Mr. TAYLOR. When this order was made in both Committees, it was expected that these pamphlets would be printed and given to the members before the House rose. If the objection raised to-day is maintained, it will probably throw the matter back another week. This is a book purely in the interests of the farmers, as it gives them a report of the working of the Experimental Farm, and I am sure that the whole cost would not amount to much. We have three or four hon. gentlemen, who are conversant with printing matters, on the Agriculture Committee, and we were informed that the type was now set, of the Report of the Minister of Agriculture. I do not think the cost will amount to as much as some returns passed by this House which are of comparatively no benefit to the country. This book is of a great benefit to the farmers of the country, and it should be rushed through and distributed while the report is fresh, and not delayed until the members have returned to their homes.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Some hon. members of the House wish to give the impression that the setting of the type forms the principal part of the work. That is a mistake. The setting of the type is the smallest item in the publication of this book, or any book, especially one with a large number of pages. The presswork and cost of paper is the largest portion of the expense. I have no objection at all to the report being printed, but I think if the chairman of the Committee had been very anxious to forward the work, he would have presented the report before now. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) says this will delay the work a week; well, it is a week since the report was made. Why did not the chairman of the Committee bring his report to Parliament sooner, and then we would not have so much delay.

Mr. BERGIN. If the hon. gentleman had taken the objection to the printing, in the Committee, which he takes here, there would be no delay.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I have no objection to the printing, and the hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Bergin) knows that. He need not put a wrong construction on what I have said.

Motion allowed to stand.

SEED BARLEY.

Mr. McMULLEN asked, About what date do the Government expect the promised seed barley to arrive? Is it in bags in transit? Will it be forwarded immediately on arrival to the several applicants? Do the Government intend to distribute any portion of it to the several agricultural societies, free? If not, why not?

Mr. CARLING. A portion of the barley we expect to arrive next week, and the rest before the 1st of April. It was shipped at London in two-bushel bags. It will be forwarded immediately on its arrival to those who have applied for it. It is not the intention of the Government to distribute any portion of it to the agricultural societies—only to farmers.

FLAG'S COVE BREAKWATER.

Mr. GILLMOR asked, Whether the Public Works, or any member of the Government, has received a petition from the inhabitants of Grand Manan, Charlotte County, N.B., asking for the erection of a breakwater at Flag's Cove, north head of Grand Manan?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. A report was made in 1875 on harbors of refuge in Grand Manan, Flag's Cove being one of the harbors mentioned. The cost of the works required was estimated to be very large, namely, $90,000. A petition from the inhabitants was forwarded by the hon. Minister of Finance, on the 17th of February last, to my Department, praying for the construction of a breakwater at Flag's Cove; but we have had no additional information about it since 1875. If any other information is required, we shall require to have a new survey.

CROFTER IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin) asked, Whether the attention of the Government has been called to an article in the issue of 18th February of the Glasgow North British Daily Mail, a journal which has an extensive circulation in the Highlands and Islands of Scotland, describing the condition of crofters at Pelican Lake, brought out under special Acts of British and Dominion Governments? If so, if statements therein contained, that crofters are starving for lack of food and that appeals for aid are being made in Ontario for relief of these people, and if statement of Rev. Dr. Robertson, Superintendent of North-West Presbyterian Missions, that these people have been lured from their homes by misrepresentations made by Malcolm McNeil, Joint Commissioner for British and Dominion Governments, sent to Island of Lewis and other Islands of the Hebrides Group, are correct?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The attention of the Government has not been called to any article of the nature referred to in the North British Daily Mail; but attention has been directed to a letter of the Rev. Dr. Bryce, Chaplain of the St. Andrew's Society of Winnipeg, which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press of the 1st instant, and in which the reverend gentleman states that the report that any of the Scotch crofters in the North-West are in a starving condition, is a tissue of falsehood; that they are being well looked after; and that the Rev. Dr. Robertson has not been in the North-West since the 1st of October last. It will thus be seen that Dr. Robertson has no means of knowing what the condition of the crofters is except by hearsay, and that the allegation that they are in want has been denied in the strongest language by one who may safely be assumed to speak with personal knowledge of the facts. Dr. Bryce's statement, it may be added, is confirmed by numerous reports received during the winter from the agent of the Colonisation Board, who resides among and is in charge of the crofters. The Government have no knowledge of any misrepresentations made to the crofters by Mr. McNeil or anybody else. All that was ever promised to them on behalf of the Dominion Government was land to the extent and on the conditions as to the actual residence and cultivation mentioned in the homestead provisions of the Dominion Lands Act, and that promise has been faithfully kept.

AGRICULTURAL BULLETINS.

Mr. DAVIN asked, Whether the Minister of Agriculture intends to act on the suggestion of W. B. Scarth, member for Winnipeg, and have the bulletins from the Agricultural Farm printed in German?

Mr. CARLING. Considering the sparseness of the German population at present in the North-West, it is not the intention of the Government to have the bulletins of the Agricultural Farm printed in the German language.

I. C. R.—FREIGHT CHARGES.

Mr. JONES (Halifax) asked, What is the rate of freight charged per ton on coals carried on the Intercolonial Railway from Stellarton to Londonderry, for the use of the Steel Company of Canada at that place?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Thirty cents per ton.

I. C. R.—SUPPLIES.

Mr. JONES (Halifax) asked, Whether all supplies required for the Intercolonial Railway are secured by contract? If so, is it by public notice, or by private notice sent only to friends of the Government?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Supplies are secured by tender and contract. It is not done by public notice, neither is it by sending private notice to the friends of the Government only. Circular forms of tender are sent to those in the various trades.

MR. P. R. A. BELANGER.

Mr. DESSAINT asked, Whether Mr. P. R. A. Belanger, civil engineer, of L'Islet, is in the employment of the Government of Canada; if so, what is the nature of his work? Has he any contract with the Government, or with any of its Departments; if so, what is the nature of that contract, and when does it expire?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Mr. Belanger is not in the employment of the Government of Canada. He has not any contract with the Government, nor with any of the Departments, so far as I know, at present.

ACCOUNT OF ELIE MOREAU.

Mr. THÉRIEN asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government soon to pay the account of Elie Moreau, advocate, of Sorel, for fees in re The Queen vs. Boucher?

Mr. HAGGART. A cheque for the amount of Mr. Moreau's account, $300, was to-day sent to the Department of Justice for payment to Mr. Moreau.

ROTARY SNOW-PLOUGHS.

Mr. McMULLEN asked, Whether P. S. Archibald, of the Intercolonial Railway at Moncton, has reported upon the "Rotary" snow-ploughs as being inefficient—in fact, useless? If these are not his words, what were the words used by him in reporting on them?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. P. S. Archibald's statement is as follows:—

"It is quite evident, from our trials of these machines and the admissions of the engineer sent from New York, that they are of no use to us."

The Chief Engineer and General Manager of Government Railways does not concur in Mr. P. S. Archibald's statements. He is satisfied that they will prove of very great service. The Rotary snow-shovel has done splendid service on the Central Pacific Railway, the Union Pacific Railway, the Northern Pacific Railway, the Canadian Pacific Railway and other lines of railway, and there is not the slightest doubt that it will do so on the Intercolonial Railway. The trial reported on by Mr. Archibald was made on the River du Loup Town Branch in the approach of spring, no train having been over the road during the winter; hence thick layers of ice were found, which the machines could not cut.

CAUGHNAWAGA INDIAN COUNCIL.

Mr. DOYON asked, Whether the Government, in January last, instructed the Indian Agent on the Caughnawaga Reserve to write to certain members of the Council of that Reserve the following letter:—

"I have the honor to inform you that there will be a meeting of the Council of the Indian Reserve of Caughnawaga, on Monday, 27th January instant, at 11 a.m., for the general business of the tribe, at which you are requested to attend, and that I am instructed by the Department to notify you that, unless you attend the meetings of the Council of the reserve, so as to conduct the affairs of the tribe, a recommendation will be made advising your removal from your position as a member of the Council, and another person will be elected in your place.

(Signed) "A. BROUSSEAU,
"Indian Agent."

If so, for what reason, and at whose suggestion or recommendation? Is it the intention of the Government to execute the threat, and what are their reasons for so acting?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The Department of Indian Affairs instructed its agent at Caughnawaga to inform certain members of the council of the band to the effect of the letter addressed to such members by the Indian agent. The suggestion or recommendation was made on the report of the Indian agent, who stated that the members in question would not attend the council meetings, or, if they did, that they left without taking any part in the proceedings, thus rendering the meetings of the council inoperative. A recommendation will be made to the Honorable the Privy Council that the obstructive members of the council be deposed from their position and an election of other parties in their places be held.

LUNDY'S LANE.

Mr. FERGUSON (Welland) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, it is expedient that the Government of the Dominion should take steps as soon as possible to enquire how best to honor and perpetuate the memory of the men who lost their lives in defending their country at the battle of 'Lundy's Lane,' and to preserve from desecration their last resting-place in the Military Cemetery at Niagara Falls, in accordance with the prayer of the petitions presented to this House.

He said: I would ask the indulgence of the House while I make a few historical references with regard to the war of 1812, and the battle of Lundy's Lane in particular, for the purpose of showing that it was not a war of our choosing, nor was it a war sanctioned by the majority of the better thinking people of America. Hon. gentlemen will remember the condition of things at that time and the position of England. England was well nigh exhausted by a twenty years struggle against the continental powers of Europe, in which she had been fighting for constitutional liberties and the freedom of mankind against the greatest military genius of that day, Napoleon I. It will be remembered also by the House that the irritation in the United States caused by the War of Independence had not yet subsided; and the world saw the extraordinary spectacle of the new Republic of the West joining hands—and I say it without any desire to cast any reflections upon him—with the arch-despot of Europe, for the purpose of fighting the only one power then existing which was struggling for constitutional liberty and the freedom of mankind. The House will remember also—and I make these few references as briefly as possible—the decree of Napoleon issued at Berlin, in which he declared all ports of the British Empire blockaded, and prevented any letters written in English passing through the post offices, not only of France, but of any other country of Europe over which he had control—and he had control over most of them; and in which he made liable to arrest and imprisonment every British subject and every man who spoke the English language on the Continent of Europe, and declared that all goods coming from Great Britain or any of her colonies were subject to confiscation, and the vessels which bore them subject to destruction. This decree was issued in 1806, and in 1807 the celebrated Orders in Council were passed by the British Government retaliating on Napoleon for this decree. The action of the United States at that time will also be remembered, with regard to seamen found upon British vessels; but when I say the United States, I mean only a political party of the United States, for the people as a whole were averse to that action. The United States Government encouraged the desertion of British seamen; they put them upon American vessels and declared them to be American subjects. Great Britain had at that time, and all times previous, asserted her right to search vessels for deserters of that kind; and in order to do away with this difficulty between the two nations, a treaty was entered into between Great Britain and the United States. This treaty was passed by the United States Senate and by the House of Congress, but President Jefferson refused to ratify it, and so it became inoperative. Matters thus went on until 1812, in July of which year war was declared by President Madison—a defensive war, as he called it, but the first act of which was to invade Canada with a large army which had been for months prepared for that purpose. The Emperor Napoleon in 1812 rescinded his decree so far as it affected American vessels; and he dated back his rescission some twelve months, so that it appeared to have been rescinded in 1811. The Orders in Council, so far as they related to American shipping, were revoked on the 24th of June, 1812, and on the 18th June, six days prior, war was declared by President Madison. An armistice was entered into between Sir George Prevost, Governor General of Canada, and General Dearborn, of the United States Army, to give the two nations time to come to some mutual arrangement and prevent bloodshed if possible; but President Madison again refused to ratify the arrangement, so that war was forced upon our people. I desire to show to the House that it was not a war endorsed by the best thinking people of the United States against Canada or Great Britain at that time. In the Senate of the United States that declaration of war was only carried by six of a majority—thirteen having voted against, and nineteen in favor of, the war. The Legislatures of Massachusetts, Connecticut and New Jersey, all passed resolutions condemning the war; and I desire to read to the House the celebrated resolution passed at Albany by representatives of nearly every county in the State of New York. The resolution reads as follows:—

“That without insisting on the injustice of the present war, taking solely into consideration the time and circumstances of its declaration, the condition of the country, and the state of the public mind, we are constrained to consider, and feel it our duty to pronounce it a most rash, unwise and inexpedient measure, the adoption of which ought forever to deprive its authors of the esteem and confidence of an enlightened people; because, as the injuries we have received from France are at least equal in amount to those we have sustained from England, and have been attended with circumstances of still greater insult and aggravation; if war were necessary to vindicate the honor of the country, consistency and impartiality required that both nations should have been included in the declaration; because, if it were deemed expedient to exercise our right of selecting our adversary, prudence and common sense dictated the choice of an enemy of whose hostility we had nothing to dread. A war with France would equally have satisfied our insulted honor, and, at the same time, instead of annihilating, would have revived and extended our commerce; and, even the evils of such a contest would have been mitigated by the sublime consolation that by our own efforts we were contributing to arrest the progress of despotism in Europe, and effectually serving the great interests of freedom and humanity throughout the world. That we contemplate with abhorrence even the probability of an alliance with the present Emperor of France, every action of whose life has demonstrated that the attainment by any means, of universal empire, and the consequent extinction of every vestige of freedom, are the sole object of his incessant and unbounded and remorseless ambition. Whereas, the late revocation of the British Orders in Council has removed the great and ostensible cause of the present war, and prepared the way for an immediate accommodation of all existing differences, inasmuch as, by the confession of the present Secretary of State, satisfactory and honorable arrangements might easily be made by which the abuse resulting from the imprisonment of our seamen might, in future, be effectually prevented.”

I read this to show that the better class of the American people, the thinking class of people in the United States, had nothing against Canadians, and nothing against Britain as a whole, but the Democrats at that time were eager and anxious for a war, they were eager and anxious to estrange these colonies from Great Britain in order to connect them with the United States. At that time there were only 6,000 British regulars in Canada to defend a frontier of 1,500 miles. It is well known that the population was only about 300,000, while the United States had a population of 8,000,000. Every member is aware that, when war was declared, there were no people in Canada who took such active and energetic steps to defend the country and resist that invasion as the people of French Canada. The Government of Lower Canada passed army bills amounting £250,000, or about $1,000,000, and not only that, but Lower Canada took vigorous steps to organise its militia and to place them at the disposal of the military authorities in order to defend this country against foreign invasion. While Lower Canada had a larger population at that time than Upper Canada, the French Province not only contributed towards defending their own part of the country, but all the means they could afford in addition to that were sent to Upper Canada to assist those people who were suffering distress in consequence of the war. I will speak cursorily in regard to the troops who were assembled upon the frontier at that time by the Americans. Those troops were intended to invade Canada at three points, Detroit, the Niagara River, and Lake Champlain. Niagara stood the brunt of the whole war, and the gallant volunteers on the field of Lundy's Lane ended the fight. The American general had 11,162 men under his command. The full strength of the British force distributed from York to Long Point did not exceed 3,000 men. The number of regular troops was only 1,800 to guard the Niagara frontier, and, in addition, they had only 450 militia and Indians along a frontier thirty-six miles long. After Fort Riall, Fort Erie and Fort George were garrisoned, only 700 men remained of the regulars available on the Niagara frontier. The American troops, under Generals Winfield Scott, Brown and Ripley, crossed at Fort Erie with 5,000 men and nine field-pieces, and reduced Fort Erie, which was garrisoned by 121 men. They marched to Chippewa, where a desperate struggle ensued, General Riall losing 500 men, or one-third of his whole force. General Drummond sailed from Toronto and joined Riall at Lundy's Lane. Riall was retreating from General Scott, but he was recalled and they again engaged the enemy. The whole British force at Lundy's Lane, was 2,800, of whom 1,500 were volunteers. They consisted of boys and men raised in the neighborhood, the descendants of the old U. E. Loyalists, and the blood of former days, of the days of the Independence fight, rose in their veins and they showed all the valor of their forefathers. The American force at Lundy's Lane under Generals Scott, Brown and Ripley, amounted to 5,000 men with 9 field-pieces. The British volunteers were badly equipped, and ranged in age from boys of 15 up to men of 50 and over. The farms were deserted, and left in the hands of the women and the girls. A story was told me by the grandmother of a foreman who works for me, that, during the day's battle, she was on the ground herself with girls and women of the neighborhood, carrying water to the soldiers who were their fathers, their sons, their husbands and their brothers, and were nursing and taking care of the wounded and the dying. When only 10 years of age, she helped to carry her brother, 16 years of age, who had been shot, from the field of battle. The fight was very deadly, it was probably the most deadly that ever took place on this continent in proportion to the numbers engaged, and the loss of the British was very severe. Of the British troops, 5 officers and 76 men were killed, 30 officers and 532 men were wounded, and 14 officers and 219 men were missing, having been taken prisoners. Of the Americans, 11 officers and 160 men were killed, 50 officers and 520 men were wounded, and a great many prisoners were taken. It will be remembered that Newark and St. David's were burned, and that nearly all the houses in that neighborhood were destroyed by fire. There is no use in now attempting to show what were the fighting qualities of the volunteers who were engaged on that occasion, but I desire to give you the last words of that celebrated soldier, General Brock, after he fell in ascending Queenston Heights. He had proceeded with a few men from the 49th, and a few who were gathered on the way, to ascend Queenston Heights, in order to dislodge the enemy. He was shot and wounded and died at the foot of the hill. His last words, when his soldiers were endeavoring to care for him, were: "Never mind me; push on the York volunteers." So that he was depending entirely upon the York volunteers to fight the great battle of Queenston Heights, which was, as we all know, afterwards won. It was won by the York volunteers, by the men and boys with shot guns in their hands, that were gathered in from the surrounding country. General Brock also said that:

"Had not the men of western Canada rose in their might in the defence of their rights and in support of the British Constitution, his hands would have been tied, being without the aid of British regulars."

General Drummond said of the volunteers during that war:

"The bravery of the militia on this (Lundy's Lane) occasion could not have been excelled by the most resolute veterans."

Now, Sir, the loyal inhabitants of this country in those days of trial and distress stood well by their country and by the British Constitution, and I say they deserve well at our hands, for had it not been for the bravery of these men and boys and women, this country to-day might have been in the hands of the American Union. Some people might say that would not have been a great loss to us, but I say it would have been a great loss to us, because it is my conviction that the institutions of this Dominion have succeeded in moulding the institutions on the other side of the line. We have maintained that liberty and that freedom for which Britain has fought for the last thousand years, and during many of those centuries Great Britain stood alone in a great conflict for parliamentary institutions and for the freedom of mankind at large. Now, there is no place where, during the war of 1812-13-14, a battle took place in which the volunteers were so well represented as at Lundy's Lane; they were so well represented that 1,600 out of the 2,800 of the home force who fought that battle were volunteers. Sir, in conclusion, I think I can appeal with confidence to this House, in the names of our self-sacrificing forefathers, to preserve in some way from desecration, their last resting-places, I think we ought to recognise in some way the services of our fathers, and our forefathers, and of our mothers and their children, in defending our native land in those days. I think I can appeal with confidence to this House and to this country to take some means suitably to perpetuate their memory, and to mark with honor the resting-place of those who fought in the battle of Lundy's Lane.

Mr. HICKEY. I have the honor to represent a county in which a memorable battle was fought on the 11th November, 1813—I refer to the battle of Chrysler's Farm. I do not intend to go into the particulars of this battle, as was done by the mover of this resolution, in the battle of Lundy's Lane. We are glad such places are few and far between in Canada, but we recognise not the less clearly, because three-quarters of a century and more has passed by, that these battle-fields are like corner stones in our national edifice, corner stones which have been well and truly laid, and cemented by that blood which, all over the world, has been freely shed for the flag that is the emblem of liberty and freedom, and the superstructure which has been reared upon this foundation, we rejoice to know, has from year to year become more beautiful and grand. These historic fields of Mars are not peculiar to Canada. Every country has its special scenes of triumph, and while these have been marked in other countries by suitable memorials, we have yet many fields of honor to decorate. Sympathising, as I do, with the mover of this motion, in the motion itself, and with the words he has uttered, I wish to endorse most sincerely his arguments and his prayer. I would like to see monuments erected on all our battlefields, not only on account of the national sentiments they would engender, but also in order to reflect the gratitude of the people over the graves of those who sleep in honor, though under the unhallowed grass of a neglected cemetery. Yes, Mr. Speaker, the dead sleep in honor, the wounded bled for their country, and both deserve the gratitude of those who possess their heritage. Nor must we forget those few veterans who still survive, fighting in memory their battles o'er again; while their shadows are nearly paralleled by the rays of the setting sun. It is true they have received some recognition from this Parliament by a small pension which has been paid them for some years, but it is due to them also, that they may see that their fallen comrades are remembered by a grateful country. Theirs were noble hearts—brave men who, against great odds of over two to one, in the battle of Chrysler's Farm, maintained their country's honor and achieved a famous victory; and I would like to realise, that over their graves will blossom flowers that bloom not over slaves. I have said it was a famous victory, and I will trouble the House with a few citations from history in reference to that famous battle. I will quote from a sketch of the County of Dundas by Mr. James Croil, who, after describing that battle, says:

"Thus terminated the battle of 'Chrysler's Farm,' and, with the defeat of the American army here, vanished all hopes, during that campaign at least, of carrying out their designs upon Lower Canada. The conduct of British troops, regulars and militia, was beyond all praise, and elicited the encomiums even of their opponents. The devoted loyalty of the militia is thus noticed by Wilkinson in his report from Salmon River, dated the 16th of November, 1813: 'The enemy deserves great credit for their zeal and intelligence, which the active universal hostility of the male inhabitants of the country enabled them to employ to the greatest advantage.' Ingersoll, the American historian, speaks in terms of the highest praise of the conduct of the British and Canadian troops. For the persevering and invincible spirit in which they met a formidable invasion, and forced Wilkinson to a dishonored retreat, when, had they been well led, there was every pledge of victory.' Morrison (who, by the way, was a U. E. loyalist from Rhode Island), in his report of the battle to head-quarters, testified to the distinguished bravery of the regulars and militia under his command. * * *

Allison alludes to the battle thus: 'The glorious defeat of an invasion so confidently announced, and so strongly supported, diffused the most heartfelt joy in Lower Canada, and terminated the campaign there in the most triumphant manner.'

"Christie says of it: 'This, called the battle of Chrysler's Farm, is, in the estimation of military men, considered the most scientific military affair during the late war, from the professional skill displayed in the action by the adverse commanders; and when we consider the prodigious preparations of the American Government for that expedition, with the failure of which their hopes of conquest vanished, the battle of Chrysler's Farm may probably be classed as the most important, and best fought, that took place during the war.'

Thus, Mr. Speaker, you will see that the motto of Canada for Canadians, is not a new one. Our fathers adopted it, their bravery enshrined it, and shall we, their loyal and dutiful sons, forget to do honor to whom most honor is due? I hope not. The request which has been made in this motion, to build some suitable memorial at Lundy's Lane, and on our other battle-fields needs no argument from me or from any one else. History, which teaches by example, is our best philosophy, and to history we appeal. If it is called sentiment, we say all the best thoughts and actions of our lives have had a similar origin. These ties of sentiment which keep and preserve nations as well as families, are more indissoluble bonds than laws can possibly create, and which, if crystallised or made manifest in some substantial way, lay the foundation of a nation's pride, of a nation's enthusiasm and of a nation's patriotism. What British boy, as he stands and reads the inscription on any of the many monuments erected to the memory of Lord Nelson, does not feel his bosom swell with pride when he thinks of his glorious deeds, and when he remembers that, as his fathers were, he, too, is his countryman? Only a few days ago a large deputation waited upon the Minister of Education in Ontario and asked that our country's flag might be hoisted over our collegiate institutes and high schools on the anniversary days of these important events. I have no doubt the request will be granted. This fact is an indication to this House, and to the Government, and to the Minister of Militia, that this country expects and demands that this regard shall be paid to its dead heroes. It behooves us, then, to make "Canadian" a still prouder name by discharging this well demonstrated duty of veneration and of gratitude to departed worth.

Mr. DENISON. After the eloquent speeches of the mover of the motion and of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, I intend to occupy the time of the House but a few moments while I add a word endorsing this resolution. When we reflect on the condition of Canada in 1812, when we consider there were less than 6,000 British troops in all Canada and less than 4,000 militia, when we reflect that the population of the United States was twenty-six to one as compared with that of Canada, the victories achieved show what can be accomplished by an united people defending their homes and firesides. It affords conclusive proof as to what a small population can do if they work unitedly. In visiting in the summer 1884, the cemetery where the heroes lie who were killed in the action in Lundy's Lane, I regretted to observe the dilapidated condition of the graves. The monuments are out of place, and generally the whole place has an untidy and a neglected appearance. I hope this House will grant such a sum of money as will place these monuments in order now. When they will remain good during the next fifty years. I also wish to endorse the idea thrown out by the last speaker, that something should be done, not only to mark the spot at Lundy's Lane, but also Stoney Creek and Beaver Dam and other memorable places. It is greatly to be regretted that any student of history, on visiting these grounds, has difficulty in ascertaining where the actions were fought; and a very small sum placed in the Estimates would mark these spots, so that in future no such trouble could arise. I hope this House will in its wisdom see fit to do something towards this object.

Mr. EDGAR. I sympathise, to a considerable extent, with the motion that has been made and with the speeches that have been delivered. While it might be well for the Government to give a small sum towards this object, I think it should be supplemented by voluntary contributions from the people of Canada, and I believe that could easily be done. I know very well the battle-ground of Lundy's Lane, which is in the constituency of the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Ferguson), and I have often traced on the ground the course of that fierce conflict, and I do not think in the whole range of history we can find a description of a battle more bravely fought than was the battle of Lundy's Lane. It was fought in the darkness of the night, within the sound of the falls of Niagara, and the field was contested for hours and hours, one army holding possession of it after the other; and I am sure it would be impossible for us to do justice to the bravery of our own Canadian volunteers and the British regulars who were engaged there, without also doing justice to the bravery of their opponents, of their enemies, of the American soldiers who so bravely fought there. And we also should remember that in this same graveyard at Drummondville, there rest the remains of the brave American soldiers who fell on that field, and I think, it would be only a graceful act, if our Government chooses to contribute something towards the purpose suggested to-day, if the American Government and the American people were asked to contribute something also, to place the names of their soldiers who fell in that fight, upon that monument. We see, in Quebec, the names of Wolfe and Montcalm inscribed on the same monument, and I am sure it would tend towards smoothing the feelings between the Americans and the people of Canada if, in the event of our Government doing something of this kind, they would invite the American people or the American Government to place the names of their dead upon the memorial that may be erected there.

Mr. COOK. I have much sympathy with the proposition made by the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Ferguson). I believe it is in the interests of the country that we should mark with some monument the place where lies the dust of the heroes in the battle fought at Lundy's Lane. But I would extend the suggestion further. The decisive battle was fought at Chrysler's Farm, and that was the end of the war. On the morning of the battle they retired to Bouck's ravine. The British forces attacked them there, they being only one to eleven of the American forces. After struggling for some time at that point, the British, under a feint, retired. The American forces, thinking they had won the day, followed up with cheers what they supposed to be a victory, until they arrived at the intervening point of Chrysler's Farm, a 200-acre farm surrounded by a large stone wall. The British forces had retired behind that wall, and when the Americans arrived within two or three yards of the wall, the British troops rose, fired and cheered—and that was the end of the war. While I submit it is right and proper that a monument should be placed at Queenston Heights to commemorate the great battle there, I think a memorial should also be placed at Chrysler's Farm in the County of Dundas, which is represented by the hon. gentleman who addressed the House a few moments ago. As one who was brought up in that county and whose ancestors fought in that battle, I have very great and strong sympathies with this proposition. We know that the U. E. Loyalists were the principal parties who were engaged in that contest, and some honor should be done to them, and while I believe we should commemorate the Queenston Heights struggle, we should not forget the decisive battle at Chrysler's Farm.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am sure we are all very much indebted to the hon. gentleman who has brought before the House in such an interesting manner the historical reminiscences of one of the most glorious pages of Canadian history. I preserve the most lively recollection of one of the most pleasant visits which it has been my good fortune to pay, to the historical battle-field of Lundy's Lane. It was made on 25th July last, and I had the pleasure and advantage of being accompanied on that trip by my hon. friend the member for Welland, by the hon. member for Hamilton, and by other hon. gentlemen who for years have taken such a deep interest in this subject and have displayed so much zeal in bringing before the House and before the country the importance for us as a people, and as Canadians, of perpetuating the memory of those brave deeds of our ancestors and of commemorating those passages of our history which have cast so much glory upon the Canadian people. I was on that occasion the guest of the Lundy's Lane Historical Society, and if I may be permitted to take advantage of this opportunity, I should like to express the opinion, that to the Historical Society of Lundy's Lane, every true Canadian patriot, and every student of history, is largely indebted for the zeal and energy they have shown in accumulating, and preserving for the inspection of the public, the souvenirs of that memorable battle. Their museum, which it was my good fortune to visit, is most interesting from an historical standpoint. The descendants of those who bled and died at the battle of Lundy's Lane handed over to the Historical Society, from patriotic motives, family heirlooms which had been treasured by them ever since the battle. Other relics of the campaign of 1812, and other relics of this battle, were collected by the zealous secretary of the Lundy's Lane Historical Society, and by the other gentlemen who have combined together to contribute their mite towards giving a new lustre to the history of Canada, and towards commemorating the deeds of the British troops and the Canadian volunteers at that battle. I cannot better express to this House the views which are entertained in relation to the battle of Lundy's Lane, and in relation to the other battle-fields of Canada, than by reading one of the petitions which has been forwarded to the Government of Canada, and by telling the House what course has been taken by the Government in relation to these petitions. I will read the following petition:—

"To the Honorable the House of Commons of the Dominion of Canada, in Parliament assembled:—

"The petition of the undersigned loyal subjects of Her Majesty, Queen Victoria, humbly sheweth as follows:—

"That within the boundaries of the village of Niagara Falls, formerly Drummondville, Ontario, on the highest point of land along the frontier of Niagara River, is situated the battle-field of 'Lundy's Lane,' whereon was fought the most severe and decisive battle in the war of 1812-14. It is a matter of history well known to Your Honorable House that this battle decided the issues of that eventful war; that there were engaged in the battle, on the British side, 1,600 volunteers, with Indian warriors, chiefly of the Home, Gore and Niagara districts, besides 1,200 regulars (of Regiments 89th Royal Scots, 41st, 3rd Buffs, 19th Light Dragoons, 104th N. B.) under Generals Drummond and Riall, while the American forces were 5,000 strong, under Generals Brown, Scott, and Ripley. The British loss was 870 killed and wounded; the American loss 930, and 300 taken prisoners. The number of the dead was so great, and the heat of summer excessive, that the British, who held possession of the field, were unable to bury friend and foe alike, and accordingly, on the second day, sent a message to the enemy, who had retired three miles to Chippawa, to send back a detachment to bury their dead. This duty the American General was unable to fulfil, leaving it to General Drummond to order the burning of some 200 American bodies, of which fact there are at this date a few witnesses living. There was at the time a village burying-ground on the hill, which then became a military cemetery. It is seventy-five years since that memorable battle—July 25th, 1814—and in all these years no care has been bestowed on the burial trenches to preserve them from desecration, and no public memorial to mark the place, or to honor or perpetuate the memories of those regulars, Indian warriors and volunteers, who fell then and there in defence of their King and country, and of this key to Western Ontario, save the erection of a very few headstones by friends of individuals among the gallant dead.

"Your petitioners would respectfully draw the attention of your honorable House to the fact that during the past year the residents in the neighborhood of this historical battle-field have, with some success, endeavored to arouse the interest of the Canadian militia and people in the work of the preservation of the ground and in the erection of some suitable public memorial to the honor, not only of British regulars, but of our Canadian volunteers, who died fighting in defence of their homes—and with that end in view have formed a local society known as the 'Lundy's

Lane Historical Society.' They feel, however, that a movement of this nature should not be local, but national; and we draw the attention of your honorable body, the representative assembly of Canada, to the patriotic duty of perpetuating the memories of those loyal defenders of our country who fell on the battle-field of Lundy's Lane, and, similarly, the memory of Mrs. Laura Secord, the heroine of Beaver Dam, seven miles distant, who rendered valuable aid to a small British garrison there, 23rd June, 1813. She died in later years, aged ninety-three, and is interred in Lundy's Lane cemetery, without any public memorial at her neglected grave.

"Your petitioners would respectfully ask your honorable House for a grant of money towards Lundy's Lane Memorial Fund, to be entrusted to the County Council of Welland, Ont. (who have consented to act on the Executive and Trust Committee), or as may otherwise seem best in your wisdom.

"And your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

(Sd.) "COL. DUNCAN MACFARLANE,
"Present at the battle of Lundy's Lane.
"WM. KING, Niagara.
"GEORGE STEELE.
"And nineteen others.

"NIAGARA, 16th February, 1888."

These petitions, one of which I have read, have not been overlooked in any way by the Government. They thought it would be better, in dealing with a question of this kind, to appoint a sub-committee of Council, and a sub-committee was consequently appointed, consisting of my hon. and esteemed friend and colleague, the Minister of Customs, and myself, to consider this question. I must say (and it is a very great pleasure to me to be able to give testimony to the House on this point) that these deeds of our forefathers, these memorable acts of valor which were displayed on this battle-field, and so many others in Canada, are every day attracting more and more the attention of the Canadian people. I am one of those who believe that a people who has a history is a fortunate people, and I believe it is the bounden duty of every man, who feels in his heart a love for his country, that he should by every means in his power contribute to give to that history all the lustre it can possibly acquire, by being transmitted from generation to generation, as an example to those who will follow us, and who will learn from these deeds of valor, the acts of patriotism which those who fought at Lundy's Lane, and at other battles, have handed down to posterity. I express my personal views upon this question, and I say, that we, as an assembly, constituted as we are, should contribute to a certain extent to build up monuments upon these places which have been celebrated by acts of valor and deeds of heroism, such as have taken place at Lundy's Lane, at Chrysler's Farm and other memorable spots. I believe it is of the greatest importance that we should perpetuate the memory of those loyal defenders of our country who fell on the battle-fields of Canada. But I think that my hon. friend's motion may not possibly go just as far as it should. As the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Cook) has said, great as was the day of Lundy's Lane, great as was the lustre cast on our history by the deeds of our Canadian volunteers, and the Imperial troops and Indian warriors who aided them on that occasion, if anything is done, I think it should apply not only to Lundy's Lane, but to all the battle-fields we have in Canada. It may possibly be of some little interest to this House and the country to know that for many years past—as far back even as the time when this country was handed over from France to England

Sir ADOLPHE CARON.

—we have been progressing in that direction. We have in Canada to-day several monuments, the erection of which has been instigated, no doubt, by the same patriotic feelings which instigated the hon. gentleman in making the motion he has done to-day. We have at Quebec, that old battle-field of Canada—on the Plains of Abraham, and also in the city of Quebec itself—monuments to the memory of the two great warriors, Wolfe and Montcalm, who fought at that time on opposite sides. We have at Ste. Foye the monument erected to the memory of the braves of 1760, who fought in about the last battle that took place on that old historic battle-field between the French and the English; and hon. gentlemen who have visited that city of Champlain may remember, that that monument is crowned by a bronze statue, which was presented to Canada by Prince Napoléon, shortly after a visit by him to this country. We have a monument erected to the memory of that hero of Canadian volunteers, DeSalaberry, at Chambly, near Montreal. We have one erected in Montreal to that hero of so many naval battles, Nelson. We have the monument erected on Queenston Heights to the memory of Brock. We have in Halifax one to the memory of Welsford and Parker. We have one to the volunteers of 1885 in Winnipeg. We have, at Port Hope, the monument to Lieut.-Col. Williams, one of our colleagues in this House, who has cast his share of glory on the name of our Canadian volunteers. We have the monument at Brantford erected to Brant. We have one erected to Sir George Cartier, on Parliament square in Ottawa, showing that not only is military valor appreciated in Canada, but that civil service also finds a reward among the people of Canada, whom he served so faithfully and well. We have another erected in Toronto to that other great political name, George Brown, who fell a victim to an assassin. We have one erected in Three Rivers to Laviolette, that discoverer in our early history. We have one to Jacques Cartier in Quebec. We have one on the Saguenay, erected to the memory of the Honorable David Price, who for many years was a member of the Legislature of the Canadian House of Commons, and afterwards became a member of the other House. We have the monument of the Sharpshooters at Ottawa, which I am glad to say not only does honor to the valor of two of the Ottawa boys, but as a work of art casts a great deal of glory on the gentleman who moulded it. These are the monuments which have been erected in Canada; but I would ask the House, and the country, whether, having erected all these, we are going to stop midway? We know that there are only a few more to be erected to commemorate the deeds of those who have distinguished themselves in the history of the country. We ought to have monuments, I think, on the Burlington Heights, at Amherstburg, at Lundy's Lane, at Stony Creek, at Chrysler's Farm, at Chateauguay, at Beaver Dam, at Odelltown, at Lacolle, and at Montreal to Maisonneuve, the founder of that city. So far as my historical recollection goes, without having had time to prepare myself—and I am quite open to correction if I have left out any—I think that we have to erect altogether about ten monuments, not to cover the whole of our history, but to follow in the wake of those who have given us the example by erecting the monuments of which I have given a list to the House; and I sincerely hope that this design will appeal to the patriotic feeling of every true Canadian, whether on one side of the House or on the other, whether being a member of Parliament or being outside of Parliament, and that the work will be taken up as soon as possible and completed. In carrying out the views of the sub-committee of which I have spoken, I thought I might possibly help the historical societies who so kindly invited me to meet them, by having a small plan prepared in my own Department by the architect, which might be sent to the historical societies, and which I intend to submit to my colleagues in Council, with an estimate of what these monuments would cost. I think we should not go in for anything in the way of very expensive monuments. What we want to do is to educate our people in our—their own history. What we want is to put up monuments, so that when people visit any of our battle-fields, they will find a monument with an inscription, having the date of the action, if it is to commemorate an action, and a few details about it. Such monuments would be a practical lesson in history to those who will follow us. In having the plans for these monuments prepared, which I shall have much pleasure in placing on the Table of the House, I was told that they would cost about $1,000 each. I do not say that we should build all these monuments in one year, but I consider that this is a very small amount of money, considering the good it would do. If we teach patriotism to our people, and educate them to love their country and to revere the deeds of those who have preceded them, it would be a practical lesson in everything which makes a man better, in everything which makes him love his country more intensely; and I think we could very well afford to contribute that small amount of $10,000 to achieve so much. Now, Sir, if my hon. friend would permit me, I would beg leave to propose that his motion be amended so as to read as follows:—

Resolved, That, in the opinion of this House, it is expedient that the Government of the Dominion should take steps as soon as possible to enquire how best to honor and perpetuate the memory of the men who lost their lives in defending their country during the war of 1812, and to preserve from desecration the last resting-places of those brave men on the battle-fields where they gave their lives for Canada.

I think that would cover, without mentioning all the different places which I had occasion to refer to, the whole ground, and would permit us, if it be considered advisable, to have a small, inexpensive monument built at each place where one should be erected.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman has not mentioned the name of Tecumseh.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. That is one I left out, but it should not be left out, because he took great care of Canadian interests when called on to do so. I will add his name to the list I have just read. I was happy to hear my hon. friend refer to the part which French Canada, as he called it, took in the memorable campaign of 1812. French Canada was then merely doing its duty in defending the country which we claim to be ours, and which we love to the same extent as any other nationality in Her Majesty's dominions; and possibly the successful solution of the troubles of 1812 was due to the fact that in the presence of immediate danger, French, English, Irish, Scotch and every nationality in Canada forgot their own individual nationality and remembered only that they were Canadians. It is sufficient but to read a list of names to show that these battles were fought by every nationality composing the Canadian people at the time. I will only mention those who appear to have shone in the front rank:—Generals Brock, Vincent, Drummond, Riall; Colonels Taschereau, Godefroi de Tonnacour, Chartier de Lotbinière, Leprohon, Desrivières, DeLery; Major de Salaberry; Captains De Barch, Viger, Fitzgibbons, Rouville, Duchesne, Panet, de Beaujeu, d'Orsemens, Taché, Papineau, de Boucherville, Cuvillier; Commodore Yeo; Captain Frederic Rolette, the most glorious seaman of that period on the great lakes, and Captain Toussaint Pothier, also of the great lakes. The names of Voltigeurs Dubois, Pelletier, Caron, Vincent and Vervais, who distinguished themselves at Chateauguay, might be given. The lesson taught us by our success in 1812 we should not forget. That success was due to the union which existed among all the different nationalities composing our people, and as long as we do remain united, our successes of the past will be quite insignificant compared with our successes in the future.

Mr. FERGUSON (Welland). I beg to accept, with the permission of the House, the amendment of the hon. the Minister of Militia.

Mr. CURRAN. I do not wish to add anything to what has been so admirably said by the speakers who have preceded me. I merely wish to state, that I heard with a great deal of pleasure the mention of the name of the founder of Montreal, M. Maisonneuve, amongst those who the hon. the Minister of Militia thought should be commemorated in some substantial way by public monuments. I may say, that the question of erecting a monument to Maisonneuve is now in the hands of a committee of the citizens of Montreal, composed of the Mayor and Aldermen of that city, the members of the Board of Trade, and the Chamber of Commerce, and various other bodies, who have taken up this matter in a very active spirit. I may also say, and I say it with a great deal of satisfaction, that amongst the most generous contributors to the monument to Maisonneuve are people of the English-speaking races in our city. The subscription list has gone on very successfully, and I had the honor of placing in the hands of the Minister the other day, an application from Mr. F. X. Perreault, the secretary of the Maisonneuve monument, for such assistance as the Government might think proper to ask from the Parliament of Canada, in order to make this monument even more beautiful than was contemplated originally by those who undertook the work. The Minister of Militia has stated, that the sum of $1,000 would be sufficient to erect a monument suitable for the purposes of commemoration, but, if he could induce his colleagues to ask the House for that amount to embellish the monument which is already in contemplation in honor of the great founder of Montreal, I am satisfied that, in doing so, they would receive the hearty assent and approbation of the members of this House and the people generally.

Mr. SCRIVER. I do not propose to take any part in the discussion now going on, but simply to draw the attention of the Minister of Militia to the fact, that what he proposes is hardly consistent with what the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Ferguson) asks. The resolution of the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Ferguson) points rather in the direction of taking care of the cemeteries, because it speaks of preserving from desecration the last resting-places of the dead, whereas the remarks of the Minister of Militia have been directed altogether to the propriety of erecting monuments to their memory.

Mr. AMYOT. There was the war of 1775 in which very memorable events took place, and I think it would be as well to lay down the principle that all of those glorious events—the first war as well as the second—should be commemorated.

Mr. BROWN. It gave me great pleasure to listen to the remarks of the hon. the Minister of Militia. I do not wish to prolong the discussion, but merely to say that, in erecting monuments perpetuate the deeds of those brave and heroic men who fell in defence of their country, we should not forget the battle of Stoney Creek, where really the termination of the war of 1812 took place in that part of the country. I hope the Minister of Militia will bear that in mind.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

ARTIFICIAL FERTILISERS.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron) moved :

That it is expedient to remove the duty on artificial fertilisers and to place them on the free list.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I would ask the hon. gentleman to allow that to stand, as the Minister who should answer him is not here at present.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I would ask the hon. gentleman if it is the intention of the Government to place this on the free list. If so, I will allow it to stand.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am afraid I will have to defer my answer until the Budget comes down.

Motion allowed to stand.

BOUNTY ON PIG IRON.

Mr. EISENHAUER moved :

That, whereas the Dominion of Canada in 1873 received four and a-half millions of dollars from the United States for the use of our fisheries, the interest on which from 1873 to 1889 amounts to about two millions; and whereas the Dominion has paid as bounty to the fishermen since 1882, $1,050,000, leaving about $1,000,000 in the Treasury of the interest on said four and a-half millions; and whereas the manufacturers of pig iron were allowed a bounty of $1.50 per ton in 1883 and a further protection of $4 per ton on imported pig iron in 1887; and whereas our fish are subject to heavy duties in the West Indies and United States, to which countries the largest portion of our fish are exported; that, in view of the foregoing facts, it is, in the opinion of this House, expedient that the Government should increase the bounty now allowed our fishermen in that proportion to the increase allowed on pig iron, and thereby, to some extent, compensate them for the heavy duties on their fish in foreign markets.

He said : It will be remembered that, since the adoption of the protective tariff, or the so-called National Policy, the manufacturers have approached the Government from Session to Session asking for an increase of the tariff on such wares as are manufactured by them. We know very well how they have succeeded in inducing the Government to increase the tariff so that now, instead of having a revenue tariff of 17½ per cent. as we had in 1878, we have a protective tariff ranging from 25 to 35 per cent., which the fishermen have now to bear along with all other classes in Canada. In 1883, the pig iron industry were allowed a bounty of $1.50 per ton, and in 1887 a further protection of an import duty of $4 per ton on imported pig iron. The Government having so largely increased the tariff for the benefit of manufacturers, and having also given the pig iron industry a further protection besides the bounty of $1.50 per ton, I think it is only fair to the fishermen that the Government should give some consideration in the shape of an increase to the present bounty. There are 61,000 men employed in the fisheries, the yield being about 17½ millions in 1888. The present bounty allowed to our fishermen is only about ½ per cent. on the total yield, while the pig iron industry gives employment to about 750 men and the value of the product is only $337,000, and the bounty allowed on the productions of pig iron in 1888 was $37,000, equal to about 12 per cent. on the value of this product. Now, while the Government have been protecting the manufacturers so largely by increasing the duties on foreign goods, they are allowing fish to come into Canada from Newfoundland free of duty, and the consequence is that large quantities of herring, also codfish, herring and oil, come into our markets, and in consequence of the competition with Newfoundland fish prices of Canadian fish are much reduced. The duties on Newfoundland fish were removed some years ago by the Government, in order to have Canadian flour, pork, beef, &c., go into Newfoundland free of the duty which that Government were about imposing on Canadian flour and other provisions; so the fishermen of Canada have suffered by the Government allowing fish from Newfoundland to come into Canada free of duty. Then, the fishermen have to contend against a bounty of 10 francs per quintal on French codfish, which find their way into the West Indies markets in competition with Canadian codfish, both direct from French ports, and also from Canadian ports where French codfish are imported and reshipped in bond, and which greatly reduce the price for our Canadian codfish in those markets. Our exports of fish are about twice the amount of manufactured goods, that of fish being about eight millions, while the exports of manufactured goods are only about four and a-half millions. I think none of our industries are so uncertain of yielding good returns as that of our fisheries. Some seasons there are almost total failures in the catch; during other seasons only a partial catch is obtained, and on the whole, this industry is far behind many other industries in Canada as regards being remunerative. I have taken the trouble to collect statistics which show that in 1888, the number of vessels engaged in fishing was 1,142; number of boats, 27,408; tonnage, 16,597; men employed, 60,900; capital invested, $6,139,416. The decrease in the value of vessels is about 10 per cent. per annum, that of boats about the same. The decrease in the value of the appliances, including nets, lines, seines, hawsers and other gear used in fishing, is estimated at about 20 per cent. It would seem at first sight that fishing was a profitable business. But when we take into account the cost for wages for catching, curing, drying per season, and which is estimated at $200 to $250 per man, making about $15,000, also the loss of appliances by storms, which is a large percentage of the capital employed, so it is evident that the profit on the capital invested in this industry is not equal to the profits realised from many of the other industries fostered by the Government by a high protection tariff and bounties. There is no other class of our people who are so exposed to storms and risk of life and property as are our fishermen, and I am sure that the members in the House, representing counties where the fishing is prosecuted, will bear me out in what I have said in this respect, as they know full well the hardships these people have to endure in prosecuting their business on the sea. The fishery is generally carried on during summer only, giving the fishermen about six months' employment, and the greater portion of them have to live on what they can make during that time, and during poor seasons have hard work to get themselves and families through the long winter, and on the whole our fishermen are not nearly so favorably situated as most of the other classes in Canada. In 1878 the Government received four and a-half millions from the United States for the privilege of fishing in Canadian waters for twelve years. The Commissioners who awarded this sum, considered that the privilege of fishing on our waters was worth about half million per season to the American fishermen. Now, while it was of immense advantage to the American fishermen to enjoy this privilege, it should not be overlooked, that the rights and privileges enjoyed by the American fishermen were a great disadvantage to the fishermen of Canada. The right to fish in our waters enabled the American fishermen largely to supply their own markets, to which a large proportion of our fish was then shipped for want of other markets, and where our fish came in competition with the American fish taken in our waters, and reducing very much the prices of our fish. I do not claim that the fishermen have an exclusive right to our waters where the fisheries are prosecuted, but I think it will not be denied that they have an equitable right to these waters, and that when these rights and privileges are partially taken from them, by allowing a foreign nation to participate equally with themselves, that any compensation for such rights and privileges received by the Government, should, in all justice, be expended for the sole benefit of the fishermen of Canada. The interest on the four and a-half millions received in 1878, from the United States Government, amounts to about two millions, while the total amount paid for bounty to the fishermen amounts to only about one million, leaving a balance in the Treasury of the Dominion of about one million dollars. Now, I contend, that they should have received at least the whole of this interest, which would have been one million more distributed among them than was paid them for bounties during the years since bounties were paid by the Government. It may be argued that the cost of protecting our fisheries should have been taken into account, when contending that the whole of the two millions of interest should have been paid the fishermen for bounty. But it should be remembered that, during the twelve years of the treaty, our coast fisheries were not protected, and, therefore, it did not cost Canada anything for this service. It may also be contended that the cost of erecting and keeping the lighthouses along the coasts should be taken into account in this connection. This, I think, could not be maintained, as the Government would have to provide and keep about as many lighthouses if the fisheries were not prosecuted at all, as they are necessary for navigation, and must be kept up for that purpose, if for no other. And, further, the Government of Canada have recently subsidised steamers to run between St. John and the West India Islands, and between Halifax and the West India Islands, which, to a large extent, supply those markets with fish and articles that could be carried to these markets by our fishing vessels when the fishing season is over, and the subsidies, which are over $60,000 per year, could be all saved to the Dominion. I have watched the shipments by the subsidised steamers from Halifax, and I find that every shipment is almost, and sometimes entirely composed of fish, which could all be carried to the West India markets by the vessels employed in that trade; but the quantity taken by this steamer is so large, that the markets to which she runs often get completely glutted and the sailing vessels in the trade have to lay at the wharves idle, or be sent out only to meet glutted markets, and the shippers sustain heavy losses. The steamer running between St. John, Yarmouth, and the West Indies gets about $4,000 per trip subsidy. Her cargo consists chiefly of such articles as our regular traders carry to these ports. The amount of her cargoes average about $6,000, while the country has to pay $4,000 to export about $6,000 worth of our products. This is most unfair to those engaged in this line of business, as, in order to get these steamers filled up with cargo when there is no inducement to ship, the owners or managers take fish and other of our products at very low freight. I am informed, on good authority, that the Portia, one of the subsidised steamers, took fish at 50 cents per tierce freight, equal to 12½ cents per quintal. Now, taking all these facts and figures into consideration, I think hon. gentlemen cannot but come to the conclusion that the resolution that I have submitted to the House is a reasonable one, and that in all justice to the fishermen of Canada, who need the fostering care of the Government more, or at least fully as much as any other of the industries of Canada, they will give this resolution their favorable consideration, this being a matter for the consideration of the Government more than for the House, I will leave it in their hands.

General LAURIE. Few men are more competent to speak on the subject of the fishing interests of our country than the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenbauer). As a large outfitter, as a large exporter from what is really the banner county of the Dominion in this matter, he is very competent to offer an opinion. But the hon. gentleman has been misled on one point, and to that point I will presently refer briefly. I do not think that the interests of our fishermen suffer intentionally by the action of the Government, or by the action of members of this House, or by the feeling of the country generally. On the contrary, if we compare the position of our fishermen, in what are even now the early days of our Confederation, with the position of the fishermen, and the interest aroused in their avocation and the protection they received from their fellow-countrymen, in the early days after the formation of the United States, I think our fishing interest occupies a most favorable position, and the country does not fail to support it. While the United States were still fighting for what they called their liberty against Great Britain, the Central States of the Union were prepared to throw over the New England fishing interests rather than fight for them, so much so that the New England States proposed to return to the allegiance of the mother country; and twenty or thirty years subsequently, in 1814, the events of which time have been referred to this afternoon by hon. gentlemen who have spoken on a very interesting subject, the brilliant deeds done by Canadian volunteers; the commissioners of the Central and Southern States of the Union were authorised to entirely ignore the claim of the New England States to their fisheries, so much so, that again the New England States consulted as to whether they would not return to their allegiance to Great Britain, as they found their fellow-countrymen were not prepared to protect their interests. Compare that with the position taken by this country when the fisheries question stirred Canada and brought the mother country almost into collision with the United States, and we will find that not one word was said on any political platform or in Parliament in the direction of finding fault with the Government for the action they adopted towards protecting the interests of the fishermen. This shows me, in the first place, that we have developed a national spirit. It shows that every part of this country is prepared to stand by the rights of any one part of it, and in that sense I maintain it has developed a true national spirit; and, speaking as a representative of the fishermen, I thank the members of this House and the country at large for the staunch manner in which they have stood by that interest and the men who obtain their livelihood from it. I now come back to the question covered by the motion now before the House. Without following the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer) in detail—for, no doubt, the subject will be discussed by other hon. members—I propose simply to deal with the question which he considers of the highest importance, namely, that part of the resolution which says:

“It is, in the opinion of this House, expedient that the Government should increase the bounty now allowed our fishermen in the proportion to the increase allowed on pig iron, and thereby, to some extent, compensate them for the heavy duties on their fish in foreign markets.”

What does the hon. gentleman propose? That we should reopen the question of bounties given to fishermen. I should be exceedingly sorry, speaking as a representative of the fishermen, if this were done. What is the argument used by the hon. gentleman in regard to the bounty on pig iron? It is, that last year, on the 30th of June, the bounty was reduced instead of being increased, and I am not prepared to reopen for reconsideration the question of the bounties paid to the fishermen, for possibly they might be reduced,

Mr. EISENHAUER. The amount is not reduced.

General LAURIE.

General LAURIE. The amount of the bounty on pig iron has been reduced since 30th June.

Mr. EISENHAUER. I thought you were alluding to the bounty paid to the fishermen.

General LAURIE. The hon. gentleman proposes, in consequence of the manufacturers of the pig iron having been allowed a bounty of $1.50 per ton from 1883 to 1886, and a further bounty of $1.00 per ton from 1886 to 1889, to reopen the question of the bounty paid to the fishermen, with a view to its being increased. But so far from this if we reopen the question, based on the bounty on pig iron, we would be reopening it with a view to the reduction of the bounty, and for that result I am not prepared. When we consider the fact, and I quote from the statutes that the bounty on pig iron was reduced from $1.50 to $1 in June last, and that the bounty of $1.00 per ton will continue only up to 1892, when it will be abolished altogether, I am not desirous that the question should be reopened. On the contrary, I think it would be disadvantageous to reopen it at present. The whole question of bounties is one not acceptable to this House. That being the case, and as we have on the Statute-book authority to pay $150,000 to our fishermen, I consider this question should not be reopened, and, therefore, much as I would have desired that some action should be taken to aid our fishermen in every possible way, I do not think this is the wisest way in which to secure further assistance. I believe there are other ways in which we can assist them more effectually. A large proportion of our fishing is conducted from small harbors along the shore, and as near the fishing grounds as possible. The harbors are exposed to certain winds, and when the gales come from certain quarters the men are obliged to empty two or three tons of ballast from their respective boats and haul them on shore until the storm is over. Consequently, very often when storms occur in the middle of the week the men do not consider it worth while to return the ballast for one or two days' fishing, and accordingly they are not able to pursue their industry continuously. By affording more protection to these harbors much greater benefit can be conferred on the fishermen than by adopting the motion now before the House, and I do not think we should reopen the question of bounties. I should be exceedingly sorry if this resolution should pass, because I do not think it is in the interests of the fishermen. By giving further protection to our harbors, endeavoring to prevent by our shore fisheries being interfered with and keeping our shore fisheries for our own fishermen, in these directions can the public money be best expended and the interests of our fishermen best protected.

Mr. ELLIS. I desire to draw attention for a moment to the remarks which have been made with respect to the subsidy paid for the steamer from St. John. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Eisenhauer) has pointed out that the vessels engaged in carrying fish to ports in the United States and the West Indies lose greatly by the subsidy paid to this steamer, which carries fish and other goods from St. John, Yarmouth and Halifax to the West Indies. He has stated that as much as $6,000 worth of goods have been carried in one cargo. The greater portion of such cargo is not fish; and I do not see the force of his argument, even supposing that $6,000 worth of fish were carried, that the trade is seriously injured by granting this subsidy to the steamer. The quantity is not sufficiently large to affect the general trade. I am very glad the hon. gentleman does not propose to press his motion. The hon. member for Shelburne (General Laurie) has stated that the feeling of the House is against bounties. I fail to see that such is the case, for the hon. gentleman and those associated with him in supporting the Government are always ready to vote in favor of a bounty proposed by the Government. I regret the Minister of Marine is not in his place, so that we could obtain some idea, if it were possible to get an idea from him on the subject, of the views of the Government with respect to the fisheries. The main requirement is the adoption of some policy on the part of the Government which will keep the fishermen of the Maritime Provinces in the Maritime Provinces. At the present time a large portion of our fishing population are employed on board of fishing vessels belonging to Massachusetts and Maine. They sail under the American flag, they give their skill to American owners, they possess a knowledge of our coasts and other matters which go to make up a fisherman, and their services are given almost entirely to the United States. The hon. gentleman who has introduced this motion, and some other gentleman living on the Nova Scotia coast, put forth considerable efforts to promote our trade. There is no question whatever, that a large proportion of fisheries carried on in the deep sea, is carried on by colonial fishermen sailing under the American flag. If the Government can reach that point in any way, something good would be done. I believe that the whole question of the fishery bounties deserves to be gone over, and some rectification of it should take place. The amount given in these bounties, and the mode in which it is distributed, does not now fill the bill, whatever it may have done when it was originally granted. I would like the Government to direct themselves to this point, but, so far as the motion of the hon. gentleman is concerned, it would, I think, be better that it should not be pressed.

Mr. KIRK. I do not know what effect the motion of the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer) will have on the fishermen if it be adopted by the House and carried into effect by the Government. I really do not understand the principle of his motion; but it is quite clear, from the frequency with which this question comes up in the House, that something is necessary to be done in order to relieve the fishermen. It is not many days since we had a resolution before the House respecting purse seines, and we know, as a matter of fact, that the fisheries are becoming more and more a failure, that fish are becoming scarcer every year, and that unless something can be done to assist the fishermen in some way, the result will be, as the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis) has said, that our people will have to leave for the United States to find employment there, instead of engaging in the fishing business in this Dominion. Notwithstanding the aid the Government has given to the fishing industry in the shape of bounties, I notice that there were not as many vessels employed in the fishing business, in the Province of Nova Scotia last year, as there were before that bounty was given. In 1879, there were 745 Nova Scotia vessels employed in fishing, and in 1888, the last year for which we have returns, there were but 690 vessels so employed. This shows that the assistance given for the purpose, as it is said, of encouraging the building of vessels to prosecute the fishing industry in the Maritime Provinces, has not had the desired effect; at any rate, it has not increased the number of vessels engaged in the fishing industry in the Province of Nova Scotia. That the fishing industry is becoming less profitable every year is quite clear. To-day I presented a petition to the House, signed by about 500 of the fishermen of the county which I have the honor to represent, asking that certain regulations be altered with regard to the lobster fishing. It is pointed out in that petition that the herring, cod and mackerel fishing is falling off year after year, and that the fishermen are more and more driven to the necessity of fishing for lobsters, in order to obtain a livelihood for their families. The reason given for this falling off in the mackerel fishing, by Mr. Bertram, fishing inspector for Cape Breton, is to the effect that purse-seining has been the cause, so far as his district is concerned, and I have no doubt that Mr. Bertram's opinion on this matter is quite correct. The fishermen on the southern coast of Nova Scotia, from Halifax east to the Straits of Canso, complain that the regulation which prohibits them from fishing for lobsters during the summer season is detrimental to their interests. They claim, contrary to the opinion of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, that the lobsters are not becoming scarcer every year, but the fishermen are obliged to go further out to sea, in order to catch them. It is well known that the lobster is a deep-sea fish, and although they may be scarcer in shallow waters in the harbors than they were in former years, in the deep sea they are as plentiful as ever they were. The regulation with regard to the lobster fishing at present in force, confines the fishermen to practically two months in the year, May and June. These months are so stormy that the fishermen, perhaps, lose one-fourth of their time, and frequently they have not more than six weeks in the year to fish for lobsters, by which to maintain themselves and their families. This regulation is so stringent that the Government have found themselves unable to enforce the law, because it is a well-known fact that on the eastern coast of Nova Scotia, lobsters were taken from the 1st October, every day down to the end of the year. I have not heard that the Government ever interfered with this. It is a well-known fact that some of the fishermen—I will not say all, because there are many who are law-abiding,—but that some of them did, in spite of the law, catch lobsters out of season, and pack them too. They were not packed in their regular canning establishments, because the owners were prohibited from opening their factories, and they did not do so. Some of the fishermen, however, found means by which they could can their lobsters, and they very easily found a market for them. Therefore, I say, the regulation, as it stands now, is practically of no value, for it is so stringent that the Government have found they are unable to enforce it without distressing the people. Although the hon. Minister of Fisheries has already declared in the House this year, that he does not intend to allow fishermen to catch lobsters in the fall of the year, I think the Government had better reconsider that determination, and allow the fishermen to fish for at least six weeks in the fall. The poor fishermen will then have an opportunity of earning something on which their families can subsist during the long winter months. I do not wish to take up the time of the House to this question of the bounty. The Government first adopted the principle of giving the fishermen the interest which would accrue from the four and a-half million dollars obtained from the Americans for the right of fishing in Canadian waters during the twelve years they had that right. It is well known that $150,000 is not the interest on the four and a-half million dollars; and what I claim is, that if the Government would do as they at first intended, and give to the fishermen in bounties the full interest on this $4,500,000, they would do their full duty to the fishermen in this matter.

Mr. KENNY. The hon. gentleman who has brought this matter to the attention of the House, has stated very correctly that the avocation of the men engaged in our deep sea fisheries, is one which naturally enlists our sympathies. There is an amount of risk, I might also say a tinge of romance, connected with it which appeals to our sympathies. My hon. friend, the gallant member for Shelburne (General Laurie), has also stated that the Government and Parliament of Canada have recognised the claims of the fishermen; and the appeals that have been made on their behalf generally met with the unanimous support of the right hon. Prime Minister and the party which surrounds him, and sometimes—but I regret that I cannot say that their views have been always endorsed by hon. gentlemen who sit on the opposite side of the House. There is no class of our population who, per capita, contribute more to the revenue than our fishermen. They are consumers of the productions of our factories; all they require in the way of food and clothing is supplied to them by the millers and the manufacturers of the other Provinces; and their occupation is one which adds materially to the national wealth. Therefore, in addressing the House on this matter, I feel that the House should be indulgent to me because it is a matter of very great national importance. The county in which my hon. friend who has moved this resolution resides, is one of the most prosperous counties in the Province of Nova Scotia, and the fishing industry is the predominating industry in that county. Indeed, it is a great industry in the Province of Nova Scotia, and we all read with pleasure recently that the Lieutenant Governor of the Province, when opening the session of the Local Legislature in reading the address which was placed in his hands by the Local Government, composed of friends of hon. gentlemen opposite, announced that he was happy to say that the fishermen had been prosperous throughout the year, with some slight exceptions. I mention this, because, from some remarks which fell from the mover of this resolution, perhaps inadvertently, one would have almost inferred that the fishermen of Nova Scotia were not in a fairly prosperous condition. I quite agree with my hon. friend from Shelburne that the regulations relating to the lobster fishing on the southern shore of Nova Scotia might with advantage be revised; and I know that the views he has expressed on this subject are the views which are entertained generally by practical men throughout the Province. From the early days of our Confederation the fishing interest has always been cared for and watched over by the Government of the right hon. the First Minister, and the Parliament of Canada. Hon. gentlemen know that immediately on the formation of the first confederated Cabinet one gentleman was assigned to the duty of looking after the maritime and fishing interests of this Dominion. The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) had charge of that department, which he created, and which, I believe, he conducted in a manner which reflected very great credit upon him. Subsequently, the fisheries were efficiently protected by the Dominion Government, and I think that we may, to some extent, attribute the fishing clauses which were inserted in the Washington Treaty to the energy with which our fisheries were protected by that Government. Hon. gentlemen will remember, looking at this matter historically, that when the right hon. Prime Minister returned from Washington, and submitted to this House, for its approval, that treaty, which secured to our fishermen the free admission of their fish to the United States, it was opposed by hon. gentlemen opposite. My hon. friend, the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), on that occasion voted against the Washington Treaty. It is true, his colleague, the late lamented Mr. Power, differed with him, and I think Mr. Power was right in doing so; and it is some slight consolation to me, who have to differ occasionally with my hon. colleague, to know that I may be sometimes right, and that my hon. colleague, as in the case of the fishery treaty, may be wrong. I refer to the action of hon. gentlemen opposite with regard to that treaty specially, because the hon. mover of this resolution has inserted in it a reference to the disabilities which our fishermen labor under in regard to the duty imposed on their fish going into the United States. That disability, however, cannot have much weight with hon. gentlemen opposite, because their vote on the Washington Treaty showed that they did not value the provision in the treaty stipulating for the free admission of fish to the United States. One hon. gentleman, who still occupies a seat in this House, stated in the debate on that occasion that the free admission of our fish to that country was no very great privilege to us, for the reason that the Americans alone paid the duty. That is an answer to some extent to one portion of the resolution of my hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer), but I believe the fishery clauses of the Washington Treaty were an advantage to the Maritime Provinces and to the men engaged in the deep sea fisheries. Consequent upon that treaty, which was opposed by hon. gentlemen opposite, we had not only free access to the American market for our fish, but we had also the Halifax Commission. As hon. gentlemen now listening to me, who were members of this House at the time, will remember, the most prominent members of the Opposition stated broadly that, as regards the Halifax award, nothing would ever come of it—that it was perfectly worthless. Well, Sir, those hon. gentlemen were wrong. It is true that award did not give to Canada the full value of her fisheries, or full compensation for the injuries she had sustained. But the commissioner who represented Canada on that occasion accepted the sum which was proposed, as a compromise for the sake of peace and harmony between the two nations. In this way the Washington Treaty secured to us, notwithstanding the hostility which it met from the political associates and friends of the mover of this resolution, the very sum of money from which the bounty has been paid. I may say, en passant, that, as regards territorial rights, that subject was discussed in this Parliament and finally disposed of in 1880, when, on the motion of the right hon. the leader of this Government, the principle was settled that the money belonged to Canada, and that, as Canada had assumed certain obligations in connection with the protection of our fisheries, the money belonged exclusively to the Dominion, and the different Provinces had no special right to it. If hon. gentlemen will take the trouble to look up the proceedings of this Parliament in 1880, they will find that by a vote of 120 or 130 against 30—in fact, all the House except the representatives of the Maritime Provinces—that principle was established. In 1882, a bounty was enacted as a recognition of the fishing industry, and the sum of $150,000, which was then proposed by Sir Leonard Tilley, Finance Minister, as the bounty to be paid, became a fixed and permanent charge. It is a statutory charge, and in this respect its position is entirely different from the position of the pig iron bounty; and, therefore, I quite agree with the gallant and hon. member for Shelburne (General Laurie), that there is nothing analogous between the two bounties. I must protest, therefore, in the interests of the fishermen of the Maritime Provinces, against any attempt being made to establish a similarity between the conditions on which the pig iron bounty stands and those on which the fishing bounty stands. Let us see how Sir Leonard Tilley was met when he introduced the measure which provided for $150,000 to aid the development of our fisheries in 1882. I do not know that my hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer) has taken the trouble to read that debate. If he has, he must have found that it was insinuated by hon. gentlemen opposite, first of all, that the money never would be paid to our fishermen; that possibly it might be paid for one year and then the payment would cease. Hon. gentleman will remember that this resolution, which was proposed by Sir Leonard Tilley, was called a political bribe and an election kite, because it happened to be proposed on the eve of a general election. Now, far be it from me to imagine or to insinuate that my hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer), in making this resolution, is influenced in the slightest degree by partisan or party motives; but it is a curious coincidence that this impracticable resolution should be placed before this Parliament on the eve of general elections in the Province of Nova Scotia; and there is just this risk, that if the resolution had emanated from this side, that if any such measure was brought down by the Government, we would still find in the ranks of hon. gentlemen opposite some uncharitable people who would say it was a mere political bribe and a mere election kite. Those were the insinuations with which Sir Leonard Tilley's motion was met. Now, Sir, it is a fact that the motion has never been assailed by hon. gentlemen on this side, but I regret that it did not meet with such fair play from hon. gentlemen opposite, as a reference to the debates to which I have referred will show. In referring to this coincidence, I may say that I did hear from an hon. gentleman, who is very high in the councils of the local party in the Province of Ontario, that we would not have the elections in Nova Scotia until the fishermen came back. I do not know to what extent the fishermen would be influenced by such a proposal as this, but that statement in reference to the date for holding the local elections was made to me very positively before I left Halifax. The object of this bounty was to develop the fisheries of the Dominion, and I think hon. gentlemen will recognise that, in that respect, it has been eminently successful. I find that, in 1868, the total value of our fisheries in the whole of Canada was only $4,376,000, and that in 1888 they had increased fourfold, and amounted to $17,415,000. To some extent, I have no doubt that that increase was due to the bounty, and the encouragement which the fisheries received from the vote proposed by the Government led by the right hon. the present First Minister. We are all anxious to develop our export trade, and I find, on investigating our fishery statistics, that we exported from 1874 to 1878 a total of $27,000,000, and from 1884 to 1888 a total of $37,000,000. During the years 1884 to 1888, we enjoyed the bounty which hon. gentlemen opposite said was not going to be of any benefit to the fishermen—which they said might be paid one year, but would not be paid another year, and which they called a political bribe and a mere election kite. Our fishermen have had the full benefit of the bounty, and the Government of our Province tells us that they have had general prosperity and there has been a large accession to the fishery business of the Dominion. Allow me for a moment to look at the question statistically and from the standpoint of my native Province, Nova Scotia, which is much more interested in this question than any other. I find that, in 1879, the total value of the fisheries of Nova Scotia was $5,700,000, and in 1888, $7,800,000.

Mr. KIRK. You are speaking of the exports?

Mr. KENNY. No; I am speaking of the value of the fisheries of Nova Scotia solely.

Mr. KIRK. How were these values obtained?

Mr. KENNY. I refer the hon. gentleman to page 313 of the Statistical Abstract and Record of Canada.

Mr. KIRK. I know where the hon. gentleman got them, but how did the Government get them?

Mr. KENNY. If the hon. gentleman is not satisfied with the information which we derive from the various Departments and has been compiled in these books, I really cannot tell him where to go for it. If he asks me where I got my information, I refer him to page 313 of the Statistical Record. I think this shows a very gratifying result. From 1874 to 1878, the total value of the Nova Scotia product amounted to $30,000,000, and from 1884 to 1888 it amounted to $41,000,000. I think this shows a very gratifying increase, and I think that the fishermen of Nova Scotia will recognise that the bounty which was given to them in 1882 was something more than a mere political bribe and something more than a mere election kite.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 106) respecting the Great North-West Central Railway Company.—(Mr. Small.)

Bill (No. 99) An Act to incorporate the Owen Sound and Lake Huron Railway Company.—(Mr. Masson.)

CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 5) to make further provision as to the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.—(Mr. Brown.)

(In the Committee.)

Mr. TISDALE. I beg to move that the Committee rise.

Mr. DAVIN. Before the Committee rises I should like to make a few remarks on this Bill. I think the Committee should apply itself to consider the clauses of this Bill, to amend the clauses, if it should be found wise to do so; but to ask the Committee to rise when so important a Bill as this is before it—

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). When it cannot fly.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend from Bothwell is always witty. I think the Committee should apply itself to this Bill for the reason that I have looked carefully through it, and I cannot find that there is in the Bill any attack on real sport. Nobody in this House has more sympathy than I have with real sport, but there is nothing more antagonistic to real sport than false sport—sport that has not the conditions that real sport should have, and which when indulged in, hits at real sport in two ways. In the first place it takes away the man from the indulgence of real sport, destroys the taste for real sport, and withdraws from real sport the time and the attention that would otherwise be given to it. Now, the word "sport," like the word "manly," or the word "gentleman," or any other word in the English language, can be abused. Sport such as hunting the fox, or shooting, going off for a run over the stubble—that is sport calculated to invigorate the frame, to give courage, to give readiness, to give quickness, and develop all those faculties, physical, intellectual, and even moral, that have made the English, the Irish, and the Scotch, aye, and the French people, the heroic peoples they are, capable of fighting in war, full of resource, full of activity, with iron frames, capable of enduring fatigue—that, Sir, is a sport we should always encourage. Sir, I am going to take the Committee into my confidence, and tell it that I attribute the excellent constitution that I have to the fact that in my boyhood I was an eager sportsman. But did sport consist in taking a trap—

Mr. TISDALE. You have got too old now.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend says that I have got too old for that sort of sport. I am not too old for it; if I had two months in Ireland, or England, I would be as ready to follow the hounds to-day as I ever was. Sir, what sort of sport did we indulge in when I was addicted to those lighter enjoyments of life?

Mr. MITCHELL. Don't ask us.

Mr. DAVIN. We hunted the fox, or we went shooting. If you hunt a fox you have to be a good rider, you have to endure fatigue, you have to cross the country on a good mettled steed; and you develop those qualities that, if your country were ever to call on you, would enable you to go into the field of war. Again, if you go shooting you also develop those qualities that give endurance, physical and moral.

Mr. MITCHELL. Moral?

Mr. DAVIN. Yes, Sir; moral qualities. My hon. friend, the leader of the third party, is so delicate in his perceptions of the nice relations that exist between all members of the human family, that he seems to think that the word "moral" is confined to one relationship, but I can assure him that it has a wide range; and when my hon. friend passes across the House and leads a Government, I have no doubt whatever, that, should any measure like this come before the House, he will give it his consideration, as I understand, he expects to give to this. Now, there is an element in real sport that is most important, that is to say, you give the animal that you hunt a chance for its life. Suppose, for instance, that my hon. friends, who are so bent upon killing pigeons, wanted some real sport, let them come out west, let them bring their dogs, and we will give them coyotes to hunt. These coyotes are very quick, and it will try all their breathing power. My hon. friend (Mr. Tisdale), who has just interrupted me, can fight gallantly. I know he can do so in an election, and if he can hunt as gallantly as he can fight in elections, I should like to be with him for a day's sport; and if he brings his dogs out to the west, we will give him the coyotes to hunt, we will give him the wolves to hunt, and after he has hunted these with dogs for three or four hours a day for a month or so, I will venture to say, that he will come back having added ten years to his life, and thus having conferred an incalculable benefit on Canada. Well, Sir, I was saying that there are two things that you must have in real sport. The reflexive influence on the man engaged in the sport should be of a wholesome character; and the animal that you hunt, that you fight with, so to speak, should have fair play. These two principles must be held constantly before you when you ask this question: Is that real sport, is that sport of a legitimate character that men should engage in, and that we, in this House, should look on it with approval? If these two things are wanting, what will be the result? You will have to eliminate from your sport the element of manliness; and when I consider the one feature in this Bill to which my hon. friend has drawn attention, that is to say, the shooting of tame pigeons from traps, I can see no element of manliness in it. There is no exercise of any of those qualities, physical or moral, that I have referred to. The poor pigeon has no chance whatever; it has not a fair deal; and I cannot suppose for a moment that there is any manliness in the spectacle of a man trained to shoot with a deadly aim at a poor pigeon having been placed for a time in a trap and allowed by the pigeon-keeper to escape. Then what is the great aim of those men who engage in pigeon shooting? Why, it is to make a big bag; it is to make a holocaust; it is to have a massacre of these doves; that is, the more you shoot, the greater sportsmen you are at this game. Now, contrast that with the real and legitimate sports that make men with iron muscles, that give men readiness, that give men strength. On the one hand, you have a fox that is chased—a single animal which has a good chance of escape, and frequently escapes, eluding all the powers of the dogs and all the skill of the huntsman. There is a chance in that case for the life of the animal, and so there are strong qualities developed in that sport. There is hardly an hon. member of this House who is opposing the Bill of the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Brown), who does not condemn any elements of cruelty that are said to be connected with pigeon-shooting at traps. They will say to you that they condemn and would punish twisting the tails of pigeons; they would condemn and punish putting out one eye of the pigeon, in order that it may fly in a given direction, because these skilful trappers, when they want the pigeon to fly to the right, put out the left eye, and if they want it to fly in the opposite direction, they put out the other eye. Sometimes, in order to give pigeons that sufficient wildness or scare which they have lost owing to tameness, they stick pins into them, and, in fact, the tortures to which those little birds are subjected at different times are great indeed.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. DAVIN. I am far from saying that any hon. gentleman would sanction such conduct; I am far from saying that such conduct would meet with their approval; I know my hon. friends too well, and I know they are humane. But can they prevent those men who have charge of the pigeons, and the gamblers who are betting on the shots, sometimes betting on the pigeons, sometimes betting on the man who shoots, introducing that pestilential element and all its foul accessories into this sport? My hon. friends raise a laugh when I talk about gambling being introduced. They laugh and flaunt and jeer when I talk of that, partly because they are conscious they would not stoop to anything so vile themselves. But every hon. member, if he is in a candid mood, will admit that you cannot have a sport of this kind, once gambling is admitted into it—and gambling attends it as its shadow—without having all those surroundings that cling to and disgrace even the sports that might be considered legitimate. Take, for instance, horse-racing. Horse-racing is, in my opinion, a legitimate sport. But even a sportsman like the late Lord Derby, who was fond of running his horses and kept a stable, but never bet himself, could not keep away even from his own horses the pestilential influence of those men who were engaged in betting on horses. We know very well, that horses have been made ill before the day of the race, in order that men who had bet heavily against them might win. And, in the same way in regard to pigeon-shooting. Those gentlemen who are hon. members, and would hesitate to see cruelty of any kind practiced, cannot prevent rascals and ruffians appearing on the scene, and, in spite of themselves, perpetrating what they abhor. Let me point this out about the pigeon-shooting: There are, even about inanimate things, certain elements that create sentiment in the human mind. The form of a flower, some delicate shrub, the color of the horizon, will beget a certain sentiment in sensitive minds; and, in the same way when you go higher in the scale and come to the lower animals, as we call them, there are certain animals, which, in sensitive minds, will create a suitable sentiment. Take these little birds—the dove, the pigeon. You cannot look at one of these graceful and beautiful birds, if you have a mind properly constituted, and a mind of due sensibility, without having a suitable sentiment of sympathy, a sense of its ineffable grace, of its beauty; and to think of those little birds being imprisoned in order that gentlemen may drive to a certain point—a “hot corner” as they call it in England—and there fire at them as they escape from those traps, is revolting to the human mind. Escape how—with what feelings? With feelings of dread and of torture, in consequence of the imprisonment to which they have been subjected. I grant that the shooting of a dove, if it is killed immediately, is no cruelty. I give that admission to those hon. gentlemen who are opposing my hon. friend's Bill. But what is the state of that little bird before the shot is fired, and afterwards? Before the shot is fired it is imprisoned sometimes for hours. Does it suffer no torture in that prison house? We know now that, although a little bird or any of the lower animals may not have as an extensive surface of sensibility as a man, it has its own sensibility, it is capable of torture, pain and sorrow. Take the dog. We know very well that a dog will grieve almost with human tenderness for the life of a master or mistress. And so it is when you go down the scale. A bird has been known to be so fond of its master or mistress that the loss of one or other has caused its death, showing that those little lives have within the narrow scope of their existence a deep-seated tenderness, and that they are capable of great mental pain. It is all very well to jeer and to laugh; but I say this to hon. gentlemen, that this is a subject which, from their point of view or from any point of view, must be discussed seriously, and it is worthy of being so discussed in this Parliament of Canada, the first Parliament, after the Parliament sitting in Westminster, in the Empire; and if they want this Committee or this House to approach this subject with the least sympathy for their views, they must discuss it seriously. The Imperial Parliament in 1883 discussed this question, and I find that some of the first sportsmen in England and in Ireland expressed their views. Take Colonel King-Harman, one of the finest sportsmen I ever saw in my life, a man who follows the hounds to this day, and who goes shooting and fishing. He rose in the Imperial Parliament, and said he would not shoot a dove, he would not go to Hurlingham and drive out with the body of gentlemen who drive from London to the place of rendezvous for this ignoble slaughter, because he thought it unmanly. Lord Percy, who also declared himself a sportsman, went to Hurlingham once and shot a pigeon, but he felt so ashamed of himself he would never do it again. Now, I have spoken of the sufferings of a pigeon before and after the firing. But what is seen at these matches? Why, after the match is over, you can go to a trembling heap of half living birds. They are all quivering with pain, and the brutal manager who takes charge of these matters makes no attempt to kill them. How long they remain in torture is no concern of his; his sensibilities are brazen; they are doubly steeled against the least sensibility for those little creatures. Lord Randolph Churchill is no sentimentalist and no humanitarian. He spoke on this question, and he spoke strongly, and as I admire Lord Randolph a good deal, and as he is a man who generally stands up for what he thinks, I will ask the House to bear with me while I read one or two weighty sentences which fell from the noble lord. Lord Randolph Churchill said :

“ He saw the birds taken out of the basket, and before being put into the trap a man cut their tails with a large pair of scissors. That, probably, was not very cruel, because he only cut the quills, though at times he seemed to cut very close. But worse follows. After cutting the tail, he saw the man take the bird in one hand, and with the other tear a great bunch of feathers from the breast and stomach of every pigeon. On asking the man what he did that for, he replied that it was to stimulate the birds in order that, maddened by excitement and pain, they might take a more eccentric leap into the air and increase the chance of the pigeon gamblers. He saw another very curious thing, too. One of the pigeons was struck, and fell to the ground ; but, when the dog went to pick it up, the wretched bird fluttered again into the air, and for an apprehensible time it remained so fluttering, just a little higher than the dog could jump. While the bird's fate was thus trembling in the balance, the betting was fast and furious, and when, at last, the pigeon tumbled into the dog's jaws, he never would forget the shout of triumph and yell of execration that rose from the ringmen and gentlemen. Hundreds, perhaps thousands, of pounds changed hands over the dying agonies of the unfortunate creature. They were told that there was actually no difference between that and other kinds of sport ; but the fact was, a pigeon-shooting now was kept up simply for the sake of betting.”

I need hardly tell you, Sir, that Lord Randolph Churchill is no sentimentalist. I shall now point out what is a far greater evil than the suffering of the pigeon, and what is a far greater evil than the taking away of men, who might be engaged in legitimate sport, to this effeminate and disgraceful pastime. I shall point to the reflexive influence of such scenes, and such sports, on the minds and character of those who engage in them. All history is open to us, to show us what this reflexive influence is on the character of men who engage in cruel sports. We can go back to the times of the decadence of the Roman Empire ; we can go into the arena there, we can see that arena “ ringed around with a flame of fair faces, and splendid with swords,” and we can see the brutal bull-fight, and the gladiators fighting. What was the result of all that ? Were the Romans able to repel the Barbarian, when the Barbarian came. Did the ancient valor of the Roman arms remain ? No, Sir ; it did not. When the Barbarian came he was able to get entrance at their gates, and when the time of trial came these men who could look on torture, dared not look on war. Then, Sir, look at the Spanish Peninsula. We are told of the time when the Spanish galleons floated all over the seas ; when Spaniards were amongst the first seamen, and when they were able to grapple with the warlike marine of England herself, at a time when that marine was commanded by men equal to the heroes of her best days. We are told of the time when the Spaniards were able to contend in a hand-to-hand fight, so to speak, with all the English chivalry of those heroic days. Well, Sir, what has happened ? At that time of her greatness, was it the chief delight of Spaniards to witness bull-fights ? Was it the chief delight of Spanish women to look on these brutal scenes ? No, Sir ; at that time the chivalry of Spain was engaged in quite a different work. When Spain

decayed, when she lost her power in war and on the seas, what did she become remarkable for ? She became remarkable for a brutalising sport, something similar to this which we now seek to condemn. If a man goes to Madrid now, the chief thing he wants to see is a bull-fight ; and a friend of mine who was recently there tells me, that now the Spaniards are fighting with tame bulls, just as some of our friends here want to see the sportsmen of this young country (who ought to have all the power, and strength, and manliness of the English race in its best days) fighting with tame pigeons. Spain has decayed, and the degrading bull-fight flourishes there. If you want to fix on one spot of the earth more degraded than another, and where the passions of men get freest play, and where the effeminate inclinations run riot, that one spot would be Monte Carlo. Read about Monte Carlo, and you will find that what moonlight is to sunlight, Hurlingham is to it in pigeon-shooting. You will always find, Sir, that in proportion as men become effeminate, in the same proportion they have degenerated to sports which lack the elements that manly sports should have. We talk about hunting. One of the chief sports of our great forefathers was hunting the wild boar. That was a noble sport. In India, to-day, they hunt the tiger. That is true sport. It is a mimicry of war ; you have an animal that when he stands at bay your life may be endangered, and the man that will face the wild boar or the tiger must have that which Horace said the man must have had who first launched a frail ship on the sea ; he must have a heart bastioned with triple brass. The man must have had a bosom trebly fortified who first faced these raging elements, and the man who faces the boar or the tiger, taking his life in his hands when he enters on the encounter, must also have a stout heart. What happens to that man when he comes away from such sport ? Not merely has his physique been strengthened, not merely have his muscles been steeled, so to speak, but the moral force of the man has been increased, and if he should meet with danger in another form—for instance, if his country should call on him to defend her, then, Sir, that man has been prepared by that sport to enter on her defence. I heard with some surprise, in the course of this debate (I know it is but a lapsus lingue) reference made to the sympathy of sentimental ladies with the Bill of my hon. friend from Hamilton. He could have no better omen of success than in the sympathies of the ladies. I know that if I were running an election, and I felt that all the ladies were with me, I would snap my fingers at the men, because I should be sure that it would be all right. It is not merely that women are a great power, and a subtle power ; they are like the atmosphere, they are pervasive. You do not know where their power impinges, but as to the reality of the power of women, why, Sir, no man—well, no man who has a heart—can doubt it. Certainly, no man who has been a student of politics in the past or present can doubt the enormous power of woman. But, Sir, I do not now wish to dwell on that power. What I dwell on specially is this, and it is a good augury for this measure. As a rule, Sir, on a question of this kind the sympathies of women are unerring ; their sympathies are nearly always instinctively on the side of what is right and good ; and I confess that I have always felt myself that they are much better than we are—that they are in advance of us in their moral feelings. My hon. friends laugh, but there is no laughter about this matter. Any man who observes life, who has observed the past and the present, will agree with me that their sympathies are quicker for good than ours. That is a rough way of saying what a great man, Lord Tennyson, has said in immortal verse; and I say it is of good augury for my hon. friend's Bill that the ladies, according to the confession of those who oppose it, are on his side. Now, Sir, when the ladies are on his side he has a prima facie case made out, because it is, after all, the side on which the best instincts of humanity will be found; if that is not the case now in this Dominion, certainly it will be in a few years hence. Now, Sir, I spoke a moment ago about the reflexive influence of cruel sports on men. I did not exhaust that point. If men indulge in cruel sports, they become cruel, and a man cannot become cruel without falling in the scale of humanity. So far as I have read the accounts of those pigeon-shootings, the desire is not to have a struggle with some other force, a struggle of skill or fleetness, but the desire is to kill as many birds as possible; and the reflexive influence of that sport is to make the man who indulges in it cruel, and if he becomes cruel he falls in the moral scale. This is a serious matter, and I am not sure that the demoralisation has not shown itself already in some of my hon. friends, which will account for the laughter with which they have met some of the propositions I have advanced. Now, a man may become callous in witnessing suffering in lower animals, and that will make him callous in witnessing suffering among men; and it would be an evil day for us, at this time in the world's history, if there were to be developed among our people, in any widespread manner, a callousness to suffering. After all, we are not to compare the way in which we should regard a sport like this with the way in which men who had not the blessings of Christianity, or men who believed in a less enlightened Christianity than we do, regarded the sufferings of the lower animals. Christianity, enforcing as it does pity and all the tender qualities of the mind, embraces in our benevolence, not merely men and women, but the whole animal creation; and no man can be said to be a man of refined instincts who can witness the unnecessary sufferings of the humblest of God's creatures without a pang. Sir, we have had to-day in this Chamber a debate—which I am not going to refer to in any unparliamentary manner—with regard to honoring those men who died in defence of Canada. We have had a debate about our duty of attending to the places where their heroic bones repose, and erecting some monuments to their memory. Do you suppose, Sir, that if you could eliminate from men those qualities to which I appeal in this case, there would be any regard whatever for considerations which would lead them to pay any attention to the feelingless bones of the heroic dead? Why, Sir, that is mere sentiment. You cannot suppose for one moment that attention to the bones of a dead hero will do him any good. Do you suppose he can look back from where his spirit may be on anything you may do for certain chemicals which remain, and which once were associated with his life? No, he cannot; and yet it appeals strongly to the highest sentiments in your breast, that you should not allow those honored bones to be disturbed or to be carelessly exposed. It is but a sentiment; and, Sir, the sentiment which recoils from inflicting pain upon these harmless little lives is just as true to the best instincts of any man as the sentiment that we should care about the bones of our past heroes. Sir, we had in England, something over a century ago, a man who changed the character of our literature, who was foremost in the forces which broke the spell of the mistaken classicism of Alexander Pope, and restored to our literature its original freshness; and that man wrote words which will remain as long as the English language lasts with reference to this very question. The poet Cowper said:

“I would not enter on my list of friends
(Though graced with polish'd manners and fine sense, Yet wanting sensibility), the man
Who needlessly sets foot upon a worm.”

If this is a true sentiment—and it has evoked from the heart of humanity an echo which will probably last as long as humanity has a heart—a fortiori how much more wanting in sensibility—because, after all, that little invertebrate life which is crushed on your path we know cannot feel as much as one of those pigeons must feel—must be the man who, for the sake of making a large score, or killing a large number of birds, or winning a certain sum of money, or proving his prowess in marksmanship, which he could better prove at butts—may, by an artifice to which I will refer presently—will shoot down those innocent creatures; and it is our duty to see that that want of sensibility does not deepen and harden until it does incalculable harm. Now, there is a device which will give my hon. friends all they desire. There is the imitation pigeon, made of clay which is thrown to a certain height. It gyrates just the same as a wounded pigeon would, and I am told by competent marksmen that it tries the skill in firing just as much as would a live pigeon escaping from the trap. If you want to try your skill in firing, fire at this lifeless piece of clay; but if you want to kill, if death should be necessary, then the proper thing is for the Legislature to step in and put its veto on the immoral and degrading sport. If I did not feel deeply on this question, I should not have troubled the Committee. It is not a question in which my pursuits or my studies lead me to take much interest. We are engaged up in the North-West in labors that are foreign to these amusements, and as yet this so-called sport has not obtruded upon us; but, hearing it discussed here from time to time and reading the Bill, my attention was diverted to it. I recall the time I used to visit in London the gun club myself. I saw there what the character of the sport was, and I will say I never saw any of those cruelties of which I have heard. They may have escaped my notice, but Earl Percy and some of the first men in England—you have it here—describe what they actually saw. Lord Randolph Churchill describes what he saw, and I have been told that similar cruelties have been practiced in Canada. I am not, however, incompetent to form an opinion on this subject, because I have, myself, been fond of coursing and hunting in other days, and if I had the time I would indulge in the sport again; but I will say this, that I could never think that there could be any element of genuine sport in shooting tame pigeons from traps. I make a broader proposition. I say, whether you are dealing with pigeons or not, shooting or hunting any tame animal cannot be called sport. It lacks the first great element of sport, which is manliness. For those reasons, I hope the Committee will discuss seriously the clauses of the Bill, and if those hon. gentlemen who are opposed to my hon. friend will show me any reason for supporting any clause they may propose, I shall be prepared to vote with them; but so long as I see the matter in its present light, so long will I give my support to the principle of the general clauses in the Bill of my hon. friend.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. When this same Bill, which is moved by the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Brown), was before the House on former occasions, I always voted for it, and I intend to vote for it now. Not because I have no taste for sport, for I think I can say safely there are few men in this House who have killed more wild pigeons than the humble individual who now addresses you. But there is one thing I can say, that I never yet shot at a poor fluttering dove, which had been confined probably for hours, and let loose all of a tremble, to become the object of my aim. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) has dealt with this subject most eloquently. He has shown us the demoralising influence which sport of this kind has upon the human mind and character. So far as we can learn from indications, Providence has given to man all these things for his use, and in exercising that right, it becomes necessary for us to slaughter living organisations; but we also learn that these things were not given to us to trifle with or to torture. I hold that such conduct on the part of human beings is wrong in itself, and has demoralising tendencies on those who indulge in it. Generally the poor bird is shot dead at once, but even when that is the case, that does not do away with the demoralising influence which the hon. member for Assiniboia has so clearly pointed out. Unfortunately, however, there is a marked proportion of these poor birds which are not killed, but simply maimed. I have had many opportunities of seeing that, and am competent to bear witness to it. I have lived for the greater part of my life about a couple of miles from grounds where these matches were held, and my experience, and that of all those who live in that neighborhood, is, that it is nothing unusual to see a poor wounded bird fluttering through the air, and dropping down exhausted, to lie there and die a lingering death from torture. It is nothing unusual to see the poor creatures trying to alight on the farm building with perhaps one leg broken by the shot, or perhaps both broken, and then the poor helpless, crippled thing will fly away again as far as its strength will carry it, only to drop helpless and die. As the hon. member for Assiniboia has pointed out, such methods of sport are quite unnecessary, the object being simply a trial of skill and not to learn shooting, the same result can be obtained just as well by other devices. I am so fond of seeing experts practice with the gun that I have walked out to the far side of this city to see the St. Hubert Gun Club practising. They did not use living birds but clay pigeons, and I have stayed by the hour watching them.

Mr. DAVIN

I know something of these matters, and I say distinctly that this sport is just as exciting as though living birds were used. A great deal has been said in former debates as to this being a manly sport. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) has drawn our attention to the sort of manliness which is cultivated by this kind of sport, and I think he was right. Take Spain for example. There, from time immemorial, the habit of bull-fighting has been indulged in, and it was not only patronised by the hardened part of the community, but the most refined gentlemen and ladies did, and do still in some instances, grace these sports with their presence. I need not say that the Spanish national character is not one which its people can be very proud of. It does not seem to have developed in them the elements of national greatness because of the sports which they have indulged in. There is another country lying very close to Spain, and that is France. These sports have never gained a foothold in the habits of the people of France; they have no liking for cruel sports. Has that made the French less manly or less warlike? Are they worse soldiers or worse citizens because of their abstention from such degrading sports? All history shows that they have left traces of their valor on a hundred fields, and we know what they have done in this country by their intrepid courage, by their system of colonisation, and by the courageous conduct of their missionaries who have penetrated every part of this continent in order to carry the Gospel to the heathen. The French people have proved that it is possible to be gentle and to be manly at the same time. I need not point out to this House that the taste of the public and the thought of the public are changing very rapidly in regard to these matters. There was a time in Britain when all this class of sports was indulged in. There was a time when bull-baiting—chaining a bull to a stake and setting dogs to worry him—was popular; there was a time when dog-fighting, badger-drawing, cock-fighting, and other sports of that kind, were considered legitimate sport, in which all classes could mingle without any deterioration to their character. I need not say that that time has gone by, and, it is to be hoped, that it has gone by forever. These things have been interdicted by law. If you take Scotland, perhaps there is no country in the world in which cock-fighting was more indulged in than it was there. Even the late Professor Wilson, who was known as "Christopher North," a man of great learning and of exquisite sensibility, was a great cock-fighter. We find that he kept sixty or seventy birds always on hand, and indulged in cock-fighting whenever he got the opportunity. Even schoolmasters, who had to train the young mind, were addicted to the sport. We find, that on Saturday afternoon, which was the only half-holiday in the week, any boy who had a fighting-cock was expected to bring it to the school, and after school they fought those cocks, and the birds which happened to be killed in fight became the schoolmaster's perquisite. Would that now be tolerated anywhere? The views of men are changing as the poet laureate states:

"The thoughts of men are widening with the progress of the sun."

In our country, if a school-teacher were to engage in a sport of that kind, his engagement would not be worth a day's purchase. At the last meeting of the Teachers' Association of East Middlesex, in which inspectorate there are over one hundred young men and women engaged in teaching the youth of the country and training their minds, when they met in convention in the city of London, a few days ago they unanimously passed this resolution, which was sent to me by the secretary of the association :

"We, the members of the East Middlesex Teachers' Association, sympathise with the Bill respecting the further prevention of cruelty to animals, introduced by Adam Brown, Esq., M.P., and hope that the members for this county may see their way clear to support it."

That is the opinion of these men and women who are engaged, in East Middlesex, in moulding the young minds in that part of the country. I do not desire to detain the House, but I will now read the decision of a judge in one of the Pennsylvania courts in a parallel case. I have already said that the moral sense of the people in all civilised countries is becoming adverse to the continuance of this class of sports. In many of the States of the Union laws have been passed prohibiting these sports. In Pennsylvania, a law was passed in 1869 prohibiting them, but in 1887 some gentlemen belonging to a gun club wanted a day's sport, and concluded that shooting pigeons from traps should be a part of the programme. Some members of the Humane Society went there and forbade these gentlemen to do so, and one of them, Mr. Lewis, said he would let two birds go in order to test the question. He shot at two birds, one of which was killed and the other wounded, but afterwards killed. The case came before Judge Yerkes, who gave the following judgment :—

"We are inclined, however, to the opinion that all animals, whether noxious or not, which are in the dominion or custody of man, or in his captivity, are comprehended by the Act. But there is an important distinction to be observed, which we will notice when we come to consider the subject between the right to shoot animals while in their natural wild state and when in captivity. It has been said of a statute similar to ours, that it does not define an offence against the right of property in animals, nor against the rights of the animals that are in a sense protected by it. The offence is against the public morals, which the commission of cruel and barbarous acts tends to corrupt. To make out the offence, the commonwealth must show, first, that the pigeon was ill-treated or abused; second, that the manner of the treatment was wanton or cruel. One of the pigeons was wounded, and alighted upon a tree, and as soon as its wounded condition was discovered it was killed. Is it ill-treatment or abuse to wound a living creature so that it lingers in that condition for a period long or short? In the case of the Commonwealth vs. Turner, it is intimated that holding a fox in captivity, in the presence of dogs seeking to destroy it, was a circumstance by which suffering by the animal might be inferred.

"The circumstance that all animals, whether domesticated or not, make violent efforts to escape from their natural enemies, or those who apparently would injure them, shows that they are deeply susceptible to the sense of fear, and that they suffer from injuries to their bodies.

"Whoever has observed at a shooting, amidst the heaps of sportsman's victims, the winged and wounded birds, causing the whole mass of dead and dying to quiver and move, by their striving and efforts to crawl away, will not doubt that pain, suffering and torture, follow as the result of wounding them.

"The natural instinct, either for freedom or of fear, would have impelled the bird, which the defendant wounded, to continue its flight had not the pain or exhaustion from the injury prevented. We are clear that this result amounted to ill-treatment and abuse in the meaning of the statute. We cannot undertake to measure the degree of this pain and abuse.

"Was the act wanton or cruel? As I regard the statute, the meaning of these two words, as used in it, is substantially the same.

"A licentious act by one towards another without regard to his rights or whatever is done sportively, loosely, without regularity or restraint, is wanton. Any act unjustifiable by the circumstances is wanton.

"The word cruelly, as applicable to similar statutes, has repeatedly received judicial definition.

"Taking up the question whether there was 'adequate reason or necessity for submitting the pig on to the pain and punishment inflicted upon it,' the judge says:

"According to the finding of the jury it was, primarily, for test of skill in marksmanship; secondarily, to prepare the bird for sale for food."

"In favor of the first, it was urged that this exercise should be encouraged as tending to promote strength and courage. And to render the citizen more official for those services which he may be called upon to render the State in time of war.

"Conceding that those recreations which serve as manly exercises and do not necessarily lead to protracted pain, should be encouraged to develop soldierly qualities, is shooting pigeons from traps the recreation calculated to best promote those qualities? Courage, endurance and steady marksmanship are among the most necessary requirements of the good soldier.

"It would be offensive to any citizen possessed of a spark of manhood to assert that his courage has fallen to so low an ebb as to require the exercise of shooting at helpless tame pigeons to qualify him to meet a foe in mortal combat, unless, indeed, he is lacking in that brutish instinct which inclines men to shed blood notwithstanding the nobler impulse which impels mortals to shrink from the infliction of pain. But we have progressed too far in civilisation to now wish to develop the brutish instincts of men that in time of war they may possibly make better soldiers.

"Neither can it be said that shooting at birds, as they are liberated from a trap, calls for such active exertions as would augment the citizen's capacity for endurance. The open chase, rowing and gymnastics are far better calculated to develop muscular action and strength. As for marksmanship, shooting at the clay pigeon or glass balls, is quite as good a means of testing quickness of the eye in following moving objects. The sportsman who would enter the modern battle-field with the expectation that his agility in using a shot gun at short range would be regarded of value, would be equally disappointed with the small boy with his pop gun.

"The army regulations do not provide for tests of marksmanship with shot guns, but with the rifle and ball. All the States use the rifle range and target practice with fixed ammunition, as the best adapted to train men as soldiers. We are, therefore, bound to conclude, that test of skill at marksmanship is not such a necessary or adequate object as will compensate for the infliction of pain, by wounding pigeons at trap shooting.

"We cannot agree that the demands of fashionable sport warrant the practice.

"In Ford vs. Wiley, Hawkins, J., said that while docking horses might be justified he held a very strong opinion against allowing fashion, or the whim of an individual, or any number of individuals, to afford a justification for such painful mutilation and disfigurement.

"Was it necessary to shoot or attempt to shoot the birds to prepare them for food?"

"The learned counsel for the Commonwealth admitted that the defendant is not answerable for shooting the bird that was innocently killed, because, as the right to kill existed, and as no unnecessary or lingering suffering was inflicted, there was no cruelty under the Act.

"Here is where an important distinction arises, as affecting the manner of killing captive or free animals. The right in man to kill, in order to render the animal more serviceable for his use, is undisputed. Therefore, one may inflict such pain and suffering as may be necessary to kill the animal for his use, as for food, without being chargeable with cruelty. He may shoot or otherwise take animals in their wild state, although it may result in lingering pain, because the animals, not being under his control, it is the only practicable way to obtain their use. In such case the necessity justifies the probable infliction of pain. But when the animal is in captivity man, in the exercise of his right to kill, is required to use such methods, having them in his power, as will avoid unnecessarily prolonged pain. All the cases cited agree to this proposition."

I will not detain the House in reading any more. I will only say that the hon. judge sustained the indictment and found the defendant guilty. In a few minutes we shall be called upon to vote upon this question. I referred to the lines of the poet aureate to show that men are progressing. I pointed out the increase of kindness and humanity among men, with the increasing predominance of the higher feelings over the lower, all which are against the continuance of the practice aimed at by this Bill. The Bill itself, as it stands upon the paper, may seem but a small matter, but we have to decide the question whether the Parliament of this country represents the feelings of the people, whether Parliament is a fair index of the humanity of the people, and whether the people of Canada are abreast with the best feeling and the best sentiment of the age, or whether we are lagging in the rear.

Mr. BROWN. I ask the indulgence of the Committee while I make some remarks in connection with the subject before us. I was not at all surprised at the proposal of my hon. friend from Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) in following out the tactics which he pursued on a former occasion, in moving that the Committee rise without reporting. I venture to say that the majority of hon. gentlemen on both sides of this House are disposed to have this Bill sifted and examined in a full House, clause by clause. My hon. friend from Norfolk seems to desire that the Bill should be killed without proper discussion. He has repeatedly stated in his addresses on former occasions that there is no cruelty in pigeon-shooting from traps. When I addressed the House on a previous occasion on this subject, I desired as much as possible to economise the time of the House, and I did not then give the evidence which I had in my desk, to prove the statements which I had made. I am going to give these statements to the House to-night, and to prove from the pens of true sportsmen who are well known in this country, that they denounce the practice of trap-shooting, and while that some of them have followed it, they ultimately became disgusted with the practice. Statements have been made in this House that the practice is not cruel, and that the birds are either killed or retrieved, or if not retrieved by dogs they are lit with sticks or stones by boys. I made a statement on my own authority, that within my own knowledge in the city from which I come, that a mile and a quarter from a shooting match grounds doves were found in the agonies of death. Yet the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) would seek to make this House believe that there is no cruelty practiced, that the birds are killed on the spot by sportsmen, or that they are retrieved by dogs or killed by boys with sticks and stones. Let me read to the Committee a few letters from men who have a right to speak on this question; men who know what they are talking about. I wish to say that I feel deeply and keenly the subject that is engaging the attention of the House to-night. I have thrown my whole energies into this measure, and although I hope for victory on this occasion, yet if the measure is defeated I shall bring it forward again. Here is a letter from Danville, P. Q., addressed to myself, and under the signature of Geo. O. Goodhue, any sportsmen of the Province will no doubt recognise the name. He writes:

"DANVILLE, P. Q., 28th February, 1890.

"A. BROWN, Esq., M. P.,
"OTTAWA, Ont.

"DEAR SIR.—For many years I have devoted a considerable part of each shooting season to the pursuit of snipe, Mr. ARMSTRONG.

woodcock, duck, and partridge and sometimes quail, of this health-giving recreation I am passionately fond, and there are few prominent sportsmen in Montreal or Quebec who shoot game, who have not heard of my skill as a wing shot in these game birds, although they may not know me personally.

"I never attended but one pigeon shooting match and although I killed 23 out of my 25 pigeons, I was heartily ashamed of the whole business and know nothing that would now induce me to try it again, aside from the degrading influences of gambling and liquor which usually to some extent, prevail at these gatherings.—trap-shooting of live birds is in itself entirely indefensible from any fair-minded sportsman's point of view. When we go out after any of the game birds that I have mentioned it is a reasonably fair contest of the skill of man aided by his trusty friends, the keen scented pointer or setter, against the wariness and cunning of the free bird in the full strength of all his powers out in the open field or lake as under the grand old times.

"How different from the murdering of poor, frightened, dazed pigeons suddenly thrown from the darkened trap into the broad glare of the sun: How such degrading work can ever be called sport by any one who knows what sport really is, is beyond comprehension. The plea that pigeon shooting is necessary to prepare young shooters for shooting at game is also totally indefensible. Before the invention of the clay pigeon, this argument might have had some force, but it is now a well known fact among practical shooters that it requires fully as much skill to make a good score at clay pigeons when properly thrown from a first class trap as it does at live birds themselves and besides, the small expense of the former is not to be compared to the cost of live pigeons. There is therefore no possible plea that can be urged in defence of pigeon-shooting except the brutal one of blood which will find no response in any real sportsman's heart. While we like to kill game when in pursuit of it, still we try to do so by giving as little pain as possible, and it is the only way to get the game. How often have I spent a whole hour aided by my good dogs in searching for a wounded bird, the main thought being to put it out of suffering. I trust your Bill to prevent pigeon-shooting will receive such a majority as to convince its opponents of the utter futility of another appeal against the better feelings and enlightened consciences of this country.

"Respectfully yours,

"GEO. O. GOODHUE."

A gentleman living in the Province of Ontario writes:

"Perhaps no man enjoys field sports and the delights of outdoors in Canada more than I do, but how men can enjoy the butchering of birds from the trap, I cannot understand.* * The shooting of pigeons from the traps, is a practice which cultivates a depraved taste, and which cannot be dissociated from a species of cruelty. I used to shoot pigeons from the trap many years ago, and I found that it was means to gambling and the cruel slaughter was something which no man of refined feelings but must surely become disgusted with.* * There are such inventions now, glass balls, clay birds &c., &c., that any person wanting to learn how to shoot ought to show their skill, have plenty opportunity without taking the lives of tame birds, in many places, I am sorry to say, bred for the purpose.* * I think any one attending a pigeon shooting match and see the medium which is generally made for gambling, must, if they reflect at all, come to the conclusion, that it is degrading to the participant and demoralising to the spectator, especially to the useful portion of the community."

I have here a letter from Toronto, pointing out another view of the question. The writer says:

"Pigeon stealing in Toronto has become so general that it is of no use to try to keep fancy birds. Boys steal them in the most barefaced way. They seem to think it no crime, but it is the one thing that starts them on the wrong road. They commence with pigeon burglary when they would be afraid to take anything else. They find a ready market among the shooting gentry and no questions asked. I have known birds worth $10, sold for 25 cents; what I write about I know for a fact. It may be of use to you,

"Trusting your much needed Bill may carry.

"I remain, yours sincerely,
"F. CASTON."

Here is another letter from Mr. A. G. Chisholm, barrister, of London:

"After referring to the interest that he was taking in the struggle then going on in this honorable House in connection with this subject, and stating that he had been connected with a gun club for a number of years, said: 'During the whole course of this time I have no recollection, although during that time we shot every week in reasonable weather, and sometimes even more frequently that we used live birds. Speaking for myself, I say that better practice can be had from shooting at clay birds now made, using the improved traps, than from live birds, and I have no doubt that if you were to take the sense of the club on the question, they would agree with what I say. Generally, when birds are shot at, for days before, the men who make it their business to organise these shoots, have had the birds cooped up, till they can get a sufficient number to make a success of the shoot, and the consequence is that the poor bird, when put in the trap and released, is in such a dazed condition that it is in no state to take advantage of the wings which nature has provided to take it out of danger. The consequence is that stones, sticks, or whatever is convenient are thrown at the unfortunate bird to compel it to fly and the bird goes off painfully flapping its cramped wings, only to be mowed down by a discharge from the sportsmen. I have never seen the eyes of the birds put out, although I have heard of it being done, but I nearly always saw the tail feathers plucked clean, that the flight of the bird may be more eccentric. I say unhesitatingly, that it is a cruel sport which does not fit one to be a good shot in the field, and should be condemned by law.'"

Here are some testimonies from men who are recognised sportsmen, who have practiced pigeon-shooting from traps until they became disgusted with the practice, and not only with the cruelty attending them but also with the surroundings of gambling. I wish it to be distinctly understood that I know there are many clubs where there is no gambling and no intoxication, and I am not here, while promoting this Bill, to make any charges whatever against any of those clubs. All I say is, and I said it before, that I do not blame the participants so much as the practice under which they are tempted to go to those matches, and as the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) has said, you cannot disassociate wrong-doing and cruelty practiced in order to secure the objects of those interested, so long as you have gambling connected with it. With reference to gambling, I may say that on Long Island the other day a pigeon match was held at which $16,000 were staked in bets for the slaughter of poor innocent doves. One man bet $5,000, another $3,000, another $1,000, and another $100 against a bottle of wine, and so on. These great sportsmen, who claim to be sportsmen stand at their ease there, while these poor birds, dazed from confinement—if nothing worse is done—fly into the full glare of the light. But there is no use saying that nothing worse is done; we know that worse has been done, and what has been done in the past will be done in the future. I would be the last man to say that any hon. gentleman in this House who opposes this measure, would be a party to preorganised cruelty to the bird in putting it into the trap. But they cannot shut their eyes to the fact that cruelty has been perpetrated and will be perpetrated in the future, so long as trap-shooting is allowed. We are seeking, by the introduction of this measure, to effect a good for our country; we are seeking to begin with the tuition and the education of the young people of the country, to abominate and execrate any practices which will cause cruelty to the meanest and lowest of God's creatures. No truer statement can be made, than that the first lesson a child learns, be it for good or for evil, remains with it, and I can tell you, that of all the lessons which can be taught in infancy to the child will take a deeper root than that which teaches kindness to animals. That principle is buried in the heart in future scenes in after life. The member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) in his address the other night in connection with this debate, made sneering and satirical remarks in reference to certain ladies who have chosen to lend their assistance towards the passing of this Bill. He spoke, I quote his own words, of "a number of sentimental ladies, bless their dear hearts," writing letters in favor of "dear Mr. Brown's Bill." He said something about "their precious little hearts, and their dear tenderness of heart," and then again he said "that the only reason why the Bill would be passed was that the ladies were asking members to vote for 'dear Mr. Brown's Bill.'" Again, with very questionable taste, the hon. gentleman chose to make satirical remarks on the names of two most intelligent and most amiable public school teachers of the city of Hamilton, which was altogether unbecoming, not only from a member of this House, but from any one else. I tell the hon. gentleman that I am proud that this measure has secured the sympathy of women. I believe, as firmly as I ever believed anything in my life, that in any movement for the good of humanity, if we have the sympathy of the women of the land with us we may depend that we are right. My hon. friend from South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale), and my hon. friend who looks at me now (Mr. Bergin)—

Mr. BERGIN. You need not refer to me.

Mr. BROWN. I am not referring to you, in this debate, it was to your remarks of last session and I want to touch you up a bit. My hon. friend must remember that when he chooses to sneer, and to cast ridicule on the influence of the women of Canada, he must remember that the Queen of England has set this noble example to the whole world. She made the statement that no civilisation was complete which did not include in it mercy and kindness to the lowest and meanest of God's creatures. When my hon. friend makes satirical remarks on the influence of the ladies, he must remember that he has to begin with the Queen of England, great as a queen, but greater still in the true nobility of her womanhood: the virtues which adorn her character become her better than her crown. The less the hon. gentleman says in reference to that influence in supporting this measure, the better. While I am proud that I have had the support and sympathy of all the humane hearted women, from ocean to ocean, with this measure, I am as proud that I have had the support of all the humane people of Canada. The press has spoken of it, and I will venture to take up the time of the House while I read one or two extracts, I have a score of them, from newspapers on this question. I wish the hon. leader of the third party was in his place, for I intend first, to read an editorial from that distinguished journal which he controls, the Montreal Herald. In the course of a very admirable article on the subject, the Herald states:

"This is a question which cannot be made a party one, and therefore every member will vote as he thinks. It is to be hoped that in defence of pigeon-shooting from traps the sacred word 'sport' will not be used. Nor will it be possible to defend it on the ground of improving anything. It is simply, avowedly and unmistakably a vehicle for matches and handicaps for money. Clay pigeons would do equally well. Some people say that glass balls are a sufficient substitute; but they are not, for at present they can be thrown only directly, and therefore do not in any way resemble the flight of a bird. But clay pigeons or stuffed birds flying round a revolving post do answer the purpose. Pigeon-shooting at Hurlingham in London and other places was stopped, and, generally speaking, the idea is gaining ground that shooting birds from a trap lacks the first and essential element of sport—that of allowing the thing pursued to use its instinct of self-preservation—and is altogether unnecessary cruelty. Trap-shooting is about on a par with coursing hares in an enclosed field, an amusement which attracts the roughest of the roughs, but which disgusts those who delight in coursing proper. If there is any reasonable argument to be advanced in favor of pigeon-shooting from traps, we shall be glad to hear it. At the same time, something might be advanced in favor of tying up a cat to be worried by ferriers."

The London Free Press says:

"It is a cruel form of entertainment, if entertainment it be. Most people will incline to the view that it is the betting and prize list which form the chief attraction, rather than the recreation which is afforded. There is no relation between genuine sports, with their vigorous exercise in the forest and by the stream, and these back yard shooting competitions. Happily, trap-shooting is on the decline, as much because of the opposition of popular sentiment as anything else."

My hon. friend from North Middlesex quoted the decision of Judge Yerkes of Pennsylvania, on a case which was brought before him in connection with the shooting of a pigeon from a trap. That decision shows conclusively that cruelty does exist in trap shooting. In a pigeon match, it is presupposed that some birds will be killed, that some will be wounded and that some will escape. There is no use of any hon. gentleman pretending that all the pigeons are killed, because they are not, but they are subjected to great suffering. I have in my possession a letter from a gentleman who is conversant with shooting matches in Canada, and he declares that the practice of putting Cayenne pepper into their eyes, in order to make them eccentric in their flying, so as to increase the difficulty of the shooting, has prevailed in Canada. I am far from stating that the clubs in Ottawa, or any of the clubs in Canada, are guilty of anything of that kind; but that is the statement, and what has been done may be done. Now, we have been told by hon. gentlemen that they have a strong sentiment from the country at their back in opposition to this Bill. I do not deny that they have presented many petitions to this House, and I will not in any shape or way disparage those petitions; but I may be permitted to criticise the prayer of the petitions. One hon. member has chosen to criticise the prayer of a petition in favor of the Bill; he says it simply prays that a Bill may pass for the further prevention of cruelty to animals. Well, that is a very proper prayer; but let us see what is the prayer of the petitions prepared by my hon. friend, or by one of his friends, and sent through the country to be signed. Listen to it for a moment. It says:

"That your petitioners are informed that certain persons are seeking to obtain amendments to the law for prevention of cruelty to animals for the purpose of preventing the shooting of certain birds."

Now, it was for the preventing of the trap-shooting of certain birds. Then they say:

"That gun clubs and sportsmen take pains to avoid the practice of any cruelty in regard to birds used in trap-shooting, and that with modern close-shooting guns, birds are usually killed instantaneously, but if wounded, are retrieved and killed with the least delay possible."

Now, I am not going to say that some of them are not killed; I am not going to say whether they kill many or kill few; but I say this, that if only one bird out of five or ten is left to flutter away and fall on the roof of some barn at a distance to die in agony, the principle is the same, and this House should stamp with its condemnation any such barbarous and degrading practice. Listen further to what they say:

"That the use of the birds mentioned for trap-shooting affords the only efficient and comparative humane means of checking their increase."

Whoever heard the like of that?

"That to stop such shooting would be a great and unwarrantable interference with the business of those engaged in the gun trade and manufacturers and dealers in shooting materials."

Here we have the opponents of this measure coming down to this base and low level, and saying that you must continue to permit a degrading and brutal sport, because if you do not, you are interfering with the manufacturers of guns and shot. Let me tell my hon. friend that since this discussion commenced, I had a visit from a gentleman who manufactures shot in the city of Montreal, and he said to me: "Mr. Brown, I came up last Session and did a good deal of lobbying against your Bill; the boys got me up, and it had to be done." There was a good deal of that done by "the boys" last Session. Last Session they had some fun in connection with this measure, but the days of fun are past. This gentleman told me that he was not going to take any further steps to oppose the Bill, that, as a matter of fact, if it passed, he would sell less shot, but that he was entirely with me on the morality of my measure and he would be done with it. Another shot manufacturer in Montreal told me that he opposed this measure, and had lobbied members and had done all in his power to defeat it last year, simply because those to whom he sold shot had asked him to do it; but this year he told me: "Mr. Brown, I tell you distinctly that you are right in the stand you are taking; whether I sell or do not sell, the moral position you take is the right one." I know there has been an active lobbying in opposition to this measure, both inside and outside of the House. I have no fault to find with that although I might if I choose. One of the parties in the Province of Quebec hoped I would not be too severe on them for their interference. I have had a hard battle to fight in connection with this matter, but my hon. friends in this House have stood nobly by the measure. But when people talk of the member for Hamilton and his pigeon-cranks, they must remember that ninety-one members of this House who voted for the second reading are cranks if I am one; and they have as good a right to exercise their judgment on a matter of this kind as those who think differently from us. There has been a great deal of misconception and misunderstanding about this Bill. One hon. gentleman tried to cast ridicule upon it, saying that under it a man could be fined $50 because he turned out a cat on a cold night. Let hon. gentlemen view this matter in a serious light; let them view it in the light in which it is presented here. I do not come before this House with any proposal for an Act which is going to be of no benefit to the country. I ask you to pass an Act which the testimony of the whole country, with the exception of this little interest, declares will be productive of good. My hon.

friend has chosen to say in his speech—I hope he is prepared to substantiate it—that the petitions sent down to me from Toronto were hawked around the streets by a few small boys. The petitions that came to me from Toronto were signed by the faculty of Trinity College, and by the faculties of four other colleges, by the public school teachers, by the judges, and by the most prominent men in the city; and I ask how an hon. gentleman could have the audacity to rise in this House and say that these petitions were hawked about the streets by a few small boys? When he goes to Toronto, let him try to prove to these people that a few small boys were able to get their signatures, and I fancy he will soon get an answer that he will not relish. The petitions from the city of Toronto would be an honor to any measure ever introduced into this House. The petition that came from St. John, the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) and my hon. friend (Mr. Skinner) told me, was the most influentially signed petition they ever saw. I am not going to speak of that which I presented from my own city, except to say that it was very influentially signed, and I will also admit that the one presented by my hon. colleague also bore the signatures of many prominent people. I cast back with scorn the imputation of the hon. gentleman that the petitions in favor of the Bill were not obtained in a regular manner. I have presented petitions in favor of this measure to the number of fifty-five, containing about 3,900 names, which must be evidence to the House of the strength of feeling which exists in the country in its favor. Archdeacon Farrar, one of the greatest authorities in England, and a man of great learning, has had occasion, in the course of his public duties, to refer to the cruel sport of killing for killing's sake. When the lower creation was placed under man's control it was not so placed for mere sport and wanton killing, but for the needs of man, and wherever that killing is due to any other cause than the needs of man, the person who kills incurs a responsibility beyond conception. Archdeacon Farrar, speaking of the disgraceful sight which he beheld, and which he said still haunted him, when he saw a number of harmless birds lying in a confused mass on the sand, their white plumage tinged with blood, sacrificed and tortured, to furnish a day's amusement, under the guise of senseless, miserable sport, said:

"Not once or twice only, at the seaside, have I come across a sad and disgraceful sight—a sight which haunts me still—a number of harmless sea-birds lying, defaced and dead, upon the sand, their white plumage red with blood, as they had been tossed there, dead or half-dead, their torture and massacre having furnished a day's amusement to heartless and senseless men. Amusement! I say execrable amusement! All killing for mere killing's sake is execrable amusement. Can you imagine the stupid callousness, the utter insensibility to mercy and beauty, of the man who, seeing those bright, beautiful creatures, as their white immaculate wings flash in the sunshine over the blue waves, can go out in a boat with his boys and teach them to become brutes in character by finding amusement—I say, again, dehumanising amusement—by wantonly murdering these fair birds of God, or cruelly wounding them, and letting them fly away to wait and die in lonely places."

In the city of Paris, in France, a few years ago, in one of the great public gardens, a man who had been so kind to the wild birds there that they would light on his hands and feed from his fingers. In the city of Venice, in Italy, the people fed the pigeons every day at noon, in the great public square of Saint Mark, and when it is near the hour of noon, you will see the pigeons flying from all parts of the city, over the roofs of the buildings, to be fed. It is a crime in Venice to harm a pigeon. Walter Von Vogelweide, the great lyric poet of the middle ages, so loved them that he left a legacy to the monks of Wurtzburg, on condition that they should every day feed the birds on the tombstone over his grave. As I stated a little while ago, in condemning trap-shooting matches, the Bill has a wider scope than that. It provides for kindness to animals in general. The humane societies which have been started in this country and England, are doing a great deal of good. In all our cities in which these societies have been established, those who have to do with horses and cattle, understanding that if they are unkind and cruel to the animals under their charge, they will be punished, are more careful in their treatment of the brute creation than they were formerly. In Hamilton, now that they understand clearly what the society requires, the Street Car Company will not work any horse which has a galled shoulder, and in Toronto, I am pleased to see, that there is a great body of men who favor every description of kindness to animals. The Hon. Frank Smith, a gentleman for whom every man in this House, on both sides has the highest respect, has a good deal to do with the street railway and he says:

"Regarding the treatment which our horses get, it is as follows: They are only worked not quite four hours out of the twenty-four—not quite twenty-four hours in a week; they get all they can eat; are well cleaned and groomed; a first-class bed and warm stable in winter; their food is of the choicest kind that can be procured, and their owners give them every attention and care possible; in fact they are better provided for than are a large portion of human beings known as servants."

I draw attention to this matter because I feel bound to do so. There are brutes in human form who do not treat their horses in the same way, and it is to deal with these men that this Bill is introduced. As I have already said, we never can repay the debt we owe the horse or any domestic animal. I might add that we can never repay the debt we owe the dog, for its fidelity and attachment to us, yet there are brutes in human form who would lash a dumb animal, whose suffering is all the more piteous because it is mute. The same fellow who would do that to a dumb animal would not do it to a man servant, because he might retaliate, while the mute and patient beast would not. All we ask is that acts of cruelty which are not already provided for by law should be so provided. Some of my hon. friends belonging to the legal profession ask what I contemplate. They say that, if a bird is caught wounded a mile or two away from the place where it was shot, the law would help us. What a long chase it would be for my hon. friend from South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) to run a mile or two when some one had wounded a pigeon, and to trace the so-called sportsman while the pigeon that had escaped was fluttering and dying in agony. We have to go to the root of the matter. There must be in the minds of some hon. gentlemen a misapprehension as to the provisions of this Bill, because it seems to be supposed to have a wider scope than it has. This Bill describes what an animal is, and proposes to put a stop forever to trap-shooting. In Australia, where they have a very good idea of things, the board of education for Victoria, in one of their annual reports to the Governor, thus refer to the discouragement which they have given to the school boys' cruel habit of destroying birds :

"Considerable mischief having been caused by the wilful destruction of birds and plants by children, we have issued a circular calling the attention of teachers to the subject; and in the case of our model schools, we have directed that the masters shall frequently assemble the children, for the purpose of pointing out to them the wrongfulness of such conduct; and we have further ordered, that any boy so offending shall be expelled from the school."

I have endeavored to show the objects we have in view in connection with this Bill; I have endeavored to show the cruelty which is practiced by trap-shooting, and I have shown that the objects of this Bill are in the direction of everything which is humane and good. I will not at this stage detain the Committee very much longer; but I hope that, when this matter comes to be decided by the Committee, they will take a reasonable view of the matter. I regret, from unavoidable circumstances, that the House is so thin, as I desired a full House for the discussion. I know that this Bill has caused a good deal of excitement, perhaps more than was necessary, amongst hon. gentlemen here. I have endeavored to be calm throughout the whole of this discussion and this contest. I felt that I had right on my side, and any man who feels that he has right on his side, although he may not succeed, feels that he can struggle on and battle for that right with a stout heart. I have done that in regard to this matter, and I hope that, when the Committee take a calm and dispassionate view of the whole subject, they will render a verdict which will show that the sanction of the law will be given to everything which tends to educate the people in the line of loving kindness and mercy to those who cannot plead for themselves. Again, I appeal for consideration for dumb animals, and I hope I shall not have spoken in vain and that the sanction of law will be given to sustain gentleness and mercy to the weak and reverence for the life of even the lowest of God's creatures.

Mr. McNEILL. I do not rise to speak in favor of the resolution that the Committee do now rise. My feeling in regard to this Bill, as in regard to other Bills, is that it should be treated with respect and consideration. But in reference to the question which has been discussed throughout this evening—that is the question of pigeon-shooting from traps—I desire to say a word or two. Whether we agree or not with all that my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Brown) has said on this subject, we will all agree, I think, that he has introduced this Bill from the very best possible motive, and has conducted the discussion from first to last with the best possible temper and the greatest possible courtesy. For my own part, I must confess that I have a little difficulty in opposing my hon. friend almost in anything, and especially in a matter of this kind, where he is engaged in what is really a good work, a work of benevolence, a work of mercy to dumb, innocent creatures; but, so far as this particular matter which we are at this moment discussing is concerned, I am, for my own part and according to my lights, constrained to oppose him in regard to this clause of the Bill in reference to pigeon-shooting from traps which is the one that has taken up the consideration of the House during this evening. I do it for this reason, that, if we decree, on the score of cruelty, that it shall be unlawful to shoot a pigeon as it flies out of a box or a trap, it will be impossible for us consistently to stop there. Hard-hearted and cruel it is, I admit, to find pleasure in a sport which involves the taking away of the life of a harmless creature; but I say that, if on that ground we decree that it shall be unlawful, we cannot consistently stop there. Because upon precisely the same ground almost every field sport which involves the taking away of life must also be declared to be unlawful. A great deal has been said about the cruelty incidental to trap-shooting of pigeons; a great deal has been said about the mutilation of pigeons, the torturing of pigeons, the putting out of the eyes of pigeons, and the pulling out of their tails—all of which are atrocious acts. It would be perfectly right for us to deal with that, because we have already stated that it is wrong to torture any animal. But the torture of pigeons is not necessarily a concomitant of shooting them from traps. That matter was tested in the mother country, and it was decided there that the shooting of pigeons from traps was not necessarily cruel, and that this torture, in regard to which a great deal of eloquence has been unnecessarily employed, could be dealt with separately and by itself. And that, I think, is what we ought to do in this case, in order to be consistent. But I say it is no more cruel to shoot at a pigeon as it flies from a box or trap, than it is to shoot at the same pigeon as it flies out of a tree, or any other pigeon that flies out of a tree; I say it is much less cruel than it is deliberately to level your gun at your victim and calmly to murder it as it sits in trustful confidence, looking at you from a branch of a tree; I say it is not at all so cruel as it is to set your relentless sleuth hounds upon the trail of a noble deer, and while he is putting forth all his splendid power of fleetness to free himself from the fangs of the dogs that are in full cry upon his track, to conceal yourself, rifle in hand, by a runway, and shoot him through the heart from your ambushade; I say that is much more cruel than to shoot a pigeon as it flies out of a box or trap; I say it is much more cruel, to slip two dogs upon a poor little hare, the most timorous, probably, of all God's creatures—I do not speak of hares enclosed in a field, as I think my hon. friend beside me (Mr. Brown) did, I speak of hares in the open—to slip two dogs upon a hare and to stand by and watch her struggles, her futile struggles, her desperate struggles, for dear life, to stand by and to take pleasure in watching this, to watch her straining desperately, all in vain, to escape those dogs that are pursuing her, to watch her windings and her turnings, all in vain, until at last you hear, coming down the wind, the strange and human-like cry that tells you that her race is run and her sufferings are at an end; I say that is very much more cruel than it is to shoot a pigeon as it flies from a trap. Now, the mere killing of the hare by the dogs, the worrying of the hare by the dogs, is of itself much more cruel. In all probability the hare suffers very much more in the jaws of the dogs than the pigeon does when it is shot, and still that is a small part of the sufferings of the hare. So desperate are her struggles to escape that it is well known that if she has had a hard run, even if she does escape, she seldom survives. She almost invariably dies merely from the effects of the physical exhaustion; on dissection it will be found that her lungs are almost filled with blood and lymph. From this we may form some idea of the agony endured by the hare from the mere excess of physical exertion, in her frantic efforts to escape. But I say that even that is as nothing, and vanishes altogether from the consideration of the matter, when we have in view the mortal agony of terror she endures when she feels, in spite of all these desperate struggles, in spite of all her straining to escape, that the dogs are surely closing in upon her. I say it is, in my opinion, absurd to attempt to argue for one moment that in the case of a pigeon, fired at as it flies from a trap, the cruelty is anything when compared with the cruelty of coursing a hare in the open, not in a closed field. Then, if that be so, how can it be consistently urged that it shall be considered so monstrously cruel and so wicked to shoot a pigeon as it flies from a box or trap, that a man shall be subjected even to imprisonment, while another is allowed to carry on these other sports without let or hindrance, which are very much more cruel than pigeon-shooting? The fact is that pigeon-shooting—I do not speak of the abominations which have been referred to by my hon. friend beside me, and by my hon. friend opposite; I speak of pigeon-shooting from traps, such as it is known in this country, and such, as I believe, it has become in the mother country since the law dealing with that species of cruelty has come into existence—I say that in point of fact such pigeon shooting is one of the least cruel of sports involving the destruction of life. Certainly shooting is very much less cruel than hunting, and the thing connected with shooting, which involves the most cruelty, the most suffering, is the escape of the wounded birds to die in agony, as the hon. member for Hamilton has just mentioned. That is reduced to a minimum in the case of pigeon-shooting, because, while in the case of shooting wild birds, many wounded birds escape; in the case of pigeon shooting, as I said, there is an opportunity of reducing it to a minimum by reason of that fact that there are many people around the ring who put these wounded birds out of pain at once. Therefore, I say it is one of the least cruel of the so-called sports. Now, for my own part, I would have no pleasure in shooting pigeons from traps. I have never fired at a pigeon flying out of a trap in my life, it is not at all likely that I will ever do so; but I know I should very much enjoy other field sports which are much more cruel, from my point of view, at least, than trap-shooting. I think that we ought, in dealing with such a matter as this, have in mind the advice given to us by our old friend Hudibras, when he tells us that we ought to take care that we do not

By damning those we have no mind to.”

It seems to me that there is a good deal of that in connection with the arguments which we hear bandied about in reference to this shooting of pigeons from traps. The time may come when it will be considered immoral to pursue any of the field sports involving the death of an animal. The time may come when all field sports shall be considered immoral. That is really the question that we are here face to face with. That question is a very large one, and a very wide-reaching one; it is the question which is necessarily involved in this discussion. My hon. friend who spoke last clearly enough brought this proposition to the surface, because he quotes as a portion of his argument from Archdeacon Farrar when he laid down the proposition that, unless it were necessary, all killing of the lower animals was wrong. Now, that is a logical proposition, and it is perfectly consistent. I think this House would be perfectly consistent to lay down such a proposition as that, if it felt so inclined. But that is a proposition which will include, I think, this consequence among other propositions which are also far-reaching. Among other propositions which it will include is this: That it is immoral to eat animal food at all, except just in sufficient quantity to maintain the human frame in health and strength. That is a proposition which will necessarily follow from the other. It is quite clear, at all events, that the man who eats animal food for the mere pleasure felt in the eating of it, is pandering to a very much lower appetite than the huntsman who indulges his passion for the chase. The difference is just that between the eagle that strikes his quarry among the clouds, and the vulture that batters upon the carcasses of the slain. It does seem to me that it is illogical, that it is inconsistent, to say that we shall fine and imprison a man for firing at a pigeon as it flies from a trap while another man shall be allowed to shoot an unfortunate partridge which is sitting upon a branch of a tree, or a pigeon sitting upon the roof of his own barn, the all sufficient excuse in this case for the sportsman being that he wishes to add to the pleasures of his table, to batten upon the dead body of his victim, and perhaps to fill his stomach to repletion. I do not think that it is a legitimate conclusion for this House to arrive at, and I, therefore, shall feel it my duty, when the clause comes up, to vote against it. The time may come when all field sports may be considered immoral, though I believe, notwithstanding all my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) has said so eloquently, when that time comes, the day of national degradation will not be very far distant. My hon. friend has spoken of bull-baiting in Spain, and he has drawn an argument from the fact that the Spaniards, who are now indulging in bull-baiting, do not hold the commanding position among the nations of the earth, they held in former days. But I do not think that argument is altogether sound, and for this reason: When England was in the zenith of her glory, strength and manhood, bear-baiting, bull-baiting and cock-fighting prevailed. For my own part, I think that the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Brown) is doing a good work in taking up the cudgels in defence of our dumb friends, a work in which, I think, he should be supported; but, so far as regards this particular matter, pigeon-shooting from traps, I think he has been altogether led astray. If there is any special cruelty in connection with the matter, if any one is so atrociously wicked as to torture these birds, by all means punish him with the utmost rigor of the law, and, if the law is not sufficiently rigorous, let us make it more so, but do let us try to be consistent.

Mr. GUILLET. I had hoped that the hon. members opposed to this Bill, would have been prepared to justify the motion made, that the Committee rise without any progress being made with the Bill, the object of which motion is simply to kill it. That is not a sportsmanlike act; it is not fair play to seek to prevent the House giving a fair and free expression to its views on this Bill, but it is an attempt to take a mean and unfair advantage of the fact that a number of hon. members who favor the measure are absent for good cause. I had expected that some hon. gentleman in favor of the present motion would have been prepared to justify their course in supporting it, and I am surprised they have not seen fit to do so. An hon. member who addressed the Committee a few minutes ago, explained that he does not favor the motion that the Committee rise, but he desires that the Bill should be further considered and any objectionable clauses removed. That is British fair play, and it is a position which all true sportsmen should adopt in order that this House may have an opportunity of fully considering this Bill. I think the feelings of sportsmen are not fairly represented by hon. gentlemen who are opposing this Bill. In my opinion many sportsmen are not entirely opposed to its provisions, and in fact gun clubs are adopting resolutions in favor of the Bill. But I cannot understand why the practice of shooting birds in traps should promote clever shooting more than shooting at glass balls or clay pigeons. I am satisfied that the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Tisdale), who has taken such a prominent part in opposing this Bill, does not represent the correct views of his constituency, for I understand that the gun club in his own riding are in favor of the Bill by a large majority. I understand this from a telegram.

Mr. TISDALE. Read the telegram.

Mr. GUILLET. The telegram handed to me by the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Brown) is from the secretary of the gun club of the Town of Simcoe. It reads:

"Simcoe gun club pass by three-fourths vote resolutions commending your Bill."

Mr. TISDALE. There is no gun club in the town.

Mr. GUILLET. I will give you the name of the secretary. It is F. S. Wade.

Mr. TISDALE. No such man lives in Simcoe.

Mr. GUILLET. The telegram purported to have come over the Canadian Pacific Railway Telegraph line, and has the sanction of the company. Many gun clubs have adopted the use of glass balls and clay pigeons, and the marksmen have proven quite as successful as those who shoot pigeons from traps. I am not surprised there is considerable opposition to this Bill, for there has always been opposition to Bills of this kind, not only when introduced into this Parliament, but also in the Imperial Parliament. There was the strongest possible opposition to the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act when first introduced in the British Parliament, and every measure for the prevention of cruelty has been opposed at every stage. Among savage tribes great and revolting cruelties are practiced on their captives or slaves.

Mr. McNEILL.

As we advance in civilisation you find gladiatorial contests, bull-fights and pugilistic competitions, and all these sports mark the progress made in civilisation among the nations. There is to-day a larger number of the people of this country and the members of this House in favor of this Bill, than when it was introduced some six or seven years ago. Each time the Bill has been brought before the House, a much larger support has been given to it than on previous occasions; and it has never had before so many sympathisers as it has to-day in Parliament. I have no doubt, that if we have a full and fair discussion, the majority will be in favor of the Bill. I think it is unfair that advantage should be taken of the absence of a number of members to kill this Bill. I hope the gentlemen who moved this motion will give some reason to justify their action.

Mr. FREEMAN. I had made up my mind to give a silent vote on this question, but I must say that the Bill before the House has my utmost sympathy, and that the hon. member for Hamilton, who is pressing this measure, deserves the support and consideration of every member who has regard for persistence in a good cause. I am proud to say, that in the part of the Dominion from which I come, we have no acquaintance with this kind of cruelty, which seems to be practiced in this portion of the Dominion. I am astonished at the course hon. gentlemen take who seem to be opposed to the Bill. I believe that the speech of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) presented this matter in a most convincing light, and in a most eloquent manner, and the hon. gentleman who introduced the Bill has supported it by arguments that have not been attempted to be gainsaid. I expected to hear from the hon. member for South Bruce (Mr. McNeill) with his logical mind, and his ability to present things philosophically, some cogent reasons why this Bill should not be passed. But, to my perfect astonishment, he made an argument which was certainly not worthy of the hon. gentleman's intelligence. He admits that there is cruelty in this trap-shooting, but he contends there should be no law passed against it, because there are some other practices that are still more cruel; that argument is not worthy of the logical mind of that hon. gentleman. It will, I am sure, not be seriously contended that because animals are killed for human food, birds may be killed for sport. When we take the lives of animals for human food, we derive our authority for doing so from the Bible, but we cannot find in the laws or precepts of that blessed book, that these dumb animals, whether the beasts of the forests or the birds of the air, have ever been given to us for sport. I hold that life is precious in the sight of God and in the sight of man, and that the man who trifles with life, whether it is human life, or the life of the dumb beasts of the forests, or the life of the birds of the air, does so in direct opposition to the divine precept. And I do believe that he breaks not only a divine law, but that he breaks that law written in the conscience and in the heart of every good man who desires to act righteously and honestly and fairly. If there is cruelty in taking the life of the animal for the support of man, we are permitted and allowed to do that, but it is nowhere permitted to us to take the life of animals, or the life of birds, for the purpose of the sport of man, for the purpose of cruel sport, for purposes which give no real pleasure to a man who is properly constituted and whose life is actuated by proper motives. Therefore, I contend that while we are permitted to take the lives of animals for our food, we are not permitted to sport with the lives of these birds. Who will dare to justify cruelty, because the degree of cruelty practiced is not so great as it might be? I am sure that such reasoning will have no influence on this House, but that the majority of hon. members are prepared to pass the Bill of my hon. friend from Hamilton, as a step in the right direction—a step, not only to put down cruelty, but to put an end to the vicious practices connected with pigeon-shooting. I am told that these practices are not supported by sportsmen who go out into the fields, as we might go to shoot a hare or a partridge, but by men who, for the purpose of making money, carry on an immoral trade which every honest and righteous man should condemn. Very valuable testimony has been brought forward during this discussion in support of this Bill—the testimony of good men and educated men, of men whose hearts are in sympathy with everything that is amiable, benevolent, kindly and beneficial to the human family, as well as to dumb animals. What have we had from the other side? We have had the support of no influential men—we have had nothing, Sir, to pit against the very important testimony that has been given in favor of the Bill. Now, I have already said that the laws of this noble land in which we live are founded upon the principles of the Bible. Our grand and glorious Queen, Sir, in reply to a question that was put to her as to what was the cause of the prosperity of Britain, pointed to the Bible; and I think no hon. member of this House need be ashamed to follow her example, or to say with me that the laws of this country are based on the Bible. Now, I wish to call attention to one statement in that book, which I trust guides every one of us on his way to the future. The divine Savior said: “Not a sparrow falleth to the ground without His notice.” I hope the majority of this House will ponder that, if they have not already done so; and if the divine wisdom takes notice of the sparrow, it also takes notice of pigeons and of the smallest of God’s creatures—I will not say the meanest, because who will undertake to say that the birds, which with their music and harmony bring so much that is elevating to us, are the meanest of God’s creatures? Not by any means, Sir; and I say it becomes our bounden duty to do everything we can, not only by our examples and precepts, but by the laws we pass in this House, as far as we can to see that there is no waste of the life of these animals—that there is no infraction of those laws by which we are all bound and will be judged, and to see that our laws are in conformity with those laws. Now, I felt in duty bound to place my views before the House, and having done so, I have discharged that duty. I have no doubt that a number of hon. members will oppose this Bill, and I should like to hear the grounds on which they justify their votes, so that we may see that they are consistent, and that they have something to say that is worthy of being called an argument. If the opponents of this Bill wish to be consistent, let them meet the arguments of the hon. member for Assiniboia and the hon. member for Hamilton. With these remarks, I beg to say that I will support the Bill.

Mr. TISDALE. I have very little to add to the lengthened debate which has taken place upon this motion to-night; but I wish to answer one or two hon. gentlemen who have asked why we bring the motion up in this way. They challenged that so many times that I will tell them now in a very few words the reason. It is because we thought that every hon. member of this House, before the long discussion we had to-night, thoroughly understood the discussion. We thought that three or four hours might have been saved to-night, and several hours previously, during which this Bill claimed the attention of the House after it had been thoroughly understood. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), who is generally a logical man, in pointing out the wickedness and gambling which accompanies the shooting of pigeons from traps, forgot that these will also accompany the shooting of clay pigeons.

Mr. BROWN. I simply wish to say that I handed my hon. friend behind me the telegram after I had received it.

Committee divided: Yeas, 52; nays, 47.

Committee rose.

ALIEN CONTRACT LABOR.

House resumed debate on proposed motion of Mr. Taylor for second reading of Bill (No. 8) to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in Canada.

Mr. TAYLOR. A few evenings ago, when this Bill was before the House, the debate was adjourned. I presume there are other members who wish to speak on the subject, and if so now is their opportunity. If not the motion is before the House, and I ask that this matter may be referred to a special committee which will deal with the subject. Since I spoke on a former occasion, I have received petitions from a great many societies from all parts of Canada, in favor of the Bill I had the honor to introduce, among which are the following: Toronto Trades Council Legislative Committee; District Assembly No. 128, Toronto; Districts Nos. 1 and 2, Montreal; Cigarmakers’ Union, Montreal; Typographical Union, Montreal; Local Assembly, No. 7628, Montreal; Local Assembly, No. 7025, Montreal; The Dominion Trades and Labor Congress.

Mr. MITCHELL. Before the Bill is declared read, I think the Government should declare their policy on the matter, as to our relations with a foreign country, and I think the Prime Minister should state to the House what their policy is.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Bill was declared to be read a second time, before I had an opportunity of stating our view. I do not think it is advisable that this Bill should be adopted, although the legislation on the other side, has been extremely unfriendly. I should not say unfriendly to Canada, because I think that, at the time the law was passed in the United States Congress, they did not have the intercourse with Canada before them at all. I believe the Act was passed there in order to prevent the influx of foreigners, in order, using an expression which I used the other day, to prevent the scum of Europe and Asia coming into the United States. I do not believe there was any reference to Canada during the discussion of that measure, but all the same it operates against us in the manner which has been described, and I think that is exceedingly unfortunate. I do not, however, believe that we ought to imitate the legislation of the United States in that respect. In the first place, we have not the same reason. The United States do not desire, they do not require, an addition to their population. The natural increase is sufficient of itself, and they find, from the fact of the heterogeneous mass who are coming into the country, that there are sources of disturbance which they wish to keep under control. On the other hand, we in Canada are a much younger country with a smaller population, and we require a large influx of settlers to occupy our great west. For that reason I do not think that this Bill should become law. At the same time, the proposition made by my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) that the Bill might be read a second time, pro formâ, and then referred to a special committee to consider the whole subject is one which I would not regret to see adopted. A report on the subject from a special committee, pointing out in proper terms the unfriendly aspect of this legislation as applied to Canada, pointing out its effect on the commercial intercourse along our frontier, and suggesting some remedy for that, might be of advantage, because, if that report were carefully prepared, as it would be no doubt, if the committee were properly chosen, might be of considerable service. It might have some effect upon the public mind in the United States and it could not do much harm. The Government, however, do not approve of the principle of this Bill, and it could only be by the assent of the House that the Bill should be read a second time, pro formâ, simply for the purpose of getting a report from a special committee.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will supplement the remarks of the hon. gentleman so far as to say that I entirely agree with everything he has said, but I will go a little further in regard to the legislation in the United States. I do not believe it was ever contemplated by the Congress of the United States that this measure should be put in force in regard to Canada. I believe the officers of the United States on the borders have put a construction on that law which was never contemplated by Congress or by those who advocated its passage in Congress. I desire that this Parliament should avoid doing anything to promote or to aggravate the unfriendly feeling which crops up now and then in regard to these international questions. We are called upon, with the view of advancing the interests of this country and its peace and prosperity, to cultivate the most friendly relations between the United States and Canada; and, while I agree with the right hon. gentleman that it might be of service that this Bill should be read a second time and referred to a special committee, I think that special committee, which should be composed of the best men in this House, should place upon the records of Parliament our desire to maintain friendly relations with our neighbors, should show that the application which has been made of their legislation as against Canada is unfair, and should call the attention of the House and the country to the fact that that application has been unfriendly to this country. I believe that that would do great good, and I, therefore, support the motion of the right hon. gentleman as to the appointment of a special committee. I am opposed to the passage of this Bill, and I only support the second reading for the reasons which have been given by the Premier.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) I cannot agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Mitchell) in the course which he proposes. I was glad to hear the leader of the Government state that this Bill did not meet with the assent or approval of the Government, and I think I am safe in saying that it does not meet with the approval of the large majority who sit on this side of the House. However, I believe that a second reading of the Bill would be taken in the United States as meaning an assent to the principle of the Bill, and I think that is a very undesirable thing, particularly at this time, when negotiations are in progress for a settlement of pending difficulties, and when we have a Minister at Washington concerned in looking after them. I think it would be suicidal for us now to adopt the principle of this Bill which is calculated only to cause unnecessary irritation. I cannot see that any good can be attained by assenting to the principle of the Bill and then appointing a committee in the hope that that committee will present a report which will be antagonistic to the lines on which the Bill is founded. I am sure that we all desire to promote friendly relations with the United States; but that is not to be done by passing a Bill of this kind, but is to be accomplished by friendly negotiations. I think it would promote good feeling on both sides of the line if a large majority of this House refused to give this Bill a second reading. If, after that, the Government thought that the relations between the two countries were such that a committee carefully chosen to consider those relations could advise the Government with respect to the relations between the two countries, that would be another thing, but that is an entirely different and separate matter, and I cannot see on what ground the second reading of this Bill should be assented to, on the suggestion that a special committee should be appointed to make a report with the view of ameliorating the conditions which exist between this country and the United States. I agree with what the leader of the Government said, that the Bill itself is not one which should receive the assent of the House, and I hope the House will refuse to give it a second reading.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I must confess that I entirely disagree with the proposition made by the First Minister to give this Bill a second reading, and to let it go to a special committee. That is abdicating the authority of the Government, and I believe it is the duty of the Government to say distinctly whether they are ready to allow this measure to receive its second reading and thus to affirm its principle. I cannot go so far as my hon. friend who last spoke. I am not prepared to say that there may not be some reason why we should pass a Bill of this description. My hon. friend thinks that the United States never intended to make their law apply against the people of Canada. I cannot agree with him in that respect. If they did not intend that the Bill should operate against Canada, if they were desirous to encourage amicable relations between Canada and the United States, they would long ere this have signified their intention, and have modified their Bill. They have not done so. The First Minister said that he did not think it was prudent that we should exclude labor from Canada, because, having a large country, we required, to use his own expression, all the labor we can get from the United States or any other country. I think that view is not in harmony with the policy of protection for the laboring people of Canada which that hon. gentleman had promised. He has inaugurated a policy by which laboring men have to pay more for everything they consume, by which they are heavily taxed, but when the just and proper claims of the laboring men are to be considered, then, forsooth, they are not to be protected, they are not to have the same rights and privileges as the manufacturers, or the farmers, or any other class. I say that if the hon. gentleman feels that protection to be good, if he feels that the laboring men are entitled to the same privileges as others, he ought to allow a Bill of this kind to pass.

Mr. GILLMOR. I agree with the leader of the Government that we should not dispose of this Bill quite so readily as my hon. friend at my left desires. This is a pretty serious matter. Every one knows my policy with regard to these matters. Here on the border we have been living in a social way, there has been no difficulty for many years. Down in the county I represent, bounded by the St. Croix, the people have, for all social purposes, been one community. Workmen from both sides have been in the habit, for many years, of going across the line without any interruption. In our lumbering operations in the winter time especially, our laborers were in the habit of taking contracts on the other side, and going with their teams into the State of Maine for the winter. Now, it has been nearly two years since this law has been put in force, and it has been exceedingly annoying to our people. We have suffered very much from it, and there is an intense feeling of anger in the way it has been enforced. I believe it was intended to be enforced against Canadians. The officials there are very zealous in enforcing the law, and have caused our people a great deal of annoyance. Since the cotton mill was built in St. Stephen, N.B., every day we find two or three hundred operatives in that mill coming across the line into St. Stephen to work and going back to live in the State of Maine, and in that community where the Americans have never been stopped from coming over to our side, the operation of the law is exceedingly annoying. I desire to see the leader of the Government pursue the line that he proposes, and at least let them understand that we are considering the subject, and that we are not going to dispose of this Bill so summarily as my hon. friend here proposes.

