MATCH-BREAKING TALE OF AN ENGLISH COUNTRY TOWN.

(Continuation)

Miss Ogleby for a wonder was completely enced by the excess of her consternation; sneed by the excess of her consternation; is also been committing treason to her faith, and guiltless friend. In the same way, it is unspeakably trying to the temper of the gene-rality of ladies to behold a cousin or particular friend contract a very advantageous marriage, atthough a mere acquaintance may form one much more so, without occasioning any "hing beyond a mementary thrill of envy and cussa-

But all this time Miss Malford is violently fanning herself, with an immense antique green fan, and Sir Peregrine is maliciously suffering her to remain in suspense. At length he spoke. "My good lady," he said, "I never told you that I had been making an offer of ver told you that I had been making an offer of marriage to Miss Ogloby, nor have I the least intention of doing se. ton."

S.r Peregrine again performed a quiet exit, and Miss Malford was left, like her friend, to the torments of regret and mortification. Sir and an assistance was tell, thee net trends. Sir Peregrine, meanwhile, proceeded to Mrs. Stapleton's house, begged a private audience with that lady, and solicited in due form he hand of her beautiful daughter. Mrs. Stapleton was very much suprised and pleased; she assured the baror et, with truth, that he might rely on her co sent and best exertions in his behalf, but she could not pretend to anser for Rose; and with some difficulty she prevailed on him to leave the house without an audience with his fair enslaver since she felt aware that a little (or perhaps not a little) preparation, argument, and expostulation, must be expended on Rose, to induce her to teceive the bannet as favorable as a young lady possessing a dower of two thousand pounds, ought sessing a dower of two thousand pounds, ought to receive a gentleman of seven thousand a year, who offers carte blanche as to settle-

Rose and her mother had a long conversa tion that evening, and the result was credita-hle to both. Rose forcibly, but calmly and respectfully represented to Mrs. Stapleton the extent of sacrifice which she should be making extent of sacrifice which she should be making in accepting a partner for life so disproportion-do to her in age, and so ancongenial to her taste, as Sir Peregrine; she professed herself happy and contented with her present situation, and promised never to marry without her mother's full consent and approphation, entreatied that she would kindly suffer be in this and every other instance to exercise the privilege rejection.

Mrs. Stapleton made some faint attempts to excite this ambition of Rose to be mistress of two carriages, a train of servants, and a service of plate; but the alternate tears and smiles of her beloved daughter prevented her from expressing herself with any severity, and a kind, courteous, but decided refusal, was conveyed to Sir Peregrine the following morning.

to Sir Peregriue the following morning.

Next to the pleasure of accepting a baronet Mrs. Stupleton felt that the honor of rejecting one was to be reckoned, and she could not resist the tempation of calling on her friends the spinters to relate the triumphof Rose's charms, and to deplore Rose's romantic determination of only marrying for love. They were delighted with the intelligence. Rose Stapleton's matrimonial prospects were still capable of being marred—she was not at present to be raised above the reach of their malice; besides, they felt no doubt that Sir Periarine would raised above the reach of their malice; besides, they felt no doubt that Sir Perigrine would resent her refusal of his proposals as warnly and deeply as an elderly gentleman usually resents the refusal of a juvenile beauty, and that the gaicties and festivities of the Hall would henceforth be withheld from Mrs. Stapleton and her daughter—no trilling deprivation, when it is considered that Sir Peregrine was frequently in the habit of ranking stylish young men among his visitors. He was fond of the society of the young and cheerful of his own sex, and he never found any difficulty in obtaining it, having a capital pack of Sir Peregrine and the Stanletons was neither more nor less than before the loss of his heart and the refusal of his hand took place. Sir Perigrine felt rather mortified that he had in the exuberance of his hopes confided the sec his attachment to Miss Ogleby and Miss ford, since he doubted not that they would in-dustriously publish his disappointment through Allingham. Accordingly he determined to be forehand with them, and related every where their misapprehension of his meaning, ar their calumnious strictures on each other, in jecose and humorous a style, that people forgot to laugh at him in their eagerness to laugh at the discomfiture of his confidents. The spinthe discompture of his confidents. The spin-sters were greatly annoted at the publicity which his story gained. Neither of them much minded the knowledge of her friend's perfidy and double dealing, for they rated their friendships for each other at precisely its real value—a bond of mutual convenience, its real valueits real value—a bond of mutual convenience, and a means of enabling them more readily to annoy and mortify the rest of the world. Accordingly, as soon as they found out that they had nothing to fear from the rivalry of each other, they became as dear friends as ever, but they could not bear the idea that the whole town of Allungham should be as well a ware as themselves of the slender and the state of the state of the state of the slender. idea that the whole town of Allingham should be as well avare as themselves of the slender and worthless tie that united them, and, this most persons fond of ridiculing others, they were keenly susceptible of ridicule in their own persons. They did not suspect Sir Peregrine of having been the circulator of the story, for they imagined that he would fool very tender in touching on the subject of his rejection, which was so closely connected with it; accordingly they imputed the whole of its publicity to Mrs. Stapleton, poor womant with all her imputed worldliness, had no plans and manusures on her own account which they could hope to balle; her peace of mind could only be reached through that of Rose, and a dozen times a day did the match-breakers wish that they could see Rose Stapleton warmly and devotedly attached, and have the felicity of placing insurmountable obstacles between herself and her lavet.

