which would be covered by such a contract. At the same time, we made it clear that there were important difficulties involved in a long-term wheat contract with the United Kingdom. We pointed out that the implementing of such a contract required the continuation of a monopoly Wheat Board in Canada and that very grave doubts existed as to the legal and constitutional basis of such a Board in peacetime.

We pointed out that the proposed contract was not in line with the general desire to promote broad international trade as between Canada and other countries and that there would be international repercussions. We indicated that wheat producers in the Prairie Provinces were interested not only in the price they received for their wheat but in the goods and services which their wheat income would make available to them. We also indicated that such a contract would lead the Dominion Government in the direction of further nationalization of grain handling facilities and services.

In spite of the many disadvantages of the proposed contract, the Board, if called upon to do so, was prepared to approach the matter in a realistic manner and felt that it was not impossible to arrive at a contract which would be advantageous to wheat producers for the next four or five years. The Board felt that if such a contract could be obtained the immediate and basic difficulties would have to be worked out in the general interest of the wheat producers of the Prairie Provinces.

On May 2nd, 1946, the Board was advised by the Wheat Committee of the Cabinet that it was the intention of the Government to open negotiations with the United Kingdom, looking towards a long-term wheat contract. I was instructed to convey a proposal to the United Kingdom Government on behalf of Canada in a letter to Sir Andrew Jones.<sup>1</sup> This letter was forwarded on May 3rd, 1946, after consultation with Mr. Mackenzie, Dr. Barton and Mr. Shaw. The United Kingdom replied on May 16th, 1946 with a counter-proposal and suggested that experts of the two countries meet together for further discussion. On May 20th, 1946, I advised Sir Andrew Jones that it was the desire of the Canadian Government that the United Kingdom send representatives to Canada to open negotiations on the basis of the Canadian proposal of May 3rd, 1946 and the British counter-proposal of May 16th, 1946.

On Friday, June 14th, Canadian representatives met with the United Kingdom representatives in Ottawa and commenced the task of negotiating a contract. The Canadian representatives consisted of members of the Board and officials of the Department of Trade and Commerce, the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Finance.

In the negotiations with the British representatives, we, and I believe Departmental representatives, were firm in respect to three important elements in the proposed contract. We proposed that the contract should include the following basic considerations:

(1) That the quantities of wheat involved in the contract should be the same in each year covered by the contract;

(2) That the quantities involved in each year should be moderate and not such as to prevent our continuing (a) to sell Canadian wheat in other traditional markets, and (b) to maintain our flour exports;

(3) That the $1.55 price should be effective for the first, second and third years of the contract.

In regard to (1) the Board felt that it would not be wise to commit larger quantities of wheat to the United Kingdom in 1946-47 and 1947-48 than in succeeding contract years. We felt that it would not be wise for Canada to withdraw from other traditional markets for the next two crop years and then have to re-establish a position once again in these outside markets. We thought that this point was important, especially in view of the general outlook for 1946 wheat production and our present extremely low stock position.

In regard to (2) we felt that the annual quantity of wheat involved in the United Kingdom contract should be in terms of a quantity which would permit us to continue to supply other traditional markets and to maintain our position in these markets for the duration of the United Kingdom contract. We also felt that if the United Kingdom contract were signed, Canada should be in a position to negotiate similar contracts with other countries.

In regard to (3) the Board was of the opinion that advantages under the contract would probably pass from the United Kingdom to Canada in the third year. We know that wheat producers have received much less than the world price for wheat during the present crop year. We believe that the $1.55 price will be less than the world price in 1946-47 and probably for part or even all of 1947-48. We felt that adequate stability and some recompense for income given up by producers in 1945-46 and in the first two years of the proposed contract demanded the continuation of the $1.55 price in the third year of the contract.

These three points were being pressed by the Canadian representatives in the negotiations with the British delegation, and to protect these elements in the contract we offered to reduce the period of the contract from five years to four years.

On Wednesday, June 19th, however, the proposed contract became a matter of Cabinet discussion. I was asked to attend Cabinet discussions on Wednesday morning and in the course of these discussions advanced the points which were being stressed by the Canadian negotiators. On Wednesday afternoon the Hon. J. G. Gardiner, Minister of Agriculture, asked for a meeting with Mr. Shaw and myself and advised us that the Canadian representatives were instructed to negotiate with the British representatives on the basis of a four year contract as follows: For the first two years of the contract the quantity was to be 160 million bushels and the contract price was to be $1.55 per bushel. For the third and fourth years of the contract the quantity was to be 140 million bushels in each year. The contract price for the third year was to be not less than $1.25 per bushel with the actual price to be negotiated not later than December 31st, 1947, and the price for the fourth and final year of the contract was to be not less than $1.00 per bushel with the actual price to be negotiated not later than December 31st, 1948.

These were the terms that we were asked to place before the British representatives. The Canadian representatives had no alternative but to abandon negotiations on the basis of the discussions of the preceding four days.

As far as the Board is concerned, we feel that these instructions do not constitute an adequate basis for a contract with the United Kingdom. As a Board, we do not agree that the quantities should be variable; we think the quantity of wheat included for the crop years 1946-47 and 1947-48 is too high, especially in view of our lack of reserves at the present time, and we feel that the price basis for the third year of the contract is not satisfactory from the producers' standpoint in view of the sacrifices in income which producers will have made by the time the third year of the contract is reached.

My colleagues and I, having been asked to take part in the negotiation of the proposed contract, feel that it is our duty to place our views before you at this time.

Yours very truly,

GEORGE McIVOR

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Mr. Clayton and Mr. Hickerson lunched at the Embassy today with Mr. MacIvor and Mr. Stone and myself.

In the course of the luncheon Mr. MacIvor gave Mr. Clayton a brief review of Canadian Wheat Policy during the past 15 years and the role therein of the Canadian Wheat Board. We then discussed the proposed Canada-U.K. wheat contract.

Mr. Clayton put forward his views on this contract in no uncertain terms and with strong feeling. Our discussion of the contract was long and I can only indicate below, briefly, the views which Mr. Clayton put forward at greater length.

I have already reported the views of the State Department in respect of the possible adverse effect of an announcement of the signing of the contract on the British loan. Mr. Clayton went further today. He said that he would regard the conclusion of this contract as a violation of the spirit, at least, of the U.K. loan agreement. He added that there were some people in the State Department who would regard it as a violation of the letter of the loan agreement and while he was not yet prepared to go so far himself, further study of the matter was being made. In any case, he said he felt that the loan agreement, in spirit, was designed to make unnecessary exactly this sort of unilateral arrangement. He felt this so deeply that if the contract were to be signed he could not, in all conscience, in his discussion with members of Congress use any more the argument that the passage of the loan would dissolve the Sterling Bloc, open British markets to all comers, and make hard currency available to the United Kingdom. This was, moreover, one of the strongest and most effective arguments that they had put forward. While he did not wish to over-emphasize the adverse effect of this contract on the loan (as he said before, he would regard it as just another serious obstacle to the passage of the loan about which he is not over-optimistic at the moment), he repeated his views as to the contract's violation of the spirit of the loan agreement, views which would naturally hold even if the contract were signed after the passage of the loan by Congress.

Mr. Clayton's next and perhaps most emotional argument against the contract was that it would be contrary to the whole multilateral trade idea envisaged and supported by all of us, including particularly the United Kingdom, in the proposals for an international trade organization. I observed that plans in this connection were not going ahead very fast and that, in the meantime, the United Kingdom had a natural desire to assure its supplies of reasonably priced wheat and we had a natural desire to assure our sales of wheat at such a price in the three or four difficult years ahead.

Mr. Clayton then went into the possible international trade programme. He foresaw the nuclear countries completing their preliminary work in about three months from their first meeting, that is to say, April or May of 1947, and he thought that this preliminary work would, in effect, put the stamp of approval on the general idea of lower tariffs, multilateral trade and open world markets; an idea to which any Canadian-U.K. unilateral wheat contract would be definitely contrary. He foresaw the meeting of the full international trade organization as coming about late summer or early fall of 1947, and he allowed some months for the ratification of the various agreements arising out of this conference. In view of past experience, I am inclined to accept any United States estimate of timing in these matters with a grain of salt and I implied as much to Mr. Clayton. He stood his ground however.

I asked Mr. Clayton what his feeling would be if the wheat contract, in its terms, took into account (as in fact I believe it did, although I was not sure of the text) the possibility of the organization of wider international trading arrangements during its life. He was not impressed with the idea and did not see how any contract of this kind could be "fitted in" nor how it could carry any cancellation clause which would become operative on a date which would be as difficult to determine as this date would be.

Mr. Clayton also holds strong views as a trader and as an economist on the proposed wheat contract. As a trader he could see nothing in it but a large scale and long-term guess on the markets by two governments. As an economist, he regarded it as a weak instrument for stabilizing prices and he thought that what it hopes to achieve in this respect could be much more adequately and easily achieved by other methods. He was a little indefinite as to what these other methods might be in Canada and almost equally indefinite as to what they could be in his own country in respect of which he could only say that the United States is trying to maintain control. He referred, several times, to the effect on the contract of a wide-range inflation and the world price of wheat going up to, say, four or five dollars. We pointed out to him that the United States price of wheat was already fifty cents above the Canadian price and that the Argentinian wheat was being bought at $3.15 now and that our farmers seem to be prepared to accept a lower present return which is accompanied by a guarantee of a future minimum. He argued that this present attitude of the farmers would not stand up against really high world prices and that, while the Western farmer might not worry much about a wide discrepancy between his price and an Argentine price, he doubted that he would stand for a very much higher differential than already exists between the Canadian and the United States prices.

Mr. Clayton had no alternatives to offer. He made it quite clear, for instance, that he considered any world wheat agreement as impracticable and unenforceable. He said that the State Department has always held this view but that they were pushed into the advocacy of a world wheat agreement some time ago by Agriculture. When we told him that Agriculture now had apparently abandoned this advocacy, he seemed relieved.

Mr. Clayton emphasized two or three times that he was not considering the proposed Canadian-U.K. contract from any selfish point of view but that he was looking at it in the light particularly of the general world picture and its effect on the possibility of our achieving in international trade those objectives of an expanding and free economy towards which we are all working so hard.

Of the items dealt with at meetings of the Cabinet held on July 16th and July 17th, the following are those of particular concern to External Affairs:

4. Long-term wheat contract with the United Kingdom

It was reported that it had been ascertained that the United Kingdom had as yet made no reply to the representations addressed to them by the U.S. government.

The Prime Minister submitted and read draft preamble and a redraft of Clause (7) of the Heads of Agreement of the proposed contract designed to meet U.S. objections to the effect of the contract upon future multilateral trade discussions.

Mr. MacKinnon referred to the desirability of early decision upon the price to be paid for Ontario wheat.

After considerable discussion, the Cabinet agreed:

(a) that the agreement with the U.K. government be not concluded until word had been received of the reply made by the United Kingdom to the U.S. representations:

(b) that, before any agreement were signed, it should be amended to include a preamble and an amended Clause (7) along the lines suggested by the Prime Minister; and,

(c) that in respect of Ontario wheat, payment of $1.40 a bushel be authorized, to be made up, subject to the approval of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board, of an increased ceiling price of $1.35 and a participation payment of 5¢.

Dear Mr. St. Laurent,

I understand that Mr. Wrong has sent to you a report† on his conversation with the U.K. High Commissioner this morning regarding the U.K. reply to the U.S. representations.

In addition, the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Agriculture at the end of Council discussed briefly the situation respecting flour exports under the proposed contract. The U.K. has suggested that the flour to be supplied should be 500,000 tons the first year plus an extra 140,000 tons if available, 400,000 tons the second year plus an extra 140,000 if available, with amounts for the third and fourth years to be negotiated subsequently, but in no case to be less than 300,000 tons for the third year and 250,000 tons for the fourth year.

Trade and Commerce officials are very strongly opposed to this arrangement of a large initial quantity diminishing each year and claim that we should have a set figure of a minimum of 416,000 tons for each of the four years. Their arguments, I understand, are based on the fact that the overly large quantity at the beginning would force us to deprive our regular customers of flour exports and in later stages we might not be able to recover these markets; also, it appeared that the U.K. was trying to establish a situation whereby it would gradually reduce its imports of Canadian flour, replacing them from domestic or other sources to the long-term detriment of our trade.

Mr. Gardiner, as a compromise, suggested that the minimum in the fourth year might be increased to 300,000 tons, but Mr. MacKinnon did not appear satisfied with this suggestion.

Mr. Gardiner also reported that he had received a direct communication from the U.K. Minister of Food, Mr. Strachey, asking if Canada could increase its commitments for the present year's exports somewhat in order to allow the U.K. to postpone introduction of bread rationing. Mr. Gardiner apparently has given a discouraging reply in this connection. (I would point out that this was a direct request which did not come through the normal diplomatic channels of External Affairs.)

The foregoing is for your information in connection with the discussion of this matter which will take place at Cabinet tomorrow.

Yours sincerely,

J. R. BALDWIN

Dear Mr. Wrong,

PROPOSED WHEAT CONTRACT

I am obliged to you for your letter of the 19th July† informing me of the attitude of the Canadian Government on the question of the minimum quantities of flour to be accepted by the United Kingdom under the terms of the proposed contract.

I immediately communicated the contents of your letter to the United Kingdom Government and I now happy to inform you that, while they feel that a commitment to accept a minimum quantity of 300,000 tons of flour in 1949-50 may be embarrassing, they are prepared in the circumstances to agree to this quantity. They accordingly accept the revised proposals put forward in your letter, and agree to the insertion of the following figures in the contract:

A. 1946/47—500,000 tons as a minimum, with an additional quantity not exceeding 140,000 tons to be determined by negotiations in the light of the out-turn of the crop.

B. 1947/48—400,000 tons as a minimum, with an additional quantity not exceeding 140,000 tons to be determined by negotiations in the light of the out-turn of the crop.

C. 1948/49—300,000 tons as a minimum, the actual tonnage to be negotiated by the 1st July, 1947.

D. 1949/50—300,000 tons as a minimum, the actual tonnage to be negotiated by the 1st of July, 1948.

Le chef, la mission alimentaire de Grande-Bretagne, au ministre du Commerce Head, Food Mission of Great Britain, to Minister of Trade and Commerce

[Ottawa,] August 28, 1946

Dear Minister,

I have been asked by Mr. Strachey to communicate to you the following message:

"I would like to take this opportunity to thank you for your co-operation in the negotiation of the recent Wheat Agreement between our two centers. I am convinced that it will prove of lasting benefit to us both.

"I have been reviewing our total requirements for the 1946/47 crop year. For the United Kingdom itself, and for the other areas for which we are responsible (excluding the needs of the British Zone of Germany and India) I estimate that if Canada could provide us with 200,000,000 bushels between 1st August 1946 and 31st July 1947, we should just cover the needs of the United Kingdom and Colonies.

"The Contract itself requires Canada to supply the United Kingdom during the current crop year with 160,000,000 bushels. During the negotiations we recognised that this was a minimum figure and we actually pressed for the inclusion of 200,000,000 bushels in the Contract. We appreciated your difficulty in agreeing to this. Nevertheless, both sides agreed that if Canada enjoyed a good harvest this year, more than 160,000,000 bushels would be supplied. Fortunately our hopes of a good harvest look like being fulfilled. Would it be possible for you, in the circumstances, to guarantee to supply us with an additional 40,000,000 bushels, making a total for this year of 200,000,000 bushels?

"I appreciate that such an undertaking might limit your ability to increase your carry-forward during 1946/47, a plan which I realise you regard as desirable, so that should your 1947 crop prove disappointing you would have sufficient supplies in reserve to met the 1947/48 Contract requirement of 160,000,000 bushels.

"We all hope that your 1947 harvest will be at least as good as your 1946 harvest seems likely to be. But, to meet the possibility of its being disappointing, I would be prepared to agree to the extra 40,000,000 bushels to be supplied during 1946-47 (provided you are able to agree to it) being treated as an advance of your 1947/48 commitment of 160,000,000 bushels to the extent to which your 1947 harvest fell short of 320,000,000 bushels.

"Thus, if your crop were only 300,000,000 bushels, your 1946/47 commitment would be 140,000,000 bushels; if your crop were 280,000,000 bushels or less your commitment would be 120,000,000 bushels. I mentioned this suggestion tentatively to Mr. Gardiner last week and he thought it might be given sympathetic consideration. I explained to him our special difficulties during this current year and he feels that if Canada can assist us your people would be very ready to make a further special effort on the lines suggested.

"I shall be very glad to learn your reaction as soon as possible so that we can plan our 1946/47 program. The 200,000,000 bushels would enable us to de-ration bread in a few weeks' time and we are naturally most anxious to give this relief to our hard-pressed British people. It would be a wonderful thing if we could tell them that Canada had enabled us to do that."

Yours sincerely,

[Ottawa,] October 7, 1946

Dear Sir Andrew [Jones],

Your letter of August 28, 1946, containing a message from the Right Honourable Mr. Strachey has received my careful attention and has been considered by departmental officials and the Canadian Wheat Board. We have taken the necessary time to examine the proposals submitted by Mr. Strachey in the light of our whole wheat position and more especially from the standpoint of supplies of wheat which we will have available for export to the United Kingdom and other countries during the 1946-47 crop year.

I would like to express my personal appreciation of the frankness of the United Kingdom in making available to us all the pertinent facts in regard to the British wheat position at the present time. Having this information at our disposal, we can fully appreciate the seriousness of the United Kingdom position in respect to supplies of wheat for the present crop year and the many consequences of this position for the people of the United Kingdom. Knowing your position as we do, it is the desire of the Canadian Government to assist the United Kingdom in respect to wheat supplies to the greatest possible extent.

In examining the proposals contained in your letter of August 28, we have found ourselves subject to a distinct limitation in the volume of Canadian wheat which will be available for export in 1946-47. As you know, our wheat crop suffered considerable damage during the growing season through drought, sawfly and frost. More recently, frequent rains have unduly delayed the harvesting operations in central and northern Alberta and northwestern Saskatchewan, and have caused substantial damage to crops which matured in good fashion. While the Dominion Bureau of Statistics officially estimates the wheat crop of Western Canada at 420,000,000 bushels, we are not at all certain that the final outturn will reach this figure, and we now know that we will have a very considerable volume of low grade wheat which will not be suitable for milling purposes.

Along with this less optimistic opinion of 1946 wheat production in Canada, I must draw attention to the low level of reserve stocks of wheat in Canada at the beginning of the present crop year. In an effort to meet the urgent demands made upon us in the first half of 1946, wheat producers in the Prairie Provinces delivered a substantial amount of wheat which otherwise would have been retained on farms. It will be quite natural, therefore, for wheat producers to endeavour to build up their farm reserves to some extent out of 1946 production. You are also aware that stocks of Canadian wheat in export positions were at a minimum level by the time our new crop came along. As a matter of fact, we have not yet succeeded in rebuilding our Eastern and Pacific Coast wheat stocks to proper working levels.

Taking all these factors into consideration, we are not prepared at the moment to estimate our exportable surplus for 1946-47 at more than 250,000,000 bushels, including flour. We expect that our mills will use 65,000,000 bushels of wheat in the production of export flour. This means that our surplus wheat for export as wheat amounts to 185,000,000 bushels. Our contract with the United Kingdom involves the shipment of about 142,000,000 bushels of wheat (not including flour), or 143,000,000 bushels of wheat including the carryover on non-contract wheat. You will see, therefore, that outside of the United Kingdom contract Canada has about 42,000,000 bushels of wheat available for all other markets. During September and October we have programmed through the International Emergency Food Council a total of 13,500,000 bushels of wheat to other countries, including nearly 4,000,000 bushels to India, South Africa and Eire. As at November 1st, 1946, we will have 28,500,000 bushels of wheat for disposal over and above the United Kingdom contract. You will appreciate, therefore, that for the balance of the crop year Canada has very little wheat with which to meet the obligations which will devolve upon her as a result of participation in the International Emergency Food Council. This is a serious position and one which should be carefully considered by both the United Kingdom and Canada in respect to international obligations which must be discharged during this critical period.

Beyond the limitations placed upon us as a result of our supply position, we are facing a critical position in respect of internal transportation. This position cannot be relieved before the opening of navigation in later April or early May, 1947. At the moment a shortage of transportation is preventing us from moving expected quantities of wheat from Georgian Bay ports to the St. Lawrence. We have not sufficient lake boats available for the movement of grain from Fort William and Port Arthur to Eastern lake ports. We have not sufficient rail transportation to move expected quantities of wheat from country points in Western Canada to Fort William and Port Arthur and to Pacific Coast ports. As a result of this situation, we have failed to meet our September export programme by some 9,000,000 bushels, and it will be impossible for us to provide sufficient wheat at seaboard to meet our October export programme, as well as the September carryover.

We regard this situation as being very serious from our standpoint and from the standpoint of the United Kingdom and other countries receiving Canadian wheat during the fall months. For the first time since the outbreak of war in 1939 Canada is in the position of not having adequate supplies of wheat in export position to meet export commitments. At the close of navigation we will do well to have one-half of a normal Eastern stock position and this will mean that exports of wheat via Atlantic ports during the December-April period will be at a minimum level of perhaps 5,000,000 bushels per month. I am compelled to emphasize that from now until May, 1947, transportation is the limiting factor upon the volume of Canadian wheat available for export. Even if we had more wheat available from 1946 production, our export position would still remain within the limits of available transportation. From the standpoint of the United Kingdom, this means that until the opening of inland navigation next spring, you will receive all the Canadian wheat which our transportation facilities can make available to you, and the position until May, 1947, would not be affected one way or another by any enlargement in our commitment to the United Kingdom.

In regard to the specific proposals outlined in your letter of August 28, I feel that these proposals should be discussed at a later stage in the present crop year, assuming that we will provide the United Kingdom with as much wheat as transportation will permit during the next eight months. Later in the crop year we will have a much better idea of the volume of wheat which producers will market during the crop year. We will have a better idea of our whole export position. If it turns out that we can enlarge our export programme for the crop year 1946-47 and thereby substantially increase our wheat exports in May, June and July, we will be only too glad to examine our commitment to the United Kingdom in terms of these new factors. I must impress upon you, however, that any enlargement of the Canadian programme for the United Kingdom could only be effective in the final three months of the crop year, and perhaps in August of 1947.

I have tried to outline our position to you in an objective manner and no doubt the facts as outlined in this letter will be disappointing to those charged with the enormous task of providing bread supplies for the people of the United Kingdom and for areas for which the United Kingdom is responsible. I want to assure you, however, on behalf of my Department and on behalf of the Canadian Government, that the United Kingdom still enjoys a first priority on Canadian supplies of export wheat and it will be the policy of Canada to enlarge the United Kingdom programme for 1946-47 if and when our supply position makes such an enlargement possible of fulfillment. It is our hope that later in the crop year we shall see our wheat position in Canada in more optimistic terms and that it will be possible for us to meet in part at least the proposals set forth in your letter of August 28.

I would appreciate your communicating this letter to the Right Honourable Mr. Strachey.

Yours sincerely,

JAS. A. MACKINNON

Dear Mr. Pearson,

I think that you should know that the High Commissioner has received a telegram from London asking him to communicate a personal message from Mr. Strachey to Mr. Gardiner on the subject of bacon supplies.

In Mr. Gardiner's absence, I have communicated the message to Dr. Barton and I now enclose a copy herewith for your information.

I also enclose a table† containing an estimate of United Kingdom supplies, utilisation, and stocks of bacon during the period January, 1946 to June, 1947.

October [n.d.] 1946

The Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs has telegraphed to the United Kingdom High Commissioner today about a report we have had from the British Food Mission at Ottawa that the Canadian Cabinet is likely, on Wednesday, to take a decision about the continuation of meat rationing in Canada. The High Commissioner will be able to give you full details of the effect which fall in shipments, likely to follow from such a decision, would have upon our total supplies of bacon, upon our stocks, and upon the United Kingdom bacon ration.

Before the war the consumption of bacon in the United Kingdom was about 6½ ounces (boneless) per head per week. Throughout the war we were able to maintain a 4 ounce ration, and, even for a very short period, to go up to 6 ounces. Moreover, there were supplies of American fat bacon available which we were able to distribute from time to time in addition to the ordinary ration. These additional supplies have long since been discontinued. On the 27th May, 1945, within a few days of the end of the war with Germany, we were driven mainly by a reduction in supplies from America to reduce the ration to 3 ounces per week and now we are faced, unless you can help us, with going down to 2 ounces, before the end of the year.

This comes on top of a long series of changes for the worse, since the end of the war, in the food supplies of the people of the United Kingdom. Early this year we were compelled to reduce the cooking fats ration to 1 ounce only per week. The soap ration, which of course is dependent upon the general supply of oils and fats, has had to be cut twice, the combined effect being to reduce it to less than 60 per cent of pre-war consumption. I have lately had to bring the cheese ration down to 2 ounces per week and the butter ration to 2 ounces per week. Our meagre meat ration of 1/4d per week has to be made up to the extent of one-eighth by the issue of canned corned beef, and the proportion of the latter will undoubtedly have to be increased in the new year. For the first time in the history of this country, we were a few weeks ago forced to ration bread. The animal feeding stuffs supply, owing to the world shortage of cereals, is so much diminished that our pig and poultry population is seriously threatened, and already our home supply of bacon has been diminished by 1,000 tons per week, and the cereals situation here will undoubtedly be worsened by our deplorable harvest weather.

At the present time our people are faced also with heavy seasonal declines in the supply of milk, the present ration of which for ordinary consumers has been reduced to two pints per week, and of fish.

I realise, of course, that the Canadian people are anxious to get rid of war-time controls as rapidly as possible and that the recent removal of meat rationing in the United States makes it difficult for your Government to continue it in Canada. Nevertheless, I do hope that you will find it possible in some way to arrange for shipments of bacon to be made to the United Kingdom for the rest of this year and during 1947 upon something like the scale referred to in the heads of the agreement come to by my predecessor with you earlier in the year. A reduction in the bacon ration on top of all these other restrictions would be yet another blow to the British housewife.

FOOD CONTRACTS WITH THE UNITED KINGDOM; BEEF; MEAT RATIONING

At the meeting of the Cabinet on October 8th, it was agreed:

(a) that meat rationing be discontinued, sometime early in 1947, as soon as present undertakings to UNRRA and needy areas had been fulfilled; announcement to this effect to be made forthwith;

(b) that in connection with the supply of hogs for the domestic market, two or three weeks before the lifting of meat rationing the Meat Board to relax its hog requisitioning programme to permit not less than 50,000 hogs per week on the domestic market; hog slaughtering quotas to be dropped with the lifting of meat rationing; licencing of all slaughterers and the stamping of carcasses to be continued, however, as an essential part of price control but licenses to be issued freely on application; the price of hogs on the Toronto and Montreal markets to be accepted as the test of adequate supply of hogs on the domestic market. If the average price on these markets were to rise 50¢ above the equivalent of the domestic ceiling, it would be considered that requisitioning had reached the danger zone; if and when these average prices rose $1.00 over the domestic ceiling equivalent, requisitioning to be relaxed promptly and progressively until prices dropped to the domestic ceiling equivalent;

(c) that the beef contract with the United Kingdom be announced forthwith and simultaneously with the announcement in connection with meat rationing.

MEAT RATIONING; ANNOUNCEMENTS

At the meeting of the Cabinet on October 9th, it was observed that announcement of the beef contract had already been made and the question was raised of the timing of a public statement of the government's intention with respect to meat rationing.

The Cabinet agreed:

(1) that the decisions taken at the meeting of October 8th regarding the programme for the lifting of meat rationing be confirmed; and,

(2) that announcement of the government's intentions in this respect be deferred to such occasion as the Minister of Finance deemed appropriate, it being understood, however, that Ministers would be free to indicate that the conclusion of the new U.K. beef contract would not affect the government's course of action.

London, October 10, 1946

SECRET 1. Lord Addison and Mr. John Strachey asked me to see them this morning about the United Kingdom's desire for an assurance that they can count on a further 40 million bushels of wheat from Canada during the current crop year, over and above the 160 million bushels promised under the Wheat Purchase Agreement. I had not seen the text of the original United Kingdom request,<sup>1</sup> which took the form of a message from Mr. Strachey to Mr. MacKinnon transmitted through Earncliffe; nor of our reply<sup>2</sup> to this request, which had reached them by the same route.

2. As you will see from the text of the United Kingdom memorandum, which is contained in my immediately following telegram No. 2036,† they are very anxious to get an assurance now that an additional 40 million bushels will be available for their requirements before the end of the current crop year, and to this end are prepared, if price is a controlling consideration, to pay the world price for wheat for this supplementary quantity. Strachey hoped that even if we could not make an additional forward commitment with the United Kingdom now, we would at least refrain from entering into any commitments with other buyers, which would in fact preclude us from furnishing the United Kingdom with the additional 40 million bushels if our general supply position in the spring made such action seem feasible.

3. I had been briefed by Biddulph<sup>3</sup> on the Wheat Board's views about probable claims against this year's wheat supplies, and explained that I thought it would be very difficult for our Government to agree to an export allocation in excess of 160 million to the United Kingdom from the total of 250 million bushels likely available for export from Canada to all destinations during the current crop year. I promised, however, to transmit their representations and to explain that the Government here attaches great importance to them. They are anxious to remove the bread ration, but fear to do so unless their supply position for the balance of the crop year is assured. They dare not take it off and put it on again, nor do they wish to be completely dependent on week to week American allocations during the summer months of 1947. At the same time they are very concerned about the dis-

RE: BUTTER RATIONING; IMPORTS OF BUTTER

You will remember that on October 30th, in deciding that the butter ration should not be further reduced, the Cabinet agreed that the Department of Agriculture should approach the U.K. government with a view to obtaining up to 15 million pounds of butter from New Zealand and Australia, after the turn of the year.

In reply to a routine "follow-up" of this decision which goes out automatically from this office, the Deputy Minister of Agriculture has reported as follows:

"The Chairman of the Dairy Products Board, Mr. J. F. Singleton of this Department, has approached the British Food Mission in Ottawa with a view to obtaining 15,000,000 lbs. of butter from New Zealand and Australia for disposition in Canada under the direction of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board.

After reference to the British Food Ministry the Ministry say that as they have purchased the entire exportable surplus of butter from Australia and New Zealand, less specific quantities agreed for other markets, the two Dominions are not free to sell butter to Canada and would have to refer to the Ministry for approval of any such action.

In the light of this, the Ministry wish us to inform you that your proposal would prove very embarrassing. The over-all United Kingdom fats position is far from satisfactory, and recently the butter ration had to be reduced to two ounces; although it is being increased to three ounces again next month, supplies for 1947 are not assured. Further, with the record droughts in Queensland and New South Wales, shipments of butter to the U.K. may be reduced by 15,000 tons.

In the above circumstances, therefore, the Ministry hope that you will not press your proposal further."

In sending forth this report Dr. Barton says that no further action is contemplated by his Department until there is an opportunity of consulting Mr. Gardiner who he says expects to return toward the end of this week.

Dr. Barton anticipates seeing him in Toronto prior to Mr. Gardiner's return to Ottawa.

A. D. P. H[EENEY]

P.S. I have just heard that the Wartime Prices and Trade Board are very much concerned at the effect of this development upon the butter ration. With Mr. Iisley's authority, therefore, the item of butter rationing is being put on the agenda for this afternoon's meeting. As the Acting Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Bertrand) is out of town, I have asked the Department of Agriculture to let me have a note for you of the Departmental view of the question.

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, November 13, 1946

Dear Mr. Gardiner,

At yesterday's meeting of the Cabinet, the Minister of Finance, at the instance of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board, raised the question of the attitude to be taken as a result of the negative reply received from the U.K. Food Mission regarding imports of sufficient butter from Australasia to maintain the existing ration.

In your absence and that of the Acting Minister of Agriculture, I had requested the Chairman of the Dairy Products Board to prepare a memorandum† on the question for the Prime Minister. This was submitted to the Cabinet. It reported the reply received from the U.K. Food Ministry to the effect that they hoped that the proposals for imports to Canada would not be pressed further. It also set out the statistical supply position and calculated that it should be possible to maintain a 5 ounce ration without imports unless an unanticipated decline in production occurred.

After considerable discussion, the Cabinet confirmed the decision taken on October 30th and agreed that, with a view to the early conclusion of arrangements to obtain the necessary quantities of butter to maintain the present ration, the Dairy Products Board be instructed to urge upon the U.K. Ministry of Food the importance of supplementing Canadian domestic supply by imports from New Zealand and Australia.

After this decision was taken, the Prime Minister saw Mr. Singleton and instructed him personally that the Cabinet wished him to take the matter up vigorously and at once with the U.K. Food Mission.

I am sending copies of this letter to Dr. Barton and to Mr. Singleton for their guidance.

Yours sincerely,

London, November 19, 1946

CONFIDENTIAL. 1. I attended a meeting in Lord Addison's office this afternoon, at which Minister of Food and the High Commissioners for Australia and New Zealand were present. Addison said that the Canadian Government's request for 12 million pounds of butter had been considered by United Kingdom Cabinet that morning. United Kingdom Government, having in mind the support and assistance that they had received from Canada in so many matters of supply, were for their part prepared to agree to the diversion of this quantity of butter, provided that they could be assured by Australia and New Zealand that the diversion of butter from United Kingdom to Canada would not affect the future rate of deliveries from those countries to United Kingdom. They were mindful of the difficulties that had developed last spring when United Kingdom Government had agreed to the diversion of a certain quantity of New Zealand butter for the provision of the United States Pacific Fleet. There had been a good deal of mischievous political criticism of this transaction in New Zealand, and some consequential falling off in the rate of New Zealand deliveries of butter to United Kingdom. They thought that if our present requirements were properly put up to the Governments of Australia and New Zealand, this kind of criticism could be avoided and future United Kingdom supplies kept unimpaired.

2. I explained the operation of our butter rationing system and relationship between the controlled domestic consumption of butter and the maintenance of our cheese exports to United Kingdom, and said that I knew that our Government must be very concerned about the possible effects of a failure of the butter ration on the general price and supply structure in Canada before making this approach. That structure had been subjected to new and severe strains by the abandonment of all comparable American controls, and it would be very difficult to maintain it if a basic commodity like butter fell short of the ration.

3. It was agreed that it would be helpful if the United Kingdom approach to Australia and New Zealand for their concurrence in the proposed diversion were supported by direct representations by our representatives in Canberra and Wellington. I was asked to furnish a statement of the Canadian position which could be used as the basis of an identical approach from us and from United Kingdom. The Australian and New Zealand representatives thought it would be helpful if such a statement made clear the rationing control of butter and fats in Canada, the period for which these controls had been in force and their relationship to the provision of supplies for United Kingdom. They thought that their Governments would agree to meet our request, but would find it necessary to handle the public announcement of the deal very carefully. Particularly they would wish to distinguish sharply between the position of Canada and the United States as claimants for butter, stressing our domestic rationing and cooperation in meeting the United Kingdom needs. With the New Zealand elections a week away, it was stressed that nothing whatever should be said in the meantime about the possibility of diverting any New Zealand butter from United Kingdom to Canada.

4. All the countries represented made heavy weather about the difficulty and delicacy of explaining this transaction to their respective publics, and felt that we should concert public announcements pretty carefully. Strachey intimated that it would be helpful in United Kingdom if we could say that the diversion of butter to Canada at this time would help us maintain, and if possible increase, cheese deliveries to United Kingdom. He also asked if there was any possibility whatever of our being able to give them some quantity of cooking fats as a partial offset to butter diversion.

5. Please telegraph memorandum of Canadian position requested in paragraph 3.

PCO/D-10-3

Le haut commissaire de Grande-Bretagne au Premier ministre
High Commissioner of Great Britain to Prime Minister

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, November 21, 1946

My dear Prime Minister,

You will remember that in the course of your talk with me on the 14th November you mentioned the difficulty in which the Canadian Government were placed over butter, and the approach which had been made to the U.K. Government with a view to the purchase by Canada of some of the butter which under our contracts with Australia and New Zealand would form part of the U.K.'s supplies.

I immediately reported to London the anxiety which you had expressed to me, and have now received a telegram informing me that the matter has been urgently considered by the Cabinet, who found themselves in an acute dilemma; for, on the one hand, they are greatly concerned over the gravity of our own fats position in the U.K. and the maintenance of our supplies, and, on the other hand, they are equally concerned that everything possible should be done to assist Canada to tide over this temporary period of shortage. In this difficult situation the Cabinet decided that, little as the U.K. could afford any contraction in the supplies coming forward from Australia and New Zealand, the immediate needs of Canada should in this emergency be given priority over our own needs, acute as they are. They therefore agreed to take the risks involved in the making over to Canada of the supplies needed by her, provided that the arrangements were such as to prevent future supplies to the U.K. from Australia and New Zealand from being prejudiced and on the understanding also that Canada would be ready to join the U.K. in seeking the concurrence of the Australian and New Zealand Governments in the diversion proposed.

The telegram further indicates that, following on the Cabinet's decision, Lord Addison and Mr. Strachey have seen the High Commissioners for Canada, Australia and New Zealand and have explained the position to them. As a result of this talk, in the course of which the High Commissioners for Australia and New Zealand emphasized that the matter would have to be very carefully handled in their countries if the impression was to be avoided that the U.K. is not in the same extreme need for butter as hitherto, the following procedure was arranged:

(1) The High Commissioner for Canada would telegraph to the Canadian Government informing them of the discussion and would ask for a full statement of the Canadian position.

(2) On receipt of this statement, Lord Addison, after consultation with the three High Commissioners, would telegraph to the Australian and New Zealand Governments explaining the position and seeking their concurrence in the arrangements proposed; and it was suggested that it would be helpful if the Canadian Government were to arrange for a simultaneous approach to Australia and New Zealand themselves.

(3) No publicity of any kind should be permitted until there had been full agreement between the four Governments, who would consult together in drafting any public statement.

I expect that you will already have received a report of this discussion from your High Commissioner in London, and very much hope that the arrangements proposed will be satisfactory to you, and will enable the difficulties here to be successfully surmounted.

Yours sincerely,

A. CLUTTERBUCK

Déclaration du gouvernement du Canada

Statement by Government of Canada

November 28, 1946

The rationing of butter in Canada commenced on December 15th, 1942, at a ration of eight ounces weekly. This rate was maintained during 1943 and 1944, but was reduced to seven ounces weekly during 1945. In January and February 1946 the rate was six ounces per week; from March 1st to May 15th, four ounces weekly; and from May 16th to June 6th, five and one-third ounces weekly. Since June 7th the ration has been six ounces weekly.

2. Evaporated milk is rationed in all areas where field milk is reasonably available, and coupons are supplied only for infants and on medical certificate. The area under ration has been extended, and the rationing procedure made considerably more restrictive within the past six weeks.

3. The rationing of both butter and evaporated milk has been necessary on account of sharply increased exports during recent years of cheese and evaporated milk to the United Kingdom and parts of the Empire, such as the Middle East, Newfoundland and British West Indies, etc., all in conformity with the IEFEC programme.

4. Shortening and cooking fats are not rationed to consumers, but have been under allocation control at manufacturer and distributor levels since January 1943 at 80 percent of 1941 usage. This level was reduced to 70 percent during the summer and autumn of 1946, and we have experienced acute difficulties in meeting these rates. Lard production in Canada has been materially reduced, partly on account of heavy shipments to the United Kingdom of Wiltshire sides. Lard production in 1946 is estimated at 52 percent of 1941, and not over 60 percent of 1935-39 average.

5. The following figures are a careful summary of current statistical trends (all figures in millions of pounds):

Stock in hand, January 1st 1947	40
Production, Jan., Feb., March	27
Total available supply	67
Total required to meet current rate of ration	72
Minimum working stocks, April 1st	10
Total requirement	82

This shows a deficiency of 15 million pounds. We think we can get by with imports of 12 million pounds by using extreme care. You should note that April is also a deficiency month in butter production, and it is not until we get into May that current production begins to equal and eventually surpass current consumption.

6. With the removal in the United States of all controls and rationing of dairy products, fats and oils, it will be most difficult if not impossible to continue controls in Canada if they are compelled to reduce ration level of butter below six ounces. From their experience last March and April, they believe that a cut below six ounces this winter would almost certainly bring about administrative collapse of the whole rationing programme. Removal of controls in Canada would almost certainly result in less cheese and evaporated milk being available to United Kingdom account during 1947.

7. Cooking fats in Canada are in very short supply, and it would be impossible to restrict distribution further to make any quantity available for export.

8. Taking butter into consideration, the Canadian per capita consumption of edible fats is the lowest in history, and with a six ounce butter ration, just on a par with that of the United Kingdom.

9. The Canadian authorities ask whether assurances can be given that a maximum 12 million pounds will be available as required, and whether an indication can be given as to the maximum time between the request to the United Kingdom Ministry of Food and actual delivery at a Canadian port. If availability of the 12 million pounds is certain, the Canadian Government can give assurance that the request will not be made earlier than necessary to have the butter in Canada when it is required to sustain the six ounce ration, and that the amount requested will be determined on a basis of the statistical position at the time. The actual production and disappearance from November 1st, 1946, and the stocks as at the close of the last preceding month, will then be known.

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, November 29, 1946

Dear Mr. Gardiner,

You will recall that Cabinet at its meetings of November 26th and November 27th dealt with the following items of interest to you.

(a) Butter rationing; imports of butter.

You reported that as a result of a further approach made to the United Kingdom Government, word had now been received that they were prepared to divert to Canada sufficient quantities of butter from Australia and New Zealand, provided that deliveries from these sources to Britain were not prejudiced, and on the understanding that Canada would join in seeking concurrence of the Australian and New Zealand Governments in the proposed diversion. It had been decided that the Canadian Government should provide a full statement of the Canadian position for communication to Australia and New Zealand. It had also been agreed that no publicity of any kind should be permitted until there had been full agreement between the four governments who would consult together in drafting any public statement.

You then submitted a draft telegram to the Canadian High Commissioner in London setting out the detailed statement of the Canadian supply position requested by the United Kingdom Government.

The Cabinet, after discussion, noted with approval your report and approved the draft telegram submitted for despatch to the Canadian High Commissioner in London.

I have been informed that the telegram was sent on November 27th.

(b) Bacon contract with the United Kingdom; price adjustment

You reported on November 26th that it was being strongly represented that the recent increase in wages in packing plants made it necessary to authorize some increase in the returns on pork products. It had been suggested that the desired result might be achieved by payment of a subsidy on bacon for export to the United Kingdom.

Consideration was being given to an adjustment in the contract with the United Kingdom to bring it more into line with the United Kingdom contract with Denmark by providing higher immediate prices and possibly some downward adjustment in the guaranteed floor two years hence.

The Cabinet agreed that it did not appear desirable to pay a subsidy on bacon for export, and deferred consideration of the question of adjustment in contract prices with the United Kingdom.

At the meeting on November 27th you reported that the question of an adjustment in contract prices had been taken up informally with representatives of the British Food Mission but that no reply had yet been received. The Chairman of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board had stated that he had no objection to the action proposed.

The Minister of Finance suggested that no final commitments in this regard be entered into until full examination of the relationship between the proposed increase in prices and increased costs in packing plants had been made.

The Cabinet, after discussion, agreed that negotiations with the United Kingdom should not proceed beyond the present informal stages pending further detailed examination of the question by the Cabinet.

I am sending a copy of this letter to Dr. Barton.

Your sincerely,

IMMEDIATE. CONFIDENTIAL. Your telegram No. 2315 of Dec. 3rd,† Canadian Butter requirement. Following is text of telegram I have sent today to our Mission in Australia. A similar telegram has been sent to the Canadian High Commissioner in New Zealand. Begins: Canadian Butter Requirement.

1. We face a deficiency of 15 million pounds in our requirements of butter on the basis of the following figures (all in millions of pounds) which are a careful projection of the current statistical trends; stock on hand Jan. 1st 1947, 40. Production Jan. Feb. and March 27. Total available supply 67. Required to meet current rate of ration 72. Minimum working stocks April 1st 10. Total requirement 82. It should be noted that April is also a deficiency month in butter production and it is not until we get into May that current production begins to equal and eventually surpass current consumption.

2. With removal in United States of all controls of rationing and prices of dairy products fats and oil it will be most difficult if not impossible to continue controls in Canada if it becomes necessary to reduce the butter ration below the present level of 6 ounces per week. From our experience last March and April we believe that a cut below 6 ounces this winter would almost certainly bring about administrative collapse of the whole rationing programme. Removal of controls in Canada would almost certainly result in less cheese and evaporated milk being available to United Kingdom account during 1947.

3. Rationing of butter in Canada commenced Dec. 15th 1942, at a rate of eight ounces weekly. This rate maintained during 1943 and 1944 but reduced to seven ounces weekly during 1945. Jan. and Feb. 1946 rate six ounces per week; March 1 to May 15 four ounces weekly; May 16 to June 6 five and one-third ounces; since June 7 ration has been six ounces weekly.

4. Evaporated milk is rationed in all areas where fluid milk is reasonably available and coupons are supplied only for infants and on medical certificate. The area under ration has been extended and the rationing procedure made considerably more restrictive within the past six weeks.

5. Rationing of both butter and evaporated milk has been necessary on account of sharply increased exports during recent years of cheese and evaporated milk to the United Kingdom parts of Empire such as Middle East Newfoundland British West Indies etc., all in conformity with IEFC programme.

6. Shortening and cooking fats not rationed to consumers but under allocation control at manufacturer and distributor levels since Jan. 1943 at 80 percent of 1941 usage. This level was reduced to 70 percent during the summer and autumn of 1946 and we have experienced acute difficulties in meeting these rates. Lard production in Canada has been materially reduced partly on account of heavy shipments to the United Kingdom of Wiltshire sides. Lard production 1946 is estimated at 52 percent of 1941 and not over 60 percent of 1935-39 average.

7. Taking butter into consideration Canadian per capita consumption of edible fats lowest in history and with six ounces butter ration just on par with that of United Kingdom.

8. After a full discussion in Cabinet we approached the United Kingdom authorities through our High Commissioner in London for their agreement to the diversion of up to 12 million pounds of butter from the supplies to the United Kingdom from Australia and New Zealand. The United Kingdom Cabinet urgently considered our request. Although greatly concerned over the gravity of their own position they agreed on the necessity of doing all possible to tide us over our temporary period of shortage and are willing to make over to us the supplies we need provided the arrangements are such as to prevent future supplies to the United Kingdom from Australia and New Zealand from being prejudiced and on the understanding also that we will join the United Kingdom in seeking the concurrence of the Australian and New Zealand Governments in the diversion proposed.

9. Would you therefore urgently approach the Australian authorities on the basis of paragraphs 1 to 7 inclusive of this telegram and seek assurance that a maximum of 12 million pounds will be available as required. Please convey to the Australian Government the assurance of the Canadian Government that requests will not be made earlier than necessary to have the butter here when required to sustain the 6 ounce ration and that the amount requested will be determined on the basis of our statistical position at the time. We shall know then the actual production and disappearance from 1st Nov. 1946 and our stocks as at the close of the last preceding month.

10. For your information the United Kingdom Government intends to inform the Governments of Australia and New Zealand of the United Kingdom concurrence in our request for the diversion to us of up to 12 million pounds of butter subject to the receipt of assurances from Australia and New Zealand that the fact of this diversion will not in any way prejudice the over-all exportable surpluses of butter from these countries. The Australian and New Zealand High Commissioners in London who have been parties to the discussions there will support the United Kingdom message in direct telegrams to their Governments urging the desirability of prompt decision on the Canadian request.

11. We are sending a similar telegram to our Mission in New Zealand.

IMMEDIATE. CONFIDENTIAL. I am informed that Minister of Food will announce in Parliament on Monday, December 16th that the bacon ration is being reduced from three ounces to two ounces a week. He will probably issue, at same time, a statistical note on the supply position which will make it clear why this action has had to be taken. I have had a private crack at the draft statement and hope to get its reference to the short-fall in Canadian deliveries put in more or less acceptable terms.

2. I have not yet told Ministry of Food that meat rationing will shortly come to an end in Canada. I hope there may be an interval of two to three weeks between the cut in bacon ration here and the lifting of our control in which case the press are less likely to link the two decisions, or to attempt to establish a casual [sic] connection between them.

2. Your paragraph 4 [Bacon] sub-sections A, B and C as they stand are agreed. Sub-section D. Gardiner of opinion that floor price of 25 dollars too low in relation to 1947 and 1948. Actually, A, B and C only give farmers from September 1947 to December 1948 to take advantage of the full increased price, and seeing the big drop in 1949 they would think twice before increasing their 1947 and 1948 production. He would like 1949 floor raised to 27 dollars fifty cents even if this was done at the expense of a reduction in 1947 and 1948. As a second suggestion, he proposed that no reference to 1949 prices should be made except that they would be negotiated during January 1948.

3. Your paragraphs 5 and 6 agreed.

4. Having expressed the above views, Gardiner added that he was strongly in favour of the basis of the agreement and would do all he could to see that it was carried out.

5. Will advise you re barley decisions as soon as known.

London, December 18, 1946

MOST IMMEDIATE. 1. Your Punic 1587 Bacon discussions. Thank you for your prompt and helpful cable. Gardiner's co-operative attitude much appreciated.

2. In view of Gardiner's attitude regarding 1949 prices and because of our own anxiety regarding our foreign exchange position in that year we feel that our purchase for 1949 might be dealt with in a separate exchange of letters, limiting the new contract to 1947 and 1948.

3. Treasury are very worried about our dollar position in 1949 and they are afraid that we shall have to review the whole of our import programme for that year at a date nearer to 1949.

4. We therefore suggest that our 1949 arrangement for buying bacon from the Canadian Government should be embodied in an exchange of letters reading as follows:

Begins. It is the intention of the United Kingdom Government to purchase 400 million lbs. of bacon in 1949 at a price to be determined in negotiation between the two Governments during January 1948. It is understood that if the United Kingdom Government having regard to its other commitments has not available sufficient dollars to purchase the whole of this quantity in 1949 at the price agreed in January 1948 further discussions will take place with the Canadian Government before the beginning of 1949 regarding any adjustments that may be necessary in regard to the implementation of the intention set out above. Ends.

5. We should of course assume that Canadian Government would make use of information contained in this exchange of letters so that farmers would know it was U.K.'s intention to purchase 400 million lbs. of bacon in 1949 if this was at all possible. Should Canadian Government decide to publish the text of the letter we should have no objection. Alternatively they might decide to make use only of the figures contained in it.

6. In further discussions we also suggest following modification first sentence of Clause 2 to read as follows.

Begins. The Canadian Government takes note of the fact that the British Ministry of Food will be prepared to purchase from Canada during the years 1947 and 1948 the quantities specified in para. 5 below. Ends. Omission of all reference to 1949 in clause 4 and clause 5 (including deletion of 4(d) and reduction of target figure for 1948 in para. 5 to 350 million lbs.).

7. Should be glad if you could rush through your comments on this suggestion after discussing with Taggart and Gardiner as quickly as you sent your comments on our Punic X1123. Next meeting 4.30 p.m. (our time) tomorrow (Thursday).

IMMEDIATE. SECRET AND PERSONAL. Pearsall has just shown me the draft heads of the Agreement for a new bacon contract which has been cabled to Ottawa through the United Kingdom Ministry of Food. There is no doubt in my mind about this country's need for all the bacon it can get from Canada during the next two years and no third country complications stand in the way of our making a bulk sale contract for our exportable surplus. I have no information on which to base a comment on the appropriateness of the proposed prices or of the quantities which it is hoped will be forthcoming under the new Agreement.

2. I do, however, think it important that we should not commit ourselves publicly to a target figure for exports if there is any risk whatever that we shall fall short of it. I also think it advisable to spell out in an agreement with the United Kingdom the whole devious system of direct and indirect subsidies and of consumption and export controls whereby we hope to make the promised quantities available for export to the United Kingdom.

3. As regards duration of the contract, I see no advantage in pressing the United Kingdom to guarantee prices beyond the end of 1948. The real guarantee of our agricultural price structure lies in our own floor price law. On this aspect of the new bacon contract you may find file on last summer's wheat negotiations relevant.

1. I am sorry to see by this morning's papers that our Minister of Agriculture and the United Kingdom Ministry of Food have agreed on an announcement of our hope to supply 350 million pounds of bacon to the United Kingdom in 1947, when the experts in both countries believe that Canada will be doing remarkably well if she succeeds in exporting 265 million pounds next year. A high target figure may have its uses in eliciting additional production and it may also help to support our claims for a larger proportion of the United Kingdom market than we enjoyed before the war. On the other hand, it must be remembered that it is a very easy slope from "hope" to "estimate" to "undertaking" and I am afraid that this time next year we may find ourselves trying to explain away a shortfall of 75 to 100 million pounds in bacon deliveries.

2. My feeling is that we should keep our bulk sale commitments to quantities we can be reasonably certain of delivering, and that we should try not to project commitments in respect of either quantity or price too far forward into the future. A two year programme covering prices and quantities seems to me defensible and in the mutual interest of both Canada and the United Kingdom. For the third year, I should be content with an indication of the United Kingdom's readiness to take Canadian bacon up to some agreed maximum. If the domestic hog production programme requires longer assurance of remunerative prices, then we have machinery available under the Floor Prices Act to give a domestic guarantee of hog prices for 1949 and 1950 if need be. By combining the techniques of bulk contract and domestic price guarantee we can hope to keep control of the expansion and maintenance of this important sector of our agricultural economy. It should not be left to depend indefinitely on the vicissitudes of the United Kingdom exchange position. What I should like to see us do is work out a domestic policy in terms of hog production supplemented by a marketing policy for bacon deliveries to the United Kingdom, reserving exhortations for the domestic field and keeping the bacon contract on a strictly business basis. Ends.

UNITED KINGDOM BACON CONTRACT; NEW AGREEMENT

At the meeting of the Cabinet on December 30th, it was agreed that, subject to the deletion of any reference to arrangements for 1949, the draft Heads of Agreement, submitted at this meeting for consideration, for revision of the bacon contract with the United Kingdom be approved, the said agreement to provide for an increased price of two cents per pound effective January 1st, 1947, and a further increase of two cents per pound effective September 1st, 1947, to the end of 1948; an Order in Council to authorize the conclusion of the said agreement to be passed forthwith.

It was also agreed that announcement of the new prices provided in the agreement should be made at a date to be agreed on, having in mind the necessary arrangements to be made by the Wartime Prices and Trade Board for consequential adjustments in the domestic price ceilings and, on the other, the desirability of informing producers at the earliest possible date.

The last word we have had is contained in tel. 278 of Dec. 20th† from our Acting High Commissioner in Australia which we referred to you advising that Australia intends to inform the Dominions Office that she agrees in principle. I think there is need for centralising these negotiations between the four countries and it would be helpful if this could be done through you. If Australia and New Zealand agree to the diversion on the conditions set out in the D.O. tels. 386 to Australia† and 297 to New Zealand† of Dec. 7th then the centralisation would relate mainly first to publicity arrangements and secondly to the handling of our specific requests. There is the possibility indicated in tel. 278 of Dec. 20th that Australia's acceptance will contain a new condition which will have to be discussed with the United Kingdom. Will you please advise me whether it is feasible to have the negotiations centralised in your hands.

In the meantime following the suggestion contained in para. 2 of your tel. 2315 of Dec. 3rd† I can advise you that the Dairy Products Board has asked us to make a firm request for 5,600,000 pounds, (that is for 100,000 boxes of 56 net pounds each) to be shipped as soon as possible from whichever of the two Dominions can make earliest delivery to any of the following ports: Vancouver, Halifax or Saint John. The butter should be shipped to the Dairy Products Board at the port of discharge and invoiced to the Dairy Products Board, Ottawa.

We are referring this telegram at once to our representatives in Australia and New Zealand for their information. Until we hear from you we are not however asking them to present the specific request to Australia and New Zealand.

The Prime Minister sent to me this afternoon the attached personal letter from Mr. Bevin, which he received via Clutterbuck last night. He commented that he did not think this letter ought to go on the files and that it was probably a matter which should be taken up with Mr. Howe. The Wartime Prices and Trade Board is also pretty directly involved. I think probably the way to deal with it is to take it up with Mr. Howe in a letter, simply indicating that this has been brought to the Prime Minister's attention by a high level approach and that Mr. King feels that the request should be carefully investigated. It would be necessary to paraphrase most of the letter.

Dear Mackenzie King,

When we spoke in Paris you were good enough to offer to help us on special matters whenever possible. Such a case has arisen. We are desperately short of paper and pulp to meet the needs of the British Zone of Germany. It is essential to have more German papers. Byrnes has told me the Americans are also going to step up both press and radio publicity in their Zone. I want if at all possible to do the same. The reason for this needs no explanation.

But our present supplies are not enough to cover German paper requirements even at their present low level. We are doing all we can to help from stocks and by manufacture in mills over here. To meet the present emergency in the Zone, we are hoping to supply immediately 4,000 tons of newsprint. But such supplies can only be sent at the expense of our own needs which are still very far from being met, and shortage of paper is, as you know, seriously hampering our own post-war recovery. Walter Layton of our Newsprint Purchasing Mission at present in your country can let you have fuller details of the position.

There is also a serious shortage in our Zone of "strong" paper for industrial packing purposes. The critical food situation makes this an urgent need.

Could you help us out by making available, on an emergency basis, over the three months October to December, 1946, 2,000 tons of sulphite pulp and 2,300 tons of sulphate pulp per month? In addition, would it be possible for you to replace the 4,000 tons of newsprint which we are sending from this country to meet the immediate needs?

I hope that the supply position in 1947 will be somewhat better but we might have to appeal for help again. I would be grateful for anything you can do in this matter.<sup>1</sup>

Yours sincerely,

ERNEST BEVIN

Mr. Garner, the Deputy High Commissioner for the United Kingdom, telephoned this afternoon with regard to some discussions which Sir Walter Layton has been having on behalf of the United Kingdom government with the officials of the Pulp and Paper Association concerning the shipment of newsprint and paper to the British Zone in Germany. I understand that these discussions resulted from a letter written to you by Mr. Bevin making a special request for additional shipments. Mr. Garner stated that the talks had been helpful and sympathetic on the whole, and the officials of the Pulp and Paper Association would be meeting representatives of all the paper companies some time toward the end of this week with regard to the tonnage to be shipped and other points of detail.

While Sir Walter Layton feels quite well satisfied with the discussions with the producers, he has been asked by his government to discuss, at the Ministerial level, some of the political aspects involved in the question. He is coming to Ottawa tomorrow and will be meeting Mr. Howe in the morning. If it could be arranged, he would very much like to have not more than 10 minutes of your time to speak to you, if it would suit your convenience. I understand that Sir Walter will be here all day tomorrow.

I told Mr. Garner that I did not know whether you would feel that you should become directly involved in this matter, especially since Mr. Howe had it in hand, but he asked to have the request placed before you for your decision in any event.

Dear Mr. Pearson,

I have your letter of October 9th,† conveying a request for sulphite pulp, sulphate pulp and newsprint. The political urgency of the matter is noted from your letter, and from a subsequent talk with Sir Walter Layton, who had been asked to make representations here by a senior member of the United Kingdom Government.

I have been doing my best to obtain this material, and thought that the matter was well in hand. However, there has been general resentment that the demands of Sir Walter Layton had not included these items, and that Canadian industry, which is already badly oversold, should be called upon by the Government for large commitments of the character contained in your letter.

There is the additional fact that Sweden has cut off all supplies of sulphite pulp to United States to further break O.P.A. ceilings. The feeling among the trade is that they should get this from Sweden. Sir Walter Layton will cable me the answer to this suggestion.

I am leaving the City for ten days, but I am asking the Timber Controller, Mr. T. F. Flahiff, to keep in touch with you about further negotiations with the industry. In the meantime, I will do my best to get confirmation of this additional quantity.

I understand that you are having a talk with Sir Walter Layton about the situation.

Yours very truly,

On receipt of a copy of the letter to you from Mr. Bevin regarding newsprint for the British Zone in Germany, I took the matter up with Mr. Howe by letter and by telephone. Mr. Howe said he would do whatever he could to meet Mr. Bevin's request. He phoned me today, however, to say that he was encountering certain difficulties, as the newsprint situation is, of course, extremely tight at the moment. However, he still had hopes that something could be accomplished. At Mr. Howe's request, I saw Sir Walter Layton yesterday morning, when he explained the situation to me and expressed the hope that, as a result of the intervention of the Canadian Government, the newsprint manufacturers might be able to divert supplies from present customers to the British Zone in Germany. I understand that Sir Walter also saw you yesterday afternoon, so he no doubt emphasized the importance that is attached by the United Kingdom Government to this request. From the point of view of the re-education of the German people, it is, of course, important that the Germans in the Russian Zone should not be in a better position insofar as information from press, periodicals and books is concerned, than those for which the western democracies have accepted responsibility.

If the United States metropolitan publishers would agree to suspend their Sunday supplements for only one edition, I should think an adequate supply of newsprint would be available for both the United Kingdom and United States Zones in Germany for some time.

Dear Mr. Pearson,

NEWSPRINT AND PULP FOR THE BRITISH ZONE OF GERMANY

In the note enclosed in Mr. Garner's letter of the 21st October† it was stated that an amplified statement would be sent as soon as possible in justification of the appeal which has been made to Canada for assistance towards meeting immediate needs.

I have now received from my Government by telegram the enclosed statement setting out the position in detail, and have been asked to communicate it urgently to the Canadian authorities in support of the case which has been put before them.

As will be seen from the statement, the situation is causing great anxiety, and it would be of the utmost assistance if the matter could be dealt with as speedily as possible. As stated in Mr. Garner's letter, my Government would very much welcome a visit by a Canadian expert to the British Zone in Germany for the purpose of studying conditions on the spot, but they much hope that it will be found possible in the meantime to proceed with the assistance needed to meet the present emergency.

Yours sincerely,

A. CLUTTERBUCK

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

A. Chemical pulp generally (excluding pulp for textiles).

1. Total production in Germany in 1937 was 1.43 million tons of which the present Soviet Zone and territories lost in the East provided two-thirds, the American Zone one-quarter and the French and British Zones provided small balance about equally. Exports and imports were comparatively small (under 200,000 tons) and approximately cancelled out. Estimated 1937 consumption in British Zone area was nearly half a million tons. Production in same area was 65,000 tons, hence this area was anything but self-supporting.

2. 1946 production in British Zone may reach 20,000 tons at the most. Only obtainable imports have been 16,000 tons ex-Sweden last spring. Further imports are absolutely essential but none are obtainable from Continental sources apart from small import referred to in paragraph 2 of part B.

B. Sulphate pulp.

1. Pre-war sulphate production capacity was 110,000 tons per year—all in Eastern parts of Germany, none in British or American Zone areas. Sulphate is urgently required for lime, fertiliser and grain sacks, strong food wrappings, cable papers, binder twine, emery base, etc.

2. Sole import to the British Zone since the war ended has been 10,000 tons. Total stock on 1st October was 3,000 tons. Total imports in sight are 500 tons pulp, 3,000 tons kraft paper; hence the total possible availability for last quarter of 1946 is 6,500 tons. Minimum requirement for the same period is 13,400 tons. If Canada could supply the deficit of 6,900 tons, this would be allocated on basis of 5,800 tons for sack paper, 950 tons for cable paper, 150 tons for emery base.

3. Requirement figure of 13,400 tons in three months is only one-third of the estimated pre-war quarterly consumption in the same area and therefore most meagre.

C. Sulphite pulp.

1. All Germany 1937 produced about 1.32 million tons of sulphite pulp and after allowing for small exports estimated consumption was about 1.15 million tons. Assuming consumption is evenly spread over the population, it is estimated that annual consumption in the area of the present British Zone must have been nearly 400,000 tons. Total 1946 availability at present foreseen is 30,000 tons (20,000 indigenous, 6,000 ex-Sweden last spring, 1,500 ex-U.K. purchases in Sweden coming in November, 2,500 tons in form of finished paper from U.K. and Austria delivery expected this quarter), that is less than one-twelfth of pre-war consumption. This indicates straits to which the Zone is reduced.

2. Present position (i.e. that for last quarter of 1946) is that absolute minimum requirements are 13,500 tons of sulphite pulp of which we cannot hope to find at best more than 7,500 tons (indigenous 6,000, import, 1,500). This leaves balance of 6,000 tons which appeal is made to Canada to supply. In order to assist towards bridging the gap pending reply from Canada to this appeal, the United Kingdom, out of its meagre resources, has despatched 1,500 tons (as stated in paragraph 1 of part C above). It might be thought that having tided over first month of last quarter of 1946 this requirement of 6,000 tons could be reduced, but the U.K. authorities feel it necessary to have at least one month's import supply in hand by end December as they have so far not been able to make any arrangements for 1947 (actually they are trying to secure option on 25,000 tons Swedish sulphite and equal amount of sulphate for 1947).

3. From 13,500 tons sulphite would be made about 40,000 tons finished paper of which one-quarter would be cardboard, one-quarter writing, typing and printing, one-fifth crepe, M.G. papers and wrappings, nearly one-eighth newsprint, one-eleventh roofing felt base, and balance miscellaneous essential technical papers.

4. Small indigenous sulphite production is due to (a) war damage and (b) shortages of pulpwood, coal and electricity. War damage is slowly being repaired. Pulpwood shortage is complicated by demands on timber, transport and labour for timber export programme for United Kingdom housing needs. Grim coal position is well known to you and electricity is directly dependent on coal.

5. Merger of British and American Zones may improve indigenous supply eventually, but the Americans will have no surplus unless and until easing of pulpwood and coal position allows them to reactivate further capacity.

D. Newsprint.

1. Sir Walter Layton has already explained the position. Supply of newspapers per head of population per week is 2.37 in Soviet Zone, 1.18 in American Zone and 0.65 in British Zone. Population of latter is estimated at nearly twenty-three millions.

2. Present indigenous newsprint production 1,400 tons per month. Interim British Zone target is 3,000 tons newsprint per month. Authorities responsible for German re-education ask for more than double this plus 2,000 tons book paper. The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs attaches great importance to this part of the programme.

E.

In conclusion it is desired to stress the extreme urgency of the present minimum demands. Should the import programme from Sweden referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2 of part C above not be fulfilled, the position as regards 1947 requirements will become still more serious.

NEWSPRINT AND PULP FOR THE BRITISH ZONE OF GERMANY

The Department of Reconstruction and Supply have been discussing the United Kingdom request, made through Sir Walter Layton, with the industry in the light of a message from the United Kingdom, giving certain further information desired by the Canadian authorities. This message was not very satisfactory, but a further message came from the United Kingdom High Commissioner today, which I am sending to Mr. Howe, and which may be more illuminating.

Meanwhile, the industry feel that they would not be justified in diverting supplies from existing contracts, with the possible risk of violation of such contracts, unless there was a directive issued as the result of a Government decision, based on the representations already made.

If you feel that such a directive should be issued, I would be able to pass this on to the Department of Reconstruction and Supply. Alternatively, Mr. Howe could bring the matter up in Cabinet, when a decision could be reached.

I think, myself, that the issue is an important one, as it involves, in part, the re-education of the German people in the British zone, and would ensure, to some extent, that they are not placed in an inferior position in this regard to the Germans in the Russian zone. I do not think the United Kingdom authorities have handled the matter very well, but, notwithstanding, I feel that everything that can be done should be done to supply the comparatively small amount of pulp requested.

Dear Mr. Howe,

Yesterday I sent a letter to Mr. Flahiff of your Department (copy enclosed)† on the United Kingdom request for newsprint and pulp for their zone in Germany. I also had a talk with the Prime Minister about this matter yesterday and he expressed the view that for broad reasons of international policy we should help the United Kingdom in this matter, if we possibly can. Unless there are technical or legal reasons which require a more specific directive than this from the Government, Mr. King would be glad if you could go ahead on the basis of this expression of his own opinion. If, however, such technical or legal reasons do exist, then he thinks that possibly you might bring this matter up in Cabinet with a view to seeing what action can be taken.

It has occurred to me that one way of avoiding the difficulty of possible breach of contract would be for the Government to purchase the supplies in question through the Commercial Corporation and then sell them to the United Kingdom authorities. I do not know if there is anything in this idea, but I thought I might pass it on to you.

You will note that I mentioned to Mr. Flahiff the possibility of a talk with the President of the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association on Monday or Tuesday of next week.

Yours sincerely,

Dear Mr. Pearson,

Thanks for your letter of November 8th, enclosing copy of letter dated November 6th to Mr. Flahiff.

I have asked Mr. Flahiff to arrange a meeting with the President of the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association for Monday or Tuesday of next week, when he will discuss the possibility of an order being placed by the Commercial Corporation. I will then be prepared to discuss the matter in Council on Tuesday.

You will appreciate that the fact that this demand from the U.K. came concurrently with the negotiations of Sir Walter Layton for increased supplies of pulp and paper for the U.K. press, and the further fact that Sweden are withholding their supplies from export in order to obtain a better price, have made procurement of these additional quantities most difficult. However, it may be possible to work out a solution without resort to expropriation, although it is quite probable that Canadian newspapers may have to bear part of the impact.

Yours sincerely,

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, November 18, 1946

Dear Sir Alexander [Clutterbuck],

I am sending you herewith a copy of a communication which the Prime Minister has addressed to Mr. Bevin, concerning the United Kingdom request for sulphite pulp and sulphate pulp to meet the needs of the British Zone in Germany.

We have been discussing this matter with the pulp and paper industry, as a matter of urgency, and they have emphasized to us, through their responsible officers, their desire to meet any reasonable requests which the Government might make. However, as they point out, pulp supply is, at the present time, far short of demand. All pulp production is fully sold and, indeed, it is necessary for mills to ration supplies to their existing customers. In these circumstances, the industry feel that, however anxious they may be to help, it is legally and practically impossible, on a voluntary basis, to comply with the request for shipment of emergency pulps to occupied Germany. The alternative is some compulsory or directive action on the part of the Government which would be binding on the industry. Before taking any such action, the Government is naturally anxious to be certain that it would achieve the desired object of providing more printing paper for Germany; that there were not other quicker and better ways of obtaining the pulps in question.

Relevant to the above is the difficulty which has already been indicated to you of the inadequacy of our information as to the facts of the case and the practical steps that can be taken to find a solution. It is true that Sir Walter Layton, in his discussions with the Canadian authorities concerned, produced certain general information as to the comparative amounts of paper propaganda in the Russian and British Zones of Germany. This information was supplemented by that contained in the note attached to your letter to me of November 5th. However, we have not yet received any definite information as to manufacturing conditions in the British Zone or as to steps taken by the Control Commission to provide paper and paper products in that Zone. Nor have we yet any knowledge of the duration of this request, based on the present position, or of any plans formulated to meet 1947 requirements. Certainly we would like to know whether this request is likely to be followed by other similar ones. Nor have we any evidence as to efforts to get these supplies from other sources, except a reference to the Swedish position, which indicates that Swedish supplies have been stopped because of a dispute between the Swedish mills and the Swedish Government. Sweden, of course, is a logical source of supply for these pulps, and adequate quantities of Swedish pulps are reported to be in existence. The dispute in Sweden to which I referred above may now have been settled. In fact, we have received reports to that end. Therefore, that source of supply might now be open. It is estimated that Sweden will export to the United States in the last quarter of this year more than 100,000 tons of these same grades of pulp. If Canadian producers are compelled to ship this emergency tonnage to Germany, it will have to be taken from contract customers in the United States and Canada. It seems unrealistic to have Swedish pulps coming to North America to replace tonnage taken away from customers here to be shipped back across the ocean to Germany. The only possible benefactors of such a programme would be the shipping companies and possibly the Swedish producers, who may gain long-range contracts at the expense of Canadian producers.

I would also point out that the request is for unbleached sulphite and unbleached sulphate pulp, not for printing papers and containers. Both these pulps require manufacture before they can be converted into printing or packaging materials. The unbleached sulphite must be mixed with five or six times as much groundwood pulp and run through newsprint machines before it can be used for printing purposes. We know nothing of the availability of machines, skilled labour and coal for this purpose in the British Zone, or whether plants could be rehabilitated to run such limited quantities for a temporary period.

It is clear that compulsion of supplies to Germany can only be achieved by taking the pulp away from contract customers in Canada and the United States. The Canadian Government has already compelled the pulp producers to supply greatly increased supplies to Canadian consumers at prices that are $20 to $30 below world prices. Canadian shipments have increased from an average of 85,000 tons per year pre-war to 180,000 tons per year during the war, and in 1946 (under Wartime Prices and Trade Board orders) to 240,000 tons. Notwithstanding these increases, Canada is still very short of commodities made from pulps such as toilet tissues, magazine papers, wrapping paper, shipping cases and multi-wall sacks. Although Canada is as well supplied with pulp products as any country in the world, it seems likely that a diversion of pulp tonnage from the Canadian supply would create shortages in this country.

Before taking any action which would result in these shortages, we would certainly like to be certain that the action taken would achieve the desired end. That is why it is difficult to send a definite reply to Mr. Bevin's request until further information is available.

I have not mentioned previously the danger of establishing a precedent if this request is met which will subject the Government to strong pressures. There are innumerable shortages in other countries that are able to make claims on the basis of need and political importance which differ only in slight degree from the present claim. Severe shortages of pulp and paper are known to exist in Greece, India, Egypt, France and Holland—to mention only a few. If this Government undertakes to provide pulps to Germany, it is difficult to see how it could refuse similar requests from other needy countries, many of which were our allies in the war.

I hope you will not mind me bringing these points to your attention. I assure you that there is no lack of appreciation here of the importance of the request or of the issues involved. I am sure, also, that you appreciate our difficulties in meeting this request and our anxiety to be perfectly certain that, if we do, it will make an immediate and effective contribution to the end desired and one which could not be more easily and as effectively made in some other way.

Yours sincerely,

L. B. PEARSON

PERSONAL AND CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, November 13, 1946

Dear Mr. Bevin,

Some time ago your High Commissioner here forwarded your letter of September 25th, wherein you inquired whether it would be possible to supply certain quantities of sulphite pulp and sulphate pulp to meet the needs of the British Zone in Germany. I must apologize for my delay in writing to you about this, but there has been no delay in the consideration which we have given to your request, the importance of which is appreciated.

In this connection we have had the advantage of discussions with Sir Walter Layton when he was in Ottawa. As a result of these discussions, we have requested certain supplementary information which would help us in making a decision. I may say that, as you doubtless know, the pulp and newsprint situation in Canada is extremely tight and that every ton of production in this country is already committed by contract. Without a reimposition of Government controls or without Government purchasing it is difficult to see how, apart from other considerations, your request can be met. Nevertheless the question will be further investigated in the light of the additional information which we hope to receive and I will let your High Commissioner here know the result. I can assure you that if we are unable to meet this specific request, it will be because circumstances make it impossible, and not because we do not appreciate the importance of the issues involved.

Yours sincerely,

Dear Mr. Robertson,

I am more than grateful to you for the kindly way you received me the other day, as also for the co-operative and sympathetic manner in which you discussed the points I raised concerning the Canadian Nationality Bill No. 20.<sup>1</sup>

2. As you very kindly agreed, I am re-stating below the more important points we discussed in order that you may favour me with your confirmation and/or comments in writing, for sake of record and for information of the Government of India.

3. My reading of Bill No. 20 is that;

(a) Under Section 4(a) and 5(1)(a) and (b), all East Indians natural-born in Canada or may be natural-born of East Indian parents, already domiciled in Canada, after the coming into force of this Act, are or will be natural-born Canadian citizens.

(b) Under Section 8(1) all East Indians not born in Canada but legally domiciled in Canada at the time of the coming into force of this Act will become Canadian citizens and will thus enjoy the rights and obligations of such citizenship as laid down under Section 26 of the Act.

4. As the Bill No. 20 would only repeal the Nationalization Act, Chapter 138 of the Revised Statutes of Canada 1927, and the Canadian Nationals Act, Chapter 21 of the Revised Statutes of Canada 1927, but would not repeal or otherwise amend in any way the provisions of the existing Dominion franchise or elections acts, nor would it affect in any manner the sovereign control of the provinces over their respective Provincial Elections Acts, I presume that the East Indians domiciled in the Province of British Columbia who do not at present enjoy the provincial vote under the British Columbia Provincial Elections Act R.S.B.C. 1936, Chapter 84, Section 2, may, even after attaining Canadian citizenship, be still disqualified or rendered incompetent to vote in the provincial elections. I further presume that as the Dominion vote is at present dependent upon the provincial vote, such East Indians who may attain Canadian citizenship, on the coming into force of Bill

No. 20, but are still debarred from the use of the provincial vote, will be disqualified and rendered incompetent to vote in the Dominion elections.

5. As under Interpretation, Section 2(g), "Country of the British Commonwealth" means a country listed in the First Schedule to the Act, and as in this list of "countries in the British Commonwealth" India is not mentioned, my presumption is that, under Section 27 of Bill No. 20, East Indians residing in or visiting Canada, other than those who may have attained Canadian citizenship, shall not be recognized in Canada as British Subjects.

6. You very kindly assured me that such was not the intention of the Dominion Government and that you would be pleased to have this point thoroughly examined, including my request for the inclusion of India in the list of "countries in the British Commonwealth", as included in the First Schedule to Bill No. 20, in order to remove all possibilities of discriminatory treatment in Canada of Indian Nationals.

Ottawa, January 31, 1946

Dear Mr. Ahuja,

I should like to refer to your letter of January 18th concerning certain points in the Canadian Citizenship Bill which are of interest to the Government of India. Perhaps it would be satisfactory for me to comment on the various points in the order in which you raised them.

Your understanding of Sections 4 and 5 of the Bill as set forth in paragraph 3(a) of your letter is correct. Children born of East Indian parents outside of Canada after the passing of the Act will, of course, be subject to the provision of Section 5(1) (b) and 5(2) with regard to registration and retention of citizenship.

Your interpretation of Section 8(1) as set forth in paragraph 3(b) of your letter is also correct. East Indian British subjects who have "domicile" in Canada at the time the Act comes into force will become Canadian citizens.

With regard to paragraph 4 of your letter, the position is as you suggest—namely, that the coming into force of the proposed Act will not affect in any way the legislative provisions that now exist with regard to the exercise of the provincial or federal franchises in Canada.

In paragraph 5 of your letter you refer to the effect of Section 27 of the Bill, read in conjunction with Section 2(g) and the First Schedule, upon the recognition of East Indians as British subjects. There has not been an opportunity yet to give this matter the careful study that it will require. From a preliminary examination, I do not think that a strict legal interpretation would give the result you fear, since the controlling definition with regard to the status of British subject so far as India is concerned (other than for purposes of purely internal status resulting from naturalization) is, I believe, the British Nationality and Status of Aliens Act of the United Kingdom, rather than the Indian Naturalization Act of 1926. However, whatever may be the correct interpretation of the Section as it now stands, I can assure you that it was not at all the intention of the Canadian government to have East Indians omitted from the category of British subjects under our law. The matter will be given careful attention.

As a related point, you referred in paragraph 6 of your letter to the omission of India from the countries listed in the First Schedule of the Bill. As Mr. R. G. Robertson mentioned at the time of our conversation, this list was established to serve a purpose similar to that of the "List of Dominions" in the First Schedule of the present Naturalization Act, which set forth the countries of the Commonwealth that had adopted Part II of the British Nationality and Status of Aliens Act or that had passed parallel legislation of their own. Under the new Bill the purpose is much the same, namely to include the countries which have their own legislation according national status of general recognition. In the case of India I believe that, at present, there is no specific nationality legislation other than the Indian Naturalization Act, 1926, which deals only with naturalization rather than with nationality in general, and section 7 of which provides that the status accorded by naturalization is an internal status only. This being so, India was not included in the list, although under section 2(g) provision was made, with the position of India specifically in mind, for the addition of further countries by proclamation.

With the above explanation I think you will appreciate why the composition of the text is what it is. It is the character of the nationality legislation in any particular country and not of its general status that was the determining factor, and for the purposes of the Bill there could be no other criterion than that.

It may be that the heading of the schedule—"List of Countries in the British Commonwealth"—is misleading if the list is not related to its specific purpose. It was used because it is a bit difficult to get any other phrase for use throughout the Bill to include all the countries which have nationality legislation which we wish to recognize as according the status of British subject for purposes of our law. The only alternative that occurs readily, and it is an awkward one, is to use, in section 27 and elsewhere, some formula such as ". . . under the laws of any country listed in the First Schedule to the Act . . ."

I think that from what I have said you will appreciate the reasoning behind the present drafting of the Bill. Technically, I think it is accurate, but the government is most anxious to avoid anything that might be misinterpreted to the disadvantage of your country or your people and consequently the Bill will be re-examined with care to see if it might be modified to avoid the implications that might be drawn from its present form.

Yours sincerely,

TELEGRAM 83

New York, November 1, 1946

CONFIDENTIAL. ASDEL No. 52. India's complaint against South Africa.<sup>1</sup> Keenleyside has today given me the following memorandum. Begins: The India and South Africa problem.

I discussed this matter with Mrs. Pandit and Mr. Menon and Mr. Saptu of the Indian delegation, with Cadogan of the United Kingdom and with Raynor and Allison of the United States. The following information was, I believe, accurate as of October 29th.

(a) Saptu and Menon were of the opinion that the Indians would be prepared to enter into renewed discussions with South Africa outside the Assembly if they could be convinced that there was any slight hope of the South Africans being "reasonable" in their attitude towards this problem. Alternatively, they would be prepared to support a reference of the legal aspect of the problem to the World Court, or any other competent legal body. Either of these steps would be valuable to the extent that it would be likely to postpone the issue for another year. The Indians were not hopeful that the South Africans would agree to either proposal because they did not think that, under the leadership of Field Marshal Smuts, South Africa would be prepared even to consider any useful concession and they are convinced that South Africa recognized that if the legal issues were ever placed before a competent court, the decision would be in the favour of India. In these circumstances, the Indians felt that they must press on with the issues in the Assembly.

(b) In the course of our discussion, the Indian delegates referred to the position of their compatriots in Canada. They said that while they do not like the way in which we have placed civil disabilities on Indian residents in Canada, they do not feel outraged in our action as they do by the steps that have been taken by South Africa. This is due, in part, to the much smaller dimensions of the problem, but in part also to the fact that South Africa has taken its recent seriously retrograde steps after the promulgation of the United Nations Charter. This action has aroused a great deal of anger among the Indians.

(c) The United Kingdom is very worried about the India-South Africa row. They do not know what line to take and are praying for "something to turn up". They would be thoroughly delighted for any excuse which would postpone the issue and would support any move to have it dealt with outside the confines of the United Nations. They would be happy to see Canada take any possible initiative designed to bring the two disputants together.

(d) The attitude of the United States is similar to that of the United Kingdom, except that they do not take so much interest in the problem. They also would like to see it settled outside the Assembly and seem to think that some Canadian initiative to bring the other members of the British Commonwealth together would be appropriate and might be successful. New Delhi, December 6, 1946

Sir,

INDIANS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—FRANCHISE

I am directed to address you on the question of conferring Dominion, Provincial and Municipal franchise on Indians domiciled in the Province of British Columbia in the Dominion of Canada. As you are aware, about 1,300 out of the 1,500 Indians resident in Canada live in the Province of British Columbia. By virtue of Section 5 of the British Columbia Provincial Elections Act, Indians there are disqualified from voting at elections and are debarred from having their names inserted in any list of voters. By the operation of Section 30(1)(g) of the Dominion Elections Act, they are also denied the federal franchise. This discrimination against a class of British subjects domiciled in a Dominion of the British Commonwealth has long been a grievance among Indians in British Columbia and Canada and is regarded as a humiliation to India.

2. In this connection it will be recalled that at the Imperial Conference of 1921, a resolution was adopted and agreed to by the representatives of Canada, which while affirming that each community of the British Commonwealth should enjoy complete control of the composition of its own population by means of restriction on immigration from any of the other communities, recognised that there was an incongruity between the position of India as an equal member of the British Empire and the existence of disabilities upon British Indians lawfully domiciled in some other parts of the Empire. The Conference expressed the opinion that in the interests of solidarity of the British Commonwealth it was desirable that the rights of such Indians to citizenship should be recognised. The late Right Hon'ble V. S. Srinivasa Sastri, who represented India at the Imperial Conference of 1921, visited Canada in August, 1922, to secure the practical application of the resolution mentioned above. Mr. Sastri, however, found that there was a very strong current of opinion in British Columbia against the grant of provincial and municipal franchise to Asiatics as the economic rivalry between the white and non-white races (particularly the Japanese and Chinese) was more acute in that Province than in any other part of the Dominion. At the Imperial Conference of 1923, the representatives of Canada pointed out that the Dominion Government were averse to taking any action which might have a semblance of dictating to the Provincial Governments. The position in respect of Franchise Law in British Columbia, therefore, remained unchanged. The Dominion of Canada Elections Act came under revision by Parliament in 1925, but as the Committee on Privileges at Elections came to the conclusion that no change in the 'existing law' could be made, the position in regard to the Dominion Franchise law also remained the same as it was in 1921. From time to time, thereafter informal discussions have taken place between various Indian leaders, e.g., the late Sir Mohammad Shafi, Sir Atul Chandra Chatterjee, Sir Muhammad Zafrulla Khan and Sir Ramaswami Mudaliar and the Canadian Prime Ministers. The latter generally were sympathetic and appreciated the Indian view-point, but no concrete action has so far been taken to redress the long standing Indian grievance.

3. In view of the magnificent part played by Indian troops during the last war and the fact that Indians fought side by side with the Canadian soldiers, the Indian position has become still more incongruous than it was in 1921 by the continuance of the old disabilities. Men who can be regarded as suitable comrades in arms should deserve to be treated as comrades in civil life. This position has been recognised by the United States of America by enacting recently legislation, which makes provision not only for the grant of full citizenship rights to Indians, but also permits Indian immigration into the United States of America on a quota basis.

4. It is now understood that in British Columbia an Elections Act Committee has been set up by the Legislature to consider the provisions of the Provincial Elections Act. The Committee are expected to make their recommendations very soon for discussion at the next session of the British Columbian Legislature in February, 1947. The Government of India would, therefore, urge upon the Dominion Government the desirability of persuading the British Columbian Government to avail of the present opportunity and take steps to confer franchise on the small Indian community in that Province and thus rectify the present anomalous position which is a source of humiliation to Indians.

I have etc.

My dear High Commissioner,

Last year and in 1944 we had some correspondence with your predecessor regarding the exchange of High Commissioners between Canada and India. I think the last communication was Mr. Wrong's letter to Mr. Malcolm MacDonald of November 5, 1945. In this connection, the Government of Canada have appointed Mr. John Doherty Kearney, M.C., K.C., as High Commissioner for Canada in India.

Mr. Kearney is at present our Minister in Norway and Denmark. Prior to that appointment he was High Commissioner for Canada at Dublin.

We have informed the Government of India that we propose to announce Mr. Kearney's appointment on Monday next, December 23rd, at 6.00 p.m. Ottawa time. It is our understanding that the Government of India desire to reciprocate by appointing a High Commissioner in Canada. We have suggested that, in making a simultaneous announcement of Mr. Kearney's appointment, the Government of India may wish to include a reference to their desire to reciprocate.

I should be grateful if you would regard the information of Mr. Kearney's appointment as confidential for the time being.

I am enclosing a copy of a communication which I have received from the High Commissioner for Ireland, relative to the appointment of Judge Turgeon as our new High Commissioner in Dublin. Mr. Hearne expresses the pleasure of his Government at the appointment, and then, on instructions, raises the question of the official title of the appointee. He suggests that we should abandon the title "High Commissioner" as a relic of Colonial times, and that Mr. Turgeon should be designated either (1) Ambassador, or (2) "Canadian Representative" or "Representative of Canada".

Mr. Hearne's Government feel that either of the above titles would be not only more appropriate than High Commissioner, but would also make it easier for the Irish Government to give the Canadian representative the degree of ceremonial honour that they now give non-Commonwealth representatives. Mr. Hearne also points out that the recently appointed Irish representative to Canberra has, by agreement with the Australian Government, been designated "Minister Plenipotentiary of Ireland in Australia."

We have, however, heard from our Acting High Commissioner in Dublin that, if the proposed change is unacceptable to us, the Irish Government will not insist on it.

My own view is that the title "Ambassador" is out of the question at this time, but that there is much to be said for accepting the Irish proposal that the High Commissioner be called "The Representative of Canada in Ireland".<sup>1</sup>

In the past, when the designation "High Commissioner" has been criticized, we have taken the position that we could not change it in one part of the Commonwealth without, at the same time, changing it everywhere else, and also that we should not make such a change without consulting other parts of the Commonwealth. I do not think that either of these arguments is necessarily conclusive. As to the first, if we feel "Representative" a better title than "High Commissioner", we could call all our representatives by that name. Certainly in connection with any first appointment to India, "Representative" might be more suitable than "High Commissioner", nor is there likely to be any objection from South Africa if we should later wish to make a change there; or, indeed, from Australia, in view of the action which they have just taken with regard to the Irish appointment.<sup>2</sup>

As to the second objection, there is not, I believe, any actual obligation to consult. When the United Kingdom made their first appointment to Dublin, Sir John Maffey was called "Representative", and there was no prior consultation with other parts of the Commonwealth, nor was there consultation in the case of the Australian appointment referred to above. However, if we are making changes of this kind, possibly we should tell the United Kingdom authorities in advance.<sup>2</sup>

It might also be argued, by certain groups in Canada, that this change of title was a further step in the breaking of Commonwealth ties and traditions.<sup>3</sup> On the other hand, there are many Canadians who would approve the change, while I doubt, myself, that the transition from "High Commissioner" to "Representative" would really cause much general concern.

Arising out of the suggested change of title, Mr. Hearne has also made a request that, when Mr. Turgeon came to Dublin, he might present a letter which would serve as credentials. This need not, of course, be in the form used for presentation to heads of foreign states, but could be a letter from the Secretary of State for External Affairs to the Minister of External Affairs in Ireland. I do not see any particular objection to this; in fact, it might be done with the change of title if it would give the Irish Government any satisfaction.<sup>2</sup>

My own feeling is that we might agree to the Irish proposal that our High Commissioner should be called "Representative of Canada in Ireland" and that consideration might be given to a similar change in the title of our representatives in other parts of the British Commonwealth.<sup>1</sup>

Dear Mr. Pearson,

I duly received your letter of the 23rd October† in which you were so good as to inform me that the Canadian Government have nominated Mr. Turgeon as the new Canadian representative in Ireland. Please accept my sincere thanks for letting me know of this appointment at the same time as you did the Acting Canadian High Commissioner in Dublin.

Since receipt of your letter I have been instructed to inform you that the Irish Government are grateful to the Government of Canada for appointing so distinguished a Canadian as Mr. Turgeon to the Dublin post. I am to add that Mr. Turgeon is assured of a very warm welcome to Ireland.

I have also been instructed to approach you on the question of the official title of your new representative.

As you are aware, Dr. Thomas J. Kiernan, former Irish Minister to the Holy See, has recently been appointed to Canberra as head of our first Mission there. Dr. Kiernan presented Ministerial credentials to the Australian Government and the Australian Government agreed that his title should be "Minister Plenipotentiary of Ireland in Australia".

The title "High Commissioner" is a colonial title and in practice its application to Commonwealth representatives has had the effect of relegating them to a place lower in prestige and public estimation than non-Commonwealth representatives, whereas the logic of the situation is that they should have the special status of Ambassador. These considerations have special force in Ireland where it has long been felt that the continuance of colonial forms, which are utterly inappropriate to the facts of free association place an undue strain on the Commonwealth relationship. The title of "High Commissioner" is such a form.

The Irish Government feels, moreover, that Commonwealth representatives in Dublin should be received with at least the same degree of ceremony and honour as non-Commonwealth representatives, namely, a formal reception in Dublin Castle, mounted escort, exchange of speeches, salute, etc. This implies some form of credentials and it is suggested that a form of letter similar to that which Dr. Kiernan presented at Canberra might be appropriate. I have not yet received a copy of Dr. Kiernan's letter. It is, I understand, on its way to me by airmail. I shall send you a copy the moment it arrives.

I am sure you will agree that the more we desire to emphasise the special relationships between our countries the more anxious we should be to remove the anomaly whereby non-Commonwealth representatives are received with dignity and honour while the arrival of Commonwealth representatives is given no appropriate official notice and formality. Public opinion in Ireland inevitably tends to rate the importance of Commonwealth representatives, and, indeed, the whole Commonwealth relationship, accordingly.

I am, therefore, to request you to agree to a change in the title of the Canadian representative in Dublin. My Government feels that, whatever his title in his home service, Mr. Turgeon should in Ireland have the title of "Ambassador", or, at least, that of "Canadian Representative" or "Representative of Canada". Sir John Maffey's official title is, as you are aware, that of "British Representative". I am to express the earnest hope that the change suggested will be agreeable to the Government of Canada and that the head of the Canadian Mission in Dublin should be received with full diplomatic ceremonial which has now been resumed after suspension during the war.

Yours sincerely,

JOHN J. HEARNE

[Ottawa,] November 2, 1946

DESIGNATION OF CANADIAN REPRESENTATIVE IN DUBLIN

The United Kingdom High Commissioner saw me yesterday and expressed a hope that we would continue to call our representative in Dublin "High Commissioner". They themselves had only accepted the designation "Representative" with great reluctance as an unsatisfactory compromise, and one which they would like to alter to "High Commissioner" on their next appointment. Sir Alexander agreed that "Representative" did not have the diplomatic implications of "Ambassador" or "Minister". He thought that if we changed to the latter there was an obligation to consult within the Commonwealth as it would signify a change in Commonwealth relations.

The Irish High Commissioner telephoned this morning to say that the actual title now being used by their Representative in Australia was "Minister Plenipotentiary, Representative of Ireland in Australia". Apparently the Australian Representative in Dublin is still known as a High Commissioner although I gather the Irish are trying to get this changed. Mr. Hearne thought that in view of the Australian precedent it might be desirable to designate our Representative as "Ambassador, Representative of Canada in Ireland".

This is a rather tiresome business, and I hope that it will not be permitted to hold up the announcement of our five or six appointments which we will be able to make next week. I talked about this matter to Mr. St. Laurent yesterday and he agreed with me that rather than do anything to necessitate this delay, it might be better

(a) to appoint Mr. Turgeon as High Commissioner, and

(b) to tell the Governments of the Commonwealth at the same time, and possibly make a public announcement, that we were suggesting an informal meeting of Commonwealth Representatives to go into the whole question of the designation and status of Representatives within the Commonwealth itself.<sup>1</sup>

Ottawa, November 8, 1946

CONFIDENTIAL. Reference my telegram No. 71 of October 23rd† concerning appointment of Turgeon.

1. High Commissioner for Ireland in Ottawa has expressed his Government's pleasure at the appointment and also raised the question of the official title. Irish Government, through their H[igh] C[ommissioner] here, suggested Turgeon be designated either (1) Ambassador or (2) Canadian Representative or Representative of Canada. High Commissioner pointed out that (1) Sir John Maffey's official title is "British Representative" and (2) Dr. T. J. Kiernan had presented Ministerial credentials to Australian Government and latter agreed that his title should be "Minister Plenipotentiary Representative of Ireland in Australia."

2. After careful consideration it was agreed here that rather than delay the announcement of our five or six appointments (press speculation was increasing and becoming embarrassing) and in view of the desirability of generalizing change of title if such a change is desirable, we would appoint Turgeon with the title of High Commissioner while indicating at the same time that the whole question of High Commissioners' titles and status was to be reconsidered and that we might suggest at an early date a Commonwealth discussion of this matter. An important factor in this decision was your statement of the Irish Government's decision that if the proposal for a change was unacceptable, Ireland would not insist.

3. At Press Conference yesterday, Prime Minister, after announcing appointments including that of High Commissioner to Ireland, said High Commissioner was not a completely satisfactory title as in many cases people bearing this title were sent here, for instance, by U.K. on special missions to Africa or some place of that sort, in order to discharge a particular function, without being governmental representatives on the same basis as diplomatic representatives. This led to certain amount of misunderstanding and it might be desirable for some new term to be used such as "Representative of the Canadian Government" or something of the sort. Prime Minister particularly stressed fact that post of Ambassador is not in any sense superior to that of High Commissioner. Canadian High Commissioner in London is in every way as important a representative abroad as we have—perhaps more important than any other. From this it should be clearly realized, the Prime Minister continued, that the move of Mr. Turgeon from Ambassador to High Commissioner was not in any degree or in any way a move to a lesser rank. In expressing doubts about the title of High Commissioner, the Prime Minister said it was a problem for all Commonwealth countries. Hence, it was felt unwise to make any unilateral change in title at the present time. Prime Minister said an opportunity would be sought to have the matter discussed at some time in the near future.

4. We are considering what would be the most effective means of making this whole matter a subject of informal Commonwealth discussion, possibly in London.

Ottawa, November 8, 1946

Dear Mr. Hearne,

With reference to your letter of November 2nd† and our recent telephone conversations, a telegram has been sent to our Acting High Commissioner in Dublin on the appointment of a new High Commissioner. In that telegram reference is made to the suggestions made by your Government, through you, that Mr. Turgeon should be designated by some other title than High Commissioner, for the reasons which you indicated in your letter of October 28th.

This whole question was given careful consideration both here and by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in New York. It was felt, however, that any change in title of Canadian representatives in other parts of the Commonwealth should be made general, and not restricted to any particular post; that, therefore the title of High Commissioner should be retained in Dublin for the time being.

As you know, a change in the official title of Commonwealth representatives raises not only constitutional problems but possibly legal and conventional ones as well. A unilateral change in the title might also involve different treatment being accorded to the representative of Ireland in Canada. For these and other reasons it is our desire to give the matter further consideration before making a change, and, in any event, to make any such change applicable to all posts. You will note from the statement made by the Prime Minister at his press conference yesterday that an opportunity would be sought to have the question discussed at some time in the near future. The possibility of having an informal meeting of Commonwealth representatives for this purpose is being explored, and the whole question will, I hope, be the subject of further correspondence.

Yours sincerely,

L. B. PEARSON

P.S.: I am sending you a further communication† in the near future regarding the procedure followed in respect of this appointment, concerning which you expressed yourself so emphatically on the telephone yesterday.

We have recently considered the question of the proper style to be accorded to High Commissioners representing one country of the British Commonwealth in another such country. Various suggestions have been made in the past but hitherto all have been felt to present certain difficulties.

We have come to the conclusion that the best course would be to adopt for High Commissioners the designation "His Excellency the High Commissioner for . . ." which is now universally accorded to diplomatic Ambassadors and Ministers. The title "His Excellency" as applied to an Ambassador is of very long historical tradition and its application to Ministers of foreign countries also is a recent development for which the King's approval was obtained a few years ago. Its application to High Commissioners would, therefore, similarly be subject to His Majesty's approval.

We shall be very ready to take action accordingly so far as concerns High Commissioners in London, but in the first instance we should be glad to know the views of other British Commonwealth Governments on this suggestion. If it is generally regarded as acceptable, the best procedure for obtaining the King's approval would appear to be that each of His Majesty's Governments should submit for His Majesty's approval the style to be accorded to High Commissioners for other Commonwealth countries stationed at its capital.

The matter would seem to be one for concerted action, and it would therefore be desirable that no Government should take action of this kind until it has been ascertained that the proposal meets with general approval. We shall accordingly await the views of the other Governments concerned before taking any further steps.

Dear Norman [Robertson],

Your efforts to avoid attending a conference in London on the titles and status of High Commissioners are understood. Our efforts to avoid a similar conference here will, I am sure, be equally understood by you. It has occurred to us that possibly the best procedure would be to have a preliminary meeting here of an informal and exploratory character, after which we can decide where the more formal talks will be held. For that purpose, I will be asking the High Commissioners to meet me next week, after which I will report to you again on the subject. I am enclosing a copy of a letter of November 25th from Clutterbuck† inquiring about the arrangements for the more formal exchange of views on this subject together with a copy of my letter in reply,‡ in which I suggest that decisions with regard to these arrangements might wait until after our preliminary talk in Ottawa. Meanwhile, I am sending you herewith a memorandum which Charles Ritchie has done on the subject and which will be of interest to you.

You will have noted that the British have launched a diversionary attack on what they no doubt consider to be the High Commissioners' weakest flank, by suggesting that all troubles will be over if they can be given the title "Excellency". This is, I know, a solution which will particularly appeal to you, but I doubt if it will avoid the main engagement. I hope you will fight as hard for your status and prestige as an "Excellency" as you would as plain "Mister".

Yours sincerely,

MIKE [PEARSON]

OFFICIAL TITLE OF COMMONWEALTH REPRESENTATIVES

Presumably, the view of the Department is that the title and status of Commonwealth representatives should gradually be assimilated to those of diplomatic representatives of other countries. With this eventual objective in mind, there appear to be at least three possible alternatives.

1. The adoption by all Commonwealth countries of the title "Representative" instead of "High Commissioner." It cannot be said that this in itself would be a very significant change. It would have the advantage of getting rid of a clumsy title which often causes misunderstanding. This change might be coupled with raising the precedence of Commonwealth representatives to that of "Minister" or even "Ambassador".

2. The title "representative" might be adopted and the personal rank of minister or ambassador might be given to the representative. This appears to be the arrangement adopted by Eire in appointing their new representative to Canberra. The representative would, so far as his own government is concerned, have the rank of Minister but would not be treated as a Minister by the government to which he was accredited. It is a little difficult to see the advantage of this uneasy compromise. We have been informed by Sir Alexander Clutterbuck that there is no question of a new Irish representative to Canberra being accepted as Minister or Minister Plenipotentiary by the Australian Government.

3. Commonwealth representatives might be assimilated now to the ranks of other diplomatic representatives. It appears to our view, however, that this step would be premature at the present time. In your memorandum of October 30th, you state in connection with the appointment of our representative to Eire that "My own view is that the title "Ambassador" is out of the question at this time." The Prime Minister has initialled his agreement to this paragraph in your memorandum. Mr. King, however, has, at his press conference on November 7th, stated that it might be desirable for some new term to be used such as "Representative of the Canadian Government or something of the sort."

Mr. Robertson has suggested that in the event of conversations on this subject with the United Kingdom Government and the other Commonwealth governments, the United Kingdom would probably be prepared to raise the precedence of Commonwealth representatives and even to use another style rather than High Commissioner but that they would "be disposed to maintain the badges which distinguish intra-Commonwealth representatives from diplomatic representatives generally." In these circumstances, it may well be that full dress Commonwealth discussion at this time would not obtain the objects which we have in view. The United Kingdom would take a strong stand against any tendency in the direction of the assimilation of intra-Commonwealth representatives to other diplomatic representatives, while Ireland would, no doubt, argue strongly in favour of such a development in the immediate future. An awkward situation for other Commonwealth governments might thus arise. We might find that the discussion had ceased to be a debate on the merits of certain common sense changes of style and precedence for intra-Commonwealth representatives and that a question of principle had arisen. It is quite likely that both the United Kingdom Government and the Government of Eire would be prepared to make something of an issue of this question which might then assume proportions out of keeping with its intrinsic importance.

It is suggested that it might be desirable, in the first instance, to have a preliminary meeting of the Commonwealth High Commissioners in Ottawa with the Under-Secretary of State to explore this whole question. This is the more desirable as we have no very clear indication of where the governments of Australia, South Africa and New Zealand stand in the matter.

If this course is approved, the High Commissioner in London should be informed.

Dear Mr. Justice Turgeon,

On your arrival in Dublin, the Irish authorities will expect you to present the equivalent of a Letter of Credence as a token of recognition of their desire to accord to Commonwealth Chiefs of Mission the formal courtesies which are generally, in Commonwealth countries, reserved for Ambassadors and Ministers Plenipotentiary.

I do not think we are yet ready to go as far as the Irish in regard to the title and status of High Commissioners, but in order to meet them, so to speak, half-way, I am sending to you, with this covering note, a letter addressed to the Prime Minister and Minister for External Affairs at Dublin. It is signed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The enclosed letter does not mention the word "credence", but it is a close approximation of the letter which Mr. de Valéra gave to Dr. Joseph Thomas Kiernan when he left Dublin in August to represent Ireland in Australia.

Ottawa, August 10, 1946

Following for Lord Winster, U.K. Minister of Civil Aviation from the Right Honourable C. D. Howe, Minister of Reconstruction and Supply. Begins: You will recall the discussions which we had in Bermuda last December on the question of a Canadian air service to Bermuda and the Caribbean area. Our understanding was that following these discussions the U.K. government would undertake to obtain the necessary permission from Trinidad, Jamaica, Bahamas and Bermuda.

The last official word which we received from the United Kingdom through diplomatic channels was to the effect that the necessary legislative clearance had been obtained in Trinidad and Jamaica and that as soon as Bermuda and the Bahamas had granted clearance we could proceed with the bilateral agreement. Subsequently we have been informed directly from Bermuda that clearance has been given and it is my understanding, based on private communications† from the Bahamas, that no difficulty exists there either.

As you may imagine, we are under considerable pressure from the islands to initiate air service at the earliest possible date and we are anxious to start the operation as soon as circumstances may permit. I have received a direct communication from Bermuda† requesting us to arrange for discussions for the conclusion of a bilateral agreement with the Bermuda Trade Development Board. It had been my understanding, however, that the necessary rights for the Canadian government in all the islands would be provided through a single bilateral agreement between Canada and the United Kingdom government, rather than by four separate agreements negotiated directly by Canada with the four different colonies. We are, of course, prepared to follow any course which may be acceptable, and are in particular anxious to make immediate arrangements with Bermuda for the early establishment of a T.C.A. service.

Before, however, replying to the formal communication which I have received from Bermuda, I considered it desirable to consult further with you with respect to the course which we might follow, having in mind the various circumstances referred to above. With best personal regards. Ends.

Following for Mr. Howe from Lord Winster. Begins: Your telegrams Nos. 332 and 342.† I am sorry that I have been unable to send you an earlier reply to your message of the 10th August on subject of Canadian air service to Bermuda and the Caribbean area.

2. The conclusion of the Agreement on the lines discussed at Bermuda has involved reference to individual Colonies and discussions in local Legislatures, but I confirm that general clearance has now been obtained in Trinidad, Jamaica, Bermuda and Bahamas.

3. Certain Colonies have made detailed reservations. Main reservation is that made by the Bahamas which is prepared to waive reciprocity for three years only, and only subject to the proviso that the Canadians will operate a direct Montreal-Nassau service with a minimum capacity of forty seats per week during the period from the 7th of January to the 7th of April of each of the three years in which reciprocity is waived.

4. The question of stop-over privileges requested on behalf of the Canadian air line has given rise to some difficulty and we hope that you would be prepared not to pursue this matter.

5. I confirm your understanding that rights for Canadian Government in all the Islands should be provided in single bilateral agreement between Government of Canada and Government of United Kingdom acting on behalf of Colonies concerned. Draft will be sent to you for your consideration through Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs. Meanwhile, we should be happy to see T.C.A. service start in advance of formal conclusion of agreement provided that you are willing to accept the conditions made by the Colonial Governments concerned and as soon as we have cleared with the United States the position over the use of Kindley Field.

6. Negotiations with the United States governing the commercial use of leased air bases (including of course Kindley Field) are not yet concluded. I understand that the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs will be communicating with your Government about this in the near future.

7. As regards your message of the 22nd of August,† His Majesty's Government have already informed the Bermuda Government that the conditions on which the Canadian air service will operate to and through Bermuda and the other Colonies concerned, will be embodied in a single agreement between the United Kingdom and Canadian Governments and not in a series of Agreements with each Colonial Government concerned. We hope, therefore, that you will not conclude a separate agreement with the Bermuda Government though there is, of course, no objection to your discussing with that Government detailed questions relating to the operation of the service to and through Bermuda. My best wishes. Ends.

Ottawa, October 17, 1946

My dear Colleague,

As you know, the 1926 West Indies Trade Agreement provided for the payment by the Colonies concerned of subsidies of varying amounts towards the maintenance of the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamship service between Canada and the said Colonies.

During the war years the Canadian National were unable to give the service contemplated by the Agreement, because some of the ships became war casualties or were requisitioned by the Government. Following representations by certain of the Colonies some of the subsidies were either substantially reduced or discontinued.

The following table shows the amounts payable under the Agreement and the present position:

	Amount Under Agreement	Present Payments
Eastern Service
Bermuda	£1500	Discontinued 1942
Leeward Islands	2000	£2000
Dominica (a)	500	Reduced in 1945 to £250
Barbados	5000	£5000
Windward Islands	2500	Reduced in 1944 to £1250
Trinidad	7500	£7500
British Guiana	8500	Reduced in 1945 to £850
Western Service
Bermuda	2000	Discontinued in 1942
Bahamas	2000	Reduced to £1000 for 1942 and discontinued since then.
Jamaica	12000	£12000
British Honduras	2000	Subsidy payable in 1946 waived Nov. 17, 1945

- (a) When the Canada-West Indies Trade Agreement went into effect Dominica formed a part of the Leeward Islands Group, but in recent years—for political and customs purposes—they have become affiliated with the Windward Group and a separate contribution has been made by that Island.

I have just received a letter† from Mr. R. C. Vaughan, Chairman and President of the Canadian National Railways, in which he states that their operating costs have increased very materially since the war, and that these costs cannot be met with the present contributions. He points out that the service to the so-called Eastern Group of Islands will certainly be very materially improved within the next six months or so because by that time they will have in operation the three new diesel vessels and also, it is to be hoped, the refitted Lady Nelson and Lady Rodney. These three diesels are modern vessels and will provide a much better and faster service than was possible with the older so-called "Vagabond" ships. Attached is a copy of the tentative schedule† upon which it is proposed to operate the fleet as it will exist next Spring.

In the circumstances Mr. Vaughan feels that the time is now opportune to acquaint the various West Indies Islands with the views of the Steamship Management concerning the restoration of these contributions.

Dealing first with the Eastern Service, the Management are of the opinion that all of these Islands should pay the amount set forth in the Trade Agreement. In the case of the Leeward Islands, the Barbados and Trinidad, this would mean continuing the existing contributions of £2000, £5000 and £7500, respectively, and changes with respect to the other Islands as follows:

- |                  |   |
|------------------|---|
| Bermuda          | — Restore the contribution of £1500 which has been discontinued since 1942. |
| Dominica         | — Increase its contribution from £250 to £500.                              |
| Windward Islands | — Increase from £1250 to £2500.   |
| British Guiana   | — Increase from £850 to £8500.  |

As to the Western service, the Management are not able to give these Islands the service which they enjoyed prior to the war, and the Bahamas—and Bermuda with respect to the Western service—may oppose the suggestion that there be a full restoration of the treaty contributions. The Management consider, however, that both the Bahamas and Bermuda should be asked to contribute at least 50% of the former amounts. As each Colony was obligated to pay £2000, this would mean a contribution of £1000 from each.

Mr. Vaughan is hopeful that Jamaica will continue its present contribution of £12000, and he thinks it would be as well if this was not brought up at the present time. A fortnightly freight service is now being operated to that Colony and if conditions warrant this may possibly be increased to a twelve-day service from Halifax during the winter months. Having only two passenger vessels and these being slated for the Eastern service, the Company is unable to maintain a passenger service to Jamaica or a banana service northbound.

Regarding British Honduras, there is little possibility of service being resumed, and the Management are of the opinion that further contributions should not be required of that country. As shown in the table above, the subsidy payable by British Honduras in 1946 was waived on November 17, 1945.

Mr. Vaughan understands that the Bermuda House of Assembly recently sent a message to the Governor suggesting that the Canadian Government be approached with the proposal that it call another conference to discuss the subject of the renewal of the Canada-West Indies Trade Agreement with all the Islands interested. He appreciates that the question of whether there should be such a conference is one of Government policy, but he does think that the views of the Steamship officials as to what they feel to be the inadequacy of the present payments should be brought to the attention of the Colonies concerned and he asks if such action might be considered by the Government.

Mr. Vaughan stresses that the steamship service has been maintained with considerable difficulty, and that during the war they had over thirty vessels in operation. He believes that the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships were a useful implement in keeping contact between the West Indies and the Dominion, and mentions that they were largely the means of keeping the islands fed during the war and that they also kept Canada supplied with sugar, molasses, etc.

I thought I should place Mr. Vaughan's views before you, and perhaps you may think it advisable to draw them to the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Yours sincerely,

LIONEL CHEVRIER

DESPATCH 1602

London, October 24, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to previous correspondence concerning subsidies payable by certain of the West Indian Colonies under the terms of the Canada-West Indies Trade Agreement. In particular, I draw your attention to your telegram No. 390 of the 13th February, 1945, in which you communicated the agreement of the Canadian Government to a reduction in the steamship subsidy payable by British Guiana for 1945 from £8,500 to £850.

2. I have now been informed by the Dominions Office that the Governor of British Guiana has approached the Secretary of State for the Colonies enquiring whether the Canadian Government would agree to the payment of the Colony's subsidy for 1946 at the reduced rate of £850. I have been requested to ascertain whether the Canadian Government would be willing to continue for the present year to extend to British Guiana the concession which they granted in 1945.

3. I have also been informed that the Secretary of State for the Colonies has received an enquiry from the Governor of the Bahamas whether any information is yet available as to the date by which the prewar service would be resumed by the Canadian Government. The Governor has stressed the importance of the service to the Colony's food supply. I should be very grateful for any indication which you may be able to give me as to the probable date of resumption of the service.

Ottawa, November 5, 1946

Further to my letter of October 22† on the question of the restoration of certain subsidy payments by the West Indian Colonies towards the maintenance of the steamship services provided by the Canadian National Steamships between these Colonies and Canada, I now enclose a copy of despatch No. 1602 of 24th October, from our High Commissioner in London on this subject.

You will note that in paragraph 2 of the attached despatch the Dominions Office has enquired whether the Canadian Government would agree to the payment of the British Guiana subsidy for 1946 at the reduced rate of £850. In view of the proposals which have been made by Mr. R. C. Vaughan, Chairman and President of Canadian National Railways, for the restoration of the subsidy payments by certain of the West Indian Colonies. I should be glad to receive your comments on this matter. I might add that I am also asking the Departments of Transport and Finance for their views.

With regard to the inquiry concerning the steamship service to the Bahamas contained in paragraph 3 of this despatch, I should appreciate your placing me in a position to reply to our High Commissioner on this point.

Ottawa, December 19, 1946

IMMEDIATE. Reference your telegram No. 2349 December 7, 1946.†

1. We are confident that £850. for year 1946 only, from British Guiana will be acceptable. For your own information question of payments for 1947 from all Colonies affected is now under consideration of Inter-Departmental Shipping Committee on basis of 1947 service to be rendered in relation to our obligations under the West Indies agreement.

2. It is not possible at this stage to say when pre-war service to Bahamas will be resumed. For 1947, however, it is intended to maintain fortnightly freight service from Montreal in summer and Halifax in winter, to Bermuda, Nassau and Kingston, Jamaica, returning direct from Kingston to Montreal in summer, and to Maritime port or ports in winter.

3. We do not expect resumption of Belize-Jamaica service in near or distant future. For your own information, even if vessels were available, Canadian National Steamships would be most reluctant to resume a service which has always been a losing proposition. We very much hope we shall not be required to resume the service in fulfilment of our commitment under the West Indies agreement.

RE: POLLUTION OF THE DETROIT AND ST. CLAIR RIVERS AND LAKE ST. CLAIR

This will acknowledge yours of the 15th† instant re above. I do not think this department would be justified in demanding changes in the manufacturing processes of the Polymer Corporation until an investigation has established that the situation demands such action. My understanding is that there is at present no proof that the contamination complained of by the city of Detroit originates wholly, or principally, from the operations of the Corporation or, indeed, that it all comes from the Canadian side of the boundary.

The matter is now before the International Joint Commission which, I believe, proposes to undertake an investigation very shortly. The Commission would hold hearings, which would bring to light all the facts of the case in an impartial way. This department is of the opinion that the proper procedure is to await the Commission's report.

Yours faithfully,

No. 24

Ottawa, February 15, 1946

Excellency,

I have the honour to refer to the proposal which you have submitted for a joint reference to the International Joint Commission to deal with the reported pollution of waters of the St. Clair River, Lake St. Clair, and the Detroit River.

After consultation with the International Joint Commission at the October meeting in Ottawa, and at a subsequent meeting held in Washington on October 19, the matter was discussed with the Legal Adviser of the State Department.

The International Joint Commission, in the course of the consultation with regard to the terms of reference, had raised the question as to whether it was desirable for the governments to proceed with the completion of the negotiation of a special convention dealing with pollution of boundary waters and waters crossing the boundary.

It will be remembered that a reference was made to the International Joint Commission in 1912 and that extensive studies were carried out under the supervision of the Commission during the years 1913-1918. A final report of the Commission was made on April 12, 1918 and, among the recommendations, was one that it was advisable to confer upon the Commission jurisdiction to regulate and prohibit pollution of boundary waters and waters crossing the boundary. In 1919, the two governments requested the International Joint Commission to prepare a draft convention. A draft was submitted to the governments in 1920 and was the subject of negotiations during the next eight or nine years.

In the course of the consultations, both at Ottawa and at Washington, it became clear that it was desirable that the governments should give further consideration to the matter, and, accordingly, studies are being made of the draft convention and it is likely that further discussions will take place between the two governments in the course of the next few months.

In the meantime, it seemed to be desirable to go ahead at once with the proposed reference dealing with the St. Clair River, Lake St. Clair, and the Detroit River.

There seems to be general agreement that it will be desirable to extend the scope of the Reference to cover other parts of the Great Lakes System and the International Section of the St. Lawrence River. It was thought to be expedient, however, to confine the immediate reference to the waters of the St. Clair and Detroit Rivers and Lake St. Clair. It will be possible to extend the scope of the Reference from time to time either by supplementary Letters of Reference under Article IX of the Convention, or by action under the new Convention if, in the meantime, it has been signed and brought into force.

Accordingly, a copy of the draft Letter of Reference† as submitted by you is enclosed, together with a draft Letter† intended to accompany the Letter of Reference, explaining the present situation to the Commission.

In the event that these meet with your approval, it should be possible to arrange for the presentation of identical Letters of Reference by the two Governments on an agreed date.

Accept etc.

Ottawa, April 1, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to advise you that the Governments of the United States and Canada have been informed that the waters of the St. Clair River, Lake St. Clair, and the Detroit River are being polluted by sewage and industrial wastes emptied into those waters. Having in mind the provisions of Article IV of the Boundary Waters Treaty signed January 11, 1909, that boundary waters and waters flowing across the boundary shall not be polluted on either side to the injury of health or property on the other side, the two Governments have agreed upon a joint Reference of the matter to the International Joint Commission, pursuant to the provisions of Article IX of said Treaty. The Commissioner is requested to inquire into and to report to the two Governments upon the following questions:

(1) Are the waters referred to in the preceding paragraph, or any of them, actually being polluted on either side of the boundary to the injury of health or property on the other side of the boundary?

(2) If the foregoing question is answered in the affirmative, to what extent, by what causes, and in what localities is such pollution taking place?

(3) If the Commission should find that pollution of the character just referred to is taking place, what measures for remedying the situation would, in its judgment, be most practicable from the economic, sanitary and other points of view?

(4) If the Commission should find that the construction or maintenance of remedial or preventive works is necessary to render the waters sanitary and suitable for domestic and other uses, it should indicate the nature, location, and extent of such works, and the probable cost thereof, and by whom and in what proportion such cost should be borne.

For the purpose of assisting the Commission in making the investigation and recommendations provided for in this Reference, the two Governments will, upon request, make available to the Commission the services of engineers and other specially qualified personnel of their governmental agencies, and such information and technical data as may have been acquired by such agencies or as may be acquired by them during the course of the investigation.

The Commission should submit its report and recommendations to the two Governments as soon as practicable.

On 27th January, 1942, the International Joint Commission made an Order of Approval in the matter of the application of the City of Seattle for authority to raise the water level of the Skagit River approximately 130 feet at the international boundary between the United States and Canada.

It was a condition of this order that the water should not be raised beyond the height at which it would reach British Columbia unless and until a binding agreement had been entered into between the City of Seattle and the Government of British Columbia providing for indemnification of British Columbia and private interests in British Columbia for any injury that might be sustained by reason of the City's operations on the Skagit River.

Though no formal representations have yet been made by the City of Seattle it is understood that the City has attempted to negotiate with the Government of British Columbia. These attempts at negotiation have met with no success and the City has been given to understand that the Government of British Columbia is not prepared to enter into any agreement covering the flooding of lands in British Columbia.

The City of Seattle may possibly file a new application stating all the facts and requesting authority to raise the water level as originally planned.

This matter involves serious political considerations on both sides of the border which it is difficult to disregard.

You may wish to discuss this matter with the Premier of British Columbia when he is in Ottawa, and to let him have the attached letter† on the subject. If not, you may wish to make some observations concerning a more opportune moment for further discussions of this subject.<sup>1</sup>

Ottawa, June 20, 1946

Sir,

Under instructions of my Government I have the honor to inform you of the receipt by the Secretary of State of a letter from the Secretary of the Interior proposing reference to the International Joint Commission, established under the terms of the Boundary Waters Treaty between the United States and Great Britain of January 11, 1909, of a number of problems arising in connection with the distribution of waters of the international rivers along the Canadian boundary, particularly those which rise in the State of Montana.

My attention has been called to the report of the Canadian St. Mary and Milk Rivers Water Development Committee, appointed by Order-in-Council dated February 17, 1941, wherein a comprehensive plan was proposed, at an estimated cost of over $15,000,000 based on pre-war prices, for increasing Canadian use of Canada's share of the water of the St. Mary River. An essential part of the plan, I understand, is to utilize the waters of the Waterton and Belly Rivers, both of which, like the St. Mary, are international rivers, rising in the Glacier National Park in Montana and flowing into the Oldman River in Alberta. Since these rivers have not been involved in earlier settlements of water disputes in that area, the Department of the Interior is of the opinion that a new situation has arisen which makes feasible and desirable a reopening of the question of the over-all division of the waters of the St. Mary-Milk River systems. Unless action on this matter is taken now it is maintained that the present Canadian plans will, if carried out, forever preclude the United States from obtaining its just share of the water available in the area. The opinion has also been expressed that more comprehensive planning will not only permit the claims of the United States to be met, but will also in fact provide more adequate supplies of water on the Canadian side. Such planning cannot at present be accomplished, as it would require activity on both sides of the border not now authorized.

Letter signed and delivered by hand to Chateau Laurier. 4/5/46 J. A. G[IBSON]

In this connection, I am enclosing a copy of a memorandum† on this subject prepared from information supplied by the Bureau of Reclamation of the Department of the Interior. This memorandum outlines the history of the St. Mary issue and discusses in some detail the present situation. It will be noted that the further point is made that Canada stands to profit greatly by a proposed diversion of the waters of the Missouri into the basin of the Souris River which drains north into the Canadian Province of Manitoba. It would appear that Article III of the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909 would require that this latter issue be referred to the International Joint Commission.

I have been instructed to say that my Government is of the opinion that it should be possible by joint action to work out a solution of these problems advantageous to Canada and to the United States, though obviously this cannot be done without authorization for an investigation and report on a broad basis.

Accordingly, I have been directed to inquire whether the Canadian Government is willing to refer the entire question to the International Joint Commission in accordance with the provisions of Article IX of the Treaty of 1909. In doing this, I have also been directed to submit the following tentative draft of terms of reference, for your consideration:

“In pursuance of Article IX of the Boundary Waters Treaty of January 11, 1909, between Great Britain and the United States, the Governments of the United States and Canada have agreed to refer to the International Joint Commission the following matters for examination and advisory report, including recommendations and conclusions, viz:

“(1) To conduct necessary investigations and to prepare a comprehensive plan or plans of mutual advantage to the two countries for the conservation, control, and utilization of the water resources which are of common interest along or in the vicinity of the international boundary from the Continental Divide on the west to and including the Red River of the North on the east. The engineering plans shall be formulated on the basis of physical conditions and other pertinent considerations without taking into account political boundaries, to the end that the most advantageous use of water may be attained.

“(2) In the event such comprehensive plan or plans are considered by the Commission to be mutually advantageous, desirable, and advisable, to make advisory recommendations concerning division between the two countries of the flow of said streams necessary to accomplish the comprehensive plan or plans and concerning allocation of the cost involved in the execution thereof.

“(3) To ascertain what change of levels or flows of said streams would result from construction of all or any part of the recommended plan or plans and if deemed advisable, conditioned on adoption of said plan or any part thereof, to authorize or approve such change or changes in levels or flows, pursuant to the terms and conditions of Articles IV and VIII of the Boundary Waters Treaty of January 11, 1909.

“(4) In the conduct of its investigations and otherwise in the performance of its duties under this reference, the Commission may utilize the services of engineers of the Bureau of Reclamation, United States Department of the Interior, together with other specially qualified personnel of the technical agencies of Canada and the United States and will so far as possible make use of information and technical data heretofore acquired by such technical agencies, or which may become available during the course of the investigation.”

I should greatly appreciate receiving at an early date the views of your Government on this subject.

Accept etc.

RE ST. MARY AND MILK RIVERS

Referring to your letter of June 25th† requesting comment on Note No. 521 of June 20th from the United States Embassy, I would submit the following as a preliminary discussion.

Briefly the United States note draws attention to the Report of the Canadian St. Mary and Milk Rivers Water Development Committee in which it is proposed to utilize the waters of the Waterton and Belly Rivers and suggests that from this a new situation arises which makes feasible and desirable a reopening of the question of the over-all division of the waters of the St. Mary-Milk Rivers system. The note also refers to an enclosed memorandum from the Bureau of Reclamation pointing out that Canada stands to profit greatly by a proposed diversion of the waters of the Missouri River into the Basin of the Souris River which would appear to require a reference to the International Joint Commission under Article III of the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909.

The note states that the United States Government is of the opinion it should be possible to work out a solution of these problems advantageous to both countries and suggests an over-all reference to the International Joint Commission under Article IX of the Treaty for examination and report of all the water resources which are of common interest from the International Divide in the West to the Red River of the North in the East.

The objective of this proposed reference from the United States standpoint is evidently contained in paragraphs 7 and 8 of the memorandum accompanying the note. Investigations made by the Bureau of Reclamation indicate that full development of the Milk River and Marias Basin in Montana require 232,000 acre-feet in addition to the water now allocated to the United States under the Commission's Order of 1921. It is stated that the only place where this water can be obtained is from the international streams—the St. Mary, Milk, Belly, and Waterton Rivers.

The memorandum refers to the Canadian plan of development recommended by the St. Mary and Milk Rivers Water Development Committee in 1942 and suggests this constitutes a new condition not contemplated at the date of the Commission's Order in 1921, and is sufficient ground for a revision of that Order. This has reference to the request of the United States Government in 1927 that the Commission's final order be reopened and to the reply of the Canadian Government, which was argued before the Commission in 1931 to the effect that any such reopening could only be justified by new conditions arising which were unforeseen at the date of the Order in 1921.

The development recommended by the Water Development Committee, now under construction, is planned to make full use of all the water allotted to Canada under the Commission's Order plus the water available in the Belly and Waterton Rivers. This is not in any sense a new condition. Preliminary surveys for this project were made in 1915 and the results of these surveys, including details of the lands requiring irrigation in Canada, the source of water supply, and the proposed method of development were presented at the Commission's hearings prior to the Order of 1921.

With respect to the Waterton and Belly Rivers, these two streams have their source in Glacier National Park in Montana and flow north into Alberta as tributaries of the Oldman River. Within the United States they are separated by mountain ranges from the St. Mary and Milk Rivers and cannot be economically diverted to irrigate lands in Montana except by a long round-about route through Canada. The Bureau of Reclamation suggests sharing the cost of the development from these rivers in Canada and in effect purchasing a portion of Canada's presently allocated water.

The present situation in Canada is that plans have been completed and construction has commenced on a project designed to irrigate an additional 345,000 acres using all of Canada's share of the St. Mary and Milk Rivers and all of the water available in the Waterton and Belly Rivers. As shown on the Plan accompanying the 1942 Report of the St. Mary and Milk Rivers

Water Development Committee, it was necessary to eliminate at least 100,000 acres of irrigable lands from this project for which water is not available. There is no other economic source of water in Canada for the project now under construction and any additional water allotted to the United States from these international streams will mean a corresponding additional reduction in the area it is now proposed to irrigate in Canada from this source.

The note suggests than Canada stands to profit greatly by a proposed diversion of the waters of the Missouri River into the basin of the Souris River draining into Manitoba. The thought here is evidently that additional water granted to the United States from Canada's share of the St. Mary and Milk Rivers could be exchanged for water from the Missouri delivered to the Souris River at the Manitoba boundary. The effect of this arrangement would be to deprive irrigable lands in Alberta of an urgently needed water supply in return for an additional supply to the Province of Manitoba where irrigation is not required. Such a proposal would appear to be very detrimental to the Canadian interests and could not be contemplated without the concurrence of the Provincial Governments concerned. Further the Souris River matter is already before the Commission and the effect of the proposed Missouri diversion will no doubt be considered by the Commission under the terms of the present Souris Reference.

The result of the proposed over-all reference under the draft terms submitted would be to reopen the St. Mary and Milk Rivers' case which has been considered finally settled by the Commission's Order of 1921. Since that date Canada has been proceeding in good faith to construct the necessary storage and diversion works to use its share of these waters. If the case is reopened it would invite another long drawn out dispute, which is not in the best interests of the friendly relations now existing between the two countries. It would endanger the water supply for the present projects and probably halt the construction now in progress and further development for many years.

In my opinion the over-all planning reference as proposed does not offer any advantage to Canada and if considered desirable should be based on the apportionments already established in the various watersheds.

A further and most important point is that the Canadian portion of the water resources under consideration are vested in the three Prairie Provinces and it is suggested that the views of the Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba Governments should be invited before a decision is reached on the reply to be made.

I am attaching a copy of the Report of the St. Mary's and Milk Rivers Water Development Committee referred to in the note.<sup>1</sup>

ATTENTION: MR. R. M. MACDONNELL

Further to your note of June 29th† and my reply of July 3rd,† I wish to present the following in connection with the two matters raised therein:

I. DIVERSION OF WATER AT NIAGARA FALLS

I am enclosing, herewith, a copy of a letter dated July 11th† from Dr. Hogg, Chairman of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission, in regard to the continuation of authorization for the temporary diversion of water for power purposes from the Niagara River.

I agree with Dr. Hogg's views, as set forth in the last paragraph of his letter, that the continued diversion by Canada of water from the Niagara River for power, as authorized by the 1940, 1941 and 1944 exchange of notes, is of very considerable importance and that the termination of these authorizations would virtually give rise to an emergency. Therefore, in view of the uncertainty concerning the 1941 authorizations and the lack of confirmation by the United States Senate of the 1944 authorization, it is believed they should all receive the most careful consideration and if it should appear that they are no longer in effect immediate steps should be taken to make them effective for as long a period as can be arranged, on the understanding that the need for continuing them would be reviewed annually.

At the present time we are in a period of high lake run-off with consequent high water levels and the effect of the increased diversions on the scenic beauty of the Falls is negligible. In case a low water cycle should occur it might be wise to stipulate that under these conditions the amount of the increased diversions might be curtailed if considered necessary in the interests of preserving the scenic beauty of the Falls. Curtailment of flow for these periods would only be necessary during the open water periods, at which time the power demand is usually not at its maximum.

II. LEVELS OF LAKE ST. FRANCIS

I have talked this matter over with officials of the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company, the Company that benefits from the existing arrangement with the United States in regard to the regulation of the low water levels of Lake St. Francis, and they are of the opinion, with which I agree, that permission to raise the low water level, as provided for in previous notes with the United States, should be continued. The arguments advanced in this regard are similar, in many respects, to those advanced by Dr. Hogg in regard to the temporary diversions from the Niagara River. The demand for power from Beauharnois is increasing all the time and the coal shortage will increase this demand this winter. This demand comes from the United States as well as from Canadian power users.

During the past two years the actual levels of Lake St. Francis have been such that it has not been necessary to raise the levels except during the winter months, but how long this condition will continue no one can say.

If the existing arrangements in regard to these lake levels are extended, I believe provision should be made for review of the situation each year as has been done in the past.

Mémorandum du secrétaire adjoint du Cabinet au Cabinet

[Ottawa,] August 1, 1946

WATER DIVERSION, WESTERN PROVINCES; U.S. REQUEST FOR REFERENCE TO INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

1. The United States has requested a broad reference to the International Joint Commission covering international streams from the Continental Divide to the Red River of the North; this request is based fundamentally upon the U.S. desire to get additional water from the St. Mary and Milk Rivers or other sources for the development of the Marias valley in the United States. Reference is made also to possible quid pro quo such as U.S. financial participation in Canadian development and such as additional water that may be made available to Canada in the Souris River from the Missouri River development. Reference is also made to the fact that Canadian plans involve use of water from the Waterton and Belly Rivers which have not been dealt with by any international award.

2. This matter has been discussed by officials of the Canadian section of the International Joint Commission, the Department of External Affairs and the Department of Mines and Resources (Dominion Water and Power Bureau). The following notes present the facts upon which these officials feel the government should base its decision.

3. As far as use of the waters of the Souris River is concerned, this matter is already before the International Joint Commission. In any case it could scarcely be considered a quid pro quo for concessions to the United States in respect of water from Alberta, since the proposed diversion from the Missouri to the Souris is of benefit only to Manitoba. The General Missouri Valley development is not of particular interest to us apart from this. Accordingly the question of the Souris waters should be dealt with as at present, and need not be tied in with any broader reference.

4. As far as the St. Mary-Milk Rivers are concerned, it is felt strongly that the 1921 award of the International Joint Commission should not be interfered with in any way or reopened. In this connection it is difficult to accept the U.S. contention that conditions have so changed as to indicate the desirability of reopening this question. Any reopening would work to the detriment of Canada which is now proceeding with its plans for utilizing its share of these waters.