Mr. McMULLEN. It appears to me that this is a very important question, and as the House is very thin to-night, and owing to the gravity of the question, I move that the debate be now adjourned.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 11.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 13th March, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.

Mr. BROWN moved:

That this House do, on Monday next, resolve itself into a Committee, to consider further the Bill to make further provision as to the prevention of cruelty to animals, and to amend chapter 172 of the Revised Statutes of Canada.

Mr. TISDALE moved in amendment:

That all the words after the word "Monday" be struck out of the main motion, and the following substituted: "That the Bill be referred to a Committee this day six months."

Mr. BERGIN. I ask the House to reject this motion, for the reason that I think motions of this character are calculated to bring legislation into contempt. The people of this country are not at all satisfied that so much of the time of this House, to the great expense of the country, should be consumed in the discussion of this Bill.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question.

Mr. BERGIN. When these hon. gentlemen get done shouting, I shall speak. I can stand here with as great comfort as they can sit there and shout. The country does not approve of this sort of tinkering with legislation. The hon. gentlemen who favor this Bill ought to be satisfied, at all events, for this Session. It has been twice defeated in this House, and I think they ought to be satisfied with that defeat, and not take up any more of the time of the House with it. We have been over six weeks in session now, and if we spend our time on such trumpery legislation as this, we shall not get through before midsummer.

Mr. BLAKE. Although I am in favor of the Bill of the hon. member for Hamilton, I have no idea that the motion he has brought, if pressed, will result in anything but another evening such as I understand was spent yesterday, to the detriment of the passage of other measures, which might possibly secure the consideration of the House. I think the only way for the hon. gentleman to obtain a favorable result for the Bill, after the reception it has met with on two occasions, is to bring it forward at the earliest possible period next Session, and press it on the House when it is likely to carry; and I do not think we ought to waste more time—for I believe it will be wasted—on the subject this Session. Therefore, I will vote for the amendment of the hon. member for South Norfolk.

Mr. FERGUSON (Welland). I desire to say that a great deal of the time of this House will be occupied if this Bill, which has been already rejected by the House on two separate occasions, is again pressed upon our attention. I have not taken any active part in the discussion upon it, but, if it is again pressed, I will, and the rest of us will, obstruct this Bill for the rest of this Session.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Order.

Mr. FERGUSON (Welland). I withdraw the word obstruct. But I think, the hon gentleman is not treating the House fairly, in moving that the Bill should be re-introduced. It is not fair, either to the House or to the country, that so much of our time should be wasted on a Bill which has nothing to it but mere sentiment. If I were so disposed, and had time, I think I could show that a great deal of what has been said with regard to gentlemen who take part in sports has been grossly exaggerated, and that many of the statements made have not been in accordance with the facts. I know a good deal about this subject, having seen a great deal of pigeon-shooting; and I think it is a pity that gentlemen, many of whom I know, and many of whom stand as high, socially and otherwise, as the gentlemen who have attacked them, should be characterised as drunkards and scoundrels, and that every crime in the calendar should be charged against them, because they see fit to take part in, what I consider, innocent sports. I think it is a pity that the advocacy of this measure should be placed on the ground that none but scoundrels have been associated with this sport. I have been a president of a gun club for many years, though I am not now, and I think I am as tender-hearted towards the animal creation as any of the gentlemen who support this Bill. I have witnessed these sports, and I have seen nothing of the cruelties which these hon. gentlemen have spoken of. I do not want to take up the time of the House, and I think it is a pity that its time should be wasted on a measure of this kind.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I voted for this Bill last Session, and also this Session, and if I live I shall vote for it until it becomes law. I regret very much that I was in my room and did not arrive in time last night to vote for the Bill, but everybody, I fancy, knows how I should have voted if I had been here. However, that is not the question now. I would mention to my hon. friend from Hamilton, that after the statement made by the hon. member for West Durham, who has supported his measure, it is quite clear that by no possibility can the Bill get through this Session, and, therefore, there is no object in his pressing his motion, and I would suggest that he should withdraw it.

Mr. BROWN. My only desire in bringing forward this motion was this: The subject had excited a very widespread interest throughout the whole country, and I knew that I had a very large support for it in this House, indeed, I am certain I had a majority, and that the sense of Parliament was not expressed in the vote last night; and as it is quite proper for hon. gentlemen to use all the forms of Parliament in order to defeat a measure to which they are opposed, it is equally proper for those who promote a measure to use all parliamentary forms to further the end they have in view. That is my case. My only desire is that a Bill of such importance as this—should receive consideration from a full House, and not be decided upon by a very thin House, such as we had last night, and, under the circumstances of last night, I know the sentiment of the House and of the country is in favor of this Bill.

and that is the reason I desire that it should be restored to the Order paper; and I hope, hon. gentlemen will not consider me as over-persistent in seeking to obtain that which I knew was right and for the public good. I know I have the sentiment of this House with me, and I appreciate the very kind feelings of the hon. member for West Durham and of the right hon. Premier; and I trust that I shall be spared to bring the measure forward again at another Session, when it will have proper consideration and assured success. Having done my duty, I will take the advice of the hon. gentleman who have just expressed their strong support of the measure, and I beg leave to withdraw my motion.

Sir DONALD A. SMITH. I am in favor of the Bill of my hon. friend from Hamilton, and had I been here yesterday, I certainly should have voted for it. I hope, however, to have another opportunity of supporting it, and I am very glad to see that the question is in so advanced a condition this year.

Amendment and motion withdrawn.

PRINTING COMMITTEE'S REPORT.

Mr. BERGIN. In moving the adoption of the third report of the Joint Committee of both Houses on the Printing of Parliament, I may say that the hon. the Minister of Agriculture has handed to me a letter received from the Superintendent of Printing, in which it is stated that the cost of printing the Experimental Farm reports and barley bulletins, making altogether 160 pages royal octavo, will be about $7,000. I move that the report be adopted.

Motion agreed to.

COST OF MAILING ENGLISH PERIODICALS.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, The organ of the Book, News and Stationery Associations of Canada having made the following statements:—

"The cost of mailing one copy each of the following English periodicals for one year from Toronto and from Buffalo is as follows:—

	From Toronto.	From Buffalo.
" British Workman	12c.	3c.
Family Friend	12	4
Children's Friend	12	4
All Id. Monthly	12	4
Good Words	24	4
Sunday Magazine	24	4
Sunday At Home	24	4
Leisure Hour	24	4
Family Herald	24	4
Chambers' Journal	24	4

"It will be seen from the above partial list, that the cost of mailing English magazines from Toronto is just six times as much as the cost of mailing from Buffalo. The Canadian dealer must pay as much for mailing a magazine for two months as the American dealer pays for a whole year. Is this not very unjust? Are we asking anything unreasonable when we seek to be placed in a position to compete in our own country for trade that rightly belongs to us? We certainly are entitled to at least as favorable facilities as are given to foreigners.

"There is no prospect of the American Government increasing their postal rate to equal ours, which is an excessive rate on this class of matter. The only remedy is to reduce our rate to the same as theirs. Until this is done the American dealer practically enjoys what is equivalent to an export bounty of 15 per cent. on all English magazines sent into Canada.

"But when we consider the facility afforded the Americans for mailing English newspapers into Canada as compared with our facility for mailing them into the United States, we find ourselves still more unfavorably situated. In Canada each weekly newspaper has to be prepaid by stamp. It may only weigh 1 or 2 oz., yet 52c. per year must be paid on it. A glance at the following comparison of the cost of mailing one copy of some of the leading English weekly newspapers for one year in the two countries will convince any one how utterly unfair the position of the Canadian newsdealer is:—

	Cost of mailing from Can. to U. S.	Cost of mailing from U. S. to Can.
"Lloyd's Weekly.....	52c.	8c.
Reynolds' Weekly.....	52	8
Despatch.....	52	8
All Id. weeklies.....	52	8
Illustrated London News.	$1 30	28

Pictorial World.....	2 08	52

"While the American Government throws no obstacle in the way of our sending periodicals into the United States—all periodicals being admitted free of duty—the Canadian postal law practically prohibits it. The postage on Id. English papers is 52c. per year—more than 50 per cent. of their real value. An export duty of from 20 per cent. to 50 per cent. on all English newspapers sent into the United States would seem unreasonable, and yet the Canadian newsdealer has actually to pay this, in the shape of extra postage."

If the foregoing statements are correct, do the Government propose to remedy these inequalities and remove the burdens complained of?

Mr. HAGGART. The organ of the associations mentioned by the hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken, as he will see if he will read clause seven of the Canada Postal Guide, which says:

"British newspapers and periodicals, however, brought by mail to Canadian booksellers or news-agents, and re-posted by them to regular subscribers in Canada, may be mailed by such Canadian booksellers or news-agents free of postage."

In answer to the second paragraph, in which are quoted the different prices paid by the different papers, I may state that if these newspapers are mailed to regular subscribers by booksellers or news-agents they go free of postage.

TREATS, INTIMIDATION, &c.

Mr. COCKBURN asked, Will the Government, during the present Session of Parliament, introduce any measure amending chapter 173 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, respecting threats, intimidation and other offences? If so, when? And whether such measure, when introduced, will contain a provision that no prosecution shall be maintained against any person or persons for conspiring to do any act, or to cause any act to be done, or who refuses or refuse to work for any employer or with any workman?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No answer can be given on that subject yet. It is under consideration, whether the application of the Labor organisation for an amendment to the Law of Conspiracy may not be dealt with this Session. I cannot describe what the contents of the Bill may be. It may possibly be introduced as an amendment to the measure now before the House.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURE IN THE CITY OF OTTAWA.

Mr. McMULLEN asked, The amount of money expended on public highways within the city of Ottawa during the year 1889? Was said expenditure made under public tender, or how? And why made?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The amount of money expended on public highways in Ottawa during the year 1889 is as follows:—

Wellington street.....	$6,636 23
María and Elgin streets, fronting
Cartier square.....	421 28
Sappers bridge.....	98 60
Dufferin bridge.....	142 00
María Street bridge.....	30 00
Chaudière Slide bridges.....	120 54
	$8,348 65

The work was not done under public tender, but by a staff under the direct control of the Department.

Mr. McMULLEN asked, The amount paid the city of Ottawa for water supply for the several public buildings? The gross amount paid annually for water supply? The amount paid for water supply for Rideau Hall, for Major's Hill Park, and Parliament Square, separately, if separate accounts are kept?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Department of Public Works has an agreement with the corporation of the city of Ottawa for the fixed amount of $14,500 annually for the supply of water to the following buildings and property actually owned by the Dominion Government:—Parliament and Departmental Buildings, Supreme Court, City Post Office and Custom House, Drill Hall, Geological Museum, Rideau Hall, Fish Hatchery and Art Gallery, the new block on Wellington street, new Printing Bureau and Major's Hill Park. Other premises rented by the Dominion Government for public offices are paid for on the same rating as charged to citizens. The gross amount paid on account of these rented buildings, including street sprinkling, during the fiscal year ending the 30th June, 1889, was $1,298.34.

Mr. McMULLEN asked, The amount paid the city of Ottawa or the Gas Company of Ottawa for gas, annually? Is there a fixed sum for annual service, or is it paid for at the same price as other consumers? If any contract has been entered into, when does it expire?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Department of Public Works has no contract with the gas company, and pays at the rate of $2 per thousand feet for gas supplied the following buildings—price to ordinary consumers being $3, subject to discount:—Parliament and Departmental Buildings and grounds, Supreme Court, Geological Museum, new block on Wellington street, Art Gallery and Fish Hatchery; leased buildings, including Printing Bureaus on Wellington and Sussex streets, Savings Bank Branch, Post Office Department, Ottawa Bank Building, and the Indian Affairs, in Durie's and Lee's buildings. The total amount paid for gas during the fiscal year ending the 30th June, 1889, was $18,908.50.

OUTRAGE ON THE STEAMER BALTIC.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, Has the Government yet taken any action in relation to the outrage which was last season committed upon a young man on the steamer Baltic, which subsequently resulted in his death, and do they intend to continue the license to Captain Tait Robertson, who was in charge of the Baltic at the time the outrage was committed?

Mr. COLBY. A commissioner has been appointed to hold an investigation into the conduct of the master of the Baltic in reference to this matter, and the action of the Government will be determined by the facts when they are ascertained.

NEW DEPARTMENTAL BUILDING,
OTTAWA.

Mr. McMULLEN asked, Whether the new buildings on Wellington street are completed? What is the entire sum paid on the buildings up to 1st March, 1890? Have any of the contractors put in claims for extras? If so, how many, and to what amounts? How much has been paid on account of extras?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The chief architect has sent me this statement:—The buildings are completed. The entire sum paid on the building up to 1st March, 1890, is $608,096.70, exclusive of land purchase. In reply to the third question, Yes—Mr. Charlebois, the contractor for the building, has put in claims for extras amounting to $393,954.19. I understand that Mr. Charlebois is ready to reduce his claim to $200,000. Mr. Garth has put in claims in connection with his contract for the heating apparatus which amount to $9,233; and Mr. Fensom, the contractor for the elevators, has claims amounting to $3,015. The claim of Mr. Garth was settled, and that of Mr. Fensom is under consideration.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Can the hon. gentleman state the total amount of the claims—has he got them added up?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; but I have stated the different amounts.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman has not answered the question: How much money has been paid on account of extras?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I said that the account of Mr. Garth for $9,000 had been settled. The claims of Mr. Charlebois and Mr. Fensom are the only two that remain. Those are not settled, and they have been sent in quite lately, especially that of Mr. Charlebois, and they have asked that these matters should be investigated in order to see how much of the claim is in accordance with the contract, and how much is for additional works. None of these claims will be settled unless they are in accordance with the contract, or are declared to be legal claims in the opinion of the Minister of Justice. The remainder of the claims will have to be settled, if they are pressed, by a court of justice.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I understood that the First Minister was to state this afternoon when the adjourned debate on the motion which I made on Tuesday would be taken up.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will inform the hon. gentleman to-morrow at 3 o'clock.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In view of the length of time to which the Session has now extended, I would ask the Finance Minister if he can give any information now as to when the Banking Bill will be introduced, and as to when the Budget speech will be made?

Mr. LANDERKIN.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope to be able to lay the Banking Bill before the House early next week, probably next Tuesday. As to the Budget speech, I gave my hon. friend the information some time ago, that I would give him a week's notice before the introduction of the Budget. I am not able to amend that statement yet.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then, I suppose the hon. gentleman can state that the Budget speech cannot come on next week? He is scarcely likely to bring it down on Friday.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not impossible.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) I should like to know when the Minister of Public Works will bring down the agreement between the Government and the city of Ottawa, by which he said we were bound to pay the expenditure, year by year, on certain roads and on the bridges crossing the canal.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is being prepared and will probably be brought down to-morrow.

SUPPLY—PUBLIC EXPENDITURE.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Before that motion is submitted to the House, I desire to address to it some observations upon the subject of which I gave notice some time ago, when certain public expenditures were under consideration. I think it is highly desirable that some general rule should be laid down in these matters, where it is possible, which will preserve, as largely as it can be preserved, the control of this House over those expenditures which are made for public improvements. We have had many attacks made recently on the system of party government, and, if the public revenues of this country were to be treated simply as being within the patronage of a party, I think a very serious objection would lie against the principle of party government. Those views of government which are recognised under that designation have always seemed to me to be entitled to the support of those who favor parliamentary government, as they have obtained in every country where the English system has been established. There are important functions to be performed not only by those who are entrusted with the public confidence, or with the royal confidence for the time being, but also by those who represent in the Legislature Her Majesty's loyal Opposition. Perhaps one of the most important functions that an Opposition performs is the careful criticism and amendment of those measures which are from time to time submitted to us by the Government. The Opposition also, where the principles of parliamentary government are fairly carried out, are enabled to exercise a wholesome check and control over the exercise of patronage and the expenditure of public moneys. In fact, the Government is again and again importuned by its friends to make expenditures and appointments which can scarcely be justified on the ground of public necessity; and the vigilant exercise of supervision by an Opposition, where fair play is given to the discharge of its functions, enables it to strengthen the hands of the Government in resisting pretensions that are not capable of justification on the grounds of public policy or public necessity. But if a Government is to treat the public revenues, in so far as they are expended on public works and undertakings, as so much patronage in the hands of the Government, to be employed in the promotion of the personal interests of supporters of the Administration, then the system of party government would be open to very serious objection indeed. Sir, the public funds that are at the disposal of the Administration and under the control of Parliament, are in the highest and strictest sense, trust funds; they are held by the Government subject to the control of Parliament in trust for the public good; they are to be employed in the promotion of the public interest, and in so far as any expenditure cannot be upheld and justified on the grounds of public interest, it is an expenditure that ought not to be made, it is an abuse of a public trust. Now, we were told in a discussion that took place in this House two or three years ago, that the representatives of the people who were opposed to the Administration had no claim to be consulted with regard to the public expenditure and the public requirements in the constituencies which they represent. I deny that proposition altogether. I maintain that those who are elected here to represent the people, those who sit on this side of the House, and who advocate a policy different from that which is supported by the Administration and those who sustain them, are as much entitled to have their representations fairly considered as are those who are elected to support the Administration, and that any indifference to their representations, any disregard to the views which they put forward, is not simply an indignity to them, but it is an indignity to the constituents who have seen proper to return them here as representatives in Parliament. Now, that I do not misrepresent the views that have been expressed by some Ministers of the Crown on this subject, I will call the attention of the House to observations that were addressed to it by the late Minister of Finance, Sir Charles Tupper, on one occasion when an enquiry with regard to a public expenditure was being made in the House. He said, in reply, I think, to the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) :

"The hon. gentleman knows that they consulted those in whom they had confidence, those in whose advice they could repose confidence, because they were supporters of the Government. The hon. gentleman, therefore, must not sneer at the presence here of the gentleman who so long and so ably represented the County of Lunenburg in this House. All I can say is, if the hon. gentleman who now has the honor of representing that county in this House is half as zealous, and takes half as much interest in the progress of that county, as Mr. Kaulbach took when in this House, it will be greatly to the advantage of the county, and the county will have nothing to complain of on the part of the hon. gentleman."

The doctrine there laid down by the hon. gentleman was, that in case the representative agreed with the Government in regard to their general public policy, they were entitled to take his judgment upon the requirements for public expenditure, but that if a representative was returned to this House by a constituency opposed to the views of the Government on questions of public policy, the Government were not entitled to attach, or ought not to attach, any weight to his views with regard to the public requirements in the way of public expenditure in his constituency. Now, I say that is a wholly indefensible doctrine; it is one which makes the public revenues mere matters of party patronage, that the Government have the same right to make public expenditures upon the representation of their friends that they would have to make official appointments upon those representations, and that it is only the friends of the Government whose representations are entitled to weight. Now, at that time I repudiated the doctrine then laid down by the then Minister of Finance. I said :

"It is the duty of the Government, it is a duty required of them by their oath of office, to make those public expenditures where the public needs require, regardless of the political complexion of the constituency; and the hon. gentleman when he comes here and lays down the doctrine that because a constituency returns a member in opposition to the Government, that member is not to be heard, that his opinion is to have no weight upon any question affecting the interests of his constituency, he lays down a doctrine for which he can find no support in the constitutional history of the mother country."

I still maintain that position. That the hon. gentleman may consult the defeated candidates who were supporters of the Administration, I do not deny. I say that hon. gentlemen are entitled to consult those who are the representatives of the people in Parliament, with regard to the public expenditure, and to ascertain the exact claims that any locality may have to a public expenditure which has been asked from the Administration. But to lay down the proposition that those only are to be consulted, then we have a representation with regard to public expenditure, so far as nearly one-half of the country is concerned, not by the representatives in Parliament, but by those whom the people refuse to return to Parliament. Those who have failed to be returned to Parliament here, are those who are to control the expenditure or to determine the conclusion arrived at by the Government in nearly one-half the entire country. The hon. Minister of Customs, on that occasion, laid down very nearly the same doctrine which was laid down by the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Customs, as I understood him, treated the public expenditure as a matter of party patronage, and he made these observations :

"Everything in the whole system of Government, in connection with patronage, is carried on upon this principle: You consult your friends when anything is to be done in a constituency, and it is the merest hypocrisy to preach or lay down any other doctrine, as being practiced by any political party in this country."

That was the position taken by the hon. gentleman; and so it is perfectly clear that, so far as the Minister of Customs is concerned, he maintains the doctrine that with regard to public expenditure in any constituency represented by any hon. gentleman on this side of the House, those representations are not to have the least weight with the Administration.

Mr. BOWELL. Will you give me the date?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). July 11, 1887. The parties to be consulted are the friends and supporters of the Administration; and the hon. gentleman, of course, throughout his whole argument, uses that expression in such a way as to show that they are not merely to be maintained along with others in any subordinate sense, but that they are to be the advisers of the Government, to the exclusion of those who belong to the opposite political party. The Minister of Customs proceeded to say :

* "There is no doubt Sir John's Government is going out of power, and Dr. Sutton—who was my opponent, a very respectable man—will have the patronage of the riding. True, Bowell may be elected, but if Blake comes in, if we have anything to get, we will get it through Dr. Sutton. That is the principle upon which you all act.

"Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

"Mr. BOWELL. We do not desire to hide it. The hon. gentleman says no. I was going to say that I was rather surprised, but I am not. But the hon. gentleman knows as well as I do, and as every member in this House does, that all party governments are carried on on that principle."

I deny that. I say that all party government is not conducted on that principle, and that all party government ought not to be conducted on that principle. I freely admit that, as regards appointments to official positions, it is the duty of the Government to appoint friends rather than opponents, that those persons are more likely to loyally carry out the wishes of the Government than those who are politically opposed to them. But I deny altogether that the rule with respect to party patronage is to be extended into the domain of public expenditure, and that the expenditure of the public money, which is the common contribution of every section of the people without reference to the party to which they belong, is not to be conducted according to the common judgment of the entire representation of the people in this House. Any other rule would not be a fair rule. If hon. gentlemen were to confine their taxation to their own friends, then they might use the money collected from their friends for the purpose of promoting their party interests; but when they impose taxes indiscriminately on the entire population, it is a gross abuse of political power to use the revenues of the country, which are to be devoted to public improvements, merely to improvements in the constituencies represented by their friends, while nearly one-half of the country, although a contributor towards the public revenue, is denied its fair share of those improvements. I know the rule, and I have met it in my constituency; and almost every hon. gentleman on the Opposition side has met the same arguments addressed by Government candidates to their constituents. It is this: You should return a candidate to support the Administration if you want your fair share of the public expenditure; you need not look for the erection of a post office, or the improvement of your harbor or river, so long as you return an opponent to the Administration; if you want such public expenditure in your constituency, if you wish to obtain your fair proportion of the public money, you should return to Parliament a friend and supporter of the Administration. That is treating the public moneys as so much party patronage; it is treating the public moneys as if they were held, not in trust for the entire country, and to be expended in the public interests, but as held in trust for the party of which the Prime Minister for the time being is the head. Let that fact be known, let it go abroad to the country that it is the well understood and settled doctrine of the Government that the candidate who supports the Government, whether in or out of Parliament, is the person who controls the expenditure for public works and undertakings, then the constituency will hold that individual responsible, whether in or out of Parliament, as to expenditures made by Parliament in that constituency. The people would then know that a failure to secure their fair share of the public expenditure was because the Administration was undertaking to punish the constituency because that constituency has failed to return a supporter of the Administration. I do not intend to lay down in the resolution I propose to submit to the House any hard-and-fast rule with respect to public expenditure generally, beyond this: That the public money shall be expended in the public interest, and not for the purpose of mere party favoritism, and that so far as the erection of post offices, Custom houses, buildings for Inland Revenue purposes are concerned, regard shall be had for the amount of revenue collected and the public business done in that particular locality. How can it, for one moment, be said that the public interest has been considered, when in a small town, a mere village, in the constituency represented by the Minister of Finance, a large expenditure has been made on a public building, while in the constituency represented by the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) there is a town with ten thousand inhabitants without any such public convenience. Why, I could enumerate a number of towns and places of importance where a considerable amount of revenue is collected, and where the amount of public and private business done is large, and where no such public improvements have been made. Why is this? The hon. gentleman cannot find such towns and places within constituencies represented by hon. gentlemen opposite; they are all found in constituencies represented by hon. gentlemen who sit on the Opposition benches. And it is impossible that a matter of that sort can be mere accident. Douglald Stuart said on one occasion:

And when you find all places entitled to public expenditure upon a reasonable rule are represented by hon. members on this side of the House, it is perfectly plain that the Government have deliberately adopted this as a line of public policy, that they will make expenditures in constituencies returning supporters to the Government, which they will not undertake under like circumstances in constituencies represented by hon. members on this side of the House. The First Minister shakes his head. Let him peruse what I read from the speech of his late colleague, Sir Charles Tupper, and the speech of the Minister of Customs. There are several important matters to be considered prior to an expenditure for public buildings. There is the question of the facilities for renting; there is the value of the capital invested in the building; there is the wear and tear upon the building, the cost of taking care of it, the expenditures for fire, and light, and so on; but all these considerations the Government had set aside as having no weight. The rule the late Government laid down is, that the expenditure shall be made in those places where the largest revenue is collected, and the largest volume of public business is done; but that rule, although generally admitted as the rule is, in practice, is absolutely disregarded, for I have already mentioned an instance in a constituency represented by the Finance Minister, where, in a place with a population of less than 1,000 souls, a village, considerable expenditure has been made, whereas, in the constituency represented by an hon. gentleman on this side of the House, having 8,000 or 10,000 of an urban population, no such expenditure has taken place. I do not propose to weary the House with a long and detailed statement of the abuses that have taken place, and of which complaints have been made during the past seven or eight years. There are many hon. gentlemen, in whose constituencies those acts of neglect, those sins of omission, have occurred. That being the case, I leave it to them to bring forward specific instances, where no such expenditure has taken place. We have had, during this Session, and during the two previous Sessions, the statements made over and over again by representatives of the various constituencies in Prince Edward Island, showing an almost total disregard by the Administration of all public works and public undertakings in that Province, and no other reason can be assigned for the absence of expenditure there compared with the lavish expenditure elsewhere, except that that Island has returned six representatives who were opposed to the Administration. I move in amendment:

That Mr. Speaker do not now leave the Chair, but that it be Resolved, that in the expenditure of public money, the public interest, and not party favoritism, should control, and in the choice of places for the erection of public buildings for post offices, Custom houses, and Inland Revenue purposes, regard should be had to the amount of revenue collected, and to the public business done.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. My hon. friend, in his very moderate and statesmanlike speech, has laid down certain rules with which I agree, and in which I cordially join him. He has stated that Government should treat the public funds as trust funds, to be applied for the benefit of the people, and not for purposes of mere patronage, or of helping the friends of the Government. I quite agree with that principle, and I do say, notwithstanding that it will probably not meet with the assent of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mills), that this Government has carried out that policy fairly and straightforwardly. To be sure, we have been liable to attack, more individual and particular, than the general statement of my hon. friend in this House, ever since 1878. I cannot complain of that, inasmuch as, from 1874 to 1878, the Opposition of that day brought, and they thought on good grounds, similar charges against the Government of the day, and in some cases the charges were, primâ furie, so good, and, in my opinion, so substantiated, that they had a very considerable effect on the country, when there was an appeal to the people in 1878. I, therefore, cannot complain, that the hon. gentleman and his friends opposite are treating us to a dose of the same medicine that we administered to them, I think, more effectively than the member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) is administering it to us now. I believe that ours was a more potent medicine, and that it had a greater effect than this is likely to have. My hon. friend says that the continuance of this practice, and the assertion of this principle, makes one fear that it raises great objection against party government. Well, party government is the same all the world over. Under the British system of responsible government, or under the American system, where there is party government, but without a responsible Administration in both countries, and in all countries, whether it be England, the United States, or any of the European nations, who have adopted in principle the representative system, it is a charge that is always brought by the Opposition of the day, that the majority are not governing according to principle, but on the basis of favoritism, and of promoting the interests of their friends. These general charges do not, I think, amount to much; and they are of no value, unless they are brought down to particular cases, in which particular improprieties are shown on the part of the Government. In days of old, when we were on your left, Mr. Speaker, we brought some particular cases against the Government of the day; but I quite agree with what I have so often heard from the other side, that the fact that former Governments have acted improperly, is no argument in defence of impropriety by an existing Government. Still, it is open to this consideration, that party government has its great advantages and has some defects. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) complains very much of the statement made by my hon. friend the Minister of Customs, and also by Sir Charles Tupper when he was Minister of Finance. Now, in my opinion, the principle laid down by these two gentlemen is perfectly correct. I agree with what my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has stated, that every expenditure of public money should be based on good sound reasons, that it should have a justification, that it should not be for the purpose of helping one's friends. That is quite true, and I do not think that either Sir Charles Tupper or the Minister of Customs infringed upon this rule by their statements. What they stated was: that they did not consider that any member who is opposed to the Government, who has no confidence in the Government, and who desired that the Government should be defeated and replaced by friends of their own—that no member of Parliament who expressed an utter want of confidence in the Government should expect confidence from the Government. The hon. gentleman opposite, it is an open secret which my hon. friend will not deny, would displace the present Administration if he could, and it is quite right from his point of view, that he should do everything possible in that direction. But how could any Ministry consult an hon. member who desired to defeat the Government, who held up to the country that the policy and the practice of that Government were equally objectionable? How could the Government consult a member who adopted that principle, and act on his advice? No, Sir; a member of Parliament in Opposition, having no confidence in the Government, is simply in the position of any other Canadian. His views, on any subject whatever, if he chooses to lay them before the Government, should receive every consideration and respect; but it is too much to say that the Government should actually consult a member as to what they are to do in his particular constituency, when it is in the interest of that man to carry that constituency at the next general election against the Government. I am sure the hon. member opposite, when he is a member of a Government, will not adopt that policy. He is too able a man, too good a politician, and too sound a statesman, to take the position that we are bound to consult a man whose business it is to turn us out, and to hold up to unfavorable criticism the policy of the Government. So far as we are concerned, I can say that the present Government—I believe every one of us—receive with respect and give due consideration to every representation that is made by any hon. gentleman in this House. I know that I have had most pleasant relations with many of the hon. gentlemen opposite; I have had occasion to agree with their views and to carry out suggestions made by them, but not as members of Parliament opposed to the present Government. I could not reciprocate their confidence; it would not be a reciprocity of confidence; it would be a jug-handled policy—my hon. friend will remember the old phrase—for me to give an hon. member sitting in Opposition, a confidence which he would not accord to us. But I would listen to his reasons, and if they satisfied my judgment, and the judgment of the Cabinet, we should act without reference to what his political proclivities might be. This very Session I have had occasion to meet some hon. gentlemen opposite: they have pressed for certain developments and improvements in their part of the country, and I have had great pleasure in putting mind to mind with them, and considering the various questions that were brought before me. But, Sir, the hon. member has spoken especially about public buildings, and in proposing this resolution—which I must say is an objectionable resolution, with one slight criticism upon it—he has said that in some small places, with a comparatively small population, buildings have been erected, while in larger towns no buildings have been erected. But, Sir, in the case of many large towns where no new buildings have been erected, perhaps, on enquiry, it would be found that they did not want, or did not require, new buildings. For instance, in a large town where a very large and commodious and comfortable building may have been rented for a post office, there is no necessity for erecting a new building. Then, in the case of very many of these places, there have been no applications to the Government for buildings. Whenever the Public Works Department is informed that the existing accommodation for a post office, or for a custom house, is insufficient, and an application is made for a new building, and it is found requisite, or expedient, to provide better accommodation, the matter is taken up and the building is erected; and I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the present Government will last long enough to erect a great many more public buildings in other places. After this discussion, I dare say there will be a considerable flood of applications for new buildings. Perhaps, my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) will come with some suggestion for a custom house, or a post office, or some other little advantage for his constituency; and I can only tell my hon. friend, that among the Opposition there is no hon. member, the interests of whose constituency I would be more happy to promote, even at the risk of getting him a little extra popularity. However, Sir, although a motion of this kind, moved in amendment to going into Supply, is, in a way, a motion of want of confidence in the Government, yet, I have no doubt, from the whole tone of his speech, that the hon. gentleman did not desire that it should be so considered. To prevent any misapprehension on that point, I should have preferred that my hon. friend had made his motion as a substantive motion; but I wish to say that I have not the slightest objection to it, and I shall vote for it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Mr. LAURIER. It is an old saying, "that it is never too late to repent," and I am glad to see that the hon. gentleman is realising that saying, and is prepared to vote for this motion. Well, Sir, I expected no less from the hon. gentleman than that he would vote for it. But if he would only act upon it, that is what we want. The hon. gentleman stated that he was always ready to accept the suggestions of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House—

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Not accept, but consider.

Mr. LAURIER. To consider them, and accept them when he finds them reasonable. Well, of course, when a suggestion is made from this side of the House, such as this one, which is so reasonable that the hon. gentleman cannot find any loophole to escape, he accepts it; but when anything is offered from his own side of the House, even though it is unreasonable, he will act upon it, and that is what we object to. That is the reproach we make against the present Government, and it is the basis of the motion of my hon. friend. It is because the hon. gentleman has again and again violated this principle, which he knows to be true, and which he accepts to-day, that my hon. friend is obliged to affirm it. What is it, my hon. friend complains of? That the Government, in the distribution, not of their patronage, but of the public expenditure for the public works of the country, has not followed that sound principle which the hon. gentleman now admits is right, and which he is forced to accept, but has violated it. It is because he has listened to the voices of his friends calling for things unreasonable, and refused to listen to the voices of his opponents, who ask for things reasonable. What can he say to this? As we have had shown a few days ago, public expenditure for post offices is made in localities which do not give $1,000 of revenue, and it is denied in other localities which give $4,000 or $5,000 revenue. Under such circumstances, what can the hon. gentleman say in his own defence for the course of his Administration? What can he say to vindicate expenditure in building post offices in localities such as Laprairie and St. Jérôme, which do not give more than $1,000 or $1,200 revenue annually, when he refuses to build post offices at places such as Woodstock, which give a revenue of $14,000 a year?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. At Woodstock, the people do not want a post office.

Mr. LAURIER. As I understand, the people at Woodstock and other places have asked for public edifices, but were not given them simply because they had returned members who were not in accord with the policy of the Administration. This is the charge made by my hon. friend behind me, and this is the reason why he offers this motion to the House, which the hon. gentleman is forced to admit, but upon which he will not act. Of course, there must be a distinction drawn somewhere, but the only principle upon which public expenditure should be made is that accepted by the hon. gentleman himself—that it should be made according to public interest. And the public interest is to be decided—how? Exactly as stated by my hon. friend—according to the revenue collected. This should be the rule on which the Administration should act. But there is more than this. Public expenditure should not be a consideration at elections. I know it has been the practice again and again to say: If you support the Government you will get a post office, or such and such a public edifice. Well, we object to this. Whenever an election takes place, the country has to judge upon the policy of the Administration; and if you allow the consideration to go to the electors, that they are to be favored with public edifices provided they will return a supporter of the Government, then the electorate must be biased. They are bribed, to a certain extent, to give an unfair verdict. The hon. gentleman now has accepted the motion. It remains to be seen whether he will act upon it or not when the occasion offers.

Mr. FLYNN. As the principle involved in the resolution moved by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) is an important one, I deem it my duty to offer a few observations on the course pursued by the Government in the erection of public edifices. In the views laid down by the hon. member for Bothwell, I entirely concur, and I will endeavor to follow the example he set of occupying but a short time of the House in the discussion of this question. As my hon. friend stated, he simply laid down the general principles, and invited hon. gentlemen on this side, who had particular reason to complain, to give their experience and views. I intend, therefore, furnishing the House with an illustration of the policy of the Government taken from cases in my own county. During last Session I had occasion to bring to the notice of the Minister of Public Works the position of a public structure in that county, a work of very great importance to the people of that section—I allude to the L'Ardoise breakwater. On that occasion I drew the notice of the hon. Minister of Public Works to the fact that very many years ago, when he held the position he now occupies, he recognised the importance of this work and the necessity for its construction by consenting to place in the Estimates a vote of $30,000 for that purpose. But before the hon. gentleman was enabled to carry out the promise he had made to that constituency, the Government of which he was a member, had to resign, and it was left to my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie), when he obtained power in 1874, to construct the work. That hon. gentleman, seeing before him in his Department, the surveys and plans connected with this work, unhesitatingly asked Parliament for a vote to construct it by sections. A section of 400 feet was constructed, at a cost of about $11,000, which, I need not say, afforded great protection and shelter to those who frequented that harbor. But, some six or seven years after it was constructed, owing to the seaworms and ice, it became out of repair, and the necessity of repairing it, if the total destruction of the work was to be avoided, was brought to the notice of the Minister of Public Works by one of the subordinates in his Department. I hold, that the necessity for immediate repair having been called to his attention, and not attended to, the hon. gentleman is responsible for that neglect and the consequent damage to the structure. In order to sustain that pretension, let me read the letter I refer to. It is a copy of the report of the Chief Engineer of the Public Works Department, dated Ottawa, 6th February, 1883. He says:

"During the year 1876-77 a breakwater 400 feet in length was built by the Department at L'Ardoise, Richmond County, C. B., N. S., at a cost of $10,330. An examination of this structure lately made shows that the portion of the work below the line of half-tide has been badly damaged by the seaworm and is in a very weakened state, and liable to serious damage at any time by gales or ice. To protect and preserve this work, which affords the only shelter for fishing boats and vessels on the L'Ardoise shore, it will be necessary to place about 5,000 cubic yards of heavy stone in the form of slopes all around, as shown in the plans herewith, the cost of which will amount to $5,000, and I have to recommend that the work be proceeded with as it is not in fit state to withstand the heavy gales."

I stated that after the officer of his Department had called the attention of the Minister of Public Works to that work without avail, it was carried away that fall by a heavy gale. After it was carried away, the condition of the structure having been called to the Minister's attention at the next meeting of Parliament, the sum of $5,000 was placed in the Estimates and voted for the purpose of repairing that work, but not a dollar of that money has ever been expended. Such was the condition of affairs up to 1887. When I came here in 1887, I could see that there was nothing of greater importance to the people I represent, than the re-construction of this work, and it was my first duty to bring its neglected state, and the necessity for repairing it, to the notice of the Minister of Public Works. I did so, and have done so every subsequent Session, including last Session, when I again brought it under the notice of the hon. gentleman and discussed the whole matter over again, and received from the Minister of Public Works some assurance that it would be attended to. I bring again to the hon. gentleman's notice the fact that this is no new work. I am not asking for a new expenditure. This was a work, the necessity of which was recognised by the Government, and which was built at a cost of $11,000, and when damaged by ice or worms, or any other cause whatever, I hold it was as much the duty of the Government to repair that breakwater as to repair any other breakwater in any other part of the Dominion. It was as much their duty to repair it as it would be to put a new roof on this building if the old one were destroyed. Having brought this matter to the notice of the hon. the Minister of Public Works, I trust that he will take proper measures to have it attended to. The people are leaving that place for the want of this, and I hope it will be looked after in future. There is another matter of which I have to complain, as to the unfairness with which my county has been dealt with in regard to public buildings. Some years ago, a site was purchased for a public building in the town of Arichat—custom house, post office and savings bank. The site cost $1,000. There were several surveys, there was a good deal of correspondence, and I believe there was a good deal of expense in addition to the $1,000. Tenders were invited for the erection of a building, but no contract was ever awarded and no building was ever erected. I have to complain of that, and, if the Minister of Public Works can offer no other reason than that it is because I sit on the left of the Speaker and am a member of the Opposition, then I hold it is no reason at all, for we are as much entitled to the expenditure of public money as the constituencies which send members to support the Government. The First Minister said that he agreed perfectly with the resolution of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills). I am glad to hear it, but, as the leader of the Opposition said, will he act upon it? I will call the attention of the House for a moment to the expenditure on public buildings and public works in Nova Scotia. I will show the House that for the last four years, including the present Session, with the exception of a small sum which has been voted for the County of Yarmouth, every dollar which has been voted for public works or buildings has been in counties which send to this House supporters of the Government. During that time, not a dollar has been placed in the Estimates for counties representing those who sit on the left of the Speaker, from Nova Scotia, excepting this small amount in the County of Yarmouth. I find that, in 1887, there was voted for public buildings in Nova Scotia $25,925, and for public works $76,950, making a total of $102,825. In 1888 there was voted for public buildings $31,000, and for public works $33,800, making a total of $69,300. In 1889 there was voted for public buildings $31,675, and for public works $22,000, making a total of $53,675. Then in this year, 1890, we find a vote for public buildings in that Province of $23,000, and for public works $20,000, making a total of $43,000. This makes a total for the four years, voted for public works and buildings in Nova Scotia, of $268,900, and, with the exception of the small amount which has been voted for the County of Yarmouth, not a dollar has been granted to any county which sends an Opposition member to this House. I hold that this is not exactly fair. I contend that the only sound principle is that public moneys should be spent wherever the public interest requires them to be spent, regardless of the political proclivities of the county itself, or of those whom the electors may send to represent them. Again, when I or any other hon. gentleman in Opposition have occasion, as we have had in the past, by petition from our constituents or by letter to the Minister of Public Works, or by personal interview, to show him the necessity for a public work in a certain portion of the constituents which we represent, I hold that it is the duty of that Minister to make enquiries as to the truth of the representations which were made in the petition, or as to the truth of the statement made by the representative of the county, in order to discover the necessity for the construction of that public work. If he should find, after proper investigation, that there is a public necessity for such a public work—for harbor protection, or for a breakwater, or anything of that kind—it is the bounden duty of the Minister, at the next meeting of Parliament, to ask for an appropriation for that public work. As was stated by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), the people in counties which send members of the Opposition contribute their share of the revenue. If the money which is in the hands of the Government belonged to themselves, or if it were paid simply by the constituencies which send gentlemen to support the Administration, that would be another thing. But, when the public funds which are at the disposal of the Administration are contributed by the people generally in this Dominion, I hold that those who are in Opposition are as much entitled to consideration as those who support the Government. The Government hold the money simply as trustees. It belongs to the people, and unless the people, irrespective of their political views in any constituency, get their share, get what they are reasonably entitled to, then that trust is not honestly discharged. Have not the Opposition rights as well as duties to perform in this House? We have seen the Opposition, as well as the gentlemen on the other side, giving their best attention to the conduct of public affairs. Have we not seen, day by day and night by night for a number of years past, the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), with his great talent, with his cultivated mind, with his legal knowledge and experience, helping hon. gentlemen opposite to perfect their measures? Have we not seen the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), with his breadth of view, with his quick apprehension and his grasp of thought, lending his abilities also to the Government. Have we not seen the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), and my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies), and the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), lending their great experience and their undoubted abilities to help the Government to perfect the legislation of the country. Then, Mr. Speaker, have not the Opposition some rights? Should their constituencies be made to suffer if, in the exercise of their opinion, they disagree with the Government or with the fiscal policy of the Government, or with some other matter of that kind? Is it not the right of every British subject to exercise the franchise in the way which he thinks right in the interest of the public, and is the constituency which he represents to be told, year after year, that, as long as it opposes the Government, it need not expect any expenditure for public works? Such principles are slavish principles; they are debasing and demoralising to any people. Every constituency, no matter what may be its political views, should understand that whenever it requires a particular amount of public money to be expended for a necessary public work, it should have it. Under our system of government, an Opposition is a necessity. Under our system a party is necessary, and that an Opposition is as necessary as a Government is a proposition which no one who is acquainted with the history of parliamentary government, will deny. With all the evils which attend parliamentary government, it has been acknowledged by one of the greatest writers on that subject that an Opposition is a necessity. Let me read what was said by Sir Thomas Erskine May, as to the rights and duties of an Opposition. After speaking of the evils that necessarily spring from party government, and deploring those evils, he goes on to speak of the Opposition:

"But, on the other side, we find that government, without party, is absolutism—that rulers, without opposition, may be despots. We acknowledge, with gratitude, that we owe to party most of our rights and liberties. We recognise, in the fierce contentions of our ancestors, the conflict of great principles, and the final triumph of freedom. We glory in the eloquence and noble sentiments which the rivalry of contending statesmen have inspired. We admire the courage with which power has been resisted, and the manly resolution and persistence by which popular rights have been established. We observe that, while the undue influence of the Crown has been restrained, the democracy has also been held in check. We exult in the final success of men who have suffered in a good cause. We admire the generous friendships, fidelity and self-sacrifice—akin to loyalty and patriotism—which the honorable sentiments of party have called forth. We perceive that an Opposition may often serve the country far better than a Ministry; and that, where its principles are right, they will prevail. By argument and discussion truth is discovered, public opinion is expressed, and a free people are trained to self-government. We feel that party is essential to representative institutions. Every interest, principle, opinion, theory and sentiment finds expression. The majority governs; but the minority is never without sympathy, representation and hope. Such being the two opposite aspects of party, who can doubt that good predominates over evil? Who can fail to recognise in party the very life-blood of freedom?"

Such, Mr. Speaker, is the opinion of an eminent writer on party government, and the rights and duties of an Opposition. Now, I would make this distinction as regards patronage and public expenditure. In the distribution of patronage, I acknowledge that the Government would be unwise, perhaps, to give it to their enemies. I do not complain, where a vacancy takes place in any public office in my county, that I should not have the nomination of the person who shall fill it. I am willing the Government should give their friends in the county the right to name the persons who shall fill those offices. But that is quite a different thing from the expenditure of public money. I hold that if in any portion of my constituency, or any portion of Nova Scotia—where we know the difficulties our fishermen have to contend with—I say, that if we bring to the notice of the Minister of Public Works that there is a necessity for harbors, piers or breakwaters in those places, it is the duty of the Government, after proper enquiry and investigation to ascertain that they are in the public interest, to go on and erect those structures. Now, Sir, we have spent a good deal of money in this country since Confederation; we have spent a good deal of money in acquiring and developing the North-West; we have spent a good deal of money in railways, and particularly on the great Canadian Pacific Railway. I know that hon. gentlemen in this House entertain great hopes for the future of this country. I am not here to say that there is not a great future for this country; I know there are great possibilities before this country. We have heard a great deal of eloquence for a number of years regarding the future of this country, regarding its development, and its material prosperity, and I say that if all these hopes are to be realised, it can only be by an honest administration of public affairs, and by the Government paying due regard to the interest of every section of the country, irrespective of its political proclivities, by a due regard to the expenditure of public money, in an honest manner, wherever it is required, no matter whether that section of the country is represented here by a gentleman who sits on your right, Mr. Speaker, or on your left.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The leader of the Government having accepted the motion now in your hands, I do not propose to detain the House at any great length. The hon. gentleman took very great pains to fasten upon the opposite side of the House a view which we do not for a moment entertain. The hon. gentleman asked the question quite triumphantly: "Do the Opposition expect we are to consult them regarding the expenditure of money? Do they expect that we are going to take them into our confidence? Do they expect we shall go to them in preference to our own friends in the country, and do they expect we shall, in fact, treat them in this matter as if they were supporting us in this House?"

Now, I say most emphatically, No, we do not expect anything of the kind. I, for one, expect nothing of the kind. I endeavored, the other night, when a similar question was before the House, to lay down the views and the policy which are embodied in this resolution. My duty then I felt to be this: That in the event of any public work being required in my own or any neighboring county with which I was familiar, it was my duty, as a member of this House, to bring it to the notice of the Government. I do not expect for a moment that if the Government are going to carry out that work, they will consult me with regard to the expenditure; I do not expect they will take me into their confidence and ask how it is to be expended, and who it is to be given to. That is their own look out. I discharge my duty when I bring to their notice the fact that a work of a public nature is required in a certain locality, in the public interest, and it is their duty to see that it is carried out. Now, so much for that point, which was the main point in the contention of the right hon. gentleman. My hon. friend on my right (Mr. Flynn) has pointed out the manner in which this subject has been treated in our own Province, and he has shown that during the last four or five years the entire expenditure has been made in counties represented on the Government side of the House. We will take the County of Antigonish, for instance. For many years it was represented by the present Judge McIsaac. For many years that hon. gentleman, I know, made strong and urgent application to the Government for an expenditure in that county, but he never had one cent expended on that county, there was never a public work undertaken there, until the Minister of Justice was elected for Antigonish, and represented that county in the House and in the Government, and then we found that, year after year, large public expenditures were made in Antigonish. I pointed out last year that there were five or six public works going on at one time, and I pointed out this year that there were four or five further expenditures proposed for public works in Antigonish County. I do not object to expenditure in Antigonish County at all, but, as I said then, it is a small and not a very commercial county. Then take the County of Guysborough, alongside of it. My hon. friend who represents that county in this House for so long a time, has never been able, up to the present moment, to have one cent of public money expended in that county. Why? Simply because he is not a supporter of the Government. The right hon. gentleman said that they had spent money wherever, in their judgment, it was required in the public interest, but it is a most singular coincidence that wherever they selected a county where public money was required to be spent, it was always a county the representative of which was supporting the Government. Then, take the County of Richmond, to which my hon. friend has referred. Take the County of Lunenburg. It was for a time represented by a supporter of the Government, and the Government went so far as to purchase a lot for a public building in the town of Lunenburg. But since the last election, when the hon. gentleman who now represents that prosperous county was returned to oppose the Administration, they have taken no action whatever. The money they spent for the lot has remained idle. They have never proposed an appropriation for the post office, simply for the reason that they have not a supporter in this House from that county. Then you take the County of Queen's, long represented by a Liberal, and during all that time no expenditure was made in that county, and it was only when the present member came here that, year after year, very considerable amounts were voted for expenditures there. Take, also, the Counties of Shelburne, Digby and Annapolis. When these counties were represented during a great many years by hon. members sitting on this side of the House not one dollar was expended there, although year after year the matter was brought to the notice of the Government; but the moment the representation was changed the policy of the Government was changed also, and expenditure was made for those works which had been neglected so long. I am glad to see that the time has arrived when the Government are going to deal with the question in the public and not in party interests. If the Government have accepted this amendment in good faith, and in good faith are disposed to carry it out, we shall have done a very good work to-day. We do not expect, I do not expect, to be consulted by the Government regarding the expenditures, and in regard to whose hands they shall be placed. All I desire to see is, that if the money is required to be spent in the public interest it should be expended, and these important counties should not be neglected simply because they returned members to this side of the House and not supporters of the Government.

Mr. IVES. Hon. gentlemen opposite have endeavored to make it appear that the Government have adopted, as a general principle, that if a county sends a member in opposition to the Administration that county does not benefit by the expenditure of public money. I can assure hon. gentlemen opposite that the converse is not established, and that it does not at all follow that because a county is represented by a supporter of the Administration, that county receives an expenditure of public money to which it might claim to be entitled. The hon. member—it is a strange coincidence that the hon. member for Richmond, N.S., (Mr. Flynn) and I represent constituencies similar in name—has complained that no expenditure has been made by the Administration in that county. Without being liable to the charge of boasting, I may say that the County of Richmond, in Quebec, is a far more important constituency, from every point of view, than the county represented by my hon. friend from Nova Scotia. For several years I have had the honor of presenting petitions and requests to the Minister of Public Works for the erection of a public building in the town of Richmond, and so far these petitions and requests have not received the recognition which I had hoped they might have received from the Minister and the Administration, and I think that very fact should show the hon. member for Richmond, N.S. (Mr. Flynn), that it does not at all follow, that, because he opposes the Administration, no expenditure is made in his constituency. I think I have been a consistent supporter of this Administration, and certainly I have for many years forwarded petitions and supported petitions asking for the erection of a post office and public building in Richmond, but so far no heed has been paid to these representations. I may say to my hon. friend from Richmond, N.S., that the town of Richmond, in the Province of Quebec, is a place of very considerable importance; it is a division point on the Grand Trunk Railway, a town of 5,000 inhabitants, a town having a post office revenue of considerable importance, it is an outpost of Customs, and also an office under the Department of Inland Revenue, and a public building has been needed there for many years. I can only express the hope that the time is not far distant when the prayer of those petitions, which, from year to year, have been sent in, will be acceded to and an expenditure made in that county; but it is unfair to the Administration and to the Minister of Public Works, to make the charge that an expenditure is not made in counties which send opponents of the Government to this House, because I can assure the hon. gentleman that expenditure is frequently not made, even when valid claims exist, in constituencies which have sent members supporting the Administration.

Mr. DAVIN. I have to complain, in common with the Opposition, that I cannot get the Minister of Public Works to give me a post office. I have been at the Minister for three years on behalf of an important town in my constituency, which has strong claims upon the consideration of the Government, as I have urged upon the Minister of Public Works. It needs a building for its post office badly, and there are reasons connected with the town, as the hon. Minister knows, why this request should be granted; and yet, notwithstanding that I have been pressing the Minister, and I have been pressed strongly from behind myself, I am in the same box as the Reformers—I cannot get a grant for a post office at Moose Jaw. I hope the Minister of Public Works, having heard the admirable argument of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) and the clear, silvery eloquence of the leader of the Opposition, when he comes to consider the claim I am pressing on him, will give us a post office at Moose Jaw.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I should like to take advantage of the offer made by the Government respecting the resolution now before the House. The Minister of Public Works has invited hon. members to lay their claims for important public works before the Government. I have not only to complain in regard to the county I represent, that the Government do not carry out any public works there, but, that the public works already there, and which were built by the Local Government, are not even kept in repair. In this regard, I desire to bring to the attention of the Minister the break-water at Little Sands. It was built at considerable expense by our Local Government, and it proved a very great advantage to the fishermen and farmers of that section of the county. It was useful to the fishermen in severe weather as affording a harbor of refuge, and it was useful to the farmers as providing a place from which they could make shipments of produce and of fish. A light was kept on the pier by the Local Government to enable the fishermen to land in safety. Although great promises were made to the Island before it entered Confederation, and although Mr. Pope, one of the delegates to Ottawa, on his return promised that our public works would be maintained in a good state of repair by the Dominion Government, this pier has been allowed to fall into a state of decay. This important work, which was built at a very large expense, is now very much out of repair, and if repairs are not carried out by the Dominion Government very shortly, it will be carried away. This is one of the important works which I desire specially to bring to the notice of the Minister, and I hope that, as he has in his possession petitions numerously signed by the inhabitants of the county and also a petition from the inhabitants of Pictou Island, who largely use this work for their shipping business, he will pay a little attention to these representations. I do not expect to be consulted on these matters; I only ask the Minister of Public Works to take into his consideration the petitions which I believe and know he has in his possession with regard to this work. Another public work in my county which is entirely out of repair is the pier at Greek River. This is a wharf which was built at considerable expense by the Local Government, but it is now falling into ruin, and will soon drift into the river, if it is not repaired. One of the oldest wharves in my county, and, perhaps, in the Province, and a most important wharf, is the one at Aitken's Shore, on the Montague River. This wharf is exceedingly useful for all kinds of shipping, especially for late shipping in the autumn season, when the harbor at the head of the river is frozen over. It was built at considerable expense by the Local Government, but it is now falling into decay, as not a cent has been expended on it by the authorities at Ottawa. There are some other very necessary works, to which I would call the attention of the Minister of Public Works, and I do not wish that it should be supposed that I intend to make any political capital out of this matter—I know the Minister of Public Works has got in his possession petitions largely signed, not only by Reformers, but by Conservatives, asking for a breakwater pier at Bay Fortune. So much is this work required, that the inhabitants of that section of the country themselves subscribed nearly $1,000, and petitioned this Government for a grant to enable them to finish it. They have petitioned, I believe, two or three times, and so careful were they in forwarding these petitions, that they did not place them in our hands, but sent them to supporters of the Government. In that section of the country, the Government has a large majority of supporters, who have subscribed towards this work and who are desirous of obtaining it. I do not expect that the hon. Minister will yield to anything I may say, but I wish to bring to his notice the importance of the work, and the fact that it is his own supporters who have asked for it, and who have been denied it over and over again. I think the Minister of Public Works has in this case treated his friends badly. I wish also to call his attention to the necessity of erecting a breakwater at Naufrage Harbor, where he ordered a survey some two years ago, and the report of which stated that the work could be done for $8,000 or $10,000. This place is on the north shore of the Island, where fishermen fish with hooks, and they only ask that a boat harbor for shelter in stormy weather should be made. At present they have to haul up their boats at night, and launch them in the morning, which causes considerable trouble, and frequently great loss, to the poor men. There is a similar work to this required to be done at North Lake, for which the people have petitioned, but have received no assistance from the Government. I have to complain that in my own county we have had no expenditure of public money in any shape or form from the present Government, except a small post office at the village of Montague, where I live, and which cost only a few thousand dollars. The Mackenzie Government built us the Souris breakwater, and the present Government has merely kept it in repair. I have also to complain of the manner in which the Minister of Public Works carries out any works which are done in that Province. He generally appoints an inspector, at a good salary of $2 or $3 a day, who employs men to perform the work by days' labor. In a great many cases, this position is given to some favorite of the Government, and he generally employs men who happen to be indebted to him, or some supporter of the Government, and who, when they are working to pay off an old debt, do not generally work very well. I believe that in the majority of cases the hon. Minister could have the work done for two-thirds or one-half the cost, if he caused a proper survey to be made, and called for tenders. The latter course would be much more satisfactory to the people generally, and to his own supporters in that part of the country. It should be remembered by the House that the moneys expended on these particular works I have mentioned, are not bonuses. When this Government took over the piers, they selected the best paying ones, and let the others go adrift; and I find that they are receiving a revenue from these few piers of about $1,200 a year, after paying all expenses in connection with them. A computation would show that this is a very large interest on the money the Government has expended there. We occupy a very exceptional position in Prince Edward Island. We are in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, in what is called the North Bay, and a large number of vessels from New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and all parts of the world, come there every season for fishing purposes. Yet, along the whole north coast of Prince Edward Island, a distance of about 150 miles, we have no harbor except Cascumpec, which was referred to the other evening. I think it is of vast importance that the Minister of Public Works should take this into his consideration, and expend some money in making a harbor of refuge on the north side of our Island, so as to prevent in future a disaster such as occurred to the fishing fleet some few years ago. We have the harbor of St. Peter's there, which can be made into an excellent harbor for a comparatively small sum of money. The only harbors we have on the north-east side of the Island, are Souris and Georgetown, but the fishing fleet may be caught in a storm on the north side, and serious disasters occur, if the Minister of Public Works does not make such provision to avert it. I find that in the Counties of Restigouche, Gloucester and Kent, N.B., some $49,000 have been expended during the last two or three years, while in my county only a very few dollars have been contributed by the Government for public works. Of course these three counties are represented by supporters of the Government, and Prince Edward Island has returned supporters of the Opposition. I am glad to see that the leader of the Government agrees with the policy laid down by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), and we hope that in the future something more will be done to encourage our public works, than has been done in the past.

Mr. PERRY. This resolution is one of great importance, and I am very happy to be able to agree for once with the right hon. gentleman who leads the House. I cannot speak for him as to whether he is in earnest, or whether his speech is only a bit of hypocrisy. I only speak for myself, and I agree with the resolution honestly, fairly and squarely, and endorse every word in it. With regard to the expenditure of public money in Prince Edward Island, we are not getting nearly as much as we are entitled to. A return which was submitted to the House a few days ago—and I suppose we have to take for granted that the figures in it are correct—purports to show the amount of money expended by the Dominion in each Province since Confederation, to the 30th June, 1889, under the following heads:—

“1st. Subsidies to railways in each Province, excepting the Canadian Pacific main line and Sault branch.

“2nd. The several railways built by the Dominion in each Province, including the Intercolonial branches and extensions, but not the main line as originally constructed.

“3rd. The buildings erected or purchased in each Province, their location and cost.”

This return contains the following statement of subsidies to railways in each Province since Confederation, excepting the Canadian Pacific main line and the Sault branch:—

Ontario.....	$3,061,905
Quebec.....	2,428,344
New Brunswick.....	888,731
Nova Scotia.....	26,138
British Columbia.....	750,000
Total.....	$7,155,118

We have in it a further statement of the money spent for building railways in each Province by the Dominion, including the Intercolonial Railway branches and extensions, but not the main line as originally constructed:—

Quebec, including the purchase of the Rivière du Loup branch.....	$5,520,323 26
New Brunswick.....	3,371,854 74
Nova Scotia.....	7,821,070 19
Total.....	$16,713,248 19

This makes a total of something like $24,000,000 or $25,000,000 expended in those Provinces, and I fail to see Prince Edward Island getting one cent. Now, if this is correct—although I have my doubt whether it is or not—where is the justice done to Prince Edward Island? Do not the people of that Province pay their share of the revenue? Are they not taxed the same as the other people of the Dominion? Are they to be told that because they send six members here to support the Opposition, they are not entitled to any consideration. The right hon. gentleman says that he is not to come and consult members of the Opposition about these public works. Well, Mr. Speaker, I would not expect it would be unreasonable for me to expect for one moment, that the right hon. gentleman or any of his colleagues should come across the House and ask us what we want for Prince Edward Island; but the soles of my boots are worn off travelling to the Departments, and the skin of my knuckles is worn off rapping at the doors of their departments asking for what we require, and what answer have I got? Have I been answered yes in one case? I have not, either by the Minister of Public Works or by the Postmaster General. They have denied me every time. They do not know me, or where I come from. They do not know that there is an Island called Prince Edward Island in the Straits of Northumberland. I cannot point to one post office which the hon. Postmaster General has established in Prince County at my request. I defy him to mention one. More than a month ago, I asked the hon. gentleman to bring down a return to the House showing the correspondence that had taken place between his Department and some gentlemen outside, which prevented certain post offices being established there; the House made an order that those documents should be brought down, and I have not got them yet, and I suppose I shall not get them before next year. Well, it is hard to tell whether the hon. gentleman himself will be here or not next year. Not one post office has been built by the Government in that county outside of Summerside. It is true, there is a respectable post office building there, and it answers the purpose well. But is Summerside the only place entitled to a post office? Look at the beautiful settlement of Kensington with no post office building. Look at the thriving settlement of Alberton with no post office building, the postmaster keeps the office in a building of his own. Look at the rising settlement of Tignish; I know the postmaster there has erected his own building and keeps the post office in it. Is that fair? Do these places pay no revenue? They pay a handsome revenue. I am not going to travel outside of Prince County; it is large enough for me, and I will leave the hon. member for Queen's and the hon. member for King's to represent their own counties. But we, in Prince County, have a right to complain. How often have I asked the Government to rebuild West Point wharf, which the Dominion took from the Local Government and paid $6,000 or $7,000 for, and they have not taken one step. Did they even take a chain, as I suggested last year, and tie it to the breakwater, to keep it to the Island side, instead of letting it drift across to the New Brunswick side where the people would use it for firewood. It is all gone. I have endeavored to draw the hon. gentleman's attention time and again to the necessity of expending some money on the breakwater at Miminegash. Thanks to the Administration led by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), they voted the money and engineered that work; but since it has been built it has been an eyesore to the Department of Public Works, and they are letting it go to pieces because Miminegash was not converted to Toryism. The hon. leader of the Government stated a little while ago that the Government did not refuse to spend money in a constituency because it was represented by a Liberal—that they did not use the public moneys as political machines. How is it that two or three weeks before the last general election the right hon. gentleman himself held out such a bait to the people of Prince Edward Island, as to say to them, “If you vote strongly for the members supporting the Government, we will give you the subway." But they cannot deny the public records, and it is a good thing we have these public records. The most prominent man then in the right hon. gentleman's Government, next to himself, the Minister of Finance, now High Commissioner, telegraphed to Charlottetown, stating that all the Island had to do was to return a solid phalanx of six members supporting the Government, and they would get the subway or the tunnel. I hold that to be bribery and corruption, and I am proud to say that the people of Prince Edward Island were so independent that they could not be bribed. They were prepared to stand by their rights and liberties, as British subjects, and by their franchise, although an attempt was made to cut that short, and they preferred to vote according to their conscience than to support a corrupt Government. I think they deserved credit for that, and it is hard that they should be rewarded for their honesty by being deprived of what they have a right to expect out of the public moneys of this country. In the motion I made for a return of expenditure, I asked for a detailed account of the expenditure on Tignish breakwater, but the return of the Minister of Public Works, which has been laid on the Table, gives merely the total cost of repairs, amounting to $534.32, and does not say whether this includes the pay of the inspector or not. It merely states that the work was commenced in March and ended in June, without showing the date in either case. So that it might have been commenced the 1st of March and ended the last of June, or commenced the last of March and ended the first of June, and there would be a difference of two months between the two. I want to find out how many days the inspector spent there, and how much he got out of this $534.22, if his pay is included in that. This return is not worth the paper it is written on; it is a mere skeleton; there is nothing in it, and I say it is an insult to the members of Prince Edward Island to treat them in that way. No doubt, if we supported the Government, we would have received a proper return, showing the day of the month the work began and ended, and how many days the inspector was paid. I suppose he was paid $2.50 per day, and I want to have this information to show the people how many days he was paid for inspecting this work, that cost a few hundred dollars. Now, with reference to the dredge, I find by the blue book that the Prince Edward Island dredge earned, last year, $1,500. But the return brought down shows that it earned $2,857.50. That is to be accounted for by the fact that the blue book is only up to the last of June, 1889, while the return shows the account to the end of the work last fall, and, no doubt, the latter is correct. But I wish the House to understand that this dredge belongs to the public, that it was paid for by the people of Prince Edward Island, and purchased from them by this Government, which charged the amount against Prince Edward Island in the general account; and I would ask if there is any justice in allowing that dredge to work for private parties and earn for the Government $2,800, when it should be employed in doing the work of the people of the Island generally. The hon. gentleman knows well that that is unfair and unjust. If I could go behind the screen, and see the secret correspondence which was sent to Charlottetown from the Department here, no doubt I would find that certain supporters of the Government down there—for instance, the defeated candidate in 1887—told the hon. gentleman where to put his dredge at work, and that, as Tignish did not return a supporter of the Government, nothing should be done for them. I do not believe that is the right way to treat the people. I wish to draw the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the Cape Traverse case. Cape Traverse pier is just opposite the great Government wharf at Cape Tormentine, and though the Government took over the Cape Traverse wharf from the Island, they have hardly done any repairs to it. They built a branch railway from Emerald Junction on the main line, through the extreme east portion of Prince County, to Cape Traverse; yet, in this return which has been handed to me, I find no account of any subsidy given to Prince Edward Island. I find no account given there of the branch railway; and, therefore, I have my doubts as to the correctness of this return. These public works were built on both sides in order to keep up continuous communication, but the Government were more generous on the Cape Tormentine side, for they expended on public works there something like $250,000, not so much, I am sure, for the accommodation of the public or for the public welfare, as for the sake of keeping the County of Westmoreland solid in their favor. That cannot be denied, for it is too plain to admit of contradiction. A little before 1882 the Government built the Cape Traverse branch, as a matter of expediency, in order to keep the electors of my county favorable to them; but, since 1887, they have allowed the work of the Cape Traverse wharf to go out of repair. The other day a meeting was held composed of the people of both sides of politics on the Island. Members of the Local House, the Hon. Mr. Bentley, Commissioner of Public Works on the Island, Mr. Laird, and many others, were present, and the meeting passed resolutions and decided to send a delegation to wait on the Minister of Public Works, and ask for a grant of from $30,000 to $50,000 to repair the wharf at Cape Traverse. But, in the meantime, bear in mind, Sir, the people on last Saturday turned out en masse, and hauled a lot of brush and piles to repair the work, thus paying out of their own pockets for work the Government should have done. It is a good job that I have a pass on the railway, for I have to attend so many meetings of the people, calling on the Government to do them justice, that otherwise I would have been ruined. But, as the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Flynn) has asked: is this the reason why we are not to get justice because we do not support the Government? Are we to be bought like sheep? I will compare my loyalty to-day with that of any hon. member of the Government. I am not only loyal to the Crown of England, but I am loyal to my people, I am loyal to Prince Edward Island. I am a little selfish that way, and I say it is disgraceful for the Government of Canada to allow such injustice to be practised against Prince Edward Island. The Government need not be surprised if, some day, they find that Prince Edward Island is drifting away.

Mr. ROBERTSON.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. PERRY. Yes; we have seen greater wonders than that. We know in that Island how to shoulder muskets; not small muskets, but the muskets of common sense. We know where to apply to get our grievances rectified, and in order to obtain justice. While we have such men at our backs as the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), and the hon. leader of the Opposition, there is no fear that we will not get justice in time. They will unquestionably navigate the ship properly and bring her safely to the port of justice. I did expect at one time to get the correspondence which I have asked for from the hon. Postmaster-General, but I am disappointed, and I know I am not going to get it.

Mr. HAGGART. What correspondence?

Mr. PERRY. The correspondence about the post office at Kensington.

Mr. HAGGART. Is it not brought down?

Mr. PERRY. Not as far as I know. The soles of my boots are worn out, as I have already stated, in going up and down stairs, and always getting the statement, There is nothing for you; and my hon. friend knows that there is nothing for me yet. He need not say that he will ask his subordinates to supply the information, because the order must emanate from himself. I do not know much about the secrets of these officers, but I know that the hon. gentleman must give the order, and he has not given the order. It is only a work of a few minutes, and, if his Department is short of hands, I will go myself and do the work for nothing. I do not believe I shall get that information, or that, if I do, it will be complete. The Baltic post office is in the same position, and I know that he will not give me that return. I asked for that a year or two ago, and I have not got it yet, and I shall not get it now. The hon. gentleman knows that he ought to establish that post office. Every county which returns Conservatives gets a post office, but how many did my hon. friends from King's County or Queen's County get? I know I got none, and I suppose they are in the same position as I am. We have a right to have post offices built by the Government in the thriving village of Kensington, in Alberton, in Tignish, and I do not know in how many more places. I would like the hon. gentleman to state, if he knows anything about his Department, what are the revenues from those places. It is certain that he cares very little about doing justice to the people of the county I have the honor to represent. If he thinks that the people of Prince County are going to be frightened or bought by such tricks as he is adopting, he is very much mistaken. We are not made of that kind of metal. We are determined to take the administration from the hands of the hon. gentleman. For my own part, I am prepared for a fight any day, to-morrow if he likes. I have forgotten to mention some breakwaters which are required in my county, but I will leave that to my colleague, who, I know, is itching for an opportunity to speak. I am very thankful to the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) for giving me an opportunity to state the wants of my people. Their demands are genuine, and, if the Minister of Public Works does not do his duty, I am not responsible for it, and if the Postmaster

General is of the same stamp, on him will lie the responsibility, and he will have to answer for that when he is tried before a jury of the country.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman has referred to the request for post offices at Alberton, Tignish and Kensington. I will see that he shall have the correspondence at once, but I may say that, in regard to his statement that there ought to be post offices at these places, and his challenge to me to state the revenue from them, I will do so now and leave the matter to the judgment of the House. At Tignish, the total revenue is $668, the expenditure on the post office employés is $251, leaving a net revenue of $417. At Alberton, which is the principal place in his whole constituency, where he claims a post office building should be erected, the gross revenue is $1,034, the expenditure for employés is $452, leaving a net revenue of $582. At Kensington, the total receipts are $571, and the expenditure is $275, leaving a net revenue of $296. These are the three places which the hon. gentleman says the Post Office Department has so much neglected by not having erected post office buildings.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They average as much as Cayuga.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. YEO. I desire to say a few words on this question, to show the way the Government have treated Prince Edward Island. In doing so, I will commence with the breakwaters on the east side of the Province, at a place called Malpeque. There is a breakwater there which cost this Dominion several thousand dollars, but as very little has been done towards keeping it up, it has nearly gone to wreck. It is a work that has been of great benefit to that section of the country, and, indeed, to the whole of that coast. This is a good harbor on the north side of Prince Edward Island, but if a vessel gets overtaken by a storm in a north-east wind, it is bound to go ashore, and lives are likely to be lost. This is a place where protection to the shipping ought to be provided after vessels get into port. What little money has been spent there to keep it in repair, has been spent by days' work. The work has been given into the hands of some friends of the Government, who proceed very slowly with it. Those who have the work on hand get so much a day, and the longer they keep the work on hand the more money they earn. I think the Government should ask for tenders, and get one of their party to inspect the work, and bind the contractors who tender to finish it at a certain time, and let the inspector see that it is properly done, so that the public money will not be wasted in the way it has been wasted elsewhere. There is also a Dominion wharf at Keer's Shore, towards which little or nothing has been done. Then we go round to Tignish, where there has been some little work done, but not judiciously. It has been put into the hands of partisans, who go along slowly, so much so that when they have done the work they have to commence over again. Then we go on to Miminegash. There has been a large expenditure of public money at this point—some ten or fifteen thousand dollars; and the money for this work was voted by the late Government and completed by this Government. It was repaired about two years ago, but nothing has been done to it since. Petitions and letters have been sent to the Government, and I, myself, have brought it to the notice of the Minister of Public Works, but it was all of no use. Now it is going to pieces, and I would not be surprised if the whole thing was swept away this spring. A few hundred dollars spent upon it now would secure this work. Last summer we wrote to the Public Works Department several times, and the Minister gave us fair promises; but these promises ended there. We then go to West Point, where there is a wharf built by the Local Government, which cost a good deal of money. The Dominion Government took it into their hands, and since then it has all gone to pieces. It is several miles from a railway, and there is no other way of shipping produce. Then, go a little further out to a place called Brae. Several petitions have been sent to the Government, calling their attention to the wharf. Engineers have been sent down to survey it, but nothing more has been done. Several parties started business there, and one man, a strong friend of the Government, who was at one time a member of the Local House and a member of the Government, started business there. He petitioned to get some aid to assist in making it a shipping place. The Government paid no attention to it, and, finally, for want of shipping facilities, the saw mill and other buildings of this man went down, and he had to go away. This winter the people in the neighborhood subscribed about $500 to build a breakwater there. They built about five chains in length and nearly one in breadth. They petitioned the Government, and also wrote letters to my colleague and myself, asking us to secure a small amount in carrying out this work, so that they could ship their produce. I hope the Minister will put a sum in the Supplementary Estimates for that purpose. Then, we come on to Sheep River, where there is another wharf that was taken off the hands of the Local Government. It cost a large amount of money, but it has been neglected in the same way as the others. I think, two years ago, a small amount of money was given for that work, and a man sent down there, an employé of the Government, I think, who took his own team and a boy, and began to draw sand, instead of stones, from the shore for ballast, but after awhile the sand washed through and filled in the channel. I think it is a great misfortune that the Government have neglected that work. Then, there is Summerside, a great highway for shipping and passengers to Point Duchene. In this House, eight or nine years ago, I asked the Government to give us a small amount to build a couple of breakwaters to protect the harbor. It lies open to the west and north winds, and the shipping is unprotected. A breakwater is needed to protect the shipping inside, as well as the railway wharf. The Government never paid any attention to this work. Last winter a petition was sent asking for a survey; an engineer made a survey, and reported that it would cost about $70,000. I think that is an over-estimate, but even if it would cost that, what signifies $70,000 to improve such a harbor as that? The people held a meeting about it, the Government supporters there cannot believe that the Government treated them in this way. There is plenty of material on the shore, brush and stone, and plenty of men who will work at a cheap rate. If the Government will only take this matter into consideration, and build these works, it will keep the harbor open much later in the fall, and earlier in the spring, it would be of great benefit to the inhabitants of the Island. Then, leaving Summerside, you come to Cape Traverse, where there is a large wharf. It has cost the Local Government a large amount of money, but since the Dominion Government took it over nothing much has been done on it. There is also a railroad to Cape Tormentine, on the New Brunswick side. A large amount of money has been spent there in building a breakwater, and I do not see why the Government do not repair the Cape Traverse wharf, so that steamers may run across the Straits with mails and passengers between these two points, the distance being only nine miles, and do it in one hour, instead of four or five hours as at present. It would also increase the trade of the Island and be a good thing for the railways. I hope the Government will take this into consideration and lose no time in doing something in this way. Now, I do not ask for any favors; I only want the Government to do what is right and just. I have been a member of this House for a good many years, but since the change of Government we have never got anything to speak of for the Island. We are differently situated in Prince Edward Island from the people of any other Province in the Dominion. We are surrounded by water; many ships come to the Island from all parts of the world, but they have not the proper harbor accommodation, and I think it is too bad that the Government do not provide better harbor accommodation. We pay a great deal more money into the Dominion Treasury than we get out of it, for we cannot even get a post office established. I do not see the Postmaster General in his place; but I may say that the late Postmaster General, before he became Lieutenant Governor of Nova Scotia promised that he would have one or two post offices established. I and my colleague visited the Deputy Postmaster General, and I was told that I could write and tell the parties that the offices would be established, but they would not be established until after the 1st July. I did so, on his word; but up to this time it has not been done. Last winter I and my colleague went to the Department, and we found a slip of paper there from the defeated candidate, to the effect that those offices were not wanted. And in that way they have not been established. I saw that gentleman during the summer, and I asked him, he came to do such an act, as the offices how were wanted. He said: Yes, but he was working for himself; he wanted to get another office. I asked him if he would write to the Department and request that the office be opened. He told me he would do so; but up to this time he has not done so. It is very unfair and unjust to the people of Prince Edward Island, that they cannot obtain even such a small grant as a post office. I have also presented a petition that the mail bag he dropped at a station on the line, where there are two or three mills, a church, school house, and two stores; but I do not expect to obtain even this accommodation, which would be useful to 200 or 300 people. The same unfair treatment is extended all over the Island. I hope the Minister of Public Works will not forget these matters, but that he will do something to meet our request. If he did more to help the Island as regards our public works, the Government might obtain additional support, but as they do nothing to further our interests they cannot expect support from us. I hope the Minister of Public Works and Postmaster General will do justice to the Island, and give the people the facilities and accommodation they ask and require.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) I desire to say a few words, before the House passes into Committee of Supply, on this question, which affects my constituents to a very great extent. I was glad that the leader of the Government accepted the amendment moved by my hon. friend, and if we can only be satisfied of the sincerity of the hon. gentlemen's repentance, they might be granted to some extent absolution for their past misdoings. But whether the hon. gentleman's repentance is sincere or not, I suppose we will have proof when the Finance Minister brings down the Supplementary Estimates. The hon. gentleman complained that the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) dealt altogether in generalities, and he invited from hon. members details of the complaints they had to make. I think the hon. gentleman must have been satisfied, from the speeches delivered this afternoon and the remarks of the hon. member for Prince (Mr. Yeo) this evening, that we not only have general ground for complaint, but we have specific grounds, and those hon. gentlemen must have satisfied him that our complaints are well founded. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that if he was convinced by the reasons of his political opponents he would be obliged to submit, but he drew a distinction between his opponents and his friends, for, as regards his friends, he only seemed to want their wishes and not their reasons. As regards political patronage in respect to appointments so far as that matter is concerned no one doubts that the Government will exercise their patronage in favor of their political friends. Any Government in power would do that, but, with respect to the expenditure on public works of public utility, it is, I believe, essential in the public interest that they should be constructed irrespective of party purposes, and that all parts of the country should have fair play. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has stated that no part of the Dominion has suffered so severely from the rule adopted by the present Government as the Province from which I come. We have been treated shabbily and shamefully in regard to public works. Hon. members who have been in this House eight or ten years will be aware that we have been obliged to complain annually during many years, no less than fifteen years, of the failure of the Government to carry out the terms of Confederation. It took us fifteen years of constant work to induce the Government to put on a respectable steamer in order to try and carry out the terms of Union with respect to the winter crossing. I am glad to say, as I stated last year, we have now an exceedingly good boat, one which reflects credit on the Department and does its work remarkably well, and as regards that matter I have now no complaint to make. I wish the hon. gentleman to understand that not only those who are opposed to him in politics complain of the manner in which the Island is treated, but our political opponents, the supporters of the Government, are themselves obliged, when they have to speak on the question, to admit sorrowfully that the Island is badly treated. A year or two ago, the Conservative Government had to send a deputation home to England to lay a petition covering the grievances of the Island at the foot of the Throne. There they met the High Commissioner, and a conference took place as to whether the Island was properly treated or not, and in order to show the House that the action we have taken is not confined to opponents of the Government, but is shared in by their supporters, I will quote a sentence from the memorial submitted to Lord Granville by the deputation that went to lay the memorial of the Island Government at home at the foot of the Throne:

"The Committee of Council speak of the 'liberal treatment' of the Island by the Dominion Government, and that it has received especial consideration, on account of its isolated position, though possessing a population less than some cities on the mainland. To this statement the undersigned desire to except. They have clearly proved, as they believe, that Prince Edward Island contributes to the general revenue more than is returned in expenditure. The unfortunate misapprehension that the Island is being treated with exceptional liberality, and that it does not return to the general revenue one-third of the amount expended, is probably due to the invidious distinction made by the General Government in the remuneration of their officials on the Island. The same erroneous impression has possibly influenced the General Government in declining, up to the present time, to maintain many of the public piers in the Province although expressly bound to do so by the British North America Act."

The hon. gentleman will see in the extract from that memorial that the same complaints we have made in Parliament year after year were made officially and publicly by two of the strongest supporters of the Government in the Province from which I come; and they complained, not only that the piers were not maintained, as the Government were bound to maintain them, but further, that an invidious distinction was made with respect to the payment of the officials on the Island. That invidious distinction is maintained to this day. I do not complain of it so far as the leading officials are concerned. I recognise the fact, as will every honest and candid man, that as regards the higher offices we cannot expect, in a small Province, that the holders of offices should receive the same salaries as occupants of the same offices in the larger Provinces, for they have neither the same responsibility nor the same labor. That I recognise, but the complaint I presented to the Government before, and which I beg to repeat in the hearing of the Minister of Railways, is this, that a common laborer working on the railway should receive a much less sum per day for the same work than a laborer at Moncton, across the straits. That is indefensible, unjust and unfair, and it is felt to be unjust and unfair, and the hon. gentleman will see that a workman taking his spade and shovel, and going to work in the morning at $1 a day, when another laborer across the straits is receiving $1.25 or $1.35, deservedly feels he is suffering a great injustice. Passing away from that matter, I want to meet the invitation which the hon. Premier indirectly extended to those who might have complaints to make of unfair treatment with respect to their public works. I do not intend to refer to King's County, which has been so ably referred to by my hon. friend from the south end of that county, this afternoon, or to Prince County, the wants of which have been put before the Committee by the hon. gentlemen who represent that county. I will confine my remarks to the county which I represent myself. I wish again to call the attention of the hon. Minister to four works which I have spoken of a number of times in this House. It is not my habit, as some hon. gentlemen have said it is theirs, to wait on the Minister at the Department and submit complaints about this and that work. I do not conceive that to be my duty as a member of Parliament, but I have availed of every opportunity in this House to calmly and quietly, and I hope, distinctly, state to the Ministry, what I conceive to be the improvements and public works required for Queen's County. These works to which I intend to refer have been called to the attention of the Minister time and again. Two of them are on the north side, and two on the south side of the Island. The two on the north side are right in the midst of the fishing fleet; one of them is the very important harbor of New London, and the other is a harbor more for small fishing boats than for vessels. I am not going to give the hon. Minister my own personal views on what is required to be done to these harbors, but I hold in my hand a report from the engineer who surveyed that harbor only last year, and as the report is a very clear and good one, I shall read some of it to the hon. gentleman. It says:

"The harbor of New London, or Grenville Bay, is situated on the northern coast of Prince Edward Island, about 10 miles south-east from Richmond Bay.

"New London harbor is a convenient fishing port, and also an important shipping point for the produce of a large and fertile farming district.

"The works constructed by the Department for the improvement of the entrance into the harbor of New London consist of:

"1. A breakwater 1,050 feet in length, on the sand beach at the eastern side of the entrance, built partly of piling, brush and stone, and partly of crib-work.

"2. A breakwater 460 feet in length on the beach, at the western side of the entrance, consisting of pile-work, brush and stone, with a squared timber block at the outer end.

"3. A dam 1,600 feet in length off Campbell Point.

"The breakwaters were constructed with the intention of confining the ebb current, and direct it on the bar outside the harbor, as well as to prevent the sea from washing the sand into the navigable channel. The results obtained have been so far very satisfactory, the depth of water on the bar having increased from six to fourteen feet in a channel about 400 feet in width, thus making of the harbor of New London one of the best on that coast of the Island.

"In file No. 96,123 it is asked:

"1. That repairs be made to the eastern breakwater.

"This has been made the subject of a special report, dated 20th January.

"2. That the eastern breakwater be extended further seawardly.

"A small channel is forming past the end of the eastern breakwater, running in an easterly direction, which channel may assume larger proportions to the detriment of the main channel, which runs in a north-easterly direction, by dividing the volume of the ebb current, and therefore diminishing its beneficial effect on the bar.

"To remedy this possible occurrence it will be necessary to extend the eastern breakwater in a northerly direction, a distance of 200 feet.

"The cost of this proposed extension I estimate at $3,500, made of pile work with brush and stone, and a stone slope on the seaward side."

The special report which is referred to has not been brought down. The hon. Minister has had this report of the surveyor in his Department for some time. It goes on to say, that if these repairs are not made, very serious damage will result to this important harbor, and an expenditure of ten times the amount now required will be necessitated. The engineer states, that if $3,500 was spent in improving the extension to this breakwater, it would make a pretty complete work. Considering the favorable report made by the engineer, considering the importance of the harbor itself, and considering the very large number of the farming population who have to ship their produce from that harbor, I do not think it is asking anything unreasonable or unfair, that the recommendations of the engineer should have met the approval of the Minister of Public Works, and that we might have seen in the Estimates some provision made to repair this breakwater. There is, however, not an appropriation of one single dollar for this work. I have been at this place, and I have seen the work myself. I have talked to the leading men of the vicinity, and I have not a shadow of doubt, that unless repairs are made there within next season, the Government will require to spend three or four dollars for every one dollar that would be required now. If the work is neglected, and this result follows, it will be a very serious matter. I urge this necessary work upon the Minister with all the force I can command. That harbor is a long way from any railway; it is the only shipping port which thousands of farmers can avail of, four rivers enter into the harbor, and up to quite a late period in the autumn of the year, it is a very fair port for large ships. The other harbor on the north side of the Island, to which I wish to call the attention of the Minister, is the harbor of Tracadie, which only requires a very small expenditure, and which, although not so important as New London, is yet a very large fishing place. The bar of that harbor requires deepening, and a survey made a few years ago, reported that it would not require much expenditure to make that a safe and commodious harbor for the smaller fishing fleet. I do not ask any expenditure for the purpose of making it a harbor for large vessels, but we should make it safe and commodious for the hundreds of fishermen who take their lives in their hands while pursuing their calling in the fall of the year. On the south side of the Island there are two harbors, both of which we have reports upon. One is the harbor of Pinette. I have here a report on this harbor from a gentleman who seems to understand his business very well; at all events, he makes very lucid reports and knows what he is talking about. He says:

"The river is about 200 yards wide, and carries a depth of about 3 fathoms at low water up to the wharf, where vessels can lie in safety and load in all kinds of weather.

"The mouth of the river is obstructed by a bar, which at low water springs, carries from 3 to 5 feet of water, to take advantage of the deepest portions of which, vessels have to take a very tortuous course, as may be seen on reference to the plan herewith (fig. 2).

"What is asked by the persons interested is to have the channel across the bar straightened and deepened, so as to permit ocean-going vessels entering and leaving at high water springs.

"On the accompanying plan, fig. 2, is shown in red (I, II), the proposed channel through this bar, and one which will give the accommodation required, the cost of which is estimated as follows:—

"I. A channel, 200 feet in width, 7 feet deep at low water or 15 feet at high water spring, would necessitate the removal of 17,355 cubic yards of material measured in the scows, which, at 30 cents per cubic yard, amounts to $5,206.50; or

"II. A channel, 200 feet wide, 8 feet deep at low water or 16 feet at high water spring, would mean the removal of 33,340 cubic yards, at a cost of, say, $10,000."

That is the entire cost at which he estimates the deepening of that harbor to 15 feet at low water and some 20 or 25 feet at high water, so as to accommodate ocean-going ships. Now, I will not say any more about that, because my hon. colleague has had charge of it for some years, and has pressed it upon the attention of the Department time and again. He knows every inch of the ground, having often navigated his own ships in and out of that harbor; but I think, after reading the report made by the hon. gentleman's own officer as to the desirability and necessity of these improvements, that no fair-minded man would hesitate to grant the sum required to make them. The last matter I will refer to is the one to which I have called the attention of the hon. gentleman year after year; I refer to the Wood Islands breakwater. The hon. gentleman knows that that is a small artificial harbor, which was commenced by the Local Government as far back as 1859; a large part of the work was completed when the Province entered Confederation; and since then the Dominion Government have taken up the work, and have built a second breakwater on the southern side, which they did make a pretty good work of at one time. But for the last six or eight years it has been almost entirely left to run down. The hon. gentleman has spent a few hundred dollars on it every year to keep it in repair; but, as I have told him repeatedly, the money was absolutely squandered; and if he voted $1,000 or $1,500 now, it would not do a single bit of good. In that part of the Island, there is no other harbor from which the farmers can ship their produce. Hon. gentlemen may wonder to hear us complain that within a radius of fifteen or twenty miles the farmers have no shipping place; but they must recollect that no part of the Dominion is settled nearly as thickly as that Province. Nearly every acre is settled; the farms succeed each other, and every one of them has a farm house with a farmer in it. I wish to call the hon. gentleman's attention to the report of his own engineer on this harbor. After reciting the history of the breakwater, the report goes on to say:

"The depth of water required by those interested in shipping at Wood Islands is 6 feet at low water springs, or 12 feet at high water. The width to be 60 feet, and the channel to be along the southern face of the northern breakwater, commencing opposite the loading place."

After speaking of the different modes suggested, which I will not trouble the House with, he gives his conclusion in the following words:—

"The best mode of improving the navigation at this place would be by the extension of the southern breakwater as far as the northern, and the removal—by dredging—of the material between them, which the tide cannot force out. The portion of the northern breakwater which was not carried to the proper height should be raised."

That portion never was raised to its proper height at any time, and now you cannot walk over it, and how anyone can land or ship goods there is a wonder to me:

"If the southern breakwater is extended 400 feet, it should be done by degrees to enable the tidal current to scour away the bar, and so obtain a deeper and firmer foundation. I estimate the amount required to raise the northern breakwater on a length of 1,200 feet to the height shown (fig. 4) and to extend the southern breakwater a distance of 400 feet, as follows:—

Raising northern breakwater.....	$2,600
Extending southern do	6,500
Contingencies	900
Total	$10,000

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.)

Now, that sum is not asked to be spent in one year; the engineer says it ought to be done by degrees; but I do think that the hon. gentleman, after the claim we have made here for the past six or eight years on behalf of the large number of people whom the improvement of that harbor would serve, cannot resist the appeal we make now, when it is backed up by such a report from his own engineer. The hon. First Minister, assuming an air of great innocence, remarked to-day that he was not aware that injustice was being done to any particular district because it was represented by a Liberal; but I look across the Straits, and I find three counties of New Brunswick, the County of Restigouche, the County of Gloucester and the County of Kent, all represented by Conservatives, received in the last three years no less than $62,000. I am not referring to Custom houses or railways; I am referring to wharves, piers and improvements to harbors alone; and I do not include in that sum the cost of building Cape Tormentine wharf, because it was built to carry out the terms of union with Prince Edward Island; whereas the total amount the Island receives this year is $6,000, an amount which is of no consequence at all. It is really too bad. However, I am in hope, judging from the expression of repentance made by the hon. gentleman to-day, that we shall now get some small modicum of justice. I do not expect to get full justice, or anything like it; but I do expect some modicum of justice, and I think the four harbors I have mentioned—New London, Tracadie, Pinette and Wood Islands—should, at least, be dealt with by the hon. gentleman this year. If they are not, at least two of them will deteriorate so much in value, by the action of the currents, that next year, if he does anything on them then, he will have to spend two dollars where one dollar would do the work now. Having said so much on these piers and harbors, I will conclude by referring to an improvement for which I hope to catch the ear of the hon. First Minister, who is now Minister of Railways. The hon. gentleman knows that we have a railway on the Island, and I find, from conversation among the hon. members of the House, that it is generally believed by them that that railway was built at the proper expense of the Dominion of Canada. I took up a book of railway statistics the other day, and in glancing over the list of railways alleged to have been built by the Dominion Government I find put down among them the railway of Prince Edward Island, at a cost of $3,250,000. That is most unfair and unjust, and leaves a very wrong impression on the minds of the public. The Dominion of Canada did not build one mile of that road; it was built entirely out of the money of the people of Prince Edward Island; and when the accounts between the Island and the Dominion were adjusted at the time we entered Confederation, every dollar of the cost of that road was charged to the Province. I do not complain of that, because that was a portion of the terms we agreed upon; I am only speaking of it to remove a misconception that exists so largely among the members of the House. But since that time the Government of the Dominion have taken a new departure, and have been building railways here, there and everywhere in the different Provinces. We have a contract for a railway in Cape Breton that is going to cost two or three millions of dollars. I find in a return, which was brought down the other day in answer to a request by an hon. member, that the money voted for railways built by the Dominion Government, up to the end of June last, amounted to $16,713,000. We expended $5,323,000 in the Province of Quebec; we expended in New Brunswick, $3,371,854, and in Nova Scotia, $7,821,070; making a total of $16,713,247 spent by this Government during the last few years in constructing railways in Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. Of that amount the Cape Breton Railway cost $2,302,000; the Oxford and New Glasgow line, which is a competitor to the Intercolonial Railway, $1,394,156; the Pictou Town Branch, which is a competitor to the Intercolonial Railway, $503,000; the Eastern Extension of the New Glasgow to the Gut of Canso, $1,284,495. But that is not all. Under the new system introduced in 1882, we commenced to subsidise roads in different parts of the Dominion; and I find that in subsidies alone to railways we have paid:

Quebec.....	2,428,344
New Brunswick.....	888,531
Nova Scotia.....	26,138
British Columbia.....	750,000
Total.....	$7,155,118

And the amount of subsidies yet unpaid, because unearned, but which are being earned daily, is $2,105,989. This will be paid in a short time. Adding these unpaid amounts to those already paid, we have a total of $9,261,107. We have, in addition, the subsidy of $1,525,250 paid to the Canada Central, and the subsidy of $1,500,000 paid for the extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway to Quebec, and money subsidies voted to lines, the contracts for which have not yet been signed, amounting to $2,892,500, making a total in subsidies, including the $2,105,989 which we are liable to pay, and will pay, during the next year, of $15,178,857. So that I find that since Prince Edward Island came into the Confederation, and since we have adopted this new policy of constructing competing lines to our existing lines, and subsidising other lines throughout the Dominion, we have actually paid and become liable for an expenditure of $16,713,247 for roads built by the Government, and $15,178,857 for subsidies to other lines, making a total of $31,892,104. Hon. gentlemen know well, from the peculiar situation of the Island, that we do not share any of the advantages which will be derived by other parts of the Dominion from the construction of these roads. We are isolated, and although we do contribute our fair share per head of the cost of these roads, and of the cost of building the Intercolonial Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, we do not derive, and never can derive, any benefit whatever from them. Therefore, I submit that, having built our own road, and having had it charged to us, every dollar of it, we are entitled to very generous consideration at the hands of the Government. I submit to the Minister that the demand I make with respect to a railway is very small indeed. The hon. gentleman knows, for he has been in the Province, that the Island is divided into two parts by a large river, and that the portion lying south of the river, embracing what is known as the Belfast and Murray Harbor district, comprising fifteen or sixteen townships, with a population one-fifth that of the whole Island, has no railway communication whatever. It has been suggested by some surveyors that, for a very small cost, a small feeder could be built, running from one of the stations on the road through these two districts of Belfast and Murray Harbor, touching somewhere near the great village of Montague, and going down from Belfast towards this Wood Islands breakwater. I believe that could be built for about $7,000 per mile, and it would not require any additional rolling stock, because we have rolling stock there already. The total cost of the branch alone, which I ask the hon. gentleman to build, would not be one-sixth of the cost of the Pictou Town branch. Now, I submit the hon. gentleman would do well, in the interests of justice and fair play to that little Island, for which I know he has some kindly feeling—for it benefited him some years ago—to have his engineer consider fairly that proposition, and give it serious consideration. When we come to compare the way our Island is settled with other parts of the Dominion, hon. gentlemen will be surprised to learn that while the population of the Island per square mile is fifty-two, the population of the rest of the Dominion is a little short of five. We are, by long odds, ten times as thickly populated as any other part of the Dominion. The hon. gentleman will see further, if he looks at the statistics, that there are very few parts of the Dominion where farming is carried on as it is with us. I find, on looking over the statistics, that Prince Edward Island owns fifty-five head of live stock for every hundred acres of improved land, while the rest of the Dominion only owns thirty-eight head. Our field products are 108 bushels per acre of improved land, while those of the other Provinces are only 61. This shows what a rich and valuable island it is. If the hon. gentleman will build that small branch from the main line to this harbor of Wood Islands, it will run through a fertile country, every inch of which is settled by well-to-do farmers, and it will be a most valuable feeder to the trunk line. No doubt the existing line has not paid heretofore, but there is this to be said of it, that it pays better than the Intercolonial Railway; and whereas the Intercolonial has a very large amount of expenditure from year to year charged to capital account, every dollar expended on the Island Railway is charged to running expenses, so that the loss is larger than it would be if the same system were adopted which is followed with regard to the Intercolonial Railway. I do not think I have put forward a claim on behalf of the Island which is not reasonable and just. I have been talking to a great many members on both sides, and I believe the members of the Government, if they could spare the time to give this matter a little consideration, would acknowledge the justice of these claims; and I am in hopes, as far as the Minister of Public Works is concerned, that these four particular works—New London, Tracadie, Pinette and Wood Islands—this Session—not next year—will be put down in the Supplementary Estimates for a sum sufficient to carry them to completion. I may not have any influence with the right hon. the leader of the Government, but he has many warm friends on the Island, as he knows—men who fight very hard for him, as I know to my cost—and if the Government would construct this branch line, their action would meet with the approval of their friends as well as opponents, and be an act of simple justice. The road would be a valuable feeder to the existing line, would not require additional rolling stock, would tend largely to reduce the deficit which year by year, unfortunately, appears in our account, would open up a valuable stretch of country, and would confer a lasting benefit on a great many people.

Mr. WELSH. You have heard me speak about this matter for some time, and I have now to congratulate the Minister of Public Works that he has taken a step in the right direction. I feel considerably mollified this evening. I have been rather rough with the Minister lately, and he deserved it, but I am getting better now. Here are the reports which I moved for two months ago, and I must say that they are very creditable, and that it is very creditable to the Government to have an engineer who can go there and make such a report as that. The Minister of Public Works will remember the two hours' interview we had in his menagerie when we discussed all these matters, and entered into them very fully. The hon. gentleman was so much interested in my description of the wants of Prince Edward Island, and of the harbor of Wood Islands, and the harbor of Pinette, that he was going to get a dredge from British Columbia to be sent down there to do the work. He will not deny it. He may ask Mr. Perley about it. I told him I had been in all these harbors, and that I had bored and tried and proved them, but I said: I would not like you to promise to undertake that work unless you had your engineer to certify that it is feasible and necessary. He promised that that should be attended to. Well, better late than never. It has come at last, and the report corroborates my statements to the minutest tittle. There is no difficulty in making these two harbors right, and there is no difficulty in improving the harbor of New London. Now, I appeal to the Government, and to the Minister of Public Works, and to the right hon. the leader of the Government, for I know that he has a warm feeling towards Prince Edward Island as I have a warm feeling towards him, and, if he will say that Prince Edward Island shall have this small measure of justice—I will not promise what I will do. I expect to get an answer from the right hon. gentleman in reference to this work.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As soon as I know what you are going to do.

Mr. WELSH. I am not going to be sold before I am bought. Now, my hon. friend will remember that in the Estimates we have $8,200 to repair thirty or forty piers in Prince Edward Island, to keep up nine or ten fine breakwaters, to keep up our harbors and everything. I see that in this motion there is something about favoritism. Let me give you an example of favoritism. Last year there was an item of $4,000 to build a pier at a place called Kouchibouguacis. This sum was to build a pier at this place, which is now, I think, called St. Louis. I happened to be loading a ship there at the entrance to the place called Kouchibouguacis about forty-nine or fifty years ago. I know the place, and I can speak from experience. The entrance to this place at Kouchibouguacis is in side of a place called Escuminac.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

Mr. WELSH. I will give any of you gentlemen who are laughing half-a-dollar if you can spell the name. There was eight feet of water there then, but now there is no water. Inside there is a lagoon which runs about fourteen miles to Richibucto, and at the mouth of a harbor called Kouchibouguacis—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. WELSH. Well, the hon. member who represents that district is there in his seat, and, if I state anything which is exaggerated, I hope he will contradict me. That lagoon is used only for the purpose of rafting deals down from the rivers and the mills inside of the lagoon. The Government took this $4,000 to build a wharf at the mouth of this Kouchibouguacis River. I opposed that, and the Minister of Public Works withdrew the vote from the Estimates. I naturally thought I had saved the country $4,000, and I went down below and treated some of the fellows to the extent of two or three dollars because I thought I had saved this amount. Will you believe that we have now a vote to build that wharf! It appears that they built it without a vote, and now they say: We gave the contract, and you have to pay for it. When I ask, Why is such a thing not done, what is the invariable answer? No money, no money. And yet, the Minister of Public Works could build a wharf at a cost of $4,000 without any vote of Parliament. Do you call that favoritism? It looks very much like it. I do not know that I am going the right way to get a vote.

An hon. MEMBER. Take it back.

Mr. WELSH. No; I will not take it back. Now we have a vote of $8,200 to keep up all these piers, and breakwaters, and harbors in Prince Edward Island. That does not look well, but I have not heard the Minister of Public Works give an explanation why his long-deferred promises have not been fulfilled. There is the harbor of Pinette and there is the harbor of Wood Island, which are incomplete, and what is the consequence to the people? The people are removing from the Island. I ask them why they do not cultivate their farms, but the young men are going away to the United States because they say they cannot get proper shipping facilities. We have a longer coast in proportion to our size than any other Province in the Dominion, and the Government ought to remember that we are frozen up five months out of the twelve. Our shipping season is very short, and the people want all the facilities possible in order to get their stock to market in the spring and fall. If the piers and harbors are not kept in a good shape, it is a bad thing for the people of the Province, and it is a bad thing for the people of the Dominion, because when one part of the country suffers, the whole country suffers. If you have a pain in your eye, the whole body suffers; if any member of your body suffers, the whole body suffers with it. We are a limb of the Dominion, a member of the Dominion, and if we suffer, the whole Dominion suffers accordingly. I really think it is a disgrace for the Government, and to every hon. member on the floor of this House, if they do not stand up in their places and demand that justice be done to Prince Edward Island. We do not want any favors, we want simple justice. Here goes five or six millions to Cape Breton, so many millions to build a railway going down through those rocky shores. How many of the members who voted for that Railway Bill ever saw the country through which the road runs? What is the population in proportion to that of Prince Edward Island? What is the population of the North-West that we hear so much about? What is the population of Manitoba? What is the population of those sections compared with that of Prince Edward Island? Look at the vast sums of money spent in those Provinces, and then see how much money we get? We do not get a cent on the dollar. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, and I tell the Minister of Public Works, whether he is asleep or awake—I guess he is listening now, he is in good humor, and I hope he will feel better—I tell you that it is a disgrace to the Government, it is a disgrace to this House, to allow this injustice to be done to Prince Edward Island. The Government have made a report, they have made a survey; here it is, and it speaks for itself, and if hon. gentlemen will look at it, I am sure there is not one of them on this side of the House, at all events, whether there is on that side or not, who will refuse to grant a vote to pay all the expenses required to carry out the recommendations of this report. My colleague has spoken about a railway branch from the main line down to Murray Harbor. I think myself it might possibly, in the end, be profitable to the country at large. It is a fact that a large portion of the people in that section are without any railway accommodation. I have heard a good deal of chaffing from hon. members about building a railway in Prince Edward Island, and spending some $3,000,000. Why, this Government never paid a shilling of it. When we went into Confederation, Prince Edward Island was out of debt. Prince Edward Island owed about $8 or $9 per head, if I remember aright, and they had assets to more than counter-balance that. When we built this railway it cost us $32.50 a head, and when we went into Confederation accounts were squared, and a balance came to Prince Edward Island of a million of money, which was deposited to our credit in the city of Ottawa. The people of Prince Edward Island paid for that railway, every dollar of it, themselves; and while you have been expending millions in Cape Breton, in Nova Scotia, in New Brunswick, in Quebec, and all over the Dominion, you have not given anything to Prince Edward Island. If the Government wishes to be an honest Government, as I should hope it does, if it wishes to do justice fairly with every Province in this Dominion, then let them take this matter into consideration and see that justice is done in the premises. I have read this report, and I will return it where it belongs. I recommend the Government strongly to consider this matter and to give me a fair and square answer; and if they will promise to do all that their surveyor or engineer has recommended, and to improve this harbor and give the people of Prince Edward Island facilities for doing their commercial business and shipping their produce, they will mollify me a good deal, and I shall feel much better towards the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. PLATT. If Prince Edward Island has got through with the discussion, I would like to say a word or two. I was just going to suggest to the Government that if there was any hope of our getting away from here before the dog days, we had better do something for Prince Edward Island.

Mr. WELSH. Yes, you had.

Mr. PLATT. Certainly, if the members from that little Province cannot secure what they are asking at the hands of the Government, it will be no fault of theirs. I was very much gratified this afternoon when the First Minister accepted the proposition of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills.) There was not as much in his acceptance as I hoped when he came to explain the position which he took upon it and other questions in connection with it; but we are very much pleased to know that he has taken a position upon this question, at last, which must mean something, and I wish to analyse, for a moment, what must be the meaning of the hon. gentleman's position. If his acceptance of that proposition means anything at all, it must mean that he is willing to proclaim to this Parliament, and to the people of this country, that the charge that has been levelled against himself and his followers, of being guilty of political favoritism in the distribution of the public funds, if it has been true in the past, is not to be true in the future; in other words, he wishes to proclaim to this country that the different constituencies need not expect public patronage to be distributed amongst them simply because they send a supporter of the Government to Parliament. If his declaration means anything it means that, and if we can only get that much from the Prime Minister it will be a great achievement. The result of the First Minister's acknowledgment cannot be otherwise than beneficial to the country. In the first place it disarms those of his followers who have been in the habit of going through the country in the past, during bye-elections, and proclaiming that the only way in which the people could secure their share of the public patronage was by sending to Parliament a supporter of the Government. It is too late in the day for hon. gentlemen opposite to deny that that has been done. The history of every bye-election during the last several years has proved conclusively that the strongest argument that came from Ottawa, at any rate, if the election took place during a Session, was that public patronage to that constituency would depend upon whether the electors sent a supporter or an opponent of the Government to Parliament. Those who have had to run bye-elections during the last several years can fully corroborate my statement if necessary. The Premier's position to-day is a rebuke to those who have used this argument in the past, and it disarms those who may wish to use it in the future. The position taken by the First Minister, however, is somewhat weakened by his following it immediately with an endorsement of the assertions and statements made by a former Minister of Finance, and the present Minister of Customs. They simply leave the question in this position: that, in theory, the First Minister accepts the proposition of the member for Bothwell, but, in practice, he is bound hereafter, of course, to distribute the patronage in accordance with fair play, but he is to base his judgment as to what fair play is upon the opinion of his supporters in the counties; that is, that he is not to consult with members upon this side of the House, who, upon general policy, are opposed to the Government, but he is to frame his judgment upon the opinions received from his supporters in those counties that are so unfortunate as to be represented by opponents of the Government. All that weakens, of course, his acceptance of the proposition, but it does relieve members on this side of the House, to a large extent, from the accusation made against them in some of the constituencies, that they are powerless while at Ottawa, or at home, to get anything done for their county, or to have any influence whatever with the Government. The First Minister has relieved members of the Opposition from that charge, and has relieved us also from the necessity of urging on the floor of this House, as some hon. members do, the requirements of their particular counties, so far as public works are concerned. The First Minister has plainly told the Opposition, that the matter of patronage, as well as the matter of the general policy of the country, are subjects on which he cannot be expected to consult with them as freely as he does with members on his own side of the House. If the Government intend to take their information from their friends in the constituency, we are justified in throwing the responsibility entirely on the supporters of the Government in each particular constituency; and, so far as my own constituency is concerned, I have simply, then, to remind the Minister of Public Works of the necessity of constructing public buildings, or draining the harbor, not to urge him to do so; but he is to take his advice and form his opinion from what he hears from his particular friends in the county, and from the statements made by delegations largely composed of his own supporters as regards the necessity of harbor drainage. He need not take my opinion or listen to my advocacy of those claims; I only ask him to remember what his own friends have said on the question, and upon them rests the responsibility in regard to the matter. Do not let it be said that the fact that there was an Opposition member, a man without influence, who raised his voice as representing the constituency, constitute a reason why Picton harbor was not dredged, when it was simply because the hon. gentleman's own friends were not sufficiently influential to secure that much needed work. I will not detain the House by detailing the public works required in my own county, and I refrain largely for the reason I have already indicated. I feel somewhat relieved by what the First Minister has told us, that he is not in a position to consult us very largely in matters of interest to the country, or even on matters respecting our own constituencies. I might be able to agree with him in regard to the general policy of the Government. We do not expect to be consulted with regard to that general policy; but I think I am justified in holding this opinion, that their policy belong to themselves, they have a right to consult whom they please concerning it, but in the expenditure of public money, which stands on a different footing from the policy of the Government, and belongs as much to members of the Opposition and the people they represent as it does to members of the Government and their supporters—it is public money—they are as much bound to listen to members of the Opposition in regard to its distribution as they are bound to listen to their own supporters. They do not see fit to do it, however; the First Minister prefers not to do so. If that be the case, we may be as independent as he is, and say that we do not care very much whether we are consulted or not, and that if he is independent we can be equally independent with respect to the distribution of public money, and still more independent with respect to his policy, and the policy of the Government, and if he does not like to ask our support, advice and counsel, and is so very independent now, I hope it will last, and that in future when he gets in a tight place and there is a threatened revolt among his followers, he will remain on his own side of the House and fight it out, without asking from this side of the House counsel, advice and assistance.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I am very much pleased that the First Minister has seen his way to accept the resolution proposed by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills). I think this House and the country will have reason to congratulate themselves if the resolution arrived at by the First Minister should be followed in the selection of sites or places where public buildings are to be erected throughout the Dominion. One of the great difficulties and great scandals in connection with the administration of the Government here has been the way in which public money has been expended for the purpose of meeting party exigencies in the past. If the hon. gentleman adheres to this resolution he will prevent a tendency in that direction, he will prevent public money being expended for the purpose of buying support for the Government, and we may look upon this as being a step in the right direction. We will watch with a good deal of interest and pleasure the adhesion to this rule which the First Minister appears to have laid down. It would have been well had the First Minister, the Minister of Public Works, and the Government generally, adhered always to this well-established principle as to the expenditure of public money. If you take the records and examine those of the Department of Public Works, and confine your examination to public buildings erected since Confederation, you will find that public buildings have been erected where they were not absolutely required, and that other places which required public buildings in the public interest failed to get them erected there. In many instances they were erected before the elections in the different ridings, and the fact that public buildings were to be erected by the Government was held out as an inducement to the people to return supporters of the Government. This principle is one that should not be entertained by either party in this House. It is essential to our well-being that the principles of fair play should prevail, not only among the people but among representatives in this House. It should be understood that fair play should characterise the expenditure of public money, and it must be remembered that the money does not belong to the Government any more than to the Opposition; and if you take the returns you will find that, although we are in a minority in this House, we represent within a thousand votes as many people as do the Government. If we examine the return showing where public buildings have been erected we will find a state of things not very salutary or pleasant to those who are Canadians and who will regard anything like a stain on Canada with abhorrence. There has been an abrogation of principle on the part of the Administration in the expenditure of public money. We believe that money should be expended where the public interest demands it, and that that principle should be strictly maintained and carried out. For instance, I find in the return brought down last Session from the Public Works Department, that in Nova Scotia there was a post office building erected at Amherst costing $38,331.67; it is in the County of Cumberland, and the yearly revenue from that office is $6,819.20. This appropriation was made in 1883-84. For a post office at Antigonish $5,346.85 was appropriated in 1883-84, and the revenue of the post office there was $2,740.10. That constituency is represented by the Minister of Justice in this House. For a public building in Bathurst $14,074 was appropriated in 1883-84, for the building of the post office there. I find that that office is in the County of Victoria, N. S., and that the revenue from that office is $1,375.80. In the years 1881 and 1882, a post office was erected at New Glasgow, Pictou County, the revenue of which is $4,486.48. In North Sydney, C.B., in the year 1883, $25,769.80 were expended on a post office, the revenue from which is $2,346.95. At Windsor, in the County of Hants, in 1883 and 1884, an appropriation for building a post office was made, amounting to $32,347.29, and the revenue from this post office, last year, was $4,158.83. In the Province of New Brunswick, an appropriation for $29,863 was made for a post office at Bathurst, Gloucester County, and the revenue from which is $1,611.13. In Carleton, St. John's County, $14,121.64 were appropriated, in 1883 and 1884, for the building of a post office. At Dalhousie, Restigouche County, an appropriation of $2,069.06 was made for the building of a post office, and the revenue from it, this year, was $1,247.65. At Sussex, King's County, in 1881 and 1882, there was an appropriation made for a post office there, of $23,325.65, and the revenue from that office is $2,881.27 a year. In looking through the Province of Ontario, I find that in many small places, post offices and other public buildings have been erected, while other places of importance, great trade centres, have been neglected, and if you enquire into the cause, you can come to no other conclusion than that these large centres have been passed over because they did not send to this House supporters of the present Government. I find that for Amherstburg, in 1883-84, an appropriation of $34,570.33 was made for building a post office, the revenue from which was $2,000.30. An appropriation of $4,381.77 was made for the building of a post office in Brampton, in 1888, and the revenue from that was $5,025. For Cayuga, in the County of Haldimand, in 1888, an appropriation of $9,198.88 was made for the building of a post office, and the revenue from that office, last year, was $1,402.06. In Prescott, where the revenue from the office was $4,912, an appropriation was made of $6,906 for a post office. In Trenton, in 1886, $22,572 was appropriated for building a post office, the revenue from which was $5,187. I find instances of that kind throughout this Province, and in every one of these places where post offices have been built, and which gave only a small revenue, they have returned a member to support the present Government. In large centres of trade and population, where progress has been rapid, and where the towns have developed very rapidly, we find that they have not been aided or encouraged, because they did not return Government supporters into this House. In the town of Woodstock, in the County of Oxford, one of the most thriving towns of Ontario, no appropriation has been made by the Government, up to the time this return came down, for the building of a post office there, although the revenue from that town is $14,751.48. In the town of Ingersoll, situated in another riding of Oxford County, the revenue is $9,903, but there is no public building there. In the town of Waterloo, with a revenue of $4,148.68, no building has been erected there. In the town of Paris, with a revenue of $4,022.77, no building has been erected there. And it is the same with Picton, which gives a revenue of $5,506.60, and Seaforth, the revenue from which is $5,289.45, and Bowmanville, the revenue from which is $4,897.24. I would like to draw the attention of the House to the conduct of the Government which preceded the present Government, and I think that a comparison will show that the former Government, whatever sins they might have been guilty of, in the expenditure of money for public buildings, selected these places where it was in the public interest that public buildings should be erected. Take, for instance, the city of Kingston, Ontario. What did the Mackenzie Government do for that city? It was represented by the then leader of the Opposition, who is now the leader of the Government. In Kingston, in 1874-5 there were appropriations for military buildings and fortifications of $113,105.55; for a military college building, of $110,149.09; and for an addition to the penitentiary, of $147,417.78. The Government, having selected a place where they deemed it in the public interest that the money should be spent, expended it irrespective of the character of the representative. The Government also made large expenditures in the city of Toronto, the city of St. John, and in other centres, such as Guelph, St. Catharines, Brantford, Windsor, and other towns and cities east and west, consulting the public welfare and nothing else. Now, if this Government will adhere to the resolution which they appear to have arrived at to-night, of granting public money where it is demanded in the public interest, it will be a good day for this country, and a system of log rolling and bribing of constituencies will be blotted out. I think it is high time that the Government should awake to their responsibility in this matter, and, by the resolution we have before us to-night, abolish a system so pernicious in its character and so greatly calculated to destroy the independence of the members of this House. Before I sit down, I should like to say that I have a return here which I will hand to the reporter if there is no objection.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Read.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It is too long to read.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. What is it about?

Mr. LANDERKIN. It is a return which was brought down from the Public Works Department last Session, but which was not printed. The hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Desjardins) states that he will bring it before the Printing Committee with the view of having it printed, and therefore, I will not insist.

Mr. DALY. I would not have taken up the time of the House on this question were it not for the fact that in the estimates of this year, as well as in those of each year since 1887, there has appeared an appropriation for the Brandon Post Office. I believe the subject of that expenditure has been brought up to-night, and I desire to explain the reasons which actuated the hon. Minister of Public Works in granting the appropriation for it. When I went to that hon. gentleman in 1887 and requested him, if possible, to erect a post office and public building there, I had in my possession facts to show him, as I will show this House, that from the amount of revenue which was derived by the Post Office Department and other Departments of the Government at that point, the hon. Minister was perfectly justified in appropriating the money which he did for the erection of that building. At that time I was able to show to the Minister that the revenue of the post office at Brandon was exceeded by that of only fourteen post offices in the Province of Ontario, only three in the Province of Quebec, only one in the Province of Prince Edward Island, only one in the Province of British Columbia, and only two in the Province of Nova Scotia. I did not ask for a building merely to accommodate the post office, but also the other departments of the Government represented there. For instance, we had a land office, the revenue of which exceeded by $25,000 or $30,000 in that year the revenue of any other land office in the whole of Manitoba or the North-West Territories, and we had an Inland Revenue office and a Customs office. Under the circumstances, I felt perfectly justified in going to the Minister of Public Works and asking him, in the interest of the public, to erect a proper building for the accommodation of the people who had to do with those different departments. I pointed out that in the land office and the post office particularly, letters and other valuable articles might possibly be destroyed by fire if proper accommodation was not afforded; and, strange to say, within a few months afterwards the building in which the post office and land office were located was one night destroyed by fire, and valuable documents belonging to the Department of the Interior were destroyed. Three or four books were saved, but all the correspondence that had taken place with the Department for several years was destroyed, and the public were put to a considerable amount of inconvenience. If we had had a proper building, such as we are about to have, the letters and also the books and papers of the Departments would have been placed in a vault, and the destruction I speak of would not have occurred. As the hon. member for Queen's (P.E.I.) has to-day questioned the appropriation for the erection of this building at Brandon, it may surprise hon. gentlemen who have not looked at last year's report of the Postmaster General to learn that the revenue of Brandon post office for the last fiscal year amounted to $11,099.75, while the revenue of the post office at Charlottetown, the capital of Prince Edward Island, only amounted to $12,233.99, about $1,000 more. I do not know how old Charlottetown or Prince Edward Island is, but I know that Brandon is only nine years old, and yet to-day its revenue is only $1,000 less than the revenue of the Charlottetown post office. I do not take up as much of the time of this House as the hon. gentlemen from Prince Edward Island; but I claim that I was justified in asking the Minister of Public Works to erect the public building at Brandon. If hon. gentlemen see fit to examine the reports of the Department of Customs and the Department of the Interior, they will find that the revenue derived by those departments at Brandon is almost proportionate to the amount derived by the Post Office Department. Consequently, the Government are only doing what is right in erecting that building. Further, I find that the total revenue derived last year from the post offices in Manitoba and the North-West Territories amounted to $196,146.27, while the total revenue derived from the post offices of Prince Edward Island amounted to $34,304. There is a slight difference, as hon. gentlemen will acknowledge. I simply brought these facts before the House to show that if any exception is taken to the amount found in the Estimates for the building of a post office at Brandon, those facts which I have given fully justify the Minister of Public Works in undertaking to erect that building. The hon. gentleman who has just sat down made an unfair comparison between the appropriations of the present Government and that of the Government they succeeded, with reference to public buildings. He referred to the city of Kingston, and to the appropriations made for the building of the Military College there, and the improvement of the penitentiary. These are not fair comparisons. The penitentiary existed long before the Mackenzie Government took office, and those appropriations had to be made, and as for the Military College, they were justified in locating it there, and no matter where it was located the same expenditure would require to be made. I will not take further time of the House except to say that, so far as our little Province in the west is concerned, the only thing the Minister of Public Works has done towards erecting public buildings in that Province since 1887 has been to make this appropriation for the post office at Brandon. I would ask the hon. gentleman to seriously consider the immediate necessity and the importance of erecting an immigration building at Winnipeg. If there is anything more necessary than another for the accommodation of those people who come to our country to settle there, it is that they should have proper accommodation when they arrive; and I am sorry to see the hon. gentleman has not seen fit to go on with this building. I hope sincerely that during the coming year he will proceed with its construction, and afford that accommodation to foreigners and others who come to our shores which they are entitled to.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No doubt the hon. gentleman who has just spoken was justified in asking the Government to erect public buildings in the town of Brandon, but I cannot understand how the right hon. the First Minister could have stated that the present Government have been carrying out the spirit of the resolution moved by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) since they have been in power. I have taken several occasions during the last ten years to lay before the Government the receipts in connection with the post office and Customs department in Woodstock, and the necessity of erecting a public building there. The hon. the Minister of Public Works has had those figures brought to his notice almost annually for the past ten years, and yet nothing has been done. There is just this difference between my hon. friend, who has spoken on behalf of Brandon, and myself—and it is a difference which goes to strengthen the position of hon. members who have spoken on this side, that favoritism has been shown in this matter—that while during the past ten years I have brought to the notice of the Government the necessity of doing justice to the town of Woodstock, they have not seen fit to make any move to erect public buildings in that prosperous commercial and manufacturing centre, whereas, in the case of my hon. friend from Brandon they have taken steps to meet his demand. This would rather tend to prove the accusation against the Government of favoritism. It is not my intention now to delay the House, as the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) has given the figures to the House; but any hon. gentleman who wishes to inform himself on this matter can see by the figures that the Government have not in the past carried out the spirit of this resolution. I hope it is their intention to reform, and that they see the error of their ways; and I trust that in the future they will take into consideration the revenue from the post offices and Custom houses in the different towns, and, in expending public money, do so in a proper and just manner, and not lay themselves open, as they have done, to the accusation of being solely guided by partisan considerations. I am sorry to know that the figures do not bear out the statement of the right hon. the leader of the Government. They show that those large centres yielding large revenues—centres such, for instance, as the town of Woodstock—do not receive the attention which is given to comparatively insignificant places. Suppose, for instance, that a fire were to occur in Woodstock, such as the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) mentioned might occur in Brandon, there is no protection whatever in Woodstock for valuable papers, because no accommodation is furnished for preserving them, except that provided by private individuals. I think this system ought to be changed. It is one which is demoralising the country. It is no recommendation, as regards the administration of affairs by the present Government, that, as has been shown by the figures submitted to the House, the public moneys are expended for political reasons or favoritism, rather than to meet the wants of, and do justice to the different localities. I trust, if it is the intention of the Government to accept this proposal, that in the towns of Woodstock and Ingersoll, and several others I could mention, they will see that proper public buildings are erected. If this return which the Government have promised to have printed be circulated, the people will find that the revenue derived from the post office and Customs in the town of Woodstock, where there is no public building, is thousands of dollars, while only tens of dollars have been received in other places where public buildings have been erected. I sincerely hope it is the intention of the Government to change the policy which they have hitherto followed in the expenditure of public money in erecting public buildings.

Mr. WATSON. It was not my intention to take up the time of the House on this question, as I have already repeatedly called the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the importance of building a post office in the town of Portage la Prairie, but as I see the hon. gentleman taking notes of the complaints of different members, and as the right hon. the First Minister has given his approval of the resolution of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), I hope the hon. the Minister of Public Works will take a note of the claims of Portage la Prairie. That is a town of some considerable importance, containing about three thousand inhabitants, and, according to last year's returns, the receipts from the post office there amounted to $6,927.06. It is also necessary that a building should be erected there, not only for the post office, but the Custom house, as at present the only accommodation the Custom house officer has is in the end of the freight shed of the Canadian Pacific Railway. There is also an Inland Revenue officer there who requires accommodation. In a great many instances, public buildings have been erected in places which have far less claims than the town I speak of. We find that post offices which have cost thousands of dollars have been erected in towns where the post office revenue did not exceed a thousand dollars a year. That is not right, and if it were in order to move an amendment to the resolution now before the House, I should feel inclined to propose one, to the effect that public buildings should not be erected out of public money until the revenues exceeded a certain amount. That would be a safeguard against useless expenditure. A town like Woodstock, where the receipts are something over $14,000 a year, ought to have a post office. Speaking of public buildings, it is very necessary that at Portage la Prairie a drill shed should be built, because that town is the headquarters of the 95th Battalion, and the Minister of Militia knows the value of keeping that battalion together. I might also state, following the line of the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly), that the erection of an immigration shed in Winnipeg is a matter of immediate necessity. There are a large number of immigrants coming there from foreign countries who have to stop in Winnipeg or at some place in the Province for some time, and there should be a good public building erected to receive those immigrants, whereas there is now little or no accommodation. Last year, I was in hopes that the Minister of Public Works, having put a sum in the Estimates for this purpose, would have proceeded with the erection of the buildings, but for some reason which I cannot understand and no one in the west can understand, those buildings have not been proceeded with. I hope the Minister of Public Works will dot these items down in his note book, and that we may see these buildings erected in the near future.

Mr. SCARTH. I am very much obliged to my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Watson) for taking Winnipeg under his protection as well as Portage la Prairie.

Mr. WATSON. I referred to the interests of the whole Province.

Mr. SCARTH. I thought he might have left Winnipeg to me. The question which the hon. gentleman refers to shows that the Government have not been in the habit of giving their supporters everything and their opponents nothing. I have been a strong supporter of the Government ever since I have been in the House, and I have pressed them to erect these immigrant sheds at Winnipeg. During this Session I have still been pressing them, and I hope that, with the influence of my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Watson) and myself combined, they will see that Conservatives and Reformers are unanimous in regard to this matter, and that we shall very soon have the immigrant sheds erected in Winnipeg.

Mr. CASEY. In regard to this question of the distribution of public works and public buildings, I wish to refer to a matter which I have more than once brought to the attention of the Minister of Public Works. In my constituency there is the town of Ridgetown, which is a place of considerable population, rapidly growing, and the centre of a large and prosperous district, in which there ought to be constructed a post office and Government buildings. Ridgetown is a sub-port of entry, and there should be a Government building there containing the Custom house and post office. I come to that conclusion from the fact that similar buildings are being erected at smaller places which are not the centre of important districts, such as Amherstburg, Aylmer, P.Q., Cayuga, in the celebrated County of Haldimand, and other places of much less importance. If, as we must believe after the remarks of the right hon. the Premier this afternoon, it is the policy of the Government to construct public buildings where they are needed, without regard to the political complexion of the constituency, then the claims of Ridgetown become irresistibly strong. I do not desire to detain the House, but I content myself with entering a protest against the delay of the Government in carrying out the intentions which they must have if the statements made by them this afternoon are correct.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Have they applied for a building?

Mr. CASEY. I am not aware that any petition has been sent in asking for this building, or that any has been sent in in the other cases to which I have referred. As to Cayuga, I do not think the application came from the constituency, but from the member, or rather the would-be member for the constituency, and I think the buildings were constructed there in order to further his interests in the numerous contests he has had to undergo. I do not know whether petitions were sent in from Amherstburg, Aylmer, P.Q., and the other places to which I have referred. But I do not think that the Government should wait for applications when they know that an important place has a population which would justify the construction of public buildings. I think, if the official records would justify it, the Government should go on and construct those buildings. I am not prepared this evening to give the figures as to the collections at Ridgetown. I have given them before, and I know that they are considerably in excess of the amount collected at other places where buildings have been constructed. I now call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the matter, with the full confidence that he will have the figures submitted to him, and that, if he is satisfied that Ridgetown is a place of more importance than those in which buildings have been erected, he will put an amount in the Supplementary Estimates for this year, or in the Estimates for next year, for that purpose.

Mr. SCARTH.

Mr. EISENHAUER. I was glad to hear the First Minister state that he intended to vote for this motion, and that, if the public moneys were not distributed properly or fairly to both parties, it was from want of information. I would, however, remind the hon. gentleman that this cannot be the case in regard to the county which I represent, as the Government purchased a site there for the building some years ago. I would remind the hon. gentleman of what the good book tells us of those who, having put their hand to the plough, and who look back. The Government profess to be progressive, but in the matter of erecting a public building in the town of Lunenburg they have not moved forward, but have remained just where they were in 1886.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I find that hon. members are making applications for buildings in their constituencies, and I think I might call attention to the town of Blenheim, in the County of Kent, which I represent. It is an important centre, with good railway facilities and it is not in the position of some others that have been referred to, because it has made an application. The present post office there is altogether too small for the accommodation of the people, and an application was made some time ago for better facilities for handling the mails. The revenue is nearly $3,000 a year, so I think it is entitled to some consideration from the Government. When we remember that other places with revenues ranging from $1,000 to $1,200 and $1,400 a year, have been granted large post office buildings, it is surely only right that an important town like Blenheim should have better post office facilities, and I hope the Minister of Public Works will take a note of it, and that, if it be possible, he will bring down an item in the Supplementary Estimates this year. I would also call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the great necessity of removing the bar at the mouth of the River Thames. He has already given it his attention, and has promised to go on with the work. I trust he will not forget that this will be of great importance, I can assure him that it is of the utmost importance, to the people of that part of the country, that it should be completed at an early day. Now that steamers are navigating that river, the people are anxious to know what is going to be done, so that they can make their arrangements accordingly. Unless the bar is removed, it will be useless for them to attempt navigation. The work was commenced last year and partially completed, but on account of the money voted having run out, the work was not completed; but I trust a further vote will be found in the Supplementary Estimates.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I was very much pleased to hear the hon. member for Bothwell read that motion when the Finance Minister moved the House into Committee of Supply, because the hon. gentleman recognised at once the policy that had been followed for years past by us. That policy, I am glad to say, is endorsed by hon. gentlemen opposite. Every one of the hon. gentlemen who have spoken on this subject, has admitted that this was a good motion, and that the policy was a proper one. I am glad of it, because we are of the same opinion on both sides of the House, in so far as the policy of the Government is concerned, relating to public works.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Why don't you carry it out, then?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is the principle we have adopted from the beginning, and in practice we have followed it out. The motion of the hon. member for Bothwell is to this effect:

"In the expenditure of public money, the public interest and not party favoritism should control—"
Exactly what we have done.

"And in the choice of places for the erection of public buildings and for Post Office, Custom House, and Inland Revenue purposes, regard should be had to the amount of money collected and to the public business done."

We have done that, but we have not only looked to these two points; we have looked to something else. We have not only looked to the amount collected, to the public business done at any place. That does not show the whole case. Sometimes a post office does not return a very large amount, but it may be a distributing office, a place where a great many mails arrive, and from which a great number of mails may be sent to other places. The revenue may be small at that place, and still a great amount of business may be done there, and, therefore, that point is to be considered as well.

Mr. CASEY. Cayuga, for example.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If you please, allow me to proceed. I listened with the greatest patience possible to hon. gentlemen opposite, and did not interrupt them. The hon. member for Bothwell called the attention of the Government to what Sir Charles Tupper had said; and as the First Minister stated in reply, the principle laid down by Sir Charles Tupper, and by the Minister of Customs at that time, is exactly the principle that forms the basis of our action, and has formed the basis of our action until now. Some hon. gentlemen were very independent this evening. They would not lower themselves to go to a Minister of the Crown and lay their case before him. Oh, no; they never do that; they never have done that; they speak from their places. Nevertheless, if my memory does not fail me, I have seen a number of them coming to me and laying their case before me. I did not find they were lowering themselves in coming to a Minister of the Crown. I did not feel that they were lowering themselves when they came and laid their case and their reasons before my colleagues. But hon. gentlemen should be fair—francs et sans dol—I beg pardon; I forgot I was speaking English. When they come to a Minister of the Crown, they should not afterwards say to this House that they never lowered themselves to do so, that they are too independent; they want no favors. What do they want? They say they want justice. That reminds me of a story of an old contractor who is now dead. He came to me one day, years ago, with a claim, and after laying his claim before me and explaining the whole thing, I said to him: "Sir, you will have justice." He answered: "Thank you for your justice. It is not justice I want, it is money." Well hon. gentlemen say it is justice they want, but we know perfectly well it is money they want—not for themselves personally, I know. Well, hon. gentlemen have tried to show that in the selection of places where public buildings were erected at different times, the Government have selected only the counties that were represented by ministerial members. It happened, no doubt, that a number of counties represented by ministerial members were favored in that way, because public buildings were required there. Their case was laid before the Government, the Government looked into the matter and considered the question of revenue, but, as I showed just now, the amount of revenue was not the only question considered when a post office was required. An hon. gentleman opposite mentioned a case just now where we had erected a building at a cost of $25,000, and where the revenue from the post office had been so much. The building was not alone for a post office, but it was also for a Custom house and Inland Revenue office. I will take now some of the cases mentioned by hon. gentlemen. For example, one hon. gentleman spoke of Bathurst, and he gave us the revenue of the post office, but he never spoke of the revenue from the Custom house, increasing that amount by over $6,000. Then an hon. gentleman spoke of Dalhousie, and gave us the revenue of the post office; but he forgot that the revenue from Customs increased that amount by $7,492. There were a number of others, with which I will not trouble the House this evening. The hon. gentleman insisted very much that it was only favored counties where our friends were elected, in which we erected public buildings. That is not so, and I will give some instances to the contrary. Last year and this year again, we voted a sum of money for a post office and Custom house at St. Hyacinthe. St. Hyacinthe is represented by an hon. member who constantly votes against the Government. But I do not find fault with him for that, I have no doubt he votes according to his convictions. The hon. gentleman is opposed to us and is free and independent to vote against us. That will not prevent the Government voting money for a post office and Custom house there. We purchased the land last year, and now we are placing an amount in the Estimates to erect the building. The hon. gentleman spoke of Laprairie. That town is represented by an hon. member who votes against the Government constantly, for which purpose he was sent here by the electors. But that did not prevent the Government expending the amount necessary to erect a public building there.

Mr. LANDERKIN. When was he elected?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. He was elected at his election. Then there is the town of Orillia. I do not think that is in a county represented by an hon. member sitting on this side of the House, but it is represented by an hon. member who sits behind the mover of this resolution and always votes against the Government. That did not prevent the Government placing a sum in the Estimates last year and this year to erect a building there. I want hon. gentlemen to quote these facts, and when they repeat their speeches to their electors, I trust they will incorporate a part of my speech in them, and admit that when they delivered those speeches in the House they were not fully supplied with data, but that the Minister of Public Works subsequently furnished the information. Next take the St. John Dominion building. We did not forget that the hon. gentleman representing that constituency, who, I think, should sit on this side of the House, votes against the Government. Nevertheless, we treated that constituency as well as we treat one represented by a Government supporter. Take the Negro Point breakwater. Did we refuse a grant to that? The hon. gentleman told me the other day across the floor that a break had occurred in that work. I thanked him for the information, which had not reached my ears—and I will take care that the work is placed in proper repair. Next comes the Rimouski pier. That is not in a county represented by an hon. member supporting the Dominion Government. We decided, however, to expend a large sum to place the pier in proper order. A contract has been given, and the contract will go on as soon as possible. Next, the pier at St. Laurent, Island of Orleans, in the constituency of Montmorency, which is represented by an hon. gentleman on the other side of the House. Nevertheless we place a sum in the estimates for that pier. Longueuil pier is situated in another county represented by an hon. gentleman opposite. Boucherville pier is also in a county represented by an hon. gentleman who sits on one of the front benches opposite. In a constituency represented by an hon. gentleman opposite, there is a pier built by the Government of the Province of Quebec, and it is a public pier. We have voted money year after year to place that pier in order. Kincardine and Penetanguishene are other examples, and those towns are not in counties represented by hon. members sitting on this side of the House. I wish these facts to be reported and to be circulated throughout the country so that the imputation cast upon us by hon. gentlemen opposite, that we show favoritism in such a way as to do nothing for counties represented by hon. gentlemen opposite may be refuted. Of course, the hon. gentlemen may be sorry that we do not do that work for them; but we do it for the country, for the counties they represent and for the people, because we believe it should be carried out. I should be glad if I could say that we did it for hon. gentlemen opposite, but they have no confidence in us, and we have no confidence in them. The leader of the Opposition said it was never too late to repent, and that remark was uttered in reply to the hon. First Minister. He has forgotten that that was our principle, that we had followed that principle since we were in office, and if he had remembered that fact it would not be necessary that he should say it was never too late to repent. That statement might apply to his own side of the House. But the hon. gentleman said, what about the practice? I have shown what the practice has been, and that practice we intend to continue, because we know that the action of the Government since we came back into office—I will not speak before that time—has been in accordance with that principle. The hon. gentleman also said that when the elections came on that promises of the Government to erect public buildings influenced the votes. It may be so. I wish to say to the hon. member for Richmond, Nova Scotia, that when he spoke of the harbor breakwater at L'Ardoise he said it had been under the consideration of the Government for a long time. That is true, but he evidently was not aware of the true facts of the case. In 1883, $5,000 were appropriated for repairing the breakwater at L'Ardoise, Richmond County, Nova Scotia, but before the tenders were advertised it was reported that a large amount of damage had been done during a gale, and, therefore, tenders were not invited. That is the position in which the matter stands. The estimated cost of repairing the breakwater according to the report of my engineer was $20,000. That matter is still receiving my attention. My attention was further called to the works a month or so ago, and I have given instructions to have the matter further investigated in order to ascertain whether the repairs could be made for a lower sum than $20,000. The hon. gentleman also spoke of Arichat, and said we had purchased a site for a public building there for $1,000, and he could not understand why we had not erected a building on the site purchased. The hon. gentleman is not altogether ignorant in regard to the matter. If he had endeavored to recollect the circumstances, he would remember that although we bought that site, there were buildings on it, and we had those buildings repaired, and used them as a post office, and I think it will do for some years yet. That was the reason we did not expend money, in the way suggested by the hon. gentleman. The senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) also affirmed that we had expended money only in ministerial counties. He must have seen from my statement that he is mistaken, and no doubt he will be most happy to correct his error in this instance. The hon. gentleman spoke of Antigonish and of a building being erected, and of money being expended there. And of course that was all expended, according to the hon. gentleman, in the county represented by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice. No doubt money has been spent in that county, since it has been represented by the Minister of Justice; but if the hon. gentleman will look at the Public Accounts, he will find that between $10,000 and $15,000 were expended in that county while it was represented by Mr. McIsaac, who certainly was not a friend of the Government. The hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives) and the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) complain that they cannot have some necessary works in their constituencies. The hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe said, that he could get no public building, though his county is more important than the County of Richmond, N. S. I think so, too. Richmond is a thriving town, and a very important place, and I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman, using his well known energy, will convince the Government that something ought to be done at that place. My friend the member for Assiniboia says he cannot obtain a public building for Moose Jaw. I am sure that if he uses for some time longer, that eloquence of his, and that power of persuasion for which he is remarkable, Moose Jaw may find itself ornamented by a public building. Of course, that has to be decided by my colleagues as well as myself. I must say to my right hon. friend the First Minister, that his statement in accepting that notion of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has brought down upon me an avalanche of demands for public buildings, wharves, piers, and I do not know what else besides.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. And fortifications.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; and fortifications, as the hon. Minister of Militia suggests.

After the hon. member for King's (P.E.I.) had given me the names of six places in which he wanted public works, he ended up by saying: "And a number of harbors of refuge besides." I have no doubt that, if we put all these requests together, we will find that it will cost a very respectable amount to satisfy him. I thank the hon. gentlemen who have made me the recipient of their complaints, and thrown all the responsibility on my shoulders.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They are broad.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. As the hon. First Minister says, they are broad; but, perhaps, hon. gentlemen would be kind enough to suppose that my colleagues have a little share of the responsibility also. The hon. member for Prince (Mr. Perry) in repeating his complaints, for the purpose, no doubt, of engrafting them on my mind, wound up by saying that, after using all the expressions which the English language placed at his command, he really could not find an English word to express what he thought of the Government. Why did not the hon. gentleman pick out one of the French words that he used in his infancy, and it might have helped him out of his difficulty? If he did so, I have no doubt but that he would be understood by some of us, at all events. The hon. gentleman spoke of every cove, harbor, wharf, and creek that he could think of. He knows that we are building a pier at Cape Tormentine, and that to have a ferry between the New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island side, we must have a pier on both sides. Let him have a little patience; Cape Tormentine is being built, and I have no doubt that Cape Traverse will be looked after, too. The hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), in his kindness of heart, gave us absolution for the past. How kind he is! I am sure that the hon. gentleman must have thought that he required some absolution himself. If he reflects a little on what he has done and said in these debates, about the public works of the country, perhaps he may think that a little absolution will not do him any harm. He may be sure that if he requires only me to give him absolution, he will have it. The hon. gentleman said that after the acceptance of the resolution of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), he is waiting for the Supplementary Estimates. If he had done that in the beginning, perhaps he would have avoided a great many of his speeches, and perhaps he would find, at last, that he had not so strong a ground to make complaints as he thinks he had. The hon. gentleman says that the patronage is in the hands of the Government. No doubt it is, and where else would it be? He says, we should have public buildings in every part of the Dominion, and that every part of the Dominion should have fair play. That is what we have been doing all the time; that is what we are doing now, and that is what we will find in the Supplementary Estimates. We intend treating every part of the Dominion fairly, but we cannot do everything in one year. He must remember that London was not built in a day or a year. Let him have a little patience, and he may be sure that during the next five years, we will give him a good many buildings.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) We may have something to say to that ourselves.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is to be seen. The hon. gentleman was kind enough to admit that we had done justice to the Island by providing an excellent boat. It cannot be better, because the hon. gentleman has no complaint to make of it. That is a relief to me at any rate. He may now put all his complaints on my shoulders, as he will not have any to make against the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I will not make any against you if you do as well.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman says that the supporters of the Government in the Island have themselves complained; he says they complain of the remuneration of the officials on the Island. Why did he mention that, when immediately after he himself admitted that those complaints were not founded in fact—that the officials there should not be remunerated as they are, for example, in Ontario and Quebec, where the population is larger, where the business is much greater, and so on. He did that only to show that there were complaints. Well, we know that the hon. gentleman, and perhaps the other five members from the Island, complain. I am very sorry that they do complain; we do not want them to complain; we want Prince Edward Island to have justice, as well as all the other Provinces. But the way to have justice is not to refuse to acknowledge the good we do; and if there is something that is really required, let it be put before the House, though not as it was three or four days ago, in the way of recrimination and hard words, and insults poured on my head. But, I must say, that the tone to-day is improved very much, and I must congratulate hon. gentlemen on a change of language. The hon. gentleman says that common laborers receive less in the Island than they do at Moncton. That may be. I have no doubt the hon. gentleman will find that laborers in certain parts of Ontario or Quebec do not receive as much as they would, for example, in Toronto, Montreal, Quebec, Ottawa, or other large towns; but the laborers know perfectly well what they are about. If they do not receive sufficient pay for their work, they go elsewhere; if they accept the pay, it is because they consider it sufficient for the work they give. The hon. gentleman spoke of a number of works which he thinks should be attended to. I took a note of all those mentioned by him and other hon. gentlemen; I thought it was a proper thing to do. The hon. gentleman spoke of the harbor of New London, which he says will cost $3,500 more. He mentioned Tracadie, but did not tell us what the work there would cost. The harbor of Pinette was mentioned by him and another hon. gentleman; that will cost $5,500. Wood Island was also mentioned by two hon. gentlemen; that would require a further expenditure of $10,000. To hear the hon. gentleman mentioning all these works, one would have thought they would require a very small amount of money, and in speaking of them he had that air of innocence which he attributed to the Minister on this side. Well, I do not see that Minister, but I see the hon. gentleman, and I think he was really describing himself when he uttered those words. Other hon. gentlemen spoke. The hon. member for Prince Edward (Mr. Platt) stated his case. I had the pleasure of seeing that hon. gentleman at my public office on deputations, and I think he had no reason to complain of the way he was received. At all events, that hon. gentleman thought he should come and lay his case before the Minister of Public Works. Then, the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) mentioned a number of places where we had erected public buildings, and told us the revenue received from those places. He mentioned, for example, Bathurst, New Glasgow, North Sydney, Carleton, Dalhousie, Windsor, Prescott, Cayuga, Amherstburg, Brampton, and Trenton. Well, as I showed just now, a number of these buildings were not erected on account of the post office revenue alone, but also on account of the Customs and Inland Revenue. All these should have been put together to ascertain the revenue from those places, and it would have been fair to show that the revenue was not only $2,700, but in several cases $6,000 or $8,000 or $10,000. The hon. gentleman, in order to show how the preceding Government had acted, spoke of Kingston, Ontario, among other places. We know perfectly well that the money voted for improvements at Kingston had only one object, and it was voted just at the proper time. It was just to affect the election of my hon. friend the First Minister, and it was so well expended that it did it. Nevertheless, it was money lost, because my hon. friend found a seat immediately in another county, and he would have found ten if necessary, and notwithstanding that attempt, he has been here for the last twelve years. The hon. gentleman said the expenditure was for the good of the country, but he missed the mark.

Mr. LANDERKIN. We will have him over here very soon.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Hon. gentlemen said that in 1882 and 1887, but they were not good prophets, and I do not think their power of prophecy has increased since then. The hon. gentleman spoke also of the immigration building at Winnipeg; so did the hon. member for Marquette; and so did the hon. member for Winnipeg. The hon. member for Winnipeg, whose duty it is to look after his constituency, has not ceased to ask for that building, and that is the reason why the attention of the Government was called specially to that work, and we have determined to have that building erected; we know that Winnipeg is a centre for the distribution of immigrants, and the hon. gentleman must have seen that item in the Estimates. The hon. member for Prince, P. E. I. (Mr. Perry), spoke of three places—Tignish, Kensington, and Alberton—which he thought, on account of the revenue they produced, and in accordance with the principle we have acted upon for the last twelve years, should have public buildings. What do we find? We find that Tignish has a total collection, by the hon. gentleman's own showing, of $668, Kensington, $571, and Alberton, $1,054; and when you deduct from that the expenditure, you find in the one case, $416; in the second case, $298, and in the third case, $581. These are the models that the hon. gentleman wishes us to follow when placing public works! We will take a note of that, as it may be useful in time to come. I have answered in as few words as I could the remarks made by the hon. gentlemen. If it were not so late, I would continue my remarks; but I have said enough to show to hon. gentlemen that they are mistaken when they say that our policy is simply to give public buildings and works to the constituencies represented by members on this side. We have done otherwise; we are giving public buildings and other works to counties represented by hon. gentlemen opposite. We try to do justice to all. That was our intention in the past; it is our intention now, and it will be our intention in the future.

Mr. HESSON. I am very glad to hear the hon. Minister's remarks with reference to the expenditure in the different counties, represented by gentlemen on both sides of the House. I can myself bear testimony to the fact that I have not been able to bring influence upon the hon. gentleman with reference to two places—one the sister town adjoining my own county, the town of Woodstock. I am sorry the hon. the Minister did not refer to that, in reply to what had been said by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Sutherland), who spoke so ably with reference to the erection of a public building in that town. I regret that the hon. Minister did not refer to that town, and I presume he omitted to make a note of it, and omitted it unwittingly. This question was brought to the attention of the House before, and I then took the opportunity of stating that I thought that Woodstock ought to be considered in the erection of public buildings. I was led to make these remarks from the kind attention bestowed on my riding by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), who referred to the large, important town of Listowel, where the revenue from the post office alone is $4,380. It is a town which has grown very rapidly indeed, and where there are large collections from Custom and Excise, as well as from the post office. I have been endeavoring for some time past, in a quiet way, and not by pressure in the House, to direct the Government to the necessity of erecting a public building there, and I trust the Minister of Public Works will see his way to do so.

Mr. McMULLEN. I simply desire to make a few remarks in reply to the Minister of Public Works. The hon. gentleman has drawn the attention of the House to some cases in which, he said, post offices were erected, not altogether because of the amount of revenue from postal service, but because of the revenue from Customs and Inland Revenue as well. I would like to ask him how it is that he did not name such places as Joliette, in the Province of Quebec? Is there any revenue collected there from Customs or Inland Revenue? Not a cent. He referred to the erection of a post office there, because that was a constituency represented by an opponent of the Government, and he said the Government had the right to take the credit for being so generous as to grant a post office to that county. What is the fact? The fact is that, in order to try and keep that county from being represented by my hon. friend (Mr. Neveu), the Government made an arrangement to erect a post office here when Mr. Guilbault was its member. They went so far as to buy the ground and let the contract, and then they dared not back out. What has the hon. gentleman to say with regard to Aylmer, Quebec, where there is no Customs, or Inland Revenue. Why did they erect a post office there, when the revenue is only $1,345? The hon.

the Minister of Public Works wanted to leave the impression on the House that he was not guided merely by the receipts of the post office service, but that he took into consideration the receipts from the Customs and the Inland Revenue, and he mentioned two cases. But he did not give us the case of St. Henri in Quebec. There is no revenue from Customs or Excise there—not one cent; and the postal revenue is only $1,289.69. Yet the hon. gentleman leaves a place like Woodstock, which has a postal revenue of $14,000, without a post office, and he leaves a place like Listowel, which has a revenue of $4,500, without a post office. He professes to say that the expenditure is not for political services. Sir, it is for nothing else. It is plain on the face of it that it is for political services. The fact of the matter is that the Public Works Department, as regards the erection of public buildings, for the last ten years, has been nothing short of a political slopshop for party purposes. In every case where the Minister of Public Works thought it would bring support to the Tory party, he put up a building. Take St. Jérôme. How much Customs and Inland Revenue was collected there? Not one cent. Why did the hon. gentleman not mention St. Jérôme? That would not have suited his argument. There is only $1,299.78 collected there from the postal service, and not a farthing for Customs and Inland Revenue. Take Lachine. How much is collected there for Customs and Inland Revenue? Those places are all in the hon. gentleman's own Province, and not one cent is collected in any one of them, for Customs or Inland Revenue. The hon. gentleman has said that several parties had asked him to erect public buildings, and he had seriously considered their applications, but I defy him to name one instance to-night in which a Reform constituency, represented by a Reform member in this House, made an application for a public building, such as a post office, and in which he acceded to the application. Not one single instance. I dare him to name one. Not in one single case have they erected a public building unless they saw that it would bring political support to the party of which the hon. gentleman is one of the prominent leaders. He gave an instance of a contractor who applied to him and said that what he wanted was not justice, but money, and he said that we wanted post offices, whether just or unjust. I think the hon. gentleman has dealt very generously with contractors, and, if I am rightly informed, the contractors have dealt very generously with him. Generosity on the one side has induced generosity on the other. I brought this matter before the House on a previous occasion, and I say now that some principle should be laid down whereby the Government would be confined to the construction of public buildings where they were absolutely necessary, and that the places that merited the erection of those buildings best, by the amount of revenue which they contributed to the funds of the Dominion, should be first considered, instead of having these buildings peddled round to one place and the other in order to try to get some political support or to please political friends. This is not fair. For ten years past we have had that system pursued, and the Minister of Public Works has been the chief instrument in the hands of the Tory party to carry it out. Still, he has the face to rise here and say that he has been so generous and has been trying to be so honest, and has been following out the principle which we now say should be adopted. There ought to be a model post office and custom house building of reasonable cost prepared, and, wherever it is necessary to erect a building, that model should be followed, the contract should be let by public tender, and not a farthing of extras should be allowed. Take the case of Napanee. There was a contract for a post office building for $23,000. By adding the extras to it, it has now cost $37,404. I would like to give the House an idea of these extras. In regard to the paving in front of this building, it cost to prepare the ground for the pavement, $523, and it cost $1,500 for the pavement itself—$2,000 for a pavement in front of a country post office. This is absurd and wasteful extravagance. Then they thought the building was not quite right yet, and, in order to complete it they decided to chisel off the corners and dress them, $893 was expended. I say it is a disgrace to the Department of Public Works and to the Government, that the public money should be squandered in this way. A model office should be designed and, wherever it is necessary to erect a building, that should be the model and tenders should be asked, the whole work should be let to one man, he should be kept closely to the terms of its contract, and should not get a cent more. It is preposterous to think that over $13,000 are paid for extras on the construction of a post office and Custom house in a place like Napanee. It is disgraceful that these amounts should be expended in order to satisfy those who are sucking round in order to get a little pap. One man is appointed as clerk of works, and another is appointed to inspect the clerk of works. Any one who will take that account for Napanee—and it is, in the hands of the Public Accounts Committee now—and will go over the extras which are allowed in connection with that building, will come to the conclusion that gross extravagance and recklessness characterises the action of the Government in these matters, and that the expenditure is made altogether for political purposes. I did not intend to detain the House to-night, but, when I listened to the barefaced speech of the Minister of Public Works to-night, I could not resist the opportunity of replying to his insinuation as to the honesty which characterised the course of the Government.