insurmountable obstacles between herself and her lovet.

About three months after these events a young man of the name of Saville, of pleasing person and gentlemanly, although rather shy and distant manners, came on a visit to Sir Peregrine. In Saville's early life there was nothing either interesting or eventful; his family was respectable, but far from rich, and at an early age his friends procured him a situation in the India House, where he devoted the bloom of his youth and (literally as well as figuratively) the light of his days, to a series of dull monotonous duties, receiving the remuneration of a small-income, which, however, had the recommendation of increasing ten pounds every year; and those who have known what it is to be many pounds the worse at the end of the year, may allow that there is some satisfaction in the certainty of heing even ten pounds the better. Saville also had received a faw lifts from the deaths of his seniors in the course of twelve years, and at the age of thirty had an income which his friends considered a very pretty one; but he pathetically replied that it was not enough to marrying, it was a pity that he had not an income to match with it.

If i was inclined to digressions, (and, by the them, although I exercise my self-denial in them, although I exercise my self-denial in bounds, good preserves of game, and a cellar of fine old wines, and a potent worker of culicately and scrupulously designated by the title of a male cook. Sir Feregrine, however, did not gratify the iil-nature of the spinsters or all of the sweetness and gratitude, that he was angry with himself instead of her, very candidly settled in his mind that he was "an old fool for his trouble," and that Rose deserved a much better husband. Accordingly, after a few embarrassed interviews, every thing went on in its usual tracks, and the intimacy between on in its usual tracks, and the intimacy between Sir Peregrine and the Stapletons was neither? rit of her condescension in accepting the addresses of a gentleman with three thousand a year, because, she observed, she was remarkably foad of a town life, and although three thousand a year was a pretty income for the country, it weal? be a patity stipend in London 1 I also read in the biography of a very excellent men, a love-letter which he addressed to the lady to whom he was engaged, in which he prudently warmed her that, as they united incomes would only amount to fifty-five pounds a year, she must not set her heart on the vanities and haveing of life. There are pounds a year, she must not set her heart on the vanities and luxuries of life. There are many intermediate gradations on which I could enlarge, but not to keep my readers in suspense will inform them that Saville's income at the time of which I am speaking was exactly four hundred a year.

Savitle was not particularly popular with the ladies; although his feelings were warm, the ladies; although his feeling: were warm, his manners were reserved; and although he was sensible and well informed, he was defi-cient in off hand conversation and showy accient: in off hand conversation and showy ac-complishments. A certain Miss Anna Maria Riley, however, the sixth of a family of ten unmarried daughters, won his heart, and re-ceived his attentions most kindly and favora-sty-told him that she could never love but once, and had never loved before—that she once, and had never loved before—that she was an excellent manager—that she despised money—that she had no war is, and that she thought four hundred a year a very ample income. Saville was enchanted at her affection, noderation, and disinterestedness, and the relations on both sides had been spoken to on the subject, when suddenly a wealthy portly citizen, knowing nothing of what had happen-ed, proposed for Miss Anna Maria. She wrote an immediate answer of acceptance to him, sent a farewell letter to Saville, telling him sent a bad readyed on sacrificing herself for that she had resolved on sacrificing herself for the good of her family, and immediately drove to a fashionable milliner's at the west end of to a fashionable milliner's at the west end of the town, where her nine sisters ordered nine blue silk dresses and nine white satin hats, decorated with nine forget-me-not garlands, and where she herself ordered—more things than I will weary the patience of my readers by enumerating. In one respect she was consistent; she had always told Saville that she despised money, and no one who witnessed her lavish expenses at the milliner's could aave doubted the fact!