5. There remains, therefore, the question of the Waterton and Belly Rivers. Water from these rivers will be used in connection with the present plans for development in Alberta. These rivers rise in the United States and cross the boundary into Canada. They are not boundary waters as defined in the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909, but are streams crossing the boundary which are referred to in Articles 2 and 4 of this Treaty. Since the proposed diversions from the Waterton and Belly Rivers in Canada will have no effect on their flow within the United States, their use in Canada would appear to be a domestic matter, not subject to the Boundary Waters Treaty. Legally, therefore, unless the United States can divert water from these streams within its own territory, there would appear to be no grounds for the United States suggestion that since these waters have not been dealt with by a previous award, they must now be divided between the two countries. External Affairs is considering further the question of the legality of this point.

6. On the other hand, the U.S. may be able to put up a case in equity for use of some of the waters from the Waterton and Belly. There can, of course, be no objection to their use of these waters within U.S. territory, but because of difficulties of terrain this apparently is not possible of easy solution and the question becomes really one of diversion to the United States from within Canada.

7. Since the present terms suggested by the U.S. for a reference to the Commission are unacceptable, the matter becomes one for choice by the government between:

(a) complete rejection of the U.S. request, (a course which would appear to offer considerable difficulties); and

(b) further discussions in which the Canadian position would be along the lines indicated in paragraphs 3 to 6 above, in an attempt to see if a more limited reference can be worked out.

It should be kept in mind that even if a limited reference is accepted it might result in the award of certain waters to the United States, and corresponding reduction in irrigable land in Canada; acceptance of reference to the Commission need not mean that some water would be made available to the United States but might be taken as an implication of our willingness to see this result.

It is also pointed out that, should the government decide to attempt to work out a limited reference the governments of the three Prairie Provinces should be consulted before any further action is taken vis-à-vis the United States.

TOP SECRET

Ottawa, August 6, 1946

Of the items dealt with at the meeting of the Cabinet held today, the following is of particular interest to your department.

Western Canada; international waters; U.S. request for reference to International Joint Commission

The Assistant Secretary reported that the U.S. government had suggested that the Canadian government join in a reference to the International Joint Commission in respect of division of waters from international streams in western Canada between the Continental Divide and the Red River of the North.

The request appeared to be based upon U.S. desire for additional water from the St. Mary and Milk Rivers or other Canadian sources. Special reference had been made to the proposed use by Canada of water from the Waterton and Belly Rivers, not hitherto dealt with by any international award.

Following discussion by the officials concerned, it had been suggested that the 1921 award of the International Joint Commission in respect of the St. Mary and Milk Rivers should not be re-opened; the question of diversions from the Souris River in connection with the Missouri River development was already before the International Joint Commission and need not become part of any broader reference.

The Waterton and Belly Rivers, while originating in the United States, were difficult of access except in Canadian territory; the point at issue was whether Canada should consider a limited reference to the Commission in respect of these rivers which might lead to the diversion of water from within Canada to the United States; any such diversion would reduce the amount of water available for irrigation purposes in Canada.

An explanatory note,<sup>1</sup> of which you have a copy (Cabinet Document 267) was circulated.

The Acting Prime Minister suggested that, while the provinces need not be consulted at this stage, in any further discussions with the United States it should be made clear that the Canadian government could not commit itself with respect to any reference to the International Joint Commission without consultation with the provincial authorities concerned.

The Cabinet, after further discussion, agreed that a reply along the lines suggested be sent to the United States, indicating that the Canadian government could not accept the suggested terms of reference and was not prepared to re-open the question of division of water from the St. Mary-Milk Rivers; but that, without committing itself in respect of any reference to the Commission, the appropriate Canadian officials would be prepared to enter into discussions with U.S. officials should the United States consider that the possibility of a more limited reference to the Commission might usefully be explored.

Ottawa, August 13, 1946

Sir,

I have the honor to refer to the letters of reference dated April 1, 1946 to the International Joint Commission, United States and Canada, whereby these Governments requested the Commission to conduct an investigation into reported pollution of the waters of the St. Clair River, Lake St. Clair, and the Detroit River, and to submit a report containing their recommendations with regard to this subject.

The Stream Control Commission of the State of Michigan has adopted a resolution recommending that the scope of the investigation conducted by the Commission be extended to include the waters of the St. Mary's River from Lake Superior to Lake Huron. According to a communication dated July 16, 1946† from the Chairman of the United States Section of the International Joint Commission, this resolution has been endorsed by the Public Health Service of the United States. It is also stated that the engineers and expert scientists of the State, Provincial, and Federal Governments now actively engaged in investigating this pollution consider it not only advisable but necessary that the scope of the investigation be extended to cover the waters mentioned.

I am instructed therefore to propose that the letters of reference dated April 1, 1946 under which the Commission is now investigating pollution of certain boundary waters should be amended by the insertion of the words "and the waters of the St. Mary's River from Lake Superior to Lake Huron" in the first paragraph of the letters of reference.

If the Canadian Government agrees to this suggestion it is requested that consideration be given to an amendatory letter of reference which would read substantially in accordance with the draft† transmitted herewith and which if approved by the Canadian Government would be forwarded simultaneously by the two Governments to the Chairman of their respective sections on a date to be agreed upon.

In view of the desirability of conducting investigations of the whole area simultaneously it would be appreciated if early consideration might be given this matter.

RE: ST. MARY AND MILK RIVERS

The Government of the United States is endeavouring to re-open the question of the St. Mary and Milk Rivers by proposing a new Reference to the International Joint Commission.

The first official intimation we have had of this is the United States Ambassador's despatch [note] No. 521 of June 20.

The Ambassador refers to the Canadian St. Mary and Milk Rivers Water Development Committee and their report on a plan for increasing our use of the St. Mary River water. He understands a part of this plan to involve the utilization of the Waterton and Belly Rivers which rise in Montana and flow into Alberta. "Since these rivers have not been involved in earlier settlements of water disputes in that area" (that area presumably being Montana), the Americans endeavour to infer that a new situation has arisen, making desirable a reconsideration of the division of the waters of the St. Mary and Milk Rivers. It is argued that the carrying out of the Canadian plans would permanently preclude the Americans from obtaining their just share of the water in the area. The United States Ambassador further argues that more comprehensive planning will provide more adequate supplies of water on the Canadian side, but he omits to state that these more adequate supplies of water would be supplied in southern Manitoba where the rainfall is much more adequate, and that the United States would obtain part of our share of the water in southern Alberta, which is a drought area.

In his despatch, the United States Ambassador proposes terms of reference which are not acceptable, and he annexes to his despatch a memorandum† supplied by the Bureau of Reclamation of the Department of the Interior.

This memorandum outlines part of the history of the St. Mary and Milk Rivers and gives "the new conditions which have arisen and were unforeseen at the time of the apportionment of the waters of these rivers". The new conditions appear to consist of the fact that the only feasible source of additional water for the United States is by importation of water from Canada through use of waters flowing into Canada in the Waterton and Belly Rivers and the unused portion of the St. Mary waters. This would mean an exchange of the American share of the Waterton and Belly waters for a like amount from the St. Mary River or by financial participation in our development of the St. Mary and Milk Rivers Water Development Committee Plan. This is set forth in the light of a "purchase of some or all of our share of the water of the Milk River". The Canadian plan is looked upon as a rather extensive, and not heretofore contemplated, use of the Waterton and Belly waters. The Bureau of Reclamation argues that these two streams were not apportioned in the Treaty of 1909, nor by the Commission's Order of 1921, because at that time, it appeared to be impracticable to divert them within the boundaries of the United States. As Canada's plan involves full utilization of our share of the St. Mary water and, in addition, the Waterton and Belly waters, the United States may be precluded forever from the use of the latter waters unless some new agreement is made. Therefore, these new conditions make necessary a re-opening of the whole question. A joint undertaking is urged whereby the United States could utilize its "just" share of the Belly and Waterton waters and Canada would, in the long-run, benefit to a much greater degree than can now be foreseen.

The Bureau of Reclamation sees the issue as involving three problems—

(1) The United States claim to a share in the hitherto unused waters of the Waterton and Belly Rivers;

(2) An investigation of a plan for the general utilization of the international waters in the area;

(3) The question of diversion of the waters of the Missouri into the Souris and Red River of the North Basins.

The Bureau of Reclamation sees these three problems as closely inter-related and proposes a broad investigation to develop a plan for the best possible utilization of the waters throughout the whole area.

The Dominion Water and Power Bureau sees no possible advantage to Canada arising out of this proposal and, on the contrary, sees great detriment resulting from the fact that the waters we might give to the United States would be taken from a drought area and replaced in an area where irrigation was not required.

As an incidental fact in the broad picture, it might be pointed out that Senator Stanley, United States Chairman of the International Joint Commission, wrote to the Honourable Charles Stewart, Canadian Chairman of the International Joint Commission on July 11†, stating that acquiescence in the United States proposal in no way involves the waters now in the St. Mary and Milk Rivers, and previously apportioned, without the full and complete concurrence of the Canadian Section of the International Joint Commission. The Stanley letter is couched in the most gentle and encouraging terms, but it should be borne in mind that it is a purely private communication.

The Cabinet has taken an active interest in this matter and has stated that, while the provinces need not be consulted at this stage, it would be made clear to the United States authorities, in any further discussions, that the Canadian Government could not commit itself without consultation with the provincial authorities. The Cabinet further agreed that a reply be sent to the United States, indicating that the Canadian Government could not accept the suggested terms of reference and was not prepared to re-open the question of the diversion of water in the St. Mary and Milk Rivers, but that, without committing itself in respect of any Reference to the International Joint Commission, the Canadian officials should be prepared to enter into discussions with United States officials should the United States consider that the possibility of a more limited Reference to the Commission might usefully be explored.

As a final item of interest, it might be added that the plans for the construction of the St. Mary River main dam have been completed and tenders have been called for its construction. One of the auxiliary reservoirs of the Canadian project has been constructed by the Province of Alberta on the understanding that the Dominion would proceed with the main reservoir.

From the foregoing, it would appear that the United States proposal is a further endeavour on their part to obtain from Canada some of the badly needed water in the drought area by re-opening the St. Mary and Milk Rivers question. The United States terms of reference are obviously much too broad and, if we are to accede to a reference of any kind, the terms must necessarily be greatly restricted.

Ottawa, September 6, 1946

Excellency,

I have the honour to refer to your Note No. 521 of 20th June concerning the distribution of waters of certain international rivers along the United States boundary and more particularly concerning the St. Mary and Milk Rivers.

The long history of the discussions concerning the distribution of the waters of the St. Mary and Milk Rivers System was brought to a close by the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909 and the International Joint Commission Award of 1921.

There has been correspondence on this subject on several occasions since the Award of 1921 and the Government of Canada has invariably expressed its concern that the integrity of the system created by the Treaty of 1909 and the Award of 1921 should be maintained. Relying on the principles established by the Award, the Government of Canada is proceeding to make full use of the waters allotted to it and the development recommended by the St. Mary and Milk Rivers Water Development Committee is now under construction.

The Canadian authorities find it difficult to accept the view that the lack of a settlement concerning the Waterton and Belly Rivers is productive of a new situation making feasible or desirable a re-opening of the question of the overall division of the St. Mary and Milk Rivers System. They find it even more difficult to see why the Canadian undertaking of the development recommended by the St. Mary and Milk Rivers Water Development Committee should be considered as a new condition; preliminary surveys for this project were made as early as 1915 and the results of these surveys, including details of the lands requiring irrigation in Canada, the source of water supply, and the proposed method of development, were presented at the Hearings of the International Joint Commission before the 1921 order was issued.

The Canadian Government is anxious to insure a maximum quantity of water from the rivers in question for users on both sides of the boundary. However, the present suggestion, urged by the Reclamation Bureau, of compensation to Canadian interests for loss of water from the St. Mary and Milk Rivers by waters from the Missouri diverted to the Souris, takes no account of the fact that the waters suggested for United States use are to be diverted from a drought area in Canada and those suggested for Canadian use as compensation would be supplied in an area of adequate precipitation.

The Canadian Government is, therefore, unable to agree to the suggested terms of reference and is very reluctant to re-open the question of the apportionment of the waters of the St. Mary and Milk Rivers. However, if the Government of the United States feels that the possibility of a more limited reference might usefully be explored, I would suggest that discussions might be undertaken by the officials of both Governments with this object in view.

If such discussions are undertaken they would, of course, be without prejudice to the rights of either Government; should they result in agreement concerning the terms of reference, the Canadian Government, before committing itself finally to such a reference, would wish to discuss the matter with the Provincial authorities concerned.

Accept etc.

RE: ST. MARY AND MILK RIVERS

On Tuesday October 8th Mr. King of the State Department called on me in company with Mr. Shillock of the United States Embassy.

The real object of this visit was to discuss the American Ambassador's Note No. 521 of 20th June proposing a rather broad reference to the International Joint Commission and our Note No. 117 of 6th September in reply thereto.

Mr. King apparently construed our Note No. 117 as being even more reluctant than it is. He seemed to feel that it shut the door upon all further discussions.

I assured him that as stated in our Note we would be glad to undertake discussions to try to arrive at satisfactory terms of reference. I did not conceal from Mr. King my apprehension lest we lose valuable water in a drought area in return for a perhaps equivalent or additional supply of water in an area of adequate precipitation. Mr. King based most of his arguments on the nature of the proposed undertaking of the Americans. It was his view that if the American plans were carried out, more water would be available for irrigation on both sides of the border in those areas requiring it most urgently.

Though Mr. King was a trifle better equipped to do battle than I was (he had marshalled a great store of facts and figures before coming to my office, and I was unaware of the purpose of his visit) I still believe that he laboured under the same technical handicap as myself in discussing the engineering aspects and the factual background of this problem.

I made it quite clear to Mr. King that we were very reluctant to part with our share of the meagre waters available but that we would be very glad to hold a round-table discussion, where a more detailed exposition of the American plan might readily result in Agreement on terms of reference which would safeguard our position and allow the exploration of plans which might be mutually advantageous.

ment of Transport. It has been concluded that permission to raise the low water level, as provided for in previous notes with the United States, should be continued.

3. For your information I am enclosing copies of a Departmental memorandum of June 29 and extracts from a memorandum from the Department of Transport of July 15.

4. I should be grateful if you would take up this matter informally with the State Department and ascertain whether they are agreeable to the continuation of the wartime agreement. If so, we should be glad to have their views on how this continuation might best be effected. You will understand that at this stage no commitment may be made. Before an exchange of notes or other form of agreement is effected, ministerial approval will be required.

MEMORANDUM ON THE LEVEL OF LAKE ST. FRANCIS

An exchange of notes on November 10, 1941<sup>1</sup> between Canada and the United States provided that the United States would not object to the maintenance of the level of Lake St. Francis at 152 during the low water periods. The purpose of the agreement was to enable the Beauharnois Company to maintain its supply of water to the aluminum factory at Massena, New York.

The notes have been extended from time to time. The last extension was made in the fall of 1944. It provided that the 1941 agreement should be "continued for the duration of the emergency, subject to review prior to October 1 of each year."

In November, 1945, the Power Controller reminded this Department that the agreement was subject to reconsideration and asked what had been done. On November 27, 1945 the Embassy in Washington was asked to discuss the matter informally with the State Department "and if they are agreeable, you would be justified in providing for continuance of status quo preferably without formal exchange of notes."

The Embassy reported on December 14 that the matter was being explored by the State Department. This is the last which was heard from Washington and no further action was taken from this end.

It is, to say the least, doubtful whether the "emergency" contemplated in the 1944 notes is still in existence. It would appear if the agreement is to be kept in force, some action should now be taken.

Mr. Marr, of the Dominion Water and Power Bureau, recently advised that the natural level of Lake St. Francis had been so high that it had not been necessary even in low water periods to use artificial means to raise the level to 152. However there is no assurance that this condition will continue very long.

Ottawa, November 28, 1946

Sir,

I wish to refer to our EX-4035 of November 27, 1945 with reference to the diversion of water of Niagara Falls.

2. The question of the desirability of renewing the wartime agreements on this subject has been taken up with the Department of Transport. It is considered that the continued diversion by Canada of water from the Niagara River for power, as authorized by the 1940, 1941 and 1944 exchange of notes, is of very considerable importance and that the termination of these authorizations would virtually give rise to an emergency. Therefore, in view of the uncertainty concerning the 1941 authorizations and the lack of confirmation by the United States Senate of the 1944 authorization, it is believed they should receive careful consideration. If it should appear that they are no longer in effect immediate steps should be taken to make them effective for as long a period as can be arranged, on the understanding that the need for continuing them would be reviewed annually.

3. For your information I am enclosing a copy of a Departmental memorandum of June 29<sup>1</sup> and extracts from a memorandum from the Department of Transport of July 15 on this subject.

4. I should be grateful if you would take up this matter informally with the State Department and ascertain whether they are agreeable to the

Washington, December 21, 1946

Dear Mr. Pearson,

I am replying to Despatch No. 1484 of November 28th by letter, because of the informality of the reply from the Department of State which we have had, having taken up with them verbally the subject matter of this despatch. You will recall that the despatch under reference is concerned with the diversion of water at Niagara Falls, and the question of the desirability of renewing wartime agreements.

Mr. Stone discussed this matter with Mr. Parsons at the State Department, who gave him a verbal reply yesterday. Mr. Parsons said that officers of the State Department have discussed the thing informally with Mr. Leland Olds of the Federal Power Commission, and while they do not wish to give us a formal reply, they are able to state that they have no intention whatsoever of changing the amounts of water diverted under the exchanges of notes of 1940, 1941 and 1944. All United States authorities concerned hold the view that this water should be continued to be provided for Canadian power purposes.

The Federal Power Commission has scheduled a study commencing in January of the whole question of diversion at Niagara including its overall effect on the St. Lawrence project. In accordance with the practice of the Commission they will soon be getting in touch with the Ontario Hydro Electric Commission in connection with this study, out of which they would hope that the emergency diversions provided by our exchanges of notes would be replaced by permanent arrangements based on the amount of water required at different times of day to maintain the scenic beauty of the Falls. I gather that the Federal Power Commission holds the view that considerably larger diversions, than are now being made, will be possible at certain times of the day and particularly during the night time.

In so far as the actual status of the notes exchanged is concerned, Mr. Olds of the Federal Power Commission feels that the President will maintain the emergency (he says that this is just one man's opinion), and that the notes of 1940 and 1941 will, therefore, remain in force. There is a possibility of some slight embarrassment in connection with the notes of 1944 for two reasons. In the first place, they have not, as you know, been ratified by the Senate, and in the second place, they provide, unfortunately, that the diversions specified should be made until "the end of hostilities". The United States authorities feel, however, that since relatively small amounts of water are dealt with in these notes, and since both sides are willing that the diversions provided should continue, and since it is proposed to keep the notes off the Senate Calendar, there is no imminent danger of embarrassment arising. In short, the Federal Power Commission clearly desires to protect the status quo.

In view of the above, I feel that we can now await the outcome of the study which the Federal Power Commission are proposing to make, and of which they propose to keep the Ontario Hydro Electric Commission currently informed. Mr. Parsons said that at any time the State Department would be glad to inform the Embassy of progress in this study. In the meantime, they are anxious to avoid, if possible, putting anything in writing in connection with the three exchanges of notes under which present diversions are being made at Niagara.

Yours sincerely,

H. H. WRONG

Memorandum by Legal Division

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, March 27, 1946

PROPRIETARY INTERESTS (INTERNATIONAL) IN CONTINENTAL SHELF

1. A Presidential Proclamation of September 28, 1945, asserted the jurisdiction of the United States over the natural resources of the continental shelf under the high seas contiguous to the coasts of the United States and its territories. The continental shelf was described generally as meaning "submerged land contiguous to the continent which is covered by no more than 100 fathoms (600 feet) of water". It was made clear that the Proclamation had in view the mineral resources of the shelf, that the right of free navigation was not to be impeded, and that the Proclamation was not regarded as extending the present limits of the territorial waters of the United States.

2. The several questions of international law involved were examined in the Legal Division in July, 1945. The conclusion then reached was that international law and custom did not at present recognize that a coastal state had any proprietary interest in the continental shelf contiguous to its shores. The further opinion was expressed that, while the matter was not free from doubt, authority existed in international law and practice for the view that the bed of the sea (which would, of course, include the continental shelf) could be effectively occupied, at any rate in so far as the occupation did not seriously affect general rights of navigation.

The Legal Division also expressed the view that, as a matter of policy, no objection should be taken to an extension of the principles of international law to provide for the recognition of proprietary interests in the continental shelf in accordance with the Presidential Proclamation. It was felt, however, that any such extension should be accomplished by agreement rather than by unilateral declaration. The further view was expressed that the recognition of effective occupation of the bed of the sea (whether by mining or drilling oil, or by works which would actually come above the surface of the sea, such as the building of jetties and lighthouses), for which authority exists, should be supported by the Canadian Government.

3. These views appear, from the file, to have been referred to the interested departments for their comments. No replies have been received.

4. It was pointed out at the same time that the coastal provinces (i.e. Nova Scotia which has leased submarine coal areas beyond the three-mile limit) would have an important interest in the recognition of the doctrine. It was not thought, however, that there would be any necessity of consulting the provinces unless it was proposed to block the United States policy.

5. On November 1, 1945, a Note was transmitted to the United States Ambassador to Canada in which we stated that the policy outlined in the Presidential Proclamation was still under review here, but that "this delay does not indicate that the proposals . . . are regarded with any disfavour by the Canadian Government."

6. It is suggested that the text of the Proclamation, together with a copy of the views of the Legal Division and of a draft Note to the United States Ambassador to Canada, be once more referred to the interested departments for their concurrence or observations.

The draft Note should, it is thought, indicate that the Canadian Government favours the policy outlined in the Proclamation, but wonders whether it would not be desirable to place such matters, in which a reasonable doubt exists as to the position under international law, on the Agenda of UNO, where the formulation of a suitable multilateral convention could be considered by its Legal Committee. (At the same time, the Canadian views as to effective occupation, while they do not bear directly on the Proclamation, might usefully be outlined).

7. In support of the above recommendation, the following is submitted:

(a) Article 13, paragraph 1.a. of the United Nations Charter charges the General Assembly with "promoting international cooperation in the political field and encouraging the progressive development of international law and its codification."

(b) In the common interest, the development of international law should be accomplished in an orderly fashion, by agreement and through the instrumentality of the appropriate international agency, rather than by unilateral action.

(c) In view of the fact that UNO was not functioning when the Proclamation was made, it would seem that these suggestions might now be made at this time to the United States Government, without appearing to criticize the Proclamation.

(d) As presently drafted, the Canadian reaction to the similar Presidential Proclamation regarding the conservation of fisheries beyond the three-mile limit takes the same general line as is recommended above.

BOUNDARY QUESTIONS AFFECTING CANADIAN WATERS IN THE PACIFIC

1. Two main questions are outstanding:

- (a) The boundary at Dixon Entrance, a question unsettled for more than forty years.
- (b) The boundary within the Strait of Juan de Fuca

2. For the last five and a half years, the United States Government have been actively pressing for a solution of our differences in this sphere. On September 13, 1945, the Cabinet approved a settlement of the two boundary questions on the basis of the draft Note† (flagged) prepared by External Affairs subject to assurance being obtained as to the attitude of British Columbia. Mr. Read was to get in touch with Mr. Ian Mackenzie and no action was to be taken until Mr. Mackenzie was satisfied on this point.

3. Nothing has been done since the Prime Minister gave assurances, in reply to a telegram from the Premier of British Columbia,† that no action would be taken with regard to the boundary questions without the provincial government being given the opportunity of making representations. Subsequently, Mr. Ian Mackenzie advised Mr. Read that Mr. Hart had stated orally that the "Government of British Columbia is unalterably opposed to the suggested changes".

4. On April 24, Mr. Lewis Clark, Counsellor of the United States Embassy made oral and informal enquiries as to whether anything had transpired which could be reported officially to his government. He was advised this matter was being considered actively and would be taken up with the Deputy.

5. The file does not disclose that Mr. Hart has ever been given the opportunity of making representations. Assuming this to be the case, it is felt that the following steps should be taken:

(a) A copy of our draft Note could be sent to the Premier of British Columbia by the Prime Minister, with a request for the Premier's views.

(b) Consultations could be arranged with the Province to ascertain what common ground and what differences exist.

(c) After further consideration by the Cabinet, we would be in a position to give a final reply to the United States government.

(d) In the meantime, the United States Embassy should be advised of the standing of this matter.

I would therefore recommend that the question of approaching British Columbia be deferred until the Prime Minister's return, but, that in the meantime, we tell Mr. Clark informally what the situation is. It would be sufficient to tell him (as evidence of the fact that the question is under serious consideration) that the Canadian Government does not feel itself in a position to reply to the United States Government until consultations have taken place with British Columbia, and that, in view of the somewhat delicate situation with respect to Dominion-Provincial relations, it is felt advisable to await the Prime Minister's return.<sup>1</sup>

RE: UNITED STATES PRESIDENTIAL PROCLAMATION ON CONTINENTAL SHELF

Attached is a draft note to the United States Ambassador to Canada on the subject of the Presidential Proclamation of 28th September, 1945, extending the territorial jurisdiction of the United States to cover the subsoil and bed of the ocean in the continental shelf.

The principles enunciated in the above-mentioned Proclamation appear to be ones which the Canadian Government should espouse. On the other hand, it is not clear that these principles are recognized by customary international law. It is therefore proposed that these principles be considered by the United Nations so that they may receive, if possible, multilateral acceptance.

Would you let me have your views as to the effect that the recognition of these principles might have on the activities supervised by your Department? I should be particularly interested in your observations on what appears to

It may be that this limitation has some basis in scientific fact, but the reason for selecting this particular depth is not obvious to me. Your comments with regard to the proposed note to the United States Ambassador would also be appreciated.

You will recall that a similar Canadian approach is under consideration with respect to the Presidential Proclamation of 28th September, 1945, concerning the regulation of coastal fisheries.

Excellency,

I have the honour to refer to my note of 1st November, 1945, in which I informed you that the Proclamation of the President of the United States concerning the policy of the United States with respect to the natural resources of the subsoil and sea bed of the continental shelf was being examined by the appropriate authorities of the Canadian Government.

The Canadian Government is inclined to favour the policy outlined in the Proclamation. On the other hand, the rights of coastal states to the land masses appurtenant thereto beyond territorial waters have not hitherto been clearly defined in international law. It would seem that principles such as those embodied in the Proclamation, which may involve the extension of an existing right or the development of a principle deemed advisable by reason of scientific and economic advancement, should be incorporated in international law, where possible, by multilateral agreement.

The United Nations Charter (Article XIII, Paragraph 1(a)) charges the General Assembly with "promoting international cooperation in the political field and encouraging the progressive development of international law and its codification". It is only after the issuance of the Presidential Proclamation that the United Nations has begun to exercise its functions.

Since an appropriate mechanism for obtaining general recognition of an uncertain principle or a new development in international law is now available in the new organization, the Canadian Government would suggest that the principles outlined in the Presidential Proclamation might usefully be placed on the agenda at the next meeting of the United Nations so as to provide an opportunity for general consideration and approval.

It would be much appreciated if you could let me have an expression of the views of the United States Government with reference to this suggestion.

RE: THE UNITED STATES PRESIDENTIAL PROCLAMATION ON THE CONTINENTAL SHELF AND ON COASTAL FISHERIES

The Presidential Proclamation on the Continental Shelf has been put before the Departments of Mines and Resources, Transport and Fisheries and there is no disagreement on the substance of the proclamation. These Departments share our view that the proclamation might properly be put before the United Nations for discussion and that broad acceptance would be preferable to unilateral action. This is a criticism of the method adopted in the Proclamation rather than of its substance and would apply equally to the Presidential proclamation of the same date on Coastal Fisheries.

2. You will recall that on 15th of March 1946, a letter<sup>2</sup> was sent to the Department of Fisheries asking for the agreement of the Minister to a submission to Cabinet drawn on the basis of conclusions reached at a meeting of officials held on the 4th of March to discuss the Proclamation on Coastal Fisheries. By letter dated 3rd September,† the Deputy Minister has expressed the agreement of the Department of Fisheries to conclusions (a), (b), and (d) of the draft submission (flagged). That Department felt, however, that further consideration should be given to conclusion (d) which suggested that the question be examined by the United Nations Organization or other appropriate international body with a view to reaching general agreement on the rights to be exercised by States in respect of the conservation of high seas fisheries in waters contiguous to their coasts. It was also felt that further consideration should be given to Section (a) of paragraph 4 which raises the question of Canadian fishermen being barred from, or discriminated against, in conservation zones established by the United States and other countries.

3. The Deputy Minister stated that the Department of Fisheries is in agreement with the points made by Dr. Keenleyside in his despatch of April 1† (flagged) in which he commented on the draft submission to Cabinet, and stated that some method of exclusion and discrimination may be necessary in order to afford adequate protection to fisheries carried on in waters contiguous to the east and west coasts of Canada. This is at variance with conclusion (c) of the draft memo to Cabinet which recommended against exclusion or discrimination.

4. The Deputy Minister did not say whether the draft memorandum for Cabinet had been put before the Minister. Nor did he suggest precisely what he thought the next step should be. He enclosed with his letter technical memoranda on the fisheries on the Pacific and Atlantic Coasts.

5. This whole question is one of considerable importance and it is no doubt desirable to attempt to make some real progress. (Your attention is drawn to the attached excerpts† from speeches on this subject made in the House of Commons on 28th August by the member for New Westminster and the member for Queen's-Lunenberg). It might be useful at this point for competent officials of the Department of Fisheries to discuss on a technical level with the United States Department of Fisheries specific problems and ways and means of solving them. As it is now we have nothing but a general expression of the necessity of taking some undefined action to protect Canadian interests. It would be helpful if the Department of Fisheries would outline in precise terms what action it would recommend to protect Canadian Fisheries. We would then be in a position to reply fully to the United States on the points raised by the Presidential Proclamation both on the matter of substance and of form. Our comments on the form of the Proclamation could be made to apply equally to the Proclamation on the Continental Shelf.

6. If you agree, the advisability of having technical discussions with the United States should be taken up with Fisheries. Fisheries, Transport and Mines and Resources should also be told that our proposed note to the United States Ambassador on the Continental Shelf which raised the question of the method not of substance would be delayed until we are in a position to discuss the similar proclamation on Coastal Fisheries.

Dear Mr. Clark,

As you know, for many years privileges have been extended by Canada to United States halibut fishing vessels on the Pacific Coast. In 1918 there was reciprocation in these privileges in United States ports, but this arrangement was terminated in 1921 when United States war legislation ceased to be effective. In 1942 the United States agreed to extend to Canadian halibut fishermen the same privileges in Alaskan ports which Canada gives United States fishermen in British Columbia fishing ports. This reciprocal arrangement has continued on an annual basis during the last four years.

The Canadian Government would welcome a continuation on a reciprocal basis of these port privileges in 1947. Accordingly, we should be glad to learn whether the United States Government wishes to renew the present arrangement in order that the necessary action may be taken in respect of Canadian ports. I may add that the Canadian authorities are anxious that any permission which may be given should be granted in both countries sufficiently in advance of fishing operations to avoid the difficulties experienced in 1945 by Canadian fishermen who wished to use Alaskan ports.

Dear Mr. St. Laurent,

Two main questions are still outstanding affecting Canadian waters in the Pacific in connection with the Canadian-United States boundary. They are the boundary at Dixon Entrance between Canada and Alaska and the boundary in the Juan de Fuca Strait between Vancouver Island and the State of Washington.

The United States authorities have been pressing for a solution of this problem for the last six years.

On 13th December, 1945, Cabinet approved a settlement of these two questions in the manner described in the draft note† attached to the enclosed letter to Mr. Hart. The actual text of this note was submitted to Cabinet and approved.

On December 14, 1945, the Premier of British Columbia requested that no action be taken without an opportunity being given to his Government to make representations. By letter of December 19th, the Prime Minister gave to the Premier of British Columbia the assurances he had requested.

By a confidential letter of 22nd December to Mr. J. E. Read, the Hon. Ian Mackenzie informed Mr. Read that the Premier of British Columbia was "unalterably opposed" to the suggested changes.

At that time it was decided to let these questions stand for the time being.

In May, 1946, the subject was raised again and it was deemed advisable to await the return of the Prime Minister who was then absent.

Though there have been no developments since May, it would seem inadvisable to allow this matter to remain dormant indefinitely. I am attaching a letter to the Premier of British Columbia enclosing a draft note approved by Cabinet. This letter is submitted for your consideration and signature, and I would be grateful for any comments you may wish to make.

BOUNDARY QUESTIONS AFFECTING CANADIAN WATERS IN THE PACIFIC

1. For the last five years, the United States Government have been pressing for the settlement of long-standing boundary questions affecting Canadian waters in the Pacific.

N.B. Only Comment: Draft note omits "to the north thereof" after words "all land" in para[graph] 3 line 5. L. S. ST. L[AURENT]

2. An informal approach was made by the United States Minister in October, 1940. Preliminary examination of the United States proposals took place, following which negotiations were interrupted in the face of opposition to the Canadian counter-proposals on the part of the Attorney General of British Columbia and the press of that province (August, 1942).

3. Negotiations were later resumed, however, after the United States had requested that the Canadian authorities reconsider their decision to postpone the matter.

4. The questions involved were carefully examined by an interdepartmental committee composed of representatives of the Department of Fisheries, the Department of Justice, the Department of National Defence for Naval Services, the Department of Mines and Resources (International Boundary Commission, the Office of the Surveyor General, and Chief of the Hydrographic Service), and the Department of External Affairs. The committee has drafted Canadian proposals in the form of a draft note, copy of which will be found in Appendix "A"† to this memorandum.

5. The proposals deal with two main questions. The first one is concerned with the waters of Dixon Entrance and is dealt with in Article I of the draft note. This matter has been pending between the two countries for the last forty years, ever since the Line AB (see map in Appendix "D")† was established by the Alaskan Boundary Tribunal in 1903. This Tribunal decided that all lands north of the Line AB would belong to the United States while lands south of the Line would belong to Canada. While Canada has repeatedly claimed sovereignty over the whole of Dixon Entrance (P.C. July 6, 1909, and P.C. May 14, 1904),<sup>1</sup> the United States have consistently refused to accept that contention. On the other hand, while claiming sovereignty over Dixon Entrance, Canada never enforced its sovereignty by exercising jurisdiction over that area in such matters as customs and fisheries. The Canadian courts, including the Supreme Court of Canada, have taken it for granted that the waters of Dixon Entrance were subject to the standard rule of international law whereby sovereignty can only be exercised within a three-mile limit from the coast. It must be said here that, from the point of view of international law, the Canadian contention cannot be substantiated.

6. In the light of these considerations, it is proposed that the waters of Dixon Entrance become historic or national waters of the United States and Canada respectively with a line of demarcation marked B-1-2-3-4, constituting the boundary between the two countries. A precise description of the Line B-1-2-3-4 will be found in the second paragraph of Article I of the draft note. Waters north of the proposed boundary would become national waters of the United States, while waters south of it would become national waters of Canada. However, all waters outside the three-mile limit would be open to vessels, aircraft and nationals of the two countries, while each country would exercise exclusive jurisdiction over the three-mile limit.

7. The second question dealt with in the draft note under Article II relates to the waters of the Strait of Juan de Fuca. The United States have proposed that the international boundary which separates the maritime belts of the two countries within the Fuca Strait be continued from Turning Point 12 (see map in Appendix "C") † at the base line at right angles thereto with an initial bearing of north 86°, 26', 40" west to the high seas. This proposal was deemed acceptable and was approved by the interdepartmental committee.

8. In considering these two questions, it should be borne in mind that the disposition of the Dixon Entrance question might be difficult to justify if challenged by a third government. If challenged, the Canadian Government would be in a position in which it would have to defend the boundary line as established regardless of whether the challenge was directed against this Government or against the Government of the United States. Similarly, the United States Government would have to join in defending it even if the challenge were directed against the Canadian Government. It is a matter in which the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice could be invoked. There does not seem to be very much likelihood of a challenge in the immediate future owing to the pre-occupation of Japan. The disposition of the question relating to the Strait of Juan de Fuca is easier to justify under recognized principles of international law.

9. It is desired to know whether the Canadian Government is agreeable to the outstanding boundary questions in the Pacific being settled in the manner described in the draft note attached.

Dear Mr. Pearson,

The contents of the letter dated October 3, 1946 from the Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs with respect to the continuation on a reciprocal basis of the port privileges extended to Canadian halibut fishing vessels in Alaskan ports and to United States halibut fishing vessels in British Columbia ports were brought to the attention of the Department of State at Washington.

I am now informed, in reply, that the authority under which the United States has, since 1942, granted certain privileges in Alaskan ports to Canadian halibut fishing vessels is found in the Second War Powers Act of March 27, 1942. Under an Act of June 29, 1946 (Public Law 475, 79th Congress, 2d Session) the pertinent provision of the Second War Powers Act and the amendments to the existing law made under such provision shall remain in force only until March 31, 1947, or until such earlier time as may be fixed by the two Houses of Congress by concurrent resolution, or by the President. Therefore, under present legislation the United States cannot extend port privileges in Alaskan ports to Canadian halibut fishing vessels beyond March 31, 1947.

The Department of State would be glad to recommend to the appropriate authorities of the United States Government that these privileges be extended to Canadian halibut fishing vessels until March 31, 1947, if the Canadian Government wishes to request the privileges for that period. It is, of course, possible that the applicable provision of the Second War Powers Act may be extended in effect beyond March 31, 1947, but the Department does not know at this time whether such action will be taken by Congress and, consequently, is not able to assure the Canadian Government that the Department will be in a position to request the appropriate authority of this Government to grant port privileges in Alaska to Canadian halibut fishing vessels for the 1947 season.

It is regretted that while the Department of State understands the Canadian desire to ascertain whether privileges in Alaskan ports will be extended to Canadian halibut fishing vessels in 1947 it is not in a position to give a definite reply at this time.

Sincerely yours,

LEWIS CLARK

Dear Mr. Macdonnell,

The US Army Air Forces, Air Transport Command, has requested authority of the War Department to institute a regular air transport service of three round trips per week as soon as a standard operating procedure can be established between Meeks Field, Iceland, and Ladd Field, Fairbanks, Alaska (total distance 3,200 statute miles).

This service has been approved in principle by the War Department and the State Department, and clearance has been obtained from the Iceland Government.

This letter is written in order to request the concurrence of the Canadian Government. Will you kindly present this matter to the proper authorities and give me, as early as practicable, the concurrence of your Government? It is not expected that any Canadian airfields will be used in this regular service, but, of course, Canadian territory would be flown over.

The purpose of establishing this air transport route, which has been designated "Polaris," using three (3) B-29 airplanes, is as follows:

- a. To gain operation experience in the Arctic.
- b. To determine navigational difficulties and procedures for overcoming same.
- c. To investigate the reliability of communications.
- d. To analyze polar air masses.
- e. To study air mass circulation in Polar regions.

EXTENSION OF LORAN PROGRAM

1. The following extract from the Journal of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, dated April 29th, 1946, is submitted for the consideration of the Cabinet Defence Committee:

"Major General Henry, Senior United States Army Member, presented a request that the Canadian government authorize the continuation until May, 1947, of the experimental program for low frequency Loran in Northern Canada initially set up to assist in air and ground navigation for Exercise Musk-Ox. A copy of his memorandum† is attached as an Appendix to the Journal. (copy appended hereto)

The Board noted that this program involved the operation of the present three transmitter stations at Dawson Creek, Hamlin and Gimli, continued flights of the U.S.A.A.F. B-29 aircraft presently stationed at Edmonton and operation of the necessary monitoring stations as might be agreed upon between the Canadian and United States representatives. The present monitoring stations are shown below:

Yellowknife	}	—operated by R.C.A.F.
Norman Wells
Edmonton
Baker Lake		—operated by Canadian Army
Churchill	}	—operated by R.C.N.
Ottawa
Fairbanks, Alaska		—operated by United States

Under present arrangements, the United States provides all equipment, the personnel to man the transmitter stations and the complete operation of the monitoring station at Fairbanks. Canada undertakes the operation of the remaining monitoring stations and messing, housing and transport of the United States personnel at the transmitter stations.

The Board agreed that the continuation of these joint tests of low frequency Loran was essential in that they were not only of the utmost importance in the development of long range aids to navigation but also valuable in the development of early warning systems, long range guided missiles, etc., and recommended approval of the United States request.

The Secretary of the Canadian Section undertook to transmit the United States request, along with the recommendation of the Board, to the Canadian government for consideration and decision and, in so doing, to stress the necessity of such decision being reached by May 15th."

IMPORTANT

Ottawa, May 4, 1946

I enclose two copies of a memorandum† left with this Department on May 1st by Mr. Lewis Clark, Counselor of the United States Embassy, proposing the establishment of Arctic weather stations. The immediate objectives are:

- (a) In 1946, or as early as practicable, a weather station central to the western Canadian Arctic archipelago.

- (b) In 1947, or as early as practicable, three weather stations on islands along the western portion of the Canadian Arctic archipelago.

In amplifying this memorandum, Mr. Clark explained that while the United States Government would be prepared to establish, maintain and operate these stations independently (and, indeed, were making such a proposal to the Danish Government with regard to a station in Greenland) they assumed that this would not be desired by the Canadian Government in view of its general policy of retaining control of establishments in Canadian territory. The United States Government would therefore be glad to cooperate along either of the following lines:

- (a) The United States to establish and to assist in maintaining the stations which would be under Canadian operation.
- (b) Canada to establish, operate and maintain the stations.

In either case, the United States would expect that Canadian technical standards would meet United States requirements and that United States personnel could be posted to the stations to acquire experience.

Mr. Clark emphasized that his Government wished to work out a programme on a fully cooperative basis and had no thought of interfering in any way with Canadian sovereignty. In view of the need for arriving at an early decision to permit of arrangements being made for supplies and personnel, he asked that the matter be treated as one of urgency. Finally, he said that technical representatives of the United States Departments concerned could come to Canada at short notice to discuss details of these proposals.

It appears to this Department that it would be unwise to allow these stations to be set up entirely under the control of the United States and that, on the other hand, the Canadian Government would not be justified in assuming the whole cost of the programme. Consequently, it appears desirable to work out a compromise under which Canada would retain operational control and make a contribution to the programme, while the United States would provide equipment, supplies and personnel. Before any final decision can be reached, however, it seems essential to have a meeting of technical officers from both countries.

I would suggest that the United States Embassy be informed that the Canadian authorities are prepared to give favourable consideration to these proposals but, before submitting the question to the Government, would like to have a meeting in Canada at an early date with United States officials. I should be glad to have your views and, if you agree, I should like to know the earliest date at which officials of the meteorological service could meet a group from the United States.

SOVEREIGNTY IN THE ARCTIC

A recent paper which has come to our attention prepared by an inter-departmental committee in Washington (the Air Coordinating Committee) indicates the interest displayed in some circles about establishing United States claims to sovereignty in the Arctic. The following extracts are from the report of the Standing Subcommittee on the Arctic:

(a) "Region west of Grant's Land. The region north of Prince Patrick Island and west of Grant's Land is largely unexplored, but several Arctic authorities believe that if any undiscovered islands exist north of Canada they lie in this area. Sir Hubert Wilkins, in searching by air for Levanevsky in March, 1937, reported 'ice islands' about 300 miles northwest of Prince Patrick Island and 'paleocrystic ice' at about latitude 84°, longitude 130°, with a lead 150 miles long in the ice, as evidence of nearby land. Reconnaissance flights from Alaska to these regions could doubtless settle the question.

A primary weather station on any newly discovered island in this vicinity would be a valuable source of information because of its proximity to the North Pole and it would serve as a communication point for trans-polar flights. It would, however, be very difficult to establish and maintain. Surface vessels have never reached this area and aircraft would have to fly comparatively long distances. Employment of gliders to establish and service the base would be desirable.

The sovereignty of newly discovered land in this area would require careful consideration by the State Department. Mr. Stewart, on June 10, 1925, in speaking before the Canadian House of Commons, definitely and officially stated the Canadian claims to include everything, known and unknown, west of the Davis Strait—Baffin Bay—Smith Sound—Robeson Channel—60th Meridian, east of the meridian that divides Alaska from Canada (141°W), and north of the Canadian mainland up to the Pole. The U.S. may not have recognized these claims."

(b) In discussing aircraft flights from Alaska-Canada-Greenland quadrant, it is stated that the following could be accomplished inter alia:

"Afford opportunity for experienced Arctic observers to study the condition of Arctic ice floes for possible evidence of undiscovered land. Only men who have walked over the ice, as well as flown over it, are qualified to obtain adequate data in this manner."

(c) The following recommendation is put forward:

"Weather Station on possible Undiscovered Land in Canadian quadrant. (Discussion, Par. 11 d and 16.)

It is recommended that the ACC ask the State Department whether reported Canadian claims of sovereignty over all known islands and lands that may be discovered in the sector west of Greenland and east of meridian 141 W. northward to the pole, have been officially asserted by that government and, if so, whether the official position of the United States would be to support any claims by this country if land is discovered and occupied by the United States west of Grant's Land, site '(d)' of recommendation #1.

If it is the policy of the United States to support such claims, it is recommended that the Army make flights over the unexplored area west and northwest of Grant's Land to determine whether (as many Arctic authorities believe) islands exist which might be claimed by the United States. In case new claimable land is found, it is recommended that the proper agencies of the Department of Commerce take action to establish a primary weather and magnetic station."

Obviously we shall have to examine carefully the whole question of Arctic sovereignty. In the meantime, it seems to me that two problems require immediate consideration and I should be grateful for your opinions:

(1) We are discussing with the United States the establishment of weather stations in the Western Arctic Archipelago. In view of the discussion mentioned above of whether the United States could claim sovereignty to newly discovered land in this region, I should like your view as to whether, if such land were newly discovered by a United States party, the United States could put forward a valid claim to it.

(2) We have been asked for permission for flights of U.S. Army aircraft between Iceland and Alaska. In view of the discussion mentioned above about looking for possible evidence of undiscovered land, should our permission be qualified in any way to rule out claims based on exploration? (The same question, of course, applies to (1) above.)

Arctic problems are coming more and more to the forefront and it can be anticipated that within the next few years there will be extensive programmes of northern exploration and development in which the United States will either be participating with Canada or will have been given permission to act independently. I am wondering whether, at the outset, we ought not to discuss the sovereignty question with the United States and endeavour to secure their agreement to our claims about Canadian sovereignty.

SOVEREIGNTY IN THE ARCTIC

Further to our conversations of May 7th concerning the above, it is my view that we should not raise any question concerning our sovereignty in the Arctic in advance of necessity. I say this for two reasons:

(a) It would not be wise to indicate that we entertain any doubts with regard to our sovereignty;

(b) We should take steps to consolidate our knowledge of the position before inviting any conversations in the matter.

As suggested yesterday, it would seem that conversations should be had with Mines and Resources and with any other interested Departments with a view [to] ensuring that we have available in consolidated form all material relating to our position in that area.

RESTRICTED

Washington, May 14, 1946

Dear Mr. Macdonnell,

I am writing to you with reference to the desire of the United States Navy Department to engage in certain Arctic operations (outlined below) in the territorial waters of Canada. The objectives of these proposed operations—which have been designated “Operations Nanook”—are (1) the training of U.S. naval personnel in Arctic operations, (2) the recording of detailed hydrographic, meteorological and electromagnetic propagation data, and (3) the conducting of other scientific investigations.

As you know, the United States Weather Bureau is interested in the establishment of Arctic weather stations in the Canadian Arctic Archipelago, and a further objective would be the provision to the United States Weather Bureau of operational and logistic support in the establishment of these weather stations if approved by Canada. It is, however, the desire of the Navy Department to conduct the Arctic operations described below regardless of Weather Bureau participation in the weather stations envisaged.

Since it is understood that the Canadian Government desires to supervise magnetic work in the area, any work of this nature undertaken by the United States will be performed under Canadian supervision. Accordingly, a Canadian observer qualified to make magnetic observations, with such assistants as necessary, will be invited to accompany the expedition. It is desired further to extend an invitation to two Canadian naval officers to participate as observers.

The approximate periods of projected operations will be from 1 July to 1 October in the years 1946 and 1947. It is planned to conduct such preliminary reconnaissance and investigation of land and sea areas in the Viscount Melville Sound-Lancaster Sound area as practicable during the summer of 1946, to aid in planning more extensive operations in the summer of 1947 and to obtain information of value to the operating forces relative to Arctic operations.

Captain Richard H. Cruzen, USN, will command the expedition. Ships and their commanding officers are listed below:

- CGC North Wind, U.S. Coast Guard Ice Breaker, Captain Richard Hoyle, USCG, Commanding
- USS Whitewood, Small net layer altered for Arctic duty,
Lieutenant Commander William H. Daly, USN, Commanding
- USS Alcona, AK<sup>1</sup>
Captain Robert J. Esslinger, USN, Commanding

USS Beltrami, AK
 Commander Gerald L. Ketchum, USN, Commanding
 USS Atule, Submarine,
 Commander John B. Maurer, USN, Commanding

If additional ships are designated at a later date, separate requests for diplomatic clearance will be submitted.

Shipborne aircraft will operate from at least two of the ships and will be used to conduct reconnaissance of ice conditions and to obtain data on flight operations in the Arctic.

I would appreciate it if you would bring this matter to the attention of the appropriate authorities as urgently as possible in order that the time schedule above-mentioned may be adhered to if this matter is approved. Should a meeting in Ottawa between Canadian and United States officials on the proposed weather station program be held, it would be arranged for Navy Department representatives to be present although, as above mentioned, it is our desire to carry out the operations outlined in this letter irrespective of decisions reached on the weather program.

Yours sincerely,

J. GRAHAM PARSONS

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, May 20, 1946

Dear Mr. Macdonnell,

I have just received the minutes of the meeting held last Friday to discuss the United States proposals to establish weather stations in the Canadian Arctic. I realize, that as intimated at the close of the Canadian section of the meeting, these minutes are intended only to be a brief summary of what was said. I am, however, a trifle worried over the condensation of my own remarks about the question of sovereignty. It would appear that this has not been given sufficient emphasis in the minutes.

Following the meeting, while the matter was still fresh in my mind, I dictated the enclosed report for our Director, on page 5 of which are set forth the views I expressed in compliance with instructions given me before attending the meeting. In transmitting my report to his Deputy Minister (Dr. Camsell), the Director added the following comment:

"We share your view that Canada should establish and operate any necessary stations even if U.S. official publications admit Canada's sovereignty. This looks like one of those defence(?) proposals that seem as though we were getting everything for nothing at the beginning and then we wake up after a while to find that the U.S. Senate has turned everything upside down and that the U.S. diplomats are back again to ask us to pay for work we could have done better and more cheaply ourselves."

I am furnishing you with this information in order that you may see that this Department takes a rather more serious view of the sovereignty aspect connected with the establishment of the proposed weather stations than appears in the official minutes of the meeting.

Yours very truly,

J. G. WRIGHT

Ottawa, May 18, 1946

Yesterday I attended a meeting in Room 123, East Block, which convened at 3:00 P.M., to discuss with representatives of the United States Government a proposal to establish weather stations in the Canadian Arctic. Mr. R. M. Macdonnell of External Affairs was Chairman. Other Canadians present included Mr. A. Thompson, Assistant Controller, Meteorological Service and Mr. Kennedy of the same service; G/C Bradshaw and one other officer from the R.C.A.F., two officers and a civilian from the Canadian Navy; Mr. Moore, Department of Transport; Mr. J. M. Wardle, Surveys and Engineering Branch. The American representatives were Mr. L. Clark, Counsel[or], U.S. Embassy; Colonel Woods, Assistant Military Attaché, U.S. Embassy; Colonel Hubbard, Technical Adviser of the U.S. Weather Bureau; Mr. Moxon, Chief U.S. Weather Bureau; Captain Cruzen, U.S. Navy; and a Colonel representing the U.S.A.A.F.

Mr. Macdonnell outlined the purpose of the meeting which was apparently called on rather short notice and asked the Americans to state their case. Mr. Clark made a few introductory remarks and introduced Colonel Hubbard who, he said, had a very full grasp of the whole subject. (It will be recalled that Colonel Hubbard has been interested in this subject for some years and has made several trips to this office. It is understood he was largely responsible for getting the Bill through Congress covering the establishment of weather stations in foreign countries.) The remarks which follow are not verbatim and are intended only as a summary of what each speaker said.

Colonel Hubbard spent some time outlining the great need for additional weather stations in the Arctic. These are necessary to improve the forecasting service, particularly for the North Atlantic, to assist long-range forecasting, to provide essential information for any flying in the far north and for general scientific meteorological studies. The Russians have carried on extensive studies in this field on their side of the Polar Basin and it is highly desirable that something be done on the North American side. It was proposed to establish two main stations in the north which would provide a complete range of meteorological records including upper air studies. One of these would be at or near Winter Harbour, Melville Island, and the other would be at Thule, Greenland. In addition, he suggested three advance weather stations supported entirely by aircraft which would operate in conjunction with the main stations. One of these would be on north-west Banks Island, one on Prince Patrick Island and the other on the west side of Ellesmere Island, or possibly on Axel Heiberg Island.

The American Navy has offered to lay down all supplies and equipment at both Thule and Winter Harbour this summer and the Air Force has agreed to do the necessary flying including the installation and servicing of the advance stations. The Congress Bill authorizing the United States Weather Bureau to seek the co-operation of foreign governments in the establishing of weather stations did not provide any funds. However, there are some funds available in several appropriations during the present fiscal year and for the early part of 1947. After that the future is uncertain. The American authorities are anxious to use the available funds now when they exist. This is the reason for the urgency in deciding the issue at this time. The American Navy is ready to operate this season and put in the supplies and the Army Air Force is ready to start at once on reconnaissance flights to determine suitable locations. All supplies for this expedition must be ready by July 1, hence the reason for haste.

Mr. Moxon (Weather Bureau) The U.S. Weather Bureau is all for co-operation and would be glad to see the proposed venture undertaken as a joint operation. The main use of the Arctic weather stations would be in the science of meteorology and extending the term of weather forecasts.

Mr. Macdonnell What reason is there for doing this now rather than in 1948 or 1950?

Col. Hubbard Funds are available now and everyone agrees on the desirability of more stations in the Arctic. We now have the support of the U.S. Army and Navy and opportunity is knocking; the Budget situation for the future is uncertain.

Mr. Clark The international political situation at the present time is important. Those on the other side of the Arctic are very active. Because of this we can get funds at the present time and later this may not be possible.

Dr. Thompson Such stations would be of great value to meteorology but not necessarily of immediate value for forecasting in the south. They would be good for trans-polar flights and local flying and, possibly, for trans-Atlantic flights.

Are the staff and suitable instruments available for such an extensive project?

Col. Hubbard The first year would be largely experimental. The start would be made as a sort of beach-head for the whole operation based on experience gained at existing northern stations. The Melville Island station would require ten men consisting of an Officer in Charge; three meteorologists; two forecasters; two radio operators; one mechanic; one cook. The three advance stations would require a total of 80 tons to be flown in by air to outfit them for the first eighteen months. The staff at each advance station would consist of two meteorological and two radio men and one cook.

G/C Bradshaw (R.C.A.F.) expressed some differences of opinion in regard to the weight of supplies required for each station supported by air. He said the movement of aircraft in the Arctic was controlled by weather forecasts. Trimetrogon photography in the Arctic will depend largely on such forecasts. In the past, many flights have been useless because the weather was unsatisfactory for photography when the plane reached the scene of action.

Dr. Thompson We know little about Arctic meteorology. The proposed stations would provide basic information. Can the United States get the personnel?

Col. Hubbard and Mr. Moxon We have many war-trained men available.

Mr. Macdonnell Can you give us any budgetary figures?

Col. Hubbard A Bill has now passed Congress and is on the President's desk authorizing $265,000 in the next two months. The Weather Bureau also has some funds, probably $100,000, for salaries. War supplies and equipment will be made available without cost. The Navy will contribute the transportation of equipment and supplies and the Seabees will do the construction.

Capt. Cruzen (U.S.N.) The U.S. Navy is carrying on cold weather research and is sending ships to the Arctic for this study. Vessels have recently been operating off the coast of Greenland and propose to enter Baffin Bay. These studies require weather service to operate efficiently. For establishing the two main weather stations it is proposed to use two cargo ships, 7,000 tons each, an ice-breaker, a small aircraft carrier, and a submarine.

Col. Woods Colonel Woods travelled with "Operation Musk-Ox" and saw Captain Larsen of the St. Roch at Cambridge Bay. Captain Larsen expressed the opinion that he could take the St. Roch to Viscount Melville Sound any summer.

U.S.A.A.F. rep. B-29's would be used for reconnaissance and photography and C-54's for supplies. Catalina's for sounding and scouting for sites. These planes would operate from Alaska. For work on the Thule station the planes would operate from U.S. bases in Greenland. There will be a formal request for R.C.A.F. representatives to accompany the flights in the Canadian Arctic. The United States would look after all air rescue work.

Colonel Hubbard suggested Bellanca planes for scouting for landing sites for large planes.

Mr. Macdonnell What steps would be taken immediately if the project were approved by Canada?

Col. Hubbard There are only forty-five days in which to carry out all procurement. They would start Monday. The ships would have to be loaded and get to Melville Island about August 20 to get the station built and the ships out by about the first week in September. Weather observations would start about six weeks afterwards. The Air Force would fly reconnaissance before the ice fails this spring, that is, at once, covering north-east Banks Island, Prince Patrick Island, and Grant's Land, studying the topography, lakes, beaches, etc., for suitable sites for the weather stations. In August it would be possible to get in by ship and make more intensive studies of the potential sites selected. If Canada can supply the personnel for these weather stations it would be satisfactory.

Mr. Davis (R.C.N.) thought there should be an ionosphere station at Winter Harbour.

Col Hubbard agreed but thought that this would not be possible this year. Radio Communications from Winter Harbour would go through Fairbanks. The Thule station would communicate by beam radio through Winter Harbour.

There followed a lot of technical discussion about the methods of equipping and operating the stations and about 5:00 P.M. Mr. Macdonnell closed the discussion by thanking the Americans for their very able presentation of the subject. He pointed out that as this subject had come up very hurriedly, Canada would require a little time to study the matter. He promised as prompt a reply as possible. He asked the Canadian representatives to remain for a further discussion after the Americans left.

The Canadian session lasted from 5:00 to 6:00 P.M. and Mr. Macdonnell called for an expression of views. I stated that while I had said nothing on the matter while the Americans were present, the Northwest Territories Council was concerned about the aspect of sovereignty in these remote sections of the Canadian Arctic Archipelago since most of these stations were going to areas where our claims on the basis of actual occupation were very weak. The sector principle on which our claims are largely based has never been accepted internationally and the Council has always taken the view that any projects involving residence in these northern areas should be operated by Canada. In the case of The Arctic Institute of North America we had decided to erect the necessary research stations ourselves so that we would have the complete control over foreigners using them. In the case of the American air bases in the Arctic, Canada recently spent some $31,000,000 presumably to extinguish any American rights and it would seem rather unwise from the point of view of sovereignty to authorize the Americans to enter into independent occupation of these weather stations. It was felt that the stations should at least be manned and operated by Canadians as part of a co-operative effort even although the United States might be permitted to contribute a large part of the cost of the project.

G/C Bradshaw hoped that the project would not be turned down on the basis of the sovereignty question as he felt there was very great need of these stations for air activity in view of the rather disturbing political situation at the present time. Dr. Thompson also hoped that the project could be gone ahead with but doubted very much as to whether Canada could find sufficient qualified personnel to man the stations. I suggested that if we scraped the bottom of the barrel and secured the co-operation of the Meteorological Service and the Army, Navy and Air Force, we could surely get enough technicians to take care of the matter. I felt that the sovereignty question should be definitely kept in mind in reaching any decision on this project.

It was decided that Dr. Thompson would obtain further particulars from his American confreres in the evening in regard to the nature of the personnel which would be required and report back to Mr. Macdonnell this morning. Mr. Macdonnell would have brief minutes prepared of the meeting and a draft of the proposed reply to the Americans for circulation to the various departments interested. Each department would be asked to express their opinion on the proposed draft before it was submitted for the consideration of the Cabinet.

There is attached a paper which the Army has done on sovereignty in the Arctic. I understand that it is largely the work of General Spry. This paper is to be considered by Cabinet Committee when the question of Arctic weather stations is discussed along with the paper prepared by this Department.<sup>1</sup>

I am in agreement with the conclusions in paragraphs 27 and 28, although I am afraid that the Government may regard them more as "ideal" than as "working" solutions. If Canada provides the real estate, the fixed installations and the administration of northern defence projects, leaving to the United States the provision of equipment and supplies, it will give us some voice in the course of events. Otherwise, we will be faced with very strong pressure from United States to allow them to move in and do as they please. Unfortunately, even the relatively modest "recommended working solution" is likely to involve heavy expenditures which will increase as the years go by unless the international situation improves. The decision is essentially a political one, but I should say that the Government's wartime policy (which dates from about the beginning of 1944) of accepting financial and other responsibility for United States defence projects in Canada has met with general approval.<sup>1</sup>

RELATION TO JOINT DEFENCE UNDERTAKINGS

INTRODUCTORY

1. The United States Government have recently requested Canadian approval for an Arctic Weather Station programme which they have put forward. This and other US proposals in connection with defence may involve the question of Canada's claim to sovereignty over territories lying within the "Canadian sector" of the Arctic.

In glancing through the memorandum I am inclined to think Spry underestimates the amount of action taken in the past to fortify Canadian claims in the Arctic. ODS<sup>2</sup>, with the Interior Dept., gave the matter a lot of attention, say from 1925 to 1930. The Minister of the Interior made a public statement about 1925 claiming the sector to the Pole; the Canadian Government made a saw-off with Norway<sup>3</sup> by which we pensioned their Capt. Sverdrup and they accepted the view that the Sverdrup Islands are Canadian<sup>4</sup>; and there was a lot of activity by R.C.M.P. and Post Office and Interior in setting up posts on Ellesmere Island, touring the country and making U.S. explorers get permits.

They declined to accept the sector theory, I see.

The various proposals which have to date been advanced fall into two distinct categories, i.e.,

(a) Establishment in the Arctic or Sub-Arctic of static installations.

These include installations such as those contemplated in the Weather Station programme, or installations such as might be developed in conjunction with the proposed Arctic Experimental Station based on Churchill.

(b) Proposals to carry out manoeuvres or training exercises by United States troops on Canadian territory.

Permission has been requested for 500 US Army troops to conduct a training exercise during the coming winter under sub-Arctic conditions in some training area similar to Shilo. The most recent request is for a clearance to permit the landing of a party of approximately 28 US Marines for a period of about one month during the summer of 1946 in the vicinity of North Devon Island, in connection with Operation NANOOK.

OBJECT OF THIS PAPER

2. This paper briefly considers the possible effect of such proposals on Canadian sovereignty over her Arctic Territories, in order to determine how United States requirements in the Arctic may best be met without consequent infringement of sovereignty.

NATURE OF SOVEREIGNTY CLAIMED

3. Sovereignty itself may be roughly defined as power, right or authority over a clearly defined and delimited area. In the case of the Canadian Arctic definite sovereignty is asserted, in right of Canada, over all known land masses and islands within the "Canadian sector" of the Arctic. However these claims are largely based either on contiguity to continental Canada, or on original discovery and exploration, (principally by British explorers). Due to the desolate nature of the areas in question, these claims have little support on the grounds of effective occupation, settlement or development. Thus, while Canada's claims to sovereignty to these regions have not heretofore been seriously challenged, they are at best somewhat tenuous and weak.

POSSIBILITIES OF FOREIGN INTRUSION

4. However, the fact that these claims have not been seriously challenged in the past does not mean that this fortunate situation will continue indefinitely into the future. In the past these regions represented little but empty space, and their very isolation preserved them from any significant intrusion. Today they have become suddenly transferred into regions of strategic importance, not to Canada alone but to such great powers as have frontiers within the Arctic circle. At the same time it should be borne in mind that the Canadian Arctic represents only a relatively small sector of the entire Arctic regions. The larger part of the remaining area lies within a "sector" based on the continental land mass of one other great power.

5. Moreover, the strategic importance which these regions have assumed is not of a purely military nature alone. The Arctic seems destined to become a crossroads of strategic international civil air routes, which may in itself stimulate the commercial exploitation of latent resources in this area.

6. From the military standpoint, the strategic value of the Canadian Arctic is not significant only from the standpoint of the defence of the North American continent. Its strategic value would certainly be given full recognition in any designs which may be made by a great power developing hostile intentions against this continent. It is not unreasonable, therefore, to anticipate that, even in peace-time, attempts may be made by foreign interest to gain foot-holds (perhaps on a commercial basis) within this region, or to secure information of military value.

7. Thus commercial developments consequent upon civil aviation activities may lead to foreign intrusion. For to the extent that commercial flying over this area increases, and commercial development is stimulated, so will there be a corresponding requirement for the establishment of facilities of one sort or another in these hitherto neglected regions. It is not outside the range of possibility that the growing need for such facilities might be seized upon by a foreign power as a pretext for making demands for right of entrance into the Canadian Arctic or for the establishment of settlements or for other concessions. While ostensibly such undertakings would be for purely civil or commercial purposes, once they were established they could readily be exploited for military purposes connected with possible offensive designs.

8. A further possibility of foreign intrusion lies in the fact that although Canadian sovereignty is assumed over the entire "Canadian sector" of the Arctic considerable portions of this theoretical "sector" remain totally unexplored. With the development of Arctic aviation and the employment of radar search methods there is a possibility that hitherto unknown islands may be discovered within the Canadian sector by a foreign power, and claim laid to them by right of discovery and primary occupation. Canada might, in this case, find it most difficult to successfully contest such claims.

9. Moreover, even in the case of islands in the Canadian Arctic Archipelago already discovered and at least partially charted, it cannot be assumed that Canada's claims to sovereignty will continue to go unchallenged. It is true that the United States tacitly acknowledges Canadian sovereignty over these discovered islands, as implied by the considered and consistent practice of the United States Government in employing, in official correspondence with the Canadian Government, such terminology as "the Canadian Arctic Archipelago".

10. However, it does not follow from this that another great power possessing strategic interest in Polar regions would under all circumstances necessarily accept Canada's claims. Any step which would constitute a clear-cut and initial compromise of Canadian sovereignty in the Arctic, such as a real intrusion of the United States might be made the occasion of similar claims or demands by another great power.

11. Thus it is of great importance that Canada should carefully safeguard her sovereignty in the Arctic at all points and at all times, lest the acceptance of an initial infringement of her sovereignty invalidate her entire claim, and open the way to the intrusion of foreign interests of a nature which might create an ultimate threat to national security. At the same time it should not be forgotten that the Canadian Arctic is an integral part of the North American continent and her exclusive claims to sovereignty must be fitted into the overall requirements of continental security and defence. This Arctic area is considered as vital to the United States as a defence frontier as to Canada, and its military security requires closely coordinated action.

12. It follows from this that essential facilities must be permitted to the United States to enable them to practise during peace-time the tasks which it may be jointly agreed they would undertake in war. Such facilities involve not only the establishment of static installations of a military or quasi-military type, but also the conduct of military exercises and manoeuvres on Canadian territory in the Arctic.

13. However, careful attention should be given to the form in which such permission is granted and to the manner in which such undertakings are carried out. The introduction of foreign permanent establishments (even those of the United States) would be attended by a consequent weakening of Canada's sovereignty,—a contingency which cannot be accepted in view of the corresponding weakness of military security which would result.

14. The problem is thus seen to devolve into finding a suitable modus operandi. This must permit the granting of essential facilities and rights to the United States, without any consequent infringement of Canadian sovereignty of a nature which would give an opening to another power (not associated with Canada in the defence of the North American continent) to make similar demands.

15. The solution appears to lie in the application of the principle of regional defence, in consonance with the spirit of the UNO Charter, to such concessions as may be granted to the United States. At the same time Canada should retain title and control of all military establishments on her own soil, and the "joint" nature of all cooperative undertakings should be given due emphasis at all times. This should effectively debar similar demands which might be preferred by another power, as the fundamental basis of agreed arrangements with the United States in North American continental defence, which is by its nature exclusive.

16. It must, however, be admitted that joint defence undertakings for the purpose of regional defence may impose a heavy financial burden upon Canada. The United States will not easily be deterred from putting forward demands for the establishment of whatever military installations she deems necessary in the interest of her own vital security, on a scale more suited to her vast resources and scale of operations than to Canada's. It can therefore be anticipated, that in the interest of maintaining friendly relationships with the United States, and thus safeguarding her own sovereignty, Canada will be forced by gradually increasing pressure to accept financial and manpower commitments which may be considerably above the scale of what is considered to be necessary from the standpoint of Canadian defence alone.

FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES FOR MAINTAINING CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY

17. To summarize the foregoing argument:—it may be laid down as a general principle, that, if continuance of Canadian sovereignty over her Arctic territories is to be guaranteed, no foreign military or quasi-military installations should be established in peace-time within such territories.

18. In view of the weakness of Canadian claims to this region, this principle should be applied consistently even to a power with which Canada may share relationships of a most friendly and enduring nature, such as the United States. In any concessions which may be made the greatest care should be taken to fully safeguard Canadian sovereignty, as otherwise another great power may be presented with sufficient and justifiable grounds for pressing similar demands.

19. However, Canada can no longer reasonably expect to maintain her Arctic territories in state of vacuum, and hope at the same time to preserve her sovereignty over them in absentia. If her somewhat tenuous claims to these territories is to be guaranteed in the face of the direct and urgent interest which the United States has expressed in the development of facilities in this region considered by her to be essential, then it follows that she must be prepared to carry out such development by herself or with a calculated degree of assistance. In brief, Canada must now either herself provide essential facilities and services in her Arctic territories or provide them cooperatively, or abandon almost all substantial basis to her claims upon them.

THE THEORETICALLY IDEAL SOLUTION

20. A continued guarantee of Canadian sovereignty over her Arctic territories may thus entail the satisfaction of legitimate demands for the development in these regions of essential facilities and services. Insofar as probable United States requirements are concerned, it may be safely anticipated that these will involve weather stations, early-warning systems, and possibly military air bases.

21. The Canadian Government has already indicated that it desires to be presented with a coordinated picture of United States requirements in the Far North. This is being compiled in the form of a schedule of tasks and annexes now being developed by the Canadian-United States Joint Planners. This plan, if and when it is approved by the two governments concerned, will then represent those developments considered as "essential".

22. However, it may well be that the provision of such essential facilities in Canada will be so heavy a burden as to be literally beyond purely Canadian resources.

23. If such is the case, the ideal solution, as outlined above will not be feasible.

RECOMMENDED WORKING SOLUTION

24. This raises the question of the extent to which a compromise with the ideal may be possible, which being based on a cooperative undertaking would still eliminate any actual foreign intrusion of a nature which would constitute an invasion or infringement of Canadian sovereignty, and would at the same time offset possible demands by a power other than the United States.

25. If United States requirements are to be effectively met on the basis of cooperative undertakings this should be done in the form of joint defence measures. The nature of certain of the proposals already made, (and those anticipated) precludes the possibility of maintaining the fiction that they are purely "scientific" or "research" programmes.

26. It is suggested that measures such as those proposed should be frankly carried out as part of a Canada-United States Joint Defence undertaking constituting a regional defence arrangement within the framework of the United Nations Organization. To this end, an appropriate statement based on Recommendation Thirty-Five of the Permanent Joint Defence Board (when ultimately approved) should be tabled with the Security Council of the UNO. This would make it clear that such Joint Defence measures were intended as a contribution to world peace and were being placed under the aegis of the UNO.

27. However, at the same time, Canadian sovereignty in the Arctic should be carefully safeguarded by the adoption of the following principles and their consistent practice.

(a) In the case of Static Installations

(i) Should any base or military or quasi-military establishment be set up in the Canadian Arctic at the request of the United States, full title and control should be retained by Canada, and this fact should be well publicized.

(ii) While acceptance of United States facilities and equipment and the assistance of United States technical personnel might be necessary in order to establish and develop such projects, a majority of the personnel employed should be Canadian.

(b) In the case of Troop Manoeuvres and Exercises

(i) Before any body of United States Army, Navy or Marine Forces are allowed to conduct manoeuvres or training exercises or given right of transit upon or through Canadian territory, specific permission should be obtained of the Canadian Government in every instance.

(ii) Such exercises should, in every case, be of a joint nature even though Canadian representation is largely in token form.<sup>1</sup>

(iii) Due emphasis should be paid in public statements to their "joint" nature.

28. In the specific case of the Arctic Weather Station programme, for which approval is now requested by the United States, it may be necessary in the initial stages to make very considerable use both of United States facilities and equipment and United States technical personnel in order to establish them. However, from the very first a certain number of Canadian personnel should be included, and United States personnel should be gradually replaced by Canadian personnel until United States personnel represent a minority.

UNITED STATES PROPOSALS FOR AN ARCTIC WEATHER STATION PROGRAMME

1. On May 1st, the United States Embassy left with this Department a memorandum requesting Canadian approval for an Arctic Weather Station programme. The objectives of this programme are:

(a) "The establishment by means of surface ships and with air support as necessary, during 1946 or at as early a date as practicable of a weather station central to the Western Canadian Arctic Archipelago; this station to require an initial basic weather station staff of ten persons, with provisions for not more than ten attached specialists and additional provisions for transients engaged on specific operations as below; and to consist of housing and camp keeping facilities, meteorological parts, radio equipment and aviation supplies.

(b) "The establishment by means of air transportation and by surface shipping or other means as may be found practicable, during 1947 or at as early a date as practicable, of three weather stations on islands along the western portion of the Canadian Arctic archipelago. These stations are to require a basic weather staff of five persons with provisions for not more than five attached specialists; and to consist of necessary housing and camp keeping facilities, meteorological parts, radio equipment and aviation supplies.

2. The memorandum stated that it is the view of the Department of State that the establishment of the proposed Arctic Weather Stations is necessary to improve weather forecasting in the United States, Canada and the North Atlantic area generally, for domestic purposes and for international civil aviation activities and also for the purpose of meeting the requirements of the Service Departments of the two Governments.

3. On May 18 a meeting was held in Ottawa of Canadian and United States representatives to discuss these proposals. Mr. C. J. Hubbard, (U.S.A.), who has been credited with stimulating interest in the Arctic in both the Weather Bureau and in Congress, outlined the plan in some detail. It is proposed that two main stations be established one in Greenland and one in Canada, the Canadian Station to be on Melville Island close to Winter Harbour. Small advance stations would be placed on Banks Island, Prince Patrick and on either Ellesmere or Axel Heiberg. He estimated that $465,000.00 would be required annually to finance the project. Sufficient funds are now available in the United States to carry out this year's plan. The United States Weather Bureau has available more than enough trained personnel to man all the proposed stations.

4. If the main station of Melville Island is to be established this year, ships must be ready to sail not later than July 15. Before that time aerial reconnaissance would have to be carried out in the general area where the stations would be set up. Owing to this difficult time table, the United States is pressing for an early answer to their proposals.

5. The United States recommendations have been discussed by representatives of the Departments of Mines and Resources, Transport, National Defence (Naval Services, Army and Air) and External Affairs. The Department of Mines and Resources has expressed considerable concern about adequate guarantees of Canadian sovereignty in areas where our claims on the basis of occupation are very weak. They feel that it would be advisable to have as large as possible a representation of Canadian personnel on the weather stations although the Department of Transport believes that it would be difficult to find on short notice more than very few meteorologists trained for this work. All Departments are agreed on the advisability of more complete weather information in the Arctic where heretofore there has been almost complete ignorance of meteorological phenomena.

A. Advantages of the United States Plan

1—It would supply meteorological information which is needed now for civil aviation.

2—It would supply meteorological information which will be needed in the future should any of the Service Departments undertake exercises in the far North.

3—Weather Stations in the Arctic would supply a base from which general topographical and other information on the Arctic could be gained; at present much of this area is little known or not known at all.

4—Canadian occupation of the Arctic areas would forestall encroachment by foreign powers.

B. Disadvantages of the United States Plan

1—Should the United States carry out their programme without Canadian participation, Canadian sovereignty might be diminished if not endangered by:

(a) claims by the United States to territory which is assumed to belong to Canada under the Sector Theory.

(b) claims to air rights on the basis of development: such claims were widely voiced in the United States when that country built airfields in Canada during the war.

2—Extensive Canadian collaboration in the plan would involve considerable expense.

C. Possible Courses of Action

1—Approval might be given for the United States to carry out all of its programme alone. This would appear to be undesirable on the grounds of sovereignty.

2—Canada might offer to undertake the entire programme herself. The great expense involved would appear to make this impracticable.

3—Canada might refuse permission to the United States to undertake the programme. If this were done the obvious need for further meteorological information in the Arctic as well as the present active interest in this area would probably result in strong pressure from the United States which would be difficult to ignore.

4—The United States might be informed that Canada wishes to defer action until the Joint Planning Groups established by the P.J.B.D. are in a position to make recommendations on all phases of collaboration between the United States and Canada. It should be noted here that if a decision is not given in a short time, it will be impossible to carry out any part of the programme during 1946. Both for budgetary reasons and because of current public interest in the Arctic which is in part attributable to the international situation it would appear to be more difficult for the United States to start the programme in 1947 than now. Deferring a decision at this time would therefore have many of the disadvantages of refusing the United States permission to carry out any of the programme at all.

5—Approval might be given immediately for the United States to carry out this programme with the stipulation that it should be a joint project with the participation of as many Canadian experts as can be made available by July 15. Although only a token number might be available, it would make it easier for Canada to insist on equal representation from the two countries in 1947. Such a compromise proposal would not involve Canada in as much expense as the assumption of entire responsibility for the programme, but would safeguard the Canadian interest. It would also give the Department of Transport time to find and train skilled meteorologists before next year. During the coming months, the Service Departments could explore means of cooperation in the programme by such measures as the provision of ships or aircraft which would increase Canadian participation without assuming liability for a greater share of the expenses than we could reasonably bear.

6—The Department of Transport, the Departments of National Defence, (Naval Services, Army and Air) and this Department recommend that course of action No. 5 should be adopted. The Department of Mines and Resources also agrees to this recommendation subject to the following provisions:

the stations should be recognized as Canadian established under a co-operative effort, with the United States furnishing equipment and undertaking construction on the understanding that no vested interest or claim for reimbursement is thereby established by the United States;

United States personnel may be used with the distinct understanding that they are to be replaced by Canadians as soon as such become available; the annual cost of maintenance should be shared on a basis determined by the relative advantages to both countries;

foreign scientists on the stations would be subject to the ordinances of the Northwest Territories; in the event of the United States withdrawal Canada reserves the right to discontinue the stations or operate them on a reduced scale.

The Department of Mines and Resources also suggests that a clear and definite understanding should be made that the establishment of the stations does not affect Canadian sovereignty. The United States has repeatedly given the oral assurance that Canadian sovereignty is not, and will not, be questioned because of the establishment of these stations. It is, therefore, the view of this Department that it would be unwise to insist on a formal assurance of respect for Canadian sovereignty in this area at this time lest it give any indication of doubt on our side of the validity of our claim to any part of the undeveloped lands in the Canadian sector.

P.J.B.D.; UNITED STATES REQUEST TO ESTABLISH AIR TRANSPORT BETWEEN ICELAND AND ALASKA

1. In accordance with the direction of the Cabinet Defence Committee at their meeting of May 8th, 1946, the Chiefs of Staff, at their meeting of May 21st, 1946, discussed the United States request to fly over Canadian territory in the establishment of an air transport service between Ladd Field, Fairbanks, Alaska and Meeks Field, Iceland.

2. They considered that, since these proposed flights would be primarily concerned with gaining experience in the operation of long range aircraft in the Arctic and the investigation and analysis of matters relating thereto, the establishment of this air route would prove advantageous in the development of Arctic flying and therefore, Canadian interests would benefit by experience gained by the United States in this field. Since, in the past, it has been considered that exercises conducted in the North have been over-publicized, they considered it advisable to curb publicity on these proposed flights as much as possible.

3. The Committee therefore recommends to the Cabinet Defence Committee

(a) that permission be given to the United States to fly over Canadian territory on the proposed flights between Ladd Field, Fairbanks, Alaska and Meeks Field, Iceland;

(b) that, as far as practicable, these flights should be regarded as a matter of routine and publicity restricted to a minimum; and

(c) that the United States authorities be advised that Canada would welcome the opportunity to have observers participate in these flights, as experience gained in this field would be of considerable mutual benefit.

Washington, June 5, 1946

Dear Mr. Wrong,

I have received your letter of June 1st† with the memorandum for the Cabinet Defence Committee on the United States proposals for an Arctic weather station programme, which I have read with much interest.

From every political point of view I should think it would be desirable that the Canadian Government construct, finance and maintain all meteorological stations on its territory which it considers to be required. The memorandum states that the great expense involved would appear to make this impracticable. I am unable to comment on this because there are no figures in the memorandum as to what this amount would be. All that is given is an estimate that $465,000 would be required annually to finance the project; that is, I suppose, to maintain the stations when they are constructed. No amount for capital cost is suggested.

I think that the preoccupation of the Canadian authorities with the effect on Canadian sovereignty in the area in question of a programme carried out by the United States, or even jointly by the two governments, is wise and understandable. I am wondering whether we could not take advantage of the present situation to secure from the United States Government public recognition of our sovereignty of the total area above our northern coasts, based on the sector principle. The memorandum feels that this is not necessary, and even possibly inadvisable, because insistence on a formal assurance of respect for Canadian sovereignty might indicate doubt on our side of the validity of our claim to such sovereignty. Without attempting to insist on anything, I think we might persuade the United States authorities that it would be in their own interest at this time to reinforce our claim to the area under the sector principle. Their hesitations in the past have been inspired, no doubt, by a feeling that they might conceivably wish at some future time to occupy some of this area themselves, or at least to establish certain facilities thereon, which would be more difficult if our sovereignty had been formally recognized by them. Nevertheless, it might be pointed out to them that, as long as this question remains undetermined in international law, there is always the possibility of some other country, notably Russia, establishing meteorological and other stations in that area on islands that have not been used or occupied by any other country. An open and formal statement on some suitable occasion by the United States that Canada's sovereignty over this area is recognized might remove the possibility of such a contingency; or at least make it more difficult to bring it about. The deterrent effect that this would have on other states would, it could be argued, be of much greater value to the United States than keeping the position uncertain because of a possible desire on its own part to exploit that uncertainty in the future. I feel that if I were authorized to mention this matter informally to the State Department there would be a good possibility of prevailing on them to adopt this view and take the necessary action. If you agree, therefore, I would be glad to try this on an entirely exploratory and informal basis. If it were done in this way, I do not see that we would have anything to lose and there might be something to gain.

Yours sincerely,

Dear General Henry,

In your letter of April 30 you enquired whether the Canadian Government would concur in a proposal that the United States Army Air Forces institute a regular air transport service between Iceland and Alaska.

I am now able to inform you that the concurrence of the Canadian Government has been given. The Government regard it as desirable, however, that the flights be treated as a matter of routine and that publicity be kept to a minimum.

In addition it would be appreciated if an opportunity could be provided for the participation of Canadian observers in the flights in order to gain experience of mutual benefit.

Ottawa, June 14, 1946

Dear Air Marshal Leckie,

Among the items dealt with by the Cabinet at their meeting of June 12th, the following decision is of interest to the Chiefs of Staff:

The Secretary presented a request submitted through the U.S. Embassy for permission to establish an Arctic weather station at Melville Island in the Canadian Arctic, as the initial part of a programme developed by the U.S. The second part called for the establishment, during 1947, of three small advance stations in the Canadian Arctic Archipelago.

The Cabinet Defence Committee had considered the proposal and had favoured delaying decision until next year. If, however, the U.S. government pressed the matter, the Committee had recommended that the government authorize the U.S. to proceed, subject to the following conditions:

(a) that the project should be recognized as a joint undertaking carried out under civilian rather than military auspices, and that the United States furnish equipment and accommodation;

(b) that the majority of personnel employed in the operation be Canadian and, if these are not available in the numbers required, that U.S. personnel be used with the understanding that they may be replaced by Canadian [personnel] as soon as such become available;

(c) that Canada should have the right to take over the installations at any time upon payment of the cost involved;

(d) that U.S. personnel on the stations be subject to the ordinances of the Northwest Territories, and that the requirements of the Department of National Health and Welfare for the protection of the health of the Eskimos be met; and

(e) that this authority be regarded as a temporary one, and that the whole matter be subject to review in conjunction with the joint Canadian-U.S. defence plan.

The Cabinet, after considerable discussion, agreed to defer a decision in this matter until the next regular meeting.

I am sending copies of this letter to the Chief of the General Staff and the Chief of the Naval Staff for their information.

Yours sincerely,

Dear Mr. Wrong,

I have just received your letter of June 13th† forwarding a copy of a letter<sup>1</sup> you have sent to the Minister of National Defence dealing with my suggestion that the United States might unilaterally agree to issue some declaration confirming their recognition of Canadian sovereignty in our Arctic territories. I fully appreciate the difficulties and possible disadvantages in the way of carrying out this suggestion, and in view of what you say I suppose it would be inadvisable to proceed even along the lines suggested in my earlier letter. However, there may be a suitable occasion in the near future when, in the course of conversations with someone like Acheson or Hickerson, I might drop a casual remark, the reaction to which might throw some light on State Department thinking on this matter.

UNITED STATES REQUEST TO CARRY OUT NAVAL OPERATIONS IN NORTHERN CANADIAN TERRITORIAL WATERS

The Chiefs of Staff, with Mr. Heeney and Mr. Wrong, at their meeting held June 7th, 1946, considered the United States proposals to engage in

Naval operations in the Northern territorial waters of Canada which were contained in letters from the Secretary, United States Section, Permanent Joint Board on Defence of 14th and 27th† May, 1946.

The Chiefs of Staff agreed to recommend to the Ministers of National Defence that—

(a) permission be granted to the United States authorities to conduct the proposed Naval operation;

(b) in order to avoid undesirable publicity, the United States authorities be asked, if possible, to consider this exercise as a normal Arctic cruise, rather than calling it "Operation Nanook";

(c) publicity on this matter be restricted to a minimum and, if and when it is considered desirable to make a release, this should be done jointly;

(d) the United States authorities be informed that we would prefer the landing of the Marines to take place in Greenland, but if this did not meet with their plans that, as a second alternative, they should be permitted to land in our territory at the site of a Canadian outpost. In this regard, it is understood that there is a Canadian outpost near Dundas Harbour; and

(e) in addition to the United States invitation to include a Canadian representative qualified to make magnetic observations and two Canadian Naval observers, the United States authorities be approached to allow R.C.A.F. and Canadian Army observers to accompany this expedition. (one of each has been suggested).

The Ministers of National Defence have approved the project on the basis recommended by the Chiefs of Staff and it is therefore in order for you to inform the United States authorities accordingly.

I hope that the U.S. request concerning the establishment of Arctic weather stations this summer will be considered by Cabinet this week as they are using a number of different channels in an effort to extract a prompt and favourable decision. I think myself that we should agree to the request under the conditions mentioned in the Cabinet Defence Committee. If the discussion in Cabinet gives rise to argument over Canadian sovereignty in the unoccupied islands, it might be well to point out that our refusal to cooperate might have the effect of stimulating some challenge to our sovereignty. The present position, it seems to me, can be summed up by saying that Canadian sovereignty in all territories in the Canadian sector is unchallenged but not unchallengeable. We, therefore, must bear in mind two risks which appear to be rather contradictory—(1) if we allow the U.S. to operate in these islands the presence of U.S. establishments (or even possibly of joint establishments) may be construed in some quarters as indicating that our sovereignty is not complete; (2) if we refuse cooperation with the U.S. in establishing posts to which they attach a high degree of importance, they may seek to obtain their ends eventually by claiming sovereignty themselves and treating some of the islands—especially those far from police and trading posts and not covered by Canadian patrols—as their own territory by right of occupation.

RE: U.S. NAVY CRUISE IN NORTHERN CANADIAN WATERS

1. Some time ago the Cabinet Defence Committee considered a request put forward by the U.S. Navy through the Permanent Joint Board on Defence for permission to have certain vessels carry out training exercises in the Canadian Arctic. The Committee concluded that there would be no objection to the proposal, provided that undesirable publicity was avoided and that an intended landing of some twenty Marines on Canadian territory be at Dundas Harbour, where there is an R.C.M. Police post. It was also felt that a few Canadian Service officers should be attached.

2. U.S. Naval authorities have now informed our Embassy in Washington that they are prepared to meet the stipulated conditions. They wish to make a brief factual press release, on the subject, before any undesirable leakage takes place.

3. A simultaneous announcement in Ottawa and Washington has been suggested, in terms to be agreed. However, Mr. Abbott is inclined to feel that it would attract less attention and be received more in the way of a routine cruise if the announcement were made in Washington only, in appropriate terms. Attached are two alternative draft releases,† the one to be used if a joint statement is issued, the other if release is made only in Washington. The United States wish to have the statement made by June 30th.

4. Mr. Abbott wished the matter to be put before you for decision.

U.S. REQUEST FOR ARCTIC WEATHER STATION

At the meeting of the Cabinet on June 27th, this matter was again discussed, having been considered previously at the meeting of the Cabinet on June 12th.

The Prime Minister emphasized the importance of considering, as a whole, all projects relating to the joint defence of northern North America, and suggested that this particular proposal should not be dealt with separately; the general problem would require most careful consideration as involving major policy; it could not be expected that the government would deal with the question finally until after the session.

The Cabinet, after discussion, agreed that the United States request for authority to establish a weather station in the Canadian Arctic could not be approved for the present season and that the United States government be so informed; requirements for weather stations in Northern Canada would be examined in relation to the general problem of North American defence.

The Secretary of the Cabinet will send to the Department of External Affairs a copy of a personal note which he is writing Mr. Howe on the subject.†

[Ottawa,] June 28, 1946

Following the Cabinet meeting on June 27, Mr. Heeney told me that the Cabinet had turned down the United States request to establish weather stations in the Arctic this summer. It was felt that, so far as defence considerations went, it would be necessary to await further progress in joint defence planning, while so far as civil aspects are concerned, there is a need for careful study of Canadian needs and capabilities.

I told Mr. Lewis Clark by telephone that Canadian approval could not be obtained this year and added that we would send them a written reply† in due course.

As could be expected, the United States authorities are considerably upset and are faced with the problem of what to do with the stores and equipment which had been loaded at Boston in the hope that a favourable reply would be forthcoming from the Canadian Government. At the request of the State Department, Mr. Clark telephoned this morning to say that the U.S. Weather Bureau was wondering whether they should gamble on approval being obtained next year and take advantage of the naval cruise to get their stores as far as Greenland. They have permission, of course, from the Danish Government to establish a station in northwest Greenland and they were considering the possibility of storing there material which could be used in the Canadian Arctic if Canadian Government permission were later obtained.

I told Mr. Clark that no one could possibly attempt to predict what the views of the Canadian Government might be in a year's time. However, it was my understanding that the Government's decision did not rule out future consideration of the project. It therefore appeared to me that the decision as to whether to keep the supplies in the United States or ship them to Greenland would have to be made by the United States authorities on their own responsibility.

USAAF WEATHER STATIONS IN EASTERN CANADA

1. It is desired to report to you the following state of the weather stations in Eastern Canada operated by the USAAF.

2. Early this year most of these stations were discontinued due to the discharge policy adopted by the United States Government, which enabled most of the observers stationed at USAAF weather stations in Eastern Canada to obtain their release.

3. It has now been reported to me that the USAAF are taking steps to re-establish these stations.

4. An American staff is already back in at Mecatina, Quebec; Upper Frobisher Bay, Baffin Island (Crystal II) is to be reestablished as a USAAF radiosonde weather station early in August; they are already taking radiosonde ascents at Goose Bay; Mingan is to be reopened as a radiosonde station within the next month or so; and Fort Chimo, Quebec, (Crystal I), I understand, is also contemplated for reopening, first, for surface observations, and, possibly, for further development as a radiosonde station later.

5. The USAAF are running a training program at Goose Bay for their staffs to be posted to these stations. All personnel being trained are United States Army Air Force permanent force.

6. Further information will be sent as it becomes available.

ARRANGEMENTS WITH THE UNITED STATES RESPECTING FORT CHIMO, P.Q.

1. By an exchange of notes of August 22, 1941, the United States was authorized to establish at Fort Chimo a weather and emergency station which included an airfield and related facilities. The Canadian Government agreed to the request "as embodying arrangements of a temporary and emergency character, and on the understanding that no question of a lease or expenditure by Canada is involved." The Canadian Government also reserved the right to replace the station by a Canadian weather and emergency station when they were in a position to do so. Fort Chimo was one of the bases on the Crimson Route and extensive construction work was carried out by the United States forces.

2. The exchange of notes of June 23-27, 1944, under which Canada reimbursed the United States for expenditures on airfields in Canada included an item of $8,686,470.00 for Fort Chimo. Any doubt which might have existed as to title or future rights was thereby put at rest, but responsibility for maintenance, operation and defence remained with the United States.

3. On May 29, 1945, Major General G. V. Henry, Senior United States Army Member of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, wrote that the War Department wished to abandon the Fort Chimo air base except for use as a weather station, the United States to continue the operation of the weather station with United States personnel. He further stated that "the War Department sees no postwar need for the Fort Chimo air base". The Canadian Chiefs of Staff agreed that the facilities at Fort Chimo were of no further military usefulness. In July 1945, through Permanent Joint Board on Defence channels, the Canadian Government gave its decision that it would be desirable for the United States to be responsible for the safeguarding of the facilities at Fort Chimo, exclusive of the airfield, for which Canada had paid. It was not suggested that the airfield itself be maintained, but it was pointed out that the United States had an obligation to safeguard the rest of the facilities until they had been turned over to Canadian custody. This, the United States agreed to do in addition to continuing to operate the weather station.

4. The position therefore is that United States forces were asked by Canada to stay on at Fort Chimo for custodial purposes and their desire to continue operating the weather station was approved. They have not been asked to give up their wartime rights to occupy the base and, indeed, the subject has not been raised by either Government. The United States authorities would therefore appear to be justified in assuming a certain freedom of action at the base. In view of reports which have reached the Canadian authorities about increased United States activity at Fort Chimo, it is open to consideration whether future activities there should not be discussed with the United States Government. The same applies to Frobisher Bay where a similar situation exists.

WEATHER STATION REQUIREMENTS IN CANADIAN TERRITORY

1. The United States authorities, through the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, have recently requested:

(a) that permission be granted to reopen stations previously operated by the U.S. Army Air Forces Weather Service at Padloping Island, Baffin Island, and Indian House Lake, P.Q.; and

(b) that the Canadian Weather Service furnish certain observations at River Clyde and Arctic Bay, Baffin Island.

In addition, the U.S. authorities have indicated that their Army Air Forces Weather Service intend to continue operation of weather stations at:

(a) Mingan, P.Q.;

(b) Fort Chimo (Crystal I), P.Q.;

(c) Frobisher Bay (Crystal II), Baffin Island;

(d) Cape Harrison, Labrador; and

(e) Mecatina, P.Q.

2. These proposals have been referred to the Department of Transport, who state that they are not in a position to assume operation of the stations at Padloping Island and Indian House Lake, and that their programme for the River Clyde station calls for much more limited observation than that desired by the U.S. Army. They accordingly recommend that the United States be authorized to operate those stations until such time as Canada is in a position to assume full responsibility. They state further that the operation of the Arctic Bay station is provided for in the present Canadian programme, and the reports sought by the U.S. can be made available to them. They recommend, therefore, that this station remain a Canadian responsibility. Transport's suggestions for dealing with the U.S. requests are supported by External Affairs.

3. It may be remembered that last May the United States sought permission to initiate an Arctic weather station programme, and on that occasion the Cabinet decided that action along the lines proposed should be postponed. It was felt at that time, however, there were possibly certain advantages, from a purely Canadian point of view, in establishing additional weather stations in the north, and that this question might be considered in the light of both military and civil requirements.

4. The Chiefs of Staff Committee, with Messrs. Heeney, Robertson, Pearson and Wrong, have reviewed the situation, with particular reference to the recent U.S. proposals, and they recommend:

(a) that in the circumstances, the U.S. requests be accepted, but on a temporary basis only and on the explicit understanding that Canadian personnel, at the discretion of the Canadian government, be included on the staff of any station operated by the United States, with the object of eventual operation by Canada, and that U.S. authorities be asked to employ civilian weather bureau personnel rather than military personnel in the operation of these stations; and

(b) that the Interdepartmental Meteorological Committee (with the addition of a representative of Defence Research and such assistance as might be found necessary) be instructed to undertake immediately a complete examination of present and future requirements for the establishment and operation of weather stations in Canadian territory.

Dear General Henry,

I am replying to your letter of August 14† on the subject of weather services in Northeastern Canada. You will recall that this subject was discussed informally at the meeting of the Board in New York on September 20.

The questions raised in your letter have been considered by the appropriate authorities and I am now able to inform you of the Canadian Government's decision. Permission is granted to the United States to re-open the stations at Padloping Island and at Indian Lake House, and to continue the operation of stations at River Clyde, Mingan, Fort Chimo, Frobisher Bay and Mecatina in order to provide additional observations desired by the United States. With regard to Arctic Bay, the programme of the Department of Transport calls for observations very similar to those desired by the United States authorities. It is therefore believed desirable that their programme be continued without United States assistance, particularly since staff accommodation is so limited that additional observations could not be undertaken. The station at Cape Harrison, Labrador, is not in Canadian territory or territory leased by Canada.

The approval given in the previous paragraph is given on a temporary basis only and on the understanding that Canadian personnel at the discretion of the Canadian authorities may be included in the staff of any station with the object of eventual operation by Canada. In addition, the United States authorities are requested to employ civilian weather personnel rather than military personnel as far as possible, if not completely.

I may add that a complete survey of present and future requirements for the establishment and operation of weather stations in Canadian territory is being initiated.

Yours sincerely,

R. M. MACDONNELL

SECRET AND URGENT

Sir,

I have the honor to refer to an informal memorandum dated May 1, 1946,† which was left in the Department of External Affairs by an officer of the United States Embassy and which set forth certain views of the United States Government concerning the establishment of meteorological observation stations in the Arctic region of the Western Hemisphere for the purpose of improving the weather forecasting service within the United States and on international civil air transport routes from the United States.

At that time it was pointed out that a great gap exists in the network of Arctic aviation facilities, including weather, magnetic, and ionospheric stations, air navigational aids, communications and air fields; that this gap extends from Spitzbergen westward over most of Greenland, the Canadian Islands, and the Arctic Ocean to Siberia, and results in a serious lack of knowledge for interpolating meteorological data across the Polar area, for forecasting the southward surge of cold Arctic air masses, for the preparation of suitable aeronautical charts, for the study and prediction of radio conditions, and generally for safeguarding air operations.

At that time my Government proposed to your Government a program for the establishment in Arctic areas of certain meteorological reporting facilities.

After due consideration your Government in a memorandum of July 2, 1946,† took the position that there had been insufficient time to give adequate consideration to a project of such importance, but intimated that further consideration would be given to the proposals of the United States Government.

It will be recalled in this connection that similar requests were made of the Danish Government which were granted and there was established at Thule, Greenland, facilities for reporting meteorological information.

I have now been directed to reaffirm and to stress the interest of my Government in this program and to urge upon the Canadian Government the necessity of proceeding without delay toward the establishment in the northern areas of this hemisphere of adequate meteorological and other reporting stations. In contrast to the situation last year there is now, as a result of the construction and operation last summer of a station at Thule, Greenland, definite assurance that northern weather stations are valuable and practical.

May I suggest that if your Government approves the principle of the establishment of such stations it would be desirable for technical personnel of our two Governments to consult and agree upon the details. In this connection I have been directed to say that the interested officials of the United States Weather Bureau and of the Coast and Geodetic Survey are prepared to come to Ottawa at any time.

Washington, November 14, 1946

SUBJECT: LORAN COVERAGE OF THE NORTH AMERICAN ARCTIC

1. With increased aerial, weather, mapping and other activities in the North American Arctic, the Army Air Forces believe there should be an installation of low frequency loran stations in this area to furnish long distance navigational fixes in support of the activities just enumerated. This subject has already been studied in a general way in the preliminary planning discussions of the Joint Subcommittee on Air Navigational Aids for Defence. As a tentative proposal, the United States believes that a long range program should be adopted for the emplacement of six (6) stations, three (3) of which would be in Canadian territory, two (2) in Greenland and one (1) in Alaska. The tentative locations for the three Canadian stations are as follows:

Port Brabandt, Northwest Territories
 Cambridge Bay, Victoria Island
 River Clyde, Baffin Island

2. The U.S. Army Air Forces have requested that I present the above tentative program to the Board at this time in order to secure its favourable recommendation. The Air Forces hope that one or possibly two of the proposed Canadian stations could be installed during the summer of 1947 and the remainder during the summer of 1948, either by the Canadian Government, jointly, or by the U.S. Army Air Forces. The method adopted will, of course, depend upon the approval and desires of the Canadian Government and, in the case of the United States, the availability of funds and personnel to the Army Air Forces. The installation of six stations would provide two integrated operational units of three stations each. Each station would be manned by approximately thirty-five persons.

3. In order that the U.S. Army Air Forces may plan for the future, it is requested that the Canadian Section obtain the following information:

a. Does the Canadian Government approve of the program?

b. If so, would Canada desire to install and operate the stations, or have the United States AAF do so, or carry out the program as a cooperative measure?

c. Under the conditions laid down in b above, will the Canadian Government approve of the installation of a station in the vicinity of Port Brabandt, Northwest Territories, and Cambridge Bay, Victoria Island, during the summer of 1947?

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, March 15, 1946

Dear Sir,

The United States Government has at length made a proposal for the disposition of the Canol Project and I enclose two copies of a proposed note which was given to the Department today by Mr. Lewis Clark of the United States Embassy.

For convenient reference, I am quoting the sections of the previous Agreements which are referred to. Paragraph 3 (b) of the note of June 7th, 1944<sup>1</sup> (referred to in A) reads as follows:

That after the United States disposes of (the Canol Project) the owners and, or, lessees thereof will be granted adequate enjoyment of the sites, rights of way, and riparian rights required for satisfactory utilization and that the Canadian Government or its assigns will permit the aforesaid works, installations, and facilities to be used, on equitable terms, for the transportation and refining of crude petroleum purchased by the United States in the Northwest Territories for the distribution of such petroleum and the products thereof both within and without the boundaries of Canada.

Paragraphs 4 (b) and (d) of the note of June 27th, 1942<sup>2</sup> (referred to in B) read as follows:

4. For its part, my Government asks the Canadian Government to agree:

(b) To waive, during the war, import duties, sales taxes, territorial taxes, license fees or other similar charges on all equipment and supplies to be used in the execution or maintenance of the Project by the United States and all personal effects of the construction personnel.

(d) To take the necessary steps to facilitate the admission into Canada of such United States citizens as may be employed on the construction or maintenance of the Project during the war, it being understood that the United States will undertake to repatriate at its own expense any such persons if the contractors fail to do so.

The paragraphs dealing with the Permanent Joint Board on Defence are regarded as satisfactory. Since the military authorities of both countries regard the Canol Project as having no further defence value, it is agreeable to us to cancel the provisions for seeking the approval of the Board.

It was explained to us that the final paragraph, which appears to contemplate the possibility of amendment to the agreement after signature but before the effective date, is required by the terms of the Surplus Property Act of 1944.

We should be glad to have your views as to the acceptability, or otherwise, of this proposal.

Yours sincerely,

CONFIDENTIAL

I have the honor to refer to your note no. 83, dated August 31, 1945, and to my note no. 366, dated September 6, 1945, in regard to the crude oil pipeline from Norman Wells, Northwest Territories, to Whitehorse, Yukon Territory, and the refinery at Whitehorse, which, together with equipment pertaining thereto, have been referred to as the crude oil facilities of the Canol Project. My reply of September 6 confirmed the understanding that the United States would at a later date submit to the Canadian Government plans for the disposition of these facilities.

In accordance with the understanding referred to, there are set forth in this note proposed plans for disposal which, it is hoped, will prove acceptable to your Government. These proposals have been drawn up to give effect to the underlying principle, that, as military considerations are no longer paramount, disposal should be accomplished in a manner designed to recover the fair monetary value of facilities.

It will be recalled that in the exchange of notes of June 27-29, 1942, the two Governments agreed that if neither the Canadian Government nor any private company desired to purchase the crude oil pipeline and refinery, the disposition of both facilities should be referred to the Permanent Joint Board on Defense for consideration and recommendation. It was further agreed in the same exchange of notes that the two Governments would not themselves order or allow the dismantling of either the pipeline or the refinery unless and until approval for dismantlement should be recommended by the Permanent Joint Board on Defense.

In the foregoing connection I understand that it is the view of the competent military authorities of our two countries that the crude oil facilities of the Canol Project no longer have defense value. Accordingly, it seems apparent that the above referred to provisions relating to the Permanent Joint Board are now unnecessary and should be annulled in order that the disposal authorities may have maximum freedom of action. My Government hopes that the Canadian Government will concur in this view and will agree to the annulment of those provisions, thereby permitting dismantlement of the facilities if that course should be desirable by the United States authorities or its successors in interest. In the event that the Canadian Government concurs in the foregoing, my Government further desires to propose the following plans to cover the disposition of the crude oil facilities of the Canol Project:

1. It is proposed to advertise the sale of the crude oil facilities in the press of both Canada and the United States. The following general principles will be observed in selling and disposing of the facilities.

A. The United States Government may, if it so desires, transfer title to the facilities or any part thereof to private ownership subject to the laws of the Dominion of Canada but exempt from import duties and excise taxes and with the further provision that the new owner or owners shall enjoy the rights set forth in paragraph 3 (b) of my note of June 7, 1944. No owner, however, would be obligated to operate the facilities.

B. If the United States Government does not dispose of any or all of the facilities under the terms of paragraph A above, the Government, its agents, or its successors in interest may remove from Canada such of the facilities as they may elect to remove for use in the United States or elsewhere. It is understood that if the United States, its agents, or its successors in interest do elect to remove any or all of the facilities, the Canadian Government will facilitate such operations by providing for continuance of the rights referred to under paragraphs 4 (b) and 4 (d) of the United States note of June 27, 1942. It is not intended to give either A or B above precedence or priority over the other since the governing factor will be the amount bid.

C. The Government of Canada may purchase from the United States through the appropriate governmental agencies such of the facilities not disposed of under A or B as that Government may desire to obtain for its own use or disposition.

D. Any of the facilities not disposed of under paragraphs A, B, and C above shall be transferred to a designated agency of the Canadian Government and shall be sold or disposed of by such agency, the proceeds to be paid to the Government of the United States, provided that the United States Government shall be represented in such sale or disposal by an officer designated by it for the purpose, who shall have an equal voice in the setting of prices, the allocation of priorities, the assessment of legitimate sales costs and other details of the sale or other disposal of the items concerned; and provided further that any such items remaining unsold at the end of two years from the time they are transferred to the Canadian agency concerned shall either be declared of no value and the account closed or, at the option of the United States, shall be removed from Canada by the United States authorities.

2. In view of certain provisions of the Surplus Property Act of 1944, it is proposed that the provisions of this note and your reply agreeing thereto constitute an arrangement between our two Governments effective at a date mutually to be agreed upon, such date to be not less than thirty days from the date of your reply. It is further proposed that the arrangement shall be effective only if neither Government has, before the date referred to in the preceding sentence, expressed a desire for any change in the lettered paragraphs A through D above.

Dear Sir,

I have your letter of March 15th attaching two copies of a proposed note passed to your Department by the U.S. Embassy and dealing with the disposition of the Canol project.

I am generally in agreement with the contents of the note, with the exception of para. D. of Section 1, which deals with the facilities not disposed of under previous proposals, and suggests that any such facilities so remaining shall be passed to a Canadian Government agency for sale.

I am of the opinion that this proposal is not practical and would involve the Canadian Government agency in considerable expense if the agency had to take custody and provide safeguards against the loss or misrepresentation of the surplus facilities that were passed to it.

I think the only practical way of doing this is to request that on completion of disposal under paras. A, B, and C of Section 1 that the U.S. be requested to transport to one location to be adjacent to points at which the Canadian Government disposal agency is operating such items which they consider have salvage value, and the Canadian agency would then try to sell this surplus paying the net proceeds to the U.S. Government and providing that any items remaining would at the end of two years be transferred to the Canadian agency concerned as of no value or removed to the U.S. at their option.

The balance of the equipment which was not removed and put in a suitable storage place would be considered as abandoned by the U.S. Government.

Yours very truly,

Dear Mr. Clark,

In connection with our discussion about the disposition of the Canol Project, I handed Mr. Shillock<sup>1</sup> a proposed re-draft dated March 25th of Section 1D of your draft note. At the same time, I informed him that we had taken up with the Department of National Revenue the proposal in Section 1A that the facilities be transferred to private ownership, exempt from import duties and excise taxes.

We have been informed by the Deputy Minister of National Revenue (Customs and Excise) that he is prepared, with a view to facilitating negotiations, to recommend to his Minister that Council be approached for authority to waive payment of the duty and taxes otherwise applicable on the disposition of these facilities.

We should be glad to receive in due course the comments of the United States authorities on our proposed re-draft of Section 1D.

Ottawa, July 19, 1946

Dear Mr. Macdonnell,

You will recall that on March 15 I left with you a draft of a proposed note on the disposition of the facilities of the Canol Project. On March 25 you handed us a proposed re-draft of paragraph 1 (d) of our note and on April 24 you informed us that the Deputy Minister of National Revenue (Customs and Excise) was prepared, with a view to facilitating negotiations, to recommend to his Minister that Council be approached for authority to waive payment of the duty and taxes otherwise applicable on the disposition of these facilities.

There were further informal discussions of this matter between Colonel Gould Jones and Mr. J. H. Berry, during which, I understand, Mr. Berry expressed his informal approval of a compromise amendment to paragraph 1 (d), as follows:

“In the event the Government of the Dominion of Canada is called upon to sell for the account of the Government of the United States any portion of Canol, before undertaking such sale, the appropriate representatives of the Dominion Government and the Government of the United States will join in a determination as to whether the expense of such sale, including all such costs, such as entry, delivery, advertising, etc., will exceed the amount that might be realized for such a sale. If determination of the representatives of the two Governments is that it is not reasonable to expect that such a sale will produce an amount in excess of the sales cost, the Government of the United States will then abandon it under that portion of paragraph 1 (d) which refers to abandonment.”

The difficulties under which the Canol Project was constructed are a fair measure of the many problems which may be encountered in salvaging and disposing of the property, and under the most favourable and flexible plan of disposal, the monetary recovery to the United States compared with the original cost will be very small. In view of this fact, we would not be willing to consider any part of the facilities of the Canol Project abandoned until every effort has been made to dispose of it. Should we take any other stand the repercussions in the United States would no doubt be far and great. However, if after a lapse of two years from the initiation of a vigorous program of disposal no substantial progress has been made in its liquidation, we would be receptive to considering it abandoned.

Although our file is not clear upon the subject and although we would prefer to keep the phraseology originally suggested in paragraph 1 (d), I, nevertheless, gather that the intention of Colonel Gould Jones and Mr. Berry was that the above suggested paragraph form the final paragraph of our originally proposed paragraph 1 (d). If this be so, may I suggest that we take the liberty of revising the phraseology somewhat and I suggest the following:

“In the event the Government of Canada is called upon under the provisions of this paragraph to sell for the account of the Government of the United States any portion of the facilities of the Canol Project, before undertaking such sale, the appropriate representatives of the Canadian Government and of the Government of the United States will join in a determination as to whether the expense of such sale, including all costs incurred in connection with such sale, such, for instance, as entry, delivery and advertising, will exceed the amount that might be realized for such a sale. If the determination of the representatives of the two Governments is that it is not reasonable to expect that such a sale will produce an amount in excess of the sales cost, the Government of the United States will then abandon it under the provisions of this paragraph."

I should appreciate it if you would let me know the views of your Government in this regard.

Yours sincerely,

Dear Mr. Atherton,

I wish to refer to Mr. Clark's letter of July 19 on the subject of the disposition of the Canol Project. The proposals contained in that letter have been submitted to the interested authorities for consideration.

There is another point on which we should like to suggest the addition of clarifying language. Paragraph 1A would give to the new owner or owners certain rights set forth in an earlier note. In the view of the Canadian authorities, it would be wise to state with some exactitude the steps which the Canadian Government is prepared to take by way of making rights available and I enclose copies of a redraft for consideration by the United States authorities.

You will note that the Canadian Government would be prepared to make available, on equitable terms, any rights in its possession, but where necessary rights are not in its possession it could only acquire them, at the purchaser's expense, if he were unable to make satisfactory arrangements with the owners. It will be recalled that the Canadian Government did not to any large extent become the owner of the property involved in the Canol Project. The procedure followed was for the Government to obtain possession of the property under leases after which the United States Government were granted licenses to occupy the property.

You will appreciate that it would be difficult at this stage for the Canadian Government to undertake to purchase property and it is believed that the proposals contained in our redraft will give a new owner the requisite assurance of the rights necessary for operation.

Yours sincerely,

DISPOSAL OF CANOL FACILITIES

This letter to Atherton<sup>1</sup> is a counter proposal. The United States suggestion was that if they could not find purchasers, the stuff should be turned over to War Assets Corporation with representatives of the two Governments deciding whether the expenses of a proposed sale would exceed the proceeds receivable by the United States Government.

Berry and I are in agreement on two points:

(1) There is no justification for the Canadian Government risking the political dynamite involved in being party to a decision to sell or not to sell.

(2) If United States authorities, with an economy-minded Congress at their heels, cannot find purchasers for Canol, it is a certainty that War Assets Corporation will be no more successful.

We therefore propose to eliminate all resort to War Assets Corporation, give the United States authorities every opportunity to sell the facilities to anyone in the world and, if they fail, to make them remove what they want or declare it abandoned. It is altogether likely that a great deal of the material will not be sold and there is no reason why the Canadian Government should be responsible even for its custody at any stage.

Berry writes that he would like to withdraw from the Canol negotiations and leave them to us. If War Assets Corporation is to be eliminated from the Agreement, this is sensible and I attach a letter of concurrence.†

If you agree to the terms of the letter to Atherton, I should be glad if you would sign it and return it to me. I will then hand it to Lewis Clark with some oral comment along the lines of this note which would not be entirely suitable for inclusion in an official communication.

Ottawa, August 16, 1946

Dear Mr. Atherton,

On July 19 Mr. Clark wrote to Mr. Macdonnell about a proposed re-draft of paragraph 1(D) of the exchange of notes on the disposition of the Canol crude oil facilities. The Canadian authorities have been giving this consideration and would like to put forward another suggestion which, in their view, would provide a more satisfactory method of disposal.

Briefly, our proposal is that 1(D) should be re-drafted so as to eliminate all resort to a Canadian Government disposal agency. This could be done by means of the following language:

"D. Any of the facilities not disposed of under paragraphs A, B, and C above within two years of the coming into force of this Agreement shall either be declared of no value and abandoned or, at the option of United States, shall be removed from Canada by the United States authorities."

We have two main considerations in mind in making these counter proposals. In the first place, we doubt the necessity or desirability of having the Canadian Government join in a decision as to whether the expenses of a sale would exceed the proceeds. We believe this to be a matter which the United States Government must decide on its own responsibility. Secondly, we question the advantages to be derived from turning over Canol to War Assets Corporation as a last resort. Under A and B of your proposals, the United States Government would have the widest opportunities to dispose of the facilities to Canadian or United States citizens, for operation or non-operation, in whole or in part, in Canada or elsewhere. In your draft proposals it is stated. "It is proposed to advertise the sale of the crude oil facilities in the press of both Canada and the United States". It can be assumed, I am sure, that every effort will be made by the United States authorities to interest possible purchasers in other ways as well. Should the United States Government not receive offers which it regards as satisfactory, we do not think that there would be any likelihood of War Assets Corporation being more successful. We therefore feel that the most satisfactory solution is for the United States Government to have the widest latitude in seeking to interest purchasers and to have the unsold residue, if any, removed from Canada or declared abandoned at the option of the United States Government after the elapse of a reasonable period.

Your proposal to advertise in the press of Canada would introduce an exception to the understanding that neither Government will sell surplus in the territory of the other. We are prepared to agree to this exception so that the Canol facilities can be offered for sale directly to Canadian nationals by the United States authorities. Should your Government desire it, we would be willing to insert specific language to this effect, although I think the point is already covered in the Embassy's draft of March 15.

I should be glad to learn as soon as possible whether the language proposed in this letter is agreeable to your Government.

Yours sincerely,

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, September 13, 1946

Dear Mr. Robertson,

In Mr. Wrong's letter of August 16, 1946, he made further suggestions in respect of the proposed exchange of notes on the disposition of the Canol crude oil facilities. The Canadian proposals contained in that letter were brought to the attention of the Department of State and I have now received a reply.

In the course of a number of exchanges of views which have taken place this year, the text of the note covering the Canol may have become somewhat obscured because of the numerous revisions made. Accordingly, I am enclosing a consolidated draft† upon which it is hoped final agreement may be secured. It will be recalled that Mr. Macdonnell, in a letter to Mr. Clark of July 26, 1946, proposed certain changes and additions to paragraph 1 (A) of the text. These additions have been approved by my Government and are incorporated in the enclosed draft.

The second, and more difficult, point requiring adjustment relates to Paragraph 1 (D) of the draft. Mr. Wrong's letter proposed a change in the draft of paragraph 1 (D), the intent of which was to eliminate all resort to a Canadian Government disposal agency in the event of any of the facilities not being disposed of within two years under the provisions of paragraphs A, B, and C. I am now informed that this proposal has been given serious consideration by the Office of the Foreign Liquidation Commissioner, and Mr. Charles B. Jones, Field Commissioner for Canada and the North Atlantic Areas, by memorandum to Mr. Parsons of the Division of British Commonwealth Affairs, dated August 29, 1946, has made the following statement:

"It is noted with considerable satisfaction that the Canadian Government has taken an extremely liberal attitude toward the disposal of the Canol Project property and is willing to help us in any way possible in working out the most favorable plan of disposition. Further, it is noted that the Canadian Government desires to eliminate the involvement of a Canadian Government Disposal Agency in the disposition of the subject property, should this office be unsuccessful in disposing of same within a period of two years. The desire of the Canadian Government to leave all matters concerning the disposition of the Canol Project property in the hands of our Government is fully appreciated, and the position she has taken in this connection meets with the approval of this office. However, should our efforts in disposing of all or part of the subject property be unsuccessful during the period of two years, it is felt that a new plan of disposal should be formulated at that time, rather than project into the future a decision, the wisdom of which may be altered by intervening events. Should a new plan of disposal envelope alternatives other than abandonment or removal of the property to the United States, the Canadian Government would, of course, be vitally interested in reviewing and considering the matter and their continued participation would, therefore, follow.

"Considering the above, it is suggested that the proposal making it mandatory that the Canol Crude Oil facilities be abandoned or returned to the U.S. if not disposed of in a period of two years, be rejected and the wording of paragraph 1 (D) be altered, as follows:

"Any of the facilities not disposed of under paragraphs A, B, and C above, after a period of two years from the date of this agreement, shall be the subject of a survey and study by the U.S. Government which will include the advisability of abandonment or return of the property to the U.S., but not be necessarily limited thereto. The resultant plan of disposal thus formulated shall be submitted to the Canadian Government as a basis for further agreements between the two Governments covering disposition of any remaining property."

The draft of paragraph 1 (D) suggested by Mr. Jones has been incorporated in the enclosed re-draft of the proposed note.† I have been directed to say that it has been approved by Major General Guy V. Henry, Senior Army member, Permanent Joint Board on Defence, and by members of the Petroleum Facilities Coordinating Committee.

If the enclosed re-draft is acceptable to your Government, may I request that I be informed in order that I may obtain over the telephone final clearance for it in the Department of State. In spite of the fact of previous delays the matter is still deemed of urgency, as it is understood the Field Commissioner for Canada still hopes to be in a position to initiate disposal action this autumn.

Dear Mr. Atherton,

I am replying to your letter of September 13 enclosing a consolidated draft of the proposed exchange of notes on the disposition of the Canol crude oil facilities.

We have given careful consideration to your suggested version of paragraph 1(D) which is the only section on which agreement has not been reached. We feel that it would be desirable to state rather more clearly than does your September 13 draft that the final disposition will be by removal or abandonment unless in the meantime a better plan can be agreed upon. We therefore propose the following language for the paragraph in question which we hope your Government will regard as a satisfactory compromise between our draft of August 16 and your draft of September 13.

"1.D. Any of the facilities not disposed of under paragraphs A, B and C above, after a period of two years from the date of this Agreement, shall either be declared of no value and abandoned or, at the option of the United States, shall be removed from Canada by the United States authorities. However, should the United States Government, before the end of this two year period, wish to propose a different basis for the final disposition of any remaining property, the Canadian Government will give careful consideration to such proposals.”

Yours sincerely,

R. M. MACDONNELL

DISPOSITION OF CANOL FACILITIES

On October 9 we will be meeting representatives of the State Department to discuss the draft exchange of notes on this subject which has been under consideration for many months. The only point to be resolved is paragraph 1D which is intended to describe the procedure which will be followed in disposing of any material that the United States authorities cannot sell to private purchasers.

United States officials show an understandable reluctance to agree to any final settlement. Whatever understanding may be reached with Canada, the fact is that the monetary return to the United States Government will be exceedingly small and the settlement is bound to provoke political criticism in the United States. Each official who has anything to do with the subject sees himself being called before a Senate Committee to explain his actions and is therefore anxious to defer the final day of reckoning as long as possible.

I learned from the United States Embassy that the State Department is troubled over one aspect in particular. If our proposals were accepted, the United States would have two years in which to sell the property and after that they would have to remove the unsold residue or declare it of no value and abandon it. (In our final compromise suggestion we were prepared to consider any alternative scheme which the United States might put to us at the end of the selling period.) The State Department claims to be worried lest possible purchasers would refrain from making bids during the selling period in the hope that when that period had expired they could move into the Northwest Territories and help themselves to property which the United States would have abandoned. The only set of circumstances in which this could happen would be the discovery of a large new oil field in the Mackenzie Valley which, presumably, cannot be excluded from the range of possibilities but is not likely to occur at the earliest for many years. To guard against such an eventuality, the United States would apparently like to retain some title to the property even after the end of the selling period.

I cannot see that we would be justified in agreeing to this. The policy of the Government over the last few years has been directed towards getting the United States out of the various defence projects set up during the war (air fields, highway, landline system, weather stations, etc.). Canol is the one remaining big project where this has not occurred. If the United States were allowed to remain there indefinitely, criticism from the Canadian public could be anticipated on the ground that the United States were retaining a vested interest in the Canadian North. Oil, defence and politics form a combination that is particularly attractive to newspapers and I think that we would do well to avoid it. There might be some justification for allowing the United States to keep the Canol crude oil facilities if they really wanted them for defence purposes and put up a strong argument that they were important. However, the United States authorities hold no such views; their only concern is to avoid public criticism of the way in which they dispose of one of the more controversial of their wartime projects.

It seems to me that we would do well to insist that the agreement on the disposition of the Canol crude oil facilities contains something pretty definite in the way of a cut-off date and I am inclined to think that we ought not to go much further than the last compromise which we suggested to the United States Embassy.

DISCUSSION ON CANOL DISPOSITION

On Wednesday, October 9th, 1946, at 4.00 p.m. in Room 123, East Block, there was held a meeting to discuss the disposal of the Canol crude oil facilities with particular reference to paragraph 1D of the proposed exchange of notes. The following were present:

- Mr. R. M. Macdonnell, External Affairs,
- Wing Commander A. M. Cameron, Privy Council,
- Group Captain W. W. Bean, Privy Council,
- Mr. L. B. Phinney, Acting Special Commissioner for Defence Projects in Northwest Canada,
- Mr. R. A. J. Phillips, External Affairs,
- Mr. Lewis Clark, Counsellor, United States Embassy,

Mr. Charles B. Jones, Office of Foreign Liquidation
Commission, Department of State,

Mr. James King, British Commonwealth Division, Department of State.

2. Mr. Jones stated that the chief concern of the United States was over the word "abandoned" in our proposed paragraph 1D. He said that the use of this word gave rise to two difficulties:

(i) The possibility that a potential buyer, after sitting out a two-year period, might take Canol property without payment when it is abandoned.

(ii) The possibility that the value of Canol equipment might be increased by future oil developments in the Norman Wells area at a time when the United States had abandoned all claim to compensation.

3. It was to eliminate the first contingency, which was considered the more probable, that the United States wished to avoid announcing a definite date for abandonment; they therefore had been proposing the principle of review in two years.

4. Mr. Clark suggested the possibility of lengthening the period beyond two years now, or of making provision for lengthening it at the end of two years. Mr. Macdonnell pointed out that, although the Canadian authorities were aware of the advantages to the United States of making the period for attempted disposal as indefinite as possible, it was equally important to Canada that this date should be quite definite.

5. Mr. Clark offered the suggestion that paragraph 1D be omitted and a confidential supplementary exchange of notes be substituted. Mr. Macdonnell felt that we should endeavour to eliminate confidential arrangements if possible, and produce a final solution to the disposal problem which would answer public criticism in both countries.

6. Mr. Jones said that the needs of the O.F.L.C. would be met if an arrangement could be made whereby the United States could obtain some return if anyone used Canol equipment after a two-year period during which no disposal was made. Mr. Macdonnell replied that this was reasonable in principle but it might involve some difficulties in practice. The Canadian authorities were anxious to avoid any custodial responsibility, and did not want to take title to Canol. Mr. Clark stated that the United States had no desire for Canada to act as a custodian. They merely asked for the right to seek fair payment at any time from any agency or company which might use Canol equipment. He suggested that a waiver of custodial responsibility might be expressly included in paragraph 1D. Mr. Phinney pointed out that such a waiver would almost certainly be regarded by local residents as an invitation to help themselves to Canol property. While appreciating this point, Mr. Clark said that the United States was interested mainly in significant items such as tanks and the actual pipeline. It was agreed, however, that it would be advisable to omit direct mention of custody if possible.

7. Mr. Jones said that if it were possible to establish a principle of compensation to the United States for beneficial use after two years the United States would be prepared to drop the proposal for review after that period.

8. Mr. Macdonnell then submitted the following paragraph 1D:

“Any of the facilities not disposed of under paragraphs A, B and C above, after a period of two years from the date of this agreement, shall, at the option of the United States, either be removed from Canada by the United States authorities or shall be left in situ and regarded as of no value unless put to beneficial use. The principle is recognized that if any such property should thereafter be put to beneficial use the United States Government should receive fair compensation.”

9. After further discussion the draft was accepted by those present. It was decided to take up the proposal in Ottawa and Washington with a view to effecting an early exchange of the notes proposed by the United States Ambassador on March 15th.

Dear Mr. Pearson,

I have for acknowledgment your memoranda† of November 13 and November 19, 1946, each transmitting a copy of Note No. 593, dated November 7, 1946,<sup>1</sup> addressed to The Right Honourable, The Secretary of State for External Affairs, Ottawa, from the Honourable Ray Atherton, United States Ambassador and dealing with the proposed disposition of the Canol crude oil facilities.

This note from the United States Ambassador has been examined by our officers and certain points have been raised as follows:

Paragraph A would appear to be satisfactory and the interests of Canada properly protected. However, it should be appreciated that Clause (III) implies that the Canadian Government will expropriate and transfer to the purchaser or purchasers at his or their expense any land, rights of way, riparian rights and other easements required for the satisfactory utilization of the crude oil facilities if such purchaser or purchasers are unable to lease or acquire such land, rights of way, riparian rights and easements on equitable terms from the owners. Under this clause it is possible, although highly improbable, that the Canadian Government would have to expropriate ninety-nine acres of the oil refinery site at Whitehorse, Yukon Territory, from the British Yukon Railway Company.

Paragraph "B" reads in part "It is understood that if the United States, its agents, or its successors in interest do elect to remove any or all of the facilities, the Canadian Government will facilitate such operations by providing for continuance of the rights referred to under paragraph 4(b) and 4(d) of the American note of June 27, 1942". That note stated that the rights would continue "during the war". It is now proposed to continue these rights but no time limit has been mentioned and it would seem to be advisable to limit the enjoyment of such rights to a definite period.

There would appear to have been some difficulty experienced in phrasing Paragraph D to meet the wishes of both governments. In our opinion the phrasing of Note 593 does not sufficiently protect the interests of Canada. It would seem that the United States Government is reluctant to use the word "abandoned" or to contemplate the condition of abandonment in connection with the crude oil facilities. Eventually the unsold part or parts of the facilities must be considered as abandoned and the problem is really reducible to a consideration of the date this abandonment will be acknowledged.

Until this acknowledgement is made some authority will need to be recognized as the custodian of the property and some organization recognized as the authority for establishing valuations for the sale of small parts of the facilities to possible tardy purchasers. The Canadian Government does not wish to assume these responsibilities at any time, and the United States Government wishes to relieve itself of them at the expiration of a two-year period, but at the same time to benefit financially from any subsequent sale or disposal without further financial responsibility.

It must be realized that the longer the crude oil facilities and equipment lie unattended the less attractive they will be to a buyer. They will become rusted and obsolete in type and deteriorate in quality. Equipment is stored in buildings which when erected were only intended to be temporary in nature and which even now are becoming adversely affected by the weather, bears and rodents. Roofs and the buildings generally will admit rain and snow to an increasing degree as time goes by and already some of the buildings are in bad shape. Furthermore, the Canol Road is deteriorating rapidly and the problem of getting equipment out will soon involve a major road-building operation.

We have been advised by a competent geologist of this department that the possibility of increased future oil development in the Norman Wells region appears to be so remote that Canol equipment will be so deteriorated and antiquated and the Canol Road so deteriorated, that they will be valueless by the time such development comes to pass.

The land occupied by the crude oil facilities is all Crown Land except about ninety-nine acres of the oil refinery site at Whitehorse and the place where the pipe-line crosses the White Pass and Yukon Route, the latter two privately owned parcels of land being owned by the British Yukon Railway Company, a subsidiary of the White Pass and Yukon Route.

The Department of Mines and Resources has leased ninety-nine acres of the oil refinery site from the railway company and granted a Permission to Occupy to the United States Government. If the refinery is to be operated, the operator will need to make an agreement for the site with the railway company. If the refinery is not to be operated the Department will wish to terminate the lease within a reasonable time and not be obligated to continue the lease for an indefinite or long period while the plant remains idle and gradually disintegrates. This means that if the refinery is not to be operated some arrangement should be made for dismantling and disposing of the plant and cleaning up the site preparatory to returning it to the railway company within a certain time limit. The responsibility for this work should be defined.

The last sentence of Paragraph D reads "The principle is recognized that if any such property should thereafter be put to beneficial use the United States Government should receive fair compensation". The wording of this sentence might be interpreted as leaving the Canadian Government liable for fair compensation or at least it does not clearly relieve the Canadian Government of liability if a trespasser or person who has no right puts the property to some beneficial use.

The point of the whole matter seems to be that the United States officers have been endeavouring to improve their position, whereas the feeling here is that there is no justification from the Canadian standpoint for further concessions.

Yours very truly,

C. W. JACKSON
for the Deputy Minister

DISPOSAL OF CANOL CRUDE OIL FACILITIES

1. By an exchange of notes in June 1942 the United States Government were given authority to construct a pipeline from Norman Wells to Whitehorse, to drill additional oil wells in the Norman Wells area, and to construct at Whitehorse a refinery and storage facilities. It was then agreed that at the termination of hostilities the facilities would be valued jointly and the Canadian Government would be given first option to purchase at the agreed valuation. If the option were not taken up it was the understanding that the facilities would be offered for sale publicly—the agreed valuation to be the reserve price. In the event that no purchaser could be found disposition would then be referred to the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, for an opinion on the continuing defence value of the project, and dismantling would not be allowed until recommended by the Joint Board.

2. In February 1945, the Canadian Government agreed that the United States might terminate or modify operation of any or all of the Canol facilities when military considerations needed no longer to be taken into account, and that action to evaluate the facilities be initiated within a reasonable time following notice of termination.

3. Later in 1945, the Canadian Government waived their option to purchase and it was agreed between the Governments that plans for joint valuation should be abandoned and that provision for a reserve price should be dropped. The United States Authorities undertook to submit plans for disposition at a later date.

4. On November 7, 1946, the United States Government, in note No. 593 (attached), submitted these plans. In view of the opinion of the military authorities that the Canol Project is no longer of defence value, they suggest that the question of disposal should not be referred to the Joint Defence Board. Instead the United States propose to advertise the sale of the crude oil facilities in the press of both countries with a view to sale to a private company. If unsuccessful, the United States propose that they be permitted to remove any of the facilities. The Canadian Government may purchase from the United States any of the facilities not disposed of by sale or removal. In the event that the facilities are not disposed of in any of these ways the following procedure is suggested:

ID "Any of the facilities not disposed of (under paragraphs A, B, and C above), after a period of two years from the date of this agreement, shall, at the option of the United States, either be removed from Canada by the United States authorities or shall be left in situ and regarded as of no value unless put to beneficial use. The principle is recognized that if any such property should thereafter be put to beneficial use the United States Government should receive fair compensation."

5. One provision of the agreement grants exemption from import duties and excise taxes on any portion that may be sold for operation in Canada. The Department of National Revenue concurs in this. It is unlikely that much, if any, of the project will be bought for operation in Canada, but the United States Government attaches importance to including the provision to help them in explaining and defending the agreement. A similar policy has been followed in other agreements relating to war surplus.

6. The United States has proposed that the provisions of the agreement shall come into force on a date to be mutually agreed. This stipulation is to comply with their law which requires that certain surplus property disposal agreements must be before Congress for 30 days before becoming effective.

7. The section quoted above is designed to satisfy the United States by avoiding the use of the word "abandoned" and to answer Canadian requirements by the elimination of any suggestion of Canadian involvement in disposal. The United States naturally wish to guard against the possibility either of a potential buyer "sitting out" a two year period or of a discovery of additional oil increasing the value of Canol after the United States has abandoned claim. In order to clarify further Canada's position, the United States has agreed to an exchange of letters firmly establishing the principle that the Canadian Government has no custodial responsibility and takes no responsibility for the payment of fair compensation if the facilities are put to beneficial use by private users.