Amendment of Mr. Mills (Bothwell) agreed to, and main motion, as amended, agreed to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that this House do, immediately, resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I desire to bring before the House a matter which I have already referred to. It will be remembered, that this afternoon I asked a question of the Postmaster General, which I had taken from the organ of the Book, News and Stationery Associations of Canada. It had made certain statements, and I asked the Postmaster General if they were correct. These statements were in regard to the postage charged on English periodicals sent by dealers in Canada. The Postmaster General stated that the organ was misinformed. Since that I have received a telegram from Toronto, which I will read to the House :

"Article in Book and Stationery organ regarding postage on periodicals correct in every particular. Have seen Bain, Hart, Winnifith, Allan and other leading booksellers here. All say they are paying postage on English magazines. Clause 5, under third class matter in Postal Guide, does not cover the point. Magazines are brought to Canada by freight, and we cannot conscientiously mark them re-mailed unless received by mail at double present expense. Have sent copy of this to Postmaster General.

"J. McLEAN, Secretary Treasurer
"Ontario Booksellers Ass'n."

I thought I would read this telegram so that the Postmaster General may have an opportunity of reconciling his statement with that of the dealers in these periodicals. I gave him notice that I would mention the matter, and he is here and can give any explanation if he sees fit.

Mr. HAGGART. My statement this afternoon was strictly correct. If you read the question put by the hon. gentleman, you will see that he asked in reference to the cost of mailing the English periodicals named for one year from Toronto and from Buffalo. What I stated in my answer was that any periodical that had been sent from the old country to this country by mail to any news agent or vendor, being afterwards re-sent to any subscriber in this country was sent free. The hon. gentleman has quoted a telegram from the news-vendors in Toronto from which it is inferred that they get their newspapers or these periodicals by other means than by the post office, and then they expect them to be sent free. The question which was put to me, and the statement in the paper, are entirely divergent from that. You will find, if you read it, that the inference to be drawn is that they receive their papers from the old country by mail, and then these being re-sent to subscribers, they have to pay certain rates. I stated that parties who get their newspapers from the old country by mail re-send them to all their subscribers free.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The Postmaster General has not apprehended the question that I put to him and of which I gave notice. The question is in the following words:—

"The cost of mailing one copy each of the following English periodicals for one year from Toronto and from Buffalo is as follows:—"

I did not say re-mailed; I did not ask about re-mailing. The Postmaster General apparently has not understood the question, and has not answered the question, but he has answered a question that I did not ask.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman must see that the cost of mailing a British newspaper would be the same as our own periodicals, and that we could not send them if they had not come through the mail from the publisher to the vendors. We cannot send them on any different terms from what we send our own periodicals.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I did not ask for a statement of re-mailing, I only asked how they went: whether the author of this newspaper had been misinformed or not? It appears he has not been misinformed, and that the Minister misapprehends the question.

Mr. EDGAR. The question that has been raised by my hon. friend is important. It does seem from the statement made here, at any rate, that the cost of mailing English magazines from Toronto is just six times as much as the cost of mailing the same English papers from Buffalo. That, surely, is a matter worthy of consideration. What the Postmaster General has said does not answer that at all, and does not show any good reason for it. He does not deny that that anomaly exists, and he has not given any good reason, that I have heard, why it should continue to exist.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not understand the hon. gentleman. Does he mean to say that a cent, or whatever it may be for three or four ounces, is too much for periodicals that are re-sent through the post office? I am only following out the law.

Mr. EDGAR. Perhaps he is following out the law, but I venture the suggestion that the law is an improper one that gives people an opportunity of sending from Buffalo for half a cent what costs twelve cents to send from Toronto. It is discriminating heavily against our own newsdealers in this country, and discriminating grossly in favor of newsdealers on the other side of the line; and surely that is not the National Policy.

Mr. HAGGART. No; you do not understand. The newsdealer who gets a periodical from the old country to Buffalo or New York, pays the mail across from London to New York, and, besides that, he pays the postage. If they be mailed from the old country to Toronto or Montreal, he pays no postage in this country; therefore, it is cheaper in this country than in the other.

Mr. EDGAR. The Buffalo man did not pay the mail any more than our man.

Mr. WALDIE. The Postmaster General is mistaken as to the course of the dealers. The dealers in Buffalo, get their periodicals from the old country by express, in just the same way as our dealers in this country. I am compelled to say, that our postage rates are a great deal too high, and discriminate against the dealers of this country.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Intercolonial Railway..... $187,100

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Increased accommodation at Halifax, $150,000—Perhaps the hon. gentleman would give us some information as to what course the Government intend to pursue with reference to the expenditure of this sum. It has been in the Estimates now for some time, and when the office was under the charge of the late Minister of Railways he promised, on several occasions, that that money should be expended in some way, either in the acquisition of land opposite the present deep water terminus, or in carrying the railway down along the wharf. There are two ways of spending that money, and I think the general impression in Halifax is rather in favor of having the road extended down along the wharf. The present deep water terminus has not much sea accommodation and if the road was extended along the wharves it would thus open the whole harbor of the city for the use of the railway, and would also give them the use of all the private stores along the line. I hope the Government will now deal with this matter promptly, because it has been standing over three or four years. The matter is of great importance, and the people are regarding it with great interest. The amount has been there so long and the people have been so anxiously watching what course the Government were going to pursue, that I hope that the hon. gentleman will be able to give us some indication of the intentions of the Government.

Mr. KENNY. The item has stood since 1887, as my hon. colleague has stated, and the late Minister then recognised that more accommodation was requisite at Halifax. The necessity for increased accommodation is greater to-day than it was at that date. My hon. colleague has explained that two projects were placed before the then Minister of Railways, and that probably may have been caused the delay in some part, by the Department not being able to come to any definite agreement. I may say, as the Intercolonial Railway expenditure is sometimes rather severely criticised here, that the additional expenditure is to enable the Intercolonial Railway better to handle the freight which comes from the western Provinces, particularly flour. My hon. colleague has pointed out that one idea seemed to be dominant in the mind of the late Minister, and it was, that by the extension of the system along the whole of the water frontage, additional storage accommodation and greater wharf accommodation might be obtained at less expenditure to the Dominion Government. At the same time, it is only fair to say that a very elaborate plan was prepared by the city engineer, contemplating the acquisition of property in the immediate neighborhood of the present freight terminus. Extra accommodation is required for freight. As my hon. colleague has mentioned, this vote has stood now for some years, and I would respectfully suggest to the Minister of Railways that the engineer should make an early and careful survey. I am quite sure my hon. colleague and myself do not desire one dollar to be spent in Halifax unless it results advantageously to the whole Dominion. That some additional accommodation is necessary is proved by the fact that the Minister, in 1887, placed this amount in the Estimates.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is quite true that this sum was placed in the Estimates in 1887, two years ago, for the purpose of supplying increased accommodation. A difficulty arose from there being two schemes open. One was to extend the railway along the wharves in front of the harbor. That seemed to be a very sensible plan, because it would give an opportunity for Government stores and warehouses for freight traffic purposes, and it would give access to the different stores and warehouses along the front. The other scheme was to extend the station yard along the west side of Water street to the deep water terminus. It was found, however, to be almost impossible to obtain the consent of the parties owning property along the wharves, and, as I understand it, an alarming amount was demanded for the property required. It has also been found that this sum asked will not be sufficient to carry out either project. But one of the two plans must be adopted. There is, I understand, and I am happy to learn it, such increased traffic to Halifax that enlarged accommodation for freight purposes is absolutely required. All I can say is this, let this vote be passed, and I will carry out, if I live to do it, the suggestion of hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, and see that one course or the other will be adopted. As I understood from the hon. gentleman opposite, he favors the line along the front. I think my hon. friend behind me (Mr. Kenny) also does so.

Mr. KENNY. If I am appealed to, I may say that I think the engineers of the Department should decide it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Very well; I will see that it is pressed forward without any delay.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). With regard to the matter of the Intercolonial Railway, I would also impress on the First Minister the great necessity that now arises with respect to accommodation at the Western Counties Railway at the North street terminus. This has been the subject of discussion in this House in previous Sessions, when it was pointed out that, under the original agreement with the Windsor and Annapolis Railway, they were to have access on the Intercolonial as far as Richmond, and also an extension made into Halifax. The hon. gentleman is aware that that is some distance from the city, and, consequently, all the trade is handicapped by the very considerable expense of carting freight to and from the Richmond station to the city. The Chamber of Commerce at Halifax and the mercantile community generally have been very anxious about this matter, perhaps more anxious than about almost anything else in connection with railway, because it interferes so much with our trade with the western part of the Province. Moreover, if a train comes in from the westward there is a charge of $2.50 to shunt the car down to the deep water terminus. This is a considerable item on the large quantities of potatoes and apples sent, and the large quantities of apples sent for shipment from Halifax to the English market. I hope the Government will see their way clear to carry out what is evidently the object of the original arrangement. The late Minister of Railways acknowledged they were bound by it; but he said that until they obtained additional accommodation, they could not carry it out. I hope no further delay will occur, because it is very important to Halifax that this arrangement should be carried out. I desire also to ask the Minister of Railways what is the object in keeping the Eastern Extension Railway account separate from the general Intercolonial Railway account. I cannot see the advantage of it. On the contrary, it appears to be a disadvantage. I know, from being connected with a line of steamers and having freight for Annapolis and that end of the Province, that, when it goes over the road to Pictou, it is then subject to an arbitrary rate over the Eastern line. It appears to me that the whole line should be worked under one general system. I should think it would be more economical, and certainly more satisfactory if the rates were under one management and shippers had not to deal as it were under two separate railways. I pointed that out also to the late Minister of Railways, and he promised to look into the matter, but the accounts are still made up in the old way. I would also say to the Minister of Railways that considerable complaint has been made lately with respect to the very important increase in the rates for local traffic over the Intercolonial. The changes have been made, I believe, by adopting the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific Railway classification of freight. For instance, what on the Intercolonial was considered as fourth class has been put into the third class, and this, in many instances, has largely increased the local rates. Leather shipped from Pictou was formerly charged twelve cents for one hundred pounds to Halifax; by the new arrangement it is seventeen cents, and a large quantity of bulky articles have been increased from thirty to forty per cent. by the changed classification, which is a pretty large advance. I fully recognise the advantage of having one classification over all the roads, but this has been a very large advance that has been made. Another matter that has been the subject of very considerable complaint in Halifax is that the railway is largely used for storage purposes by the western millers. Millers sending carloads of flour are allowed to keep it at the depot for 30 days, while the local merchants who are getting flour at the same time can only keep it there 48 hours. I am aware that that system obtains in the United States where flour or goods are sent for export; but we have no export in that sense in Halifax. The western millers merely send the flour down, and it is kept in the cars there practically for their benefit, and if a man in Halifax desires to buy a cargo of flour it is on hand in the cars. I repeat that we have no export in the sense in which that word applies in the United States. Of course many goods are sent to the United States for shipment abroad, and that concession is made to them. But here, unless for something along the coast occasionally, there is no export whatever, and our merchants complain that they are handicapped in that way. I think that whatever applies to one, should apply to the trade generally. I would like to ask the right hon. gentleman if he does not think, that our merchants should be placed at least in the same position as those in the west, who are sending their flour, not for shipment but for speculation?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. So far as regards the extension of the accommodation on the Windsor and Annapolis road, I made a note of the hon. gentleman's statement, and I shall make immediate enquiries about it. The accounts of the Eastern Extension are kept separate from the Intercolonial Railway accounts, because the Eastern Extension, although a Government road, is not by law a portion of the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It could be made so.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It could be made so, but that is the reason the accounts are kept separate. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Jones) has correctly mentioned the reason for the increase of rates. There has been a complete and thorough classification of the different articles of transport by all the railways in Canada, and the Intercolonial Railway is only adopting the rates that are charged on every other railway. It would, of course, seem to be absurd, and unjust to the public revenue, that the Intercolonial Railway, because it is a Government railway, should be charging cheaper rates than all the other railways. I am told also that although the rates have been increased on some articles in consequence of the readjustment of the classification, yet, that on the average, the tariff is at least as low, if not a little lower than before. There has been a good deal of dissatisfaction, and, very naturally, persons in trade, who have been paying a certain rate for a given article, for a certain number of years, feel aggrieved at having the rates increased. So much has that feeling existed, that I made special arrangements with some of the parties who are most interested in the matter, or who represent those who are interested, to meet me on Saturday morning, when I will go over the whole tariff with them, and hear their complaints. On enquiry from the chief engineer, I understand that the thirty days which are allowed for the use of the cars, bringing flour down to Halifax, is only given for flour to be exported to Newfoundland and for no other purpose. I dare say that some of the merchants who have got possession of the cars, keep possession of them for their own purpose, and it may have the effect of handicapping as the hon. members say, to a certain extent, the merchants in Halifax. After all, it is only bringing down an increased quantity of flour, and putting up another establishment on the wharf, instead of putting it in a store. I understand it to be a fact that permission to retain possession of the car is only granted for the purpose of flour to be exported to Newfoundland.

Mr. KENNY. I can inform the right hon. the Premier that, if that is the storage privilege, it is abused; and as my hon. colleague, Mr. Jones, has said, it is abused to the detriment of the merchants of Halifax. The principle of it may be a wise one, if it was to divert to our Canadian railways a certain amount of the traffic in Canadian flour which otherwise would have gone by way of Boston. However, from what I heard, from the merchants of the city, I believe this privilege has been abused.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The right hon. gentleman has been misinformed entirely with regard to the arrangements for the Newfoundland freight. There may be the last year, or the year before, one or two cargoes of flour exported to Newfoundland, but the hon. gentleman will find on further enquiry that most of the flour which goes to Newfoundland is American and not Canadian. At all events it would only be brought on the railway during the short time that navigation is closed, but the complaint which I bring to the notice of the Minister is, that it applies during the summer as well as during the winter. The hon. gentleman has been misinformed entirely, because practically there is no export of flour from Halifax to Newfoundland.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will enquire.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The permission was intended, I think, to cover some exports to our own coasts.

Mr. BORDEN. I wish to add a few words to what has been said by the hon. members for Halifax, as to the importance of increased terminal facilities for the Intercolonial Railway at that city. It is a question which concerns the western part of Nova Scotia very seriously. As the hon. the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) has pointed out, a large part of the trade of Nova Scotia goes to Halifax over the Western road, and the only avenue by which it can get into that city is by the Intercolonial Railway, as the Western road ends at Windsor Junction. There has been an arrangement made, by which the freight coming by the Windsor and Annapolis road should be carried to the terminus at Halifax; but when the Intercolonial Railway was extended to deep water terminus, they charged more for cars coming from the west than they charged on cars coming from the east. They charged $2.50 from the west, and $1 from the east, and the result of that is very obvious. Take the case of a car load of apples, for instance, coming from the east, the charge would be $1, and from the west $2.50, which means a direct discrimination against the farmers of the west in favor of the farmers of the east. I do not believe that the Government desires to perpetuate that kind of thing. The question has been brought up here several times, and the answer given was that there was not sufficient accommodation at Halifax to do the business. That did not seem to me to be a very good answer, because if there was no accommodation to do the business at $1 a car load, how could there be sufficient accommodation to do it at $2.50? Nevertheless, that was the answer given, and, therefore, I presume I am right in assuming that when the increased accommodation is provided, the cars from the west will be allowed to go in on the same terms as the cars from the east. Now that the right hon. Premier has the matter in his own hands, I trust that he will give consideration to this important question, as he promised to do. I can assure him that the people of western Nova Scotia are very much excited over it. On every occasion that our fruit-growers and agricultural societies meet, this question is brought up. It is a burning question in Nova Scotia, and I trust that it will get its solution now.

Mr. CAMPBELL. In reference to the accommodation at Halifax, I think, as the hon. senior member for Halifax has said, that thirty days free storage ought to be given, for this reason: A great deal of flour from Ontario goes to Halifax by way of Boston, and on all the flour that goes to Boston for export to the Maritime Provinces, thirty days free storage is given. The merchant at Halifax can have his flour sent to Boston, let it remain there for thirty days, and then bring it over to Halifax, by steamer, whenever it suits him; whereas, if he brings it over the Intercolonial Railway, he has to unload it within forty-eight hours, or after that pay demurrage upon it. I think shippers by the Intercolonial Railway should have the same advantage in the way of free storage as they would get by sending their flour by way of Boston. The quantity of flour sent to Halifax, and kept there for the requirements of that city, is not very large; probably at no time is there more than 10,000 barrels stored there. The storage for that quantity would not be very great, and I think it would be in the interest of the Intercolonial Railway if this concession of free storage for thirty days were granted to the merchants there; and, after that, charge them 2 cents a barrel a month—the same as the lines running into Boston. Another system has been in vogue on the Intercolonial for some time, that is, the granting of rebates on freight sent to Halifax and St. John. The arrangement made by the Intercolonial Railway and the receivers of flour at Halifax and St. John was that the party who got in 2,000 barrels per month, got a rebate of 10 cents per barrel on his freight, and if 1,500 barrels, then 7½ cents per barrel, and if 1,000 barrels, 5 cents per barrel, and if 500 barrels per month were brought in they got a rebate of 2½ cents per barrel; but, under 500 barrels, they got no rebate. That is a perfect nuisance, and I do not think the Government should allow that system to exist at all. It simply places the whole trade of Halifax in the hands of two or three men. The man who brings in only one or two car-loads of flour a month cannot afford to bring it over the Intercolonial Railroad; he has to bring it via Boston, because the man who brings the larger quantity gets the rebate and can undersell the man who brings the smaller quantity. I think the Intercolonial Railway should adopt the system that whether a man brings in one car or five cars a month, he shall pay the same rate. Last summer I was speaking with Mr. Taylor, the general freight agent of the Intercolonial Railway at Moncton, with reference to this very matter, and he was of the same opinion, that this system was a nuisance and ought to be done away with. Last Session the subject of the freight charges on flour passing over the Intercolonial Railway for Prince Edward Island came up in this House, and I pointed out to the Government that I thought they should give as low a rate to Pictou Landing on flour as they do to Halifax. If they did so, all the flour for Prince Edward would go via the Intercolonial Railway instead of via Boston, and by the American line of steamers, as it has done for many years. I am glad to say that last fall, though rather late in the season, a rate of freight was given to Pictou Landing, which enabled us to send all the flour for Charlottetown over the Intercolonial Railway and across on our own steamers. But afterwards that rate was withdrawn, but I hope that before navigation opens this spring, the Government will renew it, as there will be a very large quantity of flour going to Charlottetown from the Upper Provinces. For my part, I never could see the reason why the Government should carry flour to Halifax and St. John at a less rate than to Pictou Landing, more especially when such an enormous quantity of flour was going to the Island every year. If the same rate that prevailed last fall is renewed, I venture to say that nearly all the flour from Ontario for Prince Edward Island will go via Pictou Landing, and, of course, it is better for it to go over our trans-continental line than over the American lines. I think in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick many places have rather high rates as compared with other points on the Intercolonial Railway. For instance, the rate on a barrel of flour to Campbellton or Newcastle is very much higher than it is to points at the extreme end of the line. I think the Government should reduce the rates to those points a little more, especially as we know that the Americans are sending their cornmeal and flour from Chicago over the Grand Trunk and Intercolonial Railways, and laying it down at Halifax at a lower rate than that at which we can send it from Chatham. That is not right, that from Chicago, which is 400 miles farther west, the rates over the Grand Trunk and Intercolonial should be less than they are from Canadian points. This is a matter that the Minister of Railways should take up with the view of seeing whether some justice cannot be done to our Canadian manufacturers. I do not see any reason why corn and cornmeal should be carried from Chicago to Halifax for 60 cents a barrel, while from Chatham to Newcastle it is charged say 70 or 75 cents a barrel.

General LAURIE. The fruit-growers of Nova Scotia have asked me to support the proposition of the hon. member for King's (Mr. Borden), that equal facilities should be afforded to produce going over the Windsor and Annapolis Railway for shipment that is afforded to goods going over the Intercolonial. We recognise that we shall never have the trade with Halifax unless we provide outward cargoes, which we are able to do if facilities are afforded for shipment; but if obstacles are placed in the way, we shall find, as we did three years ago, that large portions of the produce of the Annapolis valley will be sent by steamer to Boston to be shipped to England. That should not be. Our produce should go out of our own ports, and, if it does, inward cargoes will come and Halifax will then become a terminal point—and will travel over the Intercolonial Railway, which will thereby have less of a deficit, if it does not pay.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). These gentlemen have forgotten that the Intercolonial Railway has to compete with Boston, and if the flour trade does not go by the Intercolonial Railway it will go by Boston, so that the managers of the Intercolonial Railway must necessarily make the rate pretty well what it would be vis-à-vis Boston. There is great force in what the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) said with reference to the rate charged to Pictou Landing. I cannot understand why a road which carries to Halifax, sixty miles from Truro, should not carry at the same rate forty miles to Pictou Landing. I notice in the report of the Intercolonial Railway referring to the general result of the year's work:

"The improvement in the net result of the operations of the Government Railways is almost entirely due to the Intercolonial, the loss on operating which having been less by $105,093.42 than during 1887-88. This result is partly due to the favorable character of the last winter, and partly to the reduction in the quantity of coal carried to points west of Chaudière."

It appears the less coal is carried from Spring Hill to Chaudière the better for the country. I suppose there has been no change in the coal rate since the previous year.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Stairs from Halifax Station to North St... $600

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It appears to me that this is almost a farce, to put such trifling items to capital account.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is a portion of the extension of the accommodation at that particular place, and, though small an amount, is on the same principle as the larger sums. It is to accommodate the passengers.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not disputing the fact that the accommodation is required, but I really do not think we ought to favor this idea on the part of officials that trifling things of that kind should be charged to capital account.

General LAURIE. This was an omission at the time of the construction of the station. It should have been done then.

Increased accommodation at Moncton... $2,000

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Does that include the expenditure for electric light?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No. It is for blacksmith shop, machinery, moving building and Mr. CAMPBELL.

levelling ground, paint shop, printing apparatus, engine house and engine shop.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I have often called the attention of the Minister of Railways to the condition of the platform at the station. It is uncovered, and when people have to wait is, in bad weather, very unpleasant.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will see about that.

Intercolonial Railway—Rolling stock... $10,000

Mr. McMULLEN. What amount of rolling stock has been provided during the last year to take the place of stock worn out? Some years ago, Sir Charles Tupper laid down the principle that when a car gets worn out and is replaced by a new car, the latter is charged to working expenses. What amount of new rolling stock was purchased last year and charged to working expenses and how much charged to capital account?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. When a car is worn out and a new car substituted, the cost of the new car is charged to working expenses.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to enquire how many new cars have been bought and put on the road during the last year and charged to working expenses, in place of cars which have been worn out?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. My hon. friend will find that in the annual report.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I see that the amount charged last year to capital account for rolling stock was $327,789. It did not appear to me that the amount that should have been charged was more than $17,000 or $18,000. This capital account of the Intercolonial Railway is assuming alarming proportions. On the 30th June, 1889, it amounted to $46,542,000, and I think there is too great a disposition to charge to that account expenditures that should be charged to current expenses. In that way the deficit on the Intercolonial Railway is reduced as compared with that on the Island road. In Prince Edward Island everything is charged to running expenses, but on the Intercolonial Railway $656,000 was charged last year to capital account. Some of that is properly charged—such as the increased accommodation at St. John and Halifax; but I think the amount charged for rolling stock is beyond the mark, and also the cost of lighting the cars by electricity. It seems to me that we are presenting a false balance to the country. While the deficit is put down at only $250,000, it is really much more than that, and there must be something more in the supplementaries.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I fancy the report to which my hon. friend (Mr. Davies) refers extends to the 1st July, 1889, and the vote of which he is speaking is the vote for the present year.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) When this matter was up last year, the impression left on the Committee was that we were not any more to have the cost of the rolling stock on the Intercolonial Railway charged to capital account. Some years ago, Sir Charles Tupper charged the rolling stock to capital account, but he explained that it was for new cars to carry coal to the west.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). What is the condition of the claims in regard to the St. Charles Branch?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That matter is not closed, but I hope it is approaching termination.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Are the outstanding amounts of these claims large?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They are large. Some of them are before the Exchequer Court.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I should like to know in what position the question stands as to the running powers of the Canadian Pacific Railway over the Intercolonial Railway. By the arrangement of last year, in reference to the Harvey and Salisbury branch, which fell through, the Canadian Pacific Railway were to have running powers over the Intercolonial Railway from Moncton to Halifax. Since then, public attention has been drawn, on several occasions, to a reported misunderstanding between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Government as to their running powers over the Intercolonial Railway from St. John to Halifax. Of course, they would be, in that case, competitors with the Intercolonial Railway, but, while they have not those running powers, we are losing, to a great extent, the advantages which were supposed to arise from the construction of the Short Line. If the right hon. gentleman could give any information in regard to that, it would be satisfactory, but I know that questions of that kind are of a delicate nature, and, if he is not in a position to give the information, I cannot expect it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In regard to the running powers from St. John to Halifax via the Short Line, the Canadian Pacific Railway desired to have the same powers as were given to them under the arrangement between Harvey and Salisbury. The Department did not think, under the circumstances, that the same powers should be given. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company contended strongly that they should get the same powers and privileges as it was arranged they should have by the other road. A substantial understanding, however, has been come to, although it is not finally closed, and the Canadian Pacific Railway is running under certain limited powers over that part of the Intercolonial Railway—limited powers in the sense that they are not so extensive as they were in regard to the Harvey and Salisbury line. I have been discussing the matter this very evening with the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway for the purpose of finally closing the matter.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I understand they are not carrying freight but only passengers.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They are carrying both.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). From St. John to Halifax?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They are sending it through. They are not carrying any local freight, but they are sending through freight to Halifax, say from Montreal.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I think the hon. gentleman is under a misapprehension. I think there has been some difficulty in the way.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Canadian Pacific Railway bill their freight from Montreal or west of that through to Halifax. Their cars bring it to St. John, and the Canadian Pacific Railway engines convey the Canadian Pacific Railway cars into Halifax.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I was informed the other day by my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Weldon) that the management of the Intercolonial Railway at Montreal were offering rates over the Intercolonial Railway to St. John at the same amount as by the Canadian Pacific Railway. I could hardly believe that statement, as the distance by the one is about 250 miles shorter than by the other, and it would hardly be worth while competing for traffic on such terms. I do not know whether it is true or not, but I was informed by my hon. friend that he had the information from reliable sources.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The rate from Montreal via Intercolonial Railway to Halifax is 10 shillings. I understand that for the majority of articles of freight the Intercolonial Railway is carrying at the same rate as to St. John; though there are some articles that the Canadian Pacific Railway are carrying so low that the Intercolonial Railway management decline to accept it at the same rates.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Will it not be in the interest of the country in such cases to allow the Canadian Pacific Railway to carry the freight? Because surely the Intercolonial Railway cannot compete with the Canadian Pacific Railway to St. John; to Halifax it is a different matter.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I heard the hon. gentleman say that the Canadian Pacific Railway used their own engines and cars. Does he mean by that that they are practically running a train each way from St. John to Halifax on the Intercolonial Railway without charge?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Canadian Pacific Railway cars are drawn from St. John to Halifax by the Intercolonial Railway engines.

Mr. McMULLEN. I put a question to the Minister of Railways with regard to the number of cars that were supplied and charged to working expenses, and the hon. gentleman said that it was found in the report. I cannot find any cars charged to working expenses in the Minister of Railways' report. Certainly there must be a number of cars supplied each year, charged to working expenses, to take the place of cars that are used up.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will get an account for it.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) On that point of charge to capital account, I was under the impression that the $327,000 that I spoke of, as charged to capital for rolling stock, embraced rolling stock on the branch lines. I find on another page of the railway report that it does not. On page 18 I find that the total amount charged to capital was $656,328. Of that, increased accommodation at terminal stations took up $29,108; branch lines, including rolling stock therefor, $258,443; rolling stock for the Intercolonial Railway proper, the old road, $327,789. That is for rolling stock charged to capital account. If you turn to the preceding page, although you will not get the amounts, you will find a statement showing the rolling stock:

"The following rolling stock has been rebuilt during the year at the cost of working expenses to maintain the stock."

Then it gives four engines, two second-class passenger cars, two baggage cars, six conductor's vans, one box car, 59 platform cars, and 52 coal cars, charged to working expenses. But it does not give the amount at all. But the items giving $327,000 for the rolling stock charged to capital account, can be found in the Auditor General's Report, page D 128. It appears those items ought to be charged to working expenses.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As regards the question whether they should be charged to working expenses or capital, the principle is simply this: That when one car is worn out and another substituted, that is charged to maintenance, but if there are any additional cars wanted, they are charged to capital account. I do not think there is any fear that there will be an excess of locomotives or cars; in fact there is a complaint that there is not sufficient rolling stock. With regard to the question asked just now, about the haul of freight from St. John to Halifax: the freight is drawn from St. John to Halifax in the Canadian Pacific Railway cars, but by Government engines, and the Government gets the freight for the articles so carried from St. John to Halifax.

John..... $17,000

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to know what was done with the rolling stock that was taken from the Onderdonk's. Where is it?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. On the Inter-colonial Railway.

Mr. McMULLEN. Has it been used there?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The Minister a little while ago spoke of paying for land damages at Halifax. When this vote was first proposed for St. John, it was upon the condition that the city should provide for right of way, and other necessary lands free of charge, and assume all liability of claims for damages for accidents. It seems to me, by the same principle that prevails at Halifax, the Government should take charge of the whole thing. I do not think it is fair to saddle the city of St. John with conditions which do not apply to other places. This $17,000 would go a small way towards having that built, yet the Minister says $150,000 is necessary to do the same thing in Halifax. Of course, where the extension is necessary, I do not object, but as it is equally necessary in St. John, I think we should be treated in the same way as Halifax, and that the city should not be compelled to buy the right of way.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. At all events, the hon. gentleman will allow us to take this vote of $17,000 to extend the Intercolonial Railway along the harbor front at St. John, exclusive of the right of way. The hon. gentleman desires that the city should be relieved of any claim the Government may have if they furnish the right of way.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The city has got to find the right of way and other necessary lands free of charge, and assume all liability by reason of the track running along the side of the street. Last year, at my request, the Minister made that vote on the same terms as it is here. I do not object to aiding Halifax, but I want precisely the same rule to apply to St. John. If the Government is giving railway and wharf accommodation to Halifax for freight, it seems to me the Government should not saddle the city of St. John with the right of way, and make it responsible for all damages.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will see what the reason of the difference is.

Mr. ELLIS. Why has this matter been standing so long? Last year there were negotiations between the Government and the city, but no one appeared to understand why the Government did not go on with the work. This grant has been standing for two years, and it is proposed to revoke it this year. The Board of Trade of St. John makes deliveries on this subject, but they do not seem to advance the matter.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The reason is that the city has not given the right of way. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) says the city should not be asked to give the right of way. I will enquire into it, and see whether there is any reason for the difference between Halifax and St. John in that regard.

Mr. McMULLEN. With respect to the Onderdonk rolling stock: has it been charged to the capital account of the Intercolonial, and if so at what sum?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is still in the Canadian Pacific Railway account and has not been adjusted.

Mr. McMULLEN. It has been used on the Intercolonial.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes. There is a very considerable unadjusted account with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and this is part of it.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Last year $35,000 were voted for increased accommodation at St. John. Has that been expended, and in what way?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is being expended now on the purchase of the Moore property. The purchase is just about completed.

Cape Breton Railway..... $50,000

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Would the hon. gentleman inform us as to the condition of the road, when the road will be open, and if this amount will close the account?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is to complete the road and rolling stock.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). When will the road be opened?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. About August next.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) In a return brought down to the Public Accounts Committee during the present Session the total expenditure on that road, up to the 31st December, was shown to have been $2,333,061. We are now about to vote $50,000 to complete after 1st July next. What will the expenditure be between December and July?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The whole of the cost will appear in the Supplementary Estimates, which will be brought down in a few days.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Do I understand that this will complete?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There will be a sum in the Supplementary Estimates. That sum will be expended after 1st July; the Supplementary Estimates will be for the expenditure up to 1st July. There will be a sum in the Supplementary Estimates.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) There appears to be $246,000 left to expend after 31st December last. Will that be sufficient to cover the expenditure up to next July?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; there will be a sum in the Supplementary Estimates for the current year. This amount of $50,000 is principally to furnish rolling stock, as the road will be finished next August. The present sum and this vote and the Supplementary Estimates will show the whole cost of the road as it will stand at August next.

Oxford and New Glasgow Railway. . . $30,000

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) I desire to ask the right hon. gentleman a question which I asked Mr. Schreiber when he was before the Public Accounts Committee. I asked the chief engineer, what was the highest grade on that road. I understood from him that the highest grade, at Stellarton towards Pictou, was 110 feet to the mile. I have ascertained since, from authority which I think is almost unquestionable, that the chief engineer must have been astray in that statement, and that there is a grade on the first mile of not less than 150 feet to the mile.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I lay on the Table a plan showing the grades.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) In connection with that road it was proposed to run a loop line between Pictou Town branch and New Glasgow, and Mr. Archibald was requested to make a report on the cost of such a road, and the chief engineer brought down a report, which showed that the cost of running another road to avoid that heavy grade, from somewhere near Westville, near the iron bridge, to New Glasgow, would cost from $35,000 to $40,000. I desire some information on this point.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is no present intention to build a loop to the iron bridge. It is under consideration.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are we to understand that, in addition to what has already been expended, a further outlay is contemplated, after the egregious misrepresentation as to the distance of this road, which was intended to be used by every pound of freight and every passenger, to quote the words of the High Commissioner delivered from his place in this House, and that the road contains a grade of 140 feet to the mile.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It contains a very high grade.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It appears to me, that of all the extraordinary transactions ever palmed off on this House, this is the worst.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I think it is generally understood that the road, as it now stands, without a new piece to avoid these heavy grades, would be perfectly useless. If there is any traffic to go over the road, the sooner the matter is considered the better.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It will be.

Mr. McMULLEN. I can well remember, that when Sir Charles proposed the construction of this line to the House, he gave as a principal reason for its necessity, that on the line of the Intercolonial Railway between Oxford and New Glasgow, going the round-about way the Intercolonial ran, there were grades there on which it was almost impossible to run a heavy freight train, and that it became an absolute necessity either to build the new road or to reconstruct the Intercolonial Railway so that it would be a possible route for heavy freight trains. After spending an enormous amount on that road, is it possible that we have on this new line grades of 150 feet to the mile?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. When Sir Charles Tupper was speaking about the very high grades, he was speaking of the grades to the coal mines. As my hon. friend from Halifax has stated, it is all down grade from the coal mines, and after that the average is 15 feet to the mile.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is not a question of the average.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I should have said the maximum.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is well known that the drawing power of an engine is measured by the steepest grade on the road, and if you have any grade which will prevent an engine drawing more than ten or twelve or fourteen cars, it is a matter of little importance whether the balance of the road is a low grade or not. When Sir Charles Tupper proposed that this new line should be built, he declared there was one grade on the Intercolonial Railway which prevented the moving of heavy freight trains, for the reason that that grade was the measure of the power of the engine. It appears now, that in the new line constructed for the special purpose of getting over that difficulty on the Intercolonial Railway as originally constructed, we have one grade of 140 feet to the mile. This line is virtually a duplicate of the Intercolonial Railway, and if we duplicated it for the purpose of allowing heavy freight trains to pass over without subjecting them to risk there would be some excuse. Now, after spending so much money, we find we are in the same difficulty as we were in before.

Mr. McDOUGALD (Pictou). I think an examination of the chart submitted by the hon. Minister of Railways will show that there is a great improvement effected by the new line, as compared with the old one. Some confusion has arisen in discussing this Oxford and New Glasgow road. The road constructed under that name only extends from Oxford to the Town of Pictou, and the grades over that line do not exceed in any place 65 feet to the mile. The balance of the line, from Pictou to Stellarton was constructed before the Oxford and New Glasgow road was taken up as a Government work. Towards the construction of that road the county of Pictou gave the right of way, and gave up a ferry service between Pictou Landing and Pictou Town, which had cost the Intercolonial Railway some $12,000 a year to maintain. That capitalised, would represent a sum of $300,000. If we compare the grades of the two lines, it will be found that the new line has a great advantage over the old road, with the exception of a very short distance, not exceeding a quarter of a mile, and even that is at a place where there is a round house, and where engines can always be found to help a train over the grade. The Pictou Town branch on which this grade is, was not built originally as part of the Oxford and New Glasgow road; it was built as the Pictou Town branch of the Intercolonial Railway, and although that is at present used in connection with the line, it is not part of the line referred to in the original statement made by Sir Charles Tupper.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman is right in one sense and wrong in another. Every one knows that it is not part of the original line. It never was intended that the Oxford and New Glasgow road should run the way it does at all, but now the Oxford and New Glasgow has been connected with the Pictou Town branch, within a short distance of Pictou Town, and then it runs along the Pictou branch until it strikes Stellarton. You cannot get to Stellarton without going over that grade, so that the hon. gentleman (no doubt unintentionally) is misleading the House. The reasons given to justify the House in spending that large amount on the Oxford and New Glasgow line, would not have been successful with the House, had it been known that that line was to be connected with the Pictou branch, and that on the Pictou branch there was a grade of 150 feet to the mile, which precludes any ordinary engines from hauling freight there. The whole trouble has been, that the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. McDougald), was exceedingly anxious to capture the vote of the villages of Stellarton and Westville. That is the secret of the whole thing, and in order to do that the line was diverted there. We practically abandoned eight miles of road running down to Pictou Landing, with the wharves and everything else complete. We lengthened the Oxford and New Glasgow line some three or four miles, and we built a road into Pictou competing with the old line we had there, at a cost of $503,827. That is the plain English of it. The hon. gentleman is perfectly correct that this was part of the old Acadian Mine road, but the Government bought it and made it part of the Pictou branch, and now it is part of the Oxford and New Glasgow.

Mr. McDOUGALD (Pictou). If there is any gentleman misleading the House, it is the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies). This railway was not originally a part of the Oxford and New Glasgow line. It was built by the Government before the Oxford and New Glasgow was undertaken as a Government work, and on entirely different grounds, and in lieu of the ferry service across the harbor of Pictou.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman has stated just what I said. This was not intended originally to be part of the Oxford and New Glasgow line, and the House would not have voted for it if full information had been given to them that it was only going to shorten the distance seven miles, and was to have a very heavy grade. The fact is, that in order to procure the election of the hon. gentleman and his colleague, this country has spent $503,000 on the Pictou Branch line, and the Government have sent an engineer to survey a new line to avoid that heavy grade, and the estimate is before us that it will cost $40,000, and I suppose that before another election takes place we shall have two lines, one to Westville and one to Stellarton. I think the hon. gentleman is likely to turn out a very expensive luxury.

Mr. McDOUGALD (Pictou). If there is anything in the hon. gentleman's argument, it is that the line should be completed, because there was no reference to this line when the vote was taken for the line from Oxford to New Glasgow.

Eastern Extension Railway..... $3,500

Mr. McDOUGALL (Cape Breton). I would like to ask whether it is the intention of the Government to replace the steamer which was burnt down at Port Mulgrave by a boat which will carry a train of cars. A large amount of freight arrives there which cannot conveniently be transferred in boats, that will require the breaking of the cargo.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There must be steamers that will carry cars to a certain extent, but that must be hereafter. The Government do not intend during this Session to ask for a vote for that purpose.

Committee rose and reported resolutions.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 12.55 a.m. (Friday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 14th March, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. LANDERKIN moved:

That the notice required by the 60th rule to be given by Committees prior to the consideration of private Bills, be reduced from one week to three days, for the remainder of the Session, in accordance with the resolution of the Select Committee on Standing Orders, as contained in the 13th report.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK moved:

That the 49th and 51st rules of this House be suspended in relation to the petition of the Dominion Mineral Company, in accordance with the recommendation of the Select Committee on Standing Orders, and that the leave asked be granted, to introduce a Bill to amend the Act incorporating the Dominion Mineral Company.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE MEMBER FOR LINCOLN.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It will be remembered that the hon. First Minister was to make a statement at three o'clock to-day with respect to the course the Government proposed to pursue as to the adjourned debate on the motion presented by me on Tuesday last. I suppose some of the hon. gentlemen will be able to state, as the Premier is not here, what the Government mean to do.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. First Minister desired me to say, in answer to the question of the hon. gentleman, that the Government wish, if it is the will of the House, that this matter be taken up on Monday at eight o'clock.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then, probably, the hon. gentleman had better cause it to be made a special Order.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved :

That the Order for resuming adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Sir Richard Cartwright, with respect to the conduct of John Charles Rykert, Esquire, member for the Electoral District of Lincoln and Niagara, declaring it to be discreditable, corrupt and scandalous, be made an Order of the Day, to be taken up at eight o'clock in the evening on Monday next.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY--BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I desire to call the attention of the House to the manner in which the Government have been conducting the business of the House during the present Session. We are now in the ninth week of the Session, and I submit it to the calm and impartial judgment of hon. members on both sides, that the Government have been remiss in the discharge of the duty which they owe to the House and the country. In the first place, it is to be remembered, that the period for the meeting of Parliament in this country is not fixed by law. The time at which Parliament shall be summoned together for the despatch of business is altogether at the option of the Administration. They themselves select the day on which they ought to be ready, and they declare practically that they are then ready to meet the representatives of the people. It is, therefore, nothing but fair to expect, under the circumstances, that every measure of the Government, and every report which by law they are required to bring before the House, and every announcement of their policy, should be ready at that time. Even if the period of the meeting of Parliament were fixed by law, if it had to come as in other countries, within a certain period well known in advance, still the duty of the Government would be the same; whenever the time came, they ought to be ready with everything which is within their domain to facilitate business, and to afford to the representatives of the people an early opportunity to discharge the duties imposed upon them. Still more pressing must be this duty upon the Government, when, as I have said, the period at which Parliament assembles is not fixed by law, but is determined by the advisers of His Excellency themselves. Now, there is a universal wish among the members of this House for an early meeting of Parliament, and what is the reason? The reason is, that it is supposed that if we have an early meeting of Parliament, and the Session extends to its normal length, which, I suppose, in this country is about three months, then the members of the House would be able to return to their private business at the time of the opening of navigation. It is to be remembered also that, with very few exceptions, the members of this House are not men of leisure, but are all engaged in the active pursuits of life. Their time is precious, they cannot afford to give more than the country absolutely requires of them, and to keep them a longer time here than is absolutely necessary is not just to them. This year we have been summoned earlier than usual, but what will be the consequence?

Will it be that the members will be discharged from their attendance here at any earlier period than usual? No; the only consequence will be simply to prolong the Session for several weeks longer than it ought to be prolonged. I charge this on the Government, that they have been altogether remiss in discharging the duties they owe to Parliament and the country. They have not yet brought down any of the reports which they should have brought at an early day; they are not yet ready to bring down their Budget; they have not even brought down the measures which they promised, at the opening of Parliament, in the Speech of His Excellency. It is one of the obligations which is made imperative on the Government by law, that they should bring down the reports of the various Departments, and reports containing other information, yearly, as Parliament is called together. Some of the reports have, of course, been brought down, but in this the ninth week of the Session, several of the departmental reports even are yet wanting. We have not yet received the Report of the Department of Agriculture, the Report of the Department of the Interior, the Report on Chartered Banks, the Report on the Fisheries, the Report on Insurance, the Report on the Mounted Police, or the Report on Railway Statistics, all of which certainly should have been laid on the Table of the House in the very first week after Parliament was called together. They are all necessary to the proper discussion of the questions which come before Parliament, and unless we have every one of them, it is not possible to discuss effectively the different subjects to which they refer, and therefore those subjects have to be deferred from week to week, and month to month, until the reports are laid before the House. So it is with the measures of the Government. The Speech from the Throne announced that they were to bring down several very important measures, with some innocuous ones. Some of the latter have been brought down, but we have not yet seen one of the important measures. For instance, on that very important question, the labor question, His Excellency was made to say :

"The report of the Royal Commission on Labor, which was laid before you during the last Session, has been distributed throughout the country. I have reason to believe that the information which it contains will be found eminently useful in suggesting improvements in the administration of the laws which affect the working classes. Measures for the amendment of these laws, so far as they come within the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada, will be submitted for your consideration." That Commission, if I remember aright, sat for a year or two; afterwards several months were occupied in hatching the report, and then it was distributed. The Government have had it for a year or more to consider; when Parliament was summoned, legislation based upon that report was announced which certainly from its nature ought to be brought down this Session, and yet, in the ninth week of the Session, we are still without it. I submit it to the intelligence and common sense and impartial judgment of every member of this House, is this a proper discharge of the duty the Government owe to this Parliament? In another paragraph His Excellency is made to say :

"The early termination of the Acts of incorporation of the principal banking institutions of the Dominion necessitates a review of our present system of banking and an adjustment of the terms under which the charters of these corporations should be renewed. Your attention will be drawn to this important subject."

Nay, a very important subject; I suppose no more important subject than this can be brought before Parliament during the present Session. Yet, after nine weeks of deliberation, the Government are not yet ready to bring down to Parliament the Bill which they had under consideration on this most important subject. I understand that we are to have it next week. It would have been important for us to have had it long before to-day, not only because members of this House would have had the opportunity to read and consider it, and to form an opinion upon it, but because it is also of the greatest importance that the public at large should have had an occasion to look into the measure offered by the Government upon that subject, in order to see what is the new policy which the Government propose. I say again, that the Government are most remiss in the duty they owe to Parliament and to the country at large, when they have allowed eight weeks of the time of Parliament to elapse, before they are in a position to submit this measure. Look at the next paragraph:

"Certain amendments to the Acts relating to the North-West Territories, calculated to facilitate the administration of affairs in that region, as also a Bill further to promote the efficiency of the North-West Mounted Police, will be submitted for your consideration."

Anything which touches the Mounted Police is certainly of a character to invite considerable discussion. It has been a matter which has been adopted on both sides of the House. But still more important is the proposed legislation in regard to the North-West Territories. It is within our recollection that the Legislature of the North-West Territories have represented that they were in need of certain legislation more suited than the present state of the law to the advanced stage of civilisation which they have attained. Under such circumstances, I say it is most important that this legislation should have been brought down at an early stage. If this legislation is proposed now, even within the ninth or tenth or twelfth week of the Session, it is not possible for Parliament to give it the attention which it deserves at our hands. The Speech goes on to state that:

"Measures will be laid before you relating to bills of exchange and promissory notes,——"

We have had that; it was not new, but was only a re-hash of the measure of last Session, and probably that is the reason why it was brought down so soon.—

"—to improve the laws respecting patents of invention and discovery,——"

We had that, but it only contained one single clause.—

"—to amend also the Act respecting the Geological and Natural History Survey of Canada,——"

This was brought down to us from the Senate within a day or so.—

"—and to provide for the better organisation of the national printing establishment."

As to that, we have not yet heard a single word. So that, of all the important measures which were announced by His Excellency in his speech at the opening of the Session, not one has been brought down, and I again ask the fair-minded members on both sides of the House, if the Government have been discharging in a proper manner the duty they owe to this Parliament? Another question, which is, perhaps, more important to us than any, is the consideration of the Budget. There is no reason, in my judgment, and there can be no excuse, if that is not brought down at an early period of the Session, certainly not later than the third week. And why? The reason is obvious. In this country, the questions which affect the people most are trade questions, and these are intimately connected with the Budget statement, and cannot properly be taken into consideration until the Budget is brought down. We have had many instances of that this Session. Several motions have been made on this side of the House giving instances where the tariff oppresses certain sections of the community, especially where it is oppressive to the farmers, and to all these motions there was but this answer given from the other side of the House—that they were not ready to give an answer at all. Wait till the Budget comes, they said, that is the only answer. If we have to wait until the Budget comes, why should not the Budget have come long before this date? If we cannot consider properly the questions which most deeply affect the people of this country until we have the Budget, that is all the more reason that we should have the Budget early, and that we should condemn the Government for having been so dilatory in that respect. What excuse can there be for the delay? If I am to speak my mind and state what I believe, I will say that, in my opinion, the only reason of the Government is that it is a part and parcel of their policy to delay the submission of important measures until such time as members have become weary, until they have become exhausted, and are called by their own business away from Parliament, so that those measures cannot receive the consideration which they ought to have. I believe that this neglect is wilful, and deliberate, and designed. If it is not wilful, or deliberate, or designed, what can it be? It must, then, be the result of incompetency on the part of the Government to form an opinion. If the delay is not wilful, we must come to the conclusion that gentlemen on the other side, though they are a pretty numerous body, are not able to form their minds on a question of public policy; that measures are considered, and then the effort is too great for them, they cannot decide, but put them off from to-day to to-morrow, and from to-morrow again to to-morrow, and so on for weeks. I think the reasons which I have given justify me in moving that you, Sir, do not now leave the Chair, but that it be resolved:

That the failure of the Government to bring down the Budget, several of the departmental reports, all the important measures announced in the Speech of His Excellency at the opening of the Session, and to discharge the duties which they owe to Parliament, is highly prejudicial to the public interest.

Mr. MITCHELL. I feel that every word that has been uttered by the leader of the great party on this side of the House is susceptible of being endorsed by myself as an independent man outside of the influence of either party. I think it is discreditable to a Government—especially a Government possessing, as they believe they possess, which I do not believe, the confidence of a majority of this House—to delay the conduct of public business in the manner which has been described. It is the duty of a Government not to delay, and practically to obstruct, the conduct of public business, as this Government has. As the hon. gentleman has correctly stated, we are now in the ninth week of this Session. We were called together early, the nominal reason being that it would enable us to get through the business of the country, and enable the members who are farmers, and the business men, to get home to their duties before the spring business opens, which demands their presence at their homes. So far from that having been the case, there has been nothing but the most reckless neglect. No consideration has been paid, either to the convenience of the members, or of the people whom they represent. Sir, it is time this kind of thing should be put a stop to. These important measures to which my hon. friend has referred ought long since to have been laid before this House. He has referred to the banking measure. That is a measure which will require a great deal of consideration, not only by the members who are representing their constituents here, but it should have been down long since in order to enable the members to take the advice of their constituents upon one of the most important measures that could be submitted to the House. Then, with regard to the Budget and the changes that are likely to be made in the tariff, as has been rumored abroad in the country. It is time that business men should know on what they can rely, so that, in sending out their spring orders, they may know whether there is to be an increase of duty upon any particular article; it is time the people should know, when they are sending their money and making investments in the trade of the country, upon what they can rely in reference to the tariff; and I desire especially to charge the Finance Minister with having been remiss in his duty in not having, weeks ago, submitted his Budget scheme for the consideration of the House, so as to enable the members to reply to the numerous letters coming up from all parts of the country, asking whether there are going to be changes in the tariff, and whether the Government have decided upon their policy. I do not want to know what the changes in the tariff are going to be, because I know what answer would be given to me; but I think the people have a right to know at the earliest day what the policy of the Government is in relation to the changes that are to be made. Sir, there is an unsettled feeling in the trade of this country in relation to the rumored changes in the tariff, some expecting that there is going to be an increase in the tariff on several items. I hope that the friends of the Government have not received information in relation to these increases, by which they would be enabled to have an advantage over the gentlemen who have not, shall I say?—the good luck to be in a position to get such information by supporting the Administration. I do not say that the Government would do a thing of this kind, but I mean to say that their course excites very grave suspicion that such things are done. It is very well known that this House has been flooded with delegations, some of whom want one thing and some another in relation to many items in the tariff. Sir, I wish to express my grave dissent from the course of the Government in permitting the delays that have arisen, and I think the Government are justly subject to public condemnation for those delays, and for the manner in which they have failed to progress with the public business that they intimated they intended to submit for the consideration of this House. What have we found on former occasions? Delays have occurred, just as they have occurred this Session, and then, in the last two or three weeks of the Session, business is rushed through, it is shovelled through the House. People have not an opportunity to consider it, the members' attention is distracted by their interests drawing them towards home, and they desire to leave earlier than they should leave; and when they have been here nine weeks diligently endeavoring to attend to their duties as legislators, there is no business laid before them to consider. If there is one thing that makes one doubt of the correctness of the system of responsible government and departmental government, and government under the rules of Parliament such as prevail here, according to which everything relating to financial matters and to public revenue must first be submitted by the Government of the day—I say it is the course this Government has pursued during the present Session. If, under our system, the private members were enabled to bring in resolutions dealing with the revenue, we could very easily elicit the policy of the Administration, but we are precluded from doing so. I will conclude the remarks I intended to make by saying that I justify the hon. gentleman in making his motion, and I entirely approve the course he has pursued in condemning the Government for their dilatoriness in the conduct of public business.

Mr. FOSTER. It is a little amusing to hear our hon. friends opposite attempting to score the Government for not having the business further advanced than it is. I think a little reflection on the course which has been run in Parliament from the 16th January till the present time, will bear me out in stating, as a fact, that the Government has been ready with business from the very first week of the Session, that it has had its business every Government day before the House, and that the reason Government business is not further advanced than it is to-day, is because the time has been taken up by dilatory motions from the other side of the House. The Government certainly would have been derelict in its duty, and would have been liable to censure, and should have been censured, if the House had been meeting here day after day, and week after week, and upon the Government days there had been no business ready for the House. But such has not been the case. There are three divisions of the complaint. One is that the reports have not been brought down. Now, it is quite true that the reports ought to be in the hands of members of Parliament just as soon as they can possibly be brought down after the opening of the Session; and if you will look at the records of the House you will find that all the important reports, with one or two exceptions, were down very early in the Session, and in the hands of members. Some of these reports differ from others in the period to which they bring down the record of transactions, and therefore it is not possible to have them ready for the House so early as others. Take, for instance, the Report of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries upon the fisheries. It may be open to question whether the plan pursued regarding that report is a wise one or not, but the plan has been for that report to bring up the proceedings to the end of ne year, and if proceedings to the end of the year are to be reported, they must come in from the different fishery officers in various parts of the country, after the end of the calendar year, and it is impossible for these officers to make up their yearly reports after the 31st December and have them transmitted to the Department, and then for these reports to go through the process of collocation, of printing, and of proof-reading, and be ready to be presented to the House at an early period. I remember the difficulty that met me in that respect when I was Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Though I started out with the best intentions to have that report down early, in two cases at least it was very near the end of the Session before it was possible for me to bring it down. The same is true, and to a greater degree, with reference to the chartered banks and the insurance societies. I think my hon. friend ought to have remembered to state that abstracts of these reports have been laid upon the Table of the House. These reports are also brought up to the end of the year, and it is not until after January that the inspections are made, and that the reports begin to come in. It has not been the fact in the history of the House that they have been down until nearly three months after the beginning of the year. With reference to the Department of Agriculture, I think the Minister explained, the other evening, to the House the reasons for the delay in the appearance of that report. It is a very bulky volume, and it is brought up to the 31st December. It has been put into the hands of the printer, and he is trying to facilitate the work as much as possible. It will contain 600 pages, and, as he informs me, he hopes to have it ready in two or three days. That disposes of the grievance with reference to the reports; and taking all things into consideration, and the system adopted by the different Departments as to the period of ending the reports, I do not think the delay has been such as to constitute a grievance for the House. With respect to the measures which have not been brought down as promised in the Speech, I find that the principal measures which have not been brought down are, among others, measures with reference to banking, the North-West, and to labor legislation. On looking over the record, I find there stood for second reading as early as 21st January, Sir John Thompson's Exchange and Promissory Note Bill, which was certainly a very important measure, and it engaged the attention of the House for several Government days. The Bill to amend the Adulteration Act stood for second reading on 22nd January. The Bill respecting the Patent Act also on the 27th; Bill to amend the Copyright Act on the same date; Bill to amend Trade Marks and Industrial Designs also on the same date. There have been, in all, fifteen Government Bills which have stood for second reading, the majority of which were early on the Order paper, and there are nine of them yet on the paper; and the reason they are still there is because, on Government days, there has not been sufficient time, owing to the motions made by the Opposition, for considering those measures. They have been ready for consideration and discussion, but they have not got that consideration and discussion simply because hon. gentlemen opposite have taken up those days. Then the leader of the Opposition and the leader of the third party were especially exercised because the Budget speech had not yet been delivered. It will be remembered by the House, that three years ago a change was made in our practice, and the British method was introduced; that is to say, the Estimates are brought down at an early period of the Session, so that they can be considered from time to time as available occasions arise. And when this is done and the Estimates are before the House and ready for consideration, it is not of such pressing importance that the Budget speech should be delivered at an early period. By our former practice the Estimates were not discussed until after the Budget speech had been delivered, and if that was delayed a late period was reached before the House was able to undertake the discussion and consideration of the Estimates. If I mistake not, the British Parliament meets in the second week of January—

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Second week of February.

Mr. FOSTER—and the Budget speech is seldom delivered before April, probably in the middle of April. The Imperial House is in Session two or three months before the Budget is brought down, but, in the meantime, the discussion of the Estimates proceeds de die in diem, and the time of the House is not lost. I find, in looking over the records, that the Estimates were submitted to this House on 30th January, the House having met on 16th. Every one knows, that for the first week or ten days of the Session the Committees are not ready, and very little business is done by any House. On 30th January, I say, which was specially early, the Estimates were submitted. From that time up to the present there have been fourteen Government days. The House was not willing to give more days to the Government, and it was only after spirited discussion last week that a third day was taken. On 31st January, twenty-three items of the Estimates were passed, which was, I consider, a good day's work. On 4th February, six items only were passed, the whole afternoon and evening having been occupied by a desultory discussion on one or two items of contingencies. It was not the fault of the Government that more progress was not made. On 7th February, nine items only were passed, because a debate was commenced by the leader of the Opposition, with respect to the rebate on corn to distillers, the product of which might be exported from the country. On 11th February, the next Government day, the debate was continued, and occupied the greater part of the day, after which sixteen items only were passed. On 14th, the next Government day, nine resolutions only were passed. It was not the fault of the Government that more were not passed, for we were ready with our explanations, and it was due to the indiscriminate attack made upon the different items and the great range of the discussion which took place upon the items from the benches opposite. On 18th we went into Supply, but the whole of that day and 21st, two Government days, were taken up by a debate on a North-West matter. The House decided to take that time, and hon. members cannot, therefore, hold the Government responsible for greater progress not being made on those days. On 25th, the next Government day, seven items only were passed, a long discussion taking place on some items under the head of Public Works. A great deal more work might have been done on that day and night, with as trenchant and effective criticism, it seems to me, but the time was taken up in discussion. On the 28th, twenty resolutions were passed, there being a long discussion on the various items under the Militia heading. On 4th March, there were four resolutions passed. On 6th March a long debate took place on the Harvey Branch survey, which lasted until midnight, and, as a result, only two items in the Estimates were passed. On 7th we again went into Supply, and a debate took place on Mr. Fisher's motion, a debate which resulted in nothing, so far as a vote was concerned, the amendment having been withdrawn; and after that only thirteen items were passed. On 11th inst., the next Government day, the whole time was taken up by a debate re the hon. member for Lincoln; and on the 13th, yesterday, the time was almost entirely occupied by the debate which took place on the motion of the hon. member for Bothwell. So that, of the fourteen Government days, two-thirds or three-fourths of the time was taken up with debates on motions proposed by hon. gentlemen opposite. The hon. leader of the Opposition has complained that, the Budget not having been brought down, and the tariff resolutions not being placed before the House for consideration, hon. members were precluded from discussing tariff matters. It must strike hon. members that there has been no lack of discussion on tariff matters. And if it were true that the Government in each case had declined to state their position, and declined to be drawn into a discussion previous to their policy being brought down as a whole, such statement or declaration had no influence in stopping the torrent of debate. Discussion went on all the same, and whatever information could be gathered has been gathered, and some of it may be found useful in enabling the Government to come to an ultimate decision with regard to tariff matters. I may say, with respect to tariff matters, that no matter how far in advance of the opening of the Session, the Finance Minister may undertake his consideration of possible changes, it is a fact, which will be attested to by all who have held this position, that not until the House meets, and possibly until some time after the House has met, do the deputations and representations which come from the different parts of the country, which have a perfect right to come and represent their views and give information from their standpoint, as those practically engaged in the different businesses and pursuits, reach Ottawa. It is necessary that they should be heard, it is right that their representations should be listened to, and that a fair and full consideration should be given to the statements that are made pro and con on all those important subjects. I think the Government would be liable to greater censure, if it undertook to press with undue haste its decision upon these matters, and without giving a fair and full opportunity for the various interests of trade and business in this country, to lay their views fully before the Government. So much with reference to that. I will grant, and grant at once, that the Budget, at the end of which the tariff resolutions are to be brought down, should not be delayed any longer than it is possible to have conclusions arrived at. In the general interest, and for the information of the House, this course ought to be pursued. I do not charge myself, nor do I think the Government can properly be charged, with being dilatory and with being neglectful of its duty in this respect. An immense amount of attention has been given by the Government to these matters, and they have been pushed with all the speed which can be used, consistent with coming to proper and well based conclusions. My hon. friend, the member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), in a jocular way I think, alluded to the possibility of the Government having given pointers to some of its friends with reference to tariff matters, and with a smile on his face, he ventured the assertion that he had grave suspicions that this was the case, and that it was the cause of the delay. With all due deference to my hon. friend, who, I am sorry, is not now in his place, I do not think he entertains any such suspicions, and if he or any other member of this House does entertain such suspicions, I would be glad if they would dismiss them. I do not think that hon. gentlemen consider that that assertion was made in any other than in a jocular way. One important measure foreshadowed in the Speech from the Throne, namely, the Banking Act, I hope to introduce on Tuesday next. It would have been impossible for the House to have given it any extended consideration and discussion, while so much which they thought necessary to be discussed was being disposed of. I think hon. gentlemen will find, after the political atmosphere in this House has been relieved of all that surcharged it upon these different matters which have been discussed on motions from members of the Opposition, that the House will now have been cleared, and will be in a better position to come down to hard work and thorough consideration upon this important measure; possibly more so than if it had been earlier introduced. With reference to the Budget, I may state to my hon. friend opposite, that it is possible I may introduce the financial statement a week from to-day, and if not on that day, then on the next available opportunity of the succeeding week.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It may be, and perhaps it is, very amusing to the members of the Government of this country, who reside at Ottawa, and who are subjected to no personal inconvenience by remaining here, to find that nine weeks of this Session have elapsed, during which very little business has been done; and that by consequence, after the expiry of two or three weeks more, hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House will be remaining here at very great personal inconvenience, and often at serious detriment to their business. The fact is, and every one of practical experience knows it, that looking at the avocations of the great majority of members of this House, it is on the whole possible for them, without serious injury to their respective businesses, to spare something like a hundred days or thereabouts, to attend to their parliamentary duties. Of course, having undertaken the position of members of Parliament, it is, and very often may become, their bounden duty to stay here a much longer time, and that duty they ought to discharge. But, at the same time, the Government of the country, knowing very well that four-fifths, and possibly nine-tenths of the House would be exceedingly inconvenienced if the Session seriously exceeds three months, ought to study the convenience of the members for the sake of hon.

gentlemen opposite, quite as much as for the sake of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. Under existing circumstances, it appears to me that the Government are, as my hon. friend said, liable to serious censure for not having their measures ready when the House met. The English practice is that no measure is announced in the Queen's Speech, until all the details of the measures therein announced have been repeatedly and thoroughly considered in Council and settled on. I believe, Mr. Speaker, although I speak under correction, that in every case where a measure is announced by the Queen from the Throne, that measure has been put in type for confidential consideration. I think I am right about that, although I will not insist on that point. As to these departmental reports, the hon. Minister is right enough in saying that they differ materially as to date, and that those which are brought down to the 1st January cannot be very well laid on the Table of this House before the 1st February. But, Sir, the Ministers knew a good while ago that Parliament was to meet in the middle of January, and they ought to have taken extra precaution, and made extra exertions, to have these reports down in proper time. The result of their not doing so has been, that time and again we have risen to consider important items in the Estimates, and the Government have had to withdraw them because their reports were not ready; so that the delay has been caused by their own dilatoriness and that of their own officials.

Mr. FOSTER. There were others always ready, though.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That does not matter. The House has been told they were going to consider certain items, and hon. gentlemen have been at the trouble to study the question, and, to my knowledge, were ready to discuss the items when they were called. If the Government were ready, these items would have been discussed then, and a long subsequent discussion would have been saved. When the hon. Minister told us that in the early stage of the Session there were fifteen Government Bills ready, he ought surely have informed the House that of these fifteen there was only one that could, by any possibility, be considered a measure of real importance: that was the Bill regulating promissory notes and bills of exchange. The others were small amending Bills of no very great practical moment, nor, so far as I recollect, involving any important principle. That one measure which was ready was a measure which had been very largely discussed, and had been in type the Session before this, and was brought down to us with hardly any alteration, or with very slight alteration. The most important part of the hon. gentleman's defence is this: The hon. gentleman, truly enough, states that three years ago the English method was introduced here. I approved at that time, of the introduction of the English method, because I thought it was going to tend to greater activity on the part of the Government; but I certainly did not understand that the introduction of the English method would be made an excuse for deferring the Budget to such a late period of the Session as this. What is the practice in England? The hon. gentleman knows that the English House of Commons meets, not, as he supposes, in the second week of January, but usually in the early part of February, and he knows that the House usually expects to sit for six full months; the English House rarely rises till August, and it has been known to protract its sittings beyond that month. It is true that the discussion of the Estimates is commenced before the Budget statement is made, but as a rule the Budget is brought down before or about Easter, that is to say, when the Session has advanced to one-third of its length. What do we see here? This House, from custom, has come to consider that three months, or three months and a-half is about the period of the Session. Two-thirds of that time has elapsed, and the hon. Minister is not yet in a position to name positively the date of his Budget speech. There is no comparison whatever between the practice which he uses in this House, and the practice which is used in the English House of Commons. The hon. gentleman, by delaying the Budget, provokes of necessity these discussions which he deprecates. Had he brought down his Budget in good time and stated what the Government were going to do, beyond all doubt those discussions would not have occurred. Why have those discussions been brought forward? Because my hon. friends, who are anxious and interested about these matters, knew perfectly well that if they waited for the Budget, the House would by that time be so impatient, so tired by this unnecessary delay, that it would be almost impossible to get a hearing; and they were forced by the hon. gentleman's dilatoriness to bring on those discussions at a time when there was some chance of interesting hon. gentlemen in them. But I must take serious objection to the statement of the hon. gentleman that it is his duty, forsooth, to delay the whole business of this country in order that deputations may come and recommend to him certain corners in the tariff. I dispute that altogether. I say he has no right to delay the business of the country for any such purpose. I say emphatically that it was the bounden duty of all those deputations of merchants and others, who desired to have changes made in the tariff, to have communicated with the hon. gentleman before Parliament met, so as to give him an opportunity calmly and quietly to hear their views, and afterwards inform himself on the various subjects brought before him; and I say, speaking with knowledge on the subject, that a very unfavorable condition of things exists for the hon. gentleman to consider calmly trade questions while Parliament is sitting. In the first place, he has not the time; in the second place, all sorts of unreasonable influences are likely to be exerted at that time. It is far better, for hon. gentlemen's own comfort, and in the public interest, that they should cause it to be understood distinctly that, although parties may communicate with them, they will not consider important tariff changes after the House has met; for the simple reason that, in the great majority of cases, however important the questions, or however industrious the hon. gentleman may be, that time is very unfavorable to calm consideration and enquiry. As the hon. Minister knows very well, many of the requests preferred by the deputations are in conflict one with the other, and they involve the consideration of intricate questions, requiring sometimes weeks, and sometimes months, before he can obtain that information which he ought to have when he attempts to deal with such matters. Therefore, I say that the excuse the hon. gentleman makes, that it was his duty to meet those deputations on matters of comparatively minor interest, and to keep Parliament waiting until a time when, in all probability, a great many important questions may have to be hastily discussed and summarily disposed of, is entirely at variance with proper constitutional usage; and the hon. gentleman will do a service to the country, as well as to himself and his successors in office, if he will cause it to be distinctly understood in future, that parties who desire to have changes made in the tariff should communicate with the Government before Parliament meets. As to the Banking Act, I must say that the hon. gentleman's policy appears to me to be almost equally without foundation. If there is any measure on which it is desirable that the country, as well as the gentlemen composing banking deputations, should be advised in good time of the intentions of the Government, it is just this Banking Act. If there is one measure which the House ought to have before it for a considerable time, in order that it could weigh and consider the several proposals of the Government, it is just such an Act as the Banking Act. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that when he brings down the Banking Act, as he promises to do next Tuesday, it will be at a period of the Session most eminently unfavorable to its full and ample consideration. Within a few days he expects to introduce the Tariff Bill, which, if it contains any important changes, will undoubtedly provoke many discussions, and draw men's minds from the consideration of the Banking Act. Therefore, in these particular cases the hon. gentleman is doubly at fault. The only case in which I should excuse delay in bringing down the Budget would be when no changes, or only insignificant changes, are to be made. In such a case the particular time for bringing down the Budget is a matter of comparatively small moment; but whenever important changes are to be made, seriously affecting the trade and commerce of the country, then it is the duty of the Government, and most especially the duty of the Finance Minister, to have considered those charges carefully before Parliament met, and to bring down the Budget at a particularly early period, so that full and ample time may be afforded for their discussion. That has not been done, but the reverse, and ten weeks of the Session will have elapsed before the Budget reaches us; and, except by subjecting the members on both sides to very serious inconvenience, it will be quite impossible for these matters and the balance of our Estimates to receive anything like the consideration they deserve.

THE TORONTO UNIVERSITY.

Mr. BLAKE. I beg to call the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite to a question of public interest, which, it seems to me, ought to be considered by us for a moment at this stage of the Session. I refer to the matter which was brought up in the House yesterday by an hon. member for one of the divisions of Toronto, and which the right hon. the First Minister asked to be allowed to stand. I mean the question as to whether the Government intended to submit to Parliament some proposition with reference to the recent conflagration at the University of Toronto. I have some reason to believe that suggestions have been made from more than one quarter to the Administration on that subject; and, following the course which it has always seemed to me more expedient to pursue, I am anxious to make any suggestions I have to make with reference to a money grant, here openly and under my responsibility as a member of this House. I wish to submit that the circumstances of the case are such as may not unreasonably induce the favorable consideration of those who are responsible for the administration of public affairs, and of the House at large, to some exceptional proceedings on this particular occasion. The institution, whose loss gives rise to my present observations, is one which may not unfairly be described as of a national character. It is one wholly unsectarian, and whose benefits are participated in by all citizens, of whatever creed or origin, of the large Province to which they belong; and in a community like ours, which is, and is long destined, I hope, to be a democratic community, without any enormous accumulation in individual hands of property, composed mainly of men who are dependent for their maintenance upon their own labor and exertions, it is of peculiar importance that institutions of the highest class for learning should not suffer serious impairment, but, on the contrary, should be efficiently promoted. The character of the calamity to which I refer is so exceptional that a remarkably marked and far extended interest and sympathy have already been exhibited. In the neighboring Province, a proposition to grant aid, as a mark of sympathy, is now far advanced and will doubtless become effectual, and in the city of London a committee has been formed, comprising the names of very distinguished men, with whom we are familiar as having filled, some of them, the highest station in our country, as the representatives of our Sovereign, and others as former Colonial Secretaries, with the view to signify, in a substantial, tangible manner, that a bond of sympathy exists, even between us and that remote community. I may say that, after a very careful consideration of the situation, which my own relation to the University rendered it my duty to give, I am convinced that the peculiar position is one which entitles us to say that the exigency is great. Contemporaneously with the loss of the library, to which I am about more particularly to refer, has occurred the destruction of the main portion of the fabric; and the restoration of that portion, without any unnecessary expense whatever, in the most economical manner possible, consistent with the efficiency of the institution as it now stands, will involve a very large expenditure for the old and the new necessary buildings, beyond all the public or municipal and all the private assistance which we can now fairly expect. A large public grant has been made, a municipal grant is hoped for, and the liberality of the friends of the institution, including the graduates, has been appealed to, and appealed to so far with gratifying results. But from what I know of the situation, I am convinced that all possible resources which are available will have to be applied in order that the efficiency of the institution in its present condition, and looking to its present needs, may be maintained. I am not at all insensible of the difficulty and the delicacy of the situation in more than one respect. A question may be raised with reference to our interference with educational institutions, a question may be raised also with reference to money grants, which may form an inconvenient precedent; and to these considerations I am myself disposed to attach—although this particular institution is one which would naturally induce me to think lightly of them—all due weight. But it seems to me that the case, in the particular aspect to which I am about to allude, is not, after all, a difficult one, and is open to a solution which relieves us from difficulty, because what is suggested, and what seems to be the most practical method of affording relief, is that the Government should propose to the House some relief in respect of that duty—that very onerous duty, as I venture to conceive it is, the duty on knowledge—which is imposed in the shape of the tax on books. We have a library to replace which will cost more than $150,000, and that at prices and values irrespective of duty, or, at any rate, having regard only to the light book tax which prevailed formerly. The book tax is now, as well as I can remember, at the rate of 15 per cent., and it seems to me that no inconvenient precedent would be created, owing to the exceptional character of the occasion, and the almost impossibility—I hope the impossibility, or, at any rate, the extreme improbability, of its recurrence—if the Government would make up their mind to propose such a grant, based on such a view, as would involve the remission of the tax on the books to be supplied. It is with a view of making that suggestion to the Government that I have ventured to interpose for a moment between you, Sir, and the adoption of the motion now before the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Every one in the House will agree with the hon. gentleman that the recent conflagration of the University of Toronto is a great blow to education in the Province of Ontario, and indeed in the Dominion, by the destruction of that noble building, and of the magnificent library which had there been collected; and I can assure the hon. gentleman that this subject is occupying the attention of the Government. I see that my hon. friend is conscious of the difficulties which arise with regard to pecuniary assistance being given by the Parliament of Canada to this institution, and I need not allude to them any further. My hon. friend has made a suggestion as to one mode by which this House could show its sympathy with the university in its disaster with as little inconvenience as possible. All I can say now is that the subject will receive the immediate attention of the Government, and I hope on Monday to be able to make a satisfactory statement to the House.

Mr. MULOCK. I would like to supplement the words which have fallen from the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake). I trust that the relations between the Dominion Parliament and the Province of Ontario are not such as will limit our relief even to that mentioned by the hon. gentleman. The Parliament of Canada has on many occasions granted aid of a money character, not strictly within the obligations of the Dominion. We have, on occasion, relieved distress in Provinces where disasters such as the conflagration in question have taken place. It is but recently we granted $10,000 to relieve the people of the city of Hull when they were visited by a conflagration, and on a former occasion we granted aid to relieve the distress in St. John arising from a similar cause. Therefore, I think that the Government will not find insuperable difficulties in the way of granting substantial money aid to the institution in question. I mention this now because a number of hon. gentlemen in this House, not on the Opposition side, have been good enough to tell me what their sentiments were on this subject. Perhaps I would not be altogether violating the confidence of some hon. members if I were to refer pointedly to the member for East Toronto (Mr. Small), who, the moment the conflagration took place, spoke to me on the subject, and intimated his desire that the Government of which he is a supporter should contribute to the relief of the university. I would rather desire to propose an enlargement of the suggestion of the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake). While I am glad to see the relief which has been given by the remission of duty on books entering the country for that university, I hope it may be possible to go further and to do what has been suggested by some members of the House, and give some cash towards the restoration of the institution.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I was not aware that there had been any communication from the Government on the subject, but I have been reminded that we had a discussion of the matter in Cabinet. It was brought to our attention, in the first place, by the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Small), and we came to an informal conclusion to remit the duties on any books imported into Canada for that institution, and that communication was made informally by my hon. friend the Minister of Customs. I had not that in my mind when I spoke, because there was no formal examination of the matter, but there was an informal examination.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Steam communication with the Magdalen Islands..... $8,000

Mr. KENNY. Before that item passes, in the absence of the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Joncas), and with his permission, I desire to address a few words to the Committee in reference to the manner in which this contract has been carried out for some years past. I am reliably informed that five years ago, when the contract with the owners of the Beaver expired, the residents of Magdalen Islands, who, of course, are more concerned in this matter than those who live on the mainland, because it is the only chance they have of communicating with the mainland by steam, made known to the Government that in their opinion the Beaver was unsuitable for the work she was performing. If she was unsuitable for that work five years ago, it is very evident, and it is confirmed from all I hear, that she is still more unsuitable to-day. Unfortunately, the wishes of the people of the Magdalen Islands were disregarded five years ago, and my hon. friend, the member for Gaspé (Mr. Joncas), and I, about two years ago, made it known to the Government that this steamer Beaver was not suitable for the work in which she was engaged; that she was a vessel of small power, and that, in fact, she was hardly safe. I then understood from the Government that it was their intention to provide for a better service, and the hon. the Minister of Finance certainly gave me and my hon. friend from Gaspé to understand that every care would be taken to provide for a better service. I was, therefore, very much surprised to receive a telegram from Halifax within the last few days stating that the Beaver was to be put on the route again. I consider it to be my duty to bring this matter most formally before the attention of the Government and of the House. Whilst I have no personal knowledge of the Beaver, as I have never seen her, yet acquaintances of mine and correspondents of mine who reside on the Magdalen Islands, have asked me, when they were in Halifax, to bring this matter to the attention of the Government, and have told me, amongst other things, that the Beaver has to be eased down in any light head sea, and that, in October, 1889, it took this vessel, to which we were paying this large subsidy of $10,000 a year, ten hours to go from Georgetown to Pictou, a distance which the Stanley accomplishes in two hours. Last year I called the attention of the Minister of Finance to this matter, and stated my opinion that the vessel was inefficient and too small and quite unsuitable for the work, and another hon. gentleman stated that he agreed with my remarks and could even go further than I dared go—and I presume he did so because he had a personal knowledge of the vessel, which I did not possess—and he stated that the vessel was actually unsafe, and that this subsidy was really more than the Beaver was worth. Another hon. gentleman, also possessing, I have no doubt, personal knowledge of the matter, and who, residing in Prince Edward Island, may have occasionally travelled in the vessel, brought to the notice of the Government the Beaver's inefficiency. The Minister of Finance then told us that the vessel had passed inspection, and, necessarily, must be safe. In 1889, this vessel took ten hours to go from Georgetown to Pictou, as I am informed, and that is sufficient to show that she is certainly not fit for the work.

Mr. MULOCK. What is the distance?

Mr. KENNY. It takes the Stanley about two hours. I may also say that a passenger, who was on board the steamer on that occasion, told me that the boiler of the steamer had been patched, and that the patch was actually leaking, and, therefore, it was impossible to keep up steam. Now, hon. gentlemen who are acquainted with this navigation, know that in the fall of the year, in that locality, gales suddenly spring up; and as this steam service is the only means which our fellow-countrymen who reside on the Magdalen Islands have of communicating with the mainland, common humanity demands that we should give them an efficient service. Now, as regards the inspection, I desire to speak with all due respect of any inspection which Mr. Stevens would make—I presume he was the inspector of boilers in that locality. I know him to be a most efficient and loyal officer, and I would be sorry to bring in question any statement which he would make. But I do say to the Government that this vessel is thoroughly unfit for the work, and that it is not fair for the people of the Magdalen Islands to put the Beaver on the route again. Last year the attention of the Government was called to the fact that this vessel was unseaworthy, and it is the very refinement of cruelty to put such a vessel on the service. I know that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance is anxious to improve the service, but I must say that I think it would be a mistake for him to take this Beaver on, even temporarily. An impression seemed to prevail that I, in bringing this matter, as I have repeatedly done, to the attention of the Government, was influenced by a desire that the service should be extended to Halifax, and that Halifax should be made the terminal port. Well, Sir, it is true that that is the desire of the people of the Magdalen Islands, because all their trade is with Halifax, and my contention is that if we had a suitable steamer, she could perform the service within a week. But I recognise that the mails should start from Pictou, as they do now, and that they should go to Pictou, as they do now; but I go further, and say that if we had a suitable steamer she could make her weekly trips also to Halifax. I may also point out to the hon. the Finance Minister, that late in the fall the Magdalen Islands can be reached from the southern shore of Nova Scotia, when the harbor of Pictou is closed. This happened, I think, the year before last, when my hon. friend the Postmaster General engaged the steamer Harlow to carry the mails to the Magdalen Islands, because the harbor of Pictou was closed by ice, or it was not safe to send them in the Beaver. In the early navigation in the spring, sailing vessels frequently reach the Magdalen Islands from the eastern side of Cape Breton, from the south side of Nova Scotia, much earlier than it is possible for them to do by way of Pictou. But be that as it may, I do not press that point, although I think it is of some commercial value, and should be considered. At the request of my hon. friend the member for Gaspé (Mr. Joncas), who is unavoidably absent to-day, I desire to record his protest against the employment of the steamer Beaver in that service. I consider, from the knowledge which has been given to me by reliable persons on this matter, that I cannot do so too formally, and I have no apology to offer to the House for detaining them in a matter which, perhaps, to many hon. gentlemen, may be considered of very minor importance.

Mr. FOSTER. I think my hon. friend who has just sat down should have enlarged his information beyond the scope of a telegram that he received from Halifax, and should have let this House into a confidence which he himself possesses, and in giving which to the House, he would not have violated anything that has passed between himself and me. His telegram is this: That the steamer Beaver is to be put on to the Magdalen Island route. Now, everybody knows that the term of contract of the old steamer Beaver has expired, and that advertisements have been called for with a view of providing a new contract for five years. The telegram as sent to my hon. friend, and as it was read by him to this House, without any further explanation, would carry with it the idea that the Government, despite the protest of the people of the Magdalen Islands, and despite the interests of humanity, as well as of quick transit, had determined that the Beaver should go on again for a term of five years. Now, such is not the fact. I quite agree with my hon. friend, and I agree also with my hon. friend from

Gaspé, who has been very insistent and pressing in his desire to get for the people of the Magdalen Islands a better service—I quite agree with both gentlemen that the Government would be derelict in its duty if it did not give to the people of the Magdalen Islands the best possible service that can be given, consistent with a reasonable expenditure. When the question was mentioned to me by the hon. member for Gaspé, as well as by my hon. friend later, I stated to both of them, that it was the intention of the Government to give the people of the Magdalen Island a good service, and it is the intention of the Government to do that. The people of the Magdalen Islands, in their petitions to the Postmaster General, and to myself, through the member for Gaspé, asked that this service should not only be better, but they condemned the Beaver, because she was an unsuitable vessel, and asked that she be not put on the route again, and asked, also, that the route should be from Halifax to the Magdalen Islands via Pictou. As my hon. friend has pointed out, there were serious objections to that. Pictou is the nearest mail point, and for the better transmission of the mails, a vessel would have to call at Pictou, and the Government did not feel that it would be justified in giving a subsidy to a steamer to run from Halifax to Pictou, and then to the Magdalen Islands, thus coming into direct competition with the trade of our own Intercolonial Railway, over which a large amount of freight is taken to Pictou, thence to Prince Edward Island ports, and to the Magdalen Island ports. Well, tenders were called for, advertisements were published, and returns were received; and after a sifting of these returns they were reduced to three tenders, upon a range of prices not very different as to the amounts. One of the three afterwards withdrew his tender, and that left two available tenderers, one of which was from Fraser & Halliday, and the other was from a Pictou company. Of the two, that of Fraser & Halliday, if accepted and carried out, would cost the country between $1,100 and $1,300 per year less, and, I believe, would give just as good a service, and the Government, upon my own recommendation—and I think it was a proper one to make—did not think we ought to go to the expenditure of $1,100 or $1,300 a year more, for the sake of one single thing, which I will now state. The essence of the Fraser & Halliday offer is, that they shall build and put on the route, a new vessel suitable in every way and fulfilling the demands of the Government, and that they shall have that vessel on the route, on or about 1st July. Considerable time necessarily elapsed before the acceptance of the tenders was finally settled, and of course, it will be scarcely fair now to ask that this be done by 1st July. But the essence of the contract entered into will be this: that about 1st July or 1st August, giving them another month, they shall put on the route a new vessel, a speedy boat, to meet in every way the Government's requirements, and, I believe, the requirements of the people of the Magdalen Islands, but until that time they shall be allowed to use the steamer Beaver, which they have had on the route, provided she is a safe boat. It is impossible for the vessel to run until she is certified by the Government inspectors, and any hon. gentleman who knows either of them will be satisfied that a certificate will not be granted to that or any other vessel until it has been thoroughly inspected and found to be seaworthy. I am quite willing to say this, that the Beaver is not a suitable boat to be continued on that route, and I am determined she shall not be continued on that route; but it is not unreasonable to allow the contractors who propose to put on a new vessel, suitable in every way, within three months from the time of opening navigation, and when they will do this at a figure about $1,300 less than the next available tender, to put on the Beaver for that intervening time; or if the Beaver is not certificated and not safe, another boat which is certificated and safe. I believe the interests of humanity, the interests of the people of the Magdalen Islands, and the interests of the people of this country, will not be militated against by the Government taking the line of conduct which has been outlined.

Mr. KENNY. The Minister of Finance has almost insinuated that I was not candid in this matter.

Mr. FOSTER. You did not give all the information to the House.

Mr. KENNY. I told the House I quite recognised that the Minister of Finance was desirous of securing a better service.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman will allow me to interrupt him, I desire to say that this is what I meant: that the information given by the hon. gentleman would lead the House to believe that the steamer Beaver, and the Beaver only, was going to be placed on the route, under the five years' contract. And that is not correct.

Mr. KENNY. I had no intention to convey any such information to the House. I thought I admitted that I believed the Minister of Finance was desirous of securing a better service. I do say, and I repeat it, that in view of the fact that although the people of the Magdalen Islands protested, as strongly as they do to-day, against the Beaver, she was still kept on five years. There is an element of risk that if she be allowed to start the service she may be kept on much longer than perhaps the Minister intends. That is what I wish to convey to the House, and I did so, for I thought I was simply discharging a public duty in conveying to the Government and to the House, and, through it, to the country, the information which had been placed in my hands, as a public man, to bring to the notice of the House. I think the Minister was perfectly right to accept, of course it was his duty to accept, the lowest tender; but I felt that if once the Beaver got on the route, she would be there much longer than 1st July, and that is the reason I felt, in the absence of my hon. friend from Gaspé (Mr. Joncas), I was discharging a promise to him, and fulfilling a public duty, in bringing the matter most formally to the attention of the House, without the slightest desire or intention, on my part, of reserving any information which I ought to have given to the House. I know quite well that the Minister of Finance intends to get a better boat for the service, but I think it is a mistake, and I repeat it here publicly, to take the Beaver even to 1st July.

Steam communication between Grand Manan and the Mainland..... $4,000

Mr. LOVITT. Why is this increase?

Mr. FOSTER. There is no increase.

Mr. LOVITT. There appears to be an increase of $500.

Mr. FOSTER. The whole amount paid is $4,000, of which $400 was paid by the Post Office Department, on account of mail changes, the rest being paid out of the Finance Department. The whole amount this year is paid out of the Finance Department.

Subsidy to a line of Steamers between Liverpool or London, or both, and St. John and Halifax..... $25,000

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The granting of a subsidy to a line of steamers like this is, I think, hardly defensible on public grounds. The steamer from Halifax and St. John is running in competition with other steamers, and as all these steamers would run under any circumstances, this vote means so much public money thrown away. On public grounds I cannot see that it is defensible. There are steamers coming to these ports all the time without any subsidy. Although these subsidised steamers come to Halifax, I cannot see why this particular line should receive a subsidy and other lines of steamers should not receive any subsidy.

Mr. WELSH. I have always opposed subsidies of this kind except where they are necessary for the conveyance of mails or passengers. When the public money is given as subsidies to steamers engaged in carrying freight a blow is struck at the marine interests of the Dominion. Direct injury is done to the private enterprise of vessel owners and to the marine interest generally, which is one of the most important in the country. A few days ago a question was raised as to the subsidy given to a steamer running from St. John and Yarmouth to the West Indies, the amount being $4,000 a trip, simply for the purpose of carrying freight. By so doing the Government are handicapping the marine interests of the Provinces. Very many ships are laid up, and a number of fishermen who formerly were employed in that service during the winter are out of employment, and thus one of the first industries of the Dominion is injured by subsidies being granted to certain lines in the carrying trade. You can have merchandise carried by a hundred routes, and by almost a hundred different modes of conveyance, to any part of the world, without subsidies, and I fail to see where the public interests will be benefited by granting a subsidy of $25,000 a year for a line between St. John or Halifax and Liverpool and London. It is a bad policy, and it injures the country instead of benefiting it. If a line of steamers was established between York Factory or some other port and Hudson Bay and England, to connect with a line of railway from Winnipeg to New York, by which route immigrants could be placed in the North-West at $20 per head, and grain could be shipped from there to England at half the present cost, I would not object to a subsidy being granted to such a new enterprise, at all events, until it had become established and other lines had entered into competition with it. But where it is proposed to grant a large sum of money to subsidise a line of steamers from Halifax and St. John, when steamers are coming there without full cargoes, and are leaving without full cargoes, that is a waste of the public money. I object to all these grants for purely trade purposes. Trade should be left to be developed by private enterprise. The Anglo-Saxons are not devoid of enterprise, and if there is any money to be made and any freights to be obtained in any part of the world, ships will be built to secure that trade. I think this is a bad policy, and I do not like to see it continued.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). If the system of subsidies is to be maintained, I think that this subsidy is one which well deserves the attention of Parliament. The Allan and Dominion Lines go to Quebec and Montreal in the summer, and with the exception of a few freight steamers, the Furness Line, which runs direct from London to Halifax and St. Johns, is really the only passenger and freight line carrying on trade regularly with these two ports, and it has been a great accommodation not only for freight traffic, but for passengers as well. It seems to me that so long as subsidies are granted, this line is entitled to a subsidy, and that the granting of it is not unfair to other steamers. The Furness Line has carried out the terms of its contract remarkably well, and persons who have travelled by these steamers speak of them as being very good vessels. So far as the Province of New Brunswick is concerned, the Furness Line has been a great advantage and convenience to us.

Mr. KENNY. I heartily agree with the remarks of my hon. friend for St. John (Mr. Weldon). In the Maritime Provinces, no subsidy has been more useful, or has helped more to develop our export trade than the subsidy granted to the Furness Line. It is a fact that other steamers do occasionally, and not infrequently, call at Halifax, and some of them at St. John, N.B.; but every merchant knows that in the keen competition which exists to-day for foreign trade, and for which we are competing with other nations, nothing is so necessary as regularity of transportation, and that can only be secured by steam. I do not think there is any expenditure which we make in the line of steamship subsidies, which is more useful and more beneficial to the country than this very vote. We all know that, in the case of the other subsidised steamers which call at Halifax, it is sometimes impossible to ship even half a dozen barrels of apples to a friend in England, at Christmas time. They positively refuse to take any freight at all, and on their outward voyages they divert transatlantic trade from Canadian ports to American ports, to the detriment of Canadian labor. The Parliament of Canada, therefore, is actually voting subsidies to transatlantic mail steamers which are diverting all the trade they possibly can from Canada. I know that is due to the fact that these lines go to Portland, where they are identified with the Grand Trunk or some other railway system, to which they transfer their freight. We may hope that when the Canadian Pacific Railway is completed to the Maritime Provinces, and when the programme of 1885 is carried out—we have to blame only the present Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway for its incompleteness—or when the new branch of the Grand Trunk Railway from Edmundston to Moncton is built, these steamers will land all their freight in our ports. With regard to the Furness Line, and with all due respect to hon. gentlemen who entertain contrary opinions, I am strongly of the same view as has been expressed by my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Weldon).

Mr. LOVITT. Would it be possible for the Finance Minister to give us the particulars as to the cargoes which are carried by the Furness Line steamers? If the greater portion of the cargoes carried by that line are composed of deals, then there cannot be any defence at all for granting this subsidy.

Mr. FOSTER. It is a condition incident to the payment of the subsidy, that we get the manifest of these steamers on their inward and outward voyages. I must say that the Furness Line has been, in the main, about as satisfactory a line as we have subsidised, both in the way in which it has conducted its business and in the development of trade. At the same time, it is only fair to say that the line has not yet developed business sufficient to pay for carrying on its monthly trips, unless aided by a subsidy. I looked very carefully into that last year, and I became convinced that, if the $25,000 were taken off, the vessels themselves would be retired from that route. I do not, however, hold out the idea that these $25,000 are to be paid always; and, in fact, I have informed the managers of the line that we look for it to be self-supporting. My great hope is that, when the Canadian Pacific Railway gets into thorough working order, and has its connections made, that there will be a large attraction of freight for that line of steamers, to St. John and Halifax, and by which their present cargoes can be largely supplemented. The company itself is looking towards that. We believe that in the course of time, trade will so develop that a monthly line, and I hope a fortnightly, or weekly line, self-supporting, will be found running between these ports and Great Britain. The only lines crossing the Atlantic, which we now subsidise, are the Allan and Furness Lines. The Furness Line visits these ports in the Maritime Provinces which the Allan Line cannot do the year through, going as it does a part of the year on a different route, for reasons which have been stated by my hon. friend. I do not believe that subsidies ought to be granted to steamship lines for commercial purposes to any greater extent than will enable them to develop a self-supporting traffic.

Mr. ELLIS. It is quite apparent that any line of steamers to the St. Lawrence, subsidised for the transport of mails and passengers, and carrying freight, must have the effect of discriminating against the port of St. John, N.B. I think this is the strong ground upon which the mercantile community of the Maritime Provinces place their claim for a subsidy. The effect of paying subsidies to steamers on the St. Lawrence route, was to cheapen freight to the St. Lawrence, and, therefore, to make it more difficult for the merchants of St. John to carry on an independent business.

General LAURIE. I cannot understand how hon. gentlemen can state in this House, that it is impossible to find cargoes for these steamers. I have crossed in them several times, and they have been filled with freight to the hatches, and also carried deck cargoes, while they have gone with full cargoes each trip. I know from the promoters of the line, that they are building an additional vessel, because they are unable to transport all the freight that is offered to them. In fact, such an excess of freight has been offered, that they were unable to take some of it, and have been obliged to ship lobsters from New York.

Mr. BORDEN. If the statement of the hon. member for Shelburne (General Laurie) is correct, and I believe it is, it is clear that the trade has been developed, and that there is no further reason for the continuation of this subsidy. In fact, I know that the subsidy is objected to on the ground that it really interferes with competition at Halifax and St. John, and that, instead of being beneficial to the persons who have cargoes to ship from Nova Scotia to the other side, it militates against them by enabling this line to keep out competing lines which would otherwise come to Halifax.

Subsidy to Steamer between Campbellton and Gaspé.....$12,500

Mr. WELDON (St. John). What boat is on that route now?

Mr. FOSTER. The Admiral. She is under contract, as I explained last year.

Mr. FLYNN. I see that there is no vote this year for a boat between Port Mulgrave and East Bay.

Mr. FOSTER. The reason that has been left out is that it was supposed, at the time this vote was inserted in the Estimates, that the Cape Breton Railway would be opened by the 1st of July next. When that road is opened it will not be possible to carry out this subsidy. Whatever arrangements are then made will have to be on a different line. However, it is not probable that the road will be opened on the 1st of July, and the Government will take into consideration the continuance or renewal of the subsidy until the railway is opened.

Mr. FLYNN. Even after the road is opened a great portion of the Island will require a service such as is afforded by these steamers.

Mr. FOSTER. That will be looked after by the Post Office Department.

Steam communication between Prince Edward Island and the Mainland. $5,500

Mr. ROBERTSON. What is the reason this vote is increased by $500?

Mr. FOSTER. This amount is about what the contract will come to. We pay the boats, not by the year, but by the trip, between Summerside and Shediac, and between Pictou and Charlottetown.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I was hoping that the Minister was giving this $500 increase for the purpose of establishing the line between ports in King's County and Pictou which I brought to his notice last Session. The hon. Minister is going back on his promise.

Mr. FOSTER. I made no promise.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The hon. Minister said he would take the matter into favorable consideration. I wish again to bring to his notice the importance of establishing a line of communication between the terminus of the Prince Edward Island Railway in King's County, and the Intercolonial Railway at Pictou. The county I represent has not been properly treated in this respect. We pay our share of the cost of the communication between Summerside, Shediac and Charlottetown, and receive no benefit from it, and, as the subsidy was cut down by $5,000 last year, I think the hon. Minister might fairly appropriate a small sum to afford the communication I refer to. It would be a great advantage to the inhabitants of King's County, and I believe, with the aid of a small subsidy to start it, the line would be a paying one in a few years.

Mr. FOSTER. I find one thing in the way, that is, the strenuous opposition of my friend in my eye, who is opposed on principle to these subsidies. I am afraid he would be in my hair if I granted it.

Mr. WELSH. I still stick to the principle I enunciated just now, but the Government have established the principle of subsidising both freight and passenger services, and if they do it for Halifax, where twenty or thirty steamers go out every month, they are bound to give my hon. friend from King's the communication with the Intercolonial Railway which he speaks of. Hon. gentlemen may say that I am interested. So I am, but I do not care two-pence about it. The subsidy used to be $10,000 a year, but last year the Government cut it down to $5,000, paying so much per trip; but as we had a very early spring and a very late fall, there were more trips than usual, and the subsidy amounted to $500 more than was voted. If it is right to grant this subsidy, I will support the claim of King's County to have a fair share of it. The hon. junior member for Halifax will know that I am fully alive to all the requirements of Halifax and St. John; and although it is not a good principle to subsidise steamers sailing from those ports, where so many sail to different ports in Great Britain, I am not going to make a particular objection to it. If it is the Government's policy to give subsidies for commercial enterprise, they ought to give a little to the sailing fleets of the Dominion. My hon. friend the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) is largely interested in sailing vessels, and I would recommend him to propose a subsidy for wooden ships, so as to encourage wooden ship-building. It would be a very good thing to start a new ship-building industry in the Maritime Provinces, by means of subsidies. I wonder the hon. gentleman has not proposed it before, since he is so favorable to all those railway and steamship subsidies.

Mr. ROBERTSON. You are aware that the steamer Stanley runs only in the winter, and as soon as the summer navigation opens we have no steam service. In the Department of Marine and Fisheries there is a petition largely signed, sent to the Minister of Marine, who is the representative of Pictou County, in favor of this line of steamers to which I have alluded; and as this is a very important matter, I wish to press on the Minister of Finance the necessity of voting a small subsidy of $500 or $1,000 to start a line in that section during the summer season.

Mr. FOSTER. The petition of which the hon. gentleman speaks has been transferred to my Department and will be considered. When the Supplementary Estimates come down, my hon. friend will have an opportunity of seeing whether it is there or not.

Steam communication between St. John, and ports in Basin of Minas, Parrsborough, Maitland, Summersville, Hantsport, Avondale, Windsor, Kingsport, Wolfville, &c..... $3,000

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I think this is a wrong principle, and this amount should not be voted. These places are already connected by railways with the central part of the Province, and I do not think it should be the object of the Government to supply trading facilities where there is already railway connection.

Mr. KENNY. If my hon. friend would read the whole resolution he would notice that it includes Maitland, where there is a large ship-building industry, which the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Welsh) has so much at heart. I think this is a wise expenditure of money, because it reaches points where it is not possible to get merchandise—such as Maitland—without facility of communication by steamers.

Mr. BORDEN. I quite differ with the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) on this point. This is a trade which is being built up by this subsidy, and which fills a great need. Moreover, the steamers engaged in this line are built at home—in Hanniford—by the Messrs. Churchill, and this grant is not only an encouragement to trade on the basin, and between the basin and St. John, but to the construction of steamships in our country.

Mr. ELLIS. I would like to know what difference there is between granting a subsidy to a steamship line like this, and a line of railway? We build lines all over the country, and then we discover a shorter route and build a competing line. What difference is there between subsidising a line of steamers along the coast, which will carry goods and passengers, and subsidising a line of railway to carry them?

Mr. SCRIVER. The railways develop settlement.

Mr. ELLIS. And the steamers develop existing settlements. Steam communication will answer that purpose as well as railways, and answer it better along this line of coast, so that, by a parity of reasoning, you must stand by the steamers in a case of this kind.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I do not agree with the hon. gentleman, because it is always understood to be sound policy, where ports are entirely isolated, such as those along our western coasts, like Shelburne and Barrington, and which have not the benefit of railway communication, to grant a subsidy for steam communication; but in a case like this, where these counties are all intersected by railways, there is no need for subsidising steamers. It has been a source of complaint from Halifax generally—but, perhaps, my hon. colleague finds it so natural to differ with me that he did not remember it—that this steamer has been subsidised to take trade away from Halifax. With regard to our western trade, the complaint is that, handicapped as we are by the expense of bringing our freight to the Windsor and Annapolis station, we cannot compete with these places to which goods can be water-borne from St. John, by means of the subsidy granted by the Government. The merchants of Halifax are not much indebted to my worthy colleague for the views he has given on this question; but, independently of that, I think it is unsound in principle, where there is railway communication, that the Government should give subsidies to aid steam communication.

General LAURIE. The coast shore of Maitland and Summerville is not approached by railways at all. The northern coast of Hants County is very thickly settled, and not within twenty miles of a railway, and this line of steamers affords great convenience to the people residing in all those places.

Mr. KENNY. My hon. colleague, when he called attention to this matter, did so on the ground that these different places named had access to the railway system of the Province. What I desired to point out was that some of the places named—notably the port of Maitland—have not; and if my hon. friend had handled ships' outfits in the fall of the year, and wanted to get them transported to Maitland late in the season, when it was necessary to get a ship off in a hurry, he would find this steam communication a great convenience. I quite agree with my hon. friend that, in this matter of the distribution of public moneys, the city of St. John in much more favored than Halifax.

Mr. WELSH. You are grabbers, both of you, in that respect.

Mr. KENNY. It has been a mystery to me ever since I came here why such should be the case; but, as a matter of fact, if hon. gentlemen would take the trouble to examine the list of subsidies, they will see that St. John receives a great deal more than Halifax. I rise merely to point out that I defended this on the ground that points are reached by water in this way which are not reached by rail.

Mr. WELSH. I notice that in political matters when one of these hon. gentlemen stands up to advocate a measure, the other gets up to oppose it, but when it comes to be a case of grab they are united solidly. They do not stand up when a reasonable question is brought up from Prince Edward Island. I see an item here of an increase of $2,500 to two lines of steamers running between St. John and Halifax. There will not be a word against that.

Steam communication between Halifax and Newfoundland, via Cape Breton at $200 per trip, not to exceed..... $2,000

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) How often does this steamboat run?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not the information here, and, therefore, I cannot speak by the book; but I think that last year she made a good many more trips than, at the rate of $200 per trip, would amount to $2,000.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). That service is not at St. Johns, Newfoundland?

Mr. FOSTER. No, it is to the west coast.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) To what ports?

Mr. FOSTER. It stops at three or four of the smaller villages on the west coast.

Mr. KENNY. That contract practically brings to Canada the whole of the trade of West Newfoundland.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) I should like to know what trade is brought ?

Mr. FOSTER. The manifests show that during the last year the trade has increased very largely.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) The trade may have increased very much, but it may be like the statement made in regard to one of the boroughs which was to be disfranchised under the Reform Bill in England. One hon. member stated that the voters had increased 100 per cent. When asked to explain, he said that originally there was only one voter, who was a turnpike man, but he got married, and the voting power had increased 100 per cent. There may have been a large increase in the trade, but I should like to know what the actual increase is.

Mr. FOSTER. I will bring down the statement. It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 109) respecting the Board of Trade of Toronto.—(Mr. Small.)

Bill (No. 113) to authorise the Toronto Savings Bank Charitable Trust to invest certain Funds.—(Mr. Small.)

Bill (No. 74) respecting the Confederation Life Association.—(Mr. Cockburn.)

Bill (No. 79) respecting the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada.—(Mr. Curran.)

Bill (No. 86) respecting the Central Ontario Railway Company.—(Mr. Corby.)

RELIEF OF GEORGE T. SMITH.

Mr. SMALL moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 98) to confer on the Commissioner of Patents certain powers for the relief of George T. Smith.

Mr. WATSON. Before you leave the Chair, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice whether he thinks it is good legislation to revive patents that have practically lapsed. The patentee in this case, George T. Smith, is a manufacturer of bolting machines, and, I believe, he has failed recently. I think we ought to be very careful about reviving patents that have lapsed.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think that, generally speaking, any legislation of that kind is very much to be regretted, and very much to be guarded against. I must say, with regard to the last Bill that passed, I had a good many misgivings on the subject. I believe it was very carefully examined in the Committee of Private Bills, and I think that the applicant made a case on which Parliament, after the fullest enquiry, might accede to the application to have his patent renewed—although I think still that it was not a case free from doubt. This one, I think, was a pretty clear case. Under the circumstances, I think the patentee was not guilty of any neglect at all. In due time he gave his solicitor the amount to be remitted to the Commissioner of Patents, and the solicitor was in due time to remit the amount to Ottawa; but I understand that, through a fraud on the part of his clerk, only half the amount reached Ottawa, the remainder being kept. Under these circumstances, I think the patentee was not guilty of any neglect, or any abandonment of his patent, and that the solicitor was not in fault; and the question is, whether this party should be deprived of the renewal of his patent by circumstances over which he had no control. Still, I agree with the hon. gentleman that we ought to be very careful about making precedents of this kind.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I understand the Minister to say that the fraud had been committed by a clerk in the office of the solicitor?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I agree with my hon. friend who spoke first, that this is a very dangerous precedent to set, when the rule is so closely observed in the Department with regard to the prepayment of fees. I believe these parties have had the benefit of this patent for a long time, and I am informed that the renewal is strongly opposed by other parties who are interested in the business, as being unjust to them, and detrimental to the public interest. I think the Minister will acknowledge that the general public should have the privilege of using this patent after a certain time, and the millers, I understand, object to this Act. Some questions have been raised with which I am not familiar, as to whether the patent should ever have been granted, but, of course, that is not a matter of consideration at the present time. I think we should not overlook the interest of those who are using, or who wish to use, or to take advantage of a part, or all, of the machines manufactured under this patent. I know there are serious objections raised by prominent manufacturers throughout the country, to this legislation. The hon. Minister will see that if the law is set aside in this case, it will afford a precedent for other parties in the future to seek similar legislation.

Mr. TROW. There is nothing irregular in reference to this patent. It was a branch of the business that was formerly carried on in Toronto by the Howland Company. I had the honor of purchasing from the Howland Company their right to the Dominion, for $8,000, for which I gave them cash. This is a distinct branch of the business, unconnected with those parties who have become insolvent in Jackson, Michigan. They are a firm who are running entirely independent of Mr. Smith, and they are regular in every respect. As the Minister of Justice has just stated, the failure to renew the patent was owing to the fault or negligence of their own solicitor, otherwise no application would be made to this House at all.

Mr. SPROULE. The case spoken of by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) was brought before the committee, but as the committee understood the case it was something like this: The party whom Mr. Watson represented claimed that Mr. Smith was using his machine, and that he ought to have had the patent instead of Smith; it is a dispute between two individuals as to who should have the patent, and not as to whether the patent ought to be renewed or not. The question of renewal was brought before the committee by this Bill, and, as the Minister of Justice has very plainly stated, the patentee notified his solicitor to renew it in proper time; the solicitor instructed his clerk to send the money, the clerk sent only part of the amount, only $10 instead of $20; but believed he had sent $20.

This was acknowledged by the Commissioner of Patents, who directed his attention to the fact that only $10 were received, and that it required $10 more to entitle him to a renewal of the patent. When perusing the letter he was suddenly called to the telephone and threw the letter down in a case; when he returned the paper was mislaid by some person shutting the case, and he forgot all about it for some days hence; the balance was not sent until the patent had lapsed by virtue of time. When the solicitor's attention was called to the matter the balance of the money was sent, this being only a few days after the lapse of the patent, but it could not be accepted by the Commissioner of Patents, and, therefore, the necessity for this legislation. I do not think the contention of Mr. Watson in regard to his friend has anything to do with the consideration of this case; it is a matter to be fought out in the courts.

Mr. WATSON. I did not say anything about any other patent or claim in my remarks.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood that was your contention before the Committee.

Mr. WATSON. There are doubts as to whether, if the Commissioner of Patents had done his duty, this patent should have been issued, and as these machines are being manufactured by other firms the passage of this Bill will cause litigation. I believe it is in the public interest that this patent having been held by George T. Smith for five years, and it having now lapsed, the public should reap the benefit of it. The evidence produced by the solicitor for Mr. Smith went to show that the Department had notified Smith, 12 or 14 days before the time of expiration, to remit the amount for the renewal of the patent. Accordingly, there was neglect not only on the part of the solicitor, but on the part of Smith. In my opinion this is a small improvement to be covered by a patent, although it is a profitable improvement to the general public, and I do not think we should pass special legislation in favor of a man who has already had a patent for five years.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman has erred in stating that Smith was notified. He was not notified, but the clerk of the solicitor was notified in reply to the letter when he sent $10 instead of $20, but the letter happened to be enclosed in a book accidentally and to be forgotten until the patent expired. In regard to the claim, that others are manufacturing and using the patent, the last clause in the Bill deals with any other persons using or acquiring any interest in the patent during the time the patent lapsed.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). This is a kind of legislation that should not be hastily adopted by this House. If people are so negligent, either by their solicitor or by their own act, as to allow a patent to lapse, it is the duty of this House to adhere firmly to the law, and not grant a renewal. The principal place of business of this firm is Jackson, Michigan, where they have carried on business for a long time. Smith was originally a Canadian, and lived at Aylmer, in Elgin County. He was engaged there in milling for some time, and afterwards removed to Jackson, where he carried on a very large business, stocking a company to the extent of half a million dollars. A few months ago he failed in business, but before that time he had established a Canadian branch at Stratford, and negotiations were in progress to establish branches elsewhere. The branch at Stratford is part and parcel of the business that was carried on in Jackson, Michigan, and I believe that to-day Smith, who is now applying for the renewal of the patent, has no interest whatever in it, and that it has become vested in the creditors of the firm. This being the case, and the patent being owned by an American company, which has a branch at Stratford, it is not in the public interest that the patent be renewed. It is the duty of the Minister of Justice to prevent legislation of this kind, and the Bill should be postponed until full enquiry be made as to the facts connected with it. I do not think the evidence given before the Private Bills Committee is sufficient to warrant this House passing the Bill. That evidence merely is, that the solicitor was notified to make application for a renewal of the patent prior to its becoming lapsed, that the solicitor sent a boy with $20 to the post office for a money order, that $10 only were sent and the boy returned with the balance to the solicitor, I suppose. He certainly knew whether $10 or $20 were sent, he also knew whether $10 or $20 were required for the renewal. If a closer examination is made of the matter it will be found that there is something wrong in it, and we should not deviate from the course we have so far adopted, of not renewing patents when the patentee fails to renew them in time. We cannot tell what injustice our legislation might cause, and, therefore, in the interests of all parties and the public, we should maintain that if patentees do not take sufficient interest to see that their patents are renewed in proper time, it is not in the interests of the general public that a renewal should be given, but that the public should benefit by the neglect. No injury will be done to Mr. Smith, as he has now no interest in the patent. Under the circumstances, the Minister of Justice should ask that the Bill be allowed to stand until full enquiries have been made as to whether injustice will be done to any parties. I, therefore, hope the Bill will not receive a second reading now, but be referred to a the Minister of Justice for a further investigation.

Mr. DENISON. The last speaker says he understands that the Smith patent did not really belong to the party who applied for it. I do not think that makes any real difference to the House. Mr. Smith applies for the extension of his patent, and under the law of the land he had a right to have it extended for five years, on payment of the small fee of $20 on or before the 22nd January. He could have renewed his patent again for a further term of five years, on the payment of the same fee. It seems to me that it would be harsh treatment of a person applying for renewal of his patent, if we refuse to take his case into consideration. We must remember, that Mr. Smith put this case into the hands of a solicitor to attend to, and that he gave a cheque of $20, which cheque the Committee saw was cashed on the 6th January. The accountant in the solicitor's office wrote a letter to the Department, stating that he enclosed the $20, but through some error he only sent $10. The reply was delayed, as explained by the chairman of Committee, and it did not turn up again until the 6th February, when the time had elapsed within which the fee should be paid. It is manifest that no solicitor would wilfully do a thing of this sort.

Mr. Smith is now mulcted to the tune of $200 instead of $20 to renew his patent, if he is allowed permission, because he has, as all applicants have, to make a deposit with the Government of $200, for private legislation. In addition to that he has, no doubt, to pay a solicitor in Ottawa for looking after the Bill, so that, altogether, he is very handsomely fined for this mistake. It does appear to me that this is a case where the House of Commons should step in and see that injustice is not perpetrated upon a private citizen.

Mr. DAWSON. This matter has been very well explained, and I shall simply confine myself to remarking, that it would be an exceedingly hard case if a poor man were to lose his patent simply through a mistake on the part of his lawyers in neglecting to pay this small fee.

Mr. TROW. It would be very unjust if we should take an undue advantage of a respectable firm which has carried on a very extensive business, and which employs, to my knowledge, 150 workmen all the year round, and is doing a great benefit to the milling interest of the whole Dominion. I am surprised that my hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Wilson), who knows no more about this firm than the man in the moon, should try to take advantage of the mere negligence or carelessness on the part of a solicitor in not depositing the money in due time. The facts of the case have been thoroughly investigated by the Private Bills Committee, which has reported that everything is all right. The firm have done their duty in the matter. The patent has done great good to the milling business of the country, and why should we take this objection?

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I think my hon. friend from Perth (Mr. Trow) is mistaken with regard to the benefit that will accrue to the public, or to the milling interests of the country, if we grant a renewal of this patent. It must be quite evident that if this Parliament refuses to renew this patent, the general public will become possessed of all the interest there is in it, and so the manufacturers will have an opportunity of using this patent, and the millers throughout the country will get the benefit. I think it would be very bad legislation if we should initiate a principle of this kind. If this man neglected for five days, from the 22nd January to the 27th to pay the fee, some other man who neglects to do so for ten days will make a similar application, and by-and-bye it might be ten weeks, or ten months, or ten years, and there would be no certainty with regard to the patent law. I think the law should not be made flexible in this respect. If the law requires the holders of patents to renew them within a certain time, we should stick to it. If we make the law flexible, we should state just how many days a person will be allowed before he is required to put up his money. If Mr. Smith gets this advantage, all the other patentees should be notified that they can do the same thing. We should not pass special legislation for any one man in particular, and especially as this is a very important matter for the millers of the country, and if this Bill be not passed, all the manufacturers in the country will be allowed to make this machine, which is of interest not only to them, but to the general public as well.

Mr. ELLIS. Notwithstanding what my hon. friend says, it was clearly shown before the Committee that this is a case in which the error was made by a third person, not the patentee. While the person interested acted promptly himself, and, so far as he thought, fully complied with the law, his clerk made a mistake. Whatever may be the public interest, it is not fair that this private individual should suffer in this particular case.

Mr. SMALL. I would suggest that the Bill should stand until the Minister of Justice shall have an opportunity of examining the question. Some hon. MEMBERS. Very well.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Steam communication between Halifax and Newfoundland $2,000

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I took exception to this item a short time ago, and I did so because I thought it was absurd that we should grant a subsidy to this small steambot. She does not carry mails, or passengers, and all the freight she carries, as I am informed by credible parties, is some herring from Newfoundland, which is brought in to compete with the herring caught by the fishermen of Nova Scotia. I think the subsidy is an entirely indefensible one, and I should like to know on what grounds the Minister can justify it?

Mr. McDONALD (Victoria, N.S.) I happen to know something about this boat, and I think if any subsidy is justified, it is this one. The boat leaves Halifax once a fortnight, and goes to the western shore of Newfoundland, and to the Straits of Belle Isle. She carries a great deal of freight from Cape Breton, such as hay and butter, and brings back lobsters and other fish which are cured on the coast by people from the Province of Nova Scotia. She calls at no less than half-a-dozen different places on the western coast of Newfoundland. She is subsidised both by the Local Government and the Government of Newfoundland. She carries also a great many passengers between various ports of Newfoundland and Cape Breton, and runs from June to the last of December. I think no subsidy given by this House is more beneficial to the people of Halifax and Cape Breton, and petitions were sent in this year asking that the subsidy should be increased, so that she could make a larger number of trips. The only trouble at present is that she does not call at a sufficient number of places in Cape Breton.

Mr. WELSH. I think this grant ought to be referred to the Government of Newfoundland, as it seems that it is most for the benefit of the people of Newfoundland, and I do not see that we should pay for that service. However, it is a small amount.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is just a large enough amount to enable the steamer to compete with the owners of small ships who are trading constantly between Newfoundland and the Dominion of Canada, and it handicaps them most unfairly. I see no justification for it whatever.

Mr. McDONALD (Victoria, N.S.) I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken. I know that she carries a large amount of produce that could not be carried by sailing vessels.

Mr. FOSTER. I think my hon. friend is not quite full in his information with respect to that. Two years ago we granted this subsidy, and I must say that, at first, I was in very much doubt as to whether it should be granted or not; but, last year, I compelled the owners of the boat to give in manifests of their inward and outward cargoes, and I was very much surprised to find, not only the amount, but the assortment of the freight she carries. It is larger, of course, going to Newfoundland, because the fishermen and villagers of Newfoundland have a less assortment to send back, for they must send the wares produced there. The vessel carries passengers, and a good many. She stops at four or five ports between Halifax and Cape Breton, and is a great convenience to the people in that section. We get a good service for the money. We agreed to pay $200 per trip, not to exceed $2,000; but the vessel runs all summer, and last summer she gave some eighteen trips instead of ten, which were all that were necessary to earn the subsidy.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) To what firm is this subsidy paid?

Mr. FOSTER. The steamer is the Harrow, and the subsidy is paid to Pickford & Black.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does the hon. gentleman know how many subsidies are paid to this firm?

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot say how many are paid, but I do not think that makes any difference. It is the services for which we pay.

Mr. KIRK. If there is so much business between Newfoundland and Cape Breton, as the hon. member for Victoria says, it ought to be able to support a steamer without the subsidy. It will be remembered that, a few years ago, the Government took the duties off fish coming into Canada from Newfoundland, and I suppose the $2,000 is given to this steamer to enable it to bring in Newfoundland fish more cheaply, so that they may compete more successfully with the products of our own fishermen, as well as to cheapen the cost of sending flour from this country to Newfoundland. I have no doubt that this is the way this subsidy is given in the interest of the fishermen.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does the hon. gentleman know what subsidy this vessel receives from the Local Government?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Or how much it gets from the Newfoundland Government?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It would appear to me that the Dominion, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland Governments pay the whole charges for bringing a few traps from Nova Scotia to Newfoundland. You pay a small bounty to your fishermen with the one hand, and with the other hand you pay a large bounty to this vessel to enable it to bring in fish, duty free, to compete with the products of those fishermen.

Mr. FOSTER. I think my hon. friend's argument turns against him. If a subsidy is given by the Local Government, it is voted by a Government who have the interest of the fishermen at heart, and who are on the spot, and ought to know whether it is for their benefit or not. That is an additional evidence that it is a service which should be encouraged.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think the hon. gentleman ought to be able to say definitely what subsidies are given for this service. The Local Government may give a subsidy for carrying passengers between Halifax and Cape Breton. But the hon. Minister cannot controvert what I said, that the vessel carries nothing but herring from Newfoundland.

Mr. FOSTER. I know she carries more than herring.

Mr. BLAKE. It does seem to me that it is not a businesslike way of proving the case for the subsidy, that the Minister is not able to tell us what other Government resources the vessel has. These matters ought to be dealt with on something like business principles; and it seems to me that if the Minister has not informed himself, he ought to inform himself, what her resources from the various Governments are, in order to see whether she is overpaid for the benefit she gives, or whether we pay an undue proportion.

Mr. FOSTER. I know this much, that she is not getting a very large subsidy in the nature of things. I think probably it might be taken as good ground that we ought to give, or ought not to give a subsidy, according to what we considered right, irrespective of what she may get from the Local Government.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not at all agree with that view. I do not know to what it may lead. The hon. gentleman says that we ought to give a subsidy which we consider right, irrespective of what the Local Government may give, but awhile ago, he indicated that the fact that the Local Governments were giving subsidies were reasons why we should give them. In the first place we should give subsidies independently of the Local Governments, and in the second place we ought to give them dependent on those Governments. The reasons seem to be rather self contradictory, but when you engage in the business of giving subsidies, I think, inasmuch as this business is capable of indefinite expansion as to the character of the enterprise and the facilities for trade, and the amounts of the subsidies, we ought to proceed cautiously and upon full information; and if it be the case that some firm—the name of which I do not remember, but which the hon. member for Queen's County, P.E.I., mentioned the other day—receives so many subsidies that the Minister cannot tell how many, it is almost time to ask what tithe they pay or what subsidies they pay, out of the subsidies they receive.

Steam service between San Francisco and Victoria, B.C. $17,640

Mr. FOSTER. This is a subsidy which we are obliged to pay by the terms of the union between ourselves and British Columbia. It was dropped last year, but we found, after looking into the matter, that we had to put it back.

Steam communication between St. John, Digby and Annapolis, for a daily service, except Sunday, during nine months, and a daily or tri-weekly during three months. $11,500

Mr. WELSH. I notice that Nova Scotia and New Brunswick draw from this Government about $160,000 a year in the shape of subsidies to steamers, and many of those subsidies are given to steamers to run in opposition to the Government railways. No wonder our people are getting poorer and our railways are losing money. The Government has a system of railways all over the Provinces. There are the Intercolonial Railway, and the Windsor and Halifax Branch, and the Annapolis Branch, and all around the coast there is railway communication; yet here I see subsidies to steamers to run in opposition to them. We will not hear a word from New Brunswick or Nova Scotia about this from the other side of the House. They are all now a happy family. And Prince Edward Island only gets $5,500, although it has nearly as large a seacoast as both of them. I want to know on what principle you grant those subsidies? They do not appear to be for the convenience of mails and passengers, but merely for steam communication, while the $5,500 voted to Prince Edward Island, which is the only subsidy voted to us in all these Estimates, is for the convenience of the mail service. It is a bad thing for a little Province to come into a big Confederation. You have swallowed us up, and you are treating us as a vanquished country. Talk about coercion in Ireland, it was never as bad as your coercion in Prince Edward Island. When the late Minister of Finance, Sir Charles Tupper, was in his place, I called his attention to a subsidy given for years to a steamer to run in opposition to the Government railway, and the minute he looked at it he withdrew it from the Estimates. Why does not the Minister of Finance follow his example, and strike out all those items which are an injury to the people of this Dominion?

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Is this contract for carrying mails between Annapolis and St. John for a term of years?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

For three lines of Steamers running between the ports of Halifax and St. John, N. B., or either, and the West Indies and South America. $85,000

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Before we enter into a discussion of this, it would be well if the Minister of Finance would give us a statement of how this money is to be appropriated, what steamers are to draw it, and the tenders for the service.

Mr. FOSTER. All the papers which are in my possession and which are necessary to be laid on the Table, will be laid on the Table, and in the meantime I can give some explanations. Last year the sum of $60,000 was voted for the steamship service between the ports of Halifax and St. John, or either of them, and the West Indies and South America. In pursuance of this authorisation, tenders were advertised for. I have a copy of the advertisement in my hand. After carefully considering the subject, I called for tenders for four routes, denominated A, B, C and D. "A" route was from Halifax or St. John to Cuba and return, calling at Havana and Matanzas. "B" route was from Halifax or St. John to Jamaica and return, calling at Bermuda and Turk's Island. Route "C" was from Halifax or St. John (via Yarmouth if sailing from St. John) to Demerara and return, calling at Bermuda, St. Kitts, Antigua, Guadeloupe, Dominica, Martinique, St. Lucia, Barbadoes and Trinidad. Route "D" was from Halifax or St. John to Buenos Ayres and return, calling at Pernambuco, Bahia, Rio Janeiro and Monte Video, and such other convenient ports en route, either in the West Indies or South America, as may be agreed upon in the interests of trade. It was provided that, for each of the above-mentioned services, proper accommodation for the transport of mails must be provided, that the above services were to be monthly and performed by steamships of a speed of not less than twelve knots an hour; and as regards the services marked "A," "B" and "C," of not less than 1,000 tons register, and with accommodation for at least thirty first-class passengers; and as regards the service marked "D," of not less than 2,000 tons register, and with accommodation for at least fifty first-class passengers. That indicated what we thought we would like to get in regard to the selection of routes, and as to the service which should apply upon those routes; but, bearing in mind that we had a vote of only $60,000 and did not wish to go very far beyond that, there was also put in that advertisement the following clause:—

"As regards the services A, B and C, persons desiring to offer to perform the same with steamers of less capacity and speed than above mentioned, may submit their tenders, specifying the speed and capacity of the boats which they desire to offer, although the conditions above specified are those desired by the Government."

That, as will be seen, gave an option to the Government of taking upon these routes vessels of less capacity and less speed, provided that the cost of the vessels of the larger capacity and the higher rate of speed, when the tenders came in, was beyond the amounts which might reasonably be placed at the disposal of the Government. The tender for route "D" was not asked for under the supposition that we had sufficient money voted for a steamship line to run from St. John or Halifax to Buenos Ayres and return, but it was asked for in order that the Government might obtain an idea of the practical cost of a steamship line between those points. For that service no person tendered, and, therefore, the practical information which was desired, as to the cost of a service of that description, was not afforded to the Government by this means. For the other three services we had a number of tenders. We had a tender from a Glasgow firm for vessels which filled the requirements asked for in the advertisement, but at so high a cost that it put that offer entirely out of the means of the Government. The three services, as tendered for by that company, would have cost the Government yearly—I forget the exact figures—between $300,000 and $500,000. That was, therefore, ruled out. The other available tenderers were Messrs. Pickford & Black, of Halifax, and the Furness Co., which runs various lines of steamships, and, amongst others, the one between St. John, Halifax and London; and there was also Mr. Van Wart, representing a company which was to be formed to carry out those services. These tenders ran in this way: Messrs. Pickford & Black tendered for all the services from the port of Halifax, and from that alone; Mr. Van Wart tendered for the services from St. John on the three routes; the Furness Line tendered for the line from St. John and Halifax to Demerara—that is service "C." Mr. Furness's tender was—with vessels to fill the requirements, which were to be built new and put on the line within six or seven months, the service in the meantime to be carried on by vessels which he named, and which were of sufficient capacity but of a less rate of speed—$50,000 a year. The tenders sent in by Mr. Van Wart and by Pickford & Black for that service was not considered so favorable, taking into account the vessels which were offered and the amounts which were required, and the Government authorised me to accept the tender of Mr. Furness on the condition that, while the vessels of inferior speed were performing the temporary service until the others were built, the sum to be paid should be $48,000, which was the amount of the tender of Messrs. Pickford & Black from the port of Halifax. Mr. Furness, however, declined to accept that offer, and the reasons he gave were that he found it very difficult to carry out his proposal, as he had not been able to hold the vessels he had temporarily engaged up to the time the award was made, and it was almost impossible for him to get temporary vessels to fill the service. After looking over the whole correspondence, it was my impression, judging from the tenor of the communications, that Mr. Furness was glad to be out of his offer. Then I opened communications with Messrs. Pickford & Black and with Mr. Van Wart. Before that was done, I was authorised by Council to take the tender of Messrs. Pickford & Black for service "B"—that is, from Halifax to Jamaica and return, calling at Bermuda and Turk's Island, for $15,000 a year with vessels of about 750 tons and a speed of eleven knots. That was not equal to the requirements of the Government if the cost were not too large, but it was found that the difference in cost between a 750 ton and a 1,000 ton vessel was so great that Council decided to undertake that service with vessels of a less capacity. For the service "C"—from Halifax and St. John via Yarmouth to Demerara, calling at the West India Islands—I asked for amended tenders from Pickford & Black and from Mr. Van Wart. Messrs. Pickford & Black refused to undertake the service with vessels of more than 750 tons, and to carry out that from St. John to Demerara and return, unless they had the other services, and I think what they wanted for that was between $45,000 and $48,000. Mr. Van Wart undertook, on behalf of the company about to be formed by him, to do the service from St. John to Demerara and return, calling at these Islands, for $49,200—a monthly service, to be carried out up to the requirements of the Government, that is, with vessels of a minimum registered tonnage of 1,000, and with the speed required, of twelve knots. After carefully considering the matter the Government came to the conclusion to accept that offer, and the only modification which has been made was this: New vessels to go on this service are to be built and to come up to the requirements of the Government; in the meantime a temporary service is to be provided for, to carry the work up to the time when the new vessels will be ready to undertake the service; and the only modification which has been made is to allow that temporary service with a vessel of less speed, and a little less capacity, for the first six months of the service, up to the time when the new vessels are built to take the route. That is the information in general, and I am willing to give any other information that I can.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). About the first route you mentioned?

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. FOSTER. I forgot that. Afterwards I asked Pickford & Black to amend their tender, if they could give me a more favorable offer for the "A" service; and whereas they had asked for that service $24,000 per annum for a monthly service, with a 750 ton vessel, they offered afterwards to do it for $20,000, and the Government concluded to take that offer, subject to the approval of Parliament, and to give them the contract for that service. That will make three services a month, "A" service with 750 ton steamers, at a speed of eleven knots, for $20,000; "B" service from Halifax, with the same quality of steamers and speed, for $15,000, to Jamaica and return; and "C" service from St. John to Demerara and return, with vessels of a larger capacity and higher speed, for $49,200.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Of course, the hon. gentleman is aware that I have always taken exception to that expenditure on its merits, and the explanation which he has given to-night in no way alters my views in that respect. Of course, this is just a question where the Government have stepped in and enabled certain parties to conduct the commercial interests of the country at an advantage over those surrounding them. If the principle which the hon. gentleman laid down was correct, if he was opening up any new trade, if he was developing any new trade, if these parties were going to extend our relations in other branches of commerce, then there might be some reason, according to his own views, although, even in that case, I claim that, for a purely business arrangement, it would not be justifiable. But in this case we will consider it for one moment in the way it affects the general trade of the country. Take, in the first place, the Jamaica route. I think, if the First Minister and his Government had understood the position of that trade, they never would have asked this House for this appropriation. We have had from time immemorial a very large trade with the Island of Jamaica in our natural products. We ship there about 100,000 quintals of fish per annum, besides large quantities of pickled fish. That steamer, which the Government have subsidised, makes a monthly trip and takes about 2,000 quintals of fish per trip. That would make 25,000 quintals of fish which she carries to the Island of Jamaica, for which she receives $15,000 from this Parliament—that is what the hon. gentleman asks us to approve of to-night; for carrying out 25,000 quintals of fish he asks us to give that steamer a subsidy of $15,000. Now, when you come to consider that the whole balance of 75,000 quintals is carried out in our own vessels, without any subsidy at all, that her going there does not in any way increase our trade with that port, that she carries out not one single article that would not otherwise have gone, and that has not been carried for these last sixty or seventy years—when you come to consider that out of 100,000 quintals of fish carried, sailing vessels take 75,000 quintals without a subsidy, and she gets $15,000 for carrying 25,000 quintals, I do not know what stronger argument I need address to any assembly of reasonable, practical business men; if that will not satisfy them that it is an indefensible subsidy, why, of course, I cannot expect to influence them. In the first place that steamer is always full, and she always gets the highest rate of freight. They carry out a box of codfish for two shillings sterling, at the rate of $10 per ton, a barrel of pickled fish for three shillings, at the rate of 35 cents a barrel, and that is a larger freight than any ocean carrying steamer on the average, any Atlantic steamer, any steamer in any part of the world we know of, gets at the present time. She is always full, and still the Government give her a subsidy of $15,000. The trouble is just this—and there is where the Government have, I think, not fully apprehended the whole question—there is nothing in return. The steamer goes to Jamaica and takes out a cargo for which she receives this $15,000 per annum, and when she has delivered her cargo there and remains 48 hours, she returns to Nova Scotia; but she has not a cargo of 500 barrels of bulk at any one time. A few hundred barrels of oranges, or cocoa nuts, or 20 or 40 bags of coffee, compose that vessels cargo. The fact is, the subsidy which the Government pay here is just what pays her for coming back in ballast, and she could not run unless under these circumstances. Her outward freight is ample to pay her, but because she cannot get any return freight—because she does not go to that port in the Island where return freight is procurable, she cannot go to the outports on account of shallow water, and at Kingston there is no sugar shipped to any extent—the vessel is, therefore, obliged to come back in ballast, and to remunerate her for coming back in ballast, the hon. gentleman asks us to give $15,000. I submit, Mr. Chairman, if such a proposition as that was submitted to any business company, or organisation, in this Dominion, from one end of it to the other, the man who would make it would be treated as a lunatic. I do not mean to say that the Minister of Finance is a lunatic; very far from it, because we know he is not, happily—but I say it is as absurd a proposition, for an undertaking of that kind, as was ever made. Then, again, the hon. gentleman was asked a little while ago, and I ask him the question now: Is he aware what subsidy the steamer receives from the other Island?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Are you aware whether she receives anything?

Mr. FOSTER. I am not.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Then I think that proves how the hon. gentleman has rushed into a contract of this kind without making careful enquiry into all the circumstances surrounding it. She receives a subsidy from the Island of Jamaica of, I think, $5,000, and from Turk's Island a smaller amount.

Mr. FOSTER. It must be a very small sum from Turk's Island.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I am not sure but that she receives a subsidy also from Bermuda, although I am not positive as to that. By receiving those subsidies she is able to take a cargo out to pay expenses, and to have the subsidies to pay the expenses coming home and give profits. Does the Minister think this is a businesslike, statesmanlike, reasonable and sensible proposal? Would the hon. gentleman consider, in his own private affairs, this to be a reasonable and proper undertaking? Formerly the steamer was not making money. The reason was that all she earned on the out-voyage was expended in paying the expenses of the return voyage; but as soon as it was announced that the Government would give $15,000, up went the stock, and I understand the managers of the line bought up a good deal of the stock from the original stockholders at a very considerable advance. Then there is another view of it. The sailing vessels engaged in this trade are largely vessels which are engaged in banking during the summer months. These vessels of 100 tons go to the "banks" during the summer, and when the fishing season is over they are engaged in the West India trade from September to March; and by giving employment to these vessels, they are made profitable, and the people on board are kept employed, and interest is paid on the investments in the vessels. But this proposal kills out these people. A steamer going at a regular time prevents that competition and speculation in perishable articles, like fish, which always prevails in hot climates, and it has the practical effect of keeping down the price of fish at least 60 to 75 cents, and sometimes $1 a quintal. That is the effect of an arrangement by which a steamer is known to be due at a certain time, whereas, when sailing vessels did the trade, the uncertainty of their arrival caused merchants to speculate, and they would cable to Halifax, and the merchants there would go to the market and buy at an increased value, the fisherman receiving the benefit. This is a blow at the interests of the fishermen, both directly and indirectly; indirectly, in the way I have just mentioned, and directly, by steamers taking the place of these fishing vessels. Again, these fishing vessels going to the West Indies bring back cargoes of salt. It is a bulky article, not very valuable, but it is necessary for our fishing interests on the Atlantic coasts. When these fishing vessels visit the West Indies during the winter they bring back salt and keep it for use on the "banks" in the spring; and if they are driven out of this trade, other vessels must be employed. That is another way in which the fishermen are injured indirectly. With respect to the Cuba contract, that is equally absurd. The steamer was running to Cuba and took cargoes of hay, potatoes and some fish. Those are the articles for which the Government are now paying $2,000 to send to that island. Every one of those articles has been going to Cuba for the last fifty years; not one barrel of potatoes is going on account of the steamer, or one quintal of fish or one pound of hay. This steamer has gone to Cuba and has generally come back in ballast, taking on one or two occasions freight to the United States. Will the vessel be allowed to carry freight to the United States under this arrangement?

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The vessel has had to come back in several cases in ballast; it has happened a few times that she has obtained a cargo for Halifax, but in three-fourths of the trips, she has had to come back in ballast. This bounty of $20,000 will pay her expenses, and if she can pick up freight it will be so much profit. Since this subsidy has been granted, not an additional barrel of potatoes or quintal of fish has gone to Cuba, and the vessel has received $20,000 to pay her expenses. If the subsidy were doing any service, and if any goods were being shipped outside of those which have been going to Cuba for the last fifty years, then I could understand the reason of granting the subsidy, but we are not sending anything except our natural products, and we are not sending them in increased quantity. Absurd as are the proposals for these two lines, and unjustifiable as they are, the proposal respecting the line from St. John is more unjustifiable still. We have from Halifax a certain quantity of fish, potatoes and other articles to ship at certain seasons of the year, but from St. John there is nothing to ship to the West Indies except lumber, which can be carried in sailing vessels. One of these steamers, I was informed, took on one trip a cargo of the value of $6,000, comprising hay, potatoes, a few apples, a few barrels of herring, and a few boxes of smoked herring, which made a great display on the manifest, and the Government paid $4,000 for taking this cargo. If we have so much money to waste on such absurd schemes, we might as well have a grab all round and see who can get the most. New Brunswick, I repeat, has no natural trade with the West Indies, excepting lumber, and it can be sent by sailing vessels at cheaper rates than by steamer. When small cargoes are carried, the vessels go to small ports where the water is shallow, but when large steamers go to a port the prices of the local markets fall, and they fall when the day is known on which a steamer will arrive. In neither Nova Scotia or New Brunswick is there any increased trade in consequence of this subsidy. This money is so much thrown away—well, not quite thrown away, because it is put in the hands of political favorites of the Government, some in the House and some out of it, and of course these things must be considered and weighed. Considering the question upon any business principle which can for one moment be considered by reasonable and practical business men, the height of absurdity is reached. I did expect better things from a practical man like the present Minister of Finance. His predecessor, the High Commissioner, at one time spoke with regard to this matter, and it all originated out of a speech that he made in Halifax during election time. The old Cunard Line steamers had been taken off, and Sir Charles Tupper made a speech in which he said, that if his Government were sustained he was going to build up a large trade with the West Indies; and certain people outside, who had not any business occupation, and who are always ready to put their hands in the public chest for any subsidy which may be offered, raised considerable excitement over the matter then. To the credit of Sir Charles Tupper be it said, that he never proposed to this House a vote of one cent to carry out the project. When he came to understand how it would affect the various interests, he saw, as any business man must see, that it would be throwing away so much money. I am very sorry that the present Minister of Finance did not consult business men on a matter of this kind, rather than listen to political advice which has led him into a policy which is utterly indefensible,—not only indefensible, but unsound and absurd. I suppose that nothing which I say will alter the decision of the hon. Minister, but when the country comes to realise that they are paying these large subsidies, without trade being increased in any way, and without receiving any return whatever, they will, I hope, arrive at the conclusion, as I think we must all to-night, that this vote ought not to pass, and that the arrangements which the Minister of Finance has announced he has made, are not in the interests of the country.

Mr. WELSH. For what length of time are these contracts given?

Mr. FOSTER. Five years.

Mr. WELSH. Well, I think the hon. Minister's explanations, as far as we ask, is quite satisfactory. I object to the principle of this subsidy, on the ground stated by the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones). I know that there are very few vessels belonging to the Maritime Provinces, engaged in the West India trade, compared with what used to be employed. At present, I am connected with several vessels, and they are all running between New York and the West Indies; whilst formerly they used to trade from ports in the Maritime Provinces. When this five years' contract has expired, I hope the Government of the day will consider this matter carefully before entering into a fresh contract. I think, however, that the explanation of the Minister of Finance is very satisfactory as far as the contract is concerned.

Mr. KENNY. I heard it remarked at a meeting which was held in Ottawa recently, in aid of some charitable association, and which was being criticised by an Irishman, that "if all the recipients of that charity were gathered into the Music Hall, at Ottawa, there would not be room enough for them." In Halifax, we have a very large lunatic asylum, but if all the people of that city, or of Nova Scotia, who are in favor of the subsidising of steamers to the West Indies, were gathered together into that lunatic asylum, I might repeat the words of my Ottawa fellow-countryman: that there would not be room enough for them. There must, indeed, be a large number of lunatics in Halifax, if every man in favor of this subsidy is to be termed a lunatic. Now, Mr. Speaker, what are the conditions of our trade with the West Indies? I know that in criticising it I shall likely be told that I am talking of what I know nothing about, and that if I were to address this House on matters concerning the particular business in which I am interested, then my opinion might be entitled to some consideration. I think it is a very dangerous doctrine to lay down in this Parliament, that a man should address the House only on a question in which he has a direct personal interest. Our competitors in the West India markets for the productions of which Canada had a surplus, are, as you all know, the people of the United States, and the business of the United States to the West Indies is conducted by steamships. My hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Welsh) referred, this afternoon, to the fact that I was interested in sailing vessels, and he thought I should do something in their interest. I should be very glad, indeed, if we could arrange that all the merchandise which Canada required from Europe should be carried in sailing ships which are owned in Canada, and such a proposal would be about as reasonable as to contend, that the sailing vessels of Nova Scotia could do the trade with the West Indies, in competition with the steamers from the United States. Unfortunately, perhaps, for us who are interested in sailing ships, we have to recognise that steam is now the great motive power, and that this is quite as applicable to the trade with the West Indies as it is to transatlantic or the eastern trade. The object of this subsidy was not only to help the fishing business in Nova Scotia, but to develop the exports of Canada generally. It is true that at the present day the West India trade with Canada is almost exclusively confined to Nova Scotia; and, looking at the statistics of that trade for some years past, I am of the opinion that it has not increased, whereas the trade between the United States and the West Indies has immensely increased. That is owing to the fact that the United States had steamers to carry their products to the West India markets. The object of this subsidy was to increase our export trade, and my hon. friend, the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), has just now told us that these steamers, at all events to Jamaica, have been immensely successful in that respect, for he has said that on their outward voyages they always have a full cargo. The hon. gentleman will remember that this is exactly what we desired, and that the object was to give our exporters every facility possible to place the productions of Canada regularly and rapidly in these markets. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) has complained that the freight on those steamers amounts to $10 per ton, while my hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer) complained in the House, the other afternoon, that these steamers from St. John to the West Indies carried fish at too low a rate. One hon. gentleman says they carry goods at too high a rate, and another hon. gentleman on the same side of the House, a few days afterwards, says they carry it at too low a rate; so that the House will see that, under any circumstances, it is very difficult to please these hon. gentlemen. Now, my hon. colleague left the impression on the House—I know it was quite unintentional—that those steamers carry so much to Jamaica and so much back again. They also call, however, at Bermuda and at Turk's Island. It is true, most of the trade is with Jamaica, and we trust and believe that it will be exceedingly valuable in the development of our fisheries and general commerce to all the points at which the steamers call. I do not remember looking over a Halifax paper at the exports carried by those ships without seeing that some of those vessels took an export of fish from the firm of the hon. member. I do not say every ship—

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Almost every one.

Mr. KENNY. My hon. friend says he was a shipper by those vessels, and we must infer that he would not have used them if they were not valuable to him in the conduct of his business. Therefore, when a gentleman of his business experience uses those vessels, I think it is a recognition of their general utility to the business community. In addition to the Jamaica trade, I pointed out their usefulness in developing a certain amount of business with Bermuda which I believe will steadily increase. My hon. friend took the hon. Minister of Finance to task because he was not able to state to us the exact amount of the subsidy which those steamers receive from the Governments of Jamaica and Bermuda. Well, the very fact that they receive any subsidy at all from those Governments is a recognition that they are useful. Now, I am of opinion that the United States fishermen of Gloucester are just as vigilant in looking after their interests as the fishermen of Nova Scotia, and they have this advantage over our fishermen, that they are thoroughly organised. They have their societies and associations, they hold annual meetings, which are reported in the newspapers and copied into some of our Canadian papers. But I never yet heard that a Gloucester fisherman, or any one in the United States interested in the deep sea fishermen, complained because lines of steamers were carrying articles from the United States to the West Indies. Of course I shall be told that they are not subsidised; but it is also contended that the very fact of the steamers being engaged in the business is an injury. My hon. friend knows that in the early days of steam communication between New York and Jamaica, steamers were subsidised by the Jamaica Government, and their value was recognised.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does the hon. gentleman say that they are subsidised at present?

Mr. KENNY. I do not think they are, for the reason given by the Canadian Commissioner, that they have developed a trade which is now self-sustaining; and that is what we desire, and hope and believe, will be the result of these subsidies. Therefore, inasmuch as the American fishermen have not found these steamers to interfere with their business, I do not think that our Canadian fishermen need imagine for a moment that this subsidy is a blow at their interest. As regards the Cuba service, my hon. colleague is undoubtedly right that at the present moment there is a difficulty in getting return cargoes from Cuba; but we are in hopes that as the business increases, and the other portions of Canada avail themselves of these facilities for increasing their exports, the return cargoes will also increase. Of course, if our American rivals had not steamers, and continued to use sailing vessels, we might expect to compete with them with sailing vessels. My hon. colleague has also criticised the adjustment of the subsidies as made by the hon. Minister of Finance, especially the giving of one to the city of St. John. I quite agree with him, that at present the Canadian West India trade is nearly exclusively a Nova Scotia trade; but I hope that the business from St. John will increase and develop. A great deal of energy has been shown by the citizens of St. John in taking hold of this matter and arranging for the construction of steamers, and I hope that their efforts will be crowned with success. Now, I have stated on two or three occasions in this House, that I differ from my hon. colleague with regard to these subsidies. Of course, time alone can develop who is right and who is wrong; but, I think, in a few years hence we shall recognise, from the increased trade returns, that those subsidies have been of advantage to Canada, and particularly to the Maritime Provinces.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) When the hon. Finance Minister read the tenders for the line from St. John to the West Indies, I did not catch what tonnage of steamer was required.

Mr. FOSTER. A thousand tons.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What tonnage of steamer did he succeed in getting?

Mr. FOSTER. A thousand tons.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Did he state that the vessel running from St. John, and receiving this subsidy, had a tonnage of a thousand tons?

Mr. FOSTER. I said before that a temporary service was arranged for, and that during that period the vessel which has been accepted by the Government for a certain time, is a little below 1,000 tons—about 800 tons, I think.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) With whom is that contract?

Mr. FOSTER. I have already stated it is with a company represented by Mr. Van Wart.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Who are the members of the company?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know all the members. There are Mr. Van Wart and his brother, and Mr. Kitchen, and Mr. McLean.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Baird) a member?

Mr. FOSTER. I am not sure—the hon. member has just told me he is.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is that an incorporated company?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, under the General Act.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) When was it incorporated?

Mr. FOSTER. About two months ago.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) So that last summer when the trip was made, under which the subsidy was paid last year, it was not an incorporated company?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend does not understand. No money was paid last summer.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) She ran some trips?

Mr. FOSTER. She ran one trip.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Did she run any trip before the company was incorporated?

Mr. FOSTER. She commenced her first trip about the middle of January.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) When was the company incorporated?

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot give the exact date.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) How much per month is paid to that company.

Mr. FOSTER. $4,100 per trip.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is currently stated every where that that company do not own this steamer, but have only chartered her.

Mr. FOSTER. I informed the House of that.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) And I believe the Government pay the company a larger sum than the company have chartered her for per trip?

Mr. FOSTER. In that you are quite mistaken.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What amount do the company pay for the charter of the vessel? If the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Baird) is a member of the company, he can give us the information.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think that is pertinent to the enquiry.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman has challenged the correctness of my statement. He says it is quite incorrect. I have my information from a source I can rely upon; and as the Minister of Finance challenges the correctness of my statement, I challenge him to give his authority for his, and to tell the House how much that company pay for the charter of the vessel. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Baird) is not only a member of the company, but all the maritime men know he is the manager of the company.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. CAMERON. I do not know it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There are many things known to the maritime members which the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. Cameron) does not know.

Mr. CAMERON. There are more than he do not know them.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. A question has been put which, I think, ought to be answered. The question before us is whether this deviation made by the Government from the terms of the contract is warranted, and it is a material fact to know if the company have subsidised an inferior vessel, and at what rate they have chartered it.

Mr. FOSTER. We ought to be reasonable about this, and all that reasonable men can ask to know is this: The Government proposed to establish a steam service between St. John and Demerara, which requires a vessel of a certain style, capacity and speed to do the service as a permanent work. After looking into the whole matter, we proposed to give so much per month for the service. It is impossible to build vessels, even with all the energy and ingenuity which my hon. friend opposite possesses, by magic; and new vessels cannot be put on the service for six, seven or eight months. In the meantime the service has to be conducted, and it can only be conducted by vessels under charter or by vessels specially built. My hon. friend must know, if he knows anything about the state of shipping of late, that it is one of the most difficult things to obtain a suitable steamer on short notice for charter, and I think if he had to attempt within the last year to obtain a vessel for a short period of time and of a particular kind, for a particular service, he would find it was neither an easy nor an inexpensive work to get such a vessel. The promoters of the company, after having tried to get a suitable vessel, presented me, as the result of their efforts, with the most favorable vessel they could get. I laid the matter before the Council, and the Council, after taking the matter into consideration, determined, reasonably I think, that for the intermediate space of time they would accept the vessel which was less than the proposed tonnage and a little less than the proposed speed for the permanent service. They proposed to give so much for each trip of about six weeks during that temporary time. This was the reasonable arrangement made, and it does not matter whether they got that vessel given to them as a gift or gave $10,000 a month for it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is a matter of some considerable interest to the taxpayers.