Saville rated the loss of this unfeeling mercenary will at a much higher value than she cenary girl at a much higher value than she deserved. He had a serious illness of conse-quence, and when he recovered, betook himdeserved. He had a serious illness of consequences, and when he recovered, be took himself to the monotonous labours of his vocation, fully resolved to forswear "the light that lies in woman's eyes" for ever. An unexpected event, however, was to occur. An eccentric distant relation of Savilles died, and bequeathed to him the whole of a large fortune. Anna Maria had been sometime married, otherwise would have undoubtedly owned the omnipotence of he'r early love, even at the church door; but with silvey overwhelmed him with invitations to family dinners and carpet dancers, in Guliford Street, and told him that Mary Jane, her seventh danghter, was far pretiency, cleverey, and more amiable than ever Anna Maria had been, and that it had always been her own private opinion that Mary Jane was ten times better suited to him as a wife.—Saville, however, resolutely repulsed the advances, not only of Mary Jane but of fifty Fanny, and Louisa's of his acquestion of the fifty Fanny, and Louisa's of his acquestion of the present of the control of the whole sex, when he was opinessed by the invitation cards and kind looks and speeches of the mothers and dauchters, who, a few menths before, had shunded him as a none-entry, or cut him as a detimential. He fig. speeches of the mothers and daughters, who, a few mouths before, had shunned him as a non-enity, or cut him as a detrimonial. He fels a thorough contempt and dist ste for them all and was only anxious to get out of their way. He had given up his situation in the India

House, and therefore he had no tie to London, and felt much tempted to accept a warm invitation to stop at the country seat of Sir Peregrine Dalling, to whom he had been 'troduced at a friend's house. Accordingly he wrote to meet Dr. Nelson, one of the leaders of the at a friend's house. Accordingly he wrote to the worthy baronet, telling him all his circum-stances and feelings, and all his dread of mer-cenary and husband-hunting beauties, and earnestly requested that he would never mention to any one at Allin, am the secret of his newly acquired wealth, or the resignation of the resignation of his situation, but would simply introduce him as what he lately was, a young man who had been labouring twelve years to gain four hun-dred per annum in the India House.

The baronet laughed heartily at the delicate and nervous susceptibility of his young friend, but promised secrecy, and as Allingham was a bundred miles from London, and Saville was ot in a rank of society to have his changes of forture and situation chronicled in the news-papers, it appeared likely that he would enjoy his wish of being considered as a poor man by the "womankind" of the neighborhood. NARRATIVE OF THE ESCAPE OF E. A. THELLES AND W. W. DODGE.

(From the Boston Post.)

These two gentlemen, who belonged to the Canadian patriot army, and were captured last spring, and condemned to death, arrived in this city yesterday, and put up at the Exchange, with a couple of friends. Dr. Theller is an Irishman by birth, but was brought up in the United States; afterwards went to Mont-real, where he married into a very respectable family. Mr. Dodge is a native of New Hamp Both were awaiting as prisoners in the of Quebec the ultimate decision of the British Home Government. Their escape fr of sentinels posted within and around the citadel was no less than thirty-nine. Still desperate as were the odds, they thought of which the nothing but expedients to escape, oped to effect on some stormy night, when e sentinels might seek the shelter of their boxes or the entrance porches of the pris than the elements, in the person of a cockney than the elements, in the person of a cockney sentinel—an elegant extract from Newgate— who was marvellously fond of beer, or, in lieu thereof PORTER. He was drugged to his heatt's content, and porter did its perfect work; and while he was snoring in a door-way the prisoners, who were in what is called a second casement, removed a bar from their window, and descended inside the outer wall, which surrounded the citadel like a shell.— As the sentinel was perfectly oblivious, the easily mounted the wall on the inside; and the only difficulty was to get down, its exterio height being some thirty feet. They com menced descending by the flag-staff, but their weight made it creek so much, that they fear-ed it would alarm the sentinels, and they concluded to drop down, in doing which they re-ceived several severe bruises.

They had still ten sentinels to avoid before they could reach a place of safety, among the inhabitants. Nine they cluded, but the tenth challenged them, but he was satisfied with an indifferent answer, and they gained a shelter; hut upon a change of guard, the condition of rhe beer-loving sentinel was discovered, and rhe beer-loving sentinel was discovered, and soon after, the escape of the prisoners. Instant search in every part of the city was commenced, and the prisoners had to change their hiding place five times before morning. In a day or two the impression prevailed that they had made their escape to Montreal, and a rigorous search was made for them, but they actually remained three weeks in Quebec. In actually remained three weeks in Quebec. In the meantime two of the "Sons of Liberty" were busy in completing arrangements for their safe excapt to the United States by the State of Maine, and on the 3rd November, horses being procured, they struck of for St. Marie armed and accounted like loyal militia Mane armed and accounted like loyal milities officers. From the Montreal Gazette of Tuesday last.