8. Accordingly it is recommended to the Cabinet that they accept the United States proposals on the understanding that Canada assumes no responsibility for custody of or compensation for the Canol facilities.

REVISION OF ABC-22

With regard to the revision of the Joint Canadian-United States Defence Plan (ABC 22), the following proposals are submitted by the Canadian Section of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence:

1. It is desirable that both countries should agree on certain fundamental principles for planning including the following:

(a) INFORMATION AND INTELLIGENCE. There should be a free and unrestricted exchange of information and intelligence in so far as it affects the forces of North America and this free flow of information should receive the necessary security safeguards.

(b) ALL EMBRACING PLAN. The plan for the defence of North America should be all embracing, i.e. it should not only cover Alaska and northern Canada, but Newfoundland, Greenland and Iceland; and any early warning system which may be part of the plan should be a uniform system throughout.

(c) STANDARDIZATION OF EQUIPMENT. The early warning and communication equipment (radar, wireless, etc.) should be standardized across the whole of the fronts.

(d) COMMAND AND ORGANIZATION. It is felt that the principle of Command should remain as simple as possible, i.e. as long as the troops of only one nation are stationed in an area, to remain on national lines, but as soon as the forces of both nations are involved the Command should be a designated Command, designated by the Governments concerned.

(e) RESPONSIBILITY FOR MAPPING AND SURVEY. This responsibility should remain with the country concerned, and each country should provide the maps on the scale desired by the other partner.

(f) TERRITORIAL CONSIDERATIONS. The stationing of troops in the other nation's territory should be avoided until war is imminent. Construction of air-fields, camps, installations, to be carried out by nationals concerned.

PROCEDURE

2. Combined planning committees of the two countries should meet together, alternately in Washington and Ottawa as required, with the object of producing a common appreciation and plan.

APPRECIATION

3. The first responsibility of these combined planning committees should be to prepare an appreciation of the problem along with an outline plan. This appreciation and outline plan should be submitted to the Board after consultation with the respective Chiefs of Staff and, if approved, should be submitted by the Board to the two Governments.

IMPLEMENTATION OF THE OUTLINE PLAN

4. On acceptance of the Plan, the Board should consider its implementation over a definite period.

TELEGRAM

Ottawa, January 16, 1946

IMMEDIATE. TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL. Your telegram D.2230 of December 14th. United States proposals for bases.

1. We have given preliminary consideration to the general issues involved in these proposals and are continuing our examination. On broad grounds we would welcome the assumption by the United States of responsibility for the maintenance of a far-flung chain of bases in the Atlantic and Pacific, provided that they were to be made available on acceptable terms to the Security Council and that equitable arrangements could be reached for civil aviation facilities at certain points. At the same time, we appreciate your anxiety lest the position of the United Nations Organization should be prejudiced through pressure by the United States to secure rights at this stage. Where military facilities have been established in foreign territories during the war (e.g. the Azores), however, it seems important that there should be no gap between the lapsing of wartime rights and the adoption of long-term arrangements.

2. It is, of course, of special interest to Canada from the point of view of North American defence that the United States should have effective use of suitable outlying bases in the North Atlantic and North Pacific. In this connection we are about to institute, under the auspices of the Canada-United States Permanent Joint Board on Defence, joint discussions with a view to revision of the existing defence plan which was adopted in 1941 by the two governments, at the Board's instance. It is clear that the maintenance or establishment of such U.S. bases, particularly in Newfoundland, Greenland and Iceland, would directly affect any revised plan which may be worked out.

3. In short, we regard it as in the interest of Canada and in the general interest of the Commonwealth and the United Nations Organization that the United States should have extensive rights and responsibilities outside her own territories. However, we also are dubious about the timing of some of the requests which they have put forward especially as they may encourage the Soviet government to make undesirable demands.

NOTE ON PERMANENT JOINT BOARD ON DEFENCE
MEMORANDUM DATED JANUARY 17TH, 1946

This memorandum was worked out at meetings of the Board on January 16th and 17th using a paper presented by General Henry dated December 21st, 1945, as a basis for discussion. It includes all the points which the Canadian Chiefs of Staff and the Canadian Section of the Board wished to see incorporated.

At the earnest request of General Henry, this paper was not made a formal recommendation of the Board and is not attached to the Journal. General

Henry felt that the distribution of the Journal in the War Department is so wide that if proposals for joint defence planning were included with it, they would come to the attention of too many officers not concerned with the problem.

The memorandum will be presented to the War and Navy Departments by the United States Army and Naval Members. If it is approved (and this is expected) a United States planning group will be designated and General Henry will advise the Secretary of the Canadian Section, suggesting a date for the Canadian planning group to come to Washington for the first joint meeting.

It will be noted that the Canadian suggestions as to procedure were acceptable to the United States Section of the Board. Joint planning groups will meet alternately in Washington and Ottawa (this is not spelled out but it is understood) and will report progress to the Board. Eventually, it is contemplated that the Board will submit a plan to the Governments for their approval.

January 17, 1946

The Permanent Joint Board on Defense has for some months been studying and discussing the postwar collaboration of Canada and the United States. At the meeting of the Board in New York on November 7th and 8th, 1945, the Senior United States Naval and Army members presented to the Board joint memoranda from the Secretaries of their respective departments requesting these Senior members to enter into discussions with the Canadian Section looking toward a revision of the basic Canada-United States Defense Plan (ABC 22). At the meeting of the Board in Quebec, on January 16th and 17th, 1946, the Canadian Section informed the United States Section that the Canadian Government had agreed that the revision of this basic defense plan was advisable and should be undertaken and had designated a Committee to work with the Board and an appropriate United States Committee to develop the details of such plan. The Board is of the opinion that more than a development of a basic defense or security plan is needed, and that the armed forces of the two countries should now take action to assure that they are prepared to act promptly in carrying out any security plan in case of emergency. The Board presents in this memorandum its recommendations as to the measures which should be adopted by the armed forces of both countries forthwith, and also presents its recommendations as to the general principles which should be incorporated in any revision of a Joint Security Plan.

PRINCIPLES PROVIDING FOR JOINT COOPERATION OF CANADA-UNITED STATES ARMED FORCES AND FOR THE CANADA-UNITED STATES SECURITY PLAN (CA-1)

SECTION I

PREAMBLE

The armed forces of the United States and Canada, realizing that any danger to the security of the North American Continent will involve the armed forces of both countries, deem it desirable to provide for the close cooperation of Canadian and United States armed forces and to revise the Joint Canadian-United States Defense Plan (ABC-22), in order to insure the security of the two countries. This revised plan will be known as "The Canada-United States Security Plan," (short title, CA-1).

SECTION II

COOPERATIVE MEASURES

In order to prepare their respective armed forces for joint action, the following principles are adopted forthwith:

(a) Canada and the United States will jointly prepare an all embracing plan to preserve the security of the two countries.

(b) There will be free and comprehensive exchange of military information and intelligence insofar as it affects the security of the two countries. Each country will respect the security classification of the other and in particular will undertake to observe all restrictions on circulation specified by the originating country.

(c) Personnel of the armed forces of one country may be assigned to the armed forces of the other country in such numbers and upon such terms as may be agreed upon from time to time by the respective military, naval and air authorities.

(d) The principle of standardization in arms, equipment, organization, methods of training and new developments will be applied as far as practicable. Appropriate joint groups will be organized to study and make recommendations on these matters.

(e) Joint manoeuvres and joint tests of material of common interest should be encouraged.

(f) The agreement for the reciprocal transit of military aircraft and public vessels now in effect should be continued, and the military, naval, and air facilities of each country will continue to be made reciprocally available to the armed forces of the other country.

(g) Each country will be responsible for mapping and surveying its own territory and will provide maps on the scale required for agreed needs.

(h) In order to develop a Joint Security Plan, joint groups will be established to study and recommend to the PJB for reference to the two Governments the military, naval, and air installations, bases, meteorological services, communication services, and industrial facilities needed, together with the forces required and their specific responsibilities in connection with the security of both countries. Their studies should be revised from time to time.

SECTION III

GENERAL PRINCIPLES TO BE INCORPORATED IN THE CANADA-UNITED STATES SECURITY PLAN (CA-1)

Purpose

This Security Plan is prepared to provide for the Joint Operation of Canadian and United States Armed Forces in case of danger to the security of the North American Continent. It will be placed in effect by the Chiefs of Staff of Canada and the United States when so directed by the Canadian and the United States Governments.

General Provisions:

1. In time of emergency a United Canada-United States Chiefs of Staff (CANUSA) will be organized and located at a place to be mutually agreed upon. CANUSA will be charged with the implementation and strategic direction of this plan.

2. As far as practicable each nation will provide within its own territory such installations and facilities and will develop such forces as are necessary for the implementation of this plan.

3. So far as practicable each nation will make available its own bases, harbors, repair and other facilities for use by the forces of the other.

4. A unified command may be established for any Canada-United States forces operating in any area or areas or for particular Canada-United States forces operating for a common purpose:

(a) Upon direction of CANUSA, or

(b) When the immediate commanders of the Canada-United States forces concerned agree that the situation requires the exercise of unity of command, and further agree as to the Service that shall exercise such command. All mutual agreements shall be subject to confirmation by CANUSA, but this provision shall not prevent the immediate establishment of unity of command in case of emergency.

5. Unity of command, when established, vests in one commander the responsibility and authority to coordinate the operations of the participating forces of both nations by the setting up of task forces, the assignment of tasks, the designation of objectives, and the exercise of such coordinating control as the commander deems necessary to ensure the success of the operation. Unity of command does not authorize a commander exercising it.

to control the administration and discipline of the forces of the nation of which he is not an officer, nor to issue any instructions to such forces beyond those necessary for effective coordination.

6. The assignment of an area of responsibility to one nation shall not be construed as restricting the forces of the other nation from temporarily extending appropriate operations into that area, as may be required by particular circumstances.

7. For all matters requiring common action, each nation will require its commanders in all echelons and services, on their own initiative, to establish liaison with and cooperate with appropriate commanders of the other nation.

Joint General Mission:

To provide for the security of the United States and Canada against armed attack.

TELEGRAM WA-502

Washington, January 29, 1946

FOR IMMEDIATE ACTION. TOP SECRET. I have received from Mr. Macdonnell a Top Secret memorandum of January 17th prepared by the Permanent Joint Board on Defence. The implications, political and military, of the proposals in this memorandum are, of course, very far-reaching, and it deserves much more consideration than I have yet been able to give it, but I thought that you might like to have my first reactions, tentative though they are.

In the first place, I am struck by the formality of the proposed document. It is almost in treaty form, whereas one might have thought that at this stage something more in the nature of a statement of general principles would have been sufficient. This, however, is a point of form rather than substance. More important, I think, is the omission of any reference to the United Nations Organization, its provisions, and the machinery set up by them for the security of its members. Surely we cannot work out separate defence arrangements without relating them somehow to general international security arrangements. In this connection, the arguments which you advance in your letter of January 7th† concerning Canada's association with the proposed Inter-American Security Agreement to take the place of the Chapultepec arrangement apply, to some extent at least, to the proposals of the memorandum. I recognize that these proposals can, without difficulty, be related to any wider arrangements, but should this not be made clear in the earliest drafts? For instance, in paragraph 1 reference is made to the respective armed forces acting promptly

“in carrying out any war plan in case of emergency”. Some limitations or qualifications might be included here to make clear that the only war plans which could be carried out would be those within the terms of the United Nations’ Charter. A similar insertion might be made to Section III (purpose), after “in case of danger to the security of the North American Continent”.

Do the arrangements contemplated in this document go further than any similar undertaking with respect to defence relationships within the British Commonwealth of Nations? If they do, and it seems to me that this is the case, then if the document were ever made public, criticism would certainly be directed to that aspect of it. Am I right in thinking that our arrangements within the Commonwealth for coordination of defensive measures have always been strictly between the services and we have resisted their inclusion in any inter-Governmental agreement? If you substituted the United Kingdom for the United States of America in the proposals in question, would they be equally satisfactory? If not, you can visualize the criticism which would follow in certain quarters. If this is a difficulty, could it not be overcome in part by leaving out the preamble altogether with its reference to Governments? This would make the agreement one between the services of both countries only, to be brought into effect when Governments determine. Section III (5), providing for unity of command is, of course, widely drawn, and no doubt necessarily so. By giving the single Commander power to issue any instructions necessary for effective coordination, he could, I suppose, do pretty well what he wished.

RE: JOINT PLANNING WITH THE UNITED STATES

1. I have again gone over the P.J.B.D. memorandum of January 17th and the attached paper, being the Board’s “recommendations as to measures which should be adopted by (the armed forces of) both countries forthwith” and “the general principles which should be incorporated in any revision of a Joint Security Plan”. In my opinion, these documents should not be taken as a basis for joint planning without full Cabinet discussion and approval; further, I believe they should undergo substantial revision, both as to form and substance, before they are submitted to the government.

2. The objections to these documents emerged during our discussion in your office earlier this week. Mr. Pearson, in his Teletype WA-502 of January 29th, has also drawn attention to the two most important, viz. the omission of any reference to the United Nations security arrangements under the Charter, and the relationship of the proposed undertakings to our position within the Commonwealth.

The fact is that the Board's proposals go far beyond a working paper for the instruction of joint planners. They take the form of a basic security pact and contain a statement of fundamental military obligations.

3. We had expected something quite different. On the basis of proposals reported at an earlier meeting by the U.S. Section of the Board, and said to have emanated from the U.S. Secretaries of War and Navy, the government were invited to approve the institution of joint defence planning under the Board's auspices. On December 19th, 1945, the Cabinet accepted a recommendation of the Cabinet Defence Committee to this effect, on the understanding that any new plans for joint defence would be submitted to the government for decision. At the same time, it was agreed that the Chiefs of Staff Committee, with the addition of appropriate civilian officials, would be given responsibility for co-ordinating Canadian participation in the preparation of joint plans.

The conclusions of the P.H.P.<sup>1</sup> Advisory Committee's paper on postwar defence relationships with the United States were accepted as general terms of reference for Canadian planning groups, and reservation was made in respect of any proposals involving a substantial departure from current plans for Canada's postwar forces.

We thought that no further action by the government would be required until actual planning had advanced at least some distance and that, meantime, the planners could be instructed on the basis of these discussions and decisions in the Cabinet Defence Committee and in the Cabinet.

4. However, the Board have produced the recommendations of their memorandum of January 17th, as amended by their supplementary memorandum of January 25th,† and the immediate question is how these documents should be dealt with and how joint planning can be instituted without delay.

My suggestions are as follows:

(a) That appropriate steps be taken to defer action by the two governments upon the Board's recommendations, on the ground that in their present form they are inappropriate and premature.

If necessary, it might be suggested to the Board that their memoranda be withdrawn for consideration at a later date in amended form.

(b) That the two Sections of the Board agree upon written instructions to the planners in the form of a working paper from the Board on the basis of policies already settled.

In the case of Canada, it would not be difficult to include most of the points made in the Board's memoranda as flowing naturally from Ministerial discussions and from the contents of ABC-22.

(Mr. Macdonnell's revision of January 29th† goes some distance to meet this suggestion, but would, in my opinion, require further substantial modification before it satisfied these conditions.)

The eventual product of the planners of the two countries as submitted to the Board and recommended to the two governments might well include a draft "Canada-U.S. Security Plan" and could then be considered and dealt with in relation to our commitments to the United Nations and as a member of the Commonwealth. Meantime, planning could go forward without hindrance, and the nature of Canada's other security obligations may have become clearer.

5. I shall send you shortly a note of amendments which might be made to Mr. Macdonnell's memorandum of January 29th.

Washington, February 7, 1946

Dear Mr. Macdonnell,

At the meeting of the PJB 7-8 November 1945, the Canadian Service Members stated that as a practical measure of continuing collaboration and to assist in coordinating the Armed Forces of the United States and Canada, the Canadian Chiefs of Staff recommended that the practice of interchange of Canadian-United States officers within selected positions should be developed.

The Board agreed with this and the United States Navy and Army members undertook to seek the approval of their Chiefs of Staff to this proposal. I am pleased to inform you that the Joint Chiefs of Staff have indicated that they consider the interchange of Canadian and United States officers within selected positions in their respective services is desirable as a practical measure of continuing collaboration and to assist in coordinating the armed forces of the two nations. The Joint Chiefs of Staff suggested that details of the interchange, such as number of officers and selection of positions, be arranged between the military services concerned.

As the arrangement of the details has been left to the military services concerned, the Secretary of War has directed the undersigned to handle the matter in this case as far as the War Department is concerned. I am therefore taking the matter up direct with General Letson and Air Vice-Marshal Curtis, the Senior Canadian Army and Air Force Representatives on the Permanent Joint Board.

It is believed that you will receive from the Senior U.S. Navy Member a similar communication in the near future.

Very truly yours,

GUY V. HENRY
Major General

DRAFT 34TH RECOMMENDATION OF THE
PERMANENT JOINT BOARD ON DEFENCE

Discussions in the Permanent Joint Board on Defence have resulted in a draft 34th Recommendation a copy of which is attached. The Canadian and United States Sections of the Board undertook to ascertain whether a Recommendation along these lines would be acceptable to both Governments. The United States Section is anxious to hold an early meeting of the Board at which the Recommendation would be formally adopted. They are strongly of the opinion that useful and intelligent defence cooperation between the two countries would be assisted, at their end, if a clear statement of principles had been adopted as United States Government policy.

The Chiefs of Staff Committee have approved the draft 34th Recommendation in principle and there are political considerations in its favour which are regarded as important by the Department of External Affairs. Both the Canadian and United States Governments have assumed an obligation under the Charter of the United Nations to register all agreements with the Secretariat. It is true that it would not be desirable to make public a detailed defence or security plan, but this is not called for. What is proposed is the registration and publication of a number of very general measures of cooperation. If this were done, both Governments would be justified in taking the line that any detailed security or defence plan which might later emerge was simply a practical implementation of the agreement already registered and would not itself require registration.

Because of the desirability of avoiding anything in the nature of a treaty or convention, the Board agreed that the best method of procedure would be to make a Recommendation which would be approved by both Governments. It could then be announced simultaneously by both Governments at an appropriate time and a valid and effective agreement would thus be entered into which could be registered with the United Nations.

Another argument for a public agreement lies in the possibility of premature disclosure of the current secret discussions. In the view of the Board, public attention will almost inevitably be drawn to the fact that plans for defence cooperation are being discussed—indeed some newspaper comment has already appeared—and it is desirable that the two Governments should forestall rumours and speculation by announcing agreed measures of cooperation which are simple and straightforward.

It is learned that the United States Section may wish to suggest that subparagraph (f) dealing with the exchange of military information should be put into a separate and non-public Recommendation. They are fully prepared to exchange military information but they feel that the publication of this part of the Recommendation would put them under great pressure from many other countries to enter into the same exchange arrangements, a course which they would not be prepared to follow. It appears that a separate and non-public Recommendation if strongly desired by the United States would be acceptable to the Canadian authorities.

Discussions which have taken place in the Board have reaffirmed the importance of continuing to maintain, in peacetime, a close relationship between the armed forces of Canada and the United States. It is submitted that the obligations of the Governments of Canada and the United States under the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security would be fulfilled more effectively through such a relationship. The Board, accordingly, makes the following as its 34th Recommendation:

In order to make more effective provision for the security of the northern part of the western hemisphere, the Governments of Canada and the United States should provide close cooperation between their armed forces in all matters relating thereto and, in particular, should provide for the following measures of cooperation:

(a) Assignment of personnel of the armed forces of one country to the armed forces of the other country in such numbers and upon such terms as may be agreed upon from time to time by the respective military, naval and air authorities.

(b) Encouragement of the adoption, as far as practicable, of common designs and standards in arms, equipment, organization, methods of training and new developments, with due recognition being given in the special circumstances prevailing in each country.

(c) Encouragement of joint manoeuvres and joint tests of material of common interest to the armed forces.

(d) Reciprocal extension of its military, naval and air facilities by each country to the armed forces of the other country with each country continuing to provide reciprocally for transit through its territory and territorial waters of military aircraft and public vessels of the other country.

(e) Allocation of responsibility to each country for mapping and surveying its own territory and providing maps to the other country on the scales required for agreed needs.

(f) Free and comprehensive exchange of military information insofar as it affects the security of the two countries, the circulation of which shall be subject to such restrictions as may be specified by the originating country.

In its meeting on April 29th, the Permanent Joint Board on Defence made two recommendations which are attached. These follow closely the drafts considered earlier by Cabinet Defence Committee and by yourself. The Recommendations have been sent to Cabinet Defence Committee.

As regards the 34th Recommendation dealing with the exchange of military information, neither country desires that it be made public. When it has been approved by both Governments it will simply be put into effect and no question of publicity will arise. This Recommendation is of considerable value to the Canadian armed services since, until it is approved, they are refused access to a wide range of United States military information, particularly on research and development, which they are anxious to obtain.

It is proposed that the 35th Recommendation should be made public on an agreed date in Ottawa and Washington. I think that publication should take place under cover of a joint statement by the President and yourself, which could give a fuller and less formal explanation of the purposes than can be incorporated in the Recommendation itself. There will also be certain points not suitable for incorporation in the joint statement which ought to be made here, especially with respect to the bearing of the agreement on our own cooperation with members of the British Commonwealth.

The joint statement might play up the relationship of the Recommendation to the United Nations Charter and particularly to the first paragraph of Article 52 on regional arrangements. We must face the prospect that in some quarters both at home and abroad there will be a tendency to interpret this Recommendation as equivalent to the conclusion of a defensive alliance between the United States and Canada directed against the possibility of attack by Russia. Such an interpretation may well be placed upon it in the U.S.S.R., while in the United Kingdom, and to some extent elsewhere in the British Commonwealth, it may be regarded by some people as impeding cooperation with other Commonwealth countries.

I think it might be well, therefore, before agreement with the United States on a date for publication, to inform the United Kingdom of what we are doing and to tell them that we are willing to make an agreement with them in similar terms. We could thus establish our position clearly as prepared to cooperate closely with the United Kingdom in defence matters while ruling out schemes of exclusive Commonwealth defence arrangements.

The State Department are inclined to favour early publication. They think that the international scene is now as propitious as it is likely to become and that it would be well to have the agreement a matter of public record before any new tensions arise. I understand that they will not secure formal approval of the Recommendation from the President until the eve of publication, so that they cannot be accused of keeping secret the fact that they have entered into a defence arrangement with Canada.

From our own point of view I am satisfied that the agreement is useful and ought to be welcomed by other Commonwealth countries. The problems to which its publication may give rise relate to the interpretation which may be placed upon it and not to its substance.

The Board considered its First Recommendation made August 26th, 1940, approved by the two governments and now in effect between the two Sections of the Board and through them transmitted to the armed forces of the two countries. This recommendation reads as follows:

“It was agreed that there should be a full and complete exchange of military, air and naval information between the two Sections of the Board, with the understanding that each Section would be free to convey to its government any information they received.”

The Board decided that it was advisable to substitute for the First Recommendation, the following Recommendation:

Subject to the national policies of the two governments, there shall be a free and comprehensive exchange of military information in so far as it affects the security of the two countries, the circulation of which shall be subject to such restrictions as may be specified by the originating country.

AIR BASE REQUIREMENTS IN NORTHERN CANADA AND LABRADOR

1. The following extract from the Journal of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, dated April 29th, 1946, is submitted for the consideration of the Cabinet Defence Committee:

"The Board discussed at length the question of immediate air base requirements in Northern Canada and Labrador. It was recognized that, although the United States at the conclusion of the war in Europe had declared the Crimson Route in Northeastern Canada to possess no continuing defence value, this declaration was based on then existing considerations. In general, the Board were agreed that final decisions could not be reached until the joint Canada-United States planning groups had submitted their recommendations. It was felt, however, that the contemplated studies would reveal a need for a number of air bases in the North and that considerations of prudence and economy indicated the desirability of maintaining these bases since to close them down and later to bring them back into operation would involve considerable additional expense. The Board stressed the importance of the maintenance of bases required for the completion of the programme of photography for air charting and mapping. The Board agreed upon the following conclusions and requested the Secretary of the Canadian Section to bring them to the attention of the appropriate authorities:

(a) the Northwest Staging Route, including the airways system, airfields, highway and landline communication system, is vital to the defence of Canada and the United States. The operation of this Route should not be reduced below a level which will provide at all times for the safe transit of large numbers of military aircraft of all types. These facilities will be of little value if not immediately available for use on a large scale as no warning can be expected of any future attack;

(b) the facilities of the Mackenzie River Air Route should be retained pending assessment of the defence value of all parts of the system by the United States-Canada combined planning group. These facilities should be maintained in an operating condition insofar as they are required for the program of trimetrogon photography and air chartering;

(c) the aerodromes of the Crimson Route, including The Pas, Churchill, Coral Harbour (Southampton Island), Frobisher Bay and Fort Chimo, are considered to possess great strategic importance, the exact assessment of which, however, must await the findings of the United States-Canada joint planning group. Meanwhile, these facilities should be retained and maintained on a fully operational basis insofar as they are required by the program of trimetrogon photography and air charting. The full operation of Churchill, however, is considered necessary regardless of photographic requirements.

(d) Goose Bay is considered vital to the defence of the United States and Canada and should be maintained as a military base on such a scale as to provide for the stationing of operational squadrons as required."

Ottawa, May 13, 1946

Among the items dealt with by the Cabinet at their meeting of May 9th, the following decisions are of interest to the Canadian Section, Permanent Joint Board on Defence:

Northern defence facilities; maintenance of airfields

The Minister of National Defence reported that the Cabinet Defence Committee had examined the conclusions of the Permanent Joint Board respecting air base requirements in northern Canada and Labrador and had agreed as follows:

(a) that present arrangements for the maintenance of the Northwest Staging Route and ancillary facilities, under Service auspices, provided for the operation of these facilities in accordance with the recommendation of the Board;

(b) to recommend to the Cabinet:

(i) that the airfields on the Mackenzie River Route be maintained in an operating condition until October 1st, 1946, by the Department of Transport, to the standard required for the conduct of the air photography programme;

(ii) that the airfields at Churchill and The Pas, on the Northeast Staging Route, be maintained in an operating condition until October 1st, 1946, by the Department of Transport, to the standard required for the conduct of the air photography programme, and that the airfield at Southampton Island be maintained on a caretaker basis;

(iii) that, in making Churchill airfield serviceable, the Department of Transport look into the possibility of making temporary repairs using local labour;

(iv) that the Air Force continue to operate Goose Bay airfield and that, if necessary, the personnel required for this purpose (estimated at 500) be additional to presently authorized establishments;

(v) that the construction of married quarters for 25 men be authorized, at a cost not to exceed $100,000; and

(c) that the whole position with respect to these airfields be reviewed in the light of current Canadian-United States defence planning.

The Cabinet approved the recommendation submitted by the Minister on behalf of the Cabinet Defence Committee on the understanding that Air Force operation of the base at Goose Bay would be continued without increase in presently authorized establishments.

Defence cooperation with the United States;

P.J.B.D. 34th and 35th Recommendations

The Minister of National Defence reported that the Cabinet Defence Committee had examined and discussed at length these Recommendations of the Board and recommended that the former be approved and that the latter be amended as to paragraphs (d) and (e) in order to make it clear that reciprocal provision of facilities and responsibility for mapping and surveying be subject to agreement between the two governments.

The Cabinet agreed:

(1) that the 34th Recommendation (exchange of military information) be approved; and

(2) that, in view of the important considerations of policy involved, action upon the 35th Recommendation (measures of cooperation between the Armed Forces of the two countries) be suspended pending its further examination in relation to current defence discussions with other Commonwealth countries.

Extension of Loran programme in northern Canada

The Minister of National Defence reported that the Cabinet Defence Committee had also considered the Board's recommendation for approval of a U.S. request for continuation until May, 1947, of the joint experimental programme for low frequency Loran in relation to navigation and for defence purposes. The Committee had agreed to recommend approval of this request as recommended by the Board.

The Cabinet approved the recommendation submitted by the Minister on behalf of the Defence Committee.

AN APPRECIATION OF THE REQUIREMENTS FOR CANADIAN-U.S. SECURITY

I: JOINT SECURITY MISSION OF THE U.S. AND CANADA

1. To defend the territory of Canada, Newfoundland and the United States, including Alaska, and to protect the vital sea and air communications associated therewith, in order to insure the ultimate security of Canada and the United States.

II: CONCEPT OF SECURITY MEASURES

2. In the past North America has been comparatively immune from heavy attack by a hostile power, due to geographical barriers created by the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans and the frozen wastes of the Arctic. Technical developments in the art of warfare occasioned by scientific progress have lessened this immunity and portend that it will diminish progressively. Hence we are now confronted with the necessity of modifying our concept of defense for the United States and Canada. The principal advancements in the science of war responsible for this change are:

- a. The increased range of application of destructive power and armed force resulting from the development of modern aircraft, amphibious technique, guided missiles, and advancement in technique of submarine warfare.
- b. The increased destructive capacity of weapons such as the atomic bomb, rockets, and instruments of biological warfare.

III: ANALYSIS OF THE INTERNATIONAL SITUATION

3. It is impossible to estimate firmly the likelihood of a major war or when it might occur. It is reasonably certain that no nation desires to become involved in a war now, and that no major world power has as yet developed an economic potential considered adequate to support a major war in opposition to a combination of powers which would include the United States and Canada. However, the possibility exists that a major world power might precipitate war or might extend its policies to a point which Canada and the United States, in their own vital security interest, could no longer tolerate. This possibility is emphasized by the present delicate international situation which is characterized by the divergent tendencies in several critical areas each of which contain the seeds of possible global conflict which could germinate with unusual rapidity.

4. A major war involving the United States and Canada may have as its inception an outbreak of war between European powers which would involve Great Britain, and with the eventual intervention of Canada and the United States on the side of Great Britain. It is possible that an alignment of certain nations might overrun the European continent. Such hostile powers however, could not ignore the war-making potential of the United States, Canada and the unconquered members of the British Commonwealth of Nations which might therefore become targets for attack. Hostile powers would not forget that in World Wars I and II this potential was the decisive factor.

IV: ENEMY CAPABILITIES AND INTENTIONS

5. Any power or combination of powers capable of overrunning Europe would of necessity possess a great superiority in manpower and in organized ground and tactical air forces. It is reasonable to assume that such power would also have a submarine force which could be readily expanded by modern production methods and could embody technical improvements developed by German scientists. However, there would still be certain weaknesses in such a war machine. No European or Asiatic nation, with the exception of Great Britain, now possesses an adequate strategic air force, effective naval surface forces including carrier striking forces, amphibious lift and support, or the atomic bomb. It must therefore be expected that any war-minded nation would make every effort to overcome these weaknesses prior to the commencement of hostilities. Two factors which must be accorded appropriate consideration in the development of any joint security plan are (a) the enemy's determination to overcome these weaknesses and (b) the time interval involved in rehabilitating war-torn industry and developing European scientific talent (including that of Germany).

6. While the rate of reorganization and development of the war potential of Europe would affect the time for the possible precipitation of a war, the continued reduction of U.S. and Canadian armed forces tends to improve the relative ability of any other nation to wage war against our countries.

7. Although enemy capabilities for offensive action against the U.S. and Canada are limited in the immediate future, they will progressively increase as ostensible weaknesses are overcome—attaining culminating proportions when any potentially hostile power has available a weapon of the destructive effectiveness of the atomic bomb. Prior to overcoming these weaknesses, it is reasonable to assume that any war-minded nation would attempt maximum gain by all methods short of a major war.

8. On the other hand, the completion of a vigorous program of economic and industrial development plus possession of the atomic bomb would change the picture. With such a weapon, any war-minded power would feel confident of the ability to inflict significant damage to Canadian and U.S. war-making ability and the will of our people to fight. It is the consensus of informed scientific thought that it will probably require three to five years for any potential enemy to develop and produce the atomic bomb.

9. A major invasion of Canada and the United States will be beyond enemy capabilities for at least several years and would not be attempted prior to securing local air and naval superiority. However, an enemy might attempt a limited invasion of Alaska, northern Canada or other positions in the northern part of the Western Hemisphere for the purpose of projecting further operations against vital or more densely populated areas of the United States and Canada. An enemy would undoubtedly initiate a vigorous submarine campaign, including the use of mines, against U.S. and Canadian shipping. Sabotage of U.S. and Canadian industry on the largest possible scale would likewise be a practical certainty. The introduction of specially trained sabotage teams by air or submarine must be expected. Capabilities of potentially hostile powers to conduct sustained long-range air operations would be slight initially, but limited long-range air attacks are possible. A strategic air offensive against the United States and Canada would probably be initiated as soon as suitable means were available. Pending availability of the atomic bomb this air offensive would include conventional type bombing and mine-laying in coastal or inland waters.

10. The extent of a threat of sabotage and subversion in North America cannot be fully estimated. It is evident, however, that a serious threat exists in this field which should diminish as our nations mobilize for war. Sabotage and industrial slowdown through subversion and demoralization would be highly effective. Because of the difficulties of identifying and taking action against subversive groups in the United States and Canada such operations may be difficult to check. This threat is one which offers great military advantages to an enemy with a minimum expenditure of military effort. It is a problem which merits the most thorough evaluation and countermeasure planning by the responsible civil and military agencies in the United States and Canada.

11. Summarizing, it is estimated that the capabilities of foreign nations to undertake offensive actions against the United States and Canada will include:

a. Initial capabilities in the next three to five years.

(1) Sabotage in Canada and the United States by subversive groups and agents, some of whom may be introduced by air or submarine.

(2) Destruction of United States and Canadian shipping by submarines including use of mines.

(3) Aircraft attacks of limited strength against our peripheral bases and facilities in Alaska and Northern Canada or minor harassing attacks at longer range against interior areas of Canada and the United States.

(4) Occupation in limited strength of outlying positions in Alaska, Northern Canada or Greenland.

(5) Biological warfare.

b. Additional initial capabilities beginning about 1950.

(1) Attacks with guided missiles, rockets, or aircraft launched from submarines.

(2) Very Long-range air bombardment of vulnerable areas of the United States and Canada possibly with atomic bombs.

(3) Seizure of objectives in the subarctic regions of Canada, Alaska, or Labrador for purposes of:

(a) Launching attacks by guided missiles, rockets or aircraft against vulnerable areas or aerial mine laying in coastal or inland waters.

(b) Launching airborne operations against vital strategic targets.

12. Distinguished from the initial offensive actions against the United States and Canada set forth above, any power which had overrun the continents of Europe or Asia would have certain progressive capabilities. A series of airborne or amphibious operations could result in the seizure of bases in Iceland, Greenland, Labrador or Newfoundland in the east, or in Alaska and northern Canada in the west. Should such operations be successful, the subsequent development of these bases as springboards for the projection of further air and surface attack would constitute a serious menace to the security of Canada and the United States.

V: PROBABLE ENEMY OBJECTIVES IN NORTH AMERICA

13. Obviously the primary intention of an enemy in attacking the United States and Canada, would be to effect the greatest reduction of our war-making capability and will to continue the war. In the selection of targets, decision probably would be based on their indispensability (a measure of their importance to our war effort), and their susceptibility to being made ineffective by the means of attack at his disposal.

14. Examination indicates that objectives in the following classes represent significant segments of our war potential.

a. Nerve centers of executive, military and industrial control vital to war-time mobilization. Washington, Ottawa, Montreal, New York and Chicago, for example, are the locations of the principal concentrations of governmental, military and industrial administration neutralization of which, in the early months of a war, by any weapon of mass destruction or temporary paralysis by subversive activity would cause extensive demoralisation and confusion.

b. Concentrations of industry, transportation and communications essential to our war potential. Broadly speaking, the economic system of the United States and Canada is so extensive that effective neutralization in the initial phases would be extremely difficult. Therefore, we may expect that initial enemy attacks of a military nature would be directed against the most profitable or highly concentrated industrial areas. The major industrial areas of the Western Hemisphere are the North Atlantic Seaboard area stretching from Nova Scotia to the Chesapeake and the Great Lakes region running from Quebec to Chicago. However, sabotage can be anticipated against all elements of our national economy. In addition, there are a limited number of precision targets, the loss of which would have a serious effect upon our ability to carry the war to the enemy. Outstanding in this category are the atomic bomb factories, and the uranium mines at Port Radium.

c. Concentrations of populations. The shock effect on the will of the people to continue a war of a devastating attack directed against the largest cities of Canada and the United States might be calculated by the enemy to be of sufficient military value to prompt such a course of action.

VI: PROBABLE AVENUES OF APPROACH

15. From examination of the polar projection map on the northern portion of the Western Hemisphere, it is obvious that for an attack on Canada and the United States the only possible routes of approach are by sea or air from either the east, west or north, or combination of these approaches. The shortest approach to the northern part of the Western Hemisphere from the center of gravity of the world island (Eurasia-Africa) is via the polar cap. Feasibility of direct assault and entry by enemy forces from the north is complicated by logistical problems which render these operations by any but small forces difficult. However, it is from this direction that the major air effort, including a missiles attack, would probably come. It is considered that no world power, with the exception of Great Britain, has the capability of a major assault by sea. It is concluded, therefore, that the most probable hostile effort would be via air from the northwest, the north or the northeast with the last named being the most likely approach of an attack in force in view of its forming, the shortest route from the industrial heart of Eurasia. The stepping stones provided by such localities as Spitzbergen, Iceland, Greenland, and the northern Canadian islands would facilitate such an approach.

VII: SECURITY MEASURES REQUIRED

16. The increasing capabilities of a potential enemy to inflict serious damage on numerous targets of vital importance to the military strength of the United States and Canada indicate the firm necessity of keeping our measures for security ahead of his capabilities. The most essential element of security will be provided by preparedness for effective offensive action designed to carry the war to the enemy thus to keep the areas of actual conflict far removed from our centres of population and industry. Nevertheless, military forces must, in any case, be provided for the protection of the most vital elements of our national economy and our facilities for prosecuting the war to a successful conclusion.

17. In providing for the security of Canada and the United States, it is considered that measures for the initiation of offensive action are beyond the scope of this paper. Precautions against sabotage should be the responsibility of Canada and the United States for their respective territories.

18. Hence, the military tasks in the formulation of a joint Canadian-U.S. security plan must include provision for:

a. An effective air defense system composed of the following integrated elements:

(1) A comprehensive air warning, meteorological and communication system.

(2) A network of air bases with facilities and supplies for the accommodation of adequate numbers of interceptor aircraft and so located as to cover all avenues of approach at the maximum practicable distance from vital strategic areas.

(3) Adequate numbers of interceptor aircraft in a mobile status deployed at air bases as required.

(4) Adequate antiaircraft defenses in localities of strategic importance.

b. A program of air photography and surveys designed to produce the necessary maps and charts; topographic, hydrographic and other essential information for Canada, Newfoundland and Alaska.

c. Air and surface surveillance of all critical areas in order to provide timely warning of infiltration, establishment of enemy bases or actual attack.

d. An antisubmarine force to protect shipping and to seek out and destroy submarines which in the future may attempt to launch aircraft or guided missile attack; and means for the control and routing of shipping.

e. Naval forces to control the sea approaches to the North American continent.

f. Garrison forces of reasonable strength to defend coastal areas, bases and installations and, acting in conjunction with mobile forces, to deny the enemy lodgment in the northern part of the Western Hemisphere.

g. A command structure capable of insuring prompt action, jointly where necessary, under emergency conditions.

19. It is estimated that by 1950 the offensive capabilities of a potential enemy against the Western Hemisphere can assume menacing proportions. In view of the considerable time required for detailed planning and for the completion of the above undertakings, it is essential that certain elements of these tasks be initiated immediately. Most urgent projects which require speedy attention are:

a. The investigation of and establishment of essential elements of the air defense system.

b. The program of air mapping and photographing.

c. Collection of vital Arctic experience and scientific data.

d. Familiarization of appropriate personnel of the Armed Forces of both countries in military operations under extreme climatic conditions.

VIII: JOINT TASKS OF THE ARMED FORCES

20. The joint tasks of the armed forces of Canada and the United States which may be required to carry out the joint Canadian-U.S. defense plan are listed on pages            to            [sic] of the draft plan.

IX: REQUIREMENTS FOR COORDINATION AND INTEGRATION

21. The fulfillment of the foregoing tasks will require action on the part of both governments and the implementation of joint detailed plans to meet security requirements. Realization of the possible tempo of enemy action, particularly air, in event of hostilities emphasizes the necessity for the immediate establishment of provisions for insuring effective unified action in time of war, the principal features of which are set forth in the attached Basic Security Plan (Annex A) (Revision of ABC 22).

INTENTION

1. This Plan is intended to provide for the co-ordinated or joint action of Canadian and United States armed forces in the defence of the territory of Canada, Newfoundland and the United States, including Alaska, and the protection of the vital sea and air communications associated therewith, in order to ensure the ultimate security of Canada and the United States.

CONCEPT

2. In the past North America has been comparatively immune from heavy attack by a hostile power, due to the geographical barriers created by the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans and the frozen wastes of the Arctic. Technical developments in the art of warfare occasioned by scientific progress have lessened this immunity and portend that it will diminish progressively. Hence, we are now confronted with the necessity of modifying our concept of defence for the United States and Canada. The principal advancements in the science of war responsible for this change are:

a. The increased range of application of destructive power and armed force resulting from the development of modern aircraft, amphibious technique, guided missiles, and advancement in the technique of submarine warfare.

b. The increased destructive capacity of weapons such as the atomic bomb, rockets, and instruments of biological warfare.

3. To counter these changes in forms and scales of attack possible against North America, co-operative action of Canadian and United States armed forces will be required for purposes connected with:

a. The protection of vital areas of Canada and the United States against air attack.

b. The defence of Alaska, Canada, Newfoundland (which includes Labrador) and the United States.

c. The protection of essential shipping within the northern portions of the Western Atlantic and Pacific Oceans.

d. The protection of land, sea and air lines of communication in Canada and the United States.

SECTION III

JOINT MISSION OF THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA

4. To defend the territory of Canada, Newfoundland and the United States, including Alaska, and to protect the vital sea and air communications associated therewith, in order to ensure the ultimate security of Canada and the United States.

SECTION IV

JOINT TASKS

5. To accomplish the joint mission, the tasks set forth in this section are those which will be undertaken jointly by the armed forces of Canada and the United States.

JOINT TASK ONE: Protect vital areas of Canada and the United States from air attack.

JOINT TASK TWO: Defend the northern area of Canada and Labrador and protect the land, sea and air communications associated therewith.

JOINT TASK THREE: Defend Alaska and protect the land, sea and air communications associated therewith.

JOINT TASK FOUR: Defend Newfoundland (excluding Labrador) and protect the land, sea and air communications associated therewith.

JOINT TASK FIVE: Defend eastern Canada and the northeastern portion of the United States and protect the land, sea and air communications associated therewith.

JOINT TASK SIX: Defend western Canada and the northwestern portion of the United States and protect the land, sea and air communications associated therewith.

JOINT TASK SEVEN: Protect overseas shipping in the northwestern Atlantic.

JOINT TASK EIGHT: Protect overseas shipping in the northern Pacific.

SECTION VI

IMPLEMENTATION

14. This plan will be placed in effect by the Chiefs of Staff of Canada and the United States when so directed by the Governments of Canada and the United States.

SECTION VII

PREPARATORY MEASURES

15. Certain measures will require implementation immediately in order to ensure the proper functioning of the Plan in the event of emergency. Therefore, implementation of preparatory measures will be effected by specific agreements which will be embodied in annexes to this Plan when approved by appropriate authorities. Preparatory measures of particular urgency include:

- a. Investigation and establishment of the essential elements of a common system of air defence.
- b. Program of air photography, mapping and charting.
- c. Conduct of tests of equipment, clothing and supplies under Arctic conditions and collection of scientific data in Arctic regions.
- d. Familiarization of appropriate personnel of the armed forces of both countries in military operations under Arctic conditions.
- e. Collection of strategic information necessary for military operations in Canada, Newfoundland and Alaska.

SECTION VIII

CO-ORDINATION

16. Co-ordination of the military efforts of the United States and Canada shall be effected by mutual co-operation except where unified command is determined to be appropriate. The forces of each nation shall be assigned tasks for whose execution such forces shall be primarily responsible. These tasks may be as assigned in this Plan or by agreement between the Chiefs of Staff concerned.

17. When operating on a basis of mutual co-operation, the forces of each nation shall aid and support to their utmost capacity the appropriate forces of the other nation. During such operations, the Chiefs of Staff of each nation will retain the strategic direction and command of its own forces.

18. Unified command may be established over any United States and Canadian forces operating in any area or areas, or for a particular operation:

a. When agreed upon by the Chiefs of Staff concerned; or

b. When the commanders of the Canadian and United States forces concerned agree that the situation requires the exercise of unified command, and further agree as to the service that should exercise such command. All such mutual agreements shall be subject to confirmation by the Chiefs of Staff concerned, but this provision shall not prevent the immediate establishment of unified command by local commanders in cases of emergency.

19. Unified command, when established, shall vest in one commander the responsibility and authority to co-ordinate the operations of the participating forces of both nations by the setting up of task forces, the assignment of tasks, the designation of objectives, and the exercise of such co-ordinating control as the commander deems necessary to ensure the success of the operations. Unified command shall authorize the commander concerned complete freedom of movement of all forces of either nation or any service under his command to any area within his jurisdiction. Unified command, however, shall not authorize a commander exercising it to control the administration and discipline of the forces of the nation of which he is not an officer, nor to issue any instructions to such forces beyond those necessary for effective co-ordination.

20. The assignment of an area of responsibility to one nation shall not be construed as restricting the forces of the other nation from temporarily extending appropriate operations into that area, as may be mutually agreed between commanders concerned.

SECTION IX

CO-OPERATION AND LIAISON

21. For all matters requiring common action, each nation shall require its commanders to establish liaison with and co-operate with appropriate commanders of the other nation.

22. Each nation will seek to provide within its own territory the base facilities necessary for the implementation of this Plan. So far as practicable, each nation will make available these bases, harbours, and repair facilities for use by the forces of the other.

23. Arrangements for mutual use of areas and facilities during peace for training, tests, manoeuvres or exercises will be made by special agreement.

Similar arrangements will be made by special agreement for stationing of combat forces during peace in the territory of the other nation.

24. To facilitate common decision and action, Canada and the United States will establish in Washington and Ottawa, respectively, officers of all Services who will be charged with the duty of representing their military Services, vis-à-vis the appropriate military service of the other nation. They will also arrange to assign liaison officers where needed for effecting direct co-operation between commanders of forces in the field.

SECTION X

REVISION

25. This plan will be subject to any necessary revision annually, or at lesser intervals, if required. It will be the responsibility of the Canada-United States Permanent Joint Board on Defence to initiate this review not later than July 1st of each year. This review will include the preparation of a joint appreciation.

SECTION XI

ANNEXES TO THE PLAN

26. Preparatory measures, military forces and facilities to be provided, organization and command responsibilities, and communication principles are set forth in annexes to the Plan. These annexes will be revised from time to time as necessary.

(Annexes are under preparation and when approved by appropriate Canadian and United States authorities will be included in the Plan.)

Memorandum from Secretary to the Cabinet to Prime Minister

Ottawa, June 12, 1946

RE: DEFENCE OF NORTH AMERICA; CANADA-U.S. JOINT PLANNING

1. You will remember that on May 9th last the Cabinet, on the recommendation of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, approved the revision of the existing Canada-U.S. joint plan for the defence of North America. Since that date, Canadian and U.S. military and civil representatives have been at work with the object of producing for their respective governments a joint appreciation and joint plan upon which defence policies can be based and joint projects undertaken.

2. This planning is now taking shape. At meetings with our officers held in Washington May 20th to 23rd, the U.S. representatives submitted a draft appreciation which had previously been approved by the U.S. Chiefs of Staff.

This was amended somewhat to meet points raised by the Canadians and is now before our Chiefs of Staff. It is to be followed by a draft joint plan.

3. The conclusions of the draft appreciation are grave. They may be modified somewhat by the Canadian Chiefs of Staff but they are unlikely to undergo any material alteration before being submitted to the government.

Very briefly the conclusions are as follows: Estimated capabilities of the only potential aggressor (unnamed), taken with possible developments in long-range guided missiles and the atomic bomb make it unsafe to assume that North America will be free from attack for more than five years—beyond 1951. Such an attack could not assume the proportions of invasion by substantial sea-borne land forces until a later date, but the danger within this short period is of an order as to call for the construction of an “early warning” system and other installations in the Arctic regions before long, the North being the vulnerable aspect of North American defence.

4. The nature of the draft joint plan which will follow is forecast in the draft appreciation. It will clearly involve heavy expenditures of money and effort on the part of Canada or the United States, or both jointly. Its nature had already been forecast in numerous unrelated requests from U.S. authorities for permission to establish weather stations and the like in Northern Canada, and for the undertaking of exercises and experimental projects of varying magnitude.

5. There is no doubt that, from several points of view, these developments will constitute one of the most difficult and serious problems with which the government will have to deal, within the next few years. The initiative has been wholly that of the United States but our own military advisers will certainly, on purely defence grounds, reach similar conclusions. They may feel, however, that, on all the evidence, we have more time than U.S. authorities have estimated. It is, I think, likely that the importance which the U.S. government attach to acceptance and implementing of joint plans will be emphasized by an approach on the highest level.

In these circumstances, the government will probably have to accept the U.S. thesis in general terms, though we may be able to moderate the pace at which plans are to be implemented and to some extent the nature of the projects which are to be undertaken.

6. At the moment the Chiefs of Staff are examining the draft joint appreciation. They will meet next week, with Wrong and me (whom they have kept in constant touch with developments) to decide what advice should be tendered thereon to the government. Subsequently they intend to submit both draft documents to the Cabinet Defence Committee prior to recommendations going forward to the Cabinet.

It is intended that the principal intelligence and planning officials should present their views of the situation to the Cabinet Defence Committee. The hope has been expressed that you will be able to attend a second meeting of the Committee when the essential details could be presented.

7. One of the difficult features has been the submission by U.S. authorities of miscellaneous and, in many cases, unrelated requests. The Chiefs of Staff would like to defer action upon all such separate items until the government have had an opportunity of deciding upon the general problem and given their decision upon the joint appreciation and joint plan. This morning the Cabinet deferred decision upon a U.S. request to establish a weather station on Melville Island, until you were present and the general political problem could be discussed.

8. This matter might be given priority on Cabinet agenda once the Budget proposals are out of the way.

JOINT CANADIAN-UNITED STATES BASIC SECURITY PLAN

1. In accordance with the decision of the Cabinet of December 19, 1945, a Canadian planning team has met with a United States planning team to form the joint Canadian-United States Military Co-operation Committee for the purpose of revising ABC-22.

2. Attached is a draft of a Joint Canadian-United States Basic Security Plan which has been prepared jointly by Canadian and United States Planners, and agreed to by the Canadian Section of the Joint Canadian-United States Military Co-operation Committee. Agreement from the United States Section of this Committee has been sought. When a reply has been received from them it will be communicated to you.

3. The Plan is based on the "Appreciation of the Requirements for Canadian-United States Security No. 1, 23rd May, 1946" which has already been submitted to you.

4. It is desired to bring to your attention that, like ABC-22, this new basic security plan is a war plan, providing for a series of Joint Tasks to be undertaken by Canada and the United States in the event of an emergency. However, unlike ABC-22, certain preparatory measures (e.g., provision of facilities and forces required in time of peace in order that the tasks may be carried out in time of war) are included in the Plan and it is felt that these deserve special comment. In particular, a clear distinction must be drawn between the Joint Tasks in Sections IV and V and the Preparatory Measures in Section VII.

5. Section IV and V of the Plan outline the Joint Tasks to be performed in time of war. This delineation of tasks would be required in any defence plan for Canada but in this case specifically relates the Canadian tasks to those of the United States. These are normal tasks for, and the normal responsibility of, the Canadian defence forces.

6. The tasks as presently set out in broad terms in the basic plan do not, in themselves, commit Canada to any immediate increase in present military establishments. Each task will, however, require to be developed in detail in an appropriate annex. The annex, or annexes, will show the forces and facilities necessary, indicating any changes in present forces and facilities required, and each annex will, of course, require separate Government approval.

7. The preparatory measures on the other hand do imply in certain instances more immediate commitments, but they are joint United States-Canadian commitments and, as stated in Section VII, will only be implemented "by specific agreements which will be embodied in annexes to this Plan when approved by appropriate authorities". Each preparatory measure will therefore require specific agreement by either or both Governments as appropriate and approval of the basic Plan at this stage does not include of itself approval of specific measures involving expenditure of funds or raising of forces.

8. When the particular preparatory measures listed in Section VII are examined it will be seen that only those listed in para. 15, sub-paras. (a) and (b) are likely to require any substantial additional appropriations; those listed in sub-paras. (c), (d) and (e) are normal Canadian defence requirements and should not involve, certainly not during the balance of the fiscal year 1946-47, any additional appropriations.

9. The measures in sub-para. (a), namely, "investigation and establishment of the essential elements of a common system of air defence" will involve considerable expenditure for forces and facilities. Further, these preparations will require a relatively long period to complete and since, in accordance with the Appreciation, they must be completed by 1950, the initiation of the necessary measures is a matter of urgency. For the balance of the current fiscal year, however, no additional expenditures are anticipated as the detailed investigation and planning required for the preparation of the appropriate annex or annexes will undoubtedly take considerable time.

10. Similarly, the measures in sub-para. (b), namely, "the programme of air photography, mapping and charting", will not involve additional expenditures for the current fiscal year since the 1946 programme is already underway and could not be expanded before next summer.

11. It may be said, therefore, that no additional appropriations will be required for the implementation of any preparatory measures before the fiscal year 1947-48, but in the interim detailed proposals can be worked out and submitted to the Government for consideration.

12. It is therefore requested that the basic Plan, if acceptable, be approved at an early date. Early approval of this Plan will facilitate the necessary joint discussions and the detailed planning necessary for the preparation of the annexes referred to in Section XI. It will also provide a basis for consideration of various United States proposals for specific projects in Canada.

Washington, June 21, 1946

Dear Norman [Robertson],

I had lunch today with Mr. Acheson and Mr. Hickerson. Mr. Stone was also present. I took advantage of this opportunity to discuss very informally with them certain aspects of our joint defence problems.

I expressed the hope to the Acting Secretary of State that the War Department would not press us too hard with urgent requests for quick action in the field of defence in the north. I said that, while developments in the north were perhaps relatively small items in the defence plans in this country, they were for us matters of great importance, strategically and politically. In this connection, I said that I sometimes wondered whether the Joint Defence Board might not develop a tendency, on occasion, to become a determining instrument of high policy. In addition, I thought that it was sometimes a little difficult to keep track of all the activities of the Board because of the fact that some of its communications pass between the two secretaries while others pass direct from General Henry to Canadian service authorities.

Mr. Acheson and Mr. Hickerson seemed sympathetic to the point of view which I put forward and will, I think, give some consideration to it.

I think this will be helpful. I also think that as a result of my talk with the Acting Secretary of State today he will put himself more into the joint defence picture. Hitherto he does not seem to have had time to follow it very closely. He was definitely interested, however, in what I had to say to him and I feel sure that he will manage in the future to keep himself more closely informed as to what is actually going on.

We spoke also about the Board's 35th Recommendation. Mr. Hickerson does not share my concern as to the possible serious political implications inherent in this Recommendation. He argues that practically everything that the Recommendation proposes is now, in fact, being done—interchange of personnel, exchange of rights and facilities on military installations, etc.,—and the approval of the Recommendation would be merely the confirmation of a situation which now exists and a good way of tidying up the loose ends. As it now stands he regards it as an excellent document. Mr. Hickerson's agreement with this Recommendation is, indeed, significant as normally he has a profound distrust of the military mind and all of its works—a distrust which he does not hesitate to express in no uncertain terms.

Yours ever,

MIKE [PEARSON]

THE POSSIBILITY OF WAR WITH THE SOVIET UNION

(in connection with the Joint Appreciation of the Requirements for Canadian-U.S. Security and Joint Basic Security Plan)

1. The purpose of the Basic Security Plan is to make effective provision for the defence of North America in the case of outside attack. While the Joint Appreciation names no anticipated enemy, it is obvious that the Soviet Union is the only possible enemy which has entered into the calculations of its authors. In the Joint Appreciation the conclusion is reached that the U.S.S.R. could undertake air raids, sabotage and submarine warfare against Canada and the U.S. within the next 3-5 years (paragraph 11a), and that after 1950 "the offensive capabilities ..... against the Western Hemisphere can assume menacing proportions." (paragraphs 11b and 19). Whereas it is the duty of the military advisers of the Government to assess the military capacities of the Soviet Union to attack the North American continent, it is the responsibility of the Department of External Affairs to estimate the possibilities of the outbreak of such a war.

2. We can dismiss the idea that Canada alone might be involved in war with the U.S.S.R.; even in the very unlikely event of an unprovoked Russian attack on Canada, we could rely on the immediate and full support of the United States. We cannot dismiss the possibility that at some future date the U.S.S.R. and the United States will be at war with each other, and we must recognize that in such circumstances it would almost certainly prove impossible to preserve Canadian neutrality. We cannot altogether dismiss the possibility that in the event of a European war involving the U.S.S.R. on the one side and the United Kingdom on the other, we might find ourselves at war with the U.S.S.R. while the United States was still neutral; in that event, however, it is likely that the U.S.S.R. would refrain from attacking any North American territory, with a view to encouraging the United States to stand aside as long as possible.<sup>1</sup>

3. The circumstances in which the defence plan would become fully operative can, therefore, for practical purposes be limited to the outbreak of a war involving both the United States and the Soviet Union. Such a war might begin by the deliberate choice of either the Soviet or American Governments. While it is improbable that the United States Government would ever decide that it was in their national interests deliberately to provoke a war with the Soviet Union, such a decision is not entirely out of the question, especially if friction at many points of the globe should continue, accompanied by subversive activities in the United States. So long as the United States is the sole possessor of atomic weapons—and particularly if they were to believe that the Soviet Government was on the verge of similar or equally overwhelming discoveries—there might grow up a wide-spread popular sentiment that war with the Soviet Union was inevitable and should, therefore, be undertaken at a time of their own choosing, while they possessed the enormous advantage of the atomic bomb.

4. It is no more and probably less likely that the Soviet Union would in the next few years deliberately provoke war with the United States. Should the Russian leaders ever feel confident that they have developed military strength superior to that of the United States and the United Kingdom, they might then, in order to attain their ends, consciously risk the involvement of the United States in war against them. Although it is apparent, both from secret intelligence and from public information about the plans for Soviet reconstruction and development, that they intend to continue to concentrate effort on the building up of their military potential, nevertheless most well-informed persons agree that devastation, war weariness and the needs for raising standards of living make it highly unlikely that the Soviet Government will deliberately seek involvement in another great trial of arms within the next fifteen or twenty<sup>2</sup> years.

or would at an early stage attempt to paralyze the U.S. by a devastating attack on industrial and administrative centres.

5. The great danger for the shorter term lies in the possibility that general war may arise out of some local conflict of interests, against the wishes of the great powers concerned. For example, the breakdown of four-power control in Germany, the outbreak of bitter civil war in northern China, or a coup d'état in Trieste, might lead to fighting which, once begun, could not be stopped. There are acute friction points all round the limits of the Soviet zone of influence in Europe and Asia. The blundering diplomacy and inability to compromise of the Soviet Government seem almost certain to lead to some local conflagrations.

6. During the next ten years or so, therefore, the danger of attack on North America is most likely to come as the result of the spread of some local conflict until it involves the great powers in such a way that they could not stay out if they would. Such a danger, although not imminent, is present today. It seems more likely to increase rather than diminish during the next few years. This is because there is little prospect of a satisfactory meeting of minds between the Soviet Union and the western powers. If in time the restraints arising from the sole possession of the atomic bomb by the United States are removed, the danger may rapidly increase.

7. Furthermore, one of the chief causes of the present strains and stresses cannot be removed by any process of negotiation. It arises from the fundamental difference in outlook towards the rest of the world between Moscow and the western powers. The hopes have waned that the years of alliance against Germany and the partnership in establishing the United Nations were closing the gap. A troubled and uneasy world suits the Soviet book. They<sup>1</sup> are not seriously interested in international trade and are taking steps to make their economy still more self-contained. While their policy continues to be supported<sup>2</sup> by a crusading zeal for the spread of Communism—a zeal kept alive at home by the carefully-preserved ignorance of the Soviet peoples about the outside world—it is essentially self-regarding and nationalistic. The Soviet leaders are unmoved by the humanitarian considerations which exercise a powerful influence on opinion in western countries. The more the rest of the world is distraught the safer they feel within their own zone.

8. In essence, however, Soviet policy is defensive. While there is a resemblance in technique between the diplomatic practices of the Kremlin and those used by Hitler, it would be most misleading to push the comparison far. For instance, the Soviet Government completely controls one-seventh of the earth's surface and already possesses, unlike Nazi Germany, a vast field for internal development. The Russian peoples also do not share the German illusion that they are a master race. Their leaders, however, have determined that it is in their interest to wage a constant war of nerves. So long as this frame of mind prevails we shall have recurrent crises, no sense of security, and the risk of uncontrollable local outbreaks. There is no indication that it is likely to change.

Washington, July 3, 1946

Dear Mr. Macdonnell,

Thank you for your letter of 8 June 1946† informing me of the concurrence of the Canadian Government for the United States Army Air Forces to institute a regular air transport service between Iceland and Alaska.

It is contemplated to start initial experimental flights preliminary to opening this service from Ladd Field, Fairbanks, Alaska, about 1 August 1946. The duration of these flights will increase as crew members obtain experience and as the necessary data indicating navigational difficulties, reliability of communications, and analysis of Polar air masses, has been obtained and sufficient photographic reconnaissance made showing land masses and navigational landmarks along the route and areas adjacent from which flight charts may be constructed and other safety precautions developed. As soon as these preliminary flights indicate that the route can be flown with reasonable safety, the regular service will be instituted.

As requested by the Canadian Government, publicity in this matter will be kept at a minimum. The Army Air Forces invite six Canadian representatives to participate in this preliminary work and will also include Canadian observers after the regular flights are instituted. For the preliminary work, it is suggested that individuals with the following qualifications be selected, but this a mere suggestion and this matter is left entirely in the hands of the proper Canadian authorities:

- 2 Pilots
- 2 Navigators
- 1 Specialist in electronics
- 1 Weather specialist

These individuals can be replaced from time to time as the Canadian authorities deem expedient. It is further suggested that any Canadian observers selected report at Ladd Field, Fairbanks, Alaska, between 25 July and 1 August 1946, and, if practical, the names, ranks and qualifications of the individuals be furnished this office prior to 25 July in order that the Commanding Officer, Ladd Field, may be notified and the necessary arrangements made for their reception. Any data acquired on these flights will of course be made available to the Canadian Government.

Hoping that the above is satisfactory, I remain,

Sincerely yours,

GUY V. HENRY

DESPATCH 1215

Ottawa, July 8, 1946

SECRET

Sir,

In your recent despatch No. A. 453 of June 13† you referred to certain anxieties aroused in London by plans being prepared in Washington for Western Hemisphere defence. You also mentioned in the closing paragraph of the despatch some speculation concerning Canada's relationship to those proposals being indulged in by those who tend to be critical of what they consider to be Canadian aloofness to plans for Commonwealth defence.

2. As you are aware, there has been speculation from time to time in Canadian and U.S. newspapers as to whether or not there is any connection between Canada and Inter-American defence arrangements.

3. The answer is, of course, that Canadian-United States and Inter-American or more accurately United States and Latin American defence arrangements have been kept in water-tight compartments. This has suited both Canada and the United States, since on Canada's part there is not felt to be a demonstrable need for extending our defence responsibilities in a southerly direction, while on the part of the United States there has been a recognition of this fact and perhaps no great desire to see Canada intervene in a Pan-American organization which they regard as functioning under United States leadership. Occasionally voices are heard arguing that hemisphere defence is a single problem calling for a single plan and common action, but no support for this geometrically attractive theory has come forward in political or military circles in either Canada or the United States. The implicit basis of understanding on both sides is that Canada and the United States will see to their common defence interests, leaving it to the United States, acting in concert with the other nations involved, to take care of the remaining areas in the hemisphere, such as the Caribbean, the approaches to the Panama Canal, the bulge of Brazil, and so forth.

4. It is true that within the past year we have had tentative enquiries from Washington as to whether we would care to associate ourselves formally with future Pan-American defence conferences and agreements. There was clearly no strong desire on the part of the United States that we should adopt this course, and when we indicated that we would prefer to take no action for the time being the matter was dropped.

5. Some interest has been aroused and a question was asked in the House by the Leader of the Opposition concerning the Inter-American Military Co-operation Bill recently submitted to Congress by President Truman, since the administration had explained that its provisions would apply to Canada. As was pointed out in Mr. St. Laurent's reply, we were not consulted about the drafting of this measure. (Through the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, we knew informally about its general provisions and objectives). It is essentially enabling legislation which will authorize the United States Government to do a good deal in the way of furnishing other American Governments with weapons, supplies, technical assistance, training, etc., on favourable terms. Its object, of course, is to bring about a high degree of military standardization, if not of efficiency, in the hemisphere. It is unlikely to affect Canada except to the extent that our armed forces may wish to procure equipment under its terms from the War and Navy Departments. This traffic might perhaps develop in time into something substantial but not until decisions of principle have been taken with regard to whether United States or United Kingdom patterns should be adopted. For the immediate future, it seems probable that transactions with Canada under the Bill will be confined to relatively insignificant amounts of equipment.

6. If there is any conclusion to this despatch, it is that those who are troubled over Canadian participation in Inter-American defence are conjuring up a bogey that does not exist. Occasions arise when this can be tactfully pointed out. To critics of the nature of Canadian-United States defence relations, the only answer is that they are logical and inescapable. As a State Department official once remarked, the United States would want close ties with Canada even if, instead of being inhabited by delightful people, it were populated by baboons. The reverse situation would also be true. Given the facts of geography, aviation and modern technology, a close defence relationship is inescapable. What must be emphasized to critics is that this relationship need not and should not be exclusive.

CANADIAN-UNITED STATES JOINT APPRECIATION AND BASIC SECURITY PLAN; COMMENTS THEREON BY THE CHIEFS OF STAFF

1. We have considered the draft Canadian-United States Joint Appreciation and Basic Security Plan, and submit the following comments thereon.
2. It must be recognized that there are considerable difficulties in presenting a Joint Appreciation and Plan where the particular conditions of each country have to be carefully considered. While it may appear desirable to change the construction and wording of many paragraphs in these papers, we do not recommend such action provided the general principles are acceptable.

JOINT APPRECIATION

3. Intelligence material on which the Plan has been based was obtained mainly from United States sources and supplemented by what little Intelligence was available here from United Kingdom sources. R.A.F. Intelligence has, however, confirmed that the basic assumptions on the air side in the Appreciation are in line with those being made in current United Kingdom planning.
4. Our Canadian Intelligence organization is not sufficiently developed to be able to produce very much material from its own sources, nor is it yet capable of assessing the value of Intelligence from other sources. Therefore, this paper is based largely on the United States assessment of the scales and probabilities of attack against this continent. Further, the Chiefs of Staff are not in a position to offer useful comment on the Intelligence background on which this Appreciation is based. This situation is now being remedied as a result of recent reorganization of the Service Intelligence Directorates, revitalization of the Joint Intelligence Committee, and opening up of direct Intelligence channels with the United Kingdom and the United States. Matters will improve within the next few months and by the time this Plan is due for revision (within the next year), the Canadian Intelligence organization should be able to produce an independent and well balanced Intelligence Appreciation.

5. In the light of these observations, the Appreciation leading up to the Plan has been carefully reviewed and the following comments are made:

(a) the Appreciation is considered a sound basis on which to develop the Plan, bearing in mind our observations above regarding the sources of Intelligence. However, we feel the conclusion that the potential enemy will be in possession of the atomic bomb in operational quantities within the next three to five years may be open to question. The Chiefs of Staff are not in a position to either confirm or to refute this assumption. Be this as it may, we agree that the probabilities of the potential enemy are such that air raids of considerable magnitude, on our country, carrying the atomic or improved conventional type bombs, will be possible within the period of three to five years;

(b) we also consider it possible that extensive submarine warfare, including bombardment with V-type missiles by submarines, is feasible within the same period;

(c) the threat to vulnerable areas in this country by attack from seaborne guided missiles is a possibility within the next five years, but it is not considered that attacks with land-based guided missiles or rockets are much of a possibility within the next five years unless based on North American territory; and

(d) the threat by subversive internal elements is not considered as alarming as is shown in the Appreciation. However, it is felt that this activity is one which is foreign to the Canadian way of life and is a method of attack with which we have had very little experience but at which a potential enemy may be most adept. Therefore, the question of a Fifth Column within this country is quite possible and does warrant careful consideration during the days of peace. It may well be remembered the disastrous effect of the German methods with their Fifth Column in France, Poland and Norway in 1939-40. These activities may be only too readily forgotten and it is drawn to attention that, in the opinion of the senior German Commanders who have recently been interrogated, they considered their own Fifth Column activities to be no match whatever for those of the potential enemy.

THE PLAN

6. The Plan in general appears to be sound, adequate and feasible. However, it would add to the clarity in the paper and aid in further planning if the primary responsibility for each Task was clearly stated. In the case of Task No. 1 (the air defence of the continent), it is not easy to decide at the outset who is the primary or predominant partner. It is felt that the following factors should be considered:

(a) the size and extent of the vulnerable areas to be protected in each country, and the proportionate financial and manpower resources of each country;

(b) The need for the standardization of equipment and procedure in many cases, which will no doubt require the use of United States equipment and procedure in the whole scheme; and

(c) the necessity of safeguarding the sovereignty of Canada.

7. Therefore, after consideration of the above factors, we feel that the United States should be the primary partner in Task No. 1, and that Canada should be the secondary partner, assisting the United States in the air defence of the continent. Canadian sovereignty might be safeguarded by allowing the United States to contribute the bulk of the equipment required for installations in Canada without Canada relinquishing control of these installations. Canada's share in the undertaking would be proportionate to the size and extent of the vulnerable areas to be protected and the financial manpower resources of each country.

8. We recommend that there is some urgency in advancing the establishment of the air defence scheme, as the Task is of such magnitude it will take a number of years to accomplish. While we appreciate that no large scale invasion of this country is possible for a considerable number of years, no such assurance can be given that air raids of considerable magnitude or attacks by small airborne forces are not possible within the next three to five years.

9. We accordingly recommend to the Cabinet Defence Committee that the Appreciation and Plan should be approved and that our Planners should be authorized to continue negotiations, subject to the approval of the American government, to complete the annexures which will indicate the scope and responsibilities of each country adopting this Plan.

Ottawa, August 30, 1946

SECRET. Following for General McNaughton from Macdonnell, Begins: We have received a most interesting proposal from the United States Section which I have communicated to the Service members in a memorandum, the text of which follows:

Memorandum from the Secretary, Canadian Section, Permanent Joint Board on Defence. Secret. The Secretary of the United States Section has informed me that at the next meeting of the Board the United States Section expects to propose for discussion the draft 36th Recommendation quoted below. It would be applicable to co-operative measures which might ultimately be agreed to under the provisions of the 35th Recommendation and it should, therefore, be read in conjunction with that Recommendation. The United States Section think it would help to make the position clear to Officers associated with any future agreed projects as well as to others interested. The draft has received preliminary approval in the State, War and Navy Departments.

Draft 36th Recommendation:

"Recognizing that in time of peace the joint construction or maintenance of military projects, the carrying out of joint tests or exercises and the use by one country of military facilities in the other country should be governed by certain principles, to be applied on a basis of reciprocity, the Board adopted the following as its 36th Recommendation.

'(a) Military projects or joint tests or exercises located within the territory of one country, or the territory leased by one country, should be under the supervision of that country provided that this supervision should not be exercised in such a way as to prevent the effective carrying out of the project, test or exercise agreed to by both countries.

'(b) Publicity in regard to military projects, or to joint tests or exercises located within the territory of one country, or the territory leased by one country, should be the responsibility of that country and releases desired by the other country should be fully cleared in advance with the responsible country.

'(c) Military projects, tests or exercises in one country, or in the territory leased to one country, whether carried out jointly by both countries or wholly by the other country should give to the other country no rights and no status, temporary or permanent, other than as agreed upon by the appropriate officials of the two countries in authorizing the project, test or exercise in question.'"

From the point of view of the Department of External Affairs, this draft recommendation is regarded as very desirable. If adopted, it would help to set at rest certain doubts that have been expressed about real or apparent impairment of Canada's sovereignty through participation by United States forces in joint defence measures. Certain drafting changes may be suggested by External Affairs but the substance is regarded as satisfactory. Ends.

New York, September 2, 1946

SECRET. Following for R. M. Macdonnell from McNaughton, Begins:

1. Your teletype No. 368 dated 30th August received.

2. I fully agree as to desirability of establishing the principles given in the draft of proposed 36th Recommendation as submitted by U.S. Section, Permanent Joint Board.

3. In proposing drafting changes please consider the following:

First, Preamble insert after "other country" following words "comma as agreed by the proper officials of both countries comma"; also alter "on a basis of reciprocity" to read "on a reciprocal basis". In the above connection consider it important to have "agreed" in preamble in view of deletion suggested in para. (a).

Second, Para. (a) Delete "provided that this supervision should not be exercised in such a way as to prevent the effective carrying out of the project, test or exercise agreed to by both countries". In this connection I think it would be unfortunate to include words which suggest a doubt of good faith in the carrying out of any agreements which might have been made.

Third, Para. (c) Delete "no rights and no status, temporary or permanent, other than as agreed upon by the appropriate officials" and substitute "only such temporary rights and status as are agreed upon by the officials". In this connection the wording as suggested by the U.S. implies that permanent rights can be acquired through agreements with officials. I think that any such implication would be most unfortunate. Ends.

Washington, September 9, 1946

SUBJECT: DISCUSSION OF CANADIAN-UNITED STATES MILITARY SITUATION

1. Since the last meeting of the Board, our Cooperation Committee has drawn up an Appreciation of the Requirements for Canadian-United States Security, and in addition a Basic Security Plan. At present it is at work on the Air Annex thereof.

2. This Joint Appreciation has been approved by both the Canadian and United States Joint Chiefs of Staff. Therefore, we must consider that these high ranking military officials consider the Appreciation sound, and one on which the Security Plan should be drawn.

3. The outstanding feature of this Appreciation is that in a period of approximately five years hence, a potential enemy will be able to inflict serious damage on the vital areas of Canada and/or the United States by aerial bombardment from long-range aircraft or by various other types of aerial guided missiles, or other new weapon attack employing atomic bomb warheads. This is a new and revolutionary idea in warfare and the main duty of our Joint Cooperation Committee is to produce a sensible plan that will give maximum protection against these new and devastating means of attack. This period of five years is being questioned. The United States belief is that, for planning purposes, this period should be taken, and is considered a conservative, proper estimate. The time may be a little too short, but certainly not overly short if a potential enemy puts his energies and capabilities on this type of attack.

4. Military principles have in the past laid down that the best defense is the offense. The United States considers this principle holds true under this new conception of aerial warfare, but the subject of the strategic offense is beyond the scope of the Joint Canadian-U.S. Security Plan and that Plan must, of necessity, be primarily a defensive one.

5. The Joint Appreciation also shows that an aerial attack against the North American continent will almost certainly come over the Polar regions, which, due to Canada's geographical position, means over Canadian territory. This places Canada in a peculiar position. First, her vital areas are within range of devastating aerial attacks, and second, the Canadian territory will be the path for aerial attack on the United States no matter what may be the Canadian belligerent situation at the time in question. Further, Canadian security will be largely dependent on United States installations in Alaska, Newfoundland, Greenland, Iceland, and elsewhere; and conversely, United States security will be largely dependent upon installations in Canadian territory stretching from the Atlantic to the Pacific.~Such a situation has never before been true for either country, nor ever before has the security of the North American continent been in jeopardy. From now on, however, within the foreseeable future, the security of the homeland of both Canada and the United States is unalterably bound up one with the other and will require the utmost of coordination between the armed forces and the military policies of the two countries. It is felt that both countries must look upon this new military problem in that light.

6. I am positive that in carrying out this view, the High Command of the United States in no way wishes to infringe on Canadian sovereignty or Canadian rights, nor in any way interfere with Canadian ties or obligations to the British Commonwealth. That High Command looks upon it purely as a military problem, the efficient solution of which will require a more intimate and complicated joint cooperation than has heretofore been achieved between the forces of the two sovereign nations.

7. An effective air defence will require a comprehensive air warning, meteorological and communications system with air bases for interceptor aircraft, all placed at the maximum practical distance from vital strategic areas. For the local defense of the North American continent this means United States installations in Alaska, Greenland and Iceland, and either similar Canadian or joint United States-Canadian installations in Canada, Labrador and Newfoundland.

The United States expects to deploy extensive forces in Alaska and hopes to do the same in Greenland, and it is hoped that the Canadian public will realize that these U.S. deployments are essential to the security of Canada.

The air routes to these outposts lie across Eastern Canada and the Northwest Staging Route, and it is felt that the military traffic over these routes will be so extensive that small United States servicing detachments at certain Canadian airfields along the same will be mutually advantageous to both countries.

8. Strategically, the United States Air Forces wish to push out on the perimeter as far as practicable. Harmon Field, Newfoundland, a United States leased base, is too close in to be strategically well situated and is too contracted to hold the garrison already approved for this general area. U.S. Air Forces would therefore like to station tactical groups at Goose Bay Air Base, Labrador. The tactical groups presently contemplated would consist of one (1) very heavy bombardment group and one (1) fighter group, together with the necessary supporting troops, leaving at Harmon Field one (1) very heavy bombardment group, one (1) fighter group and one (1) all weather fighter squadron, plus one (1) very long-range reconnaissance squadron, together with the necessary supporting troops.

9. The Canadian Government has asked the United States Government to clarify the position of the United States troops at Goose Bay, and it is believed that at an appropriate time the State Department will enter into discussions with the Canadian and Newfoundland Governments regarding this matter.

However, the above are the desires of the U.S. Army Air Forces and these would appear in line with the recommendations of the Board at its 29 April 1946 meeting, of which the following is a quotation:

“Goose Bay is considered vital to the defense of the United States and Canada and should be maintained as a military base on such a scale as to provide for the stationing of operational squadrons as required.”

This is also in accord with the statement by the Joint Canadian-U.S. Staff Planners dated 19 June 1946 which reads:

“The Planner Section deems it appropriate to point out to the Members of the Joint Canadian-U.S. Cooperation Committee the outstanding significance of this base (Goose Bay) in future defense plans.

“While the detailed plan has not yet progressed to a degree whereby a definite statement of future requirements at Goose Bay can be presented, the vital necessity for the utilization of this base in any defense system for the northern portion of the Western Hemisphere has already become obvious. It is believed that the necessity for the military utilization of Goose Bay is of such importance as to warrant the forwarding at this time of this information to the Canadian Chiefs of Staff Committee. It would certainly be desirable if final arrangements would permit of the presence of United States units at this base.”

10. As the members of the Board know, the United States Weather Bureau requested, through diplomatic channels, authority to install certain weather stations in the Canadian Arctic. This request was purely civilian. It does, however, fit into the military picture and is one step in the meteorological coverage for the military security of North America as contained in a Committee report submitted to the Board by memorandum dated 4 September, 1946. The United States Joint Chiefs of Staff, in approving the Basic Security Plan, ordered the U.S. Joint Intelligence Committee to prepare a tentative outline for Canadian-United States intelligence collaboration for consideration of our Joint Cooperation Committee. The Army Director of Intelligence has also made a recommendation that a long-range comprehensive intelligence plan for joint Canadian-American development of information intelligence concerning the geographic and environmental features of the Polar regions and its natural resources be undertaken, this plan to include an extensive mapping and photographic project and the establishment of a network of observation stations for recording weather, magnetic and other basic information, together with a series of expeditions throughout most of Arctic Canada and Alaska.

11. The United States Joint Chiefs of Staff, in commenting upon United States defense matters in general, state in substance that they assume that most matters of this kind relating to Canada and the United States will be worked out through the medium of the Joint Military Cooperation Committee and the Permanent Joint Board on Defense, Canada-United States.

12. I think all the Board members realize that there are difficulties on both sides of the border in solving this very complex problem of the security of the North American continent under present foreseeable military conditions, but if our Appreciation of the ability of a potential enemy is reasonably accurate, the problem must be worked out, and I believe can so be done to the mutual benefit of both countries.

1. We have had under review the matter of research, development and testing of service equipment under conditions of extreme cold and we consider that a Joint Services Experimental Station should be established at Churchill for testing purposes. This memorandum seeks approval of a short term plan to permit the conduct of tests during the coming winter.

2. At the present time the airfield at Churchill is being maintained in an operational condition by the Department of Transport but that arrangement terminates at the end of September when plans call for its maintenance on a considerably reduced scale.

3. Some time ago the U.S. authorities approached us through the Permanent Joint Board on Defence with the request that a permanent joint U.S.-Canadian Arctic Experimental Station be established at Churchill or some other suitable locality. The provision of facilities, as now proposed, is intended to meet these joint requirements during the coming winter. If approved, the project will be carried out under Canadian control and with U.S. participation invited on a somewhat smaller scale than that they originally suggested. This limitation of U.S. participation arises from the restricted quarters which can be made habitable for the coming winter.

4. Accordingly we have agreed to recommend to the Cabinet Defence Committee a short term plan for the administration of the Churchill station as set forth in Appendix "A" attached.† The implications of this proposal are that:

(a) Army would assume the responsibility for the camp at Churchill (exclusive of airfields, hangar, control tower and associated equipment and facilities) on October 1st, 1946, and would finance the necessary repairs in connection therewith;

(b) Air Force would assume the responsibility for the airfield, hangar, control tower and associated equipment and facilities, (less radio range and meteorological facilities) on October 1st, 1946, and would finance the necessary repairs in connection therewith;

(c) Department of Transport would continue to operate the radio range and meteorological service; and

(d) Existing buildings such as hangars and living quarters would be repaired, and owing to the remoteness and rigorous climate of Churchill, a limited number of the present living quarters would be converted into married quarters.

Major-General Mann,<sup>1</sup> however, was present during the discussion of the items of chief concern to the PJBD and he has doubtless informed the Canadian Section of the results.

2. The following were the chief decisions:

(a) The short term plan on joint services experimental station at Churchill to permit the conduct of tests next winter was approved. This provides for participation by the United States Services to the extent of 100 all ranks out of a total personnel of 560;

(b) The recommendations of the Chiefs of Staff concerning weather stations in Canadian territory were also approved. These include reopening by the United States of their stations at Padloping Island and Indian House Lake, for continued use of five other stations in Eastern Canada now operated by them and joint use of the River Clyde station to provide additional observations desired by the United States. Approval is given on a temporary basis only on the understanding that Canadian personnel, at our discretion, may be included in the staff of any station, with the object of eventual operation by Canada. The United States authorities are also to be asked to employ civilian weather bureau personnel rather than military personnel as far as possible if not completely. The Interdepartmental Meteorological Committee is instructed to initiate at once a complete survey of present and future requirements for weather stations in Canadian territory. Ends.

At the meeting of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, September 19-20, the Board considered further its 35th Recommendation. The following is an extract from the Journal:

"2. On the initiative of the United States Section, members of the Board have been considering the desirability of recommending certain principles<sup>1</sup> which should govern the carrying out of joint defence projects in the future. The Secretary of the United States Section suggested that the adoption of such principles would provide guidance to Commanding Officers connected with such projects; would facilitate the negotiations of the procedure to govern future projects; and would provide safeguards of value to both Governments. Reduced to their essence, the principles suggested by the United States Section would provide that:

(a) Defence projects should be under the supervision of the country in whose territory they are carried out;

(b) Such projects would confer no permanent rights or status to the other country, and only such temporary rights and status as were agreed upon for the project in question; and

(c) While public information on such projects should be the primary responsibility of the country whose territory was being utilized, all public statements should be made by mutual agreement.

The Chairman of the United States Section suggested that inasmuch as these principles would be related to the Recommendation made by the Board on April 29, 1946, to provide for a close co-operation between the Canadian and United States Armed Forces, it would seem desirable to incorporate the principles in that Recommendation by an amendment thereto. The Secretaries of the Board presented a draft text embodying such principles as an amendment to the 35th Recommendation. After discussion a text was agreed upon which was thought to be satisfactory and it was decided to consider the matter and discuss it with appropriate officials in Ottawa and Washington preliminary to adopting the amended Recommendation when the Board next meets."

I attach five copies of the proposed 35th Recommendation as amended.<sup>2</sup> Sub-paragraph (f) contains the new material.

This amendment was proposed by the United States Section. They believe that it might be of value if these principles which have been implicit in United States policy were officially stated and publicly recognized. There is no desire on the part of the United States to question Canadian sovereignty or Canadian capabilities and the amendment to the 35th Recommendation would make this clear to all.

In the view of this Department it would be in the Canadian interest to have this amendment adopted and approved since it underlines the right of Canada to be master in her own house. Moreover, the addition of these principles as part of the 35th Recommendation makes it clear that nothing in the earlier parts of the Recommendation can be interpreted as impairing Canadian sovereignty in any way.

I hope that this question can be considered by the Chiefs of Staff at an early date with a view to sending their Recommendations to Cabinet Defence Committee.

The Chiefs of Staff Committee this morning considered the revised text of the 35th Recommendation of the PJBD. I took the line that this should come before the next meeting of the Cabinet Defence Committee and that, at the same time, there should be submitted some minor alterations in the language used in paragraphs (d) and (e). The revision of the 35th Recommendation was merely to add paragraph (f) to the old text. When the first version was before the Defence Committee changes were proposed in paragraphs (d) and (e), designed to preserve the authority of the governments in making military facilities available to forces of the other country, in providing reciprocal transit rights and in determining responsibility for mapping programmes. It was unfortunate that these revisions were not made in the text when paragraph (f) was added by the Board, but I think that they can be cleared quite readily in Washington and approved by the Board when it meets next, about mid-November. The Chiefs of Staff agreed to this course.

I also raised the question of publication. From the purely domestic point of view, it would be a good thing to have the recommendation a matter of public record, and publication would be a full answer to any charges of the conclusion of secret military agreements. From the international point of view, the recommendation would be treated as the announcement of a defensive alliance against the USSR. That, indeed, is what it is in essence, although not in form. Since it was drafted, the beam of Soviet propaganda has been turned on defences in the far North and undoubtedly publication of the recommendation would provide a further occasion for attacks on us and the United States. The decision must be essentially a political one and I am not clear what we should do. On the one hand, Soviet propaganda does not need much in the way of fuel and the addition of a little more may not make much difference. On the other hand, publication would make it more difficult to carry out even modest and essential work in the far North without giving rise to alarmist reports.

P.J.B.D.; 35TH RECOMMENDATION (REVISED)

1. The Permanent Joint Board on Defence, at their meeting of September 19th-20th, further considered their 35th Recommendation.

2. The United States Section suggested that it would be desirable to establish the principles under which joint Canadian-United States defence operations or projects should be undertaken. They therefore put forward for consideration a revision of the 35th Recommendation by the addition of certain clauses which would establish this principle.

3. Attached is a copy of the 35th Recommendation<sup>1</sup> with paragraphs (d) and (e) revised, in accordance with the decision taken at your meeting of May 8th, 1946, and with paragraph (f) added to incorporate the revision proposed by the Permanent Joint Board on Defence.

4. The Chiefs of Staff Committee considered this matter at their meeting of October 8th, 1946, and agreed that the proposed revision of the 35th Recommendation was desirable and would aid in safeguarding Canadian sovereignty.

5. The Chiefs of Staff, therefore, recommend:

(a) approval of the proposed revision to the 35th Recommendation; and

(b) that consideration be given to the question of making the text of the 35th Recommendation public at a suitable time as agreed between the two countries.

PERMANENT JOINT BOARD ON DEFENCE 35TH RECOMMENDATION (REVISED)

1. Submitted herewith is the 35th Recommendation of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence in the form of a revised draft.

2. The original Recommendation, which set forth certain principles of cooperation between the Armed Forces of the United States and Canada, was placed before the Cabinet at their meeting of May 9th. At that time, it was agreed that, in view of the important considerations of policy involved, action be suspended pending its further examination in relation to current defence discussions with the Commonwealth countries.

3. On the initiative of the United States Section, the subject was reopened at the September 19th meeting of the Joint Board. Certain amendments to the original Recommendation were then proposed, which are designed to safeguard the sovereignty and protect the interests of the country in whose territory joint exercises are undertaken. In essence, the added clauses provide that:

(a) defence projects should be under the supervision of the country in whose territory they are carried out;

(b) such projects would confer no permanent rights or status to the other country, and only such temporary rights and status as were agreed upon for the project in question; and

(c) while public information on such projects should be the primary responsibility of the country whose territory was being utilized, all public statements should be made by mutual agreement.

4. The Canadian Section of the Board undertook to bring the draft Recommendation, in its amended form, to the attention of the Canadian authorities. It has been considered by the Chiefs of Staff, who favour its acceptance, and by the Cabinet Defence Committee, who agreed that, because of its importance, it should be considered by the full Cabinet.

5. It was previously intended that this Recommendation, upon being approved by both countries, be made public as a regional arrangement within the framework of the United Nations Organization. If, therefore, the revised draft is accepted, the Cabinet may wish to consider whether or not it should be published.

Trente-cinquième recommandation de la CPCAD

Thirty-fifth Recommendation of PJBD

Discussions which have taken place in the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, established on August 17th, 1940, have reaffirmed the importance of continuing to maintain in peacetime a close relationship between the Armed Forces of Canada and the United States. It is submitted that the obligations of the governments of Canada and the United States under the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security would be fulfilled more effectively through such a relationship. The Board, accordingly, makes the following Recommendation:

In order to make more effective provision for the security of the northern part of the western hemisphere, Canada and the United States should provide for close cooperation between their Armed Forces in all matters relating thereto, and in particular, through the following measures:

(a) interchange of personnel between the Armed Forces of both countries in such numbers and upon such terms as may be agreed upon from time to time by the respective military, naval and air authorities;

(b) adoption, as far as practicable, of common designs and standards in arms, equipment, organization, methods of training and new developments to be encouraged, due recognition being given by each country to the special circumstances prevailing therein;

(c) cooperation and exchange of observers in connection with exercises and with the development and tests of material of common interest to the Armed Services to be encouraged;

(d) reciprocal provision, by mutual arrangement, [between the govts]<sup>1</sup> of its military, naval and air facilities by each country to the Armed Forces of the other country; each country continuing to provide reciprocally for transit through its territory and territorial waters of military aircraft and public vessels of the other country;*

(e) subject to any special arrangement which may be entered into, each country will be primarily responsible for the mapping of its own territory and for the provision of maps in accordance with agreed needs;*

(f) in time of peace certain principles should govern the joint construction or maintenance of military projects, the carrying out of tests or exercises and the use by one country of military facilities to the other country, when such activities have been approved by the appropriate authorities of both governments, and these principles should be applied on a reciprocal basis as follows:

(i) military projects or joint tests or exercises undertaken within the territory of one country, or the territory leased by one country, should be under the supervision of that country;

(ii) military projects, tests or exercises, agreed to by both countries, whether jointly conducted or not, are without prejudice to the sovereignty of either country, confer no permanent rights or status upon either country, and give only such temporary rights or status as are agreed upon by the appropriate authorities of the two countries in authorizing the projects, tests or exercises; and

(iii) public information in regard to military projects, tests or exercises, jointly conducted or conducted by one country in the other country, or in the territory leased by it, should be the primary responsibility of the country whose territory is utilized. All public statements shall be made [only]<sup>1</sup> after mutual agreement between the appropriate authorities of the two countries.

Ottawa, October 23, 1946

The United States Ambassador called to see me this morning on his return from Washington. While there, he had a talk with President Truman, who brought up, as he did with me the last time I saw him, the question of Canadian-United States cooperation in northern defence. The President obviously has this matter very much in his mind. Mr. Atherton mentioned to the President that any discussions between the two Governments on this subject should now be on a high political level, and the President agreed. For that purpose he would be very pleased indeed to have the Prime Minister, if possible accompanied by you, visit Washington. However, if such a visit is to take place in the near future, it would have to be early next week, as the President is leaving on Wednesday for Missouri. What this means is that, if the Prime Minister and yourself went to Washington next Monday for the purpose of looking at Embassy properties, the President would be available for a talk on this other question; would, in fact, welcome such a talk. They would be glad to put the Prime Minister up at Blair House. Mr. Atherton added that the President's programme on Monday and Tuesday is rapidly filling up, and that it would be almost essential to know today if the Prime Minister were coming in order to arrange an appointment with President Truman on Monday or Tuesday. That is why I ventured to phone you about this matter today at, I am afraid, some inconvenience to yourself.

Mr. Atherton also added some observations of his own as to the importance of this subject and the desirability of high level political discussions concerning it. I think he has returned from Washington with instructions to do what he can to ensure that satisfactory arrangements are reached between the two Governments, at an early date, for joint defence cooperation in the Arctic. The emphasis and tone of his remarks led me to believe that, in this matter, he had received a new mandate.

Washington, October 26, 1946

I attach a hurriedly prepared memorandum on questions of North American defence which are likely to be raised in general terms with you by the President. This has been done partly from memory and may therefore contain some minor inaccuracies. Mr. Pearson passed on to me on my arrival in Washington yesterday your suggestion that a memorandum on these lines would be useful. We have learned from the State Department that defence questions are the only matter on which they have sent material to the President in preparation for his discussion with you.

Washington, October 26, 1946

The intense interest displayed by the United States authorities in making effective provision for North American defence has led to the presentation, since the end of the war, of a series of proposals and requests to the Canadian Government. These may be placed in three categories, as follows:

1. GENERAL PRINCIPLES OF CO-OPERATION IN DEFENCE.

Last April, the Permanent Joint Board on Defence addressed a recommendation to the two Governments on the general principles governing co-operation between Canada and the United States. This recommendation was approved by the U.S. Chiefs of Staff and the President, but after discussion in the Cabinet, Canadian approval was deferred. The intention at the time was that the recommendation should be made public, if approved by the Government. Since then, Soviet propaganda has been directed towards military activities in the Arctic, and new considerations affecting publicity have arisen. It cannot be doubted that the acceptance and publication of a recommendation along these lines would be generally regarded as the conclusion of a binding defensive alliance between Canada and the United States.

At its last meeting in September, the P.J.B.D. reconsidered the recommendation and recommended certain additions designed especially to fortify the sovereign rights of Canada in connection with any joint activities undertaken in Canadian territory. These additions go a long way to meet the objections raised in Cabinet to the original draft. The revised text has not yet received formal consideration by either Government. It is not very likely that the President will mention the recommendation to you. If so, I think that the line to take is that the question of the wording, timeliness, and possible publication is now under consideration in Ottawa.

2. NEW JOINT DEFENCE PLAN.

The P.J.B.D. was requested not long after the end of the war to prepare a new joint defence plan to replace ABC-22 and a committee of Staff planners was appointed to prepare a draft. A draft general plan was produced early this year, together with a joint appreciation of the dangers of attack on North America. While no potential enemy was named, the U.S.S.R. was the only enemy to which consideration was given. The conclusions in the appreciation were that there was danger of long-range air bombardment in about five years and that the possibility of a general war after ten years or so had to be seriously taken into account. The purpose of the plan was to allot between the two countries responsibility for defence and to provide means for developing detailed plans of defence on a regional basis.

After discussion in Cabinet Defence Committee, the joint planners were authorized to proceed with detailed planning, special attention being paid to the installation of long-range air raid warning equipment so as to protect from surprise attack the main industrial regions of the continent. Nearly all such installations would have to be situated in Canadian territory somewhere between the national trans-continental railway and the Arctic Ocean. The planners are now proceeding with detailed planning and a series of their recommendations is likely to come up for consideration fairly soon.

3. SPECIFIC REQUESTS.

We have in addition received a large number of specific requests, usually passed through Service channels, for co-operative defence activities on Canadian territory. Of these, the latest and most important (and the one which is likely to be mentioned to you by the President) is their desire to maintain substantial permanent air forces at Goose Bay. This request has so far only been informally discussed through P.J.B.D. channels, and the first that we heard of it was at the meeting of the P.J.B.D. in New York in September. We have, of course, permitted the U.S. to maintain forces at Goose and ancillary services at outlying points in Canada in connection with their Army of Occupation in Germany, but up to the present these arrangements have been on a temporary basis. Now they are asking whether we would agree to the stationing of a very heavy bombardment group and a fighter group at Goose, a force which might amount to 10,000 men. They have told us that their own air base in Newfoundland, at Harmon Field, will not contain all the air forces that they consider necessary for defence, and we also understand that they propose to maintain forces of over 250,000 men in Alaska. Given the organization of continental defence on this scale, it seems obvious that they feel the necessity for large permanent forces not only in Goose, but elsewhere in Canadian territory. It will be necessary, before any agreement can be reached, for both Canada and Newfoundland to agree to give the U.S. continuing rights in Goose.

I think it likely that the President may mention Goose to you in a general way. Our feeling has been that further general discussions could take place best between the Ministers concerned or through diplomatic channels, rather than through Service channels.

Apart from the proposals respecting Goose, we have had a series of requests this year relating to such matters as the opening of new weather stations in the Arctic islands, the continued operation by the U.S. of existing weather stations in Northeastern Canada, the maintenance in a serviceable condition of far northern air fields, the operation of the Northwest Staging Route, and the provision of facilities for various exercises and training programmes in Canadian territory. We have permitted the U.S. to continue to operate (and in some cases to re-open) weather stations and some air fields established during the war. We have deferred consideration of their request for the establishment by them, or jointly, of new far northern weather stations. We have made provision for a small U.S. force of approximately 100 to be stationed for training at Churchill next winter, and we are maintaining, of course, the Northwest Staging Route. We have also agreed not to dismantle a number of air fields and air strips pending some general agreement on what is needed.

There is somewhat greater realization in the United States of the difficulties, both political and military, which attend full Canadian agreement in plans of the scale and variety put forward. There is a greater appreciation for the need for respecting the rights of Canada in her own territory—rights which were not infrequently neglected by U.S. Service authorities during the war. There is still, however, a lot to be learned in Washington about our position and our problems.

The development of elaborate air defences and air-raid warning system across Canadian territory would raise in an acute form and on a long-term basis the issues which caused so much concern during the war. The scale of installations would be so great that it would strain our capacity to provide and man them from Canadian resources. Furthermore, if we undertook ourselves to equip and maintain these installations, it would probably mean that our military activities were concentrated almost wholly on the protection of North America from the possibility of sporadic bombardment from the air. It is most unlikely that, if there is another war, it will be fought on North American territory. It is much more likely to be fought in Europe, North Africa, and perhaps the Far East. The United States may be able to maintain in peacetime great forces for continental defence and also forces capable of despatch overseas. Canada can hardly do this in view of the area to be covered at home. Some eminent military authorities, including, I believe, Field Marshal Montgomery, take the line that the empty Arctic is a better defence than an Arctic equipped with air fields, which might be seized as advance bases by an enemy and would be difficult to defend.

In any event, the current proposals necessitate the re-examination of our policy of paying for and maintaining permanent military installations in Canadian territory. We may find some half-way house through the provision of equipment by the U.S. and its operation by Canada, or through joint operation of certain installations under Canadian control. From the points of view of the budget, military manpower, and political effects, problems of the greatest importance are raised for Canada by these proposals.

It has been felt, therefore, that the general problems and possibilities should be discussed at this stage on a high level and that acceptance by us of particular proposals of any substance should be deferred until some over-all understanding has been reached. The future of Newfoundland and the responsibilities there of both countries are an integral part of the problem and one in which we must, of course, tread warily. The piece-meal approach hitherto made by the United States, sometimes from Service to Service and usually through the P.J.B.D., has created embarrassment on our side because we have not been able to assess or consider U.S. defence planning as a whole. We have heard, for instance, that they are establishing a new air base far up the western coast of Greenland, but that is about all that we know about it.

In the State Department they understand fairly well our position in the British Commonwealth. In the Services, this is not well understood. It is likely that if we are again involved in war, we shall have both the United Kingdom and the United States as partners, and this has led us to give cordial support to the standardization of weapons and equipment between the three countries. Field Marshal Montgomery is an ardent advocate of standardization, and General Foulkes has this week been in London attending a conference at which both Montgomery and Eisenhower are present to further this aim. I need not mention the impact of other aspects of Commonwealth relations on our defence relations with the United States, and it is doubtful whether the President would bring up these matters in discussion with you.

The deterioration of the hopes which attended the founding of the United Nations is illustrated by the fact that I have not felt it necessary to mention hitherto our obligations under the Charter. Whatever we may do in conjunction with the United States in the development of regional defences can be brought within the scope of the Charter in one way or another. One Article of the Charter needs to be borne in mind in considering the nature of such agreements as we may reach, and that is the obligation to register all international agreements with the Secretary-General. Some of the proposals put forward are clearly not for public consumption. Recommendations by the P.J.B.D., however, when accepted by both Governments, do not constitute an international agreement in the strict sense, and we can therefore use the Board as a medium for recording joint decisions without infringing the obligation to register all formal agreements.

To sum up, I think that the general line which might be taken with the President is somewhat as follows:

1. If he mentions the 35th Recommendation, you might say that we are in hearty agreement with its general purpose of ensuring close and effective co-operation in defence matters while safeguarding the sovereign rights of the two countries. I think it safe to promise early consideration of the revised text in the very near future and to add that our hesitations have only been matters of form rather than of substance.

2. With respect to the joint defence plan it might be said that whenever the joint planners have completed the draft annexes to the plan (these will be bulky documents) we shall be in a position to determine the respective shares of the two countries and the priorities which should be given to the various installations required for continental defence. It would be well, I think, to bring up the political and other difficulties inherent in a very heavy early commitment by Canada.

3. With respect to Goose, I am not sure that the President will mention this specifically. If so, I think the most that can be done at this time is to agree to the importance of effective air defences on the Northeast and to point out the problems arising from the situation of Goose on Newfoundland territory. It might be well also to put forward the idea that it would be well to emphasize the training uses of northern air fields rather than their utility as defence bases.

4. With respect to standardization of weapons between the U.K., U.S., and Canada, you might heartily endorse the idea of making progress as quickly as possible and express appreciation of the action of the U.S. and U.K. Governments in recognizing the need for Canadian partnership in planning measures of standardization.

5. You might finally express the hope that we shall be taken fully into the confidence of the U.S. authorities not only on their plans for continental defence, but also on their appreciation of the dangers of war and their estimates of the international and strategic situation. They have been more forthcoming in the last year or so, and this might be recognized. They still, however, have some way to go before we can ourselves assess the bases on which they are doing their own planning and seeking our active co-operation with them.

DEFENCE PLANNING—CANADA-UNITED STATES
DISCUSSION WITH THE UNITED KINGDOM AUTHORITIES

1. The Canada-United States Military Co-operation Committee held its first combined meeting in Washington on 20th-23rd May 1946 for the purpose of initiating the revision of ABC-22. At this meeting an appreciation of the requirements for Canadian-United States security was drafted, together with the first combined draft of a "Basic Security Plan". To ensure the security of existing and subsequent information and plans, the following undertaking was agreed to by both Sections and included in the minutes which were signed by the Senior Members of both the Canadian and American Sections:

"It was stipulated by both Canadian and United States Sections of the Committee that such information as might emanate from each Section during these meetings, either written or oral, should not be transmitted by either Section to any third party, but should be restricted to essential Canadian and United States agencies."

2. Further detailed planning in the preparation of Appendices of the "Basic Security Plan" has made it apparent that in a future war the United Kingdom would have the same mission in providing base facilities for Canadian-United States forces as during the last war. These would probably be equal in importance to similar bases in the Azores, Iceland, Greenland, Canadian Arctic Islands and Alaska and would be essential as outposts in the defence of the North American continent.

3. The Joint Planning Committee have recently reviewed a number of preliminary draft Appendices to the "Basic Security Plan" prepared by the Canadian Sub-Committees appointed to assist in this task. It becomes increasingly evident from these that certain aspects of the Canadian-United States defence planning will be directly affected by corresponding present or proposed plans of the United Kingdom services. For example, the Sub-Committee at present drafting an Appendix on "Anti-Submarine Measures" has requested direction as to the volume of shipping that may be expected in the Atlantic in the event of any future emergency and what will be the respective roles of the British, Canadian and United States Navies in the protection of such shipping.

4. It is evident, therefore, that some planning discussions should be conducted with the United Kingdom authorities. Since the Joint Planning Committee has been intimately concerned with the revision of ABC-22 and is aware of the many aspects of the planning involved, it is considered that the Joint Planners, either individually or collectively (preferably the latter), should carry out these discussions. The month of February 1947 is suggested as a tentative date for the initiation of these talks as detailed planning with the United States is expected to be well advanced by this date.

5. It is understood that the United Kingdom Chiefs of Staff have been informed of the defence planning in progress between Canada and the United States. In this connection, it is doubtful if any mention concerning the Canada-United States "Basic Security Plan" could be revealed to the United Kingdom Planners during any discussions without violating the security agreement referred to in paragraph one above. In any case, this should not preclude the Joint Planning Committee discussing problems of Commonwealth defence or of a service nature with the United Kingdom authorities.

6. It is therefore recommended that:

(a) The Joint Planning Committee should conduct defence discussions with the United Kingdom Planners early in 1947.

(b) Direction be given as to whether and to what extent mention should be made of the "Basic Security Plan" during such discussions.

COMBINED CANADA-UNITED STATES INTELLIGENCE APPRECIATIONS

1. In the past, whenever combined Canada-United States organizations have required intelligence information, this has, in the majority of cases, been provided exclusively by the appropriate United States authorities. For example, at the first meeting of the Military Co-operation Committee in Washington, the United States intelligence authorities presented an appreciation for the benefit of the Committee. Similarly, it has been the practice for the same authorities to present up-to-date intelligence briefs or appreciations at Permanent Joint Board on Defence meetings.

2. It is considered that when such intelligence information or appreciations are presented to a combined Canada-United States committee or board these should be prepared and presented by a combined Canada-United States intelligence team. It is appreciated that the majority of this information will emanate from United States sources. Nevertheless, it is considered that it should be interpreted and presented on a combined basis. In a similar manner it would be desirable for representatives of the Department of External Affairs and the United States State Department to prepare a combined diplomatic appreciation.

3. It is therefore recommended that:

(a) The Directors of Intelligence for each of the three Services meet with the United States military intelligence authorities to prepare combined military appreciations as required.

(b) The Department of External Affairs arrange to meet with the United States State Department to prepare combined diplomatic appreciations as required.

(c) That both these combined military and diplomatic appreciations be presented at future Permanent Joint Board on Defence meetings.

TELEGRAM WA-3862

Washington, October 29, 1946

TOP SECRET. Following for Pearson from Wrong, Begins: Confirming my telephone conversation with you yesterday afternoon, the following brief account of the Prime Minister's discussion with the President may be of interest. As they were alone together, this is based on what the Prime Minister told Stone and myself immediately after leaving the White House.

The conversation lasted about an hour. After some talk on various topics, the President brought up the subject of continental defence. The subsequent discussion was in general terms and no specific proposals were put forward. The President and Mr. King agreed that there must be the closest possible co-operation between Canada and the United States in the interests of efficiency and economy, and that this co-operation should be based on the fullest exchange of information between the two countries and also with the United Kingdom.

The President mentioned Goose Bay stressing the need for maintaining strong air forces there as a necessary part of the defences of the north-eastern approaches. It was agreed that further discussions on this and related matters should be conducted initially between the Ministers concerned or through diplomatic channels. Mr. King emphasized the necessity of observing the greatest care and fullest consultation over any publicity given to defence arrangements between the two Governments, and with this Mr. Truman was fully in accord.

In connection with relations with the United Kingdom, the Prime Minister said that he would wish to inform the United Kingdom Government of any agreements or arrangements made with the United States. Mr. Truman raised no objection and went on to refer with approval to Field Marshal Montgomery's recent discussions in Washington on standardization of military equipment.

The question of the 35th Recommendation of the P.J.B.D. (on which we had learned that the President has been briefed by the State Department) was not brought up by the President nor mentioned by the Prime Minister, nor did they discuss the basic defence plan.

The President said that he had seen the United States Ambassador to the Soviet Union that morning and gave Mr. King a summary of his views on the possibilities of offensive action by the Soviet Union. These were very closely in accord with those expressed by Mr. Wilgress. Their general tenor was that the Soviet Government would be in no position to participate in a great war for a considerable period, and that the aggressiveness of Soviet foreign policy might well be caused in part by the desire of the masters of Russia to maintain a feeling of strain and insecurity at home so as to diminish discontent with the rigours of the existing regime.

This summary, I think, covers the salient points. The general effect is to clear the way for further conversations, still leaving in the hands of the United States Government the initiative as to timing and choice of channel. Since we lack safe hand means of communication with New York, you may wish to pass on this report to Mr. St. Laurent. I am sending you by bag a copy of the memorandum<sup>1</sup> which I gave Mr. King on his arrival. Ends.

Ottawa, October 30, 1946

When Mr. Atherton called on me this morning, he left the attached "oral message" which, I understand, the President read to you on Monday, and which concerns Canada-United States cooperation in defence matters. A copy of this "oral message" was also handed by the State Department to our Ambassador in Washington. In doing so, Mr. Hickerson said that the "message" had been prepared in the State Department with a view to its possible presentation to you. However, following his discussion with you, the President had spoken to the Acting Secretary of State, and told him that he had read the document to you, but had not given you a copy. He then told Mr. Acheson that, on reflection, he thought it would be a good thing if the paper were given to you. It was then sent to Mr. Atherton for that purpose.

From the above, it seems clear that both the President and the State Department attach considerable importance to the statements of policy and the proposals included in the document in question. It is, indeed, an important statement; especially that part of it beginning on page 4, which suggests the desirability of decisions by the Canadian Government on the following problems:

1. Further Canadian Government endorsement of joint planning now in progress;
2. Approval of the 35th Recommendation of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence;
3. Stationing of United States Army Air Forces at Goose Bay.

I understand a copy of this "oral message" has been sent by Mr. Wrong to Mr. St. Laurent. Should a copy not go to Mr. Abbott also.<sup>1</sup>

Would it be your wish to have consideration given to the questions raised in the "oral message" in the Defence Committee of the Cabinet prior to their consideration in full Cabinet?<sup>1</sup>

TOP SECRET

The Government of the United States is grateful to the Government of Canada for the favourable consideration which the latter has given to proposals relating to joint defence. In no case has any military project which this Government considered urgent been delayed by any lack of cooperation on the part of Canada.

Because of the extreme importance in an unsettled world of continuing and reinforcing measures of joint defense it is believed that the consideration of these matters, hitherto primarily in military hands, should also now be taken up directly by the governments. In suggesting this course, the Government of the United States is determined that the actions taken in no way be inconsistent with commitments under the Charter of the United Nations, full support of which is the cardinal point of United States policy. The decisions which the governments take and the further advancement of North American security through the recommendations of the Permanent Joint Board on Defense must always accord with the framework of the United Nations.

Early in 1946, pursuant to views expressed by the Joint Board, the two Governments decided to collaborate as partners in drawing up a basic security plan for the United States and Canada. A Joint Appreciation of the situation was prepared and planning has progressed satisfactorily. It may, however, not be practicable to proceed much further without assurances of support from the highest authorities of both Governments. Such assurances could take the form of concurrence in the Appreciation. Meanwhile, events at Paris and in the international field generally have not lessened the anxiety of those charged with assuring the security of the United States. Moreover, in the opinion of this Government, those events have demonstrated that decisions in the field of home defense should be taken now and implemented as rapidly as practicable. Only by being secure at home can Canada and the United States strengthen the United Nations and discharge their responsibility for contributing to world order and security.

Under these circumstances, it appears to the Government of the United States that close collaboration in defense matters with the Government of Canada must be carried forward actively. It believes this for the following reasons:

Two world wars have demonstrated that an aggressor must destroy the power of North America or be defeated.

Due to post-1945 technological advances, North America is no longer adequately protected by geography.

Canadian and United States military advisors agree that in five years North America must be prepared to meet major enemy capabilities.

While the peaceful foreign policies and intentions of Canada and the United States are clearly defined, there can be no guarantee that the governing officials of the U.S.S.R. will make decisions on the basis of a correct appraisal of the world beyond Soviet borders, or that the long term policy of the U.S.S.R. is not one of unlimited aggrandizement.

For the foregoing reasons North American nations henceforth must be prepared at home just as less fortunately placed nations have had to be in the past. Furthermore, under conditions of modern technology, defenses must be as far out from Canadian and American industrial centers as possible.

If within only five years another major power will be capable of jeopardizing North American security, action should be based on realization:

That Canada and the United States lag in cold weather knowledge and experience,

That, because of this lag and because of the expense involved, defense plans will take years to implement.

That, to be efficient in an emergency affecting North American territory, the Canadian and American forces should have the experience of working together, experience of the north, and increasing uniformity of equipment and methods.

The United States Government realizes that close collaboration with Canada in basic defense matters presents both governments with new problems of great complexity and difficulty. The responsible United States officials are aware of the special problems that face Canada, a member of the British Commonwealth of Nations. They have been instructed that the sole purpose of close military collaboration is defense, that every precaution must be taken to protect the traditional relations of the two countries and the position which each, respectively, enjoys.

The United States Government is also aware that the question of the financial cost of defensive measures is most serious for both Governments. It must not, however, be permitted to delay the planning of security at home and should not delay the attainment thereof. While no final commitments can yet be made by either Government, it seems clear that the Joint Defense Board should recommend and the two Governments should negotiate some equitable means of sharing the financial burden of any defenses agreed to be necessary around the northern perimeter of the continent. Possibly the United States might agree to assume an equitable proportion of the cost of any facilities jointly found to be necessary on Canadian soil if the Canadian Government were to take into account that United States expenditures in Alaska and Greenland, for instance, contribute to Canadian as well as United States security.

Although many problems remain for future determination, the United States Government believes for the reasons set forth in this memorandum that decisions by the Canadian Government on the following existing problems would be timely and would enhance the security of the Canadian and American people:

1. Further Canadian Government endorsement of joint planning now in progress would assure the United States authorities of continuing Canadian cooperation and an adequate measure of joint action between Alaska on the west and Greenland on the east.

2. Approval of the 35th Recommendation of the Permanent Joint Board on Defense would help to define the relations between the armed forces of Canada and the United States and would provide authoritative guidance as to the nature and limits of the collaboration desired by both Governments.

3. It is hoped that the Canadian Government, with Newfoundland concurrence, will permit the stationing of certain United States Army Air Force units at the Canadian 99-year leased base at Goose Bay, Labrador. Reciprocally, (as soon as the present congestion can be relieved), the United States authorities will be agreeable to a similar arrangement at United States bases in Newfoundland proper. While remaining an important feature of the defenses of the northeastern approaches to the continent, these latter bases are, however, too close to Canada and the United States to provide adequate protection against ultra-modern high speed aerial attack. Moreover, they do not afford as would Goose Bay, a highly favorable situation for the acquisition by United States and Canadian Air Force units of the experience of training together under cold weather conditions, of testing northern equipment and of coordinating their respective methods and tactics. Finally, arrangements of this kind at Goose Bay and the other bases would be consistent with the joint responsibilities which the two Governments have discharged in the past for the defense of Newfoundland.

In conclusion, the United States Government reiterates that it has been gratified by the cooperative attitude of the Canadian Government and by the informality, frankness and mutual trust which have prevailed during discussions of the delicate and momentous problems of joint defense. It believes that final decisions, not only on the three points just mentioned, but also on others in this field can be reached without necessity of any more formal documentation than has been customary since establishment of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence in 1940. There is no doubt that public opinion firmly supports effective collaboration with Canada and, in the view of the United States Government, this is a strong and satisfactory basis for joint action.

Ottawa, November 1, 1946

Dear Mr. Atherton,

As requested, I have given to the Prime Minister the "oral message" from Mr. Truman, on which the President based certain of his remarks to Mr. King last Monday, which concerned North American defence questions. This message was not read to Mr. King by the President, but the Prime Minister agrees that, though his talk with the President was in general terms, most of the subjects in the "message" were touched on. He is agreeable that this message should be used as a basis for discussions between the two Governments.

In this connection, agreement was reached at the White House last Monday that these discussions should be on the political and diplomatic level. It is hoped that they may result in some form of written agreement covering the principles on which defence cooperation between our two countries should be based. Mr. King feels sure that such an agreement can be reached between the two Governments which will preserve their rights and safeguard their legitimate interests, without conflicting in any way with the letter or the spirit of their obligations under the United Nations Charter. The previous record of our two Governments in discussions of this kind is an earnest to Mr. King that such an understanding is possible.

Yours sincerely,

L. B. PEARSON

Washington, November 6, 1946

TOP SECRET. Following for Pearson from Wrong, Begins: Your EX-2753 of November 4th,† North American defence. I thought it well to have, at this stage, an entirely non-committal discussion at the Department of State before consideration by the Defence Committee in Ottawa of the suggestions made by the President to the Prime Minister on October 28th. Stone and I, therefore, spent some time this morning with Hickerson and Parsons. The more interesting points made in the discussion are as follows:

1. We considered what sort of written agreement (as suggested in your letter of November 4th to Atherton)<sup>1</sup> might cover the principles of defence co-operation. Hickerson and Parsons thought that the revised 35th Recommendation of the P.J.B.D. would constitute the only agreement required on general principles, if it were accepted by the two Governments. If an agreement were recorded in any other form, the question of its registration with the United Nations would present difficulties, and this would, of course, involve publication. The 35th Recommendation, however, could be registered if it were found desirable.

2. We then considered publicity, to which Hickerson said he had given a lot of thought. We went over the arguments for and against it, and the matter was left that, in present circumstances, the publication of the 35th Recommendation, if accepted, seemed on the whole undesirable, although this position might change. If we were to agree on publication, Hickerson thought that the Recommendation might be made public by the two Governments and later registered with the United Nations. He suggested that the P.J.B.D. should cease numbering their recommendations and merely date them, so as not to give rise to possible enquiries for the publication of the whole series if it became known that a certain numbered Recommendation had been accepted.

3. We then discussed possible methods for continuing the negotiations initially through political and diplomatic channels. They feel here that there are difficulties in the way of Ministerial talks in Washington, largely because of the reticences of the United States Services towards the civilian Chiefs of their Departments. They felt that it would be most productive if discussions were pursued through Atherton or myself, with the assistance of special advisers. I said that I was inclined to think that progress might best be made in Ottawa, where Atherton could meet the Ministers and senior officials concerned without attracting any special notice. I made it clear that this was a personal view and that I might be able to put forward other suggestions after the Cabinet Defence Committee had considered the situation.

4. At this point I said that I was a good deal worried over the possibility that we might be strongly urged to devote so high a proportion of our available funds and manpower to northern defence against sporadic air attack that we would have too little left over for other military activities. If war came within ten or fifteen years, it would not be won or lost in operations on this Continent, and I was nervous lest too great concentration on home defence might leave Canada, and to some extent also the United States, ill prepared for military action in the decisive Theatres. Parsons interjected that he understood that the planners had modified their original conceptions so that the proposals which they would put forward in the Air Annex to the basic defence plan were likely to be far less costly than had once been thought probable. We did not enter into any discussion of possible division of costs, but I took the occasion to say that the Canadian Government could not reach an intelligent decision on the proportion of its military resources that should be devoted to Continental defence except in the light of global strategy. I, therefore, felt it necessary that there should be a very frank exchange of views on general strategic conceptions of the course of another war before we went much further.

5. Hickerson thought that such an exchange of views could only be arranged between the Chiefs of Staff without the participation of political or diplomatic representatives. We fully realized that the Canadian Chiefs of Staff were not in the same position as the United States Chiefs of Staff, but the latter would only be prepared to expound their views of global strategy to Service representatives.

6. I made some enquiries about their request for stationing forces at Goose Bay. It appears that the two groups which they wish to place there would have a total strength of four or five thousand, all ranks. They desire to rotate personnel rapidly so as to give a large proportion of their air crew experience in northern conditions, and they would like to reach an agreement as soon as possible. I mentioned the somewhat delicate situation involved in discussing the matter with Newfoundland at this transitional stage in the form of Government there. Ends.

[Ottawa,] November 9, 1946

1. I have studied the paper marked "Oral Message" and I beg to offer the following comments:

2. As you will remember the Joint Appreciation was discussed at the Defence Committee meeting in July, and later I prepared my comments† on the Joint Defence Plan which were subsequently adopted by the Chiefs of Staff and presented to the Defence Committee later in July.

3. At the 21st meeting of the Cabinet Defence Committee, on 24 July, the following decisions were taken—it was agreed that Canadian participation in the detailed joint planning, (the preparation of the Annexures of the draft Basic Security Plan), be authorized and approval given to the Chief of the General Staff to inform the United Kingdom Chiefs of Staff of the contents of the Plan. Therefore, as far as we are concerned the Joint Appreciation and Plan has been approved by the Defence Committee, which is as far as it should be approved at this time.

4. I am informed that the Joint Planning Committee had set up certain Sub-Committees for the purpose of continuing Defence planning with the United States, and that the preparation of the Annexures is well under way but has not yet reached the stage where they can be discussed by the Chiefs of Staff. In other words, it is my opinion that the joint planning is proceeding as fast as is practicable, and I have no knowledge that it is for any particular Canadian reason that the planning is slow. Until these Annexures are received by the Chiefs of Staff no further progress can be made. First progress report of Joint Planning Committee is attached as Appendix "A".†

5. On page three, the American authorities have stated that "Canada and the United States lag in Cold Weather knowledge and experience, and that to be efficient in an emergency the Canadian and American Forces should have experience in working together, experience of the North, and increasing uniformity in equipment and methods". The only comments I have to make on these statements are as follows:

Cold Weather Training—As you know, it is our purpose to train the Canadian Permanent Brigade Group in Cold Weather Training as soon as practicable, i.e., as soon as they have recruited up to sufficient strength and have completed their basic training. Further, the Cold Weather Experimental Station at Churchill has been opened this year and cold weather training with the Americans will be commenced this year. I do not plan to do any further Winter Exercises this year but I have under consideration further Winter training exercises for the year 1947-48, and it is my intention to invite American participation.

6. In regard to increased uniformity of equipment and methods, I feel that this matter must now be left open to the much wider field of standardization between United States, United Kingdom, and Canada, which is under active investigation at the present time.

7. The question of financial cost of the defensive measures, which is referred to on pages three and four of the paper, I feel that this should form the basis of a discussion on the highest level on the basis of my original recommendation which is contained in paragraph seven of the memorandum to the Cabinet Defence Committee, dated 15 July—"Canada's share in the undertaking would be proportionate to the size and extent of the vulnerable areas to be protected, and the financial and manpower resources of each country". In any case until the Annexures are completed and approved by the respective Chiefs of Staff there is very little action that can be undertaken about the division of costs.

8. In regard to the decisions which the Americans request, enumerated on page four, I submit the following comments:

(i) As the Defence Committee has already agreed in principle to the joint planning, I see very little else that can be done until the Annexures are ready for discussion, unless you feel that Cabinet approval is necessary. I am of the opinion that perhaps Cabinet Defence Committee approval and the Prime Minister's concurrence should be sufficient until financial matters are introduced. Exactly what is meant by "an adequate measure of joint action between Alaska on the West, and Greenland on the East" is not quite clear.

(ii) The approval of the 35th Recommendation has already been given by the Cabinet Defence Committee, and will need no further comment.

(iii) The question of the Americans remaining in Goose Bay would appear to be a foregone conclusion, and while this does not affect the Canadian Army manpower situation, there is no doubt the Air Force will feel that this commitment should be outside their ceiling.

DEFENCE DISCUSSIONS

Defence questions cannot, of course, be effectively considered outside the framework of general international developments. The nature and extent of Canada's defence forces are, or should be, determined by the general world political situation, and Canada's relation to it. The crux of this situation is whether the United Nations can be made into an effective agency to guarantee security or, if it cannot, whether the national policies of the Great Powers, now developing outside the United Nations, are likely to result in conflict between them.

As to the first, the United Nations is not now, and is not likely to be for many years, in a position to preserve the peace and punish the big aggressor. We should have, I think, no illusions about this. Most of us thought, after the last war, that the League of Nations meant peace and co-operation, and that we could relax our national defence efforts. We know this time that little confidence can be placed in the ability of the United Nations to guarantee security, until it can reflect friendly relations between the Great Powers themselves. We should, of course, continue to work for a strong United Nations, with every member nation making its contribution to the preservation of peace by international action. But we know that this ideal is not going to be achieved for many years.

The main reason for this lies in the relations between the Great Powers, and especially between the U.S.A. and the U.S.S.R.

If the relations between those two powers deteriorate to the point of conflict, we in Canada cannot escape from becoming involved at once. If we think that such a result is probable, or even possible, we would be negligent if we did not plan our defence policies with that end in view. The U.S.A. is certainly not going to provoke such a conflict and will not consciously shape its policies in such a way that they might be interpreted as aggressive and provocative, though it will make many mistakes and may even on occasion adopt bellicose and unreasonable attitudes. But what about Russia? Is it possible for the western democratic world to work out, if not a friendly, at least a tolerable relationship with a state, organized on a police basis, governed by ruthless despots, inhabited by millions of fighting men to whom life is hard and cheap, and with a dynamic communist ideology.

The best short statement of the position of Russia that I have recently read is the leading article in the Economist for November 3rd, "Reason and Russia", which I attach herewith.† A longer statement of the Russian problem is contained in a brilliant lecture by a London Foreign Office official, which I am also attaching.† He gave it, off the record of course, to a conference of military intelligence people in London. It is certainly worth reading.

My own view, for what it may be worth, is that without some fundamental change in the Soviet state system and in the policies and views of its leaders, the U.S.S.R. is ultimately bound to come into open conflict with western democracy. This, of course, does not mean that war is inevitable, because changes and collapse do take place. But without them—and there are few convincing signs of them in Russia—the end must be conflict. The Russian leaders themselves insist on this. We should not make the mistake we made with Hitler, of refusing to take seriously the words those leaders utter for home consumption.

Any such conflict will be as sudden as Pearl Harbour and a hundred times more devastating. The next war will certainly be "short, nasty and brutish"; no country will be given warning by the next aggressor; no country will be given time, in this day of atom bombs, bacteria and guided missiles, slowly to gather together its strength. This has, it seems to me, a bearing on our own defence policies. It would be folly to expect any warning of war, but a greater folly to prepare for a type of war which may be as out of date as the Macedonian phalanx.

All this does not mean war today or tomorrow. I cannot believe that Russia—even crediting her with the most evil intentions—would be ready to strike within five years or ten years. But the way the world is now going, there can only be one ultimate result—war.

The fact that, before we have even made peace after the last war, we can derive a measure of comfort from talk about a ten years' interval before the next, is an almost shattering revelation of the difference between our thinking now and in 1919. Who then would have dared to say that by 1929 we would be slaughtering each other again?

Nevertheless, the present world situation and particularly the position of Russia, makes it both wise and realistic to limit our thoughts of peace to a short period of time.

The U.S.A. and the U.K. have to bear the main defence burden resulting from a development of this kind. Canada, however, cannot escape the consequences of its own position in the strategy of any future war and its own importance in defence of the freedom loving world, which is our own defence as well. With the centre and pivot of that world the U.S.A., there is no isolation for us, or for the U.K., which must act as the advance base of western civilization. We will probably be asked by others to do more than we can, or ought, in defence of the things for which we have already fought twice in thirty years. Careful thought and planning on our part now will have, as one of its most useful results, the forestalling of unreasonable requests from Washington and London later. But the inescapable facts of the world situation dictate close co-operation with both those countries in working out combined plans based on sound principles. This may, for us, result in obligations which, economically, will be difficult to carry.

If I have diagnosed the situation accurately, it seems to me to suggest the following:

(1) We should organize our national strength in the most effective possible way to meet difficulties and dangers ahead;

(2) This requires combination and co-operation with others, primarily, I think, with the United States of America;

(3) We should examine, with the greatest possible care, our defence plans, to make sure that they fit into our proper place in this combined effort and are not dictated by merely traditional and possibly outworn concepts.

 The Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson)
 The Special Assistant to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pickersgill)
 The Secretary, Cabinet Defence Committee (Mr. Gill)

OFFICE OF THE SPECIAL COMMISSIONER FOR DEFENCE PROJECTS IN NORTHWEST CANADA; CONTINUATION OF FUNCTIONS

1. MR. HEENEY submitted proposals for the continued operation of the office of the Special Commissioner for Defence Projects in Northwest Canada after the end of the current year.

As he had indicated at the previous meeting, arrangements were being made for the temporary appointment of a successor to Mr. Phinney, who was retiring on November 15th, and for the office to remain in operation until the year end under the auspices of the Privy Council Office. If it were to continue after that date, it should be transferred to some other government department,—the Department of National Defence had been suggested. It would then be necessary for the administering department to seek new authority for the office upon the termination of the Emergency Transitional Powers Act.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated. (Memo to Cabinet Defence Committee of October 15th, 1946—Cabinet document D-86).†

2. THE CHIEF OF THE GENERAL STAFF, with the Minister of National Defence in agreement, saw a continuing need for the office, but expressed the opinion that, in view of the responsibility which Mines and Resources would eventually assume in connection with the Alaska Highway, it would seem more appropriate for them to assume control of the office when it was transferred from the Privy Council Office.

3. THE COMMITTEE, after further discussion, agreed that Mines and Resources be approached to ascertain whether they were prepared to assume responsibility for the administration of the office of the Special Commissioner for Defence Projects in Northwest Canada from January 1st, 1947.

DEFENCE POLICY; GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS;
JOINT PLANNING WITH THE UNITED STATES

4. THE PRIME MINISTER, referring to recent discussions in the Cabinet, said that the purpose of the meeting was to review in a preliminary way current questions of defence policy, including the estimates of the defence departments. The Cabinet would devote the next two days to these important problems.

Following his conversation with President Truman in Washington on October 28th, 1946, during which certain defence matters of mutual interest to the two countries had been discussed, an "oral message"<sup>1</sup> had been received through the U.S. Ambassador in which certain specific proposals had been made. It had been argued that these should be discussed initially between the two governments on the diplomatic level.

It would be useful, as a background to ministerial consideration of these questions, to have the advice of the Chiefs of Staff on the general strategic situation, and their report on the progress of current joint planning with the United States.

5. THE CHIEF OF THE AIR STAFF pointed out that the risk of attack upon this country had been assessed in the joint draft appreciation which had been prepared as a preliminary to joint planning by the Canada-United States Military Cooperation Committee.<sup>2</sup> This document had been submitted to the Defence Committee on July 9th, 1946, and explained by Intelligence officers. It would be recalled that this document had concluded that the North American continent could no longer be regarded as immune from attack and that, after a few years, the capabilities of a potential aggressor would be increased considerably through possession of the atomic bomb and other modern weapons. The resulting draft "Basic Security Plan" had also been explained to the Defence Committee on that occasion and, subsequently, detailed planning on the various aspects of continental defence had proceeded through appropriate joint sub-committees. The most important, and immediate, of these detailed plans was the air defence scheme. This had not yet been presented to the Chiefs of Staff, but he had had an opportunity of examining it in a preliminary way. He was very much concerned at the extent of the undertakings which it envisaged, particularly their financial implications; nor was he altogether satisfied with the strategic concept upon which it was based.

The intelligence upon which the draft appreciation was founded had been drawn largely from United States sources. The military view in Washington was that, in any future war, an aggressor would attempt to neutralize the war potential of this continent before embarking on a programme of expansion elsewhere. He did not altogether share this view, and felt that any attacks which might develop would be of a diversionary nature which would not warrant the establishment of an elaborate defence scheme employing our resources in a static role. With this in mind, and, in view of the immense financial outlays involved, it might be more appropriate to adopt measures of more modest proportions.

6. THE CHIEF OF THE GENERAL STAFF agreed that plans intended to provide complete protection against sporadic raids would not be justified. It was, however, important in future planning to bear in mind that the continent was no longer free from attack. Moreover, realistic planning should provide the means of offensive action as well as for more static defence.

While the appreciation was based primarily on U.S. intelligence, the U.K. Staff's assessment of risk did not differ materially from that contained in the joint Canada-United States document.

7. THE CHIEF OF THE NAVAL STAFF said that, in present planning, the role of the Navy was of somewhat lesser importance than that of the other Services. The Canadian Navy was being organized so as to provide defence of coastal waters and for escort duties in both the Atlantic and Pacific approaches. It would also be capable of providing a force to cooperate, as the occasion required, with the British and United States Navies. In any future war, anti-submarine measures would constitute the most important and difficult Naval task, and it was as yet not clear as to what means would prove effective in this department.

8. MR. KING observed that the reports and views of the Chiefs of Staff concerning the present stage of joint planning with the United States emphasized the need of early discussions between the two governments of the very important questions involved. Meantime, the Cabinet should be given the fullest information on all phases of the problem and should consider most carefully the immense national issues at stake.

9. THE COMMITTEE, after considerable discussion, noted the reports of the Chiefs of Staff, agreeing that these questions would be submitted fully to the Cabinet the following day.

UNITED KINGDOM—CANADA—UNITED STATES;
STANDARDIZATION OF EQUIPMENT; DEFENCE COOPERATION

10. THE CHIEF OF THE GENERAL STAFF reported upon the progress of discussions concerning the standardization of military equipment between the three countries.

Following recent preliminary meetings in the United Kingdom, tripartite talks at the Service level were now under way in Washington. It was now intended that these discussions would be broadened to include basic strategic and tactical factors and the adoption of joint measures in peacetime. Canadian officers were participating in the current talks on a basis of equality with the U.K.—and the U.S. Service representatives.