Mr. FOSTER. The only question is whether or not the subsidy given is an inordinate one for a permanent service, and whether the intermediate arrangement is an unreasonable one, taking all things into consideration. My hon. friend is on the scent for something, as I can quite see, but he will find he is mistaken in quarrying his game.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am not on the scent for anything except that legitimate information which it is the right and bounden duty of a member of Parliament to obtain, when called upon to vote $70,000 or $80,000 of the people's money.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not legitimate information which the hon. gentleman asks, but he is asking to know the private concerns of a company about whose private business he has no right to know.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. Finance Minister is entirely out of order, and is endeavoring to suppress information we ought to obtain—

Mr. FOSTER. Not at all.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)—and which it ought to be his interest, as representing the people, to give. I am not so entirely ignorant of the matter as the hon. gentleman imagines. I happen to be somewhat largely interested in a steamer myself, which is trading between the West Indies and the Maritime Provinces and the United States, and I know a little of what I am talking about; and the steamer I am interested in is one which is not subsidised at all, but has to compete with those steamers that are so largely subsidised. The statement I made was this: That the vessel which the Government is subsidising is receiving a subsidy per month larger than the company, of which the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Baird) is the manager, are paying to the owners of that vessel for her charter. The hon. the Minister of Finance challenges the accuracy of that statement.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not accurate.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) And I appealed to the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Baird) to reply, when the Minister of Finance rose suddenly to prevent the hon. member for Queen's from giving the information. The hon. the Minister attempts to suppress facts which ought to be within the knowledge of this Committee, and he has contradicted, without authority, the statement which I made on credible authority.

Mr. FOSTER. I rise to a point of order. My hon. friend may make misrepresentations, but I am determined that every one he makes I will bring to his mind. He has stated, as a second misrepresentation, that I rose when the hon. member for Queen's got up to give the information, and asked him not to give it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I say that the hon. gentleman did rise just at the moment that I asked the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Baird).

Mr. FOSTER. I must have this thing settled.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) You rose to a point of order and did not state it.

Mr. FOSTER. It is this: that the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, and who does not take his seat when a point of order is raised—

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) A point of order is not raised.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must take his seat until we hear the point of order raised.

Mr. FOSTER. The point of order is simply this: My hon. friend said that when the hon. member for Queen's rose to give the information, I rose and prevented him from giving it. That I rose is quite true, but that I prevented his giving information which he may have thought fit to give, is not true. My hon. friend ought to do me the justice of taking that back.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman has not taken any point of order. He took a most unjust advantage of his position when he said he was rising to a point of order, and raised no point of order. He had no right to do that. I stated that I was credibly informed that he was subsidising a steamer at $4,100 a month, and that that amount was more than the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Baird) was paying for the charter of the vessel. The hon. gentleman did not hesitate to contradict that statement most emphatically, and, when I asked the member for Queen's to state whether that was true or not, the Finance Minister rose and made a long statement which must have been intended to prevent the member for Queen's from giving the information which I asked. There is no error or misrepresentation in that, and I say that this is information which the Committee is entitled to receive. The Finance Minister is entirely mistaken in the view he has enunciated. He must know that, when such a large amount of money is to be appropriated to a service which everyone admits is one of a questionable character, the Committee has a right to be informed as to the data on which the Government acts. We want to know what cargo the vessel took to the West Indies, what return cargo she brought back, what is the character of the business which he says is to be developed. The junior member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) told us very plainly that he did not see what trade would be developed. He told us that all the fish trade with the West Indies was carried between Nova Scotia and the West Indies, and that none went from St. John. If this vessel is not intended to carry fish, what is she intended to carry? She may carry some small lumber, but nothing else that I am aware of. It is true that she went to Yarmouth, and almost paid people to put their small wares on board of her—some small amount of fish from Yarmouth to carry to the West Indies. The imports from the West Indies have been confined to rum, and molasses and sugar, but rum, molasses and sugar are not the kind of goods which are generally brought in steamboats. We know that the great export from the West Indies is fruit, and that it goes to the United States and will continue to go to the United States. The hon. gentleman does not expect to carry fruit by this vessel to St. John and the only result will be that she will return in ballast to St. John as vessels do return to Halifax. Because, however, a member of this House asks for information in regard to this, he is told that he has no right to do so, but I think it is due to the member for Queen's, N. B. (Mr. Baird), to give the Committee every information in reference to this steanboat. If my information is wrong, that the hon. gentleman is receiving more per month than he paid for the charter of the vessel, I will be happy to withdraw the statement I have made, but I do not want the Finance Minister to rise and instruct the member for Queen's, N. B., not to answer—

Mr. FOSTER. I did not do so.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.)—by stating that the matter was irrelevant, and that it did not require an answer. I say positively that the hon. gentleman stated that in his position as Finance Minister, and that that was an instruction to the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Baird) not to give the information which was asked for. This is not a matter to be kept secret. We know that it is a most questionable enterprise, and that the trade between this Dominion and the West Indies is not increasing. We know that, in 1873, the aggregate trade between the Dominion of Canada and the West Indies was $6,163,000, while in 1889, it was $6,138,000. Sixteen years afterwards, the trade was actually less than it was in 1873, and, although it has fluctuated between those dates, it has never gone beyond the first amount to any extent. If that is the case, if the hon. gentleman seeks to subsidise a steamboat at a large amount of money, and says he hopes to develop a new trade, we have a right to know what trade he hopes to develop, what exchange he thinks can take place between the surplus products of Canada and the surplus products of the West Indies. I hope we will receive the information for which I have asked from the hon. member for Queen's, N. B.

Mr. WELSH. I am sorry that I have to differ with my hon. colleague (Mr. Davies). I think he has no right to ask a question from the member for Queen's, N. B. (Mr. Baird), in reference to his private affairs. I agree with the Minister of Finance. I think this is irrelevant. I am opposed on principle to this grant, but, after the explanation of the Minister of Finance, I am quite satisfied. This contract is given for five years. The Minister of Finance has given a full and satisfactory explanation, to my mind, on all the points upon which we have questioned him. When my hon. colleague questions the member for Queen's, N. B. (Mr. Baird), in regard to his private affairs, I think he has outstepped the bounds. You have no right to do that. The member for Queen's has accepted the contract with the Government, and the Minister of Finance says he is bound to run a certain class of boats until he can put another class of boats on the line. That explanation was full and satisfactory to me. But I am opposed to the principle on which this subsidy is voted. I say it is ruinous to the best interests of the Maritime Provinces, and to the best interests of the Dominion as a whole, because, if we do not protect our marine industry we are doing wrong. The junior member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) spoke to-night, and spoke very properly in a great many ways, but when he talks about his lunatic asylum in Halifax, I think a great many members who support him ought to be put there if they agree with all he says. Steam is the motive power in the world now, but why should we help it? If steamers can compete with sailing vessels, why should we take money out of the pockets of the taxpayers to handicap the sailing vessels? That is wrong. I am sorry that I have to differ for the first time with my hon. colleague as to this matter. If the hon. gentleman from Queen's, N. B. (Mr. Baird), has entered into a contract with the Government to construct these boats, and in the meantime to run the line as best he can, that is a matter between him and the Government.

Mr. CHARLTON. I think the position taken by my hon. friend the member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Welsh), is not a proper one. This is not a Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

private matter; it is a public matter. Here is a sum of public money asked for, to be paid to the hon. member for Queen's, N.B. (Mr. Baird), and the question is, whether this is too much or too large a grant. Has the hon. gentleman made a charter at a less price, and is the Government paying him more than the cost he has incurred? It is the duty of the Committee to enquire into all the particulars of this transaction, and I think this Committee should demand that the member for Queen's, N.B. (Mr. Baird), should make a statement in reference to this matter, and should say whether the accusation made by the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), is correct or not. Unless this statement is made, unless this Committee is satisfied that this amount is not an unduly large amount, unless this Committee is satisfied that the hon. member for Queen's, N.B. (Mr. Baird), has not got a contract which enables him to more than pay the expenses of that charter, the Committee will not be justified in voting this money. I want to know what there is about this matter. I want to know from the member for Queen's, N.B., whether he has received more than he ought to have received. We have a right to know all about it. It is not a private matter at all.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. member for Queen's, N.B., was about to rise. I think the Finance Minister had better allow him to speak, it is not fair to shut him off.

Mr. FOSTER. I think, with all due deference to my hon. friend, when I wish to speak upon a matter which is going through as this is, and of which I have charge, I have a right to speak. I was going to say, if my hon. friend will allow me to do so, that I am surprised at the hon. gentleman, who is a fairly level-headed man, and a man who knows how to do business, taking the position he has with reference to this matter. I think my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island who spoke last took the manly, and honest, and businesslike position. I think my hon. friend has a right to enquire of me and get all the information he can, and I, as representing the Government, who is a party to this contract, must give it to him; but as to what the company pay for their vessels, what they pay for their captains, what they pay for their men, what they pay for any of their belongings—that is not a matter which he, as a member of this House, or as an individual, has a right to demand of those who are carrying on that business. If my hon. friend wants to know whether the Government, in paying $4,100 for the round trip for a steamer of a certain kind, is paying more than the cost of a steamer charter there is a business way by which he can find it out. He can go into the market and he can find out the prices of charters of vessels of that description, for that kind of work, as they rule at the present time, and he can form his own conclusion as to whether the Government is giving more subsidy than the charter of a vessel will cost. But he has no right to make inquisition into the private affairs of any company, to get his information by force in that way. I am perfectly honest in this statement. Some hon. member on the other side has said this is a questionable undertaking. I am quite willing my hon. friends shall question me or the Government with regard to this undertaking, in any way they think proper, and the information I have shall be given to them; but I do not think it is proper for them to insist that they shall know the private business of the company with which the Government makes this contract. When my hon. friend stated, with that confidence and certain air of his which almost always precede a statement which has to be taken with a good deal of discount by those who understand him, when he states in that positive and certain way that he knows that the charter—

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I did not say so.

Mr. FOSTER—that he has reliable information—and he has so reliable information that he refuses to take the word of a Minister to contradict it; he has reliable information that we are paying more per trip than is given by this company for the charter of their vessel. Now, I happen to know just what they give for the charter of that vessel.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Why do you not say so?

Mr. FOSTER. I will not say so, because it is not my business; it is the private business of the company, and I do not choose to give it away. But I happen to know that my hon. friend is entirely wrong, and on my responsibility as a Minister, I state it. Yet, my hon. friend will not take my statement of the matter; his reliable information is so great, his reliable information is so certain. He knows so definitely without a shadow of doubt of what he is speaking, that he believes we are giving more as a subsidy than the bare charter of the vessel. Now, I say the principle laid down by my hon. friends opposite I do not think is one which business men will consider a proper principle. Are we giving too much for this service? If we are, then censure us for doing it; but if we are not, then let us judge it on its merits.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We have before heard statements made by an hon. Minister in the very place occupied by that hon. gentleman, by his predecessor, which we have found to be utterly without foundation in fact. It is no longer than twelve months ago since I, standing in this place, called the attention of this House to a statement by his predecessor by which two or three million dollars were plundered from the people of this country for the benefit of that hon. gentleman and one or two of his friends and constituents in Nova Scotia, by an infamous misstatement as was ever made in any assembly; so that if we do not feel always disposed to accept the statement of a Minister, it is because we have found—though I do not say the hon. gentleman has done it—because we have found statements made on the word and honor of Ministers in the most express terms, which were utterly disproved by the facts stated by their own colleagues within a year or two. However, I will not dwell further on that, except to remind the hon. gentleman that, as a colleague of the very man to whom I allude, he is not entitled to quarrel if we do not put implicit confidence in some of his statements. I come to a much more important matter. The hon. gentleman and his Government have entered into a contract in which the hon. member for Queen's, N.B., is an interested party. Now, Sir, it is possible, if there were only private individuals concerned, that there might be some shadow of justification for the position taken by the hon. gentleman, though I do not admit it, even then. I say, when a member of this House makes a statement such as my hon. friend the senior member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), has made, the Minister, or any member in this House who has any knowledge of it, is bound to state the facts if he is called upon to state them. We are not here, Sir, to stand on these nice punctilios, when $85,000 of the people's money is being voted away. We have a right to go to the bottom of this matter. This is a transaction which, on the statements made by the hon. member for Halifax and other gentlemen of experience here, is a questionable transaction, and some of the supporters of the Government admit it is so as regards the probable result. Now, our point is to find out whether the sum which we are asked to vote is out of proportion to the service rendered, and I contend it is a material fact to know what such a vessel as is now employed could be got for—a most material fact in judging whether this subsidy is too large or not. My hon. friend was, I believe, within his right in making the statement he did, he was perfectly within his right in wishing to know what this vessel was really chartered for. That is an important element in deciding whether this vote is a good one.

Mr. BOWELL. Suppose he got it for nothing?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then I should object to paying $49,000 for it, most undoubtedly.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose his grandfather made him a present of it?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the hon. member for Queen's, N.B., whom I see here, will rise and state that his grandfather made him a present of it, that it was a bonanza which he obtained to recompense him for certain persecutions which he suffered in obtaining a seat in this House, I could understand something about it. But I say, under the circumstances, it is material to us to know the facts; we have a right to know what this vessel, and the inferior vessel, be it remembered, a vessel below the quality, below the size that you require—we have a right to know what she is chartered for. I cannot at all admit the principle that when members of this House are concerned in contracts with the Government, they should be allowed to avoid the responsibility, or to avoid giving information on points of this kind.

Mr. BAIRD. It is no great exertion for me to express myself fully and clearly on the question before the Committee. I can say with all honesty and candor, that I have never yet chartered any steamer for a Canadian, West Indian and South American steamship company. The steamer now chartered and on that route was chartered by Mr. Van Wart. After he sought incorporation for his company, he came to me and asked me to become a member of that company. I believe, if I read the law right, I had a right to do so. It was not a matter of my own seeking; it was not a matter of my own particular choice, although much interested in shipping, and although I had a somewhat personal knowledge of shipping. I may say Mr. Van Wart and his associates, having confidence in my knowledge of marine interests, insisted on my joining them in this enterprise. But if I felt that my appearance in that company was an interference with the benefits likely to result from, or with the proper standing of that company, I would rather be aloof from it. I will say openly and fearlessly that although I appear as an owner of a large amount of the capital stock of this company, freely would I hand it over to any gentleman, or any number of gentlemen, in Canada, who would come forward and take it up with its benefits and its burdens. I have full faith in it. I fully believe it will be a great benefit to Canada, and I believe it will be, in time, a benefit to the company and to the stockholders. I say, as I have said before, that any one who sees fit to enquire into it may do so freely; I have nothing to hide, I have nothing to have hidden. It is well known all over the country that I am identified with shipping, and I am probably the first person that Mr. VanWart would apply to, I having been intimately engaged in shipping interests with him. While I am on my feet, I propose to deal with the question further. Hon. gentlemen opposite appear to be opposed to the subsidy, some on principle, and some appear to be more opposed to this particular subsidy than to any other. In their arguments they appear to totally ignore the fact that there has been a complete revolution in the ocean carrying trade of the world; I speak now particularly of the change from wood to steel and iron as a means of construction, and from sail to steam as a means of propulsion. That has changed the ocean trade almost as much as the railway has set aside the stage coach, and it has been brought about almost entirely by means of aid in the form of subsidies. Some hon. gentlemen say there are no precedents or examples of granting subsidies. Let them take the great English-speaking nations, Great Britain and the United States of America. We find that Great Britain has subsidised largely and freely and has granted annual subsidies to some steamship companies, and it appears to have been a part of the policy under which she hoped to gain the control of the ship-building and ocean carrying of the world. She has followed that policy, and it is one which has always marked her course, and the result is quite plain. In trade and commerce she now outrivals the world, and everyone is ready to admit that she has earned the proud reputation of being mistress of the seas. The United States have been referred to to-night. They have steadfastly refused to grant subsidies, and the result is that their foreign trade has been driven from the ocean, and as a marine power they are a mere mendicant among the nations of the world. In discussing the question of subsidies this particular route appears to have been pitched upon by hon. gentlemen opposite, and they have said that the subsidy is not warranted. They have spoken of the trade that has existed between Canada and the Maritime Provinces and the British West India Islands, and, in fact, all the West India Islands. It is clear to my mind that a steamship route cannot be established without Government aid. The great disadvantage encountered by a steamship which has to travel between fixed and given points, when compared with a steamship which has her freedom and the world for her market, is obvious. Here are the two sides of the question. The one ship has to leave port at fixed dates and has to go, passengers or no passengers, cargo or no cargo; Her Majesty's mails are on board and sailing must be made at the appointed time. So it is necessary, in order to build up and develop a route of that kind, to give Government aid. In the other case the steamship goes abroad with the world for her market, and if she arrives at the West Indies and it will not pay to take a return cargo to Canada, she goes to South America or England to get freight. This route has been considered to be the most beneficial to Canada. Our eyes are being turned towards those tropical non-manufacturing countries to the south of us. They require our products, our lumber, coal, hay, oats, fish, potatoes, apples, the products of our factories and our looms, in fact nearly everything we produce. We, in return, require their molasses, sugars, tropical fruits, and other goods most of which now filter to us through the markets of the United States. The Government has, no doubt, been alive to the spirit of rivalry which pervades the different countries of the world and the nations of the earth. They know that we need outlets for our surplus products, that the profits of trade are so very narrow that much depends on the regularity and cheapness of the lines of communication between our home ports and foreign markets, and they have been driven to the irresistible conclusion that a country which does not hold its own lines of communications with foreign ports must ever contend ineffectually with the better equipped and more enterprising countries. Hence the subsidy system comes in. Hon. gentlemen opposite take their position from that of the United States. If there is no precedent in that country, I cannot give them a better one. I have instanced that country, and we there see the result of the policy of the last 100 years. England has pursued her policy, and the result is that she has charge of the world so far as shipping goes, whereas nothing is known of the United States in that regard. We are completely in the hands of the people on the other side of the water. There is not a good ocean-going steamer in Canada or the United States, and all the vessels united into one would not make a good ocean-going steamer. Is that condition undesirable? If we believe so, and if we wish to emerge from our present obscurity, it is necessary to grant subsidies, as other countries have done. What is the example of the United States? She commenced with her present policy nearly a hundred years ago, and has followed it down to the present time. A century ago her marine interests and foreign trade were greater than they are to-day. Then she carried 90 per cent. of her exports and imports, while to-day she carries only a paltry 14 per cent. Now she pays $200,000,000 annually for carrying her exports and imports. And yet, in the face of these facts, it will be argued here that their's was the wise course, and that the course of Great Britain was unwise. Is it a matter of no concern that the United States are paying annually two hundred millions for carrying her exports and imports, when the marine authorities admit that 77 per cent. of whatever trade is done goes to the nation that does the carrying trade? England has paid large amounts for subsidies. I think it is computed that she has paid $270,000,000 or upwards during the last century; and yet, although that appears to be a great amount, it can be proved that within the last two years the receipts from her marine interests would wipe out the payment of the total subsidies for a century. Look at the question from that standpoint, and you will begin to understand whether it is wise to keep in the background, whether it is desirable for us to stand as we are and remain inactive or non-progressive in our marine industry. It may be I am speaking too fully the truth on this subject. However, those are my views and my honest views on the matter. I look upon it not only alone as a trade matter, but as a natural necessity that our marine interests be fostered; I look upon it that the best interests of the Canadian Dominion are interwoven with this question. That our sails should be unfurled to the breeze in every clime, and that the distant markets of the world should be visited by our steamships. We are essentially a maritime people. We have 10,000 or 12,000 miles of sea-coast, studded with magnificent harbors, many other thousand miles of lake shores and inland waters, and many other thousand miles of navigable rivers and arms of the sea, which are capable of bearing a commerce tenfold greater than has ever been found upon them. Are we to sit idly by, and allow this mighty water power to fall into the hands of strangers, as the United States have done? We have got to look on it from one standpoint or another. If we are afraid of these small amounts for subsidies—I say small and insignificant compared with the results obtained from them—then we must keep in the background. Nothing is thought of the country paying millions and hundreds of millions to subsidise railroads to carry the products of the forests, and the fields, and the factories down to the ocean shore. Here it is that navigation comes in to do its work, and to carry these products thousands of miles over the sea. Is it not important for us to see whether this ocean transportation is done under the Canadian or under a foreign flag? I maintain that this is a question of vast importance for us. Here are the four great industries: agriculture, manufactures, commerce and navigation; they are not rivals, they are identified with each other, and they are so completely interwoven that we cannot do injury to the one without injuring the other. If you withhold from your navigation proper encouragement, you have got to take a back seat in the transportation of your commerce over the sea. I say it is just as necessary to subsidise steamships, to enable us to carry Canadian commerce over the world, as that we should subsidise railroads to carry our commerce through the land. But, perhaps, I am diverging a little from the particular question at issue. The hon. member from Halifax (Mr. Jones) spoke of this trade, as an impossibility, and, together with the hon. member from Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer), complained of this subsidy. I can understand that both these gentlemen who have made fortunes out of the navigation and commerce of the country, and particularly of the trade with the West India Islands, just as the proprietor of the stage coach grumbled when the railroad came along, so do they grumble now. They do not wish to see this trade done by steamships. They had the monopoly almost, in sailing vessels, and they have done well by it. I am glad to know that they have been so prosperous, and that their enterprise and energy has met with success; but I think they ought to be more public spirited, and that they should leave aside their private interest to deal more fairly with a public question of this kind. The hon. gentleman says that this first steamer went out with $6,000 worth of cargo. I am not prepared to go into that question definitely, but, from my information, I would say that the value of the cargo was nearly double that amount. He speaks of that $6,000 cargo as having cost the country $4,000, but he does not for a moment take into consideration that that steamship had to disburse at the city of St. John, something like $1,500 for labor and coal, and that her provision and supplies cost $1,100, in all $2,600. We have also to take into consideration that that steamship was fairly the property of Canadians, and was owned by Canadian stockholders and that her earnings would go to the Canadian people; so that that subsidy has not been utterly lost to the country, as the hon. gentlemen said. The hon. gentleman says that the trade was sufficiently developed. Nearly every man within the sound of my voice knows that we have but little knowledge of the West India Islands, or of the country to the south of us, and they have little knowledge of us. The trade that has been done with the West India Islands in the past was done in a narrow and contracted way, and the markets were kept in a speculative condition. A large amount of products would go to a single island, and if it was reported that the markets were high there, other cargoes were sent to the same island, and a loss probably sustained. If you mailed a letter perhaps it would be six weeks before it would reach the island, and a cable message would cost 75 cents a word. Now, the steamship comes in to equalise this condition of things, and to make known to the merchants of the different islands what products they can obtain in the Dominion of Canada. The representatives of the firms in Canada are now going to the West Indies, and, so far as I am able to report, the representative of a single House, who went in the first steamship of this Canadian company, reports sales to the extent of $20,000 of manufactured goods from Central Canada. Hon. gentlemen opposite say that does not amount to anything. Well, it was only a mere beginning, and the second ship that sailed almost doubled the cargo of the first steamer. The second steamship was loaded to its utmost extent by the products of Canada, nearly all of them ordered goods already sold in the West India markets, and ready to be delivered by this rapid means of communication. The people everywhere in the Maritime Provinces seem to be anxious for the development of this trade, and though the hon. gentleman may dispute its success, I give him the open challenge that he never saw a steamship enterprise inaugurated which gave better general satisfaction and brighter prospects of success. Some gentlemen appear to regard it in a sneering way that the steamship struck on a coral reef during her voyage, and they prophesied that this would be the end of the company. It is not the end of the company. I do not propose to come to the conclusion that the company will die out in that way, or that the loss of a steamship would drive them to the wall. I trust that is not the material they are made of. Although they may have had difficulty in establishing this route, although they have to visit twelve West India ports, although a long and expensive route of 2,400 miles has to be traversed, yet I think it is already clearly demonstrated that the enterprise can be successfully carried out. Perhaps the amount is too small for the development of the enterprise. Some hon. gentlemen may think that is a strange remark; but I do say that the amount is too small, considering the extent of the voyage the steamship has to make. When we consider what other countries have paid, when we consider that Great Britain spent £240,000 a year for opening up her West India trade, that the Spanish Government does not hesitate to pay $4,400 per trip for a line from Havana to New York, making fortnightly trips, it is not too much for Canada to begin with a subsidy of about $49,000 a year. The United States is doing a very large trade with the West Indies. I think there are 34 steamers running from the port of New York to the different West India Islands, and a large fleet of sailing vessels leaving that port are loaded with products of Canada. There is no doubt in my mind that Canada can produce them more cheaply and in greater abundance than the United States; and if proper encouragement is given, Canada can drive the United States out of that market—there is no doubt about it, and the hon. member for Halifax knows that very well. He knows that the products which the farmers of Canada raise, such as hay, oats, potatoes, horses, sheep, butter, cheese, and all that class of goods, can be produced in Canada at a greater advantage; and with cheap and rapid transportation, we can go there and drive them out. We find it very difficult to force these products into the United States' markets at present; the prices are getting lower, and their duties are against us, with, perhaps, higher duties in the future; so that this West India market is regarded as a happy outlook for the people of Canada, and I trust that they will not be disappointed in their expectation, and that the Government will not be disappointed in the investment they have had the courage to make. Now, we see that our neighbors across the border are discussing this question from every standpoint. Some are proposing subsidies and some bounties; every one who has a Bill before the House acknowledges the fact that from their want of attention to their maritime industries, they have allowed them to be destroyed. But I should say that if the United States can become a maritime power again, Canada has tenfold its advantages. We have the advantage of them in cheaper material and cheaper labor; our men take more naturally to the sea; the Americans, for the last fifteen or twenty years, nursed in the lap of luxury and ease, have begot habits of extravagance; their men do not like the dangers of the sea; while we have on our shores, in large numbers, a class of men who have been reared in the school of adversity, who have learned the rules of economy, who are willing to face the dangers of the sea, who have been hardened by a life of exposure and inured to danger. One of our men is worth ten of theirs in actual service, and one dollar expended in the Dominion of Canada to-day would do more to build up a marine than ten dollars expended in the United States. Now, I will not detain the House any longer. I simply ask them to give this matter the fullest and fairest consideration. Remember that Canada, besides her other industries, has the foundation of maritime greatness, and I ask hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House to build on that foundation as far as you can. Encourage it as far as you can by every means in your power—by every lighthouse or beacon or buoy which is necessary to be erected along our shores, by every wise, just and humane law you can enact for the protection of our seamen, and by the gift of every aid, bounty or subsidy you can afford for the encouragement of the ship-builders and ship-owners, who have established themselves on our high seas. I urge you to meet these aspirations of a maritime people, and prepare them as far as you can for the ocean race they have got to run.

Mr. BLAKE. I congratulate the hon. gentleman's county upon having returned to Parliament a member so patriotic and so broad in his views, and so liberal in his notions as to Canadian policy; I congratulate the Government on having such an ardent and enthusiastic supporter of the great National Policy; but, above and beyond all this, I congratulate the hon. gentleman's company on having such an able and earnest advocate of the policy which is to result in the granting of this subsidy to his company. The hon. gentleman said he might be regarded by some people as something of a crank on this subject. If he be, I take leave to say to him that the crank has been very well oiled by his friends in front of him this Session. Not a single revolution of the crank or of the crank's steamboat engines but is produced by the moneys of the Canadian people, to be voted at the hon. gentlemen's instance, and by his assistance. The hon. gentleman was asked a question, which I am told was greatly reprehended—it was said that it was his private business. It was alleged that the whole charter price of the steamboat was less than the whole amount of the subsidy to be voted. The hon. gentleman made an interesting speech; he touched on many topics, but he omitted that; nothing was said on that subject whatever. The common sense aspect of the question, which, perhaps, never forced itself on the hon. gentleman's attention, but which did force itself a little on ours, remains in the same obscurity in that regard, on which he could have given us the best of information, that it was in before he rose.

Mr. BAIRD. I really forgot that.

Mr. BLAKE. I thought so.

Mr. BAIRD. I know it will be a source of satisfaction to the hon. gentleman to learn that the amount paid for the use of the steamers will be nearly double what is received from the Government. The charter, as near as I can recollect—Mr. Van Wart made it and communicated it to me afterwards—was £850 sterling per month for the use of this steamer. Then add to that the steward department, the coal—

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) How much does the hon. gentleman get per month?

Mr. BAIRD. You must take it altogether, as near as I can give it to you. The trip occupies two months. In regard to these ocean steamers, there are two forms of charter: one is called net, and the other gross. Under the one form, you take the steamship as she is, provided with all that is necessary; under the other form, you furnish the captain and everything that is necessary to work the ship—you take charge of the steward's department, the purser's department, and the hands; and under the arrangement Mr. Van Wart made, I say it costs half as much, almost double what comes from the Government to pay for the use of that steamer. Now, that is as nearly as I can place it, and if any

hon. gentleman wants greater satisfaction let him come to the company and I will, although I am only what is called the marine manager of the concern, and not the business manager of the concern, give him the fullest and most ample information. There is not a thing I wish to conceal from any hon. gentleman, Liberal or Conservative. The whole business is perfectly open, and, if necessary, I will show the whole expenditure of the steamer and all relating to the business. There is nothing that we want to disguise or that we need to be ashamed of. At present, when ocean steamers are in great demand and freights are enormously high, it is absolutely necessary to yield to the demands of their owners, and we have to put as good a steamer on the route as we can get.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman must not suppose that I imagined he was ashamed of this or of anything. Not at all.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BLAKE. Has the hon. gentleman done anything to be ashamed of?

Mr. FOSTER. Nothing to be sneered at.

Mr. BLAKE. Then why should he be ashamed of anything? The hon. gentleman has told us that the charter price was £850, so that it appears the charter price was about the amount of the subsidy. He says it is true there is a difference between the net and the gross charter.

Mr. BAIRD. That is for the month. We only get paid $4,000 per trip and we pay per month in advance for the steamer; so that two months have to be paid for the one subsidy.

Mr. BLAKE. So that according to the statement the Government pay a little more than half the cost of the charter.

Mr. WALLACE. No.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman in front of me denies it; but the hon. gentleman himself nods assent, and I prefer to accept his statement to that of the hon. member for West York.

Mr. WALLACE. He says about half.

Mr. BLAKE. The result, according to the statement of the hon. member for Queen's, is that the subsidy amounts to one-half the charter price and more, the trip not taking the full two months as I understood it—

Mr. BAIRD. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. I am right in saying it does not take the two full months, and, therefore, the subsidy represents more than one-half the cost of the charter. Under these circumstances, the public pay more than one-half the total expense of the charter of the vessel. So that I do not think it is very wrong to say that the crank is tolerably well oiled. The hon. gentleman alluded to great examples which were to be followed or shunned by Canada. He alluded to the marked experiences of two great nations with reference to the progress of their marine—Great Britain and the United States; and he told us that the painful decadence of the ocean marine of the neighboring Republic was due to its not having observed proper rules of development. I think he is quite right in that general proposition, but I wholly dissent from him as to the particular facts to which he refers. I am old enough to remember when the American marine was strong and powerful upon the seas, and strong and powerful, notwithstanding what the hon. gentleman has alluded to, although, I think, in a wholly mistaken sense—the English mail subsidy policy, or, as he calls it, the policy of protection. Hon. gentlemen who have looked at the discussions in the neighboring Republic, are familiar with the arguments of those who have advocated these subsidies, and what they call the policy of protection for many years, and we know how utterly exaggerated and fallacious their views and arguments are; but I say that the English subsidy policy, such as it is, was far more extensive in early than in later days; and in those early days, the American marine was strong and powerful upon the seas. There was a time in which ninety per cent. of the American products were exported in their own bottoms. There have been changes, of course. They were twofold. There was, in part, the substitution of iron for wood, and of steam for sail, and in part, also, there was a change in the fiscal policy of the Republic. Those natural advantages which at one time the Republic had, when wood was the principal material, became, to some extent, changed and altered in favor of England, as iron became a substitute for wood, and, whatever advantage remained to the Republic, became lost by their high protective system, which rendered it utterly impossible for them to build ships. They can only build ships for their great coasting trade, because they forbid anybody else to compete with them in that,—because they do not allow any vessel under a foreign register, to partake of that trade. But they build no ships for the ocean trade, because they cannot. I believe that, at this moment, the main body of the stock of the Inman line is held in New York and elsewhere on this side of the water; but, of course, the ships are not built in New York, but where they can be best and cheapest built, that is, on the other side of the Atlantic; and though the Inman stock may be owned there, as well as that of any other line, yet they cannot build their own ships and cannot register them under their own flag. That is the condition of things in the United States. The arguments of the hon. gentleman are, to my mind, those of a gentleman who has a very strong feeling in favor of the policy to which he refers, a feeling it is impossible he should not have, seeing he is engaged in this business, not alone in this particular enterprise but in other enterprises of this character. He says the business is susceptible of great development, and he calls upon us all to help it in every way: by surveys, by buoys, by lights, by beacons, by humane and wise laws, and by subsidies, and yet more subsidies. He says his company is not subsidised enough as yet. I hope the Minister of Finance will remember that. He says they are not at all certain that they will be able, without more subsidy, to go on and develop the trade, and further the great and important mission for which they are incorporated, and in virtue of which he has joined them, but they will try and do their best. He says they are not made of such material—and we know that, because do not we see the principal corporator before us, the marine manager—that a trifle like a coral bank, into which the boat may run, will stop them. No, but a leak in the Treasury must subsist or the boat will go down. Let the Treasury leak, and the boat will run, and the coral bank will not stop them, because a vote of credit will patch up the ship, and the company will be up and doing. I pitied the hon. gentleman for the unfortunate position in which he said in the opening of his speech he was placed. It seems that in this Canada of ours there was one gentleman, a member of Parliament, who was not a free agent. He did not go into this matter voluntarily; he did not seek it, but the company sought him, and persuaded and compelled him. Mr. Van Wart came to him and insisted on his joining the company; and so it was against his will, and by compulsion that he joined the company and took the position of marine manager. He reminded me of another famous character. You recollect, Sir, Mrs. Cluppins, in the famous trial of Bardell and Pickwick, who, being called to testify to a conversation which she heard through a chink in the door, was asked by the counsel: "And so you were listening?" "Not at all, Sir," she replied, "I would scorn the haction; the voices forced themselves on my hear." So it was that the hon. gentleman did not want to join the company, but was forced and compelled by Mr. VanWart into the painful, and disadvantageous, and unprofitable position he occupies to-day.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). It is glorious to have a giant's strength, but it is tyrannous to use it as a giant, and, when I heard an hon. member of the great eminence of the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake)—of whom I heard but yesterday one of the most distinguished members of this House say that he regarded him as one of the three or four greatest speakers of our English tongue now living, and I heard that greeted with applause from many members on both sides of this House, though it was not said in this House—throw his whole weight and his whole strength against a young member who has only been here three or four years, I regretted that it was not parliamentary to use such terms as coward and bully on the floor of this House. Why does not the hon. gentleman measure swords with a hale and strong gladiator like himself? I remember that I had not been three days in this Chamber, bashful as a boy from school, when I felt the heavy hand of the hon. gentleman. I desired to rise, and it turned out that the Mace had gone on the table or off the table, I forget which. I was wrong in some point of order, no doubt, but I have nothing to say now in regard to the cowardly sneer which he then indulged in. I do not think it is worthy of that gentleman to pound and pommel young members as he has been in the habit of doing. I remember that the first three members of this House whom he raised his hands to smite after I was here were men who had not been three weeks in the House. I am sorry that I would not be in order if I went on and dealt with him in the personal way in which he has dealt with my young friend from Queen's (Mr. Baird). We know the member for Queen's, in New Brunswick. We know how he came from the country and made his way until the city of St. John is proud of the courage and the success and the business ability which he has brought to the town of his adoption. The hon. gentleman sneered at the hon. member for Queen's, and said it was evident that he could not be ashamed of anything. When history hides in her golden urn the deeds of all of us, small and great,

Mr. BLAKE.

I think the deeds of the hon. member for West Durham, are those of which we ought to be more ashamed than those of any other hon. member. Dowered by the gods with great gifts, has he made a good use of them? Mr. Forster, who used to be a lieutenant of Mr. Gladstone, said that the latter had been able to persuade his friends of many things and himself of anything, and that same gift of self-deception seems to have been the gift of the Liberal leader in this country. I am not going to rake up the events of 1870 and 1885, but, I think, the hon. gentleman should forbear to throw a taunt at any hon. member as being without shame. I will conclude by saying, that there is not one member here, when he has to go before the bar of history, and to be judged there, when the passions of this hour and this year have died out, who has as much reason to ask for forbearance as the hon. member for West Durham; for, in the hour of Canada's greatest trial in 1885, the country remembers that while the member for South Oxford and the old leader of that party like men stood by the cause of law, and will be held, therefore, in perpetual honor, the member for West Durham bowed the knee to Baal.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Of all the speeches to which I have listened since I have been a member of this House, the most extraordinary is that of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, Mr. Weldon (Albert). Unless it was to vent his spite against the honored and trusted leader of this party in the past, I do not know what his object was. The hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) simply ventured to criticise an item in the Estimates by which some $85,000 was proposed to be voted towards certain steamships in which a member of this House is largely interested. He questioned whether it was a sound policy to vote that money, whether the expenditure would result in any good to this country, and whether it was not rather a subsidy to that gentleman by the party whom he supports. The hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) did not dare to take exception to one statement made by that hon. gentleman (Mr. Blake). He did not dare to say that the argument was not a cogent and a convincing argument. He did not say whether he himself, in his better mood, would not vote against such a grant. He did not tell us whether it was honest for us to vote $85,000 to subsidise steamships, a large amount of which money would go into the pockets of the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Baird). But he turned round, and in language very carefully studied, he sought to insult my hon. friend (Mr. Blake), and made use of expressions which I think, in calmer moments, he will regret. He holds up to our respect the career of the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Baird). Is the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) aware that the member for Queen's came into this House under a subterfuge so disreputable on the part of the returning officer that he was called to the bar to be reprimanded, and was only saved by the slavish vote of the supporters of hon. gentlemen opposite? Is he aware that the member for Queen's sat here for twelve months knowing that he had only a vote of the minority in his constituency, and that he pocketed his indemnity when he had no more right to sit here than any messenger who stands at the door? Is he aware that he trampled upon the voice and the vote of the honest electorate of Queen's county, that he came here under a false return made by a partisan returning officer, and that he kept out Mr. King, who was elected by the people of Queen's, and who was one of the most respectable members who ever sat in this House, and was returned by the honest vote of the people? Is he aware that Mr. King was kept out of this House by a conspiracy which was entered into by the party opposed to him? And the hon. member himself was one of those who recorded their votes in support of that transaction. The hon. member is surprised that any man of honor should dare to refer to transactions which should bring the blush of shame to his own face as well as to that of the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Baird). I do not want to rake up these matters now, but we cannot forget, when taunts of this kind are thrown across the House, and when the hon. member asks if there is anything that he ought to be ashamed of, we cannot forget that that gentleman sat here for twelve months when even his own friends were ashamed to acknowledge him as one with whom they could associate; we cannot forget that so high did public opinion rise in this Dominion that the hon. gentleman had to resign his seat; we cannot forget, furthermore, that the Supreme Court of New Brunswick have stamped with their judicial disapproval the return, which the bought returning officer made, the false return he made to this House—as being a false and illegal return. That hon. gentleman sat here for a year, not only under a return which was false and illegal, but which the Supreme Court, after having the matter fairly argued before them, have pronounced to be such, although it did receive the approval of the high and moral gentleman who assumed that mighty righteous and moral tone here to-night. Now, I will not pursue this matter any further.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on; go on.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Well, I will pursue it this far; the hon. gentleman opposite of me talks about my hon. friend before me (Mr. Blake). It would ill-become me to defend him, he is able to defend himself; but I will say this to the hon. gentleman opposite who threw some aspersions upon his character, that to-day he stands higher in the esteem and in the regard of the good people of Canada whose opinion is worth anything, than any hon. gentleman on that side of the House. I say he has the entire affection, esteem and regard of the members with whom he has worked, and to-day there is hardly a respectable member of the Conservative party who does not entertain for him the very highest feelings, and they do so justly. Who is there in Canada who has made the sacrifices for his country that he has done? Who has given up so much of his time and his talents—

An hon. MEMBER. Oh, oh.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. member for West York sneers. I would not mention him in a comparison of this kind; it would be derogatory to the whole argument to mention his name. But who is there who has given as much of his time and talents as the hon. member for West Durham has given to his country—given it freely and voluntarily? No one that I know of, and if he enjoys the esteem and respect of those who have followed him politically, if he enjoys the respect of those who are opposed to him, he only enjoys that which is his due; and to-day, I say, he stands among the peers of the greatest statesmen that Canada has ever produced.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). Mr. Chairman—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I must ask the House to return to the subject. If the hon. gentleman wants to speak upon the item he can do so.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I had not much to say in reference to the item in my last remarks; but I would crave the indulgence of the House to say a word in reply to the somewhat energetic remarks of the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies). He is quite wrong. He betrayed—if I am parliamentary in saying so—his customary inaccuracy in choosing to say that I had made any reference to the political career of my hon. friend from Queen's, N.B. I did not mention it; I did not even allude to it. I alluded to his personal career—to his good fortune, to his vigor in conducting his commercial enterprise. I am quite ready to open up the question of the Queen's county case and fight it over again, but I am reminded by the Chairman that it is not in point to do so. I gave a vote four years ago, and I would be very glad to give that vote again to-night—and never in the forum of conscience would I apologise for that vote. I would vote again to-night to say that we should have referred that controversy to the courts. That was the position I took then, and I take the same position now. I do not think the hon. member for West Durham will feel himself very greatly indebted to the hon. member for Queen's, P. E. I., for the certificate of character he has received from him. Hardly a word he has said of the hon. member for West Durham which I would not endorse. I know he is held in great esteem by his party; I acknowledge his great abilities, but I did evince my sense of his lack of courage in speaking of the hon. member for Queen's, N. B. (Mr. Baird) in the manner he did, a manner not free from anger, jumping and pounding in so savage a manner as he did. If the hon. member for West Durham were wise he would retain his seat and let one of his dogs of war worry and bait my hon. friend; if he had let his lieutenant from Queen's, P. E. I., render that service we would have had our usual treat, and no one would have complained. For we know that hon. gentleman from Queen's, P. E. I., to be very kindly and worthy by nature. We know he simulates this rhetorical fury, but he does not frighten any one. We saw the pomp with which he stood up, the martial air and the scowling face, but I was not as terrified as I ought to have been. He did not even call out any reciprocal indignation from this side. He cannot even successfully simulate indignation, and we cannot take it seriously, we know him too well. I do think that, perhaps, the hon. member for West Durham in the future will be more kindly remembered by a good many of the members of the House, if he will pick his quarrels with his equals, men of his own age, of his own intellect, his own strength and his own experience.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Now that my hon. friend from Albert (Mr. Weldon) has relieved himself of a little anxiety, which he seems to have cherished to show his feeling against the member for West Durham, perhaps we might proceed with the subject before the House. I have listened very carefully to the speeches which have been made in the House on this vote. I listened particularly to the address of the manager of the steamship company, the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Baird); and happening during the course of that lengthy speech to glance at the paper before me, my eye rested on a motion placed on the paper by the member for St. John, for correspondence between this Government and the Governments of the West Indies relating to the extension of our trade. I could not but think that the hon. member for Queen's had arrived at the conclusion that we were not likely to reach that motion this Session, and he took this occasion to give off a speech, which he had prepared for another occasion, and deal with the subject generally in that exhausting manner with which he favored the House. It is quite true he indulged in all kinds of prophecies. He told us that our hon. friend from Lunenburg and myself were making fortunes in the pursuit of West India commerce, and for that reason we were naturally opposed to any interference. Well, I may say to the hon. gentleman that whatever fortune, be it large or small, which my hon. friend and myself have been able to make during the course of fifty years of commercial experience, we made it by our own efforts, by our own brains. We never put our hands into the public chest, as the hon. gentleman is putting his to-night, to benefit himself and his company, at the expense of the taxpayers of this country. If the hon. gentleman would go to work, as we have done, with his vessels, or his steamers, both large and small, and develop trade with the West Indies, or any other part of the world, no man would rejoice in that enterprise and the success of it, more than I should; but when he stands up here to-night to defend a company with which he is associated, which he promoted, of which he is the manager, and which never would have existed but for his political influence with the Government, I say that he is standing in a very difficult position indeed. Why, the hon. gentleman, during a large portion of his speech, told us everything but that which we wanted to know, and he would not tell us that until it was brought to his recollection by my hon. friend, and then he was very unwilling to give it. He appeared to be very frank, and wanted to tell us all; but hon. members will remember how my hon. friend had to drag statements out of him and out of the hon. Finance Minister, who knew all about it. I knew what the Portia was receiving. I knew that she got less than the subsidy which was granted there. I knew she was getting less than $4,000 per month, and I knew by the advertisements which those gentlemen inserted that they expected to make that trip once a month. And, therefore, there would be some additional expense in a small way, but the subsidy which they are deriving from the Government will go largely, if not almost entirely, to pay the whole charter of that steamer. The Committee will notice the care with which the hon. gentleman glossed over the statement made by my hon. friend, that the value of the steamer's cargo was only $6,000, and that the Government paid $4,000 to carry that to the market. He pretended not to know, he was not in a position to deny it; it might be so, and it might not be so.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No; no.

Mr. JONES (Halifax.)

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. gentleman said he was not in a position to say that it was so, and he was not in a position to say it was not so.

Mr. BAIRD. I said I was confident from my recollection that it was more than $6,000, and I believed it was twice $6,000; and I think you were not in a position to contradict that statement from your recollection.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. gentleman is quite right. He said he would not assert it, but he thought it was more than $6,000; he was pretty confident of it and he was rather inclined to believe it was double that amount. What does that go for? It is a mere bald assertion; the hon. gentleman admitted he did not know. We know the cargo of the steamer, it was a public exposition, and it was not necessary to tell a man of business what the cargo consisted of. The hon. gentleman said in the course of his very lengthy argument that there was a great future in this trade with the West Indies, and there were few members in this House who knew anything about it. In that statement he was probably quite right, and in that category I will class the hon. gentleman himself and my worthy colleague who preceded him in his argument. There never were two speeches delivered in this House, presumably by intelligent men of business, on any business subject, which displayed such a lack of knowledge of the subject, as the speeches delivered by the hon. gentleman and by my hon. colleague to-night. The speech delivered by my hon. colleague was sort of off-hand special pleading. He said it is going to turn out all right, and the people are going to be benefited in that way. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Baird), in the course of his argument, pointed out how the trade of the United States had fallen off of late years, and how the vast commerce of that country was carried in foreign bottoms. Well, he received his answer from the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake). So long as the United States adhered to correct sound fiscal principles and policy, they were able to maintain their supremacy at sea; but the moment they adopted that fiscal policy, which this country in the madness of political feeling has attempted to imitate, that moment the maritime decadence began, until they have reached the position which has just been described. But, after telling this House what a miserable position the commerce of the United States occupied, the hon. gentleman turned round and endeavored to make a case on the other hand, by showing the great advantage of trade in all parts of the world by steamers which had superseded sailing vessels. And then to prove his argument, he told us that from New York alone there were 34 vessels trading with the West Indies. This commerce of the United States which had declined to nothing at all, according to the statement of the hon. gentleman, required 34 steamers to conduct it between New York and the West Indies. He might have stated the number as more than that, because from every port in the United States they have trade with some of the West Indian Islands. They cannot have trade with the Windward West Indies. If the hon. gentleman knew anything about the trade, he would be aware that a steamer was formerly on the route from New York to the

Windward West Indies, the Barracotta, and she had to be taken off because she did not pay expenses; but if a paternal government would have given $4,000 for every trip, as the hon. gentleman is taking out of the taxpayers of this country, the steamer would be running to-day. But if a steamer would not pay between New York and the Windward West Indies, how can we expect a steamer to pay from here? The hon. gentleman has talked of the products of the Maritime Provinces, and of the products they required from the West Indies, and he should know that we cannot, from our position here, attempt to compete with the United States. It would cost more to get the products down to our seaboard than to ship them to the West Indies. In a large market like New York, where they have all the natural products, these goods can be obtained for much less than they can be bought here, and they are, moreover, that class of goods which long usage and long practice has established as being wanted there. But the hon. gentleman says we are going to send the products of our looms and our manufactories. The hon. gentleman should be aware that under our present fiscal policy, the exports of our manufactured goods have fallen off, as was pointed out by my hon. friend near me. It is utterly impossible that the hon. gentleman could not know, if he was familiar with this branch of the subject, and if he was in communication with the West India Islands, as I have been every week of my life during the last forty years, that every article manufactured in Canada can be bought much cheaper, 10 per cent. at least, in the West Indies than they can be bought in Canada to-day. And why so? Because they come from the old world, from a free trade country, and because they are admitted to the West Indies at a very moderate duty. If we have to pay 30 or 40 per cent. on these goods to keep them out of our own markets and enable our manufacturers to live, how can the hon. gentleman expect for one moment that we are going to be able to compete in markets where all the goods enter at the same rate? I have long been engaged in trade with the various islands of the West Indies, and time after time I have sent samples of goods to ascertain if some trade cannot be opened out there, but I found in every case, not in one case but in every case, the prices of goods there were lower than with us. Therefore, those arguments which hon. gentlemen are using to-night are so completely without knowledge—I do not wish to be disrespectful to the hon. gentleman or to my colleague,—but I say without any disrespect to either of them that they do not and cannot possess that knowledge, acquaintance and familiarity with the trade and wants of the West Indies that a man possesses who has been forty years intimately connected with that business. I give it as my deliberate opinion, based on a long business experience, that unless this steamer is subsidised and receives enough money to maintain it, it will not run 12 months. There is nothing in New Brunswick to send to the West Indies, except lumber. Hay will not pay, potatoes will not pay, except at certain seasons, and they have nothing to send from that Province. I am not speaking against St. John; whatever applies to St. John applies to Halifax. The principle of subsidies is as indefensible when applied to Halifax as it is when applied to St. John, while at Halifax, of course, there is more natural trade. But it is the whole principle I object to, and when my hon. colleague told this Committee that the people of Halifax want this line of steamers, he was speaking for a small political clique with whom he is associated, and through whose influence here he has been able to get this subsidy for a most improper object. I say it is improper, because it is injurious to the city he represents. I again say it is an injurious and unsound policy, and that the hon. gentleman is not wisely acting in the interests of the people of Nova Scotia, the people of Halifax, or the people of this country. The hon. gentleman asked: What do the American fishermen say about the American steamers trading with the West India Islands? Well, the United States Government give no subsidy to these steamers, and if a dozen steamers were to go from Halifax, or St. John, or any part of the Dominion to the West India Islands, on their own merits and without subsidies, it would be a perfectly legitimate undertaking. The hon. Minister of Finance displayed some warmth this afternoon when he was questioned by my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies) on the subject of the expense of these steamers. Now, I quite agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Davies), and I can quite account for the warmth the Minister of Finance displayed, because of his apparent ignorance of the whole transaction. The hon. gentleman, from the commencement, was not able to tell us what the subsidies were to any one of these lines of steamers which he mentioned. He was not able to tell us what Jamaica was giving to the line from Halifax, or what Bermuda or Turk's Island were giving to these steamers which he subsidised. I say that the hon. Minister did not faithfully discharge his duty, if, in making the contract with these people, he did not demand from them the fullest and most complete account of everything connected with that enterprise. The hon. gentleman should have known what the ordinary expenses of a steamer of that kind would be. He should have known what the company was receiving from other sources, and how much Jamaica, Turks' Island or Bermuda were giving, if they were giving anything, and then the hon. gentleman ought to be in a position to say to this company: "After all these subsidies you do not require more than so much and I will not give you any more." But, in total ignorance of these particulars, as the hon. gentleman has admitted, and in total ignorance of everything relating to the financial part of this enterprise, he enters into a contract with these people, for a very large amount. I repeat, Sir, it does very little credit to his judgment, and less credit to his Government; and I am certain that every succeeding year, the hon. gentleman will find out that public opinion will condemn his conduct in this matter. My hon. colleague (Mr. Kenny) pointed in triumphant terms to the clearances for the Jamaica steamers, and stated that he noticed that my firm generally figured for some shipments. That is quite true, I admit that at once; but my business firm carries on a large business, and if we receive orders to send a large quantity by steamer, we do so and we get paid for it, and I presume that if the order were sent to the hon. gentleman he would do the same.

Mr. KENNY. Certainly.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). We never, at any time, on our own account, shipped one dollar's worth by these steamers to the West Indies, and I do not think we ever shall. Under these circumstances, I repeat that this question has not been properly considered by the Minister of Finance. I do not think he has looked at the question in all its bearings, and I believe he has given these steamers an improper subsidy. I believe that neither the Jamaica steamers, nor the Cuba steamers, nor the steamer from St. John, should have one cent of subsidy. I cannot understand upon what principle the hon. gentleman is going to reconcile his sense of duty with such an appropriation of the public funds. He must remember that he is only holding his office for the time being. This is not his money; it is the money of the country which he is putting into the hands of political friends, and not expending for the benefit of the country. The hon. gentleman cannot show that this subsidy is going to increase the trade of the country. If he could point to any prospect of that, he might be right from his point of view, but I do not admit that either. He cannot show that we are going to send any new article to the West Indies which we did not send before, or increased quantities of anything we have been in the habit of sending. I repeat that this is the most indefensible act I have ever known to be done, even by this Government, which is so ready with their money for their political friends.

Mr. FOSTER. Although it is late in the evening, I do not think it is quite right to allow these remarks of my hon. friend, to go without a few words on my part. I do not think the hon. gentleman has treated this subject fairly, and I want to show very briefly to the Committee, in what particulars he has failed to treat it fairly. In the first place he has proceeded upon the assumption, that the Jamaica and the Cuba service was a Halifax service, and that the St. John and Demerara service is a St. John service. I am frank to say that if these three services were simply to be viewed as city services, and for these two cities alone, I should not have given them a subsidy.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). That is all they are.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman entirely mistakes the spirit which has prompted the Government in asking Parliament to give a vote of money for the opening up of these steamship services. They are for the whole of Canada, and not simply for the city of Halifax or the city of St. John. I can speak for both these services to-day, but in reference more especially to the service between St. John and Demerara, I know that a widespread interest has been taken in it outside of the city of St. John, outside of the Province of New Brunswick, outside of the Province of Quebec, and in the Province of Ontario. The statement that was made to-night, and which I believe to be true, that an agent in the city of Montreal, having gone out on the first trip of this steamer, has made sales of about $20,000 worth of goods, not only shows the interest that is taken in this enterprise outside the city of St. John, but it also shows the benefit which is accruing, and it seems to prove what my hon. friend (Mr. Jones) was so anxious to have proven, that new trade will be started in that direction which has not been there before.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). What were the sales?

Mr. KENNY.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman will allow me, I will say what I have to say. The opening of this line of steamship communication to the West Indies has been for the benefit of the whole Dominion.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). No.

Mr. FOSTER. It is for the benefit of the whole Dominion, and it will be taken advantage of by the Dominion largely. As the interest at present excited in these routes, and as the traffic which has already commenced shows, the whole of Canada, as well as the Maritime Provinces, is deeply interested in this question. My hon. friend said that we cannot raise anything to send to the West Indies. That is absurd on the face of it. The people of the West Indies have to live, and they must live upon food, a large proportion of which must be raised in a country like ours. The hon. gentleman states that you can buy things more cheaply in the West Indies than you can buy here.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Manufactured goods, I said.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman evidently forgets that in 1888 the United States exported more than $30,000,000 of goods to the West Indies, and that these goods were of the widest assortment of kind and quality. Those goods, taken kind for kind, are similar to those which the Dominion of Canada produces, and it is fair to presume that if the United States, having as the hon. gentleman argues, the great disadvantage, as compared with Canada, of a protective tariff one-third or two-thirds higher than ours, can go into the West Indies and compete to the extent of $30,000,000 worth of products in a single year, surely it is possible for Canada also to compete in that market in the very same qualities and kinds of goods, both manufactured and natural products. So that my hon. friend seems to have erred in two particulars—first, in confining this subsidy to merely local services, and, secondly, in denying that Canada has products which may be profitably exchanged with those of the West India Islands. Now, it is not necessary for me to allude to the points my hon. friend has brought up about political influence. I have frankly stated the course taken in the negotiations. Tenders were called for, the best were accepted and the contracts have been granted to the most advantageous tenderers, in the opinion of the Government; political influence, or other influence, did not weigh, one way or the other, as my hon. friend well knows. He says that it did, as he is bound to do, it is his stock-in-trade. Having followed the course of trade, though not to so great an extent as my hon. friend with his wider experience, and feeling the necessity of developing larger markets for the products of this country, I believe that between Canada and those countries there may be built up, by wise policy and prudent effort, a large and profitable business—profitable to us in both ways, of bringing in products which we need for manufacturing and to use, and taking from this country products which they need from us. By this policy we shall be opening up a beneficial trade to the whole country. It will give that which commerce to-day especially requires, regularity and despatch. We may talk about sailing vessels and steamship lines as much as we please, but the whole trend of trade to-day goes to establish the fact that in the competition of this day you must have steamship lines, and regular and quick methods of transmission, and the country which does not have these will be left behind in the race for commercial wealth and supremacy. I believe, just as was stated in the singularly able and comprehensive speech of my hon. friend from Queen's, New Brunswick (Mr. Baird), that Canada has a great future in the line of her navigation and her commerce and the benefits which will accrue from development in that branch of effort: and I believe that by a wise and judicious method of fostering and opening up these lines of profitable traffic by subsidies—which are to be graded according to the necessities of the service, and which are to be taken off gradually as the lines develop a trade for themselves—Canada will be doing the best for herself as a country and for her future prosperity. My hon. friend says that the commerce has not increased since we have tried this subsidy. The experiment is just being tried.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I did not say that at all.

Mr. FOSTER. The very fact that our commerce with the West Indies and South America is not increasing as rapidly as we could wish is a proof that more should be done than has been done. With the competition that we have to meet with the United States in those markets, we must have equal facilities, sharp, quick and regular communication, and with such, I believe, our country can make a way for herself and hold it in the competition for commercial progress in those southern countries; and, however much our trade may grow in other directions—and I believe it will grow towards the Pacific as well as towards the Atlantic—in my opinion there is to-day no more profitable field for us to enter commercially than that which lies in South America and the West Indies.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) The hon. gentleman has made a lengthy speech, as did the hon. member for Queen's, New Brunswick (Mr. Baird), before him, upon the possibilities of trade that may exist between Canada and the West Indies. The hon. Minister of Finance tells us that if Canada is going to be a great country in the future, we must develop this trade. No one knows better than the hon. gentleman himself that commerce consists in the interchange of the surplus products of one country with the surplus products of another; and can the hon. gentleman tell me what surplus products we are going to bring back from the West Indies in exchange for the surplus products which we send them? There cannot be commerce without exchange; you may force it in certain ways by subsidies; but he has failed to tell us what trade we are going to develop from the West Indies in order that they may pay for the goods we send to them. That is the first question. The second question is this: He says that he hopes that we may be able to carry the war into Africa and send our manufactures into the West Indies to compete with those from Great Britain and the United States. The hon. gentleman year after year has proclaimed in this House that such is the weakness of the manufacturing industries of Canada that they could not exist, but would be driven to the wall and submerged under the avalanche of goods from the United States if we did not raise our tariff from 17½ per cent. to 30 or 35 per cent.; and will he answer this question—if we cannot compete in our own country with the manufactures of Great Britain, handicapped, as they are, by the cost of transportation across the Atlantic, and with the manufactures of the United States, handicapped, as they are, by the cost of transportation from the centres of production, how does he expect us to compete with them in the West India market, when, in addition to the cost of the goods here, we have to add the transportation charges to the West Indies? The thing appears so simple to my mind that I cannot understand how the hon. gentleman can delude himself into the belief that we can do anything of the kind. If he thinks that by giving a subsidy of $75,000 or $80,000, he is going to reverse the natural laws of trade, he is a much simpler man than I take him to be.

Mr. FOSTER. I have just one observation to make. If the United States in 1888 sent $30,000,000 worth of goods to the West Indies and brought back $78,000,000 worth of products, it is equally possible for Canada to find something to bring back.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Does the hon. gentleman know that a very large porportion of the goods the Americans brought back consisted of fruit? If he does not know it, let him ask those in the trade, and he will find that the steamers which are employed in carrying the manufactures of the United States from Boston and New York to the West Indies exchange them for some of the finest fruits in the world, which the West India people want to export, and which New York and Boston want to take.

Mr. EISENHAEUER. As the representative of a country which will be largely affected by the subsidising of these steamers, I should like to say a few words on the question. The hon. member for Queen's, New Brunswick (Mr. Baird) has referred to me as having been connected with this trade, and the hon. senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) as having made a fortune out of it. I have been engaged in this West India trade for a number of years. We commenced this business without any Government subsidy, and I have no objection to the hon. gentleman or any one else substituting steamers for sailing vessels if they do it on their merits. If they think this is an enterprise worth going into, why do they not undertake it with their own capital? I certainly think my hon. friend and myself are entitled to more credit than is that hon. gentleman, for when we started our enterprise, we started it with our own capital and not with the capital of the Government. I am quite sure, if the Government attempted to introduce a subsidy in favor of a wholesale dry goods store at Halifax, which would compete with the business of the hon. the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) you would find that hon. gentleman taking a different position from the one he is now taking. Although he is a very warm supporter of the Government, I would not be surprised in that case to see him come over on this side. There is logically no difference between the Government subsidising a line of steamers to compete with private enterprise and subsidising a dry goods store to compete with the junior member for Halifax. The hon. gentleman told us that we had to meet competition from American steamers, but he failed to tell us that not one of these steamers are subsidised by the American Government.

Mr. FOSTER. Many of them receive large subsidies from other Governments.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Very few of them.

Mr. FOSTER. The vessels from New York to the West Indies do.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). They do not receive subsidies.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I know they do not, for I am a shareholder myself.

Mr. EISENHAUER. The hon. gentleman also said these steamers were subsidised to develop the general trade of Canada. Now, it is well known that the principal trade between Halifax and the West Indies is the fish trade, and that if you put more fish on the West Indian markets than the people can consume, the price must come down, and that is the effect of these Government subsidies. The hon. the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) will bear me out in stating that the result would be as beneficial to the country generally if the steamers did not carry any fish at all, for the country will derive more benefit from the sale of fish carried by sailing vessels than if steamers also are employed in this trade and over-stocking the markets, and thus reducing prices lower than if market was supplied by sailing vessels. The hon. gentleman said that the steamers always had full cargoes. Well, then, so much the worse for the sailing vessels and so much the worse for the price of fish. With regard to what my hon. friend has said as to the low freights benefiting the fishermen, he is altogether mistaken, because when a low freight is offered, as in the case of the Portia, which took freight, I am credibly informed as low as 12½ cents a quintal, the shippers were induced to ship more than the market could stand, and the consequence was that the low prices entailed on them a greater loss than they would otherwise have sustained. I cannot carry a quintal of fish to the West Indies at much under 40 cents freight, and if the Government are going to subsidise a company to carry it at 12½ cents they are introducing a very unfair competition, which must eventually drive sailing vessels out of the trade. We will, then, perforce, be compelled to go to the Government, and we will be just as well entitled to subsidies in order to develop this great trade with the West Indies as those who are now receiving them. I have been thinking for some months of procuring a steamer and thus acquiring the right to ask the Government for a subsidy in order to enable me to develop this trade, to the development of which the Minister of Finance assured us there is no limit. I only hope that our friends will be in power by that time. But, speaking seriously, I cannot see how the hon. Minister of Finance can take the view of this matter that he does. He talks about exporting goods to the West Indies, and asks why we do not do so. Surely he has brains enough to know that it will cost more to get these manufactured goods to the seaboard than it costs to bring them from New York to the West Indies, and that is simply the reason why we cannot develop this trade with the West Indies in competition with the United States. It is possible that we might send, to a limited extent, provisions there, but the hon. Finance Minister must see that the population of the West Indies is limited, and that we cannot, therefore, extend our trade beyond the requirements of the people without injury to ourselves. This subsidising of these steamers is most unfair to those who have invested their capital in sailing vessels. I do not think these gentlemen who are subsidised are so anxious to develop the trade of the country as they would fain make us believe. We all know that their object is to put money into their own pockets without risking their own capital, and I do not see why we should give the public money to aid them in that purpose. And the promoter of this enterprise has given the Government a strong hint to-night that the subsidy is too small, so that the Finance Minister need not be surprised if next year he should find the companies asking for $100,000 instead of the $85,000 now being given to them. The whole policy of the Government in this respect is wrong. They are opening the door to further demands, for if these steamers succeed in crushing out the sailing vessels, those now engaged in that trade will be compelled to resort to steam, and what will the Government be able to answer when we ask them for aid to develop this trade? In the course of a few years there will be hundreds of thousands of dollars asked for subsidies. I think on the whole this vote should be struck out.

General LAURIE. The hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), has, to my mind, furnished the best argument that could be furnished in favor of granting this subsidy. He has shown from the trade returns that our trade with the West Indies has been falling off for some years, whilst it has been entirely carried on in sailing vessels.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). They have carried all you had to carry.

General LAURIE. I will show the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) later on that he is not quite correct. In matters of this kind, two people have to be consulted in regard to trade—the two who transact the business—we and the West Indies. Two years ago there was a discussion in this House on this subject, and after the Session I sent to everyone holding a prominent position in the West Indies a copy of the discussion which took place and asked for their views in regard to the reason why the trade was not progressing. The answers were almost unanimous. They said: You must keep up with the times, you must have steamers to carry on your trade; if you do not send your trade by Canadian steamers, you must send it by American steamers. That is just what has been going on. We have had two steamers running from Halifax and carrying the trade, which should have gone direct to the West Indies, to New York whence it has gone to the West Indies. When a subsidy has been given for the carrying of that trade, the owners in New York have taken one of their steamers off the line to New York, and have placed it on the line to carry our trade directly to the West Indies, showing that they are aware that their trade would be cut off now that the alteration in the system has been made. Surely, it is better that our trade should go direct to the West Indies from our own ports than that it should go via New York. To go further, my correspondents in the West Indies said: You will have first of all to give a subsidy; follow our example in Bermuda; at first we paid tens of thousands of pounds to encourage the establishment of steamship lines from Bermuda to New York; now, we only pay £500 a year for the carriage of the mails; the lines are self-supporting. I believe that would be the case with our own lines. To say that there was only a comparatively valueless cargo carried by the first steamer is nothing. She was simply the pioneer, and I am informed that she carried down men who were seeking business, and that they are going to bring business, not only to Halifax and St. John—for I do not regard them as being only interested on this matter—but to the manufacturing towns of Canada. I understand that already large orders have been given, and I congratulate the upper Provinces upon that fact, because our seaports are not only the outlets of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, but are the outlets of the whole Dominion. I, therefore, think that it is proper that these subsidies should be given, and I am confident that in due time the trade will be developed.

Mr. BAIRD. I would like to say a few words in order to compare notes with the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) and the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer). In dealing with this matter, they could not refrain from dealing with it from a personal standpoint. They referred to me, they referred to my business standing and their own, and they took credit for the way in which they had prosecuted their own private affairs, and claimed credit for the manner in which they sailed their own vessels and for the manner in which they had generally acted. I agree with them, but I am bold to say to them that I have had as little Government money in my possession as either of them. I have had less. Up to this moment, I have never received, either in the way of office or of subsidy, a single dollar from the Government except the indemnity paid in this Parliament. I think I am just as clear as those gentlemen are, and, although they boast of their honesty, I think, as many men in this country will say, that I have come by the little which I possess as honestly as either of them has. As to the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), who, I am sorry to see, has gone away, I would like to ask him some questions. He is one of those aggressive—one of those doubly aggressive—men that you meet sometimes. I would like to ask him if he is not directly interested in a company which is now seeking for a Government subsidy, and if he is not prepared to take all he can get in the way of a Government subsidy? If it is a crime for me, I suppose it is quite justifiable for him. If this matter is a source of envy to those hon. gentlemen, if they have any courage or would desire to deal with this from a personal standpoint, let them examine the books of the company—I will see that they have the opportunity—and, while we have a subsidy from this Government, we expect more from the islands to the south of us. If, after that examination, you feel that you can make more money than by your own sailing ships, come in and take some of the stock of the company, with all its bonuses and subsidies, rich as it may be in Government boodle, and I am ready to take the outside. If the hon. member for Queen's (P.E.I.), were here, I would ask him if he would do that. I am willing to divest myself of all shares in the company and to do anything in order to remove the envy which seems to exist in the minds of these

hon. gentlemen. Then I will have no hard feelings against them, but, on the contrary, anything I can do to remove their hard feelings and to assist the company, I will be happy to do. Either say that you will except that offer or say that you do not care to take the trouble and the turmoil because you think you can do better with your sailing ships. As to the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), I admit the breadth of his knowledge, I have always acknowledged his learning and his eloquence, and, while we differ in principle and in the mode in which these subsidies should be applied and the benefits arising from them, I, nevertheless, have a great admiration for his views. If he wishes in the future to lay on the lash, let him do so, let him do it as hard as he likes. The party have undertaken that process with me, and they have carried it on, I should say, to their full satisfaction. But they have not driven me out yet, and they will never be able to drive me out. If it was a matter of my own choice, my own free will, I would not be in this Parliament; but while that course is pursued I will be here just as long as there is life in me. I think you have had your full swing, your full satisfaction, but if any more is necessary, go on with it, and when you succeed I will give you credit, but if you do not succeed, I will laugh at you to the last day of my life. You may say I did wrong. I have made political mistakes, I made a mistake that I regret. I fell in with political thieves, and I never learned to do good for evil, I did evil for evil, and, perhaps, I was pretty well punished in one sense, but not punished to the extent that hon. gentlemen would like to inflict punishment upon me. I never would be punished to that extent, I want you to understand that fairly; and while I admire the hon. gentleman's learning, there is no one that fears his biting sarcasm less than I do.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The Minister of Finance somewhat misapprehended my argument in reference to the articles for the West Indies. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that he understood me to say that there was nothing we produced here that would suit the West Indies. I certainly made no statement of that kind. What I was trying to show to the House was this: That as respects our natural products for the West Indies, it would cost more to take them to the sea-board and ship them at St. John and Halifax to the West Indies, than they could be sent out from New York, and on that ground we never could expect to have any large trade in our natural products. The observations of the hon. member for Shelburne (General Laurie), of course, settle the question. I suppose I should not offer any objection after that, for his remarks are conclusive, particularly when the hon. gentleman states so accurately that the Portia was taken off the New York route that she might be put on this route. Of course, the hon. gentleman was out of the country, I acquit him of any intention of misrepresentation, but it shows the difficulty of professional men when they attempt to deal with business subjects; and the hon. gentleman fell into one of those errors in which he is likely to fall again, when he speaks upon this subject.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think there is one thing that has become pretty clear by the observations made by hon. gentlemen on the opposite side who are supporting this resolution, and that is, that we cannot reconcile the interests of the owners of sailing vessels with the interests of those who are engaged in running these steamers, supported as they are, by Government subsidies. The short speech that was made by the hon. member for Shelburne (General Laurie) shows the House that he is quite ready to drive sailing vessels to the wall—in fact he thinks the days of sailing vessels have gone by, that their usefulness has gone, and so, if this country is to do a larger business than has been done heretofore, it must do it by taking money out of the public treasury to aid those who desire to become proprietors of steamers that cannot be run at a profit upon fair commercial principles. I can well understand that if this system was persisted in and generally applied, nobody would have anything, because the profits of everybody would be required to sustain the losses of those engaged in various commercial enterprises. The hon. gentlemen who are sitting around me, who are interested in the West India trade, and who are carrying on that trade without calling upon the Government for anything, have made it perfectly plain to everyone on both sides of the House, that this is a warfare waged by hon. gentlemen like the hon. member for Queen's, N.B., upon the proprietors of sailing vessels. My hon. friends near me are not coming here asking us for anything from the public treasury, they are doing, and they are ready to do, a commercial business between Canada and the West India Islands on commercial principles. The Finance Minister is not satisfied to leave this business in the hands of those who are specially interested in it, but he undertakes to turn it from the natural channels in which it would flow if there was non-interference, and to subsidise, at the expense of the whole country, steamers that can only be maintained at the expense of the sailing vessels of the Maritime Provinces. I think that is a most improper policy to pursue. The more this policy is discussed, the more obvious is it that it is indefensible. The Minister of Finance says there is a good time acoming, that Canada has a great future before it; but when we look at the failures connected with every one of these lines of subsidised steamers, I think every one here must be reminded of the story that Sydney Smith tells of his old horse calamity. He was enabled to have the old horse travel all day by fastening a peck of oats some distance before him, and the horse chased the oats. It had its provender before it, and the hon. gentleman tells us, that this country has its future before it.

Mr. FOSTER. Most countries have.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I suppose that its future is before it, but whether that future is going to be any more profitable than the past has been, so far as the hon. gentleman has had anything to do with the past, I think is extremely doubtful. I believe the unprofitable character will attach to these subsidised enterprises in time to come that has attached to them in the past, and this Committee will be wanting in its duty if it does not record its opinion upon the impropriety of these subsidies.

General LAURIE. I must correct the impression which the hon. gentleman drew from my remarks. I certainly did not wish the House to understand that I thought steamers would supersede sailing vessels. On the contrary, what I said was, that if it were desired to preserve the trade of the West Indies, which is the point we were discussing, and to increase it, we must employ steamers, because sailing vessels have not been able to retain the trade.

Mr. BLAKE. Whatever relevance the suggestive parallel of my hon. friend from Bothwell may have as to the prospects of the country, I think it is very clear that it is extremely inapplicable to the vote before the Committee, because nobody will pretend that the oats are kept at a notable distance from the horse on this occasion. The Finance Minister knows and takes care that these oats find their way where they are intended to go. I hope the digestion of the animal is improved, and that he will get more sleek under the operation. I have no quarrel to make with what the hon. member for Queen's, N.B., has just said, so far as it relates to me; on the contrary, I rather admire the tone and spirit of his last speech, and I admire it most of all because the hon. gentleman did, as I understood him, express some regret for that event to which I alluded in the remarks I had made. I was very glad to hear that expression of regret. It is the first I have heard from the hon. gentleman, and I wish to say that if I had known he had made such an expression of regret before, or if I had heard such an expression from him before, I would not have made the allusion I did make. The hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) has attacked me, and gone over a wide field in general terms in a manner to which I do not intend to respond. I intend to say only, that I have had a seat, with the exception of one Session, in this House since the Dominion of Canada was established. It has been my good or my evil fortune to have taken a somewhat active part in debate during these twenty-three or twenty-four years, and I never have been conscious of any reluctance on my part to meet any hon. gentleman in debate in this House. It has been my part from time to time and at various times to stand opposed in debate to hon. gentlemen opposite, and to take my part, as far as I could, with hon. gentlemen opposite, even with the ablest and best of them. I never felt apprehensive of the hon. gentleman's leaders, not from any consciousness of peculiar powers, but because I do not conceive that hon. members in this House stand in any such sense as the hon. gentleman avers, upon an inequality in debate. I believe that no man in this House need be apprehensive of standing up against any other man when he has honest convictions on any subject to which he has given his best attention, and is stating the conclusions to which his reason and judgment have led him. I do not think any man here, has, during my experience here, in dealing with public questions, had need to be afraid of meeting any other member. I should be sorry to regard the position of members of Parliament as different from what I have stated. I hold myself free to answer the observations of any man at any time and under any circumstances, and I believe the only serious inequality that subsists between one member and another is, not that inequality which may be due to his experience in debate, but that inequality which subsists as to the side he takes and the merits of the arguments he addresses to the House. That is the difference, from my view, in the position which the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Baird) and hon. gentlemen on the other side occupy in this debate, and the position which hon. members on this side of the House occupy. We differ in opinion on that subject, as the hon. member for Queen's has said; and the great questions involved have been debated for a great while, and I suppose will be debated for a great while longer before their solution is reached. But there ought not to be, and I repudiate for my part, the notion that there is any such inequality between any hon. member on this side of the House and any other hon. member as would render it unfit for any member to stand up and address his observations to those of any other hon. member, as would render it improper for one man to stand up against another; I repudiate the notion that we stand on such an unfortunate footing as regards the dignity and independence of members of Parliament, as has been suggested by the hon. member for Albert. The hon. gentleman has dwelt upon some grievance which he says I have committed against him—I do not know what—at a very early period, and which he seems to have cherished even to this distant day. I cannot express my apologies to the hon. member for Albert, because he has not told, and I really do not know, what the offence was. If I did, I would tender to the hon. gentleman's wounded, and apparently susceptible feelings, the same apology I would have expressed to him at that distant date, if he had communicated to me then this grievance which remains even yet quite unknown to me.

Mr. MARA. I notice that an item for mail communication between New Westminster and Victoria has been dropped. Is it intended to place that amount in the Supplementary Estimates?

Mr. FOSTER. That is an amount which heretofore has been paid for mail service by that route. The Postmaster General, in accordance with an arrangement made last year, is allowing a certain rate out of postal revenue, and that amount will be paid to the vessel. The hon. gentleman and others interested have drawn my attention to the matter, and I think I told them I would take up their case and submit it to my colleagues before the Supplementary Estimates were brought down.

Mr. MARA. I understand that is to be for a direct mail between New Westminster and Victoria?

Mr. FOSTER. That is the way the vessel runs.

Canadian Registration of Shipping..... $2,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is a very considerable increase here.

Mr. COLBY. The publication of the shipping list is made triennially, and this year the publication will take place.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There are a great many complaints amongst people in the Maritime Provinces that copies of the lists cannot be obtained.

Mr. COLBY. I am told they are sent gratuitously to all who ask for them.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Some merchants in Charlottetown have written to the Department, but failed to get them. Do I understand there will be no difficulty in getting them?

Mr. COLBY. Yes.

Quebec River Police..... $12,000

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I thought it was understood last year that this amount would be omitted from the Estimates.

Mr. COLBY. The amount for the Montreal police, which was included in this item, has been dropped.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I thought it was stated by the Minister last year that the whole item would be dropped.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What are the duties of the police that are retained?

Mr. COLBY. They have to guard the harbor and the river to a very considerable distance to prevent crimping and so on.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) My recollection is that last year the Minister stated that it was his intention to drop the vote in future years.

Mr. COLBY. But we have made good progress in one year.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) But we have $12,000 still.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think the Minister promised that he would drop the whole item; but he said he would give his attention to it, and seek to reduce it. He may have gone so far as to have said that he intended in time to get rid of half of it.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Do I understand from the Minister that the item for the Montreal police has been omitted?

Mr. COLBY. Yes.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Then this is an increase.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What has been done with these policemen at Montreal who have been disbanded? Did they receive any pensions?

Mr. COLBY. Mr. St. Ormond, the inspector, was placed on the retired list, with a pension of $308, and Mr. George Murphy, the chief constable, received a pension of $269.94. These are the only two who received pensions.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Did the men receive gratuities?

Mr. COLBY. Nothing as yet; but it may appear in the Supplementary Estimates.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would suggest to the Minister of Finance that he should lay on the Table the actual expenditure on account of Consolidated Revenue up to date, 1st March, as compared with the expenditure last year. This is usually brought down, and is of very great convenience.

Mr. FOSTER. I shall do so.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I trust the placing of an automatic buoy at Black Point, to which I called the attention of the Minister of Marine before he left, will receive consideration.

Mr. COLBY. That is being considered by the Department now.

Mr. LOVITT. There was an appropriation for a light at Helen Wood's Island last year. I wish to ask if the Government intend to build it next season?

Mr. COLBY. There is a difficulty about the title there.

Mr. LOVITT. The Government can get over that difficulty by appropriating the land. I understand there is a piece there that does not belong to the proprietor at all.

Mr. COLBY. That has been the cause of the delay there.

Mr. LOVITT. I know that; but I wanted to know if it was going to be delayed much longer.

Pier and lighthouse in the Lower Traverse River (on account—estimated cost $100,000)..... $10,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How comes this to cost such a large sum of money?

Mr. COLBY. It is a permanent pier in deep water. There is a floating lightship there at present which is liable to float away. This work has been particularly asked for by the Quebec Board of Trade and others.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How much of this is to go to the pier, and how much to the lighthouse, and what is the depth of the water?

Mr. COLBY. The water is very deep there, and I believe $80,000 will have to be spent on the pier.

Marine Hospitals and shipwrecked and distressed seamen..... $49,000

Mr. COLBY. Arrangements have been made which will involve a reduction of the vote for the marine and immigrant hospital at Quebec from $15,000 to $5,000.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I would suggest that a similar saving could be effected at St. John by pursuing the same policy there.

Mr. COLBY. I think the same policy is being carried out at other places.

Steamboat Inspection..... $23,000

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I desire to take this opportunity of referring to the appointment of the new steamboat inspector, Mr. Stevens, who was appointed about two years ago. He is a gentleman eminently well fitted, I believe, for the position, and he discharges his duties with very great care and attention. A number of those who know him and the work he is doing have spoken most highly of his inspection of steamboat boilers. I do not want to say anything disparaging of that gentleman's predecessor, but it is well known that there is no comparison at all between the efficient way in which the work is now done, and the perfunctory manner in which it used to be done, and I have been surprised to hear that the present official does not receive as much salary as his predecessor did. I heard of his inspection of one boiler, and if he devotes the same care and attention to every one that he did to that, he deserves to be very highly complimented; he made a most thorough and efficient inspection, one that satisfied me that when he inspects a boiler, the public can rely upon the work having been thoroughly well done.

Mr. KENNY. I have listened with very great pleasure to the remarks of the hon. member for Queen's. Before this evening I stated that I would have the most implicit confidence in an inspection made by Mr. Stevens. He served as engineer a long time in the Cunard Company and I do not think the Government of Canada has a more loyal and faithful officer. It is a position in which a weak man would be exposed to a great deal of temptation. I am glad to endorse the recommendation of the hon. member. I consider that Mr. Stevens is entitled to more remuneration than he receives at present.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I agree with what the hon. gentleman has said with regard to Mr. Stevens, and in justice to his predecessor I would say, that before the infirmities of his later years, he did his work very efficiently.

Mr. LOVITT. I am glad to endorse what has been said about Mr. Stevens. I had experience with him in Halifax on a disabled steamer and he is a gentleman worthy of every confidence and respect.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not know the gentleman, but if he is not getting a large enough salary, and can do better anywhere else, let him go and do it. I do not like to hear hon. members standing up here and talking about efficient officers. I venture to say that he is doing better now than he could do in any other position, and if he is not, he is a fool.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There is this to be remembered. The duties are of a most important character, and it is important that they should be efficiently discharged. I do not say that he is not well paid; but I took the opportunity of expressing what I believe to be true, that he devotes more time and attention to his work than any public officer who has come under my notice. I know that his salary is less than that of his predecessor, and his work is done five times as well, and I thought I would call attention to that.

Committee rose and reported resolutions.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 1 a.m. (Saturday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 17th March, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 122) to prevent the disclosure of official documents and information—(from the Senate.)—(Sir Adolphe Caron.)

Bill (No. 123) respecting the Ontario Pacific Railway.—(Mr. Bergin.)

JESUITS' ESTATES ACT.

Mr. CHARLTON. I desire to renew the enquiry which I previously made as to the return in reference to the reports made in regard to the Jesuits' Estates Bill to the Law Officers of the Crown. Some three or four weeks have elapsed since the hon. gentleman promised to bring down the return.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have just laid it on the Table.

Mr. BLAKE. It has been brought down today.

JUDGE'S RESIDENCE IN MONTMAGNY AND BEAUCE.

Mr. CHOQUETTE asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to change the residence of the Judge administering justice in the Districts of Montmagny and Beauce, in accordance with the petitions received from the advocates practising in the said two districts?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is not intended to take any action on that subject at present.

I. C. R.—STEEL RAILS.

Mr. LAURIER (for Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT) asked, What quantity of steel rails, or of iron rails, were purchased for the use of the Intercolonial Railway in the fiscal year 1889? Also in the fiscal year 1888? From whom were these rails purchased? Were they bought by tender? If so, were tenders advertised for, and how long?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There were 7,000 tons in the fiscal year 1888-89; and 5,000 tons in the fiscal year 1887-88.

Mr. LAURIER. Of steel rails?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Steel or iron. They were purchased from the Barrow Hematite Steel Company (Limited), and I have no doubt they were all steel. They were bought by tender and contract. Tenders were not advertised for. Circulars inviting tenders were sent to the following manufacturers: West Cumberland Iron and Steel Company, Barrow Hematite Steel Company, Blanford Steel Company, Steel, Peech & Tozer, Charles Cammel & Co., Moss Bay Company, Rhymney Iron Company. Offers are no longer asked of the Ebbw Vale Company, and the Dowlais Company, their rails having proved so bad.

STE. CROIX LIGHT.

Mr. GUAY (for Mr. RINFRET) asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to provide a floating light in place of the Ste. Croix buoy, located in the St. Lawrence, opposite the Church of Ste. Croix, in the County of Lotbinière, in compliance with certain petitions to that effect?

Mr. COLBY. No decision has yet been come to in regard to providing a floating light in place of the Ste. Croix buoy, but the matter is under the consideration of the Government.

DUNNVILLE DAM—DAMAGES AT LOOMIS CREEK.

Mr. HESSON (for Mr. MONTAGUE) asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to refer the claims of the Township Council of North Cayuga township, County of Haldimand, in respect to damages sustained at Loomis Creek on account of the dam at Dunnville, to the Dominion Arbitrators for adjustment?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is not the intention to refer the claims to the Dominion Arbitrators, but they will be referred to a tribunal which will deal with them in a more speedy form.

RONDEAU POINT.

Mr. CAMPBELL asked, 1st. How much land does the Dominion Government own on the Rondeau Point, County of Kent? 2nd. Has the Government ever had an estimate made of the value of the timber on the said lands? If so, when, by whom, and what was the estimate value thereof? 3rd. When, and to whom has the said timber been sold? And how was the sale conducted—privately, or by public auction? 4th. What was the amount received from the sale thereof?

Mr. DEWDNEY. 1st. The area is 500 acres. 2nd. An estimate was made of the value of the timber at Rondeau Point by the caretaker of the Ordnance lands there, and he represented that as the average size of such timber was small, and as its growth was dense, the growth generally would be greatly promoted if the older trees were cut out. 3rd. The fallen timber was sold in November, 1887, to Mr. John Witherford, by tender; and the standing timber was sold to Mr. T. L. Pardo, under the authority of an Order in Council, in March, 1888. 4th. $41 was obtained for the fallen timber, and $500 for the standing timber.

GUARANTEE OF REGISTERED LETTERS.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, While the fee for registering letters was largely increased under the "Postal Act" of last Session, the safe transit of such letters with their contents not having been guaranteed to the public, do the Government propose, while they retain this high fee, to guarantee the safe delivery of all money sent by registered letters?

Mr. HAGGART. The Government do not intend to guarantee the safe delivery of all money sent in registered letters.

LITTLE MIMINEGASH HARBOR, P. E. I.

Mr. PERRY asked, Whether a survey has been made of Little Miminegash Harbor, P. E. I., with a view of deepening the harbor by building a breakwater? If so, has the engineer made a report? Is the report favorable?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. A survey was made, the engineer reported, and the amount that he thinks would be required for that work would be $3,500.

REVISING OFFICER FOR CHAMPLAIN.

Mr. AMYOT asked, What is the name of the present revising officer for the electoral district of Champlain? What is the date of his appointment? Has he resigned his office? If so, when?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Mr. David Trudel was the revising officer there. He resigned his office on the 16th October, 1886, and was re-appointed on the 3rd January, 1887.

MR. ARTHUR PRIEUR.

Mr. NEVEU (Translation) asked: Is Mr. Arthur Prieur, advocate, of Three Rivers, in the employment of this House and what are his duties? Or is he in receipt of any emolument, in any form whatsoever? What amount has he received since he has been so employed as a translator, or otherwise?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am informed that this gentleman is not employed by the Government.

N. W. T.—HOMESTEADS.

Mr. DAVIN asked, Whether the present Minister of the Interior received, previous to the meeting of Parliament, petitions from agricultural societies in the North-West, urging, amongst other things, as follows:—

“That all who took up land subsequent to the 25th May, 1883, and prior to 2nd June, 1886, and have performed, or are performing their homestead duties in conformity with the land laws, are entitled to and should receive a second homestead; that the law anent second homesteads having been repealed is no reason why deserving settlers should be deprived of their guaranteed rights or suffer without receiving a full equivalent. That the parties, if any, who should suffer are the Dominion Government and Parliament, who solemnly enacted the second homestead law and placed it on the Statute-book, thereby pledging the faith of the Dominion to the settler. “We, therefore, respectfully urge that you draw the attention of your colleagues to the fact that many settlers are still deprived of their rights in this respect, and that good faith should be kept with them.”

From how many societies did the hon. Minister receive such petitions? Did the Minister of the Interior bring before his colleagues the subject of acting in accordance with the suggestion of the petitioners as to the right to second homesteads claimed by those settlers who came in between the 25th May, 1883, and the 2nd June, 1886? Has the Government arrived at any decision in the matter? If so, what?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Eight petitions containing the two paragraphs which are above cited, and three petitions of a similar import, making eleven in all, were received. Nine of such petitions were from agricultural societies. The other two were from delegates of settlers near Regina and Calgary, respectively. The present Minister of the Interior submitted the whole question of second homesteads to his colleagues, although it had previously been decided (upon the recommendation of his predecessor, the late Hon. Thomas White, who had given the matter much careful consideration), that the granting of second homesteads was not beneficial to the interests of the whole North-West. The Minister also specially referred the question of the right to second homesteads of those settlers who made entry between the 25th May, 1883, and the 2nd June, 1886, to the Minister of Justice. The decision arrived at by the Government with regard to the whole question of granting second homesteads, is that it is adopted, upon the recommendation of the late Minister. The decision arrived at by the Department of Justice, with regard to the right of the settlers before referred to, to second homesteads, is that they are not entitled to that privilege.

MR. JOSEPH DIONNE.

Mr. DESSAINT (Translation) asked, is Mr. Joseph Dionne, of St. Denis, County of Kamouraska, a permanent employé of the Government? If so, in what Department; what is the nature of his work, and what is his salary.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member, I must say that he is not.

Mr. NEVEU.

I. C. R.—FREIGHT RATES.

Mr. JONES (Halifax) asked, Do the Government intend, in view of the statement made by the Minister of Railways that the Intercolonial Railway is now carrying freight from the West to St. John at the same rate as the Canadian Pacific Railway, which line is 280 miles shorter than the Intercolonial, to apply the same rate to Halifax and put the merchants there on the same footing in this respect as those of St. John?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is not the intention to make the St. John rates apply to Halifax, but the merchants in Halifax will be put on the same footing as the merchants of St. John, by the Intercolonial Railway competing with the Canadian Pacific Railway for the business of those cities.

MR. P. R. A. BÉLANGER.

Mr. DESSAINT asked, Has Mr. P. R. A. Bélanger, surveyor, of L'Islet, received any money from the Government since 22nd February, 1887? If so, what amount, and for what service?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Mr. Bélanger received, for salary, in 1887, for sub-division survey Kootenay District, $1,090.00, and in 1888, for inspection of surveys, $1,338.75. He has also received to date on account of salary for road survey No. 2 of 1889, $523.39.

ARTIFICIAL FERTILISERS.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron) moved:

That it is expedient to remove the duty on Artificial Fertilisers and to place them on the Free List.

He said: In moving this resolution I shall have to repeat what I said in the discussion that took place last year upon this question: that I cannot see why the farmers of Canada should not be allowed this relief. One of the reasons urged last year why the duty should not be removed, was the very small amount of fertilisers that had been used in Canada. In studying the history of the use of these fertilisers, I find that it was only in 1842 that artificial fertilisers began to be used, and it was not until 1844 and 1845 that superphosphates were successfully prepared and used as an artificial fertiliser, and all that took place in Great Britain. It has been urged that Canada, being a new country, we have the benefit of a virgin soil, and we have had, as yet, no occasion to make much use of artificial fertilisers. Another reason why the duty should not be removed was given by both the Minister of Finance and the Postmaster General, which was this: We have phosphate mines of extraordinary richness, and we have all the necessary elements in an extraordinary degree for the manufacture of artificial fertilisers. I hold this is an argument that no protection should be given to the manufacturers of artificial fertilisers. We find that the quantity manufactured last year was only a little over 500 tons, so that but very little revenue would be lost. I hold that every possible encouragement ought to be given to the agricultural industry of this country. When we look at the records and examine into the condition of agriculture in the British Islands, as far back as 1820 we find that the Government and the municipal authorities of that country took so much interest in the agricultural industry that manures of every description were allowed to be conveyed upon the highways all over the country, free of toll. They understood that one of the principal interests of that country was the agricultural interest. To show what is being done in the nations of Europe, allow me to read an extract which I found the other day in one of the newspapers :

"Prince Bismack, replying to an address of the Peasants' Union, promised to continue, as far as his strength will permit, to work in the interest of agriculture, fostering the farming industry by legislation as far as possible, and relieving it from unequal taxation."

Sir, will the Government of Canada take a lesson from Bismarck and remove from the agricultural industry all unequal taxation? I hold that to-day we are suffering to a greater extent than any other class in Canada, and we are getting a smaller amount of assistance, in shape of raw material, than any other class. It is a necessity for the farmers to-day to use all the artificial manure they can possibly find, as well as all the natural manures they can produce, and it is certainly the duty of the Government to give them this relief. We must consider that the use of artificial fertilisers is only experimental so far, and after all the advances that have been made in analysing the soil, it is impossible for any analyst to tell in reality what fertiliser is required on a particular soil, until an experiment has been made. It is true that they can tell the elements that are in the soil, but they cannot tell the amount of any element in the soil that is in a fit condition to be taken up as plant food, so that the use of fertilisers is, after all, only an experiment. I am sorry that we have not more correct returns of the experiments carried on at the Experimental Farm, near Ottawa, which experiments have been conducted at a great cost to the country. I find, in last year's report, that they had been experimenting upon thirty-three varieties of corn, with different kinds of fertilisers. But that is all the information we get from the managers of the Experimental Farm. They have failed to tell us what variety of corn has given the best results, and what variety of fertilisers has been most beneficial when applied to crops on the farm. It is no advantage to the agriculturists to know that the managers of the Experimental Farm have experimented with a certain number of varieties of corn, unless informed as to the variety which has proved most satisfactory. Undoubtedly, every farmer must experiment on his own farm, but it is the duty of the Government to give every possible encouragement to them. We have been told by hon. gentlemen opposite that the present tariff is a National Policy. If it is part of the National Policy to do nothing to relieve the agricultural community, the sooner the farmers know it the better, and I am convinced that when the farmers know that even this small request that I am now making is refused, they will teach the Government a lesson when they get the opportunity. If we have not to have justice done us, if we have not to obtain any relief under the National Policy, which was announced to be one adopted with the object of fostering and benefiting the agricultural interest, if the farmers are to have nothing but promises, the sooner the farmers know it the better. Our agricultural implements are taxed, our fertilisers are taxed, in fact everything we have to buy is taxed, and yet the Government will not take into consideration even a small measure of relief. I hold that if the Government will not give us justice and a fair measure of relief in some form, we must come to the conclusion that the agriculturists are selected as a class to which the Government cannot give any consideration or relief.

Mr. FOSTER. I have simply to state, with respect to this motion, as I have been obliged to state in regard to motions of a similar nature moved by other hon. gentlemen, that it is impossible for the Government to discuss this subject in advance of the legislation which they hope to lay before the House in a short time.

Mr. LAURIER. That only justifies what I said a few days ago, that we should have had the Budget brought down long ago, for hon. gentlemen are told again and again that the question submitted cannot be discussed because the Budget speech has not yet been delivered.

Mr. FOSTER. We have, however, got all the information from the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MITCHELL. In the interest of the Government, I may be allowed to say a word or two. I do not know what the cause of the delay is, and there is no cause to justify the delay except one, and that is, that we are threatened with retaliatory legislation, or an increase of duties on our agricultural products going into the United States, if we are to believe the American newspapers. It looks very much as if there was some fire where there is so much smoke. If the leader of the House will inform us if there is any foundation for this statement, it will afford some palliation for the delay; otherwise I cannot find any. I hope the First Minister will take the House and the country into his confidence in this respect, and not allow his reputation and that of the Government to be smirched, as the hon. member for West Assiniboia would say, by the unjust charge of unnecessary delay.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I should be very glad to take the whole House, or the leader of the third party, into the confidence of the Government—

Mr. MITCHELL. It might be worse than that.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—but we would do much worse by taking the whole of the United States into our confidence as well.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then there is some truth in the statement?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not say so.

Mr. HESSON. There is probably too much importance given by the hon. gentleman who has moved this motion, to the great necessity of fertilisers being admitted free into Canada. There are many members of this House who are interested in the prosperity of the agricultural greatness of Canada. I was led, owing to the notice given by the hon. gentleman of this motion, to make a brief enquiry into the facts as they exist. I was much surprised to find that the total amount of duty paid on artificial fertilisers imported into Ontario last year was $207.80. I thought I would look further, and I found that the duty paid by the Province of Quebec was $50.70, or a total for both Provinces of $258.50. I think we have in this fact clear evidence that the tax is not a burdensome one, and further, that we do not import fertilisers to any great extent.

The subject, however, should be considered seriously by the Government, in view of the fact that we have enormous phosphate deposits in this country, which should be developed in a national sense as well as in a local or provincial sense, and also in the sense of producing a cheaper fertiliser than any we can possibly import, paying the freight, to say nothing of the duty. It must also be remembered that we have the finest salt deposits on the continent, and this is a cheap and valuable manure; and, under these circumstances, it is the duty of the Government to consider the advisability of admitting fertilisers free or not. They should also consider the possibility of producing more cheaply fertilisers at home, which will more than counterbalance the disadvantage arising from the two great Provinces of Ontario and Quebec having to pay yearly $258.50 duty on imported fertilisers.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). I suppose, probably, this is a matter that does not affect the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. But, if the argument he addressed to the House proves anything, it proves that the duty is prohibitive as regards the two Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, because I find, on looking over the gross imports of fertilisers into the Dominion, that artificial fertilisers of the value of nearly $13,000 have been imported, showing that while the great Province of Ontario, under existing circumstances, has not imported very largely, whatever burdens the 20 per cent. tax imposes, they must be imposed on our friends in the Maritime Provinces. Is it fair, under these circumstances, that this burden should be imposed on those Provinces? If we have large phosphate deposits in Canada, how is it that we cannot develop them without adopting what are practically prohibitive duties? At the present moment, if I understand the attitude of the Government, they are apprehensive of a retaliatory measure being adopted by our cousins south of the line. Would it not be good policy to extend the hand of friendship and admit their fertilisers and adopt generally a conciliatory policy towards them, and at the same time give our agriculturists an opportunity of obtaining fertilisers where they please? It is perfectly true, that perhaps this imposition is not very much, but everyone who knows the rates at which agricultural products have been selling of late years, knows that 20 per cent. imposed on these fertilisers may be to the farmers, the difference between using these fertilisers at a loss and at a gain. I do not care from what standpoint you look on it, this question, even if some may consider it a trifling question, is a matter worthy the consideration of this Government. I do not think my hon. friend (Mr. Hesson) was very successful in his illustration about the salt industry, and his statement that salt was an agricultural fertiliser which was easy of access and abundant in this country. Does my hon. friend know the position of the salt industry in Canada, to-day? Is he prepared to say to us, considering the position in which that industry is, that our farmers would be justified in using salt as a fertiliser, or that they are offered that article at such a price as would enable them to use it for that purpose? Everyone who knows anything about the salt industry, knows that just now it is in the hands of a monopoly, and that the remarkable fact prevails, that when we get west alongside of the American boundary, where they produce salt on the other side of the river, we find salt selling for 60 cents a barrel over there, while on the Canadian side the same quality is worth $1.10. Yet my friend has the coolness to say that the Canadian farmers have a fair opportunity of using salt as a fertiliser. If that proves anything, it proves that we should have reciprocity of trade in salt, as well as in other agricultural fertilisers, so as to prevent our farmers being victimised to put money in the pockets of the monopoly. It does seem to me, that the sooner the Government takes in hand the interests of the great consuming population, and pays less attention to benefiting a few monopolies, the better it will be for the country all round. Those monopolies are, perhaps, useful about election times, when they contribute to the party funds, but during all other times of the year, they are drawing largely from the community and giving them no equivalent in return. If we take that illustration of salt alone, it will go to prove that, both in the matter of salt, as well as in other agricultural fertilisers, this Government cannot do better than to approach the Americans and offer them reciprocity in all these commodities in which the farmers are interested.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). The member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) has just shown his ignorance of the question with reference to the salt industry. Salt is not a real fertiliser, and when you use it alone you run the risk of injuring the land. It is one of those fertilisers which, to be of any use whatever, requires an extra amount of fertilisers of some other description to be applied along with it. In the County of Huron, where we were accustomed to buy salt at 75 cents per barrel, we now have to pay $1.25 for it. Three gentlemen have formed themselves into a company, and have bought out all the salt manufacturers in the Province of Ontario; and they are charging the consumers of this county an enormous profit on what they sell. We must consider that the farmers of the Dominion have been ruined almost in growing grain. Take wheat, for instance, and we find that upon raising a fall and spring wheat, the farmers have been losing some hundred thousand dollars a year, during the last five or six years. The export of agricultural products for 1880, 1881, 1882 and 1883 amounted to over $24,000,000; while in 1889 we only exported to the amount of $13,000,000, or about $11,000,000 less than the years I have mentioned. We find that in Ontario 4,610,017 acres are used in growing oats, fall wheat, spring wheat, barley, rye and peas; and if we take a published statement, which was collected from the best agriculturist in Ontario, we find that this grain cost $15 an acre, on an average, to raise it; while the farmers have only realised, on an average, $14.26 per acre; showing that there has been a loss of 74 cents per acre upon the 4,610,017 acres under grain crops. It is impossible that the agriculture of the country can be carried on, if every farmer had to pay for the amount of labor expended on his own farm; but on account of most of the farmers of the country having large families, the members of which labor on the farm, they are able, although barely, to make things meet. I hold that if the agriculturists of the Dominion do not get some immediate relief, the day is not far distant when a very large quantity of the land, even in the fertile Province of Ontario, will not pay for the working. I believe that the extra fertility of the land of Ontario, which we have heard so much about, and the extra yield of both rye, barley and oats, is due not only to the fertility of the land, but as well, to the improved system of farming, and the very large amount of manure used by the farmers. I have a statement, taken from a return, which shows : that while it costs $16.40 per acre to raise a crop of wheat in the Province of Ontario, in the State of Michigan it only costs $14.20, and in Dakota $7.56. The largest part of the excess required to raise a grain crop in the Province of Ontario, is, because of the extra quantity of manure put upon the land. This statement goes to show that there were $5 per acre spent in applying manure to the land in the Province of Ontario, as compared with $1.50 per acre in Michigan, and nothing at all for manure in Dakota. Taking even this as a guide, we find that it is of the utmost necessity that the farmers of the Dominion of Canada should get some relief from the Government in removing the duty from fertilisers.

Mr. FERGUSON (Welland). I may say, in reply to hon. gentlemen opposite, that it is a well-known fact that there is no reciprocity between the different States of the Union, in this article of fertilisers. In no State of the Union are fertilisers, manufactured in another State, allowed to be sold unless there is a proper analysis of the fertiliser given by the State which manufactures it. The object of our putting a duty on fertilisers is to prevent the importation of rubbish from the United States, which, if allowed in free of duty, would be of no value whatever to the agriculturists of the country. The very fact that without the aid of these United States fertilisers, so much sought after by the hon. member for Huron (Mr. McMillan), our produce, per acre, is more than that of the adjoining country, shows that we do not need these fertilisers which are not honestly and properly made in the United States. I understand that a company is now being formed, and will be in operation very soon, which will carry out a suggestion which I had the honor to make in 1883, to the effect that the sulphur product of the Capelton mines in the Eastern Townships, together with the great phosphate deposits of the Ottawa district, should be used for the purpose of making first-class fertilisers in the Dominion of Canada. Sir, this subject of fertilisers is one that cannot be dealt with lightly ; it is one that ought to engage the most serious consideration of this House. To my knowledge, in the county in which I live, fertilisers from Buffalo have been sold to farmers for $36 per ton, that were not worth $5 per ton ; and the farmers in that county, at any rate, do not desire to spend hundreds of dollars in experimenting on fertilisers which have not been analysed, or which have been analysed and found to be valueless. A fertiliser is of no value until it has had a proper analysis and its constituent elements are found to be of a proper character. The various States of the Union are extremely careful that no fertiliser is sold to their people that has not been thoroughly analysed, and the value of which has not been made known to the farmers. Therefore,

I do not approve of taking the duty off fertilisers, in order to allow every species of fraudulent stuff which is manufactured in the United States, to be brought into our market, and which, under the law of the State where it is produced, would not be allowed to be put on the market there. Until some other plan is adopted of showing the farmers the value of the fertilisers offered to them, it is right almost to prohibit the importation of this stuff, in the interest of the farmers of this country.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I have no wish to prolong this debate, particularly after the indication given by the hon. Minister of Finance—although he does not and we cannot expect him to take us into his confidence—that he intends to make some change in the fiscal policy of the Government in the interest of the farmers ; and I hope that the subject of fertilisers will be embraced in any changes which he may see fit to make. The hon. member for Welland (Mr. Ferguson) has urged very strongly the danger of admitting worthless American fertilisers into this country. He tells us that in the United States these fertilisers are not allowed to pass from one State to another until a proper analysis of their constituent elements has been made. Our Government has followed somewhat in the same line, for they do not allow fertilisers to come into this country, and be exposed for sale, until they are analysed by the Government analyst. In regard to that procedure, both the Government of the United States and the Government of Canada have made the tremendous mistake of acting on the supposition that the farmers of both countries are fools. I wish to tell the Government and the hon. member for Welland that both the farmers of the United States and the farmers of Canada have sense enough to find out for themselves, without the intervention of any Government, whether certain fertilisers are suitable to their soils or not. Some time ago I had the honor to read to this House a letter written by Mr. Charles James Fox, of the Township of Delaware, a gentleman who has all his life been a strong Conservative, with regard to his experience in that respect. He says he has bought a fertiliser in New York in preference to anything produced in Canada, because he finds it more efficient for the purpose for which he uses it. So the experience of farmers will soon tell them what fertilisers are most suitable to their soil and most profitable for them to use, without the intervention of the Government at all. The hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) has objected to this motion, on account of the small amount of duty collected on imported fertilisers. The hon. member for North Wentworth (Mr. Bain) has effectually disposed of that argument by showing that the tariff is in effect prohibitive. Formerly there was a specific duty of $6 a ton imposed, and the Government, making what they called a concession, changed the duty to 20 per cent. ad valorem, which really amounts to more than $6 a ton specific duty ; so that the change has been no boon to the farmer, but rather a damage. Again, the hon. member for North Perth asserts that the Government have been doing perfectly right in prohibiting the importation of manures, because their action will tend to develop the phosphate mines of this country, and the enormous salt deposits which we have, especially in the County of Huron. Well, it is refreshing at this period of the nineteenth century, to see what childlike and bland confidence in his leaders that hon. gentleman exhibits. The Government have laid a prohibitory tax on phosphate and other fertilisers which prevents the farmer from using them, and the hon. gentleman says that is all right. They have laid a prohibitory duty on salt which prevents him from using it as a fertiliser, or makes him pay a ruinous price for it, and the hon. gentleman says this is all right too. It was pointed out, the other night, that the duty on the salt which the Ontario farmer uses as a fertiliser is at least 50 per cent. ad valorem, so that the price of that salt to the farmer is increased just one-half. If he uses any other salt, the duty is 42 cents per barrel, and that is added to the cost to those who purchase it. We see how the duty works in this case. It has been stated to-day that a combination has been formed to enhance the price of salt, and it has practically shut out the use of salt altogether as a fertiliser for the farmer. There is not one ton used to-day where there were a hundred tons used formerly; I say that without fear of contradiction. The hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) referred to the fact that, in her early history, Great Britain encouraged the farmers by throwing tolls off all manure passing along tolled roads. The hon. gentleman ought to have remembered that, in our own enlightened Province of Ontario, we have always done the same thing. While charging tolls on every other sort of traffic, we have made the roads free for the conveyance of manure. The Government have been acting on exactly the opposite principle; instead of encouraging the introduction of manure into the country, as the municipal councils are doing, they have been throwing every obstacle in the way. But I hope the indication given by the hon. Minister of Finance means that they have come to consider the case of the farmer on some just principle, and that we shall have some amelioration at least during the present Session.

Motion negatived on division.

HALL'S HARBOR, N.S.

Mr. BORDEN moved for :

Copies of all reports by engineers who have examined the pier at Hall's Harbor, Nova Scotia, since the year 1882; and for copies of all correspondence relating to said pier.

He said : I wish simply to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works to the breakwater at this place. In 1884 about 100 feet of this breakwater were carried away, and it has never been rebuilt. I think surveys were made in 1885, again in 1887, and again in 1889. So that, I think, sufficient surveys have been made, and I am sure that the people in the vicinity are likewise satisfied with the surveys; and what they would now like, and what I, on their behalf, desire, is that the Minister, acting on the surveys that have been made, will ask this House to appropriate a sum of money sufficient to rebuild that portion of the breakwater that has been carried away. Owing to this accident, the harbor has become entirely useless. Hall's Harbor is a fishing place, and a good many vessels, both fishing vessels and vessels carrying agricultural products, cordwood, and other things to the United States, have been in the habit of seeking shelter there. Since this accident, the trade of the place has been almost entirely stopped, and I think, if the hon. Minister will look into the matter, he will see the necessity of having this breakwater rebuilt.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I would ask the hon. gentleman to be kind enough to amend his motion, by making it read : "Copies of all reports of the chief engineer of the Department in reference to the examination of the pier."

Mr. BORDEN. I have no objection.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is no objection to bringing down the papers, but the hon. gentleman will not expect me to say now whether the work will be done or not.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

RETURN ORDERED.

Return of all correspondence, memorials and agreements between the Government and the Temperance Colonisation Company, together with correspondence of settlers, employes and members of the company, relative to the operations of the said company.

BOUNTY TO FISHERMEN.

House resumed consideration of proposed motion of Mr. Eisenhauer, declaring the expediency of raising the bounty now allowed fishermen in proportion to the increased bounty allowed the manufacturers of pig iron.

Mr. FLYNN. When the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer) moved this resolution, he was immediately followed by the hon. member for Shelburne (General Laurie), who seemed to fall into an error, or a misconception of the facts, relative to the scope and tenor of this resolution. There is nothing, either in the resolution or the argument used in sustaining it by the hon. member for Lunenburg, to warrant the construction put upon it by the hon. gentleman. My hon. friend from Lunenburg simply showed, in introducing his resolution, that the industry of pig iron, which gave employment in 1888 to 750 men, and the value of whose product was \$337,000, was favored by a bounty of 12 per cent. on the value of the products, while the fishing industry, which gave employment to 61,000 in the year 1888, and the value of whose products was \$17,500,000, was only protected by a bounty paid to the fishermen of about $\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. on the value of the products. That was the contention and the view of the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer)—the iniquity which existed in the protection afforded to the iron industry, the protection given to pig iron, in proportion to the protection afforded to a much more important industry. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) fell into the same error, and said that there was nothing analogous between the two industries, as stated by the hon. member for Shelburne. I cannot help saying that there is something very singular as between these two hon. gentlemen, who represent constituencies which are largely engaged in fisheries. One hon. gentleman drew the attention of the House to the distinction made by the Government between the great protection which they gave to the pig iron industry, and compared that with the small protection which is given to the fisheries of the country. The inference they would ask us to draw would be that the motion of my hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer) was of the same nature; but it is entirely different. Some years ago there was a duty imposed on all fish imported from any country, and there was a duty on Newfoundland fish as well as on other fish. Now Newfoundland fish are free, to the great injury of the Maritime Provinces. If protection is the policy of the Government, the fishing industry is equally entitled to protection with the other industries, and it is more entitled to protection because, while the fiscal policy of the Government affords protection to the manufacturers of this Dominion, the money is taken out of the consumers. It is the consumers who are fleeced to pay for this protection to manufacturers. Even with the bounty which you give to the fishermen, even if you were to increase that bounty, still that will not be taken from the people of these Upper Provinces, because a foreign Government paid \$4,500,000 to this Government for the use of these fisheries, and it is the interest on that amount, and that only, which they claim. Another statement which has been made by the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny), was when he told the House that the fishermen have been prosperous during the past year in the Province of Nova Scotia. As a proof of that, he quoted the paragraph from the speech of the Lieutenant Governor of Nova Scotia when opening the Legislature. We are accustomed to hear this sort of thing from Governors General and Lieutenant Governors. It is a stereotyped thing. At the opening of a Legislature—whether it be this Parliament or a Local Legislature—we find the statement that the country is prosperous, and that every branch of industry in the country is prosperous. Therefore, I am not surprised that that statement was made by the Lieutenant Governor of Nova Scotia. At the opening of this Legislature about two months ago, His Excellency was pleased to state in the very first paragraph of his speech, that this country was in a prosperous state. But no sooner was this statement made than we found hon. gentlemen stating that for years past there had not existed such deep agricultural depression in the Dominion of Canada as existed now. So much for the coloring given to the condition of affairs by the Speech from the Throne. That statement may have been contained in a speech of the Lieutenant Governor in opening the Legislature of Nova Scotia; but I say that, notwithstanding that statement, he did not speak the truth in reference to the fishermen, and that the condition of the boat fishermen was never worse than it was this fall. But for a very small success in regard to the mackerel fishery, the fishermen would have been in a starving condition, and the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) knows it as well as I do, or even better, because the only place in which assistance was asked for the fishermen was in his own country. He knows very well that the fishermen were on the verge of starvation, unless the relief for which they asked was granted. I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman himself was a contributor to that. I state deliberately that the condition of the fishermen has not been worse for several years than it has been for the last two or three years. Some years ago, when the question of granting a bounty was discussed in this House—and the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) referred to that in his speech the other evening—the gentlemen representing the Maritime Provinces contended that the fishermen alone were entitled to the \$4,500,000 which had been paid to this Government by the American Government; and at that time I had the honor of a seat in this House. Our contention was made on two grounds, at that time. We contended, in the first place, that the privilege granted to the American fishermen who fish within three miles of the shore were territorial rights belonging to the Provinces; and we contended, in the second place, that only one class of people was affected by that provision, namely, the fishermen of the Maritime Provinces, and that, therefore, they alone had the right to the interest on this award. But the view which we took on that occasion, of the right of our fishermen to that award, was opposed by the right hon. gentleman at the head of the Government and those behind him. My hon. friend, who represented at that time the County of Inverness (Mr. McDonell), moved a resolution asserting that principle, that the Maritime Provinces alone were entitled to that award. He was met by an amendment, which was moved by the right hon. gentleman at the head of the Government, in which, after a very lengthened speech contending against the principle asserted by the member for Inverness, he insisted that a farmer from Ontario was as much entitled to a share in this award as a fisherman from the Maritime Provinces. When this treaty was negotiated, it was contended by the commissioners representing England and Canada, that the right of Canadian fishermen to fish in American waters, and the admission of fish and fish oil into the American markets, was not equivalent to the rights which the Americans acquired under the Washington Treaty. A Commission was appointed to investigate that question. That Commission sat in 1877 at Halifax, and, as we all know, awarded a sum of five millions and a-half as compensation. At that time the Government of Canada submitted to the arbitrators a large volume of testimony, and the whole, or nearly all, of that testimony went in two directions: in the first place, it went to show conclusively the great and inestimable value of the right to fish within the three marine miles granted to the Americans; and also, the loss sustained by our fishermen by the competition of American fishermen within those limits. It is to be remembered that the award of five millions and a-half was secured as the result of that testimony. Now, if that be the case, who are those citizens of Canada who suffered this damage? Necessarily it was the fishermen, there was no other class in the Dominion who were affected by this concession to the Americans; and therefore they, being the only class affected, I held then, as I hold now, that they were the only class who were justly and honestly entitled to the interest on the whole of that award. A short time afterwards events proved that the right hon. gentleman, the leader of the Government, wavered in the opinions he entertained in 1878, when the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. McDonell) moved a resolution contending that the fishermen of the Maritime Provinces alone had the right to the interest of that award. The leader of the Government seemed to have lost faith in the arguments that he put forward then to sustain his views; for we find that in 1882, the Government abandoned the position they had previously taken on this question. We find that early in the Session of that year the Finance Minister, Sir Leonard Tilley, gave notice of a resolution which he intended to submit to the House, and which read as follows:—

“That it is expedient that an annual grant of $150,000 be made to aid in the development of the sea fisheries.”

In Committee on that resolution he said:

“It was considered that the interest on the four and a-half millions awarded by the Fishery Commission should be distributed among the fishermen who, under the operation of the treaty, had been compelled to give up to American fishermen the free access to our inshore fisheries.”

During the discussion in Committee he further said:

“The proposition is to reimburse the fishermen of that portion of the Dominion who have had taken from them by the treaty, exclusive privileges which they formerly enjoyed. It is to compensate them for the competition which they are now meeting with from American fishermen.”

Now, this was the contention of myself and my friends who surrounded me at the time when we spoke on this subject. These were the views we put forward. We said to the right hon. gentleman and to his Government: You may, by a strictly technical, or, perhaps, legal construction, if you will, say that this fishery award belongs of right to every portion of the Dominion as well as it does to the Lower Provinces; but we contend that the fishermen of the Lower Provinces are entitled in equity to the interest of that sum. Well, a few short years afterwards we find the right hon. gentleman abandoning the position he held; we find his Finance Minister coming down here and, by the extracts from his speeches which I have read, admitting that the fishermen had suffered by the privileges conceded to the American fishermen, and they alone were entitled to the benefit of this award. The Government acquiesced in those views, and acknowledge the justice of our contention. Now, that being the case, there is no difference of opinion between the right hon. gentleman and those on this side of the House, as regards that matter. He admits that the fishermen were entitled to the interest of that award; but what I complain of, and what the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer) complains of, is, that the fishermen never got what they were entitled to. The right hon. gentleman has admitted that they alone were entitled to that benefit; and I say, if that is the case, why not give it to them? They got $150,000, but the interest on 4½ millions at 4 per cent. would be $180,000; and in addition, nearly four years had elapsed before this sum was paid to them, so that there was accumulated interest on this sum that hon. gentleman has never recognised, and that he has refused to pay to them. I say they have a right to the accumulated interest during those years; there can be no question of that. The hon. gentleman has admitted that the fishermen have suffered by this concession; his Finance Minister had admitted it by introducing the resolution which I have read; he has admitted that they alone were entitled to the benefit of the award. If those hon. gentlemen admit it, why not pay it to them in full? Surely if they have a right to any part of it, they have a right to the whole of it, and that is the position of the case to which I wish to draw the attention of the right hon. gentleman. He has admitted that this $150,000 paid as a bounty to the fishermen, is the interest on this award that they were entitled to; why not, then, pay them the full interest from year to year, as a bounty, and not only do that, but pay them the arrears during the nearly four years that had elapsed before he recognised the rights of the fishermen to that bounty? Now, what is the position of these fishermen who are entitled to this bounty? I forget the exact number of boats engaged in the fishery in the Maritime Provinces, but it is a great number. A large portion of the fishermen gain their living exclusively from this industry. The amount they are getting as bounty is a miserable pittance, only three or four dollars a year, while under the fiscal policy of this Government, under the system of protection, they pay ten times that amount. But there is another point to which I wish to call the attention of the Government—and I regret the absence of the Minister of Marine at this moment—that is, the manner in which that bounty is paid. By a regulation of the Department it is necessary that every person engaged in the fishery should fill up a certificate on the 31st December, showing the amount of fish he had caught, in order to enable him to draw the bounty. Now, although that is returned to the Department early in January, by the various officers of the Department throughout the country, it very often happens that the fishermen do not receive this little pittance before the month of June. I cannot see why there should be this great delay in the payment of this bounty; I cannot see why it should not be paid as soon as the returns are all in. That would be the season when the fishermen most require the money, it would be in the winter when they require it most; and I wish to draw this point to the attention of the Finance Minister, who, I am sorry to say, is absent, in order that he may devise some means by which this bounty should be paid to the fishermen at an earlier period of the year. I hope the views and arguments I have put forth in regard to the interest on the award, will receive attention from the Government, and that they will admit that if the fishermen of the Lower Provinces are entitled to any portion of the interest, they are entitled to the whole of it; as I do not think it can be denied that they are entitled to the full interest of the 4½ millions every year, and they are also entitled to the accumulated interest for the three or four years in arrears.

Mr. KENNY. I was not in my place when this debate was renewed, and I presume I may resume my remarks at the point where I was interrupted on Wednesday last. My hon. friend who has just taken his seat referred to the statements which I made in reference to the condition of the fishermen of my native Province during the past year, and he took exception to the manner in which I brought to the notice of the House the reference which had been made to the condition of our fisheries in the Speech of the Lieutenant Governor in opening the Nova Scotia Legislature. The hon. gentleman said that such a paragraph may have appeared in the Speech of the Lieutenant Governor. Perhaps the House will permit me to read, for the information of hon. members, and especially the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Flynn), the statement of the Lieutenant Governor to which I referred. It is as follows:—

“I rejoice that I am able to congratulate you on the large measure of prosperity that our Province has enjoyed during the past year. Our fishermen in some localities did not share in that prosperity as fully as other classes, but good prices in some degree compensated for short catch."

The hon. gentleman for Richmond, if he compares that statement with the remark I made, will, I think, realise that I did not at all exaggerate the statement made by the Lieutenant Governor of Nova Scotia. But if he is not satisfied with that—

Mr. FLYNN. I did not say you exaggerated.

Mr. KENNY. Permit me to refer the hon. member to the speech which was delivered in the Local Legislature by Mr. Roche, the representative of the city of Halifax in that Assembly, when he proposed the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. Mr. Roche then said :

"We can congratulate ourselves that, notwithstanding some drawbacks, the Province has enjoyed a condition of prosperity."

In another part of his speech he said :

"The labors of the fishermen, as the result of enhanced prices and extraordinary catches in some parts of the country, have been on the whole advantageous and profitable. Regret has to be expressed that there was not an equal distribution of this success in all localities, and it is also to be regretted that some districts, which are largely, if not wholly dependent on the fisheries, have felt the pressure of wants owing to the scarcity of fish, but on the whole the result is successful."

I think my hon. friend, who is, perhaps, even more familiar than I am with the fishing industry of Nova Scotia, will recognise that Mr. Roche's speech represents very fairly and fully the condition of the fisheries in our native Province, and certainly coincides exactly with what has come to my knowledge of the condition of the fishermen. So much for that point.

Mr. FLYNN. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? Is it not a fact that the fishermen in the hon. gentleman's own county are in distress, and is it not a fact they have applied for relief?

Mr. KENNY. That was certainly within the knowledge of Mr. Roche, as well as within my knowledge and within the knowledge of the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Flynn), and Mr. Roche specially refers to it; and I was certainly cognisant of its existence, and in my own remarks I stated there were exceptions to that general condition of prosperity, and a notable one was my own county. But to resume. I submitted some figures to the House at the close of my remarks on Wednesday evening which, I think, show from the statistics which are now in the blue books, that a fair measure of prosperity prevails among our fishermen. I remember that an hon. gentleman opposite, I think the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Kirk), called attention to the fact that the number of fishing vessels had decreased from 1879 to 1888; that in 1879 there were 749 vessels engaged in the fisheries in Nova Scotia, and in 1888 only 690 vessels; and the hon. gentleman went on to argue that the bounty had been a failure, inasmuch as it had not resulted in increasing the number of vessels engaged in that industry in our Province. But if the hon. gentleman had taken the trouble to look at the tonnage of those vessels, he would have found that in 1879 the tonnage was 28,916 tons, while in 1888 it was 29,125 tons. So that, while it is true there is a decrease in the number of vessels engaged, there is an increase in the tonnage of the vessels. He would also have found that in 1879 there were 27,616 men employed on vessels and boats, and the number in 1888 had increased to 28,107. He would have also found that the boat fishery, which I quite agree with the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Flynn) has very largely been a failure during the last year, has proportionately increased. In 1879 there were 10,706 boats; in 1888, 13,415 boats employed. But what is still more notable is the comparison which I instituted on Wednesday last between the value of the product of the fisheries of Nova Scotia in 1879 and 1888. In 1879 the total value of the fisheries of Nova Scotia was $5,700,000, and in 1888 it had increased to $7,800,000, or an average of 30 per cent. That statement, I think, must be gratifying to every gentleman from our Province and to all who take an interest in the fisheries. I do not for a moment contend that this increase in our fisheries is due entirely to the bounty, but I do say that it has contributed to secure the development of our fisheries. Referring again to the resolution of the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer), I say, notwithstanding the opinion to the contrary which has been expressed by my hon. friend for Richmond (Mr. Flynn), that, inferentially at least, it may be construed into a desire to place the fishing bounty in the same position as the bounty on pig iron. The bounty on pig iron is, as we all know, transient and will expire in 1892, and I am sure the hon. member for Lunenburg would be very sorry to see the bounty given to the fishermen expire in 1892; and I do not think it is wise for us, in view of possible future legislation, to endeavor to establish an analogy between the two bounties. It is not in the interests of the fishermen that any attempt should be made to place them on the same plane. I may here remark in regard to the bounty on pig iron, that I voted for it. I thought it would have the same effect in developing the great iron industry of this country as the bounty on fish exercised in developing the fishing industry. I thought that, under a system of bounties, the minerals concealed in the bowels of the earth would be extracted and add to our national wealth, and we would thus be able to draw our mineral wealth from the bowels of the earth as our fishermen, under the bounty, drew their wealth from the depths of the sea. I voted for it, also, because I believed it would add to the number of men employed in Canada in that industry, and to the number employed in our coal mines, and, to that extent, would increase the home market for our fishermen, which is always the best market, by increasing the demand for fresh fish. It is true, as the resolution recites, and it is a pity it is true, that when our fish goes to the United States it is met by a high rate of duty. But my hon. friend who has just taken his seat proclaimed in this House some years ago that the duty was paid alone by the Americans. And not only that, but the hon. member (Mr. Eisenhauer) and the party who sit around, also voted against the Washington Treaty, which gave our fish free admission into the United States; so I must leave it to my hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer) to reconcile the very inconsistent positions taken by those with whom he is politically associated. I am quite aware that all the opposite party did not vote against the Washington Treaty, but a large number did, and there are some of the gentllemen who did so, here now to explain their position in that matter. The same gentlemen who voted against that Washington Treaty, by which our fish was to be admitted into the United States free of duty, are now attempting to persuade our fishermen that they cannot live without the American market. The resolution of the hon. gentleman also refers to the tariff to which our fish is subjected to in the West Indies. The hon. gentleman must know that our fish in the West Indies, pays exactly the same duty as fish from the United States or elsewhere. I think I am correct in stating that. Our competitors in these markets are the Americans and hon. gentlemen are aware that for some time past, a commission of the Senate of the United States has been taking evidence as to the trade relations between Canada and the United States; and during the course of its investigations meetings were held in Boston, before which several Gloucester fishermen gave their evidence. The complaint of these American fishermen was, that they could not compete with the lighter taxed Canadian fishermen. My hon. friend from Richmond (Mr. Flynn) complains of the heavy taxes to which our fishermen are subjected. I recognise that they have to pay their full share of the taxes, as other classes of the population have, but I do say that they are not as heavily taxed as are their American competitors; and if my hon. friend wants further proof on that, I refer him to the evidence which was submitted by the Gloucester fishermen before the United States Senate Commission. These American fishermen complained then that they could not compete with the lighter taxed Canadian fishermen, whose vessels were more cheaply built and more economically equipped. My hon. friend knows too, as regards the tariff to which my hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer) referred, that in the United States the duty on fish-hooks is something like 45 per cent., and the duty on nets, lines, and twines from 25 to 30 per cent., whereas in Canada these articles are free of duty. I am not going to refer at any length to the advantages which steam communication with the West Indies offers for transporting our Canadian exports, because that matter was fully threshed out on the memorable night of Friday last. In 1887, the first Session I was here, I brought the matter of subsidising steamers to the West Indies Islands to the attention of the House. I did so, in 1888 again, and finally, in 1889, I succeeded in getting some recognition for a steam service with the West Indies, so as to place our exporters on the same footing as the American exporters. I wonder why my hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer) did not bring the fishery bounty earlier to the attention of the House. He might have brought it up in 1888 or 1889. Why did he wait till 1890? I warn my hon. friend that it is quite possible that some uncharitable people may imagine that this motion has made its appearance in 1890, because we are on the eve of a local election in the Province of Nova Scotia. The scheme which I proposed to help the fishermen, by establishing steamers between Canada and the West Indies, was a feasible and practical one, whereas my hon. friend brings forward, at this comparatively late date, a scheme which, I believe, neither the House nor the Government will consider desirable. Again, Sir, I find that last year or the year before, my hon. friend from Shelburne (General Laurie) called the attention of the House to the Customs regulations in reference to fish imported from the Island of St. Pierre, and which received a bounty of 10 francs a quintal. The hon. member for Shelburne (General Laurie) complained then that the importation of this French fish affected injuriously the fishermen of Nova Scotia. My hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer) gave that measure of the hon. member for Shelburne a half-hearted support, and my hon. colleague from Halifax (Mr. Jones) opposed it. It is true I must admit that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Jones) stood alone in that contention, but even my hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer) did not seem to be very earnest in his desire to have any change in that respect made by the Minister of Customs. In my opinion these Customs regulations were very unjust to our fishermen, and great thanks are due by the fishermen to my hon. and gallant friend from Shelburne (General Laurie) for having them rectified. I mention these facts to show that, as regards the fishermen of Nova Scotia, the members of this House cannot have the slightest misgiving in following the recommendation laid down by my hon. friend from Lunenburg, who stated that he was not going to press this matter, but simply to leave it in the hands of the Government to be dealt with. I say we need not have any misgivings in that respect, for the Government of my hon. friend the First Minister has always recognised the importance of this fishing industry and has always shown a desire to ameliorate the condition of our fishermen. The very fact that the Government has granted this steamship subsidy to the West Indies, the fact that they changed the Customs regulations with reference to French fish from the Island of St. Pierre, and more recently, the fact of their sending a Commission to England, Scotland and Holland, to investigate into the matter of catching and curing herring, an industry in which our people are much interested, shows the desire of the Government to do everything in its power to develop our fishing industry. My hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer) in his opening remarks, referred to the so-called National Policy and the tariff of 1878. He contended that the National Policy bore unevenly on the fishermen, and, by way of illustration, he instituted a comparison between the tariff of 1878 and the present tariff—

Mr. EISENHAUER. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I did not say that it bore unequally on the fishermen. I said it bore on the fishermen equally with all the other classes of the community.

Mr. KENNY—and, therefore, to some extent they suffered from the change; that was the inference, I think, fairly to be drawn from the hon. gentleman's remarks. If the hon. gentleman had told us that the fishermen were paying any more for their tea than they paid in 1878, or any more for any article of food or clothing which they consume, or that they are not as well housed as they were in 1878, or that their children are not as well educated and provided for, or that they do not share in the general prosperity of Canada in common with all others, then I might think there was something in his contention. The National Policy has, at all events, succeeded in keeping in Canada a number of people, who, but for it would be working in the United States, and who, instead of being customers for our fishermen, would be customers for the Gloucester fishermen. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) shakes his head, but I can assure him that there are a number of people in our Province employed in cotton mills, woollen mills and sugar refineries, who, in 1878 were not so employed, and consequently did not want any fish from the Nova Scotia fishermen. But I cannot understand why my hon. friend should have instituted this comparison between the two tariffs, or why he should have brought the National Policy into the discussion of a resolution of this kind. I think my hon. friend is running a very great risk of introducing Dominion issues into the approaching local elections. Of course, I recognise that my hon. friend is actuated by the most praiseworthy motives in calling the attention of the Government to this matter. But I dare say that hon. gentlemen may find in this resolution a text on which may be preached political sermons throughout the fishing counties of Nova Scotia during the coming local election. He must remember that the repeal cry is dead and buried. The vote of 1887 disposed of that, and some new cry will have to be raised, and it is possible this resolution may be made to do work, which the hon. member for Lunenburg did not intend it to do, in the Province of Nova Scotia during the coming elections, and my hon. friend, perhaps, may be accused, as Sir Leonard Tilley was, when he introduced the bounty resolutions of flying an election kite. Since this question was discussed here on Wednesday last, I have received a newspaper from Nova Scotia, pointing out the fact that a member of the Local Legislature, who is in the political camp of my hon. friends opposite, moved that these elections should not take place for six months, in order that the fishermen might have time to return from the banks and vote. I express no opinion on the action taken by that member of the Local Legislature. To do so is not my mission here. He had a perfect right to do so, if he thought it was in the interests of Nova Scotia, or of those he represented; but the action taken in the Local Legislature of that Province is singularly confirmatory of the statement I made on Wednesday to the House, that it was the intention, if possible, to postpone these elections until the fishermen got back. The hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Flynn) referred to some of the debates which had taken place in past years in this House in reference to the fishery awards, and the bounty resolutions subsequently introduced by Sir Leonard Tilley. I am very much afraid that if the party opposite had remained in power, there would have been no discussion to-day about fishing bounties, because it seems to me the doctrine was pretty well laid down by those hon. gentlemen, that the money received from the Halifax award was not to be used for any territorial or exceptional purpose. The bounty money, it is quite true, did not go into the Treasury of Canada until after the general elections of 1878, when hon. gentlemen opposite were defeated; but if hon. gentlemen opposite had been very zealous in the interests of the fishermen, they would have made some provision before they left office, or have given some indication of their desire to use some portion of that money for the benefit of the fishermen. On the contrary, so far as I can find, their intention, as recorded, was to the effect, that this money was to go into the Treasury of the Dominion, to meet national obligations, so that the fishermen would never have heard of this bounty had they remained in power. With many of the remarks which fell from hon. gentlemen opposite, I cordially agree. I believe that the system of purse-seining, as it is conducted now, is most injurious to our fisheries, and if persevered in would almost destroy them. On a previous occasion, I mentioned that that was a matter which Canada cannot control, but that it was worthy of consideration, and should be made the subject of international agreement. As long as the American fishermen continue to fish in that manner, our fishermen, in self-defence, must do the same. I think it would be eminently in the interests of Canada if, when the fishery questions are under consideration between the two countries, some efforts were made to stop purse-seining. As regards the lobster fisheries, I know that on the south shore of Nova Scotia at least the men who are engaged in it are most anxious for a short extension of the time. Owing to the hardships they experience, they are unable to fish, on an average, more than three days a week, and as they have to cast their hand-traps from 15 to 20 feet from the ledges of the rocks, against the heavy breakers, from which there is absolutely no protection, thus effectually preventing the use of boats, the loss of time is thus very great; and I hope the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who is honestly desirous to do all that he can to ameliorate the condition of the fishermen, and develop the fishing industry generally, will take into consideration the advisability of extending the time for the prosecution of the lobster fishery on the south shore. My hon. friend from Lunenburg, in introducing his resolution, referred to the effect of the duty to which our fish is subjected and to the fact that Newfoundland fish come in free. I quite recognise that, whilst there may be some countervailing national advantages, so far as our fishermen are concerned, they labor in that respect under a disadvantage, and they also labor under other disadvantages in connection with the regulations of Newfoundland, to which it may be well now publicly, as no other opportunity may readily offer, to call the attention of the House. I refer to the manner in which the herring fishery is conducted on the French coast of Newfoundland. There are about one hundred Canadian fishing vessels engaged in that fishery; and I find that when they go there to prosecute that industry, the Newfoundland Customs officials demand from them a duty of 20 per cent. a ton on all the salt on their vessels, and of 45 per cent. on oil casks and 20 per cent. on empty barrels, although none of those articles are landed in Newfoundland except to be repacked and taken away in those casks or barrels. Our Canadian fishermen are charged a duty on the casks or barrels, although these are immediately carried back to Canada. The average tax upon a Canadian fishing schooner is about $40, and yet the Newfoundland people, who exact this tax, compete on the Canadian coast with our own fishermen without paying any duty at all. Last year, a fleet of fully one hundred Newfoundland vessels were on the Canadian coast, competing on exactly the same terms as our Canadian fishermen. This should be represented to the Government of Newfoundland, and some effort made to relieve our fishermen from the Customs taxation to which they are subjected on the French coast of Newfoundland. I suppose that the Newfoundland Government has some authority to collect these duties, but I was really under the impression until these facts were brought to my notice, that the French coast was free to all Canadian fishermen. My hon. friend from Lunenburg has intimated that it is not his desire to press this matter to a division, and that he is satisfied to leave it in the hands of Government, having made the statement and brought to the notice of the Government his views of this question and the condition of our fishermen generally. I agree with the hon. member for Lunenburg that, inasmuch as these fishing regulations were made many years ago, and changes have occurred in the fishing industry as in other industries, it may be advisable to revise them, and I also agree with him that we may, judging from the manner in which the Government has always dealt with the fishery industry, and from its desire to promote the welfare of the fishermen, leave the matter in their hands.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The motion of my hon. friend from Lunenburg has provoked a long discussion and a very lengthy speech from my hon. colleague (Mr. Kenny), but I was careful to observe that, while he travelled over a large extent of ground, he took very good care not to commit himself one way or the other. He has a very happy faculty, sometimes, of delivering a speech which may be interpreted according to the circumstances, and according to where it is delivered and where it is to be read. That is one of those happy faculties politicians can sometimes acquire, and I must do my hon. friend the credit that he has acquired it in very short time. The proposal of the hon. member for Lunenburg simply asks that the bounty be increased, inasmuch as, owing to the increased burdens of the fishermen, they are not in as good a position now as they were in 1878. The hon. gentleman would have no difficulty in establishing that fact before any body of business men. We know that the duties are largely increased. The duty on cordage alone has been increased 25 per cent. The duties on iron and everything else have been increased. We do not require to be told that the cost of living is much greater now than it was in 1878, but my hon. friend was kind enough to say that the fishermen have not been laboring under any disadvantage in this respect. I could not give a better illustration of the strength of his whole argument than by referring to one statement of the hon. gentleman. He said the Americans were our only competitors in the West Indies in fish shipments. When I inform the House that Americans do not ship fish to the West Indies, that they are not our competitors, directly or indirectly, and that they seldom shipped any fish there at any time, the House will be able to estimate the full value of the argument which the hon. gentleman has been forcing on Parliament so eloquently to-day. The hon. gentleman laid great stress on the action of myself and others with reference to the Washington Treaty. He was not in the House at the time and cannot be aware of the discussion on which the whole transaction was based. He cannot be aware that his present leader, during the discussion of the treaty at Washington, refused offers from the American Government which were of the highest possible importance. He refused coal and lumber, at one time, which was offered free admission by the American Government in addition to our fisheries, because he could not get grain and the products of the west; and the Americans then withdrew their offer. That was the ground he took with reference to that treaty. If my hon. friend had been aware of that circumstance, with his great regard to the coal interest of Nova Scotia, perhaps he would not have been so ready to condemn those who voted against the treaty then. I never regretted my vote on that occasion. The people of Halifax and the people of Nova Scotia generally approved of it, because I was dealing with the whole question—with our interests in coal and lumber as well as fish. The hon. gentleman then took exception to the fact that we did not grant this bounty when we were in power. How could we have granted a bounty during the Session of 1878, when the award was not made until August or September following?

Mr. KENNY. The award was made in 1877.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). But the payment was not. Therefore, the Government could not deal with the matter. Again, the hon. gentleman the other day endeavored to create the impression that on this side we were opposed to the bounty. He says:

"Let us see how Sir Leonard Tilley was met when he introduced that measure in 1882. I do not know that my hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer) has taken the trouble to read that debate. If he has, he must have found that it was insinuated by hon. gentlemen opposite, first of all, that the money never would be paid to our fishermen; secondly, that possibly it might be paid for one year and then the payment would cease."

Then he says:

"Now, Sir, it is a fact that the proposal has never been assailed by hon. gentlemen on this side, but I regret that it did not meet with such fair play from hon. gentlemen opposite, as a reference to the debates to which I have referred will show."

What were the facts? Sir Leonard Tilley brought down the proposal for this in the ordinary Estimates, simply as a trial. He was not aware whether it would work well or not, and he brought it down as an experiment. What was the result? My hon. friend who led the Opposition at that time, the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), said that, if this vote was to be of any benefit to the fishermen, it should be made permanent by the introduction of a Bill; and afterwards it was made permanent in that way, at the suggestion of the leader of the Opposition, and not at the suggestion of the Government. The hon. gentleman should be familiar with that fact, when he seeks to place on hon. gentlemen on this side of the House the responsibility for any desire to prevent this bounty being paid. The hon. gentleman says that our fishermen are all prosperous. I do not think it is worth while for any one to assert either that they are very prosperous or that they are very badly off. In some parts of the Province, I am sorry to say, they are not well off. In Lunenburg, where they have adopted new modes of fishing, they are fairly well off, but in the County of Halifax, where they have largely abandoned shore fishing for lobster fishing, they have altogether fallen back. Formerly we had large receipts from Cape Breton, and now our receipts are comparatively nothing, and, therefore, with the exception of Lunenburg, the rest of Nova Scotia is not prosperous. Certainly Halifax County is not, nor are the counties of Guysborough, Cape Breton, Queen's, Shelburne and Yarmouth. I mention this simply to show that this industry requires all the support which we can give it. The hon. gentleman has already referred to the lobster fishery. I do not desire to make any political capital out of that question. Last year, I made a visit to the eastern part of my county and held several public meetings. At one of these a very prominent Liberal took the chair, and, in introducing me, said he introduced a gentleman who he hoped before very long, would form part of a Liberal Administration, and would do away with the obnoxious laws relating to the lobster fisheries. Although that gentleman was a friend of mine, I stated that I did not desire, there or elsewhere, to make any capital out of the agitation in regard to these lobster laws; that I believed that the present, as well as the previous Government were influenced only by one desire, to protect the lobster fisheries and not to see them exterminated; that I believed there was very little information in regard to that, and that all that had been done and was being done, was of a tentative character, and that, therefore, I was not disposed to make any political capital out of it one way or the other. Some of my friends were rather disappointed that I would not make a political point out of that question; but where a man has a public reputation to sustain, and where he may have to deal with these questions himself at another time, I was not going to put myself in such a position that I would not be able to deal with them in the public interest subsequently, as I have recommended the Government to do now. I have made recommendations to the hon. Minister of Marine, and I have no doubt that he is actuated by the desire by which I am actuated, to protect the lobsters, though there is a strong feeling along the shore in regard to that matter, and perhaps experience might show that a longer time might be given for taking lobsters than is now given. I know the people are suffering great inconvenience now, and that, when the time terminates on the 1st July, they are not prepared for the coast fishery, and are practically idle for the rest of the year. Perhaps a month in the latter part of the year might be granted as a trial. I would not at all recommend the Government to do that as a permanent thing, because, if they found that the lobsters were being exterminated, it would be simply killing the goose that lays the golden egg, and the fishermen would be worse off than they are now. The hon. gentleman, in referring to the prosperity of our fishermen, forgot one thing which would not show that they are so prosperous as they might be. What takes so many of our fishermen away to the United States? All along our coast, from Yarmouth down to Cape Breton, a very great number of our fishermen go to the United States every year, and the reason is that they are able to fish under altogether different circumstances, and they have a market for their fish. The hon. gentleman says the Americans complain of not being able to compete with our fish, but that was in the case of there being no duty on our fish in their own market, and was not in regard to a foreign market. The hon. gentleman laid great stress on this, that, because of their more costly equipment, they could not compete with our fishermen, but that is entirely in regard to their own market. The consumption of fish in the United States is always very large, and, without having access to their market, we cannot possibly have the same success in competing with them. We have only certain markets to supply, and the West Indies do not give us the same opportunities as the United States. Sometimes, when we have a smaller catch than usual, we get a larger price, but, with the United States for our market, we would reap the great harvest which Providence has provided for us at our doors. They are practically our sole customers for the greatest amount of our catch. Last year Providence sent to our starving people in Nova Scotia a catch of mackerel amounting to nearly 10,000 barrels. Every one of those were shipped to the United States, and they were sold for $16 a barrel, and all that took place within a fortnight or three weeks. But for the American market, I do not know what we should have done with those mackerel. They were too fat for the West India market, and they do not use them in England or in Canada, and therefore the United States is the only market. Hence arises the great advantage of our having the opportunity of reaching that market. The hon. gentleman made a comparison of the increased value of our exports one year over another. While on the whole it was a fair enough way of making a comparison, I think the House will see, on reflection, that it is not altogether a criterion of the success of the fishermen, which largely depends on the value of the article, and not on the quantity. It often happens, as my hon. friend on my right knows, that they have a very large catch of fish when there is a large catch in Newfoundland, and a large catch in Norway at the same time. When that happens, the value of fish with us goes down very low—a difference of $2 in the value of a quintal of fish, is no uncommon thing. I have known fish to be as low as $2, and I have known them to be as high as $4.50. Therefore, hon. gentlemen will see that the value of the exports is not always an indication of the quantity taken. When we have, as very often happens in the early part of the year, very good reports from our fisheries, our people look naturally to see what is the report from Newfoundland, and in Newfoundland they look to see what is the report from Norway. If the report comes of a short catch from Norway, up will go the price of the fish in Newfoundland, and if the price goes up in Newfoundland, up will go the price in Halifax correspondingly; so the price is caused by the quantity taken; when there is a large quantity the price is low. I listened to the arguments which were used, and I did not gain much information, and I thought part of them was not applicable to the question before the House, and I merely refer to some of those points which were not touched by members who preceded me. The proposal of the hon. member for Lunenburg is a plain one; he has asked the Government to increase the bounty to the fishermen. That proposal, I think, the Government should consider and adopt, inasmuch as they have granted larger protection to other industries, and they have not placed the fishermen in as favorable a position. The hon. gentleman says this is an electioneering dodge. He seems to be very anxious about electioneering dodges. My hon. friend and his party are always suspecting others of harboring what they have in their own minds. I suppose the hon. gentleman knows that electioneering dodges are sometimes resorted to on his side of the House; I suppose he is aware that this bounty was proposed on the eve of a general election in 1882, and I suppose my hon. friend would never, for one moment, say to his friends on that side, that this was an electioneering dodge; and why we should suspect my modest and worthy friend, who is engaged so largely in the fishing industry in Lunenburg, and who naturally feels an interest in building up that industry in his county—why we should suspect him of having electioneering dodges in view, I can hardly imagine. However, the question is not whether this is an electioneering dodge, but whether the principle is sound, whether the hon. gentleman approves or disapproves of it. He has not told us whether he disapproves of it, and I am curious to know in what direction his mind runs, and whether he will use his great influence with the Government to benefit the fishermen in his own county, and in his whole Province at large. I think the proposal is not an unreasonable one, under the circumstances, and I think my hon. friend laid it before the House in a very fair and moderate manner, such as would commend it to the favorable consideration of business men. Our fishing interest is a very large one, and one on which the prosperity of Nova Scotia largely depends. It is the largest interest we have, and if anything tends to cripple it, the resources of the whole Province will be crippled to a large extent.

Mr. COLBY. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat says that this distribution of bounty to the fishermen was made on the eve of a general election in 1882. That, I believe, is a historical fact; but the hon. gentleman must be aware that unless the distribution had been a just and liberal one, one that was likely to be acceptable to the fishermen who were to be benefited by it, the eve of a general election was the last time in the world when it would have been introduced, and the very fact that it was introduced on the eve of a general election, goes, at least, a long way, to show that it was believed, at that time, to be a measure which was not only just and equitable, but one which would be acceptable to the people who were more particularly affected. This question has been so generally and so fairly discussed by members from the Maritime Provinces, that I do not deem it necessary for myself—representing, imperfectly, as I do, the Minister of Marine in his absence—to protract the debate at any length. The hon. member who introduced this resolution asks us to revise and enlarge the fishery bounty in consequence of action which has been taken with regard to the bounty upon pig iron. Now, like the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny), I see no analogy whatever between those two cases—no analogy except the use of the word “bounty” common to both, and the use of the word “bounty” in one instance, if not in the other, is a misnomer. It should be termed, perhaps, an allowance given to the manufacturers of iron, and should be considered in the light of a bonus rather than a bounty.

There is nothing of benevolence about it, it is a purely business transaction, resting upon a special ground—whether that ground be right or wrong, the policy is to be discussed independently and by itself. We have in this country, as every one knows, unlimited resources of iron and of coal, and of the fluxes lying in convenient proximity, notwithstanding which, it is a well-known fact, that up to the present time capitalists have not found it to their interest, or have not been induced to any considerable extent, to invest their money in the development of those resources. It was found in the United States, where like immense resources existed, that until a stringent measure of protection was adopted, or a bonus, or encouragement of some kind was given, these immense natural resources of coal and iron were likely to lie there unused forever, and the United States met that condition of affairs by the imposition of a high, almost a prohibitory duty, the consequence of which has been the marvellous development of the iron industry in the United States, since that course was taken. The Parliament of Canada, while pursuing the same general policy which had produced these admirable results in the United States, did not judge it expedient to follow exactly in their footsteps, and instead of putting on the very high duty which was imposed by the American Congress, the Dominion Parliament imposed a duty which was afterwards supplemented, for an unlimited period, by a special bonus, or bounty, the object of which was to accomplish the same result. That policy, whether it be wise or unwise, whether it be right or wrong, is a matter to be discussed at the proper time, and to be considered with those other questions which are kindred to it. But this question is in no way analogous to it. You may withdraw the one bounty, or modify the one bounty, without in any way being called upon to withdraw, or to modify, or to increase, the other bounty. It seems to me, although I do not think the hon. member intended it, that this resolution is calculated to have the same effect which was produced by the resolutions introduced by the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Landerkin) and afterwards withdrawn by him, and which served no good purpose whatever—the effect of causing disaffection among one class of people in this country. I do not think these unnecessary contrasts, the effect of which is to make one class of the people feel they are not as well treated as another class—unless there is some absolute and necessary connection between them—are for the public good. I do not think they are in the interests of the country, and I do not think that these attempts to create disaffection for the sake of creating it, and with no other ultimate object to be gained, can have any beneficial effect. I say, then, there is no analogy between the cases referred to, and there is no necessity for contrasting the bounty as it is termed given to the iron producers with the bounty given to the fishermen. The bounty given to the fishermen was granted for special reasons, which were well considered by Parliament. This is not a new question here. It was urged by certain members representing the Maritime Provinces that, in the distribution of the Halifax award, the principle should be recognised that the moneys which came to us by that award were the property of the Lower Provinces, that, as a matter of territorial right, the moneys belonged to them and not to the Dominion at large. This matter was fully considered in Parliament. The principle was laid down by a resolution, which was affirmed on a division by 126 against 30 votes, and the principle enunciated was this :

"That the responsibility and duty of regulating and protecting such fisheries were, from 1st July, 1867, undertaken by the Federal Government and Legislature. That grant was thereby cast upon and defrayed from the Dominion Treasury. That such responsibility cannot constitutionally be surrendered or transferred to any of the Provinces, and if it were possible to do so the transfer would be injurious to the best interests of the Provinces more immediately concerned in the development of the fisheries, and they would be legally and pecuniarily unable to bear the burthen and afford the necessary protection. That the duty of fostering and protecting the fisheries is certain to entail great expense on the Dominion in the future. That such expenditure and the public advantage to be derived from are correlative, and that the portion of the fishery award paid over to Canada constitutionally and of right, belongs to the Dominion of Canada."