We understand that in compliance with instructions from the Colonial office, Sir John Colborne has laid before the Special Council a bill, to dispense with trial by Jury, for a time, at least. We hope it will speedily pass into a law, for as we said before, trial by Jury in Lower Ganada, is neither more nor less than a solemn farce, an implous mockery of an outh, and a blasphemeus insult to Aimig by God.

His Excellency has sent a steamer to Quebee to bring up the prisoners confined there for political offences, that they may be tried here by Court Martial. He has also requested Judges Bedard and Panet to furnish him with written reasons for their late decision in the ase of John Teed,

These movements of the troops have given rise to various reports in town, as to different places in Upper Canada being attacked by the sympathizers, which have no foundation whatever; the movements in question being merely res of precaution.

We have been favored with a copy of a communication sent by the Polish soi disant General Von Soult, of the brigand army to Col. Young, which we subjoin verbatim et literatim. The original was written on the back of an old

COMMANDER OF THE PATRIOT FORCES AT PRESCOT

From a Postscript in the Montreal Transcript of Thursday.

"We have just been informed, through a source that has not yet deceived us, that a force supposed to consist of about 3,000 Ameriapproaching Ogdensburgh winother attack upon Prescott."

An extraordinary of the Official Gazette was sublished on Tuesday last, containing a new ommission of the Peace for the District of Quebec. It differs materially from that of last year—the names of several gentlemen having been added; and those of the following, which appeared in former Commissions, being omitted in the present, viz.

Messrs. Thomas Baillairgé, L. T. Besserer,
Charles Caseault, Charles M. De Foy, Hypo-Charles Caseault, Charles M. De Foy, Hypo-lite Dubord, Edouard Glackemeyer, Alexis Godhout, Joseph Hamel, Victor Hamel, Wm. FIRE IN CHAMLAIN STREET, LAST NIGHT. A very extensive conflagration took place in Champlain Street, which, from the number of houses and extent of suffering which it must have caused is nearly as disasterous as any that has occurred in Quebec. The fire broke out about ten o'clock, in a house some distance beyond the Inclined Plane, owned and occupied by a Mrs. Graham, as a boarding occupied by a Mrs. Graham, as a boarding ing house; and was occasioned by some one incautiously leaving a candle in the garret, where a quantity of chips and shavings had been collected. The fire burned with great rapidity till it reached the greecry store of Mr. Hummel, destroying all the intermediate buildings on both sides of the street. The total number of houses destroyed is thirty-seven, on only three of which, it it said, any insurance had been effected. The sufferers to the greatonly three of which had been effected. est extent were Mr. Hummel, grocer, Mr. Dinning, butcher, and the heirs of the late James Young, boat builder.

THE PRINCIPLE OF DEATH.

So long as the principal of Life predominates, Health is enjoyed. When the principle of Death, Sickness takes place. How is this accounted for t

By the principle of Death, I mean the orinciple of decomposition or decay, which is each hour going on in the human frame from the hour of birth, to that of our final exit. While the natural outlets—the pores—the bowels—and all other directories of the body, discharge these decayed particles as fast as they are generated, we are in a state of health; we are free from the presence of the

And should the cause which procan remove, naturally and the cause which produces this state of the body remain, and nothing be done to drive the accumulated and actimulating impurities out of the body, the principle of death or decomposition, will become paramount, and the last glimmering of life depart from the once animated clay.

How then, shall we counteract these death

How then, shall we counter dispensing influences? How? PURGE! Yes—I say Purge!
The magic in that word shall yet be understood, if this hand or brain can accomplish so stood, if this hand or brain can accomplish so mighty an explanation. Yes, purged he that pain in the head, the back, the bowels, the foot, the stomach, the side, the throat. Does it arise from internal or external cause,—I still say purge!—For know this self-evident truth, that pain cannot exist, save by the pre-sence of some impurity—some deposite of decomposed particles upon the organ or part where the pain is seated, and nurging diswhere the pain is seated. And purging dis-charges this impurity by the bowels, and con-tinuing the practice daily will cure every tinuing the practice daily will cure every complication of disease; and will prevent any one from becoming seriously indisposed; even when in constant contact with the most malignant fevers which cannot by possibility seriously affect the body, if we are contaually careful to preserve it in a state, by frequent and effectual purgation. Hippocrates says, "Purgation expulses what must be expulsed, and patients find relief; if, on the conteary, they are tormented by purgation, it is a proof there are yet matters which must be expulsed."