11. THE COMMITTEE, after discussion, noted the report of the Chief of the General Staff on this subject.

COMMONWEALTH DEFENCE COOPERATION;
SERVICE REPRESENTATION IN LONDON

12. THE PRIME MINISTER said that, among the subjects discussed at the "Prime Ministers'" Conference in London earlier in the year, was that of future arrangements for military representation within the Commonwealth. On that occasion, it had been made quite clear that, while the appointment of Service liaison officers attached to the High Commissioner's establishments would be acceptable, no centralized defence organization could be countenanced. This had been the expressed view of Field Marshal Smuts, with which he had categorically agreed. It should be quite clearly understood that Service officers stationed in London should form part of the High Commissioner's staff, that their functions were limited strictly to "liaison", and that they would not constitute a "mission" in any sense. The numbers involved should be only those required for these limited purposes.

13. THE CHIEFS OF STAFF AND THE DIRECTOR GENERAL OF DEFENCE RESEARCH reported the approximate numbers of the respective personnel required in London for liaison purposes. These involved, respectively, Air Force, one Air Vice-Marshal and some five officers, Army, one Brigadier and five officers, Navy, one Commodore and five officers, a small group for Defence Research, and necessary subordinate personnel.

The liaison duties to be performed were described; these related largely to having advance notice of U.K. Service developments on equipment and training.

14. THE COMMITTEE, after further discussion, noted the reports made, and agreed that the question be considered by the Cabinet at an early meeting.

SERVICE PROGRAMMES; AIR FORCE AND ARMY

15. THE PRIME MINISTER observed that, in the discussion of joint planning with the United States, the principal emphasis appeared to be on air defence.

This raised the question of the relative strength of the Canadian Air Force in the current programme in comparison with those of the other Services, particularly that of the Army.

16. THE CHIEF OF THE GENERAL STAFF explained that the Army was organized within the authorized manpower ceiling of 25,000, to provide operational troops of some 7,000. The remainder were to provide headquarters staffs, administrative units, and training establishments for Active and Reserve components. The principal function of the Active Force was to ensure the immediate security of Canada and a brigade group was considered to be the smallest formation capable of performing this task.

17. THE COMMITTEE, after discussion, noted the Prime Minister's observations and the statement of the Chief of the General Staff, agreeing that this matter would be considered by the Cabinet in reviewing the current programmes of the three Services.

NORTH AMERICAN DEFENCE; 35TH RECOMMENDATION OF THE PERMANENT JOINT BOARD ON DEFENCE

18. THE PRIME MINISTER, referring to President Truman's "oral message" on joint defence policy, asked the Committee to consider the 35th Recommendation of the Permanent Joint Board, which outlined certain principles of cooperation between the Armed Forces of the United States and Canada.

Since previous discussion of this Recommendation by the Cabinet, it had been amended on the initiative of the United States Section of the Board, with the object of safeguarding the sovereignty and protecting the interests of that country in whose territory joint projects of a defence nature were undertaken. It was now submitted in draft form to determine its acceptability to the Canadian authorities.

If its terms were generally acceptable, there was the secondary question of its disposition. In this connection, it had been suggested that it be made public and be registered with the United Nations Organization as a regional arrangement. (Memo from Secretary, Cabinet Defence Committee, to Cabinet, October 21st, 1946—Cabinet document 316)<sup>1</sup>

19. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS suggested that decision on this supplementary question of disposition be deferred pending the outcome of discussions now in progress in the United Nations Organization, with a view to drafting rules for the registration of regional agreements.

20. THE COMMITTEE, after further discussion, agreed to recommend to the Cabinet:

- (a) acceptance of the Board's 35th Recommendation, subject to certain minor amendments of the text; and
- (b) that the question of publicity and possible registration of the document with the United Nations Organization be deferred.

UNITED STATES BASES IN CANADA

We appreciate the importance to Canada of close political and military co-operation with the U.S.A., especially in matters of defence. This is of almost equal importance to the United Kingdom. On the other hand, we should be very careful to avoid Soviet reactions such as would tend to retard the setting up of a genuine international security system under U.N.O.

2. We should also try not to embarrass the Dominions in the Pacific by allowing a situation to develop which might make them feel that their own position was prejudiced, without any compensating guarantee of defence from the U.S.A.

3. We recognize that even if Canada should wish to remain neutral her geographical position, and the disparity between her population and that of the U.S.A., would make it difficult for her to do so if the U.S. were to be attacked from over Canadian territory. This consideration applies whatever defensive arrangements may be set up. Since Canada is likely to be drawn into any war in which the United States was attacked from over Canadian territory, and since in these circumstances Canada would look to the United Kingdom for help the United Kingdom is deeply concerned about the U.S. proposals for bases in Canada.

4. We suggest that the matter is one that should not be hurried. Although four or five years is little enough time in which to set up a defensive system in the Arctic regions and in which to train personnel, it does leave sufficient time for the matter to be given the close study which it deserves. In particular the following points should be considered:

(a) The importance that both Canada and ourselves should co-operate with the United States in matters of defence and that we should not appear to rebuff their present advances.

(b) The grave danger of provoking Soviet reactions which would tend to divide the world into two armed camps, especially at a time when we are endeavouring to set up a world system for ensuring security.

(c) The danger of embarrassing other members of the British Commonwealth, particularly in the Pacific, who might feel that their own position was prejudiced without any compensating guarantee of United States co-operation.

<sup>1</sup>This aide-mémoire was given to Mr. St. Laurent by Mr. Bevin on November 13 in New York where they were both participating in the meetings of the General Assembly of the United Nations.

(d) Whether the proposals can be held to come within the spirit and intention of the Atlantic Charter regarding regional arrangements for defence.

(e) The need that we should beware of military measures which, because of their unfavourable reaction on political sentiment, make themselves the more essential. This is a vicious circle which leads inevitably to war. Consequently, military measures, however great their technical advantages, should be subordinate to political considerations.

(f) The question of sovereignty over any bases which might be set up.

DEFENCE POLICIES; COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS; JOINT PLANNING WITH THE UNITED STATES; SERVICE PROGRAMMES

1. THE PRIME MINISTER, referring to the decision taken at the meeting of November 5th, reported that the Cabinet Defence Committee had now given preliminary consideration to important and urgent questions of defence policy to which it was now desired that the Cabinet address their earnest attention.

In particular, consideration should be given to problems of defence relationships within the Commonwealth and to the current programmes of the Services in terms of manpower and finance in relation to developments within the past few months, especially in connection with joint planning with the United States. Further, questions of government organization for defence including the appointment of a single Minister, the functions and personnel of the Cabinet Defence Committee, the position of the Chiefs of Staff and departmental machinery required careful examination.

Matters of immediate urgency were those arising out of joint planning with the United States. In this connection it was expected that discussions between the two governments on the diplomatic level would take place before long.

As a preliminary to consideration of these problems, the Chiefs of Staff had been asked to attend the present meeting to describe the present strategic situation and the background against which decisions would be made. Intelligence officers of the three Services would explain a draft appreciation and a draft basic security plan which had been prepared jointly by Canadian and U.S. officers as a preliminary to joint detailed planning for North American defence. These documents had been submitted to the Cabinet Defence Committee after concurrence therein of the Chiefs of Staff.

2. THE CABINET noted with approval the Prime Minister's observations.

NORTH AMERICAN DEFENCE; JOINT DRAFT
APPRECIATION AND BASIC SECURITY PLAN

3. THE SERVICE INTELLIGENCE OFFICERS, at the request of the Chief of the Air Staff, explained at length (with the aid of maps and charts) the joint draft appreciation and commented upon the intelligence upon which the conclusions of this document had been based.

Their exposition included a description of the strategic concept of continental defence which the joint planners of the two countries had accepted, and assessment of the capabilities of potential enemies, estimates of the time elements involved, an indication of possible objectives in North America and an assessment of probable forms and scales of attack.

4. THE CHIEF OF THE GENERAL STAFF explained the purpose of the joint appreciation. While it was based primarily on intelligence from U.S. sources, the conclusions suggested in it were generally supported by intelligence from the United Kingdom. There was, however, some difference between the American and British estimates of the time element involved.

The appreciation had led to the formulation of a draft basic security plan for North American defence in which were set forth the several tasks to be undertaken by the armed forces of Canada and the United States. These included, in the first instance, an air defence scheme also an extensive programme of air photography and mapping and Arctic tests and training.

After careful examination of the draft joint appreciation and plan the Chiefs of Staff had concurred in those documents as a satisfactory basis for detailed planning. After their submission and explanation to the Cabinet Defence Committee, further joint planning with the United States had been authorized (with the concurrence of the Prime Minister) and draft detailed plans were at present in course of preparation.

5. THE DIRECTOR GENERAL OF DEFENCE RESEARCH commented upon the draft appreciation and plan from the point of view of the technical and scientific development of weapons.

In these fields a satisfactory basis had been laid for collaboration with the United Kingdom and the United States.

6. THE CABINET noted the reports of the Service Intelligence Officers and the observations of the Chief of the General Staff and the Director General of Defence Research.

The meeting adjourned at 1.15 p.m. and resumed at 3.00 p.m.

DEFENCE POLICIES; JOINT PLANNING WITH THE UNITED STATES

7. THE PRIME MINISTER commented upon the presentations made by the Chiefs of Staff and by the Service intelligence officers that morning.

The questions raised by the draft joint appreciation were of the highest importance. There could be no doubt that North American defence had to be considered as a whole. The defence of Canada was inseparable from that of the United States. This had been accepted policy in both countries since before the war. It was questionable, however, how far the government should accept, in any event at this stage, the strategic concept upon which the conclusions of the joint draft appreciation had been based.

8. MR. KING said that, arising out of his interview with President Truman on October 28th, three immediate questions required consideration—the first related to the draft joint appreciation, the second to the 35th recommendation of the Permanent Joint Board and the third to the stationing of further U.S. forces at Goose Bay, Labrador.

The importance and urgency of the issues involved emphasized the necessity of early discussions between the two governments at the diplomatic level. This procedure had, in fact, been agreed between the President and himself. One of the primary purposes of these discussions would be to consider the subject matter of the appreciation, with a view to reaching agreement on the basis upon which further joint planning should proceed.

Meantime, the Chiefs of Staff had been invited to return to the meeting to explain the current programmes of their respective Services with particular reference to the present stage of joint planning with the United States.

9. THE CABINET, after further discussion, deferred further consideration of these questions.

DEFENCE POLICIES; SERVICE PROGRAMMES

10. THE CHIEF OF THE AIR STAFF observed that preliminary reports upon detailed joint plans in course of preparation indicated that the air defence scheme when submitted would be very extensive and involve very large financial commitments. It was unlikely that it would be fully supported by the Air Staff.

11. AIR MARSHAL LECKIE said that the R.C.A.F. was presently organized as a nucleus upon which rapid expansion could be based in time of emergency. The current programme provided for only eight operational squadrons requiring personnel of some 4,000 and headquarters, administrative and training units, all of which would come within the approved ceiling of 16,100. At present, the strength of the permanent force was approximately 12,000. The estimated cost for the next fiscal year was $21 million capital and $79 million recurring.

12. THE CHIEF OF THE GENERAL STAFF stated that the Army was organized with two principal objectives, viz. the provision of a small fighting force for the immediate security of Canada (involving some 7,000 men) and appropriate headquarters and training establishments as a basis upon which to develop the Reserve Army in the event of an emergency. The total would fall within the approved ceiling of 25,000 men and would involve annual recurring expenditures of approximately $70 million. The present active strength of the Army was about 11,700 men.

13. THE CHIEF OF THE NAVAL STAFF described briefly the role of the Navy in providing for the defence of coastal waters and for escort forces in cooperation with the United Kingdom and the United States. The units planned would involve total manpower within the authorized ceiling of 10,000. The estimated cost of this programme for the current fiscal year was estimated at $73 million. At present there were 7,000 men in the permanent force and 2,000 in the interim force.

14. THE DIRECTOR GENERAL OF DEFENCE RESEARCH described plans now in hand for the organization of scientific and development work in connection with the three Services. The Canadian Armament Research and Development Establishment at Valcartier and the Suffield experimental station were being taken over from the Army. Research of common interest to the three Services would be conducted under the joint organization. Close collaboration with both the United Kingdom and the United States would be a primary element of policy.

Personnel would likely reach some 800 when control of the Valcartier and Suffield establishments was assumed. With respect to finance, the current vote of $15 million would not be expended this year. It might be anticipated that a similar amount would be required for the next fiscal year.

15. THE CABINET, after discussion, noted the reports of the Chiefs of Staff.

DEFENCE POLICIES; 35TH RECOMMENDATION OF THE
PERMANENT JOINT BOARD ON DEFENCE

16. THE PRIME MINISTER requested reconsideration of the 35th recommendation of the Canada-U.S. Permanent Joint Board on Defence. This had first been submitted to the Cabinet at the meeting of May 9th last, when decision thereon had been deferred.

The recommendation was in draft form only. It sought to set out appropriate principles for cooperation between the forces of the United States and of Canada. It had now been requested that the government accord it favourable consideration.

The draft had been amended since its earlier submission, with a view to the safeguarding of sovereignty and the protection of the interests of the country in whose territory joint operations were undertaken. In this form it had been considered by the Cabinet Defence Committee and was recommended for approval.

17. THE CABINET, after considerable discussion, agreed that a recommendation along the lines of the draft submitted would be favourably considered by the government and that the Board be informed to that effect.

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL

Dear Mr. Pearson,

With reference to your letter of November 2nd<sup>2</sup> and my WA-4020 of November 12th,† I was surprised, as you were, to hear of the breadth of the territory to be covered during the tri-partite staff talks in Washington. To some degree I share your hesitation over our participation on a nominally equal footing in these discussions. On the whole, however, I am inclined to think that we should do so.

The more I think of it, the more I am convinced that a joint appreciation and forecast of the global strategical situation, developed by our two great prospective Allies in another war, would be of great value in reaching intelligent decisions on our own domestic policies, provided that it is well done and carries conviction. If these talks fulfil their purpose and the results are accepted in London and Washington, it seems to me that we shall have to accept the conclusions as a matter of practical necessity. Unless we run the risks involved in junior partnership in the formulation of the strategical concepts, I am fairly certain that there would be greater difficulty in securing consent in Ottawa on the political level, since the advisers of the Government would not be able to explain fully the processes whereby the conclusions were reached.

To illustrate this, it seems to me that we cannot reach a sound decision on such problems as the proper scale of air defences of North America and our appropriate share of responsibility therein except in the light of some authoritative appreciation concurred in by both the U.S. and the U.K. of the conditions and theatres in which another war is likely to be fought and decided. One could multiply illustrations of this sort.

It is possible that we might have a small positive contribution to make if we can manage to be represented by good men and to have them well instructed. You mentioned in your letter that you and Arnold<sup>1</sup> were not much impressed by the quality of some of the political arguments put forward in the War Office memoranda which Foulkes read to the Chiefs of Staff. You know very well the tendency here for the Services to hold aloof from the State Department. If our representatives can be kept closely in touch with the views of the political advisers to the Government, we might be able to do a little to improve the result of the discussions.

I assume that the talks began earlier this week, but I have heard nothing from the Canadian participants. I fully agree that it would be useful if they could keep me personally informed of what is going on, but I think that they will have to be told so by their Chiefs of Staff. No one but myself in the Embassy knows anything about the nature of these talks, and George Wait tells me that he is the only member of the Joint Staff who is informed. He is in the picture apparently only because the R.C.A.F. sent him to London with Foulkes and not because he is the Chairman of the Joint Staff here. He was dubious about talking to me about the London discussions until he found out how much I already knew.

Yours sincerely,

H. H. WRONG

Déclaration du ministre de la Santé nationale et du Bien-être social au Cabinet

Statement by Minister of National Health and Welfare to Cabinet

[Ottawa,] November 15, 1946

Yesterday afternoon, the Chief of the Air Staff told us that the United States took the view that the main attack would be launched against them, with the object of crippling the productive power of the United States.

He went on to say that this was not the view either of the U.K. or of the Canadian General Staffs, who felt that any attack on this continent would be diversionary, that is, intended to prevent our assisting in the defence against the main attack. Only when the latter was pushed home, would the full resources of the rest of the world be turned against this continent.

My present purpose is not to indicate a preference between the two views, but to point out, indeed to emphasize in the strongest terms, the fact that there is a fundamental difference in the concepts of the American and Canadian Staffs.

This would vitally affect the whole scale of the defence measures which should be established.

Further, this fundamental difference of view arises out of a joint appreciation. On the basis of that appreciation the Americans say that they are to be the object of the main attack, and we say that at the outset we would be the object of a diversionary attack.

On the basis of this appreciation, the Military Co-operation Committee of Canada and the United States (generally called "The Joint Planners") have been drawing up a plan for submission to the General Staffs of the two countries. In anticipation of this, so that we might better appreciate the situation, Air Vice-Marshal Leckie has described to us this plan, and it appears to be based on the American concept. He has added that, having regard to the defence needs of Canada and the resources of Canada, he would not be likely to recommend the adoption of this plan when it comes before him.

I mention this as the background against which we should now consider the President's request that we should endorse the joint planning and that this endorsation should take the form of approval of the appreciation.

That is, we are asked to approve an appreciation when it is a fair assumption that the Americans draw a conclusion from it totally different from that which our expert advisers are likely to draw.

Secondly, we are asked to approve the continuation of joint planning which we now know is going forward on the basis of the American interpretation of the appreciation and which is designed to attain an object which our advisers will probably say is entirely beyond our capacity, even if it is desirable, namely the achievement of a Maginot line across the north of Canada.

It seems to me that in these circumstances and against this background, our approval of the appreciation and endorsement of the joint planning that is now going on could not but mislead our American partners into the belief that we were going along with them in their concept.

It seems to me that each day that we allow them to continue along the present course will commit us further to acceptance of that course.

It seems to me that as this proceeds we will find that in their view at least we will have acquiesced in the action they have been taking, so that all that remains will be to settle the details and allocate the cost.

Moreover, if it comes down to this, we will be in a weak bargaining position, at least in a much weaker bargaining position than if we were to say to them now, "We simply don't agree with your concept. We can't afford to allocate any considerable proportion of the defence appropriations we can make in support of it. If you insist that this is necessary for your defence, then we would expect that you would contribute a large proportion of the cost."

Wouldn't it be better now, rather than to approve the appreciation and endorse the planning, to enter into the discussion with the Americans at the top political level and clarify the ground there before committing ourselves by allowing a chain of events to appear in the minds of the Americans to commit us.

Shouldn't our reply to the President therefore be that while we agree emphatically that there should be joint planning on the basis of an appreciation to be agreed to by the political representatives of the two countries, we feel that the best way to proceed would be to have the discussion at the political level at once and then to give instructions to the Chiefs of Staff and the Joint Planners.

In that way we would be reserving our position and not giving away any bargaining power or committing ourselves to something that, frankly, seems to me to be totally unacceptable.

Obviously this is a matter of great urgency. I think we should ask our Chiefs of Staff to give us at once, and without waiting for any further developments, a joint comment on the appreciation and at least the outlines of a plan of defence which would at once co-ordinate the activities of the three services and relate their combined effectives to a workable plan of joint action with the United States which would meet two requirements, first, joint action with the United States for the defence of this continent, and second, the other defence needs or military objectives of Canada.

With that and some estimates of the cost, our political representatives could, after discussion with the Cabinet, enter the political discussions with a view to securing an understanding by the political representatives of the United States of the defence needs of Canada and of the means available to meet them.

In this way we would not enter upon the most important action in the peacetime history of the country on the basis of a possible misunderstanding.

Ottawa, November 15, 1946

A meeting of the Cabinet was held in the Privy Council Chamber on Friday, November 15th, 1946 at 11.00 a.m. The meeting adjourned at 1.00 p.m. and resumed at 3.00 p.m.

PRESENT:

The Prime Minister (Mr. King), in the Chair,
 The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Mackenzie),
 The Minister of Reconstruction and Supply (Mr. Howe),
 The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner)

The Minister of National Defence for Air (Mr. Gibson),
The Minister of Justice and Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. St. Laurent),
The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fournier),
The Postmaster General (Mr. Bertrand),
The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Claxton),
The Solicitor General (Mr. Jean),
The Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier),
The Secretary of State (Mr. Martin),
The Minister of National Defence and Minister of National Defence for Naval Services (Mr. Abbott),
The Minister of National Revenue and Minister of National War Services (Dr. McCann),
The Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Bridges).
The Secretary to the Cabinet (Mr. Heeney).

REDISTRIBUTION

1. THE MINISTER OF VETERANS AFFAIRS reported on behalf of the Cabinet Committee established at the meeting of November 12th.

Discussions in respect of the different Provinces were being carried on and maps were being prepared. A detailed report for Cabinet consideration would be available before long.

2. THE CABINET noted the Minister's report.

NATIONAL WAR MEMORIAL

3. THE PRIME MINISTER, referring to the discussion at the meeting of November 12th, reported that a communication had now been received from the Dominion Command of the Legion in support of the proposal to have reference to the recent war included by a suitable inscription on the National War Memorial.

4. THE CABINET, after discussion, agreed that the Department of Public Works should have an architect examine the situation and report as to what might be appropriately done.

DEFENCE POLICIES; CANADIAN SERVICE REPRESENTATION IN THE UNITED KINGDOM

5. THE PRIME MINISTER observed that the government had as yet reached no final decision as to the form of military representation in London.

At the "Prime Ministers'" meetings in London the previous spring, this question had been discussed and it had been recognized, as a result, that anything in the nature of a centralized organization for "Imperial" defence was unacceptable and inappropriate to the relationship which existed between the nations of the Commonwealth. This was quite evident from the record of discussions at the time. Furthermore, the establishment of any executive machinery in London would be contrary to long settled Canadian policy and, indeed, to the principles of the Statute of Westminster and the recorded conclusions on the subject of recent Imperial Conferences.

In opposing the establishment of a military mission in London on the part of South Africa, on grounds similar to the above, Field Marshal Smuts had, on the other hand, supported the appointment of "liaison officers" to the staffs of the High Commissioners. This proposal was deemed appropriate and desirable as a means of facilitating the traditional cooperation and coordination in defence matters between the nations of the Commonwealth. The functions of these officers would be confined to liaison with the U.K. Services and would not include participation in planning of any kind. The Prime Minister had expressed agreement with such an arrangement and its implications, from the Canadian point of view, had been under consideration by the Services here and recently by the Cabinet Defence Committee.

The Cabinet would observe that recent proposals relating to the organization of Commonwealth defence to which publicity had been given in Britain and in this country were quite contrary to that for the appointment of liaison officers to which reference had been made.

6. THE CABINET, after considerable discussion, agreed to Canadian Service representation in the United Kingdom by the attachment to the High Commissioner's office in London of appropriate liaison officers; the personnel involved to be settled subsequently on the basis of the approved requirements of the three Services.

DEFENCE POLICIES; JOINT PLANNING WITH THE UNITED STATES;
COMMONWEALTH COOPERATION

7. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS observed that approval of the 35th recommendation of the Joint Defence Board which set forth the principles of defence cooperation with the United States involved the question of its relationship to comparable arrangements within the Commonwealth.

The Board's recommendation would constitute, in effect, an agreement between Canada and the United States for regional defence which might evoke comparison with the relatively undefined defence relationships between Canada and other parts of the Commonwealth. It would be recalled that the Commonwealth itself was commonly cited as a typical and desirable regional arrangement such as was contemplated under the Charter of the United Nations.

8. THE PRIME MINISTER observed that Commonwealth defence cooperation rested upon a basis of understanding and tradition independent of any regional arrangements and requiring no precise agreements. This was the unanimous conclusion of the Imperial Conference of 1937. Further, the proposed arrangements with the United States for North American defence were, in a sense, a substantial contribution to the Commonwealth, since a first tenet of United Kingdom foreign policy was the maintenance of the closest friendship with the United States.

Appropriate reference to the Commonwealth defence relationship might well be made when the 35th recommendation of the Board was made public.

9. MR. KING drew attention to the reference in the so-called "oral message" of President Truman to the desirability of early approval of the Board's 35th recommendation.

The President had appreciated our desire to keep the U.K. government informed of the progress of our joint defence arrangements with the United States and the Secretary of State for External Affairs had discussed the matter with the U.K. Foreign Secretary in New York. Mr. Bevin had subsequently given Mr. St. Laurent an aide mémoire containing certain observations from the United Kingdom point of view. This aide mémoire (which Mr. King read) emphasized the importance of calculating Soviet reactions to joint defence measures in the Arctic, also to the effects of special Canada-U.S. arrangements upon other Commonwealth defence relationships.

10. THE CABINET, after further discussion:

(a) confirmed the decision taken at the previous meeting respecting approval of the Board's 35th recommendation;

(b) agreed that the text of the Board's 35th recommendation be communicated to the United Kingdom; and,

(c) agreed that, at such time as publicity were given to defence arrangements with the United States under the Board's 35th recommendation, appropriate public reference should also be made to similar cooperative defence arrangements with the United Kingdom under long standing Canadian policy.

DEFENCE POLICIES; NORTH AMERICAN DEFENCE;
JOINT PLANNING WITH THE UNITED STATES

11. THE PRIME MINISTER again read the text of the "oral message" from President Truman, drawing attention to the fact that it contained three specific proposals:

(i) endorsement of joint planning now in progress with particular reference to joint measures in the Arctic (such endorsement, it was suggested, might take the form of approval of the draft appreciation prepared by Canadian and U.S. staffs);

(ii) approval of the Board's 35th recommendation; and,

(iii) consent to the stationing of substantially increased U.S. forces at Goose Bay, Labrador.

The second proposal had already been dealt with. The first and third remained for consideration.

NAVY; SIZE OF POSTWAR FORCE

12. THE PRIME MINISTER made reference to a report of a recent speech by the Chief of the Naval Staff, in which Admiral Reid was stated to have expressed the view that the Canadian Navy should be a good deal larger than at present planned. It was quite improper for a Chief of Staff to express himself publicly on matters of government policy.

13. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE said that the impropriety of his conduct had already been drawn to the attention of Admiral Reid.

14. THE CABINET noted with approval the remarks of the Prime Minister and the Minister of National Defence.

DEFENCE POLICIES; NORTH AMERICAN DEFENCE; JOINT PLANNING WITH THE UNITED STATES

15. THE PRIME MINISTER referred again to President Truman's "oral message" and the two specific decisions therein suggested which remained for disposition, viz., endorsement of joint planning and consent to increased U.S. forces at Goose Bay.

It was suggested that endorsement of joint planning now in progress (which had particular reference to measures of joint action in the North) might take the form of concurrence in the draft joint appreciation which had been explained in detail to the Cabinet the previous day by Intelligence Officers of the three Services. While assurances might be given in general terms of Canadian support for the continuance of joint planning along agreed lines, concurrence in the conclusions of the draft joint appreciation involved policy considerations of the highest importance and could not properly be given by the government, at least at this stage. In due course an agreed appreciation would have to be formulated as a basis for joint measures. Such an overall appreciation, however, would have to be prepared with the greatest care and only after full discussion between the two governments on the diplomatic level.

With respect to Goose Bay, this was also a matter for discussion on the diplomatic level. It involved directly the U.K. Government and Newfoundland, and no decision on the subject could be taken immediately.

It was proposed that discussions between the two governments would be initiated at an early date on the basis of the President's "oral message"; the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs had been authorized to communicate with the U.S. Ambassador to this effect.

It had been suggested that the discussions could best be conducted in Ottawa between the U.S. Embassy and the Department of External Affairs, with the participation of appropriate Service officers and advisers on both sides. They would cover an appreciation of the political and military factors involved, the position of the United Kingdom in relation to North American defence, responsibility for agreed joint measures as between Canada and the United States (specifically the difficult matter of finance), specific U.S. proposals such as the suggested increase of forces at Goose Bay and the U.S. programme for Arctic weather stations, as well as all other major aspects of the whole problem.

16. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE drew attention to the fact that the Chiefs of Staff had concurred in the draft joint appreciation. They had not, however, examined detailed joint plans which were still in course of preparation within the framework of the draft basic security plan which had been explained by the Chiefs of Staff the previous day.

It would be premature for the government to accept the draft basic security plan until the Chiefs of Staff had submitted their comments thereon. Meantime the Chiefs of Staff might be instructed to prepare jointly a purely Canadian appreciation and plan for early consideration by the Cabinet in relation to the government's immediate programme.

17. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS agreed that the government should not, in any event at this stage, concur in the draft joint appreciation. As the Prime Minister had pointed out, its conclusions were based on complex political as well as strategic considerations. It was necessary to distinguish between what was possible technically in a military way and what was probable from other points of view. The time factor was also difficult to estimate and upon this there was some difference of opinion.

As to specific projects, for example Goose Bay, the U.K. Foreign Secretary had offered the opinion that, from the political point of view, it would be well to proceed as far as possible on a civilian basis. The development of airfields for civil and commercial purposes could be carried a considerable distance and at the same time serve the military purpose.

As to cost, consideration might be given to recent discussions at the United Nations and the principles which were being examined there. In this connection the criterion of comparative per capita cost was being studied and was not irrelevant to the present problem.

18. THE CABINET, after considerable discussion, agreed:

(1) that while general endorsement could be given to the principle of joint defence planning with the United States, the government could not concur in the draft joint appreciation submitted through the Canadian and U.S. Chiefs of Staff, pending the outcome of forthcoming discussions between the two governments on the diplomatic level; as a result of these discussions it was hoped that a general appreciation, taking account of all relevant factors, would be agreed between the two governments;

(2) that no decision could be taken respecting the U.S. government's proposal to station additional forces at Goose Bay, Labrador, pending the forthcoming discussions with the United States, and pending discussion of this subject with the U.K. government and Newfoundland;

(3) that joint defence planning with the United States should not proceed beyond the present stage, pending the forthcoming discussions and pending agreement between the two governments as to the lines upon which further planning should proceed and joint measures be undertaken;

(4) that the Chiefs of Staff be directed to prepare forthwith a joint defence programme for the immediate future—including a joint appreciation and joint plan, due weight being given therein to:

(a) the course of joint planning with the United States; and,

(b) other relevant factors from the Canadian point of view (e.g. local defence, Commonwealth relationships, possible United Nations obligations).

DEFENCE POLICIES; SERVICE PROGRAMMES

19. THE PRIME MINISTER pointed out that the Cabinet, during the past year, had authorized the Services to proceed with plans for the active elements of Navy, Army and Air Force, on the basis of certain manpower "ceilings" and, during the past Session, Parliament had been so informed. Financial estimates for approval of permanent establishments within these manpower figures were at present under consideration.

At the meeting of November 5th the Cabinet had agreed, however, that a general review of peacetime establishments should be undertaken in the light of developments since the earlier decisions had been taken. It was necessary, therefore, to scrutinize carefully the authorized figures for the three Services in order to determine whether a correct proportion existed between the three, particularly in relation to the course of joint planning with the United States in the matter of Arctic defence.

In this connection it appeared that the defence responsibilities of Canada would involve a very high proportion of air strength. Possibly the numbers of men allotted to the Air Force was out of line for this reason.

20. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE observed that the Army programme involved a trained fighting force of only some 7,000 men. The remaining 18,000 were required for Headquarters and administrative purposes and personnel assigned to train the Reserve Army. These figures would be re-examined and consideration given to their readjustment to meet present circumstances.

It should be borne in mind that the Reserve Army (the former Non-Permanent Active Militia) formed the essential framework of the traditional Canadian defence scheme. It was based upon the assumption of a citizen Army whose fighting would be done abroad to keep the war away from Canada. Possibly some means might be found to effect adjustments in this programme in the light of the new North American requirements.

As to the Navy, it was intended to re-examine the necessity of having the second carrier in the present programme.

21. MR. KING emphasized the importance of having National Defence estimates submitted at the earliest possible date. These should be examined in the light of the joint programme which the Chiefs of Staff were to prepare.

Expenditures for defence would have to be considered carefully in relation to the whole national budget and in particular to the government's social security programme. Large expenditures upon defence would inevitably entail reductions in the amounts available for social purposes.

22. THE CABINET, after discussion, noted that the Army and Navy programme would be re-examined as indicated by the Minister and agreed that, at an early date, the Cabinet would consider National Defence estimates with the joint programme to be submitted by the Chiefs of Staff.

DEFENCE POLICIES; ORGANIZATION; MINISTRY; DEFENCE COMMITTEE

23. THE PRIME MINISTER referred to the announcement made some months ago of the intention, at an appropriate time, to organize the Department of National Defence under one Minister. There was no doubt that by this means a greater measure of co-ordination could be achieved between the three Services and substantial administrative economies effected.

It would have been observed that in the United Kingdom, a Minister of Defence had recently been appointed and the Cabinet Defence Committee reorganized with a view to maintaining an effective coordination in strategy and in administration. The question of the place of the Cabinet Defence Committee in Canada was one which should also be reexamined.

Other related questions of great importance were—the desirability of appointing a single Chief of Staff, the position of Parliamentary Assistants, and that of the Deputy Ministers.

24. THE MINISTERS OF NATIONAL DEFENCE both expressed agreement with the Prime Minister's view that a single Minister of National Defence was desirable.

25. THE CABINET, after discussion, agreed that one Minister of National Defence should be appointed<sup>1</sup> and that other questions of defence organization, including that of the Defence Committee, the Chiefs of Staff, Parliamentary Assistants and Deputy Ministers should receive early consideration.

ESTHONIAN REPUBLIC; RECOGNITION OF INCORPORATION IN U.S.S.R.

26. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS reported that it was necessary in connection with certain judicial proceedings arising out of the sale of an Esthonian vessel by a Canadian Admiralty Court to reach a decision with respect to the status of the Esthonian Republic. The Republic now formed part of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

The U.K. Government had accepted the Esthonian Republic as the de facto government of Esthonia but had as yet refused de jure recognition. The U.S. government had given no recognition and the U.S. Secretary of State commonly issued certificates to that effect to Courts and to litigants.

As yet the Canadian government had given no recognition to the acquisition of Esthonia by the Soviet Union. This question should now be decided as should that of the procedure to be followed respecting certificates of national status. (External Affairs memorandum, Nov. 14, 1946.†)

27. THE CABINET, after discussion, agreed that Canada should not extend de jure recognition to the Esthonian Republic but should recognize it as the de facto government of Esthonia; also that a reply to that effect should be given on the formulation of an enquiry by a court of law.

UNITED NATIONS ASSEMBLY; USE OF THE VETO; SOUTH-WEST AFRICA

28. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS reported on the progress of events at the current meetings of the Assembly.

An immediate question arose as to the attitude to be adopted by the Canadian delegation on the proposals being put forward respecting the use of the veto by the Great Powers. On the one hand, it was felt that the Great Powers, in particular the Soviet Union, had undoubtedly abused the veto provided by the Charter for the protection of their vital interests. To this extent, the delegation agreed with current proposals to limit its employment. On the other hand, it was felt that it was not helpful to raise this issue now. It was hoped that a compromise solution would be accepted which would not have the harmful effects of the more drastic resolution supported by Australia and many of the smaller powers. To this end the delegation had had discussions with the United Kingdom and other Commonwealth countries and it was proposed to express in the Assembly the Canadian view along these lines.

Another difficult question was that of South Africa's expressed intention to annex South-West Africa. While the Canadian government were prepared to accept as correct the information presented by Field Marshal Smuts as the wishes of the local population, nevertheless exception was taken to the method which South Africa was employing. For this reason, the delegation proposed to abstain from voting when the South African proposal came up for decision in the Assembly.

29. MR. ST. LAURENT spoke generally of developments in New York and in particular of the attitude of the Soviet Union in the Assembly and Security Council.

30. THE CABINET, after discussion, noted with approval the Minister's report.

"CITIZENSHIP WEEK"

31. THE SECRETARY OF STATE, at the Prime Minister's request, described the ceremonies planned for the first week in January in connection with the granting of certificates to new citizens under the new legislation.

The purpose of these ceremonies was to impress upon the new Canadians the importance of the privileges and obligations which they were undertaking as citizens. A central ceremony had been planned for Ottawa in which it was hoped the Prime Minister would participate.

32. THE CABINET, after discussion, noted with approval the Minister's report.

ENACTMENT OF A "BILL OF RIGHTS"

33. THE MINISTER OF VETERANS AFFAIRS referred to an undertaking which he had given in the House of Commons at the last Session to have the government give consideration to the enactment of a "Bill of Rights" to guarantee the fundamental rights of all Canadians. This was a question which would have to be decided before the House met again.

34. THE CABINET, after discussion, deferred decision on this question.

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL

Ottawa, November 18, 1946

Dear Sir Alexander [Clutterbuck],

I am enclosing herewith a copy of the 35th Recommendation of the Joint Defence Board<sup>1</sup>, to which the Canadian Cabinet gave approval, in principle, last week. The Recommendation lays down the principles of co-operation between Canada and the United States in defence matters, and I was instructed by the Prime Minister to send you a copy for transmission to your Government. Mr. St. Laurent has also taken a copy of the Recommendation to New York, where he will show it to Mr. Bevin.

Mr. St. Laurent has recently had a talk with Mr. Bevin in New York on the general subject of Canadian-United States defence relationships. As a result of that talk, a memorandum was left with Mr. St. Laurent, making suggestions on this matter. A copy of that memorandum is attached.<sup>2</sup>

The Cabinet decided, last week, that discussions should now be initiated between the two Governments on the diplomatic level, with a view to going into this whole question. A suitable basis for these talks was agreed on by President Truman and Mr. King during their recent meeting in Washington. It is hoped that they may result in an agreement between the two Governments on this important subject.

I shall, of course, keep you informed of all developments in this matter which will be of interest to the United Kingdom Government.

Yours sincerely,

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL

Ottawa, November 18, 1946

Dear Mr. Atherton,

Confirming our telephone conversation of Saturday on forthcoming talks, on the diplomatic level, about defence relationships between our two Governments, it was agreed, at Cabinet discussions last week, that these talks should begin as soon as possible, and it was suggested that they might be held in Ottawa. It was also decided that the "oral message" from the President to the Prime Minister during their recent conversation in Washington might be used as a basis of discussion. In this connection, we agreed on Saturday that we might meet, possibly on Thursday of this week, to work out an agenda, based on that "oral message".

The Cabinet has also decided that if a 35th Recommendation of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence is submitted in the form of the present draft, it would be acceptable to the Canadian Government.

We agreed, on Saturday, that, for obvious reasons, the Board, as such, should not be associated with the forthcoming talks, which will, no doubt, cover subjects outside the terms of reference of the Board. The two Governments will, of course, be quite free to call on any individual members of the Board, as they see fit, to participate in the discussions, on the understanding that these members are responsible officials of the Government concerned, and are acting in that capacity.

We will do our best here to maintain secrecy about these discussions, for we regard this as of first importance. I feel sure that we can count on your full co-operation in this respect.

I would be glad to discuss with you at what hour and at what place we might have our preliminary discussions on Thursday.

Yours sincerely,

L. B. PEARSON

MEMORANDUM ON THE AGENDA FOR CANADA-UNITED STATES DEFENCE TALKS

The United States "Oral Message" has been accepted by the Under-Secretary in his note of November 1st to the United States Ambassador as "a basis for discussions between the two Governments."

The oral message speaks of "assurances of support from the highest authorities of both Governments" and goes on to say that "such assurances could take the form of concurrence in the appreciation". The oral message, together with the draft joint appreciation would, therefore, be two documents on which discussions might well be based.

It will be recalled that the draft joint appreciation is largely a military document. It has been accepted by the Canadian Chiefs of Staff as "a satisfactory basis for detailed planning", but the Cabinet decided at its meeting on November 15th that "the Government could not concur in the draft joint appreciation submitted through the Canadian and United States Chiefs of Staff pending the outcome of forthcoming discussions between the two Governments on a diplomatic level. As a result of these discussions it was hoped that a general appreciation taking account of all relevant factors would be agreed between the two Governments". The present discussions might, therefore, begin with consideration of the analysis on which the recommendations contained in the draft joint appreciation are based. This discussion would amplify and perhaps modify the draft joint appreciation in the light of political considerations. The following are some of the points which should be examined at this stage of general discussion.

1. An estimate of Soviet intentions (as distinct from Soviet military capabilities). Such an estimate would be based on the political information in the possession of the two Governments.

2. On the assumption that the threat of Soviet aggression exists, the discussion might then turn on the question as to (a) where and (b) when such aggression might be expected to arise. Under the first of these headings it would be important to raise the general question as to whether the principal threat of war is likely to arise in Europe or whether an "all-out" attack on the North American continent is a probability. It may be that the appreciation over-estimates the likelihood of such an attack and under-estimates the probability of the United States and Canada becoming involved in a war principally, if not exclusively, waged in Europe. The United States representative on the Permanent Joint Defence Board has stated that offence is still, in the United States view, the best mode of defence. The question might be raised as to the implications of this statement in terms of North American strategic planning.

Under the second heading of when aggression might be anticipated, it would be necessary to examine the time factor suggested in the draft joint appreciation in the light of most recent political information. This would, of course, have a direct bearing on the tempo and scale of our defence planning.

In this connection we should welcome more information about the general United States conception of their global strategy.

Such a discussion would lead to consideration of the importance which the United States attach to the position of the United Kingdom, the countries of Western Europe and the Mediterranean and Middle East in the defence of the North American continent.

The further question of the importance of support for the British Commonwealth in the general scheme of North American defence might be expected to arise from this discussion.

The relationship of regional defence planning for North America to our obligations under the United Nations might also be discussed at this stage.

This first phase of the discussions might result in certain agreed conclusions of a general character. In the light of these conclusions the recommendations of the draft joint appreciation should be examined and some modifications may suggest themselves.

If general agreement could be reached on these conclusions the discussion might turn to the more particular questions raised by the United States in their oral message.

1. Financial arrangements;

2. Goose Bay (at this point it is for consideration whether representatives of the United Kingdom and Newfoundland should be brought into the discussion). In this connection it should be necessary to consider whether the Goose Bay project as well as other plans could not be inaugurated under civilian auspices rather than under military auspices. At this or some other point in the discussions it would be necessary to consider the relationship of United States-Canadian defence planning to United States defence planning in Greenland and Alaska;

3. The 35th recommendation of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence. There need not be much discussion on the substance of the recommendation which has already been approved by the United States and Canadian Governments. Discussion would turn on whether publication and registration with the United Nations would be a desirable course at this stage.

In this connection Mr. Hickerson appears to have suggested, in his interview with Mr. Wrong on November 6th, that "the revised 35th recommendation of the P.J.B.D. would constitute the only agreement required on general principles if it were accepted by the two Governments". Presumably, therefore, the United States would not welcome an exchange of notes arising out of the current conversations. It may be that agreed minutes of the meeting initialled by the heads of the two Governments would be in the form in which any agreement arising out of these governments might be incorporated.

RECORD OF CONCLUSIONS

INFORMAL CANADA-UNITED STATES MEETING, NOVEMBER 21

An informal meeting was held on November 21 to discuss procedure and agenda for the inter-Governmental discussions on Joint Defence planning which the two Governments had agreed to hold in the near future. Those present were:

FOR CANADA:

The Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs,
Mr. A. D. P. Heeney,
Mr. R. M. Macdonnell,
Mr. C. S. A. Ritchie,
Mr. E. W. T. Gill.

FOR THE UNITED STATES:

The Ambassador,
Mr. Lewis Clark,
Major General G. V. Henry,
Mr. J. G. Parsons.

1. PROCEDURE AND ORGANIZATION.

(a) It was agreed that the United States would let us know when they would be ready to hold the discussions which would be as soon as possible. On the Canadian side the participants would be much the same as at the present meeting representing the Department of External Affairs and the Privy Council Office, with the possible addition of service advisers. The United States would also be represented along the lines of the present meeting with the possible addition of a further War Department representative to present broad strategic considerations. There was also agreement that it might be desirable if a member of the Canadian Cabinet could attend the concluding sessions of the discussions. Finally, if agreement is reached, in order to surround that agreement with as much authority as possible, there might later be a meeting between the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Secretary of State or Under-Secretary of the United States.

(b) Joint Secretaries should be appointed and an agreed record of conclusions drawn up and approved.

2. AGENDA.

(a) The following items were agreed upon:

(i) Review of Joint Appreciation.

(a) Political considerations.

(b) Military considerations.

(ii) Publicity with regard to Joint Defence projects.

(iii) Recommendation of November 20.<sup>1</sup>

(a) Procedure.

(b) Publication and registration.

(iv) Finance.

(b) If time permitted, any papers which each side might prepare were to be exchanged between the Under-Secretary and the United States Ambassador in advance of the discussions.

3. PARTICULAR QUESTIONS.

A number of questions were mentioned on which each government would like to have the considered views of the other, e.g.:

(a) Estimate of Soviet intentions (the United States would welcome a Canadian estimate which was promised).

(b) Reaction of the U.S.S.R. to North American defence measures.

(c) Overall strategic concepts with particular reference to considerations affecting western Europe, the Mediterranean and the Middle East.

(d) Extent to which the earlier requirements of northern defence plans could be met on a civilian basis.

(e) Relation between defence activities in Canada on the one hand and those in Alaska and Greenland on the other.

(f) Possibility of having an exchange of notes recording approval of the Recommendation of November 20; registration with the United Nations; advantages and disadvantages of publicity generally.

(g) Relationship of the United Kingdom to Joint Defence planning with particular reference to Goose Bay.

(h) Possible methods of sharing financial costs.

4. GOOSE BAY.

At the request of the United States, this question was tentatively omitted from the agenda given in paragraph 2. It was thought that, alternatively, the United States proposals might be discussed at a separate meeting held in conjunction with or after the general talks. Canada would wish to learn United States views with regard to the balance between military advantages and political disadvantages insofar as international relations are concerned, as well as the effect on the Newfoundland domestic situation.

5. GENERAL.

The meeting, which was entirely informal, touched on a wide range of topics. The following notes sum up the more important of these:

(a) Strategic Offensive.

General Henry gave it as a personal view that the strategic offensive remained the best defence. Should war come within five or six years, he thought that very little of the basic security plan would have to become operative and by far the greater part of Canadian and United States forces would be available for use in theatres outside North America. However, if technological advances continue to be made at the expected rate, it was his view that within about eight years the basic security plan would tie down a large part of the short-range air forces of both countries to the tasks of North American defence. He did not think that this would appreciably affect the ground or naval forces of either country, or their strategic air forces, which would continue to be available for service abroad.

(b) Greenland.

Mr. Parsons explained that no conversations had yet been held with the Danish Government on the subject of facilities in Greenland. So long as Soviet Forces were in Bornholm it was felt that the time was not right for an approach to the Danes. Recent indications suggested that the latter might not be averse to discussing the problem. In this connection, General Henry pointed out that a successful strategic offensive calls for bases as far from home and as near the enemy as possible. Bases of this sort in Greenland were regarded as most important.

(c) It was agreed that, until the outcome of the Inter-Governmental discussions was known, no new Joint Planning projects should be undertaken, but that work already initiated on annexes to the basic security plan should proceed. It was further agreed that no question arose as to the role of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence which would continue to function as at present.

(d) United States requests for defence projects.

The United States was advised that it would be in the general interest to examine with some care the timing of any requests for new defence projects in Canada which they might be contemplating.

(e) Claims to Arctic Territory.

There was a brief discussion of the attitude that might be taken if attempts were made by the U.S.S.R. to take possession of territory in the Canadian Arctic on the basis that it was unclaimed. The United States may have something to say on this later.

BACKGROUND AND PURPOSES

TOP SECRET

December 6, 1946

The purposes of the forthcoming discussions, insofar as the Canadian Government is concerned, can be stated briefly as follows:

(1) To consider, on the official level, and without commitment on either side, the political aspects of potential threats to North American security and on the political implications of various steps that might be taken to meet these potential threats.

(2) To obtain the views of the United States as to what military and naval steps, on a global basis, they regard as essential or desirable for the maintenance of security.

(3) To consider whether any inter-Governmental agreement, or other document, is required in which the two Governments might record their decision to co-operate in the defence of North America, and, if so, what should be the form and substance of such agreement.

(4) To enable the officials concerned to make reports to their respective Governments which might be useful in connection with any discussions on a higher political level which might later take place.

POLITICAL APPRECIATION OF THE OBJECTIVES OF SOVIET FOREIGN POLICY

TOP SECRET

November 30, 1946

IMMEDIATE OR SHORT-TERM PROSPECTS OF SOVIET AGGRESSION

On such information as is available to the Canadian Government, it appears most unlikely that the Soviet Union would be in a position to wage another major war in the near future, and for this reason it is highly improbable that the Soviet Government would run the risk of deliberately provoking such a war. As a result of the last war, the Soviet Union has suffered so heavily in terms of a general disorganization of its economy, material destruction and loss of manpower that a breathing space seems clearly indicated as a main objective of Soviet policy. It is not possible to do more than guess at the period of time which will elapse before the Soviet Government consider that they are in a position to wage another major war should they desire to do so. It may be that the completion of each of the three five-year plans now contemplated will be considered necessary before the Soviet Government feel strong enough for such a struggle. On the other hand, there is no doubt that the Soviet Government will spare no efforts to strengthen its economy and build up its war potential (already very powerful) at the earliest possible date.

To this estimate of the short run danger of Soviet aggression, three qualifications should be made.

(a) The possibility of the development and production in large quantities by the U.S.S.R. of atomic bombs or of some new weapon of mass destruction.

(b) The situation that might arise in the event of Stalin's death. It seems unlikely that the transfer of power from Stalin to his successor would affect the power of the Communist party in the U.S.S.R. or change the form of Soviet foreign policy. On the other hand, there is always the possibility that the transfer of such immense political power as Stalin wields may not take place smoothly. Personal ambitions may operate to prevent the orderly transfer of power and to produce a crisis in the Soviet Union. However, in our ignorance of the present relationships, motives and ambitions of the members of the ruling group in the Soviet Union, it would be idle to pursue such a speculation. The preservation of the present regime and the advancement of Soviet interests abroad are likely to govern the policies of the Soviet Government, whoever succeeds Stalin.

(c) There remains the possibility that either some agent of Soviet policy (e.g. a Soviet general commanding troops in an area of friction) or more probably the Government of one of the states forming part of the Soviet bloc (e.g. Yugoslavia) may precipitate a war. It might be that the Soviet Government would be unwilling for reasons of prestige to withdraw from the position to which it had been committed and thus be drawn into warfare at first local in scale but afterwards becoming a world wide struggle.

While this is a possible eventuality, it may be regarded as unlikely. The Soviet Government have not in the past hesitated to disavow either policies or individuals embarrassing to them, nor have they hesitated to retreat into inglorious security when they felt it wise to do so. It seems, therefore, improbable that the U.S.S.R. will become involved in a major war started by any one of the agents of Soviet policy against the will of the Kremlin.

THE LONG-TERM THREAT OF SOVIET AGGRESSION

While, therefore, we do not consider there to be imminent danger of Soviet aggression, it must be recognized that there are powerful forces at work which may in the end precipitate the struggle between the Soviet Union and the Western World.

One of these is the idea which is a basic part of Marxist philosophy that an ultimate struggle between communism and capitalism is inevitable and that communism will emerge victorious. It is difficult to say how much the present rulers of Russia are affected by this concept but it is certainly not without influence on Soviet policy. It may be assumed, however, that Soviet foreign policy will be dictated less by ideological considerations than by a realistic estimate of Soviet interests as they are understood in the Kremlin.

At the same time the Soviet Union is a police state in which individual liberties and democratic methods of government, as these are understood in the West, can hardly be said to exist. Between such a state and the Western democracies a fundamental cleavage inevitably exists. This conflict of principle runs deep in all the relations of the Soviet Union with the Western World. Moreover, the insecurity which makes it necessary for the Soviet Government to rule by such methods, also makes it essential that the people of the Soviet Union should not be exposed to the unsettling effects of contact with the Western democracies or their nationals. The Soviet Government, therefore, not only keep their people in ignorance of our conditions of life, but employ unceasing propaganda to instill into the population fear and suspicion of the intentions of the Western democracies. In addition, there will always be a tendency, when things are going badly in the Soviet Union, for the Soviet Government to distract popular attention from their own shortcomings by starting a campaign of abuse and misrepresentation directed against one or other of the Anglo-Saxon democracies. Such methods are obviously dangerous to international peace.

Apart from the desire to further world revolution, the Soviet Government may be led in the direction of war by two other motives. One is the desire for expansion—perhaps for eventual world domination—and the other is fear of a threat to Soviet security by the Western powers.

It is perfectly obvious that the Soviet Union is an expanding power. The Soviet Union has annexed Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, the Koenigsberg district, Eastern Poland, Carpatho-Ukraine, Northern Bukovina, Bessarabia, Tannu-Tuva, Port Arthur, Karaputo and the Kurile Islands. It has taken the Petsamo and Viborg areas from Finland. It is attempting, with considerable success, to establish a zone of exclusive Soviet influence beyond these territories, in Poland, the Soviet zone of Germany, Austria, Hungary, Roumania, Bulgaria, Yugoslavia, Albania, Persia, Azerbaijan, the Mongul People's Republic, Northern Korea, Dairen, and the trunk railways of Manchuria. In Czechoslovakia, Soviet influence is strong but not as yet exclusive.

These represent formidable acquisitions of power and influence; and there are no signs that the Soviet Government is willing to set bounds to its appetite for further expansion. There is, perhaps, however, a valid distinction between admitting Russia's expansionist tendencies and attributing to her schemes for world domination, although the distinction may be rather one of method than of eventual objective. It seems unlikely that the Soviet Government is contemplating grandiose schemes for world domination of the kind which fascinated the restless dictators of the thirties. The Soviet rulers have always despised what they term "bourgeois adventurism". The gambling spirit that is willing to take great risks in the hope of immense returns seems to have little appeal for the Soviet Government. On the record of their past policies, it is rather difficult to imagine the rulers of the Soviet Union unleashing at a stroke a world struggle. It seems more probable that the Soviet Government will pursue a course of deliberate and cautious consolidation of positions already acquired together with a process of probing for the weak spots in the adversary's positions. Such a policy might operate on the political, economic or military planes. We have already had ample experience of these methods in negotiation between the Soviet Government and the Western powers. The tactics are familiar—the spun-out negotiation, the bargaining price, the war of nerves, the manipulation of facts for propaganda purposes, the abrupt change of front and the retreats pour mieux sauter. These have become the commonplaces of Soviet diplomatic methods.

Behind these tactics, the strategy of the Soviet Government seems to be emerging with increasing clarity. It is to undermine the position of the Western powers, and to weaken and divide them at every opportunity. In pursuit of these aims, the Soviet Government are anxious to prevent the formation of any Western bloc of powers. They strive to separate the United States from the United Kingdom and to isolate the latter in difficulties over some issue in which they hope that the support of the United States may not be forthcoming. Moreover, the Soviet Government, in its role as defender of the oppressed is carrying on propaganda against "imperialist" powers in general and against the British and American democracies in particular. In this capacity, the Soviet Government claims to be the champion of the poorer classes in all countries and of all racial minority groups.

In our estimation it is no longer possible to doubt that the Soviet Government aim at dividing the Western world against itself and increasing discord and instability. Such policies are plainly incompatible with friendship or cooperation as we understand these terms. On the other hand, they could be pursued for a prolonged period by the U.S.S.R. without implying that the Soviet Government intended to precipitate a world war. They may very possibly be carried to the length of fomenting civil war in certain countries in which the U.S.S.R. would give under-cover support to its adherents (e.g. in China and Greece).

The Soviet Government will inevitably, whatever their own ultimate objectives, be influenced in their policies by the reaction which they encounter from the Western powers. They have a healthy respect for the immense industrial resources of the United States and for its war potential. They are aware of the attraction which western democratic ideas exercise over the minds of peoples all over the world. They are alarmed at the possibility that the socialist experiment may succeed in Britain and that the example of this alternative to Communist revolution might undermine their influence among the industrial working classes of Western Europe. So long as they think the western democracies and in particular the United States and the United Kingdom are strong and united and so long as firm but fair-minded policies are pursued by those powers in dealing with the Soviet Union, the Soviet Government may be disposed to proceed with caution.

If, however, they see signs of weaknesses in the internal economies of the western democracies (or instability in the conduct of their foreign affairs) they may be tempted to follow more aggressive policies. They will certainly seize upon any evidence of appeasement as an encouraging sign of weakness. On the other hand, should they become convinced (perhaps as the result of inaccurate reports from their representatives abroad) that the Western powers have aggressive intentions against the Soviet Union, they might feel impelled to provide in haste for their security by further annexations of territory or infiltration into countries in strategic positions.

In assessing the possibility of war with the Soviet Union, it can be assumed that the United Nations, in its present form, will not provide the effective means of preventing such a struggle. While the United Nations may be competent to prevent minor wars between smaller nations, it cannot under its present Charter effectively curtail the complete freedom of action of a Great Power. It cannot be assumed that the world disarmament plans now under consideration in New York will eventually become realities or that the effective control of atomic energy on a world scale may be instituted. The Canadian Government for its part will certainly do its utmost to work for these objectives through the United Nations. But the existing international machinery cannot be relied upon as a deterrent to aggression by the Soviet Union.

Thus while the threat of immediate aggression seems slight, there is little prospect of sincere cooperation with the Soviet Union. A period of deteriorating relations between the Soviet Union and the Western world is to be anticipated. It is all too probable that this situation may end in war. The best likelihood of averting such a catastrophe would be for the Soviet Government to be convinced of the strength and unity of the western democracies and at the same time persuaded that they have nothing to fear from them. It is possible that they might then postpone indefinitely the accomplishment of their ultimate aims and the world might settle into a period of uneasy peace.

If this analysis is correct, we cannot afford to risk being unprepared in the event of war. The danger that Soviet policies may end in aggression cannot safely be ignored and it becomes essential in self-protection to consider the defensive measures entailed by the possibility of Soviet aggression.

SHARING OF DEFENCE COSTS

December 6, 1946

1. No estimates of the total cost of any Joint Defence plan are available or are likely to be available for some time. It can be taken as certain, however, that if the two Governments agree that a threat to North American security exists and further agree to take steps which would offer some substantial degree of protection against that threat, the costs will be very high. At the present time the sub-committees which are working on the Air Annex are thinking in terms of a plan which, when completed, would run into hundreds of millions of dollars. This, of course, would be spread over a period of years.

2. It is obvious that Canada could not assume the total cost. We should therefore endeavour to work out with the United States a formula which will give adequate recognition to such factors as the following:

(a) The relative capacity to pay of the Canadian and United States people.

(b) The relative benefits to each country which will be afforded by the defence measures undertaken.

(c) The desirability of retaining Canadian control over activities on Canadian territory.

(d) The relation between northern defence costs and total defence costs.

3. If it is obvious that Canada cannot foot the whole bill, it seems equally obvious that the Canadian people would be unwilling to adopt an entirely passive role and leave it up to the United States to establish whatever installations they thought desirable in Canada. Some point between these two extremes must therefore be found. During the last war it eventually (1943-44) became the policy of the Canadian Government to assume financial responsibility for everything deemed to be of permanent value such as airfields, flight strips, buildings and radio stations. It was thought desirable to avoid having any fixed installations in Canada belonging to a foreign government and this extended to the leasing of land. Thus, if the United States desired to lease land for defence projects, the Canadian Government undertook to acquire the land at its own expense and make it available to the United States.

4. If we are to avoid the disadvantages of having foreign bases in Canadian territory, (disadvantages which would be felt by both Canada and the United States) it appears important to continue the policy of providing whatever land and buildings are jointly agreed upon at Canadian expense. To this should be added the cost of providing for Canadian administration and control. This was not done, of course, during the war but a different set of considerations now applies, and the Recommendation of November 20 provides that military projects should be under the supervision of the country in which they are carried out. These two items of expense will of course be a relatively small fraction of the total bill since the major expenses will be incurred in providing equipment and supplies (particularly electronic devices and aircraft) and services such as air transport.

5. Various formulae for dealing with these expensive items suggest themselves. We could use a yardstick of 17 to 18 to one representing the ratio of the two national incomes. We could divide costs twelve to one on a population basis. We could, perhaps, using one or other of the ratios just mentioned, assign to Canada a certain proportion of the total costs of northern defence, including measures taken in Greenland and Alaska. The difficulty about any numerical ratio is that it may be hard to adapt to individual projects. On some projects it may well be that a fair Canadian share is fifty percent or seventy-five percent or even a hundred percent. The Alaska Highway and the Northwest Staging Route are instances where Canada at the present time is bearing the total cost of what are primarily defence installations. On the Northwest Land-line System it is expected that Canada will bear more than half the cost. On the other hand, there will undoubtedly be projects where a fair division would give the United States the main responsibility. There are difficulties also in the way of lumping together what is being done in Alaska, Canada and Greenland and allotting Canada a certain percentage of the total. This might work if there were any prospect of our dealing with a comprehensive plan which would be improved and implemented as a unit. What is much more likely, however, is that individual projects (such as the Loran stations) will come before the Governments for approval from time to time. Decisions may therefore have to be reached as to how the costs for those individual projects can most fairly be divided.

6. The most practicable way might be to agree that each country would provide the supplies, equipment and personnel and services which originated in its own territory. As applied to a Loran station or a radar establishment, it would work out something like this:

- (a) Canada would supply the site and buildings.
- (b) Canada would provide the administration and housekeeping facilities.
- (c) Canada might supply some or all of the operating personnel.
- (d) The United States would supply the technical equipment.
- (e) Air transport might be shared but as the United States possesses a great deal more than Canada it would be reasonable for them to contribute a preponderant share.

7. Such a plan would avoid payments from one country to another for services and material used in their joint defence, and would make the sharing of costs follow as closely as possible the sharing of the physical burden. If this were done it would have to be decided from time to time whether Canada would be prepared physically to supply certain services or to manufacture certain equipment.

8. In considering any plan for apportioning costs, the reactions of both the United States Congress and people and of the Canadian Parliament and people must be taken into account. If joint defence plans are to command general approval in the United States, they must contain a respectable Canadian contribution while if they are to command support in Canada, they must be within our means and bear a reasonable proportion to the resources of the United States and their very direct interest in effective North American defence. A programme under which Canada provided fixed installations, general administration, and such equipment and services as are available in Canada (e.g. air photography, preparation of maps, weather stations, personnel and such air transport as is available) might meet these tests as well as anything else that can be devised. It seems clear that whatever formula is adopted, the expensive technical equipment will have to come from the United States.

9. Great care should be shown in accepting any principle or criterion for sharing defence costs without knowing exactly what the application of the principle or criterion will mean in practice.

10. Finally, in any comparison of defence burdens and defence expenditures, it should not be forgotten that the United States is a world power and, as such, must accept the financial implications of the international position it has assumed. Canada, on the other hand, is a small power; is not a principal in policy or performance, and should not be expected to bear a proportion of any collective defence expenditures merely because that proportion would be reasonable if the influence of the two countries on international developments were in equal proportion. In the sharing of defence costs between the United States and Canada, it is for the former a case of puissance oblige.

POSITION OF UNITED KINGDOM IN RELATION TO CANADA-U.S. DEFENCE PLANNING

TOP SECRET

December 6, 1946

1. There is, of course, no general agreement of any kind between the government of Canada and the government of the United Kingdom which involves military commitments. We have nothing of this nature more formidable than the conclusions of Imperial Conferences respecting consultation and primary responsibility for local defence. On the other hand, each country regards the other as a potential ally in the event of a general war and our day to day conduct reflects this fact.

2. The historical relationship between Canada and the United Kingdom, in war and peace, provides the general basis for close military co-operation between the two countries in many spheres of real practical importance. These include the organization of armed forces on common lines, a large range of common arms and equipment, and the exchange of Service personnel and military information on an extensive scale. From many points of view the result approaches an unwritten military alliance of a peculiarly intimate kind.

3. In a few instances Canada has specific obligations to the U.K. government in relation to defence. These include.

- (a) reciprocal use of defence facilities such as ports and bases;
- (b) co-ordinating arrangements for the defence of Newfoundland; and
- (c) co-operation in the field of defence science.

4. The closest kind of military co-operation with the United States is a salient characteristic of present U.K. government policy. Since the war U.S. representatives have participated in discussions of defence questions with the United Kingdom and Canada. The Canadian government have accepted as essential from our viewpoint the closest possible collaboration between the United Kingdom and the United States. Recent examples of defence talks in which all three nations have participated are the Commonwealth conference on defence science held in Britain during the summer and the very important "standardization" meetings which took place a short time ago in Washington.

5. While the close relationship between Canada and the United Kingdom in military matters is based, for the most part, on general considerations which it is difficult and even undesirable to define, there is at least one specific sphere of common interest to both, namely, the defence of Newfoundland and Labrador and the protection of the Atlantic approaches to North America. (This is also, of course, a defence interest in common with the United States.) For us this is at the least a feature of local defence; for the United Kingdom it represents maintenance of essential lines of supply.

6. In the recent conversations between the Prime Minister and President Truman, it was agreed that it was to the interest of both the United States and Canada that the U.K. government be kept informed of Canadian-U.S. planning for joint defence of the Continent.

7. The recent conversation of Mr. St. Laurent with Mr. Bevin in New York followed the Prime Minister's talk with Mr. Truman. Mr. St. Laurent invited the U.K. Foreign Secretary's observations and it is evident from the response that the U.K. government have a general interest in relation to defence problems elsewhere, as well as a particular interest in Newfoundland and Labrador.

8. This question was raised at a recent meeting of the Canada-U.S. Permanent Joint Board on Defence. U.S. representatives, apparently, saw no objection to informing the United Kingdom in general terms of what was being done but it was felt that details of the joint plans should be passed on only in those matters in which co-operation with the United Kingdom was essential.

9. It is clearly in the Canadian interest that U.K. authorities be kept currently informed on all aspects of our defence planning with the United States and that, in particular, they should be consulted closely on everything affecting the defence of North-eastern North America. Specifically, Goose Bay and arrangements for Newfoundland and Labrador will require U.K. concurrence. It is only reasonable that they should be brought into this phase at an early stage.

TELEGRAM 2114

Ottawa, December 7, 1946

IMMEDIATE. TOP SECRET. Your telegram No. 2344 of 6th December† Visits of Naval Vessels.

1. We share your scepticism concerning the value of a meeting with the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs to discuss this question but the facts are clear. We have worked out with the United States at their initiative the same sort of arrangement that has been accepted by the United Kingdom. Visits of Naval vessels between Canada and the United States will be arranged directly between the Naval Authorities and the Diplomatic Channel will not be used. This is of course simply a continuation of wartime practice. Because of the exceptional secrecy attached to this question by the State Department there has been no exchange of correspondence and the arrangement rests on an oral understanding.

2. The draft thirty-fifth recommendation of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence (now the recommendation of Nov. 20th) includes no specific understandings but would provide general authority for special arrangements of this type. Wartime arrangements with the United States regarding flights of military aircraft continue in force and visits back and forth are arranged by "local notification" without resort to diplomatic channels. Ends.

[Ottawa,] December 10, 1946

I gave Mr. St. Laurent this morning a set of the working papers prepared for our defence discussions with the United States and I suggested that he consider whether they could profitably be shown to the United States participants before the meetings.

He took the view that it would make for more intelligent discussion if the United States people had an opportunity to look over our papers beforehand, but he thought that we should loan the documents rather than give them. He is anxious to avoid the possibility that these very tentative working papers should get on files in Washington and be regarded either now or later as expressions of Canadian Government policy. He sees no objection, however, to our loaning the papers to the United States and allowing them to make whatever notes they like, provided all the sets are returned to us.

TELEGRAM WA-4357

TOP SECRET. Following for Macdonnell from Wrong, Begins: Your letter of December 7th,† enclosing working papers for Defence Discussions. I notice that none of the papers deals with the relationship between our Regional Defence arrangements and obligations under the United Nations Charter. Indeed, the only references to the Charter are concerned with the question of the registration of any Agreements. In view of the emphasis given by the Canadian delegation in New York to the importance of the conclusion of military Agreements under Article 43, and in view also of the frequent statements that Canadian policy is guided by our obligations to the United Nations, it seems to me that this aspect should not be omitted in the discussions with the United States, even if the purpose of inclusion is only to secure a frank statement of the importance, or lack of importance, now attached by the United States to the relevant provisions of the Charter.

2. My own view is that the terms of the Charter should make no difference in our negotiations with the United States. When we reach the time for publicity, however, with the consequent need for clear public explanation, these matters will have to be taken into account, and they should therefore not be overlooked in the course of the conversations. Mr. E. W. T. Gill, Privy Council Office (Canadian Secretary)

1. MR. PEARSON welcomed the United States representatives and explained briefly the purposes which these talks were designed to serve.

The Joint Appreciation and Basic Security Plan which had been agreed by the Chiefs of Staff of both countries had been submitted to the two governments. While the Canadian government had not taken any decision in connection with these documents, they had been impressed with the extreme importance of the political considerations involved and felt it desirable that discussions should be held with the United States on the official and later possibly on the political level before further consideration was given joint defence plans. These official discussions were, of course, non-committal and exploratory.

Specifically, the Canadian authorities were interested:

(a) in considering the political aspects of potential threats to North American security and the political implications of measures that might be taken to meet such threats;

(b) in securing the views of the United States as to the relationship between continental defence and global strategy; and

(c) in discussing whether any decision of the two governments to co-operate in defence matters should form the subject of an inter-governmental Agreement; if so, what form and substance it should take, and what publicity, if any, might be given to it.

A number of unofficial working papers had been prepared and made available to assist discussion.

2. MR. ATHERTON said that the United States representatives would attempt to give as accurate a picture as possible of the United States point of view in these matters. The problems which faced the two governments in co-operating for the security of North America were serious ones. In his view, "possible" as well as "probable" action on the part of a potential aggressor should be taken into account and the timing of any defensive measures was of great importance. He recalled that the chief reason for inaction by the United Kingdom and United States in the years preceding the last war was the fear of unfavourable international reaction to firm measures and he hoped that this same fear would not exert undue influence now.

POLITICAL APPRECIATION OF THE OBJECTIVES OF SOVIET FOREIGN POLICY

3. THE CANADIAN CHAIRMAN said that some preliminary views on this subject had been set forth in a memorandum prepared by Canadian officials. This estimated that, subject to certain qualifications, there was only slight risk of aggression on the part of any potential enemy, such as the Soviet Union, in the near future. It was to be expected, however, that the U.S.S.R. would spare no efforts to strengthen its economy and build up its war potential. As an expanding power its policies were aimed at dividing the western democracies and one could not disregard the danger that these policies might lead, through a miscalculation in the near future or through a deliberate move in the long term, to war. Prudence demanded, therefore, that the democratic countries make preparations for their security since, if war threatened, the United Nations as presently organized would be ineffective in maintaining peace.

4. MR. KENNAN expressed himself as being in general agreement with the conclusions of the Canadian memorandum.

It was important to realize the basic aggressiveness of the Soviet programme though one need not be too pessimistic about the ability of the democratic countries to exert some influence on this programme. We should, therefore, strive to limit their expansive programme to "non-provocative" advances, and to prevent them attaining by aggressive policies those things it was essential to deny them.

It should be remembered also that in the U.S.S.R., decisions were made by the Communist Party and not by the government. Some influences in the party were known to favour a more moderate foreign policy than others. The problem of the democracies was to be sufficiently firm to provide encouragement for the moderate element (who would be encouraged by strength, not weakness) and at the same time give the more anti-western group no unnecessary opportunity to charge that the foreign policies of the democracies were aggressive and provocative.

Defensive weapons in the Arctic were a logical security development and the U.S.S.R. would expect precautions of this nature to be taken. These should, however, be carried out in such a way as to minimize the possibilities of their being exploited as a threat to peace. They should be treated as co-operative arrangements of a continuing nature and not as indicating a new policy.

5. MR. HEENEY remarked that the Canadian government were not satisfied that there was not bound to be some element of provocation in the overt planning of joint defence measures in the Arctic. Any political disadvantage on this score had to be balanced against the deterrent element in the policy of firmness which had been referred to and, of course, the accepted requirements from the military point of view. In any event the government felt that it was desirable to have preliminary defensive measures carried on under civilian auspices so far as practicable.

6. CONCLUSION. It was the general feeling that there was no substantial difference between the viewpoint of the U.S. and Canadian representatives as to the objectives of the Soviet Union and as to the effect upon the Soviet foreign policy of undertaking joint Canadian-U.S. defence measures.

RELATIONSHIP OF NORTH AMERICAN DEFENCE TO GLOBAL STRATEGY

7. THE CANADIAN CHAIRMAN sought the views of the United States side on the relationship of North American defence to their general strategic planning.

It was of great importance to Canada to have some knowledge of the essential features of the wider picture in making her own plans for co-operation in continental defence.

8. GENERAL LINCOLN stressed the uncertainties of peacetime military planning as compared with wartime planning. In the "fog of peace" political and economic factors exerted much greater influences than in the "fog of war". Peacetime planning had a dual purpose—to prevent war by acting as a deterrent to aggression and to make victory attainable if war should come.

In attempting to estimate probable dangers it seemed reasonably clear that the Soviet intentions were to expand either territorially or ideologically. These intentions must be countered by maintaining the war-making capacity of North America and thereby permitting, in the event of war, offensive action which would have a reasonable chance of breaking down the Soviet position.

Present planning was directed towards the first of these general objectives; i.e., maintaining the war-making capacity of North America—this might be described as "military posture". If the "military posture" of North America was strong, it would act as a deterrent to war and would add strength to the United Kingdom and the democracies of western Europe in their adherence to firm foreign policies.

While it was not possible to say where a war would break out or at what stage in the struggle the United States would become involved, one of the first strategic principles was to ensure the security of the vital home base, and defensive measures in North America were directed to this end.

For psychological and strategic reasons there could be little or no North American participation in fighting overseas or in a large scale offensive outside the continent unless security, which of course would not be 100%, was provided.

In planning it was not feasible to consider offense separately from defence—a more appropriate distinction would be “inside North America” and “outside North America”. In the event of war a strategic air offensive might be undertaken in the early stages and, in such an event, we would have to accept calculated risks in defence and to expect losses in the offensive.

9. GENERAL HENRY commented on the difficulty in attempting to estimate how Canadian and United States military effort should be divided between North American defence and military action outside North America. It seemed reasonable, however, to say that if war came within the next five or six years a relatively small percentage would be tied down to North America but this proportion would tend to increase thereafter, particularly as regards the air forces.

10. REPRESENTATIVES OF THE U.S. STATE DEPARTMENT, in discussing the relationship of United States foreign policy to the problem under discussion, gave assurance that geographical limits or “stop lines” to Russian expansionist policy had in fact been set with the full realization of the implications involved. Two examples of a “crystallization” of U.S. policy along these lines would be found in recent events abroad.

“Stop lines” should, however, not be considered merely geographically but also in an ethical sense.

11. THE CANADIAN CHAIRMAN expressed appreciation for the frankness with which the U.S. side had discussed these questions and hoped that Canada would in future be kept informed on those aspects of U.S. planning in the wider field of global strategy which particularly affected North American defence plans.

12. CONCLUSION. The views of the U.S. representatives on these questions were noted.

JOINT CANADIAN-UNITED STATES DEFENCE PLANNING

13. REPRESENTATIVES OF THE U.S. WAR DEPARTMENT, referring to the discussion on strategic questions, pointed out that the following factors had been kept in mind when drafting the joint Basic Security Plan:

(a) defensive measures, if kept ahead of enemy capabilities, would act as a deterrent to aggressiveness;

(b) considerable time was required for the establishment of some of the static defence facilities;

(c) the importance of offensive action was fully realized and the plan was drawn up to give maximum use of facilities for offensive purposes; and,

(d) the Appreciation and Plan were subject to periodic review.

The Military Co-operation Committee at their recent meeting had recommended that the U.S. and Canadian authorities in considering these planning reports should make a sharp distinction between the Basic Security Plan (and annexes) and implementation programmes. The former, it was thought, should be considered as a purely military plan which did not commit either government to any specific action. Implementation programmes, on the other hand, were intended to serve as a basis for definite action and each progressive stage would be a matter for government decision in the light of the world situation at the time.

14. MR. HEENEY observed that in his view the Canadian government were unlikely to regard the Appreciation as a document for actual acceptance (or rejection) by the Cabinet. Rather, the government's decisions on joint defence questions would likely be taken as and when implementation programmes were put before them from time to time.

15. CONCLUSION. The meeting took note of these remarks.

CIVILIAN OPERATIONS IN SUPPORT OF DEFENCE PROJECTS

16. THE CANADIAN CHAIRMAN asked the meeting to consider to what extent preliminary defence measures in Northern Canada could be carried out under civilian auspices.

In the Canadian view there was a good deal to be said for following such a policy in the early stages and among the activities which suggested themselves as being susceptible of this treatment the following were cited—mapping and photography; weather station programme; Loran programme; operation and extension or construction of airfields.

17. UNITED STATES REPRESENTATIVES regarded the problem as a purely Canadian one and, while it might tend to complicate U.S. participation in joint undertakings, they thought that certain measures, particularly those to which priority was attached, might be undertaken on a civilian basis, and the U.S. authorities would do what they could to meet Canadian wishes in this matter.

With reference to current planning there were some immediate measures on which proposals had been made or would shortly be put forward. These included:

(a) projects related specifically to the Air Defence Plan such as—(1) research on air warning equipment; (2) a survey of certain sites for airfields; (3) maintenance on a caretaker basis of certain airfields which might otherwise be abandoned; (4) training of personnel for air defence duties;

(b) projects related to general planning such as—(1) mapping programme; (2) weather coverage; (3) Loran programme; (4) joint tests at Churchill.

Of these various immediate measures, certain ones, such as research and training, would not be undertaken in the North and presumably did not fall into the category of those which might be civilian in character. Others, such as survey and maintenance of airfields and weather stations, might be treated as primarily civilian.

18. CONCLUSION. It was generally agreed that there might be advantages to carrying out certain of the earlier parts of the projected programme under civilian auspices, and wherever this was practicable the United States would co-operate to that end.

JOINT DEFENCE PLANNING; FINANCIAL ARRANGEMENTS

19. THE CANADIAN CHAIRMAN asked the meeting to consider the possibility of working out an agreed set of principles for determining the proportion of the cost of joint defence projects which should be borne by each country.

While the Canadian side had no specific proposals to put forward on this important aspect of defence planning, they had, however, in their memorandum on the subject, suggested how the problem might be approached.

It might, for instance, be desirable to follow a policy whereby the Canadian government would provide, at their expense, land and buildings required in Canadian territory for joint defence purposes with the U.S. providing the equipment.

20. CONCLUSION. The meeting concluded:

(a) that it would be premature at this stage to draw up principles which could be recommended for general application in the allocation of cost of joint defence projects undertaken in Canada;

(b) that, as an alternative, annual programmes submitted in implementation of any agreed joint plans should be examined jointly by the appropriate financial authorities of each country who should make joint recommendations on the allocation of cost to both governments; and

(c) that for this purpose the two governments should consider the establishment of a standing committee.

P.J.B.D. RECOMMENDATION OF NOVEMBER 20TH; PUBLICATION AND REGISTRATION WITH UNITED NATIONS ORGANIZATION

21. THE CANADIAN SIDE raised the question of publishing the P.J.B.D. Recommendation of November 20th.

In the Canadian view, a statement of some sort was to be desired as it was inevitable that in the forthcoming session of Parliament the government would be called upon to say something on defence arrangements with the United States. Apart from this, there had been considerable publicity in connection with Arctic defence, some of which was sensational and inaccurate, and a statement would do much to correct any wrong impressions that might have been created.

Several alternatives were open to the governments if they should decide to make an announcement. The Recommendation itself could be published, or some statement describing in general terms the principles of co-operation included in the Recommendation but not adhering to the text. In any event care should be exercised to avoid giving the impression that the arrangements indicated the adoption of a new policy, and it was also important to relate the arrangements to the United Nations. Also, it might be deemed desirable in Canada to add something on Canada's future co-operation with other British Commonwealth countries.

A related question was whether or not acceptance of the Board's Recommendation by the two governments constituted an International Agreement within the meaning of Article 102 of the U.N. Charter. In this connection, the question of its registration with the United Nations should be considered.

There was the further question of whether acceptance of the Board's Recommendation by the two countries should be followed by an exchange of notes or acknowledged by some more formal means than had been the case for previous recommendations of the Board.

22. THE U.S. SIDE felt that the reasons advanced by the Canadians for publication of the Recommendation or for announcements in agreed terms were sound, although the view had been held in the State Department that any public statement was unnecessary.

They favoured a statement of a general nature related to the Ogdensburg Declaration and United Nations obligations and emphasizing the fact that present arrangements were a natural continuation of wartime co-operation. Such a statement might be communicated for information to the United Nations although it should be made clear that there was no legal obligation to do so under the Charter.

23. CONCLUSION. The meeting were in general agreement:

(a) that publicity of some kind would have to be given to the arrangements embodied in the Recommendation of November 20th;

(b) that this might appropriately take the form of an agreed statement which would contain the substance of (but not quote) the P.J.B.D. Recommendation and which would make suitable reference to the relationship of these arrangements to the Ogdensburg Declaration and obligations under the United Nations;

(c) that such statement should not be registered with the United Nations but might be communicated to the Secretary General for information; and,

(d) that the governments' acceptance of the Board's Recommendation of November 20th should be in the manner normally followed by the two governments in approving Recommendations of the Joint Board.

POSITION OF THE UNITED KINGDOM IN RELATION TO CANADA-UNITED STATES DEFENCE

24. MR. PEARSON drew attention to the desirability of keeping the U.K. authorities informed of relevant aspects of joint Canadian-United States planning. Indeed, it was necessary to consult them on questions arising from the planning which affected Newfoundland territory.

Following the Prime Minister's recent conversation with President Truman, the subject had been discussed by the Permanent Joint Board on Defence. The U.S. representatives had seen no objections to informing the United Kingdom in general terms of what was being done, but they had felt that details of the joint planning should be communicated to U.K. authorities only after final decisions had been reached or in respect of those matters in which co-operation with the United Kingdom was essential.

25. CONCLUSION. The meeting took the view that any formal agreement on a matter of this kind was undesirable and concluded that the policy outlined in the journal of the November 19th-20th meeting of the Joint Board provided a suitable basis for further action.

GOOSE BAY; U.S. PROPOSAL TO SECURE MILITARY RIGHTS OF AIRBASE

26. COLONEL VAN DEVANTER read a United States memorandum on the strategic importance of Goose Bay and proposing that the United States be granted military rights for the peacetime utilization of the airbase.

Current U.S. planning had indicated the need for outlying bases some distance from the vital areas and in the probable route of approach of any air attacks that might be mounted against this continent. Goose Bay, because of logistical and other considerations, was probably the most strategically important base on the continent and its development for Very Heavy Bombardment operations was an important element in the plans to provide for the security of North America. The United States hoped that an early decision could be reached on this question.

27. CANADIAN REPRESENTATIVES pointed out that Canadian rights at this base had been secured by long term lease from the Newfoundland government, and the rights which the United States now sought would require the concurrence of the Newfoundland and (by virtue of its present political status) the U.K. governments.

Owing to the uncertainty regarding the constitutional position of Newfoundland, the present was regarded as an unfavourable time to open the question, but it might be useful to have a preliminary conversation with the United Kingdom High Commissioner on the subject.

If the concurrence of the U.K. and Newfoundland governments was forthcoming, it might be desirable for Canada to be conceded certain reciprocal rights at United States bases in Newfoundland so that the arrangements could be regarded as an exchange of rights. If the training side of the undertaking could be emphasized, this might also be helpful in concluding the arrangements sought by the U.S.

28. CONCLUSION. It was agreed that the U.S. proposals to secure military rights at Goose Bay should be discussed informally with the United Kingdom High Commissioner in Canada and that U.S. and Canadian representatives would meet with him later in the day for this purpose.

[Ottawa,] December 26, 1946

I am sending you, herewith, a memorandum on the talks which were held some days ago between officials of the United States and Canadian Governments on joint defence questions. Also a record of the conclusions reached in those talks. The meeting was, of course, informal and non-committal, and on the purely official level, but I think it served a useful purpose in giving those concerned on that level an opportunity to exchange views. I am sending a copy of these documents to Mr. St. Laurent and to Mr. Claxton, as representatives of his Department attended the talks.

You will note that reference is made in my memorandum to certain working papers which were prepared for the use of the Canadian officials. I am also sending you a copy of these papers. These working papers were sent to the Canadian officials concerned.

DEFENCE DISCUSSIONS WITH THE UNITED STATES

1. In accordance with instructions from the Cabinet, discussions were held with a delegation from the United States on December 16 and 17 in Ottawa on the subject of Joint Defence planning. I attach a record of these talks which was prepared by the Canadian delegation; it has been discussed with the United States Embassy who agree that it represents an accurate account of the topics covered in the talks. By way of supplementary comment you may find the following notes to be of some value.

2. The United States delegation made a very good impression. They were well informed, reasonable and moderate in their approach to the problems discussed. There was no effort on their part to over-emphasize dangers or underline necessities. They gave a well-balanced and carefully worked out statement of the facts as they appeared to them, and allowed us to draw our own conclusions.

3. The most frank and cordial atmosphere prevailed throughout. There was no attempt on the part of the United States representatives to present demands or to insist on certain things being done—an attitude that has sometimes been ascribed to them in speeches and articles. Happily, it is some years since there has been any table-pounding in defence discussions between the two countries. It would be fair to say that while the United States representatives were naturally anxious to see the principles of a joint defence programme agreed, and the programme itself initiated, they were fully aware of the political and practical difficulties for Canada in embarking on any such programme. They recognized that because we are a much smaller country than the United States and because most of whatever is done will take place on our own territory, it is harder for Canada to reach decisions in these matters than for the United States. The examination given to each problem was frank and thorough and few differences in viewpoint appeared as to the steps which should be recommended. General Lincoln who had not previously taken part in any Canada-United States meetings privately told the United States Ambassador afterwards that these talks had been a revelation to him of profitable and constructive discussion.

4. It was made quite clear to the United States representatives from the beginning that these talks were purely exploratory on the official level and that no commitment implied or expressed would result from anything that was said. Our sole object was to have an exchange of views which might put each delegation in a better position to advise their Government of what action, if any, was required in respect of the matters under discussion.

5. SOVIET FOREIGN POLICY

The meeting was fortunate in having present Mr. George Kennan of the State Department, one of their leading experts on the U.S.S.R., whose knowledge is extensive and whose judgments give the impression of being carefully considered, sensible and to the point. He holds in high regard the views of the Canadian Ambassador in Moscow, Mr. Wilgress, and it is clear that these two observers are agreed on most important points with regard to Soviet policy. There was general agreement with Mr. Kennan's view that if the western democracies demonstrate a reasonable degree of firmness and military strength, there is no need to be too pessimistic about the future. Without such firmness and strength one could only anticipate continued Soviet expansion which might well lead eventually to a world war. The Soviet Union, however, can be "contained" by non-provocative defence measures and by diplomacy based on firmness and fairness. This would strengthen the hands of those elements in the politburo which want an understanding with the West. Weakness on our part would merely weaken the hands of this group since it would only encourage the messianic zeal of the more doctrinaire communists and the more aggressive nationalists. The only arguments which the moderates can use successfully are that the West is strong and that its policies are supported by that strength. If they are given these arguments there is some chance that these moderates can discredit their more ardently expansionist comrades and bring about a long period of peace. It is important, of course, that western strength should be clearly non-provocative and non-aggressive and that whatever steps are taken to maintain it should be treated unsensationally, as normal and matter-of-fact developments.

6. UNITED STATES STRATEGIC CONCEPTS

It is worth noting that in these defence discussions the representatives of the United States emphasized that their main objective in any future war would be to develop the maximum fire power at the greatest effective distance away from North America. They do not wish to be regarded as unduly "continental-defence-minded". They believe that the strategic offensive remains the best defence. But since such a strategic offensive cannot be undertaken unless the home base and its productive capacities are secured, it is of vital importance that this should be done. Twice in our lifetime the aggressor would have succeeded if that "home base" had not remained inviolable.

It was also brought out in these talks, however, that the United States does not favour the enormous diversion of resources that would be needed to provide one hundred percent protection for North America. They feel that we will have to accept calculated risks and that in the event of war this continent will suffer damage. What is required, therefore, is a defence which will convince public opinion that there is a reasonable degree of home protection, without tying up so much in the way of resources that the enemy cannot be defeated abroad.

General Henry, in an attempt to strike a balance between defensive and offensive requirements, gave his views in the following terms. He appreciated the importance to the Canadian Government and people of deciding whether Canada could plan effectively for continental defence and still have forces available to fight overseas. It was his opinion that in any war which might develop in five or six years, the threat to the physical security of North America would be so slight as to necessitate the tying down of relatively few of Canada's forces. It should therefore be possible to use almost all of these in any way desired by the people and Government of Canada. After five or six years, because of technological developments, we could expect a greater threat to North American security, to insure against which would call for a higher proportion of total Canadian resources, primarily air forces.

There was a certain hesitation on the part of the United States Service representatives on the first day of the talks over any mention of the details of their strategic planning. We, however, made quite clear that we were not asking for such details. We were only interested in the principles on which their planning was based. On the Tuesday, however, they volunteered some very important information. We had been talking on the previous day about "stop lines" beyond which the United States could not allow the U.S.S.R. to advance. On the next day, General Lincoln made it clear that the stand taken by the United States delegation at diplomatic conferences in the last six months gave a very clear indication of where that "stop line" was; that it moved through the centre of Germany to Trieste, and from there through Greece to the Dardanelles. The United States, however, made a very sensible distinction between a geographic and an ethical stop line; in other words, it was not merely a question of an advance of the U.S.S.R. beyond a certain line so much as whether this advance was made with the genuine consent to the people concerned or aggressively and against their wishes. A concrete example would be Trieste. If the people of that city of their own free will decided to attach themselves to the Yugoslav Federation there could not be any objection on anybody's part. It would be quite another matter, however, if that change took place by aggressive action against the will of the people.

In discussing this matter, we made it quite clear to the American representatives that in expressing our interest in this matter we were not influenced merely by idle curiosity. As our relationship to the United States was so close and becoming closer through force of circumstances; and as it would be difficult, if not impossible, for Canada to avoid becoming involved in any major conflict in which the United States participated, naturally we wish to be made aware of the circumstances which would involve that country in war.

7. NATURE OF DEFENCE PLANNING

There was general agreement as to the nature of defence planning. Rigidity must be avoided and flexibility preserved. No plan, however excellent, could be approved by governments in the sense that commitments for any distant future could be made. All defence plans must be regarded as somewhat utopian and as goals to be attained in the event of emergency. Their degree of implementation has to be decided step by step and the rate of implementation must be under constant review so that it can be accelerated or slowed down in the light of international developments. A firm distinction must therefore be drawn between governmental acceptance of a plan as a goal towards which to work and the governmental decisions that will have to be taken as to whether certain aspects of the plan should be put into effect at any given time. The governments thus retain complete freedom to say at what rate the plan should be translated into action.

8. PUBLICITY

There was probably a greater initial difference of opinion on the question of publicity between Canadian and United States representatives than on any other topic. The State Department was obviously inclined to the view that any public reference to the Recommendation of November 20 was unnecessary and undesirable. Indeed, the opinion was expressed that the only document which required publication was the Ogdensburg Declaration of 1940 which set up the Permanent Joint Board on Defence. The Canadian representatives succeeded in convincing the United States representatives that because of the interest that had been displayed by the public in northern defence problems, it would be impossible to avoid some sort of statement at the forthcoming Session of Parliament. This being so, it seemed desirable to make public the substance of the Recommendation since, if this were not done, there would be no satisfactory answer to the inevitable question—"What arrangements have been entered into with the United States?" There was a fairly protracted discussion of the arguments pro and con publication but in the end, as the record of conclusions shows, it was agreed that we should recommend to our governments that parallel announcements should be made in Ottawa and Washington which would give the substance but not the text of the Recommendation of November 20. It was also the view of all present that these statements should avoid sensationalism or anything savouring of the provocative, and should be as matter-of-fact as possible.

9. I feel that these talks were most satisfactory and that the officials on both sides have now a better appreciation of the questions discussed.

DESPATCH 193

Washington, January 23, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to the subject of apprehension in the United States of deserters from the Canadian armed forces, and their return to Canada.

2. The Air Attaché, on instructions from Air Force Headquarters, which were in turn received from the United Kingdom Air Liaison Mission, requested the United States military authorities to apprehend and return to Canada one LAC Banazkiewicz L P706284, a deserter from the RAF in Canada. The case was very involved in that this airman had been in the United States for some time, and had obtained from the Department of Immigration permission to remain in the country. This permission has expired, but he has already made an application for extension of the period he may remain in the United States. As a result, the Army authorities, although they arrested the airman, went into the matter further and came to the conclusion that they could not properly hold him or return him to Canada under the circumstances.

3. This particular case has directed the attention of the American authorities to the general practice of returning deserters without reference to, or use of Immigration Department authority and channels. We have some reason to believe that the current practice, which has been working satisfactorily the past few years under an informal arrangement with the War Department, and which is set out in War Department Circular No. 258 of June 24, 1944, may possibly be suspended. Such suspension would be on the ground that the exigencies of the war, which justified the procedure, are no longer applicable and, from a strictly legal point of view, there is no question that the procedure cannot be supported. However, from the point of view of convenience to both the Canadian Services and the Immigration Department of the United States, the longer the present procedure is kept in force, the better, as it ensures the return of Canadian deserters much more promptly than would be the case if they were deported under Immigration procedure. An additional factor of interest to Canada is that of expense. The Canadian authorities, I believe, are responsible in the first instance for the cost of apprehension and transportation, as well as interim board and lodging. Should it be necessary in each case to go through deportation proceedings, some time would elapse and the expenses for board and lodging would increase appreciably.

4. I understand that an exchange of notes on the question of return of deserters took place with the United States authorities during the Fall of 1945, and I would like to mention that neither the Embassy nor the Service Attachés have received copies of these notes. I am therefore not in a position to state whether the expected cancellation of the present procedure would, or would not be permissible under the agreement reached by the exchange of notes, and I would appreciate copies of the notes to complete my files.*

5. I do not propose to approach the American authorities on this matter, feeling that it would be more advisable to let them make the first representations. However, I would appreciate receiving in advance your authority to discuss the matter of return of deserters generally with the American authorities as and when the question arises. In the interval you may think it advisable to inform the three Services of the possibility of a change in the present arrangements.

DESPATCH 114

Ottawa, January 31, 1946

Sir,

I wish to acknowledge your despatch No. 193 of January 23rd concerning the apprehension in the United States of deserters from the Canadian armed forces.

* With respect to the notes requested, I now refer to your despatch No. 52 of January 19, 1946,† forwarding Treaty Series 1945, Supplement No. 10, containing an exchange of notes between the United States of America and Canada concerning deserters from the Armed Forces, and dated June 13 and October 26, 1945 respectively.

The three Services have been informed of your belief that the current practice, under which the United States army apprehends Canadian deserters and turns them over to the Canadian armed forces, may possibly be suspended. The comments of the Services have been requested.

Since the initiative in the matter of the exchange of Notes of June 13th and October 26th, 1945, was taken by the United States War Department, we believe it desirable that the initiative in proposing any changes in current practice should be left to the United States authorities. You are accordingly authorized to discuss the question if it is raised by the United States authorities, but it is not desired that the Embassy make any approaches in the matter.

Since the exchange of Notes provides that the military authorities of the two countries shall co-operate to the full extent provided by existing laws and regulations, it would be possible to depart from the existing practice without violating the agreement on the ground that current laws and regulations no longer provided for the apprehension of deserters from the other country. Until the views of the Services are obtained, it is not possible to be specific on this point but it seems altogether likely that if the United States military authorities could no longer pick up Canadian deserters, the Canadian Services would wish to terminate their responsibility for apprehending United States deserters. During the period from June 13th, when the United States Note was sent to us, to October 26th, when the Canadian reply was sent (the interval was required to obtain the necessary Order-in-Council) the United States Embassy here displayed considerable interest in the subject and sent a number of informal reminders to the Department. Therefore, until October of last year at least, the War Department was evidently anxious to have United States deserters in Canada apprehended by the Canadian Services. Although the situation may have changed since that time, this information is provided for your guidance in case the subject should be raised by the United States authorities.

Washington, February 7, 1946

Dear Mr. Macdonnell,

At the meeting of the PJB 7-8 November, 1945, the Canadian Service Members stated that as a practical measure of continuing collaboration and to assist in coordinating the Armed Forces of the United States and Canada, the Canadian Chiefs of Staff recommended that the practice of interchange of Canadian-United States officers within selected positions should be developed.

The Board agreed with this and the United States Navy and Army members undertook to seek the approval of their Chiefs of Staff to this proposal. I am pleased to inform you that the Joint Chiefs of Staff have indicated that they consider the interchange of Canadian and United States officers within selected positions in their respective services is desirable as a practical measure of continuing collaboration and to assist in coordinating the armed forces of the two nations. The Joint Chiefs of Staff suggested that details of the interchange, such as number of officers and selection of positions, be arranged between the military services concerned.

As the arrangement of the details has been left to the military services concerned, the Secretary of War has directed the undersigned to handle the matter in this case as far as the War Department is concerned. I am therefore taking the matter up direct with General Letson and Air Vice-Marshal Curtis, the Senior Canadian Army and Air Force Representatives on the Permanent Joint Board.

It is believed that you will receive from the Senior U.S. Navy Member a similar communication in the near future.

Very truly yours,

GUY V. HENRY

CONFIDENTIAL

INTERCHANGE OF OFF[ICE]RS WITH U.S. ARMY

1. CSC (26 Oct 45) agreed in principle to the adoption of a policy designed to extend the interchange of officers with the U.S. and the implementation of this policy be a matter for action by each service.

2. U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff have now indicated that they consider the interchange of Canadian and U.S. officers within selected positions in their respective service is desirable as a practical measure of continuing collaboration and to assist in coordinating the armed forces of the two nations. The Joint Chiefs of Staff suggested the details of the interchange, such as numbers of officers and selections and positions, be arranged between the military services concerned.

3. The Permanent Joint Defence Board (8 Nov 45) agreed that the continuance of the exchange of officers between the U.S. and Canadian Army, Navy and Air Force was desirable and the selection of positions to be interchanged should be left to the Chiefs of Staff concerned.

4. Insofar as the Army is concerned, it is considered that the following policy should apply in the development of arrangements for interchange:

(a) The object of the interchange policy is to achieve a better understanding and knowledge of each other's armed forces so as to ensure increasing coordination between the respective forces. It is particularly desirable that the field of common knowledge be expanded in respect of equipment, staff procedure, organization, training doctrine and tactical employment of troops.

(b) The Canadian Army desires to maintain liaison officers in U.S.A. to cover four basic fields:

- (i) Research and development of equipment;
- (ii) U.S.W.D.<sup>1</sup> General Staff practice and procedure;
- (iii) Training and tactical doctrine;
- (iv) Intelligence.

(c) As a working basis there should be one Canadian officer of the average rank of Major from each arm, major service and equipment development directorate stationed at the appropriate camp or development centre in U.S.A. These officers would, in most cases, be charged with liaison on matters of equipment, organization and training aspects affecting their own arm, service or equipment interest. They should not be committed to any full-time task on behalf of the U.S. Army so that they may be free to observe and report generally on matters of interest to NDHQ. However, without prejudicing that freedom, these officers should take every opportunity to assist in the day-to-day work of the establishment to which they are attached. It is recognized that a portion of these liaison officers might be more appropriately located in Washington at U.S.W.D. rather than at U.S. camps or development centres.

(d) The Canadian Army desires to take advantage of appropriate vacancies at U.S.A. command, staff and other courses to the extent that suitable Canadian officers are available and will be prepared to supply Canadian instructors from time to time at U.S.A. schools and courses.

(e) The Canadian Army feels there would be mutual advantage in having suitable staff officers from its forces attached for duty and instruction to U.S.W.D. and will arrange reciprocal opportunities for U.S.A. officers at N.D.H.Q.

(f) In respect of Military Intelligence, the Canadian Army will be prepared to supply, as officers become available, up to four officers in the rank of Captain or Major to U.S.W.D. G.2 Branch for full-time employment on specific tasks and an additional senior officer in that branch for broader liaison and coordination purposes should this be considered necessary or desirable by U.S.W.D.

(g) All Canadian Army officers so employed in U.S.A., would be paid by the Canadian Army, there being no intention of seeking remuneration from U.S.A. even when officers are fully employed in the latter's behalf.

(h) Length of normal tour should be not less than twelve months and subject to review at the end of every six months' period thereafter.

(i) All such officers to be administered by Cdn Army Staff, Washington, and will report to NDHQ through Cdn Army Staff, Washington.

5. It is proposed that Cdn Army Staff be requested to explore with U.S.W.D. what establishments consistent with the foregoing policy would be appropriate as locations to which Canadian liaison officers could be posted and to determine the numbers consequently to be involved and supplied as they become available.

6. It is further intended that the development of reciprocal arrangements in Canada should be initiated by Cdn Army Staff, Washington, who will explore with U.S.W.D. and determine to what Canadian establishments U.S.W.D. would wish to attach U.S.A. officers. It is recognized that U.S. Army would not wish to send as many officers to Canada as the Canadian Army might send to the U.S.A.

7. Although the detailed policy of interchange was to be developed by the services concerned, it is suggested that basic policies be organized on a common inter-service basis.

8. For this purpose you may wish to discuss the foregoing in C.S.C.

"Interchange of Officers with U.S. Army

11. C.G.S. presented a memorandum which, subject to cancellation of para. 4(c), set forth Army policy for the interchange of officers with the United States.

It was intended to cover four basic fields,—research and development, General Staff practice and procedure, training and tactical doctrine and, at a later date, intelligence. The normal tour of duty would be for twelve months and it was hoped that reciprocal arrangements would be made whereby each government would be responsible for pay and allowances of their own officers.

This information was submitted for the use of other Services in formulating their plans.

TELEGRAM WA-1552

Washington, April 9, 1946

Reference telephone conversation between the Under-Secretary of State and myself on the subject of apprehension of deserters from the armed forces of Canada and the United States and their return to their respective countries.

A meeting has just been held with the three Service Attachés to ascertain their views on the proposal to cancel the arrangement now existing.

As you are aware, an informal arrangement has existed for a number of years whereby United States Military Police apprehended and returned deserters to Canada. At no time were American citizens serving in the Canadian forces returned under this informal procedure which was set out in War Department Circular No. 258 of June 24th, 1944. (You will be interested to know that the instructions contained in that Circular have been renewed by War Department Circular No. 52 of 21st February, 1946, and are, subject to earlier cancellation, to remain in effect until 21st August, 1947). During the period October 1943 to April 1946 some 390 Canadian Army deserters have been reported as returned by American military authorities and numerous others are also believed to have been returned. Air Force and Navy deserters figures are not available at the moment, but run about 12 per year for each service.

It was most unfortunate that, by exchange of notes, an attempt was made to formalize the informal arrangement, which had existed here, without reference to this Embassy. (This aspect has already been raised in my despatch

No. 193 of January 23rd.) I feel that had the Service Attachés here been given an opportunity to comment, the present difficulty, which arises from the fact that the exchange of notes did not correctly interpret existing arrangements, and in particular did not limit return of persons to deserters in the period of the recent hostilities, might well have been avoided.<sup>1</sup>

The Service Attachés inform me that there is no expressed intention on the part of the American authorities to cancel the present informal arrangement and that it would presumably remain in force unless it is specifically mentioned in the proposed cancellation of the formal Agreement as set out in United States Note 332 of 13 June, 1945, and the Canadian reply No. 104 of 26th October, 1945.

You may be interested in the present procedure for dealing with cases of deserters from the Canadian forces known to the Service Attachés.

(a) If the man is apprehended by the American authorities, our Service Attachés are notified and check with their respective headquarters to ascertain whether the man has been declared a deserter by the Service concerned. If so, the American authorities are requested to have him returned to the border where he is picked up by the Canadian Service authorities.

(b) If we know that the individual is working in a civilian capacity in the United States, we notify the Department of Justice who investigate to see if the man is deportable. If such is the case, the Department of Justice, in turn, notify the American military authorities who apprehend the man and return him in the same manner as deserters apprehended in uniform. The only case, to our knowledge, where the American authorities have actually refused to co-operate on a specific request is that of Gunner Shea, who is an American citizen and is wanted for manslaughter in connection with the death of a Canadian nurse as a result of a motor accident in Italy, when Shea was serving as a driver in the Canadian forces. In this case both Justice and the American military authorities felt that they were not on secure ground as the charge concerned a civil matter rather than the mere charge of desertion. Otherwise, we have had no formal objection to the return even of American citizens serving in the Canadian forces, but have never pressed for their return on the ground that as long as their uniforms were collected there was nothing to be gained by their return to Canada, particularly now that hostilities have ceased.

Pending further instructions we propose to allow the present procedure to continue, feeling that it is undesirable to have deserters apprehended by the civil authorities and detained for a long period pending formal deportation proceedings.

Ottawa, April 11, 1946

Your WA-1552 of April 9th. Apprehension of deserters from the Armed Forces.

2. P.C. 6577 was revoked by Order in Council on April 9th. We informed the United States Embassy in advance that this was going to take place and have since sent them a copy of the new Order in Council. A copy of our letter† is going forward to you by bag.

3. In this letter we pointed out that in our view the revocation of P.C. 6577 did not affect the validity of the exchange of notes of June 13th and October 26th, 1945, which provided that each country would use whatever legislative powers it possessed. We concluded by saying the Canadian authorities would be glad to discuss at a later date the best method of dealing with the deserter problem in peace time.

4. While we would be in no position to insist on it, it would certainly be to our advantage if the United States military authorities were prepared to continue the apprehension of Canadian deserters. We therefore concur with the final paragraph of your message. You should not, however, take any steps to urge the retention of the present procedure.

TELEGRAM EX-1399

Re position of Canadians under United States Selective Service Regulations.

2. Your WA-1248 of March 19th† indicated that the end of hostilities has brought no change in the applicability of the draft law to Canadians. We are starting to get inquiries from Canadians in the United States on this subject and wish to review it carefully with your assistance.

3. Will you please send copies of the exact relevant provisions of the Act and Regulations now in force.

4. Please confirm our understanding that there has been no change in the provisions of the Act relating to the drafting of neutral aliens. The last copy of the Act we have contains the following provision relating to neutral aliens:

“Provided, That any citizen or subject of a neutral country shall be relieved from liability for training and service under this Act if, prior to his induction into the land or naval forces, he has made application to be relieved from such liability in the manner prescribed by and in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the President, but any person who makes such application shall thereafter be debarred from becoming a citizen of the United States.”

5. If you see no objection, you might have a preliminary informal discussion of the subject with the State Department. We would be interested to know whether the United States Government has, since the end of hostilities, given any real consideration to the question of whether Allied aliens are to be drafted in peacetime.

6. As you know, we never conceded that the United States had a legal right to call up Canadians in the absence of an agreement with the Canadian Government allowing such drafting. If there was doubt as to the legal right of the United States to act unilaterally in wartime, the doubt is obviously much greater in peacetime. We do not at the moment wish to make any representations but I can see no harm in your discussing the subject frankly and informally.

7. No action has been taken to terminate the exchange of notes of March and April 1942 under which Canadians called up in the United States could opt for service in the Canadian forces. However, there are in fact no facilities for opting at the present time and, when the exchange of notes took place, we were certainly not thinking of a period beyond the end of hostilities.

DESPATCH 1341

Washington, June 29, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your teletype No. EX-1399 of May 28 regarding the position of Canadians under United States Selective Service regulations, and to my reply No. WA-2479 of June 17.†

2. We have discussed this general question informally with both the appropriate officer in Selective Service administration and with the State Department. So far as the facts are concerned, the present situation appears to be that the following categories of Canadians are adequately safe-guarded under the present regulations:

(a) Government officials.

(b) Twenty-nine day visitors. (It is impossible to register for military service until one has been in the country for thirty days.)

(c) Students (either under student visas or on 3(2) visas, if registered at a school recognized by the Adjutant General). Students are required, however, to obtain a Certificate of Non-Residence after their arrival.

(d) Persons working temporarily in the United States under a Labour Exit Permit from Canada, or under an approved "Training Program". These are mostly trainees or apprentices who are being paid from Canada. (The Canadian M-114 form is apparently honoured in the same way as a Certificate of Non-Residence in the case of students.) We understand that the "Training Program" procedure might cover persons assigned from a Canadian firm to work with a U.S. parent company, subsidiary or affiliate. The maximum period for such a "program" is two years, and payment from the U.S. company is limited to $180 per month.

(e) Temporary representatives of Canadian firms, who are paid from Canada. These presumably would enter on a 3(2) visa since they are not "gainfully employed", and may apply for a maximum exemption of 6 months under a certificate of non-residence. This application must be submitted within 90 days of entry.

3. While not completely safe-guarded by the regulations, persons who have already had military service in the Canadian armed forces are automatically placed in a special deferred category (1-G), and each case is handled individually by the local Draft Board. Although this is, therefore, to some extent discretionary, the usual practice is to honour twelve months service as sufficient for permanent deferment and a shorter time may be recognized if it consisted mostly of active combat duty.

4. Those who are liable for call-up, therefore, include: (a) visitors on 3(2) visas, and (b) Canadians on permanent visas. In both cases, the actual operation of the Draft cannot take place until after the person involved has been in the United States for 90 days. Temporary visitors are consequently safe for a three month period. After this time, however, they are liable for service, and the length of time spent in the United States is cumulative over a succession of visits. In other words, a Canadian of draft age at the present time can only make one visit of three months duration without being liable for service. If he returns at a later date, he is subject to call-up at any time after the total length of time spent in the United States exceeds 90 days.

5. For the most part, it would appear that these regulations do not impose an undue hardship upon Canadians in the United States. As you are aware, the hostilities are not officially concluded as yet, and in practical terms the United States is still committed to find manpower for her occupation forces. Under the circumstances, I doubt whether we should have much justification for protesting against the drafting of Canadians who, by obtaining permanent visas, have indicated their intention to reside and make their living in the United States. During the course of our conversation with the State Department, it was indicated that this is definitely the view of the United States authorities.<sup>1</sup>

6. The main group for whom we might feel that the regulations should be altered would probably be the 3(2) temporary visitor. It might be argued that such a person, even though he wishes to remain in the United States for longer than three months, is definitely not making his living here and presumably must eventually return to Canada. Under the circumstances, especially with reference to persons who wish to return to the United States again after having used up their 90 day period of grace, I feel that we should be in a fairly strong position if we wished to make representation on behalf of the temporary visitor.

7. The State Department are in no position at the present time to forecast what future policy may be, and assume that the current regulations will apply as long as the Draft Law is extended and until the natural expiration of the 1940 legislation. If there are any definite points which you would like to have raised with the State Department, therefore, it would be advisable for us to have our position quite clear before approaching them again on the subject. In particular, it would be useful if you could let us know whether there are any other categories, beyond those dealt with above, concerning whom you wish further information or on whose behalf you feel that exemptions might properly be made.

I have etc.

RE: JURISDICTION IN CRIMINAL MATTERS OVER MEMBERS OF THE UNITED STATES FORCES IN CANADA

On 20th December, 1943, by Order in Council P.C. 9694, the Governor General in Council under the authority of the War Measures Act gave to the military courts of the United States jurisdiction to try all members of the United States forces in Canada for offences allegedly committed by them. The regulations established under the above Order in Council were also put into force in the United States in connection with members of the Canadian Armed Forces charged with having committed offences in United States territory.

The Committee on Orders in Council is now considering the advisability of continuing this jurisdiction of United States military courts or reverting to the normal practice of trying all offenders before the civilian courts.

As this question is one which interests you, I would be very grateful for your comments before any recommendations are made by this Department and before the subject is discussed with the appropriate United States authorities.

RE: JURISDICTION IN CRIMINAL MATTERS OVER
MEMBERS OF THE U.S. FORCES IN CANADA

Reference your letters of 4th July, 1946, concerning the above-noted matter, addressed to the Deputy Ministers of National Defence for Air and Naval Services and to the under-signed.

It is expected that an American Force of approximately 100 All Ranks will be proceeding to Canada in the next few weeks to take part in certain Winter Trials at Churchill, Manitoba. If Order-in-Council P.C. 9694 of 1943 is revoked, it would appear that no provision will exist for the discipline of this Force, and of other United States' Forces, which it is expected will be in Canada from time to time.

This matter has been considered by the appropriate Service Authorities and in their opinion P.C. 9694 should not be revoked until provision is made by means of an Act of Parliament or Order-in-Council for the discipline of American Troops in Canada.

If you concur, it is suggested that informal discussions might be held at once between the Canadian and American Service Authorities with a view to arriving at a solution to this matter, and also the matter of discipline of Canadian Forces present in the U.S.A., which would be satisfactory to both countries and that when a workable solution has been arrived at, the matter should be submitted through the regular diplomatic channels for the necessary action on the part of both Governments.

The contents of this letter are concurred in by the Deputy Ministers of National Defence for Naval Services and Air. It may, therefore, be considered as a reply to the communications addressed by you to them in this connection.

JURISDICTION IN CRIMINAL MATTERS OVER
MEMBERS OF THE U.S. FORCES IN CANADA

I refer to your memorandum of 29th June† on this subject.

The three branches of National Defence, the Judge Advocate General and Justice were asked for their opinion on this matter. By letter of 8th July† Justice took the view that the Order-in-Council should be revoked. By letter of 9th July† the Judge Advocate General took the same view.

By letter of 15th July† the Deputy Minister (Navy) stated that he had no objection to the revocation of the Order-in-Council. However, in view of the joint letter from the three branches of National Defence referred to in the next paragraph I feel this letter from Navy should be discounted.

By letter of 16th September from the Deputy Minister of National Defence (Army) with the concurrence of the other two branches of the Armed Forces, the Department of National Defence has expressed the opinion that the Order-in-Council should not be revoked until provision is made by means of an Act of Parliament or Order-in-Council for the discipline of American Troops in Canada.

You will observe from the file that on 17th August I wrote to the High Commissioner for Canada in London† asking for the United Kingdom views on this subject. No answer has been received.

From National Defence letter of 16th September, it would appear that the number of American troops in the country is going to be very small and my personal view is that there is no reason to change the opinion expressed by you on 29th June. However there are political implications in this matter on which I would be grateful for your comments.

I think there is some urgency in this matter and I feel that whatever your decision is, we should communicate with the Americans without delay.

No. 136

Ottawa, October 19, 1946

Excellency,

I have the honour to refer to the jurisdiction of service courts of the Armed Forces of the United States in Canada.

On April 15, 1941, by Order in Council P.C. 2546 passed under the authority of the War Measures Act, the naval, military and air force courts of the United States forces were authorized to exercise within Canada, in relation to members of the United States forces in matters of discipline and internal administration, all powers conferred upon them by the law of the United States. On December 20, 1943, by Order in Council P.C. 9694, also passed under the authority of the War Measures Act, exclusive criminal jurisdiction within Canada was given to the naval, military and air force courts of the United States Forces over personnel of such forces for offences allegedly committed by them.

Under the legislation presently in force in Canada, the Orders in Council on this subject will automatically lapse on March 31, 1947, and may even be brought to an end at an earlier date by the legislative action of the Canadian Parliament.

I would be grateful if you would bring this matter to the attention of your Government. It is suggested that informal discussions might usefully take place between Canada and the United States service representatives together with any other persons whose participation might be helpful in arriving at a satisfactory solution.

The first meeting was called to order at 2.30 p.m., 11th December, with Brigadier R. J. Orde in the chair. He pointed out that pursuant to the notes exchanged, the meetings were for the purpose of informal discussion between Canadian and United States service representatives and other persons whose participation might be helpful and that for this reason the Department of National Defence had intimated that he act as chairman and that Lieutenant-Commander Dewis act as Secretary. CSM W. J. Crone acted as reporter.

There was provided for each representative a folder containing the relevant Canadian Orders in Council, United States Public Law 384 of the 78th Congress and a memorandum setting out briefly the historical situation. A copy of this memorandum is annexed as Schedule 'A'.†

Meetings were held on 11th, 12th and 13th December at which there were present the officials hereinbefore mentioned or their accredited representatives.

After much discussion it was agreed that a memorandum in the terms of that annexed as Schedule 'B' should, through the appropriate channels be submitted by the Canadian representatives for the consideration of their superiors and that such memorandum should be forwarded by the Chairman to the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs for appropriate action. It was also agreed that copies of the said memorandum should be sent to the American Embassy for transmission to the United States representatives.

It was unanimously agreed by all representatives that these minutes and annexures should be classified as "Confidential" and that the reporter's shorthand notes should be destroyed.

The meetings were concluded at 4.30 p.m. 13th December, 1946.

Ottawa, December 13, 1946

SCHEDULE 'B'

1. Pursuant to an exchange of notes between the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs of Canada and the United States Ambassador to Canada, an informal discussion was held in Ottawa on 11th, 12th and 13th December 1946 between representatives of Canada and the United States for the purpose of considering the extent to which United States service courts and authorities would, in peacetime, exercise jurisdiction presently authorized by the Foreign Forces Order, 1941 (PC 2546 dated 15 April 1941) as applied by Order in Council PC 2813 dated 6 April 1943 and as extended by Order in Council PC 9694 dated 20 December 1943.

2. The United States representatives at the meeting stated that they were desirous of having continued the same status and powers of United States service courts as exist under the foregoing Orders.

3. This would mean that such United States service courts and authorities would permanently be permitted to exercise criminal jurisdiction in matters involving members of the United States forces present in Canada to the exclusion of Canadian courts of criminal jurisdiction.

4. The attention of the United States representatives was called to the fact that under the constitution of Canada, while the Canadian Parliament is vested with exclusive legislative jurisdiction over criminal law and procedure, the administration of criminal justice lies with the provinces. The United States representatives fully appreciate this constitutional situation.

5. The Canadian service representatives observed that so far as they were concerned they felt that in respect of members of a Canadian "force" which is in the United States they were quite satisfied to have the jurisdiction relating to that force limited to matters of internal service discipline and that offences of a criminal nature committed by any member of such force against non-members of any such force should be dealt with by the appropriate criminal court in the United States.

6. Having regard to the views expressed by the representatives of the respective countries the Canadian representatives are prepared to recommend to their appropriate superiors that in respect of any member of any United States force which is lawfully present in Canada legislation be introduced to give effect to the following:

(a) United States service courts and authorities shall have exclusive jurisdiction in respect of all offences under United States military or naval law committed by any such member and which are not offences under the law of Canada.

(b) United States service courts and authorities shall have exclusive jurisdiction in respect of all offences under United States military or naval law committed by any such member which are also offences under the law of Canada and which involve only members of any such force, their property or property owned or controlled by the Government of the United States, provided, that in any such cases jurisdiction may be waived by the appropriate United States authorities.

(c) United States service courts and authorities may exercise jurisdiction in respect of all other offences committed by any such member in those cases wherein the appropriate Canadian authority does not wish to exercise jurisdiction.

(d) Provisions to enable the United States service courts and authorities fully to exercise the aforesaid jurisdiction.

For the purposes of this paragraph 'member' shall mean a person who is by the law of the United States of America for the time being subject to the military or naval law of that country, provided that no person employed in connection with any such force not being a National of the United States of America shall be deemed to be a member of such force unless he entered into that employment outside of Canada.

7. The Canadian representatives intimated that the foregoing proposals are not intended to extend to the situation which might subsist when Canada or the United States is at war, in which event the whole matter should be made the subject of re-examination.

8. The Canadian representatives took into consideration the provisions of the Foreign Forces Order, 1941 (PC 2546 dated 15 April 1941) and what they are prepared to recommend is consistent with the terms of that Order and with the provisions of the Visiting Forces (British Commonwealth) Act, 1933, with the extension of jurisdiction as set out in para 6 above. Such extension is substantially in accordance with the majority decision of the Supreme Court of Canada on the reference as to whether members of the military or naval forces of the United States of America are exempt from criminal proceedings in Canadian criminal courts, (1943) S.C.R. 483, although the question submitted to the Court related to the situation under war-time conditions.<sup>1</sup>

POSSIBLE REVISION OF THE RUSH-BAGOT AGREEMENT OF 1817

Naval Services wish to send four or five small training vessels to the Great Lakes this summer and have inquired whether the Department would be prepared to seek the approval of the United States Government. Such a step would, like many others that have been taken, involve a breach of the Rush-Bagot Agreement and would require still another interpretation of the spirit of that arrangement. This raises the question which has been under consideration in the Department for some time of whether it would not be in the general interest to replace the Rush-Bagot Agreement with something more suited to present conditions.<sup>1</sup>

Approved for submission to Council. L. S. St. L[AURENT]

Both Governments have agreed during the war to disregard the limitations on naval armaments on the Great Lakes contained in this Agreement and its prohibition of naval construction. It appears questionable, however, whether it is wise to retain an Agreement which is so unrelated to present conditions that its main provisions must be constantly violated. Even with the war ended, it can be expected that both countries will wish to have naval vessels in these waters and there seems no reason why they should not. It therefore appears appropriate to consider whether the time has not come to suggest to the United States that the Rush-Bagot Agreement be replaced by a new Agreement which would take account of present day relations between Canada and the United States.

Such an Agreement might cover the following points:

(a) Permit each country to maintain such vessels as it requires for naval training purposes and for police work.

(b) Permit the construction of such vessels as each country requires for purposes mentioned in (a) above, as well as for ocean use, subject to whatever agreements on naval limitations may be binding on each party.

(c) Provide for complete exchange of information on all activities under (a) and (b) above perhaps through the Permanent Joint Board on Defence.

The principal argument against a new Agreement is the great sentimental value that attaches to this historic document. It is a landmark of nearly one hundred and thirty years' standing and a monument to the excellent relations between Canada and the United States.

On the other hand, there are two arguments in favour of a new Agreement which may have even greater weight:

(a) A new Agreement might possess even more sentimental value if appropriately conceived and properly launched. The old Agreement was, despite its undoubted value, based on mutual suspicion and the need to keep a watchful eye on naval armaments. A new Agreement could be based on the complete confidence that exists between the two countries. It would be based on mutual trust, not on mutual suspicion. Indeed, a naval limitation Agreement seems inconsistent with joint defence and the responsibilities entrusted to the Permanent Joint Board on Defence under the Ogdensburg Agreement. A new understanding based on these considerations would be a landmark in the history of both countries.

(b) The existing Agreement is so unrelated to modern conditions that scarcely one of its provisions is in force. If international agreements are to command general respect, it does not appear to be sound policy to retain agreements which have become out of date and which are continually violated.

No not at that immediate time. K[ING] 14-2-46

On balance, it is suggested that a new Agreement, far from destroying something of historical interest and moral value, would be a document commanding great interest and respect in its own right. If you agree with these considerations, I would suggest that an informal approach be made to the United States either through diplomatic channels or through the Permanent Joint Board on Defence.<sup>1</sup>

A third reason which might perhaps be advanced for a new agreement is that the Rush-Bagot agreement was negotiated by a British plenipotentiary for Canada (Sir Charles Bagot, who was later (1841-43) Governor General).

It would surely now be appropriate to have a new agreement negotiated between a Canadian plenipotentiary and his United States counterpart. This could be carried out with due ceremony, and perhaps with due reference to collaboration in defence during the war years; to a continuing concern for the requirements of joint defence in peacetime, and to creating a new landmark in Canadian-United States cooperation.

Dear Mr. Macdonnell,

I refer to your letter of May 15, 1946, in which you asked me if any opinions concerning the possibility of amending the Rush-Bagot agreement had as yet been expressed by us here. As you will recall, it was stated at the March 1946 meeting of the Permanent Joint Board on Defense, United States-Canada, that the United States Navy wished to have certain naval training vessels operate in the Great Lakes for training purposes, and it was decided that the secretaries of the Board would look into the matter of amending the Rush-Bagot agreement if necessary.

The Rush-Bagot agreement as drawn up has long since been out-dated, and its observance has for many years been a matter of adhering to the spirit of the agreement rather than to its letter. In 1939, 1940 and 1942 exchanges of notes amending the agreement were completed, and understanding was reached concerning (1) the number and size of the vessels each country was to have on the Lakes, (2) the disposition of these vessels, (3) their functions, and (4) their armaments. Both the United States and Canada have worked on the basis that the spirit of the agreement was observed when any deviation from its terms was made by mutual consent.

The United States Navy wishes to maintain on the Great Lakes a small number of operative minor war vessels, to be used exclusively in the training of Naval Reserve personnel. I am enclosing a list of these ships and the lake ports at which they would be based, as well as a description of the types of ships concerned.† It is my opinion that it would be consistent with the Rush-Bagot agreement, as it has been interpreted heretofore, for the United States and Canadian Navies to undertake operations of this sort when such operations are undertaken with full knowledge of the other's plans and mutual consent thereto. The Permanent Joint Board on Defense provides an informal channel for the exchange of information of this sort. If you feel, however, that a further exchange of notes on this subject is required, I shall be happy to discuss this further with you.

DESPATCH 931

Ottawa, August 3, 1946

Sir,

The question of stationing naval vessels on the Great Lakes for training purposes has been discussed by the Permanent Joint Board on Defence. Paragraph 14 of the Board's Journal for the meeting of March 21-22 records the discussion. There has been subsequent correspondence between the Secretaries of the Board and I enclose a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the United States Section dated June 25. Mr. Parsons expresses the opinion that it would be consistent with the Rush-Bagot Agreement for the Canadian and the United States Navies to station vessels on the Great Lakes so long as they kept each other fully informed. He stated, however, that if the Canadian authorities desired an exchange of notes, the way was open to discuss this course of action.

2. It is the view of this Department that a further interpretation of the Rush-Bagot Agreement is called for. The stationing of additional naval vessels on the Great Lakes would, in our view, be in contravention of the terms of the Rush-Bagot Agreement and since various precedents already exist for re-interpreting the spirit of that Agreement, it seems to us desirable to keep the record straight by an exchange of notes which could be published.

3. With this in mind, we have drafted a note from the Embassy to the State Department, copies of which are enclosed.† You should discuss this with the State Department whose comments we will be glad to receive in due course.

[Ottawa,] August 5, 1946

We have been approached by the United States authorities rather urgently for concurrence in a fairly extensive programme of naval training on the Great Lakes. Our consent is necessary because the execution of this programme will involve the maintenance of a number of minor war vessels for training purposes which would far exceed the ancient limits established by the Rush-Bagot Agreement of 1817. In fact just before and during the war we exchanged notes with the United States on a number of occasions, modifying the terms of the Rush-Bagot Agreement, and this is only a continuation of what has already been undertaken. Our various exchanges with the United States on this subject have been published in the Canadian Treaty Series. We should have, of course, to publish also any exchange on the subject of vessels for training purposes.

I see no objection to this proposal or to the language in the attached draft.† Our own Naval people want to follow a similar course, and this exchange would give them authority to do so. The State Department was inclined to think that a formal exchange of notes was unnecessary, but as explained in Mr. Macdonnell's explanatory memorandum† attached to the draft, our own legal people take a different view, and I agree with them. What we really already have done is to alter the Rush-Bagot Agreement out of all recognition, but there is distinct political and practical value in attaching to this ancient document (itself only an exchange of notes) all subsequent Agreements relating to naval armament on the Great Lakes.

As we are under some pressure to get this matter settled, I should be glad to know whether you agree to the course proposed.<sup>1</sup>

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your despatch No. 931 of August 3rd last concerning the question of a further interpretation of the Rush-Bagot Agreement.

2. I discussed informally with the Department of State the draft of a note, the text of which you sent with your despatch under reference, and I am now informed by the Department that the text of this draft is completely satisfactory to the United States authorities concerned. The Department of State, therefore, is prepared to proceed with the proposed exchange of notes at our convenience.<sup>1</sup> Before proceeding, I shall await your further instructions.

RE: STANDARDIZATION OF MILITARY EQUIPMENT BETWEEN THE UNITED KINGDOM, THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA

1. The Chief of the General Staff understands that, when Field Marshal Montgomery<sup>2</sup> sees you in Ottawa on Monday, he will raise the question of standardizing equipment and weapons as between British, Canadian and United States forces.

2. This morning, the Chiefs of Staff Committee, with Robertson, Pearson, Wrong and myself, considered a paper on this question approved by the U.K. Cabinet Defence Committee and forwarded to External Affairs through Earnscliffe. The paper, which is in the form of a report by the U.K. Chiefs of Staff, recognizes the desirability of standardizing equipment between the Armed Forces of the three countries, outlines the difficulties which the implementing of such a policy involves and concludes by recommending the joint approach to the U.S. Government on the part of the United Kingdom and Canada. The object would be to persuade U.S. authorities to adopt a policy of immediate cooperation with a view to eventual adoption of weapons and equipment of common types.

3. Canadian military authorities have, for some time, recognized that the adoption of standard equipment as between the United Kingdom and the United States would be directly in the interest of Canada. Our industrial standards are for the most part North American; on the other hand, traditionally, our Navy, Army and Air Force have been equipped on the British model, though the recent war modified this to a considerable degree. As in so many other fields, our objective, it is felt, should be to bring the British and Americans together.

4. Field Marshal Montgomery intends to discuss this subject informally not only with General Eisenhower, but apparently with the President. If you agree, we thought that there would be no harm in your saying to the Field Marshal that he might intimate in Washington that he had approached the Canadian authorities informally and had learned that they were in general agreement with the U.K.'s views.

5. On the other hand, we did not think that the objective could best be achieved by a formal approach by the U.K. government on the political level; nor did we feel that the Canadian government should be a party to a joint approach as is suggested in the U.K. paper. It was our view that a less formal initiative by the U.K. staff to their opposite numbers in the United States would not be so likely to encounter political difficulty. So far as Canada is concerned, the joint planning now being carried on under the auspices of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence has already given an opportunity to our officers to express a view favourable to standardization. Any further initiative which might be taken on our part might, we felt, remain on the Service level.

6. It was thought that you might wish to have our views on this subject before you see Field Marshal Montgomery and I have, therefore, prepared this note rather hurriedly in order that you may have it in good time. It has been seen by Robertson and Foulkes, both of whom concur.

7. General Foulkes tells me that he is to have a word with you privately before you see Field Marshal Montgomery.

A. D. P. H[EENEY]

P.S. I have just been informed that the U.K. government now feel that any "joint approach" be left in abeyance until the results of Montgomery's informal discussions are known.

Ottawa, September 20, 1946

Dear Sir Alexander [Clutterbuck],

I am writing with reference to your letters of August 22nd† and September 5th,† concerning the report by the United Kingdom Chiefs of Staff† enclosed with your letter of August 22nd, entitled "Standardization of Equipment between the United Kingdom, United States and Canada".

This report has been considered by the appropriate Canadian authorities and I am now able to inform you that the policy outlined in it accords with their views and is acceptable to them as a general basis for planning. Indeed, you may be certain that Canadian representatives will take every opportunity in their contacts with U.K. and U.S. officers of advancing the principles of standardisation of equipment between the forces of the three countries.

In your letter of September 5th, you stated that the U.K. authorities felt that the question of a joint approach to the U.S. authorities should stand over until the results of Lord Montgomery's discussions in the United States were known. We have considerable doubt here about the value of a joint approach in Washington and our view is that progress is more likely to be maintained if the discussions with U.S. authorities are conducted on the Service level. Furthermore, we feel that there would be objection to any proposal having in view any formal or even informal inter-governmental agreement. We believe that it is likely, in fact, to be easier to secure the execution of parallel policies in the three countries by less formal methods developed between the various officers and officials. We feel also that such methods would reduce the danger of unwanted publicity.

You are already doubtless familiar with the results of Lord Montgomery's discussions on questions of standardization with the Prime Minister, the Minister of National Defence and the Canadian Service authorities during his visit to Ottawa.

Yours sincerely,

Ottawa, November 2, 1946

Dear Hume [Wrong],

I am sending you for your top secret and personal information, a memorandum from Arnold to the Prime Minister, dealing with recent staff conversations in London on standardization. Attached to that memorandum is a letter to Arnold from General Foulkes. There is a special obligation on our part to maintain secrecy in this matter in view of the fact that apparently United States Service authorities are not telling the State Department anything about it. We are also keeping it very close here.

I must say I am worried somewhat by the implications of the London talks. They went further than we had expected here, in establishing a political basis for Service cooperation between the three countries. At the last Chiefs of Staff meeting, Foulkes read one or two memoranda done by the War Office people on this political aspect of the problem and neither Arnold or I were much impressed by the quality of the argument put forward.

We are also somewhat worried about our participation in the Washington talks, even though these are to be purely exploratory and on the technical service level. General Foulkes has emphasized to us that no commitments—even Service commitments—will be made at these Washington talks; but we know, of course, how difficult it is to avoid, at talks of this kind, the establishment of positions from which it is sometimes later difficult to withdraw. The danger in this case is increased by the fact that the representatives we are sending to Washington are not likely to have much influence on the establishment of such positions. I am wondering again whether in discussions of this kind it is not better for us to withdraw as principals and be called in whenever our special interests are affected; to maintain, in short, the position we had vis-à-vis the Combined Chiefs of Staff in Washington.

In the forthcoming talks I think it almost certain that there will be a tendency on the part of the U.S. and U.K. participants to stray into forbidden fields. There will also be some delicate balancing required by our representatives of their Commonwealth and North American positions. You could certainly be of great help to them in this and in other respects if you are given that opportunity. I indicated this to General Foulkes at the last Chiefs of Staff meeting and I hope that the idea has penetrated. I can very well imagine the U.K. people at the Washington talks referring to "us", as against "you"; meaning Commonwealth on the one side and the U.S. on the other. Foulkes seems to have handled this particular situation very well in London, but it is doubtful whether the Service men in the Washington talks will be equally skillful. We shall probably hear in a day or two who they are.

Yours sincerely,

IMPORTANT, TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL

Ottawa, October 31, 1946

RE: STAFF CONVERSATIONS; UNITED KINGDOM-CANADA-UNITED STATES
STANDARDIZATION OF EQUIPMENT

You will remember that, when Field Marshal Montgomery was in Ottawa, you discussed with him and with the Minister of National Defence and the Chief of the General Staff U.K. proposals for the standardizing of military equipment. At that time, you indicated that the Canadian government were prepared to cooperate in measures designed to promote uniformity in these matters. Subsequently, after Montgomery had visited Washington, you heard from him that the President had also expressed agreement as to the desirability of the Services of the three countries working together to this end.