That was the conclusion at which Parliament arrived, which it affirmed by a very large majority, a majority not confined to one side of the House, but about equally made up of leading members representing both sides of the House, as being the legal and proper principle on which this matter should be settled. At the same time it was recognised that, in consequence of the concession of certain privileges to American fishermen on our shores, an injury to a certain extent had been done to the fishing interests of the Lower Provinces, and in dealing with this subject in Parliament a partial compensation was intended to be granted. But it was not upon the principle that this sum of $4,500,000 belonged to the Lower Provinces as a matter of right, for it was never so recognised ; and the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Flynn) was entirely in error when he claimed that any leading member of the Government or any leading member of the House affirmed the principle that this capital sum, or the interest on it, belonged as a matter of right to the Maritime Provinces and not to the Dominion as a whole. During those discussions no principle was affirmed by the majority of the House which would give the Lower Provinces, or any Province, the right to claim either principal or interest, on the strict ground of right. But in the apportionment that was made of this money, the reasons given are set forth in the Act of 1882. The grant of $150,000 a year was granted, not as being the interest on the sum obtained from the United States Government, but :

"As an aid in the development of the sea fisheries of Canada, and the encouragement of the building and fitting out of improved fishing vessels, and the improvement of the condition of the fishermen."

That was the authority for the grant, as has been explained. I would inform hon. members of the House, who may not be aware of it, that there are large charges in connection with this sum of $150,000, namely, those which are incident to the distribution of it, for the cost of distribution is not included in it. The cost of distribution is a considerable item of itself, and in addition to that one or two other statutory votes had been taken, so that the total expenditure for the seven years has been $1,144,120, or an excess of expenditure, including the cost of distribution, of $94,120. So that the Government has been quite as generous as Parliament itself was in fixing the grant at $150,000 a year. I think every hon. member of this House, not only the members from the Maritime Provinces, quite appreciate the hardships of the fishermen. Every man in this House appreciates the risks to which the fisherman is exposed and the hazardous nature of his calling, and there is every disposition on the part of members from all the Provinces, as well as members of the Maritime Provinces, to do everything that can properly be done to relieve the situation and assist that most meritorious class of men. And speaking of the tariff of which hon. members have thought fit to complain, it will be found, on examining it, that exceptions have been made in favor of that class of the community, and perhaps they form the only class of men who as a class are exempted from some of the burdens. For example, salt is admitted free for the use of the fishermen, although salt is not free for any other uses ; fish hooks, seines, nets, lines and twines ; iron masts for ships, or parts of the same, oakum, pitch and tar, wire-rope and rigging for ships and vessels are all on the free list. All of these articles are on the free list, and they are exceptional ; they are intended to relieve this most worthy and meritorious class of our people, engaged in a hazardous and not infrequently unremunerative vocation, because they are so dependent for success upon causes entirely beyond their own control. These circumstances have been considered by Parliament, and the fishermen have been relieved from financial burdens as no other class in our community has been relieved. While the most liberal intentions exist on the part of all members of this House towards the fishermen, irrespective of party, as was evident in the discussion which took place on this question some years ago, I doubt whether it would be wise and in the interests of the hon. gentleman, or of those whom he so ably represents, to reopen this question, because there is no doubt whatever, that the principle which was laid down by Parliament was, that as a matter of right the moneys coming from the Halifax award were the property of the Dominion of Canada, which has to defend and protect the fisheries, and which has to bear large expenses in connection with the fisheries. Now, this sum given in bounties is practically the amount of the interest on the $4,500,000 at 3½ per cent. The amount in bounty comes to that, although it is not paid as such. Now, I doubt myself—the hon. gentleman who proposes this resolution can, perhaps, best judge—whether the temper of this House, if he were to try it, would be in favor of increasing or diminishing the allowance which has been made to the fishermen.

REPORT.

Report of the Commissioner of the North-West Mounted Police, for year 1889.—(Sir John A. Macdonald.)

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

THE MEMBER FOR LINCOLN.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Sir Richard Cartwright, with respect to the conduct of John Charles Rykert, Esquire, Member for the Electoral District of Lincoln and Niagara, declaring it to be discreditable, corrupt and scandalous.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. In speaking of this question, to which the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has called the attention of the House, and in which he has asked this House to declare "that the conduct of the said John Charles Rykert is, and has been discreditable, corrupt and scandalous," I think, Sir, the hon. gentleman has asked us to take a very important matter into consideration; a matter of importance not only to the hon. member for Lincoln, but to all the members of this House, and to Parliament itself; because, if this motion is adopted, it seems to me, that the necessary corollary of it is, that the said member for Lincoln be expelled from this House. Hon. members cannot, with credit to themselves, sit in this House if we have among our members one whose conduct is so criticised, and if the criticism is found to be correct. It behoves us, therefore, to proceed with some caution in the matter. It is our duty to maintain the dignity and purity of this House, and if any member is proven to be unworthy of a seat in it, or to be guilty of any crime or any fraud, it is the duty of this House to remove him. The sentence is severe, and even death itself will not end the disgrace which attaches to it, for that disgrace shall remain as a stigma on the name of the member, so long as the records of this House endure. Sir, when we come to consider a matter of this kind, we ought to feel the great solemnity which rests upon us in reference to it. It is important that all hon. members of this House should know that all their conduct in relation to public matters must bear the strictest scrutiny in the brightest light, and that all aspirants for seats in this House must remember that, as it were, we are living in that bright light which beats upon the Throne, and blackens every blot. It must be remembered that what may be condoned even in private or social life cannot be condoned here, and that, if any offence is proven, the most severe sentence must be passed upon the offender. The sentence which attaches to offences of the kind alleged is severe, but I do not complain of that. Severe diseases require severe remedies, and we must make it known to every Canadian that members of the House of Commons of Canada are determined to uphold the honor and purity of this House, and that every member who comes here, must be fit to associate with gentlemen,—gentlemen in the purest and truest sense of the term. But, Sir, if such a severe sentence is to be passed; one that is to consign to disgrace a person who has been sitting with us here for many years, surely we ought to consider calmly and carefully all the facts connected with the charge made against him. I wish, Sir, that the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright), in introducing this motion, had done it in a judicial and judicious speech; but he was, I think, induced to wander off into the more familiar fields of political controversy and to make a political harangue full of party rancour and malice, and all uncharitable. I do not intend to follow the hon. gentleman in that course; nor, in the few remarks I have to make, do I wish to say one word in palliation of the sentence which he asks this House to pronounce, nor to condone the offence which it is alleged the hon. member for Lincoln has committed. If the member for Lincoln has committed that offence, the sentence must be passed, no matter how painful it may be to his colleagues in this House. I ask both sides of the House to consider this matter, not as political partisans. I ask hon. gentlemen on the Opposition benches to approach this matter, not as though they were pursuing a political enemy; and I ask hon. gentlemen on this side of the House to approach it, not as though they were defending a political or a personal friend. We must allow all political and personal feeling in this matter to disappear, and we must endeavor to approach the question in a spirit becoming the highest court in the realm. I have a very great regard for the dignity and purity of this House, but I trust that we will not create, now or at any time, a precedent which will be unworthy of us. We must remember that Parliament has in the past been guilty of some excesses—not our Parliament but the Parliament of Great Britain. History records instances of parliamentary tyranny in which partisan majorities have used the power of expulsion to diminish the ranks of their opponents. Let us be careful that we do not put upon our records any precedent which would give this power to a majority in time to come. I am thankful to say, that the records of this Parliament of Canada have been heretofore free from any motion in precisely the same terms as this. We have had occasion to consider the question of the seats of hon. members and to decide that certain hon. members have forfeited their seats. Such a question does not arise in this case. As I understand this motion, it does not at all imply that the hon. member for Lincoln has violated the Act to secure the Independence of Parliament, but it does charge him with having been guilty of conduct which is disreputable, corrupt and scandalous; and, as I said before, that motion, if passed, is equivalent to a motion for expulsion, because if the hon. member did not resign his seat upon the passage of that motion, it would be the duty of those who control this House, in my opinion to move that he be expelled, for after the passage of such a motion, no hon. member could sit with him. Sir, before such a severe sentence is passed by this House, is it not our duty to enquire carefully into the facts? The hon. member for South Oxford moves:

"That whereas it appears from certain documents and letters published in the Votes and Proceedings of this House, that John Charles Rykert, Member for the County of Lincoln, did, in or about the beginning of the month of April, A.D. 1882,—" do certain things. Then it winds up:

"That whereas it is apparent from the said documents and correspondence that the said Rykert did make use of his position and influence as a member of this House, in the matter of the said limits, for his own pecuniary advantage; and that he did afterwards make a statement, from his place in this House, with regard to his connection with and the obtaining the said limits, entirely at variance with the facts, and calculated to mislead the House and the country; and that he made further statements in his correspondence with the said Adams to the effect that he was obliged to resort to corrupt practices with members of the Cabinet, and members of Parliament, and other Government officials, in order to perfect the title to the said grant of such limits (which statements have been challenged as false by members of the Cabinet from their places in this House, and admitted by the said Rykert in his place in the House, so far as members of the Cabinet are concerned, to be untrue).

"That the conduct of the said John C. Rykert in the premises is, and has been, discreditable, corrupt and scandalous."

Now, Sir, what are these letters? We find that they are set forth in the Votes and Proceedings of the 14th of February :

"Sir Richard Cartwright moved, That whereas certain letters and documents reading as follows: * * * were published in the Globe newspaper under date of 8th February instant, containing divers statements affecting certain members of this House, and it is expedient that the House should have an opportunity of examining the same, it be Ordered, that the said letters above recited be printed in the Votes and Proceedings for the use of members."

Now, Sir, this simply means that certain letters which are published in a newspaper are ordered to be printed in the Votes and Proceedings. Next, we find that on the 18th of February :

"Mr. Bowell moved: That, whereas certain letters and documents, reading as follows:—"

And then come the personal explanations of Mr. Rykert, in which he states :

"In the Globe of last Saturday there appeared a large number of letters purporting to be written by myself." Subsequently, on the 10th of March, there is printed some correspondence from Mr. Hugh Macdonald and Mr. Stuart Tupper, of Winnipeg. I have read all this correspondence, and I do not find anywhere a direct admission that the hon. member for Lincoln wrote those letters.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Hear, hear.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. No, there is no direct confession of the fact that those letters were written by him, and I conceive that the resolution of the hon. member for South Oxford, in order to make the proceedings of this House regular, should contain the statement that those letters were admitted by the hon. member for Lincoln. Sir, the great power of expulsion which this House possesses can only be exercised under certain conditions. We must have placed on the Table of this House, the conviction of the member whose conduct is in question, duly certified by some competent court; or, we must have a confession by the member; or, we must have a report of a committee. That seems, from all the cases that I can discover, to be the rule of Parliament. Lord Palmerston lays it down in the Sadlier case, when the House of Commons was asked to expel James Sadlier because an indictment had been found against him charging him with fraud, and it was alleged that he could not be found and, therefore, no papers could be served upon him. He had been ordered to attend in his place, and did not attend, and a motion of expulsion was moved. Lord Palmerston said :

"They were now called upon to preserve the purity of the House. That was, no doubt, a most important application; but one of the chief elements of purity was a strict regard of the principles of justice, and an avoidance of precedents which might hereafter be converted to purposes of injustice. Assuming that there was a full conviction in the mind of every hon. member of the guilt of James Sadlier, still he held that they ought not to take a proceeding in the nature of expulsion without being able to find it upon some formal indisputable ground such as conviction, or confession, or the report, after due examination, by a committee."

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman will find on page 176 the admission which he says is not to be found.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I do not find any confession of the offence of which he is charged. He states distinctly that these letters purport to be written by him. In his statement to the House what does he ask for? In the course of that statement, the hon. member for Lincoln says, on page 1813 of Hansard :

"I can show a Committee of the House, and I can show the country, that the indictment framed by the hon. gentleman is a tissue of falsehoods and misstatements, and I claim that this House has no right to pass judgment on me on a one-sided statement."

Then, on page 1814, he says :

"I have letters and evidence of importance to place before the House, and in order that I may justify myself, I ask the House to appoint a Committee for the purpose of considering this whole matter."

Again, on the same page :

"I ask hon. members to give me that opportunity of defending myself before a Committee, which I cannot have under the present circumstances and under the practice of this House."

Now, Sir, we find the hon. member pleading for an investigation, without making any direct admission. It is true, it may be contended that there is a tacit confession that those are his letters, but there is at the same time, and in the same breath, a statement that he can explain them and offer further evidence that will justify his conduct; and if he can do so, I ask hon. members on both sides to treat this member who is accused, in the same manner as they would wish to be treated themselves; I ask them for the same measure of justice that they would give to the meanest criminal in the land if he were accused of any crime, that is, a fair trial. He cannot have that at the bar of the House. We have appointed a Committee with power to send for papers and records, and to examine witnesses under oath; I submit that justice will be delayed but a few days if such a proceeding be adopted. I think that would be a fair and honorable way for us to act, and one in accordance with the proceedings of Parliament; it is a practice which hon. gentlemen followed in the case of a prominent member of their own party, who was charged with having violated the Independence of Parliament Act. They asked, when the evidence was laid upon the Table, over the signature of the hon. member accused, that the matter should be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections; and when letters, purporting to have been written by the hon. member for Lincoln, are laid before the House, he asks, in his statement, that the same measure of justice be dealt over to him. I think, that if hon. members on both sides will approach this question with fairness, they will acknowledge that it is but right and proper that his request should be granted. I referred, a few moments ago, to the fact that Parliament has been guilty of excess—of acts of tyranny—in past years. Parliament has a great power. We have the power of branding this member's character with disgrace; we have the power of expelling him. But let us remember that, if we have a giant's power, it is tyrannous to use it like a giant. Let us be careful not to create a precedent which may be used as a means of injustice hereafter. Let us, to use the words which I find in Bourinot: "in all matters affecting the seat or characters of hon. members, proceed with due caution and deliberation." I ask, simply, that this House do now proceed with due caution and deliberation, and grant to the hon. member who is accused of this serious offence, and who is liable to the most severe punishment that can be inflicted—a punishment which will last beyond life itself, which will exclude him from this House, which will exclude him from social intercourse with his old friends and associates, which will be a lasting disgrace to his name,—what he asks, a fair and full enquiry. I refrain from commenting for one moment on the facts of the case. I am on the Committee of Privileges and Elections; and if it is to be sent there, I do not desire, by any word I may utter, to prejudice it. But I say this, that if it is sent there, I am sure the hon. gentleman will receive from members on this side, as well as from members on the other side, a fair trial; and if his conduct is what it has been charged to be, if he cannot explain away or disprove the charge, there can be no objection to the sentence, severe though it be, that will be passed upon him; and I am sure that the leaders of this House will assist the members of that committee in coming to a speedy conclusion, that no obstacle will be placed in the way of the Committee, and that this House and the country will learn, within a very short time, what defence, if any, that hon. gentleman has to make; and when the sentence of the House is passed no one will be able to rise in this House or out of it, and say that we proceeded with undue haste or without due deliberation, or that we did any act of injustice, but treated the hon. gentleman in the same way as the meanest criminal in the land would be treated. With this view, I move:

That all the words after the word "That" be struck out and the following words inserted instead thereof:—"The attention of this House having been called to certain documents, letters and statements, published during the present session in the Votes and Proceedings of this House, under the dates of the 14th February, the 18th February, and the 10th March, relating to the connection of John Charles Rykert, Esquire, member for the County of Lincoln and Niagara, with a grant of certain timber limits in the North-West Territories, all the questions involved in the said papers be referred to the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections; and that they be directed to enquire into all the facts and merits of the case, and into the conduct of the said John Charles Rykert in relation thereto, and to report the result of their enquiries at the earliest practicable moment, and that the said Committee have power to examine witnesses on oath or affirmation where affirmation is allowed by law."

The motion of the hon. member for South Oxford, to which this is an amendment, acknowledges that the charges in these letters go further than the hon. member for Lincoln. It acknowledges that the letters charge certain members of the Government, and certain members of this House, with corrupt practices:

"That whereas it is apparent from the said documents and correspondence, that the said Rykert did make use of his position and influence as a member of this House, in the matter of the said limits for his own pecuniary advantage; and that he did afterwards make a statement, from his place in this House, with regard to his connection with and the obtaining the said limits, entirely at variance with the facts, and calculated to mislead the House and the country; and that he made further statements in his correspondence with the said Adams to the effect that he was obliged to resort to corrupt practices with members of the Cabinet, and members of Parliament, and other Government officials, in order to perfect the title to the said grant of such limits (which statements have been challenged as false by members of the Cabinet, from their places in this House, and admitted by the said Rykert, in his place in the House, so far as members of the Cabinet are concerned, to be untrue.)"

There is the deliberate statement made that other members of this House have been guilty of corrupt practices. Is it right that such a statement should go to the country, that the hon. member accused is not the only one implicated, but that other members are open to the charge of corruption? I say that such a statement should not be allowed to go to the country, accompanied by the simple statement that the members of the Government have asserted their innocence. There should be some examination under oath of those statements. There should be some evidence given to exculpate or inculpate the members of the Government, and to let the country know that these wholesale charges are utterly without foundation or to what extent, if any, they are true. The whole of the facts ought to be enquired into in order to exonerate the members of the Government and the other members of this House, whom this motion seems to implicate in the matter. The motion seems to me to be so framed as to expressly eliminate a denial with regard to other members of this House, and to have the charge go abroad that other persons are implicated, but that only the conduct of one should be censured. I think that this should be enquired into by the Committee as well, and I therefore ask that this Committee be instructed to enquire into the facts and merits of the case, and that all the questions involved in the said papers be referred to it, and I ask, further, that the Committee be instructed to report the result of their enquiries at the earliest practicable moment.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) has rightly stated that I would second the motion; but, while doing so, I deprecate the manner in which the hon. gentleman has brought the matter before the House and he has endeavored to make some political capital in regard to the manner in which the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) presented the original motion. He said he did it with a great deal of violence and warmth. I listened to the earnest speech of the hon. member for South Oxford, and I felt that that hon. gentleman was simply doing his duty, not only to the House and the country, but to his fellow-members, and I think his speech was characterised by a great deal of calmness, though with a great deal of force, but with nothing that could be called an excess of feeling. I beg to differ with my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) in regard to that, and I think he has weakened his case by his reference to the character of the resolution and the manner of the hon. member for South Oxford. As to the motion now before the House, I believe we are living in a free country where Lynch law does not prevail, and if we saw a man struck down on the street, the result being his death, would we hang the assailant on the next tree, or would we arrest him and allow him to state the reason for his adopting the violent means he did? That is almost the position before us now. I condemn the course of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) as much as the hon. member for South Oxford does. He stands self-accused, he is caught red-handed, he is caught in the act, if we are to judge him by his own letters and correspondence; but, I think it is right, to give him an opportunity to go before the tribunal which the law, and the practice, and the rules of the House have provided for the purpose of judging between him and the person who brings the charges against him. If I were to be the judge of the conduct of the hon. member for Lincoln, the conduct which he is accused of, the ungentlemanly and dishonorable conduct of which he is accused by the statement of the hon. member for South Oxford, and were to judge by what the hon. member for Lincoln himself has said, I would say he was guilty. My hon. friend says that he did not admit that he had written those letters. Did he deny having written them? They are written over his own name, and he stands up to make his defence and does not deny that he wrote them. That does not prove that he did not write them. The member for Lincoln, is charged with these very grave offences. I agree with my hon. friend that it is a question whether Mr. Rykert has violated the Independence of Parliament Act. I do not think the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) did wrong in applying for that timber limit—not at all. Dozens of men have done the same thing. If he does that in a fair and open way, that is another matter; but he has placed himself in this position, that he has used his high position as a member of Parliament and has attempted to influence Ministers, has openly stated that he did influence Ministers, and, further, that he wanted money from his partner because he had to use it in that way. That is where the gravamen of the offence lies. He says, if I had the opportunity to go before a committee, I could give such an explanation as would acquit me of any dishonorable action. He has made a statement in regard to one of the Ministers, and I may say that I did not and I do not believe his statement in regard to any Minister having been influenced in that way. However, the hon. member has asked this House to give him an opportunity to appear before a committee and to show a justification of, or to give some information as to whether these statements were true or not. Are we to refuse to allow that opportunity to a member of Parliament, who, if he be found guilty of these improper acts, will be stamped for life, and perhaps his posterity after him, because he may be expelled from the highest assembly of the land for acts unworthy of a representative of the people and of a gentleman? The member for Lincoln asks for an opportunity to go before a tribunal in order to show the justification he has and the defence he possesses in regard to the charge which has been made against him. The rules of this House have properly provided such a tribunal. They have selected forty-five members—some of the most influential men in the House—as the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and it is their right to enquire into the case of any hon. gentleman who is so accused, as to whether he should continue in his seat in this House. I think that is the tribunal to which this matter should be referred, and, in common justice, which would be meted out to the meanest criminal in one of our courts, when in this, the highest court of the realm, the member appeals for justice to himself and to the people whom he represents, he should have the opportunity of going before that tribunal in order to vindicate his conduct if he can. I feel that there is another reason why the resolution of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), should be superseded by this motion of the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick), and I appeal to the member for South Oxford not to divide the House upon the question. Curses, like chickens, may come to roost, and we may have to pass under the ordeal of a majority of the House, and may be expelled from our seats without having the opportunity of making a defence, if we establish this precedent. It is possible that Mr. Rykert may be able to bring evidence before that Committee, if what his friends say is true. If he has those witnesses to bring forward which may possibly give some vindication, or at least some palliation, of his conduct, then, I say, it is due to him, as it is due to every British subject, that he should have an opportunity to vindicate himself. Under these circumstances, I again appeal to the hon. member for South Oxford whether, if the right hon. gentleman at the head of the Government, who controls this House, who controls the Committee of Privileges and Elections, will give a pledge to this House that no delay shall be thrown in the way, and that that Committee shall proceed duly to consider this question, and give the member for Lincoln an opportunity to state his case, to make his defence—whether the hon. member for South Oxford should not consent to it, and not divide this House. Sir, I can imagine how I would feel if I stood in the place of the member for Lincoln, were I arraigned upon a matter of fact which looked black for myself—and I will say that a blacker case cannot exist against anybody than appears at the present moment to exist against the member for Lincoln, and I do say that the darker a case looks, the greater the necessity for giving the man every opportunity to defend himself, to remove those charges which are made against him, and the stains which will inevitably follow an adverse decision. The member for Frontenac has clearly pointed out the consequences of this act. He says: If the charges which are made against the member for Lincoln cannot be removed by evidence, but one result can follow—expulsion. Every hon. gentleman must agree that if this House, if the Committee on Privileges and Elections, decide that the member for Lincoln wrote these letters, unless he can give some explanations—which it seems almost impossible for him to give—nothing ought to save him from expulsion from this House. But suppose we expel him now, without a trial, without an opportunity of bringing forward the explanations and reasons which, he says, he can bring forward, what will the country say about us? Our action would create sympathy for the member for Lincoln, it would place this House in a false position before the country; it would enable him and his friends to say that the House would not give the man who was charged with such a grave offence, an opportunity of producing the witnesses which, he says, he can produce, and of giving the explanations which, he says, he can give. I say it would place this House in a false position before the country, did we not give the member for Lincoln an opportunity of defending himself, which is the right and due of every Englishman. Sir, I regret that I shall have to take a stand different from that of the hon. gentleman from South Oxford whom I admire so much, both for his great ability, and for the manner in which he conducts public business here. I must again take this opportunity of saying to my hon. friend from Frontenac, that he is only injuring his case when he attempts to impute to the member for South Oxford, vindictive motives in bringing forward this resolution. My hon. friend has simply done his duty, he has done what was the duty of every man in this House, but which very few men like to undertake the responsibility of doing, that is, in order to protect the honor of Parliament, to assail the reputation and character of a fellow-member. In doing this the hon. member for South Oxford has only done a duty which should devolve upon an hon. member like himself, who is a leader of public opinion in this House and in this country. In seconding the motion of the hon. member for Frontenac, let me say that I hope the members of this House will hesitate before they divide the House upon a question of this kind. I think they will best serve the interests of justice, they will best maintain the purity which this House should possess, and I think they will best command the confidence of the country, and create a feeling that we have extended to the member for Lincoln that fair play which every man has a right to, if we accept the motion of the member for Frontenac and allow the member for Lincoln an opportunity of extricating himself, if possible, from a position which is very discreditable to himself. The country will say that we have given him a fair opportunity of defending himself, by sending the matter to that tribunal which Parliament has provided for just such cases as this.

Mr. LAURIER. So this is the result of the long deliberation of the Government upon this matter. My hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) has, I imagine, just given voice to the resolution adopted by the caucus which sat on Friday last. Can it be that the members on the other side, and even my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), are unable to form an opinion on this question unless they are instructed and coached by the Committee on Privileges and Elections? Can it be that the sense of right and wrong, of honor and of shame, is so dull on the other side of the House, that the members are not able to see whether the act charged against the member for Lincoln is censurable, or, forsooth, is not, perhaps, commendable? If the hon. member for Lincoln were accused of having violated a statutory law, I could understand that the Committee on Privileges and Elections might sit upon the case, in order to determine whether his action came within the restrictions provided by law. But, Sir, the hon. gentleman is not charged with having violated any law enacted by man, or any law which is to be found in the statutes; the hon. gentleman is charged with having violated a higher law, which, though unwritten, though undefined, is well known, and is to be found in the heart and conscience of every man. This law was well known to the member for Lincoln himself, since, only a few years ago, when questioned upon this very act, he denied that he had had any connection with it. The hon. gentleman violated no law, no positive statute, but had he not felt in his heart that he had sinned against his better nature, that he had committed an infamous act, why, in the name of common sense, should he have denied any connection with it? His denial of the act was a confession of guilt; out of his own mouth he stands convicted of having committed an act which he had not the courage to confess when called upon to answer for it. And yet we are told that the Committee on Privileges and Elections must sit and enquire whether the hon. gentleman did anything degrading to the honor and dignity of this House. Sir, it is in the name of justice or fair play that we are asked this matter be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I would be the last man to do an injustice to any fellow-man; I would be the very last man to do an injustice to the member for Lincoln, but I am sure that, as far as my judgment goes, we are not proposing to do any injustice to the member for Lincoln. The hon. member for Frontenac appeals for justice, and the reasons which he gives—he must pardon me for so saying—appear to me of the most flimsy character. Why, Sir, he tells us that the committee must sit upon this case, that we cannot sit upon it, that the House cannot pronounce judgment upon it, because, forsooth, we have not evidence that the letters upon which the member for Lincoln is arraigned were written by him. Well, Sir, could anything of a more flimsy character be uttered in any deliberative assembly? The hon. gentleman reminded me of the juror who had to sit upon the case of a man who was tried for stealing a pair of breeches. He would not convict the prisoner because there was no witness who had seen him take the breeches, although the prisoner acknowledged that he had the breeches on his legs at that very moment. The hon. gentleman does not want to pronounce judgment upon this case yet, because no one saw the member for Lincoln writing these letters. But let me refresh the memory of my hon. friend. In the explanations which the hon. member for Lincoln gave upon the floor of this House he used the following expression:—

“I maintain that no man can truthfully say that in any of those letters I endeavored to act corruptly towards the Government.”

Well, Sir, in the face of such a statement as this, is it not mere child's play to say that this House of Commons is not ready to sit and pronounce judgment on this case, because, forsooth, it has not evidence that these letters were written by the hon. member for Lincoln. I dismiss that contention altogether as unworthy the hon. gentleman who has brought it forward. I pass now to the contention raised by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell). My hon. friend also pleaded for fair play, and he said that delay should be granted because the hon. member for Lincoln had stated that he had letters and documents to offer to the House. Again, I repeat that I would not do an injustice to the hon. member for Lincoln, but this appeal is also, in my opinion, one of a most flimsy character. Why? The matter is not new; this is not the first time it has been brought before this House, it is in fact one of long standing. It was brought before this House as far back as 1883. The hon. member for Lincoln was questioned at that time as to whether or not he had been connected with this transaction. Then he denied any connection with it, then he boldly asserted that he had not the slightest connection with it. The matter was again brought forward in 1887, at the time of the general election. Then the hon. member had to change his utterance; he could not any longer say that he had not anything to do with it, because all the evidence of these letters was before the electors. But he changed his plea. He could not deny it, but he threw himself on the sympathy of his electors, and asked them to forgive him and not be hard on him, because, he said, he had made provision for his old age. The matter was afterwards brought up in the press. The hon. member for Lincoln was not then able to exculpate himself. He did not deny the charge, he did not appeal for pity as he had done before his election, but his plea was that he had done nothing that was wrong or derogatory to the honor of this House. And when challenged before this House he again came forward and stated that he could bring forward evidence to prove that he was blameless, and this is the language he made use of :

"I propose to-day to supply to the House and the country some letters which have not been published, which will go a long way to explain the reason why some of the correspondence was written by myself, and also give several explanations regarding that correspondence without which it might appear somewhat strange."

And, at a later date, when the matter was again brought forward, the hon. gentleman promised to give additional correspondence to the House. Now, will any man in his senses believe that, when the hon. gentleman was presenting his case to the House he was keeping back correspondence which might have acquitted him, which might have given another color to his case; that, during all that time, he had letters in his possession which he might have brought forward, but which he kept back. Is there any man in this House who will believe that assertion? There is no man who does not know that the hon. member for Lincoln has been anxious to bring forward all the evidence in his power and place it before the House. It is very true that only a few days ago, when the motion was moved, the hon. gentleman spoke as follows:—

"I have letters and evidence to place before the House."

Well, if he had evidence and letters to place before the House, why did he not place them before the House? That was the time he should have done so. I do not think I am doing an injustice to the hon. member for Lincoln, but I cannot fail to believe that, if the hon. gentleman had had letters and evidence which might have given another color to the case, he would then have brought them forward, and if he had not done so he would have done great injustice to himself. At all events, if he was not in a position to place them before the House then he could have stated so, he could have said that he had letters to bring forth, which he had not on that day, and he might have given an outline of the nature of those letters, or have stated the nature of the evidence that he was prepared to offer to the House or to a Committee of the House. But we had simply the bare bold statement by the hon. gentleman that he has letters to offer and evidence to produce. Under such circumstances I say this, that for my part I cannot accept that statement, that it is repugnant to common sense. I maintain that the gentleman has had every opportunity to file any letters he possessed. I say, moreover, that if the hon. gentleman has letters to file which he has not filed, let him bring them now before the House—it is not yet too late. Unless he does so, I must come to the conclusion that the action suggested is only a plea for delay and nothing more, and that such a motion as that offered by the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) is simply trifling with the common sense of the House. It has been stated also that the committee would be able to enquire as to whether the hon. gentleman had violated the Independence of Parliament Act. No one has charged the hon. member for Lincoln with having violated that Act. It is stated also that as the hon. gentleman has acted within the letter of a statute, a committee may enquire whether he has done anything wrong. There can be no question but that the hon. gentleman has acted within the letter of a statute; no one denies it. The law permits the Government to issue licenses for the cutting of timber in the North-West Territories. If the Government are empowered to issue licenses, it follows that persons may make application for them. There is nothing to say as to the action of Mr. John Adams in applying for a license to cut timber in the North-West Territories. The hon. member for Lincoln acted also perfectly rightly when he favored the application of Mr. Adams for that license. But an act may be perfectly legitimate in itself and become criminal from the motives which inspire it and from the circumstances which accompany it. It must be remembered in connection with this law that it was in itself an exceptional law; it was not one intended to remain forever in the Statute-book, because it was one intended to apply to a state of things temporary in its nature. The Government thought it was desirable, in order to favor cheap fuel for settlers, to issue licenses for timber limits, provided the grantees built mills and gave other facilities to the settlers. The hon. member for Lincoln favored the application of his friend Adams who made application for such a grant. So far there is nothing wrong, and no blame attaches to the hon. member for Lincoln. But blame attaches to the hon. member for Lincoln when he takes advantage of that law to trade upon his position as a member of Parliament, as the hon. member for Lincoln traded upon his influence to coin money out of such position. This is the gist of the offence charged against the hon. member. Look at the case presented by the correspondence? There were several applications made for that limit, which was a much coveted piece of property, it appears. Already an application had been made by Mr. Laidlaw, which had been backed by the powerful influence of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). Still his application had not been granted, and so far as we know from the correspondence it had been denied. Then an application was made by Mr. Adams which was backed by what turned out to be the still greater influence of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert). And the application which had been denied Mr. Laidlaw was granted Mr. Adams. I do not say this at the present moment as telling against the Government, or to say that they were unduly influenced; but I presume they were influenced by the strong pressure which a partisan, who had supported them through thick and thin, can always bring on the Government. So far there is no reproach to make against the Government. But the reproach is this, and it is one which I am not applying to the Government at this moment, but applying to the hon. member for Lincoln, that out of that transaction the hon. gentleman coined money and lined his pockets to the extent of several thousands of dollars. The application was made, and it was finally granted on 10th April, 1882. The hon. gentleman had taken the precaution on 3rd April, a few days before the application was granted, to make a contract with his client, Mr. Adams, whereby he be came joint proprietor of the license to the property which was thus conveyed by Order in Council, and out of which he reaped the substantial benefit of $72,000. This is the charge which is made against the hon. gentleman and this is the charge which, in my judgment, nothing which has been done so far has disproved, and nothing which can take place before the Committee on Privileges and Elections can disprove either. But, Sir, it turned out that this speculation, so much coveted, was near coming to naught. It appeared after a while that the limits were within the railway belt of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that every alternate section belonged to the company. That was something that had not been foreseen by the hon. gentleman, and upon that he bethought to himself what he should do to remove the difficulty, and at once it occurred to him that bribery among the members of the House of Commons, would be the thing which would remove all the difficulties. It was Philip of Macedon who once said, that there was no impregnable fortress when you could have it entered by a donkey load of gold. The hon. member for Lincoln must have evidently read that reference to Philip of Macedon, and so he bethought himself of bribery, and writing to his friend Adams, on the 28th January, 1883, referring to the fact that the limit was on the railway belt, he said :

"If this is so, we are in a bad fix, as Mr. Sands will claim that he has been defrauded, of course. You sold in good faith and relied upon the Government renewing the license. I have to go to Ottawa to-morrow night to fight the matter out, which I do not like. I mean to have all the hardest part of it to do. I have Powell working for me. And if we succeed in beating the railway, we will have to pay the amount we agreed to pay, as you recollect, when we two were at the Queen's Hotel. I have not slept any for a week on account of this."

So, Sir, the moment the hon. gentleman found himself in the difficulty, he thought the only way to remove it would be to lavish money, and so he laid out his plan to Mr. Adams, and told him to be prepared for a large expenditure. With this idea he went to work; what his work was we do not know, except what we have in his correspondence, and on the 8th March, 1883, he reported as follows to his friend :—

"I find difficulties surrounding us in every way in reference to the limit, and I find that the Canadian Pacific Railway have certain Ministers working for them. I am afraid it will cost us each six or seven thousand dollars to get this made all right. I have five or six at work for me, and have agreed to pay them well if they succeed. Muckle was here and told me the limit was all within the belt."

"I am afraid they will do their very utmost to defeat me. I want to be satisfied that you are sure I am doing what is right, and also that you will back me out in all that I do in the way of payment. Of course if you do not want me to fight the thing through let me know, and I will drop it right away. Even if we lost the amount I have mentioned, we had better do so than lose all, as we surely will, if we let these rascals have their own way."

Now, Sir, the matter was settled in a very simple way after all, simple, because the Canadian Pacific Railway Company sold their lands at the usual price of $2.25 per acre. It was a very simple settlement, but how was this settlement obtained? Was it obtained as charged in these letters, by bribery and corruption, or through money spent among Ministers and members of the House of Commons? Is that true, or is that not true? Ministers have disclaimed the accusation with indignation, and everybody is prepared to assume their word for it, no one would suppose them guilty of anything of that kind, but so far as members are concerned is it true, or not true, as charged in these letters, that there are, and there were at one time in Parliament, a dozen members who were bribed by the member for Lincoln in order to take up his defence, and to fight his case before the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway? Sir, the charge is true, or not true. If it is not true, should not members of the House of Commons be prepared to vote against such an accusation as this? Sir, I believe it is not true. I do not believe that the member for Lincoln could bribe a dozen members of Parliament as he pretends to have done. I believe that he slandered his fellow-members, and he slandered them in a fashion which ought to be resented by every man sitting on the opposite side of the House. I cannot understand how hon. members, sitting behind the Ministers, who have repudiated such a charge with indignation, can sit there unmoved and without being prepared to say that a member of the House, who thus committed a slander upon the dignity of the House to which he belonged, is not, to-day, guilty of the charge laid down by my hon. friend from South Oxford. Such conduct as this, of the hon. member for Lincoln, does not, it seems to me, require any more investigation. Such conduct carries its own condemnation with it, and as far as I am concerned, I am ready to give my vote on that question. As I said a moment ago, I would not do the member for Lincoln the slightest injury; I have no resentment against him, but it seems to me that if the House were to delay one minute to condemn such language as has been written by the member for Lincoln, the House would give to parliamentary government the gravest stab it has yet received.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat seems to have a great deal of solicitude for the honor of hon. members upon this side of the House. He says that the hon. member for Lincoln has slandered us by making statements, which, by implication, might lead to the inference that members of Parliament, as well as members of the Government, had been bribed in reference to this matter. Well, Sir, my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) criticised the speech of my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick), in which he alluded to a statement made by the hon. member for South Oxford, who moved the resolution, as one not calculated to secure the approval of members of this Parliament, in regard to the motion he submitted to the Chair. I leave it to you, Sir, and I leave it to hon. members of this House to say, as to whether the hon. member for South Oxford, in the speech he delivered in making this motion to the House, did not slander members on this side of the House more than the member for Lincoln could possibly have done. What did the hon. member for South Oxford say in introducing this resolution to the House? He said :

"Sir, I think that the facts disclosed in the case of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) show that it is a very bad case. But I am not at all disposed to say that the hon. member for Lincoln is, by any means, the only sinner in this matter; I am not at all disposed to say that that hon. member is the only man who has transgressed all those wholesome maxims and principles on which the vitality and usefulness of parliamentary government depend. More than that: I have said elsewhere, and I repeat here, that I hold a considerable section of the people of Canada, a considerable number of the constituencies of Canada, are far from blameless in this matter. I have always believed that, to a very great extent, members of Parliament were likely to be as honest as their constituents required them to be; and there was one fact, perhaps one only, which the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) stated in his defence, recorded on the Journals of the House, with which I am disposed to agree; that is, the statement which he made in which he implied, at any rate, that he came here with the full knowledge and consent of his constituents, who were acquainted with, at all events, all the material facts hereto stated, before they sent him here. "And he implied, and I think he implied correctly, that if he was wrong, his disgrace was their disgrace. If he had committed a crime, his constituents were accomplices in it. I am not disposed to dispute that statement."

And again, he says :

"This transaction, after all, is only a sort of peak, below which lies, perhaps, a mountain range of still undiscovered, but yet undeveloped rascality."

So, Sir, all through the speech of the hon. member for South Oxford, there were implications of corruption on the part of members upon this side of the House, and so I say, that whilst we are prepared upon this side of the House to defend our honor, and to defend ourselves against the attacks which these hon. gentlemen may make, yet we do not propose to do it by condemning a man without giving him a chance to be heard before his peers in Parliament. I am not a little astonished that hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House should take the course they have taken in regard to this matter. It is quite true that the hon. member for Lincoln has not had his seat attacked on the ground that he has violated the Independence of Parliament Act, and in that respect, perhaps, his case is not entirely analogous to another to which I propose to refer presently. But, Sir, notwithstanding the fact that the hon. member for Lincoln is not accused of having violated the Independence of Parliament Act, my hon. friend from Frontenac has pointed out what would be the inevitable result of the passage of the resolution of the hon. member for South Oxford. Could the members of this Parliament, after having declared the conduct of the hon. member for Lincoln to be corrupt, discreditable and scandalous, sit in the same Parliament with him? Would it not be the inevitable result of the passage of a resolution of that kind, that the hon. member must be expelled from the precincts of this Parliament? Now, Sir, what did these hon. gentlemen do on a memorable occasion which I think must have suggested itself to the minds of the older members of this House. You will remember, Sir, although you were not then in Parliament, the discussion that took place on the motion offered by the present hon. Minister of Customs, who was then the member for North Hastings, with regard to the violation of the Independence of Parliament Act by a prominent member of the Liberal party in 1877. You will remember that the hon. member for North Hastings moved that he had vacated his seat in consequence of certain transactions which he had with the Government. What did our hon. friends on the other side of the House say on that occasion? The Hon. Mr. Mackenzie, who was then the leader of the Government, made this statement :

"The hon. gentleman was endeavoring, in fact, by moving, upon going into Committee of Supply, a motion which the rules of the House forbade that it should be amended in any way, in order that he might by a side-wind have the House declare the seat vacant, and thereby require the issue of a new writ. Whether that were the case or not, it was tolerably clear from the speech of the hon. gentleman, from the previous records of Parliament, that when anything of this kind"—

That is, anything affecting the seat of a member of this House—

—"was intended, that it should at least be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, in order that that Committee might make due enquiry into the allegations, arguments and statements advanced, examine into precedents and make a report to the House, on which report the House at a future time could act."

Mr. Blake made this statement :

"When there was such deliberation in the action, although it took the Opposition two years to discover that it was a direct breach of the Independence of Parliament Act, they would not allow one day for that judgment, that investigation, that enquiry which according to precedent, should take place. Did they want to avoid investigation? Did they desire that there should be no report of a Select Committee on the subject as had been the practice in cases on these records? Did they want that the whole facts should not be brought out? The true course would have been if hon. members assumed to say that there had been a breach of the Independence of Parliament Act to make a motion to refer the question to a Committee on Privileges and Elections. When there was to be no reference to a Committee, and when after two years' delay they were to be asked to put the judgment into execution without a moment's delay, he believed the majority of the House would condemn the course pursued, and vote down the resolution."

Mr. Huntington, the then Postmaster General, said :

"The hon. gentleman who moved this resolution knew the fair thing was to refer these matters to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. There should be an opportunity for discussion: the accused should have the opportunity of defending himself, and, upon the report of the Committee the House should act."

Mr. Mills said :

"As the First Minister was not permitted to make the statement he desired to make, he now rose on behalf of the Government, to say that they were quite ready to agree to the reference of the matter to the Committee on Privileges and Elections where in fairness to the Speaker it ought to go."

Now, Sir, I should like to draw the attention of the House to the fact that before this discussion had taken place, and before my hon. friend from North Hastings had moved his resolution, the Committee on Public Accounts had made a report to the House in the following terms :

"That it appears from the vouchers now before them, large sums of money have, from time to time, been paid to J. W. Anglin, a member of the House of Commons, for printing and stationery while a member of that House. Your Committee beg leave to report copies of said vouchers and papers to your honorable House."

That report was made on the 15th of March, and was on the Table of this House from that time to the 7th of April, when the hon. member for North Hastings made his motion attacking the seat of the then Speaker, the Hon. Mr. Anglin; but, Sir, in the face of the fact that these documents were before Parliament for 23 days, the hon. members who are now opposing the reference of this matter refused to deal with the question, and contended that it should be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. It is alleged by these hon. gentlemen that the evidence before the House is sufficient to convict the hon. member for Lincoln, and that they are prepared upon that evidence to convict him of the discreditable, corrupt and scandalous conduct of which he is charged. But all matters of that kind, affecting the seat of a member of this Parliament, I contend, ought to be relegated to the committee which has been appointed by this Parliament for the purpose of trying all such cases. The hon. member for Lincoln says, in the defence he has made before the House, that if his case is allowed to go to the Committee on Privileges and Elections he will there be able to prove certain things which will extenuate his conduct, if not wholly exonerate him from the charges made against him. Let me say to our hon. friends that even supposing that the evidence which the hon. member may adduce before that committee may not be sufficient to exonerate him from the charges, he will have the benefit of having presented that evidence upon oath, and it will go before the country, so that the country will be able to judge whether there are any extenuating circumstances in connection with the matter or not. For my own part, looking at the question from an entirely non-partisan point of view—for we ought all to look at it from a non-partisan point of view—I do not propose to say one single word in extenuation of the conduct of the hon. member for Lincoln. If he is found guilty by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, the proper punishment for having committed the grave crimes and errors with which he is charged would be the vacating of his seat in this House. But, Sir, with this very intention pressing upon us, I believe the proper course for this House to take in dealing with the question is to refer it to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. CASEY. Hear, hear.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). The hon. member for West Elgin says "hear, hear." Why, Sir, he is the gentleman who in 1877 moved that the very case to which I alluded a few moments ago, should be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections; and I venture to express the hope, that if the motion of the hon. member from Frontenac prevails, and this question is relegated to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, we shall not see a repetition of the scandal which took place in connection with the matter to which I have just referred. The Conservatives in this House, when in a minority, condemned the action of the majority in withholding the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections on the Anglin case until the last dying hours of the session of 1877; and let me say to our hon. friends on the other side of the House, that the Conservative majority now in this House will neither attempt to perpetuate nor will they condone any such offence as that which was perpetrated by our hon. friends in 1877. I say again, viewing this case as one in which, even though there may not be any doubt on the minds of many hon. members of this House as to the guilt of the hon. member for Lincoln, it is their bounden duty, in all fairness, when he claims a trial at the hands of his peers, at the hands of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, where he will have an opportunity of presenting sworn testimony in regard to all matters connected with the accusations made against him, to give him that opportunity, and to give it with a full sense of the responsibility that devolves on the hon. member, and with a full sense also of the consequences that will fall upon him if the report of the Committee should be adverse to him. I feel it would be unfair to the hon. member for Lincoln to prevent his having the opportunity of defending himself before that Committee, and, therefore, I intend to vote for the resolution of the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick).

Mr. CASEY. My hon. friend who has just sat down has made allusions to a case which came before this House and between which and the one under discussion he chose to draw a parallel. His allusions to that case render it necessary for me to reply to some extent to his remarks. The hon. gentleman stated correctly that there was a difference of opinion in those days as to the propriety of sending that case to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and I wish to call attention to the difference that exists between the opinion of the Conservative members then and that of the Conservative members now. True it is that some of those who took the view I am about to point out at that time are the same individuals as those who take a different view to-day, and the inconsistency will be for them to explain. In the first place let me point out the difference between the two cases. The attack upon Mr. Anglin, as Speaker of the House, was an attack directly upon his seat on the ground that he had violated the Independence of Parliament Act, and was no longer a member of the House—that he had, as a matter of fact, vacated his seat when he received money from the Government under contract. The motion of the hon. member for North Hastings (Mr. Bowell) was:

"That the Speaker do not now leave the Chair, but that it be resolved, That, in the opinion of this House, it is inexpedient and improper for the Government to enter into any agreement or contract whereby public money is paid to members of Parliament—such as the Postmaster General's Report of 1875 and 1876, and the vouchers laid on the table of this House on the 15th of March ult., show to have been paid to Timothy Warren Anglin, a member of this House for the county of Gloucester; namely, $8,126.31 for the year ended 30th June, 1875, and $10,263.24 for the year ended 30th June, 1876, and $2,709.55 being for the quarter ended 30th September, 1876, in payment for printing and stationery done for and furnished by him to the Post Office Department of Canada 'per agreement;' as shown by the return laid before Parliament by the Postmaster General on the 1st March last, and the vouchers reported to the House by the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts on the 15th March, 1877—as such payments are in contravention of an Act passed in the 31st year of Her Majesty's reign intitled: 'An Act further to secure the independence of Parliament,' which provides that: 'No person, whatsoever, holding, enjoying, undertaking or executing, directly or indirectly, alone or with any other, by himself or by the interposition of any trustee or third party, any contract or agreement with Her Majesty, or with any public officer or Department, with respect to the public service of Canada, or under which any public money of Canada is paid for any service or work, shall be eligible as a member of the House of Commons, nor shall he sit or vote in the same;' and are calculated to detract from the independence of the members of this House."

If this motion meant anything, it meant that Mr. Anglin had been guilty of a breach of the Independence of Parliament Act by taking money from the Government, and had forfeited his seat. That view was insisted upon by the mover of the resolution and by the right hon. the First Minister, who pretended that Mr. Anglin had no more right to sit in the Speaker's chair than any stranger who might come in here and take possession of it of his own motion. Did the hon. member for North Hastings, now the Minister of Customs, propose to refer that matter to the Committee on Privileges and Elections? By no means. It was urged by several hon. gentlemen on this side that the resolution condemning Mr. Anglin included questions of facts and of law. First, as to whether a contract did exist between the Government and

Mr. Anglin, and then as to what was the effect of such a contract on his seat as a member of this House. There were parliamentary precedents tending to justify the action of the Government and of Mr. Anglin, and there were other precedents that could be taken in the other sense. But the whole question was one which required the hearing of evidence before a committee, and a search for precedents, and a deliberate legal argument, such as only could take place before a committee composed of men of legal training, whose decision should be had before this House could deal fairly with the matter. But when an amendment to that affect was proposed to the House, my hon. friend who has just sat down (Mr. White, Renfrew), my hon. friend who has moved the reference this evening (Mr. Kirkpatrick), and the right hon. the First Minister, and the Minister of Inland Revenue, and others on that side, spoke and voted against Mr. Anglin being given any hearing before the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). Look at that motion and you will see there was no division on it.

Mr. CASEY. If the hon. gentleman will allow me to finish, I am about to deal with that point. These hon. gentleman, I repeat, voted that he should be condemned without having a hearing before the Committee, and I will explain how they did so. The motion condemning Mr. Anglin was not one subject to amendment. It was one made by the hon. member for North Hastings (Mr. Bowell) in amendment to the motion to go into Committee of Supply; so that it could not be amended. In this it differed from the motion of my hon. friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) in this case, because his is a substantive motion, which can be amended, and which, therefore, gives the House an opportunity of fully expressing its views on the subject. I afterwards moved, in Mr. Anglin's case, a reference to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, but I could not do so as an amendment to the motion of the hon. member for North Hastings (Mr. Bowell), for the reason I have pointed out. I, however, gave notice during my remarks on that hon. gentleman's motion, that I intended doing so. It was well understood during the debate that it was the intention of the then Government to make that reference, and hon. gentlemen opposite, in voting as they did on the motion of the hon. member for North Hastings to condemn Mr. Anglin at once—a motion which could not be amended—and refusing to accept the expressed intention of this side, to bring the matter before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, practically voted against any such reference. Later on, when I made my motion to refer the matter to the Committee, these hon. gentlemen, seeing that it was sure to be carried, did not call for a division, but let it pass without opposition; but they had previously voted to condemn Mr. Anglin unheard, as against the alternative proposed, of referring his case to the committee. I am, therefore, perfectly correct in stating that they voted to condemn Mr. Anglin, and were opposed to giving him the opportunity of defending himself before the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I find that the hon. member for North Hastings (Mr. Bowell) on that occasion quoted several precedents from English parliamentary practice, to show that such a case as that of Mr. Anglin's could not go before that Committee. He quoted the case of Mr. Bish which had been before the British House of Commons. He had been a contractor, his case was brought before the full House, and his seat was declared vacant by the full House without reference to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. He quoted some similar cases, in which he said the House of Commons, without reference to the Privileges and Elections Committee, had declared the seat vacant. I am not sure whether his quotations were correct, but he made them. That was the conduct of gentlemen opposite in regard to Mr. Anglin's case which involved points of law and fact, which involved the infringement of the Independence of Parliament Act, and which involved the hon. gentleman's seat. How different is this case. There is no allegation that the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) has violated the Independence of Parliament Act, but the allegation is that his conduct as a man has been scandalous and discreditable and corrupt, and we are asked to make that statement on the faith of documents which have been written by the hon. member himself. There is no apparent ground for his asking to put in further evidence. What sort of evidence can be put in? Evidence that he did not write those letters? If there were any question of that kind he would have denied their authenticity instead of implicitly admitting that he did write them. The writing is admitted by the hon. member for Lincoln. He says he has other evidence. What other evidence can he bring? Evidence that the statements he made in the letters were true? If he can prove that, then his conduct certainly was discreditable and corrupt, and such as this House is warranted in pronouncing the heaviest censure upon. Would he bring statements to show that what he said was untrue? Then certainly, if he wrote lies, and presented those lies to this House as a justification, his conduct is more discreditable and more corrupt than it would be under other circumstances. I do not see where the use is of getting any further evidence, as nothing further can be proved which can exonerate the hon. gentleman from the scandal of having written these letters. In any case, the scandal upon him and the scandal upon the House remains the same. The hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) says we should not pronounce this censure upon the member for Lincoln because it would involve the loss of his seat. But thirteen years ago that hon. gentleman not only proposed to pass a censure upon a member of this House and upon the Government, though that question involved the interpretation of the Act, but he voted against the reference of that question to the Privileges and Elections Committee, and yet he now has the confidence—I might say the cheek—to say that we should not pronounce this censure upon a member of the House because it would involve his expulsion from his seat. If it did involve that expulsion, can the hon. gentleman say that is a reason for the House refusing to express an opinion? The hon. gentleman did express his opinion in 1877 in the case of Mr. Anglin. He expressed his opinion by voice and by vote that the House should pronounce a censure upon Mr. Anglin and the Government of that day, and should refuse to allow the matter to go to the Committee on Privileges and Elections; and yet, now with the grossest inconsistency he says that this case ought not to be pronounced upon by the House but ought to go to the committee. The member for Lincoln is not charged with anything of which that committee can properly take cognisance. The committee has nothing to do with the conduct of a member of Parliament except in connection with the provisions of the Independence of Parliament Act. Was the case of Louis Riel, who had been elected a member of this House, referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections? No. You will remember that that member of this House was twice expelled.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. There was a conviction there.

Mr. CASEY. He was expelled once before the conviction.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. No, he was outlawed.

Mr. CASEY. He was expelled before the outlawry. That is my recollection of it. After the outlawry, his seat was declared vacant, as it was ipso facto vacant on account of outlawry. At all events, there was no reference to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. My hon. friend who moved for the vacation of the seat of Mr. Anglin moved to expel Mr. Riel from the House without any reference to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, but now, in the case of a friend of his own, he wants the dilatory method adopted of a reference to the committee. I do not suppose that all those who vote for that motion have made up their minds that the member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) should not be censured in the way specified in the motion of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). I have no doubt that under other circumstances, many of them would vote for that motion, but I cannot understand why they should have any doubts, and, therefore, why they should refer this question to a committee. The only questions can be whether these letters were written by the hon. member, and, if they were written, whether they were true. The writing has been admitted, and, whether these letters are true or not in their statements, cannot affect the conduct of the hon. member. I am, therefore, without further enquiry, prepared to vote that the hon. member's conduct, as it appears on the face of the documents written by himself, is deserving of the censure contained in the motion of my hon. friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). In conclusion, let me point out those of the hon. gentlemen in this House who have been so inconsistent, so unjust, so unkind as to wish to condemn a man without trial in 1877, and who now ask us to go through the farce of trying a man who is already convicted by his own admission. Let me read the names from the records, of those who are now here who voted against the proposition to refer Mr. Anglin's case to a committee. I find these: Messrs. Bowell, Caron, Colby, Costigan, Daoust, Desjardins, Dewdney, Ferguson, Haggart, Kirkpatrick, Langevin, Macdonald (Kingston), McCarthy, Mitchell—my hon. friend the third party, who is a little more charitably disposed now, than he was then—Oumet, White (Renfrew), and Wright (Ottawa). Then they voted to condemn a man without a trial, and now those same members have failed to give a reason for refusing to condemn a man without his being allowed to give, as they contend, further explanation.

tions. The explanation is required still more, because, as I pointed out, the nature of the two cases is so very different. In the Anglin case, there was every ground for a judicial enquiry, while in this, there does not seem to be room for any judicial enquiry into the merits of the case whatever. This is a case of confession rather than a case of enquiry. For that reason, although I moved the reference alluded to by the hon. member for North Renfrew (Mr. White), in 1877, I feel quite consistent in voting against the same reference now, and I shall do so.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The question before the House, is whether a certain matter shall be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I have carefully read the correspondence, I have carefully read the previous debates, I have listened to what has been said in the House this evening, and the difficulty with me, in coming to a conclusion that will enable me to support the motion of the member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) is this, that I cannot see what there is to submit to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. There is nothing. There is no question, either of fact or of law; it is simply a matter of opinion which can be gathered only from the documents now before us. Therefore, there being nothing to submit to that committee, it seems to me entirely illogical to move a reference of this kind; and holding that view, and also, feeling that this is a case entirely of opinion, of sentiment, if you will, and that this House is the guardian of its own honor, I intend to vote to-night, as I voted on the motion of the Minister of Justice, against the reference to the committee, and in favor of the direct motion of condemnation. Now, it has been said that the action of this House in dealing with this matter without reference to a committee, would be analogous to that of a mob who, finding a red-handed murderer, should hang him up to the nearest lamp post. I think it is not at all complimentary to this House to make such a comparison. This House is a deliberative body, in a certain sense it is a judicial body, and to say that in a question of this kind, this House is not competent by all the rules of justice, by every principle of fair play, to deal with a question of this kind, seems to me as inconsistent as the former proposition to which I have referred. If there were questions of fact to be tested, if there were questions of law upon which we might have doubts, then the proposition now before us would be a correct one; but if there were reams of correspondence added to what has already been produced, it could not alter the bare fact which appears on the record that the member has been guilty of conduct which is in violation, if not of the letter, at least of the spirit and of the principle of the independence of Parliament. I, for one should be glad to see that principle carried further than it has been carried in our Independence of Parliament Act; I should like to see an addition to the resolution to which that now under consideration has been moved in amendment, declaring that no member of this House should be allowed to act as a paid solicitor, either before a committee of this House, or in the promotion of any Bill before this House, or before any of the Departments of which this Government is composed. Now, it may be said that this would be a very harsh measure; but when we consider how largely we have to deal with all the various Departments of Government, it seems to me that the members of this House should debar themselves from that privilege, if privilege it is, and be willing to forego any source of emolument that might arise from it. Will any man pretend to tell me that a member, acting as solicitor, can divest himself of his influence as a member of Parliament? Why are members of this House employed as solicitors before committees? Why are they asked to act as the member for Lincoln did? Is it because they are eminent at the bar? Is it because they have any special talent for conducting cases of this kind? No, Sir, it is because it is expected, and hoped, and believed that behind their power as solicitor, behind any particular ability which they have in that respect, their influence as a member of Parliament is to be brought into play to secure the object in which otherwise they would not be successful. Therefore, I say, I would be glad to see this House enact some such measure as would make it impossible for a scandal such as that now before us, to occur—make it impossible for any solicitor who is a member of this House to endeavor to combine in his own person the dual capacity of member and of solicitor. I say that as long as we allow this practice to exist, considering the numerous ways in which, under our present constitution, we have to deal with the various departments of the Government, it would be exceedingly desirable that a law like this should be passed. No analogous case can be found in the history of the Imperial Parliament, mainly for the reason that there is no such intercourse in England between members and the various departments; there are no public lands to be asked for; there are no favors, either legitimate or illegitimate, to be obtained from the Imperial Government, as there are from the Government of Canada. The only way this House can purge itself from the suspicion of corruption on the part of its members, or of being influenced by improper motives, is the enactment of a law of that character, or by adherence to the principle of abstaining entirely from acts combining the dual capacity of solicitor and member. Until we do that we shall always be liable to have imputations thrown upon members of this House, precisely as they are thrown upon the member for Lincoln in the present case. My main reason, however, for voting against the reference, irrespective altogether of the degree of guilt which may attach to this particular case, is that I see nothing to submit to this committee, and it is merely going through a form to pass the resolution under consideration.

Mr. AMYOT. I do not intend to go into the merits of the case, but I want to explain how and why I am going to vote. I shall consider this question as a legal one, entirely aside from its political character. I think it would have been easier for us to vote on the present motion, if the member for Lincoln had stated what kind of defence he wants to make, and what kind of evidence he wants to bring. I believe, also, that the member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) has committed a great mistake when he seriously proposed to this House to deny that the letters printed in our Proceedings were not signed by the member for Lincoln.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I never denied that.

Mr. AMYOT. He said they were not admitted.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I stated there had been no confession of the charges; there was no admission that these letters were signed by him. He said these letters purported to be written by him. I stated there should be either a conviction or a confession of the charge, or a report by the committee.

Mr. AMYOT. I think there is a confession that they were written by him, in one of his declarations before this honorable House. It is not a good defence to deny what has been admitted, or to say that there has been no confession. Here we have a member of this House, one of our colleagues, who has a mandate from a county, charged with the most serious offence, an offence which, for a man of honor, for a member of Parliament, is as great as would be, perhaps, an accusation of murder against an ordinary man. He says, grant me a committee; I say from my seat, upon my honor, which I still have—because he is presumed innocent until he is condemned—I can bring further evidence, either letters or witnesses, that will explain these published letters. I will prove that I am not guilty as stated in the accusation. Well, Mr. Speaker, as a lawyer, as a man in the habit of hearing trials, I say that I cannot, for my part, refuse the reference of this case to a committee. When the member for Lincoln says he has new facts to bring up, we must give him the opportunity of bringing them. It is all very fine for the hon. member who spoke before me (Mr. O'Brien) to say this is a question of law. But the member for Lincoln says there are other facts, new facts, which he desires to bring before the committee. If he does not bring them before the committee, so much the worse for him. If the case remains as it is now, none of his friends will be ready to stand up and assume his defence; and if he has made a false declaration, if he has stated wrongly and falsely that he will bring forward new facts and evidence, his case will then be worse than it is now and none of his friends will take up his defence. Under these circumstances I feel bound to vote for the amendment. I have confidence in the Committee of Privileges and Elections, and I think in view of the facts spread over the country, no Government would take upon itself to delay, by unfair means, the proceedings of the committee. I think the committee will do justice and act fairly towards the country, and also act fairly towards the accused party. Reference has been made to confessions. We may, without making a comparison, refer to cases of murder. If the accused party pleads guilty the court does not generally accept the plea, but wants the trial to proceed and the accusation to be proved. In this case the accusation is eminently grave against the accused party, and as he has asked to be heard before a committee, I think the request should be granted. As to the suggestion made by the hon. member who preceded me, that no member of this House should act as paid attorney or solicitor in supporting measures before committees of this House, I think he is perfectly right. If hon. members of the different Parliaments in Canada, either Federal or Local, were better paid and were not called upon to lose so much of their time in the public service, they would not be so much exposed to these temptations.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat has made an astonishing proposition: that when a man pleads guilty to a charge of murder, his plea is not taken by a court of law. That may be the law in Quebec, but it is not the law of the Dominion. While a prisoner is warned as to the consequence of his plea, yet, if the plea is persisted in, it is accepted, and sentence is pronounced. It appears to me that the duties of the Committee of Privileges and Elections have been misunderstood and misinterpreted as applying to this case. That committee has been referred to as if it were an appellate tribunal for this House. That committee is simply a subordinate body charged with the duty of ascertaining facts, hearing evidence and reporting on the evidence to the House, and then the House decides the case. In that respect it resembles the position of a referee or master to whom has been referred a case for the purpose of ascertaining the facts, and the facts having been ascertained the court decides the case. But I do not think that in a court of law, where the facts are admitted, that a judge on any plea would refer it to an inferior court to ascertain the facts. The business of the Committee on Privileges and Elections being simply to ascertain the facts, as I have pointed out, the argument put forth by the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) is unanswerable, that there are no facts on which the committee would have to report, but the case would merely come back to this House for adjudication on the facts already contained on the face of our Journal, for not only in Hansard, but in the Votes and Proceedings are these letters and statements of the hon. member for Lincoln to be found. Whatever course is pursued, this House is eventually the tribunal to decide the case. The member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) put forward the plea that the Committee of Privileges and Elections would decide as to whether the hon. member for Lincoln was guilty of the charge laid against him, and they would give a decision, and that decision would be reported to the House. The committee's powers are simply to ascertain the facts, they may draw conclusions if they choose, but they may simply report the facts, and at all events eventually this House must decide the case. Several cases have been referred to in this discussion. The case of Mr. Speaker Anglin has been referred to, and the motion then moved by the hon. the Minister of Customs has been quoted. In that case, it was said the Committee on Public Accounts had reported certain facts. But the Speaker of the House had not been heard before that committee, and as presiding officer he was unable to make a statement in this House; but if he had risen in his place and stated that the facts recited were true, the House would have dealt with the case. But the question was one respecting an alleged violation of the Independence of Parliament Act, and the reference to the committee was made to enable him to make his defence, and then the committee was called upon to decide whether the case was within the statute or not. But there is another law besides the Independence of Parliament Act; it is an unwritten law dealing with the honor of this Parliament and of which this Parliament has charge, and regarding which, when the facts are clearly submitted and exposed, it should act without referring the case to a committee. What proposition is put forward in the resolution of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright)? He has put forth certain documents, which state certain facts from which one conclusion only can be drawn as to the position of the hon. member for Lincoln with respect to the timber limit, the benefit he was to derive from it, and the statement he made as to the way in which he had obtained that benefit. Then the member for South Oxford proceeds, and states that the hon. member for Lincoln, when this question was brought up in Parliament, utterly denied the statement that he had any interest, beyond solicitor's fees, in that transaction, and that he then gave an emphatic, clear and categorical denial to the statement made on that occasion by the hon. member for North Norfolk on the floor of this House. The resolution next states the fact that members of the Government who had been charged in those letters with having been influenced improperly and corruptly, denied those charges in this House, and their denials were assented to by the hon. member for Lincoln. Those facts can be accepted and also the letters in question, for the hon. member for Lincoln has not denied them. He has indeed admitted them in clear and emphatic language, and the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) is too astute a lawyer not to know that the terms in which he admitted them were such as in law were conclusive. The hon. member for Lincoln said he regretted he had made any charges against Ministers of the Crown—that he made no charges against them. In a letter published by the hon. gentleman in the Citizen he stated that those letters were written by him and they were not untrue. We have also the statement of the hon. member for Lincoln as to what took place in this Parliament in 1887, when the charge was brought by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). Thus we have all the facts stated, and the evidence and letters printed in the Votes and Proceedings, together with the statements of the hon. Minister of Customs and the hon. member for North Simcoe repudiating the inferences or charges made in those letters. The hon. member for Frontenac referring to the language of Lord Palmerston, in the case of John Sadlier said that he had put in the cases of only conviction and confession. Now, Sadlier was accused of fraud, and before the judgment of a court of justice was passed upon him, he had committed suicide, and, therefore, there was no judgment of conviction in the case. When it was attempted to declare the seat vacant, it was judged that the facts should be ascertained, because there was neither conviction nor confession. In the case of Lord Cochrane, we all recollect that he was indicted with other parties, before the Court of Queen's Bench, for a conspiracy in regard to the funds. He was found guilty by the court, and judgment recorded against him. That conviction went before the House, and although Lord Cochrane stated from his place, that he would prove that the judgment was unjustly obtained against him, and that it was not a true judgment, the House declared his seat vacant. It is true that years afterwards, Lord Cochrane did justify the statement he made in the House. If I recollect the case of O'Donovan Rossa aright, he was similarly expelled from the House. We come now to the case of Louis Riel. He was elected a member of this House, and there was laid before the House a judgment of outlawry against him, and a witness at the bar of the House identified Louis Riel, the outlaw, as the member elected for Provencher. He was expelled and his case was not referred to the Committee of Elections. These cases are analogous to the one we are now discussing. What, I ask, have we to lay before the Committee on Privileges and Elections in this case? We have all these facts admitted, and if the report of the committee comes back, simply stating these facts, we have to deal with the matter just as it is. It is argued that the hon. member for Lincoln states he has other evidence to offer. We must bear in mind that when my hon. friend from South Oxford first asked that these letters be placed in the Votes and Proceedings, the request of the hon. member for Lincoln was granted, that other letters which he had in his possession should be published contemporaneously with the letters published in the Toronto Globe. Again we find, a few days afterwards, that the defence of the member for Lincoln as published in the newspapers was also entered on the Proceedings, and afterwards when the Minister of Customs read a letter from Mr. Hugh John Macdonald, the member for Lincoln was, by this House, unanimously allowed to place other letters upon record. The member for Lincoln is an astute lawyer. He knew the position he was in, and we all know that so far as a court of law is concerned, it is impossible by a verbal statement, to do away with the effect of a written statement, so far as regards the party who made the writing. Of course, hon. gentlemen who are charged in these written statements, have a right to offer a defence, and to show that the statements therein made are untrue. As the matter stands now, we have these letters containing statements which are untrue, and which, if untrue, no man of honor should have stated them at all. If, on the other hand, these statements are true, they are most serious charges against members of the Government, and against other individuals, because it is clear on the face of that letter quoted by my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition, that some corruption of some kind was openly stated to be used towards some persons. I think the House has a right to deal with this question at once, not only for the honor of this Parliament, but for the honor of responsible Ministers of the Crown. Where statements of this kind are made, and denied by Ministers of the Crown, the House should not hesitate for a moment to condemn him who made them. Suppose my hon. friend the Minister of Customs had passed away from amongst us and was no longer able to defend himself here, look at the position he would be placed in by these statements. I do not wish to see my hon. friend taken so suddenly away from this House. I wish him many long years, but if he were not now a member of this House, a stain would be on his memory which he would be unable to efface. I say that letters of this kind affect the honor and the integrity, not only of the Government, but of the entire Parliament. We have these facts before us, and it seems to me that it is simply a farce to ask us to go to a committee, to ascertain facts which are admitted, and which have not been attempted to be gainsaid. My hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) admits that the hon. member for Lincoln has brought no statements in his defence. I have no doubt that if he wished to make any further statement to this House, we would not hesitate to afford him that opportunity. After looking into this matter carefully, as I have done, I have no hesitation in saying that such a demand as that now made by the member for Lincoln would be denied by any judicial tribunal as an attempt to delay. Nothing in the statement made by the hon. member for Lincoln has given us the slightest indication that he can attempt to deny these letters, and I think no judge in a court of law, however anxious he might be to give fair play, would hesitate to say that the member for Lincoln had ample opportunity to defend himself, if he could. The member for Lincoln has not, in any statement he made to this House, endeavored to contradict the authenticity of these letters, although he may have endeavored to qualify the statements therein. It is for us, sitting here as representatives of the Canadian people, to say whether, under all these circumstances, this is such conduct as a member of this House should commit, and if he has committed it, whether or not he deserves the censure of the House.

Mr. GIROUARD. The question before the House is not whether the hon. member for Lincoln is guilty of the serious charge made against him; it is whether in dealing with his case we are following the ordinary practice of Parliament. I have heard some hon. gentlemen say that no man in his senses could assert that the hon. member for Lincoln could exonerate himself or satisfy any member of this House that he did not write the letters which he is alleged to have written. That is not the question at all; the question is whether in dealing with the case we are following the rules of Parliament. If we look at the practice followed by this Parliament for twelve years past, we find that when an accused member has asked that his case be referred to the Committee of Privileges and Elections, it has been invariably referred to that court. It is said that no one can have any doubt as to the guilt of the hon. member. Let us suppose for instance, that a crime has been committed in the presence of the ordinary judges of the land, and that the accused is brought before them. They have no doubt that he has committed a crime; are they going to pass sentence upon him immediately? No; the law of the land indicates a certain mode of procedure. The accused has a right to ask that he shall have a trial according to that procedure, and he cannot be convicted unless it is followed. It has been stated that the hon. member for Lincoln has made a confession of his guilt. Suppose he has, where is the authority on criminal law that will say that when a man is arrested for a crime and makes a certain confession, but asks to be tried according to the laws of the land, he is not entitled to have a trial according to the laws of the land? Now, Mr. Speaker, the practice of Parliament has been always to grant a reference to the Committee on Privileges and Elections to a member who is accused, and who asks for that reference. The hon. member who has just sat down says that Mr. Anglin could not leave the Chair he was occupying as Speaker of this House. I ask where is the rule which prevented Mr. Anglin from asking permission to leave the Chair and make a statement before the House if he wanted to? I would like to know where there has ever been a case more clear than that of Mr. Anglin. It was so clear that the party in power kept it before the Committee on Privileges and Elections to the last hour of the Session, and after the Session Mr. Anglin resigned. The case of Louis Riel has also been mentioned, but is it a parallel case? He never took a seat in this House and was not introduced. True, he took the oath in the Clerk's office, but he never really became a member of the House. Look at all the cases brought before this Parliament during the last twelve years. Every case, when the accused asked for it, has been referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and I hope the hon. members of this House, in dealing with this case, will not establish a dangerous precedent, will not be carried away by their first impression that this member is guilty of the gross charge made against him. Even if he has been so guilty, the evidence taken by the Committee on Privileges and Elections will go before the country, and will show that this member has been dealt with like all other members who have been accused. I will certainly vote in favor of the amendment of the hon. member for Frontenac.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I desire to say only a few words on this subject. We have before us the motion of the hon. member for South Oxford, which the hon. member for Frontenac proposes to amend. I should be very glad, indeed, to vote for the amendment if I thought there were to be brought to light any new facts or anything that would tend to exculpate the member charged. But I agree with the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien), who says that he does not see what new facts or new evidence can be adduced. I think we are seized of all the facts in the case, and, that being so, it seems to me that we ought to be prepared to give our judgment now. I think I am conscious of not being actuated by the slightest feeling of either personal or political hostility to the member who is charged. I have met with him on different platforms, as I have met with other members of this House, and we have fought our battles; but I think that gentleman himself will say that no personal enmity has been engendered between us. It is a painful thing—and I can realise that it is especially painful to those on the other side of the House who have been more intimately associated with him—to pass judgment on a fellow-member; and I think I can say truthfully that I share in that feeling. But is there no duty that we owe to this Parliament or to this country? Let us look at some of the facts in connection with this case. Is it something that was brought up and forced on the attention of Parliament by the hon. member for South Oxford? Is it not a fact that in the press of the country letters have been published, signed by the name of the member who is charged—letters that have been placed upon the Journals of this House; that the people of the whole country have read those letters; and that the verdict given by the people who have read them and the journals which have commented upon them, is that the person who had written those letters had, by doing so, and by the receipts he had given for the money he had taken, convicted himself of discreditable, corrupt and scandalous transactions? That being the case, is there not a duty for the House to act? Could the House ignore the matter altogether? It did seem to me that it was the duty of the Government, who were charged, as the hon. Minister of Customs himself admitted, with influences having been brought to bear upon them to corrupt them, to bring this matter before Parliament; but when they did not do so, can any one accuse the hon. member for South Oxford of doing something that is discreditable, as the hon. member for Lincoln charged him, when he, in vindication of the honor of the House, and in order that this Parliament might stand right in the eyes of the people of this country, discharged the painful duty of bringing this matter before the House; and now that it is before us and we are asked to deal with it, the hon. member for Frontenac interposes and says that he is not prepared to declare that the transactions of the hon. member are discreditable and scandalous. He says in the first place that the letters alluded to in the resolution of the hon. member for South Oxford have not been admitted by the hon. member for Lincoln to have been written by him. Is that really the case? Let us see what the hon. member for Lincoln does say in reference to these letters. Many places might be cited, but look at this statement on page 1803 of Hansard:

"Does he not know that it was discussed in 1887 before the electors of the County of Lincoln, whom I have represented in Parliament for the last thirty years? But now, with his party driven to the last ditch, he thinks he can throw some obliquy on myself by dragging it before the public again. There is nothing more contemptible in an individual than to make public a man's private correspondence, and when we find that this whole arraignment against myself is based on some private and confidential correspondence which was stolen from myself, it is not worthy of this Parliament to discuss it for one single moment."

Is that not evidence most conclusive of the genuineness of the letters? On page 1807 what did he say:

"I stated that this correspondence was of a private and confidential character, and it was either stolen or was obtained by the grossest fraud. This correspondence was in the hands of only five persons."

And then he goes on to enumerate who they were. On page 1814 we find him saying:

"I maintain that no man can truthfully say that in any one of these letters I endeavored to act corruptly towards the Government."

If that is not a direct admission that he wrote these letters, I do not know what is. It is not only an admission that he wrote them, but he takes the stand that they were proper letters to write, and he defies any one to say they were not. I need not multiply evidence, because I do not think that the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) would have ventured on a defence of that kind. But we have another plea put forward, and that is, that we are not possessed of all the facts. Well, if we are not, I do not think any hon. gentleman opposite—not even the hon. member for Frontenac—will say that it is owing to any fault on the part of the mover of the original resolution, or of hon. gentlemen on this side. Every opportunity was given to put in all the correspondence. It was given not only on one occasion, but on two occasions—even on three occasions—and the hon. the leader of the Opposition has said to-night that the hon. member for Lincoln will be given liberty to put in anything he may have. Let me call to your notice what transpired in the House in reference to this matter. On page 182 of the Votes and Proceedings, I find that the hon. member for South Oxford

(Sir Richard Cartwright) said, when moving in this matter :

"The House is now in possession of the hon. member for Lincoln's explanations. I desire that the House should have the other documents which piece out the documents the hon. gentleman has referred to ; and when the House is fully seized of them, we will be in a position to deal with this matter. I should be very glad, therefore, if the House will permit me, to include in that motion :

"And any other papers or correspondence that the hon. member for Lincoln desires to have included.

"My wish being that the House should be seized of everything.

"Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have asked the hon. gentleman, as it is a matter which affects him so considerably, if he requires a notice, and he only brings the condition, which the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) is willing to grant, that besides the papers that hon. gentleman has moved for, the hon. member for Lincoln will be at liberty to put in the Votes and Proceedings any other papers in connection with the matter.

"Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose all the hon. gentleman's papers are dated ?

"Mr. RYKERT. They are all in regular order. I have never put anything irregular before the House.

"Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It would make it more convenient for the use of hon. gentlemen if the letters the hon. gentleman wishes to interpolate were placed in order, as some of them are letters in reply to those contained in the document I have handed in.

"Mr. RYKERT. I have a hundred more if the hon. gentleman would like to have them.

"Mr. SPEAKER. As this motion must go into the Votes and Proceedings, what papers are required should be described.

"Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. member for Lincoln will put in within twenty-four hours all the papers, and we will have the whole story.

"Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have no objection in the world to that.

"Mr. SPEAKER. The correspondence should be defined, so that we may know what papers are to be printed in Votes and Proceedings.

"Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would suggest that, in order that the hon. member for Lincoln may put in all his papers, the hon. member will postpone his motion until to-morrow, and all the papers can be put in to-morrow.

"Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have no objection to that. It is perfectly fair that the hon. member for Lincoln should put his side of the question as fully as he pleases."

Now, that was what transpired with reference to this matter. I would invite the attention of the House to the fact that when such ample opportunity was given to the hon. gentleman to put in all his papers, the inevitable conclusion that forces itself upon my mind is that all the papers that the hon. gentleman has in his possession and that would mitigate his offence in the slightest degree or explain it, were put in by him. It was a full month ago since the matter came up, and every opportunity has been given for the production of papers. I call the attention of the House to what the First Minister said, on page 1859 of Hansard, when it seems the First Minister did not contemplate the necessity of sending this matter to the Committee at all. Sir Richard Cartwright asked :

"Is the right hon. the First Minister prepared to say when this question will be resumed ?"

To which the First Minister replied—and this was after the vote had been taken on the amendment of the hon. the Minister of Justice :

"The hon. the Minister of Justice explained his reasons for moving the adjournment. They were, that upon considering the serious nature of the charge and the serious consequences to the hon. gentleman originally concerned, and the importance of considering what the precedent would be, sufficient opportunity should be given to the members of this House, after having heard the statement of the hon. gentleman who moved the motion and the statement of the hon. gentleman accused, to read the statements and to form their judgment as to what their vote would be. The Minister of Justice took occasion to say that he would not even say how he would vote. He would not in any way commit himself to the defence of the hon. gentleman accused, but he said, as a matter of justice and reason, that opportunity should be given to every member of the House to read the debate in the Hansard, so that he could make his mind fully acquainted with all the circumstances. We will say Monday for the closing of the debate."

The right hon. the First Minister evidently took the view that, the papers being on record, the charge having been made by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), the accused having had a full opportunity to explain, that all that was required would be before the House on which to form its judgment, but he did think that the proposal of the Minister of Justice was reasonable and that members should have an opportunity to read over the evidence and debate and be in a position to give their vote. That opportunity has been given, the question is before us now, and the House is in a position, according to the right hon. gentleman's own reason, to give an intelligent judgment upon this subject. With reference to what is stated in these letters, which the hon. member for Lincoln seems to think are justifiable, let me remind the House and the Minister of Customs that, the other night, when the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) read, from some returns brought down, that the late Mr. Thomas White had applied for a timber limit, that hon. gentleman warmly rebuked the hon. member for North Norfolk for having dared to repeat what had been said in this House before, that the Hon. Thomas White had applied for a timber limit ; and he was careful to explain that when Mr. White applied for that limit he had no interest or profit or benefit in making the application, but simply made it for a constituent, and it was unworthy in the hon. member for North Norfolk to refer to the matter at all. What does that imply ? I would ask the Minister of Customs if the action of the hon. member for Lincoln was justifiable and proper, what kind of an offence it could be to any other member of the House to be told that he had applied for a timber limit ? His sensibility on that point showed it was absolutely necessary for one who had made application that it should be peradventure and beyond doubt that he had not derived one cent's worth of profit from the transaction and was entirely disinterested. The hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Hickey) desired that parliamentary practice and privilege might be extended so that he might find stronger words in which to denounce the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), who had applied for a timber limit at that time, though he declared that he had applied for another person and not for himself. Does not this show that these gentlemen realise that, if a member of Parliament participates, as the member for Lincoln acknowledges that he participated, to the extent of thousands of dollars, in any of these grants, they know that their action would be scandalous and discreditable ? Otherwise, why should they rise to declare that they have had no connection at all with the matter ? They have declared that, if it could even be suspected that they were interested in these things, it would lower them in the eyes of their peers, and would be discreditable and scandalous to them. While they say that, at the same time, though there is the receipt signed by this gentleman himself, they say there is nothing proved which is scandalous or discreditable to him, but that they must have the whole question referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections to tell them whether it is discreditable or whether it is scandalous. They say that they require time to make up their minds on this subject. There is one point as far as I remember, and only one point in the whole of this correspondence which is denied by the hon. member for Lincoln, and on which there is any difference between him and some other gentlemen who have been mentioned in this connection. I think the charge was as clearly made as it could be, and as the Minister of Customs has already stated, that he was tampering with Ministers. He has stated that he was glad to exonerate these Ministers, and that he did not intend to make that statement and it was not correct. He made another statement that he brought two young gentlemen from Winnipeg—young Tupper and young Macdonald, I think he called them—that he had brought them here in order that they might use their influence with their fathers. These young gentlemen deny that statement, and it is upon record among other things—for I think we are fully seized of all the documents in this matter—that they deny this to be the case. In regard to that, I understand that the member for Lincoln says that was true and not false. But, admitting that to be true, and that the statements of these young gentlemen are untrue, what does that accomplish for the member for Lincoln? It would acquit that gentleman of telling a falsehood in that one instance, but the result would only be to convict him of having used corrupt influences in order to secure his end, to bring those gentlemen here to do what? Not to lay the case before the Government, but to induce their fathers to act promptly in this matter. Their fathers? Why could he not say at once the Ministers of the Crown? The evidence is there, and that is the only case, as far as I remember, that the hon. gentleman disputes; and, if he maintains his veracity in that case, he does it at the expense of showing that he was using corrupt means to accomplish what was not otherwise justifiable. In his letters he says these gentlemen were to come here to induce their fathers to act properly. The member for Lincoln states that the "properly" should be "promptly." If he did not write those letters, how did he know that the word was wrongly used? I do not wish to prolong this debate or to increase the feeling against the conduct of the hon. member. I have no personal hostility and no political hostility to him, but I think we have a duty to discharge. When letters like these were sent abroad for the people to read, naturally the people look to us to see if this Parliament will put down what is discreditable and scandalous, whether this Parliament pronounce upon those documents upon the testimony we have before us, and whether we, sitting in this House, consider that these transactions are discreditable, scandalous and corrupt, or not. If I thought there was anything which could be brought out, anything which would do away with and wipe out the statements in these letters, I would be willing that the matter should go to a committee; but I cannot see how any evidence can be produced to change the present appearance of the case. I am asked by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), after these facts have been recited upon the journals of the House, whether I consider the conduct of this hon. member to be discreditable, corrupt and scandalous; and I feel that I am bound to say that I do think so, that my mind is now made up on the subject, and, if the question is to be determined by the House, I will be compelled so to declare by my vote.

Mr. COLBY. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat is not very happy in his definition of what it is proposed to submit to the committee. He says that the proposition is to submit the question as to whether the charges made by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), if they are proved, are scandalous and disreputable. I do not think there is any question here, or that there can be any question in the committee, as to whether these charges, if they are fully substantiated, are scandalous and disreputable. I do not think that is the point at issue, and I do not see why the hon. gentleman should suppose it to be the point at issue. Has he heard any gentleman in this House, on one side or the other, attempt to justify or palliate the offences which are charged against the hon. member for Lincoln? That is not the question at all, and, therefore, I say the hon. gentleman was very unhappy in his definition of what was to be submitted to the committee. There is but one sentiment, as there could be only one sentiment, on the part of any hon. member on either side of the House in regard to this matter, and I was, therefore, surprised to hear the hon. gentleman say, that gentlemen on his side of the House had no fault if this matter were not properly decided by the House. It is no question of this or that side of the House. It is not a party question at all. It is a question which concerns the dignity and the honor of the whole House, and, irrespective of any party feeling at all, the judgment—whether rendered by the House or any committee of the House—will be rendered on the merits and without any partisanship modifying its judgment. I am sure that I speak the sentiments of this side of the House when I say that no feeling of partyism, that nothing which is unfair, that nothing which any accused man could say is unfair or improper or any one in the country could say was unfair or improper, should be allowed to interfere in this case. The hon. member for South Oxford was quite within his right in making this charge. It was his duty to do it, if he believed in the allegations contained in his indictment. And what is the proposition? The proposition is simply to submit this question to the consideration of the Committee on Privileges and Elections. An hon. member of this House, a gentleman of high authority in this House, a man who has given, perhaps, as much attention to this class of subjects as any member of this House, has just told us that if we should follow the whole line of precedents, it is our duty to refer this case to the committee. But it is not necessary to go that length in order to make out a case. It is not inconsistent with the precedents hitherto established to make this reference. Then, if there is no impropriety, if there is nothing inconsistent with the former practices of this House, I can see very good and sufficient reasons, to my mind, for referring the case to that committee. Does any hon. gentleman question the competency of that committee to take evidence, and consider this matter? Is not that committee composed of the picked men of the whole House? Does it not contain men of the largest parliamentary experience, of the most profound legal knowledge, of the highest weight in Parliament, and in the country—men specially familiar with this class of subjects? Can it be said that that committee has a political complexion different from that of this House? Can it be said that by transferring this case from the House to the committee, you are putting it into the hands of a partisan body? That committee reflects the political sentiments of this House, so that if there were a political bias in the committee, it would also operate in this House. The committee are as competent to deal with this case as the House are competent to deal with it. Indeed, they are more competent than the average members of the House, because they are selected for their peculiar fitness to deal with this class of questions. Then why this reluctance to refer it to the very highest and best tribunal that exists? Questions of facts are to come up. There is no question of law. I was surprised at a remark that fell from the leader of the Opposition on this matter. In speaking, not, I hope, as leader of the Opposition, but in his individual capacity, he said: Certainly if there was a violation of a statute, if there was a violation of a written law, I should say by all means refer it to the committee. I think I understood the hon. gentleman to say so; I understood him to draw that distinction, and I think his recorded speech will show it—that if there was an offence against the statute, he could see a propriety in referring it to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. But he says the alleged offence is one against an unwritten law, against a law even higher than would be a mere statutory law. But where is the difference? The consequences are the same, whether it be an offence against the statutory or against the unwritten law, the result is obviously the same. If he has offended either against the statutory law or against the unwritten law, as the hon. member has charged, the result is precisely the same; he must walk out of the House, he must be expelled. Now, what determines me in this matter is the plea of the accused member to be allowed to defend himself. I speak as we all ought to speak, not as members of the Government or of the ministerial side, not as members of the Opposition I speak as an independent member of this House, and I hope every man's vote will be recorded from that standpoint. This man who is charged says: I have letters and evidence of importance to place before the House, and in order that I may justify myself, I ask this House to appoint a committee for the purpose of considering the whole matter. This is his language:

“I simply ask the House for justice; I ask hon. members to give that opportunity of defending myself.”

That is a request, Mr. Speaker, that I believe we ought not refuse. It may be, as was suggested by a certain hon. member, the worse for the man who asked it. But that is his business. I do not know why he asks it, I am not in his confidence. He may be asking what he had better not ask for; because I know that if he goes before that committee this matter will be investigated in a thorough manner. It is sufficient for me to know that the man who is charged here with a most grave offence asks to be allowed to put in evidence in his defence. Can we refuse him that privilege? He is charged here with an offence which, if proved, can never be blotted out from the record of his political career, or from the records of his family, an offence from the consequence of which, if he is proved guilty, he can never recover. He says he wants to put before this committee evidence and letters which have not yet appeared. Now, I, as a member of this House, am not going to deny him that. I do not know what the result may be. It may be that he will be able to mitigate his offence; it may be that while he may not be able to exculpate himself, he may explain certain passages in his letters which seem now to be of a damnable character. I do not know that he can make the slightest defence, but I know he asks it, he claims that he has a right to it, he implores it, and I do not think we ought to withhold it. If he brings forward no evidence to mitigate the charge, the verdict of that committee will be then precisely what the verdict of this House would be if we were to decide now on the evidence before us. But if there is new evidence, then let us hear it, and it is better that we should hear it in committee. If there are witnesses to be examined and facts to be considered, it is evident that a jury of 215 men is too large to make that investigation. There is no question of law in this case; it is merely a question of fact. If a long hearing is to take place the time of the committee is less valuable than the time of the House, and it is better to let the committee make that investigation. There is no concealment, in the committee everything is open to the light of day, the press is there, the members on both sides are there, and the House will know all that the committee will know. Why this insistence that the case shall not go before that committee? Surely it cannot be that any man fears that if the case goes before the committee something will come out that will exculpate the member for Lincoln? I cannot understand why there is any objection to allow the accused member the benefit of making a defence before the committee. I cannot understand why hon. gentlemen insist that we should decide the case summarily in this House. Certainly if he had not asked it, I should not have thought of proposing it. Certainly with the evidence before the House, if he had said he was prepared to accept a verdict on the evidence given, there would have been no occasion for an enquiry; but it is because he asks it that it should be granted. There should not be two sides of the House on this question, and if I were a member politically opposed to this hon. gentleman, whose judgment in this case might be liable to be questioned, I would not want that hon. gentleman or any of his friends to be able to say: You voted to deny me a fair trial, you voted to suppress evidence which I told you I could lay before you, and which, if you had heard, would have modified your judgment. It is equally in the interest of members of all parties in this House and of members of all political opinions not to have a member of Parliament, who has been a member for many years, and who has enjoyed the confidence of an intelligent constituency for many long years, turned out of this House saying: I appealed to my colleagues for an opportunity of stating my case and putting in further proof, and I was denied. I certainly will not be one of those to deny him that request. Moreover, in granting that request we will not be flying in the face of any precedent, or acting contrary to the records of Parliament, but we will simply be adopting the ordinary course. And when a member asks, and insists and claims it as his right, and implores us to allow him to take that course and submit further proofs, I think we would be hard-hearted, and acting in a wrong manner if we refused. In my view we would be taking an erroneous step if we adopted that action, and we would be saying in effect: We do not want to hear you further, you have had your day, you are out of court, for you might have put in evidence before, and you failed to do so, as might be said by a captious lawyer. We do not wish to treat a fellow-member in such a technical manner, and with such illiberal consideration. He tells us, it may be true or not, that he has more evidence to put in, and he asks us to hear that evidence. He says: If you give me that opportunity, I can either exculpate myself, or greatly modify the feeling that now exists in regard to this matter. If we believe that he will not succeed, what harm is done? If we believe that he might exculpate himself or modify his position, we ought to help him. If by any possibility he can bring any evidence that will exculpate him and cleanse the honor of this House, the better it will be for the credit of all our public men, because there are depths and depths of turpitude, and the lighter this offence, if offence it be, the better it is for the country, the better it is for the credit of our public men, the better it is for the credit of this House. We should send this case to the committee. We should do so if we believe there is the slightest chance of the hon. gentleman explaining or extenuating his action, and he tells us he can do it; and, having adopted that course, we shall then be in a position to say: You have had a double opportunity of stating your case before this House and before a committee, and now your mouth is closed, and you cannot reflect on our conduct in pronouncing the verdict which we find ourselves compelled to pronounce on the evidence before us.

Mr. BLAKE. With much that the hon. President of the Council has said, I quite agree. I agree with him as to the spirit in which this House should approach the consideration of this question. I agree with him that least of all questions which can be brought before this House, ought this one to assume in any sense a party complexion. I suppose all must have been struck by the observation made by the hon. member for Lincoln, when he gave his explanation at the opening of this debate, that expression of regret which, he said, he entertained at his unfortunate position, in that after having made his speech he was to leave the House and was disabled from participating in the debate which would follow. If that debate were to take the tone which the hon. member for Lincoln obviously conceived, if it were to proceed on the lines he obviously indicated, the regret of the hon. gentleman would have been justified, and the rule to which he gave deference by his retirement would have been proved to be an unreasonable rule. But, Sir, the regret was unfounded and the rule is an entirely reasonable rule; because that vacant chair speaks more strongly than the most eloquent language we could hear in favor of the member who is absent from it. It speaks in solemn tones, and appeals to us in terms more forcible than any tongue could use as to the line which we should take, the tone we should adopt, the spirit which should animate us in disposing of this case. Why is that chair vacant? It is vacant because our colleague is, according to the principles of reason, disabled and disqualified from being the judge in his own cause. But, then, it is a cause in which we are his judges; and it is, therefore, in a judicial capacity, strictly in a judicial capacity, that we have to deal with the matter, thus I agree wholly with the observations of the hon. the President of the Council, and also in the phrase dropped by the Minister of Justice at an earlier stage of the debate, that we are acting here as judges of the cause. Sir, under these circumstances we have no warrant, whatever may be the latitude, the regrettable latitude, which we permit to ourselves under other circumstances, when we are present face to face and are able, if attacked, to reply to the attack—we have no warrant here and now, to mingle invective with reason, to heighten the complexion of the transaction by any rhetorical devices, to blink the facts, to take any other course than, in a spirit of candor, fair play and impartiality, to endeavor to ascertain the right and the truth. I agree with the observation of the hon. the President of the Council that the honor of the whole House is concerned in the matter. It is concerned in all such matters. The honor of the House is in a sense in the hands of every member of the House. No course of conduct discreditable in the general sense of the community can be pursued by any single member without, to some extent, at all events, lowering the character of the assembly of which he forms a part, and in this view it is our common interest, as members of Parliament, that the transaction, whatever it may be, should not be depicted darker than its true color, and that every reasonable protection should be accorded to the man who is accused. On the other hand, Sir, it is even more clearly the duty of the House to watch jealously that honor of which it is the guardian, and to take care that it does not become, by any unworthy connivance in a discreditable transaction, an accomplice after the fact, and so degrade itself to some extent to the level of those who may be concerned in such transactions. The situation is, under these circumstances, painful. I agree with the hon. gentleman in the view that it ought not to be made in any sense a party question for those reasons which I have given, and for other reasons too; for reasons which, taking a somewhat lower ground, are particularly applicable to those who may happen for the time to be on the side of the minority, because if there be any section of the House that has a deeper interest than another in the observance of these principles, it is those who happen to be in the minority. Their only chance for the affirmation of charges justly made against a member of the majority, consists in the observance of the principle of justice. Their only chance for the avoidance of a condemnation of a charge unjustly made against a member of the minority, consists in the adherence to this principle of justice; and to introduce a political complexion into matters of this kind, would at one blow render it impossible for a minority to obtain justice against an adversary, and render it impossible for a minority to obtain justice for themselves. Therefore, those who happen to sit on the side of the House on which I sit are especially charged with the duty of holding up that standard of justice to which the hon. gentleman has appealed. Then, Sir, it is on those principles of justice that we ought to act, and I ask myself, applying myself to this case as it is now presented, whether the application of the principle of justice renders premature, at this moment, a final judgment on the main motion. The member for Lincoln, as the hon. President of the Council has said, has asked for a committee. I cannot say that in my judgment the best, the convenient, the fittest course to deal with this case, is to refer it to a committee. My own opinion is that the best, the proper and the convenient course is that it should be disposed of here, for reasons that I will state to you in a moment. When we shall come to dispose of it, either here or elsewhere, I hold myself free, nay, I hold myself bound—as I suppose every hon. member will—upon such evidence and arguments as shall at that time be before us to examine carefully into every recital of the motion that is presented to us, and to ascertain whether those recitals are fair and full; to examine whether the résumé is accurate and true; and to examine whether the conclusion which is drawn from those recitals and from that résumé is just and fitting; and either to negative, or to amend, or to affirm, as the result of that examination indicates is right. But that, Sir, is not the immediate question. The immediate question is, not what judgment should be pronounced upon the main motion, but whether we should refer the case to a committee, and I ask myself: why we should refer, and what we should refer? I believe that each case of this description should be dealt with according to its circumstances, and that if there be a question complicated and difficult, involving the examination of witnesses, or a subject complicated and difficult, involving a long search into precedents, it is fitting and convenient that the sifting of evidence by the examination of witnesses, or the long search into a series of precedents, not heretofore collected, should be accomplished by the Select Standing Committee that we erect for such purposes. But, I believe that in every case we are called on to consider, whether the case in hand is one that calls for the interposition of that machinery, and the intervention of that committee. Cases have been referred to in the past. It has been said by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard) that there was a rule for and a right to a reference to a committee. I do not know where the hon. gentleman found the statement that there is such a rule, or that there is such a right. I dispute the existence of the rule and of the right. I know that leading gentlemen on his side of the House, have from time to time, in days that are past, proposed a much more summary disposition—the most summary disposition possible—of matters brought before the House, and, according to my recollection of the objections taken to that summary disposition when proposed, they were based upon the special considerations to which I have referred. Particular reference has been made to the motion with regard to one of your predecessors, Mr. Speaker, in the chair. In what form was that motion made, and supported by the whole body of the Conservative party in Parliament? It was made, Sir, directly against the Speaker of this House, with that Speaker in the chair, upon a motion to go into Committee of Supply, as an amendment, in which form it was not amendable, in which an instant decision was instantly sought, and when the party whose conduct was impugned, and whose seat—if not in absolute terms, yet by a necessary implication was fatally assailed—was prevented from saying one word in his own defence. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard) indicated that there was some right on the part of the Speaker of the House to ask the indulgence of the House to leave the chair, in order that he might make a statement on the floor. I am not familiar with the precedents upon which the hon. gentleman justified that statement, but I say that if there be such, and I am quite ignorant of them, they are precedents which ought not to have been invoked. My own opinion of the conduct of those members of the House who in that case made that proposal was that, altogether regardless of another consideration to which I shall briefly refer, they took, not merely an unreasonable, but I will say a hard, a rigorous, and an offensive course, in making the motion in the form in which it was made. My opinion was, that a due regard for the principle of justice would have caused the motion to be made in such a form as that those who moved it would have secured to the man whose character and whose seat was assailed, an opportunity of defending himself. Sitting as he did in the Speaker's chair, they ought to have known that the only mode by which that result could be obtained, would be by a motion to refer the matter to a committee, before which he could appear. Beyond all that, there were important questions to be disposed of. There were questions to be disposed of, questions of fact, and also questions of law, based on former precedents, which appeared to justify the view that the seat was not vacated, and, therefore, there was a reason in the search for precedents and in the taking of evidence for a reference of that case. There were many meetings of the Committee on Privileges and Elections. As happened in other controversies which occurred when the Liberals were in a majority in this House, the effort was to do that justice which the hon. the President of the Council appealed to us to-night to endeavor to attain. The case of the Speaker was a case in which a prominent member of the majority was attacked. There was also a case in which a member of the minority was attacked. And in each of these cases I rejoice to think, that the majority entered into the investigation, sought for the truth, ascertained the truth, and framed a unanimous report, upon which the House afterwards acted. But some hon. gentlemen have said that there was a trick played in connection with the presentation of the report. Sir, no trick was played. The Committee on Privileges and Elections met, they agreed upon the report, and it was unanimously agreed by that committee, in the presence and with the assent of the hon. First Minister, who was a member of the committee and the leader of the Opposition, that the Chairman should be requested to defer the presentation of the report to the latest hour compatible with its presentation during the Session. It was thought to be a convenient course, a proper and manly course, not to create the disturbance and difficulty that would result from the vacation of the Speaker's seat a few days before the close of the Session. The suggestion was made on these grounds, I believe by myself, it was unanimously agreed to, and it was so done. The result was that the report was not presented until the last day of the Session, it being understood that it would be, as it was, acted upon immediately after the close of the Session; and I think it was a course worthy of the hon. First Minister in his position, worthy of the members of the Opposition and conformable to the dignity and the amenities of the House; and a course which a faithful though sometimes recalcitrant follower of the hon. First Minister ought not now to condemn him for having assented to. Now, I wish to know what we should refer, and why we should refer, and in order to decide this, we must brush aside some questions which in the course of this debate have been raised as being more or less in issue. I say that no case is made or pretended of breach of the Independence of Parliament Act; and that if there were, the penalties which are provided by that Act have been exhausted and apply no longer. Now, I do not state this because I conceive there is the slightest difference in principle, upon the question of a reference to the committee, whether the point arises upon the statute or whether it arises upon the unwritten law, any more than my hon. friend beside me (Mr. Laurier) did or could have supposed such a possibility. My hon. friend only pointed out that there might be a question as to what the effect of a statute was. The question is whether there is fit matter to be referred to a committee; and, whether that matter arises by virtue of alleged breach of a statute, or by virtue of an alleged breach of a rule, or by virtue of an alleged violation of those obligations, or those unwritten laws which guard the honor of Parliament, the same principle applies to all. But I say there is here no charge that the Independence of Parliament Act has been broken. Again, there is no case here made of a breach of any laws regulating the disposition of timber limits. Again, and this is not an unimportant point, in regard to some of the observations made by the hon. member for Lincoln, there is no case made here, and no charge of any fraud having been committed upon Mr. Sands, the purchaser of these limits, and, therefore, that is not a matter suggested as enquirable into here. Sands may have been defrauded, and he may not; he may have been defrauded by the hon. member for Lincoln, or by Mr. Adams, or by both, or by neither of them; it is a matter with which we have nothing to do on the issues before us. And, lastly, and most important for our consideration, there is no case whatever made of wrong of any kind, save whatever wrong is alleged to be apparent in the hon. member's own letters printed in the Votes, and in his own statements made in this House. Whatever is alleged against him, and whatever proof is suggested as sustaining the allegations, are based upon his own written and oral statements both before us. There is the whole of it. Now, to the benefit of these limitations the hon. member for Lincoln is fully entitled; but by these limitations and their consequences the hon. member is also bound. Now, as well as I can gather, the hon. member in his explanation has alleged that the recitals of the extracts from these letters in the motion of the hon. member for South Oxford are unfair and misleading. Though he did not point out the details in respect of which he made that allegation, still he made it in the general. He has also alleged that there are other papers which he can produce; though so far as I am able to judge, these relate wholly or mostly to the irrelevant question of Sands. But these other papers, whatever their nature or effect, he has not further particularised, nor has he produced them. Now, no man can deny that the hon. member for Lincoln has had the amplest opportunity of presenting his defence, both in proof and in argument. He has on two occasions at least produced such materials as he thought proper; he has on two or three occasions made statements here; and I am not saying that it might be held to be unjust to assume that no further valid evidence or defence was available, or even to decide that no further opportunity should be given. But though I contest the strict justice of that view, for my own part I do not choose to act on it. I agree, once again, in much that the hon. President of the Council has said in that regard. I think it extremely important, in the interest of justice and fair play, in the interest of this House at large, that the judgment which is finally to be awarded in this matter, whatever it may be, should be a judgment which cannot be impugned upon any pretence or suggestion that there was any fair opportunity refused to the hon. member to make a complete defence, or even to offer such mitigating and exculpatory evidence as the hon. President of the Council referred to. The ground which I take is this: I think that the hon. member having, though quite mistakenly in my view, regretfully in my view, when he made his statement in this House, reserved in part his defence, ought to have even now the opportunity of completing that statement and defence. I think the House is entitled and ought to say to him this: "While we do not see, upon the material now before us, including your own statements, any ground for referring the case to a committee, we are prepared to receive your further statement, your further argument, your further papers, if any you have, and to deal with this case as may then seem just." I think, then, that the hon. member ought to have the opportunity of saying, in his place here, what more he chooses, and of laying on the Table here what further papers he deems proper. And, I think that the adoption of this course would enable us to dispose in a proper way of the amendment now in your hands, and at the same time to do the fullest justice to the hon. member for Lincoln. It is the course which I venture to submit for the consideration of the House. The hon. the President of the Council has not himself been able to point out what there can be to refer to the committee. He was not called upon to do so. He is no doubt not possessed of such information as the hon. member for Lincoln may be able to submit for our judgment.

Mr. COLBY. I stated that I really did not know.

Mr. BLAKE. I say so. I have not the least doubt of that. None of us are aware of it. We gather its character from the statement of the hon. member himself, and his statement was that there were other papers which he could produce which would give, as he said, a different complexion to those published. I am not going to weigh or analyse the papers published, with the view of saying whether that allegation is impossible or not of execution. I desire that the hon. member for Lincoln should have the opportunity of laying these papers on the Table, with all the comments and explanations he can give upon them. I desire, under the circumstances, that as he chose in part to reserve his defence—to give us some, but not as he says, all—he should not be placed in a worse position now than that if he had on that occasion given us all; but I do not perceive in that condition of affairs a cause for a reference to a committee. I perceive rather a reason for taking such a course as shall give the hon. gentleman the opportunity of presenting the remainder of his case on the floor of Parliament, and as shall thus leave us to dispose of this matter, with his case complete, according as the dignity and honor of this House and liberal justice to the hon. member for Lincoln require. The House will observe that I have studiously avoided expressing or implying one single opinion with reference to the merits of the transaction. It is impossible, of course, to avoid forming in one's own mind impressions upon papers such as we have before us, but I believe it to be our duty to hold our minds open up to the latest possible moment. I believe it to be our duty to enquire whether there be, as the hon. the President of the Council suggested, any explanation, any door of escape, anything which may alter the complexion which, to some minds, these letters and papers bear, and in that view, keeping, as well as I might, an open mind, I have scrupulously abstained from making any argument or expressing any opinion here as to the conclusions which are to be drawn from the papers in our hands. I repeat, and I close by the suggestion, that we ought to make arrangements for this case being completed in the manner in which it was begun, by the hon. member on the floor, and that we should then proceed to give our judgment in the matter.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No one can have listened to the address which has just been made without congratulating the House on the adjournment of this debate. For the sake of the dignity of this House as well as the justice of its proceedings, it is satisfactory to know that the discussion has entered a calmer channel than that in which it ran on the night when the hon. member for South Oxford presented his resolution. For having adjourned the debate in order to afford hon. members an opportunity to calmly and fully consider this question, the House is amply rewarded by the consideration of this matter being entirely removed, as it has been by the speech we have just listened to, from political bias and party passion. I am bound to admit that I differ from the hon. gentleman in the conclusion he finally stated, but in almost every word he uttered to this House, as regards precedents and as regards the statement of the particular case before us, I agree to the fullest extent. I do not hesitate to say that if we were bound in this matter by precedents, we would have found that the course which this investigation has taken, from the first to the last, has been a departure from the rules laid down in former years. The custom has been, whether the charge has been preferred against an hon. member by another hon. member in his seat or by a committee of the House or by one of the tribunals of his country, that the member has been heard from his place in the House, and that the judgment of the House has proceeded on the statement so made by the member accused. Undoubtedly the course of procedure has been in numerous cases in the Imperial Parliament, that if the member accused has made no defence, he has been forthwith expelled. In other cases, not so numerous, when issues of fact were raised by the member accused or when he challenged the authority of Parliament to deal with his case, the result has been a reference to a committee. But we cannot fail to remember, whenever a question of this kind comes up affecting the seat or the character of a member of this House, that the course of precedents in former years has run in channels which we are not disposed to follow too strictly in the present day. We cannot forget that many precedents which can be cited from the annals of Parliamentary procedure are precedents in which the power of Parliament was exercised far beyond the right of Parliament, and that in numerous cases men were deprived of their seats in the British House of Commons, constituencies were deprived of their members, sometimes disfranchised and sometimes ordered to be represented by men whom they had not elected to Parliament, by virtue of the high authority Parliament chose to exercise, under the strained notion of privilege which prevailed in the House of Commons two centuries ago. We have reached an age and live in a country when it is not deemed necessary that we should be bound by these arbitrary precedents. We enjoy constitutional freedom—we enjoy constitutional government in a wider sense than the British people did, when these precedents were established two hundred years ago; and in a free Parliament, with wider notions of the rights of the people who sent us here, to say nothing of the wider and more liberal notions of the rights of the men who sit here, I humbly submit it is the duty of this House to depart, if necessary even, from precedents—not for the purpose of violating a right, not for the purpose of denying justice to any one, but for the purpose of taking greater caution in our decision and seeing that the last chance be given to the accused. We have had a great deal of discussion to-night, not only from the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey), but from the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) with reference to the precedent in the celebrated Anglin case, and both these gentlemen, in taunting the Conservative party with its vote on that occasion, forgot that the precedent which binds this House to-day is not the vote either party gave on that occasion, right or wrong, but the precedent which was established by the majority of the House; and if the House of those days, led by the hon. member whose voice has just been heard and the hon. gentleman who sits next to him, was in favor of a full investigation by a committee, if the early course of precedent in the cases in which the accused made no defence was not followed in that instance, it matters not who voted against that action, the precedent is established that the House should give a committee, and that is the precedent which ought to prevail, if precedents are to prevail at all. I do not hesitate to say that the case under discussion is one in which the honor of Parliament is most deeply involved. I do not agree with the contention which has been made that the authenticity of the letters has not been established. I regard the authenticity of those letters as having been substantially established; I regard this correspondence as a most shocking correspondence, and one which appeals to the House as strongly as any case could appeal to its consideration for justice, as strongly as it can appeal to the mercy of this House. But, while I think that correspondence is without a parallel in the history of any Parliament, I think further that we should not be swayed from the judicial consideration which has been suggested by the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), and, while that correspondence is of a very shocking character, is of such a character that the member who wrote those letters is liable to the severest censure of the House; still it behooves us to proceed with great calmness in regard to a matter of such importance. An English statesman has said, very properly, that the purity of Parliament would be best preserved by the most scrupulous regard being shown to the rules of justice, and to the deliberation with which the ends of justice should be pursued. I must admit that the member for Lincoln, having had two or three occasions to state his defence, according to the practice of Parliament, has failed to state a defence in this House. I say this with a view to the deliberations that may take place hereafter, and I say that, in the statements he has made, he has failed to exonerate himself, and failed to relieve himself of the censure which the resolution of the hon. member for South Oxford makes him subject to. Unless he can make a better defence than that which he has made up to the present moment, that is my view. I listened with the greatest attention to the statement of the hon. member for Lincoln, and I thought he was unwise not to make his full defence here. I find that the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) agrees with me in that matter, but I heard the member for Lincoln state that, having taken advice on the subject, he reserved his defence and begged for a committee to be granted to him in order to give him the opportunity of making that defence. According to the precedents in the English Parliament, and in this Parliament for twenty years past, he is not entitled to that committee as a matter of right. But, as a matter of caution and of prudence, I think we must arrive at the conclusion, in regard to such a solemn question, a question which is so grave that, as stated by the hon. member for West Durham, it will be the end of the political life of any man against whom such a censure is levelled, a charge so grave that it is almost equivalent as another member has said, to a sentence of death against the man who is charged, that we should give him the last opportunity, and then we shall know that we have given him the last chance which he can desire, to be heard. We shall not only have given him the opportunity to be heard from his place, according to precedent, but we shall have given him the second opportunity to be heard from his place, and to add to the record on our table, and, finally, before passing such a censure as would exclude him from public life and would degrade his name and character possibly in the eyes of future generations, but we shall have given him the additional opportunity of a hearing before a committee. It is true that we have given him two trials, and now he asks for the third. When the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) asked what we are going to refer to the committee, he himself gave the best answer. The hon. member agrees with me that the member for Lincoln, having failed to make his defence in the House, having, under advice, kept his defence for the committee, and has still a last word to be heard before sentence is given. There is still something to be heard from the member for Lincoln, as he states. I say, then, let us refer this to the committee, with the right and the power to hear that last word which the member for Lincoln has to speak. It may be ineffectual. If so, we shall have given him the last opportunity which any man can ask, and we can come to the free exercise of our duties in this matter. It may be that the conduct of the hon. member may be relieved or palliated, at any rate to some extent. I need not speculate upon that, because, when we are endeavoring to see whether a man should have another trial or not, it is vain to enquire whether he can make a good defence or not. That is a question of the accused—never for the accuser or for the judges. Therefore, when the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) asks what the reference to the committee would be for, I think he has effectually answered his own question, by saying that we shall have the evidence brought forward by the member for Lincoln, which, if necessary, will be given under the solemnity of an oath. I desire to say a word as to a feeling which may naturally affect some members of this House in regard to the policy of the Government. I did feel that there was a sentiment abroad in the House the other night that, perhaps, the Government was inclined to what the hon. member for West Durham calls an "unworthy connivance." Such a desire never entered the mind of any member of the Government. If a reference to the Committee on Privileges and Elections is now granted, I pledge myself, and I pledge my colleagues, that every influence the Government can bring to bear will be brought to bear in order to have this matter speedily brought to an issue, so that the result may be recorded before the prorogation of this Session. In that case, I may ask what is the reason for more haste, what is the reason for any informal hearing of the member for Lincoln or for the carrying of the motion of the hon. member for South Oxford to-night? Surely we are not in such a hurry to vindicate our virtue that a matter of a week or two stands between us and the giving of the most liberal trial which a man can possibly ask. I will make this further statement, to the member for Lincoln, and those who feel interested in his defence, whether inside this House or out of it, if they receive the concession of a committee, they must be prepared forthwith to enter upon the investigation with the knowledge that it must be terminated speedily in order to give the committee time to report before the close of this Session, and to allow the House ample time for consideration. And I make the further statement, that on the deliberations of that committee the Government will ask the House to come to a consideration of the whole case, as the member for West Durham came to the consideration of it tonight, free from political bias, and that every man may record his decision upon this case as one sitting on a jury under the solemn obligation of an oath. Under these circumstances, and in view of the observations which have been made to this House by the hon. member for West Durham, I feel that we are not unduly violating precedents, and that we are conserving the dignity of Parliament, and at the same time guarding against any possibility of rashness, by adopting the resolution of the hon. member for Frontenac, and allowing the committee to hear the defence of the member for Lincoln, although it might have been better that he should have made it to the House at an earlier period.

Mr. LAURIER. With the permission of the House I desire to make one remark. I stated my views at an earlier stage of the debate this evening, and while I have not changed my mind in regard to this matter, I desire to say, that after the strong declarations which have been made by the Minister of Justice, I am somewhat inclined to modify the conclusion at which I had arrived; and I will on this occasion, as an act of grace suggested by the Minister of Justice, say that perhaps it is better, though my mind is made up as far as I am concerned, that every opportunity should be given to the member for Lincoln of presenting the defence which he desires to make. Under these circumstances I would ask my hon. friends around me to agree to the motion.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to repeat the appeal which I made to the Premier when I spoke upon this question, that he should see, as having charge of the business of the House, that every opportunity should be given in order that this matter may be fully investigated.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think it is necessary for me to say that, after the statement made on behalf of the Government by the Minister of Justice. The Government, so far as they can, will take every step in their power to expedite the proceedings of the committee, and will allow no adjournments that will not be assented to by the minority of the committee; and will press the matter in such a way as will ensure a report early in the remainder of the Session, so as to give this House every opportunity to consider the report, and either to accept it or reject it.

Amendment agreed to, and motion, as amended, agreed to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.05 a.m. (Tuesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 18th March, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 124) respecting the H. H. Vivian Company (Limited).—(Mr. Dawson.)

EMPLOYMENT OF A SHORTHAND WRITER.

Mr. GIROUARD moved that leave be granted to the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections to employ a shorthand writer, to take down such evidence as the committee deem necessary.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before the Orders of the Day are called, as I do not see the Minister of Finance in his place, perhaps the Prime Minister, or some other member of the Government, can give the desired information. Last week I enquired of the Finance Minister when he would introduce the Banking Bill, and he informed us that he expected to lay it on the Table to-day. Is it about to be laid on the Table, may I enquire?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Finance Minister would have introduced the Bill to-day, but, upon consulting the authorities, it was found to be a matter of doubt, whether it ought not to be introduced by resolution, as the last Bill was introduced. The Minister of Finance has given notice of a general resolution for to-morrow, which will be moved, and the Bill brought in immediately after.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I also enquired of the hon. gentleman whether he was likely to produce the Budget this week, and he replied that it was not impossible that he might introduce it on Friday. I presume that he has by this time ascertained whether it is possible or impossible, and probably he has acquainted the First Minister.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think I will have to leave that answer for the Finance Minister when he comes in.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would request that the First Minister should inform me before the House rises to-night.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. He will remember that a week's notice was promised, but that sort of notice is very indefinite.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is so.

THE COPYRIGHT ACT.

Mr. CARLING moved that the amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 19) to amend the Copyright Act, be read the second time and concurred in.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The amendment makes no change except a verbal one. The section of the original Bill provided that criminal courts should have jurisdiction to deal with matters relating to the Copyright Act, on information of the Attorney General of Canada. The Senate has simply provided that the Exchequer Court shall be a competent court. The object was to make it clear that it was merely a court of concurrent jurisdiction.

Motion agreed to.

THE GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

Mr. DEWDNEY moved that Bill (No. 116) respecting the Department of the Geological Survey, be read the second time. He said: Hon. gentlemen will remember that, heretofore, the Geological Survey has been a branch of the Department of the Interior. The working of the branch was found to be rather inconvenient in that connection, and it is proposed to make a Department by itself, with a deputy head. Another provision is to increase the educational standard of the officers of the Department, whereby technical officers can be appointed under the Civil Service Act, which will enable any gentleman of ability and experience to be appointed to either class in the Department, at a salary fixed for that class. It will not in anyway interfere with the working of the Department so far as expense is concerned. There is another clause, which prevents officers of the Department from reporting on the private properties of individuals. Those are the principal objects of the Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

ADULTERATION ACT.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved that the order for the further consideration of the Bill (No. 9) further to amend the Adulteration Act, chapter 107 of the Revised Statutes, be discharged, and the Bill be referred back to the Committee of the Whole for further consideration. He said: It was understood that this Bill should be referred back to the Committee for further consideration, as it was thought desirable to further amend it. I propose to amend it in Committee, by striking out of section 9 the following words: "but the evidence of such person shall be admitted in his own behalf only when corroborated by the evidence of the analyst or inspector, or some other disinterested person." It is proposed to leave it to the court to say what weight should be attached to the evidence given. It is inaccurate to say that the evidence shall be admissible only if corroborated, because it must be admitted before it can be corroborated. Moreover, difficulties will arise as to the nature of the details for which corroboration will be necessary. It might be sufficient that the evidence should be corroborated on some point quite immaterial in a scientific sense, such as the date of inspection.

Motion agreed to; Bill re-considered in Committee, reported and read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY—APPOINTMENT OF QUEEN'S COUNSEL.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. AMYOT. A question of importance now agitates the public, especially the legal portion of it, and is of a nature to cause trouble. There seems to be a conflict of jurisdiction in regard to the appointment of Queen's Counsel, between the Federal and Local Governments. The object of my motion is to elucidate that prerogative, which also includes other questions vital to the Confederation at large. It is an important one, not only as far as the etiquette in the courts is concerned, but it may involve serious consequences. The criminal law provides that the Crown Prosecutor shall have the right to reply, in addressing the jury, when he is a Crown Counsel. The wrong application of this rule may occasion new trials, writs of error, cause heavy expenses, undue delays in the administration of justice. We all know what were the Queen's Counsel in England. "Custom," says Blackstone (Vol. III, page 354) "has, of late years, prevailed of granting letters patent of precedence to such barristers as the Crown thinks proper to honor with that mark of distinction; whereby they are entitled to such rank and preaudience as are assigned in their respective patents." These counsel, in England, are appointed by the executive power. It is one of the prerogatives of the Crown. The same practice obtained here, and, up to Confederation, those appointments could not give rise to any difficulty. Even after the Confederation, no difficulty arose until the Supreme Court delivered its judgment, in 1874, in the case of Lenoir vs. Ritchie. Up to that time, nobody denied the right of the Local Legislatures to appoint Queen's Counsel for their courts. The Supreme Court of Canada, in the case cited, decided that the Local Legislatures had no such power. Their judgment rests on the following syllogism: First, the appointment of a Queen's Counsel is a royal prerogative, and can only be made in the Queen's name; Second, the Queen does not form part of the Local Legislatures, but only of the Federal Parliament; Third, hence to the Ottawa Government alone belongs the appointment of the Queen's Counsel. No appeal to Her Majesty's Privy Council was taken from that decision, which has perplexed the mind of the legal community ever since, and embarrassed the divers Governments of the Dominion. That judgment was concurred in by only three of the honorable judges of the Supreme Court; the Chief Justice was not present; one of the sitting judges pronounced that the Provinces had the right to appoint Queen's Counsel, and another would not give any opinion, because the question did not arise. The only question in dispute was whether an appointment of Queen's Counsel made by a statute of Nova Scotia in 1876, had a retroactive effect, and gave to the new title-holders precedence over the counsel appointed by the Ottawa Ministry since 1867. That was the only point discussed at the argument by Mr. Haliburton, representing the Government of Nova Scotia, and he declared that the constitutional question had not been raised before the inferior court, that he did not expect it would be raised, that he did not intend to discuss it, and that he was not prepared to do so. None of the Provinces had received notice, or knew that such an important question would be raised, and none was represented. This question was not the one dependent upon the issue, although this ex parte judgment, on a collateral issue not in point, given by a divided tribunal, without hearing the interested parties, has sufficed to reverse all precedents; to annul, virtually, all the local statutes passed; to supersede all the deliberate opinions, formally expressed, by the law officers of England, as well as by those of the Dominion. I might here quote the correspondence exchanged between the right honorable leader of this House and Lord Kimberley. After having quoted section 92, paragraph 14, of the British North America Act, omitting therefrom the word "exclusively," he says:

"Under this power, the undersigned is of opinion that the Legislature of a Province, being charged with the administration of justice and the organisation of the courts, may, by statute, provide for the general conduct of business before those courts; and may make such provision with respect to the bar, the management of criminal prosecutions by counsel, the selection of those counsel, and the right of precedence as it sees fit. Such enactment must, however, in the opinion of the undersigned, be subject to the exercise of the royal prerogative, which is paramount, and in no way diminished by the terms of the Act of Confederation."

Lord Kimberley answered, on the 1st February, 1872, very politely confirming or accepting the views taken and submitted to him by the right hon. the Premier :

"I am advised, he says, that the Governor General has now power, as Her Majesty's representative, to appoint Queen's Counsel; but that a Lieutenant Governor, appointed since the Union came into effect, has no such power of appointment. I am further advised that the Legislature of a Province can confer by statute on its Lieutenant Governor the power of appointing Queen's Counsel; and with respect to precedence or pre-eminence in the courts of the Province, the Legislature of the Province has power to decide as between Queen's Counsel appointed by the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governor, as above explained."

I must protest against those ex parte cases submitted to the Home Government. In all such instances, the interested parties, the Provinces, should be invited to join and submit their own views in a joint case. I will not discuss the question as to whether a statute is necessary or not, to authorise the exercise of the royal prerogative in appointing the Queen's Counsel. Before the Union, even before Confederation, I know of no Quebec statute providing for those appointments, which, however, were freely made by the representative of the Crown, advised by his counsel, as exercising a royal prerogative. The authorities in Canada appointed them by virtue of the public law of England, which became for us the common public law of the land by the cession of this country to England. The more important point which I want to elucidate is this one: Does the Queen form part of the Local Governments? If she does not, the appointments of magistrates, coroners, justices of the peace, sheriffs, gaolers, constables, and hundreds of others are null, because every one of these appointments is equally of royal prerogative, the Queen being the source, the fountain of all honors and powers. More than that, all our local statutes would be void, because they are all enacted by "Her Majesty, with the advice, &c." In the beginning of the Confederation, the dual mandate existed. I see here hon. members who were present when the first of those statutes was enacted for the Province of Quebec, it might even have been at their suggestion that the first statutes were so phrased. None of those statutes have ever been disallowed for such phraseology. Have all the public and leading men of Canada, all the judges, all the Bar of the Dominion been so long in error on such a point? Some of our statutes have been discussed before the Privy Council. Never has it occurred to the mind of any one that they were wrongly enacted. But let us examine the law more closely. By the 31st Geo. III (1791), chapter 31, section 2, it is provided :

"That there shall be within each Province of Upper and Lower Canada a Legislative Council and an Assembly to make laws, &c., and that such laws will be assented to by His Majesty or in His Majesty's name, by such person as His Majesty shall, from time to time, appoint to be the Governor or Lieutenant Governor of such Province."

By section 30, the Governor or Lieutenant Governor is "Ordered to assent to the Bills in His Majesty's name." The same Act provides for the establishment of the courts by the Canadian Legislature. The 3rd and 4th Vic. (1840), chapter 35, section 3, again prescribes :

"That the laws of the United Canadas shall be assented to in Her Majesty's name by the Governor. Section 40 provides that the Lieutenant Governor may receive the same powers as the Governor General."

The same Act declares that all the existing laws shall remain in force, specially as to the administration of affairs by the Executive Council. It gives power to create courts, &c. Section 61 is very explicit. It reads as follows :—

"And be it enacted, that in this Act, unless otherwise expressed therein, the words 'Act of the Legislature of the Province of Canada' are to be understood to mean 'Act of Her Majesty, her heirs or successors, enacted by Her Majesty, or by the Governor on behalf of Her Majesty, with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council and Assembly of the Province of Canada'; and the words 'Governor of the Province of Canada' are to be understood as comprehending the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or person authorised to execute the office or the functions of Governor of the said Province."

Such was the law when the Confederation Act was passed. Not only was the Governor or Lieutenant Governor allowed, but he was bound to act in the name of the English Sovereign. Nothing has been changed by the British North America Act in that respect. Section 129 says :

"Except as otherwise provided by this Act, all laws in force in Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick at the union, and all courts of civil and criminal jurisdiction, and all legal commissions, powers and authorities, and all affairs, judicial, administrative and ministerial, existing therein at the union, shall continue in Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, respectively, as if the union had not been made."

So the duty of the Governors or Lieutenant Governors, the obligation by them to assent to the Bills, to act in the name of the Queen, remained in force, for such was then the law of the land. Now, let us see for the executive or administrative power. Section 69 :

"All powers, authorities and functions which, under any Act of the Parliament of Great Britain, or of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or of the Legislature of Upper Canada, Lower Canada, or Canada, were, or are, before or at the union vested in or exercisable by the respective Governors or Lieutenant Governors of those Provinces, with the advice or with the advice and consent of the respective Executive Councils thereof, or by those Governors or Lieutenant Governors individually, shall, as far as the same are capable of being exercised after the union in relation to the Government of Ontario and Quebec, respectively, be vested in and shall or may be exercised by the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario and Quebec, respectively, with the advice or with the advice and consent of, or in conjunction with the respective Executive Councils or any members thereof, or by the Lieutenant Governor individually, as the case requires." * * *

Section 88 applies virtually the same principles to Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. Section 12 applies the same rule to the Governor General. So it is clear, obvious, undeniable that the right and obligation of the Governor and Lieutenant Governors to act in the name of the Sovereign remained, by the British North America Act, the same as they were before. Let us now see more closely the mechanism of government introduced by the Confederation Act. Each Province had, at the dawn of Confederation, its rights of self-government confirmed by the British Parliament. Each Province kept some parts of those rights, and consented to some other parts being delegated and transferred to a general Parliament and an executive responsible to the people of the new Dominion. A Parliament and Executive for the whole Dominion were created; the two Canadas were separated de novo, forming each a separate Province, and each Province of the Dominion was provided with a Parliament and Executive of its own. So as to avoid confusion, different names were given to each. By section 17, the legislative body for the Dominion is called the Parliament, and it consists of the Queen, the Senate and the House of Commons. This differs from the appellation of the Government of the United Kingdom, wherein the corresponding branches of the Parliament are called: "The Queen's Most Excellent Majesty, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal and the Commons." For the Executive body the words chosen (sec. 11) were "Queen's Privy Council for Canada." Section 9 provides that the executive government and authority of and over Canada shall continue to be vested in the Queen, but section 10 provides that the chief of the Executive shall administer "in the name of the Queen." De facto it is the Governor or his representative who administers. We substitute the word "Queen." It is a mere fiction of the law. The Queen never signed any of our laws, our proclamations, our official documents. Any other word than "Queen" might have been chosen to designate the chief of the Executive. The result would not have been changed; the laws and acts of the Executive would have been equally valid, in virtue of the powers conferred upon us by the British Parliament. That the chief of the "Queen's Privy Council for Canada" only acts in the name of the Queen is made again very clear by section 55, which says:

"Where a Bill passed by the House of Parliament is presented to the Governor General for the Queen's assent, he shall declare either that he assents thereto in the Queen's name, or that he withholds the Queen's assent, or that he reserves the Bill for the signification of the Queen's pleasure."

For the Provinces, other words were chosen to designate the divers powers. So the legislative body, instead of being called Parliament, was termed "Legislature"; the expression "Lieutenant Governor" was substituted for "the Queen"; the expression "Legislative Council" was substituted for the "Senate" (the Upper House), and the expression "Legislative Assembly" was substituted for "Commons" (the Lower House) (sections 69 and 71). As to the administrative power, the words "Executive Council" were adopted instead of "Queen's Privy Council" (section 63). The Queen, acting with the advice of her own council, might have kept the right of appointing herself the Lieutenant Governors. She delegated that power to the Governor appointed by her, acting in her name. When once appointed, by virtue of that authority, a Lieutenant Governor, within the limit of his attributions, represents the Queen as fully as the Governor General also acting within the limits of his attributions. He derives his powers directly from the Queen, through the Governor her mandatory. It is of common and universal law that the acts of the mandatory bind his principal. Both the Governor and Lieutenant Governors have the same powers, under different names, in different fields of action, with jurisdiction on different subjects and matters. They all take the same oath (section 61). The members of the Privy Council are sworn as such (section 11). The members of the Executive Councils are sworn as they were before the Union (sections 64 and 135). By comparing sections 12 and 65, it is easy to ascertain the identity of powers of the Privy Council and of the Executives, each within the limits of the attributions conferred by the British North America Act. By these quotations, it is easy to see that the Queen forms part of the local Executives and Legislatures as well as of the Privy Council and Parliament of Canada. The names and appellations are changed, but the effect remains the same. The principle that the Queen forms part, virtually, by fiction of the law, of every Parliament of her colonies, has been broadly laid down as far back as 1774, in a case of Hall vs. Campbell, in which Lord Mansfield, delivering the unanimous judgment of the Court of King's Bench, decided that the King had no power, by letters patent, to impose duties on the Island of Grenada. He said:

"We therefore think that, by the two proclamations and the commission to Governor Belleville, the King had immediately and irrevocably granted to all who were and should become inhabitants, or who had or should acquire property in the Island of Grenada, or, more generally, to all whom it might concern, that the subordinate legislation over the island should be exercised by an assembly with the consent of the Governor and council, in like manner, as the other islands belonging to the King."

And, further on, he says:

"To use the words of Sir Philip Yorke, Sir Clement Wearge, it can only now be done by the assembly of the island, or by an Act of the Parliament of Great Britain."—(1 Cowper's Reports, page 213.)

The Supreme Court of Canada, in deciding that the Queen did not form part of the Local Legislatures, doubtless overlooked the then recent decision of Her Majesty's Privy Council, in the case of Théberge vs. Landry, decided in 1876, in which Lord Cairns, delivering the unanimous judgment of the court, and speaking of the Quebec Controverted Elections Act, called it "an Act which is assented to on the part of the Crown, and to which, therefore, the Crown is a party." (Council of Law Reports, Appeal Cases, 2, 1876-77, page 108.) In the case of the Queen vs. Coate, the Privy Council had decided, in 1873, that the Quebec law appointing fire marshals with power to investigate, swear witnesses and commit to gaol, was within the competency of the Province (1st Cartwright, page 97). In fact, there is no possible law, in any dependency of England, as well as in England itself, without the Queen being a party to it; the same principle applies to the Executive powers. Authorities on that point are innumerable:

"The constituent parts of Parliament are, the King, the House of Lords and the House of Commons."—(Stephens: The Rise and Progress of the English Constitution, page 531.)

"The first prerogative of the King, in his capacity of supreme magistrate, has, for its object, the administration of justice. 1st. He is the source of all judicial power in the state; he is the chief of all the courts of law, and the judges are only his substitutes; everything is transacted in his name; the judgments must be with his seal, and are executed by his officers. 2nd. By a fiction of the law, he is looked upon as the proprietor of the Kingdom. 3rd. The second prerogative of the King is, to be the fountain of honor."—(Stephens: The Rise and Progress of the English Constitution, page 566.)

"A Bill does not become an Act of Parliament until it has received the Royal assent."—(Cox: Institutions of the English Government, page 48.)

"In other cases, Parliament has expressly delegated to the Colonies a power of making laws for their own internal economy."—(Cox: Institutions of the English Government, page 10.)

"That the several enactments of Parliament should receive the Royal assent, will appear very clearly, if we consider the nature of the Coronation oath."—Cox: Institutions of the English Government, page 51.)

"No doubt the assent of the Governor is needed, in order to turn Colonial Bills into laws; and further investigation would show our enquirer that, for the validity of any colonial Act there is required, in addition to the assent of the Governor, the sanction, either expressed or implied, of the Crown."—(Dicey: Lectures on the Constitution, page 96.)

"The making of statutes is by the King with the assent of Parliament." (Bacon's Abr. tit. Prerogative, 487.)

"The King has the prerogative of giving his assent, as it is called, to such bills as his subjects, legally convened, may present to him, that is, of giving them the force and sanction of a law."—(Bacon's Abr. tit. Prerogative, 489.)

"No Acts of Colonial Legislatures have force until they have received either the assent of the Governor in the Queen's name, or the Royal assent when reserved and transmitted for consideration."—(Cox's British Commonwealth, 525.)

What is true of the legislative power is equally true of the executive and judicial powers. The Queen is the fountain of all power.

"All jurisdiction exercised in these kingdoms, that are in obedience to our King, is derived from the Crown; and the laws, whether of a temporal, ecclesiastical, or military nature are called his laws; and it is his prerogative to take care of the due execution of them. Hence, all the judges must derive their authority from the Crown, by some commission warranted by law, and must exercise it in a lawful manner, and without any the least deviation from the known and stated forms.

"So although the King is the fountain of justice and entrusted with the whole of the executive power of the law, yet he hath no power to change or to alter the laws which have been received and established in these Kingdoms; for it is by those very laws that he is to govern; and as they prescribe the extent and bounds of his prerogative, in like manner do they declare and ascertain the rights and liberties of the people." * * *—(VI. Bacon's abridgement, page 428.)

"The King is said to be the fountain of justice, fons justitie, and in that capacity has the right of erecting courts of judicature, though the right is subjected to many restrictions by Acts of Parliament. All jurisdictions of courts of justice are either mediately or immediately derived from the Crown; their proceedings were generally in the name of the Sovereign, and are executed by ministerial officers of the Crown."—(Cox, page 300.)

"Another capacity, in which the Sovereign is considered in domestic affairs, is as the fountain of justice and general conservator of the peace of the Kingdom. By the fountain of justice the law does not mean the author or origin, but only the distributor. Justice is not derived from the Sovereign, as from his free gift; but he is the steward of the public, to dispense it to whom it is due. The original power of judicature, by the fundamental principles of society, is lodged in the society at large; but as it would be impracticable to render complete justice to every individual, by the people in their collective capacity, therefore every nation has committed that power to certain select magistrates, who with more ease and expedition can hear and determine complaints; and in England this authority has immemorially been exercised by the Sovereign or his substitutes. He, therefore, has alone the right of erecting courts of judicature: for, though the Constitution of the Kingdom has entrusted him with the whole executive power of the laws, it is impossible, as well as improper, that he should personally carry into execution this great and extensive trust; it is consequently necessary that courts should be erected, to assist him in executing this power; and equally necessary that, if erected, they should be erected by his authority. And hence it is, that all jurisdictions of courts are either mediately or immediately derived from the Crown, their proceedings run generally in the Sovereign's name, they pass under his seal, and are executed by his officers."

"But at present, by the long and uniform usage of many ages, our Sovereigns have delegated their whole judicial power to the judges of their several courts." * * *—(1 Blackstone, page 261.)

I need not multiply the authorities on such elementary principles of English constitutional law. The power of erecting tribunals and appointing judges and officers has been delegated fully, without restriction, to our central Government on certain matters, and to our Local Legislatures on others. Let me now refer to the "Colonial Laws Act of 1865," which is an Act to remove doubts as to the validity of Colonial laws:

"Section 5. Every Colonial Legislature shall have, and be deemed at all times to have had, full power within its jurisdiction to establish courts of jurisdiction, and to abolish and reconstitute the same, and to alter the constitution thereof, and to make provision for the administration of justice therein; and every representative Legislature shall, in respect to the colony under its jurisdiction, have, and be deemed at all times to have had, full power to make laws respecting the constitution, powers and procedure of such Legislature; provided that such laws shall have been passed in such manner and form as may from time to time be required by any Act of Parliament, letters patent, Order in Council, or Colonial law for the time being in force in the said colony."

I will apply, further on, the British North America Act to that statute so clear and conclusive. The Supreme Court of Canada seems to have overlooked, not only the precedents and authorities I quoted, but even that statute specially made and provided for the colonies; and surely nobody will deny that every Province of the Dominion is a colony. The Supreme Court has, by that decision in Lenoir vs. Ritchie, reversed numerous precedents and decisions of our Canadian courts, which I will not quote, the Supreme Court being a higher tribunal, sitting in appeal of the Provincial Courts. Since the decision aforesaid, of the Supreme Court, Her Majesty's Privy Council has again decided, as to the plenitude of powers conferred upon the Provinces within the limits of their attributions. In the case of Hodge vs. the Queen (Law Reports, 9 Appeal Cases, page 132, in 1883) the Honorable Lords of the Privy Council said:

"It appears to their Lordships, however, that the objection raised by the appellants, is founded on an entire misconception of the true character and position of the Provincial Legislatures. They are in no sense delegates of, or acting under any mandate from the Imperial Parliament. When the British North America Act enacted that there should be a Legislature for Ontario, and that its Legislative Assembly should have exclusive authority to make laws for the Province and for Provincial purposes in relation to the matters enumerated in section 92, it conferred powers, not in any sense to be exercised by delegation from or as agents of the Imperial Parliament, but authority asplenary and as ample within the limits prescribed by section 92 as the Imperial Parliament, in the plenitude of its power, possessed and could bestow. Within these limits of subjects and area of the Local Legislature is supreme, and has the same authority as the Imperial Parliament, or the Parliament of the Dominion, would have had under like circumstances, to confide to a municipal institution, or body of its own creation authority to make by-laws or resolutions as to subjects specified in the enactment, and with the object of carrying the enactment into operation and effect."

It seems to me that this last decision of the Privy Council virtually reverses the judgment of the Supreme Court in Lenoir vs. Ritchie, which, besides, never amounted to res judicata. In spite of that last judgment, our Canadian courts have unanimously continued to consider as valid our laws assented to by the Queen. But I will only refer to the Privy Council, and quote, by analogy, the following decisions. In 1883, in the celebrated case of Ontario Government and Mercer, it was held:

"That lands in Canada escheated to the Crown for defect of heirs, belong to the Province in which they are situated and not to the Dominion."—(Law Reports, 8 Appeal Cases, 1883, page 767.)

I presume it is useless to remark how much that decision has a direct bearing on the question I discuss, and how it fully recognises the fictive presence of the Queen in the local powers. In the case of the Exchange Bank of Canada vs. The Queen, it was held, in 1885 :

"That the Crown is bound by the two Codes of Lower Canada."—(11 Appeal Cases, 1883, page 197.)

In the case of the Bank of Toronto vs. Lambe, and three other similar cases, it was held, in 1887 :

"That the Public Act, 45 Victoria, chapter 22, which imposes certain direct taxes on certain commercial corporations carrying on business in the Province, is inter alia intra the Provincial Legislatures."—(12 Appeal Cases, 1883, page 575.)

This Act had also been assented to in the name of the Queen. In the case of the Attorney General of British Columbia vs. the Attorney General of Canada, it was held, in April, 1889 :

"That a conveyance by the Province of British Columbia to the Dominion, of 'public lands,' * * * does not imply any transfer of its interest in revenues arising from the prerogative rights of the Crown."—(14 Appeal Cases, 1883, page 295.)

I do not pretend to exhaust the list of cases involving the same principle and affirming the same. I merely chose some of them, so as to satisfy this House as to the constant and clear opinion of Her Majesty's Privy Council. Having thus established that the Queen forms part of the Local Legislatures ; that the appointment of Queen's Counsel is part of the royal prerogative equally with the appointment of all judicial officers ; that the British Parliament has delegated to the Colony of Canada all the powers and prerogatives necessary to the organising and working of the courts of justice ; that all these powers and prerogatives have to be exercised in the name of the Queen, by any colony entrusted with them, there remains to be seen to what extent those powers and prerogatives were delegated to the divers Provinces of the Confederation, in so far as the courts, their officers, management and organisation are concerned. That part of the question does not seem to be of a great difficulty. I freely admit that the Federal Government have the right of appointing Queen's Counsel for their own courts, for the tribunals they have the right to create in virtue of section 101 of the British North America Act, such as the Supreme Court and the Exchequer Court. But sub-section 4 of section 92 of the same Act gives exclusively to the Provinces the right over the establishment and tenure of Provincial offices and the appointment and payment of Provincial officers ; sub-section 13 gives them an exclusive right over property and civil rights in the Province ; sub-section 14 gives them the exclusive right over "the administration of justice, including the constitution, maintenance and organisation of Provincial courts, both of civil and criminal jurisdiction," and sub-section 16 gives them the exclusive right over all matters of a merely local or private nature in the Province. The appointment of a Queen's Counsel amounts, in our days, to the giving of a rank of precedence and preaudience. It concerns the internal economy and management of the courts. Surely this is a local matter and civil right. It is essentially provincial. A Quebec lawyer could not plead before an Ontario court. He would have to be admitted to the Ontario bar before pleading there, and vice versa. Section 94 provides that the laws of Ontario, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick may be assimilated. No such disposition exists for the Province of Quebec. Our courts, bar, laws, have been, and will remain, separated, distinct, local and private, to the Province. The power of constituting, maintaining and organising a court, implies, and carries with it, all the necessary powers to regulate the internal economy of the same, the rules of practice, the admission to the bar, the appointment of the officers of the court, the keeping of records, and everything concerning the same, save the appointment of the judges of the superior, district and county courts, reserved to the Privy Council by section 96. The first law officer of the Crown is the Attorney General. He is appointed by the Lieutenant Governor, and nobody ever contested the validity of the appointment. Indictments are signed in his name, and have been upheld by all the courts. He is the first of the Queen's Counsel, according to Blackstone. The Solicitor General comes after him. Both appointments by the Lieutenant Governor are provided for by section 63 of the Confederation Act. Would it not be most extraordinary that the Lieutenant Governor should have the right of appointing the first Queen's Counsel, the head of the hierarchy, and should not have the power to appoint those who only rank after ? Where is the clause of the British North America Act that takes away that prerogative from the Crown ? When the British Crown delegated all her powers to the Provinces, in so far as the courts are concerned, she delegated the whole of her powers and prerogatives to carry that disposition of the statute into effect. It would have required a special provision to except any of those powers and prerogatives. Not only are the provincial statutes assented to invariably in the name of the Queen, but all the officers of the departments, all offices of trust, as officers of the courts, sheriffs, registrars, coroners, gaolers, justices of the peace, police magistrates, constables, legislative councillors, &c., are appointed in the name of the Queen. All the writs in the courts, viz., of summons, habeas corpus, quo warranto, scire facias, prohibition, ferri facias, renditioni, exponas, writs of possession, all the letters patent for lands, mines, timber, for incorporating companies, all the proclamations, licenses, — in a word, all the important acts of the Executive are made and issued in the name of the Crown, as required in the exercise of any royal prerogative. If the Queen did not form part of the Local Governments and Legislatures, all those appointments and documents would be void, and the Local Governments would have no power at all, and the Confederation would be a sham. It never came into the mind of any one to deny the validity of all those Acts of the Local Governments. But why should there be an exception in regard to the Queen's Counsel ? What part of the Confederation Act would justify that pretension or exclusion ? If our laws were not assented to in the name of the Queen, they would have to be assented to either in the name of the Governor or Lieutenant Governor. No part of the British North America Act gives them any such power. The Governor General received the power of disallowance as to the Bills, but never was he substituted for the Queen as the fountain of powers and honors. No disposition makes him a constituent part of a Provincial Legislature. He carries on the Government of the Dominion in the name of the Queen, and wherever he is mentioned, it means the representative of the Queen, acting in her name, using her great seal, the emblem of sovereignty. But the Local Governments have also their great seals, the affixing of which means the consent, approbation, action of the sovereign. It amounts to an official signing of a document by the Queen. A special clause of the British North America Act (sec. 136) even provides for the design of those great seals for each Province. If the Queen did not form part of the Local Legislatures, the Provinces would no more be under the monarchical system; they would be mere republics, with a president elected by the Privy Council of Ottawa. The confederate power alone would constitute a monarchy. Will any sensible man sustain such an anomaly? I have spoken of the Attorney and Solicitor General. Let me refer you to sections 134 and 135 of the Confederation Act. They give to those officers all the powers they had before the Confederation. Section 134 adds that the Lieutenant Governors "may also appoint other and additional officers to hold office during pleasure, and may from time to time prescribe the duties of these officers, and of the several departments over which they shall preside or to which they shall belong, and of the officers and clerks thereof." Surely the administration of justice entrusted to the Provinces is included in those powers; and the appointment of Queen's Counsel forms an essential, though small part of the same, affecting the internal economy of the courts of justice. The Attorney General is supposed to conduct every criminal trial. Was he in court, he would be de facto the first Queen's Counsel. He appoints substitutes who sign and speak for him. Section 134 undoubtedly gives him the right of delegating to them part of his powers and privileges; more than all that, our Federal statutes are full of dispositions, formally recognising that the Queen forms part of the Local Legislatures. The jurors appointed by the local officers are called the jurors of Our Sovereign Lady the Queen. The indictments are drawn charging a defendant to have acted against the peace of Her Sovereign Lady the Queen, her Crown and dignity. The jurors are to be challenged or ordered to stand aside in the name of the Crown. Chapter 174 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, section 179, says:

"Provided always, that the right of reply shall be always allowed to the Attorney or Solicitor General, as to any Queen's Counsel, acting on behalf of the Crown."

Can there be a more explicit recognition of the principle I sustain? Now, how extraordinary it would be that the Attorney General would have the obligation, by statute as well as by the common law, to attend to the administration of the criminal law, would have, in virtue of the same authorities, the authority of delegating his powers, but that he could not choose whom he would please, and that he would have to wait upon the good-will of an alien Government to appoint his representatives Queen's Counsel, so as to give them the right of reply in the public interest? There remain the questions of convenience or expediency and of sanction by enforcement of the appointments. It will be clear in the eyes of every one that the local powers are in a better position than the central power to judge the requirements of the Province, the qualifications of the lawyers. It would not be fair that the majority of the vast Dominion should oppose its will, in that respect, to the majority of a Province. As to the sanction of the appointment, if there was a conflict between the Federal and Local Governments, how could the federal authority have its appointments recognised? Suppose the judges appointed by Ottawa should desire to recognise and enforce them in spite of the local authority, he would be surrounded by sheriffs, prothonotaries, clerks, bailiffs, gaolers, all appointed by the Province, receiving instructions from the same, being paid by the same. He might have to leave the bench, act as sheriff, take a man by the throat, conduct him to gaol where the gaoler would tell him: "I have instructions not to receive that prisoner!" He might have to sign and execute himself, his own warrant of distress. That suffices to exemplify the impossibility of this Government having any such appointment by them recognised and sanctioned by due execution. Though the possibility of execution has always been looked upon as a criterion of jurisdiction. In the case of Lenoir vs. Ritchie, Hon. Judge Fournier said:

"It is a general principle that a court has no jurisdiction in cases wherein the judgment it would give would not be susceptible of execution."

Broom: "Commentaries on the Common Law," page 54: "The word 'law,' indeed, ex vi termini, implies a sanction." I think I have demonstrated:— 1st. That the Queen forms part of the Local Governments, as well as of the Federal Government. 2nd. That every one of them are supreme within the limits of their attributions, deriving their authority directly from the Queen. 3rd. That the administration of justice entrusted to the Local Governments carries with it all the prerogatives of the Queen, necessary to the good working and management of the courts, and that the appointment of Queen's Counsel forms an ingredient and inseparable part of the same. 4th. That the decision to the contrary by the Supreme Court of Canada, in the case of Lenoir vs. Ritchie, is an isolated one, rendered on a point not in issue nor argued contradictorily, without the interested parties being called to answer, by a divided and incomplete bench, is contradictory to all precedents as well to the precise terms and true intent and meaning of all the laws in force; that the principles upon which it rests have frequently since been denied and reversed by the highest tribunals of the Empire, and that the adoption of those principles would render impossible the working of the Confederation as well as the administration of justice. Since these notes have been prepared, I, fortunately, have procured a copy of a most able memorandum sent to this Government by the Ontario Government. As this honorable House is not yet in possession of that very valuable document, but it would take some time to read it all through, with the permission of the House, I will hand over the same to the Hansard as read.

Mr. LAURIER. I would remind my hon. friend that we have invariably refused to consent to anything being published in the Hansard which was not spoken or read on the floor of the House. If we were to depart from this rule, it would lead to very objectionable consequences, I am sure.

Mr. AMYOT. I was not aware of that.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I presume the hon. gentleman's only object is to get the document on record. I am under the impression it has been printed among our Sessional Papers, but if not, I am sure there is no objection to bring it down in such a form that it will save the hon. member the necessity of reading it.

Mr. AMYOT. I know it is not in our official papers. The leader of the Opposition would gain nothing by insisting on my reading the document, as it would only fatigue the House.