On September 26th, you reported these developments to the Cabinet and it was agreed that the process of standardization should be worked out by stages on the Service level, but that there should be no question of any formal inter-governmental agreement on the subject. The Cabinet Defence Committee had previously approved a recommendation in favour of standardization from the Chiefs of Staff and this was reported to the Cabinet at the same time by Mr. Abbott.

On Tuesday last, Pearson and I were invited to a meeting of the Chiefs of Staff to hear General Foulkes' account of subsequent developments. This made it quite clear that the British and Americans contemplate joint planning over a much broader field than that of standardization of equipment. Indeed, the draft agenda prepared for discussions which are to begin in Washington on November 11th indicates that both the U.K. and the U.S. Staffs are looking forward to a complete examination of the over-all strategic problem in the light of estimated Soviet intentions.

Canadian authorities had not known in advance of the nature of the recent talks which took place in England between Eisenhower and Montgomery and their Planners. Foulkes has now been brought into the picture fully, however, and at present is considering with his Naval and Air Force colleagues the briefing of the Canadian Service representatives who will attend the tri-partite meetings in Washington on November 11th. He agreed with me that you should be informed at once of the turn of events. Since the Minister is away (Mr. Gibson is not, I think, aware of what has transpired), I asked Foulkes to write me a brief statement of the salient features of the position in a personal letter, a copy of which is attached.

My impression is that, while the U.K. government are fully aware of the extent of the proposed conversations with the United States, the same may not be true in Washington, though presumably the President has been informed. Naturally, the highest degree of secrecy is being maintained.

Le Chef de l'état-major général au secrétaire du Cabinet
Chief of the General Staff to Secretary to the Cabinet

Ottawa, October 29, 1946

Dear Mr. Heenev,

Following my discussion at this morning's Chief of Staff meeting you mentioned that it might be advisable for you to have a word with the Prime Minister to inform him of the progress of the talks with the British Planners, and the nature of future discussions to take place in Washington commencing 11 November. It would be helpful, perhaps, if I briefly review the background which has led up to the present situation.

You will recall that following Field Marshal Montgomery's brief visit with the Prime Minister, it was agreed that Canada should participate in conversations, on a Military level, with the United States and Great Britain on questions of current strategy and standardization, as outlined by Field Marshal Montgomery. After the Field Marshal's visit to Washington I received a letter† in which the Field Marshal mentioned that he had secured the approval of President Truman to the proposal of Tri-Partite talks on a Military level. He also mentioned that the American Chiefs of Staff had agreed that the talks should include all mutual defence matters, and not only standardization. I received a similar message† from General Eisenhower, advising that the talks would take place in Washington early in October.

On the 11th of October I received a letter† from the Field Marshal in which he explained that the British and American Planners had held a preliminary meeting in London, and had drawn up a tentative Agenda for the further meetings which are to be held in Washington in November. He explained further that for reasons of security he had thought it advisable not to invite the Canadian participation but to inform us later of their discussions, and he suggested further that a team of Canadian Planners should arrive in London about the 20th of October to discuss with the British Planners this Agenda.

I discussed that matter with Mr. Abbott, and our first reaction was one of considerable annoyance that preliminary talks had been held without our participation. However, we felt that perhaps this was a good opportunity of registering our objection to such procedure and of stating Canada's case. Therefore, with the Minister's approval I proceeded with the team to the United Kingdom. On the morning of Monday, 21st October, I had an interview with Field Marshal Montgomery, when he outlined the previous meeting with the Americans, and he mentioned that he considered it desirable to have a common Commonwealth front in this matter before meeting the Americans in Washington.

I took exception to this proposal and reminded the Field Marshal that we were upset that these talks should have been held without Canadians being present, and that I could not agree to any such thing as a common Commonwealth front when dealing with these matters. He emphasized that the preliminary United States-Great Britain talks were mainly in connection with the future of the Occupation Forces in Germany in which, of course, we were no longer interested, and that nothing had been decided except the tentative Agenda had been drawn up.

It was finally agreed that there would be no preliminary talks, either in Ottawa or Washington, between the British and the Canadian teams, nor would we put up, at any time, a common front to the Americans. The Field Marshal now fully understands that during these talks Canada must be treated in the same manner as the other two participants.

I undertook to review the Agenda and the preliminary papers which are to form the basis of the discussions in Washington, and further to brief the Canadian team before they proceeded to Washington. I later met the members of the British team to discuss with them the composition of the Canadian team, and the Agenda.

The British are very anxious that agreement be reached on the strategical concept, which is to form the basis of the planning for cooperation on all matters in the event of war, and they are to present a paper in Washington giving their views on the strategical concept. They feel that until common agreement is reached on the strategical concept it would be unsound to discuss ways and means of standardization of operational procedure, weapons, and equipment.

It was further agreed that the Planners would bring in recommendations as to what mutual tasks should be undertaken in peace time, and the ways and means in which these tasks would be carried out. A report of the Planners is to be forwarded to the respective Chiefs of Staff Committees before further action is undertaken.

I have agreed to arrange for a Canadian Planning group, on Brigadier level, to meet the British and United States groups for these talks in Washington commencing 11th November. It is clearly understood by all concerned that these talks are purely exploratory and do not make, or accept, any commitments whatsoever. I feel that it is of considerable importance that we send down the best possible representation for these talks; not that we can contribute very much to talks on Allied grand strategy, but it appears important to me to be adequately represented so that we can be kept completely in the picture and to ensure that Great Britain does not again consider that she is talking on behalf of Canada in any matters whatsoever.

Yours sincerely,

CHARLES FOULKES

CONFIDENTIAL

PACIFIC COAST HIGHWAY TO ALASKA

The United States Department of State have approached us informally and confidentially on the subject of constructing another highway to Alaska. A number of groups in Washington and Oregon, whose vigorous spokesman in Congress is Senator Magnuson of Washington, have long urged the construction of a highway from Prince George through British Columbia to Alaska which would provide direct road communication between Alaska on the one hand, and the Vancouver-Seattle-Portland area on the other. The location of the present Alaska Highway east of the mountains is criticized by these groups on the ground that it links Alaska with the central part of Canada and the United States to the disadvantage of the coastal area. A similar feeling exists to some extent in British Columbia and the Pacific Northwest Trade Association, with membership on both sides of the border, has for some time been urging the construction of a new road.

Senator Magnuson has succeeded in obtaining some support from President Truman. It will be recalled that last summer, while in the State of Washington, the President was reported in the press as terming the proposed road "absolutely essential". Because of this White House support, the State Department feel obliged to take the question up with the Canadian Government although they appreciate the difficulties of their position. They are proposing a project whose economic soundness is far from proven and which, in any event, is a matter entirely within Canadian jurisdiction since it is not possible to justify another highway on grounds of defence. (It is open to question whether a financial contribution from the United States Government would be acceptable to Canada, but there are good grounds for doubting that Congress would be prepared to appropriate for another highway in Canada).<sup>1</sup>

The alternative courses mentioned by the State Department in order of preference are as follows:

(1) Establishment of a joint investigating body consisting of three members from each country to recommend whether or not a new highway is justified. If this were done, Senator Magnuson would be the principal United States member and would be in a position to see that no arguments in support of a new highway were overlooked.

(2) Having Senator Magnuson come to Canada to argue his case and to attempt to persuade the Canadian Government of the soundness of his views.

It is difficult to reply to this informal approach without knowing the views of British Columbia. If the Provincial Government is disposed to undertake a substantial portion of the construction costs, the Canadian Government might consider making up the balance. On the other hand, if British Columbia is unwilling to take this step, it is doubtful whether the Canadian Government would want to assume sole responsibility for the project. In either case, it is probably desirable to arrange a meeting with representatives of the United States Government, including Senator Magnuson, at which the positions of the Canadian and British Columbia Governments could be explained. If this is not done, there may be a risk of a press campaign in the United States charging us with lack of cooperation.

As a first step, you might write to the Premier of British Columbia on the general question of building the road and also on the advisability of arranging a meeting with Senator Magnuson and representatives of the United States Government.

Copies of this memorandum have been sent to Mr. Howe, Mr. Glen and Mr. Mackenzie.<sup>2</sup>

2. Please tell the State Department informally that the question has been considered at a meeting of the Cabinet. The Government is unable to agree to undertake the project in question since, in their opinion, no requirement has been established for a second highway to Alaska.

3. You should add that neither the proposal to establish a joint investigating commission nor the suggestion that Senator Magnuson come to Ottawa for discussions was regarded as practicable by the Government. It is clearly the feeling of Ministers that the whole project is so impracticable that no useful purpose would be served by pursuing the matter further at present, or for some time to come.

TRUCKING-IN-BOND

I had a call today from Mr. S. L. Springsteen of Windsor who represents the Michigan Trucking Association and is Vice-President of the Canadian Transit Company which owns the Canadian share of the Detroit-Windsor Bridge.

Mr. Springsteen had no new arguments or evidence to present except that he had a number of recent letters from shippers stating that they were continuing to use trucks in preference to railroads, even though the longer south shore route had to be employed. A number of such letters were presented to the Joint Committee on customs procedures at its first meeting on February 5th, but as they were dated in the early part of January it was the feeling of Canadian officials that they would carry more weight if written after longer experience with the necessity of shipping via the south shore. It appears that such letters are continuing to come in and a good many substantial shippers are prepared to say that they have always used trucks and will always use trucks. This greatly weakens, if it does not demolish, any argument on the part of the railroads that they gain business across the Ontario peninsula if trucking-in-bond is prohibited.

Mr. Springsteen has also spoken to Mr. Sim. He is aware that the obstacles in the way of trucking-in-bond are primarily political and he is going to endeavour to convince the Cabinet Ministers most directly concerned of the desirability of trucking-in-bond. He claims that Mr. Paul Martin is prepared to support the proposal and that Mr. Howe has agreed not to oppose it.

Ottawa, March 8, 1946

My Dear Prime Minister,

The Transport Controller has brought to my attention the difficult situation now existing in Canada with respect to railway freight movements by reason of the shortage of available box cars. This shortage has become critical by a progressive increase in the number of box cars held in the United States for freight movements within that Country. My information is that on March 1st there were 26,226 Canadian box cars in the United States which is an increase of 2,417 since February 1st. As against this number of Canadian box cars in the United States on March 1st, there were 16,111 United States box cars in Canada which shows an unfavourable balance against Canada of 10,115 box cars. As the total box cars owned by Canadian Railways is 112,801, you will see that this unfavourable balance of 10,115 is a large proportion.

The Canadian Railways have been operating under the handicap of the shortage of freight cars for some time, and will have to find a way to increase the supply of box cars on their western divisions if they are to take care of the heavy movements of grain and foodstuffs which are consigned for export.

Representations have been made by the Transport Controller to Col. J. M. Johnson, Director, Office of Defense Transportation, Washington, also to Mr. W. C. Kendall, Chairman, Association of American Railroads, Washington, but the response to the request from Canada for the return of Canadian box cars promptly has not met with the desired result. Mr. Kendall has taken action to deliver some substitute box cars to the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian National Railways, but while this has brought some relief many of the substitute box cars are of a lower category rating and are not suitable for grain or high-class freight.

It appears that an order has been issued by the Inter-State Commerce Commission to the United States Railroads based on a directive from President Truman which, in effect, requires the United States Railroads to give preference over all other orders in supplying empty box cars for the movement of wheat, corn, meat and other essential foodstuffs for relief programs for exportation via United States ports on Atlantic, Pacific or Gulf Coasts.

It is the feeling of the Emergency Grain Transportation Committee that, in view of the Presidential message and the I.C.C. order, the inclination of the United States Railroads would be to retain Canadian highclass box cars as long as possible, which will no doubt mean that a portion of the United States' relief foodstuffs will be moved in Canadian box cars to United States ports for export.

This question of the return of Canadian box cars was referred to Mr. George McIvor, Chief Commissioner, Canadian Wheat Board, and he undertook to make his own representations to Mr. McVeigh of the State Department as otherwise Canada would not be able to fulfil its obligations under the joint relief program with the United States.

In the circumstances, I consider that the question of the prompt return of Canadian box cars is one of sufficient importance to be taken up with the United States Government on the diplomatic plane, and I would suggest for your consideration that representations might be made by the Canadian Ambassador in Washington to the United States Government with a view to having this unfavourable situation remedied. I believe that the Minister of Trade and Commerce will concur in this view.

Yours faithfully,

LIONEL CHEVRIER

TRUCKING IN BOND; UNITED STATES-CANADA

13. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL REVENUE, referring to the establishment in 1945 of a joint Canada-U.S. committee on simplification of customs procedures, reported that it had become evident that the main U.S. interest in this committee had been to obtain permission for trucking in bond across Canadian territory. Before the committee proceeded with further discussions, it would be necessary to reach some decision in order that Canadian representatives might be instructed.

The administrative problems involved could probably be met and the concession was regarded as of value to the United States. On the other hand, there was strong objection to such action on the part of Canadian railway employees and on the part of communities affected.

An explanatory note had been circulated.

14. THE CABINET, after considerable discussion, agreed that it was not possible at present to grant to the United States the concession of trucking in bond through Canadian territory.

of National Revenue (Customs and Excise)*

Ottawa, April 23, 1946

With reference to the problem of trucking-in-bond, we have received from Mr. Parsons of the State Department and from the United States Embassy a number of affidavits and letters from shippers in the Detroit area, including large concerns such as the Ford Motor Company and The Dow Chemical Company. While some of these letters merely indicate in a general way the dissatisfaction of shippers at the slower service resulting from using the south shore route, the majority of the correspondence states clearly that the business in question is trucking business which will not be given to the railroads in any circumstances.

I had intended to send you copies of these affidavits and letters. However, I learned from the Cabinet Secretariat that the question of trucking-in-bond was discussed recently by the Cabinet who decided that it would be inexpedient to grant the privilege desired by the United States authorities. In the circumstances, it hardly seems worthwhile to have copies made of the shippers' submissions, though we will be glad to have this done if you would like copies for your records.

It is clear that the Cabinet's decision will affect the work of the Joint Committee on customs procedures and we should be grateful for your views as to the line that should be taken in approaching the United States Section.<sup>1</sup>

Parsons is on vacation but his assistant, King, who is familiar with this subject was keenly disappointed to learn that in our view the trucking-in-bond problem should be considered at the international discussions on trade and tariffs. This is the interpretation which King has put on that section of your EX-1494 reading as follows:

"Similarly in Canada it has been found impracticable to meet the United States request for trucking-in-bond without opening up a broad range of questions of Customs administrative procedure. The Canadian Government has not found it possible to permit trucking-in-bond at the present time except in emergencies since this problem cannot be considered apart from the general question of the revision of Customs administrative practices in both countries. The terms of reference of the Committee are not sufficiently comprehensive to cover this subject, and since it will be considered at the international discussions on trade and tariffs which will take place at a later date, it appears desirable that the Committee should not concern itself with this field."

King informed Scott that the above expression of opinion was anticipated as it conforms with the reports of discussions which officials of the United States Embassy in Ottawa had with Macdonnell.

King pointed out that if we insist on this point of view it would mean the trucking-in-bond problem would have to be left in suspense for probably another twelve months and that the State Department was finding it increasingly difficult to understand why, in the face of the mounting evidence they have accumulated, there should be continued resistance on our part to accede to their request for trucking-in-bond privileges.

It was, therefore, intimated that the State Department would be reopening this subject in the near future and, although King did not specifically say so, it would seem reasonable to expect that the approach will be made through the United States Embassy in Ottawa.

As to prolonging the life of the Committee on the basis you suggested, leaving trucking-in-bond to be dealt with through other channels, King expressed the informal opinion, subject to further consideration by the Department, that if the Committee continued it would be on the basis that we desired to maintain its existence. While at first sight this attitude might appear inconsistent with the view which it is understood Parsons expressed to Macdonnell, namely, that the Committee should be kept alive for the time being as a face-saving measure, Parsons probably had in mind the trucking-in-bond problem. With this subject removed from the agenda, however, it is felt that Parsons is likely to become quite as indifferent as King regarding this Committee. In fact, he expressed himself along such lines informally to Scott in the course of a casual conversation some ten days ago.

In spite of the foregoing, however, King seemed to feel that one more meeting in Ottawa could probably be arranged for discussions to take place on the lines suggested by you. It was agreed, however, that there is no urgency about setting a date and in any case it seems obvious that the initiative will have to be taken by our side in view of the American indifference resulting from our attitude over the trucking-in-bond issue.

Aide-mémoire du gouvernement des États-Unis au gouvernement du Canada

Aide-Mémoire from Government of United States to Government of Canada

June 19, 1946

The question of trucking-in-bond of goods of American origin to interior points in Canada and particularly the in-bond transit of goods by truck across the Ontario peninsula between points in the United States has long been under consideration by the Governments of the United States and Canada. During the war and as a temporary measure the Canadian Government permitted the in-bond transit of goods by truck across the Ontario peninsula between points in the United States, but terminated this authorization December 31st, 1945. During the months preceding this termination of the in-bond transit of goods by truck across the Ontario peninsula between points in the United States, the Government of the United States made several efforts to obtain the continuance of the traffic on a permanent basis. These efforts led to the creation last December of the Joint Committee for the Simplification of Customs Procedures at the Border, which was to consider the simplification of Customs procedures in general and trucking-in-bond in particular. It was generally conceded at that time that there were no technical obstacles to the trucking-in-bond in question and that the principal objection to the operation came from the railways, from labor and from local communities in the Ontario peninsula. It was, nevertheless, understood that the matter would be considered on its merits alone with no thought that a quid pro quo would be sought by the Canadian Government.

The memorandum of June 10, 1946,<sup>1</sup> on the subject of the Joint Committee for the Simplification of Customs Procedures at the Border, which was presented by the Canadian Embassy in Washington to the Department of State, throws a somewhat different light on the subject, however, in that it contains the following language: "The Canadian Government has not found it possible to permit trucking-in-bond at the present time except in emergencies since this problem cannot be considered apart from the general question of the revision of customs administrative practices in both countries." The import of this language seems clearly to mean that trucking-in-bond must be regarded as the most promising means at the disposal of Canada for inducing the United States to make certain changes in customs legislation, regulation and procedure, and that consequently it will be held in reserve for the trade and tariff negotiations scheduled for next year. In other words, it appears that the Canadian Government does now in fact desire a quid pro quo in return for permitting the trucking-in-bond of goods of American origin to interior points in Canada, and the in-bond transit of goods by truck across the Ontario peninsula between points in the United States.

It seems unnecessary to review in detail the history of the trucking-in-bond issue. Since the trucking industry attained maturity in the United States the failure of Canada to offer to this form of transportation non-discriminatory treatment as compared with railroads in the matter of in-bond transit has been a source of protest from substantial interests in the United States. That this failure imposed a handicap upon the most efficient utilization of the national resources of the United States was explicitly recognized when Canada, as part and parcel of the merging of the efforts of the two countries to obtain maximum production during the recent war emergency, temporarily granted the privilege of trucking-in-bond across the Ontario peninsula. Having thus publicly established that the most efficient utilization of the national resources of the United States required trucking-in-bond across the Ontario peninsula, it should be obvious that in the absence of proof of substantial harm to important Canadian interests the refusal to permit this operation in peacetime cannot fail to create hostility to Canada among some of the many interested American citizens.

In the discussions on this subject the United States accepted the obligation of presenting proof, both of its real interest and of the absence of substantial danger to Canadian interests. Considerable evidence collected to fulfil this obligation was presented to the Canadian Government through the medium of the Joint Committee for the Simplification of Customs Procedures. There has been no denial of the substantial interests of the United States in this matter, nor has there been any definite proof of injury to Canadian interests. On the other hand, evidence has been submitted indicating (1) that the present Canadian practice imposes a burden upon United States industry without affording compensatory benefits to any Canadian interest, and (2) that the charge that trucking-in-bond would be accompanied by a number of abuses was without foundation. The period of emergency trucking-in-bond from July 16, 1942, to December 31, 1945, has made it possible to speak with confidence on both these points. In the first place, there seems to be no doubt that the type of merchandise which travels by truck uses that form of transport whenever it is available, even though it means travelling by a longer route, whereas other kinds of goods are more suited to railway transport and are so handled regardless of the availability of allegedly rival means of transportation. Goods which prior to July 1942 moved from Detroit to Buffalo via Cleveland, during the emergency period moved directly across Ontario and are now again moving by the longer route. In the second place, no evidence has been submitted to refute the contention that the emergency experience proved the feasibility of control and administration. Charges that smuggling and other disorders would result did not materialize. Nor has it been charged that damage to the roads of Ontario was substantial, nor that the number of highway accidents was excessive. In short, there can be no substantiation for the allegation that responsible trucking companies with long experience of operation within the United States, able and willing to bear their fair share of any costs imposed by their operations upon the communities through which they operate, are a danger to Canadian interests.

In this connection it seems also pertinent to recall that the Hyde Park Agreement,<sup>1</sup> which operated so beneficially to the interests of both countries during the war emergency, was continued by an exchange of notes of May 7, 1945, and still remains in effect. In keeping with the spirit of that agreement the United States and Canada are pledged to coordinate their economies during the period of post-war rehabilitation. As recently as May 14, 1946, the Canadian Government invoked the Hyde Park Agreement to preserve its highly favorable position in the matter of the export allocation of United States-produced wheeled tractors. It would seem inconsistent to argue that an economic situation which will justify the United States in maintaining an arrangement which clearly discriminates against the rest of the world in the supply of wheeled tractors is yet so nearly normal that the Government of Canada should refuse to permit the resumption of trucking-in-bond between points in the United States. In making mention of this fact, however, there is no intention of associating the request for the recognition of trucking-in-bond solely with the Hyde Park Agreement or with any other emergency or temporary arrangement or condition. The principle embodied in the Hyde Park Agreement is nevertheless sound and apposite in respect of trucking-in-bond.

The Government of the United States believes that trucking-in-bond of goods of American origin to interior points in Canada and in-bond transit of goods by truck across Canadian territory between points in the United States should be permitted as a matter of justice and not in return for some other consideration. The denial of trucking-in-bond is a discrimination between forms of transportation which denies to the United States the most efficient utilization of its national resources. As such it constitutes a source of constant irritation, resulting in repeated protests from United States citizens whose interests suffer thereby. Accordingly, in the absence of any substantial Canadian interest to the contrary, it is believed by the Government of the United States to be a matter of no more than friendly cooperation between the two countries that trucking-in-bond be authorized on a permanent basis.

The United States Ambassador has left with me a long Aide-Mémoire on the trucking-in-bond situation, a copy of which is attached. I am sending copies also to the Deputy Minister of National Revenue (Customs and Excise) and to Mr. Heeney.

This question was raised by the Minister of National Revenue at the meeting of the Cabinet on April 17. The Cabinet agreed that it was not possible at present to grant to the United States the concession of trucking-in-bond through Canadian territory. This decision was communicated to the United States Government and they have renewed their representations in pretty vigorous language.

So far as can be judged from the evidence available, their principal arguments are sound. These are that:

1. The present Canadian practice imposes a burden upon United States industry without affording compensatory benefits to any Canadian interest.

A convincing case has been made by the truckers that no additional business accrues to the railroads (the chief opponents of trucking-in-bond) through our refusal to permit the practice. What happens is that goods continue to be shipped by truck at greater expense and inconvenience via the longer route from Detroit to Buffalo around the south shore of Lake Erie.

2. The practice does not give rise to abuses.

Our customs authorities are satisfied on the basis of wartime experience that trucking-in-bond presents no administrative difficulties and that compliance with all customs laws can be adequately secured.

This is an irritating problem of relatively little intrinsic importance to Canadian interests which has involved repeated representations from the United States over the years, and the Canadian position is difficult to justify. I wonder whether you might wish to bring the matter before Cabinet again with a view to disposing of one of the few points of condition [sic] between the Canadian and the United States Governments. There is a prospect that otherwise the Canadian Government will become the target of a campaign of press criticism in the United States with the matter also being raised in Congress.

TRUCKING IN BOND; U.S. REPRESENTATIONS

9. THE SECRETARY, referring to the decision taken at the meeting of April 17th, reported that the Department of External Affairs had received further representations from the U.S. government.

Reference had been made by the U.S. Embassy to the continuation of the Hyde Park Agreement and its application also to the handicap placed upon U.S. industry by the refusal to permit trucking privileges, and to the discrimination shown by Canada in favour of the railways.

The United States suggested that trucking in bond should be permitted as a matter of justice and not in return for any other consideration, and that the granting of the privilege would not harm any Canadian interests.

An explanatory note had been circulated.

(Secretary's memorandum, July 5, 1946—Cabinet Document 244)†

10. MR. HEENEY pointed out that the question of U.S. trucking in bond had arisen in connection with movement between United States and Alaska over the Alaska Highway and movement into and from Alaska over the Haines Cut-Off and had been made the subject of the forty-seventh recommendation of the current report of the Special Commissioner for Defence Projects in Northwest Canada.

(Special Commissioner's report, June 30th, 1946).†

11. THE CABINET after discussion, deferred further consideration of this item.

TELEGRAM WA-2763

Washington, July 11, 1946

Referring to my WA-2408 of June 11th concerning the future activities of the Joint Canada-United States Committee on Customs Procedure. The following memorandum, dated July 9th, has been received from the Department of State:

"The Department of State has considered the matters discussed in the Canadian Embassy's memorandum of June 10th. The Embassy's memorandum dealt with the future of the Joint Committee on Customs Procedure and with the subject of the United States request for trucking-in-bond.

"The interested authorities of this Government agree with the Canadian point of view that, in the light of its achievements to date, the principal value of the Committee lies in the opportunity afforded to the two customs services to meet and consider problems of mutual interest. This being the case, the State Department is inclined to the opinion that, rather than maintaining a Joint Committee with inter-departmental representation for the purpose, simpler arrangements might be made. The State Department would be glad to promote at any time direct contact between the Commissioner of Customs, and the Deputy Minister for Customs and Excise, or their representatives, on administrative matters of mutual interest. However, the Department notes with pleasure that the United States Section may expect to receive an invitation to meet with the Canadian Section in Ottawa at a later date and it is disposed to await the recommendations of the Committee itself before finally determining its attitude with respect to the continuation or termination of the Committee's existence.

"The problem of trucking-in-bond has been the subject of renewed representations by the United States Ambassador in Ottawa under instruction from the Department. While it is believed preferable to confine the present discussions of the subject to that channel, the relationship of the Committee to the subject seems worthy of comment in view of statements contained in the Embassy's memorandum under acknowledgment.

"The formation of the Committee was directly related to the long standing problem of trucking-in-bond. Its creation was first suggested by a Canadian official as a possible means of viewing trucking-in-bond in a context inclusive of other problems. It was the understanding of the Department of State that this context was conceived as being solely at the administrative level. The agreed press releases of the Committee and all communications between the Department of State and the public have maintained this conception. It was believed that the Department of External Affairs had taken a similar line. It would appear, therefore, that the position now taken by the Canadian Government in the memorandum under reference constituted a departure from the position taken when the Committee was set up, since it is now maintained that trucking-in-bond cannot be considered except in a new context in which changes necessitating United States legislative action are envisaged. The reference in this connection to "regulations in long standing" does not alter this conclusion, it being evident that such regulations are regarded as little less susceptible of alteration than the law itself.

"The Department of State cannot but regret that the Canadian Government has seen fit to adopt this position. It should be unnecessary to repeat that, in the view of this Government, the denial of trucking-in-bond is open to strong objection solely on its merits. It constitutes discrimination between forms of transportation which, in view of the fact that United States practice accords equal treatment to all forms of transportation, is difficult for United States citizens to understand, and which, since no substantial Canadian interest has been shown to have been benefitted thereby, places an unreasonable burden on the most efficient utilization of United States resources. This it does by in fact lengthening the routes travelled between points in the United States for certain types of merchandise which normally are transported by truck. Further, it constitutes failure on the part of Canada to reciprocate in a privilege from which Canada indubitably derives benefit, namely the allowing of trucking-in-bond across the United States and into the United States to interior customs ports of entry.

"The implication in the Canadian Embassy memorandum under reference, that trucking-in-bond will be thrown into the negotiations preliminary to the Trade and Tariff Conference scheduled for next year, cannot fail to add to the concern of the Department of State. Such a possibility necessarily envisages a long delay in the settlement of an issue already long overdue for settlement. The United States adheres firmly to the opinion that trucking-in-bond is a local Canadian-American problem arising out of the geographical relationship of the two countries, having the peculiar characteristic that its primary effects are upon the internal trade of the United States and, as such, should be settled on its own merits. This course has been proven by experience to be in the best interests of the two peoples. The alternative course by which settlement of a local problem is withheld to force a concession on some other unrelated problem is difficult to defend on grounds of equity. Such a course would be, moreover, at variance with the spirit of the Hyde Park Agreement to which both countries are pledged. It would lead away from the high degree of cooperation developed in recent years and encourage instead the consideration of local problems in the light of possible retaliatory measures."

5. THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY, referring to the discussion in Cabinet on July 11th, 1946, reported that further communications making reference to this matter had been received from the United States through the Canadian Embassy in Washington.

In addition to repeating arguments already advanced, attention had been drawn to the fact that the United States had granted to Canada the privilege of trucking in bond across U.S. territory and to U.S. interior ports of entry, and additional reference had been made to the importance to the United States of similar privileges in the Canadian northwest.

Mr. Baldwin that none of the Cabinet's objections to trucking-in-bond are suitable for inclusion in diplomatic correspondence and it seems preferable to return a blunt negative than to attempt to invent further reasons for our refusal. In our discussions with the United States Embassy and the State Department we will have to continue to point out that lumping the trucking-in-bond question with the Customs side of the International Trade talks is the only way in which progress can be made and that too much in the way of high pressure representations may defeat its own ends.

Dear Mr. Heeneey,

RE: SHIPMENT OF GOODS IN BOND OVER THE ALASKA HIGHWAY

1. It is again desired to bring to your attention the Customs regulations which apply to through traffic to Alaska. That country is suffering from a shortage of shipping and it is felt that Canada might well take steps which would allow fuller use of the Alaska Highway as a carrier. This would undoubtedly help Alaska at a time when such help is most needed. The development of better transportation facilities to Alaska would reflect benefit upon the Canadian Northwest.

2. In my June report for June 1946, page 730, Recommendation No. 47, I mentioned the advisability of framing regulations to permit bonded traffic by road. In the light of present developments that recommendation was probably not broad enough, as it mentioned only transportation companies: it is possible that private individuals may require help.

3. The wartime provisions for the trucking of bonded merchandise have expired. A Customs Memo D (revised 1946), Section 7, "Carrying Goods in Transit Only", might possibly be made to apply to the Alaska Highway, but local Customs officers think this very doubtful. It may therefore be said that it is not permitted, without special authority, to truck bonded goods through Canada from one part of the United States to another.

4. It would seem that these regulations are working a hardship on the Alaskans. The agreement between the United States and Canada was that the Highway would be used freely and equally by both peoples. It is suggested that, to honour fully the spirit of this agreement, Canada might well be prepared to permit the passage over the Highway of bonded goods.

5. I have said that coastwise traffic is still inadequate to the needs of Alaska, and it is felt that it will be some time before there are enough of the right type of ship to fill all needs. The smaller coastwise ships can take the inner channel to Skagway: their cargoes must then go by road through Canada. To reach the ports of Anchorage and Valdez requires ships capable of sailing the very bad open waters of the northern Pacific, and there is little such shipping in that area now. I am told that the state of U.S. shipping to Alaska is chaotic. The Highway will always be useful for the through shipment of certain goods, its free use today would undoubtedly bring great relief to the people of the North.

6. Examples of goods, other than settlers' effects, which cannot pass under the present regulations, are:

A mechanic moving to Alaska wishes to take with him his tools and his shop equipment.

A manufacturer in the U.S. wishes to truck crated aircraft to Fairbanks for assembly. Through trucking will save the great possibility of damage in the several transshipments of the water route.

Transportation companies wish to truck refrigerated fruits and vegetables, by a quick route to Alaska.

7. Memo D, Section 7, mentioned in para. 2 appears to allow through bonded traffic in areas not served by railways. It might be argued that this condition applies. There are, however, railways as far as Dawson Creek, there is rail traffic into Whitehorse and to Fairbanks, so no doubt any discussion as to the applicability of this Section 7 would be lengthy.

8. It is therefore recommended that consideration be given to allowing bonded traffic on the Alaska Highway and the Haines Road. As a full study of this question will take time it is proposed that temporary arrangements be put into force as soon as possible, as a measure of relief to Alaska. All the factors can then be studied with a view to drafting final regulations.

Yours truly,

L. H. PHINNEY

Ottawa, September 20, 1946

Dear Mr. Phinney,

I have discussed with the Department of External Affairs your letter of September 14th, concerning shipment of goods in bond over the Alaska Highway.

This question raises a number of difficulties, as it must be considered in connection with trucking-in-bond in other parts of Canada, particularly in southern Ontario. The problem as it affects that area has been under active consideration by the Cabinet in recent months. As you may know, the practice was allowed during wartime by virtue of an Order-in-Council passed in 1942, but the privilege was withdrawn at the end of 1945.

Representations were made by the United States Government to have the privilege established on a peacetime basis. After considerable discussion it was decided that trucking-in-bond could not be considered apart from the general question of customs administrative practices in both countries. A decision has therefore been deferred for the present. It is possible that some progress will be made during the multilateral discussions on international trade and tariff policies which will soon begin.

In view of this, you will appreciate that to allow shipment in bond over the Alaska Highway while denying the right in other areas of the country would place the Government in a very difficult position. Consequently, I think that all that can be said at present is that the matter of shipment in bond over the Alaska Highway will be kept in mind when the general problem of trucking-in-bond is given further consideration.

Yours sincerely,

AGREEMENT WITH MEXICO

Mr. Roper stated that the U.S. had learned from Mexican sources that a bilateral agreement was likely to be concluded between Mexico and Canada in the near future and asked whether this was true. I informed him that the position as far as I knew it was that last winter, as he knew, the Mexican government had asked for permission for a Mexican airline to land in Canada.

We had at that time informed Mexico that prior to the operation of any specific airline from Mexico to Canada there must be a bilateral agreement between the Mexican and Canadian governments and that we would be prepared to discuss this with appropriate Mexican representatives; and that we had heard nothing further from Mexico since that time.

Mr. Roper then referred to the aviation discussions between Mexico and United States which broke down some weeks ago and attempted to find out whether, in the event that an approach was made, Canada would proceed with discussions with Mexico, and if so, whether we would enter into a bilateral agreement with Mexico based on division of services, quotas, etc., i.e. the points which United States had refused to accept when proposed by Mexico. He was obviously suggesting that the United States would not like Canada to go ahead with an agreement with Mexico before the United States did, and if this did happen the U.S. would be even more irritated if we did sign an agreement including principles along the lines of those contained in our present agreement with the U.K., since the U.S. had refused to accept these principles when proposed by Mexico.

I informed Mr. Roper that as far as I knew our offer to discuss the matter with Mexico was still open and if they approached us we would presumably give consideration to the appropriate time and place for these discussions; at that time we would also consider the form of bilateral agreement which seemed appropriate to suit the circumstances.

This raises a policy question which I think we will have to settle shortly, i.e. are we henceforth to accept the formula of the Annex to the U.K.-U.S. Bermuda agreement for all our future bilateral agreements, or are we to follow such form as may seem appropriate to the individual treaty under consideration even if this means a more rigid control than that in the U.K.-U.S. agreement. The U.S. obviously wants all nations to accept the Bermuda formula but I see no reason why we should commit ourselves at present, even though the United Kingdom has given in to the U.S. on this matter. Nor can I see why, if a foreign country wants to have an Annex similar to that in our present agreement with the U.K. providing for equal division of frequencies, we should refuse to accept it unless it is considered that the danger of irritating the U.S. by this action is so great that we would harm our own civil air relations with the U.S.

In view of this situation, there may be some merit in trying to clear up our bilateral agreement with the U.S. before tackling some of these other agreements.

REVISION OF CANADA-U.S. AIR AGREEMENT

Mr. Roper said that, having heard that the State Department would wish to reopen the Canada-U.S. agreement at an early date, he was trying to obtain official information on this point; I would not be surprised if the matter was raised with us this month or next month with a request for early discussions. He was obviously trying to ascertain what the reaction of the Canadian government would be to a suggestion from the United States that the present Canada-U.S. agreement be amended to conform with the present U.K.-U.S. Bermuda agreement; this would mean primarily a revision of the Annex to the present Canada-U.S. agreement to make it conform with the U.K.-U.S. Annex, which contains certain principles to govern the operation of international air services.

He made it clear, as well, that the U.S. would hope at the same time that the Annex would be changed as far as specific routes were concerned, to give the United States fifth freedom<sup>1</sup> rights in Canada and Canada fifth freedom rights in the United States. I did not press him for information on this point but I gathered that they might like to ask for fifth freedom rights for one air service crossing Eastern Canada and one air service crossing Western Canada (presumably in addition to any rights already exercised by Pan American).

I see no objection to inclusion of the principles of the U.K.-U.S. Annex in our agreement with the United States if they so desire, but in this connection we will probably have to consider the point raised in my earlier note on agreement with Mexico, i.e. whether we would commit ourselves to use this form in all other agreements. Further, we will also have to determine what our position will be regarding fifth freedom rights. Offhand, I would be inclined to say that if the United States would grant us fifth freedom rights in New York and in Honolulu in return for fifth freedom rights for one American airline at Montreal and one American airline at Edmonton (these fifth freedom rights possibly to exclude the carriage of traffic between Canada and the United States but to apply on all other fifth freedom traffic) we would get the best of the bargain; my fear would be that the United States might want more than this.

CANADA-WEST INDIES AGREEMENT

Mr. Roper said that the State Department feared that the agreement covering Canadian service to Bermuda and the West Indies would be a monopoly agreement excluding all other services. I pointed out that this was not true and that all that was happening was that in accordance with the Chicago standard formula Bermuda was asking Canada to exercise for it rights granted to Bermuda under the agreement for a specific term of years; this would have no bearing on service which other countries wished to operate in Bermuda.

Mr. Roper then asked whether a rumour that the Canadian government would object to carriage of traffic between Montreal and Bermuda by Colonial Air Lines was true. I stated that as far as I knew, if Colonial Air Lines by agreement with Bermuda, obtained permission to operate a service between New York and Bermuda we should scarcely be in a position to object to the carriage of traffic by Colonial from Montreal to New York on its present line and on from New York via its new service to Bermuda any more than the United States could object to carriage of traffic via T.C.A. from Chicago to Montreal and then on to London. I did say, however, that we would undoubtedly object if Colonial wished to operate a direct service from Montreal to Bermuda as distinct from the two separate operations, Montreal to New York and New York to Bermuda.

Following for Phillips from Macdonnell, Begins: We have noticed press references to the campaign which Senator Magnuson is waging with respect to trucking in bond on the Alaska Highway.

I do not remember whether this point is mentioned in the files, but Keenleyside states positively that the question of trucking in bond was discussed in the Board when the Alaska Highway project was first considered.<sup>1</sup> There was agreement on both sides that the formula eventually arrived at for non-discriminatory use of the highway by United States civilian traffic did not include trucking in bond. The understanding was that the highway would be open to United States vehicles on exactly the same basis as any other part of the Canadian highway system, which obviously did not then and does not now include trucking in bond. Keenleyside discussed this thoroughly with Hickerson at the time and feels confident that the latter will have the same recollection. Ends.

"Trucking-in-bond on the Alaska Highway". The basic agreement referred to in this memorandum is, no doubt, in your files. The supplementary exchange of notes is enclosed herewith.<sup>1</sup>

In view of the exchange of notes between the Canadian and United States Governments of April 10th, 1943,<sup>1</sup> I think you will agree that the United States authorities have some ground for the complaint which they are making, and which I referred to over the telephone. Certainly we should not make any public statements on this matter which cannot be substantiated by the terms of the Agreements.

When the United States Ambassador saw me about this matter yesterday, he emphasized the anxiety of his Government to get the question cleared up quickly and in a way which would carry out the agreements between the two Governments. He added that the United States authorities would propose as entry points for the exercise of this trucking-in-bond privilege, the following: Eastport, Idaho; Kingsport, Alberta; Lauriette Pass, Montana; Coutts, Alberta. I told Mr. Atherton yesterday that we would try to get this question settled one way or the other as soon as possible. I would be glad, therefore, to receive the views of your Department concerning it at the earliest possible date.

Yours sincerely,

Dear Mr. Pearson,

This will acknowledge receipt of yours of yesterday's date, enclosing memorandum prepared by your Legal Division on Trucking in Bond on the Alaska Highway, together with copies of the supplementary exchange of notes, copies of which were not on our files.

In the circumstances, it is the opinion of the Department that we must accept the interpretation of the basic agreement as contained in the exchange of notes in April 1943.

Accordingly, we are proceeding by way of a recommendation to Council for the establishment of the privilege of the transportation of goods in bond by motor vehicle over the Alaska Highway by routes entering Canada via (a) Eastport, Idaho, and Kingsgate, B.C., and (b) Sweetgrass, Montana, and

Coutts, Alberta, (these names differ from those cited in your letter but they are the proper names for the Canadian and United States frontier ports of entry at the ports indicated.)

It is our hope that this recommendation to Council will be prepared this afternoon ready for the Minister's signature in the morning, so that it may be presented to Council at its meeting to-morrow, Thursday, October 31st.

TRUCKING-IN-BOND ON THE ALASKA HIGHWAY

On October 28th the United States Ambassador to Canada made strong oral representations to the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs on the subject of trucking-in-bond on the Alaska Highway, contending that the terms of the agreements which were signed when construction of the road was undertaken gave to the United States permanent trucking-in-bond privileges on the Highway in the postwar period.

This interpretation has been examined by the Department of External Affairs and the Department of National Revenue. The basic agreement is the exchange of notes of March 17 and 18, 1942,<sup>1</sup> which states in part:

"3 (d) Agreed that at the conclusion of the war that part of the Highway which lies in Canada shall become in all respects an integral part of the Canadian highway system, subject to the understanding that there shall at no time be imposed any discriminatory conditions in relation to the use of the road between Canadian and United States civilian traffic.

4 (b) [The Canadian Government agrees] [sic] to waive import duties, transit or similar charges on shipments originating in the United States and to be transported over the Highway to Alaska, or originating in Alaska and to be transported over the Highway to the United States;" (The remaining five paragraphs of Section 4 all relate to the construction period.)

A strict legal interpretation of this agreement taken by itself would not give the United States the right in the postwar period to send trucks in bond to or from Alaska. However, a further exchange of letters of April 10, 1943,<sup>2</sup> clearly assumed that both the paragraphs quoted above extended to the postwar period. These letters also make it clear that the United States was assumed to be entitled by the original agreement to have postwar trucking-in-bond rights on the Alaska Highway. The following appears in a letter of April 10, 1943, from the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Mr. Lewis Clark of the United States Embassy:

“ I have received your letter of April 10th, on the question as to whether the two phrases (quoted above) found in the American-Canadian exchange of notes of March 17-18, 1942, regarding the postwar use of the Alaska Highway, apply equally to the use of the existing Canadian highways which would have to be used in order to reach the southern terminus of the Alaska Highway from the United States.”

“You have stated in your letter that although it was originally intended that most of the traffic over the Alaska Highway would be routed to Dawson Creek, British Columbia, by railway, it has been found expedient to send certain vehicles and transport certain supplies by highway from the United States to Dawson Creek en route to Alaska. My Government agrees that it is the natural inference from the language quoted above that United States vehicles should be allowed to use the roads leading from the boundary to the Alaska Highway under conditions and for purposes similar to those governing the use of the highway itself. (It may prove necessary, however, for administrative reasons, to designate certain specific roads to be used in this way. It would not be practicable, for example, that United States trucks should be able to enter Canada at any point and still receive bonding privileges on the assumption that they intend eventually to proceed along the Alaska Highway to United States territory).”

In the opinion of the Legal officers of the Department of External Affairs, the combined effect of the exchange of notes, 1942, and the interpretation placed thereon by the subsequent exchange of letters referred to above is to establish the right of the United States to enjoy trucking-in-bond privileges on the Alaska Highway.

A review of the relevant Cabinet records does not indicate that the subject of trucking-in-bond was specifically considered by the Cabinet War Committee when it approved the exchange of notes on March 5, 1942, or when it approved a supplementary exchange of notes on March 23, 1943.

During the war years the Canadian Government granted the right to truck in bond in certain parts of Ontario, but this right lapsed when the Order-in-Council under which it had been granted expired on December 31, 1945.

As a result of a recommendation made by the Joint U.S.-Canada Committee on simplification of customs procedure, the Cabinet considered the general problem of trucking-in-bond on April 17, 1946, and reached the decision that no trucking-in-bond privileges could be granted at present. This decision was twice reviewed during the month of July as a result of the representations received from the United States Government referred to above, and on July 17 Cabinet confirmed the decision reached on April 17. In these Cabinet discussions during July, while specific reference was made to the question of trucking-in-bond on the Alaska Highway, no consideration was given to commitments which might arise out of the 1942-1943 exchanges.

TRUCKING-IN-BOND ON THE ALASKA HIGHWAY

I informed Mr. Lewis Clark by telephone this morning that the designation of Sumas, Washington, Noyes, Minnesota, and Portal, North Dakota as ports of entry for trucking-in-bond on the Alaska Highway is out of the question at present. Mr. Clark agreed that Noyes was not a very reasonable port. He said that the Department of the Interior anticipated that a large proportion of the trucking would go through Portal if it were designated as a port of entry. I said that it was felt that even Portal, which is more than five hundred miles east of Lethbridge, is contrary to the spirit of the exchange of letters of April 10, 1943. I suggested that if there were a large volume of trucking from North Dakota it might reasonably use United States roads and enter Canada at Coutts, Alberta, rather than make extensive use of Saskatchewan roads. He did not contest this view. Mr. Clark admitted that the nomination of Sumas was done for political reasons, looking to the time when the British Columbia government had put through a good connecting highway. I suggested that, under these circumstances, Sumas should be considered when the B.C. highway is completed. He agreed that this was reasonable, but suggested that some mention should be made in our press release of the ports of entry. He felt that Eastport and Sweetgrass should be mentioned and a statement included to the effect that consideration might be given to other towns as conditions warrant.

I outlined this conversation to Mr. P. L. Young who is in complete agreement with the position which we have taken. He said that when the British Columbia highway is put through it would be reasonable to allow Sumas to be used as a port of entry, but at present it would be foolish. He agreed to a statement in the press release along the lines suggested in the previous paragraph.

Accordingly, I attach, together with our press release,† a separate paragraph† dealing with ports of entry. If you approve of its insertion it might be put at the end of the statement. The only changes which I have made in Mr. Clark's release are the deletion of the phrase, "when they (the U.S.)

were in control of the road", and the addition of one sentence and the alteration of another in order to emphasize that the road is not now open for unrestricted traffic. The remaining changes are merely in form.

U.S. TRUCKING IN BOND; ALASKA HIGHWAY

11. THE PRIME MINISTER, referring to the discussion at the meeting of July 17th, reported that representations had been received from the U.S. Ambassador to the effect that the agreements entered into between the Canadian and U.S. governments in 1942 and 1943 with respect to the construction and use of the Alaska Highway gave the United States permanent trucking in bond privileges on the Highway.

The Departments of External Affairs and National Revenue, upon examination of the relevant documents, had reached the conclusion that the United States must be assumed to be entitled to postwar trucking in bond privileges on the Alaska Highway. The terms of the exchange of notes and subsequent correspondence had not been considered when the question had been before the Cabinet on previous occasions.

Accordingly, it would appear necessary to admit the U.S. contentions on the subject and a draft press announcement had been prepared for joint release by the two governments; this was submitted for consideration.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated. (External Affairs memorandum—Cabinet Document 3217 and draft press release, † November 4, 1946)

12. THE CABINET, after discussion:

(a) agreed that, in the circumstances, authorization be given for the shipment of goods in bond between points in the United States and Alaska over the Alaska Highway and connecting roads under appropriate regulations by the Minister of National Revenue; and an Order in Council be passed accordingly; and,

(b) approved a joint announcement along the lines of the draft statement submitted by the Prime Minister, subject to the inclusion of appropriate reference to the regulatory authority of the Minister.

Ottawa, November 9, 1946

Dear Mr. Pearson,

Mr. Roper, of the United States Embassy, has phoned me on two or three occasions, pressing for a meeting at Washington to discuss civil aviation matters with a view to revision of the Canada-U.S. agreement. Mr. Roper has now suggested that December 2nd would be a suitable date for a meeting to be held in Washington.

While Canada is not particularly anxious to revise the Canada-U.S. agreement at this time, I think that we should meet our friends in the U.S. in their desire to discuss the situation. Provided the Department of External Affairs is in agreement and is prepared to send a representative on the date mentioned, I will advise Mr. Roper that an invitation from the State Department to External Affairs will be accepted.

I will appreciate an early reply giving your views.

Yours sincerely,

[Ottawa,] November 12, 1946

CANADA-U.S. CIVIL AVIATION; REVISION OF THE PRESENT BILATERAL AGREEMENT

In the forthcoming conversations the United States is likely to suggest an exchange of fifth freedom rights. We have, however, no indication whether they will suggest many changes in the present pattern of trans-border services, which are all third and fourth freedom routes; we do know of their desire to extend the present Great Falls-Lethbridge service of Western Air Lines on to Calgary and Edmonton.

On the assumption that some discussion of the present Canada-U.S. routes will take place we should assess the changes that might be sought by each country in the present division of trans-border routes and the fifth freedom rights for through international services which might be exchanged.

BORDER CROSSINGS

There are no new routes which could usefully be opened up at present. Any changes, then, come down to the opening up of present routes for competitive operations by the services of both countries, and to the extension of present routes farther into one or the other country.

In any opening of routes for competitive operations, the main benefits to Canada would be on the Montreal-New York route and on the Vancouver-Seattle route which would become more valuable if extended farther into the United States.

There might also be some benefit in permission for T.C.A. to operate on the Winnipeg-Minneapolis route although I think this would probably depend at present on whether this route could be extended to Chicago, allowing T.C.A. to develop a Winnipeg-Chicago-Toronto triangular service.

Of the border routes which the United States operates at present, I can not think of others which T.C.A. would wish to operate for some time, although it is possible that in the long run the Boston-Montreal run might be useful.

NOTE (Vancouver to Honolulu might be considered a trans-border third and fourth freedom route but since it forms one leg of a Pacific route I deal with it later when the fifth freedom is discussed.)

The U.S. on the other hand would find it a definite advantage to get a direct Toronto-New York service and while neither Toronto-Cleveland nor Toronto-Chicago have yet proven heavy traffic lines for T.C.A., I think it is quite possible that at least the latter will develop substantially while one U.S. airline has shown a definite interest in the former. The U.S. might gain considerably in the future if it were allowed to operate on these routes. Off-hand, I believe that the result of a general opening of all trans-border routes to operation by the lines of both countries might, for this reason, be slightly more valuable to the United States than to Canada. For this reason any general opening up of routes should be balanced as far as Canada is concerned by agreement on other mutual concessions including the extension of certain existing routes.

Turning to extensions of routes the U.S. wishes to extend its Lethbridge service to Calgary and Edmonton. There is reason to believe they might be interested in obtaining the right for Colonial Airlines on its New York and Washington runs to serve Montreal and Ottawa on the same flights. The present limitation which compels each Canadian city to be served by a different flight is apparently a severe handicap for the operator, particularly in view of light traffic out of Ottawa.

It is possible as well that if the United States is allowed a service from Chicago to Toronto and the question of extension of services is raised, the U.S. might ask that its service be from Chicago to Toronto and Montreal, although the route pattern which has already been established in the United States makes this somewhat unlikely at present.

Canada, on the other hand, might benefit by the right to operate a service from Winnipeg to Minneapolis and Chicago. We would also benefit if a Seattle route could be extended to San Francisco and possibly Los Angeles although this last city is so far inside U.S. territory that it is unlikely that it would be opened to a Canadian line.

Canadian interests would also be served by removal of the limitation which prevents the T.C.A. Toronto-Chicago service from coming within 50 miles of Detroit.

FIFTH FREEDOM

In the matter of fifth freedom rights the United States has certified three lines across the North Atlantic and, to avoid any charges of discrimination between them, it is possible that the U.S. would ask for fifth freedom rights for all of them in Canada. One, Pan American, already has third, fourth and fifth freedom rights at Moncton on a twice weekly service. The amount of traffic available would scarcely justify diverting a trans-Atlantic run out of New York to have it call at Montreal. Montreal would, however, be a natural stop on a trans-Atlantic run out of Chicago, while Moncton would be the normal stop on the New York run. The loss of traffic at Montreal in the event of granting fifth freedom rights would not, I think, be very heavy, particularly if frequent service to the U.S. is offered by both T.C.A. and Colonial Airlines out of Montreal. Moncton is less important since it is not a great traffic centre.

In the West, the C.A.B.'s Pacific decision indicates that the United States would like fifth freedom rights for one airline at Edmonton and possibly Winnipeg as well. Traffic loss to Canada is likely to be of little importance, we might be prepared, before the negotiations are over, to meet U.S. desires on this point. Canadian movements to Asia over the Northwest Staging Route will not be substantial for quite a long time.

Canada's interest in fifth freedom rights in the United States arises out of the proposed T.C.A. Caribbean and Pacific routes. It would be to our advantage to have a traffic stop at both New York and Miami on alternate Canadian routes to the West Indies and a traffic stop at San Francisco and Honolulu as part of alternate routes to the Southern Pacific. In this connection the U.S. might inquire whether we would be prepared to allow a U.S. airline to operate between Honolulu and Vancouver and I would assume that our answer would be yes.

Perhaps it would be a good thing in the negotiations to suggest that for every traffic stop in Canada allowed one U.S. airline, we should be allowed a traffic stop in the United States, so that three U.S. airlines with traffic stops in Canada would mean that T.C.A. would be allowed three traffic stops in the U.S. Probably the U.S. could not accept the principle completely because much more traffic originates in the U.S., but the principle would help us in negotiation. We might, for example, say that we would grant traffic rights in Montreal or Moncton and that we would ask in return fifth freedom traffic rights at New York and Miami and possibly a third city such as Boston or Washington.

Similarly on the West Coast we could exchange full traffic rights in respect of the Honolulu-Vancouver route and in return for allowing fifth freedom traffic rights at Edmonton we could ask for fifth freedom rights at San Francisco.

Turning to trans-border routes, I think it might be preferable to open up only specified routes for competitive operation, on the principle that routes where traffic had been very heavy would be opened in this fashion but other routes would not. On this basis we would suggest that Montreal-New York, Toronto-New York and Vancouver-Seattle be opened up. If the U.S. wished to broaden this somewhat to give them another route we could add Victoria-Seattle.

I would not, however, be unwilling, if the U.S. preferred, to allow every route to be open to competitive operation, but I would only accept this position if the United States were willing to make additional concessions both on trans-border routes and on fifth freedom rights, which we required.

Additional concessions which may be used for negotiation on each side would probably cover the following six main points as far as trans-border routes are concerned.

1. Extension of Vancouver-Seattle line to San Francisco and possibly Los Angeles.
2. Permission for Toronto-Chicago service to serve Detroit as well.
3. Possible opening of a Canadian service from Winnipeg to Minneapolis and Chicago.

4. Permission to Colonial Airlines to serve Montreal and Ottawa on the same flight.

5. Extension of Western Airlines from Lethbridge to Calgary and Edmonton.

6. Permission to the U.S. to run a Chicago-Toronto-Montreal flight. (Not a request, I imagine, which they would expect to have accepted).

A further point which also needs to be considered is the position of third and fourth freedom traffic rights on international routes where fifth freedom rights are granted. If we obtained fifth freedom rights at, say, San Francisco for T.C.A. on the through service to Australia but did not get a local trans-border route from Vancouver to San Francisco, under such circumstances third and fourth freedom rights on the through service might be useful. On the other hand third and fourth freedom rights in the U.S. for our through services would be of little benefit to us at New York since we would have traffic rights at New York anyway on the revised bilateral agreement.

On the other hand, third and fourth freedom rights in Canada for the U.S. through international service making a fifth freedom stop at Edmonton would not be particularly serious; it would be more important at Montreal but I would not be particularly worried in view of the much more frequent service which will be offered by local airlines. As a general principle I am inclined to think it would be difficult to refuse third and fourth freedom rights where you are granting fifth freedom rights.

There may be something to be said for going much farther than the U.S. expects at the opening of the discussions by making a very broad offer which they would be almost certain to refuse, i.e. suggesting that we would be prepared to have all trans-border routes opened for operation by both lines, all present restrictions on these routes such as the fifty mile Detroit ban and the Montreal-Ottawa one flight ban removed, all airports named on these routes opened up for fifth freedom traffic by the scheduled airline of either country without any attempt to define specific routes for these lines, and new routes added from Vancouver to Honolulu and Vancouver to San Francisco.

I think the U.S. would find it impossible to accept this broad an offer in respect of fifth freedom rights and we would then have placed them in the position of trying to restrict the fifth freedom. Moreover, having made a very broad offer ourselves and having had it fail we could then move to the other extreme and make a restricted offer in respect of opening various trans-border routes for operation by both countries and in respect of an exchange of fifth freedom rights.

To sum up, I would be inclined when the time comes for us to make our first concrete suggestions in respect of routes and traffic rights to suggest that the New York-Montreal and New York-Toronto services be opened up for competition and that the same treatment be accorded to the Vancouver, Victoria and Seattle services. We might also suggest that we would be prepared to consider extending the U.S. service to Lethbridge on to Calgary and Edmonton and to allow Montreal and Ottawa to be served on the same flight, if in return the U.S. was willing to give us a service from Vancouver to Los Angeles and to allow us to serve Detroit and Chicago on the same flight, (possibly T.C.A. officials may feel that a Chicago-Winnipeg route would be preferable to either of these Canadian requirements).

As regards fifth freedom rights for through routes we might then suggest that we would give the U.S. fifth freedom rights for one airline at Edmonton on the Northwest Staging route and fifth freedom rights for one airline at Montreal and another at Moncton in return for fifth freedom rights at New York and Miami on a South American route and at San Francisco on a Pacific route. We could then as well offer to exchange rights at Vancouver for rights at Honolulu.

Thanks for yours of November 13th, enclosing a summary of your thoughts on aviation talks with the U.S.

Reference border crossings, I agree that no new routes need be discussed. I am reluctant to have more than one traffic stop in Canada for an American operation, as I am reluctant to ask for more than one stop for a Canadian operation in the U.S. However, we may find it worth while to modify this view. On the other hand, I would not object to opening up Montreal-New York, Toronto-New York and Vancouver-Seattle for international competition.

I have never seen much advantage to TCA in a Winnipeg-Chicago run. It seems to me that the non-traffic run presently arranged, which can stop at Minneapolis, meets all our requirements. However, TCA may be able to convince us otherwise.

We require Fifth Freedom rights in Honolulu. If we can get Fifth Freedom rights in New York for our Bermuda and Caribbean run, I would have no particular objection to opening up Montreal for Fifth Freedom traffic. Perhaps a more valuable concession would be to open either Sydney or Moncton as an international airport with Fifth Freedom rights. I doubt if Miami would be of great benefit to us, as we must look for major volume of traffic in the North.

With regard to U.S. objections to competitive route from Chicago to New York, via Toronto, we can point out that we have competition between Winnipeg and Vancouver by Northwest Airlines, which actually quotes a cheaper rate for the long ride.

For Canadian traffic reasons, we should try to remove the Detroit restriction on our Toronto-Chicago service.

I would see no objection to allowing Northwest Airlines a traffic stop at Edmonton, but I think that this should be the only traffic stop in Canada.

I see no great objection to permitting Colonial Airlines to serve Montreal and Ottawa on the same flight.

I am not impressed with the advantages of a Vancouver-San Francisco run, either as a separate operation or as one leg of the Australian service.

It would seem that our ideas do not differ greatly.

CIVIL AVIATION; AGREEMENT WITH THE UNITED STATES

At the meeting of the Cabinet on December 10th, it was agreed that the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply be authorized to carry on conversations with the United States in connection with the negotiation of a revised bilateral agreement. It was also agreed that the Minister be authorized to sign, on behalf of the Government, such agreement as might result, subject to subsequent report to the Cabinet and ratification.

[Ottawa,] March 18, 1946

The Cabinet considered the question of the Extradition Treaty with the United States at a recent meeting and directed that steps be taken to revise

it. After discussion with the Legal Division and Mr. Read, it has been agreed that we will have to start all over again and put forward proposals for important amendments, the chief one being the inclusion of the principle of dual criminality. Mr. Audette is preparing for an inter-Departmental meeting and Mr. Read feels that this should be followed by consultation with the Provincial authorities.

The Legal Division has asked the Third Political Division to handle the correspondence with the United States Government and I attach a teletype to Washington instructing them to let the State Department know informally what we are doing. Although the State Department will undoubtedly have had reports from their Embassy here about the External Affairs Committee report,<sup>1</sup> we have not communicated with them since the report was brought in and it seems advisable to tell them the subject is under active consideration.

“Your Committee is, however, of the opinion that the Government should consider the advisability of clarifying the Extradition Act in general, and in particular with respect to sub-sections 26, 31 and 32 of Article III, Article IX and Article XII of the Treaty and of Section I of the Protocol in accordance with evidence adduced before the Committee.

Your Committee further recommends that the Treaty and Protocol thereto be reconsidered.”

DESPATCH 725

Washington, April 6, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your teletype EX-797 of March 18 on the subject of the Extradition Treaty between Canada and the United States.

As instructed, I notified the American authorities informally of the contents of your message and have now received the following informal reply:

"I have received your letter of March 20, 1946† concerning the Extradition Treaty of 1942. You advised me that it was the opinion of the interested Canadian authorities that, in view of the report of the Standing Committee on External Affairs, further discussions would have to be undertaken with the United States authorities.

Re-opening of the discussions upon the pending Treaty and Protocol would be somewhat embarrassing for this government. With the understanding that with the addition of the Protocol the Treaty would be ratified by the Canadian Government, the Protocol has been submitted to our Senate for its advice and consent to ratification. Since, however, the controversial provisions of the Treaty are considered by our authorities to be of great importance, we will be interested to learn what your government wishes to propose concerning revision of the Treaty and Protocol. As you know, it is the opinion of this government that there is no need for revision of the Treaty and Protocol for the reason that, under the provisions of the Protocol, actual fraud must be shown and, under the Treaty, the Canadian authorities are the judge as to the sufficiency of the proof in those cases where the United States requests extradition. We will be glad to hear the proposals of your government in this matter, and we will consider the question of undertaking further discussions upon the matter at that time."

RE: EXTRADITION COMMITTEE

I have read Mr. Wrong's memorandum to you of 7th August.† As a result of the Report of the Standing Committee on External Affairs to the House of Commons dated December 11th, 1945, recommending that the Extradition Treaty and Protocol thereto be reconsidered, the interdepartmental committee dealing with this subject met under my chairmanship in June. No decisions were reached nor were any recommendations made, but various departments were to examine certain features of this affair and the committee was to convene again. This has not yet been done due to pressure of other matters but I anticipate being able to call a meeting in the near future.

Mr. St. Laurent may then see fit to say to the House that this subject is being considered by the interested departments with a view to determining a suitable method of approach to the United States authorities and to determining proposals of amendment to the Treaty as it now stands in order to make it acceptable to both countries.

Ottawa, March 14, 1946

Sir,

Periodically, for a number of years, consideration has been given to negotiating a treaty of commerce between Canada and the United States. The question cannot be regarded as urgent since the absence of a treaty does not appear to impose serious hardships upon Canadian nationals doing business in the United States. It is, nevertheless, true that legislation in various States imposes disabilities on aliens and such legislation can only be overridden by a treaty. A case in point is the provision in the laws of a number of States that licences for the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages are restricted to United States citizens. To take another example, certain States forbid the ownership of real property by aliens. In both cases these laws are understood not to apply to the nationals of countries which have treaties with the United States of which there are said to be between twenty and thirty. Such treaties usually also define the status of consular offices and consular property in such a way as to provide certain immunities and exemptions not accorded in the absence of a treaty.

2. The Department was told informally some time ago by the United States Embassy that the State Department would be prepared to negotiate a standard treaty on commerce, friendship and consular rights. During the war it was regarded as impracticable to enter into such negotiations because of the more urgent matters that required attention, but the time has come when the Department can devote some attention to the problem. To assist us in considering its various aspects we should be grateful for the observations of the Embassy based on any relevant matters which may have come to its attention. A copy of this despatch is being sent to the Consul General in New York with a similar request for comment.

3. I should add that the Department has received very few representations on this subject. Cases involving licenses to sell alcoholic beverages have occasionally been raised by the Embassy and there was correspondence some time ago which made it clear that the Consul General in New York could not be exempted from certain State taxes in the absence of a treaty. We have recently received representations from the legal firm of Lash and Lash in Toronto on the subject of alcoholic beverage laws and a copy of this letter† dated February 23rd is enclosed for your information. This is the only specific request for action which has been received by the Department and we have replied by stating that the question of negotiating a treaty is under consideration and asking for any indication that can be given of the extent to which State laws in practice impose disabilities on Canadians.

Washington, March 20, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your Despatch No. 292 of March 14, regarding the question of negotiating a treaty of commerce between Canada and the United States.

2. We do not have sufficient data on the effect of the various disabilities imposed on Canadians in this country by the lack of such a treaty to afford the basis for a considered opinion on this aspect of the question. However, as you know, we have had a good deal of correspondence with our Consul General in New York regarding the difficulties which he has encountered, and I feel that this problem will inevitably increase as our consular representation is expanded in this country. In this regard I would refer you to my Despatch No. 2754 of November 26, 1945.

3. While, as you say, this probably cannot be regarded as an urgent matter, I cannot see what disadvantage there could be in negotiating such a treaty and, particularly on the consular side, there would appear to be definite advantages to be gained.

*Counsellor, Embassy of United States, to Under-Secretary of State

Ottawa, July 11, 1946

Dear Mr. Robertson,

You will recall that a couple of years ago the question arose of negotiating between the United States and Canada a treaty of friendship, commerce and navigation. At that time you said, as I recall, that a lack of personnel made it seem inadvisable to attempt the negotiation of such a treaty during the war, but that after the war you thought it would be a good idea. Recently an officer of the Department of External Affairs indicated informally to me that the time might now be appropriate to proceed to the consideration of such a treaty.

Having reported this matter to the Department of State, I have now been supplied with a draft treaty of friendship, commerce and navigation† together with an explanatory memorandum.† I am enclosing four copies of each for your convenience.

In handing you these documents I have been directed to say that my Government feels that the negotiation of such a treaty between the United States and Canada at as early a date as possible would be highly appropriate and desirable as a means of consolidating on a long-term contractual basis the treatment of each other's citizens and products and the belief of my Government that such a treaty is also desirable as a means of giving formal recognition to the friendly political and economic relations between our two countries, which have never been closer or more cordial. I have been directed to add that, should the Canadian Government desire, representatives of the Department of State are available to visit Ottawa to discuss informally the objectives and substance of the proposed treaty. When you shall have had an opportunity to study the enclosed draft and memorandum, I should appreciate being informed of your desires in this regard.

Also, in presenting this draft treaty, I have been directed to stress that the draft is submitted as a basis for discussion only and that my Government will feel free to propose changes in the text of the articles including new provisions at any time prior to the signature of the treaty. For instance, I am told, we may wish to propose the inclusion in the treaty probably as a new paragraph in Article XIV of something along the following lines:

"Articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of any third country which may be imported through the territory of either High Contracting Party into the territory of the other High Contracting Party shall not be subjected to other or higher duties or charges or to other conditions, prohibitions, or restrictions than the duties or charges and the conditions, prohibitions, or restrictions, respectively, which would be applicable to such articles if they were imported directly from the country of origin."

As there seems to be a real need for a treaty between Canada and the United States such as that proposed, I should appreciate receiving your reaction to the enclosed draft in the near future.

Sincerely yours,

LEWIS CLARK

DESPATCH 1665

Washington, August 14, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your despatch No. 852 of July 12th† and to other correspondence concerning the suggested treaty of friendship, commerce and navigation between Canada and the United States.

2. This afternoon the Commercial Counsellor and I had an informal talk, at their request, with Dr. Robert R. Wilson and Mr. Constant Southworth of the Commercial Policy Division of the Department of State. In requesting additional copies of the draft on receipt of your teletype EX-1955 of August 8th,† I told the State Department, by way of explanation, that you might wish to send copies to the provincial governments. This is one point which Dr. Wilson wished to discuss with me. He was a little, though not too seriously, concerned in the matter of security as in a treaty of this kind the State Department have to work under a secrecy regulation which can only be rescinded on the wish of the Senate. He was also slightly concerned by the thought that submission of this very tentative draft to the provinces might serve to freeze some of the wording or some of the clauses and might make future changes rather more difficult. I reassured him on both points and said that if you were to submit the draft to the provinces it could be done under secret cover and with adequate emphasis on the fact that it was a draft.

3. Dr. Wilson enquired, however, whether it might not be better to submit the second draft which might result from the first informal meeting of experts on both sides and which might be more definitive than this present working draft. I said that I would put the matter up to you and let him have your views.

4. In this informal conversation with Dr. Wilson and Mr. Southworth, I enquired as to the views of the State Department on the possibility of including in this suggested treaty a consular clause. You will recall that I mentioned this matter in my despatch No. 2754 of November 26, 1945 and again in my despatch No. 570 of March 20, 1946. In reading over the United States draft I noticed that there was no mention of the position of the consular officers of each country in the other. I suggested to Dr. Wilson that as a model for preliminary consideration, we might take article 14 of the treaty of friendship, commerce and navigation between the United States and Siam of 1938, or article 8 of the Franco-Canadian convention of 1936. This second suggestion seemed to appeal to Dr. Wilson and while the Commercial Policy Division has nothing to do with the negotiating of consular treaties, he thought that if a clause like article 8 of the Franco-Canadian convention were to be inserted in a treaty of friendship, commerce and navigation between the United States and Canada that our two countries might then proceed with the negotiation of a consular convention modeled on the convention concluded between the United States and Mexico in 1942, copy of which I have already sent to you. I venture to suggest that thought might be given to this possibility in the Department. I would emphasize that the conversations which took place in the State Department this afternoon were, of course, of a most informal nature.

Ottawa, September 11, 1946

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

I should like to refer to your despatch No. 1665 of August 14th regarding the draft Treaty of Friendship, Commerce and Navigation between Canada and the United States.

2. We shall not definitely decide whether we wish to send copies of the draft treaty to the Provincial Governments until we have received the views of the Department of Justice on the ability of the Parliament of Canada to give effect to certain clauses of the draft treaty. If we should decide that we wish to send copies of the draft treaty to the Provincial Governments, we will first let you know in order that you may obtain the concurrence of the State Department. If the draft treaty should be sent to the Provincial Governments, it would be made clear that the draft is confidential, and I am sure that its confidential nature would be respected by the Provincial Governments.

3. On the question of the possibility of including consular clauses in the draft treaty, I am inclined to think that it would be more satisfactory to keep the consular question separate from the draft Treaty of Friendship, Commerce and Navigation. If we really wish to negotiate a consular treaty with the United States it might be a very lengthy document (if one may judge from the Consular Convention between the United States and Mexico) and it would not be feasible to incorporate it in the draft Treaty of Friendship, Commerce and Navigation. Whether there is a need for a Consular Convention, and whether it should precede or follow the establishment of more consular offices in the United States, are questions that require further consideration.

4. You suggested in your despatch the possibility of including in the draft Treaty of Friendship, Commerce and Navigation, an article along the lines of Article 14 of the United States-Siam Treaty of 1938 or along the lines of Article 8 of the Canada-France Convention of 1936.

5. It would not be feasible at present for us to accept an article along the lines of Article 14 of the United States-Siam Treaty, because we are not at present in a position to grant tax exemption for consular properties in Canada.

6. There would be no objection from our point of view to including an article along the lines of Article 8 of the Canada-France Convention, if you think that such an article would confer any benefit on Canada. Indeed there might be an advantage in securing most favoured nation treatment for our consuls with respect to immunities and privileges. If you agree, it would be in order for you to discuss this informally with the State Department.

7. I should be grateful for your comments.

RE: DRAFT TREATY OF FRIENDSHIP, COMMERCE AND NAVIGATION
BETWEEN CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES

1. Annexed is an important letter dated October 8th from the Deputy Minister of Justice regarding this draft treaty. Before discussing the letter it may be useful to summarize what this Department has been doing in relation to the draft treaty.

2. On July 11th, 1946, the United States Embassy in Ottawa wrote us enclosing the draft treaty and suggesting that negotiations regarding it should be started. A copy of the draft treaty† is annexed to this memorandum for convenient reference. On August 31st we sent a circular letter† (copy of which is flagged on file) to all the departments of the Canadian Government which might be interested in various articles of the treaty. At the same time we sent a special letter to the Department of Justice asking for their views on the legal power of the Canadian Parliament and Government to carry out such a treaty.

Our letter said:

"If the draft treaty should be signed, it will be the second treaty of this type negotiated by Canada. The first was the Commercial Convention with France of May 12, 1933 (Canada Treaty Series, 1936, No. 18). The Convention with France was, of course, signed long before the Privy Council judgment of January 28, 1937, in the Reference relating to the I.L.O. Conventions.

Several articles of the draft Treaty deal with matters which normally would appear to fall within the exclusive legislative jurisdiction of the Provinces. I should be grateful for your opinion as to whether the Canadian Government could carry out such articles of the Treaty. If you feel that, in the light of existing Privy Council judgments, the Canadian Government could not, by itself, undertake to carry out such articles, would you favour our asking the Provinces whether they approve of the articles in question and whether they would pledge co-operation in giving effect to these articles?"

3. We have received replies from most of the Departments circulated. The replies are generally favourable but I have not yet prepared an analysis of them.

4. The Canadian Embassy in Washington suggested that detailed consular clauses should be included in the draft treaty. We informed the Embassy in despatch No. 1082 of September 11th (a copy of which is flagged) that we are not in favour of including detailed consular clauses in this treaty and that it would be better to negotiate a separate consular treaty if it were thought desirable and feasible to have such a treaty.

5. The inter-departmental committee which was set up to prepare for the world trade talks is of the opinion that we should postpone action on the draft treaty with the United States until after the International Trade Organization situation is clarified. I understand that the reason for this opinion is that many of the provisions in the draft treaty with the United States duplicate provisions in the proposed constitution of the International Trade Organization.

6. Mr. St. Laurent has not yet been briefed regarding the draft treaty with the United States. He had not been appointed our Minister when the draft treaty was first given to us in July and I was waiting until we had the views of all the other departments before attempting to draft a memorandum for him.

7. In view of the fact that the inter-departmental committee on trade talks is in favour of delay, and the fact that Mr. St. Laurent is leaving in a day or two and will be absent for many weeks, I would suggest that we let the matter stand until his return and then submit to him a detailed memorandum. Apart from the desirability or otherwise of concluding the draft treaty, the most important question (in the light of the letter of October 8th from Justice) is whether the Government will wish to make a test court case out of this treaty. It would be possible to do so, in the hope of getting a judgment of the Privy Council to the effect that the Parliament of Canada may, for the purposes of carrying out a treaty, legislate on matters ordinarily within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Provinces. On the other hand, it is possible that the Government may not wish to have such an important court case at the present time; if that should be the view of the Government, we would necessarily have to request the deletion from the draft treaty of all provisions which deal with matters normally within the exclusive legislative jurisdiction of the Provinces.<sup>1</sup>

I agree, but we will certainly have to face this "Provincial" issue shortly in respect of treaties of this kind. Consulting the Provinces on this one would be a bad precedent.

RE: DRAFT TREATY OF FRIENDSHIP, COMMERCE AND NAVIGATION BETWEEN CANADA AND UNITED STATES

I acknowledge your department's letter of August 31st† last with reference to the above draft treaty in which you ask my opinion as to whether Parliament could implement this treaty if executed and also whether, if part of the Treaty could only be implemented by provincial legislation, I would favour the Canadian Government asking the provinces to pledge their co-operation in giving effect to the treaty.

I may say that I have some difficulty in determining the precise limits of the obligations which the treaty, if executed, would impose on the Government of Canada. I presume that in the course of negotiations alterations would be made in the text and I have not, therefore, attempted to form an opinion with reference to each particular Article.

Looking at the problem from a general point of view I have to advise as follows.

1. Such provisions of the Treaty as require implementation by legislation relating to the status of United States citizens in Canada or relating to such subject matters as foreign exchange, defence, Dominion taxes, international trade, immigration or international communications may be implemented without the assistance of the provinces. Provisions which may be implemented by legislation giving United States corporations the same status as Dominion companies may also be implemented by Parliament.

2. While some provisions of the treaty relate to matters ordinarily regulated by provincial legislation, the present state of the provincial law may be such that no legislation would be required to carry out Canada's obligations. As to such provisions, they might be included in the treaty relying on the Federal power to disallow provincial legislation in order to ensure that Canada would not be placed in default.

3. There is some doubt as to whether the provisions of the treaty which relate to matters ordinarily regulated by provincial legislation and not falling within the enumerated heads of section 91 of the British North America Act, for example, provincial taxes and the legal position of partnerships and associations, can be implemented by Parliament. The better opinion would appear to be that, if Parliament is of opinion that the implementation of the treaty is necessary or advisable as a matter of international relations, it may be implemented by legislation designed to carry out Canada's obligations under the treaty. As the validity of such legislation is not free from doubt, if the treaty as finally executed contains provisions that require to be implemented by such legislation, it might be considered advisable to obtain a decision of the courts thereon before ratification of the treaty.

4. While it is a matter of policy as to whether the provinces should be consulted before the Treaty is executed, it should be borne in mind that a practice of consulting the provinces with reference to Treaties may give rise to a constitutional convention which would hamper Canada in its conduct of international relations. Serious consideration should also be given as to whether Canada should undertake obligations to another state if such obligations can only be carried out by legislation of all nine provinces.

If in the course of negotiations you require a further opinion with reference to some specific problem, I should be glad to give consideration thereto.

F. P. VARCOE

RE: DRAFT TREATY OF FRIENDSHIP, COMMERCE AND NAVIGATION
WITH THE UNITED STATES—SUGGESTIONS RECEIVED FROM THE DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE (ARMY)

Annexed is a letter of October 30th from the Deputy Minister of National Defence (Army) suggesting that some new matters relating to the armed forces be included in the draft treaty. For convenient reference, I attach copies of Articles XIII and XXIV of the draft treaty† to which reference is made in the letter.

I think it would be a great mistake to deal in a treaty of friendship, commerce and navigation with the matters suggested by National Defence. It would be much better to have a separate agreement or exchange of notes covering all such matters relating to the armed forces. In that case it might be desirable to remove Article XIII from the draft treaty and put it in the separate agreement relating to the armed forces.

Article XIII which deals with conscription by one country of the nationals of the other country, is traditionally a matter dealt with in treaties of friendship, commerce and navigation and I personally see no harm in leaving it in the draft treaty. However, if National Defence wants to deal at the same time with other problems relating to the armed forces, I think that this draft treaty is the wrong place for such matters.

I hope that you will discuss this point with the Under-Secretary and perhaps you might take it up informally with National Defence.

One of the problems which National Defence suggests should be included in the Treaty is the matter of the disciplinary powers of the armed forces. As you know we have proposed to the United States Embassy on File 2818-40C that discussions be held shortly on this particular problem.<sup>1</sup>

In general, I should like to repeat what I said to you a few months ago, namely that in my opinion it would be better if the 3rd Political Division were to assume primary responsibility for the handling of the file relating to the draft treaty. There is, of course, work to be done by the Legal Division and we will be glad to do it, but I cannot see any sense in the Legal Division being primarily responsible for this file. I should be glad to have your comments on this point.

DRAFT TREATY OF FRIENDSHIP, COMMERCE AND NAVIGATION
BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA

With reference to your letter of 31 Aug 46, † much consideration has been given to the memorandum thereto annexed.

2. It is noted that under date 13 Sep 46, you were advised that on the part of the RCAF, the provisions of Articles XIII and XXIV were considered to be desirable and that no changes therein were necessary. However, so far as the Army is concerned and this may apply in some degree to the Navy, there are certain points to which it is suggested some consideration might be given, bearing in mind that as between the armed forces of Canada and the USA there will during the post war period, be some degree of integrated training and interchange of personnel doubtless involving USA forces being present in Canada and vice versa, likewise, there may be some interchange of technical and other equipment resulting from the research and development activities of the respective countries, all of which it is considered should be admitted free of duty or customs charges.

3. Having regard to the foregoing, it is suggested for consideration that the proposed treaty should contain provision covering the following points:

(a) Dispensation of the taking of an Oath of Allegiance by persons who are nationals of one country offering themselves as candidates for enlistment in or appointment to the armed forces of the other country if by taking said Oath, they would relinquish their citizenship or nationality in the country to which they belong;

(b) Reciprocal exemption from customs dues in respect of equipment required by the armed forces of one country which can more advantageously be obtained from the other country than by having it manufactured in the country requiring the same;

(c) Authority whereby the armed forces of one country lawfully present in the other country, may through their own Service Courts and Authorities, administer discipline under the Service Code of the country concerned with ancillary provisions in the matter of temporary custody, arrest, etc. In a word, it is felt that there should be some provision in relation to the US forces similar in principle to that contained in Visiting Forces (British Commonwealth) Act 1933 in relation to a "Visiting Force" as therein defined, lawfully present in Canada.

4. With particular reference to item (c) as set out in the foregoing paragraph, it is not considered to be either expedient or constitutionally sound to seek any legislation designed to perpetuate or continue the provisions of Order-in-Council P.C. 9694 of 20 Dec 1943, giving to US Service Courts Jurisdiction (to the exclusion of the Civil Courts) in criminal cases so that consequently, any jurisdiction which might be considered as suitable to be conferred on US Courts and Authorities should be limited to what might be termed service as opposed to civilian offences. The purport of the foregoing has been discussed with the D.M.<sup>1</sup> (Navy) who agrees therewith.

CONSERVATION OF FISHERIES IN THE HIGH SEAS

On September 28th, 1945, the President of the United States issued a Proclamation in the following terms:

“The Government of the United States regards it as proper to establish conservation zones in those areas of the high seas contiguous to the coasts of the United States wherein fishing activities have been or in the future may be developed and maintained on a substantial scale. Where such activities have been or shall hereafter be developed and maintained by its nationals alone, the United States regards it as proper to establish explicitly bounded conservation zones in which fishing activities shall be subject to the regulation and control of the United States. Where such activities have been or shall hereafter be legitimately developed and maintained jointly by nationals of the United States and nationals of other states, explicitly bounded conservation zones may be established under agreements between the United States and such other States; and all fishing activities in such zones shall be subject to regulation and control as provided in such agreements. The right of any State to establish conservation zones off its shores in accordance with the above principles is conceded, provided that corresponding recognition is given to any fishing interests of nationals of the United States which may exist in such areas”.

The views of the Canadian authorities had been sought by the United States Government prior to the issuance of the Proclamation. However, after discussions between officials of the Departments of External Affairs and Fisheries, it was decided that no comments should be offered until Ministerial approval had been obtained, since it was felt that acceptance of the principle of fisheries conservation zones in the High Seas would mark a new development in international law. It did not prove practicable to submit the question to Ministers before the United States Government announced its position. Since then, the subject has received further official consideration and the view has been taken that it would be desirable to obtain an expression of Government policy at this time, in view of the fact that discussions may have to be held with the United States authorities in the near future.

The establishment of conservation zones in the High Seas is designed to prevent over-fishing and the depletion of fishery resources. Although the Presidential Proclamation was expressed in general terms, it is understood that the United States Government is primarily concerned with conservation in the Pacific, and that it has particularly in mind the manner in which Japanese vessels operated before the war in waters off the Alaska coast. These fisheries had been built up by the United States and there was believed to be serious danger that unregulated Japanese operations might seriously deplete them. It is possible that other countries will wish to launch large scale operations in the Pacific which would have a harmful effect on the fishery resources adjacent to North America.

The principle of the conservation of High Seas fisheries is considered to be sound and in the general interest. Moreover, the method of ensuring conservation outlined in the Presidential Proclamation seems both reasonable and practical, so long as:

- (a) the regulations laid down are not discriminatory or exclusive; and
- (b) due regard is had to the desirability of reaching agreement with neighbouring states as to the appropriate measures of conservation in respect of fisheries in which there is a joint interest.

The most desirable course might be to reach agreement on the above principles through an appropriate international body. The matter might, for instance, be placed on the agenda for the next meeting of the General Assembly of the United Nations, for reference to the Legal Committee thereof, having in mind the formulation of an appropriate Convention.

The direct interests of Canadian Fishermen appear to be:

- (a) To avoid being barred from, or discriminated against in, conservation zones established by the United States and other countries (e.g., off the Pacific coast States and Mexico).
- (b) To support the principle of conservation in areas adjacent to Canada in order to prevent their being depleted by unregulated operations on the part of foreign nationals.

The following courses appear to be open to the Canadian Government:

- (a) To make no comment on the Presidential Proclamation.
- (b) To express disagreement with United States policy.
- (c) To accept and endorse United States policy without qualification.
- (d) To express conditional agreement with United States policy.

It is recommended that the last of these alternatives be followed, since there appears to be no doubt that the long-term interests of Canadian fishermen would be best served by the adoption of a policy of conservation. However, we should make the point that no State or States establishing a conservation zone in the High Seas should have the right to exclude or otherwise discriminate against the nationals of foreign States who are prepared to abide by the regulations. Moreover, it is in the interests of Canada, and in the general interest, to support the development of international law by agreement between States rather than by unilateral declaration on the part of any one State. It is therefore proposed that the Government adopt the following policy, to be communicated to the United States Government at an appropriate time:

(a) Agreement with the principle of conservation zones which Canada might wish to establish in areas off the Canadian coast where substantial fishing activities are carried on by its nationals alone.

(b) Readiness to discuss with the United States the establishment of joint conservation zones in areas where nationals of the two countries maintain fishing activities.

(c) Emphasis on the importance of not excluding or discriminating against nationals of other States; such foreign nationals should be permitted to fish freely in conservation zones so long as they observe the regulations; and no discrimination should be practised either directly or indirectly through such devices as excessive licensing fees.

(d) In order to remove any doubts as to the propriety of this position in international law, it would be desirable to have this question examined at the earliest possible by the United Nations Organization or other appropriate international body with a view to reaching general agreement on the rights to be exercised by States in respect of the conservation of high seas fisheries in waters contiguous to their coasts.

Ottawa, September 3, 1946

Dear Sir,

RE PROCLAMATION OF POLICY OF THE UNITED STATES WITH RESPECT TO COASTAL FISHERIES IN CERTAIN AREAS OF THE HIGH SEAS

This will acknowledge your letter of August 16th† and refer to letter of March 15th with which a memorandum on this subject was enclosed.

The memorandum has been studied and discussed and this Department agrees with sections (a), (b) and (d) of the last paragraph. However, it suggests that further consideration be given to section (d) of that paragraph and section (a) of paragraph 4 so that proper protection may be afforded by Canada or the United States, or both, to the particular fishery, or fisheries, that are common to only one of these countries, or to both, and that have up to the present been developed and conserved by either, or both, at continuing expenditure of substantial amounts of public funds, and on which large numbers of the nationals of these countries are, and will continue, to be dependent.

In respect of the protection of such fisheries, it may be necessary to consider the use of some method of discrimination and exclusion, although it may not be necessary to use such terms. In view of the need of affording adequate protection to such fisheries as are carried on in waters contiguous to the East and West Coasts of Canada, this Department is pretty well in agreement with the points made by Dr. Keenleyside in his despatch of April 1st.

The Canadian fisheries just referred to are the following, and memoranda† are attached dealing in some details with each such fishery:

- | (a) Pacific Coast | (b) Atlantic Coast        |
|--------------------------|----------------------------------|
| 1. Halibut               | 1. Lobster                       |
| 2. Salmon                | 2. Scallop                       |
| 3. Trawl Net             | 3. Haddock and other ground fish |
| 4. Pilchard              | 4. Halibut                       |
| 5. Tuna                  | 5. Swordfish                     |

The situation with respect to Canadian fisheries on the Pacific and the Atlantic Coast is somewhat different. On the Pacific Coast the fisheries are almost entirely utilized by Canada, or by Canada and the United States and, therefore, there would seem to be [no?] need of developing such controls in the off-shore areas as might be interpreted to be discriminatory or exclusive. On the Atlantic Coast, while other countries apart from the United States and Newfoundland, such as France, Portugal and Spain, have operated seasonally on the Grand Banks, and more recently on the nearer-to-shore banks with more modern fishing equipment, there now appears to be growing need of some regulatory measures that will not only provide for adequate conservation, but will afford reasonable protection for the maintenance and development of the Canadian interests in the fisheries off the Atlantic Coast on which the Canadian Atlantic fishing industry has depended for by far the major portion of their required supplies of raw material, and to which it must look for maintained and increased supplies as the industry develops.

Yours very truly,

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, October 1, 1946

I wish to acknowledge your letter of September 3 on the subject of the United States Proclamation relating to coastal fisheries in certain areas of the High Seas. We have read with interest your memoranda† on the various Pacific and Atlantic Fisheries and have noted your view that some measure of discrimination and exclusion may be necessary to protect Canadian interests.

We should like to suggest for your consideration that a stage has been reached where informal discussions with the United States might be of value. While the United States Proclamation has been in effect now for a year, the Canadian authorities have no knowledge so far as this Department is aware of what practical steps the United States authorities may have in mind. The latter have shown some desire to cooperate as far as possible with Canada and the time may have come when an exchange of views would be helpful to both sides.

If such a meeting were arranged, we might open the discussion by saying that we were in agreement with the United States on the principle of establishing conservation zones, although from the point of view of international relations we were somewhat concerned about discrimination and exclusion, and also about the advisability of having an international body consider the whole matter with a view to reaching a generally acceptable agreement. We could then suggest that a discussion of the practical problems raised by each fishery in which Canada and the United States had a common interest would show what issues needed to be faced and might throw some light on the steps which the two Governments could profitably take.

It seems to us that an informal discussion of this sort dealing with concrete problems would help us to approach the question on a less theoretical basis than we have so far been using.

If there should be agreement on this programme it would first be necessary for officials of our two Departments to meet and discuss the line to be taken. In particular, it would be desirable to determine what the Canadian position should be on:

(a) Rights which Canadian fishermen should have in conservation zones which might be established by the United States (where we would presumably be opposed to discrimination or exclusion).

(b) Exclusive rights which should be reserved in Canadian zones to Canadian fishermen or to Canadian and United States fishermen (where we would support the principle of discrimination and exclusion).

I should be glad to have the views of your Department.

Mr. R. A. J. Phillips

Mr. G. V. Beaudry

2. The meeting was called with a view to making recommendations to Ministers on policies which the Canadian Government might adopt regarding the establishment of conservation zones on the high seas.

3. There was a general examination of this problem which is complicated by a number of factors. For one thing, a different situation prevails on each coast. On the East Coast a number of European nations have long traditions of fishing in waters near Canada (which would have to be taken into account in setting up any conservation regime) while on the West Coast only Canada and the United States have such historic rights, except for Japanese encroachment which it is desired to limit. Again, adoption of similar conservation policies by Canada and the United States might affect each country differently. The United States fishing industry operates to a considerable extent off Canadian waters while Canadian fishermen operate to a limited extent only off United States waters; thus Canadian fishermen can claim only limited historic rights off United States waters and might be prevented from entering such areas by the United States policy of exclusion. This applies particularly to the tuna fisheries.

4. The suggestion was made that an extension of territorial waters from three miles to twelve miles might help solve the problem. However, it was recognized that by far the greater part of the fisheries which require conservation are beyond the twelve-mile limit and that the practical benefits to Canada of such a doctrine would not justify the long-drawn-out international arguments that would inevitably take place if such a claim were made by the Canadian Government.

5. On balance, it was the view of the meeting that a policy similar to that of the United States was in the Canadian interest. Since both the United States and Mexico have publicly announced their conservation policies, it appeared desirable that Canada should take similar action, perhaps, early in the forthcoming Parliamentary Session. The meeting then reviewed the draft memorandum to Cabinet of March 14, 1946. This memorandum was acceptable in principle to the Department of Fisheries with the exception of sub-paragraph (c) of the last paragraph dealing with exclusion or discrimination. The point was made that no measures of conservation would be acceptable to the industry if foreigners, who had made no contribution to the conservation or development of a fishery, were allowed to come in and reap the benefits of a Canadian conservation policy which had limited the take of Canadian fishermen. The size of the fishery would no doubt be increased and the general objective of conservation would be attained but the Canadian share would not necessarily be increased and might even be diminished so that public support for such a policy could not be obtained. It was recognized that discrimination and exclusion are inconsistent with the broad principles to which the Government has subscribed of lowering barriers to commerce and making the resources of the world available to all on an equal footing. Nevertheless, it was thought that since a policy of establishing conservation zones is in the Canadian interest and since such a policy would not be effective without a measure of exclusion or discrimination, the inconsistency must be accepted and Ministers advised accordingly. It was decided to redraft this sub-paragraph so as to set forth the arguments for and against exclusion with a recommendation in favour of it.

6. There was also discussion of sub-paragraph (d) of the final paragraph which urged consideration by an international body. On the one hand, the view was expressed that it was to the long-term disadvantage of Canada to have international law modified by unilateral declarations such as that of the United States. Holders of this view could argue logically that Canada should object to such a step on the part of the United States and should not itself take such a step even if it meant giving up short-term advantages in the form of fish. On the other hand, it was felt that the time had passed when a protest by Canada would have much validity. To carry any weight, such a protest would have to be made shortly after the announcement of United States policy and already fifteen months have elapsed without any objection on the part of Canada. It would not look particularly impressive if we were to say publicly that it had taken a year and a half to discover a principle in the Presidential Proclamation to which we objected. Moreover, it might be found preferable to support the present and future interests of the Canadian fishing industry rather than the more shadowy concept of the development of international law. It was decided to redraft this sub-paragraph so as to set forth the arguments for and against international action as opposed to national action, and to favour in more general terms than the March 14th draft the principle of international action.

7. It was agreed that the draft should be revised by External Affairs as outlined above and also in such a way as to make it a recommendation as to the announcement of a Canadian policy rather than as a commentary on United States policy. This revised draft will be sent to the Department of Fisheries and, if approved by officials there, will be submitted to the Minister of Fisheries.

SECRET

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your despatch No. 1220 of October 15th† in which you ask for some indication of the date when the State Department expects to submit to Canada and the U.S.S.R. their draft of a new Pelagic Sealing Convention.

2. On taking this matter up informally with the State Department today I have been told that they have not been able to make much progress to date in the preparation of their draft. Resulting from the discussions held in Ottawa in September, 1945, the subject under reference was reviewed in Washington among the several Federal Government agencies concerned and subsequently a cable was sent to the United States Mission in Moscow asking for further views. The reply received apparently was rather cryptic and did not contain very much information.

3. The State Department also asked their Mission in Tokyo to look into the Japanese Government files with the object of finding out what biological data the Japanese had in support of their demand for the abrogation of the 1911 agreement on the grounds that the navigation route employed in fur sealing was damaging the Japanese salmon fishing industry. A report has been received on this subject from Tokyo but there has not been time to digest the information furnished and the opinion was expressed that the American draft will probably not be ready for discussion in any formal sense much before the middle of 1947. Meanwhile, however, renewed assurance was given that the State Department would keep this Embassy informally advised from time to time regarding the progress on the draft itself.

4. From the foregoing it would seem clear that the Department of Fisheries will not have to consider introducing legislation during the next session in order to supplant the Order-in-Council confirming the present agreement between Canada and the United States.

Washington, November 16, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your despatch No. 1384 of November 13th, † with reference to the drafting of a new Pelagic Sealing Convention.

2. I am afraid that my despatch No. 2029 of October 21st was somewhat misleading and I think the explanation was my failure to realize that in order to keep the regulations under the existing agreement in force, legislation or a new Order-in-Council under some other statute would be required.

3. On re-opening the subject yesterday with the State Department, the informal opinion was expressed that the present agreement between Canada and the United States would continue until the two governments jointly declared the end of the war for the purpose of the Sealing Agreement. In other words, the United States government consider that the Agreement is still in force and, moreover, it was made clear that the State Department would view with considerable apprehension any lapse of the existing Agreement. Indeed, if you have any reason to feel that any difficulties are going to arise with regard to maintaining the existing Agreement, pending the negotiation of a new Convention, the State Department would be desirous of conferring with the Canadian authorities to see what steps might be taken to avoid such a lapse. By the same token, if any legislation is enacted by Congress which would, in the view of the State Department, jeopardize the status of the existing Agreement, the State Department have undertaken to inform this Embassy with a view to working out an arrangement which would take care of such a contingency.

4. It would, therefore, seem clear that the only action required for the time being at least, is a new Order-in-Council, or other legislation which will maintain the present Agreement on the expiry of the National Emergency Transitional Powers Act.

I have etc.

DEA/3953-40

Mémoire du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au Cabinet

EXTENSION OF MARITIME KNOCK FOR KNOCK AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

1. At its meeting of December 19, 1945, the Cabinet considered Document No. 114 concerning a request from the United States Department of State for an extension of the present Agreement between Canada and the United States of America (for the waiver of claims arising from collisions between vessels of war) which was embodied in an Exchange of Notes dated May 25 and May 26, 1943<sup>1</sup>. The alternative courses of action suggested to the Cabinet were:

a. Not to enlarge the present Agreement;

b. To enlarge the present Agreement to include all ships and cargoes at the ultimate risk of Canada and the United States of America (subject, possibly, to the exclusion of the Canadian National Steamships);

c. To enter into an agreement of arbitration concerning all ships and cargoes at the ultimate risk of the Governments of Canada and the United States of America.

2. The Cabinet agreed that, as a matter of policy, it was desirable to extend the "Knock for Knock" Agreement to include all ships and cargoes at the ultimate risk of the two governments and that, subject to the concurrence of the Minister of Reconstruction, Canadian representatives should seek this end in negotiations with the United States; it being understood that, if the agreement were so extended, the Navy should compensate Park Steamships to the extent of their claims against the United States.

3. The Minister of Reconstruction, subsequent to the Cabinet meeting of December 19, 1945, signified his concurrence in the decision referred to in paragraph 2 above.

4. On April 10, 1946, the Minister of Transport indicated that officers of the Department of External Affairs differed with officers of the Department of Transport and Justice as to whether or not it was intended by Cabinet that vessels of the Canadian National Steamships should be excluded from the proposed extension of the "Knock for Knock" Agreement. This difference arose in connection with claims by the Canadian National Steamships against the United States, for damages sustained in a collision, in the amount of $119,000.00. The Cabinet has requested that representatives of these Departments should examine the question and submit a memorandum combining the views of the interested Departments and making specific recommendations for the consideration of Cabinet.

5. On April 13, 1946, representatives of the Departments of External Affairs, Transport, Justice, National Defence (Navy) and Reconstruction and Supply met to consider the matter. They came to the conclusion that the proposed extension of the "Knock for Knock" Agreement should apply only to public and war vessels in the possession and service of each country, in accordance with the Anglo-American interpretation of International Law, rather than to all vessels at the ultimate economic or financial risk of each government. It was the feeling of these representatives that this view is consonant with International Law and could be readily applied. It was pointed out that each major vessel of the Canadian National Steamships is owned by a separate limited company, the stock of which is owned by the Canadian National Steamships Company Limited, whose stock, in turn, is owned by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, whose stock is owned by the Canadian National Railways. Thus, while it might be said that vessels of the Canadian National Steamships are at the "ultimate economic or financial risk of the Canadian government", these ships are really owned and operated by a limited company and cannot be considered in the legal sense as "public vessels in the possession and service of Canada". It was therefore agreed that vessels of the Canadian National Steamships should be excluded from the proposed extension of the "Knock for Knock" Agreement.

6. The representative of the Department of National Defence (Navy) pointed out that steps had been taken by that Department to make provision for the possible indemnification of the existing claims of the Canadian National Steamships in the amount of $119,000.00 and he was apprehensive that the negotiations for the extension of the "Knock for Knock" Agreement might be prejudiced if the vessels of the Canadian National Steamships were not included in it. A representative of External Affairs who was in Washington at the time of the preliminary negotiations of September 19, 1945, felt that the exclusion of these vessels would not affect the negotiations; he suggested the Cabinet's policy should exclude these vessels subject to a further reference to Cabinet should the negotiations with the United States Department of State become deadlocked because of the non-inclusion of Canadian National Steamships vessels.

7. Since the Cabinet meeting of December 19, 1945, it has become apparent also that the United States of America may have a claim against Canada by reason of a collision of a Canadian war vessel and a United States flying boat in the possession and service of the United States government. It appears also that the United States may have a claim against Canada arising out of the docking of two United States public vessels in a drydock owned by the Canadian Government. The United States Government is anxious to have these claims included in the proposed extension. It is the opinion of the representatives of the five Departments concerned that these claims should be included in the Agreement providing the drydock and flying boat concerned were in the possession and service of each Government.

8. Accordingly, it was agreed to recommend that Cabinet should establish the following policy for the Canadian representatives in the course of their negotiations with those of the United States of America:

"As a matter of policy, the Canadian representatives should seek to include in the extended Agreement only those legal maritime claims by either government against the other government or any servant, agent or instrumentality of the other government or any vessel, flying-boat or drydock in the possession and service of the other government in respect of damages by reason of collision, salvage, general average, negligent navigation or negligent management of the said vessel, flying-boat or drydock; subject, however, to appropriate provisions for adjustment of matters arising out of any insurance carried by either government.

"In negotiating with the representatives of the Government of the United States of America, the Canadian representatives should make clear the reasons for the non-inclusion of vessels of the Canadian National Steamships and, if required, should resist any attempt to have them included until such time as it appears that negotiations are likely to fail due to the lack of such inclusion; in which case the matter shall be referred for the further consideration of Cabinet".

At a meeting of the Cabinet held yesterday the following item, of particular interest to your department was discussed:

Canada-U.S. knock for knock agreement; Canadian National Steamships

The Cabinet agreed:

(a) that as a matter of policy the Canadian representatives, in negotiations with the United States, should seek to include in the extended agreement only those legal maritime claims by either government against the other government or any servant, agent or instrumentality of the government or any vessel, flying-boat or drydock in the possession and service of the other government in respect of damages by reason of collision, salvage, general average, negligent navigation or negligent management of the said vessel, flying-boat or drydock; subject, however, to appropriate provisions for adjustment of matters arising out of any insurance carried by either government; and,

(b) in negotiating with the representatives of the U.S. government, the Canadian representatives should make clear the reasons for the non-inclusion of vessels of the Canadian National Steamships and, if required, should resist any attempt to have them included until such time as it appears that negotiations are likely to fail due to the lack of such inclusion: in which case the matter should be referred for further consideration of the Cabinet.

Excellency,

With reference to the exchange of notes of May 25 and 26, 1943, between the Governments of Canada and of the United States of America recording an agreement for the waiver of claims from collisions between vessels of war, I have the honour to inform you that the Government of Canada is prepared to give effect to an agreement in the following terms:

ARTICLE 1

In this Agreement the expression "Government vessel" means a vessel (including a vessel of war), flying-boat or drydock owned by or under bareboat charter to, requisitioned by, demised to, or otherwise operated by, either Government, its servant, agent or instrumentality on bareboat terms or chartered to or otherwise operated by or for such Government on terms which authorize such Government to make this Agreement effective with respect to such vessel, flying-boat or drydock; it includes a vessel operated under the supervision of the War Shipping Administration or Park Steamship Company Limited, but does not include (a) a vessel, flying-boat or drydock on bareboat charter or otherwise on demise by either Government to a Government other than a contracting Government, or to any person, firm or corporation otherwise than as the servant, agent or instrumentality of either contracting Government; or (b) a vessel owned by Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships Limited, Canadian National Steamships Company Limited or associated or subsidiary companies.

ARTICLE 2

The Government of Canada and the Government of the United States of America agree that each shall waive all those legal maritime claims by either Government against the other Government or any servant, agent or instrumentality of the other Government or any Government vessel in respect of collision, salvage, general average, negligent navigation or negligent management of the said Government vessel or in respect of the loss or salvage of, damage to, or general average in connection with, cargoes carried in the said Government vessel; subject however to the provisions of Articles 3 and 4.

ARTICLE 3

Where in any case claims arise which are not required to be waived by this Agreement in addition to or in conjunction with claims which are so required to be waived and it is necessary in any proceedings including proceedings for the limitation of liability that claims be marshalled or for the proper assessment of any salvage or general average that values should be estimated, the provisions of this Agreement shall not apply but claims which would otherwise be required to be waived under this Agreement shall be asserted. Any recoveries, however, shall be waived by the Government entitled to such recoveries or at the option of such Government shall be dealt with in such other way as will give effect to the purpose of this Agreement.

ARTICLE 4

1. In order to carry out the full intention of this Agreement each Government will so arrange in connection with bareboat charters or demises to it or requisitions by it that neither the owners, nor the persons, firms or corporations interested through such owners, shall have or assert any claims of the character specified herein.

2. Each Government represents that in no case in which a legal maritime claim arises under any insurance that has been or will be effected on or in respect of any Government vessel or cargo carried therein shall any rights that can be exercised against the other Government be subrogated to the insurers concerned insofar as the insurers' liability relates to a claim which is required to be waived by this Agreement.

ARTICLE 5

Each Government shall facilitate the assertion by the other Government of sovereign immunity in relation to any Government vessel.

ARTICLE 6

This Agreement terminates the agreement contained in the exchange of notes of May 25 and 26, 1943, and it shall apply to legal maritime claims arising since December 7, 1941 but remaining unsettled on the day this Agreement enters into force, as well as in respect of claims arising on or after such day and during the period in which the Agreement shall remain in force.

ARTICLE 7

This Agreement shall remain in force until the expiration of six months from the day on which either Government shall have given notice in writing to the other Government of an intention to terminate the Agreement.

I have the honour to inform you that if an Agreement in accordance with the above terms is acceptable to the Government of the United States of America, it shall be considered by the Government of Canada to have been concluded and to be in effect as of the date of a corresponding note from you indicating that the Government of the United States is prepared to give effect to the Agreement.

Accept, Excellency, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

Memorandum from Legal Division to Head, Legal Division

[Ottawa,] October 8, 1946

RE: KNOCK FOR KNOCK AGREEMENT WITH THE UNITED STATES

On 15th April a memorandum was submitted to Cabinet recommending that:

"As a matter of policy, the Canadian representatives should seek to include in the extended Agreement only those legal maritime claims by either government against the other government or any servant, agent or instrumentality of the other government or any vessel, flying-boat or drydock in the possession and service of the other government in respect of damages by reason of collision, salvage, general average, negligent navigation or negligent management of the said vessel, flying-boat or drydock; subject, however, to appropriate provisions for adjustment of matters arising out of any insurance carried by either government.

“In negotiating with the representatives of the Government of the United States of America, the Canadian representatives should make clear the reasons for the non-inclusion of vessels of the Canadian National Steamships and, if required, should resist any attempt to have them included until such times as it appears that negotiations are likely to fail due to the lack of such inclusion; in which case the matter shall be referred for the further consideration of Cabinet”.

At a meeting of the Cabinet on April 17th, the recommendations set out in the memorandum to Cabinet of 15th April, were considered and approved. It was agreed that the Canadian representatives should proceed accordingly.

The secretary of the Cabinet asked that he be informed, in due course, whether or not the United States are prepared to conclude an Agreement along these lines.

On 13th June a draft Note was forwarded to the Canadian Ambassador in Washington concerning the extension of the Knock for Knock Agreement. The Ambassador was requested to “bring this draft Note to the attention of the State Department and ascertain whether that Department would be willing to use this draft as a basis upon which to negotiate an Agreement between both countries.” By a teletype dated 28th September† the Ambassador advised us that at the request of the State Department he had officially transmitted in a formal Note the text of the draft Agreement originally forwarded as a basis for negotiation.

On 4th October we requested the Ambassador by teletype† to confirm our understanding that the draft was to be used as “a basis for negotiation” only, and not as a formal Agreement.

In reply to this teletype, the Chargé d’Affaires stated that Mr. Yingling of the State Department had advised him informally that a draft Agreement was acceptable to the United States Government. He had therefore transmitted to the State Department a formal Note† signed by the Ambassador informing them that the Government of Canada was prepared to give effect to the Agreement based on the draft text.

This set of facts produced some apprehension that action might have been taken a little hastily.

At a meeting in the Legal Division Conference Room this afternoon, the following persons met under the chairmanship of Mr. Audette of this Division: Mr. G. M. Jarvis, Director General of the Legal Branch of the Department of Reconstruction and Supply, Captain Kerr of the Department of Transport, Mr. Finley, Counsel of National Harbours Board, Lieutenant Commander Dewis and Mr. Watkins of Navy, and Mr. Foote of this Department.

After a thorough discussion of this question it was the general feeling of the Committee that the situation was definitely advantageous, and that having submitted a draft Agreement to the United States Government, it would be extremely difficult to do anything but carry on with it if the Americans approved, even if it were felt the proposed draft was not to our advantage.

Mr. Finley of National Harbours Board was somewhat apprehensive about their position in this Agreement, as the Canadian Government owns a number of jetties which occasionally suffer damage from ships coming alongside and the United States apparently does not own similar jetties. However, he did not feel that this was a sufficiently serious consideration to warrant any action on our part.

To sum up, I think that our proposals, having been accepted, and none of the interested Departments having raised any objections to them, our position is as good as we could ever have hoped for even if Washington moved more quickly than we anticipated.

On the question of procedure and Cabinet approval, I have chatted with Mr. Baldwin who does not feel we need to go back to Cabinet. The meeting was in accord with this view which I shared with Mr. Baldwin and put forth for discussion.<sup>1</sup>

IMMEDIATE. Following for Pierce from Ritchie, Begins: Your letter of February 20th† concerning the draft first chapter of proposed report to Congress by the Export-Import Bank.

Maffrey has now given me the latest version of this chapter which has been re-drafted to take account of the points raised in your letter and in our previous telephone conversation. On all points he was, of course, anxious to meet our wishes, and accepted our proposed language willingly. On the reference to consultation between our two Governments concerning foreign lending plans and operations, Maffrey was keen on having some such statement in his report and hoped that we would not be unhappy if the report were to state that "the Canadian and United States Governments have kept each other informed at all times of their foreign loan activities under the Canadian Export Credit Insurance Act on the one hand, and through the Export-Import Bank on the other". Since this proposed language would seem to be in line with that suggested in paragraph 4 of your letter as the version which would be least objectionable to you if Maffrey was particularly anxious to have some reference to this co-operation, I would propose to tell Maffrey that the revised version is not objectionable to us. As they will be reading proofs almost immediately, Maffrey has asked me to let him have our reaction not later than Tuesday, February 26th, on which date I would propose to indicate our informal agreement with this section of his report unless I am advised by you to the contrary by Tuesday noon. Ends.

Dear Jack [Hickerson],

There are times when I despair of the future, especially when I read the following in the Congressional Record from Senator Ellender of Louisiana: "This Nation owes that much more money than does the British Empire. In other words, our national debt today is over twice as much as that of Great Britain and all her possessions. Included in her possessions are, of course, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and British South Africa."

If Senator Ellender knows so little about Canada, it might be desirable to invite him to come around and see us sometime at the Embassy when we will do our best to convince him that we are the possession of nobody but our people, our government, and the Soviet Military Attaché!

Yours sincerely,

CONFIDENTIAL

London, November 4, 1946

Dear Mr. Pearson,

I had a call today from Colonel Eric Phillips of Toronto, who spoke to me about difficulties his Fiberglass Company, at Oshawa, Ontario, is encountering in getting its platinum requirements from the U.S. It appears that the U.S. Government has repossessed itself of all platinum stocks which had been rented out to industrial processors, in wartime, by the Metals Reserve Corporation, and now refuses to provide any to processors located outside the continental United States. In the case of Phillips' company, they have not only turned down his request for additional quantities of platinum, but have asked him to return the quantity he is now using as lining for his glass furnaces, and have suggested that he meet his requirements out of Canadian platinum. The catch in this is that virtually all our platinum goes from Sudbury to Huntingdon, W. Va., for refining, and thence into the American supply stream. Phillips was wondering whether he could make arrangements over here to rent platinum from the United Kingdom supply authorities on the same basis as he had been procuring it from the U.S. during the war.

I told him that I thought the situation which he described was one that our Government could quite properly take up with the U.S. Government and with the International Nickel Company. I see no objection to—in fact, I should welcome—efforts of the American Government to maintain an adequate strategical stockpile of platinum, and think their scheme for keeping this stockpile in active use by renting it to industrial processors is a sensible one; but I see no valid reason why they should exclude processors located in Canada from access to platinum under the same conditions as American operators.

I suggested that Phillips take the question up with Mr. Howe or with the Department of External Affairs, to determine what action the Government could take to help him, and have written Mr. Howe (who had suggested that Colonel Phillips come to see me) giving him the foregoing account of the platinum set-up.<sup>1</sup>

Yours sincerely,

DESPATCH 36

Washington, January 7, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your despatch No. 1436 of December 28th with enclosed copies of the list of commodities which could be removed from export control at this time, and which would be removed from control if the action taken would not be considered as a failure on Canada's part to co-operate with the United States Government in controlling shipments to Argentina.

2. I am enclosing a copy of a memorandum which was left with State Department on January 2nd, along with a copy of the list of commodities under reference,† with the object of providing a basis to discuss with the United States authorities informally their reaction to the proposed removal of these items from Canadian export control.

3. On January 3rd Mr. Scott was invited to attend a meeting in the State Department, presided over by Mr. Parsons. Others present included Mr. Gilmore, who took the lead in the discussions reported on in my despatch No. 2717 of November 21st, Mr. James Farris of the International Resources Division, also present at this previous meeting, Mr. Frederick Exton of the Munitions Control Section, and Mr. Shaetzel, representing Mr. Clair Wilcox, Director of the Office of International Trade Policy.

4. The meeting held on January 3rd covered substantially the same ground explored in November last, except that the urgency of this problem from the Canadian point of view was further emphasized, and it was moreover stressed that the removal of the items in question from the Canadian positive list would not, in our view, draw public attention to Canada's more liberal policy toward Argentina to the extent which the American officials feared, since our announcement would primarily be directed toward informing the Canadian export community that the commodities in question were no longer subject to export control except to very few destinations. This argument was not convincing to the Americans, who contended that our proposed action would seriously embarrass their position not only vis-à-vis Argentina, but would also lead to criticism from United States exporters who would claim that Canadian firms were in a position to expand their business with Argentina at a time when American firms were being handicapped. This American view was expressed in spite of the fact that for some considerable time past exports have been freely licensed to Argentina, except for strategic materials and those in short supply, the only limiting factor being the requirement of an individual licence as distinct from the privilege of exporting to what is called the K Group of countries without licences for all commodities not specifically listed.

5. Attention was also drawn by Mr. Exton, who is responsible for the control of exports of armaments, munitions and aircraft, to the inclusion of toluol, an ingredient for the manufacture of explosives, and aircraft parts in our list. As regards the aircraft parts, Mr. Exton pointed out that the list did not show any distinction between military and commercial, and therefore in his opinion the status of aircraft parts was rather unsatisfactory. The opportunity was taken at this point in the discussion to enquire if the United States authorities would feel that their difficulties could be overcome by our removing certain items from the list. This suggestion brought forth no specific comment.

6. The American attitude throughout the meeting was substantially the same as the views recorded in my despatch No. 2717 of November 21st. In other words, they are still determined to retain Argentina in the E Group of countries under the United States export licensing system, pending the outcome of the conference of American Republics proposed for March of this year. Whereas in November no intimation was given that Canada would not continue to co-operate along similar lines, the intimation given at this meeting that we propose removing from export control the commodities on the list submitted upset the Americans considerably. Our view that the removal of these items from our export control would really have little effect on the volume of goods moving to Argentina was unconvincing.

7. In fairness to the opinions expressed by the Americans at this meeting, it should perhaps be mentioned that Mr. Farris in particular took several occasions to draw to the attention of his colleagues the fact that, to use his own words, "time had run out on the American export policy toward Argentina", and that for several months past they had not been able to offer any practical help to our export control authorities in regard to our operational problem. The opportunity was taken of Mr. Farris' support several times during the meeting, when a tendency developed for the Americans to inject the political aspect of this problem into the discussion, to emphasize that what we were trying to solve was the operational difficulty which results from the nature of our administration of export control, and not, on this occasion, to become involved in a debate on the political issues affecting Argentina. It was, as you will appreciate, difficult to keep the two separate, but the American officials present freely conceded their knowledge of the Canadian point of view, namely, that the United States was not effectively accomplishing its political objective vis-à-vis Argentina by means of economic restrictions.

8. It was also pointed out to the Americans that there were no effective measures to prevent the re-export from other Latin American countries to Argentina of a wide range of commodities no longer subject to the United States individual licensing system. They had no effective answer to this argument.

9. Reference was also made to the fact that other countries, notably the United Kingdom, have not seen fit officially to apply restrictive measures in their export control to Argentina.

10. At the conclusion of the meeting, although Mr. Parsons indicated that the matter would be further considered in the State Department, it was quite obvious that the United States reaction to these proposals was going to be unfavourable.

11. On January 5th Mr. Parsons informed the Embassy that the Pan-American Section of the State Department had shown serious concern regarding the Canadian proposal, and that in view of the urgency which had been attached to the latter from the Canadian standpoint, instructions were being sent to the American Ambassador in Ottawa to ask the Canadian authorities to defer momentarily our proposed action to provide time for the State Department to prepare a note to me which it is expected will reiterate the views reported in my despatch of November 21st last, and at the same time express the hope that the Canadian proposal can be deferred for at least sixty days. It is apparently the American hope that within sixty days they may be able to finalize their attitude toward Argentina, following the outcome of the forthcoming elections in that country. Mr. Parsons explained that no reference would be made in their note to the informal memorandum left with him, but that the note will indicate that the United States authorities understand certain actions regarding Canadian export control toward Argentina are under contemplation.

12. Mr. Parsons conveyed the impression that the action which the State Department had decided upon resulted from the reaction of Mr. Spruille Braden to our proposals on having them brought to his attention on January 5th.

13. The highlights of Friday's meeting were conveyed verbally in a telephone conversation which Mr. Stone had on January 5th with Mr. Pierce.

In addition Mr. Scott also reported informally by telephone to Mr. English in the Department of Trade and Commerce, with respect to certain of the operational details involved. Both these conversations took place before hearing from Mr. Parsons late on the morning of January 5th.

*Mémorandum de l'ambassade aux États-Unis au département d'État
des États-Unis*

Memorandum from Embassy in United States to Department of State of United States

Washington, January 2, 1946

The Canadian Embassy wishes to draw the attention of the Department of State to informal discussions which have been carried on for some time with the United States authorities concerned in regard to the modification in the control of exports to Argentina.

Attached to this memorandum is a list of commodities which Canada could remove from export control, and which it is desired to remove from such control if the action taken would not be considered as a failure on Canada's part to co-operate with the United States Government in controlling shipments to Argentina.

The Canadian authorities responsible for the administration of export control are under constant pressure from the Canadian export community to reduce the number of items under export control, but such action cannot effectively be taken under the Canadian regulations without specifically listing the Argentine along with the blockade and former enemy countries.

It is the feeling of the Canadian authorities that the removal of the items on the attached list from Canadian export control would really have very little effect on the volume of goods moving to Argentina. On the other hand, it would greatly simplify the administrative work of the Canadian Export Permit Branch. Even with the proposed changes Canada would still be retaining an adequate control over the movement of all strategic materials to Argentina, for example, within the last three weeks an export permit application covering two hundred parachutes for Argentina was refused as it was obvious these parachutes would be used in the training of Argentine airmen.

It is also proposed to amend Clause 5 of the Canadian Export Permit Regulations by adding to the list of countries exempted from requiring export permits on all shipments. Clause 5 now reads in part—

"No person shall export any goods to any country, other than parts of the British Empire or the Western Hemisphere without first having obtained an export permit, except as provided in Regulation 31. For the purpose of this Order, the Western Hemisphere is defined as embracing all land west of longitude 30° east and west of the International Date Line".

Under the new proposal Clause 5 would read—

"No person shall export any goods to any country, other than to parts of the British Empire; destinations within the Western Hemisphere and Possessions and Protectorates of the United States; Belgium, France, The Netherlands and their Colonies and Protectorates; Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Greece, Luxembourg, Norway, Poland, Turkey, U.S.S.R., Vatican City, Yugoslavia, China, Egypt, Iran, Iraq, without first having obtained an export permit issued by or on behalf of the Minister of Trade and Commerce."

This arrangement would have the effect of allowing goods in free supply to move to the liberated areas without export permits; however, as in the case of Argentina, even with these proposed changes there would still be adequate control over the movement of all strategic materials.

In the circumstances as recorded above, the Canadian Embassy would welcome the views of the State Department on the proposed modifications in the Canadian export control regulations.

TELEGRAM WA-116

Washington, January 8, 1946

SECRET. Reference my despatch No. 36 of January 7th which should reach you tomorrow, and other communications concerning the control of exports to the Argentine.

2. Mr. Stone and Mr. Scott of this Embassy went to the State Department this morning to receive from Mr. Braden, Assistant Secretary of State, the following note, Begins:

I have the honour to refer to information which has been received by this Government to the effect that the Canadian Government intends very shortly substantially to modify its present export controls. It is understood that as a result of the proposed modification a substantial list of products may be exported to Argentina without the necessity of individual licences.

In this connection I desire on the part of the Government of the United States to express keen appreciation of the consistently cooperative attitude which has been displayed throughout the war by all officials of the Canadian Government in the joint solution of the manifold problems of trade control which have arisen. However, the implications at this time of the proposed change of procedure upon the control of exports to inimical interests in Argentina are viewed by this Government with a great deal of concern.

An election campaign of unprecedented bitterness is now in progress in Argentina. This circumstance counsels the greatest caution in adopting any economic measures which may be interpreted by public opinion, both in Argentina and throughout the hemisphere, as an endorsement of the policies and actions of the present Fascist-type Argentine regime. It was for this reason that the Government of the United States retained Argentina among the Group E countries, for which individual licences are required, at the time the United States export control regulations were relaxed in September.

Under present circumstances it would be entirely impracticable for the Government of the United States to consider any further relaxation of its export controls affecting shipments to Argentina, and it is hoped that as a further measure of cooperation Your Excellency's Government would be willing to postpone its projected action until the present situation shall have become further clarified by the forthcoming elections. Ends.

3. In handing this note to the representatives of this Embassy, Mr. Braden said that he could not over-emphasize the importance which he attached to the maintenance of present Canadian controls over exports to Argentina. He reviewed at some length the present political situation in that country and said that any relaxation of controls would be used by Mr. Peron as an argument in his favour in the present elections which there was still a possibility, although not a strong one, that he might lose. He stressed the psychological effect of the present controls rather than their actual effect on Argentine economy, which, except in the case of armaments and materials of war, is not great in view of the fact that a reasonably free licensing policy is being followed by both Canada and the United States. I might say in this regard that Mr. Braden, in the first instance, implied that the licensing policy of this country was to allow only those exports to go forward which were required for the health and well-being of the people of Argentina against whom, he said, he had nothing. Mr. Braden's implication was bluntly refuted later in the conversation by one of his assistants.

4. It was pointed out to Mr. Braden that in effect what we were being asked to do was to maintain an administrative machine which was out of line with our general policy of the relaxation of controls of materials in free supply and to continue to exercise control over a long list of commodities to a great many countries, merely to maintain a control over these commodities to the Argentine. It was added that the effectiveness of the assistance which such Canadian controls afforded the United States in its economic policy vis-à-vis the Argentine, was very doubtful. The alternative would be to relax our controls to every country except the Argentine, which would mean singling out one of the United Nations and maintaining a discriminatory policy vis-à-vis that nation on the eve of the first meeting of the Assembly, or during it, which would probably be regarded as politically undesirable. Mr. Braden said that he would, of course, welcome such a step from his point of view. He went so far as to add that the time might come when the Argentine would not be one of the United Nations. It was further pointed out to Mr. Braden that it was primarily on the insistence of the United States Government that the Argentine had become one of the United Nations and that he could readily understand that this fact, coupled with present United States economic policy vis-à-vis that country, in which they were asking us to cooperate, led to some confusion in our minds. Mr. Braden expressed his thorough embarrassment that, as a result of United States insistence, the Argentine was a member of the United Nations Organization, in which expression he was joined by the other officers of the State Department present at the discussion.

5. In the course of the discussion it came out that the main desire of the State Department is that we should maintain our present controls at least until after the elections in Argentina as is stated in the note quoted above. Mr. Braden was asked what would be the policy of the United States Government after the elections in the event that Peron is successful. He said that political action would be taken of such importance as to over-shadow the economic action, although he hoped that the present economic policy would be maintained (a divergence of views on this point between some of his advisers and himself was quite apparent). As to the nature of the political action, Mr. Braden has apparently two things in mind; first the publication of certain documents incriminating the present regime in Nazi plots, and second, a refusal by the United States to participate in the Rio Conference with the Argentine represented by Peron.

6. Mr. Braden was told that the request of the State Department would be sent at once to the Canadian Government and considered by them and that it was hoped that a reply would be forthcoming in the very near future.

7. While there is certainly not unanimity within the State Department itself on policy towards the Argentine, and while there are some who believe that the present economic policy, exception made of the control of armaments and materials of war, is not effective, I think that there is general agreement that it would be helpful to present United States policy if Canadian controls were to be maintained until February 24th at least, and I should report to you that there is no doubt in my mind that a refusal on our part to do so would be taken with very bad grace. The point was made this morning that the revisions proposed in Canadian controls would, in all likelihood, pass unnoticed in so far as the Argentine is concerned, in view of the fact that they would similarly affect many other countries. To interpret this, therefore, as a Canadian step to assist the present regime in Argentina would be pretty far fetched. Mr. Braden could not agree. He contended that Peron could very easily and would so interpret it. It is not too strong to say that Mr. Braden is almost fanatical on the subject of Argentina. He showed no disposition either to regard our administrative problems with any sympathy or to relate the question of the Argentine to any other international problem.

8. As a postscript to this message I might add that certain other points came up in this morning's discussion which I feel are adequately covered in my despatch under reference.

9. I shall be in Ottawa tomorrow and shall hope to have an opportunity of discussing this rather vexed problem with you.

DESPATCH 22

Buenos Aires, January 17, 1946

MOST SECRET

Sir,

I have the honour to acknowledge your two secret telegrams Nos. 3† and 4<sup>1</sup> of January 12th regarding the interview with Mr. Braden on export controls.

2. One of the troubles with such a decision as that requested by the State Department is that it is almost bound to be more than provisional. Mr. Braden himself practically concedes the election of Colonel Perón, and although I continue to meet some lonely optimists, and while democratic stock is slightly up this week, the general feeling is that a Perón victory is a foregone conclusion. If, as I doubt, to trade with Argentina free of controls when there may still be a chance of a Perón defeat is to give him a handle, then to free the controls after a Perón victory would be to approve it.

3. I take it that Mr. Braden must have been misunderstood when in paragraph 5 of telegram No. 4 he is quoted as saying that the publication of the incriminating White Paper would not take place until after the election. I have been told by Mr. Cabot,<sup>2</sup> and this is in accordance with your enclosure No. 180 of December 24th of the Washington teletype WA-6327, December 21st, that it would be published this month. Dr. Leguizamón told me this morning that he understood it would be sent to the Foreign Minister either today or tomorrow. There is also some mention in the papers today of a proposal to bring it up at the United Nations meeting in London. It may then introduce a new factor, that possibly may affect the results. If not, it is difficult to see how after the election we shall be able to withdraw from the stand now taken. Further, it is suggested around here that the results of the election may not be known for some time after February 24th.

4. However dressed up, what we have been invited to do is to convert our general wartime controls into a special policy of Argentine ostracism, in itself a form of intervention. We may not be able to stop at that, but may find ourselves involved in more. What Mr. Braden has in mind it is difficult to say, possibly because he himself is quite uncertain how far he can go, and how far he can count on even a majority support from Pan-American States. Mr. Cabot, with whom I had, on the 8th of January, a conversation on the Uruguayan Note,—though careful to point out that he was only speaking for himself, and tentatively,—seemed to think that the action contemplated by it would stop at a declaration. He also, however, referred to his own view that you could not make a people democratic by compulsion, and that if anything more than a declaration were in question, it would have to be based on the interests of the interveners, and they would have to be prepared for all the consequences. There seem to be many tangles ahead for the State Department—tangles with the Senate, tangles with the Pan-American States, tangles with the United Nations organization, with always the possibility of a change of pilot and direction. For us there are other embarrassments, and there is not much time, and certainly not much help from the State Department, for thinking them out. How free shall we be to guide ourselves after the event?

5. I have referred to some lonely optimists, and it would not be fair for your thinking to overlook their points. Dr. Leguizamón is one. He considers the democratic sentiment overwhelming. To him, the significance of the three-day lockout, which came to an end last night, is that people have shown that they are not afraid to assert themselves against the Government and the Police. He also tells me that in the British Railways, for which he is counsel, employees have purchased for 20 centavos apiece 120,000 tickets supporting the democratic cause. Also, the effects of the recent Decree, on bonuses and salaries are not all favourable to Perón. Government servants do not like having been left out of it, and the numerous persons retiring on pension are also complaining about its effects on prices. Dr. Leguizamón thinks, in addition, that scandals recently revealed will have considerable effect. He referred particularly to the case now being ventilated of the Federal Interventor of the Province of Buenos Aires, General Albariños. He was given the sum of 420,000 pesos by the Jockey Club of the Province, apparently for some charitable purpose, and is said to have made payments out of it not only to himself but to certain Perón newspapers. Dr. Leguizamón further mentioned an incident in a country town during the last three days. A policeman went up to one of the closed shops and called upon the proprietor to open it. When he refused, the policeman began the preparation of an act to establish the refusal, and called upon the bystanders to sign as witnesses. Not one of them would sign. All these things are important, and Dr. Leguizamón must know his country far better than I can; but the general opinion at the moment, subject to vague hopes regarding the White Paper, is against his view.

6. Speaking merely in terms of future trade between Canada and Argentina, we are already late in laying the foundation, and a further delay may have negative effects for a long time to come. Canadians who come down here are as greatly impressed with the value of the market that awaits us here as they are concerned about the apparent apathy of the Canadian exporter. We note an announcement of a prospective visit from representatives of the Indiana Chamber of Commerce; and the political situation does not seem to have interfered with the visit to the United States of a military mission supposed to be for the purpose of buying equipment for the new airport.

January 18th.

7. Mr. Cabot yesterday gave to the press what may be perhaps only an instalment of the proposed revelations. It was interesting as showing that some of those who were lending themselves to German propaganda during the war are now connected with Perón newspapers. Mainly, the information is the dotting of "i's" and the crossing of "t's" on something already known. More immediately significant is the effect of the Albariños affair. According to this morning's papers, the Minister of Marine, Admiral Pantin, and the Service Admirals stationed near Buenos Aires, had a long interview yesterday with the President, protesting that the Government promises of neutrality were being continuously violated. One of the Admirals who was to supervise the elections in this district has resigned, on the ground that while General Albariños remains in office the election cannot be fair. The Minister is supposed to have tendered his resignation, although this is officially denied. The protest is given more point by the resignation of Colonel Mercante as Secretary of Labour because of his nomination as candidate for the Vice-Presidency.

8. In fairness to Mr. Cabot, I would not like my quotation of his remarks to be passed on.

I have etc.

ATTENTION: S. D. PIERCE, ESQ.

Dear Mr. Pierce,

May I refer to your letter of January 10th,† enclosing a copy of teletype No. WA-116, dated January 8th, relative to control of exports to Argentina.

I note that it appears desirable to you that Canada should defer any relaxation of export control affecting exports to Argentina, at least until February 24th.

The position of this Department in this matter is one of very serious difficulty. Export industry in Canada is extremely restive over the retention of the export permit system on commodities for which there is now no obvious and clearly understood reason for continuing control. Our course has been to eliminate the export permit requirement in every case as soon as we could obtain clearance for such action from the Wartime Prices and Trade Board, Department of Munitions and Supply, or such other bodies as were instrumental in the first instance in having the export permit requirement imposed.

We have now reached a stage in which we have been advised either by the Wartime Prices and Trade Board or by other organizations that many of the commodities placed under control at their request need no longer, for their purposes, be continued under such control.

Perhaps the clearest way of indicating the way in which the consequences of our consistent co-operation with the United States in the present policy toward Argentina have closed in on us is to point out that, solely for the purpose of maintaining such co-operation, we are now keeping under export control approximately 340 commodities on which Canadian exporters are being compelled to obtain permits on all shipments except those to Empire countries and to the United States. We are actually denying Canadian exporters the freedom of access to many foreign markets which is vital to their aggressive prosecution of export business. Meanwhile, the United States itself has gone ahead very rapidly with the removal of export controls on a wide list of commodities, retaining the controls only with reference to named countries, such as Germany, Japan, Spain and Argentina.

Our system of export control does not lend itself to the method of removing controls except in the case of named countries. The result is that we are being forced into the practice of holding a lengthy and steadily increasing list of commodities under export control solely to cover the Argentine case. Our whole system and procedure leaves us no practicable alternative. We are already issuing blanket licences, but this expedient meets the problem only in a very inadequate way.

We feel very strongly that this situation should not be allowed to continue. Otherwise, the anomalous position in which we are now placed is bound to become steadily worse, with Canadian exporters becoming still more resentful over the retention of control on shipments of many products to many different countries that should not be involved in the application of a policy aimed specifically at Argentina.

Further, I should point out that the United States' request is that we should retain our controls, at least until February 24th. There is no assurance that we shall not be asked to prolong our controls for a further indefinite period.

While I realize that other and very important considerations must enter into the decision as to the course that Canada should now take, I cannot over-emphasize the urgency of breaking the deadlock that has been reached as regards our freedom to cut down the range of our export controls. I would strongly recommend that the United States Government be advised that we cannot postpone our proposed action for the removal of controls beyond February 24th, and that we propose to release from export control as from February 26th the commodities shown in the list already communicated to them. We would be prepared, however, to eliminate from this list and to retain under control, for the time being, toluol and such other products of a warlike nature that the United States might care to discuss with us.

Yours faithfully,

[Ottawa,] January 30, 1946

I am enclosing copy of a telegram† which has just been received from our Ambassador in Argentina, reporting that General McNaughton is planning to visit Buenos Aires after the completion of the ceremony he is attending in Rio de Janeiro. In normal circumstances I should see no objection whatever to him extending his trip in this way, but, in view of the very difficult state of Argentina's relations with all the other countries of this hemisphere, I am afraid that such a visit as General MacNaughton has in mind might be quite mischievous.

At United States request, we are maintaining special export controls on shipments to Argentina, lest their relaxation be construed as a gesture of sympathy with the Argentine Government. For similar reasons we have suggested that the cruiser Uganda, in her voyage around South America, should not put in at Buenos Aires.

There is no public interest in General McNaughton going to Argentina at this time, and it would be difficult for him to pay a strictly private visit, particularly as he is travelling in an R.C.A.F. plane.

I attach, for your approval, a draft telegram† to our Ambassador in Brazil, suggesting that General McNaughton drop the Argentine project.<sup>1</sup> If he wants SECRET. Following for General McNaughton from Prime Minister, Begins: I understand from Canadian Ambassador in Buenos Aires that you have been considering possibility of paying a private visit to Argentina. In present circumstances I am afraid purely private character of such a visit could not be effectively observed. Argentina is desperately seeking evidence of foreign interest and approval and mischievous political implications would be read by Argentina into any visit which might be paid at this time by any one who would be regarded as a representative of Canadian Government. Moreover it is also almost inevitable that in view of attitude Canada had felt obliged to take, along with United States and United Kingdom, towards Argentina, a visit by yourself, following your visit to Rio de Janeiro in an ambassadorial capacity, might be misunderstood by both the United States and United Kingdom.

Should you wish to vary your return from Rio de Janeiro, there could be no objection to your returning by way of Peru and Mexico but as matters stand I cannot but feel that a visit to Argentina at this time would be unwise. Kindest regards. Ends.

DESPATCH 271

Washington, February 2, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your EX-299 of January 30† containing your instructions on the reply you wish made to the note which I received from the Secretary of State on the control of Canadian exports to Argentina, and which was transmitted to you in my WA-116 of January 8.

2. From the enclosed copy of the note which I left yesterday with Mr. Spruille Braden, Assistant Secretary of State, it will be observed that the phraseology was changed slightly from the instructions contained in your EX-299 following a telephone conversation which Mr. Stone had with Mr. Pierce on January 31.

3. When handing this note to Mr. Braden I reiterated that it was with some reluctance that our government had agreed to the wishes of the United States authorities to retain our existing control of exports to Argentina until the end of February in view of our belief that the proposed relaxation would not result in any practical benefit to Argentina, and moreover, that on account of the nature of our proposed general relaxation of export control we did not feel that it would provide Colonel Peron with the psychological argument that Canada was favouring Argentina.

4. I inferred that Mr. Braden felt differently on the psychological aspect of this problem, and he confirmed again that in his view Colonel Peron would readily seize the opportunity provided by our relaxation of export controls to draw attention to a relatively more friendly attitude on the part of Canada toward Argentina than the United States.

5. Mr. Braden went out of his way to express his gratitude for our continued co-operation in this matter. Indeed on this occasion, contrary to the attitude he adopted when presenting the State Department's note to Mr. Stone, he conceded that our retention of export controls to Argentina imposed a heavy administrative burden considering that these export controls involved so many other countries in addition to Argentina.

6. In the absence of any specific indication from you I felt it would be undesirable to create any apprehension in Mr. Braden's mind that we might be unwilling to continue the present controls beyond the end of February. At the same time I said that we would probably want to re-examine this problem with the State Department when the time approached, in the hope that the political situation in Argentina would have improved to the point where it could be considered no longer necessary for the United States Government to maintain its present export policy vis-à-vis Argentina. In response Mr. Braden expressed the hope, but I am afraid without much expectation, that such a development may materialize.

7. The opportunity was taken to draw Mr. Braden's attention to the difficult position our authorities have been placed in from time to time through not being kept informed on the United States policy toward Argentina. It was explained that in the particular case of aircraft it was embarrassing that exports of commercial aircraft from the United States to Argentina had been approved by the State Department when no advance information had been conveyed to this Embassy of the American intention to approve such shipments. It was hinted to Mr. Braden that this example could be applied to other Latin American countries as far as aircraft was concerned, and that whereas the State Department had from time to time asked us to consult them in advance of any proposed Canadian shipments to Latin America, we had on no occasion been given any opportunity to express our views on proposed American shipments.

8. I think Mr. Braden sensed that in mentioning aircraft I had in mind the whole question of our co-operation with the United States Government in export policy matters and he assured me that steps would be taken by his own branch of the State Department to see that we were better informed in the future.

9. Having laid the groundwork for a further approach to the State Department toward the end of February on this subject of Canadian export control to Argentina, after you have had an opportunity of considering further our position I would appreciate having some guidance as to what attitude should be adopted in future discussions with the State Department.

I have etc.

No. 35

Washington, January 31, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your note of January 8th† on the subject of the proposed relaxation of Canadian controls on exports to Argentina. In response to the wishes of your government, the Canadian Government proposes to retain until the end of February its present control over exports to Argentina.

It remains the belief of the Canadian Government nevertheless that the proposed relaxation which would greatly lessen the administrative burden on Canadian officials, remove unnecessary obstacles to trade with other countries in a great number of commodities, would, at the same time, confer no substantial practical benefit on Argentina. The Canadian Government remains most anxious to relax the existing controls at the earliest possible moment. It would be appreciated, therefore, if your officials would give further study to the practical effect of the proposed relaxations. It may be that, if certain items such as toluol and other products which can be put to war use were retained under control, several hundred other items of a purely commercial nature which are now moving freely from both countries under permit to the Argentine might be removed from formal control.

Washington, March 19, 1946

SECRET

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to my despatch No. 271 of February 2nd on the subject of Canada's cooperation with the United States in the control of exports to Argentina.

2. Yesterday Mr. Stone, accompanied by Mr. Scott, called on Mr. Spruille Braden, Assistant Secretary of State, for the purpose of leaving with him a copy of the Amendment of March 4, 1946 to the Export Permit Regulations, along with the annex containing a list of commodities exempted from requiring an Export Permit when shipped to the countries listed in the Amendment under reference.

3. Although the State Department officers concerned had already learned informally through Mr. Scott of this development, yesterday's meeting with Mr. Braden was the first official advice to him concerning this amendment to our regulations.

4. As Mr. Braden was most profuse in his appreciation of this latest evidence of co-operation with the United States in their export policy vis-à-vis Argentina, the opportunity was taken to remind him again of the importance of our being kept closely and continuously informed of any changes in their policy.

5. Mr. Braden said he fully realized our position, and indeed at yesterday's meeting he asked one of his assistants who was present to have a memorandum circulated among all concerned in the Department conveying instructions that this Embassy was to be kept fully informed on all developments affecting American export policy to Argentina.

6. When questioned as to how Colonel Perón's now conceded victory in the Presidential elections might affect the American policy under reference, Mr. Braden was noncommittal, and gave the impression that the State Department was adopting a "wait and see" attitude. Mr. Braden did, however, remark that any thought of economic sanctions was out of the question in view of Europe's dependence on Argentine foodstuffs.

DESPATCH 676

Washington, April 2, 1946

SECRET

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to my despatch No. 561 of March 19th on the subject of Canada's co-operation with the United States in the control of exports to Argentina.

2. The opportunity was taken of articles on Argentina appearing in the news and editorial columns of this morning's Washington Post, copies of which articles are enclosed,† to have Mr. Scott approach informally Mr. Gilmore of the River Plate Division of the State Department with a view to ascertaining, in the absence of any word from the Department itself, whether any new developments in the United States export policy vis-à-vis Argentina were contemplated.

3. It might be appropriate to mention at this point that Mr. Stone and Mr. Scott were asked to attend a meeting with Mr. Spruille Braden, Assistant Secretary of State, on March 25th, which meeting was postponed at the last moment. Beyond implying that the subject was to be Argentina, no details were given as to the reason for calling this meeting.

4. On drawing Mr. Gilmore's attention to the article in this morning's Washington Post, and the postponement of the meeting under reference, he volunteered the information that the State Department had hoped to inform this Embassy of a new development in regard to their policy on exports to Argentina, but that on further consideration they found themselves not quite ready to discuss the matter.

5. As a result of Mr. Scott's call in the State Department this morning, however, Mr. Gilmore was authorized to reveal for the first time to this Embassy a copy of a letter† which the State Department proposed to send to the Department of Commerce. This draft letter, marked confidential, which bears the signature of Mr. Willard L. Thorp, Deputy to the Assistant Secretary for Economic Affairs in the State Department, is addressed to Mr. Arthur Paul, Assistant to the Secretary, Department of Commerce, the contents of which are quoted as follows:

"I am writing at this time, in accordance with previous correspondence and conversations, to inform you of proposed revisions of United States export policy towards Argentina. These revisions are dictated by a number of important developments—the impossibility of securing multilateral cooperation in a program of economic pressure; the rapidly increasing worldwide availability of goods, expanding international commerce, with concomitant though gradual relaxation of national controls; the spread of famine conditions through Asia and Europe with consequent emphasis upon maximizing food shipments from Argentina; and the current political situation. You should therefore consider that this letter supersedes the Department's previous statement on export policy towards Argentina as embodied in my letter to you of December 29, 1945.

It is the recommendation of the Department that with respect to economic controls Argentina should now be placed on an equal footing with the other American Republics. Implementation of this revised policy will involve careful consideration of Argentine requirements for controlled materials and non-discriminatory review by the Department of Commerce of license applications, such review to be made in so far as possible on the basis of criteria used in screening shipments to the other American Republics.

This policy will mean, in specific terms, removal of Argentina from Group "E" and her transfer to the Group "K" category. Furthermore, no special controls or restrictions should be retained for shipments to Argentina in the case of raw stock film and oil field drilling and refining equipment. Current special restrictions on toluene and light coat tars should be eliminated.

Arms and munitions of war will be restricted primarily through the authority delegated the Department of State by the President's Proclamation on April 9, 1942 based on the Neutrality Act of November 4, 1939. It is the Department's intention to discuss the scope and implementation of this control with the Departments of War and Navy. Should these discussions indicate that proper controls would necessitate authority and techniques not available under the President's Proclamation, I shall be pleased to communicate with you again.

With respect to consignee control, it is requested that the Department of Commerce review license applications only against specifically listed firms and individuals and discontinue the practice of referring to the Embassy in Buenos Aires the names of unknown consignees and government entities.

The Department considers it to be of great importance that this revised policy be given as little publicity as is administratively possible. Although the necessary removal of Argentina from the Group "E" category will inevitably receive considerable attention both in the United States and elsewhere, we nevertheless request that the Department of Commerce join this Department and refrain from making any public statement or announcement with respect to this change in policy."

6. It will be observed that the State Department is now proposing to the Department of Commerce a very drastic modification in the United States export policy to the Argentine. Indeed this proposal calls for placing Argentina in the same category as all other American Republics, which in effect will remove from individual licensing to Argentina a huge list of commodities now free to move to what is known as the "K" Group of countries which includes, in addition to the Latin American Republics specifically mentioned, all other destinations except Group "E" countries comprising the neutrals and ex-enemy territories.

7. It is expected that this draft letter will be sent to the Department of Commerce within the next two or three days, and allowing for a reasonable amount of time for discussion on details between the two Departments it is hoped that this new policy can be put into effect some time within the next week or so.

8. It will be noted from the last paragraph of the draft letter that the State Department considers it to be of great importance that this revised policy be given as little publicity as is administratively possible. To this end it is proposed to incorporate in a public release, probably in one of the Export Control Bulletins, a statement removing Argentina from the Group "E" list of countries to the Group "K" category with the briefest possible explanatory comment. The State Department hopes that it will be feasible to include this reference to Argentina in a list of other current changes in the United States export control regulations, obviously in the hope that it will not attract too much public attention. This does not mean, of course, that the State Department will necessarily escape having to provide further explanations to the Press following whatever original announcement is given out.

9. Mr. Scott took the occasion to emphasize to Mr. Wright, Special Assistant to Mr. Braden, and also to Mr. Gilmore, the importance of our being given adequate advance notice of the proposed official announcement in whatever form it may take in order that the appropriate Canadian authorities will have the opportunity of announcing publicly any revision in our own regulations which may be decided upon as a parallel step to the removal of the American restrictions vis-à-vis Argentina. It was agreed informally that for obvious reasons it would probably be undesirable to issue a joint announcement. On the other hand, by giving us sufficient notice in advance it should be possible to issue a statement from Ottawa announcing a revision in the Canadian export regulations which would have the effect of including Argentina in the list of countries mentioned in the amendment of March 4th to the Export Permit Regulations.

10. Mr. Scott was given a definite assurance by the State Department that this Embassy will be informed immediately the proposed change in policy has been finalized as between the Departments of State and Commerce, and moreover that ample notice will be given of any public statement of this change of policy to enable the Canadian authorities to make whatever changes may be considered desirable in our own regulations and at the same time issue a parallel statement for the benefit of Canadian exporters.

11. It may be of interest to record that Mr. Wright made a particular point in his conversation with Mr. Scott this morning of saying that the State Department was not at this time informing the United Kingdom of this proposed change in their policy, but that in view of the whole-hearted co-operation which Canada had given in this matter it was felt desirable to let this Embassy know in advance of these United States proposals.

12. Mr. Wright went on to add that it was for the purpose of informing us along these lines that Mr. Braden had hoped to hold the meeting last week with Mr. Stone and Mr. Scott. The fact remains that it was only through the initiative taken in this Embassy on the strength of the publicity given the matter in this morning's Washington Post that the foregoing information was ascertained from the State Department.

13. As and when further developments take place you will be promptly informed. Meanwhile, in view of the immediate interest of the Export Permit Branch in this matter from a purely administrative standpoint, this contemplated change in the American policy is being transmitted informally to W. F. Bull, Director of the Export Division in the Department of Trade and Commerce.

DESPATCH 96

Buenos Aires, April 3, 1946

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

The election of Colonel Perón is now beyond question, subject to the theoretical power of the electoral college to choose someone else; and I have the honour to suggest that we should be considering our future attitude towards the new régime. So far the dates variously suggested for its inauguration are—May 1st (Labour Day), June 4th (The Anniversary of the Revolution), and June 20th (The Day of the Flag). Dr. Shaw, whom we saw yesterday, is inclined to expect a late day in June.

2. A local paper under date of March 30th carries an item from the United Press to the following effect:

“According to expressions in Government circles, the Canadian Government will maintain normal diplomatic relations with the new Government of Colonel Perón . . . The Dominion of Canada has maintained its Ambassador in Buenos Aires from the month of October last year and the relations between the two countries have not been modified since the agreement of July last to raise the respective Missions to the rank of Embassies.

It is said that the Government considers that no problem of recognition arises since it treats the coming of Colonel Perón to the Presidency of the Nation as a normal change in the direction of the Government and similar to what happens in every country under the system of universal suffrage.”

I would guess that, even if wrongly attributed, this represents the view of the Government, but would be glad to have your confirmation.

3. Meanwhile, for the purposes of discussion I should like to suggest the following principles of conduct:

(a) We should have a policy of our own, uncompromised by the oscillations of Washington, and unaffected by the bias that seems to prevail in so much of United States thinking, official and unofficial, when directed to this quarter.<sup>1</sup> I cannot help believing that pride and prejudice play there a larger part than judgement, and lead to a confusion of thought and interpretation that can hardly serve as a basis for sound policy. Not sharing the ends, we should not be embarrassed through sharing the means.

(b) We should deal with Argentina as a fellow-member in good standing of the United Nations Organization, to be judged by her current conduct. If we enquire afresh into the credentials of the various members of the U.N.O. on the grounds of their conduct anterior to their admission, we shall be in for some awkward inconsistencies. For instance, a Blue Book about Russian dealings with the Axis prior to the German attack, would make much more lively reading than anything that could be said about Argentina, and would have far more justification. While we may not approve of the régime and may not consider it democratic, however elected, we should let it prove itself; and it may well be, as we thought in San Francisco, that surrounding it with a normal atmosphere may be the best way of turning it to a normal course. There is much to be said for the view that if the San Francisco policy had been consistently followed out, the cause of democracy here would have been better served. In any event, our concern should be with the future actions rather than with the antecedents of the coming Government.

(c) We should therefore maintain normal, courteous, and unreserved relations, strictly refraining from any cold-shouldering, interference, or pressure. We may wonder at the Argentine people for having voted as they did: but they have voted. A course of conduct, appropriate to a prolonged and extraordinary election period and inspired by a desire to avoid any political implications, is no longer suitable. We should in future not distinguish in treatment between Argentina and other countries of the Continent. Any missions or courtesy visits going to neighbouring countries should also come here. We should so act and speak that there will be no room for any suspicion that we are watchful critics rather than disinterested neighbours and friends.

I should be glad to have your views.

I have etc.

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, May 16, 1946

Dear Mr. Chipman,

In your despatch No. 96 of April 3 you quoted an item from the United Press which stated that "according to expressions in Government circles the Canadian Government will maintain normal diplomatic relations with the new government of Colonel Peron." The despatch went on to say that the Canadian Government considers that no problem of recognition would arise from the accession of Colonel Peron as President. I believe you are correct in assuming the accuracy of this forecast.

Your despatch also asks for our views on the following principles of conduct, which you suggest should govern our future policy towards Argentina:

a. "A policy of our own, uncompromised by the oscillations of Washington, and unaffected by the bias of United States thinking, official or unofficial, when directed to this quarter."

b. Dealing with Argentina "as a fellow member in good standing of the United Nations Organization to be judged by her current conduct."

c. The maintenance of "normal, courteous and unreserved relations strictly refraining from any cold-shouldering, interference, or pressure."

As regards (a), I think it may be fairly said that our policy towards Argentina has been our own and will continue to remain so. At the same time, any Canadian Government must give due consideration to the views of the United States on the questions in which they claim a deep interest. That is, an element to be taken into account in determining our policy towards a third country must be the nature and the vigour of the policy of the United States towards the country in question. To reduce justification of such an attitude to material terms, our economic stake in the cooperation of the United States and Canada is so much greater than our interest in cooperation with any other country of this hemisphere that we cannot remain indifferent to the views of the United States when strongly expressed. For nearly three years, under two Presidents and three Secretaries of State, the United States have taken a strong line towards Argentina because of their conviction that if Fascism were rooted in that country it might become a menace to the rest of the hemisphere. We have recognized American sincerity just as the United Kingdom has done, and like it have endeavoured to shape our policy accordingly. On the other hand, we have not slavishly followed United States policy nor have we always approved of the means by which Washington attempted to secure its ends.

With point (b), I am in full agreement. Argentina now has an opportunity to justify her admission to the United Nations and nothing would now be gained by enquiring into her credentials. The time for that was San Francisco. We sincerely hope that Argentina will become a valuable member of the United Nations. I cannot draw any useful conclusion from your argument re the war records of the U.S.S.R. and the Argentine. You suggest that "a Blue Book about Russian dealings with the Axis prior to their attack would make much more lively reading than anything that could be said about Argentina, and would have far more justification." For its policy between 1939 and 1941, Soviet Russia could claim some justification because of the course of European diplomacy in the Munich period. The period of uneasy alignment with the Axis Powers was followed by a period of suffering and heroism on the part of her people in this war which few nations can equal. In contrast, Argentina defied the wishes of the other nations in this hemisphere by declining to break with the Axis after the Conference of Rio de Janeiro. Her behaviour towards Nazi Germany was, to say the least, compromising and only began to change when it was clear that the Axis had lost the war. There is no record of the heroism of the Argentine people to place beside the U.S.S.R. record. Furthermore, there still seem to be indications of Nazi activities in Argentina, which those countries, including our own, that fought in this war are justified in resenting.

With point (c), I also fully agree. We do not intend in future to distinguish between Argentina and the other countries of Latin America. We are arranging, as you are aware, for your accreditation as Special Envoy to the Inauguration of Colonel Peron as President. Yet, in view of Colonel Peron's past record, I can see no reason why we should not continue to cock a watchful eye in Argentina's direction. Such a watchfulness does not, of course, preclude the normal diplomatic relations which you favour.

Yours sincerely,

H. H. WRONG

ATTENTION: MR. WM. FREDERICK BULL, DIRECTOR, EXPORT DIVISION

I refer to your letter† of May 13th regarding a request received from the Canadian Power Boat Company, Limited, Montreal, that they build certain motor torpedo boats for the use of the Argentine Navy. Enclosed, as requested, is the correspondence† from this firm which was attached to your letter.

Cabinet recently considered the general question of Canadian policy regarding the export of arms and reached the decision that each case would require consideration on its merits.

In view of the present doubtful political status of the Argentine, I do not feel that we can recommend that the request of the Argentine Government be given favourable consideration by Cabinet. I suggest, therefore, that the Canadian Power Boat Company be advised against entertaining any bids from the Argentine Government for war vessels such as motor torpedo boats. These considerations would not, of course, apply to commercial craft, which can be sold in the ordinary way of business.

DESPATCH 1441

Ottawa, November 20, 1946

SECRET

Sir,

We have been informed confidentially by our Ambassador in Buenos Aires that the newly-appointed Argentine Ambassador to Canada, Sr. J. C. Rodriguez, recently Under-Minister of Foreign Affairs, told him, on the eve of his departure for Canada, that a great extension of Argentine diplomatic and consular activities in Canada is contemplated for the immediate future.

According to this information, the new Ambassador expects to be joined before the end of the year by a Counsellor, a First Secretary, a Second Secretary, an Attaché ungraded, and specialist Attachés for press and cultural relations, agriculture, labour, medicine, and mines, as well as three Service Attachés and a Commercial Secretary. Six cypher and general duty clerks are also expected to be assigned.

In addition, the present Argentine Consul at Quito expects to arrive at Toronto to open a new Consulate there next month; and the Ambassador will have a Vice-Consul in Ottawa in addition to the other members of his large staff.

The number of these proposed appointees seems unusual and disproportionate, not only to the interests between Argentina and Canada, but also to the Argentine establishments in other foreign countries of corresponding importance. As the Embassy of the United States in Ottawa has twenty officially recognized officers and attachés, and the Embassy of the U.S.S.R. in Ottawa has only twelve officers and attachés diplomatically listed, the proposed Argentine establishment would become second in number of personnel of diplomatic status in Ottawa.

We have confidentially asked Mr. Chipman for his views as to the reasons underlying this unusual proposed expansion.

If you are in a position discreetly to get any further light on this proposal, we should be glad to have your observations.

CONFIDENTIAL. Argentine representation. You will be interested in the following message which has just come from our Ambassador in Buenos Aires, whom we had asked whether he could throw any light on the increased representation of Argentina here. Mr. Chipman's telegram states, Begins:

"Great increase in the Argentine Embassy and Consular personnel is taking place step by step in most countries. See, for instance, establishment approved for Embassy in Moscow as given in my despatch No. 351 of October 9th.† Naturally, in those countries which resemble Argentina geographically, the establishments are greater as a special effort is being made to obtain useful information abroad to assist in working of President's five year plan. A secondary motive is that Argentina is seeking to call attention to her importance as a nation by sheer weight of numbers of her diplomatic Missions abroad. Note, in this respect, fact that Argentine Mission now en route to Mexico for Presidential inauguration there is eighty strong and recent Mission to Chile was almost as large." Ends.

If you have not already done so, I think it might be just as well not to make any inquiries of the State Department on this matter.

The re-organized Government of Austria has now been formally recognized by the U.S.S.R., the United States, the United Kingdom and France. There is no evidence yet that any other country has taken action to recognize the new Austrian Government, but there has been comment in the press about the possibility of other countries, including Canada, following the lead of the Big Four.

One possible course for us to follow would be to defer the question of Canadian recognition until it was raised automatically by some development, such as a request for the exchange of diplomatic or consular representatives. This policy would have two possible disadvantages; one, that we would be failing to give encouragement to a political development in Austria which appears to be favourable; the other, that we will probably be under pressure to take action from organizations such as the Free Austrian Movement, and it would be regrettable if our eventual recognition were to appear to be the result of these representations.

If, for these reasons, you would prefer some action to be taken at the present time, it occurs to me that we need do no more than simply "take note" of the re-establishment of an independent Austrian Government. The precedents established in the recognition of the Czechoslovak and Polish Governments are not very helpful in the case of Austria, and I do not see any reason for going further than simply acknowledging the existence of an independent Austrian Government. With this in mind, I attach a draft press release† for your consideration. If it were decided that such a press release should be issued,<sup>1</sup> I presume that a copy could be sent in advance to the High Commissioner for Canada in London, with the suggestion that appropriate steps should be taken to see that it is drawn informally to the attention of the Austrian authorities. This latter step should be taken, I think, in order that the Austrian Government may receive word of our action through some channel other than the local Free Austrian Movement.

During your absence Dr. Kleinwachter, Representative of Austria in Washington, visited Ottawa principally for financial discussions with the Department of Finance. He had, however, a second purpose in mind. He said that before he left Austria in January to go to Washington he was given a letter officially appointing him as the Austrian Representative in Canada as well as in the United States. He had delayed in taking up this matter until he could pay a personal visit to Ottawa as he did not wish to present his letter until he knew whether we would be prepared to accept him. We have, of course, had a number of applications for dual representation of this sort and hitherto we have consistently refused them for reasons which I explained to Dr. Kleinwachter. He advanced a new reason as applicable to his case which currently has a good deal of force. He said that the Austrian Government is so desperately short of foreign exchange that they were having the greatest difficulty in furnishing him with enough American dollars to maintain his very small establishment in Washington. His Government's desire was to appoint a separate representative in Ottawa as soon as this position eased and they hoped that we would in due course agree to an exchange of Ministers. I promised to see that his request was considered and to let him know the result through the Ambassador in Washington.

I am inclined to think that for the present what we should tell Dr. Kleinwachter is that we have no objection to his being employed as a channel of communication between the Austrian and Canadian Governments but that we would prefer him not to present his official letter appointing him as Austrian representative here.<sup>1</sup>

In addition to our standard reasons for refusing such requests in the past, there are the added reasons that Austria is still occupied territory and technically an enemy state and the Control Council in Vienna might well take the line that it would be an infringement of their prerogative if we gave Dr. Kleinwachter even by courtesy an official standing in Ottawa without their knowledge. You may perhaps remember him as he served for a couple of years in Canada as Austrian Consul General before 1938. He has spent a number of years since then in a concentration camp and I think that person-

Ottawa, August 28, 1946

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

My telegram No. 117 of today† dealt with the taxation problem raised by the President of Brazilian Traction and the general question of a tax convention between Canada and Brazil.

2. For your records, I enclose copies of a letter from the President of Brazilian Traction dated August 23† which sets forth the Company's views at some length and a copy of our reply.† The subject was discussed with the Deputy Minister of National Revenue (Taxation) who feels that the Government should do everything possible to assist the Company. The Canadian Income Tax authorities recognize that it is in the general interest to encourage participation of local capital in undeveloped countries along with money from capital exporting countries. If this is to be effective, the tax laws of the capital exporting country should not bear too heavily on the dividends payable to the foreign nationals concerned—in this case Brazilians. The problem was discussed at various times by the Fiscal Committee of the League of Nations and may well be examined by the Fiscal Commission of the United Nations. In any event, it is one of which the Canadian authorities are prepared to discuss sympathetically with the Brazilian authorities.

3. In our view, however, any agreement on this question should be only a part of a broader income tax convention. There is a continuing trend towards the negotiation of such conventions between states whose nationals are doing business in each other's territory and they are found advantageous in developing international trade. In recent years, for example, Canada has concluded agreements with the United States and the United Kingdom, and the Canadian authorities believe that other agreements can be negotiated to mutual advantage in the case of countries with which Canada has considerable present or prospective trade or investment relations. Such agreements usually cover a wide field including provisions for the taxation of foreign individuals, foreign companies with permanent establishments, agencies, shipping profits, airline profits and so forth. The Canada-United States Convention of 1942 (Treaty Series 1942—No. 2) indicates the type of subject that can be included in such an agreement.

4. I shall be glad to have a report when you have been able to discuss this question with Mr. Borden<sup>1</sup> and subsequently with the Brazilian authorities.

Dear Mr. Wrong,

Several weeks ago the Brazilian Ambassador discussed with Mr. Iisley the possibility of obtaining from Canada a $50 million credit for the purchase here of steam locomotives, freight railway cars, ships, shovels, drag-lines and cranes, agricultural machinery and certain other miscellaneous articles. I was not present at the interview but apparently the orders for the above articles were to be placed this year for delivery chiefly during 1947-48 and it was suggested that the credit would be for a term of eighteen years at 3%. It was also stated that the credit would bear the guarantee of the National Treasury and the Bank of Brazil.

Later we received from Dr. Paes a memorandum† giving a fairly elaborate outline of Brazil's holdings of gold and foreign exchange and its external financial requirements. This was a memorandum which I believe had been presented to the National Advisory Council in Washington in connection with a similar application made to the United States Export-Import Bank for an export credit. This material was probably submitted because of statements made by Mr. Iisley to Dr. Paes concerning the magnitude of Brazil's holdings of gold and U.S. dollars.

In connection with an application from the Government of Denmark for an export credit, I wrote you on July 27th saying what I believed to be the Government's attitude towards any increase in its export commitments at the present time. In the case of applications from South American countries, or indeed from any country the economy of which has not suffered as a result of the war, I think the attitude of the Canadian Government would be even more negative. Mr. Ilsley, I believe, advised Dr. Paes that while consideration would be given to his request he thought the answer would be in the negative; I think he went so far as to say that it would be almost as appropriate for Brazil to make a loan to Canada as for Canada to make a loan to Brazil. The memorandum referred to above shows that Brazil's holdings of external assets are perhaps not as great as we had thought and that their need for such assets is perhaps larger than we had assumed. It is also true that the United States is apparently willing to give export credits to Brazil and other South American countries. When the officials of the Export-Import Bank were here a few weeks ago, I asked Mr. Maffrey whether they were considering making export credits to South American countries. He said that they were considering applications and would undoubtedly be making a loan to Brazil in the not distant future. He admitted that Brazil's cash position was fairly good but he said there were other considerations which had to be taken into account from the United States point of view.

I am sure that the Government would not wish to increase its export credit commitments at this time and particularly not in relationship to a country which had not been disrupted by war. Furthermore, our own supply situation which was an important factor when the Government changed its general point of view towards export credits two or three months ago, has now become considerably worsened as a result of the series of prolonged strikes and also the shortage of coal which will be acute this winter. I have talked the problem over with the Acting Minister who agrees that the Government should not consider favourably the application from Brazil for the reasons I have already mentioned. We felt that the most appropriate thing to do would be to have the reply go through External Affairs and the explanation given for failing to grant the credit should be based largely on the magnitude of our own financial commitments and the serious difficulties of our supply position.<sup>1</sup>

I think it is probably not necessary to have formal consideration by Council but it would be desirable to have any letter you send out approved by the Acting Prime Minister. Mr. St. Laurent is very familiar with the considerations which led to the reduction of a number of applications for export credits last spring.

Yours sincerely,

W. C. CLARK

SECRET. Export credits. We have informed General Kiang, Director, Chinese Government Supply Agency in Canada, that we are prepared to enter into loan agreement for $35,000,000 in accordance with programme of procurement to be agreed with Department of Trade and Commerce and that we are prepared as well to extend an additional credit of $25,000,000 for purchase of supplies originally requested as Mutual Aid as and when the various categories of those supplies are shipped by mutual agreement. The understanding has been reached that weapons and munitions included in the original Mutual Aid programme of military supplies will not be purchased or shipped at the present time. The items on the Mutual Aid programme which will be procured and shipped are trucks and used industrial equipment which will require approximately $15,000,000 out of the $25,000,000 earmarked for Mutual Aid supplies.

The loan will be made on condition that the Chinese Government will use for purchasing supplies in Canada for export to China an amount of Canadian dollars derived from the sale to Canada of gold and United States dollars equal to 20 per cent of the amount of the credits utilized. We have indicated that we would be prepared to include purchases made by the Chinese Government or by Chinese importers through commercial channels provided satisfactory arrangements can be made for obtaining records.

We are prepared to accept repayment in thirty annual instalments, commencing in 1948 with interest at 3 per cent.

We have indicated our willingness also to consider the provision of guarantees for credits obtained in Canada for the financing of specific industrial projects.

DESPATCH 33

Ottawa, January 31, 1946

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your despatch No. 465 of October 9, 1945, in which you urge that renewed study should be given to the question of Chinese immigration so that an understanding might be reached on a reciprocal basis while Canada's position in China continues to be favourable and before the issue may become important in the eyes of the Chinese.

2. I can assure you the authorities here share your concern over this question. Since the receipt of your despatch, a good deal of thought has been given to the matter by members of the Department and by the Director of Immigration. As a result of their study, the enclosed memorandum has been prepared reviewing the negotiations leading up to the presentation of the Draft Treaty to the Chinese Government, and to their decision that the principle on which the Treaty was drafted was unacceptable.

3. You will note that in the course of the studies connected with the drafting of the Treaty it was recognized that all immigration measures involve some form of discrimination. It may be noted here that the immigration measures now effective in Canada include the following forms of discrimination:

(a) Under the Chinese Immigration Act entry to Canada of persons of Chinese origin or descent is confined to members of the Diplomatic Corps, children born in Canada of parents of Chinese race who have temporarily left Canada, merchants and students.

(b) P.C. 2115 of September 16, 1930 embodied in the Immigration Act and Regulations, prohibits the landing in Canada of any immigrant of any Asiatic race except the wives and children under 18 years of age of Canadian citizens resident in Canada.

(c) Under P.C. 695, March 21, 1931, amended June 30, 1944, the landing in Canada of immigrants of all classes and occupations is prohibited except for

(i) British subjects from Great Britain or Northern Ireland, the Irish Free State, Newfoundland, United States of America, New Zealand, Australia or the Union of South Africa

(ii) United States citizens

(iii) wives, children and fiancés of residents of Canada

(iv) Agriculturists

(v) Non-immigrants who have been honourably discharged from the Canadian armed forces.

4. It was believed that discrimination would have its least unfavourable effects through a treaty of the kind suggested based on the principle of reciprocity. As noted in the memorandum, however, the Chinese Government indicated that the principle on which the Treaty was drafted was unacceptable to them. Since that time, June 1944, it has been our assumption that the next step must come from the Chinese. Among the alternative forms of action which the memorandum suggests to be now open, there is included, however, possible reconsideration of the Treaty itself.

5. The alternatives as noted in the closing sections of the memorandum on Conclusions are the following:

1. Reconsideration of the terms of the Treaty.
2. Naming of a quota of Chinese to be accepted as immigrants.
3. Entering into a Gentlemen's Agreement by which a limited number would be admitted.

6. Before proceeding with further consideration of any of these alternatives, it would be important to try to estimate how they would be regarded by public opinion in Canada and by the Government of China. It will be appreciated if you will indicate which, if any, of these alternatives you believe should be taken up for serious consideration, and let us have your comments on the general position. In the meantime, of course, it is understood that no conversations are to be initiated with the Chinese either in Chungking or in Ottawa.

PROVISION FOR CHINESE IMMIGRATION TO CANADA

III. CONCLUSIONS

This review suggests three practicable courses of action now left open:

1. RECONSIDERATION OF THE TERMS OF THE TREATY

Special attention might be given to the possibility of eliminating Article VI under which Canadian citizenship is withheld from any child born hereafter in Canada whose father is a Chinese citizen. If serious consideration is to be given to this point, it would involve:

First, discussion with members of the Canadian Government, particularly those from British Columbia, as to the probable reception of the proposal in Canada.

Second, an informal approach to the Chinese Ambassador to discover whether such an amendment to the Treaty would be likely to cause the Chinese Government to give it favourable consideration.

2. THE NAMING OF A QUOTA

This alternative could be provided for under Section 38,C of the Immigration Act. The Order-in-Council would have to be stated in terms of prohibiting entry beyond a certain number, but a definite number could be indicated. Presumably the size of the quota would be determined through consideration of the proportion of Canada's population which Chinese now in Canada represent and, possibly, through reference to the proportion which the quota of 105 Chinese provided for in the United States quota bears to the population of that country. The chief objection indicated is the opposition East Indians would make to the proposal. This objection could be met by naming simultaneously a quota for this national group also.

3. A GENTLEMAN'S AGREEMENT

This would have the same practical effect as the naming of a quota but would avoid the difficulty imposed by the necessity of naming a quota in terms of a prohibition of general Chinese immigration. The device proved difficult to apply in the case of the Japanese and might not find favour with the Canadian Government. It would also probably meet with the same objection from East Indians as in the case of the "named quota". This objection could be met, however, as easily as under the "named quota" alternative by entering into a Gentleman's Agreement with the East Indians also.

Dear Sir,

At the time of signing today with you the agreement<sup>1</sup> for the provision of a credit of $60,000,000 to the Government of China under the Export Credits Insurance Act, I desire to place on record our understanding regarding certain points in connection with the use of the credit and about purchases which China will make in Canada, to be financed by Canadian dollars acquired from the sale of gold or foreign exchange convertible into gold.

In paragraph 4 of the agreement it is specified that the Government of China will expend the moneys received by it under this agreement for the purpose of purchasing Canadian-produced goods in accordance with a program to be agreed from time to time by the Canadian Minister of Trade and Commerce and myself on the one hand, and by representatives of the Government of China on the other. In this connection I wish to place on record that it is our understanding that $25,000,000 of the $60,000,000 provided in the credit will be reserved for the purchase of supplies and equipment which had been requested by China from Canada as Mutual Aid, other items in production in Canada at September 1, 1945, which are surplus to Canadian requirements, and also certain items of used industrial equipment which China had sought to purchase from Canada, together with the costs of reconversion and completion of such equipment for Chinese use and its preparation for shipment.

The remaining $35,000,000, it is understood, will be available for purchasing equipment, supplies and services desired by the Government of China in Canada for reconstruction and other post-war purposes, items of which are to be agreed from time to time with the Canadian Departments of Trade and Commerce and of Finance, as specified in the agreement. I have noted your request to be permitted to use the credit in paying the cost of transporting goods from Canada to China in Canadian ships. At present our legislation and the regulations under it do not make this use of the credit possible, but the legislation and the regulations may be changed in this regard, and if that is done, my colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and I will be prepared to give sympathetic consideration to the inclusion in the program of the costs of shipping goods to China in Canadian vessels.

I wish also to record that I am prepared to agree to the redemption, under paragraph 10 of the agreement, of the bonds to be given in accordance with the agreement, out of any Canadian dollars accruing to the Government of China from current account transactions between Canada and China. I am also prepared to agree to the use in the repayment of the credits advanced under the agreement, or for redemption under paragraph 10 of the agreement, of Canadian dollars acquired by China from the International Monetary Fund or the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. I wish also to confirm our understanding that the Foreign Exchange Control Board (or its successor agency) will sell to China Canadian dollars in exchange for United States dollars at the official rate in force on the day of transaction, for the purpose of making repayments of the credit provided under the agreement signed today.

I wish also to record that it is the intention of the two Governments that a certain proportion of the Canadian dollar requirements of China shall be covered by the purchase from Canada of Canadian dollars for gold or foreign exchange convertible into gold. To implement this intention, it is understood that the Government of China will during or at the end of each half-year during which the credits referred to in this letter are being drawn upon, commencing with the first half of 1946, acquire Canadian dollars by the sale to Canada of gold or foreign exchange convertible into gold in an amount not less than twenty per cent of the amount of the credit drawn during each such half-year. It is understood that the Canadian dollars so acquired will be used to meet the current requirements of China in Canada, including purchases of the Government of China or its agencies and including Canadian shipping services and marine insurance charges. Any purchases of Canadian dollars for gold or foreign exchange convertible into gold during the first half of 1946 prior to the signing of this agreement shall be regarded as coming within the amount of such required purchases during the first half of that year. These agreed purchases of Canadian dollars for gold or foreign exchange convertible into gold shall be reduced by an amount equal to the Canadian dollar equivalent of any United States dollars or other foreign exchange convertible into gold paid by Chinese importers for imports from Canada during each half-year in question, provided that the Government of China supplies satisfactory evidence of such payments and they are verified by the Foreign Exchange Control Board of Canada. In case the amount of such Chinese imports from Canada in any half-year exceeds the required purchases of Canadian dollars for that period, the excess shall be carried over to the succeeding half-year period or periods.

I would appreciate it if you would confirm the understanding set forth above, and also if you would inform me from time to time of the representatives of the Government of China who will agree with the Departments of Trade and Commerce and of Finance upon the program of purchases to be covered under this agreement.

Yours very truly,

Dear Mr. Howe,<sup>1</sup>

You enquired at yesterday's meeting of the Mutual Aid Board as to the views of this Department on the shipment to China of the munitions covered by approximately $25,000,000 of the export credit of $60,000,000 which we are to extend to China.

The $25,000,000 was reserved for the purchase of supplies and equipment requested by China from Canada as Mutual Aid, for other items in production in Canada at September 1945 which are surplus to Canadian requirements and also for certain items of used industrial equipment. Included in the supplies and equipment are munitions, and it had been agreed between the Chinese authorities and ourselves that these munitions would not be shipped without our concurrence.

The internal political situation in China has improved markedly in recent weeks and I do not now feel that we can reasonably object to the shipment of the munitions in question so long as present conditions continue.

Yours sincerely,

Dear Mr. Robertson,

Thanks for your letter of February 7th, regarding the views of your Department on the shipment to China of munitions covered by approximately $25 million of the export credit which we are to extend to China.

I am glad to note that your Department does not object to shipment of the munitions in question, so long as the present conditions continue. This will enable us to clear our warehouses of a volume of material which we would gladly get rid of.

I hope that arrangements can be made accordingly.

Yours sincerely,

DESPATCH 287

Chungking, March 5, 1946

Sir,

TRADE AND COMMERCE OFFICE IN SHANGHAI

I have the honour to send you herewith copies of

- (a) A letter from Col. Moore Cosgrave, dated February 25, 1946.†
- (b) A list† of Commodities which Col. Cosgrave says Canada can take from China.

All this material will, of course, go direct from Col. Cosgrave to Trade & Commerce; but I would like you to have this fresh light on the situation in Shanghai. It may either confirm, or cause you to amend, the impressions you have gained from what I have been writing.

2. Everyone who has studied the situation in China is as convinced as am I that there is a real opportunity for Canada in China, on the higher level. Captain Palmer, Col. Cosgrave, Mr. Campbell, and now General Cohen (who called this morning after a trip to the coast). All say that there is an opening for substantial Sino-Canadian trade, and that Canada is in a preferred position, everything else (such as quality and price) being equal. The reason is not hard to seek. There is a psychological bias in favour of Canada because she is a small but technically advanced nation. Against Britain there is resentment, a heritage from the past; in the case of the United States, there is a feeling that it is too masterful, too over-powering; and so, by pure reversion, we get our opportunity.

3. China's need for goods, tools and machinery is great. On the surface, China looks like a dangerous, an uncertain market. But it should not be forgotten that China has a hard economic core. The 25,000,000 substantial purchasers, buried almost out of sight in the mass of 500,000,000 should never be forgotten.

4. I am sending you, separately, copies of letters† from Campbell. He feels certain that the Embassy will require a permanent office in Shanghai. I am inclined to agree with his opinion, but I will not feel certain until after I have visited the coast. What Campbell says about available office accommodation is correct. There is none. I would like to see the "Canadian" office enlarged, by renting additional rooms, so that the full Canadian representation could be available at one place. But that is not feasible just now. However, it is a goal at which we might aim. It is hard for me to fire without a target.

[Ottawa,] April 9, 1946

The Chinese Ambassador came to see me yesterday about the possibility of negotiating a commercial agreement between Canada and China. China is one of the few remaining countries whose exports are still subject to the maximum Canadian tariff rates, although Canadian exports to China receive most favoured nation treatment. What the Ambassador hoped for was an agreement which would provide for the exchange of most favoured nation treatment on a basis of reciprocity.

I told him that the Government had looked forward to concluding such an agreement with China once the end of hostilities in the Pacific had made resumption of normal trade possible. We did not wish to embark on substantive commercial treaty negotiations prior to the preliminary meeting of the drafting countries in England in September, but would probably not object to the negotiation of an interim arrangement with China along the lines of the treaty we had just concluded with Mexico. At the same time, we would be glad to receive from the Chinese Government a schedule of Canadian tariff items on which they might wish to negotiate reductions during the preliminary meeting of the drafting countries. The Ambassador did not appear to have been kept informed by his Government of the preparations which the participating countries had been asked by the United States Government to make for the preliminary meeting, and I suggested he ask the Chinese Embassy in Washington to get him a copy of the United States memorandum on procedure, so that he would be familiar with the general background against which any interim Canadian-Chinese trade negotiations would have to take place.

I have your memorandum of April 11† making enquiry concerning Mr. Lu Tso-fu and the Ming Sung Industrial Corporation.

Negotiations have been carried on for over a year now between the John Inglis Company, the Departments of Finance and Reconstruction, the Canadian Embassy in Chungking and this Department on the one hand, and the Ming Sung Industrial Corporation and the Government of China on the other, with a view to concluding a $15,000,000 contract involving purchase by the Ming Sung Corporation of eighteen vessels for use on the Yangtse. The contract would be concluded under the guarantee provision of the Export Credits Insurance Act (8 George VI, Part II, Clause 22 (1)c).

The Canadian Government in April 1945 indicated that it would be prepared to consider favourably the guarantee of the credit to be extended to the Ming Sung Company provided that the Government of China were prepared to guarantee the credit as well and to request the Government of Canada to give its guarantee. The proposed contract was approved by the Executive Yuan, and the Chinese Foreign Office have requested the Canadian Government to act as surety.

It is hoped that during the course of Mr. Lu's current visit certain still outstanding details relating to the contract will be ironed out and the Agreement will be formally concluded.

DESPATCH 453

Chungking, April 19, 1946

Sir,

With reference to my cypher telegram No. 428 of April 18†, I have the honour to enclose for you herewithin a copy of a memorandum† handed to me on Thursday (April 18th) at noon by Dr. T. V. Soong.<sup>1</sup> With him at the moment was the General Manager of the China Merchants Steam Navigation Company. Dr. Soong said categorically that:

(a) the Government of China would guarantee the contract if a contract were made;

(b) the ships required were intended to be of a high quality; and

(c) if the Government of Canada intimated it was prepared to finance the contract under the terms of the Export Credits Insurance Act, the China Merchants Steam Navigation Company and the Chinese Government would jointly send two experts to Canada for the purpose of completing the detail negotiations.

2. It is now nearly a year and a half since I met the officials of the China Merchants Steam Navigation Company. I realised from the beginning that this firm was the most important Chinese shipping firm in China. If it had at its head a man of the calibre of Lu Tso-fu, it would be outstanding. Even as it is, in view of its full Government backing, it is a concern of major importance. Its management is good and it has an equipment which cannot be matched by any other company. It is the fortunate possessor of docks and godowns at all important points. In this it has great advantage over the Ming Sung Co.

3. Dr. Soong told me that the Chinese Government had already backed the China Merchants Steam Navigation Company in securing a number of hastily built cargo vessels from the United States. The first need of the Government and of the Company was for tonnage that could be immediately delivered and this tonnage was acquired through American channels. When, however, it came to arranging for the building of its better class shipping, they turned to Canada. They believed that Canadian firms could do better work in this class than could the Americans. They would naturally go to Great Britain, the home of high grade ship-building, but the British yards are not prepared to take orders.

4. I am just as anxious that this proffered contract should receive consideration as I was that you should entertain the project of Lu Tso-fu. I put my back behind these two things and the introduction of Chinese raw silk into Canada. I have failed with the raw silk, I understand according to a despatch† which came in today; but the Lu Tso-fu transaction is well on its way and now I am anxious to see you give to the China Merchants Steam Navigation Company the same careful, thoughtful attention that you have given to Mr. Lu Tso-fu.

Nanking, May 14, 1946

Sir,

RONNING ON "PEACE" IN CHUNGKING

I have the honour to send to you herewith a copy of a letter which I recently received from Ronning. From it you can deduce a good deal. Before sending it, I should have submitted to you a "sob sister" story of the kind of life we led in Chungking. In the Embassy itself things were comparatively peaceful and the daily routine was orderly. But outside of the Embassy building and within the compound walls there was considerable turmoil. Babies appeared in fairly rapid succession and each added a shrill note to a chorus which was already almost deafening. I cannot say that the babies appeared unexpectedly, for we generally had a fair warning; but the results were just the same.

2. Outside the compound we were hemmed in by dogs, pigs, hens (particularly and most audibly roosters) and human beings of diverse types. Within twenty feet by measurement from my window was a building occupied as a rooming house for rickshaw men and stone masons. The term rooming house is a misnomer, for there were no rooms; just one big open space. They all piled in there and some of them tried to get bits of their rickshaws in so as to protect them during the night. They talked until very late hours and they commenced spitting at a very early hour. Chinese of this class never speak in soft sweet tones. Even when standing within a few feet of each other, they shout. The origin of this shouting, I do not know. I have asked many questions but I never got a reasonable answer.

3. Chinese dogs have one peculiarity—they choose the night time for their greatest interest and activity in life. They have a sort of signal system which works almost unfailingly. One, for some reason known to it and unknown to us, commences to bark and in due course others take up the alarm and pass it on. Each one incites the others to greater fury and at times I used to become very much annoyed that I wanted to get up and use my revolver. But while Chinese dogs are not loved, there would be a great resentment if one were slaughtered; and so I held my hand.

4. At several points around us were eating houses where the "hand game" was played. The "hand game" is not, as you might imagine, a petting game under the table. It is a very noisy guessing game. Each one tries to beat the other to a correct estimate of the number of fingers jointly displayed. The Chinese get a great deal of fun out of it and at times I can become quite interested; but when I am not a participant and am trying to sleep the din tends to disturb me.

5. Taken all in all, noise was a principal feature of our life in Chungking; the noises of animals, of fowl and of men, the latter term including women and babies. You will notice that after the rest of us came away, the babies disappeared and Ronning waxed eloquent in his ecstasy. It is true that the other noises remained but the silence of the babies was so startling that it drowned out what would otherwise have been deafening overtones and undertones.

6. I only send you this despatch and this letter from Mr. Ronning so that you may catch a glimpse of the life we have been leading in Chungking. I feel sure that even with this glimpse you will scarcely appreciate the troubles which have disturbed our souls. You may, however, be somewhat entertained and if you are, I will be rewarded.

I have etc.

Dear General,

This is Sunday morning and I should be meditating upon my sins of commission and, you may perhaps justly say, upon my sins of coat-hanging omission. That is out of the question this fine Sunday morning. I am too enthusiastic to meditate even upon much more pleasant things than my sins. In fact I cannot wait for breakfast before sitting up to the portable to painfully pick my way with two fingers and a thumb to the end of this epistle. I have a feeling that I should not have dignified it by including it in my regular series to you. Nor should I have started numbering the paragraphs as I shall probably not be able to confine myself to merely one topic in each.

2. I feel certain, General, that if you realized that your Embassy building could really be as tranquil as it was last night, you would have stayed to be convinced regardless of the departure of Government and Diplomats. I must not wax too eloquent about the new order of things as you might be tempted to return and that would never do. Liao was too stingy with the Marmalade. He left me only one measly little jar and if you should suddenly decide to invade the domain in which I have been the sole master since

Nanking, May 14, 1946

Sir,

SHIPPING DIFFICULTIES IN CHINA

I have the honour to send to you herewith as an enclosure a copy of a part of a letter I have just received from Mr. Ronning. It was written immediately after he had had a rather harrying experience. Mr. Ronning found himself suddenly allotted certain accommodation on one of the Waichiaopu foreign mission flights from Chungking to Nanking and he had to scrape together whatever he could find with which to take advantage of the opportunity. He had a bag received in Chungking from the British Embassy and he decided to send it to Nanking by giving space to Miss Ricker, a Canadian who was on her way from Chengtu to Shanghai for return to Canada. Mr. Ronning bundled Miss Ricker, the bag, Miss Ricker's baggage and a considerable quantity of our own wooden files packed with records into the plane; but before he got them there his soul was nearly torn to shreds.

2. It would be quite wrong for me to attempt to anticipate what Mr. Ronning has to say. No words of mine could take the place of his distraught agony. When I wrote to Mr. Ronning after I received his letter, I expressed my gratitude to him; first, for the work he had done so well and second for the fact that he had saved me a great trial, a temptation and a probable fall. I am sure that I would not have been as patient and as resourceful as was Mr. Ronning. I explained to Mr. Ronning that had he not done the work he was doing in connection with the Embassy goods and chattels, I would have had to do it myself; and that while I believe that I would have succeeded, I feel sure that the experience would not have been a pleasant one for me.

3. I think that you ought to put this experience of Mr. Ronning to his permanent credit. He and Brigadier Bostock<sup>1</sup> have done remarkably good work. It is true that I have had to remain at the centre of things in Chungking and grind out the daily bread; but they have been on the field of fire and they have carried through successfully.

4. The enclosure I am sending you, like many others, does not call for action but it will at least enrich your records.

7. I hope Miss Ricker arrived safely with the diplomatic bag and the boxes today. I thought I had had just about every experience there was to be enjoyed in getting off airlift shipments but I was disillusioned this morning. Miss Ricker has perhaps already told you about it but I cannot refrain from giving you a brief summary for the sake of the record of our move to Nanking.

8. Miss Ricker and I were up at four. We had breakfast at four-thirty. While we were finishing the last bit of marmalade, it started to rain. It poured. We were ready at five for the arrival of the truck which I had engaged together with the French Embassy. We waited until six. The plane was due to leave Nine Dragons at that hour. Then a French representative arrived and said that the truck was having trouble and could not come all the way. We must bring our boxes to the truck. Fortunately he had room for Miss Ricker in his passenger car. They departed to inform the Airport authorities that we were arriving.

9. I determined that this was not the proper occasion for Mohammed to go to the mountain. I ordered Chen to go down to the truck and tell them to come to the Embassy for our goods. He returned dripping like a drowned rat cursing and calling upon "Omeitofu". The truck driver refused to come any further than the second back-alley intersection with Fairy Grotto from our premises. Mohammed went to budge the mountain. It came. In the meantime, I had the servants load up our car with the boxes just in case the truck driver could not be persuaded to change his mind. When the truck arrived and I looked under the canvas, I found that it was full of people and baggage. What to do? The people refused to step out into the pouring rain and it was imperative to completely rearrange everything if our stuff was to be taken on. Chen and I crawled in over the top of it all. An old amah had two French dogs in a basket. She refused to let us move the miserable little hounds. She was afraid they would get wet. We pushed and shoved and packed in one after another of our boxes, pails and bed racks. Two boxes remained. We could not get them in. I asked our driver if I might place them on the front fenders. He said absolutely not. So I got our boys to lift them up on the fenders and tied them on myself as the boys were afraid to approach too close. I was lavish with rope as I did not intend to have them fall off. Everything was set. But there was no place for me. I asked if I could squeeze into the cab. The answer was, "No!" But said the driver you must sign a statement that we called here under protest. I said I would sign only after we came back from the airport. He said: "But you may not be here."

I told him to have no fears as I intended to go out with him and he could see to it himself that I returned to sign his statement. In the meantime I climbed into the cab. The co-pilot who was dry as he had not gotten out of the cab said I could not sit by him as I was soaking wet. I asked him what Province he was from. He said that he was Szechuan. Well, I replied I am from Hupeh. We are neighbours. Move over. He did. We had as uneventful a trip to Nine Dragons as is possible with a driver who steps the accelerator down as far as it will go that he may devote his full attention to keeping the rampaging truck on the slippery road. We arrived safely if not entirely sanely.

10. We were not too late though it was nearly eight o'clock. No one was worrying about us. It took me some time to locate anyone who would accept responsibility. I was informed at last that we must wait for a weather report. It arrived and the coolies began unloading the truck and carrying the stuff around the building and through corridors to a small room at the back. I could not understand this but before I could get a satisfactory explanation, the coolies started to carry the whole business back again to the truck. Now I demanded an explanation. I was told our plane was not leaving from this Airport but from Pai Shih Yi, forty miles on the other side of Chungking.

11. No one seemed to be very much disturbed. It was very casually arranged to crank up a plane and ferry the whole entourage to Pai Shih Yi. I made certain that all our stuff, bag and baggage not to forget our acting King's Messenger, was safely on board. The plane took off. I watched it disappear over the hills and looked for my French friend anticipating a ride back in the passenger car. But he had also disappeared. He seemed to be so glad when he found that the extra hop was not to cost the French Government any additional expense, I decided that he had gone to cable Paris. At any rate I had to look for a ride as I had signed the statement required by the truck driver and sent him off with my blessings thanking him for his many courtesies after admonishing him that politeness was an ancient Chinese virtue which it would be well even for truck drivers to cultivate. I accosted a number of people and sat around for some time before I got a ride. It took me as far as Chialing House. From there I called up Chen and told him to send the car for me. Then I remembered our gasoline had been thoughtfully replaced with water. So I asked the chauffeur to come to the phone asking him if there was enough gas to come to fetch me. He said there is about one gallon but the gravity feed would prevent the car from climbing the hill. I had my first bus ride in the reeking diesel wagons of Chungking. It was even worse than I thought. But I got home and Chen had the bath water drawn and dry clothes laid out. Then I joined him to finish the packing. We are ready for the passage to Nanking.

12. Two men came from the Ming Sung Company today to estimate the tonnage. They say there are about thirty tons by measure. It is packed and ready to go. I hope you do not think it is too much although it exceeds our original expectations. Please let me have your comments in this regard.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. RONNING

DESPATCH 548

Nanking, May 15, 1946

Sir,

STUDENTS FOR CANADA

I have the honour to quote herewith a news item which appeared this morning in the Central News Agency Service. It deals with the despatch of Chinese students for overseas education. It indicates that the Chinese Department of Education has for the time being at least given up the idea of any reciprocal arrangement with Canada. The despatch runs:

Chungking, May 13 (Central): Two hundred forty Chinese college graduates will get a chance to make advanced studies on scholarships abroad either by going through selection or competitive examinations to be given by the Ministry of Education not later than the beginning of August, according to a spokesman of the Ministry of Education.

Of the 240 scholarships 100 are to be given by the Chinese Government, 50 donated by the United States Government, 20 by the British Government and the rest of the 20 Chinese students to be selected by the Ministry of Education for advanced studies in England and 50 students in exchange with the same number of French students.

The date for the examinations which was originally scheduled for Sept. 10, has been advanced to some time between the end of July and the beginning of August.

2. This of course is a great disappointment to me. For two years now I have been pressing for an arrangement under which a number of Chinese students would be taken to Canada each year for post-graduate work. As you must be aware, I have pressed throughout, not for a policy of charity to China, but rather for a Canadian investment in overseas economic contacts. I have stressed the point that the Chinese who have returned from education in the United States, Britain, France, and Germany, now occupy key positions in government and industry; and that whenever their duties call upon them to make purchases abroad, or to recommend such purchases to others, they invariably think of the outstanding firms and products of the countries where they have been educated.

3. I have been convinced that in no way could Canada get so permanent and so economical a field force in China as through the expenditure of money on the advanced education of outstanding young Chinese. The first investment is the last. The young men will return to China full of enthusiasm for, and knowledge of Canada and her industries; and will devote a whole lifetime, without pay, to promoting Canadian interests in China and Chinese contacts with Canada.

4. The failure to take action along the lines I have so strongly recommended, and which I know have been supported by others is a great disappointment to me. I am aware that the fact that there has been no action up to the present does not mean that there will be no action in the future. On this point my confidence continues. But it would be very wrong if I were not to let you know how I feel on the subject. I am sure that a great opportunity has been lost, not permanently, but at a critical time in the development of Chinese industrial and trading life. China is today, as far as world economics are concerned, at the point where the little streams in the hills of Canada are to be found—that is, at the headwaters of the currents which eventually will form the great rivers. The directions now given to the currents will have a great bearing on the future of the courses they will follow.

I have etc.

It is suggested that instead of sending a formal note in reply, a representative of the Embassy should be asked to call, to whom it should be indicated that the Order-in-Council has been passed to meet conditions which have no relation whatever to the question of immigration from the Orient.

It should then be suggested to the Chinese representative that in view of the explanation given of the reasons for the Order-in-Council, the Embassy might wish to consider withdrawing the note.

It is an intemperate and unfair document, and if not withdrawn we shall have to give a stiff answer.<sup>1</sup>

Ottawa, May 31, 1946

The Chinese Ambassador presents his compliments to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and has the honour to state that he has noted with the deepest regret and keenest disappointment the announcement made by the Honourable J. A. Glen, Minister of Mines and Resources, on May 29th, of the Order-in-Council, dated May 28th, permitting the relatives of persons legally admitted to and resident in Canada to enter this country, but excepting from the operation of the new regulations immigration from the Orient.

Ever since the passing of the Chinese Immigration Act in 1923, the question of Chinese immigration into Canada has been a source of great dissatisfaction. It has also formed a subject of considerable discussion between the two Governments. But, in spite of the offer of the Canadian Government to solve the question, unfortunately, it has not yet seen its way to meet the wishes of the Chinese Government and nothing has come of the negotiations. As a result, hardly anything has been done to rectify the anomalous situation which has existed in relation to this matter.

What is more deplorable, the Canadian Government has, in the above-mentioned Order-in-Council, given evidence of a further attempt to discriminate between [sic] the people of a country which has been Canada's faithful ally during a long period of stress and strain.

The Chinese Ambassador has transmitted to his Government the contents of the new Order-in-Council and awaits instructions to communicate further with the Secretary of State for External Affairs on the subject.

Dear Mr. Howe,

We are negotiating the purchase of eleven frigates now in the West Coast of Canada from War Assets Corporation. There are four Class A and seven Class B without armament. The Government of China intends to use these ships as customs patrol vessels, and it is their desire to have the full armament such as four-inch guns and mountings, oerlikon guns, bofor guns, all with the appropriate number of rounds of ammunition.

We have been advised by the Deputy Minister of National Defence, Naval Service, that the guns and ammunition are available; but before proceeding to make this purchase through the Canadian Commercial Corporation, we understand the policy of the provision of armament for ships other than Canadian warships is a matter for decision of His Majesty's Canadian Government and this matter will be presented to Council for a decision.

We are naturally desirous of buying the armament for the frigates in Canada, otherwise we understand the British Government or the United States War Assets Corporation would favorably consider our application for armament for the eleven frigates, but it is our desire to have this work done in Canada and we respectfully request your decision on our behalf in bringing this matter to a favorable decision so that we may facilitate delivery of the frigates.

Yours faithfully,

CHINESE IMMIGRATION INTO CANADA

Attached is copy of a note from the Chinese Embassy, dated May 31, 1946,<sup>1</sup> with reference to the bearing of Order in Council No. 2071 of May 28, 1946 on the question of Chinese immigration into Canada.

2. It was felt that the note was intemperate and unfair and must rest on a misunderstanding on the part of Dr. Liu of the purpose of the Order in Council. With the approval of Mr. St. Laurent, Mr. Tien of the Embassy (in the absence of Dr. Liu) was asked to call and it was explained to him that the Order in Council had been passed to meet conditions which have no relation to the question of immigration from the Orient. It was then suggested that the Embassy might wish to withdraw the note. It was pointed out that, if this were not done, we would have to reply in terms which might make it more difficult to consider soberly and constructively the solution of the question of Chinese immigration in which we were both interested.

3. Mr. Tien called again on June 21st to say that his Ambassador had considered the representations made to him and had decided not to withdraw the note. Mr. Tien said the matter would be referred to Nanking.

4. It was thought that we should wait a few days before replying in case Dr. Liu might receive instructions from Nanking which would cause him to withdraw the note. Since this has not occurred the attached note has been drafted in reply.

5. As an alternative to sending this reply, the Prime Minister may wish to consider the advisability of asking Dr. Liu personally if the misleading memorandum might be withdrawn.

6. The Prime Minister will also wish to note that in the interviews with Mr. Tien, it was recalled (as has been done in paragraph 4 of the draft reply) that in January 1944 the draft of a proposed immigration treaty was handed to the Chinese Minister in Ottawa. When the Ambassador, in June 1944, had informed the Under-Secretary that the Chinese Government found it impossible to accept the principle on which the proposed treaty was drafted, the Under-Secretary had pointed out the advantages which it was believed the treaty contained and had referred to the impossibility of repealing the present Chinese Immigration Act unless some other workable agreement could be reached. It was then indicated to Mr. Tien that the way had always been open for the Chinese to make suggestions as to lines along which further consideration might be given to the question.

Draft Note from Secretary of State for External Affairs to Ambassador of China

Ottawa, July 2, 1946

The Secretary of State for External Affairs presents his compliments to the Chinese Ambassador and has the honour to acknowledge receipt of his note of May 31, 1946, with reference to the announcement made by the Minister of Mines and Resources of Order-in-Council No. 2071 of May 28, 1946.

2. The statement of the Chinese Ambassador that the Order-in-Council excepts immigration from the Orient from the operation of the new regulations cannot be accepted. The regulations at present controlling immigration into Canada prohibit the landing in Canada of immigrants of all classes and occupations with certain specified exceptions. Order-in-Council No. 2071 merely provides for the addition of certain other exceptions to the specified list. In his statement to the House of Commons on May 29, 1946, in which he referred to conditions in Europe, the Minister of Mines and Resources made it clear that the Order-in-Council is intended as a short term measure and that these exceptions have been added in order to meet, in some degree, the pressing demands being made on behalf of certain refugees or displaced persons in European countries. On two occasions during the war, it may be recalled, Orders-in-Council were similarly passed to modify immigration provisions in order to improve the position of Chinese citizens and persons of Chinese origin.

3. None of these Orders-in-Council can be regarded as making any change in Canadian immigration policy. It is regretted, therefore, that the Chinese Ambassador should interpret the present action of the Canadian Government as giving evidence of a further attempt to discriminate against the people of a country which has been Canada's ally during a long period of stress and strain and that he should characterize as deplorable an action inspired in large part by humanitarian considerations.

4. The reference in the note of the Chinese Ambassador to the offer of the Canadian Government to solve the question of Chinese immigration into Canada is noted; also the statement that the Canadian Government has not yet seen its way to meet the wishes of the Chinese Government. It will be recalled that on January 17, 1944, the draft of a proposed treaty was handed to the Chinese Minister in Ottawa and on June 2, 1944 the Chinese Ambassador informed the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs that the Chinese Government found it impossible to accept the principle on which the proposed treaty was drafted. The Under-Secretary pointed out the advantages which it was believed the treaty contained and referred to the impossibility of repealing the present Chinese Immigration Act unless some other workable agreement could be reached. The way has always been open for the Chinese Government to make suggestions as to lines along which further consideration might be given to the question.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION INTO CANADA

The Prime Minister has read the memorandum of July 4 together with the note from the Chinese Embassy and the draft note in reply.

Mr. King asks whether the order in council cannot be amended so as to include persons of the Chinese race, without specifying them by name but including them under the general category of nationals of one of the United Nations.

Mr. King says that if this could be done he would willingly see Dr. Liu and would then feel able to ask him to withdraw the note of May 31.

The Prime Minister said that he thought there might be something in what the note from the Chinese Embassy represented. I said I made no attempt to defend the general position respecting Chinese immigration into Canada; but I was concerned that a note should be based on what was in my judgment the misapprehension of the exact circumstances. I pointed out that the negotiations for a comprehensive agreement between Canada and China which would cover the situation described in the note, had been broken off at the instance of the Chinese Government and had not since been resumed.

Dear Mr. Robertson,

I have your letter of the 11th instant† concerning the note received from the Chinese Ambassador relative to the recent changes in the Immigration Regulations, and the suggestion that the Order-in-Council (P.C. 2071 of May 28th, 1946) effecting these changes might be so amended as to include persons of the Chinese race. To take this action would bring about such far-reaching results that I believe the same would be impracticable.

To put the suggestion into effect it would be necessary to make changes in the basic Order-in-Council P.C. 695 of March 21st, 1931, which now does not apply to immigrants of the Asiatic race, but recording therein the specific Asiatic races that should be excluded and the classes of Asiatic immigrants that are to be admitted thereunder. P.C. 2115 of September 16th, 1930, which excludes Asiatic immigrants other than the wife and child of a Canadian citizen and those admissible under the Chinese Act, would require to be rescinded.

A simple way of effecting the change would be to rescind P.C. 2115 (The Asiatic Order-in-Council) and reenact same by prohibiting the admission of immigrants of any Asiatic race with the exception of those whose admission is desired.

Either procedure would result in the Chinese Immigration Act becoming largely ineffective for the purpose it now serves. In other words, the provisions of the Statute would be almost altogether nullified by the Orders-in-Council passed under the authority of another Act.

The actual effect of the changes referred to above would be that a person of Chinese race in Canada could apply for and bring to Canada, subject to health, character, and ability to provide for maintenance,

- (a) a wife and child under 18 years,
- (b) unmarried sons and daughters 18 years of age and over,
- (c) unmarried brothers and sisters,
- (d) father and mother.

It would be difficult to exclude East Indians, or if this were done to justify the distinction.

The admission of the classes would mean a very considerable Asiatic immigration, practically all of which would be destined to British Columbia.

Yours very truly,

A. L. JOLLIFFE

NEW CHINESE IMMIGRATION AGREEMENT PROPOSAL

The Chinese Ambassador came to see the Under-Secretary yesterday afternoon to discuss a new approach to the question of Chinese immigration into Canada, which he had been authorized to make by his Government.

Dr. Liu said that he was most anxious to see some agreement reached which would settle the present unsatisfactory situation that existed in regard to Chinese immigration into Canada. Since the breaking off of the last conversations over the Canadian draft immigration treaty, Dr. Liu said that he had informed his Government fully of the difficulties which the Canadian Government faced in introducing legislation along the lines of the recently introduced U.S. regulations governing Chinese immigration. He said that on the whole his Government favoured the quota approach to the problem but recognized the fact that it would be difficult to work out such an agreement with Canada since its immigration policy had not developed along quota lines.

Dr. Liu said that instead of restricting immigration to Canada along lines of occupations (as was suggested in our previous draft) his Government thought that Chinese immigration might be restricted in terms of "next-of-kin" and that the numbers might be limited by some agreed annual quota.

Mr. Robertson thought that the "next of kin" proposal may have been suggested by the recent Order-in-Council which permits the entry into Canada of immigrants from Europe whose support is guaranteed by next-of-kin resident in Canada. This, too, would fit in with the pressure which has been put on the Chinese Ambassador by Chinese resident in Canada and on the Chinese Government by relatives of Chinese resident in Canada to endeavour to work out with the Canadian Government some relaxation of the present complete exclusion of Chinese immigration into Canada.

Mr. Robertson told Dr. Liu that the Government was reconsidering at this time its whole immigration policy to see what revisions should be made to meet the requirements of the post-war period. He added that we would give prompt and sympathetic consideration to the Ambassador's proposal of the lines along which an agreement might be worked out.

Of the items dealt with at the meeting of the Cabinet held today, the following items of particular interest to your department were dealt with:

1. Sale of armaments to foreign governments

Mr. Howe reported that the Chinese government were prepared to proceed with the acquisition of a number of disarmed surplus frigates.

In these circumstances, the Cabinet decision of July 27th, would, presumably, apply only to vessels which had not been demilitarized.

The Cabinet, after further discussion, agreed that the proposed sale of disarmed frigates to China be approved.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION INTO CANADA

Mr. R. G. Robertson and I discussed the recent proposal of the Chinese Ambassador for a Sino-Canadian Immigration Agreement with Dr. Keenleyside. Dr. Keenleyside was of the view that neither of the two suggestions made by the Chinese Ambassador, viz., next-of-kin and annual quota, were likely to be found a suitable method of approaching the Chinese immigration question. Dr. Keenleyside felt that it would be very difficult to limit by any numerical quota the entry of next-of-kin to Canada once we accepted that as a basis for the entry of Chinese to this country. He said that at the time we made our original proposals for a reciprocal immigration treaty we had canvassed pretty carefully the question of setting up quotas for the entry of all national groups that would be difficult to assimilate in Canada and that the Immigration Branch had seen insuperable obstacles in the way of introducing such legislation in the House.

Our discussion indicated that there would be a good deal of difficulty in considering constructively the Chinese Ambassador's proposal. We thought, therefore, that it might be better to let the matter stand over until the Inter-departmental Committee on Immigration Policy had an opportunity to consider this and other related questions. If you think it desirable, we might refer this specific question to that Committee to indicate the difficulties that we faced in working out a satisfactory agreement with the Chinese.

I am attaching a letter to the Chinese Ambassador<sup>1</sup> for your signature and also one to Mr. Jolliffe.†

Dear Dr. Liu,

Before leaving for Paris, Mr. Robertson spoke to me about the new proposal you had made in connection with Chinese immigration into Canada.

As I understand it, you suggested that consideration might be given to the admission to Canada of next-of-kin of Chinese residents in this country with some overall annual limitation as to the numbers to be admitted.

After a preliminary examination of this proposal, it has been concluded that it would be wise to let this matter stand over for a while until the Inter-departmental Committee on Immigration Policy, which is examining the whole question of immigration into Canada, has got further along with its work.

I shall communicate with you again as soon as we are in a position to make any concrete comments on your proposal.

Yours sincerely,

TOP SECRET

Ottawa, August 1, 1946

On June 27th the Cabinet decided not to sell a number of frigates to the Chinese Government, complete with armament. The Chinese wish to use these frigates for the Chinese Customs Service and therefore want them with whatever armament is required for customs preventive work.

We have been informally notified by the United Kingdom High Commissioner's office that the Chinese have approached that office with a request that the United Kingdom Government supply the armament. The United Kingdom High Commissioner does not wish to forward this request to the Admiralty without knowing what our attitude would be. I understand that the Navy is anxious to dispose of the ships and would, from the point of view of supply, have, of course, no objections to selling the armament as well.

In view of the previous decision of Cabinet, it seems to me desirable that the position should be submitted once more to Cabinet for consideration. There are three courses open:

(i) We can inform the United Kingdom High Commissioner that we would like the Admiralty to turn down any request from the Chinese for arming these ships. That would seem to be going rather a long way provided that the United Kingdom authorities are satisfied about the end use of the armament in China. The Chinese Customs Service has had in the past a good reputation and has employed a good many British subjects;

(ii) We can inform the United Kingdom High Commissioner that although we are not prepared to furnish the arms ourselves we would not wish to stand in the way of the Chinese getting the arms they desire in the United Kingdom. This is open to the objection that we have surplus armament and might just as well dispose of it on these ships if they are going to be armed in any event.

(iii) We can reverse the earlier decision and agree to supply the ships with armament, perhaps with some restriction as to the type of armament to be left on the vessels. I presume that we would want, in any event, to remove a fair amount of the special equipment installed to meet the conditions of convoy duty in the North Atlantic, and that what the Chinese really want is the guns and ammunition.

I see no serious objection on the grounds of policy to the third course. As the matter is rather pressing, I should be glad if you could seek to secure consideration by Cabinet this week.

DESPATCH 847

Nanking, August 1, 1946

Sir,

AMALGAMATION OF RELIEF AGENCIES

I have the honour to send to you herewith copies of three letters† dealing with a report which Mr. Ronning brought to me from Shanghai, to the effect that an amalgamation of relief agencies operating in China had been decided upon, and was about to be put into force. The letters to which I refer are:

(a) letter from myself to Rev. V.J.R. Mills, dated July 18, 1946, asking him for particulars of the meeting held in Shanghai while Mr. Ronning was there;

(b) letter from Mr. A.A. Dorland, Secretary of the Canadian Advisory Committee of the Canadian Red Cross and Chinese War Relief Fund of Canada, commenting on a copy of the letter which I wrote to Mr. Mills, which I had sent to Mr. Dorland; and

(c) letter from Mr. Mills dated July 27th written in reply to my letter of July 18th.

2. One of the problems facing those who are interested in Canada's effort in China arises from the attitude of professional relief workers. They are inclined to adopt efficiency methods, which means, of course, efficiency from their own point of view, and in line with their own desires and projects. They are inclined to overlook the natural aspirations and wishes of those in Canada who deny themselves in order to make contributions to China.

3. As I have advised you on a number of occasions in the past, I think that the task of Canadian agencies operating in China is two-fold

(a) to actually do good, and to help those who are suffering; and

(b) to make Canada better known to China, and by so doing, to extend and make more solid the foundations of goodwill between Canadians and Chinese.

The second objective can only be reached if the Chinese are made conscious of what Canadians are doing in China. If the Canadian effort becomes anonymous, the first objective will be accomplished, but all sight of the second objective will be lost, and Sino-Canadian goodwill will not be consciously developed.

At the meeting of the Cabinet held today, the following item of particular interest to your department was dealt with:

Sale of armaments to foreign governments

The Assistant Secretary, referring to the decision of the Cabinet on July 29, 1946, reported that the office of the United Kingdom High Commissioner in Canada had been approached by Chinese officials with a view to purchase from the United Kingdom armament for the disarmed frigates being obtained from Canada.

Before dealing further with the request the U.K. authorities wished to ascertain the attitude of the Canadian government.

The Cabinet, after discussion, agreed that the High Commissioner for the United Kingdom in Canada be informed that the Canadian government had refused to sell arms and ammunition to China for the frigates in question and that the frigates would not be permitted to leave Canadian waters bearing arms or ammunition.

DESPATCH 854

Nanking, August 3, 1946

Sir,

SHIPS FOR SALT ADMINISTRATION

I have the honour to call your attention to your telegram No. 418, dated August 1,† which has just reached me. I would like to impress on you the fact that when firms in China similar to the Salt Administration ask for quotations on ships, they are, in fact, asking for assistance and guidance, since they have no technical advice available to them in China. There are no naval architects whom they can consult, and there are no engineers who could prepare satisfactory drawings for them.

2. Under similar circumstances the Americans are in the habit of acting very quickly and sending to the scene a specialist able to deal with the situation. Along this line they have shown a great deal of enterprise and have been very prompt to act, even though at considerable initial cost. I have not yet been able to discover under what system they take care of this initial cost, but in many instances they certainly act before any arrangement is made. There is no doubt that, in the end, if a contract is entered into, the costs of the preliminary trips and expert advice must be included in the final figure.

3. The Salt Administration, like the Ming Sung Company and other concerns, have come to us because of their psychological bias towards Canada. We have not met them with the promptness and decisiveness which have been shown by the Americans. As a matter of fact, in no single instance have we acted with decision. Our attitude has been to hold back and expect the Chinese to supply the technical details, which, as a rule, are entirely beyond their reach.

4. It is true that in many cases the Americans have been over-hasty, and in their zeal they have promised things which they have not been able to deliver. This has caused a good deal of dissatisfaction and hard feeling. On the other hand, we have given the impression that we are not seriously in the field at all, and that our claimed technical skill and industrial capacity are questionable.

5. When dealing with Chinese firms under present conditions, and with the severe limitations which do exist in China, it would be wise, I think, to study the conditions under which initiative could be taken. It is true that it was suggested that Mr. Danner should come to China in connection with the modernizing of the salt production operations. However, the fee asked by Mr. Danner of $250.00 gold a day, plus expenses, seemed very high to the Chinese, particularly when no time limit was indicated. In the eyes of the cautious Chinese, the time might easily have stretched out to six months or more.

6. I know that Canada just now is passing through troubled industrial times. Still, in spite of this, I think her line of operation should be clear-cut and decisive. It is always possible to come close to a contract and then to delay its final consummation, pending the establishment of reasonably stable conditions. The Chinese understand what is happening, and are very tolerant and patient. Apart from their technical incompetence and their lack of specific and detailed knowledge, it is a pleasure to negotiate with them.

In spite of the fact that General Odlum will have left for Canada on leave before another mail can reach him, I think it would be helpful to our Embassy in Nanking to know the reason why we have not been able to send favorable replies to the many trade and investment leads that General Odlum has sent forward. General Odlum undoubtedly feels that we have not shown enough enterprise for a young, vigorous trading nation in following up the leads that he has uncovered for us. This is principally due to the fact that he is not sufficiently familiar with the method of operation of the Canadian Government and Canadian business in general. I suspect that he may have gained a wrong impression of big business through overhearing conversations of his cousin, Floyd Odlum, who would be talking, quite likely, in terms of hundreds of thousands of dollars.

With General Odlum's departure our Embassy will require, and will be prepared to accept a good deal more direction from Ottawa. I think that any explanation we can give them of the difficulties involved at this end in pursuing trade and investment leads would be appreciated, particularly since those on the spot have very little practical experience with Canadian Government practices. I should think it would be a good idea to add a further paragraph to your draft despatch saying that we understand that a senior Canadian Government Trade Commissioner will be going out to Shanghai some time this fall. With his greater familiarity with Canadian Government procedure and the organization of Canadian business he should be in a better position to investigate trade inquiries in China more thoroughly before sending forward recommendations and suggestions to the Canadian Government. He will also be able to distinguish between the large venture that may require Government credit, the intermediate venture that may appeal to private Canadian groups, such as E. P. Taylor's Sino-Canadian Development Corporation, and the small agency business for the handling of ordinary commodity exchanges.

DESPATCH 333

Ottawa, September 13, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your despatch No. 854 of August 3rd with respect to the need for enterprise on the part of Canadians in pursuing prospective contracts in China.

The situation which you describe is probably unavoidable in the present circumstances. In the first place, the political situation in China is highly disturbing to commercial relationships. Secondly, Chinese proposals generally are not attractive because of the uncertainty surrounding the means of payment. Lastly, there is a heavy domestic and export demand in most lines that makes it unnecessary for firms to seek business and reluctant to consider proposals that offer any considerable difficulties. I feel it is improbable that Canadian concerns will be willing to run risks in the Chinese market until we are in a position of having surplus goods for export and are hard pressed for foreign markets.

As you are aware, we have tried to meet some of the difficulties through Government guarantee of credits. The Chinese projects under consideration cover some $40,000,000, one-fifth of the total available for all countries. However, negotiations over guaranteed contracts are inevitably complicated and protracted and are not attractive to the Canadian firms except where there are very substantial amounts involved.

Perhaps some improvement might come through the appointment by Chinese principals of representatives in Canada. It will be interesting to see if the presence of the representative of the Szechwan Salt Administration in Canada will lead to the conclusion of a Canadian contract.

Herewith is a memorandum, prepared for Cabinet consideration, authorizing the conclusion of a commercial modus vivendi with China. The effect of the agreement would be to give China most favoured foreign nation treatment in Customs matters, on a basis of reciprocity. At present, China is one of a very small number of countries whose products are subject to the rates of our General Tariff. Since China has a single level tariff and gives Canadian goods the lowest rates accorded to goods imported from any country, the present position amounts to a de facto discrimination against Chinese trade.

It had been hoped that this modus vivendi could be authorized in time for General Odium to sign the agreement with the Chinese Government in Nanking before his return to Canada. If this is not possible, the Chargé d'Affaires could sign it instead, or we could shift the venue to Ottawa and let Dr. Liu sign.<sup>1</sup>

Ottawa, September 12, 1946

COMMERCIAL MODUS VIVENDI WITH CHINA

1. The Chinese Government has enquired concerning the possibility of negotiating a commercial agreement between Canada and China.

2. By the terms of the Canada-China Extraterritorial Treaty of the 14th April, 1944, Canada and China are bound to negotiate a commercial treaty within six months of the termination of hostilities. It has not however, been considered advisable to negotiate a substantive commercial treaty prior to the discussions to be held throughout the next twelve or fifteen months relating to a multilateral agreement on tariffs and trade and the establishment of an International Trade Organization. Nevertheless, it has been felt that there would be advantages in negotiating an interim arrangement with China. The Chinese Government has expressed its preference for a commercial modus vivendi rather than a formal trade agreement. Accordingly, a draft modus vivendi providing for the reciprocal granting of most-favoured-nation treatment for the period of one year has been negotiated by officials of the Governments of Canada and China. The draft agreement, which is quoted in extenso hereunder, will, if concluded remain in force after that period subject to termination by either Government on three months' notice.

3. It is considered that the conclusion of this modus vivendi would help to increase the flow of trade between Canada and China to the mutual benefit of the two countries. The modus vivendi will come in force on the exchange of Notes between the Canadian Ambassador to China and the Chinese Minister of Foreign Affairs.

RECOMMENDATION:

It is therefore recommended by the undersigned, with the concurrence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue that the Secretary of State for External Affairs be authorized to inform Major General V. W. Odium, C.B. C.M.G., D.S.O., Canadian Ambassador to China, or in his absence Chester Ronning, Canadian Chargé d'Affaires, a.i., that it would be in order to complete negotiations for the proposed Modus vivendi with China by an exchange of Notes in the following terms:

1. Articles, the growth, produce or manufacture of China shall not, on importation into Canada, be subject to higher duties or charges than those levied or which may hereafter be levied on like articles, the growth, produce or manufacture of any other foreign country.

2. The advantages now accorded, or which may hereafter be accorded by Canada exclusively to other territories under the sovereignty of His Majesty the King of Great Britain, Ireland and the British Dominions beyond the Seas, Emperor of India, or under His Majesty's suzerainty, protection or mandate, shall be excepted from the operation of this agreement.

3. Articles, the growth, produce or manufacture of Canada shall not, on importation into China be subject to higher duties or charges than those levied or which may hereafter be levied on like articles the growth, produce or manufacture of any other foreign country.

4. The advantages now accorded or which may hereafter be accorded by China to adjacent countries in order to facilitate frontier traffic shall be excepted from the operation of this agreement.

5. Articles, the growth, produce or manufacture of either country imported into the other shall in no case be subject in matters concerning customs duties and subsidiary charges, or as regards the methods of levying such duties and the rules and formalities connected with importation, and with respect to the laws and regulations affecting the taxation, sale, distribution or use of imported goods, to any duties, taxes or charges other or higher, or to any rules or formalities other or more burdensome than those to which the like articles the growth, produce or manufacture of any third country are or may hereafter be subject.

6. It is understood that the present note and Your Excellency's reply will constitute an agreement between the two governments which will enter into force on the..... and, if a Trade Agreement is not concluded before, will remain in force for one year to the....., and thereafter will remain in force subject to termination by either Government at any time on giving three months' notice.

COMMERCIAL AGREEMENT WITH CHINA; PROPOSED MODUS VIVENDI

At the meeting of the Cabinet on September 17th, the Secretary of State for External Affairs submitted a departmental memorandum recommending the conclusion of a commercial modus vivendi with China, the effect of which would be to give China most-favoured-nation treatment in customs matters on the basis of reciprocity.

The Cabinet, after discussion, approved the recommendation submitted by the Minister and authorized completion of negotiations with China by an exchange of notes in the terms set out in the departmental memorandum.<sup>1</sup>

DESPATCH 465

Ottawa, October 22, 1946

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

I have the honour to enclose for your information copies of correspondence† between the Prime Minister's Office, the Director of Immigration and this Department concerning the quarantine examination of Chinese passengers in accordance with provisions of Section 20 of the Chinese Immigration Act. You will note from this correspondence that passengers aboard the S.S. General Meigs en route from Vancouver to Yokohama in June of this year wrote to the Prime Minister protesting against discrimination being shown Chinese passengers and members of the crew of the vessel in the special procedure followed for their quarantine inspection.

Pending arrival at some mutually satisfactory solution of the general question of Chinese immigration into Canada that would permit the rescinding or modification of the Chinese Immigration Act, the Government has endeavoured wherever possible, to administer the provisions of the Chinese Immigration Act in such a manner as to avoid criticism on the grounds of racial discrimination against persons of Chinese origin. I am, therefore, very glad to note from the last paragraph of Mr. Jolliffe's letter of October 17† that the Immigration Branch has now arranged with the Quarantine Service to accept the usual quarantine pratique in place of the special Bill of Health previously required, and that instructions have been issued to Quarantine officers that where it is considered necessary to muster passengers and crew there is to be no differentiation between nationalities. These instructions will eliminate the possibility of further complaints such as that filed in regard to the passengers on board the S.S. General Meigs.

GUARANTEED CREDITS FOR CHINESE PROJECTS

I met this morning by arrangement with General Odlum, Mr. Pearson and representatives of other interested Departments to discuss this subject with Odlum immediately on his return here and in the hope that we could explain the situation somewhat to him and raise the important questions with him before he got too far in discussions with various persons individually, and before he saw you and Dr. Clark, as undoubtedly he will endeavour to arrange to do. I thought I should give you a very brief resumé of the points involved, as I see them.

By way of background, you will recall that we have agreed to loan the Government of China $60 million, of which $25 m. has been earmarked for the purchase of supplies and equipment requested by China as Mutual Aid, other surplus items, and some industrial equipment which China had sought to purchase from Canada before the loan was arranged. The size of the loan in general, and in particular the size of the $35 m. available for post-war requirements apart from Mutual Aid and other items mentioned above, was considered very carefully by yourself and the Government and decided upon as being roughly in the proper relation to the credit of $500 odd million which the U.S. was said to be making to China at that time. In addition to this agreement we are now completing arrangements to lend up to $12½ m. to the Ming Sung Industrial Company, guaranteed by the Government of China, for the purchase of ships and some related equipment in Canada. This company is an old, established Chinese shipping and industrial company, in whose management we have some reason to feel confidence and which will afford us useful business connections.

At the time of making our main loan to China, you wrote to General Kiang, who was representing the Chinese Government in the matter, as follows:

Mr. Bryce has reported to me the strong desire of your Government to have us increase the amount of credit which we could make available to you. I have discussed this matter with my colleagues, and I must report that the Canadian Government is not prepared at this early stage to agree to a larger credit for general post-war purposes than the one I have outlined above. As you know, however, we have indicated our willingness to consider the provision of guarantees for credits obtained in Canada for the financing of specific industrial projects, and we remain prepared to consider any projects along this line that your Government wishes to put forward itself or permit Chinese nationals to put forward.

On the basis of this statement of the Canadian Government policy, which was communicated to him at the time, and of other somewhat similar indications of Government policy, General Odlum has been discussing with the Chinese various industrial projects which might be put forward to us here for consideration in connection with guaranteed credits. He has recommended a number of these projects to us for favourable consideration, and in one or two instances he has, I think, gone some distance in indicating to the Chinese that the Government here would give sympathetic consideration to the project in question, although he had not sufficiently definite word from Ottawa to justify this expression of opinion.

We have told General Odlum of the general reluctance of the Government at the present time to go ahead with any new export credit commitments, and have indicated to him that any projects put up at this time would be scanned rather carefully and critically. We have told him that amongst the things we would wish to take into account are the usefulness of projects in providing us with employment, the value of the later trade connections and markets that will be developed in making these arrangements, and, as well, the contribution that they will make to the development of a strong, stable and democratic China, which, of course, is a matter that is of concern to us as well as to the Americans, although perhaps not in such great degree proportionately. We have told him that in addition to our general concern over the political situation, we are particularly concerned over the dangers involved at the present time in Government controlled and sponsored companies and projects which may be associated with various bureaucrats or cliques that are lining their pockets now during the period of confusion and corruption. We have asked him as to his views regarding the practicability of investigating these various projects under consideration. We made clear to the General that no increase in the credit to the Government of China itself could be contemplated at this stage, and that even any industrial projects coming within our policy statement would probably be undertaken somewhat reluctantly and, if possible, we would want to have the production on them deferred as long as possible from the point of view of our own supply and employment situation.

We had, I think, a useful discussion with the Ambassador on these matters. On the whole, he understood and accepted the point about making any further general commitments for credits at the present time, but he thought it highly desirable that we should continue to consider and act upon some of these industrial projects. He emphasized that the U.S. were going ahead in this field, even though they were holding up on the general credit to China, as a technical device in assisting General Marshall's endeavours to secure a truce in the civil war and some reorganization of the Government. He emphasized that the vast majority of people in China are at work and that, despite the confusion, political uncertainty and corruption, some progress is being made in the economic sphere. He said that there was a very favourable attitude toward Canada, and that we should take advantage of this in building up our trade connections with them. He certainly wanted us to proceed with the consideration of the better projects that were being brought forward to us. He spoke specifically of the political risks and he told us he had been assured not only by the leaders of the present Government but by one of the highest Communist leaders that any Chinese Government in the future that may emerge out of the present political uncertainties will honour the external obligations being assumed now by the present Chinese Government for the purpose of re-establishing their economic life.

We did not discuss at any length the various projects that he has put forward and encouraged the Chinese to put forward. As yet we do not have sufficient information in my opinion to justify forming any attitude on them. I think the three that look best from our point of view are the following:

1. The Hwainan Mining and Railway Company project, which involves expenditures of about $7 m. for equipment to restore and somewhat expand this privately-owned railway and mining company.

2. The Lung Chi Ho Power Project. This involves expenditures of approximately $5 m. for equipment from Canada for the construction of a power plant on the Yangtze River in Lower Szechuan, not far from Chungking. This would be a publicly-owned company in which both the Central and Provincial Governments will share.

3. The Taiwan Electric Power Company Project. This involves purchases of about $6 m. worth of Canadian equipment for the reconstruction and improvement of this Japanese-built and formerly Japanese-owned power system on the Island of Formosa. This appears superficially to be a sound scheme economically. It is likely that our Aluminum Company, and possibly Noranda Mines, will be engaged in the operation and possibly to some degree the financing of industrial and mining projects using this power, and we may be able to bring them into some arrangement for a guaranteed credit to this Company. It looks as though the Company will be very largely, if not wholly, owned by the Chinese Government or one of its agencies, as it has been taken over from the original Japanese owners.

Odlum has also suggested a number of small hydro-electric projects, about which I am not prepared to venture any comment at present. Some of these might be worthy of consideration, but I would think we were going far enough if we undertook to consider and study the projects listed above.

One of the projects which Odlum will probably mention is the provision of credits to the China Merchants Steam Navigation Company for the construction and purchase of ships in Canada. This is a large project, involving about 35 ships of fairly substantial size, and probably involving between $35 and $40 m. credits at least. Trade and Commerce, External Affairs and ourselves are all dubious about this project. The Company is entirely owned by the Government, it has been mixed up in Chinese politics repeatedly, the record of administration is not good, and the amounts involved are quite large and concentrated in an industry where we have relatively little chance to build up continuing business. Odlum admits most of these facts, but he stresses the soundness of river shipping and coastwise shipping in China, the enthusiastic backing this matter has now by the Chinese Government and particularly T. V. Soong himself, and the encouraging quality of the present administration of the Company. I certainly would prefer to see this project financed elsewhere, either by the U.S.A. or by the International Bank.

I have not attempted to raise the question of whether we should enter upon any more of these projects at all. I feel that we should discuss the matter on the basis that we are not closing out entirely the line of policy laid down at the end of last year. Moreover, there will be delays in these things, and apparently the Chinese are prepared to go ahead on plans involving construction and employment in Canada in 1948 and subsequent years. At that time such business may be of value to us and we will not be up against the supply difficulties that we are at present. I propose to get more information about the policy being followed by the United States in regard to China, so that we will not be getting out ahead of the Americans in this matter of mutual concern.

Dear Sir,

SHIPS FOR THE CHINA MERCHANTS STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY

I would refer to your letter of the 24th of October,† forwarding copy of Despatch No. 979, of September 7th,† from the Canadian Ambassador to China, concerning the China Merchants Steam Navigation Company's ship-building programme.

In the recent report of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, it is stated that up to June 1946, individual credits for construction of coastal and cargo vessels to China have amounted to only U.S. $6,800,000.00.

We have already committed ourselves for a guarantee of credits to the Ming Sung Industrial Company Limited. This project is to construct a number of merchant ships in Canadian yards, amounting to a maximum of $15,000,000.00. It is considered that this appreciable credit is all that should be granted the shipping industry at this time.

Having in mind a policy of granting a guarantee of credits to diversified interests in China, so that they will have the effect of intensifying trade with various types of industries in China, and providing diversified exports and employment in Canada, I feel that, for the present the guaranteed credit to the Ming Sung Industrial Company Limited is sufficient, and any further credits that may be granted should be directed to other industries.

Yours faithfully,

OLIVER MASTER

Ottawa, November 1, 1946

The undersigned have the honour to report:

1. That the Government of the Republic of China, through His Excellency Dr. Liu Shih Shun, duly accredited to His Majesty the King as the Ambassador of China to Canada, has requested the Government of Canada to guarantee, under the provisions of the Export Credits Insurance Act,

(a) the guarantee of the Government of the Republic of China of the payment by Ming Sung Industrial Company Ltd., a Corporation duly organized and subsisting under the laws of the Republic of China, of the cost of Canadian-produced goods to be purchased by it from exporters and the cost of Canadian services to be supplied to it, to a maximum amount of Twelve Million, Seven Hundred and Fifty Thousand Dollars ($12,750,000) in lawful money of Canada, to be advanced by Imperial Bank of Canada, The Bank of Toronto and The Dominion Bank pursuant and subject to an Agreement dated October 30th, 1946, between said Company and said Banks, and

(b) the securities given by the said company for repayment of the said amounts so to be advanced in the form of the covenant contained in the said Agreement to pay the amounts drawn or to be drawn under letters of credit to be issued by the said Banks in accordance with the said Agreement and in the form of any other covenant or covenants given by the said Company to repay the amounts so drawn or to be drawn, and in the form of promissory notes or other evidences of indebtedness made or given by the said Company to the said Banks in accordance with the terms of the said Agreement, including interest as therein provided.

2. That the Government of the Republic of China under the hand of its Ambassador duly authorized in that behalf has itself guaranteed the payments to be made by and the securities to be given by Ming Sung Industrial Company Limited, under the said Agreement, has requested the Government of Canada to guarantee as aforesaid and has undertaken to indemnify the Government of Canada against loss in connection with the guarantee so requested;

3. That the terms and conditions upon which the guarantee by the Government of Canada is requested and upon which the said Banks have entered into the aforesaid Agreement with Ming Sung Industrial Company Ltd., are set out in said Agreement, a true copy of which is annexed hereto† and contains as schedules thereto the form of guarantee given to the said banks by the Government of the Republic of China as aforesaid and the suggested form of guarantee requested to be given by the Government of Canada;

4. That the giving of such guarantees is advisable for the purpose of facilitating and developing trade between Canada and China; and

5. That the aggregate amount of guarantees under subsection (I) of Section 22A of Part 2 of The Export Credits Insurance Act outstanding at the date hereof together with the amount of Twelve Million, Seven Hundred and Fifty Thousand Dollars ($12,750,000) in respect of which the guarantee of the Government is now requested, does not exceed Two Hundred Million Dollars ($200,000,000);

The undersigned accordingly, with the concurrence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, have the honour to recommend that Your Excellency in Council under the authority of Part II of The Export Credits Insurance Act (as amended) may be pleased to authorize the Minister of Finance on behalf of the Government of Canada to give the guarantee, as so requested, in the terms aforesaid provided that the aggregate amount to be so guaranteed shall not exceed Twelve Million, Seven Hundred and Fifty Thousand Dollars ($12,750,000).<sup>1</sup>

Dear Sir,

Reference is made to your letter of February 7, 1946, in regard to the loan of $60,000,000 granted by your Government to China under the Agreement of even date. In that letter the understanding, inter alia, was recorded that $25,000,000 of the credit was to be reserved for the purchase of supplies and equipment which had been requested from Canada by China as Mutual Aid, other items in production in Canada at September 1, 1945, which are surplus to Canadian requirements, and also certain items of used industrial equipment which China had sought to purchase from Canada, together with the costs of reconversion and completion of such equipment for Chinese use and its preparation for shipment.

I enclose herewith a summary† of the disbursements and allocations as of November 27 of the Canadian loan, from which you will note that the Chinese Government has purchased only a small proportion of the items on the original programme, namely, small arms and ammunition, including freight, to the extent of $3,750,000. This was determined by the actual requirements as they developed in China since the original list was prepared by the Mutual Aid Board and with the concurrence of the Department of Reconstruction. It is our understanding that a large portion of the balance of the material on the Mutual Aid List has been disposed of by the War Assets Corporation.

Included in the $25,000,000 is a small arms ammunition plant to be designed and built in Canada at an estimated cost of $12,000,000. Discussions in respect of this plant have been held with the War Assets Corporation and the Canadian Arsenals Limited and, in fact, $100,000 has been paid to the Canadian Arsenals Limited to be used in the preparation of preliminary plans with the understanding that no construction work on this project will be done until confirmation is received from the Chinese Government. It may be that the estimated cost of the small arms ammunition plant can be reduced.

During the past ten months we have endeavoured to prepare a programme of industrial equipment that could be purchased in Canada and a tentative list is now ready. The cost of such equipment would exceed the amount of funds left in the $35,000,000 proportion of the loan, and, on behalf of my Government, I hereby request permission to spend the unused portion of the $25,000,000 for the construction of such industrial equipment, supplies and services as may be agreed upon with the Canadian Departments of Finance and Trade and Commerce as specified in the Agreement.

I hope that you will give this request your early consideration and that, if it is agreeable to you, you will send me a prompt reply, so that the Chinese Government Supply Agency may as soon as possible enter into discussions of our industrial programme with the Canadian Departments concerned.

Yours faithfully,

TIEH PAO-CHENG

EMERGENCY POWERS; LEGISLATION; CHINESE IN CANADA

At the meeting of the Cabinet on December 10th, a report† was submitted regarding a draft bill to amend the Immigration Act in respect of ports of entry, permission to return with immigrant status, and permission to visit the United States, which had been prepared by the Cabinet Committee on Immigration Policy. The question of permitting entry into Canada of wives and children of Chinese already in this country was also raised.

The Cabinet noted the report submitted and agreed that the Committee prepare and submit a draft provision for admission to Canada of wives and children of Chinese lawfully in Canada.

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa,] November 28, 1946

MEMORANDUM PREPARED AND SUBMITTED BY T. C. DAVIS
AMBASSADOR DESIGNATE TO CHINA WITH RESPECT TO THE GRANTING OF FURTHER FINANCIAL AID TO THAT COUNTRY

1. Canada has made a loan to China of sixty million dollars and this loan is in the course of being used for the purchase of Canadian goods in Canada by the Government of China.

2. Under the Export Credits Insurance Act, Parliament has authorized the guarantee of credits to other countries to the extent of Two hundred million dollars. Of this amount a guarantee to Russia of Three million dollars has been provided and a guarantee to China of Twelve and three-quarter million in respect of the purchase in Canada by the Ming Sung Shipping Co. of a series of ships to be built in this country.

3. Several further Chinese projects have been submitted for consideration, by General Odlum, former Canadian Ambassador to China, in respect of which he has recommended that guarantees be given under the said Act.

4. In my opinion it is very desirable before I leave Canada to take up my post as Ambassador to China that a decision be reached as to whether or not any further guarantees will be given in respect to Chinese projects. If no further guarantees are to be given then China should be advised accordingly and all further discussions and negotiations stopped. If consideration is to be given to further guarantees, then there remains for consideration, the extent of such guarantees and the specific projects to be guaranteed. In this event those projects which will not be guaranteed should be selected and these wiped out from further consideration. The remaining projects should then be listed in order of importance and each dealt with on its merits to the extent that further guarantees may be given.

5. This raises at once the question of the general policy as to whether or not further guarantees are to be given. I recommend as strongly as I can that further use should be made of the above mentioned legislation to guarantee further Chinese projects. My reasons are as follows:—

(a) Canada is a great and growing nation and long range policies must now be laid to enable this nation to share in the future trade of the world to an extent commensurate with her future. The day will come when Canada will be seeking an outlet for the investment of Canadian capital abroad and also for the employment abroad of Canadian Technicians and Managerial staff in connection with Canadian industries in other countries.

(b) The area of the greatest population of the globe is in the Far East, that is, East Asia. The countries of that part of the world are largely undeveloped, with the lowest standard of living in the world. In my opinion, the next hundred years will see the greatest development taking place in such portion of the world. I have in mind India, Japan, N.E.I., The Malay Union, Indo-China and above all else, China. Canada is a Pacific Ocean nation and the future of the Western part of Canada, in particular, but, in fact, of all Canada is tied up to a remarkable degree with the developments which take place in these Eastern lands.

(c) The present powerful Western influences in China are the U.S.A. and the U.K. I have a feeling that the U.S.A. will end up by losing some of its popularity in China. The influence of the U.K. in the East is on the decline. The name of Canada stands high and we should start to plan to capitalize upon this feeling.

(d) I therefore feel that now is the time to help China to the limit of our ability, so to do and thus lay the foundation for good-will, which I believe will pay out in dividends for many years to come.

(e) Every guarantee given under the said Act is based upon a previous guarantee of the Government of China and only after that government makes default will Canada be called upon to implement her guarantee. China is a very considerable trading nation. She is recognized by International bodies and great nations as one of the five great powers of the world. If she did make default then every other nation in the world would be interested financially and out of such default would come some arrangement which would provide for the liquidation of debts. I have a feeling that our guarantees are to quite an extent a matter of form provided they are based upon previous guarantees of the Government of China.

(f) I therefore submit that agreement should be reached in principle that further guarantees will be given.

6. If such agreement on principle is reached, then I would suggest that we should first consider a guarantee to enable the Chinese Government to purchase in Canada the electrical equipment required to repair the Hydro-Electric power project on the Island of Taiwan, or Formosa, which plant was damaged by bombing during the war.

7. My study of this matter indicates to me that Formosa which was under Japanese control for over fifty years and which has now passed to China as a result of the defeat of Japan, is the most efficiently organized and industrially developed portion of the Chinese Republic. The Japanese seem more advanced than the Chinese in the creation and development of industry and it is clear that, during their occupation of Formosa, the Japanese have created an efficient industrial machine therein. Subject to repair, this whole machine now falls into the hands of the Chinese Republic. I would judge that Formosa has been blessed with a greater variety of valuable natural resources than any like geographical area within China.

8. It is anticipated Formosa will play a very important part in the future life of China. At the moment the Aluminium Company Limited is arranging to enter into an agreement with the Chinese Government for the joint ownership of the Aluminium industry in Formosa and the operation thereof by this Company. Also at the moment the Noranda Mining interests are negotiating with the Chinese Government for the operation of the copper lead mines of Formosa. China will have to have outside help to run these Formosan industries, as all Japanese technicians have been returned to Japan.

9. The two above-mentioned Canadian companies, viz., Aluminium and Noranda, will be large users of the power produced by the power plant in question and we will be aiding these Canadian companies to establish profitably in Formosa by making it possible for them to secure a continuous source of cheap power. The production of aluminium in Formosa will not cut into production of this commodity in Canada, as I am told by the Company that they will have no trouble in disposing of their Canadian production, regardless of how far they develop production in Formosa.

10. Separate and apart from the question of sale of Canadian electrical equipment in connection with this project, I am of the opinion that Formosa opens up a very splendid opportunity for the creation of a centre of powerful Canadian influence in China. Formosa has the added advantage of being separate from the mainland of China and thus not as much subject to political and military strife internally prevalent in China.

11. The giving of this guarantee would put Canada, with the consent and in fact upon the approach of China, into the financial picture in Formosa. This fact, with the operations of the Aluminium Company and Noranda, will concentrate a very powerful Canadian interest in that Island. Canada would thus have a base for operations in the future in relation to trade with China and the investment of Canadian capital in China. Formosa can be made a Canadian beachhead in relation to China.

12. I, consequently, recommend that: (a) I be given a decision as to whether or not further guarantees on approved projects will be considered for China;

(b) if (a) is approved, that immediate consideration be given to the Taiwan project referred to above;

(c) that, with the approval of (b) above, further consideration be given to two other projects, which, from the dozen or so projects submitted by the Chinese authorities, are considered the most favourable ones for consideration by the Department of Trade and Commerce;

(d) that, in accordance with the decision reached in (a) above, I will be able to encourage or discourage the submission of further projects by Chinese interests.

Respectfully submitted this 28th day of November, 1946.

I have been very much interested in looking over the attached material with reference to credits to China.

My own views on this subject are very mixed, and it seems to me that the Chinese situation is steadily becoming more speculative, rather than less so. I do not see how anyone, under present circumstances, can very strongly advocate the granting of additional credits to China, except on a basis which takes fully into account their highly speculative character as regards their ultimate repayment.

The other factor that seems to me to require strong emphasis at this time is the need for setting a definite limit on the extent of any additional credits that the Canadian Government may be prepared to extend under the guarantee sections of the Export Credits Insurance Act. While the Government has so far utilized its guarantee authority only to the extent of less than 16 million dollars, out of the total of 200 million dollars that is provided for, this fact does not mean that there will not be in the near future much greater opportunities than have yet presented themselves for utilizing this type of credit to the advantage of Canadian trade in directions other than that of China. Canada's capacity to go on extending additional direct credits is for one reason or another likely to become subject to very definite limitations, and it is quite possible that within a year or two there will be a number of countries, other than China, to whom such credit facilities as we are able to afford may be granted on much sounder ground than is now in evidence with respect to China. I think, therefore, that there are the strongest reasons for husbanding as carefully as possible the presently unutilized portion of the credit guarantees which the Government is now empowered to extend.

When I returned to you a week or two ago some material which you had sent me with reference to the Taiwan project, I think I indicated to you on a note† attached to the documents, that the material they contained with reference to conditions in Formosa certainly did not strengthen one's confidence in the probable future of that area. Mr. Bryce's memorandum† to Dr. Clark goes even further in its adverse comments upon the way in which Formosa is being administered by the Chinese officials.

Ottawa, December 30, 1946

Your despatch No. 1055 of September 28th,† export credit guarantee for China Merchants Steam Navigation Company.

The question of providing an export credit guarantee to assist this company to finance a shipbuilding programme in Canada has been given careful consideration recently. It is considered unlikely that we can undertake to extend an export credit guarantee to this company at the present time, and in these circumstances we feel that it would not be practicable for the technicians of the company who are awaiting word in China to proceed to Canada to open detailed negotiations to come now. Our reasons are as follows:

a) it is unlikely that further ships can be built in Canada for China for some considerable time, due to our shortage of steel in relation to heavy demands for equipment for export and our own domestic requirements;

b) we have already provided the Ming Sung Industrial Company with an export credit guarantee of $15,000,000 to assist their shipbuilding programme in Canada, and consider this is the limit of the assistance we can give to shipbuilding projects at present;

c) export credit guarantees for shipbuilding projects will not greatly assist in the promotion of continuing trade between Canada and China, which is, as you know, the principal purpose of granting export credit guarantees to China.

2. Will you please advise Mr. Oliver Zi, general manager of the company, that we do not feel it advisable for the company's technicians to proceed to Canada at the present time. In so advising him, you may use the first reason I have given above. The second and third reasons I have given for your own confidential information.

Memorandum from Secretary, Cabinet Committee on Immigration Policy, to Interdepartmental Committee on Immigration Policy

[Ottawa,] December 30, 1946

The following is a summary of the decisions taken by the Cabinet Committee on Immigration Policy at a meeting held on December 20th, 1946.

(1) The Committee:

(a) agreed to recommend that the Chinese Immigration Act be repealed, and that any clauses therein granting privileges be transferred to the Immigration Act; and

(b) gave instructions that draft legislation be prepared to give effect to this recommendation, and in addition that draft legislation providing alternative ways of dealing with the Chinese problem be submitted at the same time.

(2) The Committee agreed that it should be made known that Canada would not accept immigrants who had not been X-rayed, and that in principle, the examination would be required to be made without cost to Canada. This provision would not apply to persons coming from countries having lower mortality rates from tuberculosis than had Canada.

Ottawa, January 23, 1946

IMMEDIATE. The Honourable J. A. MacKinnon, Minister of Trade and Commerce, is planning to leave Canada February fifth for a visit to Mexico and Central America. He plans to sign a trade agreement in Mexico and engage in trade discussions in the Central American countries. The Minister would like to extend his trip to Colombia and it would be appreciated if you would approach the Colombian Government to ascertain whether such a visit would be welcome and opportune and whether Colombia would be prepared to consider consolidating our commercial relations by the conclusion of a trade agreement providing for the exchange of most-favoured-nation treatment.<sup>1</sup> Tentative plans provide for the mission to arrive in Bogota February twentieth from Panama. The Canadian Trade Commissioner in Bogota has details of the party. If the visit is not opportune, the Minister would like to visit Colombia later this year.

DESPATCH 7

Havana, January 14, 1946

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to my cypher telegram No. 2 of January 5† concerning the possibility of extending the Cuban flour import subsidy to

Canadian flour, and to give you hereunder a review of the steps taken by this Legation to assist local Canadian flour importers.

2. Your despatch of January 22, 1945, to H.B.M.<sup>1</sup> Minister, Havana, outlined the situation as it existed at the beginning of last year, and asked him if he would be good enough to see what could be done to see that the Cuban flour import subsidy be extended to include Canadian flour imported into Cuba.

3. An identical situation arose this year. If you will permit me, I will give in this paragraph a short and general review of the position as regards the import of Canadian wheat flour into Cuba. Cuba has always been a good market for wheat flour. Due to the nature of the bread baked to suit Cuban taste, it has been necessary for the principal wheat flour exporters in the United States and Canada to spend a good deal of time and money studying the baking problems and developing milling processes suitable to the Cuban market. Until the war with its subsidies, shipping problems and United States bloc purchasing of Cuban sugar, in which was included an agreement for a special subsidy on the export of United States flour to Cuba, Canada enjoyed a share in the Cuban wheat flour market. Flour was imported directly from Canadian mills, and also a good deal of Canadian wheat was milled in Buffalo for export to Cuba. The tariffs applied were 82¢ for a two hundred lb. bag of flour milled in the United States from U.S. wheat; 94¢ for a two hundred lb. bag of flour milled in Buffalo from Canadian wheat and $1.32 for a two hundred lb. bag of flour milled in Canada from Canadian wheat. When the United States gave a general subsidy on all wheat flour exported (now $1.48 per two hundred lb. bag), and added to this a special subsidy ($2.70 per two hundred lb. bag) on wheat flour exported to Cuba as part of the sugar agreement (to enable the Cuban Government to maintain the price of bread at 10¢ a loaf), Canadian wheat milled in Canada or in Buffalo could no longer compete in the Cuban market because of these subsidies and the tariff preference given American wheat flour. Last year when the negotiations for the sale of the Cuban crop to the United States Commodity Credit Corporation were temporarily suspended as part of the bargaining procedure, it was found that the flour stocks here were low, and the Cuban Government decided to subsidize the import of flour until such time as the United States renewed its special subsidy as part of the new sugar agreement. Mr. J. L. Mutter, at that time Canadian Government Trade Commissioner in Havana, managed after a good deal of delay to obtain an interview with the Minister of Commerce, and protested against the decision of the Cuban Government to pay this subsidy only on imports of flour milled in the United States from United States wheat. By the time he got his interview, it appears that the Ministry of Commerce had already concluded its agreement with the local flour importers for payment of the subsidy on some 800,000 two hundred lb.

bags of flour needed. Actually, Decree No. 89, which was published in the Official Gazette on January 16, 1945, authorized subsidies to be paid on purchases made between the 1st and 15th of January, i.e. before the decree was published.

4. When the same situation arose this year Mr. J. E. O'Neill, Administrative Officer left in charge of the Commercial Secretary's Office, received instructions from the Department of Trade and Commerce to enquire whether the subsidy which the Cuban Government again proposed to pay on wheat flour imports would be extended to Canadian flour as well. Anticipating that we might receive instructions from you along similar lines to the ones which were sent (too late) last year to H.B.M. Minister to protest the decision of the Cuban Government to grant subsidies to imports of United States flour only, it was decided to take this matter up. It was hoped that Mr. Vaillancourt could make a call on Dr. Alberto Inocente Alvarez, Minister of State and actual boss of the Ministry of Commerce of which he was former Minister. For this purpose he was fortified with a memorandum, with Spanish translation, setting forth the attitude of the Canadian Government in connection with this matter of the payment of subsidies by the Cuban Government on the import of wheat flour. As it was not possible to make arrangements for Mr. Vaillancourt to call on the Minister, the memorandum was left at the Ministry of State on December 29. I enclose copies of this memorandum† for your information.

5. About this time, representatives of the Canadian flour milling companies began to get in touch with us to enquire if the Legation intended to take the matter up with the Cuban Government. They supplied us with a good deal of useful information about developments in wheat purchasing circles. The representatives concerned were Mr. Rafael W. Bornn, representative of the Brackmanker Milling Company, Limited, and Western Canada Flour Mills of Toronto, Mr. Ronald Cabrera, representative of the Maple Leaf Milling Company of Toronto and Mr. Colin Rose, representative of the Dominion Flour Mills Limited, Montreal. Mr. Bornn was most assiduous in keeping us informed of developments, and I am attaching copies of a memorandum,† dated December 31, which he left with the Legation outlining the situation, as well as copies of a letter of December 31st† addressed to Mr. Albert F. Nufer, Economic Counsellor of the American Embassy here, complaining against discrimination against the southwest mills by a group of northern millers who seem to have managed to corner the local market by having their advice accepted almost exclusively by the responsible officials of the Ministry of Commerce.

6. On January 4th, Bornn brought in to me the draft of the decree which had been made available to the National Association of Foreign Commission Agents by the Ministry of Commerce. This draft decree referred throughout to flour imported from United States mills, and it was obvious its intention was to exclude Canadian flour. A note was immediately addressed to the Minister of State requesting assurances from the Cuban Government that the decree when published would not discriminate against Canadian wheat flour. I attach copies of this note† for your information.

7. The decree in question, No. 4128, was published in the Official Gazette on January 5th, and conformed substantially to the draft that we had already seen, and which we had protested in our Note No. 1 of January 4th. I attach an English translation of this decree† for your records. You will note that the decree provides for a rebate in taxes of $2.54 on each two hundred lb. bag of spring wheat flour imported, up to the amount of some 864,492.25 bags, all purchases to be made between the 1st and 15th of January 1946.

8. When no reply was received to our Note No. 1 of January 4th, I went, on January 10th, to see Señor Valdés Rodríguez, Assistant Chief of the International Commerce Section of the Ministry of Commerce. I told Sr. Valdés Rodríguez that, if we did not have a reply by January 12th, it would be quite impossible for importers of Canadian wheat to make their purchases before January 15th. I pointed out to him that the Canadian Government was paying subsidies on a long list of imported food stuffs in order to maintain a ceiling on the cost of living in Canada. I said that it might interest him to know that it was my understanding that the Canadian Government paid a subsidy on the import of bananas, of which fruit Cuba supplied Canada some $829,000 worth in 1944, and it was quite possible that a subsidy was paid too on some $748,000 worth of fresh pineapples exported by Cuba to Canada in the same year. I said that the Canadian Government did not discriminate in the payment of subsidies in regard to the source of supplies obtained. I said that if the Cuban Government could not see its way clear to extending customs rebate payments to include Canadian wheat flour, this fact would have to be reported to the Canadian Government so that they might consider whether it would be desirable to withdraw the Canadian subsidy from imports on certain commodities from Cuba. I am attaching, for your information, copy of a memorandum† which I prepared for Mr. Vaillancourt on January 10th developing these arguments. Sr. Valdés Rodríguez said that, as time was short, he would counsel the Legation to try to obtain an interview with the Minister of Commerce, and if at all possible, it would give more weight to our representations if Mr. Vaillancourt could attend the meeting.

9. At 3:30 on January 11th, Mr. Vaillancourt, Mr. J. E. O'Neill and I called on the Minister of Commerce, Sr. César M. Casas, and repeated to him the representations which I had already made to Sr. Valdés Rodríguez. The Minister of Commerce said that he had read with a good deal of interest the statement made to the press by the Honourable C. D. Howe concerning the desire of the Canadian Government to see its trade with Cuba increased and regularized by the conclusion of a commercial treaty. He thought this was an excellent idea, and he hoped that, under the new regulations worked out, it would be possible for Canada to export wheat to Cuba. He said, however, that Decree No. 4128 had been drafted to take care of a particular, and he hoped temporary, situation. It could not be discriminatory if it was viewed against the background of the sugar negotiations. He said that it must be obvious that Cuba had been, during the war, almost completely dependent on the United States for its full range of supplies, and that, under the agreement for the sale of the sugar crop to the C.C.C., provisions had been included whereby the United States had endeavoured to assist the Cuban Government to maintain ceilings on essential food supplies. Cuba hoped that the United States would renew its special subsidy on wheat flour exported to Cuba as a part of the new sugar agreement, and, therefore, wished to do nothing that might prejudice this outcome. (I read between the lines here that what was intended was that the Cuban Government hoped that U.S. flour milling companies would exert pressure on the U.S. Government to maintain its subsidy, and that for this it was necessary that the Cuban Government keep in with the American flour millers). Sr. Casas went on to say that, if the U.S. Government did not grant a special subsidy on wheat flour exported to Cuba as part of the new sugar agreement, it was quite possible that Cuba would approach the Canadian Government to make available some wheat flour supplies for the latter part of the year. After this, Mr. O'Neill and I, on behalf of the Legation, and Sr. Valdés Rodriguez and Sr. Ruben Ortiz La Madrid, Chief of the Division of Interior Commerce, for the Cuban Government, exchanged a number of thrusts. I said that we were all agreed on the desirability of working out arrangements for fuller Cuban-Canadian trade in the future, but that what we were here to discuss this afternoon was the regime which would be effective in the interim period. I said that it would be difficult for Mr. Vaillancourt to explain to the Canadian Government that the Cuban Government wished to see commerce expanded when its actions in this case could only be considered by the Canadian Government as discriminatory. Sr. Valdés Rodriguez argued that Mr. Vaillancourt should report that this decree was not discriminatory if it was viewed against the background of the sugar negotiations. Mr. O'Neill brought out the figures of past Canadian wheat flour sales to Cuba, and showed how we had been cut off from this market during the period of the war, and how unbalanced the trade between the two countries had been. He said that if the Cuban Government wished to sell more to Canada, or even to continue the sales which it had been able to make during the war when other sources of Canadian supply had been cut off, it would be necessary for the Cuban Government to adopt a more liberal attitude toward Canadian imports in the future. The meeting broke up in a spirit of goodwill, with nothing specific achieved in regard to this particular decree, which we were told only granted a subsidy to flour imported from the United States and milled there from American wheat, but we did, I think, have a useful exchange of views that should prove a good starting point for further commercial discussions we may have in the future.

Ottawa, January 26, 1946

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your despatch No. 93 of November 19th, 1945, enclosing letters and memoranda relating to the position of Canadian Life Insurance Companies in Cuba.

2. The suggestion put forward by Mr. William Campbell that Canadian insurance companies in Cuba might secure protection from excessive taxation if the Canadian Government were to lower the tariff on high-class Cuban cigars has been given consideration here and discussed with the Department of Trade and Commerce.

3. I should not, on the whole, be inclined to favour a proposal of this kind. In the first place, as you mentioned to Mr. Campbell, the balancing of two such different concessions would be difficult. In the second, it is felt by the Department of Trade and Commerce that any advantage gained by retail tobacconists in selling high-priced Cuban cigars to United States tourists might be outweighed by a decline in the purchase of Canadian produced goods from other merchants. There might also be some disposition on the part of the United States Government to lower the number of Cuban cigars which United States tourists are at present permitted to import duty free, or even to place new restrictions upon the general tourist privilege of customs exemption.

4. From a more general point of view, it would be inadvisable to abandon our bargaining position in respect of an important Cuban export such as cigars, since we are contemplating the conclusion of a general commercial treaty (arising out of the "nuclear" trade discussions called by the United States) with Cuba and wish to press for more favourable treatment of Canadian products.

5. If you are approached again on this matter you might give a general indication that discussions on tariff matters are not likely to be opened before the beginning of the "nuclear" trade discussions initiated by the United States in which both Canada and Cuba are participants.

Le chargé d'affaires à Cuba au ministre d'État par intérim de CubaChargé d'Affaires in Cuba to Acting Minister of State of Cuba

No. 81

Havana, October 3, 1946

The Chargé d'Affaires, a.i. of the Canadian Legation presents his compliments to the Acting Minister of State, and has the honour to advise His Excellency of the fact that, under the existing system of subsidies to imports of wheat flour, Canadian flour is virtually prohibited from entering the Cuban market.

It is fully realized that, in establishing the subsidies now in effect, there was no intention of discriminating against Canadian flour, and for this reason the matter was discussed informally with His Excellency the Minister of Commerce, who suggested that the facts should be presented in writing to the Government of the Republic of Cuba.

Under Decree No. 1159 of 6th May, 1946, a subsidy was established of $2.54 per bag of 200 pounds of first patent flour. Subsequently, and in order to compensate for the rise in the price of flour, Decree No. 2156 of 5th September, 1946, established an additional flexible subsidy of $3.24 up to a total of 950,000 bags to be shipped before the end of December of this year. This latter decree was amended on 21st September to bring the total flexible subsidy up to $3.68 per bag. These decrees also established that the 6 per cent sales tax (impuesta de consumo) should be paid on the basic price of $6.90, c.i.f. Havana, plus the corresponding import duties.

The effect of these resolutions is amply shown in the attached memorandum,† whereby it is evident that, regardless of the price Canadian mills might quote in order to legitimately acquire a share of the Cuban market, and to offset the higher import duties payable on Canadian flour, the c.i.f. price to the importer would inevitably result in $6.90 per bag. For example, a quotation by Canadian mills of $12.90 per bag would result in a lower flexible subsidy, but the delivered cost to the importer handling Canadian flour would necessarily be some 50 cents more per bag.

In the cases where it has been necessary to take measures to lower the cost of essential food items, the Cuban Government, taking advantage of Law No. 5, has temporarily suspended the duty on imports of a certain quantity of goods. For example, at the meeting of the Cabinet on 25th September, approval was given to the exemption of customs duties on the importation of 20,000 cases of eggs and a quantity of animal feeds.

It would be greatly appreciated if the same principle were to be applied to the import of flour, and that, therefore, consideration be given to the elimination of duties on the import of the 950,000 bags of flour covered in Decree No. 2156 of 5th September 1946.

If the duties were to be eliminated on flour imports, the flexible subsidy could be reduced by an equivalent amount so that the net result to the treasury would not be altered, except that on all imports that might be made from Canada at prices under those in effect in the United States of America—and there is reason to believe Canadian prices are now slightly under those of the United States of America—the amount of the subsidy paid would be reduced by the amount the Canadian price would be under $13.12 per bag.

Thus it may be noted that the effect of such action would be to (a) increase the sources of supply of a commodity (flour) that is in short supply in the Republic of Cuba; (b) produce a measure of healthy international competition; (c) tend to reduce slightly the cost of the subsidy on the import of flour; (d) remove the virtual prohibition of imports of flour from Canada.

In making the foregoing request it is not suggested that unlimited supplies of flour could be found in Canada, since the allocation of supplies is well advanced and, as Your Excellency well knows, wheat and flour are still in desperate short supply in the world markets. However, some Canadian mills are still interested in supplying the Cuban market. Furthermore, the Republic of Cuba is among those countries listed by the Canadian Wheat Board as entitled to receive export licences for flour from Canada.

It is, perhaps, of interest to draw Your Excellency's attention to the heavy increases of Canadian purchases of Cuban products during the first six months of this year. From the attached table† it may be noted that Canada's imports from the Republic of Cuba have increased eighty-two percent over the first six months of last year, whereas exports from Canada to the Republic of Cuba have increased some twenty-four percent.

DESPATCH 156

Havana, October 5, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to advise you that, owing to the system of subsidies on imports of flour, it is virtually impossible for Canadian flour to be sold in this market.

2. Under Decree No. 1159 of 6th May of this year, the Cuban Government extended the payment of the basic subsidy, $2.54 per bag of 200 lbs., to imports of flour from any origin whereas, previous to that date, the subsidy had been confined to imports of United States flour. (See our despatch No. 7 of January 14, 1946). Subsequently, and in order to compensate for the rise in the price of flour, an additional flexible subsidy was established in September to a total amount of $3.68 per bag.

3. When the local representatives of Canadian mills tried to sell Canadian flour, however, it was found that the flexible subsidy was applied in such a way that the final c.i.f. price to the importer would always result in a price of $6.90 c.i.f. Havana.

4. In other words, regardless of what price Canadian mills might charge in an effort to combat a higher rate of duty payable on imports of Canadian flour, the duty paid price to the importer would inevitably be higher by the amount of the difference in the duty.

5. In addition, the aforementioned decrees granting the subsidies in question established that the 6 percent sales tax should be paid on the basic price of $6.90 c.i.f. Havana, plus the corresponding import duties so that, again, the laid down cost of Canadian flour to the importer would be increased when compared with United States flour, regardless of any action that might be taken by Canadian mills to offer compensation by way of reduced prices.

6. I had a conversation with the Minister of Commerce concerning this matter last week, and suggested that, inasmuch as the Government was authorized under Law No. 5 to grant freedom from import duties on essential food articles in short supply, and as this law was being applied in cases of imports of eggs and other essential commodities, the same procedure should be followed in the case of imports of flour. Such action would not mean any loss of revenue to the Government since they could reduce the subsidy by the amount of the duty and the net result would then be exactly the same.

7. The Minister of Commerce, Mr. Casas, seemed interested in my suggestion and requested me to put the matter in writing. Accordingly, yesterday I had an interview with the Acting Under-Secretary of State and put forward the same points again. I left with him a memorandum on the subject in which I requested that they should remove the duty on imports of the 950,000 bags of flour that were authorized to be brought in before the end of this year and that were subject to the payment of the subsidies in question.

8. I was well received by the Acting Under-Secretary of State, who seemed to appreciate our point of view and also to realize that it was in the interest of Cuba to have an alternate source of supply of flour, particularly as they are having such difficulty at the moment in obtaining their full requirements. The Under-Secretary promised to study the matter in detail, and to let me know the decision as soon as possible. In the meantime, I have also sent a copy of my memorandum to Mr. Casas, and it is hoped that, as a result of this action, the obstacles in the way of imports of Canadian flour may be removed.

9. I am also communicating this information to Dr. C. F. Wilson, Director, Wheat and Grain Division of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Minister in Cuba to Secretary of State for External Affairs

DESPATCH

Ottawa, October 15, 1946

SECRET

Sir,

I have the honour to bring objectively to your attention the following facts in connection with Canada's commercial interchange with Cuba.

2. At the beginning of the present year the Government of Cuba issued a decree authorizing the Cubans to import wheat flour from the United States granting to them for that purpose a substantial import bonus besides the subsidy allotted by the Government of the United States to its wheat flour exporters.

3. On the afternoon of the 11th of last January, accompanied by Mr. Arthur Menzies—then Second Secretary of the Canadian Legation at Havana—I had an interview with Sr. Casas, the Cuban Minister of Commerce, who received us in the presence of two of his assistants, at the Ministry. The purpose of our call was to request the Minister to have the above decree amended so as to allow the entry into Cuba of Canadian wheat flour on a par with the similar product from the United States, as was the case before World War II, when a large proportion of wheat flour consumed in Cuba was milled in Buffalo of Canadian wheat and popularly known as "harina Buffalo".

4. The Minister received us with great courtesy and listened with attention to the object of our request. But he said that the decree provided only for the importation into Cuba of wheat flour milled in the United States from American wheat and that there was no possibility whatever that it could be amended to include even American flour milled from Canadian wheat. When asked the reason for such discrimination against the Canadian product, he raised his hands and told us that we should know that Cuba was held in the economic claws of the United States, and that he did not see how his country could liberate herself from such a strangle-hold, thereby implicitly admitting that the decree was imposed upon his Government by the United States.

5. A few months later Sr. Casas was my guest at the Country Club of Havana for luncheon, together with his Sub-Secretary of Commerce, Dr. Rolando Acosta; Dr. Antonio Arturo de Bustamante, a prominent Cuban jurist, and Dr. Guy Carrington Smith, the Commercial Secretary of our Legation. By that time, the United States had no more wheat flour to ship to Cuba. The Minister of Commerce told us that Canadian wheat flour could now be admitted to Cuba on the same conditions as the American flour. Mr. Smith told him that he doubted that Canada had any more flour available for export to Cuba, but that nevertheless he would enquire from the Canadian Department of Commerce. What Mr. Smith had said was soon confirmed by the answer of the Department to which he is responsible.

6. A few days ago during my present leave, I received in Montreal a letter from Mr. Smith, dated 3rd October, wherein he writes: "You will be sorry to hear that the flour trade is acting up again and under the existing system of quotas, it is virtually impossible to ship in any flour."

7. While in Ottawa, since my arrival in Canada, I met on different occasions, Dr. Mariano Brull, the Cuban Minister to Canada, who not only received me in his residence but also gave a largely attended reception in my honour. Ever since I have known Dr. Brull we have developed together a sincere friendship. I have kept up an interesting correspondence with him informing him, more than once, by newspaper clippings sent by airmail of things going on in Cuba that I thought would be of interest to him. He said to me last week that when I am in Canada he does not know what is happening in Cuba as his Department does not keep him informed the way I do.

8. On the 31st of August, 1945, shortly after Dr. Brull's appointment as Cuban Minister to Canada had been announced officially, I gave a 135 cover luncheon at the Havana Country Club in his honour. Those present were, among others, the Vice President of Cuba, Dr. Raul de Cardenas; the Prime Minister, Dr. Felix Lancis; the Minister of State, Dr. Gustavo Cuervo Rubio; all the heads of the foreign diplomatic missions, prominent Cubans, as well as a great many Canadian, British and American residents and the representatives of the most important daily newspapers. This mark of esteem, Dr. Brull told me many times since, he will never forget as long as he lives.

9. I am relating these phases of my relations with Dr. Brull merely to explain and justify the confidences he made to me as described in the following paragraphs.

10. Last Saturday, October 12, Dr. Brull and his wife were in Montreal for the day. I invited both to luncheon with me at the Windsor Hotel. During the meal I asked him what prompted his Government to discriminate against Canadian flour the way it is doing. His answer was the same as given to me ten months before by Sr. Casas. "Moreover," he added, "I know pertinently, because I am reliably informed, that such a line of conduct was imposed on our Government who had no other alternative than to follow it because the United States want to retaliate against Canada on account of your country having pegged her wheat at the price of $1.55, thus excluding the United States shipments of that Commodity to Great Britain and elsewhere."