Mr. IAURIER. I think my hon. friend had better follow the rule which we have invariably adhered to. If we commence by departing from this rule and allow members to send in matter to be printed that was not spoken in the House, we will have whole speeches sent in by-and-bye.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The document is a long one, and the hon. member's only object, I understand, in reading it, would be to have it on record. I am inclined to think that it is already printed among the Sessional Papers; but if not, we will take care that it shall be printed, in order to relieve the hon. member from the necessity of reading it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I understand the Minister of Justice will bring it down and lay it on the Table, formally, and have it referred to the Printing Committee.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes, I will do so.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If the hon. gentleman wants this document to stand as part of his speech, he had better read it.

Mr. AMYOT. I will not undertake to read it; it is too long. As we have the assurance that it will be laid officially before the House, that will meet the object I have in view. By an official letter, dated 27th September, 1886, the Government have refused to comply with the desire expressed by the Ontario Government of having the question of Queen's Counsel and the jurisdiction as to their appointment submitted to the Privy Council upon a joint case. And they say:

"His Excellency is advised that so long as the judgment in Lenoir vs. Ritchie is not revised, it is the duty of Governments and individuals in Canada to respect and conform to that judgment."

Such is the policy adopted by the Government on that question. They take advantage of an ex parte judgment denying the Provinces an important right, namely, the right of using the great seal in the name of the Queen, and refuse the Provinces the opportunity of being heard before the competent tribunals. In spite of that, the commissions of Queen's Counsel, issued by this Government, prove that some doubts still exist in the mind of the hon. Minister of Justice. After having stated after whom the new Queen's Counsel will rank, to wit, after Queen's Counsel created by the Provinces before Confederation, and after Queen's Counsel created by Ottawa since the Confederation, these commissioners add: After "those members of such bar (if any) who may lawfully be entitled to rank and precedence over you the said." * * * Who are those? The document professes not to know it! Let the title bearer find it out for himself! The Department is impotent in that regard. I am surprised that a Government allows such documents to officially issue from the Department of Justice, where the laws are presumed to be entirely known, understood, and put into practice. The same letter affirms that no inconvenience has been occasioned by the judgment. I think I have proved that the very reverse of that pretension is actually the case. It is greatly time that this question be finally and clearly settled. Therefore, I beg to submit the following proposition to this honorable House, without making of the same a question of non-confidence:

That, in the opinion of this House, it is the exclusive right of the Local Legislature and the Executive of each Province to appoint Queen's Counsel for all courts established, maintained and managed by such Province, and to settle the rules and rights of precedence or pre-eminence of the bar in proceedings in such court.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The subject which the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) has brought to the notice of the House this afternoon, of course the House will regard as one of very great importance, not only for the rights which are immediately connected with the appointment of Queen's Counsel for the various courts in this country, but because, as he has indicated very clearly, the subject branches out into constitutional questions lying at the basis of much larger rights than those of Her Majesty's Queen's Counsel in the courts. I cannot too strongly express my appreciation of one observation which the hon. gentleman made towards the close of his address, when it was suggested that he should proceed with the reading of a document which came to this Government from the Government of Ontario. The hon. gentleman hesitated to do so, on the ground that the reading of documents of that character, touching upon legal and constitutional questions, gave the House very little information and instruction, and required, in order to be appreciated, to be more carefully read than can be done in the progress of a debate. I feel I must, with great respect to the hon. gentleman, apply that observation to the whole of the argument on this question he has submitted. I feel somewhat at a disadvantage in coming to the discussion of an abstruse constitutional question, without the slightest notice, considering it touches a subject not only of constitutional importance, but also involving legal technicalities which I have not looked at for a good many months, and, therefore, the hon. gentleman will not consider me, I am sure, wanting in courtesy to him, if I find myself, this afternoon, unable to contribute anything to the discussion of this question which will very much interest the House or throw very great additional light on the subject. I, however, have had some acquaintance with it. I am in a position to assure the hon. gentleman that one of the propositions which he states at the conclusion of his paper, as having been completely established, namely, that the decision in the case of Lenoir vs. Ritchie was upon a point not before the court, not raised on the appeal, not considered in the judgment below, that that proposition, so far from being established, would not be considered well founded by any one who was acquainted, as I have had to be, with the case of Lenoir vs. Ritchie from its inception to its close. So far from its being correct, as the hon. gentleman supposes it to be, from the statement by Mr. Haliburton, in the course of his argument before the Supreme Court on appeal, that the constitutional question had not been raised in the court below, I am in a position, as one of the counsel who argued the case, to say that that was the gist of the argument in the court below; and not only so, but if the hon. gentleman will turn to the decision in the court below, the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, he will find the judgment of one of the judges giving judgment in favor of Mr. Ritchie proceeded only on the constitutional ground and disregarded all others; and that constitutional ground was more or less discussed likewise in the decisions given by the other judges.

Mr. AMYOT. I took my information from the reports of the Supreme Court.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I would refer the hon. gentleman, for further information, to the decision in the court below, not only given in the Supreme Court reports of Nova Scotia, but embodied in the Cartwright edition of constitutional cases, where it immediately follows the decision in the Supreme Court of Canada. The hon. gentleman intimated to the House that the decision in the case of Lenoir vs. Ritchie was an erroneous one, and he arrived at that conclusion by a course of reasoning, in which he sought to affirm the proposition that Her Majesty is part of the Provincial Legislatures, and he came to the conclusion that that proposition had been denied by the Supreme Court of Canada in the judgment in Lenoir vs. Ritchie. I venture to say that the judgment in the case does not proceed on that ground, and I venture to differ from the hon. gentleman that he has established that the Crown is an integral part of the Legislatures of the Provinces. Let me first refer to the course of reasoning by which the hon. gentleman sought to establish that position. He sought to establish it by showing a course of legislation existing long prior to the confederation of the Provinces, to the Imperial legislation confirming certain rights and powers as to the use of Her Majesty's name by the functionaries who, from time to time, governed the different Provinces in British North America. The hon. gentleman referred to the practice which prevailed in some of the Provinces, of using Her Majesty's name in the enacting part of the Provincial statutes. Let me submit for the hon. gentleman's consideration, in the first place, that Imperial legislation prior to Confederation has really no bearing upon the subject, and that the provision in the Colonial Statutes Act of 1865, passed in the Imperial Parliament, and designating the powers which Colonial Legislatures possessing representative institutions can wield, has really no bearing on the subject, for the very obvious reason that, in 1867, by the British North America Act, there was a completely new distribution of the powers by the Imperial Parliament. In reference to all the Provinces of Canada, I think I am speaking within the lines of the decisions, which have all run one way, proceeding from the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, all the legislative powers and constitutional functions which existed down to that time in the various Provinces in British North America were, for the instant, taken back by the Imperial Government and redistributed under the terms of the British North America Act. Whether I am strictly correct in stating that they were taken back or not, certain it is that from that time forward the distribution of powers in those various Provinces must depend upon the provisions of that Act, and on that Act alone. Nowhere is it provided in that Act that Her Majesty shall be considered an integral part of the Provincial Legislatures. So much for the early Imperial legislation on the subject. I will come by-and-bye to the hon. gentleman's argument, that Her Majesty's prerogatives are necessarily involved in the administration of public affairs in each Province. That I do not dispute. I am confining my argument for the present to the contention that Her Majesty is an integral part of the Legislatures of the Provinces, as was held, and properly held, in the case of Lenoir vs. Ritchie. As to the practice which the hon. gentleman has cited, of Provincial Legislatures using Her Majesty's name in the enacting part of the statutes of the Provinces at various times, I beg likewise to differ from him, both as to the conclusions which he would draw from that circumstance, and as to the extent of the practice itself. In the Province of Canada, the practice did exist before Confederation, of enacting these statutes in the name of the Queen, and that practice, without authority, I think, without anything more to be said for it than a mere desire to continue the form which prevailed before Confederation, was carried forward and continued, and to this day, not only in Ontario, but in the Province of Quebec, the statutes continue to be enacted in the name of the Queen. Now, it does not by any means follow that Her Majesty is the enacting power, and as to the correctness of that practice, I do not feel myself sufficiently informed to criticise the soundness of it, as applied to the Province of Canada before Confederation. It may have been proper to use it there, on account of the circumstance that in that Province Her Majesty's rule was administered by her direct representative, the Governor General. But I can assure the hon. gentleman that that practice did not exist in the other Province of Canada, and that from the time representative institutions were given, down to the present moment—outside, I mean, of the old limits of Canada—the statutes were, from the earliest periods, and are to-day, enacted in the name of the Governor, Council and Assembly, without any pretence whatever that Her Majesty was part of the legislative body. I conceive, Sir—and in this respect I again differ from what the hon. gentleman has said—that that is of no material consequence whatever; and I am unable to agree with the hon. gentleman, that if Her Majesty is not a part of the Legislature of the Province, it follows that the statutes purporting to be passed by Her Majesty are invalid, or inoperative, or should have been disallowed. On the contrary, the validity of a statute arises from the fact of its having been enacted, by the powers which have a right to pass it, within the British North America Act. If a statute is passed by the Lieutenant Governor of a Province, with the advice of his Assembly, and his Legislative Council if he have one, that statute is valid, as the statute of the Province, and as I submit, valid, altogether irrespective of any style by which it purports to have proceeded from Her Majesty. If the Act was actually passed by the Legislature of the Province, it is immaterial that it purports to have been enacted by Her Majesty. Now, having said that much with regard to the hon. gentleman's contention, which he understood that his argument had established, that Her Majesty is an integral part of the Legislature of the Province, let me refer the hon. gentleman to the mistake which, I think, he made, in attributing that as the foundation of the decision in the case of Lenoir vs. Ritchie. It seems to me, and it has always seemed to me, that the Executive Government, not only of Canada itself, but of every one of her Provinces, is vested in Her Majesty. It seems to me, that it is perfectly within the competence of a Provincial Legislature to make enactments binding Her Majesty's prerogative, and binding that prerogative to the fullest extent, but only in regard to matters which are entrusted to the Provincial Legislatures under the British North America Act; and this, for the very obvious reason, that, inasmuch as these powers are given to Provincial Legislatures, the Provincial Legislatures cannot fully legislate upon them without binding all the rights which Her Majesty has in regard to them, as well as the rights which Her Majesty's subjects have in regard to them. When we find the power to regulate the civil procedure of the courts entrusted to the Provincial Legislatures, it is surely competent for the Provincial Legislatures to control that Provincial procedure, even though it affects to some extent the use of Her Majesty's name, as, for instance, in the issue of writs, which the hon. gentleman has referred to as running in Her Majesty's name. It seems to me perfectly within Provincial powers to control and to regulate that procedure, notwithstanding the mere fact that justice is supposed to be administered in Her Majesty's name, and that all who come within her courts are supposed to come at Her Majesty's summons. But the difference between the proposition which the hon. gentleman has laid down, with regard to Her Majesty being an integral portion of the Provincial Legislatures, and the principle which is laid down, rightly or wrongly, in the case of Lenoir vs. Ritchie, seems to me to be this: that the respect in which Her Majesty was said not to form a part of the Provincial Legislature by the Supreme Court of Canada, in the case of Lenoir vs. Ritchie, was this respect, that Her Majesty could not be said to be bound in her prerogative rights by a Provincial statute, unless the power of a Legislature upon that subject was expressly conferred by the British North America Act. It had been contended there by counsel for the appellant that even though the subject dealt with should be the distribution of honors and of titles—which constitutionally proceed from Her Majesty as the fountain of honor—yet the Provincial Legislatures might properly pass a statute binding Her Majesty in respect to the exercise of that prerogative, even though the power was not conferred upon them by the British North America Act, on the ground that the Provincial statute being once passed, Her Majesty had yielded her prerogative in giving assent to that Act. That involved the proposition that Her Majesty was a portion of the Legislature of the Province, and it was in that respect that the Supreme Court of Canada, as I understand the decision in the case of Lenoir vs. Ritchie, held that Her Majesty was not bound by a Provincial statute, and that she did not form part of the Provincial Legislature. The logical result of that conclusion was, not at all as the hon. gentleman seems to suppose, that Her Majesty could not be bound in any of her rights by a Provincial statute, but simply that Her Majesty was not bound by a Provincial statute, unless that Provincial statute was passed in pursuance of powers conferred on the Legislature by the British North America Act. In the case of a statute passed by this Parliament, or passed by the Imperial Parliament, the result would be different. Her Majesty would be bound, and Her prerogative would be yielded by the fact of her giving assent to the Act, irrespective altogether of the powers which the Parliament itself possessed. Now, to show that I am right in supposing that that was the view taken by the Supreme Court of Canada, and that, therefore, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Amyot) was hardly right in impugning that decision as being erroneous in that respect, I will call his attention to a passage from the judgment of Mr. Justice Henry, in which he says:

"The Local Legislatures are now simply the creatures of a statute, and under it alone have they any legislative powers. The Imperial Parliament, by the Union Act, prescribed and limited their jurisdiction; and, in doing so, has impliedly and virtually and effectually prohibited them from legislating on any other than the subjects comprised in the powers given by that Act. The right of the Imperial Parliament, when conferring legislative power on the Local Legislatures, to limit the exercise of them, cannot be questioned; and any local Act passed beyond the prescribed limit, being contrary to the terms of the Imperial Act, must necessarily be ultra vires."

A little further on, and toward the conclusion of his judgment, Mr. Justice Henry deals directly with that question of Her Majesty being a portion of the Legislature, in these terms:

"If the Imperial statute has not given the necessary legislative power to the Local Legislatures, an Act of theirs would be of no higher value than a city ordinance, such as I have stated. The argument of this question, however, is unavailable, for the Queen has not signified her assent to the local Act in question. By the provisions of section 90 of the Imperial Act, the Governor General, and not the Queen, assents to local Acts made in his name, as provided. The Lieutenant Governors are appointed, not by the Queen, but by the Governor General in Council. It cannot, therefore, be successfully contended that the Queen has assented to the local Act in question; nor can it be with greater success contended that by assenting to it the Governor General had any power, in doing so, to interfere with the Royal prerogative."

One other extract from the decision of Mr. Justice Taschereau indicates the same conclusion:

"But, said the appellants, Her Majesty has assented to this Act of the Nova Scotia Legislature. This, in my opinion, is a grievous error. Her Majesty does not form a constituent part of the Provincial Legislatures, and the Lieutenant Governors do not sanction their Bills in Her Majesty's name."

Then he goes on to show that Provincial Acts are not sanctioned by Her Majesty at all. The hon. gentleman, therefore, I think, will see that the heresy which the Supreme Court of Canada was aiming at in the decision of Lenoir vs. Ritchie was not at all, in fact, the proposition that the statutes of a Province cannot bind the Crown; but that the Crown is bound by the provisions of a Provincial statute by the fact of its being allowed to go into operation, and the court merely held that the Act, for its validity and effect on the Crown, must depend on the single consideration whether it is within the powers conferred on the Provinces by the British North America Act. Then the court proceeded at the next step to consider whether this was within the range of the subjects entrusted to the Provincial Legislatures, and came to the conclusion that the appointment of Queen's Counsel was simply the conferring of a title of honor carrying rank and precedence, and, therefore, was not within the powers given to the Local Legislatures. Now, the hon. gentleman read to the House a summary of several decisions of Her Majesty's Privy Council, in which the position was laid down, that the Provincial Legislatures have, as the hon. gentleman asserted, plenary powers. I do not for a moment question the force of the decisions referred to. They by no means take the view that the Provincial Legislatures have any powers, plenary or otherwise, beyond those given to them by the British North America Act. The single effect of all that line of decisions is, that within the powers conferred upon them by the British North America Act, the Provincial Legislatures are supreme in their legislation; but the fundamental question which lies at the base of this whole controversy with regard to the appointment of Queen's Counsel is, whether it is within Provincial powers or not. If it is within Provincial powers, I admit that those powers are as plenary as any which are conferred on the Central Government. The hon. gentleman has made reference to the form of the commissions which are now issued, and which the hon. gentleman thinks are ludicrous in their character. I do not profess to be wiser in my generation than all the Attorney Generals who have preceded me, and all those who administered affairs of this kind in the various Provinces of Canada, and I think it will be found that the commission which we have issued is in substantially the same form as that established ever since the appointment of Queen's Counsel has been made by the Federal Government, and is substantially in the same tenor as the commissions issued by the Provincial Governments before Confederation. I think, further, it will be found, on a close comparison of that commission with the commissions that used to be issued by Her Majesty's Government conferring the rank of Queen's Counsel on practitioners in British North America, that the forms of the two are substantially the same. The commission simply confers the title quantum valeat, and does not profess that the precedence conferred upon the recipient shall justify him in asserting rank or precedence over any class or over any particular person. It assumes that the decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada, when they are announced, are the law of the land, and that being so, the precedence is to be regulated by the court to whom the patent is presented, and, in the ordinary course, confers on the recipient the right to rank next to the person who last received the appointment from the Federal authority. The hon. gentleman impugned the force and effect of the decision in the case of Lenoir vs. Ritchie, not only on the ground I have already referred to, that it proceeded on a point which really was not involved in the appeal, but likewise on the ground that the parties interested had not been heard. I am not able to agree with the hon. gentleman in that view of the case. It might have been more satisfactory if all the Provincial Governments had been invited to take part in that argument, or it might not. The question was raised in the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia between a barrister holding a patent from the Governor General and a barrister holding a patent from the Lieutenant Governor of the Province. Those two parties were all whose rights were immediately concerned in the subject under controversy. Although, in the litigation of those rights, doctrines of law were laid down which were exceedingly interesting to many persons outside of the immediate litigants, that is precisely the case with every important decision pronounced; and if we impugn the decision of Lenoir vs. Ritchie on the ground that every person who took an interest in the subject was not heard, we must take the ground that every decision of the courts of this country and of the mother country is inconclusive in establishing the law, because the hon. member for Bellechasse or myself may have had, or intended some day to bring, a suit just like it, and ought to have been heard. Now, in replying to the observations of the hon. gentleman somewhat fully, as I felt bound to do in courtesy to him, considering the care he had bestowed on this subject, and the care and ability with which he brought it before the House, although I have followed him at some length, I do not propose to ask the House, and I hope he will not think of pressing it, for a decision of the legal question by a vote proposed in amendment to going into Supply. I do not propose this afternoon to state, and, I think, I am not called on to state to the House, what my opinion is as to the powers of the Provincial Legislatures or Governments with regard to the appointment of Queen's Counsel. That has been within certain lines decided by the Supreme Court of Canada. All I have ever said, in answering despatches which have come from any of the Provinces in reference to my report, is, that while the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in Lenoir vs. Ritchie exists and remains undisturbed, we must recognise it to be the law of the land within the limits within which it proceeds, and that, if any person, whether a Provincial or Federal appointee to this office or any other, is of opinion that the case of Lenoir vs. Ritchie does not deny or establish the authority of the power which appointed him, it rests with the courts of the country to administer between him and those who contest his rights the same measure of justice that was meted out between Mr. Lenoir on the one hand and Mr. Ritchie on the other. I think myself that it would be more convenient to allow these constitutional questions to be settled in that way, unless the actual rights of property or revenue of the two Governments are so interfered with by the action of one of them as to make it inconvenient that such action should be allowed to continue. The questions in dispute can be left to the decision of the tribunals which may be appealed to by those parties. I think it is more simple that they should be left to the tribunals than that we should interfere. For these reasons I do not feel called upon, this afternoon, to assert with any confidence or dogmatism what is my own individual opinion on this point. The hon. gentleman has not been able successfully to question the decision in the case of Lenoir vs. Ritchie. While that decision remains unreversed it ought to be recognised by this Parliament as the law of the land. But the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) has made an argument to the House in which he claims to have reached the conclusion that the decision of the highest tribunal in this country was wrong in point of law, and he asks the House this afternoon, on amendment to go into Supply, to reverse that decision by its vote. Without, therefore, saying what foundation there may be for the ingenious and able argument the hon. member has advanced, without saying that I am able to concur in any of the points which I may have omitted to answer, from forgetfulness of the hon. gentleman's argument as it fell on my ear, or from the difficulty I sometimes experience in hearing him—without going further into the matter, I simply ask the House to decline giving an opinion on this question, seeing that it has been decided by the highest court in the country within certain lines and limits, and that, outside those lines and limits, we may leave that question to be pressed to a solution by those directly interested. I would urge on hon. members that we should pause before undertaking to declare our opinion to-night on a difficult question of law, upon which the courts have differed, counsel have differed, and Provincial Governments have differed, and in respect of which, when this question comes finally to be conclusively decided, we might have the mortification of seeing that we had expressed and recorded on our Journals a fallacious opinion as to what the law of the country is.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not understand the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) proposes to do more by his motion than to invite discussion in the House upon an important question, upon which we had administrative action, and therefore a proper question to discuss, whatever may have been the judgment of the Supreme Court. But it does appear to me that the judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, in the case of the St. Catharines Milling and Lumber Company against the Queen, does, in effect, overrule the decision of the Supreme Court in the case to which the hon. the Minister has referred. I will just read an extract from that judgment to the House. It is stated in that judgment that :

“By an Imperial statute, passed in the year 1840, the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, then known as Upper and Lower Canada, were united under the name of the Province of Canada, and it was, inter alia, enacted that in consideration of certain annual payments which Her Majesty had agreed to accept by way of civil list, the produce of all territorial and other revenues at the disposal of the Crown arising in either of the united Provinces should be paid into the consolidated fund of the new Province. There was no transfer to the Province of any legal estate in the Crown lands, which continued to be vested in the Sovereign; but all moneys realised by sales or in any other manner became the property of the Province. In other words, all beneficial interest in such lands within the Provincial boundaries belonging to the Queen, and either producing or capable of producing revenue, passed to the Province, the title still remaining in the Crown.”

According to that decision, the title to all the Crown lands in the various Provinces, or the lands so designated, is still in Her Majesty, and yet those lands are under the control of the Provincial Legislature. There is not simply a beneficial interest recognised, but there is absolute control; and if the opinion expressed by the Minister of Justice to-day, and by the Supreme Court, in the case to which he has referred, be good law, it is quite impossible that a Local Legislature can, by any Act of its own, divest the Crown of that title and vest that title in some other party. If the Lieutenant Governor in a Province does not represent the Crown, I would like the Minister of Justice to explain how he can legally, in the name of the Sovereign, pass a patent which will convey the title to the property therein described to any individual.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. He can do so under the terms of the British North America Act, which gives the Provincial Legislatures power to legislate on that subject. The same power might have been conferred on a municipality; and if conferred upon a town council, that town council could alienate the lands of Her Majesty, not by virtue of Her Majesty being a member of the town council, but by virtue of the powers conferred on the town council itself.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There is no such power in the British North America Act as that to which the hon. gentleman refers, unless it arises from the fact that the Lieutenant Governor is a representative of Her Majesty. The Province, as the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council say in this case, has simply a beneficial interest, and the title is and always has been in Her Majesty. Under the provisions of the British North America Act, a beneficial interest is in the Province, but the legal title is wholly beyond the control of the Province, unless it be with the Lieutenant Governor as a member of the Government of the Province. Let me say, further, that I respectfully dissent from the view expressed by the Minister of Justice, that there was ever an instant of time in which the Provinces which constituted the British North America federation were divested of the powers they possessed when the British North America Act was passed. It is true there are certain words and expressions in the Act which, if read carelessly, would bear the construction sometimes put upon them, and seem to favor, from a cursory examination, that view, but it must be remembered that one of the objects aimed at when the Canadian federation was formed was to divide the Province of Canada into two Provinces, as well as to federate the various Provinces which were to be united. The preamble to the Act declares that the union is to be a federal union, and there was never an instant of time when it was anything else. It is true that section 5 of the Act says :

“Canada shall be divided into four Provinces, named Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.”

That provision was made, because, if the country had been federally united without the division of the Province of Canada into Ontario and Quebec, there would have been three Provinces, and the emphatic word in that section is the word “four,” because it was intended to prevent there being but three Provinces, and to make these four Provinces constitute the federation. Now, Her Majesty was a part of the Provincial Governments—at all events, in Ontario and Quebec—at the time the federation took place, and it seems to me to be a wholly erroneous view to suppose that the Provinces, which remained as they were before, were divested of any of those powers which are declared by the British North America Act to be exclusively vested in them. Nova Scotia, for example, stood, as far as these powers were concerned, in the same position as she was before. She had control over property and civil rights before Confederation, and she continued to have that control afterwards. The only change in her constitution was that there were certain powers which she possessed before the Act was passed of which she was divested; but her form of Government, her constitution, the formation of her Legislature, the duration of that Legislature—except so far as it was changed by this Act—the responsibility of the Ministers of the Crown, etc., remained just the same as they were before. There is not a word said in this Act, from beginning to end, about the constitution of the Legislative Council of Nova Scotia or New Brunswick, because they were already provided for and it was not intended to alter them. But, as to Ontario and Quebec, we find different provisions, for the reason that the old Province of Canada was divided, and it was necessary, not only to provide a constitution for the union, but also to provide a constitution for each of the Provinces carved out of the old Province of Canada. As to Quebec, the Act says:

"The Legislative Council of Quebec shall be composed of twenty-four members, to be appointed by the Lieutenant Governor, in the Queen's name, by instrument under the Great Seal of Quebec."

Why in the Queen's name? What meaning has that expression? If Her Majesty is a part of the Government erected in the Province of Quebec we can understand it. In that case, the Lieutenant Governor acts as Her Majesty's representative, calls these people to the Legislative Council in Her Majesty's name, and that is done because the Lieutenant Governor is a representative of Her Majesty, so far as the executive powers with which he is vested are concerned. Then, in section 82 we find:

"The Lieutenant Governor of Ontario and of Quebec shall, from time to time in the Queen's name, by instrument under the Great Seal of the Province, summon and call together the Legislative Assembly of the Province."

Why in the Queen's name? Because the Lieutenant Governors are the Queen's representatives, acting on behalf of Her Majesty. They call these Legislatures together in Her Majesty's name. There is not a word said there about the Legislature of New Brunswick or the Legislature of Nova Scotia. Why is this? It is because the Legislatures of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia were existing institutions. The Government and the constitution in those Provinces existed before Confederation. The Legislature in New Brunswick, which existed when the federation was formed, continued to exist afterwards. If there had been an instant of time when there was no power in that Province, when all that power which it possessed had been resumed by the Imperial Parliament, there would be an instant of time when the political life of the Provincial establishment would have been wiped out of existence, and it could not have been revived. But the fact is that, so far as those Governments are concerned, they continued to exist. They had the same form of Government and the same constitution which existed before Confederation existing after it. There was the same responsibility of the Executive Council to the Legislature afterwards as there was before. In fact, everything remained afterwards as it was before, except that the Legislature which existed before Confederation existed afterwards with a more limited legislative dominion than it had prior to the passing of the British North America Act. Therefore, in order to learn what is the constitution of these two Provinces, we have to look outside of the British North America Act to find out what it was when that law was passed. I have always felt a very great deal of difficulty in understanding the position of those who deny that the Lieutenant Governors in the different Provinces, under our federative constitution, represent Her Majesty. In the first place, there is an Attorney General in each Province. Whose Attorney General is he? Is he the Attorney General of the Lieutenant Governor, or the Attorney General of Her Majesty? Is he the law officer of the Crown, or is he the law officer of the Lieutenant Governor? If he is not the law officer of the Crown his title is a misnomer. What right has he to prosecute in the Queen's name and to conduct the Queen's business? This power is recognised, in part, at all events, as belonging to the Attorney General, on the assumption that he is Her Majesty's representative. If we look at the ancient institutions of England, I think we will see why it is that under our Federal system the Lieutenant Governors are recognised as exercising the powers of the Sovereign. Look at the ancient Counties of Chester and Durham, where the Lord Palatine exercised a prescriptive right; and if you look at the ancient County of Lancaster, where it was a matter of grant from the Crown, and it was held that they had the same royal rights in their respective limits as the Sovereign possessed elsewhere, prosecutions in those counties were made in the name of the Lord Palatine. The Attorney General was not the Queen's Attorney General, but the Attorney General of the Lord Palatine, because these powers were held to be exercised as a grant, and not as a trust. How is it in regard to the exercise of powers in the various Provinces of Canada? Is there a grant of executive power so as to divest the Crown of that power? If there is a grant divesting the Crown of any powers which it previously possessed that grant is sufficient to divest the Governor General of the rights held by the Crown, except as an act of prerogative, and all those powers held by the Governor General under statute of this Parliament would be separate and distinct from those powers which appertain to Her Majesty. When we look at the provisions of the British North America Act we find that the words used in regard to public lands seem to be broad enough to have vested the title in the Province. Section 109 says:

"All lands, mines, minerals and royalties belonging to the several Provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, at the union, and all sums then due or payable for such lands, mines, minerals or royalties, shall belong to the several Provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, in which the same are situate or arise, subject to any trusts existing in respect thereof, and to any interest other than that of the Province in the same."

Now, if the Crown is not a part of the Government of the Province that would have been a conveyance, that would have divested the Crown of the title which it previously possessed, and would have vested that title in the Government and Legislature of the Province. But the Privy Council, in the St. Catharines Milling Company case, declares that the provisions of this Act never divested the Crown, that they were in the Crown after 1840, when the control of these lands was transferred to the various Governments of the Provinces. Why was not the Crown divested then? Because the Crown continued to be the Government of the colony at the time; and so, when you find here this provision declaring that all the lands, mines and minerals situated within the limits of the various Provinces shall belong to the Provinces, and when you find the Privy Council in that case holding that the Crown was never divested of the legal title which was in it, it is perfectly clear that the Privy Council assumed that the Crown was a part and parcel of the Government of the different Provinces. And in the case of British Columbia against the Dominion, the Judicial Committee held the prerogatives of the Crown, so far as they related to lands, mines and minerals, were in the Province. It does seem to me, that that being the case, the decision in the St. Catharines Milling Company case in this particular over-rides the decision of the Supreme Court in the case to which the hon. gentleman has referred; and if that be so, undoubtedly the power of the Crown, as represented by the Governor General, to appoint Queen's Counsel, would be a power to appoint Queen's Counsel for the courts of the Dominion, and not for the courts of the various Provinces. Now, when you look at the provisions of the law in this particular, when you look at its history, you find that the Crown originally, when it appointed a prosecutor to conduct the Crown business on circuit, recognised that prosecutor as a Queen's Counsel extraordinary; he was the Queen's Counsel for that purpose; he had not a permanent appointment, but he had a temporary and a provisional appointment. If you have in the various Provinces a party appointed to prosecute offenders in the Queen's name, the party who appoints the persons so to prosecute is a party who appoints a Queen's Counsel, the appointment being an appointment of Queen's Counsel extraordinary. In the Palatinate Governments the party appointed to prosecute was the counsel of the Lord Palatine, because the Lord Palatine, having royal rights, was entitled to have parties who offended against his law prosecuted in his name, and that being so, the prosecutions were so conducted. But the appointment of a Queen's Counsel is the appointment of a party to act on the Queen's behalf permanently, and, in its character and spirit, it is not at all different from the appointment of a person to conduct the Crown business upon circuit. The first appointment of Queen's Counsel that ever took place was that of Sir Francis North, for prosecuting Denzil Hollis, in the place of the Attorney General, before the House of Lords. That was the first case of a permanent appointment, and before that all the parties who prosecuted on behalf of the Crown were simply persons appointed to prosecute on circuit, or before any court in which the Crown had a right to have a party appear on its behalf. So, if you deny to the Provincial Legislature, or the Lieutenant Governor, under a Provincial statute, the right to appoint Queen's Counsel, you deny his right to appoint a person to conduct the Crown business on circuit in the various Provinces. Now, I say that has never been contended, that has never been argued, and if that be so, I think it is clear that the appointment of Queen's Counsel in Provincial courts is an appointment by the Crown upon the advice of the Attorney General of the Province. The Minister of Justice is not the head of the bar of each Province, as the Attorney General is the head of the bar in England. The Minister of Justice may not be a member of the bar at all, in many of the Provinces; and how can he advise the Crown in regard to the appointment of persons to prosecute on the Crown's behalf, in a Provincial court, when he is himself, perhaps, not a member of the bar in that particular Province? The Attorney General, as the head of that bar, advises appointments from that bar on behalf of Her Majesty, but otherwise he has not that power, unless, indeed, it is specially conferred upon him by the British North America Act, and I do not think the hon. gentleman can argue seriously, that that is the case. I agree with the Minister of Justice that this is not a proper place to undertake to argue this question. I had not looked into the subject for many years, but I dissented from the views which the Minister of Justice had expressed to the House, and I thought it was only proper, before this matter was disposed of, that I should give my reasons for so dissenting.

Amendment withdrawn, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Superintendence of Insurance..... $9,500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are the sums paid by the various insurance companies sufficient to cover this amount?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; they meet the whole expenditure.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. For what purpose is the additional $500 required?

Mr. FOSTER. The Superintendent reports that an extra clerk is required in the Department.

Geological Survey..... $60,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It has been usual for the Minister in charge of this Department to give the Committee a general summary of the manner in which it is proposed to expend the vote during the coming year.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I presume the hon. gentleman means a statement in regard to the different parties in the field, the principal expenditure being incurred under the surveys. Last year the parties were divided as follows: Dr. G. M. Dawson and Mr. Bowman were engaged in British Columbia, the latter not being a permanent officer of the Department, but engaged in the mineral work last year. Dr. Dawson made a flying visit to the Kootenay district, which is being rapidly developed, and he made a short report, which is now printed, and will be distributed tomorrow, I hope. Mr. McConnell spent last season in the Athabasca district, where large oil districts are being surveyed. Mr. Tyrrell was in Manitoba, along the western shore of Lake Winnipeg and Lake Winnipegosis. Dr. Lawson was engaged on the north-west portion of the shore of Lake Superior. Mr. Ingall was engaged in the phosphate district. Dr. Bell was employed in the Sudbury district. Mr. Low was in the Eastern Townships. Mr. Ells was occupied in the southwest section of the Eastern Townships. Mr. Adams was also in the Eastern Townships. Professor Bailey was engaged in the northern portion of New Brunswick, near the boundary between New Brunswick and Quebec. Mr. McInnes was employed near River du Loup. Mr. Chalmers was engaged in New Brunswick, Mr. Fletcher in Nova Scotia. I may say, generally, that the work for the coming year will be an extension of these surveys, unless any point of special interest should need the services of members of the staff immediately. The disposition of the staff during the present year will be as follows:—

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY—PROPOSED EXPLORATIONS FOR SEASON 1890.

British Columbia; Dawson, Dr. G. M.; Mr. McEvoy, assistant; Bowman, A.

North-West Territory: McConnell, R., assistant; Petroleum District to Athabasca Lake, &c.

Manitoba: Tyrrell, J. B.; Mr. Dowling, assistant; Duck and Riding Mountains, &c.

Ontario: Bell, Dr. Robert; Mr. A. Barlow, assistant; Sudbury District. Mr. Cochrane, correction and additions to topography, Ontario map series. Lawson, Dr. A.; Mr. Smith, assistant; Port Arthur and Pigeon River.

Quebec: Ellis, Dr. R.; Mr. Giroux, assistant; South-western sheet, E. T. Map. Low, A. P., assistant; N. W. sheet E. T. Map and line of Lake St. John Railway. Laflamme, Rev. Prof.; Ingall, E. D.; Phosphate Region. Mr. White, assistant, field surveying and mining statistic work. Mr. Brumell, statistical work.

New Brunswick: Bailey, Professor, 3 months; Mr. McLunes, assistant; boundary of Quebec and New Brunswick. Chalmers, R., assistant; superficial geology, soils, timber, &c.

Nova Scotia: Fletcher, Mr. H.; Faribault, E. R., assistant; Gold District.

(General LAURIE. In what counties in Nova Scotia will the work be continued?)

Mr. DEWDNEY. Mr. Fletcher, I think, was last year in the Pictou district, and it is proposed to continue the work there. There has been an application from some gentlemen in Nova Scotia that he should report on some gold deposits, I forget exactly the locality, but I think in Pictou County; and although an examination had already been made there, it was found necessary to make further inspection, and Mr. Fletcher was asked to do it. An application has also been made for the survey of another gold section, and it is hoped that Mr. Fletcher's assistant, Mr. Faribault, will be able to attend to it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In addition to this sum of $60,000 we spend $47,000 in payment of salaries, making $107,000. Having reference to the enormous extent of our Dominion, I cannot say that the amount is a large one; but I am aware that a considerable number of persons, whose opinions are entitled to respect, are of the opinion that we get very little for the money we spend on the survey, and that, in view of the fact that in eight or ten years a million of dollars are expended, but small economic results are arrived at. I made a suggestion, I think last year, to the Minister, which I had made without success on other occasions to the hon. gentleman's predecessors, and which I think, looking at the fact that we own enormous quantities of land in the North-West, might be worthy of consideration, even although I make it, and that was this: It would be well that a certain portion of the money should be expended in making borings through certain sections of the country; as probably the Minister of the Interior knows, very great improvements in the way of constructing machines for boring have been made within the last few years, and there are many inventions by Americans and others, connected with that, which enables boring to be done very cheaply. I cannot help thinking that it would be very greatly to our advantage, as being practically the landlords of an enormous tract of territory in the North-West, if we caused to be made, at proper distances, a number of trial borings in different sections of the country. I believe we would learn more in that way of the real nature of the country we have possession of than we would by a very considerable number of these superficial surveys.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I quite agree with a great deal of what has been said by the hon. gentleman, and I assure him that I did not forget the suggestion which he made last year. I dare say he has heard that an artesian well has been commenced at Deloraine, in Manitoba. The settlers themselves subscribed the money, and the municipality taxed themselves for the purpose of making this well to the full extent they could under their by-law. They sank the well to the depth of some 1,300 feet, when they got stuck for money, and they appealed to this Government to help them. I felt so much inclined to assist them that I made a recommendation to my colleagues, and a sum of money will appear in the Supplementary Estimates to enable these people to sink the well to the depth at which they believe, and which is believed by the Director of our Survey, they will strike water. This summer, Dr. Selwyn visited the artesian wells which are south of Deloraine, in Northern Dakota, in order to get some information in regard to them, and he refers to them in his report this year. Mr. Tyrrell also visited the wells that are being sunk at Deloraine, for the purpose of getting some information, and he states that the parties who had charge of the boring made a note of the strata at every five feet, and had kept specimens for the information of the Government. We had given $500 at this time, out of our Geological vote, to assist them; and subsequently the Government granted $2,000. They are still at work, and every day I expect to get some information as to their progress. I mention this because I do hope we shall be able to demonstrate that we have a large area with an artesian basin in the North-West, which will prove of the very greatest benefit to the country. While we are getting information with regard to the strata we shall also, I hope, be able to supply a portion of the country where they have no water, and where the settlers are suffering for want of it. There is a notice on the paper in reference to irrigation in the Territories, and in consequence of that, I was aware that this would come up. Although I cannot agree with some gentlemen's views with regard to irrigation in the North-West Territories, to the extent to which some of them would go, I believe a great deal of good can be done by sinking artesian wells, and I intend to propose to recommend to carry out the ideas, not only of hon. gentlemen in this respect, but also the views and the hopes of a great number of settlers in the Territories, so as to enable them to obtain a plentiful supply of water where now they have great difficulty in securing it.

Mr. CASEY. My hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) has expressed the views of a great many hon. gentlemen in this House, and of a great number of the people of the country, when he hints that the people and their representatives here do not feel they are getting value for the money expended on this Geological service. The hon. Minister and myself are quite old enough to remember the condition of our Geological Survey under the late Sir William Logan. We all know that at that time, with a very much smaller staff of assistants, and at a vastly less expenditure than we have to pay out now, that gentleman made the Geological Survey of Canada the admiration of the scientific world. It was, I may say, the pioneer Geological Survey upon this continent. Since that time our neighbors across the line, moved to admiration by the scientific achievements of that splendid Survey, and especially of its practical usefulness, have gone into the business themselves. Many of the States of the Union have established Geological Surveys, and there is also, I believe, a Federal Geological Survey which takes a general oversight of the geological explorations of the whole of the United States. These surveys are doing most valuable work, in mapping out the country and giving a general scientific report of the strata found in different parts of the Laurentian and other formations—I will not go into technicalities which I do not understand very well. Besides, these surveys are adding greatly to the wealth of the country by their practical discoveries. The surveyors in the United States have been, as our surveyors under Sir William Logan were, discoverers of great deposits of economic minerals in different parts of the country. They have also traced valuable deposits already known to a considerable distance from the place they were first discovered, and in thus pointing out to capitalists where there was an opportunity of investment they have added greatly to the wealth of the country. It cannot be claimed that our Geological Survey, for several years past, has been doing anything of this kind. I take some little interest in the matter. I look at the Geological Report from year to year, and I am unaware that for a good many years past our Survey has materially extended our knowledge of the mineral resources of Canada. I say "materially," because no doubt it has extended our knowledge to some extent, mostly in regard to previously known deposits. But, Sir, nothing has been done with our present large staff, and our present large expenditure, that could compare for a moment with the achievements of the small staff, and the small expenditure, under Sir William Logan. I do not know whether the fault rests with the Department, in their general management of the Survey, or with the Survey itself, on account of its management of the details of the operations. We had a few years ago, a committee to enquire into this matter, whose report was laid before the House, and which report did not attract at that time, nor since, the attention which it ought to have received. I would call the attention of the hon. Minister to that report, as it was before his time in this House, and he may have remained unaware that this important question was discussed before the Committee and an opinion pronounced thereon.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I have read the report.

Mr. CASEY. Having read that report, I am astonished that the hon. Minister has not something more definite to propose to us in the way of reforming—I will not say the "abuses"—because I do not mean to use such a strong word, but of reforming the general state of inefficiency into which the Survey appeared at that time to have fallen, and in which it still appears to remain. There are, I must say, some marked exceptions in the way of explorations by some members of the Survey, but little appears to have been done in the way of explorations of a geological type. A great deal has been ascertained in a general way about the fertility of the North-West, about its flora and fauna, by special explorers, and who have been sent out to report on the general features of the country and its fitness for settlement, rather than upon its geological features. Without being invidious, I might refer to the explorations of Professor

Mr. CASEY.

Macoun and Professor Bell; these two gentlemen, among others, have added largely to our knowledge of the country. If all the revenues of the Survey had been spent to as good purpose as those spent in promoting their explorations, I should not have these complaints to make. But I find that a very large portion of the funds voted by this House are spent in exploring, for example, coal mines in Cape Breton and other parts of Nova Scotia, already very well known to capitalists, and not in any sense the property of this Dominion. They were originally the property of the Province, and they have since, to a very great extent, passed into the hands of private individuals; and the effect of the survey of those lands amounted to mapping out the coal deposits of that part of the country for their benefit. The elaboration of the details has not been to add to the wealth of the Dominion, but rather to add to the wealth of the individuals who have already acquired those lands. I do not think it is the business of this Dominion to survey the lands of private parties for them.

Committee rose; and it being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. CASEY. When you left the Chair at six o'clock I was referring to the explorations conducted during the last few years by the Geological Survey, and I pointed out that a very large proportion of the work done under that Survey consisted in the development of private property, referring, for example, to the coal mines of Nova Scotia. It was no doubt desirable that a good general map of that region should be had, but I contend that it is none of our business to provide perfect detailed maps of coal deposits which have passed into the hands of private parties. The capitalists who invested their money in them were and are quite able and ready to make the fullest explorations of the lands which they hold in fee simple from the Province of Nova Scotia, and their own work might have been left to themselves. It was not only not our duty to vote money for the purpose of developing these private properties, but it was distinctly our duty to abstain from doing anything of the kind. The true scope of the Dominion Geological Survey is to develop, by exploration, analysis, and all other possible means, the lands that belong to the Dominion, and to explore and develop other lands belonging to the Crown, but held in the name of any of the Provinces. I contend that only Crown lands as yet ungranted should be developed and advertised at the expense of the people of the country. Of course it will be necessary, once in a while, in carrying on a survey of this kind, to take note of property belonging to private individuals, where something noteworthy occurs that requires to be investigated, in order to assist in the investigation of cognate matters. For instance, a vein of ore may start on private property, and continue some distance outside of it, and the whole vein must be mapped out to give any idea of its extent and value. But the primary reason for the existence of a Geological Survey is to make known to the country and to investors who may be ready to invest their money in them the extent of our mineral resources. So far from accomplishing this object at the present time, it is the fact that a gentleman, of whose business I have some little knowledge by hearsay, applied to the Geological Survey, some years ago, for information in regard to certain mineral deposits within the Dominion; I need not specify the exact locality. He applied as the agent of a large syndicate of capitalists in Great Britain who wished to invest a large sum of money—I was told it was half a million pounds sterling—in some good paying mineral region. My friend simply asked the Geological Survey for a little practical information in regard to the region that had been recommended. He informed the head of the Survey that he did not expect him to guarantee any particular results from the mines, but he wished to get such practical information as would enable capitalists to decide whether it was worth their while to make further explorations of the neighborhood. The answer I received from the head of the Department was that it was none of the business of the Geological Survey to give such information to investors. If that be not part of its business, I should like to know what is. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior expressed the intention of the Government to include a sum in the Supplementary Estimates for the purpose of boring for water in certain parts of the North-West Territories, with the subsidiary intention of ascertaining the distribution of the tiers of strata at the same time. My contention is not that the Government should not make these experiments in artesian wells, but that they should be able to make them out of the grant the House has been already asked to vote; and they could do this by the very simple process of curtailing expenses in other directions, as, for instance, the advertising of private property. But, if it should be found, after the practice of such economy as I have suggested in one direction, that it would be desirable to go a little further than the Minister promised to go in the other direction, namely, that of testing the value of our own land, I, for one, would not be inclined to oppose a considerable vote for that purpose. We should find out the value of our own territory and make it known to the investing world at large. The sooner we make it possible, by adopting a financial policy which I shall not discuss at present, for foreign investors to put their money profitably into Canadian mines, the sooner we shall become a rich and flourishing nation. We hear every day, near the north shore of Lake Superior, in the district around Sudbury, on the Canadian Pacific Railway, north of Lake Nipissing, from various quarters of British Columbia, even from the prairies of the North-West, where, some ten or fifteen years ago, nobody thought of looking for minerals, of discoveries being made of deposits of the greatest value, whether of metal or of coal, and yet we do not find that the operations of the Government Survey, which may be looked upon merely as an agency for ascertaining our corporate wealth as a nation, have been directed intelligently towards developing these deposits of which we hear. No doubt a cursory survey has been had of the mining district north of Lake Superior; no doubt a report of some sort has been had of the Sudbury district;

no doubt a year ago Mr. Dawson made as good an exploration as could be made in the time at his disposal, of the Kootenay district, and regions in British Columbia; but there has been no systematic and thorough survey of those particular parts of the Dominion where the greatest mineral wealth has been developed in the past few years. That is what we ought to get for our money and that is what we have not got. I find, in looking over my notes, that I have omitted to mention one particular exploration which took place within the last few years, and which has been of general value, though coming more under the head of an exploratory expedition than of a geological survey. I refer to Dr. Dawson's expedition to the neighborhood of the boundary between British Columbia and Alaska, which resulted in furnishing us with much valuable information, though necessarily of a somewhat superficial nature, owing to the limited time at the Doctor's disposal and the vast extent of country he had to visit. But I say such an exploration as that was rather connected with the Crown Lands branch of the service. In fact, I hardly know what Department to mention as the proper one to conduct that exploration. It was an exploration to find out the general nature of the country near the boundary between us and the United States territory, in that direction. It was not, in the strict sense of the word, a geological exploration, and it could not be, under the circumstances. I wish to give credit to the Department for what it has done, and, therefore, mention this now, in connection with these general explorations and cursory surveys which have resulted in information of great material use to the country. This information itself has been unconscionably delayed. We have in the blue book laid on the Table for 1889 the report of Dr. Dawson, to which I have just referred, and a sprinkling of others, ranging from the beginning of the season of 1887 down to the season of 1888. Now, if the information collected by the Geological Survey is not to be laid before the public until more than two years after it has been obtained, that fact alone is a most convincing proof of the inefficiency either of the Survey itself, as a Department, or of the greater Department of the Interior, which controls its general line of policy, and under whose instructions it must act. Of course, the members of the Survey are not responsible for the delay in the publication of their reports, unless they have been behindhand in sending them in, and I do not believe such has been the case. I believe they have been sent in as soon as could be expected after the explorations were made, but the Department, for reasons best known to itself, has been so careless as to delay many of these reports over two years from the time the information was acquired. I may be asked what I would suggest that the Survey should do. I would suggest, in the first place, that a thorough survey, not a mere rough exploration, should be made as early as possible of all the regions possessing railway facilities, in which Crown lands are situated and in which the existence of minerals is ascertained or suspected. There is no use in exploring places where we have no hope of finding minerals, but all the places where the existence of valuable minerals has already been ascertained, or is suspected by experts, and which are near the great transcontinental railway or any of its branches, should be examined as early as possible, and examined, not in a superficial way, but so thoroughly that the survey would afford capitalists some fair idea as to whether it would pay them to invest in one locality or another. In the second place, the regions already known to contain valuable deposits should be again surveyed, and I may mention Sudbury, the Lake Superior mining district and the gold mining district of British Columbia as practical instances. Further, it should be the duty of the Survey to furnish to any enquirer such information as they have in their possession. It has been asserted—I do not know how truly—that an agent of that Survey has taken it upon himself, in one case in the Province of Ontario, to furnish information in regard to something which might be found under the surface of the earth, not to the general public, or to the first enquiring investor, but to political friends, in advance of the publication of his report. It has even been alleged that he has given that information in advance of the publication of his report to a member of the Government, and that, in consequence of such information being given before the report was made public, a company was formed which now includes the said member of the Government, and of which the said agent of the Geological Survey is now the manager and at the same time a shareholder.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds and Grenville). Name.

Mr. CASEY. I will give the names of the parties. I have said that this is alleged. I do not know whether it is true or not, but I state the facts as given to me in order to elicit information on the subject.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds and Grenville). You cannot state facts unless you know them.

Mr. CASEY. The agent of the Department to whom I referred is Mr. Coste, who, I understand, was sent to look for natural gas in the County of Essex, and the member of the Government to whom he is alleged to have given information is the hon. the Postmaster General. It is stated that a company was formed before Mr. Coste's report was made public, and that the Postmaster General is a member of that company and Mr. Coste is the manager. I shall be glad to be assured that this is not so, but I should like to hear from the Minister of the Interior whether Mr. Coste is now in the employment of the Government, or whether he is the manager of a company to develop natural gas in the County of Essex; and, if that is so, whether he became connected with that company before or after his report to the Government was made public and available to investors at large, and that is only within a few months. I think I have made sufficiently clear my views as to what should be the general purposes and operation of this Survey. I wish now to call attention to one or two details of the local administration of the Department which do not concern the Survey, but which do concern the Minister who is at the head of that Department. I find, for instance, that, during the year for which we have the Auditor General's account very considerable sums were paid to different parties for lithographing and printing maps connected with that Survey. I find that the British American Bank Note Co., the Burland Lithographic Co., George E. Desbarats & Co., and Mortimer & Co., received payments on this account, and the sums paid were very considerable, especially in the case of the Burland Lithographic Co., who received over $2,600. I should like to know whether this was let by contract, or in what way it was given. Then I find that very considerable sums have been paid for other kinds of printing, which I suppose means ordinary letter-press work, to two newspapers which are certainly not inimical to the Government of the day. I refer to the items of balance for printing of 1888 to the La Minerve, Montreal, $1,513, and a payment of $5,606 to the Gazette Printing Company of Montreal "on account of $7,500 for printing." I suppose this means that this $5,600 is part of a contract to do $7,500 worth of printing, on which only this amount has been paid. Year after year the Department has been asked why they had this printing done in Montreal instead of by the Government printers here in Ottawa. For some years the excuse was that the headquarters of the Geological Survey were in Montreal. My recollection goes back to that somewhat distant time. But for many years the Geological Survey has been located in Ottawa, and the system of having this work done by the journalistic friends of the Government has been continued, and it has been done by the Montreal Gazette instead of by the Government printers. But no excuse has been given to the House for that course, and now, when we have a Government Printing Bureau, I must ask the Minister to state whether he intends in future to give out this extensive amount of printing to the Gazette and to La Minerve of Montreal or to have it done in that magnificent structure which has been, at great expense, erected in this city to do all the Government printing? It was stated that great economy would result from the establishment of the bureau of printing, and no doubt great economy might result from it if the original intentions were carried out; but, if these large slices of Government printing are to be given in the future, as in the past, to outsiders, as a bit of fat is thrown to the terrier that follows at one's heels, the result will not be attained. I desire the Minister to give his attention to these points. In the first place, was the lithographing let by contract or by private arrangement? In the second place, is it the intention of the Government to continue letting their printing to newspaper offices, or to other parties outside of the Government Bureau itself? Surely, on these two points the hon. gentleman can give us definite information, and I would like to hear a more explicit statement as to the intentions of the Government as to the general operation of the Survey for the next year.

Mr. MARA. I am glad to hear that the Government intend in the North-West to bore for water and prospect for minerals. The Government must not forget that they are also landlords in British Columbia and own a vast territory there, over 500 miles in length by 40 in width. They must also recollect that they are now deriving a large revenue from that section of the country, and they owe it to the Province of British Columbia to assist in the development of that country. Croppings of coal have been discovered at Golden, Kamloops and Ashcroft. If the Dominion Government, by boring, can demonstrate that coal exists in those districts, they will be able to sell large areas of land at $10 an acre that to-day are worthless. Then, again, in the valley of the Thompson there are thousands of acres of rich land now lying waste and valueless for want of water. If, by a system of boring, the Government can demonstrate that these lands can be successfully irrigated, the lands can be sold at $10 per acre. The Province is about to inaugurate a system of boring, and I would suggest to the Government that they should work along with the Province; it would be cheaper for both. If the Dominion Government would place a small sum in the Estimates this year, say $2,500, they could commence work with the Provincial Government, and if the enterprise proved successful, the grant could be increased next year. I would strongly urge upon the Minister of Interior the necessity of attempting something of the kind this year. If successful, this Government will receive the lion's share, because they would reap a direct benefit from the sale of the lands, besides indirect advantages derived from increased population, and an increase in the customs and excise.

Mr. DEWDNEY. In answer to the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey), I must say that I perfectly agree with him that our officers should not be employed to report on private property. I did not understand from him what private property he had heard that our geologists had reported upon. I think he referred to the coal districts in Nova Scotia.

Mr. CASEY. I mentioned those as a typical example of what is going on.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Since I have had the honor of being connected with the Department, the Director has informed me that he has always been averse to reporting directly on private properties or on properties of companies. A short time after I took charge of the Department several applications were made to me by private individuals to allow our engineers or geological surveyors to report on private properties. I refused; and on the Department being still further pressed, I submitted the matter to my colleagues in Council, who decided to instruct me to issue a regulation forbidding any of our engineers to report upon the private property of individuals. If the hon. gentlemen had read the Bill which has been introduced into this House he would find there a clause forbidding our surveyors to do that, which will relieve the Director and myself from the annoyance to which we have been subjected in that respect. The hon. gentleman has referred to the survey made in olden times, under the supervision of Sir William Logan, and the work which is now being carried on. I admit that the amount of money voted in those days was not as large as at present, but I cannot agree with him that the work now being carried on is not of equal importance; indeed, it is certainly equal, if not superior, to the work which was carried on in those days. If the hon. gentleman will examine the reports published in those years, and compare them with the reports published to-day, I think he will come to the conclusion that I am right in this statement. I know there is a feeling amongst a great number of people in this country that the Geological Department is not doing justice to the country; but I am glad to say that we have, from other portions of the world, especially from the United States, very complimentary letters from geological experts in that country, not only congratulating us upon the work which we are doing, but also giving great credit to the officers in our Department. I must say, from what I know of the officers connected with the Department, that I believe there is no Geological Department in America, or in the world, which has men of greater talent than are to be found to-day in the employment of our Department.

Mr. CASEY. I am not disputing that in the slightest.

Mr. DEWDNEY. With regard to the conduct of the Survey, that must necessarily be left, in a great measure, to the Director of the Department. If he is not fit to do that, certainly he is not fit to be at the head of the Department. The hon. gentleman must know that Dr. Selwyn had been engaged in this work for years before he came into this country. He has now been engaged in that work in this country twenty-five years, I think, under successive Governments. I consider that he is a gentleman of great abilities, great experience, and a man unequalled in capacity for the position he holds. Every man has his failings, and probably the Director has his. Although I have had no difficulty with him, I know that he is a gentleman who has opinions of his own, and a gentleman who likes to stick to his opinions; at the same time, I believe he is conscientious in his work, and I think he has well earned the salary which has been paid to him since he entered our service. He has been now for twenty years or more in our service, and his salary is just the same now as it was at the beginning. I think we have received from him good service for the salary he has received. The hon. gentleman in one breath says that our Departments should be able to show to capitalists, or to people who wish to invest, where they can profitably invest their money.

Mr. CASEY. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The hon. gentleman stated that our service should be able to show the people who wish to invest their money where they can do so.

Mr. CASEY. No; I did not. What I said was, that we ought to be able to furnish to investors such general information as they, in their position, required, regarding different regions where minerals exist, and which might form the basis for investment by those capitalists. At all events, that is what I meant to say.

Mr. DEWDNEY. In the next breath the hon. gentleman complains, as I understood him, that in some instances our officers were doing so.

Mr. CASEY. Yes.

Mr. DEWDNEY. He referred to a gentleman who, I may tell him, has left our Department for a year or more, and he said this gentleman had made use of his information for the benefit of private individuals when he was in the service of the Department.

Mr. CASEY. Exactly; I said I was told so.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The gentleman named may have taken credit to himself for making the valuable discovery to which the hon. gentleman referred; but I think, if the hon. gentleman will read the reports previous to that, he will find that the Director of the Survey had indicated a locality in the peninsula in western Ontario where, if borings were made, gas would be discovered.

Mr. CASEY. In his report he indicated this ?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The Director of the Survey indicated this several years before, and he discovered where gas could be found. The hon. gentleman stated that Mr. Coste had taken upon himself to furnish to political friends the information which he had received while in the service of the Department. I do not know exactly whether Mr. Coste had been sent specially to survey there or not. I think not.

Mr. CASEY. He did make a special survey, and I have his report.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The Director had himself reported. Mr. Coste may have done so; at all events, he has left the Department and has not been in the service for a year. I think the hon. gentleman does not understand what the object of our Geological Survey should be. I quite agree that it certainly should not be to report for the profit of private individuals. I also agree that the surveyors should be most careful in their reports, as otherwise they are liable to lead capitalists into trouble. With regard to all our men, from the Director down, I can say this: I have read the reports for years back, even before I expected to come to this House, and when they were reporting specially on British Columbia I was struck with the very careful manner in which they reported on mineral districts which I knew were most valuable and important. I give credit to the staff for those reports, and it is the duty of the geologist, especially any young man, to exercise the utmost care in making his report. In an article published in the American Geologist in March this year, by John C. Brenner, a noted geologist in the United States, on "The Training of a Geologist," he says:

"The necessity of caution on the part of the young geologist, in publishing conclusions that one feels to be open to criticism, or when he sees that important facts may be over looked, cannot be too strongly emphasised. The publication of facts is generally useful, but deductions can afford to wait until they are properly matured. A most valuable piece of advice was once given to me, to the effect that young people would better not begin pumping out of their intellectual reservoir before something has been pumped into them."

In another paragraph, referring to another matter, the writer says:

"I may say briefly that a professional geologist, especially if he is in a public place, such as State Geologist, in any way connected with the State or National Survey, has no moral right to have a personal interest in any mining property, or in any other property, a knowledge of the value of which might come to him through his knowledge of geology. Abstaining from such interests is a duty the geologist in the public employ owes to himself as well as to the public, and the public has the right both to expect and to demand that its employes shall not walk off with the profits of its investments, just as the manufacturer has the right to demand that his employes shall not appropriate the articles they make."

I perfectly agree with those sentiments, and it is in accordance with those sentiments that I introduce the Bill this year. In regard to other question put by the hon. gentleman, as to the publication of reports and maps and why the contracts were not let for the lithographing of the maps, the hon. gentleman must know that these are works requiring very great care, and it is being performed by the Burland Lithographic Company, and we have had no occasion to change that arrangement with the firm. With regard to the publication of the report, it is the intention of the Government to utilise the new Printing Bureau for printing our reports, so far as it is capable of doing so. This year the French translation has been printed in the Government Bureau. The English edition, as has been the custom, was published in the Gazette office, for, I am sorry to say, the Printing Bureau was unable to do it on account of pressure of work; but I hope this is the last time it will be published outside of the Bureau. With respect to the remarks made by the hon. member from British Columbia (Mr. Mara), if the Government will agree to adopt my suggestion and commence boring in different parts of the territory I shall be glad to see the system extended to British Columbia. With respect to boring and sinking of artesian wells or other works, I am not at all satisfied that it would be advisable for the Government to take the matter into its own hands and do the work as heretofore with its own machinery and gang of men. I hold this opinion because the machinery is very heavy; it has to be transported at great cost, not only the machinery, but also the lumber in connection with the power to be used, and when breaks occur, the men drawing Government pay will not hurry about remedying the repairs. I, therefore, propose to recommend, if we do anything in this direction, that we should let the work by contract at so much per foot, which will be the cheapest and most satisfactory way. There are firms in Ontario and the United States perfectly willing to undertake contracts of this kind.

Mr. CASEY. It will be given by tender, of course ?

Mr. DEWDNEY. By tender.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman has stated that the reason why the lithographing has been left in the same hands without asking for tender was that the work had been done by those parties for many years, and satisfactorily. That may be quite true, but a great many years have elapsed since the Burland Lithographic Company united to form a company to execute fine work. Since that time a number of other companies have sprang into existence to execute fine work. It is the duty of the Government to remember that the country has not failed to advance, although the Department may have done so. Although the Department may follow old-fashioned methods, it is their duty to ascertain whether the Government cannot obtain the same class of work at lower rates than those that are now paid. It appears that the letter-press work which was formerly done by the Gazette and La Minerve was done last year by W. Foster Brown & Co., of Montreal, as I find from the imprint on the book. I do not know whether or not the Gazette has fallen from favor with the hon. Minister, but, at all events, W. Foster Brown & Co. seem to have done the work, and they did not get it by tender, nor could they have obtained it on the ground that they had performed it for years satisfactorily. The hon. Minister may be able to explain this.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). What about the price ?

Mr. CASEY. The price is given in a lump sum for the year before. We cannot yet tell what it cost last year, unless the hon. Minister is able to inform us. In regard to my pretension that the Department ought to supply information to investors, the Minister said that I complained because Mr. Coste had furnished such information. What I urged was that the Department itself, and not the officers of the Department, should furnish information to investors; but I never said that even the Department should furnish that information before it had been made public by presentation to this House. Everyone knows it would be a very great scandal if even the Department gave information to intending investors, without letting it be known to the public at large. But if an investor wants to know about a particular region the Department should send him the information they have in their blue books about that region. That is one of the purposes for which the Department was established, but the Coste matter is very different. I am sorry the Minister has not been able to deny the allegations about Mr. Coste's action which have been made to me, and, through me, conveyed to the House. These allegations are that Mr. Coste, not only before the presentation of his report, but before it was sent to the Department, had given private information to other parties that, he knew gas to exist in a certain locality, and that on the basis of that information, a company, of which he became manager, was formed to utilise that gas. The charge is, that he used the information he acquired while an officer of this Geological Survey for the purpose of putting money in his own pocket, and in the pockets of the members of the company with which he is now associated. Now, as to whether an hon. Minister, who had been mentioned here, had any connection with this matter or not, I cannot say, or as to whether he had any knowledge of the improper manner in which Mr. Coste had acted I will not attempt to judge. That will be for himself to make clear, as soon as he thinks it is his duty to do so. It is a matter that ought to be explained, and I hope he will explain it, since the hon. Minister at the head of the Department does not seem to know anything about it. I accept the hon. Minister's statement that the Department has issued instructions to their explorers not to explore private properties for the personal information of the owners thereof. I did not charge that they had gone to examine "John Jones' mines" or "Tom Smith's mines" for the purpose of furnishing information to them personally, but what I complained of was that the public money had been spent in making detailed maps, and explorations, and borings of property, which was in the hands of private individuals, and which were good for nothing else but to advertise that private property. Let me give you an example of how this advertising of private property is done. From the Geological Report of the year 1889 we find in the "list of plates and maps" accompanying this volume the following: Plans I to IX, plans of mines: Silver Islet, Pie and McKellar's Islands, Spar Island, Jarvis Island, Shuniah Mines, Minerals 3A Mine, Porcupine and Rabbit Mountain Mines, Beaver Mines and Silver Mountain and Crown Point Mines, and views of Rabbit Mountain Mines. One of these is a picture and the other are plans and maps of the mines. We find from the report of 1889 that a number of these plans and maps and lithographing are done for the benefit of the owners of these mines and at very great expense to the public. This should be put an end to. It only remains for me to remark that I am sorry to find that our wonderful Printing Bureau has not yet been able to undertake all the work that has come before it, and that, according to the Minister's statement, there is yet a prospect of the Government being able to give some work to their political friends of the newspapers which support them. This defect in the Printing Bureau must be owing to a mistaken idea as to what it would be able to accomplish when it was first started, or to the mismanagement of the Bureau after it has been established. Whichever is the true reason, I hope this state of things will not be continued any longer. I trust we will find that the country, after having been put to enormous expense for erecting that Printing Bureau to do the public work, shall not be put to the further expense of having a large slice of the Government printing done outside this Government Bureau.

Mr. MARA. The Provincial Government in British Columbia has already taken means to carry on "borings" in certain parts of the Province, and have purchased the necessary plant to commence operations in the early spring. While it is to the interest of both the Dominion and the Provincial Governments that these experiments should be carried on near the line of railway, yet, if water is discovered there, the Dominion Government will have the greater part of the benefit, because they have lands to sell, while the Provincial Government has none. I, therefore, think that a special sum should be voted by this Parliament to assist the British Columbia Government in boring for water as well as for minerals in lands within the railway belt. I think there should be money set apart, outside of the general vote for this special purpose, as the Minister has explained that it is his intention to call for tenders and to carry on these borings by contract. I think in this case there ought to be a special vote to assist the British Columbia Government in carrying on the borings which they contemplate carrying on this year.

Mr. TROW. I do not rise to make any objections to the grant to the Geological Survey. I think the resources of this country of ours are worthy of considerable expense in their exploration. We are possessed of rich minerals in almost every Province of the Dominion. I dissent from the remarks made by the hon. member for West Elgin, and also by the Minister, in regard to private enterprises. I think private parties should be able to get the services of any of the officers of the Department, when they are not otherwise employed, to examine and report upon private enterprises in the interest of the country at large, so long as they pay all the expenses. As an illustration, I may say that a gas well for natural gas has been started in the city of Ottawa, and I understand that some $4,000 has already been expended upon it.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Nearly $10,000.

Mr. TROW. By examining a geographical map in the Department, drawn by Prof. Dawson, any one must come to the conclusion that people might bore there to eternity without getting any gas, because it is out of the region of natural gas. But there is a region extending from St. Catharines to Essex Centre where natural gas flows in many places on the surface, and it takes no exploration to find it. I look upon Mr. Coste as a creature of circumstances in many instances. He has fallen upon a region which has been explored and reported upon by others before his day, and by following in their wake he has been successful where almost any explorer could have succeeded as well as he. I hope the Minister will take into consideration the propriety of aiding the settlers in the North-West by sinking artesian wells in settlements where the land is arid and where there is a deficiency of wholesome water. By very little expenditure you may succeed in accommodating a hundred settlers even with one artesian well. I think a few thousand dollars expended in the North-West in that way would have a very beneficial effect on the future settlement of that great country. On the other side of the line, south of Lake Superior, 500 per cent. has been expended by the State of Michigan in explorations more than we expend altogether, and anyone passing up one side of the lake and down the other can see the spirit of enterprise displayed on the other side, while those who are acquainted with the geology of the country say that our mineral wealth far surpasses theirs. If the proprietors of the project I have spoken of in the city here under our eyes had got the opinion of one of the professors of the Geological Survey, who make such matters a life study, it would have satisfied them that it was utterly useless to make any effort in this locality and the $10,000 would have been saved.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Let me state to the hon. member that the parties who sunk the well in Ottawa did it in the face of an adverse report made by Dr. Selwyn, who advised them not to sink the well, and told them that if they did they would find no gas.

Mr. CASEY. I must differ in one respect only from my hon. friend the member for South Perth (Mr. Trow). I do not think the officers of the country engaged on this Survey should be allowed practically to hire themselves out for the benefit of private parties. Their whole service is needed by the Department to which they belong, and if a private party wants explorations made on his own property he should hire his own expert. At the same time, he is entitled to all that the Department knows from previous explorations with regard to it, and should be able to obtain it without expense.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). I should not have said one word except for the last expression of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down. He said that the opinion of none of the Government officers should be employed to enhance the value of important discoveries made by private individuals. On that point I decidedly disagree with him. During the last few years the range of Laurentian Mountains have been supposed to contain immense resources of minerals, and a vast amount of time and labor has been expended in exploration. Many people have supposed that they have made valuable discoveries, and many have been mistaken; and if the authorities of the Geological Survey can endorse the discoveries of those private individuals and give them a fixed commercial value it would be important, not only to the discoverers, but to Canada. If the private individuals, by submitting samples of minerals or oil, or by taking parties over the ground to test for deposits of gas, could get an opinion from the Geological Survey, it would be of great advantage to the country and would enhance the value of the discoveries of private individuals.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Do you mean through the reports of the Department?

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). I say that when a private individual makes a discovery, and submits it to the Department, and asks them to report upon it, they do not do their duty to this country or to that individual if they do not faithfully report upon it, and afterwards embody it in their report.

Mr. TROW. So long as the private parties bear the expense.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). I do not care who bears the expense, so long as the country gets the benefit. With regard to natural gas company referred to, I am not thoroughly conversant with it; but I am in possession of this information: that long previous to the formation of the company referred to by the hon. member for West Elgin the indication of gas was signified by the Geological Survey of this country, and before the report of Mr. Coste was made I believe that company was formed. With regard to the Government or any individual friend taking advantage of this report, such is not the case. Now, it is notorious to every man in this country who has paid any attention to what has been done in the North-West, or on the north shore of Lake Superior, that even the most astute geological explorers have passed over regions redolent with wealth without being able to discover anything, and yet private explorers have afterwards made discoveries there and brought them into notice. These discoveries should not afterwards be emphasised and the credit taken for them by the Geological Survey after they have been brought to their notice. They are simply talking nonsense, and we are paying a staff for a service which they do not do.

Mr. DAWSON. It is very satisfactory to hear the hon. Minister express himself so highly with regard to the staff. It always encourages officers to know that their superiors are ready to defend them, though I do not think they have been seriously attacked to-night. I believe there are many good and rising men among the present staff of the Survey, but they will have to work well and to exert themselves greatly before they can hope to attain the eminence which has characterised their predecessors. Sir Wm. Logan had a world-wide reputation as a geologist, and so had some of his associates—Mr. Billings as a palæontologist attained great eminence, and is quoted all the world over, and a man still living, Dr. Sterry Hunt, gave his great ability and time to the service of the country for a great many years. His abilities were better appreciated in another country. He considered he was not placed in his proper position here, as I believe he was not, and he went over to the United States where he attained a high position. These were men any country might be proud of. We have now on the staff, no doubt, many rising and capable men, but I do not think they have attained to the eminence which their predecessors reached. However, although the Survey is open to criticism, it has accomplished a great deal of good. It has extended its explorations all over the Dominion, and the discoveries, though not always of practical value, are of great interest. It is to be regretted, however, that the Director, when a discovery is made and he goes to investigate it, is very apt to throw cold water on it, and to frighten away foreign capital. He has evidently a nervous dread of our American neighbors losing their money in Canadian mines. Sudbury came very nearly being crushed out in that way. There were copper and nickel there, he said, but really so overwhelmed with iron pyrites as to be of little practical value. In the same way the silver mines at Port Arthur came very near being crushed out some years ago. The distinguished Director of the Survey came up there, and could not see much good in them. All he could see was a little silver in certain positions; but he changed his mind afterwards, and I must say that once he became thoroughly convinced of the great richness of the district—and he was not convinced through his own work—he was not slow in proclaiming the fact. Upon the whole, this grant to the Geological Survey is one that is well expended, and there is no doubt that when the new Act is introduced and discussed, the organisation of the Department will be very much improved. I am very glad to see that our friends opposite do not very seriously criticise this grant, but only offer some suggestions.

General LAURIE. I regretted to hear the hon. member from West Elgin state that he considered enough had been done in surveying the Maritime Provinces, and that the whole resources and energy of the Geological staff should now be occupied in developing the North-West. We are not at all prepared to accept such a recommendation. On the contrary, we claim that a great deal still remains to be done in the Maritime Provinces, and especially in the Province of Nova Scotia. The central part of the western portion of the Province of Nova Scotia, the back part of Shelburne, and Queen's and Digby counties are generally believed to be very full of minerals. Large discoveries of gold have been lately made in the interior of Queen's County, and we believe that if examinations were made in the counties of Shelburne and Digby gold would also be discovered there in quantities which would add largely to the material wealth of the country; and we believe that not only gold, but other minerals of great economical value will also be found in those districts. I urged the matter on the Department two years ago, but was informed that it is desirable a continuous survey should be kept up from the east to the west. The wise men came from the east, but if we are to wait until the wise surveyors come from the east to enlighten us it will be a long time before the resources of the western portion of the Province will be ascertained. By employing an additional staff these resources could, without interfering with the work in other parts, be enquired into, and if possible developed, and I hope our Geological staff will devote some energy in surveying the western portion of the Province and not expend it altogether in other sections.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Is Mr. Coste still in the service?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No; he resigned.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Was he superannuated?
Mr. DEWDNEY. No.

Mr. LANDERKIN. When did he resign?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Last year, during the Session.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Had he been conducting a survey?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The year previously he had.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Had he made a report to the Department?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Are we to understand that the report for this year is to be printed outside the Government Bureau?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; the report of this year will be, and I hope that will be the last.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I do not think there can be any excuse for this.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Well, every one was pressing to have this report published, and I found it impossible to have it printed in the Government Bureau.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. It seems absurd to think that a work of that kind cannot be done in the Bureau, where they have ample room and every convenience, and the finest building of the kind on the continent. They have printing presses to do all the work that is required to be done there, and an unlimited supply of material. Well, why cannot the work be done? The only possible excuse might be that they have not a sufficient number of hands. They have room enough for all the printers required to do all the Government work. They have presses and they have type sufficient to do all the work that can possibly be set up for the Government. The only possible lack may be in the number of hands, and there can be no difficulty in obtaining a sufficient number of hands. The Minister knows that there was a great deal of difficulty in connection with the printing of the voters' lists, but he engaged a number of extra hands, promising them three months' work, and discharged them before the expiration of that time. It is evident, therefore, that there is no difficulty in obtaining the requisite number of hands, so that the only reason for giving this work out must have been that it was desired to give it to some friend of the Government. I think, if the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) were to investigate this matter he would discover that, though the imprint on this report for some years was not that of the Montreal Gazette, the work was done there, because, though for years the work was done in that office, the imprint was that of the Dawsons. When we have a Printing Bureau of our own the work should be done there, and there can be no excuse at all for giving any work out at all. The building is large enough, and everything in the way of plant is good enough to prevent any excuse for giving any work outside. I do not think the Minister has offered any sufficient excuse for giving the work out.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I told the hon. gentleman the reason why I thought it was advisable to give out the printing of the English copy of the report this year. The French copy was printed in the Printing Bureau. I took an opportunity of testing the prices which it cost to print the French copy in Montreal last year and at the Printing Bureau this year, and I found that the cost per page in Montreal was $2.28, and that it was $3.50 at the Printing Bureau.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. That carries out exactly what gentlemen on this side of the House urged when the Printing Bureau was established. The Bureau never should have been established, because it is well known that printing can be done more cheaply in an ordinary printing office than it can be in a Government establishment. The Government will find in this Printing Bureau that they have an elephant on their hands, and that has already been discovered by the Minister of the Interior, who has found that it is going to cost a dollar a page more to print the Geological Survey Reports there than to print them outside, and he must remember that the printing of these Geological Reports has cost the Government for many years past double what it would if it had been done by the contractors in Ottawa, so that the contrast is still greater than he represents. That, I believe, will be the experience of every Minister of the Crown, that this Printing Bureau, instead of being a gain to the country, will prove to be a losing concern.

Mr. DEWDNEY. If I save $2,000 by printing the report outside, I hope the hon. gentleman will give me credit for it.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I will give the hon. gentleman credit for printing it at a fair price, but the Gazette has been getting much more than the contract price in Ottawa, and I do not think the hon. gentleman deserves much credit now, when there is a Printing Bureau, because he has there more facilities than the contractors had.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). We cannot give credit to the Government, of which the hon. gentleman is a member, though we may give him credit in his Department, because the Government established this Printing Bureau to save money, and it must be remembered that, besides the difference of one dollar a page in favor of private printing, there is the immense amount of capital invested, and the wear and tear, so that one dollar a page does not by any means represent the whole difference between the printing in a private establishment and the printing in the Printing Bureau. Some years ago it was found necessary to do this printing in Montreal, for the reason that the Geological Department was there, and the proof sheets of the report had to be read by an expert. It was necessary that a geologist should read over the proofs in order to prevent inaccuracies, as the report is, in many of its pages, of a highly technical character. But it was supposed, when that branch of the Department was removed to Ottawa, that there would no longer be any necessity for having the printing done elsewhere. The Department is here, and for years the printing of the Geological Report ought to have been done by the public printers in Ottawa, because the parties who are to read the proofs reside in this city. While the hon. Minister of the Interior may have made out a case in favor of the economy shown in his Department, he has made out a very strong case in regard to the un wisdom of establishing a Printing Bureau at all.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Do I understand the hon. Minister to state that Mr. Coste had made his exploration a year ago last summer? If he made these surveys a year ago last summer, I would desire to know from the hon. Minister if he was employed during the whole season in making the exploration for gas in the County of Essex?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I believe that, during the summer the hon. gentleman refers to, Mr. Coste was engaged in the Eastern Townships. He was not making any exploration in that oil district that year. I do not know that he ever made any exploration of those oil districts for the Government. I cannot speak with any certainty, but that is my impression.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Did he make any examination of that gas district in Essex?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Not to my knowledge. I do not think he did.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Where was Mr. Coste occupied during the summer before last—the summer previous to his resignation?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I believe he was in the Eastern Townships during that year.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Do I understand from the Minister that Mr. Coste was not engaged in Essex making any exploration during that or the previous summer?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I cannot say definitely as to that; but I understand that the year previous to my coming here, he was engaged in the Eastern Townships collecting mining statistics.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Then the Minister does not know whether Mr. Coste ever made any examination of the Essex section or not?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No; I do not.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I find by the Auditor General's Report that, in 1888, Mr. Coste did a good deal of travelling around, and was allowed a considerable amount for travelling expenses. The Auditor General has called attention to the fact that, in some cases, as high as $5 a day were allowed for expenses, whereas the regulation allowance is only $3 per day, and if they are on the regular staff they are allowed only actual expenses. On page 78—E the Auditor General says:

"Mr. E. Coste and his assistant, H. B. Brumell, were allowed a per diem allowance of $3.50 in place of actual expenses, when travelling on Geological Survey business, during last season."

Where were they travelling? Where did these expenses occur? Then he goes on to explain that they were only allowed actual expenses, and further on he says:

"I may remark that from one of the vouchers rendered by Mr. Coste it appears that when in the city of Sherbrooke he was paying only $2 a day for board, while charging $3.50 for living allowance—an overcharge of $1.50 a day. Mr. Coste drew an allowance of $3.50 a day for sixty-seven days, and $5 for four days while travelling in the United States, or $254.50 in all. Mr. Brumell drew $3.50 a day for seventy days, or $245 in all."

On page 79—E the Auditor General calls attention to the fact that there were other charges not pertaining to the Department proper:

"Please explain the charges for tobacco which appear in the following surveyors' accounts:—W. McInnes, $3.90; T. C. Weston, $1.70."

Will the Minister please explain how these items occur? Why should they be charged to the Department? We ought to have some information given as to where Mr. Coste was engaged prior to his resignation, and why it was that he resigned. We ought to have some information as to how he came into possession of the facts in reference to gas up in Essex. We ought to know how and why it is, that he formed a company for the purpose of boring for gas; we ought to know whether any members of this House, or members in other places, have any interest or share in the explorations made there; we ought to know whether the Government has in their employ, officials who may possess certain information which they use to their advantage, and to the advantage of some of their personal friends, contrary to the general interests of the country. We ought to know whether any of those reports are true, and the Minister ought to give us full explanations so that we may be in possession of all the facts. I think it is his duty. I think my hon. friend from West Elgin was right in calling attention to these facts. We want to know if there was anything wrong in the transactions of Mr. Coste before he resigned his position as a servant of the Government.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I must say that I am not in a position to answer all the questions which have been asked by the hon. gentleman, and I do not think he can expect it. I am not in the confidence of Mr. Coste, therefore I cannot tell him why Mr. Coste resigned. I can only suppose that Mr. Coste, who was getting a salary of some $2,200 or $2,300, found that he could better himself, and he gave up his position in the Department and went into an occupation which pays him better. I think I explained to the hon. gentleman that I was not aware that Mr. Coste made any special report, or was employed by the Government to make any special report, with regard to this gas field in which he appears to have taken an interest. I did tell him that that portion of the country was indicated by the Director of the Geological Survey some years before, as being one in which, if parties undertook to bore, they might probably strike gas. This I believe they did. With regard to the travelling allowance the hon. gentleman spoke about, I may say, that shortly after I came into the Department I found there was a misunderstanding between the Auditor General and the Director in reference to travelling allowance, and it was that which brought about the explanations I see here. Subsequently to this, I issued regulations regarding the travelling allowances of that Department, which were very similar to the regulations which we had in the land branch of that Department, that is, that when surveyors are travelling independently by themselves through the country, they get $3.50, whilst they are in our country; and when they are out in the field with other parties, they have a subsistence allowance sufficient to cover their actual expenses. I recollect that when I was going into this matter of the travelling expenses, Mr. Coste was in the Eastern Townships during that year, and he had also visited the United States to get some information with regard to his work, during which time he was allowed a travelling allowance of $5 a day.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I think the Minister will freshen his memory a little if he will read his report. He certainly would not sign his name to that report and allow it to go out without examining it carefully, and he must have known whether Mr. Coste did make a report in reference to Essex. If he will look at the last Geological Report, he will have an opportunity to refresh his memory, and he will find that Mr. Coste did make a report, and subsequently resigned and went into a company which was formed, and, perhaps, my hon. friend the Minister, if he has not all the information in reference to that company, might call upon some members of the House who sit not far from him, and who might give him some information in reference to the formation of the company, and the gas well in Essex. Now, if you will look carefully into the expenses of this Department, you will find extravagance in almost every detail, as appears in the Auditor General's Report. We find that these individuals under the charge of the Minister, from the chief manager, Dr. Selwyn, down to his subordinates, although they may travel upon a first-class car, think it is not good enough for them, because you will see that these individuals charge for Pullman cars, and, of course, the Minister allows this extravagance to go on. No one will find any fault for the expenditure on this Survey if it is economically administered; but I think we have just cause to complain of the lack of attention given to this Department by the Minister. If the Minister allows this report to go broadcast through the country without knowing what is in it, I say that some one else should take charge of that branch of the Department. He would then be able to say whether his officers are receiving salaries and allowances and gratuities and other consideration to which they are not entitled. I have no hesitation in saying that we are paying more money for this service than is necessary.

Mr. HAGGART. I should like to offer a few remarks in answer to the hon. gentleman. I know the hon. gentleman intends his remarks for me. He has insinuated that the Minister of the Interior might know something about the stockholders in the gas well in Essex, and if he was not able to do so an hon. gentleman near would probably know. I am one of the stockholders in the gas well in Essex County. I do not know what business it is of the hon. gentleman as to whether I am a stockholder or not. I did not take my stock or get my information in any improper way. I never knew Mr. Coste was in Essex; it was not at his instance that I took the stock. And after that statement from me, until the hon. gentleman knows better, I hope he will stop his insinuations and be better informed before he makes an attack on any hon. member.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). It appears, then, that if I did not strike gas I struck oil. It appears that the hon. gentleman thinks I have no business to obtain information respecting a public officer.

Mr. HAGGART. I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). The hon. gentleman says it is none of my business whether he is a stockholder or not. I do not pretend to say it is. I was asking for information in regard to what Mr. Coste was doing. I knew he had been in the service of the hon. gentleman; I knew he had been employed by the Government here, and was receiving a salary at the hands of the Dominion of Canada; and I knew further, that the hon. gentleman who said it was none of my business was a member of the Government who was responsible for Mr. Coste doing his work. It is strange how the hon. gentleman should have ascertained so readily, if he knew nothing of Mr. Coste, that there was gas there, and it would be a good investment. It is surprising indeed. The hon. gentleman appears to have displayed a simplicity for which I would not have given him credit. How did he obtain his information? Through what source? It is right that he should have taken stock and become a member of that company, but the question is this: Did Mr. Coste, an employé of the Government, by any means allow my hon. friend to have an opportunity to know there was a good investment there, and that in all probability it would yield an ample and full return on the money invested? The hon. gentleman said it was none of my business that I, in my place as a representative of the people, should try and find out what Mr. Coste had been doing.

Mr. HAGGART. I never said anything of the kind either here or elsewhere.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Will the hon. gentleman repeat what he did say?

Mr. HAGGART. It is not necessary. If the hon. gentleman will not put words into my mouth, I will reply to him afterwards.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Will the hon. gentleman state what he did say?

Mr. HAGGART. That would not make any difference to the hon. gentleman; he would go on and repeat again and again something which I did not say. I spoke in plain language, which he could not misunderstand. I told him I never got the information from Mr. Coste, that it was from another party, that it was the hon. member for Essex, Mr. Patterson, who asked me to take stock in the company. I told the hon. gentleman I did not see Mr. Coste, that I was not aware he was there; and I said it was none of the hon. gentleman's business whether I was a member of the company or not. Perhaps the hon. gentleman understands me now.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Now we have got at the bottom of the whole matter. It appears that an individual by the name of Mr. Patterson—I wonder if it is the hon. member for Essex.

Mr. HAGGART. It is.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). So here we have a Minister of the Crown and one of the leading supporters of the day, and further we have an employé of the Government, who is under the pay of the Government, and holding a position under the Government, and this individual possesses information which is essential to the Minister of the Crown and a supporter of the Government obtaining the opportunity to form themselves into a stock company to develop a gas well in Essex. And yet I am told, forsooth, that it is none of my business, nor is it the business of any other representative of the people to ask how they got the information. I think we have a right to know, and I am very glad we have extracted from the Postmaster General the declaration that he is a member of the gas company there, and that another member of this House is also one of the stockholders.

Mr. HAGGART. You could have found that in the Gazette, if you had looked for it.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin).

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Further, I would like to know from the Minister whether Mr. Coste had any vacation that year? If so, how long did it last; did he receive any salary during his vacation; was his vacation for three weeks or six months? I think the Minister will be able to answer this question.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I was not in charge of the Department at that time, so I am not able to give the hon. gentleman the information.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Then, may I expect he will search the records, ascertain the information, and bring it down on a future occasion?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Certainly. I should like to make one remark. It is very difficult to satisfy hon. gentlemen opposite. The hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) stated that our officers should be able to make such reports as would enable financial men to invest their money. When one of our officers—if he was one at that time—makes a report, which the hon. gentleman thinks he did, such a report as induced capitalists to invest money, then, says the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Wilson), he had no business to make a report.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). If the Minister will take the trouble to examine the accounts of the Department, he will come to the conclusion that an unnecessarily large expenditure is made. If he will examine the Auditor General's Report, from page 72 to 76 inclusive, he will find the expenditure could be reduced. So far as regards the remark made by the Postmaster General, that this matter is one respecting which it is not the business of any hon. member of this House to ascertain the facts, I pay no attention to his statement. Whatever statement is made in the heat of anger by an individual, not responsible for his sayings, I say that so long as an individual is not responsible for his sayings in this House, I treat him with that contempt to which he is entitled. I say that any hon. member of this House who will make such a remark across the floor, when a member is trying to obtain information of that nature, should be treated in the same manner as his remark was intended.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.). Before the Committee passes away from this item, I trust that the hon. Minister who is leading the House to-night, will take some notice of the very serious charge preferred by the Minister of the Interior, against his colleague the Secretary of State. It is a very serious matter, and one which should not be allowed to pass unnoticed. If I understood the Minister of the Interior aright, he officially declares that the business of the Printing Bureau is managed so unsatisfactorily, so expensively, and with such an absence of that economy, which should be directed to the management of all such institutions; that the public documents cannot be printed there. In other words he states, that in order to publish a report of his Department with any reasonable regard to economy at all, he has to go away to the city of Montreal, and get it printed there at a private establishment. The hon. gentleman who is leading the House will on the present occasion, I am sure, be actuated by that keen sense of chivalry which leads him to come to the rescue of the Secretary of State, whenever he is attacked in his absence. I trust he will ask the Secretary of State to inform us whether there is ground for this serious statement. If it is true, some steps will have to be taken to abolish that bureau. If the Minister of the Interior is correct in stating, that even in the extravagant Department over which he presides, they cannot go to the Bureau to have a report printed because of the Bureau's extravagance, then the same must apply to the other branches of the service. If I understood the hon. Minister aright, he said it would cost a dollar a page more to print the Geological Report in the Printing Bureau than he could get it done by private contractors in Montreal. The private contractors have their own profit out of this work, and here we have a great many hundreds and thousands of dollars sunk in the purchase of material and plant for that Bureau, but notwithstanding that they cannot do the work at such a rate, as would justify a Government official in sending the work to be done there. That is a very serious charge and requires explanation.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I do not think the hon. gentleman understood me correctly. I did not say that I could get the report printed a dollar a page cheaper in Montreal, than in the Government Bureau here. I did say, that I had a return sent me to-day, which showed me that our French report, which was printed in Montreal, last year, cost a dollar a page or so cheaper, than the report which is being printed this year in the Printing Bureau, and I said, when the hon. gentleman was complaining of the report, which I had to print in English this year, that if I had saved a dollar a page or two dollars a page, the hon. gentleman might give me credit for it.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. As I understand, the Minister admits that the work costs a dollar a page more here than in Montreal. The member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) must remember in addition to this fact that this work done in Montreal was not done at contract price, but at the price they choose to ask for it. If it had been done at the contract price by the contractors who did the Government work here before, it would be done for half the price that was paid for it.

Mr. DEWDNEY. No.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Yes. Fifty cents was charged in Montreal for the composition, while the Government contractors here were bound to do it for twenty-five cents, and we pay the same in proportion for presswork.

Mr. LISTER. Why was not this work done in the Printing Bureau here, instead of being sent to Montreal?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I understand it was not done here, because they were unable to do it.

Mr. LISTER. That is no answer at all. The hon. gentleman must remember that when the Secretary of State, introduced the measure to establish this Bureau, he promised the House and the country that all the departmental and other printing required for the public service, would be done in the Printing Bureau; and he promised, moreover, that the system of contracting, as it had existed before, between the Government and the different printing establishments throughout the country would cease, and that all the public printing would be done in the city of Ottawa, at the lowest price. Either the Secretary of State did not know what he was promising, when he made this statement, or else the Government has given printing to outside establishments, for the purpose of making patronage. So far as the printing of this particular report is concerned, the Minister of the Interior has stated to the House that it would have cost a dollar a page more, if done in the Printing Bureau in Ottawa, than if done in Montreal.

Mr. DEWDNEY. No.

Mr. LISTER. That is the plain meaning of the hon. gentleman's statement. More than that, he has not stated to the House whether tenders were asked for the performance of this work, or whether it was given to the contractors at their own price.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I explained that in connection with the printing of this English copy, which I was obliged to have printed this year, I had the price referred to the Queen's Printer, who certified that they were most reasonable.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The practice for the last eight years has been to give out this work without tender.

Mr. BOWELL. Carry it back further than eight years.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I only speak of what I know.

Mr. BOWELL. The Geological Report has always been printed without tender.

Mr. LANDERKIN. This debate has elicited several points worthy the consideration of this House. In the first place it has been shown that an officer of the Geological Department, who had been engaged in explorations in the county of Essex communicated the result to private parties. I do not know how many persons were engaged with him in this exploration, but they made apparently an exhaustive survey, and no doubt in due time they reported to the Department the nature and value of the discovery they made. That report, as far as I am aware, was not made public until some time afterwards, and as a result we find this officer of the Department retiring from the service and forming a company to utilise the discovery made by himself. We find not only a member of the House, but a member of the Government as well, joining that company, and we now hear that member of the Government rising in his place and with courtesy more forcible than to be admired, he answers an hon. member on this side of the House "that it is none of his business whether he joined the company or not." That is quite true, if the information obtained were not acquired by the outlay of public money, but if it has been so acquired, it is the duty of every member of this House to ascertain whether that information, which was the basis of the formation of this company, was communicated by an officer of the Department in the public service who obtained his information at the public expense. It may be considered proper on the part of the Postmaster General to act as he did to-night, but the members of this House should consider this matter well, for I think it was a very unfortunate statement for a member of the Government to make in this House, under circumstances which appear, at all events, so very shady as this transaction does. I do not know what amount of money was expended on that survey, but this we do know, that the information was afforded by an officer of the Government, on which this company was formed, and that a member of the Government, as well as a member of the House, entered that company. Then, the hon. Minister gets up as if his conscience was pricked by it, and as if he thought it came within the purview of the Independence of Parliament Act. At any rate, I think it is the duty of this House to enquire into the circumstances under which that company was formed, and it is unfortunate that a gentleman so situated should get up and make a statement against an hon. member, who is only doing his duty by asking for the reasons and objects for which an expenditure of public money has been made. It is a legitimate and proper question, at all events, and it demands a courteous answer. If the hon. gentlemen forming the Government of this country cannot be courteous to the members of this House, they should give way to those who will be courteous and polite in stating to the House the expenditure of the people's money and the uses to which it is applied. Now, we find that an officer has resigned his position under the Government, and has become manager of this company. The Government say that we have no right to enquire into that matter, but I say we should be neglecting our duty if we did not enquire into it. It is our duty to ascertain whether the knowledge on which that company was formed was procured by this man while he was still an officer of the Government.

Indians, Ontario and Quebec..... $53,235.25

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Have there been any new Indian schools instituted during the past year?

Mr. DEWDNEY. There have been only two new schools established—one at Stoney Point, in the County of Lambton, and one at Red Rock, in Lake Superior.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I find by the Auditor General's Report that the expenditure on the schools up to the 30th of June, 1889, was $15,000, while the vote taken is $24,000.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I fancy that after the 30th of June there would be some unpaid accounts.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think this would be an appropriate occasion on which to make some enquiry of the Minister of the Interior with reference to the aid that has been given to these Indian schools—how far they are still under denominational control, and how far they are aided otherwise than by the Government. The hon. Minister knows that during the past six or eight months a very active agitation has gone on in the country, and that a great many synods and conferences and associations have pronounced against state aid for any religious purpose whatever, and it would be interesting to know to what extent the parties who have taken this position, have notified the Government of their intention to cease accepting Government aid for those schools, and how far they purpose relying on the voluntary efforts of their respective denominations. This is one form of connection between Church and State. Indian schools, when first established throughout the North-West Territories, within the district where the Indian title to the soil had been surrendered, were aided, because they, in most cases, lay beyond the regions where settlement was being carried on, and it was very much more convenient to aid the missionary establishment than it would have been to undertake to establish Government schools. But that aid was given, from year to year, with the express understanding that the Government pledged itself to nothing beyond the appropriation for the year. Now, it would be interesting if the Minister would lay before us a statement of the extent of this aid, of how much these institutions have received from other sources, and whether there has been any intimation on the part of those who control these schools, of their intention to depend wholly on voluntary contributions in the future, and decline aid from the public treasury.

Mr. DEWDNEY. As the hon. gentleman very likely knows, nearly all the schools of Ontario are Protestant, while those in Quebec are Roman Catholic, and in the two Provinces we pay $9,531.68 for salaries for the year. We ask to have the balance of $9,331 voted to supplement the amount paid out of the school fund. The hon. gentleman I fancy will know better than myself what amount of support we get from the different denominations in Ontario. In Manitoba we have support there from almost all the denominations to a certain extent. We have a number of industrial schools carried on purely by the Government, schools of different denominations—one at Qu'Appelle, one at Battleford, and one at High River, and since last year we have built one in Manitoba, near the St. Peter's Reserve, at St. Andrews, and one at Elk Horn, Manitoba, and have just completed one at Regina. I think those are all the industrial schools we built this year. One is built in the Diocese of Rupert's Land, which the church assists to some extent. With regard to the Roman Catholic institutions which are being erected in the Territories, such as the one at St. Albert, we have to pay $60 a head for any pupils they take, and they pay the balance. Last year we provided for twenty pupils at the St. Boniface College, and agreed to give $100 per pupil, the Roman Catholics agreeing to pay the balance. A great number of our day schools, especially those carried on by the Methodists and the Presbyterians, have been assisted to a great extent. Also two industrial schools, one of which has been built and furnished entirely by the Presbyterian Church, and to it we make an allowance of $60 a head for a certain number of pupils.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). My statement was that the Government did not pledge itself to the continuance of its support, but that it was given in the meantime as the most convenient way of aiding Indian education, reserving the right at any time to establish a public school system for the Indian population as well. I call the hon. gentleman's attention to an appropriation which, perhaps, it would be more regular to refer to at a later period; I refer to the appropriation for industrial schools of about $140,000. If I rightly understand the hon. gentleman's statement, this money is expended in aiding the education of the Indian population in institutions wholly under church control.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The hon. gentleman understands that the Indian Act has to guide us to a great extent as to the manner in which we conduct the schools on the reserve. All these schools are on the reserve, except a few Industrial schools, and although they are carried on under the immediate control of the different religious bodies, the Government has the entire control. With regard to the Indian schools, we find the greatest difficulty on account of that section of the Indian Act which compels us to give a school to a minority of Indians, if they ask us for it, and the Government consider they are prepared to receive them. I should like some arrangement by which only one denomination should be on a reserve.

For payment of Annuities under the Robinson Treaty..... $16,806

Mr. DAWSON. I would like to ask the hon. Minister what steps have been taken, if any, to secure to the Indians the amount of the arrears due them under the Robinson Treaty? These arrears amount to a large sum, I believe to as much as half a million dollars at least. According to the estimate I made some years ago, not less than half a million dollars is due to these poor people. Some of those Indians, especially in the older settled parts of the country about Garden River, are exceedingly poorly off. There is quite a large population of them there, and they are so poor that they cannot afford to send their children to school in winter, because they have not the clothes wherewith to cover them. It is too bad that these poor people, with half a million dollars in the hands of the Government, should be in that position. I believe this arises from the fact that, while it remains with the Government of the Dominion to deal with the Indians, the land on which the annuities were made a lien has fallen to the Government of Ontario. I believe the Government of Ontario refuses to recognise any duty in that regard, and says that it is for the Government of the Dominion to pay the annuity. On the other hand, the Government of the Dominion maintains that the payment of annuities should go with the land on which they are a lien. I believe there has been a decision recently by the Imperial Privy Council, which puts it beyond doubt which Government has to pay. I believe that decision makes the payment to the Indians go with the land, and determines that the Province which has fallen heir to the land must pay the annuities of the Indians. But, why should the Indians be made to suffer from this? Would it not be much better that the two Governments should agree in the meantime to pay these poor people what is due to them, and then have it decided which of the two should be responsible for the payment? These poor people are in need and can hardly exist without their annuity. Let them be paid, and let the question be settled afterwards as to which Government should ultimately pay the money. The Indian Department administers the affairs of the Indians with care, prudence, and economy, and the payment of these amounts would, under its careful management, provide a fund which would relieve their distress for a long time to come, would provide for the education of their children, and might do an infinite amount of good. When there is a dispute between the two Governments, surely an arrangement might be brought about by which the Indians would be paid in the meantime, and the question as to which Government was responsible for the payment might be settled afterwards.

Mr. BARRON. I was glad to hear the hon. gentleman (Mr. Dawson) refer to these annuities. I have had occasion to notice the great distress which the Indians—especially those under the Robinson Treaty—are suffering. While I am on my feet, I cannot but refer to a matter which was brought up last Session in order to show the way in which this Government treats the Indians. There was brought up last Session a matter referring to the Indians on the north shore of Georgian Bay under Treaty No. 6. The Government disposed of an Indian reserve, or of the timber upon it, to the junior member for Ottawa (Mr. Robillard) for the small sum of $316. The Minister of the Interior then justified his course by saying that, notwithstanding this fact, the Indians would receive about $20,000 in timber dues. I think the hon. gentleman will remember making that statement. Well, if the Indians were to receive $20,000 at one dollar a thousand, that means that there must be at least twenty million feet of timber on that reserve which the Government sold to the member for Ottawa for the paltry sum of $316. I understood at the time that many hon. gentlemen sitting behind the Minister did not seem to appreciate the importance of the case which was made against the Government. The Minister said that the Indians were to receive $20,000 in dues, but they could not receive these dues if the timber were not there, and that would represent, at $2 a thousand, $40,000 of a bonus which the Government should have received instead of the small sum of $316. Since last Session, matters have come to my knowledge which show that the junior member for Ottawa who got this limit did not state exactly what was correct. He stated then that he did not make one dollar out of that limit. I corrected him flatly at that time, and I wish now to justify my position. I state that the junior member for Ottawa received, for the limit for which he paid $316, $15,000 in cash for his half interest shortly after he obtained it. I am in a position to prove that, and, if I had a committee of this House granted me, I could prove that a gentleman went to him, Mr. Riopel, and offered him $10,000 for his half interest, that he refused that offer, but afterwards sold his half interest in this limit for $15,000, the other half interest remaining with his partner. Subsequently those to whom the hon. gentleman sold his half interest sold the limit for $55,000. It will therefore be seen that a timber limit of seventy-nine square miles in extent, which was sold by the Government for $316, was very shortly afterwards sold for the enormous sum of $55,000, and the hon. gentleman who sits behind the Minister of the Interior got for his half share the sum of $15,000. And yet the hon. gentleman who represents Algoma (Mr. Dawson) asks for an additional grant for the Indians. Let the Government recognise the fact that the Indians are their wards, let them sell their property by competition, and then the Indians will get their just dues, and will not have to ask the country for additional annuities. I think the case which was really made out last Session showed a state of things which was a perfect disgrace to the country at large and reflected the greatest possible discredit upon the Government.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I should like to ask if the Minister of Interior has taken into consideration the question of the annuities paid to Indians of Ontario. I think the hon. member for Brant (Mr. PATERSON), who has given a good deal of attention to this subject, will agree with me in saying that the Indians who receive their annuities in semi-annual payments, very often need some assistance during the meantime, and they go to stores and get credit, and, as a consequence, pay a great deal more for their goods than they ought to, because the merchants are not secured. The Indians themselves are very anxious that some system should be devised by which orders should be issued by the agent on the several reserves; those orders of course, would be as good to the merchants as cash, and by that means the Indians would not only be helped in time of need, but would also receive full value for the amount which they desire to draw. I think it would be a great advantage to the Indians, as well as a protection to the merchants.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I may state that the Department have put their face very much against the issuing of orders in any way. Where they have found cases of actual distress, they have reluctantly given permission for a certain amount of the annuity money to be drawn in that way. I believe in days gone by, the agent was allowed to give orders on the different storekeepers in the neighborhood. That led to great abuse, and heavy claims were made against the Department which, in some cases, they had to meet, and it resulted in their issuing stringent instructions against the order system. I think myself the Department were perfectly correct in that regard; and although since I have been here, strong appeals have been made to me to allow the order system in certain cases, I have agreed to it in very few, and the orders were not on the merchants, but the money was sent to the agent and he was allowed to give a small amount of the annuity in cash to the destitute Indians; but he was allowed to do this only when he was sure that the Indians would spend the money for the purpose for which it was given. But we have stopped entirely allowing orders to be given to the Indians upon the merchants.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Would the hon. Minister explain in a few words, the state of the negotiations between the Ontario Government and the Department with reference to those arrears?

Mr. DEWDNEY. These arrears, I am sorry to say, are mixed up, and unfortunately for the Indians, they are mixed up with other claims which the Federal Government had against the Provinces of Quebec and Ontario. The treasurers of each Province have met on several occasions, but have not been able to come to a satisfactory decision with regard to those matters. I understand that they have now agreed to submit the matter to arbitration, and my information is that it is in a fair way for settlement. I agree with the remarks of the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dawson), and I also recollect the remarks made by the member for Simcoe last year. It does seem a hardship that the sum of $543,000, or thereabouts, which are due to the Indians up to the year 1882, should be kept out of the hands of the Department and prevented from going to the benefit of the Indians. By a return which I have in my hand the sum has increased since that time, making, I presume now, over half a million. However, they are not losing any money, and I have no doubt eventually the money will be paid, with the interest that has been added to the claim. I hope that in the near future the matter will be settled. They are drawing now, as hon. gentlemen know, from $18,000 to $20,000 a year, which is sufficient to supplement the amount which we have at our disposal, some $4,400, which sum will pay the $4 per head of annuity which was to be paid at the time of the Robinson Treaty. That has been paid regularly since 1874, I think. As soon as the amount is paid into the fund, the Indians will also receive the actual interest which has accrued. I am in hopes the matter will be settled in the course of a year.

Mr. DAWSON. I am happy to hear such a satisfactory explanation of the matter from the Minister. I really hope he will press the matter, because these poor people are suffering very much, and I am sure they will be much pleased to hear that their claims are so valuable.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I would like to say to the Minister that the Mississauga Indians are exceedingly anxious that the sum of $52,000, with the accumulated interest of the money which should have been paid to them some years ago, should be distributed among them.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Such an application has been made, but I am not at present able to say what course the Government will take. My attention was drawn to it a day or two ago, and I will make enquiries and let the hon. gentleman know.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). With reference to the trust fund, I see there is a discrepancy between the account as kept by the Auditor General, and the account kept by the Department, of some $83,000; that discrepancy occurs in the account of the trust fund of the Mississaugas. Does the Minister know how it happens? His Department credits them with the sum of $83,000 more than they received credit for in the account of the Auditor General. That is probably the money that is referred to.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The hon. gentleman is correct. This $60,000 makes about the difference. The Auditor General refuses to credit us with that amount, although an Order in Council has been passed, as I understand, giving it to the Mississaugas.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). But it has not been paid to the Mississaugas, apparently.

Mr. DEWDNEY. No, it has not; that is why there is no credit given by the Auditor General.

Removal of the residue of the Lake of Two Mountain Indians from Oka to Township of Gibson.....$4,912.73

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I observe this is a revote. In what position are the negotiations at present?

Mr. DEWDNEY. In the course of the spring, I hope—though I have not as great hopes as I had a few weeks ago—that we shall be able to come to an understanding with the remainder of the Okas, so that they will remove to Algoma. We are in communication with them quietly, and I expect one of the chiefs, one of their leading men, up to see me in a few days. The negotiations so far are very satisfactory, and I hope we shall be able to induce the balance of the Okas to remove in the course of the spring, as they are anxious to do so.

To provide for the survey of Indian reserves..... $639.02

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think the Minister should explain about these surveys of Indian reserves, how they are conducted, and whether, before a survey is conducted, it is asked for by the bands, and whether, in cases where surveys are made, the funds of the band are used to pay. If I remember rightly, I heard the Minister reply to my hon. friend from Laprairie (Mr. Doyon) that a survey had taken place on the Caughnawaga reserves, and that the amount had been paid out of their funds. In a case of that kind does the Department order a survey without any request from the Indians, and pay the cost out of their funds; or is it paid out of the amount voted by Parliament? I ask this question because in the case now under consideration the amount asked is not nearly sufficient to cover the expenditure of the survey on the reserve.

Mr. DEWDNEY. When the Indians have a fund at their disposal, surveys are only made on the application of the Indians themselves. The vote asked for is for surveys in Ontario and Quebec, where there are no funds at the disposal of the Indians.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Has the Tomogaming reserve been set apart? Application has been made for a reserve, and some dispute arose between the Ontario Government and the Department with respect to its location; and that is the last I have heard of it. Has it yet been set apart?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The Department is still in communication with the Ontario Government with regard to that matter, and after several letters had been written, to which, I believe, we received no reply, I had an Order in Council passed a few days ago, asking that a final reply be obtained from the Ontario Government with regard to this matter.

Mr. DOYON. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, if I rightly understood the hon. the Minister of the Interior, he said that, in the Province of Quebec, when there is anything to the credit of the band, the Government take out of their funds what is required to have the reserve surveyed. The hon. Minister stated, a few days ago, that he had, out of the funds of the band, paid $19,000 for the survey of the Caughnawaga reserve, and that a sum of over $3,000 was still due. I find in the Auditor General's Report, that the balance to the credit of the band only amounts to $83.95. I should like to know whether the Government will pay the balance due on the cost of that survey. They cannot pay it out of the funds of the band, for there is nothing left to their credit, unless it is entered elsewhere.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The cost of the survey has been taken out of the funds of the band.

Mr. DOYON. Two weeks ago the hon. Minister gave me the same answer, that the money was taken out of the fund of the band. This survey has cost $22,250, and upon that amount there has been paid $19,000, so there is a balance due to Mr. Walbank, the surveyor, of over $3,000. On looking at the Auditor General's Report I find the balance to the credit of the band only amounts to $83.95. I should like to know from the Government if they intend to take this balance to pay that sum.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). There does not appear to be, according to the Auditor General's Report, a sufficient sum at the credit of the band to pay the amount required. Have not the Caughnawaga Indians a trust fund in the hands of the Government?

Mr. DEWDNEY. A few years ago their trust fund amounted to over $20,000.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). This expenditure was taken out of that fund.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes.

Mr. DOYON. Then the whole fund has been expended in order to have the reserve surveyed, and there is a balance of $3,300 still due to the surveyor, according to the Minister's statement a few days ago. I should like to know from the hon. Minister why the Government had that reserve surveyed? The work was commenced in 1882 and was not completed until 1888, and, if I remember correctly, the surveyor was nominated on his own recommendation. A few days ago in answer to the hon. member for Huron, who asked the cost of surveys in Manitoba and the North-West Territories, the Minister answered that the cost was a little over 4 cents per acre; but the cost of surveying the Caughnawaga reserve has been $22,250 for 12,327 acres, or a little over $1.80 per acre. What does the Government intend to do in regard to this matter, for there is no money to complete the sub-division of the reserve?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The survey was made on a petition of the Indians themselves, and it has been carried on, as the hon. gentleman states, for a number of years. Of course a survey of this character must cost a great deal more than the survey of the Dominion lands. The cost per acre of the Dominion lands survey, was calculated on millions of acres which had been surveyed. This survey, as the hon. gentleman knows, was cut up into small fields, resembling much the appearance of this chamber, the desks representing the little holdings of the Indians. The location of every house, and fence had to be surveyed, and a most complete and detailed map, equal to an ordnance map of the old country, I find has been made. Whether there was a necessity for such a detailed survey as that, I am not prepared to say. I know something about that class of work, and I can say that the map has been very well made, showing the topography of the whole of the reserve, as well as the various holdings. The sub-division of the reserve has been commenced although not completed. The reason of the survey was, I have no doubt, as was found to be the case in other reserves, that some of the more advanced Indians took up larger portions of the reserve than others thought they were entitled to, and they believed that the survey would give them more equal portions. I know that this difficulty has presented itself to such an extent in our North-West country, that we have already commenced to sub-divide our reserves there into forty-acre sections, and, as far as we possibly can, we are inducing the Indians to settle on their own sections of land, not compelling them to remain there if they do not like it, but when they get there, we find that they make their improvements, and begin to look upon it as a home. I have no doubt that this undertaking will have a beneficial effect. This survey does appear to have cost a great deal of money, but the work, as far as it has gone, is very good work, perhaps, indeed, too good for what we really require.

Mr. DOYON. I admit that there was a good deal of work in sub-dividing that reserve, but the hon. Minister must see that there is a great deal of difference between the cost of this survey, and the cost of the survey in the North-West. I should like to know, whether in this survey the estimate of the cost of the improvements made by the Indians has been calculated. Some of them owned larger tracts of land than others, and, if I understand aright the views of the Government, they want to sub-divide the land into equal parts to the members of the band. I heard that the surveyor made an estimate of the improvements on the whole property. I should like to know if that is correct, and I would also ask the hon. Minister when the Government intend to sub-divide the reserve?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I informed the hon. gentleman that the sub-division had commenced, but was not yet completed, and I presume that until it is completed it will be impossible to get the Indians to settle on the permanent locations. I find from the remarks of the hon. gentleman that I was correct that the difficulty on the reserve was, as I thought, that some held more land than others thought they should. If the surveyor were also instructed to make an estimate of the improvements, I presume that will be obtained in the report which is in the Department, and when the time arrives, and the Indians themselves are satisfied to take their different locations, I am sure the Government will give them every assistance.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. In connection with this item for the travelling expenses of Indian agents, I wish to ask the Minister, if he can give us any further information with reference to the travelling expenses of Mr. Dingman, which amounted to $1,795 last year.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The information was asked by the hon. gentleman some days ago, and I now hold in my hand a statement showing the points to which the inspector was sent from July, 1888, to June, 1889. That was the year, I think which covered the amount of expenses referred to. Would the hon. gentleman wish me to read the different items or shall I pass the statement over to him?

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I might just say that this expenditure for travelling expenses has been attracting the attention of the newspaper press of the country, not merely the Reform press, but the Conservative press as well, and I have in my hands the Stratford Times, one of the strongest supporters of the Government in Western Ontario, in which I find some criticisms in regard to Mr. Dingman's expenses for travelling. I will just quote for the information of the Minister a few sentences from that article.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I have read it.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I think, probably, the House would like to hear it. This is a staunch Tory newspaper which invariably supports the Government, but it appears to have no faith in Mr. Dingman as an Indian inspector. The article says:

Mr. DEWDNEY.

"It is a well known fact that this man, who is called an Inspector of Indian Agencies, is loafing part of his time about Stratford. Time and again the Times has called the attention to this barnacle, and it is a satisfaction to know that our efforts in the direction of having a useless 'official' removed, are at last bearing fruit. Time works wonders. In addition to a salary of $1,700, which Absalom Dingman received last year, he squeezed $1,700 out of the Government for travelling expenses, less $5. Just imagine $3,400 for a useless tool called an 'Indian Agency Inspector.' And what does he do for that extravagant expenditure? As Mr. Casey pointed out, the Hon. Mr. Dewdney, Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, 'did not know whether Absalom Dingman's work was shown in the report of his Department or not. He did not know where Absalom Dingman had gone, what he had done, or how far he had travelled! But he did know that the Government had to pay $1,700 (for travelling expenses alone). Mr. Casey characterised this 'as rather a loose way of doing business.' We should say it was a decidedly loose way of doing business! Something that calls for a searching enquiry."

"Absalom Dingman had, it is true, paid a visit to the seaside for the purpose of settling some grievances among the Caughtawagas last summer. The Government might just as well have sent a native of Congo or an Esquimaux, as Absalom does not understand their language, nor yet can he speak French. When he is away from his office in Brantford, he frequently conveys the impression that he is out on an inspection tour, but the facts are he is loafing about this city, where his family are quartered. His frequent trips between here and Brantford and Sarnia every few days will explain some of the travelling incidentals. Every time he wants a change of linen he makes a trip to Stratford, travelling by the back streets to his residence in the outskirts of the city. And, then, it is currently reported, that whenever one of his progeny goes on a kissing or fishing excursion to Port Dover or the back townships, his travelling expenses are charged up to the 'Indian contingency fund.' Was there ever a ranker fraud perpetrated upon the people than this man drawing $3,400 from the Ottawa Government?"

This is rather a serious charge for a Conservative newspaper to bring against the Government, of giving this large sum of money to Mr. Dingman for services which it declares are not rendered, and I think the Minister should give us a full explanation with regard to it.

Mr. DEWDNEY. That is an Opposition organ.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I beg pardon; it is a Conservative organ.

Mr. DEWDNEY. It is in opposition to Mr. Dingman. I may say it is a newspaper quarrel. Mr. Dingman is a very able officer, and does not deserve the criticism made in that paper, which is opposed to a newspaper owned and carried on, I believe, by some members of Mr. Dingman's family in the same town. But probably it would be well, as the hon. gentleman has raised the question, that I should read to the House a statement of Mr. Dingman's expenses during the year for which this amount is charged, though I understand that the gentleman has been summoned before the Public Accounts Committee, where it would be much more convenient that he should himself give an explanation of his travelling expenses:

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Are these livery expenses at Brantford charged to the Six Nation fund or are they paid out of our money?

Mr. DEWDNEY. They are charged to management.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I understood that he resided on the reserve while doing work there.

Mr. DEWDNEY. No; he was living at Brantford. The Indian office is there.

Mr. AMYOT. If the hon. gentleman employed an officer who knew both English and French he would avoid some expense. They do not understand English at Lorette. Perhaps he could not find any one competent to speak both languages. If not, I am sorry.

Mr. DEWDNEY. That would entail another inspector, and would increase the expense.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I suppose the Department keeps some check on those officers so as to know whether the returns of expenses they make are correct?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I presume the inspector keeps a diary, and his accounts which are sent in every month are audited in the Department before they are paid.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). Some difficulty has taken place with regard to the limits of the Lorette Reserve, near Quebec, and a case was taken before the Superior Court to ascertain what the exact boundaries were. After the case had been proceeding in the court for some time, the powers of the attorney, who represented the Indians, were revoked and the Government took an action in disavowal against him. I do not think there was ever a more clear case of political persecution than this action in disavowal against the attorney, Mr. Pelletier. The Superior Court dismissed the action, the judge expressing the opinion that there was not the slightest foundation for it. Despite that, an appeal was taken. There were rumors in Quebec that these actions were due to the fact that the lawyer who represented the Government, the latter tutor to the Indians, had changed his political course, and the friends of the Government declared it was intended to ruin this lawyer by piling up costs against him. I know something of the case, because I argued it in appeal, and I must say I never saw a case conducted in such an extravagant manner. The judgment of the court below was maintained by the unanimous decision of the Court of Appeal, and now it is rumored that the case is to be taken to the Supreme Court. I would like to know at whose expense and in whose interests these proceedings are taken? I have not the slightest doubt of the final result, and in Quebec the friends of the Government say that the case will be taken as far as the Privy Council. It is well known that before the Privy Council you can recover but a very small portion of the costs you are compelled to incur in your defence, and relying on that some friends of the Government are boasting publicly in Quebec that they are going to ruin Pelletier. Is it at the expense of the Indians these costs are being incurred? Or are they to be paid by the Government? They amount to very nearly $4,000, and perhaps more. They reach nearly $4,000 at present, and will probably go into the tens of thousands after the case is taken to the Privy Council. Are these costs to be paid by the Indians of Lorette or by the Dominion Government, and in whose interest are they taken?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I understand that the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs is not in a position to give an explanation as to the details of this proceeding. I was spoken to concerning the matter about ten days ago; when the documents connected with it were handed to me by the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), and I promised to look into the case. I do not understand that there has been any persecution of Mr. Pelletier in the case. There certainly has not been any disposition to persecute him on my part, and I am not aware of any of the proceedings of the character described by the hon. gentleman having been taken. They may have been commenced before I took charge of the Department. I can assure the hon. gentleman that those who are stating that it is the intention of the Government to appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council on the mere question of removing the attorney, are speaking without authority. If the proceedings were taken unduly, they will not be continued any further; if they have been taken with due ground, and the law of Quebec is such that it is impossible for us to get rid of an attorney whom we once engaged, we will have to abandon our case, and get it into the hands of a solicitor in whom we have confidence.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). It has been established by the Indian agent of this Government that he had given instructions to the attorney in question, but after some movement was attempted to stop the proceedings, he came up to Ottawa to receive documents to assist Mr. Pelletier in the direction of the case. After an attempt was made to disavow Mr. Pelletier as attorney, Mr. Bastien—not the Indian Chief—was heard as a witness, and stated he had been paid some $700 or $800 for his trouble and expenses in giving instructions to that attorney, and it was contended that the attorney had no authority whatsoever. The court was struck so very much by that feature of the case, that when the party who had given Mr. Pelletier instructions in the name of the Government had been paid by the Government subsequently, when they knew every thing.

Mr. AMYOT. I am sure the Minister of Justice never had any ill-feeling against Mr. Pelletier, but I know all the facts and circumstances, and I may tell the hon. gentleman, that there is no more bitter opponent to Mr. Pelletier than the attorney chosen by the Crown, and that gentleman is taking every opportunity to satisfy his hatred. The whole cause of the misunderstanding was as follows:—Mr. Pelletier was duly authorised in the beginning of the proceedings. He took action for the Indians in the name of the Government, according to instructions received directly from Ottawa; at a certain moment politics interfered, and an order was obtained from the Deputy of Indian Affairs to stop the proceedings. A telegram was sent to that effect to Mr. Bastien, sub-chief of the Indians. That telegram was entrusted to Mr. Picard, another Indian, but instead of giving the telegram to Mr. Pelletier, he tore it up and never said a word about it; so the proceedings went on. After that Mr. Bastien came to Ottawa and received further instructions in the case, and the case went on. It is under these circumstances that proceedings are taken against Mr. Pelletier. If the Department believe that Mr. Pelletier was wrong, it is their right to go on, but they have lost in the Superior Court and in the Appeal Court, and on that simple question of fact they are attempting to ruin Mr. Pelletier in costs. He has had to make the disbursements from the commencement, and I think it is unfair for a Department or for the Government to use the public money to persecute an individual under those circumstances. I know the whole circumstances of the case, and I am sure that my calling the attention of the Minister to the matter will prevent its going further.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON

Indians, Prince Edward Island... $2,000

Mr. CAMPBELL. How are the supplies for the Indians in Prince Edward Island purchased? Is it by tender, and at what season of the year are they purchased?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The supplies are purchased under contract. I see by the report that Mr. Gaffney received $449, Mr. Arsenaux received $198 and Mr. Gallant received $260.

Mr. CAMPBELL. At what season of the year are these contracts made?

Mr. DEWDNEY. In the summer season, after the summer supplies are voted.

Mr. CAMPBELL. In what month?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I am not aware in what month.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I find by the report that there are only 314 Indians in Prince Edward Island altogether, and according to the Minister's statement, some of them are cultivating the soil and are very industrious. Yet I find that the Government purchased for these Indians 71 barrels of flour, at an average cost of $6.10 a barrel. That seems a most extraordinary price to pay for flour. The finest grades of flour would not be worth anything like that in Prince Edward Island at that season of the year, and I cannot understand how 314 Indians could use that amount of flour in that time.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I can only give the hon. gentleman the information I have here, and I am told that it is not an unreasonable price to pay for flour in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I suppose the best grades of flour are not purchased for the Indians, but in any case this price is too high.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I cannot state as to the flour purchased in Prince Edward Island, but I know that we give a very good grade of flour to the Indians in the North-West. At all events tenders were called for and the contracts given to the lowest tenders.

Mr. CAMPBELL. In Nova Scotia and New Brunswick I find there was very little flour purchased for the Indians at all.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Very little relief is given to the Indians there. In New Brunswick they are largely engaged in lumbering.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There appears to have been 40 lbs. of flour to each Indian in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I should like to ask why there is an increase in the expenditure for medical attendance and medicine of $300 in Nova Scotia and $188 in New Brunswick?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The amount voted for New Brunswick has never been sufficient. The amount expended in 1884-85 was $1,145; in 1885-86, $951; in 1886-87, $1,209; in 1887-88, $1,002; in 1888-89, $1,443; or an average of $1,500. The estimate is made on a cost of 75 cents a head. It is considered that no smaller amount than that is sufficient to pay medical expenses in New Brunswick.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. That is not extravagant, considering that the Mounted Police cost $8 a head.

Indians, British Columbia..... $66,910

Mr. DEWDNEY. There is an increase of $2,630, which is caused principally by the fact that the Department were obliged to fit out a steam launch, which has just been completed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It appears to me that the vast bulk of this sum of $66,910 goes rather to pay the officials of the Government than for relief or assistance afforded the Indians. It looks to me as if these men absorb something like six or seven-tenths of the entire grant that we are making for the benefit of the British Columbia Indians.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I can explain that satisfactorily. British Columbia is a very large Province, and has a very large number of Indians in it. There are nine agents, scattered from one end of the Province to the other, whose time is entirely occupied with the Indians. But the state of those Indians is very different from that of Indians in other parts of the Dominion. A large majority of them are self-sustaining. The country is still full of game and fish, and nine-tenths of them live almost entirely on fish. In fact they are a great deal better off than some of our settlers.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell.) I would like to ask the Minister in regard to the surveys of the reserves. I supposed, when this plan of laying out Indian reserves in British Columbia was agreed upon, that long before this the work would have been completed. Can the Minister tell us how near the work of the commission is to an end?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The hon. gentleman, I think, asked me the same question last year, and I then told him that in the immediate vicinity of the settled portion of British Columbia, the reserves have nearly all been settled. But the country is growing, and settlement is expanding, and the reserve commission, I think, will be employed for several years longer. When we send this commission among the Indians where there is no settlement, it will be a great benefit to them, by defining their reserves, and preventing many of those unpleasantnesses which we have had, and really brought about the commission.

Mr. CASEY. In looking at the very first of the items under the head of general expenditure, British Columbia, I think the remarks of my hon. friend from South Oxford are pretty well borne out. Under the head of salaries, we find that I. W. Powell, superintendent, receives $3,000 salary for one year, a pretty big salary. If the hon. gentleman will look at page 81—E of the Auditor General's Report, he will find some information which will probably be as new as interesting to him in connection with this matter. $3,000 salary for the Indian Superintendent, is about the pay of a permanent head of a Department in Ottawa. It strikes me as very high pay for British Columbia. When we find that Mr. Powell received in addition $284 and some cents for travelling expenses, we find that he is paid quite as well as a head of a Department in this city, who has to live in a very different style from that expected of an Indian Superintendent in British Columbia. Then we find that Mr. Wootton, stipendiary magistrate, received a salary of $2,599.92 for one year, 8 cents less than $2,600. Why they deducted the 8 cents, I do not know. But he also travelled a great deal, and was pretty well paid for it. He received $855 for travelling expenses, making about $3,855. Why, Sir, there are many county judges in the wealthy and populous Province of Ontario, receiving smaller salaries than that.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The service of that gentleman has been dispensed with. He was appointed under an understanding that we had with the Provincial Government, appointed for a stated time, which is now up.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Was that a salary as stipendiary magistrate, or was this in addition?

Mr. DEWDNEY. As stipendiary magistrate.

Mr. CASEY. I am glad to see that this very expensive official has been dispensed with. What is paid to his successor?

Mr. DEWDNEY. He has no successor.

Mr. CASEY. There is no stipendiary magistrate at all?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No.

Mr. CASEY. So it appears that for some time back we have been paying about $3,855 per year for an officer who was not needed at all.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Oh, yes, he was.

Mr. CASEY. Then, why has not a successor been appointed?

Mr. DEWDNEY. He was appointed at a time when there was considerable trouble on that north-west coast, and it was necessary to have there a magistrate with superior powers, and he was sent there at the request of, and with an understanding with, the Local Government of British Columbia. That state of affairs has passed away, and there is no longer a necessity for a magistrate. The Indian agent has sufficient authority to deal with the questions which arise there.

Mr. CASEY. This trouble, I suppose, arose out of the Metlakhatla business?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes.

Mr. CASEY. A question which the Government could have regulated before it came to a head, through their ordinary agents, and by doing justice to the Indians at that point. However, we have to pay for these little mistakes. Then, after these large items for salaries, I find, under the head of supplies, a charge of 75 cents for bacon. I think the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) was justified in saying that salaries rather than supplies make the larger portion of the cost in British Columbia, probably no less than nine-tenths of the amount. At pages 82 and 83 (E) appear very large charges for medical attendance and medicine; $454 to one doctor, $217 to another, $111 to another, and so on. I do not know whether there was any epidemic at that time or not; it is not so stated, because we had a special charge for attending small-pox patients. Are those doctors permanently appointed or are they called in as needed?

Mr. DEWDNEY. They are called in as required, and there is, I believe, an understanding with the Department with respect to their charges. They are not regularly appointed; there is a tariff fixed.

Mr. MARA. If the hon. gentleman will look at the number of Indians in British Columbia, 30,000, as compared with 20,000 in the North-West Territories, he will see that the cost of administering justice and regulating the Department of Indians is very much lower in proportion, about one-fourth of that in the North-West. With respect to the Indians, I may state that the doctors are paid a very low rate, often $1, when in ordinary cases they would be entitled to $5; and I know in many cases a doctor spends the greater part of the night on an Indian reserve and receives only $2 or $3, whereas in an ordinary case, according to the fees in British Columbia, he would receive $20.

Mr. CASEY. I am sure the Minister will be glad to have this matter explained to him by his colleague (Mr. Mara), especially as to the fixed payment to doctors. We have yet, however, not been told whether a fixed rate or fixed fee is paid, or whether the rate is only one lower than the ordinary fee. I find also among the items, rent of office $585. The agents' salaries average $1,200 throughout and a very large allowance for travelling expenses; and in fact a very much larger proportion of the expenditure is paid for administration than for the support of the Indians. Taking out medical attendance and certain supplies and the cost of administration, and what is there left?

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). We have not had a satisfactory statement as to a fixed rate being paid to the medical men. Apparently there is no agreement between the Government and the physicians in British Columbia.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I can tell the hon. gentleman that the doctors are instructed they will be paid the smallest charges made to the poorest class of individuals.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). There is no such rate among doctors. Doctors have a regular tariff; and if they feel disposed to charge a poor man 25 cents instead of $1, it is not a charge made but it is taking a pittance. There is no such thing as the smallest charge. There must be some agreement between the Government and officials in attendance. We would like to know whether there is an agreement or not, and if there is, what are the terms?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The doctors verify in their account that such is the case, that they only charge the Indians what they would charge the very poorest portion of the population; and the hon. gentleman, who I understand is a medical man, will understand that. No doubt he does not charge all his patients alike.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). That is not an agreement between the Government and physicians. We want to know whether there is, or there is not, such an agreement, what it is, how much is paid per visit and per mile for travelling expenses?

Mr. DEWDNEY. We do not have any special rates. The accounts are sent in through our agent, who knows what is a fair account; they are audited before they come to the Department, and if they are thought to be excessive they are sent back. The same custom prevails in British Columbia as in the Maritime Provinces. In the North-West Territories a fixed rate is paid.

Mr. CASEY. In Ontario, the doctors at the agencies, are paid a fixed sum, no matter how much attendance they have to give. That is the proper course to be adopted, for then the doctor is not tempted to multiply calls when not needed. As regards British Columbia there is no limit to the number of calls a doctor may make at an Indian reserve, and there is no specific sum paid for his fees. The Minister will have an opportunity of distinguishing himself by engaging doctors with fixed salaries for each Indian reserve. I am glad the Minister has ascertained, what he evidently did not know at the commencement of this discussion, the absence of agreement with medical men in British Columbia and he will have an opportunity to make a reform in that respect, of which, no doubt, he will avail himself. Are the supplies for the Indians of British Columbia contracted for on the basis of tenders, or are they also obtained from the most convenient sources when needed?

Mr. DEWDNEY. All our Indian supplies are contracted for.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think it is highly desirable that some arrangements should be made with the doctors, for I believe they are imposing upon the Indian Department. When we look over this list here and see the enormous amounts expended for medicines and medical attendance, I believe it is in the interest of the Government that they should have a special arrangement with the doctors, because I do not think they are to be trusted very far.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). My hon. friend from Kent is a living witness that the millers were charging too much for flour in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. MARA. I quite agree that a fixed salary should be paid to the doctors. I have repeatedly urged that upon the Minister of the Interior, but he has declined to do so, on the score of economy. My impression is, and it is based on observation, that the Indians do not receive that medical attendance which they require, and that the Indian agent does very often haggle with doctors, and doctors do not care about attending the reserves, because the fee they receive is very low. According to the scale in British Columbia, a doctor is entitled to $5 a visit, on an ordinary patient, and he will not care about going on the reserve in the middle of the night when he will receive only $1 or $2. I hope the hon. Minister will accept the suggestion made by hon. members opposite, that the doctors should be paid a stated salary for certain reserves.

Mr. MACDOWALL. In the North-West Territories doctors are paid certain sums, and I agree, that if the Indians are to be properly attended to, the doctors must be paid such sums as will secure first-class professional men. I think every man belonging to the medical profession will say that good doctors are entitled to be paid their fees, and that they should not be paid in such a way as might cause them not to devote all their care and attention to the Indian patients. I regret very much to see that this item is reduced, because I believe that the doctors might be paid a little more with great advantage to the Indians.

Mr. FERGUSON (Welland). I cannot see why the doctors should be made the subject of a special attack to-night. The hon. member (Mr. Mara) has said that they only get $1 or $2 for attending the Indians in British Columbia, whereas they get $5 for attending the white man. In that case it cannot be charged that they are paid too much for attending the Indians. It is so well known throughout the country that the members of the medical profession are so high-minded, so dignified, and so honorable, that no such accusations should have been made on the floor of the House.

Mr. MONTAGUE. In some of the reserves in Ontario, the system has been adopted of paying the doctors a stated fee, and it has not been found to work well. The Indians of the Mississagua band desire to return to the system of paying the doctor for just the services he renders, and they are now agitating for a change in that direction.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I believe it would be in the interests of the Department, if the doctors on certain reserves were paid so much a year for their services. We find physicians very frequently attending the Oddfellows, and such other societies, at the rate of a dollar a year for each member. Could not the Government enter into some such arrangements with the doctors for attending the members of an Indian band? The worse charge that has been made against the Government tonight has been made by one of their own supporters, who coolly rises to his feet, and states that the medical wants of the Indians are neglected because of the parsimony of the Government, and that these poor half-civilised people are allowed to die without proper medical attendance. I say that the Government is censurable for this conduct. I find that a very large amount is expended for medical purposes, and as the physicians only get a small amount, some one else must get the money. We find some very large sums here for medicines, and there must be something wrong, or it is very evident that the doctors are not called in when the Indians are sick. I would advise the Minister who has charge of those Indians as his wards, to see that proper medical care is taken of them and that they are not allowed to die out for want of medical aid. In British Columbia, we find that $6,000 or $7,000 have been expended for medicines. How many Indians are treated there, and who are the physicians treating them? Who furnishes this medicine? How is it used, and who is responsible for its use? These are questions which should be looked into by the Minister.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The hon. gentleman talks about something that he knows nothing about. The medicines which he sees charged there are medicines which are sent to the outlying districts of British Columbia, where there are no doctors. The missionaries every month of the year were begging us to send medicines, and the amounts expended in that regard are very small compared with the demands made upon us.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). You ought to make them larger, then.

Mr. CASEY. It is very unfortunate for the reputation of British Columbia as a healthy country to look at the items in this report. I think the hon. Minister should not taunt my hon. friend from East Elgin with speaking of matters that he does not know anything about. I am afraid the hon. Minister would have to profess that he does not know very much about this subject himself. He is perhaps not aware that the expenditure for medical attendance and medicines amounts to at least $10,000, if not more. I do not think he knows, either, why these items are charged in such a peculiar and haphazard way. We find on page E—82 a lot of charges for medical attendance and medicines under the head of general expenses; again, under the head of each agency we find charges for medical attendance and medicine for that agency; and then, at the end of the whole, we find this lump sum which my hon. friend has alluded to. In the Fraser agency, $1,085 was paid for medicine and medical attendance, and it appears to have been very useless after all, for in spite of it the doctors allowed an epidemic of small-pox to break out among the Indians, which cost us $3,555 in addition. Then, in the Kamloops agency $1,439 was spent for medicines and medical attendance, of which about $500 was paid for the attendance of two doctors. I hope my hon. friend will be able in the future to make a better showing for the salubrity of the climate of the Province which he came from than he has been able to do hitherto.

Indians, Manitoba and the North
West Territories.....$910,089

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am glad in one sense to see that there is a very considerable reduction proposed in this item, but I should be glad to hear from the Minister on two matters—first, whether the population on the reserves is rapidly diminishing, and in what particular quarter it is diminishing, and also to what extent the Indians are becoming self-sustaining.

Mr. DEWDNEY. In some portion of the Territories within the last year or two there has been a considerable decrease in population. It has occurred specially in Treaty No. 7, that is, the western district, amongst the Blackfeet and the Piegans. Amongst them the deaths exceed the births. I have a return here showing the birth-rate and death-rate on every reserve, and I am glad to say that on eleven of our reserves in the Territories there has been an increase. The Indians in the Blackfeet country have a large number of old people, which partially accounts for the large number of deaths among them, and they have also suffered from a bad attack of whooping-cough, which has carried off a great number of children. I am glad to say, however, that the Indians of the North-West Territories and Manitoba are making very marked progress. If I had time to read the return which I have in reference to their progress and the increase in their wealth, I think the hon. gentleman would be astonished. He will see that we are asking a decreased amount for supplies to destitute Indians by $24,000. They are raising a great deal of their own food now. For instance, at Fort Pelly, there are 673 Indians, and we only ration 338; at Birtle there are 557 Indians and we only ration 112; at Moose Mountains there are 303 Indians and we ration 283; at Crooked Lakes there are 809 Indians and we ration $500; and so on. In the Blackfeet country we have to ration almost every man, woman and child, for they are the most helpless and unprogressive of all the Indians. The ration varies from 8½ ounces in the Touchwood Hills to 23½ ounces in the Blackfeet country.

Mr. MACDOWALL. Before this item passes I wish to call the attention of the Minister to the case of the Prairie Lake Indians, who have not been paid their annual allowance since the rebellion. They were supposed to have been disloyal, but I hope that now the Minister has received such evidence as will induce him to take their case into consideration. I believe myself that they were loyal.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I may say that I think this year every Indian in the Territories will be paid his regular annuity. We have been increasing those who we think deserve it from year to year.

Mr. WATSON. There is a great fear experienced by the Indians and their agents that the fishing allowed in Lakes Manitoba and Winnipeg are depleting these lakes of fish.

Mr. DEWDNEY. That matter has been brought to my attention by the officers of the Department, and also by the Lieutenant Governor, who has taken great trouble to enquire into the matter, and has written me several reports which I laid before the Department of Fisheries. They propose to send Mr. Moffatt, who is in charge of the fisheries, at an early date to make special enquiries into the matter. From what I hear, I believe the southern portion, especially, of the lakes has been depleted to a great extent, and I understand what a serious signification that has, because if we allow our lakes in Manitoba to be fished out, we shall have to feed all the Indians, of whom there are 8,000 or 10,000, the same as we do those in the North-West. The fishermen are making a big fight, contending that there is no depletion in the catch and that the Indians are perfectly satisfied, but I know that our inspector invariably on his trips receives complaints from the Indians, and, therefore, I am taking specially means to get at the truth.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I understood the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall) to say that the Indians were really loyal, and yet have been deprived of their funds since the rebellion up to the present. If they were loyal they are entitled to be paid those funds.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Although we have not paid these Indians their annuities, we have seen that they have not suffered, and have assisted them to a large extent in other ways. My opinion is different from that of the hon. member for Saskatchewan, and I acted upon the information I had. The Indians will be perfectly satisfied when they get their annuities paid.

Mr. MACDOWALL. I do not believe the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wilson) has helped the Indians. My information is perfectly sound, and I hope the hon. Minister will consider it.

Mr. WATSON. The Government derive no revenue at all from the fishermen on the waters of Lakes Manitoba and Winnipeg. All the fish caught there are taken by the company, who are Americans, down to the United States, so that our people have more difficulty in getting fresh fish now than before that company was started. Mr. McColl in his report says :

"In many of those favored districts the supply of game, fur-bearing animals and fish is becoming gradually exhausted in consequence of the more effective instruments of destruction now used by hunters and fishermen in prosecuting their business regardless of consequences to the Indians who are naturally apprehensive of starvation unless their valuable fisheries are preserved. Their alarm is great at the probable failure of their fisheries, especially in Lake Manitoba and in the southern half of Lake Winnipeg, because American fishermen have commenced operating extensively there with several steamboats and a fleet of fishing smacks, fully equipped with men and provided with the requisite number of nets for catching nearly all the choicest fish in a very few years. At every council meeting I attended in those districts the question was prominently brought before me, with eloquent and pathetic appeals for assistance to prevent the destruction of their fisheries before they would be irremediably ruined.

"In consequence of the extensive fisheries established on Lake Winnipeg, especially in the Little Saskatchewan Bay, a large number of Indians belonging to this agency abandon their reserves during the fishing season and resort, with their families, to that locality for employment. They are supplied by the companies engaged in the business with boats and nets for fishing, and receive two dollars in trade or about one in cash for every hundred whitefish caught; these fish are afterwards disposed of for upwards of fifty times the amount paid for them. Instead of the Indians being benefited by the fisheries, I find the very opposite to be invariably the case, for not only is the supply of fish, upon which they principally depend for subsistence becoming rapidly exhausted, but also the general condition of the Indians within this agency is getting apparently worse every year. Since the commencement of those fisheries their reserves are not properly cultivated, their gardens are frequently neglected and their houses often deserted. At the approach of winter, when the fishing season is over, they return to their homes empty-handed and heavy-hearted, to wander about in search of food to keep themselves and families from starving."

He makes the same report on the fisheries of Lake Manitoba and the Indian reserves. These Indians are paid for their catch the paltry sum of one cent apiece for whitefish, and I believe it would be in the interest, not only of the Indians, but of the white settlers as well, that this fishing industry on the part of the Americans should be stopped. The Indians would then receive a fair price for their fish, instead of one cent apiece, and the people would be better supplied with fish than they are now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How are the Indians taking care of the cattle placed in their charge?

Mr. DEWDNEY. They are taking very good care of them. Within the last year or two, we have given them on a few reserves small herds of heifers where we thought that they would look after them, and the result has been very satisfactory. In regard to their own cattle, which they are now purchasing largely, as well as agricultural tools, they are taking as good a care of them as the whites do.

Day and Boarding Schools.....$68,905

Mr. WATSON. I would like to enquire of the Minister what is being done in regard to the boarding school at Birtle, and also in regard to the boarding school at Portage la Prairie.

Mr. DEWDNEY. As to the proposed purchase of the school at Birtle, I may say that the matter was brought before me last year and, during my trip west last summer, I went to inspect that school. I subsequently had an expert to examine the school, and one of our inspectors to go there also, and to find what additions were necessary in order to make it what we would consider a proper school, similar to those which we have in operation in other parts of the country. I confess that I was a little disappointed in the building, and the school inspector in connection with the expert reported that it would take $5,000 to make the additions to the school which were necessary. However, there is an amount which I have put in the Supplementary Estimates for that purpose, but it has not been placed before my colleagues yet, and consequently no decision has been come to. There is one difficulty, and that is that there is no ground about it and I am not aware that we could get any land to serve as an Indian farm, which is almost a necessity in connection with such a school. Before we come to any decision I shall have further information to present to my colleagues. In regard to the school at Portage la Prairie, I may say that, on my visit last summer, I found out that I had sufficient money granted to give that school $300 for the balance of the year. I have placed $1,000 in the Estimates this year for that school, and I have received a letter from the secretary of the Presbyterian Synod in Winnipeg thanking me for the liberal consideration we are giving that school for the coming year.

Mr. WATSON. I hope the Minister will be able to induce his colleagues to vote the sum required to complete the purchase and the additions which are required in connection with the Birtle school. It has been occupied as a boarding school by the Government for some time, it is in a very nice situation, and I would not suppose that it would be necessary to have a great quantity of land around it, as it is close to the reserve; but I have no doubt that a small quantity of land could be secured. The municipality is anxious to dispose of it, and I hope the Minister will be able to induce his colleagues to take it over.

Mr. BARRON. We would like to know—and if the Minister cannot give us the information now, he may do so on concurrence—what is the number of the denominational schools among the Indians, the respective denominations which are assisted, and the amount of Government aid which is given to each denominational school?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I can give you that at once. We were paying towards the support of 21 Church of England schools in 1889, and are adding six for 1890, making 27. We pay towards the support of 11 Presbyterian schools, 10 Methodist schools, and 24 Roman Catholic schools, making a total of 72 of all denominations. The amounts paid are, to the Church of England schools last year, $30,957.60, to which we add $1,700 for this year; to the Presbyterian, $16,807.85; to the Methodist Church, $2,737, and we are adding to that $300 for a new school this year; to the Roman Catholic schools we paid last year $60,970.89, and for 1890, there is an addition of $1,400.

Mr. BARRON. I should like the hon. gentleman to explain why he is granting $61,000 for 24 Roman Catholic schools, and only $30,000 for 27 Church of England schools?

Mr. DEWDNEY. A great deal of that amount for the Roman Catholic schools is for the support of the two large industrial schools which were established before any others were founded. To the Fort Qu'Appelle Industrial school there is an amount of $39,675 voted for that year, and the High River Industrial school takes $12,354.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I suppose the hon. gentleman will give the attendance at those schools later?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; I have a return somewhere.

Mr. BARRON. I see the 24 Roman Catholic schools are given a larger sum than all the Protestant schools put together. Is this large increase to be accounted for simply by the industrial schools?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; that takes $42,000 for industrial schools out of the $60,000.

Mr. WATSON. It seems to me that a very extravagant price is paid for fuel at these industrial schools. At Battleford there were 100 tons of coal used at $12, and 260 cords of wood. At the High River school, 62 tons of coal, at $16 a ton, and 30 cords of wood, at $7.75 a cord. I do not know much about the High River school, but I think that is an extravagant price for wood. At Qu'Appelle there were 99 tons of coal used, at $16.50, and 167 cords of wood, at $2.12. Now that appears to me to be a very excessive price to pay for coal at Qu'Appelle. Certainly, if coal cannot be got cheaper than that, it would be much better to burn wood altogether, when wood is comparatively so cheap.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The coal used at Qu'Appelle and at High River is hard coal from Winnipeg, and I think now they are using our own hard coal at Calgary, where it has only lately been delivered. They were not able to supply the demand at Calgary until this winter. That contract was let 18 months ago, and the coal has to be hauled twenty-four miles. The wood at the High River School has to be brought a long distance. The wood in the neighborhood of the river has been used up, and it now has to come, I fancy, from the base of the mountains. At Qu'Appelle the wood is supplied by the Indians, who gather the dead wood on their reserves, principally at File Hills. This they are very anxious to do, to get a little money. I think they have to haul it about twelve miles.

Mr. WATSON. It would be better to encourage the Indians in hauling wood at $2.12, than to bring in American coal at $16.50 a ton. There is evidently bad management here. If wood can be got for that price, and it certainly can, the Indians ought to be encouraged in that industry. It seems strange that the Government, after giving large assistance for the purpose of developing our coal mines in the North-West, and giving large subsidies to build railways, should find it necessary to bring in American coal for their own schools in the North-West, now that western coal is shipped east as far as Winnipeg and is used there exclusively by some people for heating purposes. If it is good enough for the people of Winnipeg, it is good enough for this industrial school.

Mr. MACDOWALL. I do not think the price of wood or coal is a bit too high. In the first place, hard coal will burn all night; wood will not, and these fires have to be continually replenished. The price of wood at Battleford is not a bit too high; in fact so much is that the case that the people of Battleford only last year petitioned the Government not to take their wood and supplies from the Indians, because it was cutting off the market from the white settlers. The white settlers themselves find that the market is being taken up by the Indians. There is so much competition that the hon. gentleman may be perfectly certain that the price is not too high.

Mr. WATSON. Surely the hon. gentleman, as representative of the people, is not going to suggest that we should keep on feeding those Indians at the public expense, when they are able, and willing, and anxious to work to supply wood, and when actually the white settlers are petitioning the Government as, against giving these Indians any work to do. That is the most illogical argument that I ever heard a representative of the people make use of in this House. He is actually in favor of preventing the Indians from working, and that we should feed them and not allow them to earn their own living when they are able to do so. Have we not got industrial schools and instructors on purpose to educate the Indians up to the point where they will be able to provide for themselves? But the hon. gentleman advocates that the Indians should not be allowed even to cut wood and sell it in competition with the white settlers.

Mr. MACDOWALL. I think the hon. gentleman is quibbling. I never advocated anything of the kind, I simply made a statement of facts.

Mr. WATSON. What is your opinion, as a representative of the people?

Mr. MACDOWALL. I do not know that you have any right to ask me my opinion.

Mr. WATSON. I think when a statement of that kind is made, and the hon. gentleman, as their representative, says what the people wish up there, he ought certainly to express his own opinion on it. I should suppose he was leading this House to believe that the Government should not allow these Indians to sell wood to the industrial school in Battleford. He says the people ask for that, and he, as a representative of those people, certainly intended to convey that impression to the House; I have no doubt he was doing so, because the Indians in that section of the country have not got a vote.

Mr. MACDOWALL. As the hon. gentleman insists on having my opinion—he has already stated that the Government and the country have spent large sums in developing the North-West—I may tell him that when isolated settlements find their markets so restricted, more must be spent if the improvement of the North-West is to be gone on with, and large sums must be spent, and the country be developed more rapidly.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would like some information with regard to the denominational schools further than the Minister has given us. I observe that for the industrial schools, $139,214 are asked. The Minister has given us sums that amount to about $110,000. Now, are there any secular schools supported wholly by the Government, and under the control of the Government? Then, with regard to the day boarding schools, I observe there are $68,905 for these. How much of this sum that the Minister has given us, applies to the day boarding schools, and how much to the industrial schools? I would also like the Minister to say how it is that there is $7,800 of a reduction in the amount voted for industrial schools?

Mr. DEWDNEY. That is regulated by the amount of building we are doing, because the amount has been asked for that purpose as well. With regard to the other question, I may say that these amounts which I gave to the hon. gentleman is the money that we gave up towards the day schools and industrial schools in the North-West and Manitoba.

Mr. WATSON.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The sum he has given us is a good deal less than the appropriation.

Mr. DEWDNEY. That refers only to the North-West Territories alone. Manitoba, I think, is $15,000.

Mr. WATSON. Are supplies of medicines and drugs usually kept in schools?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; there is always a certain quantity of medicine on hand. Regular visits are made to the school by a doctor who is paid a regular salary; that applies to Qu'Appelle and another large institution.

Mr. WATSON. In the school accounts there is an extraordinary item: whiskey, 2 quarts, $6.00.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I cannot give the hon. gentleman any explanation in regard to that item, but the whiskey must have been used for medicinal purposes.

Mr. WATSON. Where are the grist and saw mills to be erected this year, for which $3,100 is asked?

Mr. DEWDNEY. This amount is to provide for the completion of a mill belonging to the Department, which was completed at Carlton last year. It is completed, and has been opened, and I have here a sample of flour made by the Indians from Indian wheat. It is a very wholesome flour, although if supplied by the Department, it would be considered to be rather dark in color. Another building will be erected at Onion Lake. We are making use of the machinery which was left on the ground after the troubles. We paid the loss and took over the machinery, and we hope this summer to complete the mill. Then we propose to erect a flour mill at Crooked Lake, south of Broadview. When His Excellency visited the North-West last year, the Indians in that locality waited upon him, and one of their requests was that he would ask the Government to place a grist mill on the Indian reserve.