11. In the first months of the present year our Legation in Havana sent communiqués to the Cuban press informing the citizens of the country (either by birth or by naturalization) that in the future they could enter Canada as tourists for a period of six months provided that they had a passport but without any Canadian visa. This also applied to all Cuban residents, no matter their nationality, provided they held a re-entry permit from the Cuban Immigration. After making such an announcement I had interviews with the Minister of State suggesting, either orally or by means of "aide-mémoire" that my country would gladly welcome reciprocity in such instance. He always gave me evasive answers although promising that he would try to do his best to give me satisfaction.

12. Dr. Brull, last Saturday, again gave the answer. The attitude of the Cuban Ministry of State was once more dictated by the United States who opposed my request, while stating that espionage was still very active and that all possible measures should be taken to forestall it.

13. Cubans can enter the United States without passports, as well as Canadians can enter the same country also without passports. But Canadians proceeding from Cuba to return home to Canada, as well as Cubans proceeding from Canada to return to their country, must have a passport with a United States transit visa.

14. During the last winter the Chief of Staff of the Cuban War Navy, Commodore Jose Aguila Ruiz, came to Canada accompanied by his aide-de-camp, Lieutenant Alonzo, for the purpose of buying from the War Assets Corporation either corvettes, frigates or Bangor minesweepers. I believe some of these units were laid aside for him. He returned to Havana to secure the proper authority to complete the deal. Leaving Havana later for Ottawa, he stopped en route at Washington where on the advice of the President of Cuba, he met the United States Naval authorities. He returned therefrom to Cuba without going to Ottawa.

15. To such a mystery Dr. Brull gave me the key. He was told by the Commodore that the Americans in Washington had told him that what Canada had to offer in the way of ships was no better than mere scrap.

16. The Nicaro Nickel Mine is uneconomically operated in Cuba by a Company receiving subsidies from the Government of the United States and that at the detriment of an important Canadian enterprise, the International Nickel.

17. Canada's most important item of export to Cuba is newsprint. This product of Canadian industry is distributed in Cuba and shipped directly from the United States by an American agency in New York.

18. At the beginning of last summer, accompanied by Mr. Guy Carrington Smith, I went to the Cuban Ministry of State and there, in the presence of the sub-secretary of that Department, we interviewed Sr. Solano, in charge of commercial affairs of that Ministry. We told him that the different countries who were to take part in the London Conference for Commerce and Employment were already exchanging notes telling one another what tariff amendments they would desire to have made in order to facilitate commercial interchange between themselves. We told Sr. Solano that Canada would welcome such an exchange of notes with Cuba. But Sr. Solano said that Cuba really could not do anything before they knew about the wishes of the United States Government in that particular instance.

19. Cuba is the only country with whom the United States have a preferential tariff treaty. For all their exports to Cuba they are entitled to a 20% rebate on all existing customs tariffs. Any country dealing with Cuba is entitled to the minimum tariff if exportation to that country does not exceed her importation therefrom. Should she export more than she imports a tariff surcharge would apply to her shipments from 25% and upwards but this does not apply to the United States.

23. It is evident that the Americans have built a Chinese wall around Cuba which they evidently consider as their own hunting ground. Therefore, I would be obliged if you could give me a direction so that I may know how I should behave in meeting these conditions. Should I co-operate with the Americans, oppose them or "laissez-faire"?

24. I am sending a copy of this letter, by British air courier, to Mr. Guy Carrington Smith, actually Chargé d'Affaires ad interim of the Canadian Legation at Havana during my absence.

DESPATCH 236

Ottawa, October 22, 1946

SECRET

Sir,

I have the honour to acknowledge and thank you for the secret despatch of 15th October, which you left with me, on the difficulties for Canadian interests in Cuba created by some of the policies and commercial attitudes of the United States in respect to that country.

2. The specific points you raise, and various instances adduced, are being carefully studied. I have brought your despatch to the attention of other Government Departments interested, and also confidentially to Mr. St. Laurent, and our Ambassador in Washington.

3. I shall write you at a later date on this matter, when some of the points in your despatch have been more fully examined. Meanwhile, I think it would be desirable that, while not opposing openly the policies of the United States of which you complain, you should take advantage of every opportunity to emphasize that Canadian-United States collaboration in this, as in other fields, should be on a give and take basis. You will also, of course, continue to take advantage of any opportunities that may occur for the furtherance of Canadian interests, especially in cases where United States representatives seem to be going out of their way to ignore or over-ride those interests in the pursuance of their own policies.

Le ministre à Cuba au ministre d'État par intérim de Cuba
Minister in Cuba to Acting Minister of State of Cuba

No. 102

Havana, November 26, 1946

The Canadian Minister presents his compliments to the Acting Minister of State, and has the honour to refer to the Legation's Note No. 81 of 3rd October, 1946, concerning the importation of flour from Canada.

While it cannot be stated that Canadian flour mills are in a position to make any offer to the Republic of Cuba for immediate delivery, nevertheless, the unfavourable position of Canadian flour as described in the note mentioned above, makes it difficult, if not impossible, for an argument to be put forward to the Canadian mills to set aside a quota of their stocks for the Republic of Cuba.

It was pointed out by Mr. Smith, Commercial Secretary of this Legation, whilst acting as Chargé d'Affaires ad interim, in a conversation that he had with Your Excellency, subsequent to the presentation of Note No. 81, that, if the action requested therein were to be implemented by the Cuban Government, Canadian flour mills would feel that in putting aside a quota of flour for Cuba, they would be building for the future when trade may become more normal. However, as long as Canadian mills are faced by the present unequal position vis à vis the United States of America, there is no incentive for them to try to find flour for the Cuban market.

In discussing this matter with the Chargé d'Affaires, His Excellency the Minister of Commerce suggested that, by acceding to the request of this Legation, the terms of the Cuban-United States Treaty of Reciprocity of 24th August, 1934, might be violated. His Excellency observed that, although Law No. 5 authorized the granting of freedom from import duties under certain circumstances, and while this had been done in the case of eggs, no subsidies had been granted so that the case of eggs and flour were not precisely similar.

It has been noted that on the 8th November a Decree was issued authorizing the free importation of 300,000 cases of evaporated milk under Law No. 5 plus the payment of a flexible subsidy up to one peso per case. This is precisely the same action as was suggested in the note under discussion [that] should be applied to imports of flour from any origin.

Under the circumstances, and in the interests of the favourable development of trade between Canada and Cuba, it is requested that the suggestion, put forth in our Note No. 81 of [3rd] October, 1946, should be given Your Excellency's most favoured consideration. It is considered that there is nothing in the Cuban-United States Treaty of Reciprocity that prevents the total elimination of customs duties on any specific items, as is provided for by Law No. 5 which has been invoked in the case of the importation of eggs and evaporated milk.

The Canadian Minister wishes to draw to Your Excellency's attention the desire of the Canadian Government and people to increase trade between Canada and Cuba, which desire has been clearly demonstrated by the steps taken to facilitate this trade within the possibilities of existing conditions. In the note previously referred to, were included figures demonstrating how Canada had increased its purchases in the Republic of Cuba by some 82 per cent for the first six months of 1946 as compared to a similar period last year. Furthermore, the Commercial Secretary's Office of this Legation has been actively engaged in assisting the marketing of Cuban products in Canada, and, recently, was able to effect the sale of some 300,000 pounds of hard candy. In September a Canadian shipping company established a direct and regular shipping service connecting Canadian Atlantic ports with Havana, thus further facilitating the interchange of commodities.

Under these circumstances, it is hoped that Your Excellency will be able to assist in removing this obstacle to the further development of trade and at the same time enabling one of the basic industries of Canada to maintain or to build up its position in the Cuban market.

The Canadian Minister avails himself etc.

The Ministry of State of the Republic of Cuba presents its compliments to the Legation of Canada and wishes to refer to the latter's note No. 102 of 26th November, concerning the tariff concession that the Legation would like to see applied to wheat flour originating and proceeding from Canada.

This being a matter within the competence of the Ministry of Commerce, the Ministry of State has forwarded the note referred to above to the former.

The Ministry of State of the Republic of Cuba takes this opportunity to reiterate to the Canadian Legation the assurances of its highest consideration.

No. 1014/46

Ottawa, April 4, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that I have been instructed by my Government to apply to the Government of Canada for a credit of thirty million dollars on the basis of the Act to amend the Export Credit Insurance Act passed by the House of Commons on December 6th, 1945, for the purpose of buying Canadian goods.

By asking for this credit, the Czechoslovak Government plans to rehabilitate the Czechoslovak trade and industry and to reconstruct the trade relations with Canada which flourished in the period before the world economic depression when Czechoslovakia was the second largest consumer of Canadian wheat—coming immediately after Great Britain. My Government intends to purchase out of this credit wheat and other foodstuffs to the value of fifteen million dollars. In addition we propose to purchase manufactured goods such as agricultural machinery, electrodes and chemicals to the value of about four million dollars, metals, wood, asbestos, hides and furs and other raw materials to the amount of about six million dollars and the balance to be used for transportation costs.

With regard to the conditions of repayment of such credit, the terms stipulated in the first Credit Agreement could be taken as a basis for the formulation of the new agreement.

The Czechoslovak Republic would be very grateful if their application for this export credit could be favourably considered by the Government of Canada.

Accept etc.

I enclose copy of the following communications from the Czechoslovak Minister in Ottawa:

1. Note of April 4th.
2. Letter to Mr. Robertson of April 4th.†
3. Letter to Mr. Robertson of April 9th.†

The Czechoslovak Minister has asked for an export credit of $30,000,000. Mr. Robertson, in the conversation referred to in the letter of April 4th, told Mr. Pavlásek that the Canadian Government could not at this time make an additional export credit commitment. Mr. Robertson gave the usual economic reasons and touched on no political considerations. Mr. Pavlásek has asked that the matter be reconsidered.

I see no strong political interest in granting an additional credit to Czechoslovakia. We have shown our friendly intentions by the original credit.

I should welcome your comments. I have sent a similar memorandum to the Department of Finance.

ATTENTION: MR. S. D. PIERCE

I have for reference your memo of May 17th with attached correspondence in which it is noted that the Czechoslovakian Minister in Ottawa has approached you on the subject of an additional export credit of $30,000,000.

My comment in this connection is that the general supply situation for the goods in which Czechoslovakia is interested in obtaining from Canada under the original agreement and a proposed new loan has not improved any in the last year, in fact if anything the situation is tighter than ever.

Dr. Pavlásek has been informed already that there will be no more wheat available until the new crop is harvested, and until then we are not in a position to state what quantities might be allotted. As you know foodstuffs are under Combined Food Board allocation. On a number of occasions after the granting of the original credit in March and June 1945, we called Dr. Pavlásek's attention to the necessity of not only obtaining an allocation from the Combined Food Board, but also having the agreement of UNRRA to the Czechoslovakian Government purchasing these supplies in view of the fact that Czechoslovakia was a claimant on UNRRA. So far as we have been able to ascertain this matter was never finally settled, and I believe that there are some difficulties on the allocation of foodstuffs because of this.

The original credit was granted for the purchase of specific goods, the principal of which were:

Wheat, Copper, Lead, Nickel, Aluminum, Canned Fish, Dried Milk and Semolina flour.

According to Dr. Pavlásek's statement of April 27th, at that date only $3,295,921 was expended, and of this $2,679,119 was for wheat, the balance $616,802 for raw materials, principally electrodes.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that under these circumstances we can take the position that if in a period of over a year they have failed to use the credit already granted them, although perhaps through no fault of their own, it seems hardly reasonable or good business that we should undertake to advance them a further credit and tie up additional funds.

Ottawa, May 28, 1946

Dear Mr. Wrong,

I have your letter of May 17th enclosing the note of April 4th from the Czechoslovakian Minister in Ottawa, his letter to Mr. Robertson of that date, and a subsequent letter of May 9th† to Mr. Robertson on the same subject. I have also had a personal visit from Dr. Pavlásek during which he has repeated to me his request for an additional export credit to Czechoslovakia.

This Department has reconsidered this question and I have taken it up again with the Minister of Finance. It continues to be our belief that the Canadian Government could not and should not at this time make an additional export credit to Czechoslovakia. In my letter† to you of even date on the subject of an export credit to Greece, I have referred to what I understand to be the Government's general attitude in regard to additional commitments under its export credits legislation.

Dealing more specifically with the Czechoslovakian request, it seems to us likely that the amount of the present credit remaining unused should cover the most urgent needs of Czechoslovakia in Canada for most of the remainder of this current year, particularly when it is recalled that most of the supplies which Czechoslovakia wishes to obtain are now scarce.

Consequently, we feel that it would be wise for your Department to indicate to Dr. Pavlásek that even after reconsideration the Government is unable to agree, for economic reasons, to any increase in the amount of credit that has already been made available. This was the personal view which I expressed to him during our conference. He seemed, however, very anxious to be able to carry back to his own Government on his return to Czechoslovakia some kind of undertaking that the Canadian Government would be willing to increase the outstanding credit, at least by some small amount, if an extra credit of $30 million was impossible. He expressed the hope that he would be allowed to reiterate his arguments personally to the Minister of Finance some time before leaving Ottawa in July. I told him that the Minister was exceedingly busy but that possibly he could find time for an interview if it were strongly desired.

On the general merits of the question, we continue to have a fairly high opinion of Czechoslovakia's credit and are inclined to believe that the country's past record and the general toughness and good sense of its people in regard to economic and political matters may entitle it to careful consideration when and if we are prepared to increase our commitments in the field of export credits. There is, of course, a real danger that they may not be able to resist the pressures that may be exercised upon them and that in both politics and economics their policies may be oriented eastward, in which case they may not be able to find the surplus exchange which will be required to meet obligations due to the western countries. Personally, I was not too happy about the note which Dr. Pavlásek has sent on behalf of his Government, explaining the latter's attitude in respect of the ITO proposals; they seem to have gone out to find an embarrassing wealth of reasons to justify their reluctance to accept the obligations of multilateralism in trade and currency which are involved in those proposals. There is some validity in a number of the arguments advanced but methought the lady was inclined to protest too much.

If, in any way, the Government is willing to hold open the possibility of reconsidering the question of additional credits at a later date, I believe it would be well to indicate to Dr. Pavlásek that we will wish, when such consideration is given, to have rather detailed estimates of the balance of payments position of Czechoslovakia before the war, in 1945 and 1946, and over the next few years, so that we may be able to judge how a credit such as may then be under consideration will fit into the general external financial position of Czechoslovakia. We shall also wish at such time to have further information regarding the economic program of reconstruction being planned and carried out in Czechoslovakia.

I presume that your proposed reply to him will be cleared either by the Cabinet in general or by several of the Ministers most directly interested, including the minister of Finance.

Yours very truly,

W. C. CLARK

Ottawa, June 17, 1946

Dear Dr. Pavlásek,

I am sending you herewith a formal reply† to the request which you made on behalf of your Government for an additional export credit.

I realize that in your discussions with Mr. Robertson and Dr. Clark the circumstances surrounding your request and the attitude of the Canadian Government have been somewhat fully discussed and therefore I feel that I should not attempt to go into any detail in answering the Notes which you addressed to Mr. Robertson on April 4th and May 9th, as I could not contribute anything further which would be helpful to you. But I should like to mention that the Canadian Government is most reluctant at the present time to enter into new or added commitments for the provision of export credits and in particular it desires to avoid concurrent loans to any country or the increasing of an existing loan until the original amount has been almost fully utilized.

Only a small proportion of the $15,000,000 credit which was advanced in March of this year has been expended by your Government, a circumstance which can no doubt be attributed in some considerable degree to the limited availability of those goods and commodities which your Government is interested in obtaining from Canada. It may be possible to reconsider the question of an additional credit at some future date but I do not personally believe that any such submission would be profitable until the Canadian supply situation has improved and the current credit has been almost exhausted.

In the event that discussions should be re-opened at a later date I would suggest that we should be furnished with detailed statements of the balance of payments position of Czechoslovakia in the immediate pre-war years and in 1945 and 1946, together with estimates of the expected balance during the next few years. We should also wish to have information regarding the planning and execution of the programme of reconstruction in Czechoslovakia so that we can understand how a credit from Canada would fit into the general exchange position of Czechoslovakia and its programme of reconstruction.

Yours sincerely,

No. 1849/46

Ottawa, June 21, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to Clause 3 of the Canadian-Czechoslovak Credit Agreement of March 1st, 1945, according to which the Minister of Finance agrees to pay from time to time as mutually agreed upon within a period of twelve months, commencing on the date of the first payment thereunder, amounts which are requisitioned by the Czechoslovak Government to pay the cost of goods purchased or to be purchased by the Czechoslovak Government in Canada, the total of such amounts not to exceed fifteen million dollars.

The general economic and transportation conditions were so adverse immediately after the war, however, that Czechoslovakia was not able to employ this credit effectively in 1945. Later on, in 1946, when the transportation situation improved somewhat, the scarcity of goods on the Canadian market made it impossible to carry out the intended purchases.

The Czechoslovak Republic was unable to purchase wheat in 1945 in spite of the fact that it was available, because the Canadian Wheat Board made the condition that only such wheat could be sold which we could transport to Czechoslovakia, and as very little shipping space was available, we were able to buy only four cargoes in all. At the present time, although we are able to charter vessels, the Wheat Board has refused to sell wheat due to the general scarcity of this commodity. The same applies to lead, copper, nickel and other metals, in the case of which the Canadian Commercial Corporation has advised me that they cannot place orders earlier than 1947.

In consequence of these circumstances, the Czechoslovak Government would be grateful if they could make requisitions for amounts to pay the cost of the goods to be purchased on the basis of the said Agreement also in a period later than twelve months after the date of the first purchase, that is, November 30th, 1945.

As, according to information received from the Canadian Commercial Corporation and from the Canadian Wheat Board, it will be possible to place orders not earlier than 1947, an extension of a further twelve months would alleviate the difficulties of the present situation. I should therefore greatly appreciate if the period of one year stipulated in Clause 3 of the Credit Agreement could be prolonged by another twelve months.<sup>1</sup>

IMMEDIATE. 1. French delegation on double taxation having advanced its schedule arrived here last night from Washington. Negotiations began this morning. As Deputy Minister of National Revenue is away and as French delegation staying only until April 6 discussions aim merely at reaching agreement in principle with final negotiations to be concluded at a later date in Paris or by correspondence. Discussions will deal with proposed convention for the avoidance of double taxation on income and for the avoidance of double succession duties. Convention will probably closely follow the Canada-United States Income Tax Convention of 1942<sup>2</sup> with the exception that provisions for exchange of information are not as complete. The succession duties convention will probably follow fairly closely the Canada-United States Convention of 1944<sup>3</sup>

2. We intend to seek the retroactive application of the income tax convention to cover disputed cases of Royal Bank, etc. under French decree of 1872.

3. We hope to discuss also the national solidarity tax and the treatment of Canadian interests under French laws respecting reconstruction grants to war damaged properties although we do not expect to make much progress on these points since they are unrelated to the main purpose of the talks.

IMPORTANT. Our telegram 126 of April 4th, double taxation conversations.

1. Discussions ended this morning. Large measure of agreement in principle has been reached in proposed income tax convention. Informal agreement reached on draft clauses paralleling closely Articles III, IV, VI, VII, IX and XV of the Canadian-U.S. Convention of 1942. We have offered the French the same treatment with respect to exchange of information as was offered in the recent U.K. Convention. This provides for exchange of information on request but not automatically as in our convention with the U.S. The French seem satisfied that they cannot expect more favourable treatment. With respect to the French Convention of 1872, we have accepted in principle Article 4 of the original French proposals which offers us a choice of the treatment laid down in the Anglo-French or Franco-American conventions. We have not yet elected which alternative we will accept. We have obtained the concession that the new treatment will apply to all court cases in which a decision is still pending.

2. With respect to succession duties agreement, French have indicated an automatic giving of lists of names of estates in which French interests are noted is prerequisite to any agreement, with specific investigation by us of those cases in which they are interested. We are considering whether we are prepared to go so far.

3. Re the national solidarity tax, we have been offered treatment no less favourable than that accorded countries in a similar position with respect to capital taxes, viz U.S.A. Measures for administrative co-operation in the application of this measure by designating a special French official to discuss its application in individual cases with an officer or your Embassy have been suggested by the French.

4. We raised the question of the treatment of Canadian interests under French laws respecting reconstruction grants to war damaged properties but did not obtain the assurance we sought that national treatment would be granted us.

Ottawa, May 3, 1946

Dear Mr. Robertson,

I have carefully considered the question raised by Mr. Blum of extending additional financial aid to France, as outlined in your letter of April 20th,† and Mr. Pearson's teletype of May 2nd,† copy of which reached this Department with your transmittal slip of the same date.

Although on humanitarian grounds I would like to see all possible assistance given to the French in their difficult task of rehabilitation, I cannot help but feel that the aid we have already given in granting the current credit is quite considerable in the light of our population and resources.

As you are aware, the amount of the present credit occasioned a good deal of hesitation when it was still in the discussion stages, as it was felt then that a loan of this size should provide possibilities for continuing trade on a scale larger than could be reasonably hoped for. Our exports to France in the immediate pre-war period averaged about $9,000,000 per year or approximately 1.25% of total French imports from all countries, and whereas there seems to be some basis for expecting a higher post-war figure, such expectations are largely conjectural. In short, it was difficult to justify the original financial arrangement from a trade point of view. An additional and even larger loan to France would seem to have even less commercial justification, particularly in view of Canada's other heavy foreign commitments.

I think it is significant that our financial aid to France has been proportionately very much greater than that of the United States.

Yours sincerely,

TOP SECRET

Ottawa, May 7, 1946

The following item of particular interest to External Affairs was discussed at this morning's meeting of the Cabinet:

Export credits; further loan to France

The Minister of Justice suggested that a suitable communication to the French government might point out that the Canadian government had agreed to free French assets presently held by the Custodian of Enemy Property; and might offer to facilitate the flotation by France of a loan in Canada through the International Bank if such a course appeared desirable; to consider funding Canadian military relief to France; and at an appropriate time in the future, to give sympathetic consideration to a further loan on the basis of the proposed programme of French purchases, subject to the following conditions:

(a) that the French government undertake to remove certain restrictions on trade;

(b) that further financial assistance be obtained by France from the United States; and

(c) that the Canadian government be satisfied in respect of the physical availability of the supplies involved and the feasibility of financing the loan at the time required.

The Cabinet, after discussion, agreed that the Minister of Finance prepare, for consideration at the next meeting of the Cabinet, a communication to the French government along the lines suggested by the Minister of Justice.

TELEGRAM EX-1253

Ottawa, May 9, 1946

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Following for your information is copy of the memorandum which I<sup>1</sup> gave to the Prime Minister after the talks with Mr. Monick had been concluded yesterday:

"Mr. Clark and I saw M. Monick, the French Ambassador and their colleagues this afternoon and gave them copies of the draft revision of the statement† concerning financial assistance to France which we had discussed with you, Mr. St. Laurent and Mr. Ilsley at three o'clock.

M. Monick thought, as we had rather expected, that a joint declaration along these lines might provoke more questions than it answered, and that it would probably be unwise for either Government to give the impression that a greater degree of agreement had been reached than was actually attained. His own preliminary view was that we should frankly recognize that under present conditions it was difficult, if not impossible, for the Canadian Government to extend the further credit to France for which he and his colleagues had hoped. The discussions in Ottawa had been friendly and frank. They fully appreciated the difficulties of the Canadian Government and the spirit in which our Government had attempted to understand and help meet the difficulties confronting the French Government. He would advise M. Blum at once of the position which the discussions had reached and let us know what instructions he received from him.

Later in the afternoon M. Monick called me to say that he had explained the position very fully to M. Blum, who quite appreciated the Canadian Government's inability to make new financial commitments at this time. He wished M. Monick to let you know how much France valued the financial cooperation it had already received from Canada. The welcome and understanding which his mission and M. Monick's had met in Canada were very important to them. It would be a great error on the part of France to prejudice this sympathetic relationship in any way by pressing our Government to go further than it thought it wisely could. In this spirit M. Blum told M. Monick to withdraw the request for a new credit from Canada. He was himself confident, on the basis of discussions here, that if on some future occasion our mutual interest made a supplementary financial agreement desirable, the Canadian Government would be as quick as the French Government to further it.

It was agreed with M. Monick that there would be no press or public reference to his discussions in Ottawa, as it was felt that it could be awkward for either Government if it became known that a request for a new loan had been made and that it had been turned down. If the press were very insistent about knowing the reasons for his visit to Ottawa, it would be entirely correct to say that as the new Governor of the Bank of France, he had wished to discuss a number of questions of mutual interest with the Governor of the Bank of Canada."

The alternative proposals which we had put forward and which were not considered sufficient to warrant such a declaration as was proposed were as follows:

"Alternative A

Before the present credit is exhausted, the two governments will explore together ways and means of providing such financial assistance to the Government of France as it may be feasible for the Government of Canada to provide and as may be necessary to enable the Government of France to finance this programme.

Alternative B

At the appropriate time, the two Governments will discuss the carrying out of this programme and have every expectation that it will be possible to make satisfactory arrangements both from the physical and financial points of view."

Dear Mr. Symington,

I enclose for your information a memorandum for file which I have made on our conversations here yesterday with French representatives regarding a bilateral agreement. In general they are satisfactory.

I would draw your attention however, to the suggestion put forward by Mr. Howe in respect of an inter-company agreement to permit certain exchanges of special traffic. This, I believe, was a proposal that Mr. Howe produced on the spur of the moment to meet the French desire for some special concession and which was left in a rather vague fashion. You will undoubtedly wish to examine it further. Rather than offer any detailed comment in this letter I will wait until I have had an opportunity to discuss it with you.

DISCUSSIONS ON A CANADA-FRANCE AIR AGREEMENT

On Tuesday, June 4, 1946, representatives of the French government attending the first assembly of the Provisional International Civil Aviation Organization came to Ottawa to discuss a bilateral aviation agreement between Canada and France. They met in the afternoon with Mr. J. R. Baldwin of the Privy Council Office and subsequently with the Ministers of Reconstruction and Supply and Transport.

The French representatives wished commercial rights in respect of two services; the first from Paris to Montreal (this would, in effect, be on the line which they are granted under their agreement with the U.S., from Paris to Chicago via Montreal); the second, a local service from St. Pierre and Miquelon to Sydney, Nova Scotia.

They were informed that there would be no difficulty about the second service which would, in effect, be a feeder connecting with Trans-Canada Air Lines at Sydney; we would not be interested in exercising any reciprocal rights in respect of this service.

As regards the Paris-Montreal line, the French representatives were informed that there would be no difficulty about an exchange of the first four freedoms, but it would be exceedingly difficult for us to grant any fifth freedom rights at Montreal since we had already refused them to several other countries. The French representatives expressed their appreciation of this position, but pointed out that they were very anxious to obtain what they described as a limited fifth freedom right at Montreal which would permit them to pick up some traffic for Chicago. They stated that they would be willing to accept any reasonable rules and regulations governing capacity and frequencies which we considered necessary for our protection in the event of granting this limited fifth freedom; as an example, they would be prepared to impose the rate differential discussed by PICAQ.

Mr. Howe made it quite clear that we could not contemplate granting in any inter-governmental bilateral agreement, any fifth freedom rights at the present time, but suggested as an alternative that the Canadian and French governments might exchange the first four freedoms and that subsequently Trans-Canada Air Lines and Air France might enter into an inter-company agreement or understanding which would permit, in effect, involve a limited amount of carriage of fifth freedom traffic. He suggested, for example, that under an inter-company agreement Air France might be permitted to pick up in Montreal for Chicago any traffic which could not be carried by Trans-Canada Air Lines, or that arrangements might be made by which Trans-Canada Air Lines would permit Air France to carry a certain limited type of traffic out of Montreal. Mr. Howe pointed out that there would have to be some quid pro quo such as an agreement by Air France to route traffic over Trans-Canada Air Lines in instances where no competition was involved, e.g. the French local service in the West Indies might agree that its travellers proceeding north or south over the territory served by Trans-Canada Air Lines would be routed via Trans-Canada Air Lines; a similar arrangement might be entered into in regard to other routes as well.

DESPATCH 476

Ottawa, June 21, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to the question of compensation to Canadians with respect to war damaged property in France.

Article VII of the Declaration of the Government of the United States of America and the Provisional Government of the French Republic made on the conclusion of the recent Franco-American financial talks, states: "The French will accord to American nationals who have suffered damage to their properties in France through causes originating in war compensation equal to that payable to French nationals having the same types and extents of losses. The United States Government has informed the French that equality of treatment is accorded to French and American nationals with reference to war damages to property in the United States.”

You will recall the question of compensation to Canadian nationals was brought up in connection with both the National Solidarity Tax and the loan negotiations with the French. On these occasions we pointed to the provisions of Resolution 3 (a copy of which is attached)† of the Unanimous Resolutions contained in the Final Act of the Paris Conference on Reparations. The principal argument put forward by the French in refusing to grant Canadian firms national treatment regarding compensation for war damage was that there would be no reciprocity in such an arrangement. Canadian firms in France would benefit, but French firms in Canada would not, since Canada suffered no war damage of any significance. This they contended was in accordance with their understanding of the last sentence of Resolution 3.

With the granting of national treatment to the United States the argument of the French with respect to reciprocity is clearly no longer applicable as the American position relative to war damage approximates our own.

We should be grateful, therefore, if you could make a representation to the French Government with a view to obtaining the same treatment for Canadian nationals as that accorded to American nationals. You might point to the sustained efforts of Canada in the re-establishment of France as a world trader. Canada's loan to France of approximately $250,000,000 compares highly favourably, bearing in mind the relative population and resources of Canada, with the loans and other grants obtained from the United States.

We feel that our case is a strong one, and you should, therefore, make every effort to obtain from the French Government agreement to the extension to Canada of the treatment already accorded in this regard to the United States.<sup>1</sup>

I have your letter of June 27† enclosing a memorandum covering the conversations which took place in Ottawa on 4th, 5th and 6th April last between representatives of the Republic of France and representatives of Canada. In the attached memorandum prepared for forwarding to the French authorities certain modifications particularly in the section concerning the National Solidarity Tax have been introduced, and for the sake of convenience subject headings have been supplied. If you agree to the suggested memorandum, I should be glad to forward it to French authorities as proposed in your letter.

I assume that your memorandum of the conversations was discussed with the Department of Finance and I am referring to them a copy of this letter and its enclosure.

(d) A Roman numeral preceded by the letters U.S. refers to an Article in the Income Tax Convention between the United States and Canada.

I PRELIMINARY AGREEMENT ON PROCEDURE

In view of the short stay in Canada of the French Delegation it was felt that a general discussion should take place initially, to be followed by agreement where possible on principles.

Concerning Succession Duties, it was agreed that the problems were not many or difficult and that accordingly the principles with respect to an Income Tax Convention should have priority in the discussions.

II EXCHANGE OF INFORMATION

The French Delegation made it clear that they were vitally interested in the widest possible exchange of information between the taxation authorities of both countries, in order that fraud might be limited as much as possible. (16, 17, 18; XIII). They indicated a desire to have a provision similar to that in the U.S.A.-Canada Convention. (U.S. XX)

The Canadian Delegation stated that it was not empowered to offer automatic interchange but only information on specific request in a particular case. All information obtainable under the Canadian law would be furnished upon specific request. It was explained that special circumstances had prevailed in so far as the U.S.A.-Canada Convention was concerned and that the Canadian Government did not see its way clear to extend the same treatment to other nations.

The French Delegation pointed out that while it understood the Canadian desire to avoid overloading its administration, nevertheless the volume of income flowing from Canada to persons in France and from France to persons in Canada would be much smaller than that flowing between persons in the United States and Canada and therefore the automatic information which they sought would probably not impose a very great burden on the Canadian administration. They emphasized the importance to France of the fullest information to combat fraud and they feared that the policy of information on request might not be sufficient for their principals, particularly in view of the wider provision in the U.S.A.-Canada Convention. (U.S. XX)

The Canadian Delegation replied that in practice the information forwarded under U.S. XX was supplied by Canadian companies and placed a very great burden upon them; further, that it was intended to attempt to negotiate Conventions with a number of countries and the Canadian Government did not wish to extend the practice of automatic interchange. In fact, the practice of automatic interchange was not extended to the United Kingdom of Great Britain in the proposed Convention between Canada and that country.

From time to time during the conversations further reference was made to the question of exchange of information. The French Delegation inquired whether the Canadian Government would be prepared to go further for Succession Duty purposes than they were for Income Tax purposes, inasmuch as there would be much less work, i.e., fewer persons involved. They pointed out that the United States had gone so far as to agree that United States assets of French decedents should not be transferred until receipt of a release in respect thereof from the French Government. The Canadian Delegation indicated that it had no authority to go further than to offer information upon request in specific cases but undertook to refer the question again to their principals.

The French Delegation inquired as to the extent of the information it might expect if an inquiry were addressed to the Canadian taxing authorities in a particular case. They were informed that they would get all the information which could be obtained under the law as it stood in Canada. They inquired whether this meant merely the information which the Canadians would have on file, or whether the authorities were empowered to make investigations, and in particular whether information could be obtained from banks. They were assured that the Canadian taxing authorities had power to obtain information from banks with respect to particular taxpayers.

The subject of the exchange of information was taken up by the Canadian Delegation with the Canadian Ministers of Finance and National Revenue and subsequently the French Delegation were advised that the Canadian Government was not prepared to accept the automatic basis of interchange of information.

It was indicated by the French Delegation that an agreement might be reached on the subject of Income Tax on the basis of the more limited exchange of information but that the Succession Duties question presented more difficulty. They indicated that unless something more extended than information upon request were agreed to in the case of Succession Duties the French Government would probably not wish to become bound by a formal convention. They suggested that Canada undertake to give a list each year of successions in which it had come to the notice of the taxing authorities that there were assets in both countries. In this way it was thought that the French Government would be satisfied in that it would be put on guard against any possible fraud on the part of the estates thus listed. The Canadian Delegation promised that the suggestion would receive consideration.

III FRENCH TAX OF 1872

The Canadian Delegation asked for information concerning the tax which appeared to them to be extra-territorial in its effect, namely, the French tax levied on the dividends distributed outside of France by a foreign government which controlled a subsidiary company carrying on business in France. (VI)

It was pointed out by the French Delegation that under the French system of taxing companies carrying on business in France, branches and subsidiaries are treated somewhat differently. In the case of a branch there is a 24% tax on profits and in addition a 30% tax levied as on the distribution by the Canadian Head Office, but assessed in France and based on the proportion of French assets in proportion to total assets of the company.

In the case of a subsidiary, there are three taxes:

- (a) 24% of profits;
- (b) 30% on dividends from the subsidiary company in France to the parent company abroad; and
- (c) 30% calculated in the same manner as the second tax with respect to branches referred to above.

The French Delegation explained that this tax law has been part of the French taxation system since 1872 and would therefore tend to be difficult to change. The solution they proposed (4 and 5) was outlined. In the French-U.K. Convention 4 Alternative 1 was adopted and in the French-U.S. agreement 4 Alternative 2 was taken by the United States. Canada was to consider which alternative of Article 4 she desired to adopt. Under the clause accepted by the United Kingdom the amount of tax is assessed arbitrarily and does not necessarily relate to the amount of profits made in France. In this way there is a ceiling to the tax and an advantage may result to the taxpayer.

Under the clause adopted by the United States the tax would be levied on three-quarters of the profits actually derived from France.

In both these formulae, however, the objectionable feature of taxing regardless of profits which prevails ordinarily under the law of 1872 would be avoided inasmuch as by this system if there were no profits there would be no tax.

It was pointed out by the French Delegation that it would be difficult to arrange any other solution, particularly as the U.S. and U.K. agreements had been concluded as outlined, and that in view of the precedents thus established, it was doubtful if a third formula would be acceptable to the French Government. It was further contended that while the systems in the two countries were different, the weight of taxation was much the same, e.g., the Canadian tax amounts to 40%, whereas the French tax works out at 41%.

It was pointed out by the Canadian Delegation that under our existing Canadian legislation no tax was levied by Canada on dividends paid by a wholly owned subsidiary to a foreign parent company.

IV CANADIAN PROVINCIAL TAXATION

The French Delegation brought up the question of extra-territorial tax levied by the Canadian Provinces, particularly taxation by the Province of Quebec of French companies having no permanent establishment in that Province but which sell wines and spirits therein through agents. The Canadian Delegation explained that the Provinces have local autonomy in the matter of levying direct taxation for provincial purposes and it was emphasized that the Canadian Government could enter into no agreement which would have any effect on the Provinces within the sphere of taxation of the provincial legislature. The French Delegation pointed out that there was a possibility of the Provinces levying provincial taxes which might throw any international Convention out of balance. The Canadian Delegation reiterated that it was unable to make any agreement which would bind the Provinces.

V TERMINATION CLAUSE

This subject was considered again later in the proceedings when the question of the duration of any Convention was under discussion and it was decided that, to protect France against the levy of an extraordinary tax by a Province which would disturb the equilibrium of the Convention, no provision would be made setting out the life of the Convention but that a termination clause providing that one party might end the Convention in any year by giving a stated number of months notice, would be sufficient. (XV)

VI EXTENSION TO FRENCH UNION

As to Article II, there was a discussion as to whether the French Overseas Empire should be included with the definition "Republic of France". The Canadian Delegation inquired as to the appropriateness of including in a Convention a clause whereby by simple agreement between the parties, a portion of the French Colonial Empire might be included therein. The French Delegation pointed out that at the present time the Colonies either imposed no income tax or such a small tax as to be negligible.

After further discussion the following procedure was agreed upon: France could extend the agreement by a simple declaration of intention, but the extension to any given colony could be repudiated by Canada without affecting the general application of the Convention.

VII AGREEMENT IN PRINCIPLE ON CANADIAN HEADS OF AGREEMENT

The several headings to be forwarded by the Canadian Delegation were reviewed and the following articles as contained in the headings were agreed to: IV, V, VII, VIII, IX, X, XI, XII.

Regarding VII, the Canadian Delegation pointed out that it was not desired to base the exemption from tax on vessels upon the registration of those vessels, inasmuch as certain ships of Canadian companies were registered in the United Kingdom. The French Delegation indicated that if the vessels were owned by a resident of Canada there should be no objection, even if the vessel were registered in another country.

Concerning VIII and X, the Canadian Delegation pointed out that it was desirable that Government pensions should be taxed only by the state paying the pension. The French Delegation agreed that this was their understanding.

Regarding XI, it was agreed to delete the words "business apprentices", that there was considerable difficulty in defining just what was meant by "business apprentices" and, in any event, it was considered that remittances received by such persons would not be large enough to attract taxation.

VIII SOLIDARITY TAX

The Canadian Delegation inquired concerning the nature and effect of the French Solidarity Tax (XIV). It was explained that the Solidarity Tax was a capital tax levied on the value of all material and intangible assets situated in France without regard to the nationality of the owner.

The question was asked as to whether a Canadian company subject to the Solidarity Tax on its French assets could participate in compensation to be paid by the French Government for war damage. The reply was to the effect that Canadian owned companies in France were not eligible for war damage compensation because French owned companies in Canada could obtain no reciprocity, there having been no significant war destruction here. It was further pointed out that, although the preamble to the Solidarity Tax law referred to war damage compensation, the proceeds of the tax formed part of the general revenue fund of France and were not earmarked in any way for war damage. The Solidarity Tax was imposed equally on nationals of France and foreigners having assets in France, so that there was no discrimination in the imposition of the tax.

The extent to which the French Solidarity Tax applies to residents of Canada was discussed. It was suggested that Canadian treatment in respect to the Solidarity Tax should be no less favourable than that afforded to any other country. The French Delegation stated that they could not grant Canada the same treatment as that accorded to other countries with capital taxes because certain special arrangements relating to capital taxes might be worked out by France and the foreign country imposing the capital tax. However, Canada would be granted treatment no less favourable than that accorded to any other country in the same position with respect to capital taxes, specifically the United States. The French Delegation promised a liberal interpretation of the capital gains provisions of the National Solidarity Tax as for example in the case of individuals and companies who were unable to repatriate monies because of the war exchange control or other reasons. The French Delegation suggested that specific application of the law in cases of this type might be worked out most efficiently by administrative cooperation between a member of the Canadian Embassy in Paris and officials of the French Ministry of Finance.

FRENCH NATIONAL SOLIDARITY TAX

1. As Canadian companies and nationals must shortly complete returns with respect to the French National Solidarity Tax, it is now necessary that we reach an understanding with the French defining the extent of their liability and that we advise our nationals accordingly. Although the subject was originally discussed in connection with the proposed convention with France for the avoidance of double taxation, it seems preferable to settle it now as a distinct issue. Several Canadian companies and concerns are interested, including Massey-Harris, some Canadian banks and the Foreign Power Securities Corporation of Canada, Ltd. Col. J. L. Ralston, K.C., is representing the Foreign Power Securities Corporation and is pressing us for information concerning our action in the matter.

2. The solidarity tax was imposed by Ordinance dated August 15th, 1945. It consists of a tax on capital and on enrichment (increase of wealth between January 1st, 1940 and June 4th, 1945). Companies whose head office is situated outside of France and who owned on June 4th, 1945, assets in France are liable to taxation on such assets in France as of June 4th, 1945, and individuals domiciled abroad are liable to taxation on their total assets in France on June 4th, 1945, and to the tax enrichment.

CANADIAN POSITION.

3. We raised the question of the liability of Canadian companies and residents of Canada to these taxes in our negotiations with the French delegation in Ottawa in April last concerning the proposed convention between Canada and France for the avoidance of double taxation. The French explained that the Solidarity Tax was a capital tax levied on the value of all material and intangible assets situated in France without regard to the nationality of the owner. We suggested that Canadian treatment in respect to the Solidarity Tax should be no less favourable than that accorded to any other country. The French delegation stated that they could not grant Canada the same treatment as that accorded to other countries with capital taxes (e.g. Holland and Belgium) because certain special arrangements relating to capital taxes might be worked out by France and the foreign country imposing a capital tax. However, Canada would be granted treatment no less favourable than that accorded to any other country in the same position with respect to capital taxes, specifically the United States. The French delegation promised a liberal interpretation of the capital gains provisions of the Solidarity Tax as for example in the cases of individuals and companies who were unable to repatriate monies because of the war, exchange control, or other reasons. We prepared a memorandum of the above negotiations and sent a copy to the French Ambassador on July 19th.<sup>1</sup> We have, however, heard nothing further from the French.

4. Article 7 of the Canada-France Convention concerning the Rights of Nationals and Commercial and Shipping Matters of May 12th, 1933,<sup>2</sup> provides that companies of either country shall enjoy in all respects and in all matters the treatment of the most favoured nation and Article 2 of the Convention provides that individuals are entitled to the treatment of most favoured nation in fiscal matters. We could I think claim no less favourable treatment than Belgian or Dutch, etc. companies or nationals even if these are liable to a capital tax in their country for assets situate in France. Mr. Renaud concurs. We were advised in June last by our missions at The Hague, Brussels and Oslo that France had not concluded any special arrangements with The Netherlands, Belgium or Norway. We recently requested advice if any such arrangements have now been concluded.

RECOMMENDATION

7. Any one of the following 3 courses may be open to us:

(i) We can decide not to invoke the 1933 Convention to the extent of demanding full most favoured nation treatment, that is, the treatment which may be accorded by France to such countries as Belgium and Holland which

have capital taxes of their own, and to accept the treatment of the most favoured nation in a similar position with respect to capital taxes as we are. This would give us at least the same treatment as that accorded to the U.S.

(ii) Course (i) above, but at the same time we would advise our nationals that although the Canadian Government is not making representations to the French authorities demanding full most favoured nation treatment, companies and individuals may do so on their own account if they so desire. I am not clear that an individual citizen may so invoke the provision of an international convention on his own behalf, and I am having this point checked by the Legal Division.

(iii) We can decide to rely on the 1933 Convention and demand strict most favoured nation treatment.

8. I recommend that we adopt course (i) indicated above. This course conforms very closely with the attitude both the U.K. and the U.S. have adopted. It might be difficult to ask for the same treatment as that accorded to countries with capital taxes of their own. Any special arrangements which France may make with such countries will presumably deal with the question of the avoidance of double taxation with respect to capital and these arrangements will not be applicable to a Canadian taxpayer.<sup>1</sup>

9. Presumably it will be necessary to refer this question to Finance and National Revenue when we have decided our position.<sup>2</sup> I am sending a copy of this note to Political II.<sup>3</sup>

DESPATCH 830

Ottawa, October 29, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your despatch No. 830 of September 19th† regarding compensation to Canadians for war damaged property in France.

2. I have noted that you have not received a reply from the French authorities to your note No. 244 of September 10th.† Your despatch, however, suggests that from conversations of a member of your staff with French officials, the French authorities may wish us to entertain some arrangement of "50-50" responsibility in this matter, and further that the French may wish to join the question of war damage compensation with discussion of a new credit to be granted by Canada to France.

3. Your note to the French Ministry of Foreign Affairs states our position quite accurately and I do not consider that we should be expected to modify it in any way. We should not entertain any suggestion of "50-50" assumption of responsibility. Nor should we permit France to use the question of war damage compensation as a means of bargaining for an extension of her export credit granted by Canada, which is a matter quite distinct.

4. To strengthen the case you have made, I feel it would be advisable if you were to draw the attention of the French authorities to the Canada-France Convention concerning the Rights of Nationals and Commercial and Shipping Matters of May 12, 1933. Article 2 of the Convention provides that nationals of either country shall enjoy the same treatment and the same protection before the fiscal authorities and jurisdictions of the other country as nationals of the other Party or as nationals of the most-favoured-nation. Article 7 provides that companies shall enjoy in all respects and in all matters the treatment of the most-favoured-nation. While it is true that payment of war damage compensation was not contemplated when this convention was signed, the spirit of the Convention, and indeed the purpose of it, is to put Canadian nationals in the position of nationals of a most-favoured-nation in regard to all commercial and fiscal matters in France and, of course, to put French nationals in the same position in Canada. Articles 2 and 7 to which I have referred considerably weaken the French argument that because French-owned companies in Canada can obtain no compensation for war damage, as they suffered no damage, Canadians are not entitled to compensation in France. The Convention of 1933 contains no suggestion that the regulations applied in one country must be identical with the regulations applying in the other if national or most-favoured-nation treatment is to be accorded the nationals of one country by the other.

5. There is one other aspect of the question which until recently has escaped our attention. It is felt that paragraph 23, read together with paragraphs 24 and 25, of the agreement with France covering the release of private property from government control (Treaty Series 1946, No. 16) fully covers the question of war damage compensation. I am advised by the Assistant Deputy Custodian that it was fully the intention of the Custodian's Office when this agreement was negotiated to require the French Government to agree to protect the interests of residents of Canada who might have suffered loss or damage to their property situated in France, and that he firmly believes that the French representatives who negotiated this agreement accepted this fact as they themselves approved of the above three clauses. It should be noted also that the agreement referred to establishes the definition of "property" as "all real and personal property and all rights and interest therein, whether legal or equitable". I am enclosing for convenience a copy of this agreement.†

6. I am therefore of the opinion that this agreement itself could be considered as an international agreement such as is referred to in Article X of the French Bill "Projet de Loi sur les dommages de guerre", and in Resolution 3 of the Final Act of the Paris Conference on Reparations.

7. If you consider it necessary and advisable you might refer the French authorities to this agreement and our interpretation of it. I think you should note however that our interpretation of this agreement is based on the recollections of the Custodian's Office of the negotiations which led up to it. The French may very well have other views and reject our interpretation.

I have etc.

Ottawa, November 1, 1946

Dear Mr. Pearson,

I thought you should know of the negotiations which the Foreign Exchange Control Board (Rasminsky and Coyne) and the Finance Department (Read and myself) are conducting with France and, to a lesser degree, with Holland and Norway, regarding the use of Canadian dollars to pay for imports into their countries from Canada. The occasion for such rearrangements arises out of the desire of these countries to use their export credits for private trade, but the implications of the present arrangements go beyond that.

In general, it is proposed that we shall make the Canadian dollar balances of these various countries freely available to pay for exports from Canada, even though these balances may have been derived from certain capital sources. Up to date, of course, our exchange control has been operated on the principle of not permitting the export of capital except in special circumstances, and of requiring U.S. dollars to be provided for exports to all countries other than those in the sterling area. At the time of making this arrangement, we are asking these various countries to give us the privilege of using any Canadian holdings in their countries to pay for exports from those countries to Canada. It is not expected that these balances will be large. In general, it is planned that exports from such countries to Canada can be paid for either in the currency of those countries or in U.S. dollars. Heretofore they have been paid for in U.S. dollars. We are planning to ask these various countries for assurance that in consideration of this arrangement of using Canadian dollars to pay for exports from Canada, they should assure us that they will not permit their residents to buy or sell Canadian dollars except through official channels or channels approved by our control authorities, i.e., that they will not permit their residents to buy or sell dollars in the unofficial markets, such as in New York. We will be prepared to give a similar assurance in respect of Canadians buying or selling their currencies.

We had originally planned, in the case of France at least, to incorporate these arrangements in a monetary agreement that would be published in your treaty series and that would supersede the exchange of notes on August 23 and September 11, 1945. However, when we came to draft the notes, we found that we were not able to agree on the provisions for convertibility of balances, and we think we can avoid having to raise this issue by making the arrangements in the manner described above and carrying them out in such a way that neither country will accumulate substantial balances of the currency of the other. Inasmuch as these arrangements involve granting some privileges to these countries, which are borrowing from Canada, that we do not grant to other countries, for example, the United States, we would prefer not to have formal agreements nor published agreements, which might lead to charges that we were discriminating in favour of these countries and against others in the operation of our exchange control. In fact, there are good answers to such charges of discrimination, but they are of such technical nature that it might be difficult to make them convincing to public opinion, for example, in the United States. Essentially the point is that while we are granting credits to a country, it seems unreasonable to prevent it drawing on its own capital resources in Canada to finance exports from Canada. On the other hand, of course, we cannot permit the United States to draw on its huge capital assets in Canada to finance American imports from Canada.

If there are any questions about these proposed arrangements or the negotiations concerning them which anyone in your Department would like to raise, they might get in touch with me or with Mr. Rasminsky or Mr. Coyne about them. I am sending a copy of this note to Mr. Heasman of the Department of Trade and Commerce, in case they are interested as well.

I should add that these arrangements in regard to exchange control will be supplemented by amendments or other documents authorizing the use of the credits provided to these countries for private purchases of Canadian goods in Canada.

Yours truly,

R. B. BRYCE

Mémorandum de l'ambassade de GrèceMemorandum by Embassy of Greece

Ottawa, May 9, 1946

1. On November 22, 1945, the Ambassador of Greece had occasion for the first time to communicate, orally, to the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs that the Hellenic Government would be interested in securing from the Canadian Government, on the basis of the Export Credits Act, a credit destined for the purchase of Canadian products so as to cover a part of the actual needs in Greece.

2. On December 4th, 1945, in conformity with instructions from his Government, the Ambassador of Greece had the honour to address a letter to the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs on the same matter (Letter No. 1218).

3. On December 10, 1945, by his note No. 21, the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs brought to the attention of the Ambassador of Greece that before consideration is given to his country's request for export credit, a programme covering the supplies which Greece intends to procure in Canada must be presented. Said communication ended as follows: "The sacrifices which your gallant countrymen made during the war and the difficulties which face your country today are fully appreciated by the Canadian Government. We share with other Allied Governments the earnest hope that ways and means will be found to ease the tremendous reconstruction problems which confront the Greek people."

4. On January 11, 1946, by his note No. 1283,† the Ambassador of Greece submitted to the Attention of the Secretary of State the list of Canadian products which the Hellenic Government intended to procure with the credit requested.

5. On January 16, 1946, by his letter No. 1,† the Secretary of State for External Affairs supplied the Ambassador of Greece with information as to the possibility of securing in Canada the products listed in the aforesaid letter of the Ambassador of Greece.

6. On January 22, 1946, the Ambassador of Greece had a long conversation on this same topic with the Deputy Minister of Finance, Dr. W. C. Clark, who promised to inform the Ambassador of Greece of the decision of the Canadian Government after entente with the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance.

7. No further communication from the Canadian Government relative to the request of the Hellenic Government on this matter has been received until the present moment.

8. The Hellenic Government, sprung from the will of the people as expressed by the vote of March 31, 1946, has charged the Ambassador of Greece to express to the Canadian Government the hope that it would help in the great effort to reconstruct the country which the Hellenic Government assumed, by providing the possibility of securing, through a credit, those products existing and easily procurable on the Canadian market. As an indication, the Hellenic Government is particularly interested in the following products:

- a. Railroad material
- b. Raw materials for industry
- c. Machinery and spare parts for industrial installations
- d. Building material

Ottawa, May 10, 1946

I saw the Greek Ambassador yesterday about his Government's request for an export credit from Canada and gave him a very discouraging reply. I told him that the Government had recently been taking an inventory of the external financial commitments it had already made, and was seriously concerned about the strain which, in aggregate, they would put upon our productive capacity during the next year or two. At the present time, they would be very reluctant to consider any extension of these commitments, even within the limits already authorized under the Export Credits Act. If, in these circumstances, any further export credits were extended, they would have to be very closely related to the protection of established export markets for Canadian products and to the economic prospects of repayment in goods and services.

We fully recognized the economic plight of Greece and her need of external financial assistance during the years ahead, but we thought that, relatively, the scale of her needs was so great that plans for such assistance should be worked out under international auspices and preferably through the agency of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, to which Canada was making a very substantial financial contribution to the capital funds necessary for its operation. There was a better chance of such a plan of international financial aid being related to an appropriate programme of internal economic reform than there would be in the case of bilateral financial arrangements.

The Ambassador found this advice rather hard to take and was very reluctant to resort to the International Bank for funds as an alternative to securing an export credit from Canada. We went over the argument two or three times and I promised finally that we would give him a formal statement of our position which he could transmit to his Government.

No. 2171

Ottawa, September 25, 1946

Sir,

Mr. André Stratos, Greek Minister of Labour, presently at Montreal as head of the Hellenic Delegation to the International Labour Conference, requested me, in the name of the Hellenic Government, to communicate the following to the Canadian Government.

As known, the help given to Greece by UNRRA with regard to food supplies will stop on December 31st, 1946, thus again creating a most difficult situation for the Greek people.

In view of the decision already taken, in principle, by the Food Conference that approximately 500,000 tons of wheat will be allotted to Greece for her 1947 requirements, the Hellenic Government would deeply appreciate if the Canadian Government were so good as to examine whether a credit could be granted to Greece, so as to defray the expense incurred by the purchase, in Canada, of the above mentioned quantity of wheat.

The sympathetic understanding and the particularly friendly sentiments always manifested by Canada in all her relations with Greece give rise to the hope that the Hellenic Government's request, based on a most vital matter for the Greek people, will find a sympathetic response by the Canadian Government.

Accept etc.

*Memorandum from Economic Division to Associate Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

[Ottawa,] September 28, 1946

Enclosed is a note from the Greek Ambassador, putting forward a singularly muzy suggestion of the Greek Minister of Labour (now in Montreal at I.L.O.) concerning wheat and an export credit. They now suggest that Canada ship Greece 500,000 tons of wheat in 1947, and arrange a credit to defray the cost.

2. REGARDING WHEAT

The situation is as follows:

A. So far as we know, the F.A.O. Conference in Copenhagen did not consider detailed allocations.

B. Assuming that the Greek Ambassador is referring to the International Emergency Food Council, the situation is as follows: A Sub-Committee of the Cereals Committee of the I.E.F.C. has been screening requirements for the crop year 1946-47, but has not yet reported to the main Committee. Dr. Wilson (Wheat and Grain Division of T. and C.) states that 500,000 tons for Greece is about the figure he would expect, but there is no question yet of its having been adopted even "in principle".

C. Assuming that Greece is to get 500,000 tons of wheat, there is not the remotest possibility of the I.E.F.C. designating Canada as the source of supply for the whole amount.

D. Our programme of wheat exports is still on a month to month basis. Transportation and supply difficulties are acute, and we could not possibly undertake a large long-term commitment of the amount suggested.

3. REGARDING CREDIT

A. 500,000 tons of wheat, if available, would cost $40,000,000 at Lakehead. Financially, as well as from the supply angle, the Greek request is preposterous.

B. In November, 1945, Greece requested an export credit of $50,000,000. Although at one stage we considered that it might be politically expedient to grant a small token loan of $2,000,000 in view of the United Kingdom credits advanced to Greece and the small United States loan of $25,000,000, the request was entirely refused in May of this year. We felt a loan to Greece would be difficult to justify because of

(a) the political instability of Greece;

- (b) failure of successive governments to deal effectively with chaotic economic and financial conditions;
  - (c) the small volume of normal trade with Greece;
  - (d) the failure of Greece to repay the loan made by Canada in 1919;
  - (e) the fact that the assistance required by Greece is of such magnitude that it should be given on an international basis.
- The Greeks pressed their request most persistently.

4. Politically, it might be desirable at this time to offer some token encouragement to the Greek Government. It might be possible, for example, to give a small token credit to cover the small month to month shipments that can be squeezed out. It is not, however, clear whether there will, in effect, be any wheat shipments as T. and C. advises that for the next few months the U.K. contract will keep us so busy that they may have to cut out even token shipments.

5. However, this whole problem is bound up with the strategy which we propose to adopt on international relief problems. We are unlikely to know where we stand on this subject until after the U.N. Assembly meeting.

6. I assume I should notify Finance and T. and C. of the Greek request, with our comments, after I have had your instructions.

No. 2188

Ottawa, September 30, 1946

Sir,

The imminent ending of the supply of foodstuffs by UNRRA will create an extremely difficult situation in Greece.

In order to face this situation, the Hellenic Government has just charged me to furnish them the following information with the least possible delay.

1. Could a purchase of 100,000 tons of wheat, destined to fill the immediate requirements of the country, be effected in the Canadian market and under what conditions?

2. Is the Canadian Government disposed to facilitate the payment of said quantity of wheat by making possible the utilization of a credit of $4,000,000 placed by the Government of Great Britain at the disposition of UNRRA, in London, in favour of the Hellenic Government?

I should be greatly obliged if you were so good as to give me the above information at your earliest convenience and if possible directly through the proper channels.

Ottawa, October 11, 1946

Dear Sir,

ATTENTION: MR. ARNOLD C. SMITH

I have for reply your letter of October 1st† in which you enclosed copy of the Greek Ambassador's note No. 2171 of September 25.

I note that the Greek Ambassador's request is for a loan on the assumption that 500,000 tons of wheat can be purchased in Canada for Greece in 1947.

You are quite correct in your understanding that the International Emergency Food Council has taken no action to set any wheat programme for Greece or any other country in 1947. Certainly our own supply situation is such that this quantity of wheat could not be contemplated at the present time from Canada. Undoubtedly, however, the Greek wheat requirements will have to be met in part, at least, with the possibility of some wheat shipments from Canada programmed on a monthly basis, as is our usual practice.

This does not provide, however, a basis for a loan application from Greece. On September 28 the Commercial Counsellor of the Greek Embassy approached our Wheat and Grain Division with a request for purchase of 100,000 tons of wheat by the Greek Government and the Commercial Counsellor indicated that the Greek Government were in a position to pay cash for this quantity of wheat. Subsequently, I have been advised by UNRRA that the Greek Government has turned over to UNRRA cash in the amount of $4,000,000 or $5,000,000 for the purchase of cereals and other supplies.

Preferably any wheat sold to Greece by Canada from here on would be a direct arrangement, other than through UNRRA. I think this can be accomplished at such time as we are able to offer any wheat, but certainly there would be no occasion for the setting up of a loan in the face of these other indications that the Greek Government has some foreign exchange available for the purchase of cereals.<sup>1</sup>

Yours faithfully,

DESPATCH 661

Athens, October 12, 1946

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Greek Government have advised me that they are instructing their Embassy in Ottawa to approach the Canadian Government with a view to signing a temporary agreement regarding the application of customs tariffs by the two countries, according to which the most favoured nation clause would be introduced on a reciprocal basis until such time as a Commercial Treaty may be negotiated.

2. In my telegram No. 115 of July 12th, 1946,† I reported to you that Mr. Stephanopoulos, the Minister of Coordination, had told me that the Greek Government was ready to commence discussions for a Commercial Treaty with Canada on the basis of the most favoured nation treatment. You asked me to wait until Mr. Monty had taken up his duties as Commercial Secretary at the Embassy. In the meantime, I wish to report that the Greek Government is interested in reaching, as soon as possible, a temporary agreement extending most favoured nation treatment on a reciprocal basis.

3. The latest démarche of the Greek Government arises out of an effort which I had made in September to assist a Greek importer who made representations to me about excessive duties charged by the Greek Government on imports from Canada. The importer in question, Mr. Madras, had brought from Canada a shipment of toothpaste on which he was charged a duty considerably in excess of the value of the article and several times that paid on similar products imported from the United States. I informed Mr. Madras that it was a matter which he would have to take up with his Government himself and he had no one but himself to blame for not calculating the duty before ordering the shipment. However, I undertook to bring his case before the Greek authorities on the grounds that the Greek Government had already asked for a most favoured nation treaty and might wish to reassure the Canadian Government and those importing goods from Canada that there is no discrimination against Canadian imports as such on the part of the Greek Government. In reply, the Greek Government did assure me that there was no discrimination against Canadian products, but their tariffs were in force on the same scale for all countries with which Greece was not bound by a most favoured nation treaty. The Greek Government's Note Verbale then went on to inform me of the offer which it is proposed to make through their Embassy in Ottawa for a temporary agreement to exchange most favoured nation treatment.

4. In bringing this matter to your attention, I shall take no further steps until Mr. Monty arrives or until I have fresh instructions from you. It is quite clear from the example of the toothpaste deal that a large class of Canadian products are completely excluded from the Greek market by the present Greek tariff.

Ottawa, November 6, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to Ambassador C. M. Sakellaropoulo's note No. 2188, dated September 30th, 1946, concerning the request of the Greek Government to procure 100,000 tons of wheat in Canada to fill the immediate requirements of Greece.

In subsequent conversations I have had in your Department on the matter, my attention was drawn to previous commitments made by the Canadian Government to other countries and to the general unfavourable conditions now prevailing in the Canadian wheat market. Consequently, I was urged to advise my Government to investigate the possibilities of procuring the wheat needed in Greece from other sources.

I am now in receipt of new instructions from Athens directing me to again place before the Canadian Government the seriousness and urgency of the situation developing in Greece due to the failure of my Government in their efforts to secure the wheat necessary for maintaining the present rations of bread, which constitutes not only the staple food of the Greek people but also the principal source of calories in their daily diet.

I should, therefore, highly appreciate it if the appropriate departments of the Dominion Government would, in the light of latest returns on the Canadian 1946 crop, further examine our request with a view to meeting Greece's pressing needs in wheat to the fullest possible extent.

In this connection may I also point out that Greece has long been a customer of Canadian wheat, and though Greek imports from Canada fell off considerably after the 1920's, owing mainly to difficulties in our foreign exchange position, an average of 2,000,000 bushels of Canadian wheat grains was imported in the 1929-39 period, according to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

Ottawa, November 9, 1946

Sir,

I refer to your note No. 2188 of September 30th, 1946, to the letter of your Ambassador addressed on October 11th to the Canadian Prime Minister,† and to subsequent discussions which you have had with members of my Department concerning the possible purchase of 100,000 tons of Canadian wheat to meet the immediate requirements of your country.

As you know, our surplus exportable grain position is severely strained at this time by reason of heavy existing commitments and by the additional requests of an urgent nature which we have been receiving from so many countries, including your own. It is apparent that until our exact position is known, and this will not be until the detailed figures on grades and quantities of the 1946 crop are firm, we are unable to make estimates of future availabilities from which shipments to Greece might be possible.

There is the additional delaying factor that our wheat shipments are programmed on a monthly basis, and as of this date the shipping schedule is some 20,000,000 bushels in arrears. Every effort is being made to overtake this backlog, but until substantial progress has been made in this respect it is not possible for the Canadian Wheat Board to formulate export programmes for November and December, and at this stage it seems unlikely that even our existing obligations for those months will be met by the end of the year.

It can be seen, therefore, that circumstances make it impossible for me to hold out any hope of wheat being available for purchase by your Government during the remainder of this year and the supply of your overall requirement will, of course, be an impossibility even in 1947.

It is perhaps unnecessary for me to mention that the Canadian Government has indicated by its contributions to UNRRA and its support of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development how desirous it is of assisting the economic recovery and rehabilitation of those countries which have suffered so severely from the war. The Prime Minister has himself requested that the needs of your country which you have represented to him be kept to the fore when it is possible to make future allocations of wheat. I can assure you that this will be done.

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your despatch No. 661 of October 12th on the subject of the proposed most-favoured-nation trade agreement between Canada and Greece and to advise you that we should be prepared to negotiate such an agreement.

2. We should, however, wish the terms of the agreement to be limited to a period of one year in view of the International Conference on Trade and Employment which is convening early next year for the purpose of reducing tariff and trade restrictions on a multilateral basis.

3. We have not yet received any approach from the Greek Ambassador on this subject which you indicated would be forthcoming. You may, if you consider it advisable inform the Greek Government that we will be prepared to consider such an approach favourably. I am enclosing two copies of our pro forma trade agreement which we have recently amended in two of three minor respects.<sup>1</sup> We have changed the wording of paragraph 1 Article VI slightly. We have also deleted paragraph 3 of Article VI which provided that the provisions of the agreement are subject to the constitutional limitations on the authority of the Governments of the respective countries. Paragraph 1 of Article VIII with respect to the terms of the agreement has been withdrawn.

4. Although I am forwarding to you these copies of the amended pro forma agreement, I do not intend that the negotiations of the agreement with Greece should take place in Athens, as I feel it would be preferable for such negotiations to take place here. Ottawa, February 27, 1946

Dear Dr. Laureys,

I have your letter of February 15th† concerning the establishment of an Italian Mission in Ottawa. This office, which has been opened within the past few weeks, is not, properly speaking, a diplomatic mission. Count Carlo Fecia di Cossato, who is head of the office, has the personal rank of Consul-General, but his title in Canada is Representative of Italy and he will not be included on the diplomatic list amongst the other Consuls-General.

The acceptance of this mission in Ottawa arose out of the desire of the Italian Government to be represented here, and we have no immediate intention of establishing a Canadian office of similar character in Italy. It is probable that, after the conclusion of the Peace Treaty, the status of the Italian representation in Canada will be regularized, but even then the appointment of a Canadian representative in Italy will be delayed, because of the prior commitments which Canada has for the establishment of offices in other European countries.

Yours sincerely,

Ottawa, April 6, 1946

Dear Mr. Roberston,

Since my arrival in Ottawa and upon instructions received by my Government I have tried to do my utmost in order that trade between Canada and Italy could be fully re-established.

At present, however, Italy is not in a position to pay by her exports the goods that she might buy in Canada and substantial commercial relations cannot, therefore, be resumed unless a financial aid is temporarily granted to my country.

My Commercial Assistant has already got in touch with the Economic Section of your Department and with the Departments of Finance and Trade and Commerce in order that the possibility of such aid might be considered.

However, as I have unofficially informed Mr. Ilsley and Mr. MacKinnon, when I had the honour to pay them a visit, I think that a partial solution to this problem might be found. In the course of a conversation which took place last year in Washington between representatives of the Canadian and of the Italian Embassies in the United States a proposal was laid out namely, that the total amount of Allied Military lire issued in Italy for Canadian Troops pay be credited to Italy by the Government of Canada in order to enable my Government to begin purchase of commodities in this country.

I understand that the Department of Trade and Commerce is also very anxious to re-establish trade with Italy and that a decision upon the matter of the Allied Military lire might shortly take place.

I do not hesitate to ask for your aid which I consider of the utmost importance and that I hope will be granted by your usual and benevolent kindness.

As you know, the United States of America have already taken similar steps and I believe that the Government of Canada, who are second to none in their understanding and sympathetic attitude, would also take this equitable decision.

I might add that almost all the lire has been issued after the declaration of Italian co-belligerency with the Allies.

I know that you are aware of the economic situation in Italy and of the efforts of my Government towards reconstruction and rehabilitation.

The new democratic life of Italy has just begun but the result of the municipal elections which, partially, are still taking place, and the atmosphere of liberty and order by which they are surrounded give hope for a true and healthy democracy.

Such atmosphere, however, might be affected by the worsening of the economic and particularly of the food situation.

I am fully aware of the fact that the Allies are giving their best consideration to the Italian problems and I feel confident that I may count on the aid of your Department and of your person, Mr. Robertson, in order to obtain a favourable solution to this question, which, in its comparatively limited proportions, is however of the utmost importance for us.

It will result, I hope, in a happy start to revive trade between Canada and Italy, to the final advantage of both Countries.

Thanking you etc.

Ottawa, April 13, 1946

I am in receipt of your letter of April 9,† which refers to previous correspondence between our departments on the subject of trade with Italy, and how it might be financed. Officials of this department recently had some informal discussions on the subject with the Commercial Assistant of the Representative of Italy in Canada.

During these talks the Italian Commercial Assistant enumerated a list of materials, principally raw or semi-manufactured, which his country was anxious to import through private channels from Canada. Most of these materials we are in a position to supply immediately or in the near future, and for some, we are about the only source of supply. One or two items consisted of manufactured goods, such as agricultural machinery, of which one Canadian company had $400,000 worth earmarked for Italy for 1946, and in fact sold, if the deal can be financed. The majority of the items would perhaps constitute a continuing trade for the reasons above mentioned, but in dollar value they would not exceed our pre-war exports to Italy which had an approximate yearly average value taken on the basis of the five years immediately preceding 1940 of $3,000,000. The items mentioned in the discussion were, as a matter of fact, similar to those which constituted the bulk of our pre-war exports to Italy.

On the other hand there is a considerable demand in Canada for Italian products. This question was also discussed informally with our Import Division, and we were of the opinion that Italian exporters could find fairly substantial markets in Canada, if prices were competitive.

Under the circumstances and taking into consideration present conditions, which to some degree have altered since the subject was first broached by my departmental officials, early in 1945, I feel that some practical action should be taken to re-institute at an early date at least token trade with Italy, or we may find that we have missed our opportunity in view of the fact that Italy is now prepared and in a position to undertake private trade with the United States.

Under date of March 13, I wrote Dr. Clark of Finance as per the attached copy,† to which as yet, I have not had a reply. You will note, I specifically stated, I did not feel we should go very far in pressing for a loan, but urged that some sum be made available to inaugurate and develop trade, perhaps, a sum, not greater than the average yearly value ($3,000,000) of our pre-war exports. The amount might be made available from the Canadian Allied Military Lire Account which you mention at June 30, 1945, amounted to approximately $13,000,000.

The department is receiving increasing numbers of enquiries from Italy and from Canada, as well as from many returned soldiers all anxious to develop trade between the two countries. Mr. J. P. Manion<sup>1</sup> is expected back in Ottawa within a few weeks and will undoubtedly have interesting facts to disclose, which will enable us to judge the long term possibilities. In the meantime the above outlines briefly the situation as we see it.

Dear Mr. Robertson,

RE: FINANCIAL RELATIONS WITH ITALY

Your Department sent to us on April 9th a copy of a letter which you received from the official representative of Italy in Canada, in which he mentioned his efforts to re-establish trade between Canada and Italy, noted the need of Italy for some financial assistance in order to purchase in Canada, and specifically requested that Canada should pay Italy the equivalent of the Allied military lire obtained by the Canadian Army for the pay of Canadian troops. I have also noted Mr. Mackenzie's letter to me of March 13th,† copy of which you have seen, and his letter to me of April 13th. I have noted particularly that the Department of Trade and Commerce, while not prepared to recommend a loan to Italy at the present time, does suggest that some dollars be paid to Italy in compensation for the portion of the lire obtained for our troops.

This Department does not feel at the present time that a loan should be made to Italy, at least until after the peace treaty with Italy has been arranged or the situation in regard to it clarified, and even then it is doubtful whether a loan would be justified if we are not also in a position to make a loan to Greece, which seems unlikely. This question of a loan has been discussed with Mr. Migone, of the office of the representative of Italy in Canada, and he recognizes the difficulties in Canada making a loan to Italy at the present time and is not endeavouring to press action of this kind.

In regard to payments for the lire, the situation is by no means clear or simple. My understanding of the situation is that Canada is under no legal obligation to pay for these lire. This has been confirmed to us by your own legal division. Consequently, the reasons for our making a payment must be moral, political or economic.

As regards our moral obligations, I find it hard to see that this particular claim of Italy's ranks ahead of many of the moral obligations which we might legitimately feel at this time to help the suffering people in Allied countries and elsewhere. Already we have contributed substantial amounts to the relief of Italy both in military relief, which we will not recover, and through UNRRA. If we should contribute more to relief purposes or rehabilitation purposes, surely it should be on a general basis rather than directed specifically toward Italy.

As regards any political or security reasons for making these payments to Italy, we must defer to the judgment of your Department and I am not sure how far you are prepared to recommend assistance to Italy on this ground. Presumably the western powers have some interest to see that Italy becomes an effective member of the western community and is not alienated by neglect and persuaded to join the countries in the Russian orbit. On the other hand, however, it seems almost certain that the United States is going to continue to aid Italy on a substantial scale and any little that we may add to this total seems hardly likely to affect the balance of political alignment. It might be different if we were being pressed by the United States and the United Kingdom to take this action jointly with them, but such is not the case. The United States paid Italy for these lire immediately before the last election in what was obviously a domestic political move. The United Kingdom has not paid Italy for them, and to the best of my knowledge does not intend to do so in view of the large amount involved and the difficult exchange situation of the United Kingdom.

As regards the economic reasons for making this payment to Italy, I am not yet convinced by the case put up by the Department of Trade and Commerce. It is true that we had some trade with Italy before the war and that Italy is now prevented from resuming its purchases here by reason of the shortage of dollars. On the other hand, our exporters do not suffer from any shortage of markets at present, and I do not see that the prospects of trade with Italy are so encouraging as to justify our making a payment to them that we do not need to make otherwise. Certainly I do not believe that we can make this payment merely to provide a market for a few million dollars' worth of exports in the next year or two.

In the above arguments I have taken a somewhat skeptical line to indicate that I believe the issue is by no means a simple one. On the other hand, if your Department and the Department of Trade and Commerce would like to press the matter, perhaps we should have a meeting to consider what we should recommend to the Government. I would suggest that we arrange a meeting some day in the near future at a time convenient to us and to Mr. Mackenzie. Could you call me about this matter on the telephone so that we might arrange a mutually convenient time? In the meantime my Department is proceeding, along with the Department of Trade and Commerce, to do some further work on the economic aspects of the question, and it might be worth while if your Department could have ready an appreciation of some sort of the political and other general international considerations involved.

Yours very truly,

W. C. CLARK

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, July 3, 1946

Dear Mr. LePan,

I reply to your letter of June 25th† on the subject of the economic difficulties which face Italy in 1947.

You will see from despatch No. 1139† of today's date which replies to the Acting High Commissioner's despatch No. A.507 of June 25th† that there is no disposition on the part of either the Department of Finance or the Department of Trade and Commerce to extend export credits at this time. Italy's difficulties have been before us for some time and informal enquiries have been made to us by the Office of the Representative of Italy in Canada both on the subject of an export credit and the military lire account. The answer we have given them on the export account is that goods are not available and that we are already heavily committed. With respect to the military lire account, we had so far been unwilling to acknowledge that this was a legal indebtedness. We were adopting the United Kingdom position but I see from a recent press despatch that the United Kingdom has now made some arrangements with Italy whereunder Italy is allowed credit on her military relief account with the United Kingdom for the United Kingdom military lire account. While this recognizes the indebtedness, it does not put Italy in funds nor improve her position. Neither does it make the United Kingdom position worse because she, like the United States and Canada, did not expect any payment from Italy on military relief. We asked you recently by telegram whether the press report was well founded.

I do not hold out much hope for some time on either of the two accounts. Trade and Commerce has been pressing for some time that we make some funds available for Italy because of the considerable Canadian interest in Italian trade but so far the efforts of the Department have been unavailing in the face of the resistance of the Department of Finance.

I would think that you could informally tell the Foreign Office that the prospects of Canadian assistance are not good at the present time and because we have already committed $644,500,000 out of an amount of $750,000,000 available for export credits. Further, the lack of goods in the near future makes it difficult to justify export credits at this time, since under the Act we are obliged to use export credits for trade promotion through the purchase of Canada-produced goods.

Yours sincerely,

SYDNEY D. PIERCE

RE: ITALIAN LIRE SETTLEMENT

You may recall that we have discussed on a number of occasions the question of releasing to Italy some or all the Canadian dollar equivalent of the Italian lire obtained for the pay of Canadian troops in Italy. We have paid Allied countries for currency obtained for the payment of our troops in such countries, but we have not paid Italy because we started to obtain this currency following the capitulation of the Italian forces, and continued to get the lire without payment while Italy was fighting as a co-belligerent. The United States has turned over to Italy dollars equivalent to the lire received by American forces. The United Kingdom has not been willing to do so, but is apparently proposing to set this potential claim of Italy on the U.K. off against the claim which the U.K. has on Italy in respect of Military Relief supplied to Italy. We have never decided what should be done on the grounds of policy, although the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Department of External Affairs have pressed from time to time for us to release at least a portion of the funds for use in enabling Italy to purchase supplies in Canada.

The funds are available in a special suspense account. The account has already been charged in our expenditures, but there has been a contra item set up as a liability in our accounts and the actual cash has not been disbursed. However, as I understand it, the release of these funds to Italy would not now increase our recorded expenditures, but instead would reduce the liability showing on our books.

Yesterday I met with officials of the Department of External Affairs and the Department of Trade and Commerce in an endeavour to come to some agreed view as to the proposal that should be placed before Council for consideration. It is recognized that this problem is in considerable part a political one on which the Ministers themselves will wish to exercise their own judgment, but it was felt that in putting the proposal forward, every effort should be made to clarify the issues so far as possible. Consequently the Department of External Affairs are now preparing a recommendation which they will probably put before the Prime Minister for his consideration, and if he is prepared to approve, it will go forward to Council as from the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

The proposal to be put forward is that we should agree now to release one-third of the total amount now held in suspense as a liability to Italy, i.e., about $3.9 million out of about $11.7 million in all. It is suggested that when the action is taken, it should be announced as a release to Italy of a portion of an amount owing to her in respect of currency placed at the disposal of Canadian troops, and indicating that the remainder of this amount is not being released pending a further clarification of the Italian financial situation. Reference might be made to the fact that the United States had taken action of this kind some time ago.

In substance, the principal possible objection to this action is that Italy will owe us a substantial amount in respect of Military Relief, and we could write off all of this lire claim against our claim on Military Relief, if we wished to be tough in the matter. The United Kingdom are proposing to do this, although in their case the amounts involved are very much larger proportionately than in ours, and they are much less able to afford settlement along the lines being suggested.

We discussed at some length the real reasons why we should take action of this kind. The important ones, I believe, are broad political considerations of foreign policy. Italy is destitute, desperate and wobbling now in her allegiance to the East or the West. She is going to require help from the U.S. and other countries next year as well as this year. We have already helped her through Military Relief and through UNRRA. We shall probably be called upon to help her to some degree in future when UNRRA is finished. This is one measure we can take now to be of some immediate assistance in helping to get Italian industry revived by providing them with the funds necessary to buy raw materials here in Canada. There are some trade considerations involved as well. The Department of Trade and Commerce urged strongly that it is important for us to resume trade with Italy and develop trade with Italy on a small basis in the next year or two, in order that we may have some foothold in that market in future years, when we will be in need of export markets.

I do not believe that our policy in deferring or rejecting requests for export credits at the present time need lead us to reject or defer the release of these funds to Italy under a different heading. I think we can reasonably take the view that Italy has a claim in respect of these lire, and that on the whole we consider it reasonable and expedient to recognize this claim at present in view of all the circumstances, even though we ourselves may have some claims on Italy which will be difficult to collect.

London, July 26, 1946

Dear Mr. Pierce,

I am obliged to you for your letter of 3rd July concerning the possibility of a Canadian Export Credit for Italy. I have communicated this information informally to the Foreign Office.

You will be interested to hear that since then I have learned from Mr. R. B. Stevens, Head of the Economic Relations Department of the Foreign Office that the United Kingdom would not feel embarrassed if the Canadian Government were to decide to make available to the Italian Government the Allied Military Lire used by Canadian troops in Italy. You will remember that, during my stay in Ottawa, when there was some discussion about this question, the opinion was expressed in some quarters that, if the Canadian Government were to follow this policy it might prove a source of embarrassment to the United Kingdom since the Allied Military Lire provided for United Kingdom Forces stands at a very large total, and, for that reason, it would be impossible for the Government here to follow suit and put to the credit of the Italian Government the amount of sterling exchange equivalent to the Allied Military Lire which had been supplied before the revision of the Armistice. I took the liberty of enquiring from the Foreign Office whether, in fact, they would experience such embarrassment. Mr. Stevens said that he would like a few days to consider the matter. After reflection he let me know informally that, although it would not be proper for the Foreign Office to offer any advice on this question, their satisfaction at the help which such action would bring to the Italian economy would far outweigh any embarrassment which it might cause them. He told me that, in any case, the Italian Government realize that the United Kingdom is not in a position to offer financial assistance of this nature and have not attempted to press for it. Sir David Waley of the Treasury has confirmed this last piece of information.

I have sent a copy of this letter to Mr. Robertson.

Yours sincerely,

I enclose, for your consideration, a draft memorandum to the Cabinet containing a proposal that we should make available to the Italian Government in Canadian dollars one-third of the sum of $11,700,000, which represents the value of the military lire supplied to the Canadian forces in Italy. This proposal has been debated for a long time and we have had many discussions with the Italian Representative who is very anxious to know what to tell his Government. The memorandum has been prepared as a result of a series of consultations between officials of the Departments of Finance, Trade and Commerce and External Affairs and its terms have been concurred in by the three Departments on the official level. Those concerned all feel, however, that the decision is a political one and that any recommendation made to Cabinet should be in the name of the Ministers most directly concerned who are yourself and the Minister of Trade and Commerce. If you agree with the proposal, I should be glad if you would let me know so that I may give Mr. Baldwin additional copies of the memorandum for distribution to the Cabinet.

RELEASE TO THE ITALIAN GOVERNMENT OF PART OF THE CANADIAN ALLIED MILITARY LIRE ACCOUNT

OUTLINE OF THE POSITION

The total value of the allied military lire supplied for the payment of Canadian troops in Italy is about $11,700,000. This account represents a debt incurred by the Canadian forces in favour of the Italian Government. In international law, however, there is no binding obligation on the Canadian Government to redeem the debt, and the draft of the proposed peace treaty with Italy in fact provides that "The Italian Government will assume full responsibility for all allied military currency issued in Italy by the allied military authorities, including all such currency in circulation on the date of the coming into force of the present treaty." (Article 66, Para. (4)). The Canadian Government, moreover, has a claim upon the Government of Italy for civilian relief supplies furnished by the combined military authorities which may exceed the total of the military lire account and is probably not collectible. Any portion of the account made available to the Italian Government by us would therefore be in the nature of an ex gratia payment. The disposition of the account is thus governed by broad considerations of Canadian policy towards Italy and Canadian economic interests in the Mediterranean.

Considerations of both kinds suggest the desirability of releasing at least part of the account to finance Italian purchases in Canada.

1. POLITICAL CONSIDERATIONS

In the present critical economic difficulties besetting Italy and the unsettled state of Italian public opinion, any friendly gesture, no matter how small, would be productive of great goodwill and would have appreciable influence on the Italian attitude towards the western democracies. In this connection it is worth noting that both the United Kingdom and the United States have acknowledged their military lire indebtedness and each has made independent arrangements to credit the Italian Government. The United Kingdom government, for example, has offset the equivalent of lire obtained for British troops after the Armistice against its claim on Italy for military relief supplies.

2. ECONOMIC CONSIDERATIONS

Canada has a general interest in the maintenance of a healthy Italian economy. Any action taken now would be of immediate assistance to the revival of Italian industry by supplying urgently needed raw materials, and would correspondingly lessen the need for help in the following years.

Canadian traders are anxious to re-establish their contacts with Italy, which offers the chief market for some products, such as cheap grades of canned fish, and to take advantage of new opportunities presented by the current disorganization of prewar channels of supply. Italian imports of forest products, for example, came from areas of southeastern Europe which are not yet ready to resume their position as suppliers.

3. RECOMMENDATIONS

The Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs, with the concurrence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, accordingly recommends that of the sum of $11,700,000 standing in the allied military lire suspense account, one-third, or $3,900,000, be made available to finance Italian purchases in Canada, the remainder of the account to be held pending further clarification of the Italian financial situation. Attached is a draft submission to Council authorising the release of the funds in writing.<sup>1</sup>

FINANCING OF TRADE WITH ITALY

At the meeting of the Cabinet on September 11th, the Acting Minister of Finance raised again the question of the release of certain funds for the re-establishment of Canadian trade with Italy.

The Cabinet, after discussion, agreed that an amount equal to one-third of the debt incurred on behalf of the Canadian troops in Italy (or $3,900,000) be made available to finance Italian purchases in Canada, the remainder standing in the military lire suspense account to be held pending further clarification of the Italian financial situation and that an Order in Council be passed accordingly for release of funds.

No. 536 CADEL No. 54, re Treaty with Italy, Begins: Representative of Italy in Canada has advised that in accordance with Italian decree laws all Bearer Shares and securities held in Canada of Italian Companies should be presented for registration in the name of their holder before December 31, 1946, and has proposed to inform Canadian citizens of this procedure by present release. We are advised that non-compliance would result in unregistered shares being declared null and void.

Custodian feels that to recognize the right of the Italian Government to issue this notice and to apply the penalty of nullifying the securities should the procedure not be complied with would weaken his general position with regard to retention of Italian assets.

Many of the shares and securities in question are held by the Canadian Custodian and it is envisaged that they would not be exempted from application of the Decree Law. In this connection all Allied Governments have agreed that securities under Canadian Custodian control should not be subject to their registration requirements until these securities have been released to the beneficial owners in accordance with release agreements.

For these reasons the Custodian is of the opinion that it would be inappropriate for the Italian Government to publish such a notice in Canada pending the Peace settlement. Our present information is that the notice has been published in the United States with the concurrence of the State Department and that similar practice will in all probability be followed in the United Kingdom.

If the Peace Treaty adequately protects the position of Canadian holders of Italian securities and provided that the Italian Government will specifically exempt from the requirements of the Registration Law those securities under his control the Custodian has agreed to raise no further objection to the publication of the Registration Notice.

It would be helpful if you would advise whether it is your opinion that many holders of Italian securities would be protected in this regard under the Draft Peace Treaty and it would be of interest to have the views of the appropriate United Kingdom and United States officials in Paris on this question. Up to the present we have refused similar requests from Latin American countries on the grounds that we do not propose to engage in this traffic until the United Nations has had an opportunity to explore the possibility of regulating the trade by international agreement. (Before we took this stand we had asked you to enquire as to the policy adopted by the State Department.)

We are undecided whether we should hold this line or whether we would be justified in making an exception in the case of Mexico. Our decision might be influenced by the attitude that the State Department would adopt toward shipment of arms to Mexico. Would you, therefore, please obtain the State Department's views? Since we are not anxious to disclose the specific enquiry we have from Mexico, it would be best if you could sound out the State Department on the general question of shipment of arms to Latin American countries and in the course of discussion learn how they feel specifically about Mexico.

SALE OF ARMAMENTS (INCLUDING AMMUNITION AND IMPLEMENTS OF WAR) TO FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS

Under existing legislation the export of arms from Canada is forbidden except under permit. (See Appendix) †.

Since the end of hostilities exports to foreign governments have been limited to cases where provision had been made under Mutual Aid (the United Kingdom and China). Arms, surplus to Canadian military requirements and located in The Netherlands and the United Kingdom, have been sold to The Netherlands.

It was hoped that Canada could refrain from engaging in the arms traffic until the Security Council had an opportunity of considering the regulation of the traffic by international agreement. We have accordingly refused to sell armaments for demilitarized Canadian vessels purchased by Chile and the Dominican Republic. This policy conformed to that of the United States Government which has refused similar requests from Chile, the Dominican Republic and Venezuela.

Now, however, the Mexican Government is negotiating for the purchase from War Assets Corporation of up to twelve demilitarized Canadian frigates and it is probable that they will seek to obtain armaments for the ships from Canada.

The Canadian Embassy in Washington learns that while the United States still refuses to sell to most Latin American countries they are willing to grant export permits for arms to Mexico and Brazil. It is accordingly advisable to determine what the Canadian reply should be to the probable request from the Mexican authorities and to possible requests from others.

There appear to be three possible courses of action:

(1) We can continue our present policy and refuse to sell arms to all countries, save those such as the United Kingdom and the United States with whom we have exceptionally close political relationship and a clearly established community of defence interest.

(2) We can parallel the present policy of the United States and permit sales to some additional countries, such as Brazil and Mexico, and refuse to sell to others.

(3) We can sell freely to all countries.

There appears little difficulty in continuing the first course. The second course would lay us open to charges of discrimination from the countries we have already refused and from those which we shall have to refuse. It would put us in the position of paralleling the arms policy of the United States while our political interest in Latin America is neither as great as nor identical with that of the United States. If we adopt the third course we might invite strong protests from the United States Government.

I think the weight of the argument is in favour of maintaining the present policy, and is reinforced by the facts (1) that we could count on a good deal of United States diplomatic opposition if the equipment we were trying to sell was of United Kingdom type and standard, and (2) that it would be a pretty unprofitable business selling United States type and standard equipment in competition with prices comparable to those which the United States Army has offered to the Canadian Army in the recently approved equipment deal.

SECRET. Following for S.D. Pierce from Scott, Begins: Exton, in Munitions Control Division of State Department, furnished me with the following information for what it is worth.

One, Colonel Charles A. MacLaughlin of Ciudad Trujillo, Dominican Republic, who describes himself as an arms expert for the Government of that country, is reported to be in Canada at the present time attempting to negotiate for another corvette and a supply of military aircraft. Exton pointed out that the Dominican Republic has already acquired a corvette from Canada through negotiations carried out by New York middlemen, which corvette it is claimed was employed to carry the rifles and ammunition from Brazil referred to in our WA-1613 of April 12th.†

Exton hastened to assure me that the State Department naturally had no objection to the Dominican Republic acquiring corvettes from Canada but they were not too happy about the use to which the first corvette was put, namely, the carrying of arms from Brazil. For obvious reasons, I offered no comment on this point, as I failed to see myself how we could conceivably be held responsible for such a development.

Exton claims that the aircraft which the United States released for export to the Dominican Republic has been limited as to what he describes as "innocuous" types. On asking him what was the nature of the State Department's apprehension over the end use of military aircraft and/or ammunition, he was not too specific but he did express the view that possibly it was intended to use such equipment against Haiti. Again I expressed no comment.

Exton further informed me that Colonel MacLaughlin is recognized in the State Department as an American soldier of fortune, formerly a Marine private, and whose ascendancy to the rank of Colonel was probably of his own making, and in general he is not considered an estimable character. Ends.

Exton understands, moreover, that the original Canadian corvette, formerly known as Lachute, and now the Colon, purchased through New York Middlemen, is also on its way to Halifax with a crew to man the frigate in question.

Exton again reiterated that the State Department obviously cannot object to these negotiations, but he would appreciate very much being kept informed of developments.

TOP SECRET. Following for Scott from Wrong, Begins: Your WA-2332 of June 4th,† arms for the Dominican Republic.

In view of the numerous requests for arms and ammunition from Canada we have asked for and received Cabinet guidance in the matter.

The general purport of the Cabinet decision is as follows:

The export of arms is to remain under licence as laid down by P.C. 1838 of July 30th, 1937, and P.C. 2488 of April 18th, 1941. New requests will be screened by the officials concerned and those which it is felt not advisable to meet will be given a negative reply at the official level. Requests about which there is any doubt or those which the officials concerned consider should be met, will be brought before Cabinet for decision on their individual merits.

Regarding the arms which the Dominican Republic wishes to buy for its newly-acquired Canadian corvette, my feeling would be that if the United States attitude towards the sale of arms to the Dominican Republic remains unfavourable, the request should be discouraged. I am inclined, therefore, to recommend that the request be refused but it might be well for you to have a word with the Department of State before we take further action here.

I do not see what the British Naval Attaché has to do with the matter in any case and you should, I think, suggest that he disinterest himself in the proposal. Unless we decide to grant the request there will be no purpose in bringing the Canadian Naval Attaché into the picture. Ends.

Scott suggested that it might be helpful if Exton would let him have a letter confirming the United States view on the question of arms for the Dominican Republic, at the same time providing some of the background which has led to the adoption of this attitude, namely the fear of an outbreak of hostilities between the Dominican Republic and Haiti. SECRET. Regarding my WA-2417 on arms for the Dominican Republic. Exton's promised letter to Scott has now been received and reads as follows: "My dear Mr. Scott:

In the course of our conversation on June 10th, 1946, we discussed the attitude or policy of the Department in connection with certain specific cases of shipments of arms, or requests for arms, or products which may be used as ingredients for ammunition. From the cases discussed an attempt was made to formulate general principles which might be applicable in similar cases.

You will recall that in reply to your specific question as to this Government's policy regarding the shipment of arms, ammunition and implements of war to the Dominican Republic, I pointed out that requests had been received from the Dominicans for a considerable quantity of rifles and ammunition, and that the request had been rejected. I added that it is the firm policy of the Government to refuse any similar requests which might be made and that the British Government had been informed of the Department's views, and had likewise rejected a request for some ammunition. Later the Dominican Government had purchased rifles, ammunition and probably other arms from Brazil which had been carried to Ciudad Trujillo in the former Canadian corvette Lachute, now renamed Colon. As pointed out to you at the time of the sale of the Lachute the Department perceived no objection to a transaction involving the sale of a demilitarized vessel of this type, although it was considered unfortunate that the ship should have been used for such a purpose. Should the Dominican Government now request the export of a similar vessel by this Government it is doubtful if such a request would be entertained.

You then brought up the question of a request from Argentina for the purchase of magnesium for use in flares to be manufactured for the Argentine army. You indicated that when this request was presented you hesitated to grant it knowing that this Government is not in favour of supplying arms to Argentina. However, upon consulting the comprehensive export schedule you had found that magnesium could now be exported from this country to Argentina under general license and that Canada could, therefore, approve the Argentine application without violating the spirit of the United States policy regarding the exportation of arms. In this connection I pointed out that magnesium had many industrial uses and that it would be difficult to separate those of a commercial nature from military applications. It was probably for this reason that magnesium had been placed under general license to Argentina. I then cited the case of centralyte, a product which is used as a plasticizer and stabilizer in the manufacture of smokeless, and, particularly, rocket powders. I informed you that the Department is considering requesting its inclusion on the Positive Export Control List, with particular reference to Spanish and Argentine requests. This could be done without affecting commercial interests as practically the only use for the product is as indicated above and the only producers at present outside of Argentina itself are the United States and Great Britain. This matter has likewise been discussed with the British, who have been informed of the Department's views. I pointed out that with respect to the exportation of airplanes to Argentina the Department will permit the sale of a limited number of commercial aircraft, personal planes, and primary and basic trainers. All other articles defined as arms, ammunition and implements of war will not be permitted to be exported to Argentina.

I further informed you of the reports the Department had received regarding the situation in Haiti and that the Department would not permit the exportation of the corvette or frigate for which it was rumored negotiations are being undertaken by the Haitian Consul at Miami in the interest of former President Lescot.

Sincerely yours,

FREDERICK EXTON
Munitions Division"

It will be noted that Exton has commented on United States policy vis-à-vis Argentina as well as the Dominican Republic. This arose through Scott's pointing out informally to Exton that we had encountered difficulties from time to time in trying to interpret their policy in regard to Argentina, and that it was therefore important that we be kept fully informed as possible in order to avoid criticism from Canadian exporting interests who might claim that American shippers were being given an unfair advantage through being allowed to undertake business barred to Canadian exporters.

TOP SECRET. Following for Scott from Pierce, Begins: Re-arming of Canadian frigate bought by Uruguayan Government.

The following comes to us from the British Ambassador in Uruguay via the Canadian Ambassador in Buenos Aires. The Uruguayan Government, which recently negotiated through the Uruguayan Naval Attaché in Washington the purchase of a Canadian frigate, is most anxious that the original artillery and radar equipment should be transferred with the vessel. It is suggested that these items should be re-installed.

Before giving consideration to this request, we are anxious to know what the attitude of the State Department is towards the furnishing of arms to Uruguay. Please try to find out what the State Department policy in this matter would be. We are not committed in any way to giving favourable consideration to the Uruguayan request, and your enquiries should therefore be made on the most general basis.

SECRET. Your WA-2592 of June 25.†

1. It is our feeling that an attempt should be made to reach an informal understanding with the State Department under which the two countries would adopt parallel policies with respect to the export of arms to Latin America. The fluctuations of United States policy and the reticence of the State Department continue to create difficulties for us. We should welcome your views on the advisability of proposing to the State Department an understanding along the following lines:

(a) The two countries would agree that neither would export arms, ammunition and implements of war to the Argentine Republic. Should circumstances arise which result in either country abandoning this policy, it would give ample warning of the change to the other.

(b) There would be consultation between the two countries with respect to the export of arms, ammunition and implements of war to other Latin American countries with the object of endeavouring to concert policies.

(c) The two countries would agree that it is impracticable to control the sale or ultimate destination of common purpose stores which can be used for both warlike and peacetime purposes.

2. With regard to (c) above, we could explain the circumstances in the sale of Catalina flying boats which have embarrassed us. They are regarded as largely obsolete for military purposes although obviously they can be put to military use. The Canadian authorities did endeavour to ascertain the final destination of those sold by War Assets Corporation and, so far as could be judged, they were consigned to private hands. It could then be remarked to the State Department that the United States, in its turn, had had this same difficulty over the disposition of Pratt and Whitney engines for installation in the Sunderlands which were made available to Argentina by the United Kingdom. It could be further pointed out that it is most awkward to explain to Canadians and Argentinians why Canada is unwilling to sell Catalinas when similar craft, Sunderlands, are available from the United Kingdom and engines for them from the United States. It would be extremely difficult for Canada to check with the United States and even more difficult for the United States to check with Canada on borderline cases, and it appears that more harm than good would result from an attempt to coordinate actions. The complexities of consultation on sales under consideration by the war surplus disposal agencies of the two countries, and the extreme difficulty of determining into whose hands the goods will ultimately pass, indicate that the problem would defeat the best efforts and intentions of both countries.

3. It would be important to make clear that the exchange of information and consultation referred to in paragraph 1(a) and (b) above is intended to work in both directions. To our knowledge, the United States has not consulted us in any instance involving a specific sale and, indeed, has failed even to advise us of major changes in United States policy.

4. We should be glad to receive your views.

CONCERTING OF CANADIAN AND UNITED STATES POLICIES ON THE EXPORT OF ARMS TO LATIN AMERICA

Harry Scott has replied to our teletype of July 4th† (attached WA-2722)†.

He argues that the Inter-American Military Co-operation Act, which will probably become law by the autumn, would make impracticable the method of consultation that we proposed.

In my view, we can only reply that the United States cannot expect to have it both ways. If they are going to launch a series of special agreements with Latin American countries, they should not expect us to consult them on every sale we make.

I should be glad to have your comments so that we can prepare an answer to Scott's teletype.<sup>1</sup>

DESPATCH 877

Ottawa, July 18, 1946

TOP SECRET

Sir,

I refer to my teletype EX-1692 of July 4th† and your reply WA-2722 of July 5th† on the subject of export of arms to Latin America.

I do not see that it necessarily follows that, because the Inter-American Military Co-operation Act is now before Congress, this is an inappropriate time to discuss the question of the export of arms with the State Department. It might be inappropriate to attempt to reach an agreement on a definite export policy, but this was not the purpose of our suggestions. What we sought was to clarify the present arrangements. These arrangements are vague, but because of them we hesitate to make any shipments to Latin America without consulting the State Department. The State Department seems to expect us to parallel their policy, although they do not keep us informed of it nor consult us about it.

What we envisaged was an informal conversation with the State Department in which we laid our suggestions before them. Whatever the fate of the Act, it seems to us that the procedure we outlined was workable. Our object, in short, is either to clarify the present arrangements or to abandon them.

The first suggestion, dealing with Argentina, leaves ample scope for adjustment to any changes that might follow the adoption of the Inter-American Military Co-operation Act. The second suggestion, dealing with exports to Latin American countries other than Argentina, proposes that there be consultation. We did not have in mind that either of us would be bound to adopt parallel courses. The United States could enter into any arrangements she wished without our consent. We think consultation is in the interest of the United States because it is quite probable that Latin American countries who thought that they were not getting arms from the United States as quickly as they wished might seek them in Canada. This raises the question of the probable application of the new Act to export control. Would it be likely that all exports of arms to certain countries would be permitted or would export permits be issued against a specific programme? If the latter is the case, we might wish to reserve the freedom to export arms from Canada. There is the possibility that the United States will establish a specific programme, say, for Venezuela. The question would arise as to what part we might play in that programme. On the one hand the United States might be anxious that American weapons were supplied. On the other hand the recipient country might not wish to be too dependent on one source and might seek weapons from Canada.

The third suggestion was that we should agree that it was impracticable to control the sale of common purpose stores. Whether or not you think that the first two suggestions should be put forward, surely there is no objection to advancing the third. Indeed, if agreement cannot be reached I should think we should be well advised to declare to the United States that it is not our intention to consult with them over the export of these stores for the reasons we advanced in our teletype.

If we have not understood the significance of your teletype and of the Act, I should appreciate it if you would explain in more detail your reasons for considering that discussions are inappropriate.

SECRET AND PERSONAL

Washington, July 22, 1946

My dear Sid [Pierce],

I have just had a talk with Hadow of the British Embassy about the Argentine situation. Hadow has the same impression which we have had for the last eighteen months that we are all generally being given the run-around by the United States State Department in this business. Until today I have had very little talk with the British Embassy—in fact, practically no contact at all. I don't know whether you know Hadow very well or not, but generally speaking he is a sort of wild man with not very sound judgment. In this business, however, I think he is right. I find that he has exactly the same complaints as we have that one simply can't get a definite answer. The reasons for this are obvious. There are really three policies in the United States in respect of exports to the Argentine—one in the War Department, one in Mr. Braden's office, and one held by the commercial and financial interests in New York who want to do business down there. These latter can achieve their ends in two ways—first by exerting pressure on the people who control exports to the Argentine, and second, by trans-shipment through Brazil or other Latin American countries, as they did in the case of a recent shipment from Brazil of a lot of American rifles.

Insofar as the direct export of arms is concerned this, of course, is of much more interest to the United Kingdom than it is to us—particularly in the case of naval supplies. Hadow believes that the United States is doing a lot of forward selling and he is nervous that he will wake up some morning and find the policy of the United States changed, of which change he will be notified 24 hours after the contracts have been signed for arms and ammunition.

I am at a loss to know just how to advise you. My inclination in the case of such things as military trucks, corvettes and frigates is to strip their arms off them and sell them as commercial trucks and vessels. I don't really think much of the value of any investigation that we might make in the Argentine as to the end use because if a dictator needs something to remain in power he is certainly going to take it and its end use is obvious.

Within the War Department itself there is certainly a split in policy, although I think that the article in the New Republic the other day was very much exaggerated as I am sure that General Eisenhower has rather more control than is suggested or than was suggested in a despatch from London, copy of which came to us the other day, on General von der Becke's visit. There certainly seems to be, however, a pretty strong group who place hemispheric defence above all other considerations, who are out to equip and organize Latin American armies according to the North American pattern, and who are very impatient with the Chief of Staff of the army for his willingness to accept political guidance from the State Department, based on other considerations, in respect of one of the potentially strongest military powers in South America.

This letter does not get us much forwarder but I thought I had better put down these few thoughts for you, which had better not go on the record.

Yours ever,

THOMAS A. STONE

TELEGRAM WA-2947

Washington, July 25, 1946

SECRET. Following for Pierce from Stone, Begins: This will confirm my telephone call reporting that the State Department could see no objection to the sale of corvettes to the Argentine. They had called me down (Spaeth and Mann of Braden's office) to tell me that they had a report to the effect that corvettes were not, repeat not, suitable for any kind of commercial work, principally because certain features of their construction made it impossible to stow cargo and trim ship properly. In addition, it was reported to the State Department that the draught of a corvette was too deep for work on the River Plate.

Your very helpful information, which you gave me by telephone today, enabled me to satisfy them that we had gone into the matter rather more thoroughly than their people had and I was able to convince them that the corvette was an out-moded naval vessel, that the cost of re-arming one after we had de-militarized it would be prohibitive, especially since re-armed it would still be out-moded and perhaps more so, and that the corvette could be used commercially. I said that I was not prepared to take an oath, nor did I think that they were in a position to take an oath, as to the end use of any equipment of any kind that might be sold to the Argentine. (Incidentally, the Naval Attaché told me the other day that he understood that in the conversion of corvettes to commercial use, the practice now is to take out one boiler which would reduce their speed to an economic speed and make it completely impracticable to reconvert them for naval purposes. I told the State Department this but I gave them, of course, no understanding that one boiler would be removed by us before sale.)

On the general question of dual purpose equipment, now known as "Grey Zone" equipment, I suggested to the State Department along the lines of the last but one paragraph of your despatch No. 877 of July 18th, that we should not bother them about shipments to the Argentine as long as we were satisfied that we had reasonable guarantees that the equipment was to be used for commercial purposes. I added that we had been securing, and would continue to secure, such guarantees in the same way that they themselves secured them and that it would take a guarantee of approximately the same nature to satisfy them. I also added that we could not, of course, be held responsible for any Canadian equipment of an undesirable nature or otherwise which might reach the Argentine through middlemen in the United States to whom it might be sold by our War Assets Corporation. I said that we felt that once a corvette or a Catalina, or whatever it might be, came into the hands of a United States corporation or company, it became the business of the United States authorities to see that such equipment was not sold to undesirable purchasers.

The above arrangement would seem to answer one of the points raised in your despatch under reference above. I shall comment later by despatch on the other points. Ends.

SECRET. Canadian firm has applied for export permit covering 14 Canso (PBY-5A) Amphibian aircraft to be purchased by Argentine Naval Commission, Buenos Aires.

Under the present understanding which you have reached with the State Department we would feel free to export these aircraft to a commercial purchaser since the planes are regarded as obsolete for combat use and susceptible of being put to non-military use. However, as the purchaser is the Argentine Naval Commission, we think it best to afford you the opportunity of considering whether we should consult the State Department on this specific export. If you think we should, it would be appreciated if you could do so quickly and telegraph us their reaction.

We feel that since similar planes, Sunderlands, have been furnished by the United Kingdom, a refusal to issue the permit for the Cansos would penalize the Canadian exporter to the advantage of exporters of other countries and would do no more than inconvenience Argentina, since this type of aircraft can be obtained elsewhere.

DESPATCH 2125

Washington, November 5, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to our several exchanges of views in the past few months with regard to the sale of surplus aircraft to Latin American countries, notably Argentina, and the discussions which have taken place with the State Department on this subject.

2. The general question of Canadian co-operation with the United States in the disposal of surplus aircraft, corvettes, and other types of naval vessels was discussed in the State Department at a top level by Mr. Stone in July last, when general agreement was reached that as long as we had reasonable guarantees that the equipment in question, whether naval or aircraft, was to be used for commercial purposes it would not be necessary for either government to consult the other. Moreover, Mr. Stone made it clear in these discussions, as reported in our WA-2947 of July 25th, that we could not be held responsible for Canadian equipment of an undesirable nature which might reach such destinations as the Argentine through middlemen in the United States, to whom it might be sold in good faith by our War Assets Corporation.

3. Since these discussions took place in July, apart from two queries raised by the State Department regarding the reported sale, through United States middlemen, of Catalina aircraft and mine sweepers to Argentina, no curiosity has been shown by the State Department regarding the shipment of Canadian materials to Latin America and, in the two cases under reference, their apprehension was completely removed by the explanations you provided.

4. Just recently, however, the Commercial Counsellor was invited to call on the Munitions Control Division of the State Department when he was provided, on a quite informal basis, with the attached documents,† which are intended to outline the latest American conception of their policy regarding the export of aircraft. It will be seen from the enclosed documents that the basic policy of the State Department is to permit only the export of aircraft originally designed for commercial purposes but subsequently re-designed for military duty. Provision is made, nevertheless, for exceptions to this rule.

5. In the course of Mr. Scott's informal discussions with the State Department, it was emphasized that the State Department was merely providing this Embassy with their policy as a matter of information, and in no sense was it suggested that we should adopt a similar policy. At this point in the discussion, the opportunity was taken to refer to the general agreement previously reached by Mr. Stone at a higher level, and also to make the observation that to all intents and purposes our policy was parallel to their own, even if we were not attempting to set forth the Canadian policy in such detail.

6. Mr. Fred Exton, the State Department official who provided these documents, hastened to assure Mr. Scott that Canada was fully co-operating with the United States in this matter and that, primarily, the reason they had turned out such a document was to provide a yardstick for the various United States Government disposal agencies who had been asking the State Department to establish a policy which could be followed without causing confusion.

7. When Mr. Exton admitted that they had to provide for exceptions to the general rules as set forth in their policy the occasion was again taken to put forward the customary suggestion that it would be even more helpful if the State Department would inform this Embassy in advance, before issuing a licence for the export of aircraft which might be of a military type. This suggestion was put forward having in mind that up to the present we had not on one single occasion been consulted in advance by the United States authorities with regard to any shipments which they themselves have made to any Latin American country.

8. Mr. Exton said he fully appreciated the position we were placed in by their failure in the past to keep us informed along such lines, and he volunteered an informal memorandum† explaining the circumstances under which the State Department recently allowed a shipment into Mexico of a number of B-18's. His memorandum has not yet arrived, but there is every reason to believe that it will be forthcoming in the near future.

9. It has been ascertained from the United Kingdom Embassy that a similar set of documents was received from the State Department, and it is understood that copies are being forwarded to London. The reaction of the member of the United Kingdom Embassy staff who was in touch with Mr. Scott on this matter was that although, as in our case, no attempt was made to hint that the United Kingdom Government should adopt a similar policy, nevertheless the handing of a copy of these documents to their Embassy was clearly intended as an invitation to reciprocate with like information as to the policy of the United Kingdom Government. The general impression gained by Mr. Scott was that the United Kingdom Embassy would be taking the same line as our own, namely, that they are, in fact, co-operating with the United States Government with regard to the sale of aircraft to Latin American countries without attempting to define their policy in such meticulous detail. It is understood that the State Department is trying to formulate a similar policy to cover the sale of naval craft, but are finding this much harder, due to the difficulty of determining what are the essential characteristics of naval craft whereby they can be identified as such.

EXPORT OF ARMS TO THE DOMINICAN REPUBLIC

At the request of Mr. Ross, Deputy Minister of National Defence, Army, I saw today a Mr. A. W. Rogers who was looking for military equipment for the Dominican Republic. He is a British Engineer who has spent a good many years in that country and he came with an introductory card from the British Legation.

He said that he was a personal friend of President Trujillo who was worried by fears of communist uprisings and wished to strengthen his position with almost any sort of military equipment that he could pick up.

I told Mr. Rogers that it was the policy of the Government not to engage in the export of arms and military equipment. Mr. Rogers is returning immediately to the Dominican Republic where he will in his own words report the failure of a mission.

Dear Mr. Kemp,

I refer to our conversation on the subject of the Canada-Mexico Trade Agreement and in particular to the article which the Mexican authorities have suggested inserting covering the exchange of m.f.n. treatment in all matters relating to sea and air navigation, etc.

With reference to air navigation, I have canvassed the views of this Department and it is our feeling that the International Civil Aviation Conference at Chicago in 1944 laid down principles for international collaboration in civil aviation matters. Both Canada and Mexico signed the Interim Agreement, the Convention and the Air Services Transit Agreement. The latter Agreement grants Two Freedom privileges to contracting states.

On the subject of other air rights, the Chicago Conference arrived at agreed procedures.

We have already advised the Mexican Ambassador in Ottawa that we were prepared to discuss the negotiation with the Mexican Government of a bilateral agreement in accordance with the standard formula developed at Chicago for the granting of reciprocal rights of air service. I attach copy of our note of August 10th, 1945. I also attach copy of our earlier note of June 15th, referred to therein.

Dear Mr. Robertson,

The Minister for The Netherlands has requested an early appointment with the Minister of Finance for Dr. Crena de Iongh, representing the Government of the Netherlands Indies, to discuss the further extension of the credit which Canada has granted to the Bank for the Netherlands Indies.

Before we discuss this matter with Dr. Crena de Iongh, we would very much appreciate having any opinion which your Department cares to express on the current unsettled situation in Java and the Netherlands Indies generally, and any advice you might wish to give us regarding the extension of additional credit to the Bank for the Netherlands Indies at the present time. We are, of course, fully committed to provide credits up to an amount of $15,000,000 of which only $700,000 has been utilized up to the present, and I do not think there is any need for haste in providing additional amounts, as we originally agreed to do, until more use has been made of the $15,000,000 already available. On the other hand, I think there is no doubt that the representatives of the Netherlands Indies will wish to have us make a definite commitment for the remaining $50,000,000 as quickly as possible.

I believe Mr. Bryce of my Department spoke to Mr. Pierce about this matter several days ago.

I confirm what Mr. Pierce told you and Mr. Bryce, that our feeling is that discussions should not be resumed until the Netherlands East Indies situation is settled. The Government is being criticized—unfairly—for permitting War Assets to sell military equipment to The Netherlands for use in the Indies. In the circumstances I do not think that the Dutch really expect us to negotiate a further extension of the agreed credit at this time.

Furthermore, as you point out, only $700,000 of the $15,000,000 has been utilized up to the present, so that the matter does not appear to be a pressing one.

No. 36

Ottawa, March 18, 1946

Excellency,

I have the honor to refer to your Note No. 815 of March 11, 1946, wherein you communicated the views of the Netherlands Government regarding the registration of Netherlands securities now under the control of the Custodian of Enemy Property.

2. The matter has since been discussed with the Custodian who has indicated that no objection is taken to the registration requirement in so far as it is applicable to securities held by persons residing in Canada. However, the Custodian has reiterated his request that the registration requirement, in so far as it affects Netherlands securities held by him for persons residing, not in Canada, but in enemy countries or in countries now liberated which were formerly enemy-occupied, be extended for a reasonable time after the date on which the Custodian will have released such securities pursuant to the Release Agreement now under discussion between the Netherlands and Canadian Governments.

3. In support of his request, the Custodian has pointed out that:

(a) It would not be physically possible to comply with the Netherlands notice within the time specified. Since the Netherlands Government has indicated a willingness to extend the time-limit for registration, the Custodian would naturally prefer, instead of an arbitrary date which it might or might not be possible to meet, an exemption of the securities held by him until the expiration of a reasonable time after Netherlands assets have been released by him pursuant to the Agreement.

(b) The Custodian will not be in a position, until applications are received from the beneficial owners, to determine whether any particular asset is a "Class A" or "Class B" enemy asset, in which latter case the custodian could claim it for reparation purposes; his position would obviously be impaired if, in the meantime, the asset has been "cancelled" under Netherlands law.

(c) Some other countries have indicated a willingness to exempt from the operation of their registration laws property held by the Custodian until a reasonable time after the property has been released.

(d) A parallel situation arose after the First World War, when a large number of C.P.R. shares registered in German names were not surrendered to the Custodian as required by the Treaty of Versailles, such shares having been illegally traded from hand to hand in European neutral markets. Some of the ultimate holders were Netherlands nationals who did not report or sell their holdings to the Custodian, apparently expecting to obtain a release or a better price. The Custodian after due notice cancelled all outstanding certificates. In 1939, the matter was taken up by the Netherlands and Canadian Governments, and officials of the Custodian's Office proceeded to Amsterdam for the purpose of verifying each disputed claim. Wherever a claimant qualified under conditions approved by both Governments, he was indemnified in respect of lost revenue and new certificates were issued to him. In the present case, the Custodian suggests that difficulties of this kind would be avoided if the requested exemption were granted by the Netherlands Government.

(e) Some of the securities affected by the Netherlands notice are undoubtedly held for nationals of countries to whom Canada has already submitted release proposals. If the Netherlands notice were complied with in respect of such securities, it might be construed as a breach of confidence so far as these countries are concerned.

(f) The Custodian appreciates the desire of the Netherlands Government to locate and bring under control Netherlands securities which may have fallen into enemy hands. On the other hand, he and other Custodians are working toward the same end, which would not, it is thought, be defeated if the requested exemptions were granted.

4. It is understood that, as presently advised, the Netherlands Government would prefer setting a definite date-line after which undeclared securities would be cancelled. On the other hand, it is possible that the Netherlands Government may not be fully aware of all the considerations outlined in paragraph 3 above. It would be much appreciated, therefore, if you would bring these views to the attention of the Netherlands Government as soon as possible, and if you would, moreover, regard this Note as a further request to exempt from the registration requirements of the Netherlands notice property held by the Custodian until a reasonable time after it has been released pursuant to agreement.

5. In the meantime, it would be most helpful if you could provide me with a copy of the Netherlands legislation upon which the notice is based.

Ottawa, April 30, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to my note of March 20th, No. 908† and to inform you that I have now received telegraphic advice from my Government stating that in their opinion there seems to be a misunderstanding with regard to the extent of the registration of Netherlands securities in Canada, especially insofar as securities under the control of the Custodian of Enemy Property are concerned.

My Government specially draws attention to the fact that only those securities belonging to owners who are residents of Canada and which are deposited in this country would be liable to registration. Consequently all securities under the control of the Custodian which belong to owners residing outside of Canada, including of course those resident in The Netherlands, are not subject to registration.

I consider it possible that the above restriction, which certainly reduces the securities to be registered to a very small number, has been lost sight of during our recent conversations.

I should very much appreciate it if you would let me know whether the explanation given above can in any way alter the point of view taken until now by the Custodian with regard to the registration question.

Ottawa, June 17, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to my note of April 30th, No. 1283, and our foregoing discussions on the subject of registration of Netherlands securities at present under the control of the Canadian Custodian of Enemy Property.

As stated in my note of March 20th 1946, No. 908†, I have brought the contents of your note of March 18th, No. 36, to the knowledge of my Government in The Hague. My Government now informs me that they have given careful consideration to the arguments set out therein. They feel, however, that they have to call your attention to the fact that they are bound to comply with their internationally accepted obligations regarding the search for enemy-owned Netherlands securities. The only manner in which it is possible to ascertain whether or not certain securities are owned or controlled by enemy-interests is, as my Government states, by overall registration. This registration does not prejudice, however, the ultimate question to whom the securities belong. This being so, and my Government feeling that the system of registration as followed at present is the only one which fully corresponds to their internationally established duty, they hope that the Canadian Custodian of Enemy Property will accept to comply with the existing Netherlands regulations, thereby safeguarding himself against a possible declaration of cancellation to be applied to non-registered securities.

At the same time, however, my Government is ready to extend the ultimate date of registration to the 31st of July, 1946.

Excellency,

I have the honour to refer to your note No. 1726 of June 17, 1946, and to advise you that the Custodian is prepared to approve the proposal of the Netherlands Government for the registration of securities under the Custodian's control as it does not involve displacement of the securities.

Before the Custodian instructs his depositaries to make the declarations as outlined in your note, he would like to be assured that the Netherlands Government will undertake not to apply any penalties to the owner or to the Custodian so long as such securities remain under his control.

If you will be kind enough to give this undertaking, the Custodian will at once issue the instruction to comply with the Netherlands registration regulations.

The final date set by the Netherlands Government for registration is July 31, 1946, and the Custodian would like also to be assured that registration will be accepted after that date should there be any delay in obtaining the undertaking of the Netherlands Government regarding penalties.

[Ottawa,] October 26, 1946

I had a visit yesterday afternoon from the Netherlands Chargé d'Affaires and Dr. Boerma, Deputy Minister of Agriculture in the Netherlands Government, who is attending the F.A.O. Conference in Washington, which opens on Monday. The purpose of the visit was to bring to the Department's attention the wheat situation in The Netherlands, which they described as desperate. They added nothing, however, to the facts which they disclosed to the Department of Trade and Commerce yesterday morning and which are outlined in the attached memorandum by Mr. Master. †

They then referred, though in somewhat guarded terms, to political difficulties which they would encounter if they were forced to accept offers of wheat from "eastern Europe". They said that a U.S.S.R. trade mission in The Netherlands was in direct touch with merchants, indicating that wheat from Russia might be available in certain circumstances. They added that the Communist Party in Holland would, of course, exploit this situation to the limit. I said that we quite appreciated their preoccupation with this aspect of the question. I also gave them a general assurance that, other things being equal, and reserving the position of the United Kingdom, with which we had a special relationship in this matter, there was no country whose request for wheat would receive more sympathetic consideration than one from The Netherlands. That, however, was as far as I could go. I pointed out also that we had been receiving many requests from countries whose food position was serious and that it was impossible, of course, for us to satisfy all these requests. The Netherlands, however, could be sure that they would not be discriminated against.

Posthumus Meyjes said that they appreciated this attitude of Canada and they, in turn, understood our difficulties. They felt, however, in The Netherlands that they had been rather generous to their neighbours in the difficult times last spring, and that was one reason why they were in such a position now, with only three weeks' reserve of cereals. Dr. Boerma was quite frank in stating that one reason why Canadian wheat was so attractive was its price. In this connection, the Argentine had been holding them up by prices which were impossible to pay. I replied that I was conscious of the fact that our price policy in wheat was one reason why our wheat was so popular.

Mr. Posthumus Meyjes is to send me a note on the subject in the next day or two, which he has asked me to bring to the attention of the Government.

Memorandum by Legation of The Netherlands

Ottawa, October 26, 1946

MEMORANDUM CONCERNING THE BREAD GRAIN
 POSITION OF THE NETHERLANDS

The bread grain supply in The Netherlands has never been so low since the end of the war and it seems to be necessary to explain in short which circumstances have led to this situation.

At the time of the liberation all supplies had been completely exhausted. During the last months of the war the population lived on a ration which was so small that the death rate, especially in the Western part of The Netherlands, increased alarmingly. The first relief was the dropping by air of foodstuffs, after which the immediate arrival of further supplies enabled the Netherlands Government to give the highly undernourished population a more reasonable ration. This could be largely attributed to the policy of the Government in exile which during the war saw to it that an important stockpile was formed, which was made up to a large extent of Canadian wheat.

Thereafter steps were taken to further ameliorate the situation by the following measures: first, the greater part of the 1945 crop (which, owing to war conditions was much lower than the average pre-war crop) was only made available for human consumption, and secondly, large new purchases were made by The Netherlands in Canada and the United States of America. This very careful policy was the prime reason that at the beginning of this year The Netherlands had a fair sized grain supply at their disposal.

Suddenly it was realised that other countries would have to face considerable shortages if immediate action was not taken. The matter was so urgent that in the beginning of February The Netherlands had to stop all purchases of foreign grain, and agreed to divert quantities already bought to France. Later The Netherlands were further willing to loan to Belgium and France quantities of wheat; reduce their bread ration to 300 grams per day per person, and to bring down their working stocks to four weeks.

Appendix No. 1† shows the expected development of the Netherlands bread grain position, up to the first of November, respectively first of December. The stocks on December 1st of 74,000 tons for a bread ration of three weeks can hardly be called sufficient for a normal distribution, especially because winter is apt to close up the Netherlands waterways necessitating the mills to acquire beforehand ample winter stocks in order to be able to maintain the national distributing system.

Consequently, The Netherlands have looked for ways and means to improve this condition, and have requested a delegation to meet the Canadian Government in order to lay before them this critical condition and ask all assistance possible that could ameliorate this condition, possibly by giving priorities.

On Appendix II† the situation is shown of the estimated bread grain position up to October 1st, 1947.

As the Canadian statistics only run up to the 31st day of July the figures given can be reduced by a two months requirement, in order to be in accordance with the Canadian crop year.

The Netherlands Government is much concerned over this long term program and now wishes to make agreements with Canada, the United States of America, and the Argentine, in order to meet the requirements, shown in the table attached‡. So far Canada has only made monthly allocations, while the United States of America has not been willing to commit itself after January 1st, 1947.

Moreover the Netherlands foreign exchange position limits the possibilities where purchases can be made. The table‡ attached shows the quantity that can be bought from the United States and the Argentine. As so far it has not been possible to make a financial agreement with the Argentine eventual purchases in that country have to be paid for in U.S. currency. The Canadian Credit allows for further purchases in Canada, and consequently this country has to be considered as the only source of supply for the balance of the Netherlands bread grain requirements.

Summarizing, The Netherlands are compelled to apply to Canada for the procurement of 18,000 tons per month, on top of the monthly 17,000 tons which have already been tentatively allocated.

A strong request to the Canadian Government to meet the needs of The Netherlands was put forward by the delegation during their conference on October 25th, 1946.

In connection with the above, and with regard to the experience of this year, it is evident that the Netherlands Government would appreciate to make a long term contract with the Canadian Government, in order to stabilize the mutual relationship with regard to the bread grain supplies over a period of—for instance four years. This agreement could be based upon a monthly supply of 35,000 tons for the first two years, and of 20,000 tons for the two years thereafter. The advantages of such a stabilization would regulate the flow of bread grain for the population of The Netherlands, and would further contribute to the general reconstruction of the country.

Under existing government policy it was necessary to obtain express Cabinet approval for such transactions.

6. THE MINISTER OF RECONSTRUCTION AND SUPPLY explained, in answer to queries by other Ministers that the trucks in question could not be converted readily for civil use. They were essentially fighting vehicles of no commercial use or value in Canada unless broken up.

7. THE CABINET, after discussion, approved the proposed sale to the Netherlands government.

No. 111

Ottawa, November 9, 1946

Excellency,

I refer to your note No. 3276 of October 26th† which, with its enclosure<sup>1</sup>, outlined the serious situation in respect of bread grain which exists in your country.

During my conversation on October 25th with Posthumus Meyjes of your Legation and Dr. Boerma, Deputy Minister of Agriculture in the Netherlands

Government, I stated that I would arrange to have the Canadian authorities examine our present wheat situation to determine the maximum assistance which might be given to your country, although I emphasized at the same time how difficult our surplus exportable wheat situation had become as a result of heavy commitments and the numerous urgent requests for grain which we are continuing to receive from so many countries whose food shortages have become acute.

This detailed survey has now been completed and I am able to advise you that the Canadian Wheat Board will undertake to supply at seaboard position 7,500,000 bushels for your country covering the period September 1st, 1946 to August 31st, 1947, and priced at the Board's Class II price in effect when the wheat is sold. In addition to these undertakings, every effort will be made to provide The Netherlands with an additional 2,500,000 bushels, but as you will appreciate all of the amounts which I am quoting are subject to anticipated farm deliveries being made and adequate transportation facilities being available.

In this latter connection I should perhaps tell you so that you can fully appreciate the extent of our problem that our shipping schedule, which is programmed on a monthly basis, is as of this date some 20,000,000 bushels in arrears, of which I understand 1,568,000 bushels represent shipments for your country. It is expected that this backlog will be overcome in the very near future but until it has been reduced substantially it is not possible to formulate firm future programmes, and it is this factor which has prevented my furnishing you with figures of probable monthly deliveries.

In view of the fact that the 7,500,000 bushel undertaking, together with the probability of an additional 2,500,000 bushels, represent the maximum quantity which can be assured under present indications, it can be seen that a contract with the Canadian Government such as you suggested would not have the effect of increasing deliveries to your country.

In the meantime, the Canadian authorities will continue to keep your needs before them on every occasion when they find it possible to make further allocations, and I can only repeat the assurance which I gave to Mr. Meyjes during his aforementioned visit that there is no country, apart from the United Kingdom with which we have a special relationship in this matter, whose requests for additional wheat allocations will receive more sympathetic consideration than will those of The Netherlands.

Accept etc.

I was informed this morning, officially, by the Netherlands Minister that his Government desired to raise their Legation at Ottawa to the rank of Embassy. I was also asked to secure the agrément for Dr. J. H. van Royen whom they desire to nominate as their first Ambassador to Canada and who has been the Foreign Minister of The Netherlands.

2. I was asked whether Canada would take simultaneous action for the elevation of the Canadian Legation at The Hague to the rank of Embassy,<sup>1</sup> and I indicated that there would probably be no objection to this.

3. An Order-in-Council is not necessary for these changes, but the King's approval must be obtained through the Governor General.

4. If you approve, I will ask for the King's approval and ask Dupuy to enquire whether the Netherlands Government are agreeable to the elevation of our Legation to the rank of Embassy and whether they desire that we should seek agrément for Dupuy as Ambassador.<sup>1</sup>

5. Thereafter we will suggest that a simultaneous announcement in both capitals be made.

6. In the meantime, all the preparations are confidential and I have told Dupuy that we are most anxious to avoid premature publicity.

7. The Netherlands Minister emphasized this morning the extreme desirability of avoiding a premature leak, and I will take whatever steps are possible to avoid this at this end.

TRADE AGREEMENT WITH NICARAGUA

I shall speak to Mr. MacKinnon about this matter as soon as possible. Meanwhile, my present views are:

(1) If Mr. MacKinnon signs the treaty, no great problem exists. I think that he should sign it alone, because of the misunderstanding which is always created in foreign countries by the participation of the United Kingdom representative in this kind of action;

(2) On the assumption that the United Kingdom Minister has not made any substantial contribution to the negotiations, but has acted largely as a "post office", I do not think that he would have any great cause for irritation if Mr. Stewart signed the treaty alone, in the absence of Mr. MacKinnon. I think that, as suggested, arrangements to this end might be put into effect as soon as we learn definitely that Mr. MacKinnon has cancelled his proposed trip;

(3) I appreciate that, in omitting the United Kingdom Minister from participation in the signature, we may appear to be discourteous, and I think that we should take advantage of every opportunity to emphasize our appreciation of his services in this and other matters which are of Canadian concern. Nevertheless, I feel that, on balance, the advantage lies in having a Canadian sign alone when the treaty is one of exclusive Canadian concern, as I assume this one is.

Dear Sir,

RE: TRADE TREATY—NICARAGUA

Your attention is invited to my recent visit to Managua, Nicaragua where negotiations for a most-favoured-nation treaty with the Nicaraguan Government were successfully completed. I arrived in Guatemala Friday afternoon, October 25th, after having travelled all night by plane from Washington via New Orleans and Mérida and, as there was no point in proceeding to Managua over the weekend, I stayed in Guatemala and spent considerable time with Mr. C. B. Birkett, who is becoming nicely settled in his new post.

We proceeded to Managua Monday morning by Panair and, after discussing our plans with the British Minister, Mr. A. W. Robertson, he was able to arrange an interview with the Foreign Minister, Dr. Román for early Tuesday morning when we had a very pleasant and lengthy conversation with Dr. Román, who indicated his keen interest in negotiating a most-favoured-nation treaty with Canada at the earliest possible moment. However, he had to consult various other members of the Government, including the President and the Minister of Finance and it was not until Thursday evening that he was able to advise us informally that they were prepared to proceed with the signing of the treaty. I had previously indicated to him that I was authorized only to conduct the preliminary negotiations and initial the draft of the treaty, in company with the British Minister, and that the actual signing ceremony would take place at a later date. Dr. Román was aware of our Minister, Mr. MacKinnon's expressed hope to proceed to Nicaragua in the near future to sign the treaty and his government is very keen that this formal event should take place in Managua at the earliest possible date. They are having general elections in Nicaragua early in the new year and it is possible that the present Government (dictatorship) which has been in power for many years may lose control and it would be desirable from every point of view to conclude this treaty while the present Foreign Minister, Dr. Román, is still in power, and I am sure the British Minister, Mr. Robertson, who will receive a copy of this letter, would concur with this statement.

Concerning the actual negotiations, there is little to report as Dr. Román was exceedingly co-operative throughout and did everything in his power to expedite a decision from the fellow members of his cabinet. As stated above, he gave us his decision informally at a dinner party at the British Embassy on Thursday evening but, as Friday was a National Holiday in Nicaragua, the Government offices were closed and we could do nothing more until Saturday morning. Mr. Birkett had completed most of his routine business calls in Managua by that time, and he decided to return to Guatemala Friday morning and I believe his visit to Managua at this point enabled him to establish very good connections with the Government and with the business and importing interests in Managua.

On Saturday morning, in company with the British Minister, we met at the Foreign Minister's office at 9:30 where he was accompanied by his legal advisers and he had the Spanish translation of our treaty with Colombia read and discussed and, after having satisfied himself and his advisers on one or two points, he indicated his willingness to initial the final English draft and this was done and the draft was initialled also by the British Minister and myself and the official visit concluded. We then returned to the British Legation from which I sent a brief telegram to Mr. Arthur Neal<sup>1</sup>, advising him that the first draft had been initialled and the Minister wrote a despatch on this matter to External Affairs,† a copy of which you doubtless have already received. I wish to stress at this point the extremely helpful and interested attitude shown by Mr. Robertson and his unfailing assistance was of the greatest value to us.

Having completed my task in Managua, I took a Panair plane to Panama Saturday afternoon and posted the initialled draft of the Treaty to Mr. Arthur Neal by registered mail from Panama Tuesday morning, November 5th, Monday having been their National day and a full holiday. Naturally the British Minister at Managua, Mr. C. B. Birkett of Guatemala and myself will be extremely interested to learn of any further developments re the arrangements which may be made for the formal signing and we shall welcome your advices in due course.

Yours faithfully,

M. T. STEWART

Dear Mr. Birkett,

With reference to my letter of November 28th† regarding the Canada-Nicaragua Trade Agreement, I am enclosing Full Powers authorizing you to sign the agreement together with two photostatic copies. I would be grateful if you will communicate as soon as possible with Mr. A. W. Robertson, British Minister in Nicaragua, and arrange with him a convenient date for you to proceed to Managua to sign. The Nicaraguan authorities wish to sign the agreement as soon as possible.