Mr. WATSON. How is the mill operated at Crooked Lake? Does the Government employ a miller there?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No; we have had a mechanic to erect the machinery, but the farm instructor will run the mill.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Will the hon. gentleman explain how the item of $18,032 would be expended?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The buildings which it is proposed to erect and to complete with this sum of $18,032 are as follows:—Fort Pelly, to complete warehouse, office and stables, $800; Moose Mountain, to erect new agency buildings on White Bear's Reserve, $2,500; Crooked Lakes, to erect wagon and harness house, $200; cellar for gunpowder, $30; repairs, $62; Muscowpetung's Reserve, general repairs to agency buildings, $100; new farm house on Pasquash's Reserve, $600; Piapot's Reserve, for farm house, $650; well, pump, &c., $300—total, $1,650; File Hills, to erect new farm house on Pee-pee-kee-sis' Reserve, $600; improvements and repairs to agency building, $350; repairs to houses of clerk and interpreter, $125; well at agency, $100—total, $1,175; Touchwood, to complete granary and implement sheds, repairs to agency buildings, new implement and wagon sheds, repairs to farm buildings, $780; Duck Lake, repairs to agency buildings, for roofing and gables of new barn, $400; Carlton, repairs to agency buildings, $100; Battleford, new farm house on Moosomin's Reserve, $600; Onion Lake, additions and repairs, $180; Saddle Lake, new office building, additions to agent's house, repairs of farm buildings, &c., $815; Edmonton, repairs to building, $435; Peace Hills, repairs, $100; Sarcee Reserve, repairs, &c., $545; Blood Agency, new stable, &c., $800; Piegan Reserve, new agency house, $1,500. Regina, warehouse, $1,500; minor items, $430. I propose this year to adopt the suggestion made a year or two ago with respect to the purchasing of supplies on which I feel sure I will be able to make a considerable saving; that is, to call for tenders for articles, such as groceries, tools, and all our supplies (except the very heavy machinery which it is proposed to deliver on the reserves), and will distribute throughout the North-West Territories. When I first went to the Territories, the transport was so poor that it was found to be almost impossible to conduct that from Winnipeg, but now, as the transport is cheap and the roads better, I believe it will put a great deal of money into the hands of our people who do the trading. I gave my attention to this matter two or three years ago, when it was brought up before the House, and at that time I made an estimate, and I calculated that we should save, perhaps, $25,000 a year.

Mr. MACDOWALL. I would suggest to the Minister that in purchasing supplies he will give the traders in the northern portion of the Territories an opportunity of tendering for such articles as they can supply.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON. I am glad to hear that the Minister has seen fit to adopt this system which I have advocated for the last five or six years in this House—that is, to allow the settlers in the different districts to do the freighting. It is not only fair to the people of the local districts, but it is fairer to the contractors of the east that this should be done; because, as I before explained to this House, a contractor, say, in Ottawa, would want to supply some articles for some particular agency and he could not figure on these supplies being delivered at these agencies, because he had to arrange for the freight. When these supplies are delivered at some place on the line of railway any contractor, whether for a large or a small quantity, can put in his tender, and can know what it will cost him to deliver the article at any point on the Canadian Pacific Railway. I think that by the adoption of this system local merchants will have a better opportunity than before to tender for supplies. This system will certainly, as the Minister has stated, distribute quite a few dollars into the hands of local freighters which otherwise would go into the hands of the large carriage companies who undertake to carry these supplies to different points.

Committee rose and reported resolutions.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 1.15 a.m. (Wednesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 19th March, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. CURRAN moved:

That Rules 49 and 51 of this House be suspended so far as they apply to the petition of the Grand Trunk Railway for an Act to grant them certain powers, in accordance with the recommendation of the Select Standing Committee on Standing Orders.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Before this motion is adopted, I wish to call the attention of the House, and especially the attention of the Minister of Railways, to its terms, because, although the Bill, with respect to which this motion is submitted to the House, may be properly described, in regard to the greater portion of it, as dealing with matters with which the outside public have no special concern, and in regard to which the rules might properly be suspended, yet, there is in that Bill one clause of a very great and sweeping character, which, I think, should not be allowed to pass without the notice of those interested in railway legislation in this House being called to it. General powers are asked to lease, or purchase, or otherwise deal with existing lines in terms that are very vague and very general, and, it seems to me, that a clause of that kind cannot properly be tacked on a Bill, which, prima facie, appears to be simply to do things which very properly come within the control of the board and shareholders. I do not propose to pursue the matter any further; but I call the attention of the House, and of members of the Railway Committee, to this Bill, and I ask them to consider whether or not such a clause should be passed, without the ordinary notice having been given to the public and to all concerned with regard to it. I may be wrong in my view, but I think such a clause should not be passed, without, at all events, the attention of the House and the public being called to it.

Mr. BERGERON. If I may be allowed, in a few words, to defend the position taken by the Standing Orders Committee, I would say that the Grand Trunk Railway Company are asking by their petition, briefly, the following powers: To aid, financially, the St. Clair Tunnel Company, with which they are connected; the Midland Railway, for the purchase of rolling stock; the Detroit, Grand Haven and Milwaukee Railway, to enable it to make improvements; to double the track between Hamilton and Toronto; and also general powers to lease and acquire any other railways authorised to be leased to the company by Act of Parliament. It is true that no notice was given. The question that came before the Committee was: whether any private interest would be injuriously affected by the granting of such petition without notice having been given. The members of the Standing Orders Committee generally regulated their action by precedent, and we have nothing better before us than the work on parliamentary procedure by Bourinot, from which I desire to read an extract before I proceed to defend the report of the Committee before the House. Bourinot says:

"The committee will always be guided, in coming to a conclusion, by the circumstances of the case under their consideration. It may not infrequently happen that they will dispense with the notice altogether or declare themselves satisfied with a partial and defective notice, when they are assured that no private interests will be affected injuriously by the irregularity.

"The committee have also dispensed with a notice with the following circumstances:

"When no interests except those of the petitioners are likely to be affected by the proposed legislation. When no exclusive privileges are asked for in the Bill. When the omission has arisen from some accident, and not from any negligence on the part of the petitioner, and the absence of notice would not be prejudicial to any private interests. When it has been shown that the circumstances rendering legislation necessary were so recent that it was impossible to give the requisite notice.

"When the committee have had abundant evidence that all parties likely to be affected were fully informed of the application, and that there was no opposition to the project."

We had before the Committee the Assistant Manager of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, who satisfied all the members of the Committee, except the hon. gentleman who has just addressed the House, that there were special reasons why such petition was not presented in time. I may here merely mention that before prorogation an application will be made by the Standing Orders Committee to have a change made in certain of our rules. At present ten days are given within which to present petitions for private Bills, but no Session has occurred when that time has not been extended to thirty, forty or even fifty-one days. We were perfectly convinced that no private interest would suffer from the request of the Grand Trunk Company being granted. Last week or the previous week, a similar application was made by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, in which the request was also made to grant the company the privilege of leasing railways in the same way as is asked in this petition submitted by the Grand Trunk. The request was granted to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company without opposition, the petition went through this House, and their Bill was received. I believe this to be wise legislation. Even during this Session the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have been obliged to come here three times to obtain permission to lease three railways: South Ontario Pacific, Regina and Long Lake, and Qu'Appelle, Manitoba and Western Railways. By the legislation which they ask they would be authorised to enter into these agreements with other companies without being obliged to come here specially and ask each time for the same privilege. I may say, for the satisfaction of members who are not conversant with our rules, that there is no danger in this action. We have, moreover, recommended that a provision similar to that inserted the other day in the Canadian Pacific Railway Bill shall be inserted in the Grand Trunk Bill, namely, that nothing can be done unless with the sanction and approval of two-thirds of the shareholders of the company. Whenever either the Grand Trunk or the Canadian Pacific Railway, by this legislation, may wish to lease or acquire a road, such agreement cannot be made unless the companies which want to lease or enter into an amalgamation with either the Grand Trunk or Canadian Pacific Railway come and ask special legislation to that effect, and unless such agreement is sanctioned also by two-thirds of their shareholders. It is true we have special rules adopted by the Standing Orders Committee, but it is inexpedient to always put them in force. If the Committee are satisfied that no interest will suffer by the rules of the Committee being waived in certain cases, then it should be done, for these rules were not framed for the purpose of preventing legislation, but for assisting it. Much is left to the discretion of members of the Committee, and until now not only have we followed the precedents of our predecessors, but we have followed them very closely. We have only in three cases asked a suspension of the rules, and, I do not think, we have any precedent for the suspension of Rule 51, and the cases in question are: The Dominion Mineral Company, asking for an increase of capital; H. H. Vivian & Co., for confirmation of charter; George Smith, extension of letters patent; and in all these cases we thought no private right could possibly be injured. In the case of the Montreal Coal Company we could not ask to suspend Rule 51, because we were not satisfied that parties who might be injured had been notified. For all these reasons, I hope that the House will adopt the report which we made, and will carry the motion which is now before the House, granting to the Grand Trunk Railway Company the very same legislation as was given last week to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). I do not propose to make any very lengthened remarks on this subject, and I would not have said anything, but for the casual statement of the chairman of our Committee, that the Committee were practically unanimous, with the exception of the hon. member from Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien). I have no wish, as an individual member of the Committee, to require that its rules and forms should be absolute and without any relaxation whatever, but I confess, that while I have no disposition to place the least obstacle in the way of the Grand Trunk Railway obtaining any legislation that may be necessary for the development of its resources, and the advancement of the undertakings on its hands, I am at a loss to understand, similarly with the hon. member for Muskoka, how it was that time for only one notice in the Canada Gazette could be found, for the various important matters applied for to the Committee on Standing Orders this morning. The doubling of the track of the railway from Toronto to Hamilton, or the aiding of the St. Clair tunnel, or the acquiring of power to amalgamate with railways that are authorised to amalgamate with the Grand Trunk Railway, were, to my mind, in no sense enterprises that could have been only decided upon by the Grand Trunk Railway Company last week. I cannot conceive any circumstances under which the efficient management, as we know it to be, of a large and powerful institution, such as the Grand Trunk Railway, could have been found to be so cornered in their administration as to come down to the Standing Orders Committee and to ask us, inside of four days, to pass legislation of that sweeping character. I confess that I share the feeling of the hon. member for Muskoka, that we are becoming altogether too lax in suspending the rules of the Standing Orders Committee at the request of powerful corporations; whether they be the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway, I care not. I remember, Sir, that on two occasions last Session, in consequence of representations made to the Committee that there were no private interests involved, and that the legislation affected none outside of the economy of the railway companies that were making application, we allowed these Bills to be presented. These members of the Standing Orders Committee, who were also members of the Select Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines, had to receive a rather pointed rebuke, very properly administered by the chairman of the latter Committee, to the effect that they had not discharged their duty of properly seeing that the interests of other parties were preserved in these applications; and both of the measures were thrown out in consequence of our failing to discharge our duty as we ought to have done. Personally, I do not propose to offer any objection to the Bill that is before the House, but I do think that it is only fair to the Committee, and fair to the hon. member from Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien), that I should make this statement, after what I saw in the Committee this morning.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not see that there should be any objection to the report of the Committee. The chairman has explained that the Committee has looked into the case, to see whether there was really any right which would suffer, and that, as far as they could learn, no outside interest would be affected. They thought that, under the circumstances, the Bill should be allowed to be introduced. The chairman has, of course, added, that they have recommended a special clause to be inserted in the Bill, to the effect that it must be submitted to the acceptance of two-thirds of the shareholders. I have no doubt that the Railway Committee will look carefully into the measure when it comes before them, in order to protect any special interest that might be endangered, and I believe the motion should be adopted.

Mr. BLAKE. I think that, after what has been done in other instances, as the hon. gentleman has stated, we should adopt this motion, but I cannot forbear to say that I view with some apprehension the proposal of the hon. gentleman to move the House to extend the time for action by the Standing Orders Committee. I must say, Sir, that during some years I took a very earnest part in endeavoring to enforce, as far as was practicable, consistently with real emergencies, those rules of the House which require the presentation in due time of private Bill legislation. I think that we have now fallen into laxer practices than have prevailed in former years. From my observance of the system in past Sessions, I think it is one which is open to very great possibilities of evil, and when we find private Bill legislation dropping into this House at an advanced period of the Session, it is almost certain that something will slip through for want of being attended to, which, if properly attended to, would be prevented. So far from relaxing these rules, I had rather that we should pass an ordinance which would make them more binding, and that the regulations of the Standing Orders Committee should be more rigorously observed in the future than in the past. I think our attention should be directed to some plan by which we should further enforce upon those who require private Bill legislation, the duty—unless in a case of emergency, and of course our laws are flexible and adequate to meet all real emergencies—of giving the full notice required, and sending in their petitions and presenting their Bills early in the Session. I think a very large improvement would be obtained if we made some arrangement whereby these petitions should be so dealt with that the Bills, by perhaps some alternate process or otherwise, should take their initiation in the other branch of the Legislature. We know that after Parliament meets, of necessity but a very small portion of legislative duty can be discharged by the Senate in the early part of the Session, until we supply it with work. I think a function of the highest public consequence would be performed by that Chamber, if a much larger part of the private Bill legislation, than has ever been initiated there, were, by a course of practice, which the two Houses have it in their power to arrange, begun in that branch of the Legislature. We know that in England a certain class of private Bill legislation is very largely moulded and managed by the House of Lords. I have some reason to believe, not from personal experience, but from what I have heard, that those Bills which are dealt with by the Senate are very carefully criticised, and I do think that it would be of great consequence, if we could devise some methods, not for further relaxation, but for more rigid observance of the general rules; and also for providing that a large portion of the private Bill legislation should take its initiatory stages in the other branch of the Legislature, in order that it may have that more perfect consideration which we cannot give it here.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am glad to hear my hon. friend calling the attention of the House to the very great expediency of following, to a considerable extent, the practice in England, with respect to private Bill legislation. From the fact, that a great portion of the measures before Parliament involve the expenditure of public money, they must originate in this House, and, therefore, as regards these measures the Upper House is simply a court for reconsideration. But there is here, as in England, a means by which a portion of the work of this now overburdened House can be thrown upon the Upper House; at all events, as regards the initiation of such measures. I am under the impression, though I do not know for certain, that in England private Bill legislation, as a general rule, is initiated in the Upper House. If such a practice prevailed here, we could much more readily apply ourselves to measures which must of necessity originate in this House, at the same time having confidence that the measures originating there would receive a degree of attention which we cannot well give them. I think it would greatly expedite the work of Parliament, greatly shorten the Sessions, and assure a more careful consideration of private Bill legislation than we can give it at present.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have made a suggestion here before—which, unless my memory deceives me, was received with some favor on the Government benches—with respect to private legislation, and I will take this opportunity to repeat it. During the time I had a seat on the Private Bills Committee, some years ago, I came to the conclusion that it would be very greatly to the interest of the public if no private Bill were permitted to pass until it had been carefully revised by a competent legal official employed by the House. In old times, some sort of an attempt was made by the Solicitor General, if my memory serves me, to discharge that function; but he could not do it with anything like the efficiency with which it would be done by some such officer as I suggest. I have considerable doubt whether, even now, no matter what other precautions we take, it would not be in the interest of the public that every Bill should be reviewed by some legal person set apart for that special duty.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have listened with a good deal of interest to the criticisms on the action taken by the worthy president of the Standing Orders Committee, and I must say that I agree with the suggestions in relation to it made by all the gentlemen who have preceded me. I think, in place of relaxing the rules, we really ought to make them more stringent than they are now. The suggestion made by the hon. member for South Oxford, I think, is worthy of consideration. It will be in the recollection of this House, that on a recent occasion, while the Grand Trunk Railway Company had a Bill before this House, several alterations were made in it, and it was withdrawn and amended from time to time. Had that Bill been required to go through the hands of such an officer as the hon. member for South Oxford suggests, the difficulties that then arose would never have occurred. I am not going to rake up old scores with the Grand Trunk Railway Company. They have done a great deal better since I took them in hand. I see the Premier smiling. He knows the pressure which on that occasion was brought to bear upon him to condone a very serious offence against this House, and he did it; but I am proud to say that my action has compelled the Grand Trunk Railway Company to double-track the line between Montreal and Toronto; and if that is being done to-day, it is because the power was not left to the discretion of the board in London, but was made compulsory before the bonds could be used, and it is due to my persistent efforts in forcing them to agree to do it at the risk of losing their Bill. With regard to this particular Bill, the Grand Trunk Railway Company are a very important corporation. They are competing against a younger and more active corporation, and it is our duty to show them fair play. Only last week we passed a Bill giving the Canadian Pacific Railway Company the same power which the Grand Trunk Company are asking by this Bill, of endorsing the bonds of the roads which they wish to acquire; and it is only right that we should give the Grand Trunk Company the same power. Another portion of the Bill, I understand, is to enable the company to raise money for the purpose of adding to the equipment, and for the purpose of building a tunnel which is to be of great service to the line. Under such circumstances, as no private interest can be affected by the short notice, I do not think we should stand on technicalities. Another feature of the Bill provides for the raising of money to double-track the road between Toronto and Hamilton. I am glad to find that the company have awaked to the necessity of making further improvements in their system, in order to compete with the younger and greater corporation, and although I am not in sympathy with them, I will do what I can in the public interest to help them to get their Bill through; but I will say to them: "Do not do it again; do not come late next time."

Mr. LANDERKIN. As a member of the Committee, I may be permitted to say, that this morning, after we had heard the reasons advanced, we felt that we should hardly be justified in not asking for the suspension of the rule, so that the Bill could be presented to Parliament this Session. We did not feel like taking upon ourselves the responsibility of obstructing the Bill, which is of so much importance to the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and to the country, and I hope there will be no opposition to our proposition. I have been a member of that Committee for a number of Sessions, and I think that we have asked for the suspension of the rule on fewer occasions this Session than in former Sessions. In that respect, we can meet the views of the hon. member for Northumberland, as we are doing better than we used to do, and, in now asking for an extension of time, we are endeavoring to do what is in the public interest.

Mr. O'BRIEN. My remarks only applied to that portion of the Bill which cannot be considered urgent, and with regard to which I thought public notice could be given.

Mr. BERGERON. I am afraid that the hon. member for West Durham did not understand what I meant. We are entirely in the hands of the House, like all the other Committees. I only spoke of the feeling that we might suggest to the House before the end of the Session—the desirability of enlarging the time for presenting petitions at the commencement of the Session. We should not be obliged to ask for the suspension of any rule, if the time were made a little longer. At present it is only ten days, and there has not been a Session since Confederation, in which it has not been decided, at the first meeting of the Committee, to ask Parliament to extend the time. If the regular time were made a month or six weeks, we should not need to come to the House and ask for the suspension of Rule 49. The hon. gentleman has referred to England. There, the Standing Orders Committee formerly consisted of from seventy to 100 members. It was reduced afterwards to forty members, and divided into five sub-Committees. But to-day, it is only a small Committee of eleven members, of whom five form a quorum, and they sit for a month or six weeks. We do not want to change the rules, but we want to make suggestions for the best. I may state that the Canadian Pacific Railway came to Parliament and asked for legislation which was accepted immediately in our Committee and in the House without any opposition, and very sensibly, as the hon. member for Northumberland has said. The Grand Trunk Railway, naturally, seeing that Parliament was disposed to grant to the Canadian Pacific Railway such a privilege, come here and ask for the same. It is true they are eight days later, but there are no private interests which will suffer, and, consequently, the Committee thought they were justified in asking the House to suspend the rule in this case as in the other.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. CURRAN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 125) respecting the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE MEMBER FOR LINCOLN.

Mr. GIROUARD moved :

That the letters, books and papers relating to the charges made against John Charles Rykert, Esquire member for Lincoln, in connection with the granting of certain timber limits in the North-West Territories, as referred to the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, may be reprinted in pamphlet form for the use of the members of the Committee, and that Rule 94 be suspended in relation thereto.

I make this motion in consequence of a resolution passed by the Committee this morning.

Mr. MITCHELL. It appears to me this is incurring a great deal of expense, as we have the papers in the Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. GIROUARD. I understand that the type is up, and that it will not be necessary to reprint them. They are found in the Votes and Proceedings of three different dates, and it will involve very little expense to have them in this convenient form.

Motion agreed to.

MR. ARTHUR PRIEUR.

Mr. NEVEU (Translation) asked, is Mr. Arthur Prieur, advocate, of Three Rivers, in the employment of this House and what are his duties? Or is he in receipt of any emolument, in any form whatsoever? What amount has he received since he has been so employed as a translator, or otherwise?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) I would suggest to the hon. member that his question be put in the form of a motion and to put it now, if he desires it. When the motion would be adopted, the answer would be laid on the Table by the clerk, as this is not an answer to be given by the Government.

Mr. LAURIER. (Translation.) The answer will not be given during this Session?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

An hon. MEMBER. In English.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have just said in French that as this is a matter relating to the House, and which cannot be answered by the Ministers, I would suggest that the question be put in the form of a motion, and that the answer would be laid on the Table in a couple of days.

Mr. NEVEU moved :

That the clerk do lay on the Table a return showing salary and remuneration paid to Mr. Arthur Prieur, employé of this House, as translator or otherwise, and the total amount received by him since his employment in any capacity.

Motion agreed to.

BUOYS IN RIVER ST. LAWRENCE.

Mr. GUAY asked, Whether the Government have given a contract for placing the buoys in the River St. Lawrence, between Quebec and Montreal? If so, to whom? Is it the intention of the Government to appoint a licensed pilot to superintend the placing of the said buoys? If not, under whose supervision are the buoys to be placed?

Mr. COLBY. The contract for placing the buoys in the St. Lawrence, between Quebec and Montreal, has been awarded to the Sincennes-McNaughton Company, of Montreal, and no decision has yet been made as to the appointment of persons to superintend the placing of these buoys.

PICTON HARBOR.

Mr. PLATT asked, Has the engineer sent by Public Works Department to examine the harbor at Picton and to enquire as to the necessity of dredging and improving the same, presented his report? If so, 1st. Does such report indicate that necessity exists for improving such harbor? 2nd. What is the estimate cost of making necessary and permanent improvements? 3rd. Is it the intention of the Government to place a sun in the Supplementary Estimates for the purpose of making such improvements or any part thereof?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The harbor, which is 1,800 feet in length with an average depth of 400 feet, has been gradually shallowed by the deposit of mud brought down by a small creek emptying into its head. Large quantities of grain and lumber are distributed at Picton, and it is a port of call for steamers and vessels plying on the Bay of Quinté. Owing to the shoaling of the harbor (the average depth being 8 feet) these are necessarily of light draught, and it is to accommodate a larger class of vessels that dredging has been asked for, the cost of which, to give 11 feet of water, is placed at $9,000. I am not in a position to give an affirmative or a negative answer to the third question.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. From one cause or another we have had no meeting of the Public Accounts Committee for a fortnight, and I would suggest the desirability of calling one early.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will mention this to the Minister of Finance when he comes in.

SULTANA ISLAND.

Mr. BARRON. I would draw attention to the insufficiency of the return brought down relative to Sultana Island. I asked for the original location of the island, with a map of the reserve. The only map brought down is one bearing quite a recent date, with the reserve colored on it. It appeared to me to be an ordinary map, with just the reserve painted on it. I would like to get a copy of the original map showing the reserve as originally surveyed. There was a map published by the Interior Department as far back as 1877, which shows the reserve is considerably east of where it recently has been placed. There is no correspondence brought down between this Government and the Ontario Government, although that was asked to be embodied in the return. Let us have any other maps showing the original location of the reserve, and also all correspondence between the two Governments.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I may mention that, since the hon. gentleman asked for the return to be brought down, we have had reports of some trespasses having been committed on Sultana Island. That was the cause of my making further search for papers in connection with this matter which I thought should be on record in the Department. I mean that, if parties were cutting timber on that island, there should have been on record either a surrender of the island by the Indians or a surrender of the timber. On communicating with the Department of Indian Affairs, I found that there was no record there. I then directed that search should be made in the Department of the Interior. Some papers were found there, and I think it is likely that the map referred to by the hon. gentleman will be found on that file. If so, I shall be glad to bring it down as well as any other papers, but I do not think there is any correspondence between the Ontario Government and either of the two Departments, except that which has been brought down from the Indian Department. However, I will bring down what may be found.

Mr. BARRON. There was a letter dated the 16th July, 1888, from Mr. Vankoughnet. There was another letter, of which I have not the date here. I know there has been some correspondence between the Ontario Government and Mr. Vankoughnet.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I could only trace two letters in the Indian Department and those are on the file and have been brought down.

MISS MAYBEE.

Mr. CHARLTON moved for :

Correspondence between the Post Office Inspector and other parties at Quebec, and the Post Office Department at Ottawa (and other Departments or officials at Ottawa, if any), respecting the discharge of Miss Maybee, a shorthand writer and type-writer in the Post Office at Quebec.

He said : This motion asks for information in regard to the dismissal of Miss Maybee from the position she held in the post office in Quebec. I know very little about the matter excepting from the rumors that have been made public through the newspapers, and it is in order to verify these rumors or to show that they are unfounded, that I ask for this correspondence. It is charged, as I understand, that Miss Maybee, who is a thoroughly excellent officer as a stenographer and type-writer, and who bears an excellent character, was appointed to a position in the Quebec post office, and that representations were made in reference to her appointment by people from Quebec, and that the fact that she was not a native woman was brought up, and she was dismissed because she was not a native of the Province of Quebec. It is in order to verify or disprove these charges that I call for this correspondence. If these reports are true, the action of the Government is not creditable to them, and if they are not true, it should be shown that they are not.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In consequence of some discussion which has taken place on this subject in the newspapers, no objection will be made to carrying this motion. At the same time, I would again, as I have on several occasions before, call the attention of the House to the inexpediency of the administration of affairs being interfered with because of a mere rumor published in the newspapers. No matter what Government may be entrusted with the administration of affairs, this kind of interference should not be permitted. It is never done in England. There it is considered that the House of Commons is a legislative, and not an administrative body. If there be a proved wrong, or if there be prima facie evidence of a wrong, then it would be well enough for Parliament to interfere, but this interference on mere newspaper rumors is altogether a different thing. Still, as this case has been made a matter of public discussion, I think it is well that all the papers should be brought down.

Mr. LAURIER. I am glad to hear the statement of the First Minister. I think the motion of my hon. friend (Mr. Charlton) is quite right. I do not know what took place in the Post Office Department in regard to this lady ; I do not know whether she was dismissed or not ; but this matter has not only had all the honors of publicity in the newspapers, but it has had publicity in a great debate which took place in this House, and I, therefore, think the action of my hon. friend in making this motion is quite right and proper.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not like to hear the reflection which the Premier has made on the newspapers. He speaks of this having been brought up on a mere newspaper rumor. It is from the newspaper that we get most of the information as to what is going on. I hope the right hon. gentleman will speak more respectfully of the newspapers in the future. They, or at least some of them, point out the way that he should follow, and if he adopted their suggestions a little more than he does, it would be better for him.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No doubt, as my hon. friend (Mr. Mitchell) suggests, we get all the facts from the newspapers, but unfortunately we get a great deal more than the facts. We not only get information as to facts, but we get further information which arouses our imaginations.

Mr. MITCHELL. Well, that is very beneficial. Motion agreed to.

CONSTRUCTION OF THE MONTREAL COURT HOUSE.

Mr. CURRAN moved for :

Return showing : 1. The actual cost of first construction of the Montreal Court House, 1851-57. 2. The amount spent for repairs since, each year down to Confederation. 3. The total number, nature and amount of bonds issued in connection with the Court House, showing also when said bonds were redeemed. 4. The total amount received or collected each year down to Confederation, in sale of stamps or otherwise, from the levying of the tax in the District of Montreal generally known as the Court towards paying the cost of such Court House.

He said : I am informed that the two first items of this return can be obtained, but that the others are not in the possession of the Government. The returns will show some light upon rather an important subject. The lawyers and litigants in the district of Montreal have been victimised for a great number of years. They think it is very proper that they should pay their share towards the revenue of the Province of Quebec, but they feel that they have paid for the Court house many times over. They desire to know exactly where they stand. Therefore, in order to supplement the other information which may be obtained elsewhere, I beg leave to move in respect to the first two items of this motion, as I have been informed by the Government that information respecting the other two is not in their possession.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

TIMBER LIMITS.

Mr. CHARLTON moved for :

List of timber limits granted by the Dominion Government since 1st March, 1885 ; the names of the parties to whom granted, with date of grant ; the area of each limit granted; whether granted to highest bidder at public competition, and the amount of bonus, if any, in each case received.

He said: I do not know whether any return has been brought down since February, 1885. The object of the motion is to secure returns from the date mentioned. I only wish to have the record complete by getting a return for what has not been brought down.

Mr. DAWSON. I am very glad the hon. gentleman has made this motion. He said, the other day, that a limit had been granted to me. I beg to say that I was not aware of a limit having been granted to me, and I have made enquiry since in the Department of the Interior and I find that no such thing occurred. I do not know how the idea got into the hon. gentleman's head.

Mr. CHARLTON. I think my statement, the other night, was, that the hon. member for Algoma had made application for a limit, and that the limit had been granted upon his application. I have a little ledger here in which I find this information in regard to timber limits, taken from the returns made in 1885:—

"Application by S. J. Dawson, M.P., May 3, 1884. Page of return, 9809. Order in Council issued to T. McRae, Port Arthur, fifty miles on Rainy Lake, May 17, 1884. Applications made by S. J. Dawson, M.P., not granted: For Thomas Marks, March 18, 1882; for Walter Ross, April 29, 1884."

My statement was that an order had been issued upon the application of the hon. member, and the record I have shows that such was the case. Two applications were made by the hon. member, which were not granted.

Mr. DAWSON. In my district there are a great many lumbermen, and they often send applications through their member, and I suppose I sent forward a good many of their applications, but I sent not one for myself. If the hon. gentleman had expressed himself in that way the other evening, I should have had no fault to find, but I understood the hon. gentleman to say that I had got a limit, which is not the case. I am in the habit of sending applications in regard to various matters every day to the Departments for which they are intended. My constituents on the occasion referred to, asked me to send forward applications, and I did it, but none for myself; and I take this opportunity of saying that since I became a member of this House I have never purchased so much as a single acre of Dominion land, nor acquired so much as a single square mile of limits for myself.

Mr. CHARLTON. I think the hon. gentleman will find that the statement I made was that he had made application for a party who had received a limit upon his application, and if I made a statement that he had secured a limit for himself, then I stand corrected.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is all very well for the hon. gentleman to say that now, but he made a speech the other day in which he quoted a long list of members, from which he carefully excluded any member from his own side, and he made a charge of impropriety of conduct on the part of those members. He said it was a scandal that members of Parliament were making application for timber limits. He does this with a purpose. It would be unparliamentary in me to impugn the motives of the hon. gentleman; the motives may have been most praiseworthy, but the object was obvious, it was for the purpose of trying to cast a slur upon hon. members. That was the necessary inference from the hon. gentleman's language, otherwise his speech was of no value; it was for the purpose of conveying the impression that the members whose names he had quoted, had been making application for timber limits and using their position as members of Parliament in order that their applications might be successful. That was the plain object of the hon. gentleman. He quoted the name of Mr. Thomas White as one of them, and he requested it, although in a previous debate when he brought that matter up, he had heard that hon. gentleman, now in his grave, state that he received an application, as a member, and that he sent it into the Department; and yet, the hon. gentleman brought it up again, as it were, to cast a stain upon the memory of that hon. gentleman. That was the fact, and it met with the just indignation of the House, which, if necessary, would have been loudly expressed from both sides of the House. In the same way, the hon. gentleman, in 1886, I think, brought up the name of my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy); he left it out this time because he and the hon. member for North Simcoe are both Equal Rights men. How are we to put down that kind of thing? The only way I can see is to ask my hon. friend from West Durham (Mr. Blake) to sit upon the gentleman as he did before.

Mr. CHARLTON. As the hon. gentleman has made a personal charge against myself, I suppose I may be permitted to say a few words. I deny the assertion that I suppressed the names of any of my friends on this side of the House; I did suppress one name, and that was the name of the right hon. gentleman himself. He made application for his friend Onderdonk for a small limit, but I thought it was a matter not worth troubling the House about. But, so far as my conduct in this matter is concerned, I may express regret now, that I mentioned the name of the late Hon. Thomas White. I found his name among those who had made application for limits, and for the moment it had escaped my memory, that the hon. gentleman had made the explanation he did make, and to which the First Minister referred. But I may tell the First Minister, that the feeling he evinces with respect to this matter shows very clearly, in my opinion, that he feels the pinch of the shoe in connection with the timber limits scandal. The proof was made that limits were granted to his friends, and they were granted in considerable numbers; and when I show the House that this was the case, the fact elicits an exhibition of feeling on the other side, which clearly proves that the hon. gentleman is conscious that he cannot justify the course that he and his Government have taken on this matter.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, I can.

Mr. CHARLTON. No, you cannot. The hon. gentleman made use of the public domain to reward his friends, and he granted, as I showed the other night, over 850 square miles of timber limits to members of this House; he granted nearly 4,000 square miles to his friends in the country, on application of members of this House; and the whole thing was a gigantic scandal from beginning to end. And yet the hon. gentleman stands up here to-day, and because I made an explanation to the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dawson) with regard to what I said last night, that hon. gentleman having misunderstood me, and I stating exactly what I did say, the First Minister rises and refuses to accept that explanation, but charges me with having maliciously and intentionally made a gross charge against the hon. member for Algoma, when I made no such charge as that to which the hon. gentleman alludes. The hon. gentleman had better say as little as may be about that episode in his political history connected with the granting of 25,000 square miles of timber limits to his friends without inviting competition, and granting the greater part to his own political friends in a most corrupt manner. It is a scandal in our history, and the Government have since admitted that the policy was wrong by abandoning it and resorting to competition.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I must say a word or two in reply to the hon. gentleman. I pointed out to the House that the hon. gentleman had acted disingenuously in his speech the other day. I have not the slightest objection to a discussion taking place on the policy of the Government with regard to the administration of affairs in Manitoba and the North-West. I would be glad to have that discussion, and I would prove, not to use an unparliamentary expression, that the hon. gentleman is as much in error as it is possible for a man to be. I am ready and able to justify to this House and to the country, everything that was done connected with the administration of public lands in Manitoba and the North-West Territories.

Mr. BLAKE. The only observation, I think, I need offer in answer to the hon. gentleman's appeal is, that I am delighted to hear so many verifications from all quarters of the House of the views which we on this side of the House for some years ineffectually expressed. The view, in the first place, which we endeavored to enforce in the form of a resolution as long ago as March, 1882, that the cession of timber limits to private individuals without competition was liable to gross abuse, and apt to result in the cession of the public domain for inadequate consideration to favored individuals, and which we repeated in 1886; and, in the second place, I am delighted to observe the disposition on the part of hon. gentlemen who are charged, or with respect to whom it is supposed, that they have touched what I may, I suppose, now call that unclean thing, a timber limit, to purge themselves from what the First Minister calls, a stain on their reputation; I am delighted to observe the desire evinced by those who did not touch, but are the protectors of those who did touch, to wash out any such possible stain. I am glad that we are undergoing this process of purgation and lustration.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I think what hon. members have a right to complain of in regard to the action of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), is this, that both in 1886 and the other night again he read a list of gentlemen who had made application for timber limits, impliedly for their own benefit, and in making that statement the hon. gentleman the other night referred to those hon. members as having participated in what he very elegantly expressed as the public swag. The implication was made on hon. gentlemen whose action was within the law—and I am not going to express an opinion in regard to the law, because I have already expressed my opinion on the matter—and who had, on behalf of their constituents, legitimately made application to the Department for an apportionment of the public land under the law as it existed. The objection which hon. members on this side of the House entertain to the course of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), is, that he implied that those hon. members participated in the profits arising from the apportionment of the public lands.

Mr. WARD. I desire to say a few words with regard to the matter brought before the House by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). Unfortunately I was out of the House when he brought forward the list of the names of members who had from time to time made application for portions of the public lands. I read from the hon. gentleman's speech in Hansard that he stated:

"That H. A. Ward, M.P., had received one limit."

And further:

"H. A. Ward M.P., made three applications and secured three limits."

The hon. gentleman must have had the returns before him at the time he made that declaration in this House, and he must have known, if he had read the returns and dates on which these applications were made, that these limits in question were applied for two years before I became a member of this House. That, however, is the style of the allegation put forward by the hon. gentleman. I simply wish to say that at that time, two years before I became a member, I was interested with some American and Canadian gentlemen who desired to enter into transactions in timber in the North-West. They applied through me, and I had one limit granted to myself, and afterwards about $3,000 was expended in examining and surveying the limits. My friends, however, came to the conclusion that they could not by any possibility be made to pay. Nothing more was done in regard to them, and the applications were cancelled. The hon. gentleman's mind must be relieved by the circumstance that the public domain has not in any way been squandered on gentlemen associated with me, but he cannot be relieved of the imputation of having attempted on false premises to assail the reputation of a member of this House.

Motion agreed to.

PICTON HARBOR.

Mr. PLATT moved for:

Correspondence, petitions, memorials, reports of engineers and others relative to the necessity and expediency of dredging and otherwise improving the harbor at Pictou, Bay of Quinté, since 1st January, 1883; and also containing all correspondence, petitions, memorials and reports concerning the desirability or expediency of constructing public buildings at the said town of Pictou for the accommodation of Post Office, Customs and Inland Revenue offices in that town, since 1st January, 1886.

He said: Although a portion of the information asked in this motion has been given by the Minister of Public Works in answer to a question, yet there is a portion not covered by that answer which is of more than local importance. I will not enlarge on the question at issue between myself and my constituents on the one side and the Minister of Public Works on the other, in regard to the necessity of improving the harbor of Pictou at the present time. The latter part of the motion is of still greater local interest, and my reason for seeking the information which I desire to be submitted to the House, is that rumor has been busy in stating that certain parties, interested in renting buildings for public offices in Picton, have been instrumental in neutralising or paralysing the efforts of those who were interesting themselves in securing the construction of public buildings at the public expense. I have only to say that, so far as Picton is concerned, the people of that town will be delighted by the discussion which took place in this House the other day, and by the remarks which were made by the First Minister, and by the motion which was unanimously adopted by this House, which gave us to understand that, in future, political favoritism was not to influence the distribution of public moneys; and, further, that the revenues received from the Customs and post offices in the various towns were to be considered in the construction of public buildings. I will make no reference, therefore, except to facts which are within the knowledge of the people of my immediate locality. I wish simply to compare the towns of Napanee and Picton, which are closely situated to each other. The town of Napanee is on the main line of railway and so situated that it has always received large benefits from the expenditure of public money in the construction of railways. The town of Picton, on the other hand, not being on the main line of railway, has never, I may say, received any direct benefit from the expenditure of public money, and the same may be said of the entire county which I have the honor to represent. We find from the returns, that the net Customs revenue from the town of Picton last year, was $10,216.74, and the net revenue from the post office of that town, $5,506.60, making a total of $15,723. In Napanee, the Customs revenue last year was $4,361, and the post office revenue $6,536, making a total of $10,897. The town of Napanee has had an expenditure on public buildings, in the last year or two, of some $37,000, while the town of Picton has as yet received no favors of that kind. I simply draw attention to the fact, that if political favoritism is not to influence, in future, the distribution of public works, and if the revenue of the various towns is to be considered; then, in order to regulate that very great discrepancy which seems to exist with regard to the different treatment extended to those two towns, it will be necessary to do something for the town of Picton.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I leave to the hon. gentleman the interpretation which he put upon the motion passed by the House the other night. I would suggest that the hon. gentleman, instead of putting the words "of engineers and others," should insert the words "report of the Chief Engineer of the Department," which is the ordinary phraseology to put in a motion of this kind. I have no objection to the motion if that change is made.

Mr. PLATT. I understand that the engineers sent to examine these works report to the chief engineer, and the chief engineer reports to the Department. I know that, on a former occasion, some such change was made in a resolution I had the honor to move, and the report did not come down, simply because the engineer who made the examination did not report to the chief engineer. If the report to which the hon. Minister made reference to-day is brought down, that is all I require.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is what I suggest to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. PLATT. I adopt the suggestion.

Mr. BURDETT. If an engineer or other officer is to be sent to survey the harbor of Picton, with a view to making permanent improvements to which they are justly entitled, he should be instructed to take some means to report on the advisability of deepening the Bay of Quinté, at Telegraph Island, above Deseronto. I am informed, by competent authority, that some slight improvement in the way of dredging and buoying out the course will make the waters of the Bay of Quinté at that point deep enough, as they are at other points, for the larger lake vessels which will pass through the Murray Canal to Montreal. I respectfully suggest that if an engineer is sent to Picton, or to any other port on the Bay of Quinté, or, indeed, whether one is sent there or not, it is advisable that the waters of the Bay of Quinté, from Belleville to Deseronto, should be surveyed and the depth ascertained, with a view to accommodating the large class of vessels which will pass through when these canals are constructed. With reference to the question of public buildings, I should think, that if Picton and Napanee are to be considered, the town of Deseronto should not be passed by. It lies between the two former towns, and is the most thriving town in that district. It is progressing very rapidly and gives a larger revenue from the post office and Custom house than many other towns which have public buildings. If the claims of important towns are to be considered in this matter, Deseronto should have a new post office and Custom house. It is an important centre, from which a large quantity of lumber and other goods are shipped. It has large manufactures in different classes of articles, and the people are enterprising and industrious. Neither should the Government forget the towns of Madoc and Tweed, the one in my riding and the other in North Hastings. These two towns are entitled to public buildings, as many other places have obtained them which give less revenue to the country, and in which the population is not so large or progressive. I call the attention of the House to this matter, as it seems, from the resolution adopted the other night, that the Government were disposed to carry on an equitable distribution of public money. If that be the case, all I have to do is to point out how they can do their duty, and if they do not do it I may call their attention, on a subsequent occasion, to their neglect.

Motion agreed to.

ALIEN CONTRACT LABOR.

Order for resuming adjourned debate on proposed motion of Mr. Taylor, for second reading of Bill (No. 8) to prohibit the importation and migration of Foreigners and Aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in Canada, read.

Mr. SPEAKER. Shall the Bill be now read the second time?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Mr. SPEAKER. Second reading of the Bill.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Did I understand you to say "carried," Mr. Speaker? By no manner of means.

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes, unless a division is called for.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, I call for a division on that Bill.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It was declared carried.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is a Bill which was most strongly objected to, and which ought not to be passed without division in this House. It is taking quite an unfair and unusual advantage. I had thought that the thing had been withdrawn by mutual consent.

Mr. SPEAKER. I hope the hon. gentleman does not refer to me when he speaks of an unfair advantage having been taken.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, certainly not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER. I waited the usual time, and supposing that the House was in favor of the second reading, I declared it carried.

Mr. MITCHELL. There were some faint "yeas," but the "noes" were really predominant. The right hon. First Minister speaks for a great many, I admit, but there is no doubt that the feeling of this House, when this matter was discussed the other day, was against the spirit of the Bill. I think it is a most pernicious Bill, and it ought not to be allowed to pass.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If I remember aright, the hon. gentleman agreed with me in everything I said on this Bill. I said that it was of very great importance, that full information should be got upon a measure of this kind; that it should not be summarily thrown out by the House; that it was of great importance that the people of Canada, especially the working classes, should know that we consider that very harsh treatment has been dealt out to them by the American law, and by the way in which it had been administered; and I suggested that the Bill should be read a second time pro forma and referred to a special Committee, from which we should get a report upon the Bill. I stated, and the hon. gentleman agreed with me, that I did not believe that the case of Canada had been at all in contemplation of the American Congress when dealing with the subject, but that their object was to keep out the overflow from Europe and Asia. I stated that it was of great importance that a sub-Committee should be struck, and that that Committee should make a calm, deliberate statement of the facts of the case; and that it would be greatly for the promotion of good feeling between the two peoples lying to the north and south of our great inland waters, that there should be liberal treatment on both sides. My hon. friend also pressed that very strongly; he said he agreed with me in every respect, and thought the Bill ought not to be summarily treated by being thrown out. I have no desire in the world to spring a mine upon the hon. gentleman. The motion was put in the ordinary way, the usual time was given, nobody said a word in objection, and the Speaker, in the performance of his duty, declared it carried. Now, I am still in favor of the proposition that I made. I think it would be well for this House, and I would ask hon. gentlemen on both sides, to accede to my proposition. It will satisfy the working classes in Canada that we are not summarily telling them: "You have no grievances, and you can go to the States if you want to get employment there." I think the feeling should not be allowed to spread throughout the country that we have not considered their case at all. I did not hesitate for a moment to say that I would not give my assent to the Bill in principle, and I gave my reason—that the United States were full to overflowing, in the opinion of Congress, and wanted no increase to their population beyond the natural increase, while we had a very large country without a population, and wanted an increase. But I put it to the House very strongly, and I put it now to the House, that it is desirable to satisfy our own people that we do give due consideration to their feelings of irritation and annoyance at the harshness with which they have been treated along our borders. Let the Bill go to a Committee, from which we shall get a calm and full statement of our case; and then we can hold ourselves perfectly free, as Parliament has frequently done, to vote as we like on the report, and on the question of the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. In justice to myself I feel it necessary to make a short reply to the right hon. gentleman. He is right in saying that, when the matter was before the House on a former occasion, I endorsed his view as I do now—that was, that the Bill should not be passed. That was the principle on which we both agreed. But I thought the hon. gentleman was going quietly to let the Bill remain on the paper, in order to see whether the United States Congress would make any alteration in the legislation, or place any different interpretation upon it. I believe that the application given to that law by the subordinate officers of the United States Government was never intended by Congress, and I do not believe it now. That was the principle on which I agreed with the hon. gentleman; but I did not agree, and do not agree now with the essential principle of the Bill. But if my right hon. friend wishes to place upon record something that will enable him, in the course of the negotiations, to utilise any act of this Legislature for the purpose of strengthening the position of our own people, he will find no one more ready to join him than I am. His duty, when this motion was made, was to have stated to the House that the second reading of this Bill would not be considered as any recognition of its principle by this House. Had he stated that he intended to refer it to a Committee, in order that the Committee might make a full and elaborate enquiry into the matter, and submit an exhaustive resolution to the House, I do not suppose that any one would have objected to the reference, but I do not feel disposed to allow the right hon. gentleman to place me in a false position with regard to this matter. As the hon. gentleman has now stated what he should have stated at the outset, that our agreeing to a second reading should not be recognised as binding the House to the principle of the Bill, I would have had no objection that this motion should pass, and the Bill be referred to a special Committee. I desire that our workmen should be protected as far as we can protect them; but I desire that we should take action in a way which will be effective, and it certainly will not be effective if we attempt to retaliate in the way proposed by this Bill. Any attempt at acts of retaliation, either in this or anything else, against the country to the south of us, will only be a waste of time, and do harm instead of good. The rights of our people can be best respected and maintained by moderate and judicious correspondence and diplomatic action, and not by our resorting to threats or to force.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I stated that I asked the second reading merely for the purpose of sending the Bill to a special Committee, where the whole subject might be considered. I stated that explicitly, and I will read what my hon. friend said in reply :

"We are called upon, with the view of advancing the interests of this country and its peace and prosperity, to cultivate the most friendly relations between the United States and Canada; and, while I agree with the right hon. gentleman that it might be of service that this Bill should be read a second time and referred to a special Committee, I think that special Committee, which should be composed of the best men in this House, should place upon the records of Parliament our desire to maintain friendly relations with our neighbors, should show that the application which has been made of their legislation as against Canada is unfair, and should call the attention of the House and the country to the fact that that application has been unfriendly to his country. I believe that that would do great good, and I, therefore, support the motion of the right hon. gentleman as to the appointment of a special Committee. I am opposed to the passage of this Bill, and I only support the second reading for the reasons which have been given by the Premier."

I consider that the hon. gentleman supported me in every respect on that occasion.

Mr. MITCHELL. I did, so far as that is concerned, but what I hold is this: That it is the duty of the right hon. gentleman to state to the House that he intended to send this Bill to a special Committee for the purpose of getting an elaborate report on the subject. I do not want to be considered as pledged to the principle of the Bill.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I stated that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What I objected to mainly was what I supposed to be an attempt to rush this through, without regard being had to its great gravity and importance. I cannot at all assent to the principle of the Bill, because it commits us, as far as it goes, to a direct policy of hostility and retaliation towards the United States. I hold, with the right hon. the First Minister, that this American measure was not intended to apply to Canada, but to apply to a totally different class of persons from those passing to and fro between Canada and the United States. I hold this is a matter which most undoubtedly ought to be brought to the attention of the people of the United States, and to the United States Government, and I can only say that this is one of the incidents which are constantly occurring, and which go to show the wisdom of the proposal made a good many years ago by the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), and reiterated afterwards by myself and others, that the time has come when it is in the highest degree in the interest of Canada that we should have a recognised agent of our own, in some form or other, at Washington; and this, in my opinion, is a great deal more important to us than to maintain an expensive and useless High Commissioner in London. As regards what the right hon. gentleman has further stated, I do not see any objection to referring the Bill to a special Committee. I do see a grave objection to affirming the principle of it by giving it a second reading, and I really think, if we are to depart from precedent and custom at all, it would be better to send this to a Committee such as the hon. gentleman describes, without going through the formality of a second reading, which formality is technically supposed to pledge us to the principle. I do not at all desire to be understood as imputing any unfairness, Mr. Speaker, to you. We can call it, pro forma, carried on division, and then it will go to the committee the hon. gentleman suggests.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not suppose, Sir, that any one could imagine your conduct to have been otherwise than proper and correct, and the misunderstanding was due to the fact that attention was not called to the arrangement on which the proceeding to be taken was intended to be based. The second reading of the Bill, even under the circumstances under which the First Minister proposes it shall be read, may be used in the neighboring Republic as an evidence that we have assented to its principle. I think that it would be an unworthy act for us to pass it through a second reading with any such object, since the First Minister, who leads the great majority in this House, has announced that he does not agree to its principle. He has stated that the second reading has entirely another object. We have, therefore, no idea of using this as an indication of any intention to pass hostile legislation. Whatever the intention may be in our breasts, that is not the intention with which we are asked to go through a second reading. If it were, I should regard it as a very regrettable intention to act on, unless we were fully decided that the principle is a sound one, which the First Minister says he does not affirm. On the contrary, he asks us to agree, in words contrary to the formal effect of the second reading, that we do not affirm that principle. He has stated that his desire is that the Bill should be referred to a Select Committee, in order that there should be a careful and full report made of the conditions and circumstances of our grievance and difficulty with the neighboring Republic—not the grievance and difficulty which this Bill professes is designed to remove, namely, that too many people are coming in from the other side, but the grievance and difficulty we labor under by the restriction of the passage from our side to the other of the citizens of our own country. I hold that is not the function of a Select Committee on the Bill. I think, Sir, you will find that all the Select Committee on the Bill can do, if you strike one, is to report the Bill either in its present shape, or with such amendments as they may think should be submitted to the House; and, therefore, the object the right hon. gentleman has in view will not be attained by the appointment of the Select Committee he proposes. If the purpose be to examine this question carefully, to consider its whole bearings—the bearings, namely, of the operation of the law of the United States upon us, and the bearings of the operation of such a law as is proposed by this Bill upon us, and the best remedies for the difficulties—the better plan would be, that the hon. mover of the Bill should propose, or that the hon. First Minister should propose, a motion for the appointment of a Select Committee to consider the whole subject and report upon it. Such a Committee could consider it and give us a full and general report, which a Select Committee on the Bill will not, under its appointment, have power to give, as such Committee will be able to deal only with this Bill, which presents but one side of the case, and its powers will be limited to simply remodelling the clauses according as the Committee think they should be remodelled. I wish to refer briefly to another matter, in respect of which I have been anticipated by my hon. friend the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). I do think that the passage, in its present form, of the legislation on the other side, and the effect which has been suffered to be given to that legislation, without any attempt made to modify it, are very cogent proofs of the importance of a diplomatic agent of Canada being present at Washington. I stated that view as long ago as the year 1880, and I think all that has happened since that time has indicated the importance of our doing what I then said we ought to do, that is, to send there the very best man this country can afford, to bend his mind to the consideration of those matters in which the interests of the one country are affected by the action of the other, in which Canadian interests are affected by what is being done and what is being said in Washington. I thought then, and I think now, that it is important that there should be always a free and responsible Canadian medium for the interchange of opinion with the Washington authorities in regard to Canadian interests. I believe that, if that plan were adopted in regard to a country which, to adopt the language of the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), is so much governed by newspaper misunderstandings would not occur, difficulties would be explained, the path would be made easier in many ways in regard to our various relations with the States. This House is now sitting, and it may perhaps have a function to discharge in regard to this matter. My opinion is that the function would be best discharged by the appointment of a Select Committee; but, if you are going to accept the suggestion of the First Minister in regard to this Bill, it will either be necessary to interfere with the precedents and practice of Select Committees on Bills, or, in some extraordinary way, by giving some special authority or instruction to the Committee, to enable them to make a finding in this regard, otherwise you will find, when the report comes back, that it will not be what you expect.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It seems to me that the proposition of the Prime Minister is a sort of dilatory proposition. It proposes to suspend the action of the House on this Bill indefinitely, or, at all events, for the present time. I agree with the view which has been expressed by the First Minister and by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), as to the object of this legislation. I have no doubt that the construction put upon that measure is very much wider in its effect than the intention of the promoters of the Bill. I do not see, however, that the reference of the Bill to a Committee is going to remove the difficulty of which we complain. I think the Government ought to enter into negotiations with the American Government—through the existing machinery, I suppose, until a better machinery is provided—with reference to this subject. This is an executive matter. If we are going to assume that the American legislation is to remain unchanged, then our course might be altogether different, but we still hope that some action may be taken by Congress to alter the legislation which is now on the American Statute-book. It seems to me that the views of members on this side of the House, as well as the supporters of the Government, would be best met if the American legislation on this subject were modified, if the clause of the American Alien Contract Act were repealed as far as Canada is concerned. The hon. gentleman has not informed the House—and I do not think it would interfere with anything the Government is doing at Washington if he gave that information—whether any action has been taken in this matter or not. If the Government have taken any action, it seems to me that, pending a decision, it would be very improper to pass any legislation on that subject, and to either affirm or disaffirm the principle of the Bill which is before us. Why should this House refer the Bill to a Committee to report upon it, when the House is still in the dark in regard to the action of the Government in reference to the whole subject? Let the Government assume the responsibility of determining what course shall be taken in the first instance. It is not a Committee of this House to whom the administrative policy of this country is entrusted, but it is to the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches. It is not the view of a Committee, but the view of the Prime Minister and those who are associated with him in the government of this country that we have to consider. What action have you taken? What line have you pursued? The hon. gentleman has told us that he does not approve of the principle of this Bill. Whether he means that he does not approve of it under present circumstances, or whether he goes further, I do not know. Whether that is a general proposition on his part, or one which is looking hopefully to a change in the condition of things in the United States, I do not know. It seems to me that the hon. gentleman could very well take the House into his confidence without interfering with any negotiations that may be proceeding, and might let us know whether the Government have initiated any negotiations in Washington or not, and whether any conclusion has been reached. If the negotiations have taken place, and the American Government have absolutely refused to entertain any proposition for action in this matter, we should know it, and then this House would not be taking a leap in the dark. We would know what was the state of affairs in the United States, we would know whether it was permanent or not, and then we could deal with the hon. gentleman's Bill much more intelligently than we can under the present circumstances. The responsibility to decide this does not rest on this House, but on the Government. The responsibility which rests upon this House is to decide whether the Government has done what is right or not, but it is not for us to point out the road which the Government should travel. That is a matter which they should decide for themselves, and subsequently we may decide whether they have acted wisely or unwisely.

Mr. BLAKE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I may remind the hon. gentleman that this measure was not introduced by the Government, but was introduced by an hon. member because it happened that his constituents suffered special hardship from the American law, and from the extreme harshness with which it was administered. The hon. gentleman, to use an Americanism, "voiced" the opinions of the workingmen of the Dominion, and, if I were desirous of getting any political advantage in this matter, I would be glad to see every hon. gentleman on the other side of the House vote against this Bill, because I know that it would be considered as an unfriendly act upon their part. But I have already explained candidly and truly to the House that I thought it was of great importance, that the people of the United States and the Congress of the United States should know what was the opinion of the people here. At Washington, even among the statesmen, there is a wonderful amount of ignorance as to the working of our political machinery, and I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that the executive in this country, like the executive in England, have certain responsibilities. We do not ignore those responsibilities, but in the United States the executive forms a portion of the Legislature; and what I desire to get was a calm, friendly statement from the Legislature of Canada as to the injustice and the hardship that was dealt out to us by the Legislature of the United States. Our Legislature would calmly say: Your Legislature have acted in an unfriendly manner, unintentionally we believe, but we desire to tell you that it is so. It is with that object only that I took that course, and I am of the opinion still that we should set aside the technicality that the principle of the Bill is acknowledged on the second reading. In my parliamentary experience, and no doubt in that of hon. gentlemen opposite also, I have known many instances in which, by universal consent of the House, a Bill was read the second time with the understanding that we were perfectly free, after the subsequent report of a Committee, to act on the third reading. I think it is of very considerable importance, in the interest of the working classes, and of all people who are liable to have their business interrupted by interference of communication with the United States, that we should have this report of our Legislature taken up calmly, because we think the Legislature of the United States has made a mistake. There is some basis for the statement of my hon. friend from West Durham, as to the limited powers of the Committee. That Committee will take the evidence; it is quite within the scope of their power and of their reference to take evidence on the matter, and they can point out quite relevantly with regard to their duties, what the cause of this Bill was, and in what respect it might be amended so as, in some degree, to ameliorate the consequences of the legislative action of the United States. My hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) stated that the Government had not taken the House into their confidence. Well, their confidence was not asked in the matter, but I have no hesitation in telling the hon. gentleman that immediately after this Act was passed, the Government received remonstrances from our people who had suffered hardship, and those remonstrances were transmitted to Washington, and certain proceedings took place with regard to those remonstrances. This question, like several other questions that have arisen between the two countries, is now under discussion at Washington. The House must not suppose that in this case we have been in any way indifferent to this matter, or to the consequences to our people, especially in some sections in the immediate vicinity of the United States. Now, I would ask hon. gentlemen opposite to forego any objection to have the Committee struck at once, that we may have a report upon it.

Mr. LAURIER. Before we do this, it would be well to understand exactly where we stand. The position is this: When the Bill was called, the hon. Prime Minister said "carried," and you, Sir, as usual under such circumstances, called "carried," dealing with this Bill as with an ordinary Bill. I do not question your ruling, but the House cannot forget that this is not an ordinary Bill. It is one of great importance, and on this side of the House, on repeated occasions, from different hon. members on the front benches, strong objection was taken to it. I do not, for my part, abate one jot of the objection I made on a previous occasion, but I have no objection that the Bill should be carried on division.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There is a misunderstanding, I think, on the part of those gentlemen who raise an objection to the Bill being carried. The Bill was spoken against as strongly from this side of the House as from that, when it came up for discussion in the ordinary way, on motion for reading it the second time a week or two ago. We called "carried" this afternoon, merely in consequence of the explanations which the First Minister had made, seeing that his desire was to have it read a second time without the principle being considered to have been adopted by the House, and with a view to have a reference to a special Committee. There is one other observation I wish to make in addition to what I said the other evening, that is, by way of correcting an impression which seems to exist on the part of some hon. gentlemen, that the enforcement of this statute by the United States in the oppressive way mentioned by the gentleman who has charge of the Bill, had been wholly a matter of inadvertence, that it was never the intention of the American Government to enforce this Act against the Canadian people, and that all that was necessary to correct the cases of hardship which were illustrated by the cases mentioned by the hon. member, was for the Government of Canada to call the attention of the United States authorities to the fact that the Act was being enforced against Canadians. Now, I beg to say that while I still adhere to the opinion I expressed the other evening, that the Act was not by any means passed with a hostile purpose towards Canada, yet it was passed for the protection of American laborers against all the peoples of the earth, including Canada, and Canada was in the mind of the Congress of the United States when that statute was adopted. To show that such was the case, I will read from the report of a Committee of the House of Representatives, on which report the Act was passed to restrict the importation of alien labor. There is a passage headed "Immigration along the Canadian border," and this is the language used:

"Along the border between Canada and the United States no inspection whatever is made of immigrants, and alien paupers, insane persons, &c., may land at Quebec and at once proceed to this country without any let or hindrance. The number of persons not lawfully entitled to land in the United States who thus arrive in this country by way of Canadian frontier, is rapidly assuming large proportions, and has become a matter of serious contemplation. The testimony shows that in many instances, immigrants, coming by steamer to Quebec, have, within forty-eight hours after their arrival there, been applicants for shelter in the alms-houses in the State of New York. At many points along the border, no account whatever is kept of the number of immigrants arriving, so that it would be a difficult matter to state, with exactness, the number arriving in the United States, whose landing on this continent was first effected in Canada; but, from information submitted to them, the Committee believe that for the six months ending the 30th June, 1888, there were about 50,000 such immigrants who arrived here by way of Canada, many of whom, by reason of being paupers, idiots and insane persons, were not lawfully entitled to land. The charitable institutions in the county of Wayne, Michigan, of which Detroit is the principal port, are filled to overflowing, and the county has now in process of erection, an alms-house at a large expense.

"Sigmond Simon, President of the Board of County Poor Commissioners, testified before the Committee that this state of affairs was owing entirely to the alien immigrants coming from Canada, whom the county is forced to take care of, and that, were it not for the alien paupers who are supported by the county, no increased facilities would be demanded."

If the measure rested simply upon that statement of fact, as regards the grievance on the Canadian side, I admit that representations as to the incorrectness of those statements, and a promise to guard against Canada being made a passage for immigrants of that kind, would probably be sufficient to correct the operation of this Act, and to induce Congress to reconsider the policy of enforcing it against Canada, in part at least, so that the class of laborers mentioned by the hon. member for Gananoque (Mr. Taylor) might be relieved, as far as possible, from the hardships to which they are now subjected. The report goes on to say:

"Along the frontier bordering upon Canada it is the practice of aliens to perform labor in the United States, coming over in the morning and returning to Canada in the evening. At Detroit, in the State of Michigan, it was ascertained that a great many aliens are so employed, notably in the building trades. The testimony shows that about 800 carpenters and joiners, subjects of Great Britain, perform labor in that city, and that about the same number of American citizens of that occupation are lying idle because they cannot obtain employment."

I mention this for the purpose of showing that this application of the Act to Canada was not overlooked, and that it was brought to the notice of Congress, when that Act was before Congress, that one of the evils that it was desirable to remedy by this Act was the passage of Canadian laborers from our country into the United States.

Mr. MULOCK. I understand that by common consent the Bill has been read the second time, and that we are now discussing a proposition to refer the Bill to a Committee of the Whole or to otherwise deal with it. From the discussion that has taken place it is manifest that the country is face to face with a very serious problem, a problem that is going to grow in increasing importance, a problem that, in the interests of Canada, must be solved, if possible, one way or the other, a problem that we cannot solve by the mere passage of a Bill introduced by a private member this Session, but a problem to which the Parliament of Canada must without delay, I consider, give its best attention. Whether, therefore, the proposition now suggested, to refer this question to a special Committee, will enable this House to obtain such information as may ultimately solve it, I cannot venture to say, notwithstanding the fact that I can conceive that such a reference may be productive of great good. I think it would be most unfortunate if there had been a division in this House on a question such as this. In order that our action may have any influence towards bringing about more friendly relations, it is manifest that we should be of one mind in regard to defending Canadian interests. It would be unfortunate if, whenever we discuss any legislation of a foreign country that seems to operate harshly against ourselves, we should at once proceed to adopt retaliatory measures, instead of first adopting that course which is now invariably followed by civilized countries, namely, to resort to methods of diplomacy. It may be that our means of communication with the United States are not sufficient whereby we may, in the most convenient and ready way, put these methods of peaceful negotiation into immediate and active operation; nevertheless, I think that the discussions and resolutions of this House can in various ways be communicated to the authorities in the United States, and may be the medium of bringing about a solution which would render retaliatory measures as this wholly unnecessary. If, after investigation, and if after diplomacy has failed to bring about any amelioration of the conditions, then, and then only, it will be necessary, or the time will be opportune for us to consider the desirability of dealing with the question in a radical manner as is proposed here. But, at this stage, while I am not prepared to express an opinion as to what legislation circumstances might justify, I think we are bound, as a friendly people living alongside of a friendly people, to first endeavor, in the manner that has been suggested, to see if this difficulty can be settled in a satisfactory way. We cannot ignore the fact that there are points of contact from ocean to ocean between Canada and the United States, and these points of contact are going to increase in number, and the occasions of difficulty between the two countries will enormously increase as years roll by; and if every time there is any friction we are immediately to rush to retaliatory measures, it will be impossible to have any communication of a satisfactory character with our neighbors. I think, in view of the discussion, whatever difficulties there might be in the way of such a reference being satisfactory, no doubt the Committee would feel it had enlarged powers under the circumstances and might make its enquiry more extensive than the matter involved in this particular Bill would technically justify. I have no doubt the argument of the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) is technically correct, and that the proper method would have been for the order for the second reading to have been discharged, and the Government, on its own responsibility, to make some proposition involving a resolution carrying with it a reference to a Committee. But as the Government have taken the responsibility of saying that a reference even under this motion will meet the case, I think the Committee will feel justified in extending its enquiry beyond the matter in issue, and in that light I favor that mode of dealing with the matter.

Mr. TAYLOR moved:

That the said Bill be referred to a Select Committee composed of Messrs. Brien, Colby, Daly, Davin, Earle, Ferguson (Welland), Gillmor, Girouard, Lépine, Lister, McDougald (Pictou), McKay, Mills (Annapolis), Mulock, Taylor, Weldon (Albert), Welsh and Wilson (Elgin), with power to send for persons and papers, and that Rule 78 be suspended in relation thereto.

In regard to the remarks of the Minister of Justice in relation to the discussion which took place on the Bill when before Congress, I wish to say that I have received a letter from Buffalo, N. Y., dated March 13, in which a few passages occur that I will read for the benefit of the House and for the Special Committee. The writer says :

"I have been raised along the border, and, for the last six years, have lived on the Yankee side of it, and I know how much the United States would be likely to discriminate in favor of Canada. I lived in Windsor for a time, and worked in Detroit, and I heard the vile epithets hurled at us every morning by street loafers and passers-by, as we came from the dock. There were meetings held with a view of stopping us, though, at the same time, there were sixty-five more, by actual count, coming from Detroit to Canada, than went the other way. The Canada Southern Railway are almost all Yankees, though the road lies altogether in Canada, simply because the starting points are Detroit and Buffalo. A Canadian cannot run the train a few rods in the States, but a Yankee can run it two hundred and thirty miles or more if needs be, in Canada. This is, indeed, a pretty state of affairs. Now, could you not get a short Bill through, which would make it necessary for persons working in Canada to live there; let them come in under contract if they wish, providing they intend to become residents, then it would not prevent immigration, it would promote it. It would also give the people along the border a more independent feeling, and put them on an equal footing with residents of the States."

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not wish my name to appear on the Committee, as I am opposed to the reference. I hold that it is a matter for executive action, and that the Government should assume the responsibility of dealing with an international matter; and, further, that the Committee will not have before it the necessary information to enable it to act properly. I, therefore, decline to serve on the Committee.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has taken the words I was about to utter out of my mouth. I decline to serve on the Committee for the reasons which have been so clearly stated by my hon. friend.

Mr. TAYLOR. The House can appoint you on the Committee.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask the House not to make such an appointment, when I state I am opposed to the principle of the Bill, and think it is the duty of the Government to initiate a policy and take the responsibility of it.

Mr. CASEY. The Government have, in a certain sense, by authorising this reference to a Committee, made themselves responsible for this Bill, to the extent at least of desiring further discussion on it. But I do not think that they have yet placed themselves in the position which the Government ought to maintain in reference to a Bill of this nature. I quite agree with my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills), that this is a question that should not be dealt with at the instance of a private member. It involves very delicate international questions, which may possibly get us into difficulty with our neighbors, and which, at all events, must be treated with diplomacy and with a degree of lengthened and mature consideration which cannot be expected from a private and irresponsible member of this House, but which should be expected from those who control the legislation here. A matter of this kind should eminently be a Government measure, and should not be passed at all, unless, after being introduced by a private member, it be adopted by the Government, who take the whole responsibility of passing the measure, as well as the consequences of its passing. As the Government have not done that, I think they have not done their duty. With regard to the Bill itself, I think, as I said before, that the principle of it, which appears to have been adopted by the House, is a correct one, namely, that native labor is as much entitled to protection as native manufactures; and that the operative in a manufactory who has to pay high taxes on all that he uses should not be subjected to the importation of foreign labor under contract, whenever he wishes to ask for higher wages. I believe that the laborer has as good a right to protection as the employer, and, therefore, I support the principle of protecting native labor against competition from labor imported under contract. I do not believe that our neighbors in the United States should take offence at our asserting that principle, although they might take offence at some details of the measure, and at the high-handed conduct adopted by the hon. gentleman who proposes it. I do believe that the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor), who has declared war against the United States, and enforced a blockade of their ports, is likely to be regarded with disfavor by the Government and people of the United States. He has made himself, by that action, an international question, and he is in fact a difficult national problem in himself. He is now a person of such importance that his name is known in the United States as having taken that action, and leading articles have been written on him in the New York papers. Therefore, everyone in the United States will know what the Taylor Bill means, and they will think accordingly.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is a copy of their own Bill.

Mr. CASEY. Under all these circumstances, I am satisfied that the Government should take this Bill into their own hands, and mould it so as to suit themselves, or to substitute another Bill for it, or otherwise to choke it off right here. Of these three alternatives, I think the proper one should be that they should substitute a Bill of their own. But to put my opinion in this respect more clearly on record, I beg to move:

That all the words after "That" in the motion be left out, and the following substituted: "this Bill be not now referred to a Committee, but that it be resolved, that the delicate international questions involved in this Bill should not be dealt with by this House, at the instance of a private member, but by legislation introduced by the Government, and that it is the duty of the latter to secure fair and adequate protection for native labor."

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I regret very much that my hon. friend the member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) will not consent to sit on the Committee. It is quite understood that the principle of the Bill is not in question, and that that will come up on the third reading. I think it would be a great deal better if the hon. gentleman would consent to give his experience, his wide information, and his general acquaintance with the country, to the service of the Committee. I have no doubt that he would be a valuable addition to the Committee, and that his absence will be a loss to it. I was rather surprised that my hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Casey) should make such a motion—that is to say, that he should deny the perfect equality of the members of this Parliament; for, whether it be an Act affecting the administration of affairs or the foreign relations of the Government, no matter what the question may be, every member of this House has the same rights. I should be very sorry indeed to see a resolution put upon the Journals, stating that any question, no matter what it should be, ought only be introduced by the Ministry of the day. That would be a surrender of the power of the representatives of the people, which I was glad to see found no response anywhere in the House. If my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) is obstinate in his refusal to sit on the Committee, I would suggest that the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Brien), who has not yet expressed an opinion on the subject, and who lives on the frontier and must understand the subject well, would be a valuable member of the Committee. With the consent of the House, I would ask that the hon. member's name be placed upon the Committee. I am sorry, also, that the leader of the third party will not sit on the Committee. After the strong opinion he has given to the House on the question, I would ask the hon. gentleman if he would give us the name of some member of his party who would take his place. But, in all seriousness, I would like the hon. gentleman to sit on the Committee.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am sorry to say that I do not take the same liberty with the names of my followers as the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House do with theirs. As I have not consulted the other members of my party, I am not in a position to oblige the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. BLAKE. Besides which, the hon. gentleman's party always follow his lead, and if he refuses to sit on the Committee, they will surely follow his example.

Sir DONALD A. SMITH. In common, I have no doubt, with many hon. members of the House, I have received numerous representations from my constituents in favor of this Bill, and I think, whether we approve of the principle of the Bill or not, it is only courteous to the member who introduced it, that it should be submitted to the Committee, to consider the whole question and to pronounce upon it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Allow me to make just one other suggestion. I wish to have a committee that really understands the subject. It has been suggested to me—I did not think of it before—that Mr. Lister and Mr. Brien be put on the Committee, as they both live on the frontier, and they will both act, I have no doubt.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

RETURN ORDERED.

Copies of all petitions, correspondence and documents whatsoever respecting the placing of a floating light on the St. Lawrence, opposite the Church of Ste. Croix, in the County of Lotbinière, in place of the buoy now located there.—(Mr. Rinfret.)

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS

Bill (No. 91) to grant certain powers to the Chamby Manufacturing Company.—(Mr. Préfontaine.)

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Bill (No. 89) to amend the Act to incorporate the River Detroit Winter Railway Bridge Company, and to change the name of the company to the River Detroit Railway Bridge Company.—(Mr. Ferguson, Welland.)

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 121) to amend the Act to incorporate the Dominion Mineral Company.—(Mr. Kirkpatrick.)

INDEPENDENCE OF PARLIAMENT.

Mr. CASGRAIN moved second reading of Bill (No. 12) for further securing the Independence of Parliament. He said: I ask the indulgence of the House for a few moments, while I explain the object I have in view in bringing this Bill forward. I believe that the Independence of Parliament may be further secured. I believe I am justified in saying, that corrupt practices in elections have not disappeared, despite the very severe laws against them on our statutes, and I am endeavoring to find some means by which the law, both in letter and spirit, may be enforced. During my experience in Parliament, and I have been here a good many years, I have seen members occupying their seats in this House who were not entitled to occupy them. I have seen men who sat here, while their cases were being fought out before the courts of law or the Committees of Parliament, and who were declared in the end not to have been properly returned. I remember one instance in which a member of this House was disqualified for seven years and his seat declared vacant. Since many years, and more particularly since the last election law was passed, I venture to say that money is still spent at elections, so that the law is not operative as it should be. Every effort is made not to be discovered, and when the election fraud is discovered, the accused resorts to all the quibbles of the law to avoid the penalty. Are there, then, any other means than those provided in the statutes, available by which we can control to a certain extent the conduct of candidates at elections? I believe in the sanction of the oath, and that such oath would be a proper control to be exercised upon candidates at elections; and I propose by this measure that a member should, before taking his seat, and after he has taken the oath of allegiance, make a declaration under oath that he is eligible as a member according to law, and not only that he is eligible, but that he has a right to sit in the House under the statute; that is to say, that he has not been guilty of any act of corruption which would void or tend to void his election. As regards the oath, no doubt some hon. members will consider this a drastic measure, but while, perhaps, it may be too severe for some candidates, I believe on the whole it would have a good effect. I believe, if a member knew that before taking his seat he would be obliged to swear that he was really entitled to it, and that he did not make use of any corrupt means, he would take care not to break the law. I do not think such an oath would be easily violated. I have a better opinion of men than that; and supposing even that in some cases it would be violated, that would be no reason for not applying it in all cases. The member who took the oath would be answerable, first, to God, and, secondly, to the torture of his own conscience, if he perjured himself, besides subjecting himself to be brought before the criminal tribunals of the country. The main feature of the Bill is that no member should occupy a seat who is not lawfully entitled to it. Another feature is the imposing of the oath of office to members. As to that part of the Bill, the members are restrained by the law to the different enactments which I propose; that is to say, that a member should not have, directly or indirectly, any contract with the Government. The law is stringent upon that point. It is very clear that no member of this House should have any contract with the Government while he is acting as member. Also, that he will not willingly sell any wares, goods or merchandise to the Government; also, that he will not, directly or indirectly, receive or accept any emolument or value in money or in kind, or any pledge or promise of any kind, to promote or impede any measure or proceedings pending in the Parliament of Canada. This is nothing but carrying into effect the statute passed to secure the free action of members, in order that they may not be induced to accept any bribe or promise to support any measure before Parliament. I hold that the duties of members of Parliament are duties of trust. Not only are the Ministers the trustees of the people, but the whole Parliament are, and each member of Parliament is one of these trustees, and as such cannot receive, directly or indirectly, any emolument or profit or advantage whatever from the Ministers or the Government as a whole. This is the law, and I do not see why members of Parliament should not be bound, like other trustees, to observe this trust to the fullest extent. When we see that Parliament is called every year to vote very large sums of money, which are sometimes voted with too much laxity, I think that the application of the oath will have a salutary effect upon the administration of public affairs. I believe that, in cases where members are called upon to act in this House in their judicial capacity as representatives of the people, as they have been lately, the obligation of fulfilling their duties according to the laws of the land and the justice of the case, would be felt to a greater extent if an oath were imposed upon them. The principle of this Bill, I believe, ought to be accepted by the House as a good principle—the further securing of the independence of Parliament. If the members who compose this Parliament act well and irreproachably in their seats, the community will benefit by that, and we will not see members sitting here who are returned by undue means, or who continue to have contracts with the Government, or who remain under any of the disabilities which the law forbids. In one of its features, this Bill presents an aspect which it may be difficult for some members to accept, but, if that is so, it is simply because it is too good a measure in the first part. As to the second part, I do not hesitate to say that the Government ought to adopt that and oblige members to take an oath of office. The highest function varies in the State, even the judges, whose character and dignity and personal reputation are above suspicion, are constrained to take an oath of office as well as the small justices of the peace. Even the Queen of England, the sovereign of the realm, takes the Coronation Oath, and she is bound to follow the laws of Parliament and the laws of the land. Under these circumstances, and seeing that corporations and municipal bodies and private individuals, who are corporators in charge of public funds, are constrained to take an oath of office, I think this Bill should pass. The members of a corporation—the city of Montreal, for instance—are obliged to take the oath of allegiance, and also to take another oath to this effect:

“I swear that I will faithfully fulfil the duties of the said office according to the best of my judgment and ability.”

Further, the oath is to the effect, that the incumbent of the office has not fraudulently or by collusion obtained the same by making a false statement in regard to the amount of real estate necessary to qualify him. If these municipal officers are constrained to take an oath of office, I do not see why a member of Parliament, whose trust is much more extensive, and who has much more weight in the conduct of the affairs of this country, should not have to take a similar oath. I, therefore, move the second reading of this Bill.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have followed attentively the argument of the hon. mover of this Bill, and certainly he seems to have given a good deal of attention to his measure. In fact, he appears to be full of his subject. Of course, this Bill would make a large amendment to the present law. According to the present law of Parliament, we have one oath to take when we become members of Parliament, and that is the oath of allegiance to Her Majesty, and then we take our seats. By this Bill, the hon. gentleman wishes us to take another oath, by which the member declares:

“That he is not, to his knowledge and with his consent, guilty of any unlawful and corrupt practices which avoid his election and return; that he is not, directly or indirectly, alone or with some other person, or company or partnership, or by the interposition of any trustee or third party, holding, enjoying or undertaking any contract, expressed or implied, with or for the Government of Canada on behalf of the Crown, or with or for any of the officers of the said Government, for which public money of Canada is to be paid, or has been paid in full before the final execution of such pending contract; that he will not knowingly, so long as he remains such member, sell any goods, wares or merchandise to the Government of Canada, or to any of the officers thereof, for which public money is paid or to be paid, whether such sale or transaction is single or continuous, and whether the said money is paid by the interposition of a third party or in any other indirect manner whatsoever; that he will not, so long as he continues such member, directly or indirectly receive or accept any emolument, or value in money or in kind, or any pledge or promise of any kind, to promote or impede any measure or proceeding pending in the Parliament of Canada; and that he will do his duty faithfully and truly as such member, without fear, favor or partiality.”

There is, no doubt, a great deal in this proposition of the hon. member. I do not say that everything contained in it, or that the whole of the language which is used in it might absolutely be accepted, but certainly everything which is there deserves great consideration. I would only throw out this, en passant, that perhaps sub-section (d) of that clause might be extended. It provides that a member:

“Will not, so long as he continues a member of the said House of Commons, accept any office or commission, work or employment in the service of the Government of Canada, at the nomination of the Crown, or at the nomination of the officers of the Government of Canada, to which any fee, salary, wages, allowance, emolument or profit of any kind is attached, whether in money or otherwise.”

I am surprised that the hon. gentleman did not extend that to the Governments of the different Provinces, so as to make members perfectly independent. It is all very well to make them independent of the Government of Canada and of its officers; but he should extend that principle so that no member of the House, as long as he continues to be a member—

“shall accept any office, or commission, work, or employment in the service of the Government of any Province at the nomination of the Crown, or at the nomination of the officers of the Government of such Province, to which any fee, salary, wages, allowance, emolument, or profit of any kind is attached, whether in money or otherwise.”

He would certainly make his Bill more stringent, and secure better the independence of the members of this House. Of course I throw that out in the meantime, so that it may be considered later on. The other clauses of the Bill are less important. The hon. gentleman will understand that I do not object to the second reading of the Bill, and I would suggest that it be then referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. I think the hon. member is a member of that Committee, and, as he knows, it is composed of the leading members of the legal profession in this House, who will certainly give to this Bill all the consideration that it deserves.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would just remark, concerning the observations made by the Minister of Public Works, that to secure the independence of Parliament is to secure the independence of Parliament from the Crown as represented by the Government of a Province, or in Australia, or in England. It is legislation in this House, and not for legislation in any other House, that we are here specially concerned with. We are not specially interested in maintaining what we call the independence of Parliament against the influence of a Provincial Administration, nor is the Provincial Administration specially interested as against us. We have no power of voting in the Provincial Legislature, because we are not members of that Legislature. But I am rather surprised at the declaration of the Minister, because it seems to me, from a hasty reading of this Bill, that the hon. gentleman ties himself to the principle of abolishing Cabinet Government; for if that Bill is carried, a member of the Government cannot remain in the House. I looked at the Bill hastily while the mover was discussing it, and I did not notice any provision excepting members of the Cabinet.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. My hon. friend did not say that he approved of the whole Bill, but he said there was enough good in it to warrant him in agreeing to the second reading of the Bill.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). He supported the principle of the Bill.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The principle of the Bill is to perfect the independence of Parliament.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). By excluding the members.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is one of the clauses, but I dare say the Committee on Privileges and Elections will somewhat modify it, for the purpose of preserving Cabinets more valuable to the country than the present one. My hon. friend wishes Parliament to be independent in a certain sense; he wants that there should be a limited liability, that we should be independent after a fashion, but that our independence should not be complete. However, that will be all considered by the Committee.

Mr. CASGRAIN. If the hon. member for Bothwell had read the Bill more carefully, he would have understood it better. The object of the Bill is to secure the independence of the members of this House from the control of the Ministers of the Crown—that is, to prevent them from asking any favors or receiving any favors from the Government, in order that they may be free to act, and not only be free to act, but bound to act to the best of their ability, without fear, favor or affection.

Mr. AMYOT. I will suggest to the mover that he make his Bill apply to relations, to sisters, cousins and aunts.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT.

Mr. CHARLTON moved second reading of Bill (No. 38) to amend the Dominion Elections Act, chapter eight of the Revised Statutes of Canada. He said: In moving the second reading of this Bill, I may remark that the election law of Canada, so far as it refers to the acts of a candidate with reference to individuals, is as stringent as could be desired. The candidate is debarred from the use of any corrupting influence with the individual voter. He can neither promise him employment, or pay him money, or influence him in any way, even by treating, and the provisions of the law in this regard do not require revision or amendment. The individual acts for which a member may be unseated, or some of them, are very insignificant in their character. For instance, I believe there is an hon. member of this House who was unseated on one occasion because an indiscreet friend of his, who was really not an agent, paid a man in liquor one dollar to get rid of his importunities, after the election had passed. The Government candidate, however, may, and often does, make use of influences that may have much more effect upon the results of an election than very many of those individual acts that are declared now under the law to be corrupt practices. The Government candidate is able to make promises to the voters of his riding in the shape of Government appropriations, that may, and often do, influence very largely a portion of the electorate in the riding which he seeks to represent. And this class of offences, I believe, are corrupt practices that require the attention of this House, as having a more corrupting influence on the electors of this country than very many of the practices that are now prohibited by the Election law. The Government of the country, too, can, if I may be permitted to use the expression, resort to practices which are little short of bribery en bloc with respect to ridings all over this Dominion; and we are all quite well acquainted with the Government methods for the purpose of influencing elections. For instance, the Government may, if there is a redistribution of seats, if a Province is to be accorded one, two, three or four additional representatives, it may, as it has done heretofore, re-arrange ridings in such a way as to secure a very corrupt advantage at the elections. The Government may, in its distribution of patronage, in fact, it does in its distribution of patronage, seek to influence the elections, and it succeeds in doing so to a very great degree. In its appropriations, presumably for the public good, appropriations which should be made impartially, without reference to the effect they may have on the elections, the Government are charged with, and I believe the Government are guilty of the offence of making those appropriations in such a way as to redound to their own political advantage in the elections in every portion of the Dominion. The Government have made use, as we are all well aware, of its ability to reward favorites, by granting timber limits, by granting pasture leases, and by granting bonuses to railways, and a very serious abuse has gradually grown up, which has cost this country many millions of dollars, purely for the purpose of strengthening the Government, purely for the purpose of influencing the ridings, purely for the purpose, in short, of buying support, by the expenditure of public money in vast sums. The methods adopted are perfectly well understood; and supporters of the Government, it is well known, can obtain favors from the Government, which no member sitting on the Opposition side would think for a moment of asking, or have the remotest chance of getting if he did ask it. The public interest is not taken into account in these matters. It is not a question the Government asks as to whether this appropriation will be in the general public interest. That question has no bearing whatever with the Government; but these appropriations, if we scrutinise their character closely, in the great majority of cases, are made, purely and simply, for the purpose of strengthening the Government and make more certain a renewal of its lease of power at the next general elections. The annual increase of our debt, which has been very rapid, which has been in fact alarming, has been largely due to this method of appropriation and the granting of bonuses made by the Government purely for political purposes. In this plan of appropriation, if we had time to go into the details, we would find very striking abuses. I will mention one or two. For instance, take the case of the hon. member who represents the County of Haldimand. The Government have made appropriations which are presumably, which I assert are beyond doubt, made simply for the purpose of strengthening that hon. gentleman in his riding. We have for the little insignificant village of Cayuga, comprising 600 souls, an appropriation made for the purpose of erecting a costly post office, while Woodstock, one of the most prosperous cities in the Dominion, has no public post office, simply, I presume, for the reason that the riding has been, from time immemorial, represented by an opponent of the Government. The little village of Hagarville, in Haldimand county, has been made a port of entry. There was no necessity for it. There are scores of places in Ontario more entitled to the privilege which the Government has accorded it of being made a port of entry than the insignificant village of Hagarville. I might instance cases almost without number of this character, where appropriations have been made clearly for the purpose of influencing elections and where no other reason existed for making such appropriation. Our friends from the Maritime Provinces, in the course of the debate raised on the motion of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) a day or two ago, laid before the country the character of the appropriations made by the Government for the purpose of constructing piers, lighthouses, harbors and other public works. In regard to the appropriations made for railways, I might instance the case of the South Norfolk Railway, where the present Conservative representative secured a bonus for a railway some 17 miles in length. I venture to say that the gentleman who previously represented the riding (Mr. Jackson), who was not a supporter of the Government, would never have dreamed of asking for such an appropriation, and he would not have had the remotest chance of securing it if he had asked it. Now, unquestionably, the members who support the Government, are well satisfied with this condition of things. It is natural they should be so. There is a passage in the Scriptures which says: "Doeth the wild ass bray when at grass, or loweth the ox over his fodder." This is pasture and fodder for these gentlemen. The Government furnishes money for public works to secure them in their seats, and they are amply satisfied with the system; but it is a corrupting system, and one which should be ended in this country. The penalties under the Act at present are stringent and severe, but these penalties are not sufficient. I claim there are classes of corrupt influence used by the Government and by the friends of the Government, which should be dealt with by the election laws of this country. The first section of the Bill which I move tonight is as follows:—

"Every candidate in the interest of the Government who, either by himself or by his agent, at any time during an election, promises that the Government will make, will be likely to make, or will be solicited by him to make, any grant of money for any railway, road, bridge, harbor, pier, public building, or other public work, to be expended within the bounds of, or for the benefit of, the constituency for which he is a candidate, such promise being calculated to influence the result of the election in his favor."

The candidate who offers to a voter a dollar to stay at home, or a dollar to vote for him, who calls a voter up and gives him a cigar, who hires a team to transport a few voters to the polling booths on election day, will be unseated for that act; but he may make promises of the expenditure of hundreds of thousands of dollars in his riding, he may induce numbers of people, as being a supporter of the Government and as having influence to secure appropriations, to vote for him, and he may by that promise, secure hundreds of votes. The promise may be one that will give to hundreds of voters promise of employment. If he promised, in his individual capacity, employment for one day to a voter, he would be unseated, but he may promise employment to hundreds of men by an expenditure of public money, and by that means influence the election and secure his seat, and he may do this under the present law without being guilty of a corrupt practice, or with having used a corrupt influence at elections.

"Any grant of money, unless for necessary repairs or demanded by urgent public necessity, made by the Government of Canada for any railway, or public work or building within any constituency where an election is to be held within ten months from the date of the making of such grant, and calculated to influence the result of such election in the interest of the candidate favorable to the Government, is a corrupt practice within the meaning of the said Act."

If that clause were a part of the election law it would debar the Government from making the large appropriations which are made on the eve of every election for the express purpose of influencing the result in their favor. It would be the means of saving the country millions of dollars, it would be the means of securing a purer election and of debarring the Government from engaging in a wholesale system of bribery, and of expending the public money for the purpose of influencing elections; and certainly no amendment of the election law that could be proposed could be a more reasonable one, and one better calculated to obtain greater purity in elections than is this clause of the Bill.

The third sub-section provides as follows:—

"Any promise of a grant of money, made by any Cabinet Minister or any official in the employ of the Government, for any railway or public work or building within any constituency where an election is to be held within ten months from the time of the making of such promise, and calculated to influence the result of such election in the interest of the candidate favorable to the Government, is a corrupt practice within the meaning of the said Act."

Now, Sir, the agent of a candidate may go into a riding, and he may promise the smallest advantage to an individual voter, and that promise on the part of the agent of the candidate is a corrupt act and voids the election. But a Cabinet Minister may go into the riding and make promises of lavish expenditure, calculated to influence that election; any officer in the employ of the Government may do the same thing, and may exercise a thousandfold the influence of the agent on the individual voter, yet he escapes scot free. Surely, the act of an officer of the Government in attempting to influence hundreds of voters in a riding, by the promise of the expenditure of public money, is tenfold more corrupt than the influencing by an agent of an individual voter.

The fourth clause of the Bill provides:

"Any indirect or inferred promise made by any Department of the Government sending engineers to make a survey for a railway or public work of any kind, not under contract and for which a grant of public money has not previously been made, within any constituency where an election is to be held within ten months,—the impression being thereby created that such railway or public work is to be proceeded with, and the result of the election being thereby influenced in the interest of the candidate favorable to the Government,—is a corrupt practice within the meaning of the said Act."

Very many of these inferential promises held out to constituencies, by the sending of engineers to survey works that it is alleged the Government intend to undertake, are the barest swindle, for they are done very often without any intention on the part of the Government to proceed with this work, and for the express purpose of influencing the election that is pending. The sending of engineers to survey public works, and thereby conveying the impression to the voters of the riding that if the Government be sustained in power, they are likely to proceed with the construction of these works to the great advantage of the constituency in a pecuniary sense, is, in the highest degree, reprehensible. If any corrupt practice is to be declared illegal by the election law, surely this one should be so declared. We have in this country a political conscience and a private conscience, and there is a great deal of difference between the ethics that pertain to private transactions and the ethics that pertain to political transactions. The treating of a voter, or the hiring of a team, are acts which the voter sees are made illegal; but the voter sees the Government rewarding its followers by the granting of timber limits, as they did some years ago. He sees the policy of the Government with regard to the superannuation of men in the prime of life, for the purpose of making vacancies to be filled by the favorites of the Government, as a reward, perhaps, for political services. He sees millions of money squandered in bonuses for railway enterprises which are totally unnecessary in the general interest of the country, but which are made for the purpose of influencing the result of the elections in Provinces, or in ridings. He sees such transactions as the Onderdonk contract, passing unchallenged, as well as the wholesale granting of money to the Canadian Pacific Railway; and he contrasts these with the stringent conditions of the law with regard to his individual action. He loses faith in the Government, he loses faith in the institutions of the country, and he draws the inference that there is neither justice nor truth in the administration of public affairs. The voter arrives at the conclusion that the Government may do, with impunity, acts a thousandfold more reprehensible than the acts for which, if he performs them, he is liable to severe punishment. The progress of the political demoralisation of this country, since the Pacific scandal, has been of the most alarming character. Perhaps it is a fortunate thing, if we look at it in the right light, that the policy of the Government has made this country miserably poor; for if we were in a state of affluence, we might, like Jeshurun, with all the corrupting influences at work, "wax fat and kick." If we had gone on in luxury I do not know what disaster might fall on the country. We are too poor to be corrupt as we might be, but so far as the Government can corrupt, by its policy, the electors of the country, and so far as they can introduce false opinions as to the line of policy to be pursued, the Government has done that as best they could. I say, with regard to the Government, in a collective sense, and with regard to the offences committed in a general sense, that the Government is the great briber, the great demoraliser, and the great debaucher of the public conscience of this country, by the policy it has pursued. I do not say that in an offensive sense as regards individuals, but I speak of the policy of the Government. It has produced most deplorable results, and it is time that such a policy should be changed. I propose by this measure to ask the Government to consent to the curtailment of its own power for evil. I propose that the Government shall be willing to place on the Statute-book a law that will enable it to be more virtuous, and will compel it to be more virtuous if it does not feel inclined to be so. I move the second reading of this Bill, in order that it may render the Government more amenable to the principles of morality.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House that this Bill be read a second time?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, Mr. Speaker, I do not think it will be the pleasure of the House to adopt this Bill. It is simply a wanton insult to any Government, and to every Government in this country. The hon. gentleman in his Bill assumes in the first place that every Government will be corrupt, and that, therefore, being corrupt, they must be deprived of all the powers which have been hitherto thought requisite for the public interest, either in England or in any of the colonies. The phraseology of the Bill is singular; we will take the first clause:

"Every candidate in the interest of the Government who, either by himself or by his agent, at any time during an election, promises that the Government will make, will be likely to make, or will be solicited by him to make, any grant of money for any railway, road, bridge, harbor, pier, public building, or other public work, to be expended within the bounds of, or for the benefit of, the constituency for which he is a candidate, such promise being calculated to influence the result of the election in his favor."

What does the hon. gentleman mean by "in the interest of the Government?" All a person has to do is to say, that he is not going in the interests of the Government. The hon. gentleman does not seem to know the difference between the Government and the Ministry. The Government is a permanent institution in which the representative of the Sovereign is one of the main elements, and the Ministry is quite a different thing. If a man says he is a supporter of the Ministry of the day, he cannot tell his constituents that he will work for them; he cannot say that he will try to get something done for his county; he cannot say that he will be active; but if he says he is opposed to the Ministry of the day, he can make all these promises. I will give you an instance. The hon. gentleman, in his speech just now, spoke of a post office having been built at Cayuga, a small place, when there was no post office built in Woodstock, which is a large town. Well, let us suppose that there are two candidates running for the county. The hon. gentleman opposite, who now so ably represents South Oxford, could denounce the Government for not having made a grant for a post office. He could say: "Let us turn out this do-nothing Government, this corrupt Government, which has helped other places but has not helped Woodstock, and when our party comes in, we will see that justice shall be done to Woodstock." He could make that speech; but if the candidate opposing him should say: "Woodstock has been too long neglected, and if I am elected, I will wake up this sleepy Government and try to get them to give us a vote for a post office," according to this Bill, the hon. gentleman who now sits for South Oxford would be quite right to make that speech, but the candidate opposing him would commit a corrupt act which would, if he were elected, turn him out of the House and disqualify him for eight years, for doing what the hon. gentleman on the other side has done, and I have no doubt will again do with his accustomed ability and energy. So with all the rest of the Act. It says:

"Any grant of money, unless for necessary repairs or demanded by urgent public necessity, made by the Government of Canada for any railway or public work or building within any constituency where an election is to be held within ten months from the date of the making of such grant."

I do not know that the present Minister of Public Works is gifted with the Scotch gift of second sight, by which he can know when the seat is going to be vacant, or can guess when the incumbent is going to die, or resign, or be appointed to office; yet if it happens by any chance that any necessary expenditure is made in any constituency within ten months of an election in consequence of the member being carried off by la grippe or anything else, a corrupt act has been done. The whole Bill is a parcel of nonsense, and is quite unworthy of the hon. gentleman who has introduced it. I move that this Bill be read a second time this day six months.

Mr. LAURIER. No one expected that the hon. gentleman would accept this measure. My hon. friend drew it in full anticipation of the opposition which it meets from the other side of the House; but no one expected that the hon. gentleman would characterise it as a wanton insult to the Government. My hon. friend in his remarks did not say or imply that all governments were corrupt; but he not only implied, but he distinctly said, that this Government was corrupt. Now, this is an opinion which it is the privilege of every subject of Her Majesty to entertain with regard to the present Government, and that privilege carries with it the further privilege of expressing that opinion in so many words; and it is because my hon. friend has not full confidence in the honesty of the present Government, that he says he wants to prevent them doing wrong, if it is possible to do so, by law. This is the nature of this measure. I think my hon. friend may possibly agree with me that his measure is not as happily worded as my right friend opposite would have worded it if he had framed it himself; but, Sir, is this Bill, which I believe to be a good Bill, the only thing in the world which is not an unmixed good? Are we to adopt the doctrine that because a thing is not perfect we are not to attempt to perfect it, but should throw it aside altogether? This is the objection of the hon. gentleman. He says the Bill is unhappily worded and is a piece of nonsense; but if it is based on a true principle, that is a reason why we should do what we have done but a few minutes ago with regard to another Bill, namely, to pass it through its second reading, and then refer it to a committee which would put it in better language. In my judgment the principle of this Bill is unimpeachable. What have the people to do in a general election? They have to pass on the policy of the Government. The Government boast of their policy, and yet I never knew an instance of their going to the people on the merits of that policy alone since they came into power in 1878. In 1882 their National Policy was in full bloom, but did they go to the country on the simple merits of that policy? Why, Sir, it is on record that they loaded the dice as far as they could. They did not go to the electors and ask them to try them on the merits of the National Policy, but they adopted the Gerrymander Act in order to obtain an undue advantage over their opponents. So in 1887, when they again went to the country. They did not appeal to the electors simply on the merits of their policy, but they were careful to obtain for themselves an undue advantage by the Franchise Act. On every occasion when there has been an election, whether a general election or a bye-election, these promises of public works, which are objected to in this Bill, have been a constituent of the elections. We had a motion the other day, moved from this side of the House, and accepted by the hon. gentleman, that the construction of public works should be determined simply by the public interest. The hon. gentleman assented to that doctrine in words, but he has never assented to it in practice. What is the language used in every election by every ministerial candidate? It is simply this: "If you elect a supporter of the Government, you will have public works." We have heard that in this election and that election, in this Province and that Province, everywhere; and the electors are further told: "If you do not elect a supporter of the Government, a candidate of the Opposition will not be able to obtain any favor from the Government. So these public works, which the hon. gentleman said a few days ago should be determined only by the public interest, are always used in election times as an inducement to the electors to support the Ministerial candidates. This is what my hon. friend is opposed to. The right hon. gentleman says that we may make promises from this side of the House. Let him then amend the Bill and agree that those promises shall be carried out, whether made by a Ministerial or any other candidate, and then the objection will be obviated. He referred to the case of Woodstock. Well, if the hon. gentleman were to agree to the doctrine which we laid down a few days ago, there would be no occasion for any candidate in Woodstock or elsewhere to refer to public works, because then they would be built according to public standard. It may be that the Bill is not as aptly framed as it might be. It may be that it might be improved in its wording; but it must strike any man that if we are to have anything like purity in our elections, if we are to have the action of the Government pronounced upon fairly, we must prevent the Government exercising the corruption my hon. friend desires to guard against, and this Bill, if adopted, will certainly be a step in that direction.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is highly desirable that some change should take place in the law, for as it now exists it is quite clear that the Government exercise an undue influence in every constituency in this Dominion whenever there is an election. No one who has observed the course of the Government since Confederation down to the present time, can fail to observe that every provision of her constitution which could possibly be violated has been violated, and every law which could be turned into account to secure to the party now in power the perpetuation of their lease of office, has been so used. The hon. gentleman who introduced this measure referred to the Superannuation Act. That Act, which was intended to secure a small sum to those who were worn out in the service of the country, in order to enable them to be independent for the balance of their days, has been grossly abused. We see to-day men superannuated under that Act who are as healthy as any man in this House, and who were superannuated solely because their places were wanted for some others who had claims on the Government. In that way we are forced to pay $225,000 a year for the superannuation of civil servants, $100,000 of which has been incurred within the last ten years. This superannuation tax has increased from year to year, until to-day we are paying at the rate of $225,000 a year. Take the question of railways, and what are the facts? It was well understood at the time of Confederation that the Provinces should manage matters connected with their local lines; but in order to take out of the hands of the Local Governments the handling of local lines of railways, a Bill was introduced, under that provision in the Confederation Act by which all lines declared for the general advantage of Canada should be looked upon and treated as Dominion lines, and passed, and the result was that every line of railway, whether it was a small local line or not, as soon as it was connected with any main line, was declared to be for the general advantage of the country, and brought under the intention of the Government, and then began the general wholesale subsidising of roads in all directions when it was thought any good could be accomplished for the Tory party. Constituencies came here and asked for charters and applied for bonuses, and we had the ridiculous farce on several occasions of constituencies asking bonuses for five miles of a railway declared to be for the general advantage of Canada, because it connected with the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway, and because it was located in a riding where it was thought the granting of a bonus would be an advantage to the party running in the interest of the Government. Take the small bonus granted to the line of road running in connection with the Toronto, Grey and Bruce to Wingham. That road was subsidised by hon. gentlemen opposite to keep out of the House the man who now sits here. There are hundreds of cases like that. Take the erection of the post office in Goderich. The First Minister went round on his election tour before the last general election. There was no post office in Goderich then, and whether he made a promise or not is not known, but there is no doubt the hon. gentleman has had erected a post office at Goderich. Why?

Mr. LAURIER.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Because it is a small village.

Mr. McMULLEN. Because the hon. gentleman who sat on this side for that constituency was defeated, and, as a mark of appreciation of the defeat of a man who was a thorn in the side of the hon. gentleman, he erected a post office at Goderich. It was erected there simply because he was grateful to that constituency for turning out of the House one of the best men that ever sat in it—a man who fearlessly exposed the transactions of hon. gentlemen opposite, a man who never lost an opportunity of showing to this country the nature of the transactions the Government was guilty of. It was thought desirable by any and every means to get rid of him, and the result is that a monument in memory of his defeat is erected in Goderich. They should print over the door of that post office: "Erected in memory of the defeat of M. C. Cameron." My hon. friend has stated something with regard to Cayuga. It is a known fact that the post office was erected there solely because the people had elected at one time the hon. gentleman who now represents that constituency. We had in this House the other night the fact brought out of several buildings having been erected in the Province of Quebec, which no doubt were erected for the same purpose. I drew attention to one or two myself, and stated that I believed the Minister of Public Works was using the construction of public buildings to manipulate the elections, and secure the returns of members to support the Tory party. I say that the looseness with which public money has been squandered from one end of the Dominion to the other has been the means of increasing our debt and the responsibilities of the people. We are now laboring under an annual expenditure of $40,000,000 a year to 5,000,000 people. That is largely owing to the improvidence of hon. gentlemen opposite. We know well that when Sir Charles Tupper came across last time from Great Britain with the object of trying to secure a solid following in the Province of Nova Scotia, it was stated plainly and openly through the press that it would cost from $6,000,000 to $8,000,000 to implement the promises made on that occasion by the Government. We have built the Oxford and New Glasgow line, which cost an enormous amount of public money, to duplicate our present line, and in place of bettering the condition of that road which the people constructed, and for which they do not receive a cent in return, it injures it. And this was done in order to secure the election in the Counties of Cumberland and Gloucester of supporters of the Dominion Government; and to secure in the County of Pictou the return of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. That county was subsidised by the construction of the Pictou branch at an expense of $550,000. In all directions money has been recklessly squandered in order to secure the return of Government supporters. My hon. friend deserves credit for bringing in this Bill. I did not expect the Government would accept it. I knew well they would not, because the First Minister has told us he feels very comfortable in the position he has held for a number of years, by means of the exercise of enormous influence through subsidies to railways, erecting public buildings, the superannuation system, timber limits and the many other human devices in which he is past master. But it has been a serious thing for this country, because the hon. gentleman has been adding a million a month to the debt of the country for every month during which he has held office. If you examine the national debt, you will find that my statement is correct, and I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman is willing to continue to add a million a month to the debt in order to hold office. I believe he has made up his mind that, as long as he is allowed to breathe breath—no matter what the results to the people may be, no matter what the increased drain on the resources of the people may be—any means which may be used to keep him in office he will exercise. We are aware that, to the discredit of the party which the hon. gentleman has led so long, we had the discreditable Gerry-mander Act passed, which was intended to beat men out of their rights and to sustain that party in power. The hon. gentleman says that if the town of Woodstock has not a public building, the hon. member who represents that constituency can easily make a strong appeal to the electors against the Government because they refused to build a post office there, and so can assure his return to the House at the next election. The hon. gentleman knows very well that nine-tenths of the electors in that county are Grits, because he knows that he hived them all together. He knows that they do not take any stock in the hon. gentleman, and that they would not elect a supporter of his in any case, and that is the reason why there is no post office in Woodstock. If it would be the means of electing a supporter of his, there would be a post office there very quickly, and there would be a pavement in front of it which might cost double the amount which the pavement cost in front of the building at Napanee, which was $2,000, and the hon. gentleman would spend $10,000 for a pavement in front of a building in Woodstock, if he thought it would result in attaining his object. I say that this Bill should become law, and that the party opposite would do themselves credit by frankly acknowledging, even at this late date, that the law of the country should be changed in this regard. It would be a great relief to the hon. gentleman himself, for he would no longer have deputations coming to him every day, urging and praying and begging for bonuses for railways and bridges and for other advantages. I suppose, however, that he is accustomed to that now, and that it is pleasant to him, and that he likes to see these people buzzing around him. If this measure were passed, he would not be bothered with them as he is now. I say that measure should become law, and I say it is unfair to the party in opposition—I care not what political complexion they may have—that the Government should be able to use the great power which they have in their hands in this way. Until we have a purer system, we will have a continuation of the present mode of managing affairs. Our debt will roll up every year and the people will become financially enslaved; we will have to resort to repudiation, or the population will be practically enslaved by the Government.

Mr. PORTER. It was not my intention to trouble the House with any remarks, if the hon. gentleman had not attacked my action in the election in 1887. I did not desire to be dragged into this debate, even by the remarks of the hon. gentleman, because, as the Spanish author has told us, "There is never anything to be made by breaking a lance on a windmill." As to the post office in Goderich, which the hon. gentleman accuses the Government of having promised in order to aid my election, I tell him here from my place that he is saying what is not true. I tell him that, during my whole canvass, not in any meeting which I held, was a word spoken or a promise made by me that any public work would be undertaken in that riding. I defy the hon. gentleman, or any one in this House, or outside of this House, to say that I, in any public meeting, or in my private canvass, represented to the people of West Huron that one dollar would be expended on any public works. I say further, that the building of a post office in Goderich was a work of necessity. If the hon. gentleman has ever visited that town, he must know that the public building which was used there was altogether inadequate, and was almost a disgrace to the town. He must know that it is a poor, miserable building; and he must also know that the Customs revenue at that port is of considerable magnitude, while the revenue of the post office alone is between $5,000 and $6,000 per annum. I think that any attack upon the Government, or upon the member who represents that riding for using his influence with the Government in this matter, is wholly unjustified, and could only come from a man whose mind is as small as his utterances are mean.

Mr. MULOCK. I think it is to be regretted that the First Minister, before calling upon his supporters to vote down this measure, did not venture to offer any argument in support of his position. I think he did not on this occasion rise to the gravity of the situation, and did not deal with it in the manner which it deserves to be dealt with. We are face to face with a very grave condition of affairs. For many years the law has declared that bribery is illegal, and should be punishable in certain severe ways, but, while the principle of the law has been affirmed by statute, which was always the law in theory, we now find the law to be defective. There is no necessity to cite cases to support this fact. We all know that the practice has been resorted to, and it may be because the First Minister appreciates the results of that practice that he calls upon his supporters to vote down this measure. He ridicules some of the features of this Bill, and endeavors to kill it by ridicule. That is a favorite way of treating a matter of this kind when those who oppose it are unable to treat it on its merits.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It has no merits.

Mr. MULOCK. I am sorry that the First Minister does not think it is meritorious to affirm that it is just as improper to buy elections by wholesale, when the law says they shall not be bought by retail. I say, that this matter lies at the foundation of the liberties of the people. The First Minister and his colleagues are now affirming that it is meritorious to use the people's money to buy the people's liberties, in order to sustain a certain Administration in power. Why, Sir, admit such a principle as that, and what becomes of our boasted representative institutions? They pass away. The people become in that way corrupted, they place themselves in a position to be bought with their own money, and then, they cease to be a free people, Parliament ceases to be a representative institution, and the Minister, by his argument, says that that is the proper condition of a free people, that it is not meritorious to ask to free them from those who should be their servants, but who have now become their masters, and that we shall now throw out of Parliament a measure, right in principle, endorsed in principle, always recognised in principle and endorsed by legislation as right and proper. Sir, we are face to face with a threatened danger, a danger not merely threatening one Government or one party, but a danger that strikes at the foundation of the institutions we are supposed to guard here. Are we here to allow the Government, because they are entrusted with the public money, quietly to take the people by their throats and, by abusing their position, to solidify themselves in office, make themselves the masters of those to whom they should be the servants? I regret that the First Minister has not risen to the occasion, at all events that he does not treat seriously and with argument a question of the importance of that involved in this Bill. If there is something in it that does not commend itself to him, there is something in it that does. I do not choose to follow the isolated illustration of Woodstock, or, for that matter, of Goderich. I know nothing about whether the hon. gentleman who has posed as Don Quixote, is right or wrong in his presentation of the case; it is not necessary to dispose of this proposition by an isolated case. We find, by reference to the statute, by the debates extending over years, what abuse the Government has made of their power. We have it in the very case referred to by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), how that New Glasgow road was constructed for nothing but corrupt purposes; we have had the experience before us last year, and again this year, of the acts of the Administration in trying to implement the promise made to the Maritime Provinces, to build a short line railway from Harvey to Salisbury. Why was that promise made? Why was it endeavored to be carried out? There never was a good argument presented on the floor of this House in defence of the proposition to expend several million dollars to construct a short line railway from Harvey to Salisbury. The Government dared not give the true reason to the House. The argument could only be made in secret. Certain reasons were assigned by the Government, but they were so unsound that their own supporters in the Senate, a body not amenable to public opinion, in a sense, refused to listen to the arguments that were advanced. But we have to look to our financial statements to find out the consequences of this state of affairs. As the member for North Wellington says: Look at our public debt if you want to see whether there is any need of this amendment to the law; look at our Estimates for this year. The hon. gentleman says that the Minister of Public Works is not gifted with foresight, but I think every member in this House who is possessed of the slightest degree of sagacity—and I assume we are all possessed of some—may safely make up their minds when the Dominion elections are imminent, the public records of this House will show that we are going to be saddled with an enormous advance to our debt for the purpose of carrying these hon. gentlemen safely through the next general election. Look at the measures of the Government introduced at the dying moments of every Parliament since the First Minister has been in office, and what do they show? Whenever he is about to go through a general election you will find large sums of money voted for this or that enterprise. Why is it that these good things are all reserved until the eve of a general election? How comes it that there is only one house-cleaning during the whole life of a Parliament, and that that takes place about the time they are laying down the reins of office, and going back to their constituents to ask for a renewal of confidence? How comes it, if these things are all so pure, that they are all reserved to this particular period? I again express my deep regret that the First Minister has, on this occasion, appeared in the roll of a backslider. A couple of days ago, he was repudiating any such thing as a corrupt act, and I began to have a great deal of confidence in him, and said to myself: "The old man is not so bad as they have been telling us." I began to have hopes for him when I saw him repudiating the conduct of an hon. member, and declaring that these actions should be thoroughly ventilated, under oath, before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, holding up his hands—they seemed to be all right—and I began to think that the First Minister was in his latter days going to reverse his record and go back to reform principles. Even now, late as it is in the debate, can he not take a turn round again? He has taken many a sharp curve before, and can he not go back on his utterances of a few moments ago, see the error of his way, and repent before this Bill is disposed of, and declare himself in favor of further adding to the securities of the people and the good government of the country.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) stated a few moments ago that the leader of this Government has added a million a month for every month he has held office since Confederation. I think that statement should be taken with a grain of salt, indeed I think it would take a whole barrel. When Confederation was formed this Dominion assumed the debts of the different Provinces, amounting to some 130 millions.

Mr. McMULLEN. No.

Mr. TAYLOR. During the five years of the Administration of hon. gentlemen opposite they increased the national debt by about 40 millions, and adding that to the debt assumed at Confederation we find that the total debt amounted to 170 millions. The total debt to-day is 240 millions. Deduct from that 170 millions, and we have only 70 million dollars for which this Government are responsible; still the hon. member says that this Government has spent a million a month for every month they have held office. Well, they have held office about 18 years, or 216 months, which, according to the hon. gentleman's statement, would make, 216 millions. The fact is the present Government has increased the debt by only 70 millions, making 146 millions of a misstatement by the hon. gentleman opposite. That is on a par with all the statements that hon. gentleman makes, when he attacks the leader of the Government and the members supporting him.

Mr. McMULLEN. I wish to make a correction. In the first place the statement of the hon. member is not correct when he says the debt at Confederation was 130 millions. It was only 75 millions. I stated that since Confederation—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; you have already spoken.

Mr. SCRIVER. I move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. McMULLEN. I desire to correct the hon. gentleman in the statement he has made. He has tried to lead this House astray: he has made a statement that is not correct, not in accordance with the facts, and I simply wish the privilege of showing wherein he is incorrect. He stated that the net debt at the time of Confederation was $130,000,000. That is not correct; it was $75,800,000. He stated again that the Reform Government during the time they were in office, from 1874 to 1878, increased the debt of the country $34,000,000. That is not correct, because the debt was created by their predecessors before they took office, and they had to find the money to pay it.

Mr. TAYLOR. How much did they increase it?

Mr. McMULLEN. They had to find money to pay expenditures to which their predecessors had committed the country.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the hon. gentleman tell the House how much they did increase it?

Mr. McMULLEN. From 1878 to 1889, a period of eleven years, the public records show that this Government has added $132,000,000 to the debt. I say the statement I made is correct to the letter; the present Government have added the amount I have stated, and the records will prove it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried, carried.

Mr. LAURIER. I think we had better dispose of this question now.

Mr. SCRIVER. With the permission of the House, I withdraw my motion for the adjournment of the debate.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried, carried.

Mr. CHARLTON. I hope the Government are not disposed to shirk this question, and do not propose to avail themselves of the motion made for the purpose of allowing the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) to make an explanation, to shirk the issue and avoid a vote upon the Bill.

Mr. LAURIER. The majority can have their way. If the debate is to be adjourned, we are willing, and we will spend another evening on it.

Motion to adjourn debate withdrawn.

Mr. CASEY. Mr. Speaker, I beg to call your attention to the fact that, through inattention at the moment the vote was being taken, I voted in a way that I did not intend to vote. The vote which I intended to give was against the amendment, and I ask that my name be entered as voting against the amendment.

Mr. SPEAKER. It might perhaps be advisable at this moment to call the attention of hon. members, more especially of those who have had long experience, to the fact that I do not think the vote given by the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) should be altered, according to the authorities. Both May and Bourinot cite the English practice. We have no precedent in our parliamentary history. It might, perhaps, be well for the House to discuss this matter, for, if we are going to create a precedent, the subject should be well considered and discussed before such precedent is created.

Mr. CASEY. I rise to a point of order. In the nineteen sessions during which I have sat in this House I remember several instances, although I now cannot call attention to the particular cases, where a member has voted, through inattention, on the side on which he did not intend to vote, and he has invariably been allowed to correct his vote on stating his intention to the House. I am quite willing that a different precedent should be established in the future if such is the will of the House; but as such has been the practice hitherto, and as such has been done during the present session in the case of an hon. member, I hold that I should be allowed to correct my vote. During the present session the hon. member for East Assiniboia was allowed this privilege on explaining that a mistake had occurred, and his vote was entered as he wished it to be entered.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I beg your pardon. It never occurred.

Mr. CASEY. I claim what is sauce for the Mr. LAURIER.

goose should be sauce for the gander. The hon. member for West Assiniboia is the hon. gentleman to whom I should have referred. I am asked who was the goose? You pay your money and you take your choice. It was foolish on my part to make the mistake, but a strict rule should not be enforced now, when it has not been enforced hitherto; and I should be allowed to record my vote as I wish it to be recorded on this occasion.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the House must yield to the impassioned appeal of the hon. member, and allow him to change his vote. We will give him some of the sauce. At the same time, I would say that the point is worthy of consideration, as to whether, when a vote is once registered, it should not remain; and for one reason, there might be a tie, and then, at the last moment, for party purposes, an hon. member might change his vote.

Mr. MITCHELL. You are not so far gone as that yet.

Mr. LAURIER. I am not quite sure, with all deference to you, Mr. Speaker, that the rule is exactly as you have put it down. If a name was erroneously entered on the roll, it would be quite an anomaly that it should remain there, and surely under such circumstances the list must be corrected.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In response to your request, Mr. Speaker, to ascertain what was the recollection of the older members of the House, I may say that my recollection distinctly is, that, under former Speakers, this thing has occurred more than once, and on several occasions what the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) has asked to be done was done. Whether it was correctly done or not is another matter, and I am not prepared to offer an opinion on that; but, as a matter of fact, it has been done on former occasions.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It has been done. Main motion, as amended, agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see that notice of motion has been given by the Government to take Wednesday. If the House should adjourn now, it will be impossible to reach certain pressing private business this Session.

Mr. LAURIER. The next order is a Bill of my hon. friend from Laprairie (Mr. Doyon). A promise was given by the Government that the House would have an opportunity to consider it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That pledge will be carried out.

Mr. MITCHELL. My hon. friend from Gleggarry (Mr. Purcell) has a Bill on the paper of great importance to the laborers of the country, and I trust that he will have an opportunity to bring his Bill before the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think we will give him a chance.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to ask if the hon. gentleman means to go into Supply to-morrow?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then I wish to give notice that certain matters have been put into my hands affecting a company called "The Direct Meat Company" to which I will call the attention of the House when going into Committee of Supply. I may state that I do not intend to make a motion, but I will use the privilege of calling his attention to certain matters and asking for an explanation.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Very well.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 10.35 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 20th March, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

SMELT FISHING IN MIRAMICHI RIVER.

Mr. MITCHELL asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to so alter the fishing regulations, as to permit the taking of smelts during the fishing season in the Miramichi River above Middle Island?

Mr. COLBY. It is not the intention to change the regulation referred to at present. The object of the regulations was the protection of the bass fishing at that place during the limited period of three years.

NATIVE TOBACCO.

Mr. THÉRIEN asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to continue in force the enactment which forbids the cultivators to manufacture into cut tobacco or cigars the tobacco which they raise for their own use and consumption?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is the intention of the Government to continue in force the enactment referred to.

ANNAPOLIS POST OFFICE.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, (1) What area of land was purchased for the site of the public buildings in Annapolis? (2) From whom purchased, and at what price? (3) Was a lot adjoining the one selected offered for sale to the Government? (4) If so, at what price was it offered? (5) Who is the person in charge as inspector of said buildings? (6) What was his occupation prior to this appointment? (7) When appointed? (8) Is he engaged until the buildings are completed? (9) What salary does he receive?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In reply to the first part of the question, the answer is: The area purchased is 3,116 $\frac{3}{4}$ feet. (2) From Pickels & Mills, 50 feet by 48 $\frac{3}{4}$ feet, price \$3,300; and from John Buckley, 15 feet by 47 $\frac{1}{4}$ feet, at \$700; total, \$4,000. They were corner lots. (3) Another lot, two lots distant from the one selected, was offered by S. A. Corbitt for \$2,500. It was not a corner lot. (5) Charles Jacques. (6) House builder, bridge contractor and farmer. (7) 19th July, 1889. (8) Yes, so long as he satisfactorily discharges his duties. (9) \$75 per month, the usual amount paid to clerks of works. I may say that the vendors also transferred whatever rights they may have to a strip of land lying in front of property sold, up to old line of street, an area of 1,386 feet.

PATENT BALLOT BOXES.

Mr. CHAPLEAU moved:

That a Select Committee composed of Messrs. Edgar, Girouard, White (Cardwell), Kenny, Madill, Choquette, Ward, Perley, Brown, and the mover, be appointed to examine and report upon newly-invented ballot papers and ballot boxes to be used in parliamentary elections.

Mr. LAURIER. Explain.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Several well-intentioned persons in the Dominion have thought, since the last time we deposited in one of the rooms of this House a ballot box furnishing a means of securing a better system of voting, that they could invent a system for registering votes which does not present the disadvantages and the defects of that at present in use. We all know that, under the present system, a number of votes are lost because the cross which is to be made in a certain part of the ballot paper may be formed in such a manner as to be interpreted by the returning officer as not being according to the provisions of the statute. The marking of ballot papers with ink, as any one of experience in elections well knows, often leads to the loss of votes on account of the ballot paper being maculated by the ink. Caveats have been taken out in the Patent Department recently for ballot boxes which secure full secrecy in the giving of the vote, and at the same time prevent any mistake in marking the paper, or the necessity of an illiterate voter having to mark his paper in the presence of the agents of the candidates. These boxes have been perfected, and have been sent to the Government for examination. At the same time, other persons have thought of keeping up the ballot paper system, but have suggested a kind of ballot paper made, printed and arranged in such a manner as to prevent in a large measure the mistakes in voting I have alluded to. No action has been taken by the Government, as they considered that the question of registering votes at elections was one which essentially belonged to Parliament. It is for that purpose that we decided to ask the appointment of a Committee to report to the House on these ballot paper boxes. The Committee will have an opportunity of inspecting those papers and boxes, and they can report to the House whether any one of these contrivances might be used more effectually in elections than the present system.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Will these ballot boxes support the Government?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It depends on the material of which they are manufactured. If they are made of good stuff, they will, no doubt, support the Government.

Mr. MITCHELL. I look with a good deal of suspicion on any proposition of this kind coming from the other side of the House. Ever since the present election law was passed, which I opposed in almost every particular, except the principle of the Bill, which fixes the power of regulating the franchise in the Parliament of Canada, I have felt, and experience has confirmed it, that the Bill is a dangerous one, and I shall look with a great deal of distrust on any proposition to purify elections, and to ensure more correct and honest voting, coming from members on that side of the House, who proposed, carried out, and brought into existence, such a Franchise Bill as is now in existence in this country.

Mr. LAURIER. I think our present system has worked fairly well, though there have been some frauds and some errors in connection with it. What we want in any system of ballot is, as far as possible, to ensure fair play between the voters, and prevent any possibility of fraud. I have nothing to say, at this moment, as to the suggestion the hon. Minister offers, but it seems to me that the remark made by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) is not altogether out of place—that we must look with suspicion at what comes from the other side of the House in this respect. We should especially do that in this case when we look at the composition of the Committee, in which the hon. gentleman has not been at all fair to the Opposition.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Does the hon. gentleman object to the first name?

Mr. LAURIER. I do not object to the first name, but I object because there are not enough names of the same persuasion. Mr. Edgar and Mr. Choquette are the only two members of the Opposition on the Committee of ten which is proposed.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I have no objection at all to ask that one or two Opposition members should be added.

Mr. LAURIER. I would suggest three more from the Opposition side, which would then make the Committee consist of five Opposition and eight ministerial members. If the hon. gentleman will agree to that, I would suggest Messrs. Sutherland, Watson and Langelier.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I have no objection.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is really not at all a question of party. What we want to have is the best mode of taking the vote, without the suspicion of any outside influence being able to tamper with the voter when he goes up to vote. I must say that I think the present system is fairly satisfactory, and I should be quite satisfied to leave things as they are. But there are a great many schemes proposed, some, which I have seen, exceedingly ingenious, for promoting absolute secrecy. We are all interested in the same thing, namely, in having absolute secrecy in the polling of the vote, and in seeing that after it is polled there is no interference with it and no disputing it except on the suggestion of fraud; and if any of these schemes are likely to promote this object more effectively than the present system, I think they are worthy of being considered by a Committee.

Mr. BLAKE. I confess I entirely shared the view of my hon. friend beside me (Mr. Laurier), when I saw the composition of this Committee as proposed. It is all very well to say that we are all equally interested, and all want to see fair play; but one thing one always has to consider about a machine is the character of the man who works it; and when you find that the Government of the country has taken into its hands the appointment of the returning officers, who in turn appoint the deputy returning officers, the poll clerks, and all the other officers who are to have the control and the handling of an election, then it is extremely important that the machinery placed in their hands should not be so pliable, or so excessively complicated, that it may give facilities for fraud still greater than those which pertain to the present system. I do not now recollect all the defects that were pointed out to me after the holding of the first election under the present system, but one I remember was, that the ballot papers were of such a thin and flimsy texture that it was impossible to mark them with the implements provided for that purpose without rendering it possible in the great majority of cases—and we know that in the great majority of cases a tolerably heavy hand is used—to perceive from the outside of the ballot paper, after it had been folded, the way in which the vote was marked. I agree with the view that, so long as you maintain the ballot system, it is of the last consequence, not merely that you should have security for secrecy, but that the mass of the voters should be persuaded that the ballot used is secret; because nothing is more common than to inform the voter that his vote can be found out, and that he must vote thus, and so, at the peril of his vote becoming known, notwithstanding the ballot. So I am informed. Therefore I agree that an arrangement under which, first of all, actual secrecy should be secured, and, secondly, under which that secrecy should be guaranteed, understandably by the mass of the voters and recognised and appreciated by them, would be very important. But, as I have said, we must take very great care that this machinery is not of such a pliable character as to be in danger of being put to the uses to which I have referred. The hon. gentleman is probably aware that, a few days ago, an investigation was held in the State of New York with reference to the election of a senator by a machine method which was supposed to work well, but which lent itself to most atrocious and widespread frauds. Therefore, it occurred to me that the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman, that this was a matter peculiar to the House itself, in which the Government did not wish to interfere—a suggestion which he sought to enforce by a committee composed of eight ministerial members and two Opposition members, with reference to machinery which was to be operated entirely by the hon. gentleman's friends—was a little “too thin.” There was not a great deal of secrecy about that, whatever there might be in the new ballot. I am glad to know, therefore, that the hon. gentleman and his leader feel that the Committee cannot assume quite that complexion, and that a larger representation is due to this side of the House, considering that the character of the operators gives us of the Opposition the greatest interest in the character of the machinery to be adopted.

Mr. HESSON. I congratulate the hon. gentleman in the remarks he has made as to the desirability of secrecy in the ballot system. It is that for which we in Ontario have been struggling for some time past, and it is that, I believe, for which the Opposition in the Ontario Legislature are struggling to-day; and I do hope that the remarks made by the ex-leader of the great Reform party of Canada, will have their influence in securing for the electors of Ontario the secrecy of the ballot which they so much desire. I am sure we cannot but feel that the hon. gentleman has struck a chord which will vibrate in many a breast, and I hope that the Hon. Mr. Mowat and those opposing the principle of a secret ballot in the proper sense, will take notice of what the hon. gentleman has said, and will be influenced thereby.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I must repudiate any of the intentions which have been indirectly attributed to me in the composition of this Committee. I must say that I thought that the two gentlemen of the Opposition whom I put on that Committee would be faithful watchers and were sufficiently acquainted with the ways of elections not to be deluded by any devices of their opponents, but, Sir, it is not only the members of that Committee who will take an interest in its doings. I am sure that members on both sides of the House will examine those mechanical inventions, and they will be given every opportunity to do so before the Committee. So far is it from my desire to prevent the other side of the House from having a voice in the Committee, that I will add to my motion the names of any two or three other members from that side. The hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) has stated that there were doubts as to the absolute secrecy of the votes given under the present system. I have no doubt that if people wish to know how others have voted, they can find out, in a great many cases, especially with regard to those who have not sufficient education to mark their papers and give their votes themselves. If there be connivance between the voter and the election agent, the voter may, by making his cross in a certain way, show the agent that he has voted according to his promise. I found in my experience that an agent of a candidate could tell by looking at their ballots whether certain voters had carried out their promises. My hon. friend has stated that in New York, despite the ingenious machinery used there, the boxes have been stuffed. Well, we need not go to New York to find instances of that practice. I had the misfortune at one time of being obliged to ask for the conviction of two or three of my fellow-countrymen, in a case in which I was acting as counsel, for having stuffed a ballot box, and by this means changed the result of the election. I need not mention names, but the case is well known to the members on the other side. What the Committee will be asked to examine is both the new ballot papers and ballot boxes. For my part, I would say that if some of the ballot boxes would work as their inventors pretend they will, they are by far preferable to the present system, because they provide the greatest secrecy to the voter. This invention does not, as the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) said, come from this side of the House. The hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Choquette) has told me that the inventor of the best of those ballot boxes is one of his electors. The inventions are those of well-meaning people who have no political object to serve. I don't know whether the change proposed will be found preferable to the present system, but I must say that the present system does not give absolute security of secrecy to the voter. In adding those names which my hon. friend will suggest, I would ask, with the consent of the other side, to add to the motion, for the instruction of the Committee:

And also on the best means of securing the secrecy of voting.

Mr. CASEY. I have no doubt at all that the desire of the vast majority of this House is to have an absolutely secret ballot, but I was rather astonished to find my right hon. friend the First Minister posing as one of the supporters of that kind of ballot, because, if my memory does not greatly deceive me, at the time the present Ballot Act was passed, the right hon. gentleman objected to the absolute secrecy which the promoters of that Bill claimed it secured, and preferred a system by which the voter would afterwards be identified on a judicial investigation—a system something similar in effect, though not in detail, to that now in force in Ontario. He wanted then to have the power of identifying a voter, of course in a judicial manner and before a judicial tribunal, at a future time; and was not then an advocate, but an opponent, of absolute secrecy in connection with the ballot. He appears to have changed his opinion, and I think he is right. At the same time it is very questionable whether any mechanical method of casting votes is superior to that of voting by ballot. Every machine for that purpose must involve certain technicalities in its management. The part to be performed by the voter may be very simple—the mere pulling of a handle or the turning of a crank; but still the manipulation of the machine to prepare it for the voter's use, and after a vote is given, for the use of the next voter, will require an expert's knowledge of its working; and as the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) has said, when the operation of the machine requires the handling of an expert, and the experts are all of one party, there is certainly room for grave suspicion as to the result. I claim further, that there is an advantage in voting by ballot, in that it preserves a record of the actual number of votes cast. I do not see how that can be done by a mechanical ballot box. These boxes all profess to record the votes at the time, but do not preserve a record of the votes cast.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Some do.

Mr. CASEY. I would urge as a sine qua non that some permanent record should be secured of the actual number of votes cast. It is quite possible, either from accident or fraud, that the parties who counted the votes might make a mistake, and there should be some means of recounting the votes at some future day, if the number be called in question. The vast experience evidently possessed by the Secretary of State, and of which he has given an example to-day in regard to the possibility of marking the ballots so that the agent can find out who marked them, shows that some reform is necessary. The hon. gentleman has given the benefit of his large experience in this respect to the Committee, and no doubt if we stick to the ballot, some improvement may be obtained. I do not believe that the Government, for their own purposes, can make any improvement on the old invention. In one county of New Brunswick, instead of having a machine to count the votes, they found the shortest way to secure what they desired, was to have a returning officer who would return the Government candidate in any case.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

BANKS AND BANKING.

Mr. FOSTER moved:

That the House do forthwith resolve itself into Committee on the following resolution:—

That it is expedient to bring in a Bill to extend the charter of the several banks in Canada, and to amend the laws relating to banking.

He said: As this is simply the formal motion which precedes the introduction of the Bill, and, I believe, necessarily precedes it, I shall take occasion at this time, inasmuch as the resolution itself gives very little insight into the nature of the Bill which may be founded upon it, to give a brief résumé of the Bill which will be introduced if the Committee adopt the resolution. It will be seen by those who make even the slightest review of the banking legislation since Confederation, that it has proceeded upon very conservative and very careful lines. What I mean by that is that it has never been attempted to carry out ambitious or revolutionary theories. I think I may say that our banking system is a growth which has developed out of the existing circumstances, the business interests, and the trade development of the country, and has kept very good pace with them. In 1867, the first enactment was passed, which did little else than continue for three years the charters of the incorporated banks then in existence, and to apply the system of a tax upon the bank circulation to the banks in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. In 1868, another idea seems to have prevailed, and legislation was had in that year which contemplated the taking over by the Government of the note circulation of the country, under arrangements which should be made with the different banks, upon the principle, I think, of paying the different banks a certain rate per annum, for the average circulation which they at that time possessed, and which should be continued until their charters expired. It appears, however, that this plan was not adopted by any of the banks, with the exception of one, which, I think, was the Bank of Montreal, and, in 1870, the legislation was repealed. In that year, the first extended legislation was had in reference to the banks. The charters were then continued for ten years and it was made obligatory that banks which were newly started should have a bonâ fide paid-up capital of $200,000, that the circulation should never exceed the paid-up capital, that they should have no power to circulate notes below the value of $4, and also that a certain amount of the cash reserves should be in Dominion notes—the minimum being 33 per cent., and the maximum to range somewhere in the vicinity of 50 per cent. A double liability of the shareholders was also provided for in that year, and arrangements were made to have lists of shareholders and stated returns published for the information of the shareholders and the general public. In 1871, legislation was again had in which the chief features of the Act of the preceding year were embodied. Some change was made in reference to the amount of capital, and it was then fixed as it remains to-day, that the subscribed capital must be $500,000, with $100,000 paid up, when a new bank was established, and $100,000 more to be paid up within two years from the time of its commencing business. The next legislation took place in 1880, when the principal features added were that the Dominion notes to be held as reserves should be not less than 40 per cent., that the issue of four dollar notes be taken from the banks, and that the privilege of issuing fives and multiples of fives be continued, and that notes have a preferential lien in order to give greater security. These are the principal features of bank legislation as it exists to-day. In looking over that legislation, it seems to have been the purpose of Parliament not to interfere violently with what we may call the natural growth of the banking system in this country. Parliament, from time to time, at these different periods of revision, affirmed the principle that it possessed authority to control the circulation, and the power of circulation was continued to a greater or less degree to the banks as a privilege, the Government, in the meantime, taking over a certain proportion, from period to period, of the smaller note circulation of the country. It also appeared to be the desire of Parliament to hedge around the banking system, which then prevailed, by severer conditions of charter, by regulations which should be restrictive upon the dealings of the banks, especially with their own stock and with the stock of other banks, to foster the laying by of reserve capital, and by a judicious requirement of returns to perfect the system and render it as safe as possible without interfering voluntarily with the general principles upon which the banks had been operated from the earlier time. Concurrently with the legislation affecting the banks, there was legislation, from period to period, affecting the circulation of the country. Before 1867 there had been, by the united Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, legislation which had the effect of calling into possible existence the circulation of Provincial notes to the extent of $5,000,000, with a limit above that of $3,000,000 contingent upon the banks giving up their power of issue, to be assumed by the Government. In 1868, I think, or in 1867, the Parliament of the Dominion legislated in the same direction and authorised an issue of that amount of notes, and made it obligatory that a specie reserve of 20 or 25 per cent. should be held therefor. Various changes were made as to the limit of this note circulation and as to the reserve until in 1880, the limit was fixed at $20,000,000 and the reserve at 25 per cent., not less than 15 per cent. of which must be in gold. I find that the Government circulation has increased from Confederation up to the present time, until last year the average was some $15,000,000. The circulation of the banks has risen from about 10 millions in 1867, to a maximum of 35 millions and a least circulation of 30 millions last year. In coming to consider what legislation should be had as the time for revision drew nigh, and as the time draws nearer when the bank charters are to expire, there were, amongst others, four or five plans which presented themselves for consideration. One was, that the Government should take over in toto the circulation of the country. That, of course, would have involved several very weighty considerations. In the first place, the Government would have to take the responsibility of providing a sufficient circulation, and of providing sufficient gold reserve to hold against the circulation; it would have had to undertake that very difficult and delicate task of providing the mechanism for a perfect circulation, and of deciding the varying amounts which, from time to time, should be kept in circulation, or should be put into circulation, in the country. It would also have had to face the great problem of the redemption, possibly in part at any time, possibly in the whole at times of great disaster, and would always have been skirting that sea of possible inflation and an inconvertible currency wherein has been the rock of shipwreck of many a governmental financial system. Another plan which presented itself for consideration was, that of the Government guaranteeing a circulation, under which the banks, for instance, were to place in the hands of the Government a certain percentage of their circulation in debentures or in proper securities, and that the Government should thereupon guarantee the circulation to the country. This would have brought about, as its advocates hold, what is so desirable in this country, a circulation of one kind and passing at par from one end of the country to the other; but it would also have brought the Government face to face with a very heavy contingent liability, one which, under the present limits, might have arisen to $60,000,000, and which, in the actual circulation last year at its highest, would have arisen to $35,000,000. On this contingent liability, of course, it would be stated by the advocates of that system that the Government should have then the lien which is now held, but if the Government had taken the contingent liability and taken the lien as well, it would also have brought the Government face to face with the difficult problem of realising assets, personal and otherwise, and it only needs a little reflection to perceive how difficult such a task as that might be. Another plan which presented itself was that akin to the plan adopted in the United States, by which the bank deposits security, Government debentures or bonds, to the total amount, or 10 per cent. more than the total amount, of its circulation. The adoption of this plan would imply the transfer of a large amount of capital from what you may call a usable condition, to that of a permanent investment; and, in the present state of the country, very strong objections would be made to that system as causing a stringency, and curtailing the amount of usable capital, which is now none too much, for the development and progress of this country. Another plan was that of taking the general features of the present system and continuing them, at the same time making certain improvements which should better safeguard them than they are at present, and which should obviate some of the objections and defects which are generally acknowledged to exist in the present system. Now, it will be seen in a moment that the advocates of all these systems had one idea uppermost, and that was the security of the note circulation. No one of these systems did primarily, or even secondarily, to any degree, look at any larger and stronger security for the voluntary creditors; all of them aimed at making as absolutely perfect as could be the security for the note circulation. Well, Sir, it is a question, I think, which might well be considered by the Government, and which might well be considered by Parliament, whether there is not, under the present system, a sufficiently reasonable security for the realisation of the note circulation, if it becomes necessary. If there is a sufficiently reasonable circulation, it would not be prudent to adopt measures which, although having good features in some respects in themselves, would certainly have the effect of unsettling the present system of banking, and the present system of trade which is so intimately connected with it. Now, with reference to this we might ask the question, How has our banking system worked so far? I am sure that all of us, in looking over the working of the banking system since 1870, when the first principal legislation was had in this Parliament, must come to the conclusion that, take it all in all, looking at the circumstances of this country, and at the development of business over its broad extent of territory, at the peculiar service which the banks here have to fulfil in taking hold of business ventures, to a certain extent, and of helping to develop them, I am sure, taking all these things into consideration, along with the history of the banks, we must come to the conclusion that the system in Canada has worked quite as well as, and probably in a superior manner, to the banking system of any other country, at a similar stage of its development and its history. With reference to the security of the bank notes, I quite admit that it is not a sufficient argument to say that because a system has worked well in the past it must necessarily, under different conditions, work well, but certainly it is a fair argument to say, that if it has worked reasonably well in the past, it has claims for a fair and full consideration, at least, before it is violently interfered with. Then, as to the matter of security for the note circulation, let us see what it is to-day. In February, 1890, by the latest bank returns that we have, the assets of the banks amounted to $246,289,764. We have a double liability available of $64,560,395, making a total of $310,850,156, as a security upon which the present note circulation of $30,627,074 has a preferential claim; that is, for every note of the banks at present in circulation, there are about $10 in assets, and double liability available for their security and for their ultimate redemption. It would seem that that is a very large and a very satisfactory security for the notes in circulation. The system, as I have stated, is one of growth, of natural development. It has worked, in the main, well; it keeps in touch with the business and trade of the country. We have under it large banks, which are fitted to hold up large operations; we have under it small banks, which are peculiarly fitted to be useful to the rural sections of the country. We have no great monopoly built up under the banking system. But there were certain defects which have been complained of in the country, and which have been complained of in this House, and it is proposed by the present Bill, which I shall have the honor to introduce, to remove those defects. One of them was this: That the notes of solvent banks, banks of which there was no suspicion, banks the notes of which no person fears would not be redeemed if they were presented at the office or agency of the bank which issued them, that the notes of these banks, when presented outside of the section of country in which the banks had its offices, were subject to discount; and citizens of the same country were under the disagreeable feeling that when they had a note, even of a solvent bank, but happened to be outside of the region or district for the redemption of that note, they were to be subject to a discount upon it, at the railway station, at the hotel counter, at the place of business. And there was a well-founded desire that such an anomaly should cease, and that notes of chartered banks, so long as they were perfectly solvent, should pass at par from one end of the country to the other. There was a means by which no person need have lost. We have in this country now in circulation, in the small circulation of Government notes, between five and six millions of dollars, and it would not have been a difficult thing, it is not to-day a difficult thing, for any person who wishes to travel outside of the district of a small bank with which he may be doing business, to gather those notes and take them with him. In taking payment from any bank a customer has to-day a right to ask for $60 of the payment to be made in the small notes of the Dominion circulation. But even that was felt not to be sufficient, and one of the clauses of this Bill deals with that question, and will, I believe, bring it about that the notes of all solvent banks in any part of Canada, wherever they may be presented, will be paid at par; and in that respect there will be no difference between that and what may be called a national circulation with but one imprint upon it. Another defect consists in this: There has not been, in the history of banking in Canada since 1870, with one exception, I think, and that was the exception of the Mechanics Bank, if I remember rightly, any case in which the notes which were secured by the banks have failed to be redeemed at their face ultimately. But the original holders of the bills, who live often in remote parts of the country, are the persons who suffer when a bank suspends payment, because they have to submit, many of them by the force of circumstances, and others by the general feeling of panic which is aroused when a bank suspends payment, to lose upon the notes they hold, although ultimately the notes are redeemed at their face. It was felt by the Government, by the country, and by the bankers themselves, that the time had come when that anomaly ought to cease, and when some means should be devised by which the notes of a bank, from the time of its suspension to the time of its liquidation, should be so held that the investor, the original possessor, the trader, the broker and the banker would be able and willing to keep them, so as not to fall below par, so that not only would they be ultimately redeemed at par, but there would be no loss to the holder between the time of the suspension of the bank and the ultimate redemption of its notes. The plan which is proposed to bring that about is this: That a certain percentage of the average circulation of the bank shall be paid into a fund, to be called the banks' circulation redemption fund. The provisions of the clause are these: That on 1st July, 1891, when this Act comes into force, two and a-half per centum of that payment shall be lodged in this fund, and one year thereafter another two and a-half per centum, and that thereon and thereafter five per centum of the average circulation of each bank shall be held in this fund as the payment of each one of the banks. Upon that fund of five per centum of the average circulation the Government proposes to pay interest to the banks at the rate of three per centum per annum, which I think the House will not quarrel with as an exorbitant rate of interest, and which at the same time will prevent that amount of money contributed from the banks lying dead. It is at least a fair investment for them on the amount held in the fund. This amount is always to be held in the fund. Upon the suspension of a bank, and between the time of suspension and redemption, whether it be long or short, comparatively speaking, the notes will be kept at par partly from the knowledge that there is a fund of that amount to redeem them, and partly because it is proposed that from the time of the suspension of the bank until the day notice is given of the liquidation of the notes, these notes shall bear interest at the rate of six per centum per annum. That will prevent the notes falling below par, and it will enable the original holder, if he pleases, to keep them, feeling that he gets a fair investment for his money, and it will enable investors to hold them; and more than all and better than all, it will cause the banks to take those notes immediately from one end of the country to the other, and, consequently, when presented by the holder at any bank, they will be taken the same as any other bank note. If, however, at the end of two months the notes have not been liquidated in whole or in part, then the fund becomes available for the redemption of what may remain unredeemed, and the interest which may have accrued is taken from the fund, and is to be recouped to the fund out of the assets of the suspending bank. That is, in brief, and as clearly as I can put it, the arrangement which is proposed in the clauses which deal with that matter. It is a sort of co-operation. It will, I believe, have the effect which it was designed to have, to prevent loss to the original holder upon the note of a suspended bank between the time of redemption and time of ultimate liquidation. These two amendments, then, will take away the two defects which have been mainly complained of, namely, the discount upon current notes of a solvent bank, and the discount or loss to individual holders upon the suspension of a bank from the time of its suspension to its ultimate liquidation. It is felt also that greater care should be taken in the formation of new banks, and that, with the number of banks which we have at present in Canada, no other banks ought to come into existence and do business without giving bond fide warrant that they are prepared to do business, and do a safe business; and it is proposed, although the capital stock to be subscribed, is not increased, which is a lesser matter, that before any bank undertakes business in Canada, $250,000 shall be bond fide paid in and deposited in the hands of the Finance Minister and Receiver General. That will prevent any bank, I think, going into operation in Canada without giving a fairly good guarantee that it is prepared to do business on a solid foundation. It is proposed to extend the bank charters for the usual period, the period of ten years. It is also proposed to introduce an audit system, an audit system not of the Government, but yet compulsory, an audit of shareholders. The machinery for that is something like this: that the shareholders shall, at their annual meeting, elect two or more auditors; that those auditors shall, during the course of the year, have the opportunities which are necessary for the auditing of all accounts and of all statements, that they shall present this report, and their audit of the directors' report, at the yearly meeting, and that a copy of this report shall be lodged with the Minister of Finance and the Receiver General. These are, in brief (and I have striven to give them in brief), the chief features of the Act. There are other emendations which will be better discussed clause by clause, as we take them up in the Committee on the Bill. With this introduction, I beg leave to move the House into Committee on the resolution.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It appears to me that it would have been more convenient that the hon. gentleman should have placed this Bill in our hands, which I presume he could easily have done, at a sufficiently early date, to have allowed us to follow his description of the merits of the Bill. It is not easy, no matter how familiar hon. members may be with subjects of this kind, to offer any opinion as to their merits or demerits, without the text of the proposal of the Finance Minister in our hands. In matters of this kind, it is of extreme importance to us to see how the details are intended to be worked out, and, therefore, I do not propose at present to make any but the very briefest observations, on the remarks which we have now heard. I may say further, that I agree with the hon. gentleman in this: that I think, take it altogether, the banking system of Canada has worked very well; that it has grown up naturally among us, and is well suited to our wants, and I do not believe, for my part, that it is at all desirable to make any hasty alteration in it. One point I might call the attention of the hon. gentleman to, is this. I observe that he spoke of the security which we had for our notes, as if the whole aggregate assets of the banks were pledged for the whole aggregate circulation. Now, that is not quite correct. The assets of each bank are pledged, no doubt, for the circulation of such bank, but the assets of one bank are not pledged—except by such clause as the hon. gentleman may hereafter introduce—for the notes of another bank. It is not a very safe way of viewing the subject to say, because the collective assets of banks, plus the double liability, amount to something like $350,000,000 (as, I think, I heard the hon. gentleman state), and our circulation is only $35,000,000, that, therefore, we can say we have $10 for $1, as regards our circulation; because some banks have a very small circulation in proportion to their assets, and some have a very large circulation. It would be indiscreet at present to go into details, but I can recall that one of the very best banks we possess, has a circulation very much smaller than many banks of not one-third or one-fourth of its capital; and certainly not one-half of its stability. If I caught the hon. gentleman's meaning aright, I think he was, therefore, a little in error in giving the House to understand, that because we had aggregate assets held by banks to the amount I have stated, that we, therefore, had that applicable to protect the general circulation. There are, no doubt, several points which it is very desirable that we should endeavor to secure with respect to our banking system. One important matter is the security of the notes. I will say a word or two as to what I have understood the hon. the Minister of Finance to propose. This question of security, as regards the public at large, is a matter of first interest, and too great pains cannot be taken to see that when we create these institutions, and when we make them to a large extent the vehicle for supplying the needed circulation of this country, we should take all possible means to protect the involuntary creditors, more especially as these are largely composed of the poorer class of the community. We should also, in my opinion, be careful to guard against undue monopoly by banks, and that is a matter to which, no doubt, a good deal of attention will have to be directed in considering the hon. gentleman's proposal. One of the very most important functions in maintaining commerce, is to secure the due elasticity of the circulation, and I concur with the hon. gentleman in thinking, that he has been well advised on this occasion in not attempting to take that excessively delicate and difficult duty into the hands of the Government. There is another matter on which the hon. gentleman said nothing, but which may, perhaps, not unprofitably engage the attention of the House, that is, the desirability of maintaining a good specie gold reserve in Canada; a thing which has been considerably trenched upon by a number of these regulations to which the hon. gentleman alluded. As a matter of fact, in the case of a good many of our banks it may be said, that they practically hold no gold at all. They hold a certain amount of Dominion notes, for which the Government is compelled to keep a specie reserve of 15 per cent., if my memory serves, but they themselves hold no gold at all. That has not as yet proved a source of more than, perhaps, temporary inconvenience, but there is a risk there, and a risk which cannot altogether be overlooked. Then there is another matter which possibly comes more within the purview of the hon. Minister of Justice, than the hon. Minister of Finance, but to which the attention of the House has sometimes been directed, and which is germane of this subject; that is, the way in which the law can best be framed to deal with men in the position of directors or cashiers of banks, who have abused the trust reposed in them by their shareholders and the public. That is a point about which, also, something may be said. As I understand the proposition of the hon. Finance Minister, he states that arrangements are going to be made—but he did not state, or at least I did not catch it if he did—whether these arrangements were to be made by the banks themselves, or by the Government—whereby the notes of solvent banks are to be paid at par all over the Dominion. I take it for granted he means that is to be done by some arrangement among the bankers themselves, and perhaps enforced by law. Am I correct in that?

Mr. FOSTER. That is correct.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then there arises the other and important question to which I alluded just now, namely, how the public are to be secured, and how the note circulation is to be redeemed? I understand that the hon. gentleman proposes to provide that to a certain extent the banks are to be each other's insurers, and that if I also follow him correctly, he proposes that what we may call the insurance fund or the reserve fund, is to amount to 5 per cent. on the circulation, which would be an insurance reserve fund of about $1,500,000, on the present circulation of $30,000,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; that is right.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, that might or might not be a sufficient reserve. I suppose that that, if it were trenched upon by the failure of one or two banks, could be immediately made up in some form or way to the $1,500,000.

Mr. FOSTER. It is to be kept at that percentage.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So I supposed, but I did not hear the hon. gentleman say so. That is a matter of detail which will bear some discussion. There is no doubt that, as regards the great mass of the small banks, that would be sufficient; but should such a calamity occur—and such calamities have occurred—as one of the large banks with a large circulation failing, or two or three banks with a considerable circulation failing at the same time—and the hon. gentleman will note that some of our smaller banks have a very large circulation, out of all proportion to the amount which is in circulation from larger banks—it is possible that this provision may not afford, by any means, such perfect security as it is desirable to have. To these points I simply call the attention of the hon. gentleman and the House briefly. I think discussion had better be had at a later period, when we shall have all the details before us; I hardly think it can be carried on very profitably now. As I understand, the hon. gentleman proposes to make no change as to the amount of subscribed capital required by new banks, but he proposes that instead of $200,000 being paid up—$100,000 paid down and $100,000 in two years—they shall be required to pay $250,000. So that the minimum of cash paid up will be raised from $200,000 to $250,000, and the hon. gentleman will insist on it all being paid at once.