I am also enclosing the draft text of the agreement<sup>2</sup> which has been initialled by Mr. M. T. Stewart and Mr. Robertson on behalf of Canada and the Nicaraguan Minister of Foreign Affairs. The date left blank in paragraph 2 of Article IX is to be eight or nine days subsequent to the date of signature in order to give us time to have an Order-in-Council passed to bring the agreement provisionally into effect.

The English and Spanish texts which you will sign are being prepared by Mr. Robertson.

On signing the agreement, will you also arrange with the Nicaraguan authorities the time and date for a Press Release and advise me by telegram in order that we may synchronize the Press Release here with the release in Nicaragua.

Please return the original Full Powers and the draft initialled text of the agreement to me along with the signed copies of the agreement. This may be done either by you directly or I presume through Mr. Robertson.

We much appreciate your services in this matter and trust that the arrangements we have made will not inconvenience you. We would have put the signing of the agreement off until early next year if the Nicaraguan authorities had not expressed a desire to sign at an early date.

You will note that you will be the sole signatory on behalf of Canada. I might add, for your own information, that although we are most grateful to Mr. Robertson for the services he has rendered us in concluding this agreement we have not requested him to sign on our behalf, due to our policy of having direct Canadian representatives sign our international agreements wherever possible. I think it would be well if you were to use any opportunity which offers to express to Mr. Robertson our appreciation of his valuable good offices.

You will also find attached a copy of telegram which I am sending today to Mr. Robertson.†

CONFIDENTIAL

Lima, April 16, 1946

Dear Sir,

CANADIAN-PERUVIAN TRADE TREATY NEGOTIATIONS

I would refer to discussions regarding the foregoing which I had with you in November last and also with Mr. H. Kemp, Director, Commercial Relations, in connection with the standing of the long drawn out negotiations which have been going on ever since Mr. Pedro Beltran's trip to Ottawa in January 1941 and the visit of the Hon. James A. MacKinnon and his Trade Mission to Peru in August of that year.

You will remember that these negotiations were temporarily shelved on the basis that while no obstruction existed from a commercial angle to the signing, the Peruvian Government wished the Canadian Government to open up diplomatic relations with Peru. However, this consideration was naturally finally removed by the establishment of the Canadian Embassy in Lima in October 1944. Then another delaying factor was injected by the fact that the Peruvian authorities thought they might prefer to conclude inter-South American agreements before accepting any new commitments in world areas. The numerous delays which have been experienced in getting any kind of South American cooperation on an economic plane have militated against the conclusion of such accords and Peru is now in the situation that the importation of merchandise from all parts of the globe is of vital necessity to keep her economy going. All through the early negotiations I felt that one of the main reasons Peru did not wish to conclude this agreement was that the officials here did not see that such a treaty would be of any advantage to Peru as the range of commodities which they could expect to export to Canada was small and as we showed no inclination whatsoever towards importing any volume of their two principal commodities, cotton and sugar. Also the various Peruvian officials have been so pre-occupied in the last couple of years with federal elections and the disturbed political situation that they have had little time for discussions of commercial agreements.

Treaty negotiations in Peru are under the direction of the Minister of Foreign Affairs and unfortunately since our Ambassador's arrival there have been numerous changes of Ministers so that it was difficult to get continued action. However, during these one and a half years the Ambassador has unceasingly kept the subject of our commercial agreement with Peru before the various Ministers of Foreign Affairs who have succeeded themselves since he came here, (Dr. Solf y Muro, Dr. Gallagher, Dr. Correa and finally Dr. Garcia Sayan), as also with many other Peruvian personalities interested in our commercial relations. The present Minister of Foreign Affairs, Dr. Enrique Garcia Sayan, is much more favourably disposed and has assured Dr. Laureys that he will do everything he can to bring negotiations to a successful conclusion within a reasonably short time. He informed the Ambassador that it would [be] in order for me to get into touch with Mr. Juan Chavez Dartnell, Chief of the Commercial Section in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and to work out with him the necessary details concerning the treaty. I have now been in touch with Mr. Chavez for the past month and you have probably already been informed of the progress made by the receipt of copies of the Ambassador's despatches to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in particular the one dated April 3rd† which is being followed by the last one under date of April 15th.†

I have had approximately six interviews with Mr. Juan Chavez, in the first of which I left him with a copy of the Spanish text of the projected treaty. He was in general agreement with most of the clauses with the exception that he felt his Ministry would be more inclined to sign a most favoured nation treaty for the term of one year instead of two. This is due to the unsettled state of international trade and the possibility that after a year's period the Peruvian Government would be in a better position to review the matter and possibly suggest definite schedules in place of the general treaty. Mr. Chavez admitted no one in the Ministry had either the time or the staff to make a thorough study at present. I suggested consideration of the two year term as it seems unlikely that international trade conditions will be much more settled after the lapse of one year than they are now; also if the term was so short we would have to re-open negotiations for the new treaty immediately after the first one was signed. Although I did not express it I also doubted if their commercial section would be re-organized sufficiently in the one year period. However, Mr. Chavez still felt the one year term would be better as far as they were concerned and was willing to recommend a general agreement for that period. I suggested that at least provision should be made for renewal of the most favoured nation agreement and Mr. Chavez appeared conformable thereto. I believe this fits in with the views expressed to me by Mr. H. Kemp, that the Canadian Government would prefer a general most favoured nation agreement rather than one embodying detailed schedules and rates.

Subsequent interviews with Mr. Chavez were more to see that he was following up with the officials in his Ministry and in the last talk I had, on April 13th, he informed me that he had had a further conversation with the Minister of Foreign Affairs on April 12th. He had also consulted with Dr. Francisco Tudela, who as you will remember was President of the Foreign Political Economic Commission of Peru at the time of Mr. MacKinnon's visit, and which Commission has now been more or less bodily incorporated into the new Consultative Committee of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. On April 10th Dr. Laureys had a long conversation with the Minister of Foreign Affairs in the course of which Dr. Garcia assured the Ambassador that he would endeavour to see that this treaty was signed as soon as possible. With this background, and the favourable reports from Mr. Chavez and Dr. Tudela, the Minister informed Mr. Chavez that the Economic Sub-Committee of the Consultative Committee of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs should be convened at once to discuss the projected Canadian-Peruvian trade treaty. Mr. Chavez told me that he was arranging for this Sub-Committee to meet but that he felt it would take a week or so to get various gentlemen to agree on a fixed date. I shall be getting into touch with him again immediately after the Easter week-end.

I wrote to Mr. Kemp on April 2nd asking for some additional background material which he might have in case the Economic Sub-Committee should ask for any more detailed information than I possess here. I presume this will reach me shortly.

I am attaching an additional copy of my today's letter in case you wish to refer it to the Department of External Affairs and I have also provided a triplicate for the Ambassador's files. Dr. Laureys is consulting with his Department in regard to the actual process of signing as the Peruvian authorities have requested that this should take place in Lima. I shall keep you advised of further developments.

Meanwhile, believe me to be,

Yours faithfully,

WILLIAM G. STARK

DESPATCH 73

Ottawa, April 20, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your despatch No. 60 of March 28th† concerning the proposed establishment of a direct air route between Lima and Montreal by the Peruvian International Airways. I should like to make some observations on this despatch for your information which you may wish to communicate to the Peruvian authorities as you see fit.

In the first place, we consider that the necessary preliminary step to the inauguration of an air service between Peru and Canada would be the conclusion of a bilateral agreement, in accordance with the standard formula developed at the International Civil Aviation Conference held in Chicago in December 1944, for the granting of reciprocal rights for air services between the two countries. Before service between Canada and the United States was begun, such an agreement was concluded. In this connection I enclose a copy of the exchange of notes of February 17th, 1945, between the United States and Canada on civil air transport.<sup>1</sup>

Further, when such an agreement was concluded the designated airline of Peru, presumably the Peruvian International Airways, would have to make application for a permit to operate an agreed service into Canada. Such an application would be subject to the conditions of Clause 7 of the Standard Form of Agreement for Provisional Air Routes, under which each contracting party reserves the right to withhold a permit in any case where it is not satisfied that substantial ownership and effective control are vested in nationals of a party to the agreement.

The above remarks are of general application conforming to our adherence to the principles enunciated at Chicago, and do not apply especially to Peru. A similar line would be adopted in dealing with any other country which proposed to inaugurate a service to Canada.

Any further information you may receive concerning this company and the proposed inauguration of a service between Peru and Canada will be welcome.

TELEGRAM 17

Lima, April 26, 1946

IMMEDIATE. Reference Canadian-Peruvian Trade Treaty negotiations.

Preliminary informal conference of Sub-Commission of Ministry of Foreign Affairs reveals the following objections.

1. Concessions to be accorded by Peru considered of far greater value than those to be received from Canada due to small number of Peruvian products exported to Canada.

2. Due to present tightness of dollar exchange situation, Peru not anxious to increase imports from dollar area unless compensating exports to Canada possible.

3. Provisions of Articles II and III regarded as too wide, particularly as Peru desirous of increasing imports from sterling area.

Questions:

(1) Is there any possibility of increasing Tanguis or Pima cotton imports into Canada?

(2) Have price subsidies applicable to raw cotton imports been further reduced and do subsidies react in any way in disfavour of Peruvian shippers?

Observation regarding third objection, have suggested that Peruvians submit their re-draft of those Articles.

Please confer immediately with Department of Trade and Commerce and cable as soon as possible. Further details by next British courier.

DESPATCH 105

Lima, May 7, 1946

Sir,

CANADIAN-PERUVIAN TRADE AGREEMENT

I have the honour to refer to previous correspondence concerning the above subject, and particularly to my last despatch, No. 92, of April 29th.†

2. In that despatch I informed you of progress to that date and attached a memorandum† from Mr. William G. Stark, Commercial Secretary of this Embassy, as to his conversations with Mr. Juan Chavez D., Chief of the Commercial Section of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. This memorandum reviewed the objections to the proposed treaty raised in an informal meeting of the Sub-Commission of Political Economy and Foreign Commerce of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and I am awaiting information from you as to these points.

3. As arranged, Mr. Stark got into touch with Mr. Chavez at the end of last week to inquire if a full meeting of the Sub-Commission had taken place and the results thereof. Mr. Chavez stated that the formal meeting had just been held and that if Mr. Stark would call on May 7th he would give him further particulars.

4. The Commercial Secretary consequently had a long discussion with Mr. Chavez this morning. The latter confirmed that the Sub-Commission in their formal meeting had raised the same objections as those tabled in Mr. Stark's memorandum of April 26th but as you already have these details I am not repeating them here. The following new facts emerged in today's conversation:

a). The Sub-Commission made an attempt to rewrite Articles II and III of the projected draft treaty without success. They found they could not agree on any text which would approximate the ideas contained in the present paragraphs with their desire to maintain complete freedom in allocating exchange or shares of the Peruvian market for goods to be bought from countries with whom their exchange position would be easier than it is at present in United States dollars. The Sub-Commission therefore wish to have these two Articles omitted from the treaty. Mr. Stark said he would report this and I would appreciate receiving your views.

b). Regarding cotton purchases, the Sub-Commission inquired if there were some way in which Canada would guarantee to buy certain quantities of Peruvian cotton annually. The actual amounts were not specified, although the Sub-Commission thought these might approximate those quantities imported in the war years. The returns of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics show imports into Canada of cotton from Peru as:

1941 .....	$1,024,000
1943 .....	541,153

Mr. Chavez inquired again from Mr. Stark regarding his opinion as to why cotton sales to Canada had decreased so abruptly in 1944-45; imports in those years being small, and Mr. Stark informed him that the cotton trade stated this was due to prices but that this Embassy was seeking information on this point from Canada. I look forward to receiving your opinion on this matter as outlined in my despatch of April 29th.

c). The Sub-Commission also inquired if a special rate could be accorded to Peruvian sugar. In this connection it might be considered whether such a concession could be granted even if it were restricted to the entry of a definitely stated and limited quantity of Peruvian sugar, for example, say allowing the entry of 3000 tons of Peruvian sugar per annum at 10 or 20 percent below the present conventional rates. I observe from recent information that there is a dearth of sugar in Canada at present. Mr. Stark informed me that he had mentioned the question of sugar to responsible officers of his Department when he attended the Trade Commissioner Conference in Ottawa in November last, and that these officers stated that the sugar agreements might be revised shortly when consideration towards widening the scope of Canada's purchases would be given. I note, however, that the Dominican Republic already receives most-favoured-nation treatment and doubtless in the forthcoming proposed trade treaty negotiations with Cuba any concessions made regarding sugar to Peru would also be claimed by that Republic. As these two sources of supply are nearer Canada with consequently reduced shipping rates entailed, such a concession would likely be of more advantage to them and would therefore not improve Peru's position. Mr. Stark explained to Mr. Chavez our present system of sugar purchases under which a reduction of the conventional tariff would have little effect. He informed Mr. Chavez, however, that he would draw this matter to the attention of the Canadian Government and I should appreciate it if this question could be examined. Is it possible to phrase a concession in such a way that its benefits would not have to be extended to other countries who have most-favoured-nation agreements with us?

d). The Sub-Commission made further reference to the long list of items included in the schedules of Peru's treaties with the United States and the United Kingdom. They would be interested to learn which of the goods enumerated therein could be supplied from Canada under present circumstances. Copies of these treaties are already in possession of the Director, Commercial Relations, Department of Trade and Commerce, and Mr. Stark is requesting that a survey of the supply position of those articles be made by his Department. Many of these goods are necessary articles in Peruvian economy and the Sub-Commission felt that they would like to examine whether certain purchases could be transferred to Canada without disturbing Peru's present exchange position unduly. Is there any possibility that the regulation of the Foreign Exchange Control Board requiring payment in United States dollars for Canadian merchandise exported to Peru will be amended in the near future?

5. In general the Sub-Commission felt that the Commercial Section of the Peruvian Ministry of Foreign Affairs should make more detailed studies of the factors involved in this treaty. Mr. Chavez told Mr. Stark that he had been recalled from Washington to re-organize the Commercial Section but that it would be a month or more before he had a staff to undertake this work. Mr. Chavez stated that he had tried to impress on the Sub-Commission that present international trade conditions were so unsettled and changeable that a study made now would have little bearing on the situation a few months hence. For this reason he suggested to Mr. Stark that the latter obtain as much information as possible to meet the more specific objections mentioned above and that once these were explained the Sub-Commission would be more favourably inclined.

6. Mr. Stark inquired informally of Mr. Chavez if the Sub-Commission had made any further objections to the length and form of the proposed treaty. (There had been reference to this in the previous non-official meeting of the Sub-Commission). Apparently, however, the chief objections centered around Articles II and III and were these omitted the rest of the form of the treaty seemed acceptable. Consequently Mr. Stark did not raise with Mr. Chavez the possibility of substituting the simpler modus vivendi form which, as you will recall, I suggested should only be resorted to if other negotiations failed.

7. Mr. Stark has agreed to provide Mr. Chavez with certain additional details which the latter requested and thus will continue to keep in touch with him. Meanwhile I am awaiting your reply to my cable of April 26th and my despatch of April 29th.

8. I attach an extra copy of this despatch which I would suggest your referring to the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

I have etc.

Ottawa, May 31, 1946

ATTENTION: S. D. PIERCE

I refer to our correspondence respecting the Canadian-Peruvian negotiations for a trade agreement. We have not yet completed the study of the schedules attached to Peru's trade agreements with the United Kingdom and the United States, but it is possible to comment on some of the other questions raised.

With respect to the Peruvian objections to Article II, it should be remembered that this article was drafted long before the Bretton Woods Conference. Since both Canada and Peru have now become adherents to the International Fund, we are of the opinion that Article II can be eliminated altogether. This seems to be in agreement with the Peruvian views and, as you know, neither of the trade agreements recently concluded with Mexico and Colombia included such an article.

With respect to Article III, we would suggest that the terms of similar articles in the Mexican and Colombian agreements could be substituted. The text of Article II in the Mexican agreement, which covers the same ground, is as follows.

Whenever the Government of either country proposes to impose or alter quantitative restrictions upon imports from the other country, or to allocate shares to the countries of export or change existing allocations, it shall give notice thereof in writing to the other Government and shall afford such other Government an opportunity to consult with it in respect of the proposed action.

It will be noted that the above article does not insist on a definite allocation of a share to Canada—but rather provides for consultation only.

If this substitution meets with the approval of our Peruvian friends, we should suggest also that a paragraph 3 should be added to Article VI as follows.

If agreement is not reached after due consultation as described above, either Government shall be free to terminate this Agreement in whole or in part on thirty days' written notice.

Dr. Laureys enquires if there is any possibility that the regulation of the Foreign Exchange Control Board requiring payments in United States dollars for Canadian merchandise imported into Peru will be amended in the near future. In this connection, we would point out that both the Canadian and United States loans to the United Kingdom (copies attached)† provide that within a year the United Kingdom will eliminate (with certain reservations in "emergency" cases) its exchange control on current transactions. It would appear, therefore, that Peru will in due course be able to use its current receipts of sterling, at least in part, to pay for purchases from Canada. It should be mentioned also that the Articles of Agreement of the International Monetary Fund look toward the resumption of multilateral convertibility of different currencies on a wide scale. Accordingly, any long range outlook should be governed by these considerations.

Objection is made by our Peruvian friends that the concessions to be accorded by Peru to Canada are considered of greater value than those to be received from Canada due to the small number of Peruvian products exported to Canada. It is true that the number of Peruvian products normally imported into Canada is not large but their value has been in general higher than the value of Canadian products exported to Peru. Indeed in 30 odd years prior to the outbreak of war both Peruvian and Canadian trade statistics showed an excess of imports from Peru over exports to that country (see Table I attached).†

While wartime conditions resulted in sharp declines in Canadian imports of Peruvian petroleum and products, it is reasonable to expect that when world trade returns to its prewar pattern, Canadian imports from Peru will again reach and, we hope, surpass prewar levels.

It is possible that the concessions offered by Canada appear to be of less consequence than is actually the case because on many items of interest to Peru our tariffs are already low or do not discriminate against nations which do not now enjoy most-favoured-nation treatment. We hope to supply confirmation of this general statement through comparison of tariffs against Peruvian exports to Canada, United States and United Kingdom.

It is reasonable to expect that the extension of the most-favoured-nation rates to Peru and the abolition of the 3 percent excise tax will result in greater imports into Canada from Peru both in volume and in diversity. The fact that we already afford favourable treatment to imports from Peru does not seem to be a valid argument against this agreement.

Canada supports measures which conduce towards the expansion of world trade and the liberalization of commercial policy. In our recent treaty with Mexico we extended to that country the whole of our conventional tariff rates although we did not receive in return any tariff concessions or benefits which we did not previously enjoy and notwithstanding the fact that Canada has been buying more from Mexico than she has sold in Mexico. We confidently hope that our Peruvian friends hold views similar to our own regarding the importance of general expansive policies in respect of world trade.

Trade among Peru, Colombia and Canada is a good example of the triangular nature of many commercial transactions (see Table 2 attached).† Peru has an unfavorable balance with Canada (Col. 1) but a favorable balance with Colombia. Colombia could not permit such a situation to persist—unless she in turn has a favorable balance with other countries. One of those countries is Canada. In fact Colombia's favorable balance with Canada is much greater than our favorable balance with Peru. Thus we contribute more than our "share" to Colombia's continued ability to accept an unfavorable balance in her trade with Peru. The statistics are summarized below.

	Peru's Unfavourable Balance with Canada	Peru's Favorable Balance with Colombia (000's Soles)	Total of Peru's Balance with Canada and Colombia	Canada's Unfavorable Balance with Colombia (000's $)	Soles (1)
1939	2,673	444	2,229	(3,413)	18,466
1940	3,422	6,319	2,897	(8,413)	45,476
1942	8,893	14,912	6,091	(781)	4,624
1943	6,284	5,908	376	(3,683)	21,793
1944	7,499	17,046	9,547	(11,567)	68,443

(1) Canadian statistics converted at yearly average rates of exchange.

As to the extent and value of the concessions which Peru would extend to Canada in virtue of the exchange of most-favoured-nation treatment we have as stated not yet investigated the schedules attached to Peru's trade agreement with the United Kingdom and United States. In the present unsettled state of world trade and production we are inclined to believe that any such investigation at the present time would have but a limited and temporary significance. In general we should hope that the conclusion of this trade agreement would conduce to the orderly expansion of trade between the two countries in both directions. Nevertheless we see no reason to believe that the concessions that Canada gains would outweigh the advantage extended to Peru. It is reasonable to believe that the concessions extended by Peru to the United Kingdom and United States were carefully selected and adapted to the particular capacities of those countries. It should be noted that Canada enjoys in most of the other nations of Latin America treatment not less favourable than that extended to the United Kingdom and United States. In none of these countries do imports from Canada compete unfairly or show signs of becoming burdensomely excessive. It is not our anticipation that such will happen in the case of Peru. On the contrary we hope that elimination of the mutual discrimination which is unfitting to the friendly and cordial relations now existing between Canada and Peru will lay the foundations for co-operation on the economic side mutually profitable to both.

With respect to the question of cotton, neither the Canadian nor the Peruvian statistics reflect the total quantity of Peruvian cotton used in Canada, since some quantity of cotton and other products is imported via the United States and is not recorded in the Canadian statistics as originating in Peru, nor as being destined to Canada in the Peruvian statistics (see Table 3 attached for partial explanation of discrepancies).†

We are informed by the Cotton Institute of Canada that this country has always used a quantity of Peruvian cotton on account of the special characteristics which make it particularly useful for certain purposes. When Peruvian cotton has been attractive from a price and supply standpoint, it has been imported into Canada in substantial quantities. For example, in 1941, 6,700,000 pounds were imported. An increase in the use of raw cotton in Canadian mills is looked for. The extent to which the use of Peruvian cotton will increase depends upon the competitive factors. The Canadian subsidy on cotton imports is paid irrespective of the country of origin. No discrimination whatever exists against Peruvian cotton, and Canadian importers are free to import from whatever source they wish on a purely competitive basis.

In Mr. Stark's memorandum to the Ambassador of April 26th,† it is mentioned that the Peruvian Sub-Committee consider that our insistence on the exception of the British Preferential rates from the operation of most-favoured-nation is much greater than the exception of contiguous country rates which is allowed to Peru. We are in agreement with the reply made by Mr. Stark in this connection. Perhaps in addition it could be pointed out that the proposals put forward by the United States as the basis of discussion at the proposed International Conference on Trade and Employment provide with regard to preference (a) that no new preferences will be introduced, (b) that no existing margins of preference will be widened, and (c) that any reductions that are made in most-favoured-nation rates will operate automatically to reduce the preferences. All the British countries have accepted invitations to attend the forthcoming conference. If this conference is successful, it is reasonable to expect that many margins of preference which now exist will be reduced or even wiped out. The reductions will only apply to the most-favoured-nation rates and not to the rates which now apply to countries subject to the general tariff. It is not impossible that the general rates might even be increased.

The Canadian Ambassador raises the question whether or not it would be possible to extend a concession to Peru on sugar in such a way that its benefits would not have to be extended to other countries entitled to most-favoured-nation treatment. This action would be contrary to Canadian policy of not granting exclusive advantages, and would in fact be contrary to both the spirit and the letter of all of our most-favoured-nation trade agreements. In any case Canada's present imports of sugar are governed by allocations determined by international agreement so that any special or exclusive tariff privileges which might be granted would not for the time being necessarily result in greater imports of Peruvian sugar into this country.

Lima, July 6, 1946

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

RE: CANADIAN-PERUVIAN TRADE AGREEMENT

I have the honour to refer to my despatch no. 160 of June 9th† on the above mentioned subject, and particularly to previous despatches on this same subject in which I reported on the difficulties encountered with Sr. Chavez, the chief of the Commercial Section of the Peruvian Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and the Sub-Commission of Political Economy and Foreign Commerce.

2. As stated in my despatch no. 160 referred to above, Mr. Stark prepared a letter for Sr. Chavez, embodying the information contained in the letter from the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce to the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs dated May 31st forwarded under cover of your despatch no. 118 of June 7th.† Mr. Stark handed his letter to Sr. Chavez on June 15th. After discussing its various points with Mr. Stark on that occasion, Sr. Chavez promised that he would examine this letter at greater length and then give copies with which he had been provided to the members of the Sub-Commission.

3. As I informed you in my despatch no. 160 referred to above, the minister of Foreign Affairs, Dr. Enrique García Sayán, left Lima on June 2nd for Buenos Aires; he did not return until June 27th. My first opportunity of seeing him again was on Thursday, July 4th. Previous to calling on him, I asked Mr. Stark to telephone Sr. Chavez in order to find out what he, Sr. Chavez, had been able to do since his last interview with Mr. Stark in order to place the Canadian proposals before the Sub-Commission. Sr. Chavez's answer was most discouraging in that he frankly admitted that nothing had been done since his last conversation with Mr. Stark and that the latter's letter had not even been communicated to the various members of the Sub-Commission, let alone discussed by them.

4. I called on the Minister of Foreign Affairs in the afternoon and placed before him a copy of Mr. Stark's letter to Sr. Chavez together with a covering note of my own, of which I am attaching a copy.† As usual the Minister received me most amiably. I told him that nothing had been done by the Sub-Commission, and after I had once more discussed with him the various objections raised by the Sub-Commission, he told me that he would take the matter up himself, that he hoped to have the treaty signed and would call upon me again as soon as possible. For this I thanked him and took leave after again repeating to him the valid reasons for which we are eager to sign this agreement with Peru.

5. What the ultimate outcome will be, I cannot say. However, I must inform you that I consider that this should be my last approach to the Peruvian Government concerning our treaty. I have realized for a long time that whenever Cabinet Ministers are approached, and even Presidents, one receives a smile and an answer to the effect that they are most desirous of seeing Peru sign a trade agreement with us and that they would like this to be brought about in as short a space of time as possible. However, no one really attempts to carry out their good intention. The matter is referred to Government officials and committees which are composed of indifferent people with no real knowledge of economics and who work at a very slow rate. They are most polite but do not appear to understand the question of international trade relations in the liberal way in which these are visualized by advanced countries. They think only of their own personal and immediate advantages, indicative of a narrow-minded mentality and not favourable to profitable expansion of trade. It is therefore my considered opinion that for the time being at least, no further steps should be taken at this end. We should wait and see what the Peruvian Government will do.

6. I might add that today Sr. Chavez left Lima to return to the Peruvian Embassy in Washington as Minister-Counsellor. The Foreign Minister has told me that he may return to Peru in a month or so but that this is not certain. When I remarked to him that, this being the case, I should consider that the matter under consideration would be indefinitely postponed, he reassured me by saying that the work would go on, (I now understand what is meant by that expression) and again repeated that he was desirous of signing this agreement as soon as possible.

7. I sincerely regret that I have no especially favourable information to report, but hope that you will understand the very difficult circumstances under which we are working here. When everything appears to be settled and success near at hand, some new factor appears which makes it necessary to start everything all over again.

8. I shall keep you informed of further developments.

I have etc.

Ottawa, March 11, 1946

Dear Dr. Clark,

In reply to your letter of February 22nd† about the possibility of a Canadian loan to Poland, my views of the four questions you raised are as follows:

(1) The political risks involved in a loan to Poland this year.

(2) The extent to which Canada has a general interest in the future of Western Europe which would be furthered by such a loan.

The object of extending credits to Poland is to assist in the economic recovery of the country. Hence if Poland remains completely in the sphere of Soviet influence, the credits would operate to our disadvantage if our interests and those of the Soviet were in conflict. The credits would operate to our advantage if there is no conflict of interest or if the credits enable Poland to become a viable and independent country with its windows open both to the East and the West. The granting of assistance through credits would strengthen the majority of the Polish people, who do, I think, seriously and passionately believe that their country must retain its political and economic independence.

Whether Poland will remain under Soviet influence and whether our interests and those of the Soviet will clash are unanswerable questions but I believe we have more to gain politically than to lose by extending credits. I do not feel, however, that our political interests are sufficiently great to override our own economic and financial considerations.

Since a Canadian credit would be insignificant in relation to Poland's requirements, I do not think our action would by itself be important either materially or psychologically. If the United States does not grant substantial assistance, we have nothing of consequence to gain in granting a Canadian credit.

(3) The action taken and likely to be taken by the United States in regard to loans to Poland.

I attach copy of teletype WA-1068 of March 6th† from our Embassy in Washington which I think fully answers your question.

(4) The means by which any Canadian action in this matter could be concerted with that of the United States.

I feel that while our action should be largely determined by the action of the United States it need not be concerted with that of the United States. The United States would not make their course dependent on our cooperation so I see no reason why we should commit ourselves. It would be enough, I think, to have Mr. Ritchie informally advise his contacts in the Export-Import Bank of the Polish request on us and of our intention not to deal with it until the United States-Polish negotiations are concluded.

Yours sincerely,

POLISH ART TREASURES IN CANADA

Dr. Bielski came to the Department. He said that Dr. Fiderkiewicz realizes he cannot make an official approach but desires to make an urgent request of the Canadian Government.

Dr. Fiderkiewicz has received information that the persons in Canada who have in their custody art treasures of Poland sent to Canada in 1939 are preparing for these treasures to be moved or hidden, and that the Polish Government would be grateful if the Canadian Government would take such action as would prevent the art treasures being moved from where they now are without the approval of the Canadian Government.

He stated that the treasures consisted of 16th Century Tapestries, 12th Century swords and other arms and armour and Paintings; and that these articles are at The Experimental Farm and National Art Gallery in Ottawa, at the Toronto Museum, and at the Redemptorist Monastery at Ste. Anne de Beaupré. Dr. Bielski said that the treasures are known to him to be at these places but that other treasures might be elsewhere in Canada.

The treasures were before the war in castles and museums in Warsaw and Cracow. The Wawel Castle was mentioned in particular.

Mr. Beaudry said that the information conveyed by Dr. Bielski that there are in Canada art treasures belonging to the Government of Poland was new to him. In response to questions, Dr. Bielski said that these articles are priceless in value and of great historic interest and were sent out of Poland in 1939, some via Roumania, some via The Baltic, and he assumes that the pre-war Polish Government placed them in the care of the then Consul General of Poland in Canada.

Mr. Beaudry stated that he would report the conversation to the Acting Under-Secretary and that we would have to consider carefully whether the Canadian Government could assume any responsibility.

Aside from Canadian Government responsibility it may be difficult to determine custody, identification, an inventory and the exact location of known and unknown articles.

Later

The attached file No. 837-40C contains a letter dated July 11th, 1940,† from Mr. Podoski, Consul General of Poland, asking for free entry for "Polish National art treasures from the Wawel Royal Castle in Cracow, including the famous Arras tapestries of the Kings of Poland—these under the care of Mr. Zaleski" which, in a Polish ship, arrived in Canada in July, 1940.

The Commissioner of Customs letter of July 16th, 1940,† accords free entry and adds: "The goods being entered as the property of the Polish Government and to remain their property".

Ottawa, June 11, 1946

Dear Mr. Holmes,

I should like to refer to your letter of May 27 1946† (your file 975H/412), regarding relief for Polish refugees in Canada.

2. I have just been advised by the Under-Secretary that he has discussed this problem with members of the United Kingdom Interim Treasury Committee in London.

3. Mr. Robertson told them that there was no possibility of the Canadian Government taking over responsibility for the relief payments to Polish refugees in Canada now being made through your office. This would seem to dispose of the principal question raised in your letter of April 12, 1946.†

4. Mr. Robertson explained to the Committee that in Canada the responsibility for direct relief and assistance to unemployables rested on the local authorities. As most of the Polish refugees have by now been living in Canada for five or six years, it is probable that they have become eligible for municipal relief if they are in need of it.

5. In view of the above, it is no longer necessary for us to have information regarding the 450 Polish refugees in Canada who are not now drawing relief from your office. I think, however, that it would still be desirable for us to have full details regarding the 50 Poles who are drawing relief. When we have that information we will, if you see no objection, consult the Department of National Health and Welfare as to the best means by which particulars of these cases could be brought to the attention of the local relief and welfare authorities.

Yours sincerely,

RE: POLISH STATE GOLD IN CANADA

On June 18th the Polish Minister wrote us as follows:

The gold reserves belonging to the Polish State were brought to security soon after the outbreak of war and were deposited in various allied countries. One of these countries was Canada. The value of the Polish gold deposited in Canadian Banks amounted to $70,490,000 zlotys in gold.

As the above deposit was made only for the duration of the war, my Government wishes me to inform Your Excellency of its intention to reclaim now this gold. In this connection I should be most obliged if you would kindly facilitate my approach to persons in charge of the Polish gold in Canada and thus enable me to discuss the methods by which the gold would be restored to Poland.

2. On June 24th we sent an interim acknowledgement to the Minister in these terms:

I am in consultation with the interested branches of the Canadian Government and shall send a further reply to your note as soon as possible.

In the meantime I should be grateful for as much information as you can give regarding the present status of the Bank Polski, or Bank of Poland, in whose name most of the Polish Gold in Canada is held.

3. The Bank of Canada informed us that it is holding 12,371.410 fine oz. of gold for the Polish Government and 382,536.851 fine oz. gold for the Bank Polski. The Bank of Canada is also holding a Canadian dollar balance in the name of the Bank Polski amounting to $17,295.74.

4. The Department of Finance inform us that neither the former Government nor the present Polish Government owes any money to the Canadian Government.

5. We made inquiries in Washington and were advised that the Federal Reserve Bank of New York is holding about $40,000,000 worth of gold in the name of the Bank Polski, that the latter has been negotiating for the eventual transfer of the gold to Poland, and that decision on this request will be taken on a high level.

6. We consulted the Dominions Office and were told that the Bank Polski has not been taken over by the Polish Government and that its constitution is unchanged. Dominions Office said that Article 4 of the financial agreement between the United Kingdom and Poland signed on June 24th, 1946, provided for the eventual release of the gold held by the Bank of England for the account of the Bank Polski. However, this agreement will not be ratified until certain conditions with regard to the Polish elections have been met. The Dominions Office concluded by saying that it would be of assistance if the Canadian Government would continue to delay the release of Polish gold in Canada.

In the letter to us of June 27th the Bank of Canada said:

If we were to receive properly authenticated instructions from Bank Polski to make a payment out of their dollar balances we would be obliged to comply. We have never, however, undertaken to buy or sell gold, but we might be in a very difficult position if Bank Polski should give us properly authenticated instructions to transfer gold to one of the chartered banks in Canada. No commitment has ever been given to Bank Polski that the gold held for them would be freely exportable, and if instructions were received to ship gold to New York or elsewhere it would be possible for the Canadian Government to refuse to grant an export permit.

I find this statement a little puzzling.

7. Perhaps we will have to find out the precise condition on which the Bank of Canada originally accepted the gold from the Bank Polski.

8. The Deputy Minister of Finance in a letter on July 2nd said in part as follows:

Our position, with regard to this request, differs from that of the United Kingdom in that neither the present government of Poland nor the former government are indebted to the Government of Canada. Hence it appears that the Bank of Canada would be bound to act upon the instructions of properly authorized persons with regard to both the gold held for the account of the Government of Poland and the gold held for the account of the Bank of Poland and that the Government of Canada as a matter of good faith would not be justified in putting obstacles in the way.

As regards the gold held on behalf of the Government of Poland there does not appear to be any difficulty. As the Government of Canada has recognized the present Government of Poland, the Polish Minister being the accredited representative of that Government, would, I should think, be the proper person to give instructions.

As regards the gold held on behalf of the Bank of Poland the position is not so clear but here again if instructions were received by persons properly authorized by the Board of Directors of that Bank I should think that the Bank of Canada would be bound to act on them.

9. COMMENTS:

(a) Leaving aside the request from Dominions Office that we should delay the release of the Polish Gold, there would be no difficulty in informing the Polish Minister that the gold held by the Bank of Canada for the Polish Government is recognized as belonging to the present provisional Polish Government. Nor would there be any difficulty in telling him that the gold held for the Bank Polski is recognized as still belonging to the Bank Polski; it is open to the Bank Polski to deal direct with the Bank of Canada in a normal manner as between State Banks.

(b) It is necessary to obtain a decision as to whether we will meet the request of the United Kingdom Government to delay releasing the Polish Gold. I cannot at present think of any grounds on which we could justify to the Polish Government delaying the release of the gold for the political reasons which govern the policy of the U.K. Government in this matter.

(c) If we decide to refuse the request of the Dominions Office, the next question is whether to anticipate the request that the Bank Polski will undoubtedly make to the Bank of Canada to allow the gold to be exported from Canada, probably to Poland. It may be necessary to discuss this point with the Bank of Canada and with the Deputy Minister of Finance. It may well be that the legal obligations of the Bank of Canada to the Bank Polski merely extend to recognizing the Bank Polski as the owner of the gold and that there is no obligation to allow the gold to be exported from Canada on the order of the Bank Polski. However, I cannot see what advantage there can be to the Canadian Government in refusing to allow the Bank Polski to return the gold to Poland.

(d) I would suggest that you might discuss this matter with the Acting Under-Secretary in order to decide where we go from here. We can, of course, wait until we get a further note from the Polish Minister but I cannot see much advantage in that.

POLISH GOLD IN CANADA

1. The Legal Division has sent me the attached memorandum of July 26† so that I might attach my comments before sending it to you.

2. The Legal Division asks for political guidance on the question whether the bank should postpone payment in the light of the request made of us by the United Kingdom Government. Mr. Marble and Mr. Hopkins could not themselves see any reason why the bank should withhold payment at the request of the United Kingdom Government, there being no outstanding indebtedness owing from the Polish Government to Canada.

3. The request of the United Kingdom Government is contained in D.O. telegram No. 121 of July 11,† and in this telegram reference is made to D.O. circular D.652 of June 26† and circular D.297 of July 2.†

4. The comment of the Legal Division seems to be based upon the impression that the United Kingdom is withholding ratification of their financial agreement, which also provides for the release of Polish gold held in the Bank of England, until the Polish Government has paid its outstanding indebtedness to the United Kingdom. The telegrams, however, make it clear that the reason why the United Kingdom is withholding ratification is not this, but in order to put pressure on the Polish Government to carry out the obligations of free elections which the Polish Government undertook as the condition of recognition by the United Kingdom Government. The text of the United Kingdom note to the Poles on this subject is given in telegram D.297.

5. While, so far as I know, the Canadian recognition of the new Polish Government was not expressly connected with the undertakings of that government to hold free elections, the Canadian recognition was consequent upon Poland undertaking those obligations.

6. The specific request made by the United Kingdom Government is that it "will be of assistance if the Canadian Government would continue to delay the release of Polish gold in Canada".

7. My feeling is that we should accede to this request of the United Kingdom Government. No immediate action on our part is necessary since we still have to wait for a reply from the Poles to our note of June 24.† However, when this reply comes in, I think we ought to pursue delaying tactics as long as possible.

E. R[EID]

P.S. I attach copy of a memorandum which you prepared on July 9, 1945, on the subject of the form of our recognition of the Warsaw government. In this memorandum you point out that it is not correct to imply from the form of our recognition that the United Kingdom and United States recognitions had been conditional on the holding of free Polish elections whereas our recognition had been couched in broader terms.<sup>1</sup>

The amount involved is nearly $14 millions. We could use it as a counter in bargaining between the UK and Poland on their own financial relations, but I see no good political argument for our getting ahead of the U.S. Government (There may be special problems, however, re credits and supplies between U.S. and Poland, apart from the political reasons arising from the U.S. partnership in the Yalta pledge). Before we accede to or refuse a Polish request for release and export the matter should be considered by the S[ecretary] of S[tate] for Ex[ternal] Aff[airs]. Although Canada is not a party to the Yalta pledge, it was one of the reasons leading to our recognition of the provisional government.

No. 15

Ottawa, August 2, 1946

Excellency,

I have the honour to acknowledge your Notes of June 21st† and July 10th, 1946,† concerning the Polish art treasures transferred to Canada from Poland in July 1940.

2. Careful consideration has been given to this question in the light of the facts outlined in your Notes referred to above and of informal conversations between Dr. Bielski and officers of this Department. The position of the Government of Canada in this matter is set out below:

3. As a convenience to the Polish Legation, the Government of Canada agreed that the Polish art treasures which were brought to Canada in July 1940 should be deposited in the Records Storage Building at the Central Experimental Farm. At that time, although space was made available for the storage of the treasures, no responsibility was accepted by the Government of Canada for their safekeeping and, indeed, access to the treasures had [been] given only to Messrs. Zalewski and Polkowski, who had brought them to Canada.

4. From the original date of storage at the Central Experimental Farm until May 1946 the Government of Canada had no access to the Polish art treasures. In your Note under reference, however, you state that in the Spring of 1945 some of the treasures were removed from the Records Storage Building and delivered to the various points listed. This disposition of a portion of the Polish art treasures in Canada was not made at the instigation or suggestion of the Government of Canada, nor was the Department of External Affairs informed of the fact that the removals had taken place.

5. On May 22, 1946, instructions were issued by the Government of Canada for the placing of a new lock on the door of the room in the Records Storage Building where the remaining Polish art treasures were located. The key to this lock was placed in the possession of the Department of External Affairs and since that time this Department has not granted access to the room to any but government officials, nor has it permitted any of the contents to be removed.

6. As a further convenience to the Polish Legation in Canada, and without accepting responsibility in the matter, the Department of External Affairs undertook, in the third week of May, to communicate with the various companies and institutions where, according to Dr. Bielski, certain Polish art treasures had been stored. In reply to our enquiries, we were advised as follows:

(a) The Bank of Montreal confirmed that it was holding in safekeeping two locked steamer trunks which, according to Mr. Stanislaus Zalewski, were property belonging to the Polish State;

(b) The Monastery of the Redemptorist Fathers at Ste. Anne de Beaupré, Quebec, stated in their reply of May 31, 1946, that they were not holding in storage any "objet d'art de valeur historique appartenant à l'État polonais";

(c) The Monastery of the Precious Blood, 774 Echo Drive, Ottawa, advised on May 29th that they held no effects belonging to the Polish State, but they had stored some six or seven months ago some trunks containing the private possessions of certain Polish refugees. These trunks had recently been reclaimed by their owners;

(d) The Capital Storage Company of Ottawa wrote on May 28, 1946, to the effect that they had nothing in storage for the Polish Government but that they were holding personal effects for Mr. and Mrs. Roger Raczynski, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Raczynski, and Dr. S. Raczynski.

7. The Government of Canada sympathizes entirely with the desire of the Legation of the Republic of Poland to recover the art treasures belonging to the Government of Poland and is prepared to give possession, to the duly authorized representative of the Polish Legation, of any such articles now in storage at the Records Storage Building. The Government of Canada does not feel, however, that it can accept responsibility in assisting the Legation of the Republic of Poland to secure possession of treasures which may have been stored by private arrangement in other than government buildings. It is the view of the Canadian Government, moreover, that such art treasures as are now stored in the Records Storage Building should be removed by the Polish Legation at as early a date as may prove convenient.

8. The Canadian Government is prepared to permit the Legation of the Republic of Poland to continue to use the storage space already at its disposal in the Records Storage Building until satisfactory alternative arrangements can be made for the transfer of the treasures to other accommodation suitable for the purpose.

Accept etc.

RE: CREDIT TO POLAND

On Dr. Clark's instructions, I called the Polish Minister this morning and found he was out of town. Later Dr. Bielski, First Secretary at the Polish Legation, called me back to say the Minister was away, and asked if there was any message he could give him. I told him that Dr. Clark, before going away for some weeks, had asked me to inform the Polish Minister that the request of Poland for a credit had been taken up with Mr. Abbott, the Acting Minister of Finance, who had told Dr. Clark to inform the Poles that the Government would not be prepared to grant a credit to Poland at the present time. I went on to explain to him that the Canadian supply situation was so tight and the credit commitments already undertaken by the Government so large that they have not been willing to make any additional commitments as to credits in recent months. Dr. Bielski said that they understood the difficulty of the supply situation at the present time. He asked me whether I thought it would be any use to raise the matter again before the winter. I said that I saw no harm in their bringing it up again during the autumn if they so desired. I said that we were aware of the urgency and importance of Poland's need for credits. I told Dr. Bielski that Mr. Ilesley himself had been in Poland and Warsaw recently and had been very much interested and impressed with what he had seen there. Dr. Bielski said that they had noticed in the press accounts of Mr. Ilesley's visit to Poland, and that they were very glad he had been able to see at first-hand some of their problems and circumstances.

RELEASE OF BANK OF POLAND GOLD

The Bank of Canada has received a properly authenticated request from the Bank of Poland to release, for shipment to Poland, gold which the Bank of Canada has held for the Bank of Poland since early in the war. The amount involved is some $13,000,000.

I understand that the Polish instructions are completely in order and there are no legal grounds on which we can refuse.

On July 11th, 1946, the United Kingdom Government stated that "it would be of assistance if the Canadian Government would continue to delay release of Polish gold in Canada." The United Kingdom Government has been delaying release of similar Polish gold in London, chiefly as economic pressure to try to ensure satisfactory elections in Poland as laid down in the Yalta Agreement.

There is also some Polish gold in the United States. The State Department had been delaying its release for similar reasons. However, we understand that the Poles stated that they wished to use these funds for the Polish contribution to the World Bank, and the State Department told us in July that under these circumstances they might have to agree to release them. We have not been informed that the State Department has actually released this gold, but it has recently restored a substantial Export-Import Bank credit to Poland. While recognition of the Provisional Polish Government in fact resulted from the Yalta Agreement, Canada was not a party to this Agreement. Under the circumstances, and in view of the recent United States loan to Poland, there is probably no reason why we should put political difficulties in the way of the Bank of Poland claiming gold which is legally theirs. In any case, the amount involved is too small to affect Polish Government management of their elections.

Mr. Graham Towers is anxious to give the President of the Bank of Poland and the Polish Finance Minister a favourable reply before they leave Ottawa this afternoon.

To do this may cause some flurry in London and Washington, but under the circumstances we should, I think, tell Mr. Towers that we have no objections to his going ahead as he proposes. We would then inform London and Washington post facto.<sup>1</sup>

The Department of Finance agrees.<sup>2</sup>

SECRET. Your telegrams No. 1806 and No. 1807 of 17th October†, Polish gold.

Information contained in your telegrams has been communicated informally to the Foreign Office. Their preliminary view before consulting Treasury is that we had no alternative except to return the gold in view of the legitimate nature of the request and the precedent of the United States loan. I think, however, that they regret this necessity to return the gold arose, as they are obviously wedded firmly to the policy of concerting with the Americans in exerting the greatest possible pressure at the present time on the Poles.

Dear Mr. Pearson,

Mr. Garner told you in his letter of the 19th October† that the United Kingdom authorities were very anxious to reach an end of the present arrangements for providing relief to certain Poles in Canada through the operation of the Interim Treasury Committee for Polish Questions and hoped that it might be possible for the Canadian Government to agree to arrangements whereby support from the Committee for this purpose would no longer be required. The United Kingdom authorities were anxious to withdraw support from the Committee as from the end of 1946. As, however, it was understood that the Canadian authorities had not been able to reach final conclusions on this subject, I recently made the suggestion to London that it might be convenient if withdrawal of support from the Committee could be postponed for, say, a month until the 31st January.

I am now writing to let you know that the United Kingdom authorities agree that in the circumstances withdrawal of Interim Treasury Committee support should be postponed until the 31st January, 1947. They have, however, asked me to make it clear that they would feel unable to agree to any further extension beyond this date.

The United Kingdom authorities have also asked me to arrange for suitable notice to be given to the Polish representatives concerned here. I should be glad to arrange for consultation with your Department as to the terms in which this notice should be given.

Yours sincerely,

POLISH ART TREASURES

I asked Dr. Bielski of the Polish Legation to call on me on December 23rd with a view to discussing the question of the Polish Art Treasures. I reminded him of his request for information as to when a reply would be available to the Polish Minister's note and said that we were now in a position to send a reply. I added that I thought it would be useful if we could discuss the question informally before the reply was sent.

I told Dr. Bielski that we had made very little progress. I said that we had made inquiries concerning the present location of the art treasures and that we had asked people whom we thought might know. We had, however, in every case received a negative response. It was my opinion that these replies had been truthful ones. I said I thought that it was even probable that Mr. Polkowski did not have precise information where the treasures were located.

I said to Dr. Bielski that I thought we should consider informally what the next step should be. The Polish Legation might, if it wished, secure legal advice and then proceed to the courts. It could lay charges against persons in whose care Polish State property had been left, if there was evidence that these people had wrongfully disposed of the property. They could bring action for the recovery of material which they claimed belonged to the Polish State, if they could discover where the material was located. I suggested that if such legal action were taken and this Department were called upon to provide information to the courts, we would be prepared to state what our records showed. This was that Mr. Padoski, as Representative of the Polish Government, had brought to Canada in 1940 certain articles which he claimed were the property of the Polish State. These articles had subsequently been deposited in a government building. The articles had later been removed from the government building by the representatives of the Polish State who had deposited them there. The Canadian authorities had surrendered to the representatives of the new Polish Government any Polish property which remained in Government buildings.

I made it clear that the Polish Legation would have to take this action on the advice of its own legal counsel, and that the Department itself would not feel in any way obliged to bring legal action. I suggested that the Legation should consider very carefully with its legal adviser what the effect of the legal action would be.

I asked Dr. Bielski what motives he thought the Poles, who were now hiding these articles, had in doing so. He said that he thought it possible that certain individuals might be rewarded by being given particular items on which they could later realize funds. On the whole, however, he seemed to think the greatest danger lay in the possibility that harm would come to the art treasures through damage occasioned by improper storage. I then asked him what he would think of a proposal by which the articles would be restored to the Polish Legation on the understanding that they would be put on display in Canada for a period of years. I said that the Canadian public had some interest in the collection in view of recent publicity. It was possible, on the other hand, that the persons who now held the treasures rightly or wrongly, felt that conditions in Central Europe were uncertain and would be satisfied if they felt the treasures would be kept safe until such time as greater stability had returned to Europe. Under such arrangement, the National Gallery might be asked to take charge of the material in Canada for a period of time agreed upon. It might be possible to arrange for a small collection of Canadian paintings to be shown in the Gallery in Cracow from which these treasures had come.

Dr. Bielski responded to this suggestion with evident enthusiasm. He reminded me that the original note which the Polish Legation had addressed to us on this subject suggested that the Minister would like to put the material on display in Canada. He said that they would be glad to have the treasures stay here "for a long time". They would be pleased also if some reciprocal exhibition could be arranged.

I told Dr. Bielski that we should perhaps both think over this suggestion and that I would get in touch with him later. It was agreed that in the meantime we should not answer the Polish Minister's note on this subject.

Le bureau du Conseil privé au président, Trans-Canada Air LinesPrivy Council Office to President, Trans-Canada Air Lines

Ottawa, June 5, 1946

Dear Mr. Symington,

AIR AGREEMENT WITH PORTUGAL

You will recall that in Bermuda last December the U.K. representatives undertook to ascertain on our behalf whether the Portuguese government would be prepared to enter into an aviation agreement with us, and if so, what form of agreement would be most likely to be acceptable.

Since that time a Canadian Consul has been appointed in Lisbon and has apparently taken part in discussions at the British Embassy in Lisbon on this matter. Through him we have learned that the British Embassy has informed the Foreign Office in response to its direction on this matter that it would like further and clearer instructions as to the Canadian requirements before taking the matter up with the Portuguese government. You will note that the U.K. government itself has not passed this information on to us; it has been received through our representative, but presumably we will hear from the U.K. on this matter in the near future.

In view of the long delay in getting any action through the U.K., I would be inclined now to take the matter up through our own Consul who could continue to work in cooperation with the U.K. Embassy. I would be glad to have your views on this.

In addition it may perhaps be advisable to communicate some definite instructions or proposals. There would appear to be three courses which we might follow.

1. We could merely ask permission of Portugal to make use of the Azores or Lisbon in the event that TCA has to make a non-traffic stop there on occasions when the alternate southern route is used by TCA. This would not require any bilateral agreement and could be accomplished simply and rapidly by an exchange of notes.

2. We could go a step further and suggest that Canada and Portugal exchange the two freedoms. This too would be a relatively simple matter and would not require any lengthy bilateral agreement.

3. We could conclude a bilateral agreement exchanging the first four freedoms and perhaps including the formula which we propose to try out on Newfoundland and which leaves the door open for the carriage of fifth freedom traffic later, (i.e. some such phrase in relation to traffic rights as, "and may also carry such additional traffic as may be requested by the government of Portugal").

The Canadian Consul suggests that if we expect any traffic requirements in Portugal in future years it would be preferable to conclude an agreement now rather than waiting; this argument is based on the apparent readiness of Portugal to enter into almost any bilateral aviation agreement at present.

My own preference at the moment would be to prepare a draft bilateral agreement based on the four freedoms and to send it to our Consul as the sort of thing we would like to have. Before speaking to Mr. Howe on this matter, however, I would like to have your comments.

Sincerely yours,

DESPATCH 55

Ottawa, July 11, 1946

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your despatch No. 41 of May 20th† concerning the proposed bilateral civil aviation agreement between Canada and Portugal.

The question of concluding such an agreement was originally brought up at the Bermuda Conference in December 1945, at which time the United Kingdom representatives at this Conference undertook to ascertain on our behalf whether the Portuguese Government would be prepared to enter into an agreement with us and, if so, in what form the agreement would be likely to be acceptable. We now consider that it would be advisable for you to proceed with this matter in co-operation with the United Kingdom Embassy officials in Lisbon.

Accordingly we are forwarding two copies of a draft of a proposed agreement† which represents a model of what we would like to have and which can be used as a basis on which to proceed with discussions with the Portuguese authorities. This draft provides for the exchange of the first four Freedoms and is based on the standard Chicago formula as modified by our Bermuda agreement with the United Kingdom. You will note, however, that we have in the Annex of this draft agreement specified the grant of Freedoms

1 and 2 in a separate clause to that granting Freedoms 3 and 4. This has been done since Portugal is not at present a party to the Transit Agreement (Two Freedoms).

Will you therefore please take up in co-operation with the United Kingdom Embassy the question of this agreement with the Portuguese authorities. I may add that we are also making available a copy of the draft agreement to the United Kingdom authorities as they have been handling the matter for us up to the present.

I am etc.

CIVIL AVIATION AGREEMENT WITH PORTUGAL

We have now reached general agreement with Portugal on all major points and if you approve, instructions would be forwarded to the Canadian Consul General in Lisbon to complete the negotiations and sign the agreement on our behalf.<sup>1</sup>

The main points of the agreement are as follows:

1. Exchange of third and fourth freedom rights to be exercised by Portugal at Montreal and to be exercised by Canada at the Azores and/or Lisbon.

2. The Canadian air service to make a compulsory stop at Lisbon on any flights crossing the mainland of Portugal; this is no handicap to Canada since our flights will run directly from the Azores to the United Kingdom and will not cross the Portuguese mainland.

3. No clauses in the Annex in respect of frequencies, capacity or rates, but a general clause stating that if the Portuguese government should decide to operate a service, the Annex may be amended at the request of either party by the insertion of clauses covering frequencies and rates along the

Sir,

I refer to my telegram No. 222 of October 21st and my despatch No. 1200 of October 17th on the subject of our difficulties with the U.S.S.R. over terms of credit, and over contracts for industrial equipment which was to have been provided under Mutual Aid but which the U.S.S.R. undertook to pay for if delivery took place after the cessation of Mutual Aid.

Our early difficulties arose because the U.S.S.R. refused to pay the full contract price of approximately $25,000,000 for the industrial equipment delivered, or to be delivered, after the cessation of Mutual Aid. This difficulty was finally overcome through an arrangement whereunder we sold to the U.S.S.R. at a substantial reduction other equipment, chiefly flat cars, requested as Mutual Aid prior to the end of the war for which equipment the U.S.S.R. had no obligation to pay. This equipment cost $7,500,000 and was sold for $2,000,000. Considering the two transactions—one for industrial equipment and the other for flat cars—as one, the result was that the U.S.S.R. agreed to pay approximately $27,000,000 for goods which cost the Canadian Government about $32,500,000. The Russians considered that the reduction applied on industrial equipment. We applied the reduction against the flat cars, which was reasonable since the cars had been made to U.S.S.R. specifications and were only of scrap value to us. The Russians, in addition, agreed that they would forego any benefits that might be obtained through the re-negotiation of the contracts for industrial equipment. Such benefits, probably substantial, will accrue to the Canadian Government.

We considered the settlement a generous one and made it in the hope that it would ease our other difficulties. Unfortunately, we have been unable to reach agreement with the U.S.S.R. on the terms of the credit which they wish to receive and out of which they would pay for the industrial equipment. The U.S.S.R. authorities continue to seek a lower interest rate than that we have granted all other countries receiving export credit. Cabinet has confirmed the position of the Mutual Aid Board that we will not extend better terms to the U.S.S.R. than to others.

The Mutual Aid Board found itself in an extremely awkward position. The industrial equipment was being produced for U.S.S.R. account and to U.S.S.R. specifications but the customer was neither willing to pay cash nor would agree on terms of the credit to be extended.

The Board accordingly advised the U.S.S.R. that in the absence of definite arrangements for payment by February 1st the Board would consider arrangements in respect of the equipment as ended, would issue instructions to cease production to U.S.S.R. specifications and arrange for such modifications in the equipment as would make the equipment saleable to other purchasers. I attach a copy of the letter of January 19th from the Secretary of the Board to the Commercial Counsellor of the U.S.S.R. Embassy. The U.S.S.R. authorities have not yet replied.

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, January 19, 1946

Dear Mr. Krotov,

I have been instructed by the Mutual Aid Board to write you concerning the decision taken by the Board at its meeting on January 17, 1946 with regard to the disposition of the industrial equipment ordered by your government, in the light of the negotiations on the proposed credit arrangements between the government of the U.S.S.R. and the government of Canada.

In the absence of definite arrangements for payment by your government for the industrial equipment, the Board is faced with serious problems: manufacturers are pressing for payment and are requesting, on the most urgent basis, the removal from their plants of equipment already completed. Storage facilities will have to be arranged forthwith, and the costs of handling and storing the equipment represent a not inconsiderable sum of money.

The Appropriation from which the funds have been made available to pay for the production of this equipment will lapse at the end of the current fiscal year, and the Board does not consider that it would be possible to ask Parliament for further funds without making clear the difficulties encountered in reaching an agreement with your government on the payment for this equipment. The Board could not undertake to recommend such a further appropriation to Parliament if the arrangements with your government continue on the present indefinite basis.

In view of this position in which it is placed, the Board has felt obliged to inform you that unless your government can agree, by February 1, 1946, to pay for this equipment, and the additional supplies specified in your letter to Mr. Karl C. Fraser of November 29, 1945, either in cash or on terms of credit which have been offered to your government by the Minister of Finance, the Board will consider that our mutual arrangements in respect of this equipment have ended, and will issue instructions to cease production of the industrial equipment to your specifications and to arrange for such modifications in the equipment as will make it saleable to other purchasers.

I am therefore instructed to inform you that in the absence of notification by February 1, 1946, of acceptance by your government of one of the alternative proposals already offered to you, the Board will regretfully be obliged to make new arrangements along the lines indicated above.

Yours very truly,

Dear Mr. Krotov,

The Mutual Aid Board, at its meeting of February 6th, again considered the question of the disposal of the industrial equipment and supplies referred to in my letter to you of January 19th.

Since no reply has been received by the Mutual Aid Board to the proposals set forth in the abovementioned letter, the Board has instructed the Director of Administration to arrange for the disposal of this material, making such changes in specifications as may be necessary.

The Board regrets the necessity of having to take this action and wishes you to be informed of its decision in this regard.

Communiqué à la presse du ministère des Affaires extérieures

Press Release of Department of External Affairs

No. 17

Ottawa, February 15, 1946

The Prime Minister, Mr. Mackenzie King, made the following statement this afternoon:

Information of undoubted authenticity has reached the Canadian Government which establishes that there have been disclosures of secret and confidential information to unauthorized persons, including some members of the staff of a foreign mission in Ottawa. In order to make possible the full investigation which the seriousness of this information demands, the Government has appointed Mr. Justice Taschereau and Mr. Justice Kellock of the Supreme Court of Canada to act as Royal Commissioners to hear evidence and to present a report which will be made public. The Commissioners have appointed as their Counsel Mr. E. K. Williams, K.C., of Winnipeg, Mr. Gérald Fauteux, K.C., of Montreal, and Mr. D. W. Mundell of the Department of Justice; the Commission has already commenced its investigation, which is proceeding in camera.

Upon the application of Counsel, and having regard to the serious nature of the evidence already adduced before the Commission, the Commissioners recommended Counsel to apply to the Minister of Justice for orders for the interrogation and detention for that purpose of a number of persons known or suspected to be implicated. This action has been taken today. The persons involved include some now employed or who have been employed in a number of Departments and agencies of the Government.

It is the intention of the Government that, after the report of the Royal Commission has been received, prosecution will be instituted in cases in which the evidence warrants it. It would not be proper at this stage to make a more complete statement or, in particular, to make public the names of those concerned. Some of them appear to have been far more deeply and consciously involved than others. Some will probably be found to be more or less innocent instruments in furthering activities much more serious than they may have imagined. Obviously, the whole matter should be treated with caution and reserve, pending the time when it will be possible to issue a fuller statement. Until the investigation by the Royal Commissioners has been completed the case remains sub judice.

IMMEDIATE. TOP SECRET. The Prime Minister asked Soviet Chargé d'Affaires to come and see him this afternoon and read to him statement the text of which is contained in my telegram No. 17† of today. He made it clear to Mr. Belokhovostikov that the foreign mission referred to in the statement was the Soviet Embassy in Ottawa, though this fact was not for the present being made public. He said that the situation to which his statement made reference had come to him and to his colleagues as a very disagreeable shock.

Mr. Belokhovostikov, who had been accompanied at the interview by Mr. Vitali Pavlov, Second Secretary of the Embassy, said that the Prime Minister's statement came as a very great surprise to him and that he would at once inform his Government of what the Prime Minister had told him.

Moscow, February 21, 1946

My immediately preceding telegram.† Following is text of statement handed over to me by Mr. Lozovski<sup>1</sup> tonight, Begins:

On February 15th this year the Canadian Government published a statement about the delivery in Canada of secret information to persons not having the right of access to this information, including certain members of the staff of a foreign Mission in Ottawa. On handing this statement to the Soviet Chargé d'Affaires, N. D. Belokhovostikov, the Prime Minister, Mr. King, stated that the reference in the Canadian Government's statement to certain members of the staff of a foreign Mission referred to members of the staff of the Soviet Embassy in Ottawa.

In this connection, after appropriate investigation, the Soviet Government consider it necessary to make the following statement:

Soviet organizations have become aware that in the latter periods of the war certain members of staff of the Soviet Military Attaché in Canada received, from Canadian nationals with whom they were acquainted, certain information of a secret character which did not, however, present great interest for the Soviet organizations. It has transpired that this information referred to technical data of which Soviet organizations had no need in view of more advanced technical attainment in the U.S.S.R.; the information in question could be found in published works on radio location etc., and also in the well known brochure of the American J. D. Smyth, "Atomic Energy".

It would, therefore, be ridiculous to affirm that delivery of insignificant secret data of this kind could create any threat to the security of Canada.

None the less, as soon as the Soviet Government became aware that the above-mentioned acts of certain members of the staff of the Military Attaché in Canada, the Soviet Military Attaché, in view of inadmissibility of acts of members of his staff in question, was recalled from Canada. On the other hand, it must also be borne in mind that the Soviet Ambassador and other members of the staff of the Soviet Embassy in Canada had no connection with this.

At the same time the Soviet Government finds it necessary to draw attention to the unbridled anti-Soviet campaign which began in the Canadian press and on the Canadian radio simultaneously with the publication of the Canadian Government's statement. In spite of complete lack of significance and importance of circumstances which gave rise to the Canadian Government's statement of February 15th, this anti-Soviet campaign is being supported by many Canadian organizations, and at the same time the position taken up by Canadian Government is directly aimed at encouragement of this anti-Soviet press and radio campaign which is incompatible with normal relations between the two countries.

In this connection, surprise is occasioned by the unusual fact that the Canadian Government published its statement on February 15th instead of, as is customary between countries in normal relations, previously asking for explanation from the Soviet Government. Inasmuch as the Canadian Government did not consider it necessary to approach the Soviet Government for a previous explanation, it must be admitted that the Canadian Government herein was pursuing some other ends having no relation to the security interests of Canada.

It must be admitted that the above-mentioned unbridled anti-Soviet campaign formed part of the Canadian Government's plan aimed at causing the Soviet Union political harm.

It cannot be considered a mere chance that Mr. King's statement was made to coincide with the ending of the session of the Assembly of the United Nations where Soviet delegate spoke in defence of principle of democracy and independence of small countries. Evidently Mr. King's statement and the anti-Soviet campaign in Canada which has been developed in connection with it are something in the nature of an answer to the unpleasantness caused to Mr. King's friends by the Soviet delegate at the session of the Assembly. Ends.

DESPATCH 511

Washington, March 11, 1946

Sir,

I am attaching herewith a report† from the Press Analysis Section on the press reaction in this country to Mr. Churchill's Missouri speech on March 5th. I would like to add one or two observations of my own to this report.

2. The popular and press reaction to Mr. Churchill's Westminster College speech is about what I expected, mixed, but with the preponderance of opinion critical. The criticism is, however, less violent than one might have expected, mainly for two reasons: (1) Mr. Churchill's personal prestige and popularity remain extraordinarily high in this country, and count heavily in his favour in respect of anything he may say. (2) The growing anti-Russian feeling in the country found satisfaction in his criticism of the Soviets and therefore less dissatisfaction in the accompanying plea for an Anglo-American alliance than would otherwise have been the case. The more vocal and prejudiced anti-British elements in this country (always excepting the Communists and their "fellow travellers") are also anti-Russian. Therefore, the vehement disapproval such elements would normally show towards Mr. Churchill's proposal for an Anglo-Saxon alliance has been modified in this case by their approval of the strong line he adopted against Russia. In their reaction to Mr. Churchill's speech, these elements find it difficult to combine their favourite pastimes of "Redbaiting" and "Lion tail twisting".

3. The main criticism of the Anglo-American alliance provisions of the Fulton speech come from three sources:

(a) Those who, like Mr. Walter Lippman, feel that an alliance with the United Kingdom and the Dominions is one thing; an alliance with the British Empire quite another. This is the traditional and deeply rooted fear of being linked with "Imperialism"; a fear which is increased at this time as the British Imperial system faces a post-war upsurge of native nationalism which may be expected to express itself violently. Underwriting the United Kingdom is one thing; underwriting Malay, Burma and Hong Kong something else, though the two can hardly be separated. This is perplexing to the "Lippman" school.

(b) There are also those who think that Mr. Churchill's plea is a measure, not of United States' needs, but of Britain's desperation; that it is just another case of Great Britain looking for someone else to pull her chestnuts out of the fire. This feeling, though strong, is being weakened, however, as Americans begin to realize the possible value of British help in the face of a powerful, aggressive Russia. Those who feel this way look upon the United Kingdom as a necessary outpost for the defence of the United States.

(c) Finally, Mr. Churchill's proposals have been vigorously attacked by those who see in a strong and universal—or as nearly universal as possible—United Nations Organization the only hope for peace. They feel, and with some reason, that an Anglo-American military alliance might weaken and eventually destroy the United Nations Organization. Mr. Churchill, of course, attempted to combat these fears by his "In My Father's House are Many Mansions" argument. But he has not been successful. He might have been more successful if he had broadened the basis of his "fraternal association" proposals to include all peace-loving states, who might wish to strengthen their defence relationships within the United Nations Organization. From this point of view, and in my opinion from others, also, it would have been better if Mr. Churchill had made a plea for strengthening the United Nations Organization and for the alteration of the Charter, if necessary, to make such strengthening possible. He then would have been on much stronger ground in arguing that, if one state, or more than one, blocked such a strengthening, a special relationship between the others would be justified. However, it is pretty clear that Mr. Churchill did not have this in mind in his speech. He was thinking of an intimate military association of the English-speaking people alone.

4. In the draft of the speech which I read, there was a specific reference to the advisability of continuing the Combined Chiefs of Staff. I mentioned at the time to Lord Halifax that I thought this would be unwelcome even to those United States and British service authorities who were hoping most for such a continuance, but thought that the best chance of bringing it about was not to call attention to the matter, but to let the wartime arrangements quietly go on. Lord Halifax agreed and the sentence in question was later amended. However, as amended, it was clear enough to what it referred; clear enough already to cause a discussion which may prejudice these arrangements by bringing them into the open. The attached article† by Arthur Krock in the New York Times is interesting in this connection.

5. You may also have noticed that a question was asked President Truman at last Thursday's Press Conference on this point. Mr. Truman explained that the Combined Chiefs of Staff were still functioning because peace had not yet been formally made, but that this situation would not, he hoped, last much longer. This part of Mr. Churchill's remarks, therefore, may have hindered rather than helped the cause he hoped to promote; the closest possible association of the armed services of the two countries.

6. Mr. Churchill's speech, following that of Senator Vandenberg and Mr. Byrnes has, of course, helped to focus attention in this country on Russian-American relations; not that help was needed in view of the development of Russian policy itself, in the Balkans, Iran and Manchuria.

7. There is no doubt that feeling in the United States is hardening against the Soviet Union. There has been a deterioration in this respect that is depressing if not dangerous. The frankness of comment on Soviet policy that one encounters in official and congressional circles is alarming, even after allowances are made for the usual tendency here towards exaggeration and verbal irresponsibility. Even in quarters normally friendly to Russia, and aware of the catastrophic consequences of a break, there is a disposition to despair of the possibility of steady and friendly relations with Moscow either within or without the United Nations Organization. The stronger line now being taken by the State Department is almost universally approved. If Mr. Byrnes goes back on it, he will be one of the most unpopular men in the country and will have to go.

8. There are, however, pitfalls ahead of this "strong" policy. One is the personality and abilities of the Secretary of State. He is, I think, by nature a compromiser; I was almost going to say, a waverer. He is also, I think, less popular both in Congress and at the White House than when he took office; nor has he made any considerable impression on his own Department as the man best equipped to stand up to Molotov and Vyshinsky.

9. A more important difficulty is the instability and undiscipline of public opinion itself; a tendency to cheer vigorous speech but veer away from its consequences. This is a factor which makes any firm, fixed policy difficult. I cannot help but feel that it is one on which the Russians are relying greatly in their obvious determination to exploit the present post-war international situation in a way most favourable to themselves.

10. They listen to Mr. Byrnes in Moscow, but they also read of strikes and strife and discord. More important, they see United States' armed strength shrinking to something approaching pre-war weakness. They may, therefore, feel that while United States policy is getting firmer, the United States itself is getting weaker. The Soviet leaders are not, I gather, likely to be impressed so much by an increase in the strength of speech as by the diminishing size of the stick.

11. The danger in all this lies in the temptation it provides for Moscow to push ahead regardless of diplomatic consequences.

12. It may well be that Soviet policy is fundamentally defensive; an effort to exploit a fluid post-war situation for all it is worth in the interest of their own domestic security; of squeezing the last ounce of advantage out of their own relatively strong position. The Soviet authorities may feel that they can now take with impunity steps which would provoke a war if made ten years from now when an international pattern has been re-established. They expect to encounter diplomatic resistance and incur resentment; but nothing more, unless they go beyond a line which has not yet been fixed and the boundaries of which they hope themselves to be largely instrumental in determining. Once determined, however, they will, as realists, not seek to go beyond it. The risk would be too great.

13. If this is, in fact, the motive of Russian policy, that policy becomes understandable. Even the ill-will which it arouses outside Russia can be used by the Russian rulers to strengthen their position at home. They can and do complain of that ill-will as unwarranted and unfair and a proof of the implacable hostility of the capitalist powers towards the workers' and peasants' state; necessitating the maintenance of a huge army, and justifying the sacrifices which this entails.

14. There is, in my mind, only one effective reply to this Russian policy. A big Three Conference should be held where all the cards will be placed on the table; where all the issues will be faced and a genuine effort made to resolve them. No such conference has yet been held; and it is long overdue. Potsdam and Moscow were hasty, limited, almost half-hearted attempts, compared with what is really required. Such a conference might have to remain in session for months, but should be prepared to do so. The Foreign Ministers must be willing to take whatever time and make whatever efforts are required to clear away suspicions and differences and to bring about a definite understanding of each other's desires and designs.

15. If no real success is achieved at such a conference, then the United States and the United Kingdom should convert the United Nations into a really effective agent to preserve the peace and prevent aggression. This means revising it radically. If the Russians veto such a revision, agreed on by others, a new organization must be created which, as the guardian of the peace for all nations, and not merely the English speaking ones, can function without the Russians and, as a last resort, against them.

16. All this is far removed from the more limited, but, I think, far less effective proposals of Mr. Churchill for an English-speaking association. I am convinced, however, that this broader basis for a solution of our present difficulties would have a far better chance of acceptance in this country, and would provide a far stronger foundation for an effective organization of peace.

I have etc.

DESPATCH 110

Moscow, March 21, 1946

SECRET

Sir,

I have the honour to report that I returned to Moscow from London on March 6th, exactly three years to the day since I arrived first in Kuibyshev to assume the representation of Canadian interests in the Soviet Union. In spite of all the ups and downs in intra-allied relations during those three years, I have never known a time when relations between the major allies were so strained or the prospects of cooperation with the Soviet Union so depressing. The two weeks since I returned have witnessed the crisis over the failure to withdraw the Soviet forces from Iran by the treaty date, March 2nd; the mutual recriminations over Bulgaria; United States and United Kingdom protests about the removal of industrial equipment from Manchuria and the stir over Mr. Churchill's speech at Fulton, Missouri.

2. From all this the present pattern has become clear. The Soviet Union apparently has decided to go its own way. Still distrustful and suspicious of the intentions of the western world, the Soviet leaders believe that they can gain advantages for themselves out of the present disunity of the different countries composing the western world. Their main object of attack at the moment is the British Commonwealth of Nations. Like his predecessors, Mussolini and Hitler, Stalin's dictator mentality leads him to mistake the loose ties that bind the British Commonwealth to be an inherent weakness. The legitimate strivings of coloured peoples to free themselves from white domination are thought by the Kremlin to foretell the doom of British Imperialism. I even have evidence that the independent stand taken by Australia in the deliberations of the United Nations is interpreted as a sign that the British Commonwealth is disintegrating.

3. In concerting the attack on the British Commonwealth of Nations the Soviet Government are taking care not to provoke unnecessarily the hostility of the United States. Thus the attack is directed mainly at the colonial policy of the United Kingdom because on this United States opinion has the most misgivings and sympathy for the United Kingdom in that country is least likely to be aroused over Soviet attacks aimed at this weak point in the British armour. While resisting United States diplomatic offences over Bulgaria and Manchuria the Soviet Government are careful not to provoke United States opinion in respect of areas where the sympathy of that country is responsive e.g., Manchuria. Thus in the last few days we find in preparation for the show-down over Iran Soviet troops being withdrawn from Manchuria and from Bornholm and a definite bid for United States sympathy in the official replies to Mr. Churchill's Fulton speech.

4. It is difficult for the outsider to appreciate the profound impression which Mr. Churchill's speech has had on the peoples of the Soviet Union. Longing as they do for peace they see in this speech the confirmation of what their own leaders have been telling them about the machinations of reactionaries in capitalist countries to foment war against the Soviet Union. The Soviet press, after waiting for some days, did Mr. Churchill the rare compliment of printing his speech in full, although interspersed with comment designed to stress the anti-Soviet character of his remarks. The great mass of the Soviet peoples have only the vaguest idea of what is the present position occupied by Mr. Churchill—to them he is a leader of reactionary Anglo-Saxon capitalism.

5. The reaction by the Soviet leaders to Mr. Churchill's speech was instinctive. What they fear more than anything else is the end of disunity among the countries of the western world on which they see such a good opportunity to capitalise for their own advantage. Besides they genuinely fear that co-operation between the countries of the western world might under a rightist reaction develop into a crusade against the Soviet Union. Hence their violent opposition to the proposals for "a western bloc". Their fears of a combination of western European countries are small, however, compared with their fears of an Anglo-American combination.

6. The Soviet leaders do not particularly dread the power at present wielded by the United Kingdom. While they realize it may be sufficient to check their expansion into certain regions, such as the eastern Mediterranean, they do not look upon it as being likely by itself to threaten them. But they have a most healthy respect for the power of the United States, when the industries and manpower of that country are mobilized for war purposes. They have been delighted to see the rapid demobilisation of the United States military power under pressure from public opinion in that country. They are anxious to keep it that way. Hence we find Academician E. Tarle, in his article on Mr. Churchill's Fulton speech, reported to you in paragraphs 5 to 8 of my despatch No. 101 of March 14th, 1946,† stressing the long tradition of friendship between Russia and the United States. He contrasted this with the long record of Anglo-American bickerings. He unearthed again the refusal of Alexander II to join England and France in their support of the South against the North in the American Civil War.

7. Again the selection of Iran as the main object of Soviet aggression at the moment is consistent with the efforts to attack British interests without disturbing overmuch United States susceptibilities. In this connection I may quote again paragraph 36 of my despatch No. 437 of October 29th, 1945, which read as follows:

The one exception I see to this abstention from territorial expansion in the near future is the possibility of Soviet encroaching on the territorial integrity of Iran in response to the old Russian longing for an outlet on warm water combined with the new longing for oil. A foothold on the Persian Gulf would give Russia that longed for outlet to the open seas which even the Baltic or the Mediterranean cannot provide because their exits are controlled by other powers. Any Soviet moves in Iran would be sure to meet with resolute resistance from their British ally and the determining factor would be the extent to which the United States would back British policy in this remote part of the world.

8. Seldom has Litvinov's famous saying: "Peace is indivisible," been more applicable than it is to the present situation in Iran. The Soviet government have chosen Iran as the testing point of Anglo-American solidarity because they believe it is an area where they can attack British interests without the United States doing much beyond a bluster of diplomatic notes. If they can get away with it in Iran they can then proceed to treat with Afghanistan, another area remote from the United States and unlikely to concern seriously the people of that country. Only after Anglo-American lack of a common policy and inability to act decisively has been demonstrated in the case of these remote areas, are the Soviet Government likely to test possible reactions to territorial encroachments on more delicate regions, such as Turkey and the Middle East generally. It is just because, as Mr. Jack Hickerson of the State Department told General Pope at San Francisco: "The average American does not know where the Persian Gulf is" (see paragraph 18 of my despatch No. 368 of September 25th, 1945), that the Soviet government have selected Iran as their first test of Anglo-American solidarity.

9. It seems as if Soviet intrigues in Iran have proceeded further than and in a manner contrary to the wishes of the Soviet Government. The date for the withdrawal of the allied forces, March 2nd, came around at a time when the Soviet government were engaged in active negotiations at Moscow with the Iranian Prime Minister, Qavam-es-Sultaneh. No doubt, they felt that the withdrawal of their troops would lessen the chances of Qavam-es-Sultaneh agreeing to their demands. In any case they could not leave to their fate those whom they had set up as the government of Iranian Azerbaijan. Probably they never expected that the Iranian Prime Minister, whom outsiders regarded as a pliable tool of the Soviet Government, would prove to be so intransigent in resisting their demands. For this we have to thank the existence of the Security Council. The Iranians knew their case would be overwhelmingly strong when the question next came before the Security Council, since the Soviet Government had placed themselves so definitely in the wrong by a flagrant breach of a solemn treaty obligation. The future will depend upon the degree of firmness shown by the United States representative on the Security Council. If, as a result of the Council's decision, the Soviet Union withdraws its troops from Iran, history will record one more example of the politically-bankrupt Persian regime being preserved through the rivalries of the great powers, but a definite check will be brought to Soviet expansion and Anglo-Saxon hegemony over the world outside of the Soviet sphere will have been restored.

10. It is this Anglo-Saxon hegemony that is so essential to the maintenance of peace and security. Mr. Churchill was on the right track when he spoke in this vein at Fulton, Missouri, but I doubt the wisdom of the time and place chosen for this trial balloon. The fraternal association of the Anglo-Saxon peoples will come about rapidly and inexorably through the pressure of events, with or without the speeches of elder statesmen. This presupposes a reorientation of British thinking of which Mr. Churchill has shown himself incapable. The times call for a United Kingdom Prime Minister who is willing to preside over the at least partial liquidation of the British Empire. India must be set free, the Greek and Egyptian questions solved, the vexed problem of Palestine delegated to international trusteeship, the United States given bases in the British West Indies and Hong Kong perhaps restored to Chinese sovereignty. The principles underlying the trusteeship chapters of the United Nations Charter must be applied unequivocally. All this is necessary not only to bring British policy in tune with United States political philosophy but also to accord recognition of the legitimacy of the strivings of coloured peoples for racial equality and for freedom from white domination. There must be a realisation of the indisputable truth that if we are faithful to our convictions the hegemony of the Anglo-Saxons involves more obligations than privileges. We must recognise that for the good of mankind we have been called to assume that task because practically we alone among races have been able to evolve political systems that are responsive to the will of the peoples.

11. The events of the past weeks have driven home the truth that only political systems responsive to the will of the peoples can remove the threat of wars of aggression. The people of no country, if left to themselves, want to wage aggressive war. This applies, I am sure, to the great and lovable Russian people. I am also still convinced that the Soviet Government are anxious to avoid war, that they desire above all else a long period of peace in which to repair their shattered economy and strengthen it still further for a possible future trial of strength and that they are no longer interested in spreading communism for its own sake. But because the Soviet Government is run by a handful of men and is dominated by a strong personality with absolute dictatorial power, without having to pay regard to the will of the people, they cannot refrain from following the dictates of personal ambition which lead them to seek the exploitation of the advantages to be gained from temporary situations.

12. This interpretation of Soviet policy as opportunist is at variance with that expressed by those who hold that the Soviet Government are working to a definite plan and know just what they want. The impression of a clear-cut programme is given by reason of the fact that unlike western policy there is no need for Soviet policy to be exposed to public debate. But apart from the overall programme of doing everything possible to strengthen the position of the Soviet Union, I believe that the day-to-day manifestations of Soviet policy are nothing more than revelations of the intuitions of Generalissimo Stalin and of his beliefs of the extent to which he can go in pushing Soviet interests without incurring undue risks.

13. To a dictator with the upbringing of Stalin the disunity of his western allies and the vagaries of their policies are circumstances that he just has to exploit. It is known that Stalin spoke scornfully to his associates of the late President Roosevelt's concern over American lives which led first to postponing the opening of the second front and secondly to paying a high price for Soviet participation in the war against Japan. Stalin must often have chuckled to himself over the ease with which he secured the tremendous concessions to his point of view at the Teheran, Yalta and Potsdam Conferences. In fact the price paid to keep him fighting to the last Russian must have convinced him that an equally high price will be paid to keep his remaining Russians at peace. He must contrast the debate over whether or not to divulge the secret of the atomic bomb with the manner in which he would have exploited this advantage if the position had been reversed. He can only interpret as a sign of weakness the feverish efforts of the United States Government to satisfy the demands of the American people for the return home of their sons and husbands. In the centre of this picture he sees, as Mussolini and Hitler once thought they saw, the imminent breakup of the British Empire. The pickings seem too easy for him not at least to have a try at helping himself.

14. It was, I believe, through this process of thought that the Soviet Government have bungled into the situation that has arisen in Iran. I do not think they ever intended deliberately to provoke a serious conflict with their allies over that ancient country. They drew out of the hat, so to speak, the charges against Great Britain over Greece and Indonesia and brought them before the Security Council as a means of distracting attention from Iran. I believe that this action was spontaneous and not according to any long thought-out plan. Having embarked on this course they have felt themselves committed to a general frontal attack on British interests everywhere. They have been encouraged to continue the attack by the success with which it has been attended in the shape of anti-British manifestations in the countries of the Middle East. They know what they want, but they do not know the best means of getting it. They are improvising, therefore, to meet the day-to-day situations as they arise.

15. To this irresponsible opportunism there is only one possible rejoinder. Not that policy of toughness which in the minds of its advocates means treating the Soviet Union as an inferior or as a pariah, but a policy of firmness based on a coalescing of American and British policies on a high moral plane. This high moral plane should be intimately associated with the purposes and principles enunciated in the Charter of the United Nations. There should be no more compromising with these principles for the sake of brief vodka honeymoons in Moscow.

16. I am sending a copy of this despatch to the High Commissioner for Canada in London.

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, March 23, 1946

Dear Mike [Pearson],

I read with a great deal of interest your despatch No. 511 of March 11th in which, starting from the reception in the United States of Churchill's Fulton speech, you go on to reflect on the situation created by the uncertainty and aggressiveness of Soviet policy. I found myself in agreement with everything you said until I reached the last few paragraphs in which you argue that the only effective reply is a Big Three Conference at which all the cards would be placed on the table and all the issues faced. I think that in fact I do agree that such a conference may prove essential but I cannot convince myself that it would have a real chance of success.

Perhaps the metaphor about putting the cards on the table is misleading. It implies that the issues between the great powers can be clearly defined; and that, by arranging the pack so that each of them gets a hand satisfactory to itself and to the other two, the game would continue in amity in accordance with the book of rules.

The trouble is that in the sort of game that is now being played each of the great powers can, if it wishes, manufacture new cards, add new suits and decide for itself what are trumps. That is what the Russians have been doing with vigour during the last few months, and the others are forced, willingly or not, to disregard the rules or to invent new ones. I cannot conceive a conference really facing the issues honestly at present because the issues are not clearly enough defined and because, like most international problems, really serious issues cannot be solved but only changed in form and urgency. Such a conference would, I think, at the best end merely in the application to the world as a whole of the old Hapsburg motto of "divide et impera". It would create a balance of power which would have less stability than the balances achieved during the 19th Century.

I am, therefore, inclined to argue that there is an essential condition requisite to success in establishing some sort of respectable working relationships between the great powers, and that is the lifting of what Churchill called "the steel curtain" that surrounds the Soviet Union, its client states and occupied territories. In short what is required is a modification, and a very substantial one, of the domestic regime within Russia. Without such a modification, no matter what agreement might be reached between the heads of governments or the Foreign Ministers, we shall never be able to rest easily for long. The motives of the masters of Russia may be security, Imperialism, world revolution or desire to perpetuate their own dictatorship. They are probably a mixture of all these elements. The point is that they are not stated and that we do not and cannot believe their own explanations of Soviet policy. I doubt that we shall ever be able to believe them as long as profound secrecy surrounds the process whereby that policy is framed.

I, therefore, feel that if a Big Three Conference were now to be summoned on the lines that you suggest, its main result would be to show the impossibility of reaching a lasting meeting of minds. This may well be an essential condition to developing a satisfactory public opinion in the western world and particularly in the United States on the need for more effective international arrangements.

Yours sincerely,

H. H. WRONG

SECRET AND PERSONAL

Moscow, April 15, 1946

Dear Mr. Robertson,

I thank you for your secret and personal letter of March 26th, 1946,† in which you advise that there is a possibility, although probably a remote one, that the Prime Minister will wish to visit Moscow in the course of this summer, while he is in Europe for the purpose of attending the Peace Conference at Paris.

As you will recall I wrote to you last October, when you were with the Prime Minister in London, and I indicated then what a good thing I thought it would be if the Prime Minister could find the time to pay a brief visit to Moscow. In spite of the great personal pleasure it would give me, I cannot now advise the Prime Minister to come here, at least not until after some months have elapsed since he was publicly abused in the Soviet press for disclosing the information leakages in Canada. This is referred to now by Russians as "the King affair".

The Soviet Government and the Soviet public would regard a visit by the Prime Minister to Moscow so soon after the events of the past two months as a sign of weakness and a step of appeasement comparable in kind if not in degree to Chamberlain's visit to Goetesberg [Godesberg] in 1938. They would interpret it as an indication that after their all-out attack on Great Britain, Canada, the country occupying the key position between the United Kingdom and the United States, is thoroughly scared and will pay almost any price to appease them. Instead of making them more reasonable I fear it would encourage them to a continuation of their disruptive tactics.

I read in Hansard the speech delivered by Mr. Stanley Knowles, M.P., in the House of Commons on March 19th, when he urged the Prime Minister to follow his example and visit Moscow. Mr. Knowles came here in only a semi-official capacity and escaped official hospitality. His visit was not recorded in the Soviet press. He was able to devote his whole time to seeing what he wanted to see. The Prime Minister could only come here as the guest of the Soviet Government. He would be lodged probably in the official guest-house of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. He would be greeted probably on his arrival with a guard of honour. He would be given probably a luncheon by Molotov, a reception by Molotov, a dinner by Stalin and would have interviews with both Stalin and Molotov. All of these events would be duly recorded in the Soviet press. If the Prime Minister was not accorded all of these honours he would be treated differently to the Prime Ministers of other countries who have visited Moscow recently and it would be a studied insult to Canada.

It is not easy for me to write like this. I have been a proponent of the doctrine that we not only must but can find a way to get along with the Soviet Union. I still believe in that doctrine but I have modified lately my ideas as to how we can best get along with the Soviet Government. For thirty years I have had a great affection for the Russian people. I know that they are not like the Germans. But I have discovered of late that the mentality of a totalitarian autocracy is much the same whether or not the leaders of that autocracy are Germans, Italians, Spaniards, Argentines or Russians. One thing one must not do is to show that one is afraid of them or is prepared to pay tribute to buy them off. With them it is not good policy to turn the other cheek after being the recipient of an insult.

I can forgive much of the Soviet Government because I have lived here now for three years and have learned to understand their point of view. But I cannot forgive them for their ferocious attack on Mr. King, after all that he did to promote friendly relations with the Soviet Union. This has profoundly altered my attitude towards these people with whom I had been fairly successful in establishing friendly personal relations. I am prepared to do everything I can to restore the friendly relations which have been so roughly shaken these past two months, but I feel I cannot without a protest permit the Prime Minister to suffer at the hands of these people what in the eyes of a great part of the world would be regarded as an indignity and a trip to Canossa. I am also convinced that a visit to Moscow next summer would not serve the cause the Prime Minister has in mind in contemplating this visit.

In conclusion I wish to add that I do not think the above would apply to a semi-official visit by yourself if the Prime Minister could spare you for the ten days necessary to make the trip.

I am sending an extra copy of this letter to London in case you may have left Ottawa before it arrives.

Yours sincerely,

L. D. WILGRESS

DESPATCH

Ottawa, May 10, 1946

Sir,

1. I enclose a copy of despatch No. 185 of April 24† from the Canadian Ambassador in Moscow. In this despatch Mr. Wilgress examines the chief aspects of Soviet foreign policy as revealed by recent events.

2. Mr. Wilgress believes that the Soviet leaders will not expose themselves to undue risks by pushing matters too far in the near future. The Soviet Union in his opinion will not be in a position to wage another long-drawn-out war until the next three five-year plans are completed and, unlike the dictators of the thirties, the Soviet dictators are not reckless but are cool and calculating.

3. This does not mean that the Soviet leaders will not continue to try to make further gains, especially since hitherto they have been able to obtain their objectives so easily at the successive three power conferences. Their technique at these conferences has been to prosecute a war of nerves, to insist that the other powers give in to them and to count on the lack of cohesion between the United States and the United Kingdom and upon the vagaries of United States foreign policy.

4. While the Soviet leaders insist on stability throughout the area dominated by them, they prefer unrest and economic and political instability throughout the remainder of the world (e.g. Western Europe and China) because the continuance of instability gives them a greater opportunity of extending Soviet influence. It is, therefore, largely a matter of indifference to them when the peace treaties are concluded.

5. Mr. Wilgress returns to the conclusion which he has underlined in a number of other despatches which he has written recently. In his opinion the history of previous controversies with the Soviet Union demonstrates that concessions by the Western powers are looked upon by the Soviet leaders as a sign of weakness and a vindication of their suspicions and mistrust. This encourages them to put forward other demands and thus the process goes on without the possibility ever being presented of reaching a satisfactory understanding with the Soviet Union.

6. Any policy savouring of appeasement is, therefore, bound to fail. Resort must be had to the policy of firmness which has been pursued for the past few months by the United States and the United Kingdom—a policy based on a frank recognition that the attempt to prevent a division of the world into two camps has failed and that an attempt must now be made to find an equilibrium between the two camps on the basis of relative power.

“It is important to remember, however, that the distinction between the two camps is not merely that one is communistic and the other capitalistic but chiefly that one is dynamic and the other static. Since the dynamic always carries with it the greater appeal to the dissatisfied and frustrated everywhere, it is not sufficient to confront the communist camp with an overwhelming display of strength. Support for this policy must be assured among the masses of the peoples in the capitalist camp. This makes it essential that firmness should be tempered with fairness in order that the Soviet Union may never be able to pose as a martyr state. This also renders it important that the true nature of Soviet aggression should be exposed. The Soviet Union should be depicted always as a totalitarian state governed by an autocracy, who are creating out of their immediate followers a class with privileges greater relatively than those enjoyed by any class since feudal times. It should also be made clear that the autocracy has commenced to govern in the interests of that privileged class rather than in the interests of the masses of the people who, being entirely without civil liberties, are unable to exert any political influence. Hence the foreign policy of the Soviet Union reflects only the desires of the autocracy and of the privileged class and not of the masses of the people.”

7. I should be interested in your comments on the problems raised in this penetrating despatch from Mr. Wilgress.

PERSONAL

London, May 22, 1946

My dear Mr. Park,

I had hoped to have an opportunity before leaving Canada of replying to your letter of April 8† and thanking you for the copy of the Council's programme† which you enclosed with it, and which I examined with a great deal of interest.

As one who has always been a firm believer in the necessity of friendly relations between the Soviet Union and other countries, I have been gratified to know that your organization is continuing to devote so much thought and care to the relations between the Soviet Union and Canada. You are, I am sure, fully conscious of the need for the exercise, at the present crucial stage of international progress, of all possible judgment and discretion in the methods by which these aims are pursued. It is essential to scrutinize all plans with the utmost care to ensure the elimination of activities which, however well-meant, might under conditions prevailing at the moment have a tendency to do more harm than good.

In this connection I should like, for reasons which you will readily appreciate, to suggest that if the programme of public meetings proposed were to commence before the conclusion of the trials now in progress, the effect might be extremely undesirable.

I might also mention the reference to "an Anglo-American alliance" in section 5(a) of the programme. This reference, it seems to me, is unfortunately worded. If it is intended as a comment on Mr. Churchill's recent speech at Fulton, Missouri, it should not be overlooked that what Mr. Churchill proposed was a fraternal association. To direct attention, instead, to the United Nations Organization will not of itself be an adequate solution for the urgent and involved problem of finding a basis upon which the nations of the world can live together in peace and prosperity. It would, I think, be misleading to describe as "disastrous" the consolidation and extension of that cooperation between the two largest Western democracies which has proved so effective in the period of extreme peril from which we have just emerged, or to suggest that such a development could fail to strengthen the principles and organization of the United Nations as a guarantee of peace and of the independence and integrity of all countries.

Canadian-Soviet friendship is a growth which has come to maturity under the stress of war, and which we are all anxious to foster with the cooperation of our friends in the Soviet Union. It is not a one-way street, and in all discussion of means which may be employed to strengthen it the necessity of collaboration by all parties has to be kept to the fore.

I appreciate your having let me see the draft of the Council's plans, and hope that your deliberations may assist in bringing about a steady increase of goodwill and cooperation in international affairs.

Yours sincerely,

W. L. MACKENZIE KING

[Ottawa,] July 12, 1946

In the Royal Commission Report, there is given a list of members of the Soviet Embassy staff who "have been identified by both oral and documentary evidence" as having been active, at one time or another since the establishment of the Embassy in 1942, in directing undercover espionage operations in Canada. This list contains seventeen names, including six persons who, according to our information, are presently employed on the Embassy staff in Ottawa. The others implicated have returned to the U.S.S.R., or have been transferred to other posts.

Of the six believed to be in Ottawa, two, Mr. Ivan Krotov, the Commercial Counsellor, and Mr. Vitali G. Pavlov, First secretary, are members of the diplomatic staff of the Embassy, Major B. P. Sokolov is a member of the staff of the Commercial Counsellor, and his wife, according to the Report, has been associated with him in inadmissible espionage activities. Mr. A. M. Farafontov and Mr. J. G. Levin (or Levine) are the two remaining employees of the Soviet Embassy whom the Royal Commission have found to be involved in the espionage activities which were the subject of their investigation.

It is the expectation of the Canadian Government that the Soviet Government, of its own initiative will wish to withdraw these persons from the staff of its mission in Ottawa before the publication of the Report of the Royal Commission. With the Report of the Royal Commission to be published on Monday, July 15th, this may not now be physically possible. It is hoped, however, that the Soviet Government will make immediate arrangements for their removal, so that the Canadian Government will not have to request it formally.

MEMORANDUM ON SOVIET MOTIVES IN RELATION TO NORTH AMERICA

In considering the security of North America attention must be paid to the possibility of a threat to the continent by the Soviet Union. So long as Germany and Japan remain weak there is no other source from which aggression might spring. It becomes necessary, therefore, to examine existing and probable Soviet policy from that point of view. In doing so it must first be recognized that it is possible only to analyze Soviet interests and Soviet foreign policy as far as these can be understood at the present time.

Widely different views have been expressed on the effects of the war on Soviet power. It is clear that that country has suffered very severe losses both in population and resources. From this it may be argued that the primary interest of the U.S.S.R. at the present time and for some years to come is the maintenance of peace.

No great power, however, is willing to contemplate peace at any price. The U.S.S.R. in particular has made clear its intention to enforce its foreign policy with military and industrial strength. A recent speech by Stalin on the eve of the Soviet elections indicated that the Soviet Government is not contemplating large scale demobilization in the post-war period, nor a change from military to civilian emphasis in the organization of Soviet economic life. On the contrary the Soviet people were called upon to accept continued sacrifices in the interests of maintaining and extending the military strength of the Soviet state.

The Soviet Union might be considered as having the following basic interests:

- (a) The restoration and development of its domestic economy;
- (b) The maintenance of its political and social institutions;
- (c) Retention of its relative place as a great power in relation to other states.

The achievement of the above objects depends to some extent on successful foreign policy. The present foreign policy of the Soviet Union is similar in its main aspects to that followed over a long period by Czarist Russia and its main aspects are:

(a) Control over the entrance to the Black Sea, either by occupation or influence;

(b) Control over the second sea gateway to Russia, namely, the Baltic and especially the Gulf of Finland;

(c) A secure position on the Far Eastern frontiers whether on land or sea;

(d) An extension of influence in the Caucasus, particularly in the interests of oil supplies. This involves claims for frontier rectifications with Turkey. It also means pressure on Iran, at least for the restoration of the position gained in the 19th century and possibly for control of access to the Gulf of Persia;

(e) A secure position on the central western frontier.

All the above ambitions have been pursued, particularly in the period since 1940 beginning with the war against Finland. The defeat of Germany and her satellites enabled these objects to be pursued more rapidly. The central question is whether the expansion of the Soviet Union can be regarded as being limited to the achievement of these objectives. The case may be argued as follows:

CASE FOR LIMITED EXPANSION

If a line is taken from Finland to the Dardanelles it can be shown that the Soviet Union has consistently pursued an attempt to establish either a strategic frontier where such is possible, or a political one where it is not possible. The frontier of the Soviet Union is a social as well as a strategic or political line. The Russians, therefore, regard it as fundamental that there should not be on the far side of that frontier a state which has a government unfriendly to them. The extent to which this policy will in fact be carried out within moderate limits cannot at the moment be determined. There are, however, some encouraging signs. In spite of the rapid collapse of German resistance, the Soviet Government has not altered its stated intention of allowing autonomous though friendly governments to exist on its borders. The Finnish Government appears to enjoy a relatively free hand. The measure of independence which the governments of Poland, Roumania and Bulgaria will, in the long run, be able to achieve, cannot yet be forecast. The Soviet Government has not yet, however, included within its boundaries territories in Europe as extensive as those which were under the direct jurisdiction of the Czarist regime. Present indications are that no further direct annexation of territory is contemplated with the exception of the claims which have been made upon Turkey. Nor has its position in Iran yet reached the point at which a rough balance was established in the 19th century.

The strategic frontier, like the political one, may be regarded as requiring outposts. The most striking case of this is in the eastern and central Mediterranean where the Soviet Union are seeking control over certain strategic areas for the purpose of making secure the sea route from Gibraltar to Crimea.

CASE AGAINST LIMITED EXPANSION

It may be argued that the Soviet policy of maintaining outer bastions to its frontier can have no limits. By desiring political and social influences over the countries bordering on it it must invariably find a receding frontier which may be pursued indefinitely. The same kind of argument could be applied to strategic claims and lead, for example, to demands in the Mediterranean going beyond the expressed interest in the Italian possessions on the southern shore. Similarly it might be felt that the Soviet expansion will progressively extend through Siberia to the north-west areas of Canada and the United States.

In considering Soviet foreign policy it is important not to confuse the ends with the means. While the Soviet Union pursues, largely to the same extent, the same ends as those of the Czarist regime it does not, like the latter, accept the traditional techniques of diplomacy. The method of avoiding friction through diplomatic representation is very little appreciated by the Soviet authorities. The highly centralized Government of the U.S.S.R. does not permit its representatives in diplomatic missions or at conferences more than a small degree of discretion. The Government tends to use shock tactics through its controlled newspapers and its representatives abroad. There is a difference of opinion as to whether the Soviet Union is in the end less ready for international compromise than other states. It may be that the more violent forms in which its views are expressed are not in essence different from the more carefully guarded but perhaps equally maximum demands put forward in the traditional diplomatic language; both possibly may be intended as opening moves.

The Soviet Union has participated fully in the establishment of the United Nations Organization from the time when plans were first under consideration. In spite of frequent accusations there is no evidence that they have deliberately tried to sabotage UNO. It has been said that at the Preparatory Commission their delegation was generally constructive in its attitude. The attitude of the Soviet representative on the Security Council in New York has been disturbing, but there is no evidence of a desire to weaken that institution generally. It cannot be said of the U.S.S.R. or indeed of any other state that it is prepared to make any measurable amount of concessions to the interests of UNO or that it will maintain indefinitely its support. From one point of view the Soviet Union has, however, reason to continue to support the UNO since by any other action it would tend to turn the UNO into the nucleus of a world alliance against itself. Time alone will show whether the Soviet Union intend to put a major reliance on the UNO but the evidence so far is not discouraging.

CONCLUSION

In conclusion it may be suggested that the foreign policy of the Soviet Union, while pursued by different methods and sponsored by a government which is foreign in its political institutions and social structure, is nevertheless the normal expression of the interests of that country. There have been no indications of undue Soviet interest in North America and politically, therefore, it may be judged that there is an absence of evidence to show the development of any aggressive designs on the part of the Soviet Union against this continent.

No. 14

Ottawa, September 26, 1946

Sir,

In September of last year, the Commercial Counsellor of the Embassy of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics requested the Minister of Finance to arrange for the Canadian Government to purchase wheat, flour and certain other products in Canada on behalf of the Government of the U.S.S.R., as these were urgently needed by the U.S.S.R. at the time, and Mr. Krotov assured the Minister of Finance that the Government of the U.S.S.R. would repay the Government of Canada for the costs incurred in making these payments. This repayment was to be made either in cash or on the basis of a long term credit agreement which was then under negotiation.

The necessary measures to implement this requested arrangement were taken by the Government of Canada, and in so far as the supplies requested were available they were purchased by the appropriate agencies of the Canadian Government and made available for shipment to the U.S.S.R. The direct costs incurred in such purchases, apart from interest on borrowed funds and administrative costs, amounted to $8,819,032.06. The dates on which the various amounts were paid, and further details of the transactions are set forth in a schedule† attached to this letter, and further details and documentation are available in the Department of Trade and Commerce and its purchasing agencies.

On December 28th, 1945, the Minister of Finance wrote to Mr. Krotov concerning the interest charge to be included in this arrangement, as it was then evident there would be a period of some months between the payment of these accounts by Canada and the reimbursement by the U.S.S.R. Mr. Hisley proposed that, if the repayment were on a long term credit basis, the rate of interest agreed for the long term credit should apply from the time the advances were made by Canada, while if the advances were repaid within a short period in cash, the rate of interest should be  $\frac{3}{4}$  of 1 per cent. In each case, these interest rates were based on the cost to Canada of borrowing money for corresponding periods. Mr. Krotov replied to Mr. Ilsley that he was informing the appropriate authorities in Moscow of these proposals. As no objection has been raised since that time to these proposed rates, we assume they are satisfactory to your Government.

As no agreement has been reached on terms for a long term credit, and as negotiations for such a credit have been suspended now for many months, it is evident that this form of repayment for the amounts advanced on your account by the Government of Canada is not now practicable. Consequently repayment should now be made in cash. The schedule enclosed shows the appropriate amount of interest payable at the rate of  $\frac{3}{4}$  of 1 per cent, up to September 15th, and interest beyond that date at the same rate amounts to \$181.21 per day.

Repayment of the amounts advanced by the Government of Canada and the interest thereon should be made in Canadian dollars obtained by the sale of U.S. dollars or other foreign exchange convertible into gold to the Foreign Exchange Control Board or an authorized agent of that Board. If, however, it is more convenient to your authorities to make payment directly in U.S. dollars, that would be satisfactory.

At the meeting of the Cabinet on November 15th,<sup>1</sup> the Secretary of State for External Affairs reported that it was necessary in connection with certain judicial proceedings arising out of the sale of an Esthonian vessel by a Canadian Admiralty Court to reach a decision with respect to the status of the Esthonian Republic. The Cabinet, after discussion, agreed that Canada should not extend de jure recognition to the Esthonian Republic but should recognize it as the de facto government of Esthonia; also that a reply to that effect should be given only on the formulation of an enquiry by a court of law.

The Postmaster General came to see me this afternoon to report a conversation he had had with Senor de Yturralde, the Spanish Chargé d'Affaires in Washington, who had asked him to ascertain, informally, if the Canadian Government would be willing to negotiate a commercial agreement with Spain. I told Mr. Bertrand that, under present arrangements, Spanish goods received m.f.n. treatment on importation into Canada, and that Spain could expect no better commercial treatment of its exports as a result of a trade agreement. As far as procurement of supplies was concerned, our market was now a pretty open one, in which Spain could buy what it could get for United States dollars. I therefore did not see what object Spain could have in seeking a commercial agreement except, possibly, an export credit.<sup>1</sup> Under present conditions, and having in mind particularly recent diplomatic developments, I did not think the Government would for one moment consider granting an export credit to General Franco.

I told Mr. Bertrand that some months ago we had been approached, informally, through the Spanish Embassy in London, about the possible exchange of diplomatic missions between Canada and Spain, and had replied that, under present conditions, we were not prepared to exchange legations.

quite true

In view of the fact that Canada was one of the forty-five nations to support the resolution introduced into the United Nations General Assembly condemning the present government of Spain, the Canadian Government would not wish to be put in the position of seeming to encourage commercial relations with Spain. We could certainly do nothing, however, to stand in the way of a private business deal between Canadian Vickers and the government of Spain, and in fact the sale of a few freighters in this way could hardly be prejudicial to Canadian interests.

I would suggest advising Mr. Glass in this sense, stressing that he should not play any part in promoting the proposed sale and should not lead Canadian Vickers Limited to expect assistance from any agency of the Canadian Government.

DESPATCH 50

Lisbon, June 21, 1946

SECRET

Sir,

Mr. Mockford, Passport Control Officer at the British Consulate here handed to me yesterday the following message from Madrid;

Jacques Guérrard who escaped from Italy with MANCINI has now obtained Spanish Passport No. 573574 in name of Armando FLUVIA VENDRELL.

He is accompanied by his wife, Maria ESCOZA BENAGUES whose name is on the same passport.

Both are stated to be now in Madrid on their way to Lisbon where they will apply to proceed to Canada.

This is to be the forerunner of regular escape route for prominent Vichy French.

Naturally this is causing quite a flurry in Security circles and France would welcome the opportunity to lay these people by the heels.

Mr. Mockford, when I told him how difficult it would be for any of these people to obtain a Canadian visa, requested me to place before you for your consideration the suggestion that their entry into Canada be facilitated with the idea of having them all under close surveillance and where they could be easily apprehended. I believe the United States Security officials (F.B.I.) approve of this plan but the French authorities have not been kept advised of developments for fairly obvious reasons.

As it is anticipated that developments will probably take place within the next two to three weeks, an early instruction would be appreciated not only as a guidance for this consulate but also to permit our United Kingdom and United States colleagues to make their dispositions which to a considerable extent will depend upon your decision.

DESPATCH 1760

London, December 2, 1946

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to my despatch No. 1401 of September 11th,† concerning the debts owed to Canada by Spain, and also to my despatch No. A663 of 8th August† concerning diplomatic relations between Canada and Spain.

2. Attached is a copy of a letter to Mr. Hudd dated 23rd November from the Treasury, reporting that Mr. Ellis-Rees, of the Treasury, when in Spain recently, had been informed by the Director-General of Political Economy at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs that Spain's diplomatic relations with Canada were not normal, that the Canadians had treated them badly, and that if they could not normalize relations the Spanish Government would find it difficult to normalize financial matters.

3. This suggestion seems to me completely unacceptable, and I am enclosing a draft† of a reply which, if you agree, I shall send to the Treasury.

4. The matter has been informally discussed with the specialists on Spain in the Foreign Office with a view to ascertaining whether they thought this attitude on the part of the Spaniards was significant of any trend in Spanish policy towards Canada in particular, or towards the United Nations in general. The Foreign Office view was that they knew of no reason why Spain should choose this particular time to act in this way towards Canada, and they suspected that it was just a convenient excuse for not paying up. They agreed that the Spanish attitude was preposterous and were in favour of telling the Spaniards so. They suggested, however, that in dealing with Spain it was advisable not to sacrifice the chances of a settlement of a number of outstanding grievances by protesting too vehemently over one. They themselves are still seeking compensation for Civil War damages to British property. The Treasury is considering the presentation to the Spanish Government of a demand for a general settlement of all outstanding financial questions, and it might be advantageous for us to collaborate with them in seeking a settlement of all Canadian grievances at the same time. It has therefore been indicated in the draft to the Treasury that we should not want, by annoying the Spaniards unduly at this time, to prejudice the chances of a general settlement later on.

5. As the Treasury would not be aware of the Kobbe case, no mention has been made in our letter to them of this additional grievance on our part. The Foreign Office, however, have said that they would be reporting directly to the Ambassador in Madrid on this development and they would remind him that this continuing cause of dissatisfaction could not be dissociated from any consideration on our part of our relations with Spain.

I have etc.

Dear Hudd,

Mr. Ellis-Rees of the Treasury has just returned from a visit to Madrid where he had discussions with Spanish authorities on matters connected with trade and payments with the United Kingdom.

At a meeting with Señor Navasques, the Director General of Political Economy at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, he took the opportunity of mentioning the long outstanding question of the liquidation of the Canadian debts. Mr. Ellis-Rees said that he had ascertained that the Spanish Exchange authorities (the Instituto Español de Monéda Extranjera) has agreed to a scheme of liquidation but that nothing had been done. It had been hinted to him that this was on account of political differences with Canada, but in any event he would like to tell the Canadians what was holding things up.

Señor Navasques replied that Spain's diplomatic relations with Canada were not normal. They felt that the Canadians had treated them badly and that if they could not normalize relations, the Spanish Government would find it difficult to normalize financial matters. He added that he had no objection to our informing the Canadian Government of the reason for holding up the debt settlement which in the ordinary way would give them no trouble at all.

Yours sincerely,

Lisbon, December 10, 1946

Dear Mr. Heasman,

I have for acknowledgment your telegram of November 28th† enquiring as to the present situation in Spain concerning the importation of Canadian seed potatoes. The situation in Spain is precisely that which exists in Portugal, in that the import of potatoes of whatever class or kind are prohibited from the North American continent due to the prevalence of the Colorado potato beetle. I was aware of this fact from unofficial sources and I had been endeavouring through the same means to discover what the possibilities are of obtaining a change in the existing regulations in Spain. I did not reply to your cable earlier as I was fully aware of the fact that you required official information rather than my unofficial or hearsay knowledge and it was only yesterday that I received a definite reply from Spain to the effect that potatoes from North America were not allowed to enter that country.

In view of the very strong attitude which has been taken by Canadian delegates to U.N.O. who, despite the fact that we had no diplomatic mission or other diplomatic or governmental source of information in Spain, have categorically condemned the Spanish regime, I have felt most hesitant about taking or asking that there be taken any steps to place our case as regards seed potatoes or, for that matter, any other official question before the Spanish authorities. I would therefore like to have your direct instructions as to what, if any approach I should make to Spain with regard to the question of Canadian seed potatoes. This question is not confined entirely to seed potatoes but I think is a matter of general policy which must be decided in Canada as it covers so many cases, as for example the cabled instructions which I received to approach the Spanish authorities in connection with the possible exchange of Canadian nitrates for Spanish potash. Your guidance would be much appreciated.

SPANISH DEBTS TO CANADIAN FIRMS

We have been trying for some time to get an arrangement with the Spanish Government to permit repayment of debts owed to Canadians by persons or firms in Spain. These debts amount to about $600,000. A good many of them have been owing since pre-civil war days. Shortage of foreign exchange has been the principal cause of delay.

2. Negotiations have been carried on through the British Treasury representative in Madrid, Mr. Weston.<sup>1</sup> Early in 1945 he reported that the Spanish authorities, in view of the comparatively small amount involved, saw no difficulty in paying off the debts in a single payment rather than by instalments. The balance of trade between Canada and Spain had been in their favour for some time, and they should therefore have been able to allot foreign exchange for the payment of the debts. Later, however, it developed that they had preferred to devote their accumulated dollars to buying a telegraph company, and would have to start saving up all over again to meet the Canadian debts. They suggested that Canada might buy more from Spain to assist them in doing so; this suggestion was felt, under the circumstances, to be scarcely practicable.

3. In November, 1945, however, they said they were prepared to come to an arrangement, though in view of their shortage of dollars they would have to pay by instalments. We accordingly requested the British Embassy to draft, in conference with the Spanish authorities, an exchange of letters for this purpose.

4. All through the present year the Spanish authorities have been deferring action, ostensibly because of the illness of the Director-General of their foreign exchange organization. They have now put forward the claim that, since Canada's diplomatic relations with them are not normal and since the Canadians have treated them badly, they would find it difficult to pay the debts until diplomatic relations were made normal.

5. This evidently refers to the reception by the Canadian Government of a Spanish proposal made in September, 1945, for an exchange of diplomatic representatives. The proposal was not accepted. Instructions to the Canadian High Commissioner in London were to tell the Spanish Ambassador, orally, that the Canadian Government was not prepared to receive a diplomatic mission from the present Spanish Government. While there is some doubt whether Mr. Massey actually included the word "present" in conveying this message, Count de Morales, on making similar inquiries at Ottawa, was given a reply identical with that which Mr. Massey had been instructed to give.

6. The Spanish Government are now trying to force us to exchange missions with them by withholding repayment of the commercial debts. Mr. Robertson has drafted a letter which he proposes to send Mr. Weston if it is approved. Attached is a copy of his despatch† with the draft letter.†

7. In view of the Assembly resolution on Spain, it will, I think, be necessary to alter the text of this letter. The Spanish Government, which has for so long, on the flimsiest excuses, maintained its barrier against the repayment of these debts, is even less likely at the present moment to be influenced by any considerations we could put forward. Moreover, the account in the draft letter of the reply made to the Spanish Government's proposal for an exchange of missions is quite different from anything indicated by our records. There is no precise information here as to what was said to the Spanish Ambassador in London during his call at the High Commissioner's Office, but in any case Count de Morales, during his visit to Ottawa, was definitely told that we were not prepared to receive a diplomatic mission from "the present Spanish Government", and there is no record of any pretexts having been given him along the lines of those in the draft letter.

8. To avoid any wording that might be taken to imply dissent from United Nations policy, I think the statement in the last sentence of para. 2, that "Canadian diplomatic relations with Spain are exactly as they have been in the past", will have to be modified. Para. 3, as noted above, is inconsistent with what the Spanish Government learned from its Ottawa inquiries as well as with the instructions sent to the High Commissioner in London, and in any case its tone would be out of keeping with the present situation. As it seems necessary to make some immediate reply to this preposterous attempt to blackmail the Canadian Government into accepting a Spanish mission, and to make it clear that we cannot accept the contention that repayment of commercial debts depends on the form taken by relations between governments, I am attaching a redraft, for your consideration, of the letter to be sent to Mr. Weston.

9. The Department of Trade and Commerce and the Foreign Exchange Control Board have been in touch with the negotiations for repayment of the debts, and are being consulted on the action to be taken.

10. As stated above, the debts amount to about $600,000. Of this, $500,000 is due to the Ford Motor Co. of Canada for shipment of automobiles in 1935 to Ford Motor, Iberica, in Barcelona. Hudson Motors of Canada has $80,000 coming to it for similar shipments. The other accounts are small.<sup>1</sup>

Dear Weston,

Thank you for your letter of 23rd November, in which you reported that Ellis-Rees, of the Treasury, had been told by Señor Navasques when he was in Spain, that Spain's diplomatic relations with Canada were not normal, and that if relations could not be normalized the Spanish Government would find it difficult to normalize financial matters.

As you will no doubt realize, such an answer is totally unacceptable to us. In the first place, of course, we could not recognize that the state of Canadian diplomatic relations with Spain would have any effect on these legitimate debts. In the second place, there has been nothing abnormal about Canadian diplomatic relations with Spain. Like our relations with many other countries, they have always been conducted through the British Embassy. The development of direct diplomatic relations between Canada and other countries is comparatively recent and still far from complete. We have not as yet been able to open missions in a number of countries which have had diplomatic missions in Ottawa for some years, including some which were our allies during the war.

Last year the Spanish Government approached us with the suggestion that Ministers might be exchanged between our two countries, and further representations were made to us by the Spanish Ambassador in London in August of this year. We agreed at the time to the appointment of a new Spanish Consul-General in Montreal, but maintained the position previously taken that the Canadian Government would not be prepared to receive a diplomatic mission from the Spanish Government.

Some changes in draft are evidently required. ST. L[AURENT] 28-12-46

The fact, of course, is that as a member of the United Nations, the Assembly of which has made clear its disapproval of the present Spanish regime, we could not think, at the present time, of taking any step which could be construed as constituting any special or additional recognition of the present Spanish Government. Although we have not said so in as many words, I do not suppose that the Spaniards are unaware of this aspect of the case, which has been emphasized by the recent Assembly resolution recommending that those members of the United Nations which have ambassadors or ministers in Madrid should withdraw them.

I am sending copies of this correspondence to the Dominions Office and to the Foreign Office, as we had been keeping them informed of the developments in connection with the Spanish desire to establish direct diplomatic relations with Canada. The matter has already been discussed informally with the Foreign Office who agree with our response to the views of Señor Navasques. We should be grateful if you could ask your Representatives in Madrid to make clear to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs our views on this matter.

I refer to our letter to Mr. Sim of February 25† and further correspondence with the Department of National Revenue (Customs) forwarded to your Department on the question of the customs treatment to be accorded goods originating in Syria and the Lebanon.

You will recall it was agreed that while the Levant States were no longer considered "territories under French mandate" in the sense of our trade agreement with France of May 1933, all the formalities to bring the mandate over the Levant States to an end had not yet been completed. Since Canadian exporters were benefiting from the 1933 agreement it was thought desirable that the advantages extended by Canada to Syria and the Lebanon in accordance with Article 14 of the trade agreement should be continued for the time being.

We have now been informed that during the final session of the Assembly of the League of Nations held at Geneva in April 1946 a resolution was adopted welcoming the termination of the mandated status of Syria and the Lebanon. The last formalities marking the recognition of Syrian and Lebanese independence have thus been completed.

Article 14 of the Canada-France Trade Agreement and Article 4 of the Additional Protocol of February 26th, 1935, under which intermediate tariff rates are levied against certain products of territories under French mandate, can thus no longer be interpreted as applying to Syria and the Lebanon, since the latter are no longer under mandate. Of their own accord, however, both Syria and the Lebanon continue to grant Canada the most-favoured-nation treatment which was required under the mandate. Neither have they made any change in other rights guaranteed to Canadians under Articles 10 and 11 of the mandate which has now been extinguished.

The Department of External Affairs therefore takes the view that the customary intermediate tariff rates should continue to be levied against goods of Syrian and Lebanese origin as a reciprocal courtesy pending world trade talks, when a tariff agreement between our two countries might be formalized.

I should be glad to learn if you agree with this view. If so, we might inform the Department of National Revenue (Customs) to that effect.<sup>1</sup> Perhaps an arrangement might also be made whereby your Department could inform the Department of National Revenue and this Department should any change arise with respect to the treatment of Canadians or of Canadian goods by Syria and the Lebanon which might involve a reconsideration of our present position.

I have your letter of June 15th, † your file 29307-A, in which you concur in the view of this Department that it would be appropriate for Canada to continue to grant Syria and Lebanon the privileges of the Intermediate Tariff as a reciprocal courtesy pending world trade talks when a tariff agreement between our countries may be formalized.

I enclose copy of a letter of June 21st from the Deputy Minister of National Revenue (Customs and Excise) stating that since the provisions of the Canada-France Trade Agreement and Protocols thereto no longer apply to Syria and Lebanon, products of those countries immediately revert to the general tariff status unless provision is made by the Governor General in Council.

I have accordingly prepared the attached draft submission to Council<sup>2</sup> recommending that the tariff benefits accorded to Syria and Lebanon under Article XIV of the Canada-France Trade Agreement of May 12th, 1933, as amended by Article IV of the Additional Protocol of February 26th, 1935, continue to be extended to these countries. Dear Mr. Wrong,

I have your letter of the 19th† instant further in regard to the status of Syrian and Lebanese products, and note that the mandated status of Syria and Lebanon has been terminated.

I further note that both Syria and Lebanon of their own accord are continuing to grant Canada most favoured nation treatment formerly required in accordance with Article 14 of the Canada-France Trade Agreement, and that your Department feels that Intermediate Tariff rates should continue to be levied on products originating in those countries.

As the provisions of the Canada-France Trade Agreement and Protocols thereto no longer apply to Syria and Lebanon, products of those countries immediately revert to General Tariff status, and this Department could not grant more favourable treatment unless provision is made by the Governor General in Council.

If it is desired to grant most favoured nation treatment to Syria and Lebanon, the authority available for action by the Governor General in Council is Section 11 of the Customs Tariff. If it is desired to grant merely Intermediate Tariff rates, the authority available is Section 4(g) of the Customs Tariff.

By the termination of the mandate of the Government of France over Syria and Lebanon the advantages extended by Canada to those states in accordance with article XIV of the Canada-France Trade Agreement of May 12th, 1933, as amended by Article IV of the Additional Protocol of February 26th, 1935, are discontinued and the products of Syria and Lebanon revert to general tariff status unless provision is made by the Governor General in Council.

3. Syria and Lebanon of their own accord continue to grant Canada most-favoured-nation tariff treatment which was required under the mandate and have made no change in the other rights guaranteed to Canadians under Regulations 10 and 11 of the mandate which has now been extinguished.

The undersigned, therefore, with the concurrence of the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of National Revenue has the honour to recommend that it be ordered, pursuant to Section 11 of the Customs Tariff that the tariff benefits formerly accorded to Syria and Lebanon in their capacities as mandated territories under Article XIV of the Canada-France Trade Agreement of May 12th, 1933, as amended by Article IV of the Additional Protocol of February 26th, 1935, continue to be extended to the products originating in and coming from Syria and Lebanon when conveyed without transshipment from a port of Syria or Lebanon or from a port of a country enjoying the benefits of British Preferential or Intermediate Tariff into a Customs Port of Canada and that this arrangement shall remain in effect as long as Syria and Lebanon continue to grant Canada most-favoured-nation tariff treatment or until otherwise decreed by the Governor in Council.

All of which is respectfully submitted.<sup>1</sup>

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa,] May 6, 1946

Dear Mr. Grew,

Your letter† addressed to the Director of the Trade Commissioner Service enclosing communication† that you received from Mr. M. S. Dormen with inquiry as to the prospects of a trade agreement between Turkey and Canada, was passed on to me in due time. The Turkish Minister in Ottawa has been informed on several occasions during the past month of Canada's willingness to negotiate a trade agreement on the basis of exchange of most-favoured-nation treatment between the two countries, but we understand that up to the present time the Minister has not received any instructions in this connection from his government and there have consequently been no further developments.

While we understand that a few Canadian firms have been able to make sales in Turkey, others have informed us that it has proved to be impossible to arrange for obtaining payment in United States dollars as required by the Foreign Exchange Control Board, with the result that it has been impossible for firms in the latter group to do business. The explanation given by the Turks as to the non-availability of exchange for making purchases in Canada has usually been that it is not their policy to make exchange available for the purchase of goods from countries with which they do not have a commercial agreement.

It is of course possible that the difficulty of doing business with Turkish firms is principally the result of a real shortage of foreign exchange on their part, which leads them to allocate such supplies as they have for the purchase of those imports that the Turkish Government deems to be most essential.

On the other hand, it has been suggested that the customers of one particular agency in New York (the Brenner Corporation) ordinarily receive a degree of consideration which is not extended to those who do business through other channels. How this agency has acquired its influence in Turkish governmental circles we of course do not know. There is in fact much that we do not understand about Turkish business practices and the methods by which it is possible to sell goods and receive payment in that country. We have in any case taken the initiative in informing our Turkish friends that we are prepared to negotiate a trade agreement with them, we are satisfied that this information is in the possession of the authorities at Ankara, and we feel that the next move, if any, should be made by the Turkish Government.

All this is naturally for your confidential information.

Yours faithfully,

H. R. KEMP

Memorandum from Embassy of Turkey to Government of Canada

Ottawa, September 9, 1946

In conformity with the desire expressed some time ago by the Canadian Government, the Government of the Republic too are anxious to conclude with Canada a Treaty of Commerce and Navigation on the basis of most favoured nations. This could be accomplished either by means of direct negotiations or else, if the Canadian Government so desires, by the adherence of Canada to the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation of 1930 which exists between Turkey and Great Britain. This adherence might be obtained by way of a communication made by the diplomatic representative of His Majesty the King in Turkey according to the stipulations of Article 38 of this Convention.

Ottawa, September 27, 1946

I refer to your letter of September 12† regarding the proposed trade agreement between Canada and Turkey.

We agree with your feeling that Canada should not consider adherence to the United Kingdom-Turkey Treaty of Commerce and Navigation but should proceed with direct negotiations with Turkey. We have looked up the text of this Treaty and find that it is a fairly comprehensive instrument covering considerations outside the range of most of Canada's commercial agreements. You will recall that we have suggested that the negotiation of a treaty of friendship, commerce and navigation with the United States should be postponed owing to the shortage of manpower and owing also to the fact that it would involve overlapping with some of the matters to be shortly under discussion at the world conference on trade and employment. The same considerations would apply also in favour of postponing the negotiation of an elaborate treaty with Turkey.

With respect to your request for our views as to the form the agreement should take, I have pleasure in sending you herewith copy in duplicate of a pro forma trade agreement† and would suggest that these be handed to the Turkish Ambassador.

Mémorandum du gouvernement du Canada à l'ambassade de Turquie

Memorandum from Government of Canada to Embassy of Turkey

Ottawa, October 5, 1946

The Government of Turkey and the Government of Canada have both expressed their desire to conclude a Treaty of Commerce on the most-favoured-nation basis.

In view of the proposed World Conference on Trade and Employment, which seems likely to be called toward the end of 1947 by the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations, and in view of the probability of a general multilateral trade treaty emerging from that World Conference, it seems desirable at this time to conclude a simple most-favoured-nation treaty to run for a period of one year and thereafter until terminated by either party on three months' notice.

Attached are two copies of our usual draft of a most-favoured-nation treaty.† It is suggested that this draft, with the amendment to Article VIII as to duration mentioned above, might form the basis of direct negotiations in Ottawa between the Turkish Government and the Canadian Government.<sup>1</sup>

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures à

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Ambassador of Great Britain in Uruguay

Ottawa, December 9, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that representations have been made to the Canadian Embassy in Buenos Aires by Houlder Brothers and Company (Argentina) Ltd. who are the local agents for Furness (Canada) Ltd., complaining that Uruguayan consular arrangements in Canada are inadequate for facilitating Canadian shipments to Uruguay.

2. There is no Uruguayan consular office at Saint John, New Brunswick, or Halifax, Nova Scotia, from which ports Canadian shipments to South America are frequently made. In consequence, shipping papers have to be airmailed to Montreal at heavy expense, with resulting delay.

3. The Consul-General of Uruguay in Montreal, Señor Alvaro Guillot Munoz, is believed to have no responsible assistants on his staff, with the result that he is unable to deal expeditiously with ships' papers or the legalizing of bills of lading. In the case of one recent sailing from Canada, he was unable to deal with the ship's papers or the merchants' bills of lading until sixteen days after the ship had sailed. This naturally causes Canadian exporters great inconvenience, and also is prejudicial to Uruguayan importers awaiting shipments and deliveries.

4. We are informed that the Uruguayan consular service in New York is very much better, and that a real danger exists that shippers will revert to the New York route for this reason, with consequent damage to the Canadian shipping company and Canadian interests generally.

5. If you see no objection we should be grateful if you could explain the situation to the Uruguayan Government and point out the advantages that would result both to Uruguayan importers and to Canadian exporters if increased Uruguayan consular facilities were provided at either Saint John or at Halifax, or failing this, if the Consulate-General in Montreal were put in a position to handle shipping papers of Canadian exporters more expeditiously.

6. I should be grateful therefore, if you could take an opportunity of bringing this matter to the attention of the Uruguayan Government, and advise me in due course of the result.

7. I am sending to the Canadian Ambassador in Buenos Aires a copy of this despatch, for his personal information.

Your telegram No. 172 of December 13th.† In accordance with instructions from his Department,<sup>1</sup> Maguire<sup>2</sup> called on Uruguayan Foreign Minister in Montevideo on December 12th. On my advice, he first called at British Embassy and was accompanied to the interview by Second Secretary, Commercial, of that Embassy. He reports interview as most satisfactory. Uruguayan Government propose to send an extra official to Consulate in Montreal and will ask Department of Trade and Commerce to nominate someone in Saint John to act as Vice-Consul there.

ago on the Stepinac matter.<sup>1</sup> He said that he was glad to be able to co-operate by not publishing his letter. He also intimated that he rather got the impression that, as a return for this co-operation on his part, you had suggested that Yugoslavia might receive some kind of help from Canada in 1947. He was hard to understand, and I am not sure whether he was referring to the development of trade relations or relief supplies. I think the latter, as he mentioned their need for cattle. I told him that, insofar as relief was concerned, our policy was to take our fair share of the international relief burden, and that this whole question was now under consideration in New York. If, as a result of this consideration, Canada participated in international relief, her supplies would be sent to those who needed them the most, after international consultation. This made it impossible, therefore, to discuss relief supplies for any particular country. I emphasized that we had been approached by other countries for help, if and when UNRRA came to an end, but that we did not make any commitments of this kind because we did not like, in principle, the idea of relief being handled on a unilateral or bilateral basis.<sup>2</sup>

Memorandum from Head, Economic Division, to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Ottawa,] November 21, 1946

With reference to your memorandum of 20.11.46 attached, on the subject of your talk with the Yugoslav Chargé d'Affaires, I believe either Mr. Robertson or Mr. Wrong was approached by Aluminium Company officials seeking advice as to whether they should negotiate with the Yugoslav Gov-

<sup>1</sup>L'archevêque Aloysius Stepinac de Zagreb en Yougoslavie fut condamné en octobre 1946 à seize ans d'emprisonnement pour avoir collaboré avec l'ennemi. M. Cabric avait menacé de présenter une lettre de protestation au gouvernement canadien au sujet d'une déclaration de l'archevêque de Toronto sur le cas Stepinac critiquant le gouvernement yougoslave.

Note added to the bottom of this memo by Mr. Magann. Mr. Cabric's imminent return for a visit to his homeland has made him very accessible to impressions. At the close of our discussion I asked him for a description of conditions in Yugoslavia and obtained on my part the impression that his country needed almost nothing except possibly cattle and hides.

<sup>1</sup>Archbishop Aloysius Stepinac of Zagreb in Yugoslavia was sentenced in October, 1946 to sixteen years imprisonment for collaboration with the enemy. Mr. Cabric had threatened to present a letter of protest to the Canadian Government concerning a statement by the Archbishop of Toronto on the Stepinac case criticizing the Yugoslav Government.

ernment for the development of properties. They were discouraged from proceeding because of the control the U.S.S.R. had over Yugoslav Economy. Our Records indicate that the Aluminium Company officials received further discouragement when we acted for them in representations to the Yugoslav authorities. In our Note No. 4 of April 26th† we transmitted the request of the Aluminium Secretariat Limited (1) for the present management of their Company in Trieste to be allowed access to the mines in the Yugoslav zone and (2) to have bauxite in storage in the Yugoslav zone shipped to traditional customers in Italy. Both requests were in effect rejected by the Yugoslav government.

I suspect that a further deterrent is the possibility of nationalization. The assurance that there would be no nationalization without compensation is worth little as an inducement to a company to put its efforts into development work. On this subject we have just received a telegram† from our High Commissioner in London asking us to forward all claims for properties situated in Yugoslavia which are in danger of nationalization. While we have no definite information that mines are to be nationalized, it is a likely possibility.

With reference to the prospects of trade between Yugoslavia and Canada I agree that we can give them no encouragement as long as the present political situation continues. I doubt if we could give them any encouragement even if the political situation improves. Imports from that country were roughly $62,000 in 1937, $63,500 in 1938 and $188,000 on the eve of the outbreak of the war in 1939. Exports for the same three years were $46,600, $12,500, and $20,000. The disruption of the German economy probably improves our prospects of supplying manufactured goods, but at the best I don't think we can hope for much trade.