Mr. FOSTER. With the exception that the payment is to be a bonâ fide payment.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It was to have been a bonâ fide payment before, although there have been cases, and not a few, in which that wholesome provision has been evaded.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It has been done by discount.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That has been done, and it is the duty of the Finance Minister, I suppose, if possible, in this Bill to see that there is no chance of that being done. As to his proposed audit system by the shareholders, we can say nothing until we see what he proposes. Although the provisions he intends to introduce may be valuable, my own impression is that the public should be cautioned against putting too much reliance on any audit system or system of inspection that can be devised, for this reason, that I can conceive of no possible mode by which any auditor or inspector can ascertain the real intrinsic value of the notes which a bank discounts, which form by far the greatest portion of its assets, and whose value depends entirely on the solvency and standing of the men who make them. I have never, myself, been able to see how that difficulty was to be overcome; and I think that the Government, in making any of these provisions, should take special care to see that bank shareholders and the public are not lulled into a false security by the idea that the proposed audit system, or any other that can be devised, will secure good management and care on the part of the banks. I shall not trouble the House with any further observations at present, because I deem it almost essential to have before us the text of the measure before we can properly discuss it.

Mr. BLAKE. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that it would be convenient if he would provide us with a table, in plain and simple form, showing the details of the calculations of which he gave—what was very satisfactory in one way—the general result, but the details of which he did not give. I refer to the relation of the gross assets to the gross liabilities of the banks. It is quite clear that that teaches us nothing. You might as well say that you could decide as to the solvency of an individual by putting down on one side the assets and on the other the liabilities of all the members of his community, and striking a general balance. You would find that, although there might in the whole be a considerable margin of assets over liabilities, yet if you looked into the details there would be deficits in the case of some and large amounts to the credit of others. For my own part, I am much more disposed to place reliance on that to which the hon. gentleman alluded in this regard, as the actual experience of banks which have gone under, and which, speaking generally, I think, quite justified his observations. I do not propose to say a word with reference to the details of the plan for the redemption of the notes, for the hon. gentleman has not entered into details, and there are some questions of detail which are rather important, but which, in the absence of details, it would be entirely premature to discuss. Nor do I intend to enter into the question of the working of the guarantee system, because that also requires very careful consideration as to details, and as to the exact liability which it would impose on the mass of the banks and as to the arrangement in case of a call. As to the audit system, I must say that I concur in every word the hon. member for South Oxford has uttered. I agree that if our present system of auditing is in any respect defective in theory, if it does not provide an adequate legislative recognition of the duty of the shareholders or the authorities to secure a proper audit, we ought to make such a legislative recognition. But with reference to most institutions which are engaged in enormous transactions in the lending of money, especially to those lending money on personal security, I hold that it is absolutely impossible for any auditor to make an audit which will indicate the real position of the bank. We know in our own experience that it is quite impossible. We in this House have had the most signal instances brought before us of banks which displayed the most flourishing statements, duly audited, before their shareholders, and in a very few weeks, or even days, it was found—without imputation of fraud on anyone—that those accounts were really nominal, and that enormous sums which were returned as good, turned out in the end to be of the most doubtful character. It is really of the greatest consequence, therefore, that we should not hold out to the public that we are giving them a security which we cannot give. I feel the importance of a proper audit, and I think that, if by any means we could, we should establish to some extent the independence of the auditor; and I will even go so far as to say that it would be worthy of the consideration of the House whether we could not provide some peculiar mark of our sense of the responsibility which any man assumes who undertakes the duty of auditing, as to the thoroughness and accuracy of the audit, by attaching to him a certain responsibility, which would of course involve a satisfactory remuneration. But, so long as the board of directors have the confidence of the shareholders, although the shareholders may, in name, appoint the auditor, after all we know that it is the board of directors who really name him, and, so long as that is the case, the auditors are very much exposed to the danger of doing their work perfunctorily, and of being guided, in matters which at all savor of questions of opinion, by the views of the manager of the institution and those who surround him. I was disappointed, I confess, to hear the hon. gentleman's statement with reference to the change he proposed to make as to the creation of smaller banks. As to the amount of capital to be paid in, if he is only going to ascertain, by the actual payment of cash that cash has been provided for the moment or for a brief space, to the amount of $250,000 instead of $200,000, that does not amount to very much, nor is it in the matter of the actuality of the payment extremely satisfactory. You cannot provide that without imposing a barrier, which, I do not suppose, you intend to impose. You cannot provide it by retaining for any long time the $250,000, because that is what the bank is built upon, and you must hand it back. It is evident, from our experience, that the system which has gone on will not, by any such arrangement as that, be stopped, though to some extent its operations may be restrained—the system, namely, of a bank, almost immediately after its formation, discounting the paper of its shareholders for an amount approximating to the amount of their subscriptions, and thus making the transaction a nominal one. Apart from this difficulty, which, I think, the hon. gentleman's proposition may to some limited extent prevent, I must say for myself that the experience of Ontario, so far as I can gather, with reference to the smaller banks, has not been favorable. I say so the more openly because I very well remember the discussion we had, a good many years ago, when the late Sir Francis Hincks was Finance Minister, when we had before us that whole question, and when a considerable effort was made to keep up the minimum capital for the establishment of banks. I was amongst those—in those days I was much younger than I am now—who moved by the unquestionable difficulties which the smaller centres of population then labored under, strenuously insisted upon a lower minimum. Those difficulties were due to a condition of things which has, to a considerable extent, disappeared. That condition was this: The number of the banks was much smaller, and the capital of the banks was also very much smaller than in these later days, and the indisposition of the banks to provide branches in the country was very much greater than it has since become; and it was a fact that very great difficulty was experienced, arising, in many instances, from the impossibility of obtaining local banking facilities in a good many thriving communities. It was thought necessary to give those facilities; but I must say that the experience of our Province has been that the smaller banks have not been on the whole a success. They have been, speaking generally, though with some exceptions, rather an element of danger than otherwise, and it has been proved that the present plethora of banking capital, and the widespread banking facilities, make it exceedingly difficult to conduct a profitable banking business with a bank, weak in the sense of its capital being small. Therefore, we ought to consider carefully, though not at all unfairly—I do not suggest any interference with any existing institutions—in the light of the experience of the past few years and of the existing condition of things as to the amount of banking capital which is available—the question whether it may not really be in the interest of the country, to discourage the establishment of banks with a minimum of capital so low as that which at present obtains. In expressing that change of opinion, I think it proper to assume the penitential stool, in view of my former attitude and of the position I now take on this question.

Mr. COCKBURN. I cannot but think that both the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) and the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) have unconsciously in their minds confounded two things which are in reality very different. They seem to me to have mixed up the idea of audit and the idea of inspection. Now, I think that for the Government to attempt to make an inspection of the banks, under our Canadian system, would be to attempt an utter impossibility. As the hon. member for West Durham has said, it would be an utter impossibility for any inspector to take hold of customers' paper of a bank and value it, as that is a process which severely taxes the ingenuity both of the manager and of the directors. What I understood the Finance Minister to say was that he intended to improve the system of audit; and as long as that system is confined to mere auditing, it may to some extent be improved. I do not think myself it can be of much benefit, but at the same time I do think it is advisable, in dealing with this question, that we should not in any way confound the inspection with the audit. You can easily understand, Sir, the difficulties even of simply auditing under our Canadian system. In the United States, where they have but the one bank with no branches, under one national banking system to deal with, it is not so difficult for an auditor, appointed by the Government, to enter into a bank and form some idea, even though an imperfect one, of its assets. But we have seen even in the United States glowing reports given by Government auditors of banks whose doors were closed in a few days. Under our system it would be utterly and physically impossible for the Government or anybody else to value all the assets of, say the Bank of Montreal, or Commerce, or the Merchants Bank, or any other, or even to trace the cash or count the cash. We can easily conceive an inspector walking into the Bank of Montreal here and counting the cash, and finding it amounted to, say, $50,000, and then starting for Kingston, and on arriving there find in the Bank of Montreal, in that city, the same $50,000. He might go on his rounds and keep on counting the same cash over and over again. We could only have a thorough system of inspection, even with reference to the cash, by having on the same day and at the same moment a whole host of inspectors actively inspecting every branch as well as the head branch. I do not think it is in the sphere of the Government to undertake any such duty. I think, if any attempt were made to establish a Government inspection, the result would be to create a false impression altogether in the minds of those who are shareholders and of the general public, and I question very much if, in the event of failure, a moral responsibility would not rest on the Government to make good the assets of the bank.

Mr. BLAKE. There is no intention to propose a Government audit.

Mr. COCKBURN. I understood there was.

Mr. BLAKE. No ; but to impose an obligation on the shareholders to provide an audit.

Mr. COCKBURN. I do not know that that would amount to anything very different. I think that is a matter which might be left very fairly to the shareholders interested to determine for themselves.

Mr. BOWELL. So it is.

Mr. COCKBURN. I do not see the necessity of the Government interfering in a matter of that kind, because such an audit will be made by those appointed by the board having the confidence of the shareholders, so that you can safely leave it, as a private matter to be settled between the shareholders' and directors, and presidents of the banks, for them to say how they will manage their own affairs. With reference to the remarks of the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), regarding the guarantee fund, amounting to ten dollars of assets to every dollar of circulation liabilities, taking the banks as a whole, the position taken by the Minister of Finance is a sound one, because we must take the weaker banks into the calculation. We must not forget that the Finance Minister told us that the weak and the strong banks under this system will be welded, for the time, into one conglomerate whole, so that they will be bound to give each other mutual support.

Mr. BLAKE. To the extent of 5 per cent.

Mr. COCKBURN. The 5 per cent. will amount altogether to $1,500,000, and if the Government had at any time that much insurance fund in hand, it would be able to meet any one difficulty that might arise. There is no use of our contemplating the sudden disruption of all the banking system of the country, in making a provision of this kind. At the present moment, as I have not had the pleasure of seeing the provisions of the Bill, I shall reserve any further remarks for a future occasion, when the Bill is under discussion in Committee of the House.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Is it proposed in the Bill to provide that a fixed percentage of their liabilities shall be held at all times by the banks in specie and legal tenders ?

Mr. FOSTER. It is not.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Of course I do not propose to criticise the observations of the hon. gentleman. There is just one point to which I would venture to draw his attention. It has been thought by some that there is a difference between the note holders, who are involuntary creditors, and the depositors, who select their own bank in which to deposit their money. A man is very often induced to deposit his money in a bank on account of getting some interest on his money, while the holders of the notes are involuntary creditors ; and the question naturally arises, whether the double liability of the shareholders should extend to both or only to the note holders. That is a question which is worthy of the hon. gentleman's consideration.

Mr. COCKBURN.

Sir DONALD SMITH. I rise to say a few words upon the resolution which has been brought forward by the Minister of Finance, and I do it under the very great disadvantage of not having heard what fell from the hon. gentleman in regard to it ; but I understand that the principal change which it is proposed to make in the Act as it now stands is that a guarantee of 5 per cent. is to be provided by the banks as a whole. I must say that I feel disappointment that something more radical has not been attempted at this time. I had hoped, and I think the country is also fully prepared for this, that the Government would have secured a guarantee for every dollar that is circulated throughout the Dominion. I think the time has come when we might well take a leaf out of what has been done by our neighbors on the other side of the line, and, in doing so, I trust the proposition would be approved of by a great majority of the members of this House, and I feel satisfied, at all events, that it would meet with the approval of the country as a whole. I do not mean that the change should be made in a moment, but that it should be carried out gradually. At all events, might we not go some way towards the establishment of such a guarantee ? If we were not to have it pure and simple as in the United States, where we know it has been very successful, might we not insist that each bank should deposit with the Government, say, to the extent of one-third of its circulation—33½ per cent. or 40 per cent. ? This, with the double liability and with the first lien, would give an assurance to the country, and would also guarantee the Government from loss. I do not think the same objection could be taken to this as might be taken to insisting upon a full guarantee, that is, adopting the plan in existence in the United States, by which each bank gives dollar for dollar, or, at any rate, 90 per cent. of its circulation. This would not interfere with the circulation or the commerce of the country to the same extent as that, while I believe it would give a thorough guarantee to the Government. With the double liability and the Government having the first lien on everything appertaining to the bank, there could be no danger to the public interests or to the Dominion treasury. Would it not be wise for us to pause before passing into law such a half measure as that which has now been presented ? Would it be at all fair, for instance, that the larger banks, the solvent banks, about which there is no doubt, should be compelled to make sound the smaller banks ? Is it reasonable that those institutions which have acted prudently for ten, twenty or fifty years, and have built up a business that for its character, for prudent and efficient management, causes them to be trusted throughout the country, and relied upon, not only in ordinary times, but in times of crisis, should be called upon to contribute so largely in order to make strong banks which, to say the least, may be very doubtful as to their solvency ?

Mr. JONES (Halifax). That is the offer which came from the banks.

Sir DONALD SMITH. I do not think it is an offer which has been concurred in by all the banks ; there must be at least two banks which do not approve of and have not concurred in that offer.

Mr. COCKBURN. Which banks?

Sir DONALD SMITH. At least two of the banks do not approve of that offer, and there need be no hesitation in naming them. I think this provision is most unjust. I do not see why we should call upon a bank, the solvency of which is beyond a doubt, to establish the bonâ fides of other banks any more than we should call upon you, Mr. Speaker, or any one else whose credit might be beyond question, to put people whose credit is very doubtful in the same position as yourself before the public. I think, also, that the hon. gentleman might very well have taken into consideration the putting of some further limit upon the circulation. Ought not the circulation to be in proportion, not alone to the capital of a bank, but also to its rest, because, if a bank has a large rest, surely it ought to have the benefit of that beyond one that has nothing but its capital. With regard to the audit, I hold very much with the hon. gentleman from Toronto (Mr. Cockburn), that it would practically be of little use to have any other audit than that which we have under the board of direction of the bank. At the same time, it ought in every case to be insisted upon that the audit should be thorough. It is not, I understand, intended that the audit should be made by a Government auditor, but that it should be more immediately under the control of the shareholders than it has been heretofore. While I think that a well-managed bank will have sufficient confidence in the directors to make anything of this kind unnecessary, and while it may not be strongly objected to by the directors of a bank, I feel that it is very little indeed to give, in order to improve the Banking Act as it at present exists. However, I wish to make only these few observations in the meantime, and when the Banking Act comes up, of course we shall be prepared to deal with it.

Mr. IVES. I would like to ask what provision, if any, the new Act will contain as to the amount of capital required in the case of new banks?

Mr. FOSTER. I mentioned that a capital of $500,000 must be paid up.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It seems to me that the member for Montreal West (Sir Donald Smith) does not fully appreciate the advantages to the public of the suggestion made by the Finance Minister. This arrangement, as I understand it, is a species of coercive endorsement on the part of the stronger banks, on behalf of the weak ones; and the hon. gentleman must see that the public will have a great deal more confidence in the circulation of weak banks where such a provision is made by law.

Sir DONALD SMITH. That, I am afraid, does not speak for its justice.

Motion agreed to, and resolution considered in Committee, and reported.

Mr. FOSTER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 127) respecting Banks and Banking.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that, for the remainder of the Session, Government measures shall have precedence on Wednesdays, commencing with Wednesday, the 26th instant, after questions put by members.

Mr. LAURIER. I would remind the right hon. gentleman, that there are several public Bills of importance which have not yet been called for the second reading. If the hon. gentleman carries this motion, he will see that these Bills cannot be called during the present Session. Does he propose to make any provision as to that?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If Wednesday is given to Government measures, then Monday will be the only day left for business in the hands of private members; therefore, I see no objection, that the same rule should be adopted as was last Session, and that every Wednesday the routine should be the same as if it were Monday; that would give precedence to the public Bills and Orders.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

TRANSATLANTIC MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. KENNY. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire, with the permission of the House, to call the attention of the Government to the manner in which the subsidised transatlantic mail service is performed; and by way of illustration, I beg to read a telegram which I received this morning, dated Halifax, March 19:

"Persons leaving Liverpool, March 5th, in the City of Paris, reached here Sunday evening, the 16th, after spending one day in New York, and one day in Boston. The Canadian subsidised mail steamer Peruvian, sailing March 6th, is not yet here."

On looking at the files of the New York Herald, in the reading-room, I find it is reported there that the steamer City of Paris arrived off the bar at New York at 6.15 p.m., on Wednesday, March 12th. That would make, without allowing for any difference of time, a passage of about $7\frac{1}{4}$ days. Now, if that steamer had been coming to Halifax she would have arrived there on Tuesday at mid-day, that is, Tuesday of last week. Allowing that the voyage from Halifax to Liverpool at this season is 2,400 miles, six days steaming at 17 knots would make 2,448 miles, or an average of 408 miles a day. The telegram which I have read states that the Canadian mail steamer Peruvian, which sailed from Liverpool on March 6th, had not completed her voyage yesterday; I do not know, as a matter of fact, whether she has yet completed that voyage. But, assuming that she will arrive in Halifax to-day, this subsidised Canadian mail steamer will have occupied fourteen days on the voyage, or an average, say, of $171\frac{1}{2}$ miles as against 408 miles by the steamer which was bound for New York. Sir, I might mention other instances; I dare say there are many others within the knowledge of other hon. members in this House. I know of one case which came under my personal observation, of a gentleman, a friend of mine, who lives in the adjoining Province of New Brunswick. He arrived in Halifax in the first days of Christmas week. He told me that ten or twelve days before that date that he was in Liverpool, England, and that he was anxious to get to his home in New Brunswick, and to arrive there in time for Christmas. He came down to Liverpool, and he found that the Canadian mail steamer was sailing on a certain day, and on the same day there was sailing another steamer for New York. The risk was that, if he came by the Canadian steamer, he would not be home in time to spend Christmas with his family. Halifax was his objective point, to some extent, because he had business to transact there, and he was very much inclined to take the Canadian mail steamer bound to Halifax. What happened? He took the New York steamer. He went to New York by that route; he passed by the port of Halifax, and was almost within sight of it; he steamed 500 miles further, to New York; he took the train there and went to Boston, from Boston to St. John, N. B., from St. John to Moncton, from Moncton to his home on the north shore of New Brunswick; he spent a day, or a day and a-half, with his family, he came down to Halifax, transacted his business, and proceeded to his home in New Brunswick, and arrived there before the Canadian mail steamer, which had sailed from Liverpool on the same day as the steamer by which he had gone to New York, had arrived at Halifax. I quite recognise that it will not be in order to enter into any discussion of this question at present. My object is to bring it formally to the notice of the Government, in the hope that when the steamship mail subsidies come under consideration, the hon. Postmaster General will be able to explain to us, in some way which will be satisfactory to the House, the manner in which the service is conducted; and I call especial attention to these particular cases.

Mr. HAGGART. I regret to say there is a good deal of truth in the remarks of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny), but we are getting the best service we possibly can obtain for the money. We are only paying $125,000 for the service under our arrangement with Messrs. Allan, and there is a sum of nearly $90,000 accruing to the Government out of that sum, so that the net cost of the service is about $35,000 per annum. We have taken a vote, as the hon. gentleman must be aware, in the Estimates with a view of obtaining a much faster service than at present, and the Government are trying to make an arrangement, and are using every effort, by which we shall have a line of steamers to Halifax which will be as fast as any coming to the city of New York, and I hope at some future time to hear the hon. gentleman state in his place in this House that he has received a letter from some gentleman who had arrived at Chicago via Halifax by our new line of steamers while those steamers he has been talking about had not arrived at Sandy Hook or New York.

Mr. LOVITT. In regard to the remarks of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny), account has, probably, not been taken of the delay due to the presence of ice. That fact probably accounts for the long passage.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Might it not be due to fog outside Halifax harbor?

Mr. KENNY. There is one fact which it is a satisfaction to know—that when vessels come to the harbor of Halifax there is always plenty of water for them.

Mr. HESSON. I desire to ask the Finance Minister when the return in regard to banks that have failed and charters that lapsed will be brought down? It will be useless to bring down the return after the discussion has taken place on this Bill.

Mr. FOSTER. I enquired yesterday in the Department in regard to this return, and it was stated that it was very nearly ready, and I hope to be able to bring it down to-morrow.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex). Before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I wish to bring to the notice of the House a matter affecting the honor of this House. The hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Wilson), on Tuesday last, stated as follows:—

“So here we have a Minister of the Crown and one of the leading supporters of the day, and further, we have an employé of the Government, who is under the pay of the Government, and holding a position under the Government, and this individual possesses information which is essential to the Minister of the Crown, and a supporter of the Government, obtaining the opportunity to form themselves into a stock company to develop a gas well in Essex.”

Further on, we have the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) stating:

“It has been shown that an officer of the Geological Department, who had been engaged in explorations in the County of Essex, communicated the result to private parties. I do not know how many persons were engaged with him in this exploration, but they made apparently an exhaustive survey, and, no doubt, in due time they reported to the Department the nature and value of the discovery they made. That report, as far as I am aware, was not made public until some time afterwards, and, as a result, we find an officer of the Department retiring from the service, and a company formed to utilise the discovery made by that officer of the Department. We find not only a member of the House, but a member of the Government as well, joining that company.”

The hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) stated in connection with this subject:

“It has been asserted—I do not know how truly—that an agent of that Survey has taken it upon himself, in one case in the Province of Ontario, to furnish information in regard to something which might be found under the surface of the earth, not to the general public, or to the first enquiring investor, but to political friends, in advance of the publication of his report. It has even been alleged that he has given that information in advance of the publication of his report, to a member of the Government, and that, in consequence of such information being given before the report was made public, a company was formed which now includes the said member of the Government, and of which the said agent of the Geological Survey is now the manager and at the same time a shareholder.”

It has been within my knowledge for several years that there was natural gas to be found in the County of Essex. Four years ago, a number of gentlemen formed themselves into a company to bore for natural gas in the north riding of Essex, in the township of Rochester, a year before the report which is referred to here was ever entertained or ever suggested. In the Session of 1888, or some time prior to that year, some gentlemen had suggested to me that we should form a company and experiment in regard to finding gas. They suggested, among others, the name of General Alger, of Detroit, as one of the investors, and a number of other gentlemen in Detroit and in the County of Essex. Towards the end of that Session, I said to my friend, with whom I had been on terms of intimacy for many years, the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart), not then a Minister of the Crown: Suppose you join me in this matter. I said it more in a jocular than in a serious spirit, because I had very little faith in the pecuniary success of the enterprise. I do not say this as an apology, nor do I say it as an apology that he was not then a member of the Government, because I consider that what a man should not do as a private gentleman is the guide we should take, and not whether he is a member of Parliament or a member of the Government. Mr. Haggart joined that enterprise subsequently on my suggestion solely, wholly, and alone. If there is any blame to be attached to any person owing to his having joined that enterprise, I am the person, and I alone, to whom that blame is to be attached. Now, Sir, Mr. Coste never furnished me with any information—that is Eugene Coste, a young gentleman who was a member of the Geological Survey, and whose character is impugned in this matter. So far as I know, Mr. Coste is entirely blameless. I have no knowledge of his having furnished prior information to any one. I have no personal knowledge of his ever having obtained one dollar owing to the enterprise having been gone into. I know, as a matter of fact, he is not, and never has been, manager of the company. So far as stock is concerned, he does not appear as a shareholder, although I am not aware but that he may have an interest through his father, who is a wealthy gentleman in Essex, and who is one of the largest shareholders in the company. Mr. Haggart and I agreed that we would each take two shares, but when I went home and looked into the matter, I thought that two shares, costing $1,000 each, would be too great a risk, for I did not consider, and I do not consider now, that any pecuniary profits will arise from the enterprise. I went into it solely because I was member for a portion of the county, and as a matter of public spirit; and when I took my friend into that enterprise, I made up my mind that, if there was a loss involved, I would not allow him to bear that loss. Now, as far as knowledge of this matter is concerned it was derived from the fact that I have been consulted by, and have advised with gentlemen who were actually, four years ago, engaged in this enterprise. These gentlemen had applied to the County Council of Essex for a franchise to exclusively use the county roads for piping purposes. Dr. King of Kingsville, who was also an intimate friend of mine, had opposed that application in the County Council, because he said that there was natural gas in other portions of the county, and in consequence of this the council refused the privilege to the company who were boring at Rochester, in the north riding of Essex. Some gentlemen from Ohio, who were visiting at Kingsville, advised Dr. King, the Reeve of that village, to go into the enterprise. Professor Selwyn, in his report of 1887, drew the attention of the public of Canada to the question of natural gas, and he directed special attention to the similarity between the specimens of natural gas in Canada, and the natural gas in Ohio, which lies south of the County of Essex. Professor Orton, of whom you have all heard, and who was employed as geologist in Ohio, published a map in Science showing the natural gas region of Ohio, and any person of common sense acquainted with those regions in Ohio, could see that the belt extends across the County of Essex. In 1888, Dr. Selwyn again referred to the subject of natural gas in southwestern Ontario. As for Mr. Coste's report, I never heard of it until I read the Hansard Debates on this matter. I went around to the Geological Department this morning, and I there obtained the report for 1888 in which Mr. Coste made the following statement:—

"At intervals during the summer, Mr. Coste or Mr. Brumell visited a number of localities in Ontario and Quebec with a view to investigate the occurrence of natural gas and petroleum in those Provinces, especially in the formations that underlie the Devonian. In reference to natural gas Mr. Coste states as follows:—'A number of localities where natural gas has been reported were examined and where possible the gas flow was measured and the logs of the borings and specimens of the drillings were obtained. Respecting wells bored several years ago, it was impossible to obtain any reliable information, and the loss of all such data is very much to be regretted. The result of our investigation is that none of the wells yet bored in Ontario and Quebec produce more than 50,000 cubic feet of gas per diem, and very few even this much. The production of these wells, though small as compared with those of the United States gas region, are nevertheless of some value when in or near towns or villages.

"There seems no reason why further trials, especially in that part of Ontario between Lake St. Clair on the south-west, and Lake Simcoe on the north-east, should not prove more successful, and yield as abundant a supply of gas or petroleum as do some of the Ohio wells.

"In reference to petroleum, Mr. Coste states that no new oil wells of value have been bored, and that the entire production, 594,273 barrels in 1887, is confined to the County of Lambton, and produced from about 2,700 wells, very few of which yield more than one barrel per diem. The average depth of the oil rock in Lambton is 400 to 500 feet from the surface.

"Several wells have been bored in Essex County. One at Comber, 1,300 feet deep, is said to yield about one barrel of oil per diem. This oil is probably from the same formation as that of Findlay in Ohio."

I never saw Mr. Coste's report until to-day, and that is the only report I know of that Mr. Coste ever made. Based upon the statements in Parliament which I have read in the Hansard, the Toronto Globe, of Wednesday, 19th March, has the following statement:—

"In Committee of Supply a new scandal was uncovered and an old one resurrected. Mr. Eugene Coste was a surveyor connected with the Geological Survey. He was sent into Essex County to prospect for natural gas. He struck a rich flow, and with prompt and beautiful acceptance of the teachings of this Government he proceeded to organise a company and to make provision for profit out of the discovery. When he organised his company he resigned from the service of the Government and became its manager. The list of stockholders, according to the statements made to the House to-night, contains the names of J. C. Patterson, Conservative member for North Essex, and the Hon. John Haggart, Postmaster General. It seems that not only did a public official, engaged on public business, make use of his position to promote his personal interest, but he was joined in his speculation in public property by a member of Parliament and a Minister of the Crown."

Now, I hope that the enterprising correspondent who telegraphed that information, if he is present here as I suppose he is, will do me the justice to give as wide publicity to my statement as he did to those unfounded remarks of hon. gentlemen opposite. If the shade or a shadow of blame rests on me in the opinion of hon. gentlemen opposite, and I use that term "hon. gentlemen" in its restricted and non-parliamentary sense—if the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), or the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), or the hon. leader of the Opposition, or my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills), or my hon. friend from the west riding of Durham (Mr. Blake), if I may take the liberty of calling him so, or any other gentleman in the House, in the restricted and non-parliamentary sense of that term, gets up and blames me for what I have done—

Mr. BLAKE. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman is making invidious distinctions between certain members of Parliament and certain other members of Parliament. I do not think he means it, but it is quite improper.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex). If the hon. gentleman considers that a shade or a shadow of blame attaches to me, I will resign my seat on an hour's notice. If some other hon. gentlemen had made enquiry from me before they attacked me, I would have given them all the information they desired. I do not want to hold my seat for ten minutes in this House, if I am considered to be unworthy the confidence my constituents have so generously bestowed on me. I do not want to hold my seat longer than men on the opposite side of the House, whose honor and high position I respect, and I consider I am entitled to hold it with self-respect. I will again state that the hon. the Postmaster General had the sole and only information on this subject from me, and from no other human being, and that we joined that enterprise in the spirit of pioneering exploration and experiment, not having struck any rich flow of oil as was stated in the Globe. We went into it as a preliminary company, and we paid up our money. We have sunk several wells unsuccessfully, but one well has been struck which is stated to have been a successful one, but, under circumstances that I need not refer to, it is yet untried. Mr. Haggart and I have paid our $500 each, the price of a share, and a little more too. We have not the control of the company, nor can we dictate to it. Others have that power. I went into that enterprise because I lived in the locality, and because I believed that it would develop our trade and prosperity there. As far as Mr. Eugene Coste is concerned, I am not here to defend him. If he has done wrong, let him defend himself, but if he has done wrong, he has done it without my knowledge. I feel bound to say in justice to that young man, that personally, I have no knowledge of anything that would reflect on his character as an official or as a private gentleman. If he has done any wrong in this matter it was entirely without my knowledge, and there was nothing in the formation of this company to justify the attacks made in this House and in the public press. There was no political preference or anything of that kind; it was purely a matter of business. As a matter of fact, Mr. William McGregor, the ex-member for the county, who is a Liberal in politics, and whom I defeated in 1878, is a member of the company, and has just as much say in it as I have. If there are any other questions I can answer to hon. gentlemen opposite, I shall be only too happy to do so. I do not know if I have fully answered the statements that have been made, but I am only too anxious to do so, for I have nothing either to conceal or to evade.

Mr. CASEY. As my name has been mentioned in connection with this charge, I may say that I never mentioned the name of, or alluded to, the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Patterson) in connection with the matter. I stated that my information was that Mr. Coste had given hints as to the existence of natural gas at this point to the Postmaster General, before making his report to the Department, and in consequence thereof that hon. gentleman had joined the company. It was the hon.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex).

Postmaster General himself who was the first to bring the name of the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Patterson) into the controversy. The hon. Postmaster General was the first to bring the name of the hon. member for North Essex into the controversy, by giving him as the only source of his information with regard to the natural gas. I think my hon. friend from North Essex has done perfectly right in making a full statement in regard to the matter. I think it is highly probable that he, as an enterprising member for that county, knew all that it was possible to know with regard to the natural gas industry there; but I think it was hardly within his power to state positively that the hon. Postmaster General got information from nobody but himself. He knows what he told him, but he does not know what information he got from other sources. I hope the Postmaster General will make an equally full and frank statement.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman will remember that I made the statement the other evening that the person who gave me the information, and who induced me to go into the enterprise, was the hon. member for North Essex, and he alone.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). As my name has been mentioned in connection with the allusion to the hon. member for North Essex, it may be proper for me to state that I would have treated with indifference the remark made by the hon. member had he not made the insinuation that some members of this House were guilty of making attacks in the House which other members would not make. Now, Sir, I made the remarks I did in the interest of the public, after ascertaining from the Minister in charge of the matter, as far as I could, whether I could or could not obtain the information I desired with regard to the time Mr. Coste made the survey in Essex. I then suggested to him that if he had not the information, perhaps it would be possible for him to obtain it from members sitting close to him. After I had taken my seat the hon. Postmaster General rose and stated that he was no doubt the individual I referred to. It was he, and he alone who mentioned the name of the hon. member for North Essex; it was not mentioned until then. The hon. Postmaster General stated that he had obtained all his information from the hon. member from North Essex, and that that hon. member was a member of the company engaged in the enterprise. We had no report and no definite statement from any other source, and, therefore, we were unable to say whether Mr. Coste did or did not give the information referred to by the hon. member for West Elgin. Further than this I have only to say that I am very glad indeed to hear the statement made by the hon. member for North Essex. But Mr. Coste was a servant of the Government; his father lived in Essex in the neighborhood of the exploration; Mr. Coste possessed the information which it was necessary to give to his father, and his father is one of the leading spirits of that company in which the son is perhaps the manager. And it is a very easy matter to ascertain how this information may have gone from the son to the father, and from the father to those interested in the enterprise. So I think no hon. member of this House should be charged with insinuating anything dishonorable or disrespectful towards another hon. member. I do not desire to injure the feelings of any one; I desire merely to ascertain, so far as I can, all the facts in connection with this matter, and as it has been referred to, it will of course naturally occur to any one that a further enquiry into the facts ought to be made.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex). I thank my hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Casey) for the courteous way in which he has treated me in reply to my remarks. As to the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Wilson), all I have to say is that if he had, in a neighborly manner, desired any information from me, he would have got it as frankly and fully as I could have given it to him. So far as Mr. Coste is concerned, I am not responsible for the relationship between him and his father. Mr. Coste knew nothing more about what was going on in the County of Essex, or about what was contained in the bowels of the earth there, than any other well-informed geologist; and the newspapers are entirely in error in supposing that anything was discovered there. The ground on which gas was struck was selected by Dr. King, of Kingsville. Mr. Coste was not connected with it; Mr. Coste has never succeeded in getting gas in the County of Essex; and what makes me think that he cannot have had any interest in the company in which I am interested is, that he has, in a hostile spirit to that company, induced other speculators to come into the county and bore for gas. Therefore, it is not likely that he is very anxious for the success of this particular company. I am sorry to obtrude this matter on the House. It is a matter not only personal to me, but it concerns the honor of the House, because anything that reflects upon the honor of any member, however humble, reflects also on the honor of the House, and I trust that I have satisfied the House that I have not done anything that a private gentleman might not do.

Mr. LANDERKIN. As I took part in the discussion the other evening, I wish to state that the information I received on that occasion, as to Mr. Coste having been engaged in explorations in the County of Essex, I received from the Minister of the Interior. Other members who took part in the discussion drew out the fact, that Mr. Coste had formed a company, and that the information which enabled him to do so had been obtained by him during the time he was a paid servant of the Government; and if so the natural reference was, that the act was a very questionable one indeed.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I might shorten the remarks of the hon. gentleman, if he would allow me to say that he entirely misunderstood me. I stated, that Mr. Coste never made any report in reference to that part of the country, and in going over, to-day, the notes of my remarks in Hansard, I find that that is exactly what I said.

Mr. LANDERKIN. There was a discussion on that point, and we had the fact that Mr. Coste had made the exploration while he was a paid servant of the country. I have no feeling in the matter, and no desire to do a wrong to any hon. member of the House. I only spoke on that subject from the information I received, and the conclusions which I drew from that information are those which any hon. gentleman in this House would naturally draw from them.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex). I wish to recall again to the hon. gentleman that Mr. Coste, of whom he speaks, is not the manager of any company that I know of in Essex. He never, as far as I know, formed a company, and never succeeded in getting as much as one dollar.

Mr. LAURIER. The whole discussion is out of order. No one would interfere with the hon. gentleman as long as he confines himself to any question regarding a point of honor, but he is out of order in attempting to defend Coste.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex). I am not defending Mr. Coste. The hon. gentleman reiterated a charge which I denied, and I am not disposed to submit. There are other methods of bringing this before the House, if I should be declared out of order, and the hon. gentleman need not think that he is going to cut me short in my remarks.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the whole discussion on this incident has been allowed to go too far. When an hon. gentleman arises to reply to something, to some statement in which he finds his honor attacked, it is my duty to give him full opportunity to defend himself; but where I should have stopped hon. gentlemen is when they continued the discussion which we had the other night. If the hon. gentleman to whom the hon. member for Essex made allusion had only risen to say "yes" or "no," as to whether he intended to impute anything against the honor of the hon. gentleman, he would have been quite in order, but I cannot allow any attempt being made to renew the discussion of the other night.

LEATHER INSPECTION.

Mr. WALDIE. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to enquire if it is the intention of the Government to proceed with Bill 117, for the inspection of leather. The tanners in my constituency are very anxious to know whether it is the intention of the Government to withdraw this measure, as they are now negotiating for an order from England for a portion of the leather they manufacture, and they think they would obtain this order if this Act is not amended. In connection with this they have forwarded me to-day a memorial from the Council of the Board of Trade of Toronto, asking that the law may be permitted to stand as it is.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is out of order. He must confine himself to merely asking the question.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Several representations have been made to me with regard to the Bill referred to, and these are under consideration of the Government.

HURRELL AND VALIQUETTE PENSIONS.

Mr. MULOCK. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Militia to a return which he promised to lay before the House some time ago, and with which promise he thinks, no doubt, he has fully complied. I refer to the return in the case of Staff-Sergeant Hurrell. Only a portion of the papers asked for have been laid on the Table. I have received a communication from Sergeant Hurrell, saying that he has seen those papers, and they do not include all those in the Department on the question; and he asked me if I would suggest that the return should be made complete. He writes me further, as follows:—

“I went to the Militia Department yesterday to look at the papers re my hospital sergeant services in the North-West Force, in February, 1886. I was refused access to them by order of the Minister of Militia.”

No doubt that is a mistake. If it happens that there are further papers in the Department bearing on this question which ought to be laid on the Table, the hon. gentleman will, perhaps, be good enough to have them brought down, and, perhaps, would allow this volunteer to attend at the Department and point out such as he says should be produced.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am under the impression, from the information given me by the officers of my Department, that all the documents connected with the case of Private Hurrell have been brought down. But I will enquire again, and shall be glad to bring down any others, if there are any. I am not at all prepared, however, to allow Private Hurrell or anybody else to come into the Department, and take possession of official documents which can only be obtained by a member on an order from the House for their production. When those papers are brought down the hon. gentleman who takes such a deep interest in this case will, no doubt, be able to give communication of them to Private Hurrell, but the officers of the Department are really kept too busy to attend to the private matters of every man who considers himself aggrieved and would like to run through the official documents for the purpose of obtaining that information which he considers he may be entitled to.

Mr. MULOCK. I did not propose that the hon. gentleman should place the papers of the Department in the hands of any person outside of his own employés, but what I suggested was that in order to remove any possible complaint which this volunteer might make, he might be permitted to point out in the Department such papers as he said have not been produced, and which should be produced. While he may be but a private or an ex-private in the volunteers, I presume the hon. gentleman will not deny him his rights. In fact, his very weakness ought to be an argument in his favor.

Mr. BLAKE. With reference to the other return, regarding Valiquette, which the hon. gentleman brought down, I wish to call his attention to a letter which, it seems to me, indicates that the return ought to be supplemented. The following letter appears in the return from Antoine Valiquette to M. le Colonel Lamontagne:

“After having waited a long time, I see the necessity of having recourse to you with reference to a pension which was granted me by the Government on the decease of my son, Sergeant Prima Valiquette, who died in the North-West in the service of his country, on the 4th July, 1885. In the month of May that pension was granted to me, and a few days later I received a departmental letter from the office in Montreal, asking me to go there and draw the sum of $612.54. The same day Colonel Hughes came at my place, saying that he had been working in order to procure a pension for each child, and asked me for a power of attorney (which I gave him), authorising him to act in my name. Under this power of attorney he drew my money, and remitted to me one-half of the sum, that is $306, and some months afterwards, $130, and nothing more afterwards. I do not know when the next payment will come. Will you be good enough to conclude this affair, and tell me when the next payment will come.”

and the balance of the first payment. In doing so you would oblige a poor, sick old man whose seeks protection.” That letter, put upon the Table of the House, leaves Colonel Hughes in a very painful position which has been altogether unexplained, and there is a later letter in a similar strain. I suppose there has been an enquiry.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have ordered an enquiry.

Mr. BLAKE. It appears, so far, that Colonel Hughes had a power of attorney, that he received this amount and remitted the half of it, and held the remainder for some time, how long we know not. Will the hon. gentleman bring down a statement showing the regulations as to officers of the Government being allowed to act as attorneys. My impression is that there is a general regulation forbidding gentlemen in the public service to act as attorneys for public creditors. It is a wise regulation, as this case proves, if the statements made are correct.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In reading over the papers, I noticed the letter which the hon. gentleman has just read, and I called upon the deputy of the Department to get all the information which could be collected in reference to the action which appears to have been taken by Colonel Hughes. The deputy has written for that information, and I expect that by this time he has received the information. In regard to the conduct of Colonel Hughes, I may state that he was really the colonel in command, or one of the officers in command of the regiment to which young Valiquette belonged, and it may be that, after helping the father of his late companion in arms, he may have done more for him than for an ordinary volunteer. However, I shall bring down all the explanations that can be obtained.

REPORT.

Report of the Minister of Agriculture for the year ended 31st December, 1889.—(Mr. Carling.) It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

SUPPLY—CANADIAN DIRECT MEAT COMPANY.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In compliance with the notice which I gave last night, I desire to call the attention of the House to certain facts connected with a company called the Canadian Direct Meat Company. I desire to call attention to the fact that, on or about the 27th November last, a company appears to have been floated in London, under the above title, with an authorised capital of close upon two million dollars—£350,000 sterling. The greater part of the shares of this company, as I understand, have been issued. At any rate, about £300,000 appears to have been taken up in one form or another. Now, I have lately received a copy of the prospectus of the company, and I desire to read to you certain statements which are contained in that prospectus, and to call your attention to certain other statements which have been publicly made in the city of London by gentlemen of standing there who are connected with this company. The first sentence of this prospectus reads as follows:—

"The objects of the company are to acquire a concession by the Corporation of Three Rivers city, Canada, of one hundred acres of freehold land within the city's limits, subject to the erection thereupon of abattoirs and other buildings at a minimum cost of £20,000, and which land, with all buildings thereon erected or to be erected, is to be free of all taxation for a period of 99 years, so long as the works are in operation, to purchase live stock and to kill and dress same, for shipment or otherwise, on the company's premises, which are adjacent to the seaboard, and where the hides, horns, offal and other remains can be advantageously utilised."

Thereupon, there follow a considerable number of paragraphs referring to the estimated value of the cattle in England and other matters of that sort with which I do not intend to trouble the House, but I desire to call the attention of the House to this further statement:

"The vendor has fixed the price of the concession, with all its advantages, at the sum of £150,000, from which he will pay all expenses of the formation of the company up to allotment."

"The said £150,000 to be payable as follows, viz.: £60,000 in cash, and £89,500 in cash or fully paid ordinary shares, at the option of the directors, and the balance of such purchase money in 100 fully paid founders' shares of £5 each."

There is another paragraph which likewise requires attention. It reads as follows:—

"From the Canadian Statistical Abstract and Record in 1888, published at Ottawa, it appears that 54,248 head of cattle and 30,421 sheep were shipped alive from Canada to Great Britain, while 40,047 head of cattle and 353,999 sheep were sent to the United States. It is believed that the 40,047 head of cattle is very much understated."

Here is a paragraph which conveyed a great amount of novel information to me, and, I think, will convey a great amount of novel information to many members of this House, and not the least to those who come from the neighborhood of Three Rivers. It states:

"From the district east of Quebec large quantities are sent to Chicago, a distance of 900 miles, where they are slaughtered, and the produce sent back another 900 miles for export to Europe via New York. This company will have the advantages of dealing with cattle at Three Rivers, thus saving the cost of carrying it 1,800 miles, its consequent loss of weight, and the cost of feeding in transit."

Now, when I first saw this prospectus, and when I first saw the comments that were made upon it in the press, I thought it necessary, before venturing to bring it forward in this House, to make certain enquiries touching the statements herein contained, and especially with regard to the value of the concession, and the price which is paid for that concession; and also the statement relative to the sending of these cattle 900 miles to Chicago, and thence to Europe via New York. So far as I am informed—of course, I am open to correction—the market value of this concession for which £150,000 sterling is stated to be arranged to be paid, part in cash, and part in paid-up stock, appears, so far as the evidence that has been laid before me goes to show, to have been simply nil; that is to say, that the city of Three Rivers, as I am informed, was perfectly willing to hand this property over to anybody who would undertake, as the prospectus states, to spend £20,000 sterling at least in erecting buildings thereon for the purpose of promoting this trade. I am informed—again I say, under correction—that this most valuable concession, for which £150,000 sterling, three-quarters of a million, in round numbers, was arranged to be paid, was offered to several parties in Canada, without any of them being induced to accept it, as a free gift. Now, I made further enquiry with respect to the cattle which were sent to Chicago, and here again I speak under correction. My informants, who are parties who ought to have known something about the matter, were of opinion, some of them, that no cattle whatever were sent from the district east of Three Rivers to Chicago to be slaughtered, and thence exported to Europe, via New York, or otherwise; and others stated that if any such trade did exist, it must be in exceedingly minute proportions. Now, although the transaction, to my mind, is one which ought never to have been put on the English market, and though it is very much to be regretted that any Canadians of any sort should have been engaged in it, the transaction, so far, is not one as to which this House would be called upon to deal; but on the 20th February last, about four weeks ago, I find that a meeting of the Canadian Meat Company was held in London, with Sir William Marriott, chairman, in the chair, and I find there that a series of statements are made which do appear to me to require explanations at the hands of the Minister of Public Works; I find that in the prospectus, occupying an entire side of the London Financial News, a paper of very wide circulation, the board of management in Canada is headed by Sir Hector L. Langevin, K.M.G., C.B., &c., Minister of Public Works of Canada, and I find that Sir William Marriott, M.P., states in this report, on the 20th February last, that their position was as follows:—

"Amount subscribed was £151,355, and the amount paid to Mr. Bender was £44,500; therefore out of the £151,000 they had in hand about £110,000. The directors thought if their duty on hearing of the reports to stop all expenditure, because at any rate, if the worst came to the worst, they felt the shareholders would have two-thirds of the money. They thought it then their duty to make enquiries, and sent telegrams over to Three Rivers at once. The first one was to Sir Charles Tupper, and was as follows:—'Inform Directors Canadian (Direct) Meat Company, Three Rivers.'—

I presume the Canadian directors.—

—"passed resolution, mailed to-day, protesting newspaper attacks, confirming Bender's statement prospectus." Then he goes on to say:

"He has always believed that the company would be a great success. Sir Charles Tupper, the responsible agent for the Canadian Government here, believed in it. Sir Hector Langevin, a responsible Minister in Canada, approved of it, and agreed with all the statements made in the prospectus, and those statements were also borne out by the mayor of Three Rivers, who, they were told, was a highly respected man. Those were names he knew they could rely on as being trustworthy."

He further proceeds to say in reference to these gentlemen:

"These people were not irresponsible people, and if the worst came to the worst, when they found they had been deceived, he did not think the company would be without their remedy to get back the whole or the greater portion of their £44,000. If they had been deceived by the promoters, he thought they would be liable, and could be made liable, but he did not know of any prospectus brought out that had better people, people in a higher position, to state that what was in it was correct. In conclusion he assured the meeting that the directors were anxious, &c."

I found further, that it was stated that Mr. Bender appeared to have got this for nothing, and proceeding to deal with one of the questions raised, the chairman went on to say:

"Proceeding to deal with questions raised, the chairman said, Sir Hector Langevin and Mr. Normand were managers in Canada for the company. Canadian people were not, as a rule, investors in enterprises, because they had not the money to subscribe."

And certainly, in an enterprise of this kind, I think, it is not very much to be wondered at. Now, I desire to call the attention of Ministers to these statements. I think it would be well, under the circumstances, that the Minister of Public Works, whose name appears at the head of the Canadian board of management, should state to the House, first of all, what interest he has in this enterprise: whether he has received, directly or indirectly, or been promised, any portion of the £44,000 sterling, or any other advantages in connection with this; I would like to know whether the hon. gentleman is in a position to contradict the statements which have been made to me as to the value of this concession, as to whether it is or is not true that this concession was offered to anybody in Canada who chose to expend the money required, and whether, in point of fact, the £150,000 sterling, partly in cash, partly in paid-up shares and founders' shares, which has been paid to the promoters of this enterprise—whether, in point of fact, at any rate so far as the money part of it goes, that sum has not been extracted from the pockets of English capitalists, wholly and solely for a concession which could have been obtained for the asking from the corporation of Three Rivers; and, what is much more to the purpose, whether it was not paid, as Sir William Marriott states in the speech which I have read, which he made in London on 20th February last, on the ground of the confidence which English shareholders reposed in a prospectus issued apparently under the sanction of our High Commissioner in London (Sir Charles Tupper), and bearing the name of the hon. the Minister of Public Works; and besides, what information or particulars the hon. gentleman is able to give us as to the statement that a large quantity of cattle are sent from the district east of Quebec to Chicago, a distance of 900 miles, where they are slaughtered, and the carcasses sent back another 900 miles for export to Europe via New York. These questions I think it is desirable the hon. gentleman should answer to this House. I am not going to proceed, as I stated, to make any motion with respect to the advisability or inadvisability of hon. members, while Ministers of the Crown, interfering in any commercial enterprises in this country. That is a question which may well be discussed, but I will not discuss it on the present occasion. What I do say is this: prima facie, if the information given to me is true, it would appear that a great fraud has been perpetrated on the English public, who had been induced, under the circumstances I have described, to take stock in this enterprise; and that it is likely to be in the very highest degree injurious to the interests of the people of Canada, and to all persons who are desirous to obtain money on the English stock exchange market, if no better explanation than I have heard can be offered with respect to the issue of this prospectus and the statements therein contained. I venture to say that the repetition of transactions like that would inflict many millions of pounds sterling injury upon the people of Canada, and I sincerely trust that the hon. gentleman, for the sake of Canada, will be able to give to us a satisfactory explanation of the circumstances to which I have now called the attention of the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman, I have no doubt, thought it his duty to bring this matter before the House, and I do not complain of the manner in which he has done so. The hon. gentleman put certain questions to which he wants answers. I have prepared a short statement of the facts, which I will now read to the House, in order to answer his question, and I may offer a few remarks after reading this statement. The statement is as follows:—Mr. Bender, before leaving for England last summer, told me he was going for the purpose of forming a company to be called La Compagnie des Abattoirs des Trois-Rivières; that the city corporation of Three Rivers were disposed to give free for that purpose one hundred acres of land and other concessions in order to have the seat of the company in Three Rivers, considering that it would be to the advantage of the city and also that of the company, labor being cheap in Three Rivers, and ships being able to load and unload easily at their wharves. I said I believed the city was right and I hoped the project would succeed. Some eight or ten weeks after that I received from Mr. Bender a cablegram from London telling me that the company was formed and that Sir Henry Isaacs, Admiral Inglefield, Sir William Marriott and others, directors of the company, would wish me and the Mayor of Three Rivers to become directors with them. I consulted Sir John A. Macdonald, and he thought that inasmuch as this company was to have its seat in Canada in my constituency, and that it would thus benefit largely the city of Three Rivers, I should give an affirmative answer. I, therefore, cabled "Yes." Since that period I have had no notice from the company. They have never communicated to me their prospectus. They never notified me to attend any meeting. I have never been called upon to subscribe or sign the stock-book, and therefore have not considered myself a director. When Mr. Bender came back to Canada, he met me with the Mayor of Three Rivers, and I told them that I did not consider myself a director, having had no notification from the company and not having qualified, and therefore I did not intend taking any part in the management or direction, and up to now I have had none. I may add that either directly or indirectly I have received no money, fee, stock or other advantage from the company or any person connected with it, or in any other way whatever. Moreover, I expect none. This is my statement. I may add that from it the hon. gentleman and the House must see, that leading men in London, including Sir Henry Isaacs, Admiral Inglefield, Sir William Marriott and others form the company, that they obtained their information either from Mr. Bender or someone else, and not from me, and that the only communication I had with those hon. gentlemen was the cablegram sent by Mr. Bender, asking, on behalf of those gentlemen, that I, as well as the Mayor of Three Rivers, would become a director with them. That is my position. The only other communication I had with any of those gentlemen was with Sir Henry Isaacs, who shortly afterwards telegraphed, asking me whether I would go to London to be present at his inauguration as Lord Mayor of the city and to attend the banquet, which invitation I declined, not being able to cross the ocean at that time, and it not being my habit, of course, to go that distance to be present at a banquet. In regard to the other questions asked by the hon. gentleman opposite in regard to land at Three Rivers, in regard to cattle and other matters, I know nothing about them.

Mr. AMYOT. I cannot allow this matter to pass without stating what I know in regard to the whole subject. Mr. Bender, with whom I am well acquainted, although I am perhaps not on very friendly terms with him, is a most honorable and enterprising man. He considered that a large trade could be done in live stock between Canada and England, and he thought that by forming a company and slaughtering the animals here they could be sent in a frozen state to the English and European markets, and very large profits obtained. He went to England for the purpose, and he succeeded in forming a company. Everything went on very well until Chicago merchants interested in the same trade raised very strong opposition, and they filled the newspapers with attacks on the details of the prospectus, and so on. They succeeded in throwing doubts into the minds of the directors of the company in England, and to-day I am sorry to say that we in Canada are giving our assistance to the Chicago opposition. I think that the trade of shipping dead meat to England would be much more profitable than that of sending the living animals. We would save the cost of feeding the animals on the voyage, we would save the danger of disease among the animals, we would retain here the skins and other portions of the animals; and moreover, labor is cheaper here, and the cost of transportation is cheaper for dead meat than for living animals. Moreover, a company would be able to erect buildings at Three Rivers on ground that could be obtained much cheaper than elsewhere, and being exempt from taxation, the company would be sure to be a paying one. But by joining hands with the Chicago opposition, we run the risk of preventing the company from succeeding, and it will be so much money lost to the country. As to the live stock being shipped east of Quebec or Three Rivers to Chicago, those who deny it have never seen the Grand Trunk cars, as I have seen them very often, filled with live stock, going to Chicago from these places. There is a considerable amount of live stock at the disposal of the market in that section of the country, but the abattoir company would not be limited to that district for that supply. Of course, if we proceed with this opposition, the capitalists, when they see such influential men as the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) opposed to the company, may be inclined to think that the opposition from Chicago is well founded in fact. I hope that the company will succeed, because it will encourage the farmers in raising stock, it will improve the condition of the labor in the country, and it will create a new commerce which will be to the benefit of the Dominion at large. I think it is the duty of any public man, when he sees an undertaking of this kind having a chance of success, to lend his name to the project, and to encourage the enterprising men who wish to devote themselves for the benefit of the country, and for their own benefit as well. I see no impropriety in that, and I think that the people of the city of Three Rivers, instead of approving the course of the hon. member for South Oxford, will think it most strange that the opposition to the scheme should come from one of our fellow-countrymen. I do not say that as a party man, but I state it from a national point of view. I know the hon. gentleman is moved by honest motives, but I believe he does not know much about the part of the country to which he refers, and that if he did know he would change his opinions entirely.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am quite sure that it is not necessary for me to corroborate the statement of my hon. friend, the Minister of Public Works, but I wish to emphasise the fact, for fear there should be a doubt about it, that these gentlemen in England, Sir Henry Isaacs, and the other gentlemen who have been named, were not in any way induced to enter into this company, from the fact of its being encouraged or initiated in any way by my hon. friend, Sir Hector Langevin. Sir Hector came to me with a telegram from Mr. Bender, which ran to this effect:

"Sir Henry Isaacs, Lord Mayor of London, Sir William Marriott, and others, have formed a company for the purpose of establishing this abattoir, and they want you and the Mayor of Three Rivers to join."

Sir Hector asked me if, under the circumstances, I thought he ought to give his name. I told him that if these respectable names were in the company, and as it was a company that was likely to be of great advantage to his constituency, I did not see how he could well refuse, and the Minister of Public Works acted on my suggestion.

Mr. LAURIER. Every member of the House will, I am sure, accept as perfectly satisfactory, and will be glad to hear, the explanation given by the hon. Minister of Public Works. But what has taken place in this matter shows, in my judgment, the great precaution public men in Canada should take before they allow their names to be used in such a way as this. I do not say that the object of this company is not a laudable one. I think it is a laudable one in many respects, for I believe that a meat trade could be organised anywhere on the St. Lawrence, whether at Montreal, Three Rivers or Quebec, but it is manifest to me that the statements which have been made in this prospectus cannot be borne out by facts. In the first place, it is not true that my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works is one of the directors in Canada; and, in the next place, I cannot conceive where my friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) has ever seen that there is a cattle trade between the district below Quebec and Chicago. My hon. friend says he has seen some cars loaded with cattle, and I believe it; but we have only to look at the blue books to see that there is no export trade of live cattle between Quebec and Chicago or between any part of Canada and the United States. As to the concession of a hundred acres of land made in the city of Three Rivers, for which is agreed to be paid £150,000 sterling, a part cash, with the additional condition that there should be an expenditure on it of £20,000, this seems to me the most monstrous proposition I have ever heard. This certainly could not be the price of one hundred acres of land on the outskirts of the city of Three Rivers, which is not built on, and which is merely farming land. If it were to bring $100 an acre, it would be the most it would be valued at, and some of it would be worth that price, because it is most valuable farming land, but when there is such a preposterous price as this stipulated, we do not know how to criticise the prospectus, and I had better abstain from any comment upon it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. With respect to this matter, I desire to say two or three words. After what the hon. Minister of Public Works has said, I do not think that I am at present disposed to condemn him for more than great imprudence. If he does not know, I know right well, how this transaction is going to be commented on in England. Already actions have been taken at law by the shareholders of this company, to recover part of these £44,000 sterling, which has been paid for an utterly worthless concession. I have to say to my hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot), and to others, that such transactions as this are infamous, and will make the name of Canada stink in the nostrils of every English investor.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) has referred to the people in this country who, he says, are aiding the people of Chicago to deter a legitimate enterprise which comes into rivalry with their trade. As one interested in newspaper enterprise in Canada, and as one connected with one of the first newspapers to take this matter up and deal with it, I wish to tell my hon. friend from Bellechasse, that it was no spirit of aiding the people of Chicago which induced that newspaper to take that matter up. When I read that prospectus, and knew to my own knowledge that it was founded on misstatements, I felt it to be my duty, as a person controlling a leading journal in Montreal, to deal with the question. I have listened to the explanation of the hon. Minister of Public Works, and I am glad to find that that gentleman can so well clear his skirts of this transaction. I did not believe, when I heard it, that he had anything to do with promoting a scheme of that kind, further than to allow his name to be used to promote the prosperity of the district he represents. Sir, we know what this country has suffered in the British market from enterprises which have been deleterious and injurious in their effects. We know that the false representations which were made for years in connection with the original prospectus of the Grand Trunk Railway, threw this country back nearly half a century in the money market of London, and it has scarcely yet recovered from the effects of that affair. Sir, this is a wilder scheme, such as was never contemplated at the time the Grand Trunk scheme was promulgated, whose promoters promised to pay 11½ per cent. on the outlay. Sir, any one knowing anything about the business of the country and taking up the prospectus and reading it, knows what an absurdity it is. I am amazed at the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) saying that there is a great trade in cattle in that district, and that he has seen carloads of cattle shipped at Montreal for Chicago. The hon. gentleman must have deceived himself, because such a thing does not exist. I have taken the pains to ascertain the facts in the matter, and I cannot find that a single carload of cattle has been shipped there for Chicago. Some breeding cattle may have been sent to the west, but I do not think any of them came from the district of Three Rivers. They have been almost entirely imported cattle, on their way to Ontario and Manitoba for breeding purposes; but I venture to say, that the hon. gentleman did not see one carload of feeding cattle shipped at Montreal for the west. My objection to this scheme is on public grounds. I feel that anything launched on the British market that will have the effect of deceiving the people there is deleterious and detrimental to the business interest of Canada. I feel that we, as public men, ought to put our foot on such schemes; but we ought, at the same time, to let the British public know that if they are misled into making foolish investments in things of this kind, the fault rests with themselves for accepting representations without verifying them. This Parliament ought not to sit silent when such a monstrous scheme is propounded. It was only a week or two ago that I met a couple of gentlemen who were sent out here to verify the statements made in the prospectus of this company, and, from what I could learn, they were not very well satisfied. I do not know what actions are threatened in connection with this matter; but if actions are commenced in London, and the subject is ventilated, as it will be, I am sure it cannot have otherwise than a very injurious effect on the credit of Canada and on those Canadian enterprises which are worthy of the investment of British capital. We know that there are at the present time gentlemen in England floating our phosphate mines, asbestos mines and copper mines, and they are meeting with some degree of success; but if they are met in the market with charges such as that formulated to-night, of parties having been induced to put money into enterprises founded on false representations, they cannot have anything but a disastrous effect. My hon. friend speaks of the butter business in Three Rivers being a success. Well, I know something about the business of the country, and I venture to say that if that scheme goes on in the expectation of getting cattle from Three Rivers to make the business a profitable one and to return anything at all to the investors, it will only end in disappointment and disaster to the British capitalists who put their money into it. Therefore, I am glad that the hon. Minister of Public Works has so well explained that he has had no complicity in this affair, and I am proud of the hon. gentleman who has had the courage to bring the subject before Parliament, so that, whatever happens, the Parliament of Canada cannot be said to have remained silent with regard to such a transaction as this, even though it prevents British money from coming into the country.

Mr. MULOCK. There is one feature in connection with this matter which I think ought not to be lost sight of. The newspaper from which the hon. member for South Oxford has quoted, the Financial News of London, England, in giving the speech of Sir William Marriott, reports him as having stated that the scheme had the endorsement of the High Commissioner, the words being that Sir Charles Tupper believes in this scheme. I would ask the House whether it is proper for the representative of Canada in England to take part at all in endorsing schemes of this kind or in promoting private enterprises of any kind. I am not assuming in this case that Sir Charles Tupper has given authority for the statement assigned to him. He may not have so expressed himself to Sir William Marriott, although it would seem most extraordinary that that gentleman should make the statement if it was not founded in fact. If it is a fact that the High Commissioner of Canada lends his countenance to the promotion of private enterprises, however pure his motives, in his desire to promote the best interests of Canada, still I think he commits a grave mistake. I do not think he is paid for any such purposes. He is in England to represent the Dominion of Canada, and the Dominion of Canada only, and he should be limited to dealing with such matters as are assigned to him by the Dominion Government, and the Dominion Government only. I think the Government should take steps to see that this statement is contradicted if untrue; and if it is true, steps should be taken to caution our Agent General not to do so again.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think it at all necessary to defend Sir Charles Tupper from a casual remark in a newspaper, which I have heard now for the first time. I think Sir Charles Tupper understands very well that he is to keep himself clear of any connection with private enterprises of any kind so long as he is High Commissioner for Canada. He cannot well hold his tongue about such things, however. I will give an instance. Suppose the Bank of Montreal were to double its capital and go to the English market for a million more of stock, and somebody should go to Sir Charles Tupper and ask him, "Do you think that is a safe investment?" Do you think he would say, "No, I cannot give you an opinion of it?" If the hon. gentleman himself were High Commissioner in such a case, and the question were put to him, "What do you think of this company—do you think it is a respectable company?" I think he ought to express his opinion if he has any opinion; but he ought not to be connected with promoting, or projecting, or holding stock in it, or in any way whatever implicating himself in, or annexing himself to any private enterprise however meritorious. I agree with my hon. friend; but, if there happens to be a worthy enterprise coming from Canada, and he happens to be asked if it is respectable and worthy of consideration, I think he would be very wrong in refusing to give his candid opinion, because the fact of his declining to express an opinion would cast such a doubt upon it as would most likely kill the most worthy enterprise in the world.

Mr. MULOCK. I did not make my observations with any view to refer to him particularly, further than to say that he should not promote companies. I am giving him credit for honesty of purpose, but I say that he should not use his position to promote private companies.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am with you altogether in that.

Mr. MULOCK. That was the tenor of my remarks, and the more closely he adheres to that policy the less danger he will run. He ought if possible to avoid giving opinions, though under certain circumstances his withholding an opinion might do more harm than good. That is a matter which he must judge for himself and run the risk.

Mr. AMYOT. My statement has been challenged as to the number of cattle that go to the United States from the Province of Quebec. Taking the tables of Trade and Navigation of last year of our general freight with the United States, I find that, of horned cattle we shipped $488,266 worth, and of sheep $918,374, making a total of $1,406,000.

Mr. MITCHELL. To Chicago?

Mr. AMYOT. To the States.

Mr. MITCHELL. He said Chicago.

Mr. AMYOT. If we can keep the greatest part of that and ship it from here with profit, I think that will be a very good thing.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Sault Ste. Marie Canal..... $1,641,000

Mr. DAWSON. I have some very interesting information about the Sault Ste. Marie Canal, which I may be permitted to give to the House. It is very important for us to consider the trade which has arisen in that western country, and I have a statement here showing the amount of freight that passed through the canal during the past summer. The traffic has very largely increased on the American side, and it was only by working night and day, and by the very best management, and by taking advantage of every hour of time, that the enormous fleet of vessels which passed up and down during the summer could be got through. Upon a former occasion I had occasion to draw a comparison between the traffic passing through the Suez Canal, which carries the commerce of Europe and Asia, and that passing between our two great inland seas, Lakes Huron and Superior. While I stated last year that the traffic on the Sault Ste. Marie Canal was hardly up to that on the Suez Canal, I am in a position to say this year that the actual freight traffic passing through the Sault Ste. Marie Canal is in excess of that passing through the Suez Canal. The traffic of the Suez Canal was as follows, in the following years:—

	Vessels.	Gross Tonnage.	Net Tonnage.
1885.....	3,624	8,985,411	6,355,752
1886.....	3,100	8,183,313	5,767,655
1887.....	3,137	8,430,043	5,903,024

The net tonnage, I believe, means the actual freight tonnage, and the gross tonnage means the total room of the ship. Now, that trade does not vary much from year to year, and the value of freight carried is over £58,000,000 sterling yearly. Through the Sault Ste. Marie Canal last year, the quantity of freight which passed, was 7,516,022 tons of actual freight, and the number of vessels was of course greater than in the Suez Canal, but not so large in tonnage. That trade has gone on increasing gradually at the rate of a million tons a year. Last year over seven millions and a half of tons passed through the Sault Ste. Marie Canal of actual freight, the total value of which was $83,732,000. Of course, the value does not come up to that of the freight that passes through the Suez Canal, but it exceeds it in bulk. A great portion of the freight is from the country round Lake Superior. The quantity east-bound last year was 5,552,000 tons, and the greater part of that east-bound freight consisted of iron and copper ores, and wheat and flour. Eighteen million bushels of wheat and 2,228,707 barrels of flour came by way of Duluth last year through the canal, and with the leave of the House I will give this little statement to the Hansard for reference.

The valuation of freight for each year is based on the unit values used in 1885.
The trade is still increasing, and the canal last year was taxed to its utmost capacity. They were scarcely able to pass the number of vessels through, and it was only by adopting the most excellent system and working night and day, that they were got through. Now they are building a new canal on the American side of far greater capacity than the present one, and they are also straightening the channel in order to avoid the difficulties which exist at present. The cost of improving the Sault Ste. Marie channel by way of Hay Lake will be $3,000,000. Besides that, the new lock which is being built will cost $4,000,000. In view of these facts, the necessity for a canal on our side must be very evident. I would call the attention of the Government to this fact. The fleets of vessels on the lakes are increasing so immensely every year that it is absolutely necessary that additional lights should be provided. This is a matter which can be no longer neglected. The Government should adopt a more liberal policy in regard to the placing of lights on these coasts so that the waters in that region may be safely navigated at all times. The navigation on the Canadian side of Lake Superior, is far better than that on the American side, and the natural harbors are very much superior to those on the other side. It only needs a proper system of lighting to have the whole American fleet passing on the north shore of Lake Superior

NOTE 1.
The west-bound freight since 9th June, 1881 (the date on which the U. S. Government assumed control), is 33 per cent. of the total, or very nearly one-half as much as the east-bound freight.

because of the greater safety which they find there, and, when we remember the immense quantities of agricultural products which will be sent down from our own North-West, which are increasing every year and which must come to Lake Superior and pass through these waters, it is evident that we need not only this additional canal, but improved navigation and additional lights and increased accommodation for the vessels which pass through those inland seas.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would desire the Minister to inform the House if he is at present prepared to state the probable total cost of this work, as well as the time when he expects it to be completed. I think it would be convenient, at this period, if the hon. gentleman would explain to the House the general policy of the Government in regard to the canals and the probable cost which they think will be necessary.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Perhaps we had better confine ourselves to the question of each of the canals as they come up. I can give more specific answers to the hon. gentleman in that way. The cost of the Sault Ste. Marie Canal is estimated as approximating to $3,000,000. Most of the amount of $1,641,000 which is now asked for is a revote. This is estimated to be the amount which is required during the year 1890-91. The expenditure hitherto has been very small—$42,164. That has been used in sinking the great lock which will be required on that canal. A portion of the lock-pit has been sunk to the full depth, and there has been dredging on the upper entrance to the canal. I need not say much more about the value of the canal after the very clear statement, and the very satisfactory statement, which has been made by my hon. friend from Algoma (Mr. Dawson) in regard to the great value and the great necessity for this canal.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman has not stated at what date he expects to complete this canal?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In about two years and a half.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is about the end of 1892?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And the hon. gentleman thinks that $3,000,000 will suffice to complete that work?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. My information from the chief engineer of canals is that it will approximate to that amount.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose that is for a depth of 16 or 18 feet?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is for a depth of 18 feet below the lowest possible water.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. 18 feet clear

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Lachine Canal.....$71,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. gentleman choose to state now what he expects will be the total cost of the contemplated works on the St. Lawrence canals?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; I do not think I have a statement of that prepared, though, perhaps, I ought to have had one.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think it would have been better.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will have that prepared for the hon. gentleman. As to this vote of $71,000, it is for the purchase of lands necessary to deepen the canal to fourteen feet, and to form a drain from the town of Lachine to the St. Lawrence, and also to give natural drainage to the town of Lachine. There has been a great deal of complaint from the people of Lachine as to the canal intercepting their connection with the St. Lawrence. It has been stated that this has rendered their town unhealthy, and that it is absolutely necessary that some means of drainage should be afforded to the town of Lachine. This is the principal object of the vote this year.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I see that a large amount is taken because of a judgment of the Supreme Court for $4,992 to the representatives of R. A. Hebert.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That sum the hon. gentleman speaks of, was to pay the claim of Mr. Hebert for damage done to his land by the overflow of the canal. He brought an action and got a verdict. The Government may be obliged to buy his land, because there is no means of preventing the inundation at some seasons of the year.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What were the costs of the suit?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot sever them, but I suppose the whole amount is included in that sum.

Cornwall Canal..... $1,000,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What are you going to do here?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The revised estimate of the probable cost of enlarging the Cornwall Canal for a draft of fourteen feet throughout, is $3,710,000; the total expenditure chargeable to enlargement up to 30th July, 1888, was $824,854.15; expenditure for 1888-89, $163,993.85; from 1st July to 31st December, $205,889; total expenditure up to 31st December, $1,194,708. The estimated expenditure from 1st January to 30th June of this year, is $14,111, making an expenditure as estimated, up to the 30th June, of $1,208,820. Required to complete to 1st July next, $2,501,180. That gives 14 feet for navigation.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. A question of interest has been raised with respect to this which it is probably my duty to mention. Statements have been made by some shippers cognisant with the river, although, of course, I am not at all prepared to say that these statements are all correct. It is an engineering question wholly, and I simply repeat what these men have said; but I have been informed by some shippers, friends of the hon. gentleman, that, in their opinion, there was considerable risk lest, in the process of deepening the channel, the water in the upper regions would be sensibly lowered. Now, I cannot say whether there is any foundation for that, but such a thing is at least abstractly possible, and if there should be any foundation—and these gentlemen have had long experience and acquaintance with the St. Lawrence—we would find ourselves in a very pretty position, if, as fast as we deepened the stream in one part, we found that we made it shallower in another.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the hon. gentleman, or some other hon. member, brought this up last year, and I took occasion to make some enquiries about it. My information is that there is not the slightest apprehension that the deepening in the manner the hon. gentleman mentions, or even the deepening by removing boulders and obstructions so as to make a depth of 14 feet, will in any way accelerate the draught of the water to such an extent as to lower it above.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not at all mean that it would affect a reservoir like Lake Ontario; but the St. Lawrence, as the hon. gentleman knows, is contracted in some places, and I dare say, Mr. Chairman, you know pretty well that the width must be something like half a mile or three-quarters of a mile close to Brockville. It is conceivable, if you are constructing a channel of that depth for four or five miles, that the effect might be to lower the water above.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Quite conceivable.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not pretend to say that is the case; still, if the First Minister has caused enquiry to be made and is satisfied that there is no apprehension on that score, there is no more to be said.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The chief engineer told me that there was not the slightest apprehension that it could in any way affect the river.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice by the Auditor General's Report, page D—138, that as high as $80 an acre was paid for some land in connection with this canal; $1,920 for twenty-five acres in one place, and $2,000 for ten acres in another place. How has the value of this land been placed?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They have always been appraised by the Government appraiser. In most cases the parties object at first, but they are told that if they do not like it they can go to the Court of Exchequer, and rather than go to the Court of Exchequer, they take the price.

Mr. McMULLEN. It appears to me a very high price to pay for ordinary township land.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Land is valuable along the St. Lawrence, and depend upon it, there is no more paid than a fair value. We are obliged to pay the appraised value. The hon. gentleman must remember that, besides the value of the land, there is the consideration that the parties are cut off from direct access to the St. Lawrence, which greatly diminishes the value of the property.

Murray Canal $150,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the total cost of the Murray Canal to date ?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The total expenditure on the Murray Canal is $1,042,646 up to the end of the fiscal year. I have a memorandum which says that up to the 31st December, 1889, the whole expenditure has been $1,106,513, and this vote of $150,000 is required to complete the canal. It will have a depth of 12 feet.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What depth is there in the Bay of Quinté, below that ?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is 12 feet.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not disposed to censure making it 12 feet, because, after all, it gives admission to only a moderate class of vessels. As the matter stands, only comparatively small craft can take advantage of the internal navigation of the Bay of Quinté.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The depth of the main channel is considerable. The depth of water at Belleville and Picton, and of the latter I speak particularly, is eight or nine feet. Dredging operations have been steadily continued until a depth has been obtained of about 12 feet. There are some shoals which interfere with navigation, but they are of small extent, and can easily be removed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has there been any serious trouble on this canal from the falling in of the banks or from quicksands ?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No ; nothing of that kind. The canal is not faced with stone ; there is a little wash, but no falling in.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is it open to travel to the full extent ?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It will be open in May to the full extent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is it used at all at present ?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It has been used, but it has not been regularly opened.

Welland Canal..... $184,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I notice under this head an item of $92,000, deepening Welland Canal to 14 feet throughout. The Welland Canal cannot be deepened for that outlay. What has been spent upon it up to the present time ?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This amount of $92,000 is for the purpose of winding-up certain contracts. The work connected with the deepening to 14 feet has been completed. There is also an item included of $12,000 for land damages on Grand River.

Mr. McMULLEN. I see, on page D—141, Auditor General's Report, a payment of $9,228 for sodding on the canal. This is a heavy charge for the work, as natural grass sown would have saved the expense.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am informed that grass will not grow on newly thrown-up earth, but that such has to be sodded.

Trent River Navigation..... $76,000

Mr. BARRON. I think I should thank the Premier, or whoever is responsible, for taking my advice last Session and completing some of the work necessary for the navigation at Fenelon Falls. I have to recognise that they did what was right in removing obstructions so far as the rocks at the entrance to Fenelon Falls River are concerned. But I still have my complaint to make, which I made no less than four Sessions ago, that the money expended on this lock has been, and is now, entirely wasted by reason of not having the bridge across the river at Fenelon Falls removed. I am not alone in my complaint, for I find that an official of the Government refers to it. Speaking of the work done at the lake he says :

“ The corner was broken off one of the valves of the lock-gates. This was repaired. The passage through to Cameron's Lake is stopped by the fixed bridge of the Grand Trunk Railway across the river at the head of the canal. This bridge should be provided with a swing before the opening of navigation next season.”

Next season is rather late in the day, although, of course, better late than never. Hon. gentlemen opposite should listen to, and take the advice of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, who are really anxious to do what is right in behalf of their constituents, and the Government should have adopted the advice I offered during the first Session I was in Parliament. I then pointed out that this bridge was in the way of navigation, and, not only so, but the money expended up to the present time on the lock at Fenelon Falls has been actually wasted, and the money recently expended on removing obstructions to the entrance of the river has also been wasted, unless the obstruction of the bridge is also removed. What is the use of expending money year after year if we are going to allow an obstruction, such as this bridge is, to remain ? What is the use of making two bites of a cherry ? What is the use of prolonging this work, except to prolong it to the next general election ?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh.

Mr. BARRON. The Premier says “ oh.” It is the truth, nevertheless ; and I may tell him that the prolongation of the work is not satisfactory to the people in my part of the country. There is on record not only the correspondence with myself, but also a petition from the different municipalities interested in the navigation of these waters, setting forth the needs of the country in regard to navigation, and also that private individuals have up to the present time suffered severe pecuniary loss by not being able to fulfil contracts, as they were unable to forward cord-wood through Fenelon Falls on account of the obstructions in the river. We all know that, prior to every election, the Premier and Sir Charles Tupper, when he occupied a position in the Government went through that part of the country and made election promises connecting the waters of the Georgian Bay with Lake Ontario. I applaud the Government for the work they have done in making internal navigation, but I am sorry to say they have not done that which they promised the people would be done ; that is, to make this canal right through to Lake Ontario. On one occasion, when the Premier himself went to Peterborough, he told the people that he had made arrangements to retain control of these internal waters, which the late Government had handed over, he said, to the Ontario Government, so that they would have communication from Georgian Bay right down to Lake Ontario, by means of this Trent Valley Canal. That was just prior to an election, but just so soon as the election was over, the Premier said "no" to that project. I think I produced last Session the remarks then made by the right hon. gentleman, as published in his own organ.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Read them again.

Mr. BARRON. Not only that, but I produced a statement from a Peterborough paper, an organ of hon. gentlemen opposite, showing that the hon. member for West Peterborough (Mr. Stevenson) after the last election stated that he had received an intimation from the Minister of Public Works, that the work between Lakefield and Peterborough should go on in the following summer. That statement was made the night of the election, and, therefore, the hon. gentleman must have heard it from the Minister of Railways and Canals prior to the elections, and no doubt, perhaps, he made use of it for the purpose of gaining his election. The Premier himself has recognised the importance of this canal, when he says in his report for 1889:

"In view of the interest taken in the scheme for connecting the waters of the Bay of Quinté, Lake Ontario, with those of Georgian Bay, Lake Huron, it was thought advisable that the matter should receive investigation at the present time."

The Government thought wise to appoint a commission on the 8th October, 1887, to find out the needs of the country, so far as the Trent Valley Canal was concerned, but which needs they professed to be familiar with when they made the election statement I have alluded to. From the date of the appointment of the commission, in October, 1888, to the present time we have not yet had their report. The Premier will recollect that at the beginning of this Session I asked if he expected to have the report of the commission soon laid on the Table, and he said "yes;" but I see by the papers of yesterday, or the day before, that the commissioners visited Orillia with the object of getting some evidence there. If I am not mistaken, the time occupied by these commissioners for the whole purpose of getting evidence, and making up their minds as to what report they should present, has been altogether forty days since their appointment in 1887. May I ask why is it, that the commissioners are allowed to take this very long time to make up their minds in regard to their report, if the reason is not that the Government is willing that they should prolong their deliberations until just prior to the next general election? In view of the great interest which the Premier himself says is taken by the people of that locality in this work, I say that the Government are much to blame for allowing the commissioners to so long delay their report. I am voicing the feeling in my part of the country when I say that much dissatisfaction is felt, not only at this commission being appointed, but particularly on account of the way in which they have been allowed to delay their report, and also on account of the way in which the work has been done at Fenelon Falls, by reason of which navigation has been interfered with for such a length of time, and the interest of the money wasted ever since 1885, when the lock was first begun. I do hope that some reasonable promptitude will be shown now by the Government in completing the work at Fenelon Falls, so as to make the upper waters navigable with those below. While I say that, I am quite willing to give the Government credit for doing the work as well as they have done it, although it was long-delayed justice. Here let me say that Mr. Kennedy, of Bobcaygeon, the contractor, did his work well in removing the obstructions at Fenelon Falls River. But, if the obstruction of the bridge, which Mr. Rogers refers to in his report, is not removed the entire communication will be stopped, and the large amount of money already expended will be wasted.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. My hon. friend is, I think, getting election on the brain. He says everything is postponed until election time, and yet he lauds the Government for having done what they have done. He also says, that when I was in that part of the country, I urged this matter for election purposes; but the hon. gentleman applauds me for using it, whether for election purposes or not, if it happened to be for the benefit of his constituents. The hon. gentleman says that he objects to the delays which have taken place, and he thinks we are holding the matter over until the election. Well, we are approaching election time now, and if we expended too much money up there, the hon. gentleman would probably say as to that what he said as to the previous expenditure, that it was for election purposes. Don't you think it would be safer for us to postpone all further expenditure until after the general election? Would that suit my hon. friend?

Mr. BARRON. I am quite willing to sacrifice my chances in the interests of my constituents.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think we cannot be charged with any want of energy or neglect of the Trent River navigation, I shall read to my hon. friend the amounts which have been expended for this purpose: In 1883, $40,767; in 1884, $161,161; in 1885, $282,000; in 1886, $357,000; in 1887, $537,000.

Mr. BARRON. That was the year of the election.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, in 1888, the year after the election, we expended $652,000. In 1889, for the fiscal year, $699,000; and up to the 31st December last, $703,000. I do not think we can be charged with any want of energy in this matter, and it is rather fortunate for the good fame of the Government, that we have spent considerably more money since the elections than before. There is a good deal in what the hon. gentleman says with respect to that bridge at Fenelon Falls, but there is a contention between the Government and the Grand Trunk Railway Company as to who should pay for the building. At all events, this vote for $75,000 is required to pay the work now under contract, to settle with some contractors yet unpaid, and for cleaning out the channel at several points between Lakefield and Balsam Lake. With regard to the commission, Mr. Kennedy, one of them, whose report we want specially to get, was absent from ill-health and had to go to Europe, and there was no particular hurry in urging them to make the report. We want to get a full report in order to ascertain what the real cost is to be. No one knows better than the hon. gentleman that various opinions have been given as to that. Some persons are of opinion that it is going to cost millions to connect the Trent navigation and to carry it down to the Bay of Quinté. There was no hurry at all, however, because these other works are going on vigorously in the meantime, and they are especially valuable for inland navigation in that part of the country. So that nothing has been lost, and this $76,000 will remove the obstruction which the hon. gentleman complains of. The railway bridge will be built, and the Government and the Grand Trunk Railway Company will have to fight out the question as to who is to pay for it.

Mr. BARRON. Last Session I was told that the grant then voted was for the purpose of removing not only the obstruction which has been removed, but that created by the bridge.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The money did not hold out, that is all.

Mr. BARRON. Then you should have removed the obstruction and asked Parliament to sanction the expenditure afterwards.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Then I should have the hon. member for North Wellington attacking me for asking for a special warrant. We are not going to do that.

Mr. BARRON. The hon. Premier says that there is a dispute as to who is liable. Has it taken three years to decide that? I do not think any lawyer acquainted with the facts will deny that the liability rests with the Government.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Do not give our case away.

Mr. BARRON. At any rate, are the people going to suffer because the Premier and his Government cannot decide as to who is liable, when the work has to be done at some time or other? I do not complain of the expenditure. What I do complain of is the dilly-dallying policy of the hon. gentleman in proceeding with this work. He does it by piecemeal, and the result is that although the lock is there, we have been unable to use it for three or four years by reason of these obstructions to which the attention of the Government has been called time and again. They have now only woke up to the necessity of removing them. The people have confidence in the commission, but they believe that the Government are delaying the report for some reason. While the connection of the waters is, of course, an admirable thing, the people will not be satisfied unless the work on this canal goes on, especially in view of the money already expended upon it. The right hon. Premier says that it may cost a large sum of money. Suppose it does, the work is necessary; and when we find the Government wasting money in building certain railways in the Lower Provinces, our people think—

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You want to have a share of the swag, eh?

Mr. BARRON—if the money is to be wasted in this way, we want some of it also; and I tell the Premier that, in view of the election promises he made, the people are dissatisfied with the way he is proceeding.

Mr. BLAKE. I really think it is about time that this question of the canal should be settled. Certainly, as long ago as before the election of 1882, the hon. First Minister did make a promise in the town of Peterborough that the canal should be built.

Certainly, for years after that time the Minister of Railways and Canals reiterated that promise, and time after time it was indicated that reports were being obtained as to what the cost would be; and, if I remember aright, Mr. Rubidge was named as the officer from whom those reports were expected. Ultimately, an intimation was given, in the Railway Committee room, or somewhere else, to some large deputation which called on the Government to redeem its pledges—which had been very extensively used in a large number of the ridings bordering on the route of the projected canal—that the cost of the work was roughly estimated, I think, at the sum of $9,000,000. Another election came on, when I have no doubt further pressure was put upon the Government, and after the election of 1887, it seems that for the first time the Government took the step of appointing a commission. Their doing so at that time was, of course, an indication that they had neglected their duty up to that time. If they were going to make the building of the canal contingent on the commission giving a satisfactory statement of its cost, there should have been no such pledge as was given in 1882, and kept dangling before the eyes of the people for years afterwards. This commission has, I think, for nearly three years, had the matter in hand, and the hon. gentleman does not yet give an intimation when their report is expected. He says that somebody was ill and went to Europe, but that there is no hurry, because the work is going on all the time. But how do we know that it is work on the canal? To do work of this kind piecemeal, if it is to be part of the great communication between the upper and the lower lakes, may be to do it in an extremely wasteful way. It may be that the work being done is adequate for the purpose of local communication, and yet it may be inadequate for the purpose of the large work if it ever comes to be accomplished. What I do say is that what was in a sense formally initiated as a pledged Government undertaking, as early as before the elections of 1882, ought not to be in the condition it is in to-day, nearly eight years later, namely, that for five or six years a step which the Government then declared to be essential, the formation of a commission, is delayed, and then the report of that commission is postponed for three or four years, and we do not know when it is to be obtained. I think the hon. gentleman ought to see this thing expedited; the report should be obtained early and a decision reached; and the people who are interested in this project, and who have been waiting for it and hanging on the hon. gentleman's words so many years, should be relieved in one way or another, by a determination either to proceed with the work or to abandon it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman has hardly been fair. He says we have gone on without the necessary information, but if he will look back he will remember that this is an old scheme and that it was reported on by engineers fully competent to judge on such matters. It has always been understood that this was a work sooner or later to be undertaken. The probable expenditure delayed it for years after the first project was mooted, and after these reports were made. Then the hon. gentleman says that these works, although in the general line of the proposed improvement of the Trent navigation, may be unfit for that navigation when completed. I can assure the hon. gentleman that all the works were of great use for the local purposes for which they were used, and were constructed with a view of being a portion of the completed canal down to the Trent. There is a certain indication which is known to all engineers, as to what it would cost owing to the shallowness of the stream and of the impossibility of getting more than a certain depth, but the canal so far has been built with the object of being a portion of this great line of inland navigation. I am not in a position to say when the report will be made, but will let the hon. gentleman know in a day or two.

Mr. McMULLEN. Before closing this discussion we ought to have some understanding as to when the report of this particular commission will be received.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It does not in any way affect this work, only the extension of the work.

Mr. McMULLEN. The country has already expended a good deal in connection with this work, and before proceeding further we should have a distinct estimate of the cost, and a plan of the location of this canal. This commission has been established to ascertain whether it is in the interest of the country that the work should be completed or whether we should abandon it altogether.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The object of the commission is to ascertain whether the statements of experienced engineers are true or not. They vary very much from the earlier estimates of the engineers, who were considered quite competent in their day, and we wish to ascertain exactly what the extension could be built for. The hon. gentleman must understand that, even supposing the extension of the canal should be abandoned, which I do not at all contemplate, every farthing of this money has been well expended, because it has connected a chain of lakes and has given very valuable means of transportation in a portion of the country which greatly requires it, and I think my hon. friend who represents that part of the country, and who sits near the hon. gentleman, will say that the portion of the canal which is intended to be finished by means of this vote will be very valuable and should under any circumstances be undertaken.

Mr. McMULLEN. We have not had the slightest information as to the total cost.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We must wait for the report of the commission for that purpose.

Mr. McMULLEN. And we should wait for that report before voting this item. The right hon. gentleman says this is a very old scheme. It is, and it has a very peculiar history. It is quite clear that from year to year the First Minister has moved in the direction of constructing this particular work just as political necessities demanded; and when perhaps those political necessities were got over, there was a lull in the prosecution of this work, which was undertaken as a political job.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh, no.

Mr. McMULLEN. It was undertaken for the purpose of exercising considerable political influence in that section, and has been kept alive from year to year with that object. It will stand, like many other works, a monument of folly for the purpose of using political influence.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. My hon. friend who sits behind the hon. gentleman will tell him whether it is a piece of folly or not.

Mr. McMULLEN. Some portions may possibly be worth some money. If the country's means are to be invested in a manner that will give a general beneficial result, and procure a proper return for the investment, they would never have been invested in a work of that kind. Before we are asked to vote any money to begin another movement in the direction of the completion of this canal, we should have the report of that commission to guide us, because, I presume, the hon. gentleman intends to be guided by that report. In the meantime, before voting this money, we should know what that commission is going to report. I notice by the Auditor General's Report that those commissioners are drawing $20 a day.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Only when they are working.

Mr. McMULLEN. How is the hon. gentleman going to decide whether they are working or not? One of the commissioners is away in England on leave of absence, and when he comes back he may say that he has been at work all the time getting certain information. I do not know whether the right hon. gentleman will be able to tell how much work the commissioners did—whether they worked Monday and adjourned Tuesday, and so on. We have had a great many commissions and we know how expensive they are. We had two or three men appointed as commissioners to settle the North-West Rebellion claims, and they sat twelve or fourteen months, and drew $30,000 altogether. This commission has been appointed longer than the one I have just referred to, and I would like to know what it is going to cost?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. These commissioners happen to be gentleman of high standing and are certainly not going to rob the country, and certainly stand above that suspicion. That would be an injurious suspicion. One of them is Mr. Frank Turner, of Toronto, who, perhaps the hon. gentleman knows, is an engineer of standing, and all he has charged so far is for thirty days of service. The $76,000 asked for has no connection with the extension of the canal, but is required to complete the work now under contract between Rockfield and Balsam Lake, and to pay some unsettled balances due to the contractors for the old works, and to construct the railway bridge which the hon. gentleman complains is an obstruction. It has nothing to do with the extension of the railway down to the Bay of Quinté.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I think there is a great deal in the contention of my hon. friend in front of me that the Government is bound to proceed more rapidly with this work. If the work was promised in 1882 by the First Minister, he must have had some idea as to the extent of the work. When he was holding forth to the electors and promising that he would use his influence to have this completed, he must have had some idea of the cost. Eight years have elapsed since the pledge was made by the Government, and I think my hon. friend has good reason for saying that, if such a time has elapsed and the Government has not gone on with the work with the vigor they have shown in other works, they are not serious in regard to this. In 1887, there is no doubt that they made further promises, that they stated it was a very important enterprise, that it was required by the people and that the people would be benefited if it were completed. They have expended a large sum of money, but the question is, what are we to realise for the work which has been performed? Have we any adequate return for the amount of money which has been expended?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think so.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). If the hon. gentleman would take a pleasure trip up that canal, he would see how far he could get, even on an ordinary light boat. If he went there to see the country, he would hardly get half way up before he would be stuck in the mud, and yet he tells me that the money has been well expended in the interest of the people in that part of the country. No doubt the money was well expended, in order that the hon. gentleman might obtain the vote of the people in that part of the country.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They elected my hon. friend opposite.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). The hon. gentleman did everything in his power in order to defeat my hon. friend, and it was only the inherent worth and the moral superiority of my hon. friend which caused his election, and not the expenditure of this money. If the First Minister desires to see the result of the large expenditure of money on this work, I suggest that he should go up there himself next summer.

Mr. BLAKE. I hope it will be a wet summer.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Yes; or he should take sufficient quantity of drink with him or he would be thirsty before he got through.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I might do it in a cab.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Now we find there is a commission appointed. Is that intended to blind the eyes of the people in that section when the hon. gentleman states that he will go on with the work when the commissioners make their report? They are delaying that report, and the hon. gentleman does not desire to have that report. That would spoil the whole game. He would either have to say that the work is impracticable or he would have to go on with it. No doubt there will be a great deal of talk about this canal at the time of the next general election. Although the commissioners do not report, although they are kicking up their heels in Europe or in some other place and are having a nice time, we find by the Auditor's Report that they have not neglected to make their mark on the pay-roll. They do not believe in working without getting their pay. We find that some individuals are pretty well paid there. There is a certain engineer named J. A. Aylmer, who worked seven months and received $875. He had living expenses there for 214 days for which he received $321. It would not do for one man to perform that work, and so he had his assistant, a Mr. A. J. Belcher. I do not know whether the names are purposely reversed or not, but I see that one is J. A. and the other is A. J. Mr. Belcher was employed for 183 days for which he received $915, and he also received a considerable amount for horse hire and cab hire and other things of that kind, bringing his salary up to between $1,100 and $1,200. Not only that. Though they were paid full wages for the services they rendered, and were allowed living expenses so as to stop the work, so as not to proceed with it, so as to keep the matter before the electorate up there, what was done? These men had to be set aside, and they could not be set aside without some consideration, and the First Minister, in the generosity of his soul, advised perhaps by his subordinate, decided that they should have a gratuity, so Mr. Aylmer received a gratuity of $338.50, making his total pay $1,605.50. The other individual, Mr. Belcher, was also set aside and he received a gratuity of $255, or, in all, he received a sum of $1,212 for the 183 days' work which he performed. Now is it any wonder that my hon. friend in front of me should feel discouraged, and should feel inclined to the opinion that the First Minister did not intend to have this work gone on with? Because, here we find a large sum of money paid to commissioners and to engineers, and large gratuities paid to men who have been removed from the work. And, yet, we are told: Oh, it is a very important work; the benefits arising from the expenditure of the money are ample; and we are having a just return for that expenditure. We find, also, in the First Minister's report, the sums paid to certain individuals. There was one sum of $2,000, paid to a man named Stevens, for one-half of a lot containing a mill property. Perhaps the First Minister will be able to explain why this money was paid. Is it necessary to buy out all the mill properties in that section, so that they may be able to float a canoe or a flat boat down the stream? Have they to go round all the neighborhood and purchase all the little mill streams? If that be the case, more injury than benefit will be done to that section of the country. Have these amounts been expended for the purpose of building a canal? No; for no such purpose at all. It is for the purpose of keeping these people up there quiet, with the idea that they are going to have a very large amount of money expended among them, so that they may vote right at election time. That is the evident object, from the manner in which this work is being proceeded with. Now, the First Minister says that we are getting ample returns for the amount expended. What are the ample returns? Let us take his own report, and I suppose it is correct in every particular; let us see what is the amount of tonnage upon this blessed Trent Canal. The whole volume of business amounts to 16,153 tons, all told. You will be surprised when I tell you the enormous amount of revenue that the country receives from this work. It is beneficial, I have been told, for excursion parties who attempt to go up the canal for pleasure trips, for fishing, but it seems that after they have got a short way up they get stuck on some uncompleted portion of the work, and have to turn round and return home. We find the whole revenue from this canal is $259.72. These are the ample returns for the expenditure of that money. If the hon. gentleman would go on manfully with this work, as he promised the people he would do, he would have larger returns; but he has spent just enough money to leave the work perfectly useless. He is allowing it to remain in that condition, and allowing his commissioners to kick up their heels all over the country, and only return to their work when they want to draw their fees. I say it is time the Government should decide what they are going to do in this matter. If they think this work is important and useful, it is their bounden duty to proceed and finish it at once. On the other hand, if they think the work is not useful or is not feasible, let them tell the people so, and let the people know that they are not going to receive any more money at election time.

Mr. BARRON. It is not often that I have to disagree with any hon. gentleman on this side of the House. Notwithstanding the kind reference made by my hon. friend behind me, towards myself, I must say, that his appreciation of the state of things on that canal, in my opinion, is entirely wrong. However, much, politically speaking, I would like to see the Premier stuck in the mud, at the same time, I do not think, if he attempted to go up the Trent Valley Canal he would have any such difficulty as has been pointed out by my hon. friend. I dare say my hon. friend's figures are correct, regarding the amount of tonnage and the revenue, but, they are easily explained by the facts which I pointed out a few minutes ago, that is, by reason of the imperfect state in which these works have been left for so many years, by not completing the entire system of navigation, and the result has been that the country has received very little return for the expenditure. If the work had been gone on with properly, completing it as far as it went, the amount of tonnage would have been very much greater. I can state that large contracts to carry wood from one part of the country to another, down these waters, were entered into, and it was discovered that these contracts would have to be cancelled by reason of the obstructions to be found in the channel, which ought to have been removed when the work was proceeding, so far as the locks themselves are concerned, I entirely deny the statement that the work, so far as the internal waters are concerned, is useless. On the contrary, it has been a great boon to that part of the country, and the only annoyance the people have suffered arises from the fact that the Premier and others on that side of the House have, from time to time, been making pledges which they have not carried out. Let us see what the Premier himself said in the House on the 11th July, 1885, speaking of this system of waters:

"The system is a very old one. It has been reported on by many able engineers, and at last the Government adopted the idea of making it a permanent work by connecting the two great waterways."

That is, the Georgian Bay and Lake Ontario.—

"It may be it cannot compete in all respects with other and deeper waters and with a railway system, but it will be substantially a Dominion work, connecting the two waters, and at the same time of great advantage to the fine district and country through which it passes."

There was a distinct pledge, in the year 1885, that the work, as a canal from one great waterway to the other, would be gone on with and completed, and yet in 1889 he tells us that he appointed a commission to find out the necessity of doing that which, in the year 1885, he said would be done by his Government. Therefore, I say, the people have reason to complain bitterly of the treatment they have received in reference to this Trent Valley Canal.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin).

Tay Canal..... $11,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This, I understand, is a really useful work; it drains the County of Perth.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It drains the public treasury pretty well.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What are the annual receipts?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is not opened yet.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do I understand it is not completed yet?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This amount is to settle with the contractors and finish the work.

Lachine Canal..... $55,000

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the amount of $45,000 for constructing a bridge over the canal at Wellington street, Montreal, should properly appear under capital account, as it will be a permanent improvement.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is a new work, and should be carried to capital account, for it is necessary to relieve the overburdened traffic.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The remark I have from the chief engineer is this: Wellington street bridge does not afford sufficient accommodation for the traffic. When there are many vessels entering or leaving the canal, long lines of vehicles are frequently delayed on both sides. It is, therefore, absolutely necessary that the city should secure other means of crossing. A bridge and the means of access will cost between $50,000 and $60,000.

Mr. DESJARDINS. I do not consider that the amount of $8,400 will be sufficient to pay for the drainage of land and leakage of banks from Lachine to Côte St. Paul.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The extension of the pier to the head of the Lachine Canal has interfered with the natural drainage of the town of Lachine and the low lands adjacent. Between Lachine and Côte St. Paul the drainage of the low lands is likely to be interfered with. Consequently it is necessary to adopt some plan to deal with it. Mr. Parent, the engineer, is now engaged in preparing plans and reports as to the best means of dealing with this subject. This is only a temporary vote, as the Government has not yet received the engineer's report as to what works will be necessary.

Chambly Canal..... $43,256

Mr. McMULLEN. Has there been any break in this canal to cause such a large expenditure.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No. It is, however, an old canal built many years ago.

Post Office Service..... $3,083,140

Mr. McMULLEN. I see there is a very large increase of $19,000 for the mail service; that will require some explanation.

Mr. HAGGART. That is caused principally by the increased amount given to the Canadian Pacific Railway of from 8 to 12 cents per mile, and to the increased mileage on the railways. The increase of from 8 to 12 cents between Montreal and Toronto comes to $81,300, less amount of one quarter, which was paid in 1888-89, $61,000, and the additional mail service on 164½ miles of railway, making the total that would be paid to the Canadian Pacific Railway, $336,153.

Mr. ELLIS. I would like to call the attention of the Postmaster General to the service between the Maritime Provinces and Ottawa. It is disgraceful to a country like this that the mails to the Capital should be detained for seven hours in the city of Montreal. The mails from the Maritime Provinces, east of St. John and as far as the boundary, are daily delayed, and they go no faster now than they did over the Intercolonial Railway. Nothing is gained whatever by that service over the Canadian Pacific Railway. I trust that the Postmaster General will do something for this service, and make it at least creditable to the country.

Mr. HAGGART. It is only a question of expense. The hon. gentleman will understand that to get the mails direct it would require the payment of another train from Montreal to Ottawa.

Mr. FISHER. I think there must be some difficulty also, either in the Montreal post office or the Ottawa post office, because I find, frequently, that letters which must arrive in Montreal the forenoon of one day, are not delivered here until the following morning. The mail trains from my part of the country arrive in Montreal about ten o'clock in the forenoon, and these letters ought to come up here by what is known as the "Soo" train, or, at the latest, by the afternoon trains. They certainly ought to be delivered in the afternoon or evening, as they frequently are, but more frequently they are not delivered until the following morning.

Mr. HAGGART. They do not arrive here until eight o'clock in the evening, so that they are not delivered until the next morning.

Mr. FISHER. I think they ought to be delivered here in the evening. They sometimes are, but not always. I do not understand either why the "Soo" train leaving Montreal at ten o'clock does not carry the eastern mails which arrive there before that hour.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). When the time was shortened over the Intercolonial Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, one of the advantages we were to derive was that we were going to have more rapid mail communication; but if our mails are to be delayed for seven hours at Montreal, we shall lose all we were to gain by rapid transit. It seems to me that some arrangement might be made by which the mails would be shifted as readily as passengers at Montreal Junction, during the sitting of Parliament at least, as it is very inconvenient that the correspondence of members should be delayed so long.

General LAURIE. The Intercolonial Railway is a Government line, and the trains on it might be so arranged as to accommodate the mail trains on other lines.

Mr. ELLIS. It seems to me that the expenditure necessary to bring these mails from Montreal to Ottawa during the Session would be very small, compared with the sums expended for purposes that seem to be utterly useless. It is not creditable to the country that the mails coming from the Maritime Provinces should be delayed for seven hours between Montreal and Ottawa. The Postmaster General might dispense with the mails by the earlier train and bring them all by the "Soo" train.

Mr. HAGGART. There are three mail trains a day between here and Montreal, and those trains are arranged to meet the trains which have the greatest amount of correspondence on them. If more trains are wanted, it is only a question of expense. I will look into the matter, and see whether the expenditure will be justified.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Do I understand that the increase in the estimate is caused by increased mileage only, or by an increased payment per mile?

Mr. HAGGART. An increased payment per mile from 8 cents to 12 cents over the Canadian Pacific Railway. That is owing to an arrangement made with my predecessor, by which we get half a car instead of one-quarter of a car.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is that the same as is paid to other railways?

Mr. HAGGART. I think the Grand Trunk and Intercolonial Railway get a larger sum per mile.

Mr. BARRON. I wish to draw the attention of the Postmaster General to a complaint which has been made to me in connection with the post offices of Bushkong and Carnarvon. The mails are taken out on Saturday, and they leave on Saturday morning, so that a whole week elapses before an answer can be got. I am told that petitions have been sent to the Department from these localities asking for two mails a week instead of one, and the people say that no response has been received from those petitions, and no attention whatever has been paid to them. If that is true, the hon. Minister ought to look into the matter.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not think it can possibly be true, because I take particular care to see that every petition is answered and referred to an inspector, and that a report is made upon it. I am not aware of the complaints made, but I have taken a note of them, and I will furnish the hon. gentleman with the information.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I should like to ask the hon. Postmaster General if the various mail routes are let by public contract?

Mr. HAGGART. All over $200 are required by the statute to be let by public contract.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). But any for $200 and under can be by a private arrangement.

Mr. HAGGART. I very seldom make a private arrangement. The routes are almost always granted by tender.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Would the hon. gentleman tell me under what circumstances the mail contract for the post office of Upper Musquodoboit was taken from George Hamilton, who had it for nine years at a sum of $104 a year, and given to Alexander Burnet, in October, 1888, for $200 a year? It was for carrying the mails three times a week. Hamilton tendered again at the same rate of $104, but his tender was passed over in favor of Burnet.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not think it at all possible that any such thing as that ever happened. I know that it did not happen under my régime, because the law directs that the lowest tender, for any amount, whether $200, over or under $200, if a tender is called for, shall receive the contract; but I have the option of making private contracts for amounts under $200.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). My memorandum does not say that tenders were invited, so I suppose the Government exercised the power which they possess of giving $200 for work which had previously been done for $104. I have this information from the contractor himself, who I do not think would make any misrepresentation, and I would ask the Postmaster General to look into the matter.

Mr. HAGGART. I have taken a note of it and will give an answer later.

Mr. GUAY. I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister to a fact which is a cause of great complaint among the merchants and manufacturers and others of Etchemin. As the case now stands, we have in Etchemin, which is about six miles from Lévis, two mail deliveries a day—one about 10 o'clock in the morning, and the other about 5 o'clock in the afternoon. The lumber merchants, manufacturers and others, who do a great deal of business with the west, are obliged, if they wish their answers to leave the evening of the day their letters are received, to send them by carter to Lévis, where they must be posted by 8.30 in the evening. If the Department could arrange with the Grand Trunk Railway Company to stop their 8.30 a.m. train at Etchemin on the way west, our business men could post their letters at Etchemin, and thus be saved the inconvenience and loss of time and expense of sending their letters a distance of six miles to Lévis, in order to be posted there, and this arrangement would entail very little expense on the Department, and be a great benefit to our people. Some years ago there were great complaints, owing to the fact that the mail from the west, which passes Etchemin in the morning at 6 o'clock, did not stop there, but went straight to Lévis, from which place they were sent back to Etchemin only at 11 o'clock the same day by the regular mail, and the consequence was that our merchants had not time to read and answer those letters and mail their answers in time to go to Lévis by the regular mail which leaves Etchemin at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, in order to be posted from Lévis to the west that same evening. Thus, by losing this regular train, as in most cases they were bound to do, their letters were held over in Lévis the whole of the next day, and not sent until the afternoon of the second day, thus entailing a loss of two days which was a matter of considerable importance to our lumber merchants, manufacturers and others, who do an extensive business which demands much greater promptitude in answering their correspondence. This, however, was remedied to some extent lately, because the down train from the west that passes Etchemin at six in the morning stopped at Hadlow, and delivered a supplementary bag there especially for Etchemin, and this bag was then sent by a mail carrier to Etchemin. Another cause of complaint lies in the fact that the mail train which leaves Lévis in the evening at 8.30 does not stop at Etchemin on its way west, and thus letters which come from the west by the Canadian Pacific Railway and arrive at Etchemin at 5 or 6 in the afternoon cannot be answered and sent to the west by that train, in consequence of the train not stopping at Etchemin. Therefore, if by any possibility the answers cannot be sent to Lévis by carters in time for the 8.30 train, they have to stay over at Lévis the whole of the next day, and only leave by the 8.30 train of that day. If, however, the 8.30 train from Lévis were to stop at Etchemin just long enough to receive the letters for the west, this would be a great boon for our business men, and I hope the hon. gentleman will take steps to see that the Grand Trunk Railway Company will give us this facility, which they could do with very little inconvenience and cost.

Mr. HAGGART. I have often asked railway companies to stop at stations for the purpose of accommodating the postal service there, but unless these places are of sufficient importance for other reasons than mail purposes, we can never induce them to stop.

Mr. GUAY. I would however impress on the hon. gentleman that Etchemin is an important place and the centre of a large business. In the fall and spring of the year especially nearly two hundred or three hundred people leave there to work in the States and these people are obliged to drive to Point Lévis and pay $1.50 to get there, in order to catch the train. If the train would stop at Etchemin they would be saved this expense. I have been told frequently by our lumber merchants and other business men that the objection made by the Grand Trunk Railway Company to stopping at Etchemin was that the grade was too steep. This cannot be accepted as a good reason, since we know that the Intercolonial Railway stops there, both coming and going, every day.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I would like to call the attention of the Minister to the fact that in the municipality of Bayham, near Stratfordville, the mails could be carried twice a week at the expense of $24 a year. The amount is a small one, and if the hon. gentleman would send his inspector to that locality to enquire into the necessities of the case, he would find that the revenue would pay the expense.

Mr. HAGGART. The deputy has taken a note of it, and will make the necessary enquiry.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would call attention to the fact, that a certain post office in the County of Kent, called Oldfield, was closed a year or two ago, on account of the postmaster having moved away, and no other competent person, being found to assume his duties. But last year a petition was sent to the Department, praying that a certain Mr. Gordon, a very competent person would assume the duties of postmaster, and asking that the mails would stop at that particular place. The mail carrier carries the mail past that post office to the next one, and it would cost the Government very little to have this office re-opened and the mail delivered there. I do not know that any action was taken on this petition, but I hope the Minister will take action on it, and see if these people can be accommodated. I would also draw his attention to Pig Point and Dover South, in the county of Kent. They only get their mails now twice a week, and I want the Department to arrange that the mails should be carried there at least three times a week. The expense will be very trifling.

Mr. BARRON. I understood the Minister to say that in all cases where the amount was over $200, the contract had to be let by tender, but that where it was under that amount, he could give the contract without any tender. That seems to be a very dangerous principle. A tender might be called for, and one might be a small amount over $200. It might be made known—though I am sure the Minister would not do anything of the kind—and another man might be induced to put in a tender for something just under $200, who might get the contract. That is quite possible, and it is even probable under certain circumstances.

Mr. HAGGART. I have never known such a case. In regard to Oldfield, that is simply a temporary matter. The reason why Oldfield post office was closed was that we could not get any postmaster.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I know that was the reason.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Has the hon. gentleman received any report on the question which was brought forward by my colleague and myself in relation to Herring's Bay in Halifax County? He stated that he would look into that matter.

Mr. HAGGART. Whenever a petition is brought in, it goes to the inspector for his report.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I would like to know if anything has been done in regard to the carriage of the mails between Chambord, on the line of the Lake St. John Railway, and Roberval? The railway has been opened between these two places for more than a year and a-half. And yet the mails have been carried under the old system, by a mail courier with a horse. Petitions have been sent to the Department in regard to this matter, and I think interviews have taken place also with the Minister, or with his officials and with the contractors of the railway, in regard to that service. There was a rumor that the Government had acquiesced in the demand to have the mails carried by railway instead of by a team, but the last time I was in Quebec I was unable to discover that anything had been done. I should like to know whether anything has been done in this matter, because I cannot understand why the Government retains the old system of carrying mails for a distance of 18 miles by means of a horse.

Mr. HAGGART. An offer was made that the mail should be carried from Chambord to Roberval at 4 cents per mile. I did not receive any acceptance of this offer, and it is only yesterday or the day before that the railway accepted it, and now the business will be properly carried out.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I should like to know what the Government has done in regard to the carriage of mails between Grand Falls and Edmundston. As a matter of fact, the mails get to their destination twenty-two hours after the passengers.

Mr. HAGGART. I have been waiting for an arrangement to be come to between that company and the company which runs from Rivière du Loup to Temiscouata. The reason why no arrangement was made was that the Government was awaiting the arrangements that might be made between the railway companies. I have been waiting for a connection which I understood was to be made, and in the meantime I find that the mail is being carried by couriers at a cheaper rate than it would be carried by the railway.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I have before called the attention of the Minister to some occurrences in connection with the Quebec post office, especially in regard to the position of the Inspector, Mr. Bolduc, and the deputy inspector, Mr. Fréchette. I have since had some information in regard to the superannuation of Mr. Fréchette, which I did not have when I referred to it before. I have been informed by the gentleman himself that his superannuation was dated on 1st January, or that he received notice on the 1st January, that he was to be superannuated. He did not receive the formal notification, but, when he was making his New Year's calls, one of his friend told him he had heard some news about him. He said: "What news?" I said, "The news of your superannuation." He said: "I never heard of such news." "Well," I said, "there is a rumor in the post office to that effect, a letter has just been received, stating that you had been superannuated, and that your superannuation is to commence from yesterday or the day before." He was making New Year's calls. He was so surprised that he nearly fainted, as he told me himself, and he actually had to take a cab to go home with. He sent to the post office and the news was confirmed. I can but repeat what I stated upon that occasion, that Mr. Fréchette is not an old man at all. He may be about 60 years of age, but before he was superannuated, he did not look more than 50. He is in perfect good health, and he told me that he had never failed on any occasion to go to his office. He was a model officer as deputy inspector for the district. If the Postmaster General will take the trouble to inform himself he will find that there never was a better officer. The Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Militia know Mr. Fréchette very well. There is no more respectable man in Quebec, and no better officer. He told me himself that he had never been in better health in his life than he was when he was superannuated. He had been 20 years in the office, and he considered himself just as able to discharge the duties of deputy inspector as he had been at any time during the last 20 years. Why was he superannuated? We do not know. By whom is he replaced? I do not know that either. It is in the recollection of the House that the Postmaster General was not able to give any information at that time. He said that he had no more details than the Order in Council deciding upon the superannuation. I would like to know now upon what grounds Mr. Fréchette has been superannuated? It is a great hardship to Mr. Fréchette, but the public interest is also concerned, because every one knows it is a terrible waste of money to superannuate a man and replace him by another man who is no more able to discharge the duties of the office. To all appearances Mr. Fréchette was able to discharge the duties of that office for 20 years more. He is now receiving a superannuation allowance of, I think, $650, and he told me that he could not live upon that allowance, and that he had been too long in the service to go into any other occupation now. The public of Quebec are very much interested in having some explanation of that superannuation.

Mr. HAGGART. I brought a return down to the House giving the reasons for the retirement of these two gentlemen, Mr. Fréchette and Mr. Bolduc. It was found necessary to reorganise the Quebec Post Office, which was getting into a very bad state. The assistant postmaster was in his sixty-second year, had been a long time in the office, and the inspector told me that he was incapable of managing the office. As it is well known Mr. Bolduc was owing $5,000 to the Government and had only repaid it a year or two ago. The inspector reported that he was unfit for the management of the office. The appointment of an assistant postmaster has not yet been made, but it will be when we can get a party who is perfectly fit for the position. We are trying the gentleman who is there now. In reference to the statement the hon. gentleman made that notices were not sent to these two parties, you will see by the copy of the return that after the order was decided on by the Department, a notice was sent to these gentlemen informing them of their superannuation. Mr. Bolduc was appointed on the 21st November, 1854, and had been in receipt of a salary of $1,400 a year from the 1st of July, 1875. He is in the sixty-second year of his age, and on the report of the inspector he was superannuated. The superannuation allowance is the usual amount to which he should be entitled.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I am more and more surprised at the reasons given. I know that Mr. Bolduc has never been sick in his life, and he never was in a better state of health than he was at the time of his superannuation. Now, as to the other reason for his retirement which was not mentioned then, the defalcation, I think it shows a queer system of managing public affairs to superannuate an officer who had been a defaulter. If there was really a defalcation, he should have been dismissed at once, and not given a pension at the public expense. But I think there is some other explanation than that pretended defalcation. As to bad management in the post office, that is news to me. I think I know as much of the public of Quebec as the deputy inspector does, who has been there only one or two years. He was a stranger to Quebec, although I admit that he is a very intelligent and able officer. I say that I never heard any complaints about the management of the deputy postmaster's office; on the contrary I have always heard his management highly praised in Quebec. Mr. Bolduc has shown himself to be a model officer. There were some complaints about the general management of the Post Office Department, but none against the management of the deputy postmaster's office. If there ever was an efficient officer in that department, it was Mr. Bolduc, who, I hear now, for the first time, has been reported by the inspector to be unfit to occupy the position any longer. I am sure that whoever the Government may appoint in his place, he will not be as efficient for some years to come as Mr. Bolduc was.

Mr. LAURIER. Did I understand the Postmaster General to say that Mr. Bolduc was a defaulter?

Mr. HAGGART. I understand so. He was a defaulter for a great many years.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec).

Mr. LAURIER. And yet this man, who was a defaulter, was superannuated, and is paid a pension out of the treasury of the country. If ever an outrage was committed against the people this is the case; and if this is the way in which our affairs are to be administered, where are we to end? He is a defaulter, and admitted to be so. I do not know whether the charge is true or not, it surprises me, for I never heard of it; but if we are to believe the head of the Department, here is a defaulter who has been paid a pension. If he was a defaulter, he should have been brought before a criminal court; but instead of that being done, he is superannuated and given a pension. I do not see how this transaction can be defended.

Mr. HAGGART. Why did you not try him? He was a defaulter when you were in power.

Mr. LAURIER. That is more than I know. If he was a defaulter in our time—

Mr. HAGGART. The whole time.

Mr. LAURIER. That may be so or not. I do not know. I take the statement made by the Minister, that he was a defaulter. If he was a defaulter in our time, surely he was not superannuated and given a pension in our time.

Mr. HAGGART. He was a defaulter for a great many years, and during the whole time hon. gentlemen opposite were in Government. Since then he has paid up his defalcation, the last amount about two years ago.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman will not be allowed to shirk the question in that manner. He says he was a defaulter at that time. How did I know that? I cannot be expected to know such matters, and I did not pretend to know it. But the hon. gentleman has acted on that fact or not. If he considers he was a defaulter, surely that was not a motive for superannuating him. If he did not consider him such, he had no right to bring in the name of the officer, and it is unfair to the officer to so act, if he is not treated as a defaulter.

Mr. HAGGART. It is thought inadvisable to state to the House all the reasons given by the inspectors for superannuating officers. I did not know he was a defaulter until his name came before me for superannuation. He had been for 12 or 15 years a defaulter, but he had paid the amount of his defalcation, and his superannuation was deducted from his salary; and in the last two or three years he has paid up the amount of his default. Surely we could not then dismiss him after taking the superannuation, when he had made reparation to the full extent, and dismiss him without superannuation.

Mr. LAURIER. That is perfectly right. If Mr. Bolduc was a defaulter, and if his offence was condoned by the Department and he paid up the amount of his defalcation, the hon. Minister has no right to bring the matter before the House. It is unfair to the officer, when the whole matter has been condoned by the Department. I look now to the motive of the superannuation. It cannot be the deficit. I find, however, a memorandum to the effect that Mr. Bolduc, Assistant Postmaster, now in the sixty-second year of his age, has been placed on the retired list since 1st January, 1890, with an allowance of $980. His average salary during the time of service was $1,400. At sixty-two years he is in the prime of life and able to discharge his duties, and there is no reason why the Government should have dispensed with his services.

Mr. McMULLEN. A new phase of the superannuation system has been developed, namely, that when an inspector reports the inefficiency of a servant he is liable to be immediately superannuated without any communication taking place with him. This superannuation system was intended, however, for the purpose of pensioning civil servants after long and efficient service. In this case the man was quite capable, at all events there is no evidence that he was incapable. Men should not be superannuated simply because the inspector reports them as being inefficient. It is unfair that the inspector of post offices should be allowed to exercise the power of recommending men, who are capable of discharging their duties, for superannuation.

Mr. LANGEЛИER (Quebec). Did I understand the Postmaster General to state that the other officer was a defaulter?

Mr. HAGGART. There is nothing reported against Mr. Fréchette, except that he was not an officer qualified for that important position.

Mr. LANGEЛИER (Quebec). I am very much surprised at the statement of the Minister. I do not find in the return before the House any such statement made, and there is nothing to support the statement that the superannuation was made at the request of the inspector.

Mr. HAGGART. It was decided to reorganise the office, and this officer was considered by the inspector not to be capable of managing such an office as Quebec.

Mr. LANGEЛИER (Quebec). I do not understand that the present inspector is a kind of autocrat who can do what he pleases as to the Quebec Post Office, without reference to the Post Office Department. I do not see in this return anything to the effect mentioned by the Postmaster General.

Mr. HAGGART. The inspector's reports are not brought down; they are treated as confidential documents.

Mr. LANGEЛИER (Quebec). It is very unsatisfactory not to be placed in possession of the reason which actuated the action of the head of the Department. It is desirable to know what suggestions were made, and what foundation there was for them. I am sure that the inspector would not state under his signature, in any newspaper in Quebec, that either Mr. Bolduc or Mr. Fréchette were inefficient. All who have had business with the post office will be of a different opinion, and know better than the post office inspector. All those who have business at the post office will protest against a statement of that kind. That is the reason why I would like to have the report of the inspector, because if it were published, the public of Quebec would be in a position to contradict it.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I would like to ask the Postmaster General what has been done in reference to the post office at Maple Hill? This post office has been established for nearly thirty years, but this year it appears that the allowance to the postmaster was reduced, and the postmaster refused to keep it longer. I would like to ask the Postmaster General whether or not this post office has been re-opened, as he promised early in the Session?

Mr. HAGGART. Maple Hill post office was re-opened some time ago, and the postmaster has been appointed. In answer to the member for Quebec (Mr. Langelier) I will give the exact words which Mr. Bolduc stated in his correspondence, when it was decided to reorganise the Quebec post office. He stated: That he did not regard Mr. Bolduc as a suitable person for the position, and in a semi-official correspondence with the Postmaster General he recommended that Mr. Bolduc should be superannuated, and then it goes on to say who should be recommended in his place.

Mr. LAURIER. Who says that?

Mr. HAGGART. Mr. Bolduc, the inspector.

Mr. LANGEЛИER (Quebec). I have been speaking with the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) now, and I am surprised to hear what has been read, because that hon. gentleman received quite a different statement from Mr. Bolduc, the inspector. Mr. Bolduc was reproached with having been the cause of these superannuations, and he denied that he had anything to do with it, or that he had made any report that these gentlemen were inefficient. He spoke as if he had been asked to make a report as to their age, but he never complained of their inefficiency. If he did, the Postmaster General could call on the public press of Quebec, or ask the opinion of any one doing business in that city, who will contradict it. I have been mayor of Quebec for eight years, and I have had more to do with the post office than Mr. Bolduc, the inspector, who is a new man imported into Quebec, only a short time ago, and who is a brother of a senator lately appointed, I know Quebec better than he does, and I never heard any complaint against the efficiency of the two gentlemen who were superannuated.

Mr. HAGGART. The Department here are likely to know better than the hon. gentleman as to the efficiency of the post office at Quebec. It has been reported to the Department again and again that the Quebec Post Office was not in an efficient condition.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman is citing from a report which I understand is the basis of the superannuation. How is it we have not that report brought down in answer to a return for all the papers connected with this matter which was moved for and laid on the Table of the House this Session?

Mr. HAGGART. I think the hon. gentleman will remember that in motions of this kind for papers, I always make a statement excepting the inspector's reports, which are confidential and are not brought down.

Mr. LAURIER. Do I understand that these superannuations are made on confidential reports which cannot see the light of day?

Mr. HAGGART. A good many of them are.

Mr. LAURIER. Then, I do not think that is right or proper.

Mr. EISENHAUER. I would remind the Postmaster General that I have during several Sessions presented petitions for better mail accommodation and for post offices in the County of Lunenburg, and nothing has yet been done for that county. The expense that would be incurred by giving these districts additional mail services, and by establishing post offices would be very small. I trust the hon. gentleman will take that matter into consideration and see that something is done.

Mr. HAGGART. Whenever I receive such petitions, I refer them to the inspector for his report, and I am guided by that without any consideration at all, as to the particular locality for which these post offices are asked.

Mr. EISENHAUER. The question is whether the inspector takes any trouble to ascertain.

Mr. HAGGART. I think there is no doubt that he does. If the hon. gentleman will call on the Department, he will get those reports as there would not be anything confidential in them.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I notice that the appropriations for the mail service is very largely increased, while I learn from a great many postmasters in country places that the allowance made to them for keeping the post offices has been decreased. I would like to know how it is that the Postmaster General has made this decrease in the salaries of country postmasters.

Mr. HAGGART. The manner of paying the postmasters has not been altered since I have been in the Department, and I understand from my assistant that it has not been altered for a great number of years.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Can the Postmaster General give us information as to the way this reduction took place?

Mr. HAGGART. Because, I suppose, there is a reduction of collection in the different offices.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Does the Postmaster General give us to understand that the business done at these offices has diminished, in keeping with the reduction of the business of the country? Is that the inference we have to draw?

Mr. HAGGART. If the hon. gentleman looks at the Estimates he will find that the payment of postmasters, as a whole, has increased.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I know that some parties have complained to me that their salaries have been reduced from eight to ten dollars, and it is somewhat singular that they should be reduced in this way. I think the fact must be admitted by the Postmaster General himself, that there is no class in the public service worse remunerated for their services than the country postmasters.

Mr. O'BRIEN. With regard to the diminution in some post offices, I may say that I have a great deal to do with the Post Office Department and I find that in a new country where railways are being opened, as they are being opened in some parts of Ontario, the revenues from some post offices are constantly changing and, consequently, the salaries to some post offices are reduced. A place may be important, but if a railway runs a few miles away from it, it may lose a good deal of that importance and in consequence reductions of the post offices revenue ensue. There is a complete change from year to year in the nature of the population and the methods of doing business, and consequently there is a frequent diminution in the business of some of the post offices, and an increase in the business of others.

Mr. LANDERKIN. A few days ago I brought to the notice of the hon. Postmaster General the subject of the postage of British periodicals mailed in this country, and I was told by the hon. Postmaster General that the organ of books and notions was entirely incorrect and did not understand the question. I have since received a statement from the Executive Committee of the Booksellers' and Stationers' Association of Ontario in reference to this subject, which I will read to the House.

Mr. HAGGART. We have all read it.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Then you understand the nature of it. I understand that the postal revenue does not come up to the expenditure. If the postal revenue is fixed on the basis indicated by this return, it is no wonder that it does not meet the expenditure of the Department. I think by a re-adjustment of the postal tariff the revenue could be largely increased, and the interest of this country largely promoted, and improvements made that would tend to increase the postal facilities to the public and the trade in the matter of books and periodicals delivered in this country. Now I will read a letter which I have received from a gentleman concerned in the book trade in Toronto:

"TORONTO, 18th March, 1890.

"DR. LANDERKIN, M.P.

"DEAR SIR,—The booksellers of Canada are much indebted to you for bringing up the question of postage on periodicals in Parliament. Letters and petitions from the trade have been sent to the Post Office Department for five years past on this question; deputations interviewed the Postmaster General concerning it as long ago as three years since, and it seems impossible to get them to understand it. They appear to be under this impression, that by reducing the rate to one cent per pound they will at the same time reduce the revenue, and as the post office revenue is less than the expenditure, they cannot afford it. Such an impression is entirely erroneous. The fact is that more money is paid to the post office in New York for mailing English magazines from there to the Canadian trade than our Government is at present getting from the dealers in Canada on periodicals altogether. At present the cheapest way to bring English magazines to Toronto is to ship them across the ocean by freight to New York and bring them by mail from there. I cannot say exactly what quantity is brought to Canada in this way, but it is fully 90 per cent. of all the English magazines used in the Dominion, somewhere between five and ten tons per month. These were formerly brought by freight across the ocean to Halifax and Quebec, and thence by express to Montreal and Toronto. If the Canadian postal rate had been the same as the American, in all probability they would now be mailed at Halifax in winter and Quebec in summer, instead of at New York as at present. But as Postmaster Haggart's rates are so much higher than Postmaster Wannamaker's, the latter gets the business. Taking the quantity of English magazines at the lower estimate, five tons per month, you will find that it would cost $4,500 per year to mail them from Quebec, while it only costs $1,200 to mail them from New York. But what we have to complain about is not that our Postal Department will not take this $1,200 per year at Halifax and Quebec, but will rather let the amount go into the American treasury at New York, and receive the magazines from the American postal authorities at Niagara Falls and distribute them all over the Dominion, from Halifax to Vancouver for nothing. This is not what we are complaining about at all. It makes no difference to us whether we receive them via Halifax, New York or via Jericho, and if Jericho is the cheapest, you may bet that we will bring them that way every time even if the Turk gets the revenue. But what we have to complain about is simply this, that after receiving them in Toronto, we cannot mail them to subscribers and the retail trade as cheaply as booksellers living in the United States can, that our market is freer and more open to the American trade than it is to our own, that having to pay one cent for four ounces or fraction thereof postage on English magazines and having to stamp each and every package separately we are compelled to pay six times as much for mailing English magazines from Toronto to subscribers in Canada as a bookseller in Buffalo has to pay. We complain that this is not right—that it is unjust, and I think the Postmaster General will find it less difficult to remedy the matter than to convince us that we are wrong.

"Thanking you for the interest you have taken in the question and trusting that you will not allow it to drop,

"I remain,

Yours sincerely,
"W. T. WILSON."

If the statements made in this letter are correct, and they appear to be well founded, I think it is the duty of the Postmaster General, and if he will not attend to it, I think it is the duty of the House to look after this matter and provide a remedy, and a remedy is very easy and simple and within the reach of the Department, so that we can retain in this country the revenue which is now going into the treasury of the United States.

Mr. HAGGART. In answer to the hon. gentleman, let me show the amount of treasure that would come into our vaults from his proposition. Periodicals from the old country, which come by mail from the old country to this country are remailed free, and if they come to this country by freight in most cases they are mailed free; but the regular postal rate for 52 British weekly papers sent to any part of Canada is 12 cents a year. The rate which the hon. gentleman proposes we should substitute for ours, in order to fill our vaults, is one-half a cent a year.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The question is this: We now send out few of these magazines, and the postage on all that are sent out goes into the treasury of the United States. If the Postmaster General decides to continue this restrictive policy, this export duty on magazines, it will of course drive the whole trade into the United States, and that in effect is what the policy of the Government is doing.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to draw the attention of the Postmaster General to a defect which exists in the mail service between the town of Picton in the county of Prince Edward and the town of Adolphustown. Adolphustown post office, which is the chief post office in the township of Adolphustown, is only some eight or nine miles from the town of Picton, the county seat in the county of Prince Edward, and that county is separated from the township of Adolphustown and from the county of Lennox simply by the narrow Bay of Quinté. I am not aware of a single mail crossing the Bay of Quinté except that at Belleville so that the whole county of Lennox and the county of Prince Edward, are separated, so far as the mail service is concerned, by an insuperable barrier. Now, take the route across the bay at Glenora or what was formerly called Stone Mills. Adolphustown and Stone Mills are only three miles apart, yet a letter written from Glenora to Adolphustown, or from Picton to Adolphustown, cannot reach the latter place except by some such route as this. It has to travel by stage to Picton.

Mr. HAGGART. There is a subsidy given the Rathbun boat to carry the mails from Deseronto.

Mr. PLATT. That does not touch Adolphustown.

Mr. HAGGART. But you said they all went round.

Mr. PLATT. So it will by Napanee, just as it now goes around by way of Georgetown to Napanee. But the boats are not running now, and a letter written three miles from Adolphustown post office has to travel to Picton by stage, then thirty-three miles by rail to Trenton, then fifty-five to Napanee, and then twenty-five miles east by stage again to reach Adolphustown, taking in all one day and a half to reach Adolphustown. In summer when the mail is carried by the Rathbun boat, the same letter will go to Picton by stage, to Deseronto by boat, to Napanee by rail, and thence twenty-five miles by stage to Adolphustown, taking four days to get a return. If the hon. gentleman would look at the map, he could see that that could be easily remedied. He has a line running now down the North Marysburg shore within sight of Adolphustown post office only two miles distant. By connecting Glenora and Adolphustown, the remedy would be complete, and a very great convenience would be supplied to the people of Adolphustown.

Mr. HAGGART. I will take a note of it.

Mr. DOYON. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, Colonel Brosseau, who was postmaster at Laprairie, resigned his office two years ago and was succeeded by a gentleman named Grondin. The former gentleman received a salary of $250 a year, and the latter receives but $210. Both of them are friends of the Government, and Mr. Grondin performs his duties to the general satisfaction as well as Colonel Brosseau did. It appears to me, however, that business has not lessened in the Laprairie post office. On the contrary, it must have increased, if I am to judge by the subsidy which the hon. the Minister of Public Works has just placed at the disposal of Laprairie village for the erection of a post office, and I beg this opportunity of congratulating the hon. Minister on his generosity towards the Laprairie village. It is true some members complained that certain localities, having a larger population, were not so favored; but one must have regard to the fact that the County of Laprairie has never been spoiled by Ministerial favors and that it is very proper that it should have its small share. Everybody knows that there is no patronage whatever in that county; there are even, in any of the Departments, very few public officers coming from the county. If I am not mistaken, there are only two of them, and they were appointed only two years ago and their salaries are very low. I, therefore, consider that the hon. the Minister of Public Works, in acting as he did, has been doing a simple act of justice towards the village and parish of Laprairie. I wish now to enquire from the hon. Postmaster General why he has reduced the salary of a good servant who needs it perhaps more than his predecessor did, and I think it would be a simple act of justice to give him the salary which Colonel Brosseau received.

Mr. HAGGART. If I understood the hon. gentleman rightly he was complaining about the reduction of salary of a postmaster. The salaries of the postmasters are computed every year or eighteen months, and are based on revenue. The percentage is calculated the same way in every case. There may have been a mistake in the calculation, but all the calculations are made up on the same principle for the postmasters in the whole Dominion.

Mr. PERRY. A very bad arrangement has been carried out from time to time during the present winter, between the Postmaster General and the mail carriers, with regard to the mail service from the Island to the main line. We have been as much as nine or ten days without any mail from the Island, and no doubt on the island they were the same length of time without receiving their letters. The steamer Stanley happened to make a trip successfully a week or two ago from Georgetown to Pictou, and the consequence was the mails were ordered from Cape Traverse to Georgetown. The result was we were five days without a mail. Any one who knows anything of Northumberland Straits knows well that this is the hardest time for a steamboat to cross there, and the best crossing is between the two capes. Why, then, not leave these mails to be carried by the boats? Is it because a few Liberals are engaged in these boats that the Government wish to deprive them from carrying the mail? If the agents of the Department on the Island do not know when the time is proper for this mail service to be changed from the Cape to Georgetown, or vice versa, they are not capable to represent the Postmaster General or his Department on the Island. The people on the Island expect to have their mails once every twenty-four hours, but as it is they are often nine or ten days without their mails. I want also to draw the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that on the 12th February, the House made an order for certain papers to be brought down in connection with the post office at Farmer Road, P.E.I. The hon. gentleman has said that the inspector stated a post office was not wanted there. How then came his deputy to promise a post office there very nearly a year ago? That can be shown in black and white, and I read his letter the other day. But there is somebody else behind the screen and I want to know by these papers upon whose recommendation a post office has not been established there. I do not want these papers garbled, but I want the whole of them. I want the petition, I want a copy of all the letters which have been asked for and promised and ordered by this House, I want all the correspondence between the Government and this gentleman, whoever he may be, and I have an idea who he is. If I cannot get his body, I want his ghost, and this House has a duty to perform, and that is to order the Postmaster General to send these papers down here without further delay. I want them, and I will take no excuse. If the hon. gentleman is not able to bring the four bones of that gentleman here, I will accept his ghost. I hope the papers will be brought down very soon. The hon. gentleman need not think to frighten me by nodding his head. I believe this is a question of privilege, and I may have to move to have the Postmaster General examined at the bar of the House. We are a small number here—only five, or six with myself. It will not do to put the blame on the Inspector in Charlottetown, Mr. Brecken, because I believe that Mr. Brecken recommended the establishment of that post office. I know that his deputy did, and the Postmaster General could not deny that, but I have my doubts as to whether he is correct or not in some of the statements he has made. I would like to know whether there is not some Sir John concerned in this matter. I do not mean Sir John Macdonald, but another Sir John who lives in Summerside.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) With reference to the mails from the Island, I think some discretion should be allowed to the postmaster as to the carriage of those mails. I crossed in the Stanley a short time ago. She arrived three days after she was due, and left half an hour before the mails were ready for her. The result was that they remained in Georgetown on Sunday and Monday, and were only received in Charlottetown on that day. We received notice that the boat was to leave Georgetown on Monday morning, and I supposed there would be a train leaving Charlottetown on Sunday night; but I found that the postmaster had sent the mails the other way, by the capes, and I had to hire a special train, at a cost of $40 or $50 to get to Georgetown to catch the boat. I think discretion should be allowed to the postmaster in this matter. Fortunately, for me, on that occasion there were some twenty other passengers who took advantage of the special train, and to that extent I was relieved of the cost, but the postmaster told me that he had no discretion and had to obey arbitrary orders. I am quite sure that if Mr. Brecken is given a certain amount of discretion, he will act upon it reasonably.

Mr. HAGGART. I thought the postmaster there had that discretion, and also that there was a close connection made by the train with the boat which carried the mail.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I thought so too, until I found that the mail had been sent the other way, by the cape.

Mr. HAGGART. I will enquire into the matter.

Mr. McMULLEN. Since we commenced discussing this item I find we have a change of chairman. I understood that we were taking these amounts item by item, but I see the present chairman is disposed to carry the whole en bloc.

The CHAIRMAN. I was informed that the whole was to be considered under one head.

Mr. WATSON. I would like to call the attention of the Postmaster General to the importance of establishing another service to Glenborough. There are three passenger trains running there each week, and there are only two mails. I think the additional service should be given.

Mr. HAGGART. I have considered that matter a good deal. It has been urged very strongly by the member for Winnipeg (Mr. Scarth) and the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly). These two gentlemen have been incessant in their efforts to obtain that mail service. I am inclined to give the matter very favorable consideration, but the amount required is very considerable.

Mr. WATSON. What would it cost in addition to the present service?

Mr. HAGGART. I think it would cost something in the neighborhood of $5,000 or $6,000. There is a large revenue derived from the post office in that neighborhood; and, as the hon. gentleman says, that service is very much needed. Whenever we can afford it we will put on the additional service.

Mr. ELLIS. Has the Postmaster General come to any decision as to the application of the letter carriers throughout the country for an increase of pay? Their present pay appears to be very low. I merely confine myself to the question whether the Postmaster General has come to any decision.

Mr. HAGGART. You will see by the estimates that I have made no provision for any increase.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I brought to the attention of the Department last year, the case of John Campbell, a letter carrier, who, while in the discharge of his duty, was killed on the Maine Central Railway; the train ran off the track and he was burned to death, leaving a wife and children. I asked for some compensation to his family, but the hon. gentleman seemed to think that two months' allowance was a sufficient gratuity. There was a man injured on the Canadian Pacific Railway for whom the Government made more allowance than that. Where a man dies in the discharge of his duty it seems to me there is even a stronger case for a gratuity. The man had been a long time in the service, and I think his family are fairly entitled to compensation.

Mr. HAGGART. I followed the usual course. There was no precedent for giving this man's family any more than the usual gratuity.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I understand that two months' allowance is usually given when a man dies, but in this case the man was killed while in the discharge of his duty, and that makes his case even stronger.

Mr. HAGGART. No discretion is left to the Postmaster General. All these matters come before the Treasury Board, and the Minister of Justice looks strictly into them.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Has the Minister of Justice no more bowels of compassion than the Treasury Board?

Mr. LANDERKIN. Before we leave this item I would like to bring to the notice of the Postmaster General the need of adding to the mail service on the Georgian Bay and Wellington Railway. It will be known to the Postmaster General, who has, no doubt, studied the condition of the postal service of this country, that this is a very important section, and yields a very large revenue. On the Toronto, Grey and Bruce Railway, they have two mails a day. That is quite proper, and quite enterprising on the part of the Postal Department. I would like them to extend the same service to the Georgian Bay and Wellington Railway that runs from Palmerston to Wiarton. It passes through a number of towns and villages, and a fine agricultural country, and I think it is the duty of the Minister to see that the people on that line receive the same accommodation as on other lines of railway. I understand that the Wellington, Grey and Bruce Railway have also two mails a day; if they have not, I think they should have. I think the Postmaster General should look into this matter with a view of seeing whether we cannot have an extended accommodation in the way of mail service there, and would the hon. gentleman have the kindness to let me know whether he thinks he will be able to comply with this request?

Mr. HAGGART. I cannot tell, I do not even know that two passenger trains a day are running on that road. I will make enquiries and find out what the receipts are from the towns in that section, and whether the Department would be justified in making the increased expenditure.

Mr. LANDERKIN. After you leave Palmerston you pass through Harrison: that has already two mails a day. Then you pass through Ayton, Neustadt, Hanover, Elmwood, Chesley, Tara, Allanford and on to Wiarton. All these are places of considerable importance, and I think, from the revenue they yield, they are entitled to the service. I think the hon. member for East Bruce (Mr. Cargill) will bear me out in what I say, that these towns are justly entitled to the fullest consideration from the Post Office Department, and are justly entitled to this service.

Mr. CARGILL. I am very glad that the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Landerkin) has brought this to the attention of the Postmaster General. I know that there have been numerous complaints with respect to the mail service north of Palmerston. During the summer season there are two daily trains, but in the fall of the year the Grand Trunk Railway takes off one train, and this reduces the mail service to one per day. Petitions have been sent by the County Council to the Department to increase that service in the winter season to two mails a day, and I should be very glad if the Department could see their way clear to grant that request.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I am well aware we have two trains a day in the summer, but, I think, during a short time in the winter season, one train a day is taken off. On three days in the week they have two trains, and during summer two trains a day both ways. I do not ask any favor from the Postmaster General, but I think we are, in justice, entitled to this additional accommodation in view of the large revenue which these places yield.

Government of the North-West Territories $186,910

Mr. MULOCK. In regard to the appropriation of $1,000 for the cost of elections in the North-West Territories, I think the time has arrived when we might fairly introduce the ballot. Is it the intention of the Government to introduce the ballot for the approaching elections?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I fancy the Assembly have that matter in their own hands, by the powers given them under the North-West Territories Act.

Mr. MULOCK. I think the item for printing in the North-West Territories ought to stand over, until those who object to printing the dual language are here to attend to their duties. I really think, after a debate extending over several days on printing these ordinances, it would only be right that we should give those gentlemen, who took such a deep interest in this matter, an opportunity to be present to lay their views before the House and before the country. I think the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) took an interest in this matter, and I believe the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn) had some views upon it—I do not know to what extent, though I understand he took an interest to-day in financial matters. I would like to know whether he is now in favor of this expenditure for printing in the North-West Territories? I think we should have his views as a follower of the hon. member for North Simcoe.

Mr. COCKBURN. I am very much obliged to the hon. gentleman for having had the courtesy to ask me to give my views. I may say that I have unlimited confidence in the Government, which I am prepared to follow; and, no doubt, any proposals they bring forward this evening in regard to printing or anything else will commend themselves to the mature judgment of the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock).

Mr. MULOCK. It is no doubt satisfactory to the Government to find that the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn) is growing as a supporter of the Government. I remember a year ago he had not that unbounded confidence in them; I might say he had it until he went to Toronto. I understand that on a certain occasion his constituents induced him to withdraw for the time being that confidence which he had hitherto reposed in them.

Mr. COCKBURN. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I must simply tell him that he is stating what is not consistent with the facts. The hon. member for Centre Toronto gives his vote as he conscientiously believes to be right. The hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) is so much under the direction of newspapers and his constituents, that he is utterly unable to imagine any person having an opinion entirely his own.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who is the legal adviser?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Mr. Scott, Q.C., formerly of Orangeville.

Mr. WATSON. Has any arrangement been made with the Manitoba Government with a view to keeping the insane people in the asylum instead of in the penitentiary.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I never heard the question raised.

Mr. WATSON. I do not think it is a very suitable place to keep people. It would be much better to keep them in the asylum than in the penitentiary?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Up to the time I left all insane people were sent to Selkirk asylum.

Mr. WATSON. What has been done with the four boring machines, and what results have been obtained?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I understand they have been very unsuccessful in the work for which they were intended. They have been used almost entirely in the dry portion of the Assiniboia. They are used entirely for boring for water, and are capable of going down 300 or 400 feet. They are seldom required more than 100 or 150 feet, for water is generally found at 60 feet.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. For what is $500 paid to Judge Richardson?

Mr. DEWDNEY. This is a claim two or three years old. Judge Richardson was engaged, at my request, when I was Lieutenant Governor, to prepare an ordinance, in which work he was engaged during the month of August, 1886. The claim was made during my term of office, but I did not make any recommendation. Since that time the matter has been brought before the Lieutenant Governor, and a memorandum has been submitted to this Government respecting the claim, which was thought to be a reasonable one.

Committee rose and reported the resolutions.

Mr. COCKBURN.

ADJOURNMENT—ANNUNCIATION DAY.

Mr. TROW. On Saturday we have a holiday, and on Tuesday there is a statutory holiday; and as many of the hon. members are going east and west it will be inconvenient for them to leave here to-morrow night, remain at home over the Sabbath, and return on Monday, which is private members' day, and then have a holiday on Tuesday. It is advisable, I think, that the Government should agree to an adjournment from Friday night until Wednesday at three o'clock. I, therefore, move:

That when this House rises on Friday night it stands adjourned until three o'clock p.m. Wednesday.

Mr. LOVITT. If the members want to go home, I do not see why they cannot go home and stay there. It should be remembered that the Maritime Provinces members live so far away that they cannot get home the entire Session.

Mr. McMULLEN. I call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the fact that the Don improvement scheme, and several other important matters, are set down for consideration before the Railway Committee at 11 o'clock on Wednesday morning.

Mr. TAYLOR. This is only a motion to adjourn the House, and not to adjourn the committees.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think the House should give some consideration to members who come from a distance. It is understood that the Minister of Finance will introduce his Budget statement on Tuesday, and the probabilities are that there will be a slim House and that this will be postponed. Whether or not, Monday is the only day which remains to private members after the Government takes Wednesday, and they should have an opportunity of bringing these matters before the House. We have been here over two months now, and the probabilities are that we will be here a month longer. I do not think that these hon. gentlemen who want to go home should ask the whole House to be adjourned for their convenience. In a very short time we will have to adjourn for Easter, and, of course, I do not oppose such an adjournment, but it is becoming quite a serious thing for men who have business to attend to, to stay here longer. It is unjust to a number of members that this adjournment should take place, and it is not in the interests of the country.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I quite agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Davies) that it is unjust to members who come from a distance, that this adjournment should be asked. There are a number of Public Bills and Orders which should be disposed of, and private members should have an opportunity to bring them forward. We have every prospect of being here now until the 1st of May, and probably longer. It is not right that the business of Parliament should be delayed by such an adjournment.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government of course are in the hands of the House in this matter, and from all that I can learn, I think that the majority of the House is in favor of the motion made by the hon. member for Perth. After all, it is only one day, and I think that the hon. members from the Maritime Provinces might allow their friends, and their friendly foes, to go home and not break up their chance holiday by coming back on Monday. All the members will be here on Wednesday morning and the business will go on at three o'clock. I do not know whether my hon. friend the Minister of Finance will not consent to postpone the Budget until Thursday.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, on Thursday.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I will point out to the First Minister, that what my hon. friend says is perfectly correct, as to the probable result of postponing the Budget until Thursday. If the financial statement is delivered on Wednesday, there is a fair chance of getting the debate, important as it is, through by Friday night, although I cannot say that that will be the case; but there is a certainty that if the financial statement is made on Thursday, the debate will be carried over until Tuesday and that means that the whole of next week will be devoted to the Budget discussion.

Mr. FISHER. It seems to me that it would be much better to sit on Saturday next, and thus make up for the loss of the following Tuesday. There are many members of the House who feel that they have been already kept too long here, and that the Session should be advanced as rapidly as possible, so that before spring opens they can return to their occupations.

Mr. MULOCK. I think it is very unfortunate that the work of the Session should be postponed to a period when members are anxious to return to their homes; and it should be remembered that every interruption of the business now tends to lengthen the Session. Personally, I sympathise with the motion; but, having regard to the convenience of hon. gentlemen from a distance, I think we should proceed with the work of the House as rapidly as possible. I think we are not promoting the public interest by giving up the time that we ought to devote to public business, even for one day, thereby throwing important measures over to the close of the Session, especially when we are going to have a further vacation at Easter.

Mr. TROW. I do not think that adjourning over Monday will prolong the Session. It is a day exclusively for private members, and already on two separate occasions the motions have been read, and the members were not prepared to go on with their business.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not wish to press the question of order, as a large number of the members are opposed to it. The motion cannot be put except by general consent, but if it is put, I think we ought to have a division upon it.

FRIDAY, 21st March, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

COLUMBIA AND KOOTENAY RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. BERGERON presented the sixteenth report of the Committee on Standing Orders, recommending that the Columbia and Kootenay Railway and Navigation Company should be allowed to introduce a private Bill, for reasons stated in the report, notwithstanding that the time had expired.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thought that yesterday we had the last of these reports from the Standing Orders Committee. I think the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), who so ably performs the functions and duties of president of that Committee, should give some explanation where the urgency exists in this matter. This application does not look like the reform he indicated yesterday.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not know that it is the time to give an explanation until after the motion is made.

Mr. MARA moved :

In accordance with the recommendation of the Select Standing Committee on Standing Orders, that the petition of the Columbia and Kootenay Railway Company for an Act to declare their railway to be a work to the general advantage of Canada, and to confer upon the company certain powers, be now read and received.

Mr. BERGERON. Before this motion is adopted, I wish to say one word in answer to my hon. friend for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell). Although I presented a report and asked the consideration of the House upon it, I had not the honor to preside over the Committee this morning. It was presided over by the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien), who is satisfied, with the remainder of the Committee, that the recommendation in this report should be made. If the hon. gentleman wishes some further information, I may say that the delay was caused by the British Columbia House of Assembly. The same measure was before that body, and it was only sanctioned last week, and could not come down here earlier.

Motion agreed to.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 105) to amend chapter 148, Revised Statutes of Canada, respecting the improper use of fire-arms and other weapons.—(Mr. Brown.)

THE MEMBER FOR LINCOLN.

Mr. GIROUARD moved :

That a Message be sent to the Senate requesting their honors to give leave to the Hon. Sir David Lewis Macpherson, K.C.M.G., one of their members, to attend and give evidence before the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections in the enquiry relating to the connection of John Charles Rykert, Esq., member for Lincoln and Niagara, with a grant of certain timber limits in the North-West Territories.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. GIROUARD moved :

That the evidence taken before the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, and also any letters, documents or papers which may be filed with the Chairman of the Committee by Mr. Rykert, be printed from day to day for the use of members of the Committee, and that Rule 94 be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

SERGEANT VALIQUETTE'S CASE.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to refer to a matter which was brought up by the hon. member for West Durham in connection with the Valiquette case. The hon. member, after reading over the papers, drew my attention to a letter among them indicating that Colonel Hughes, who occupies a very high position, as we all know, had been acting under a power of attorney on behalf of Sergeant Valiquette, and that some complaints were brought by Valiquette against him. I think it only due to Colonel Hughes that I should read a telegram which I received from him to-day, supplemented by information which I have been able to obtain from my Department. Colonel Hughes telegraphs :

"I acted as attorney for Valiquette. I paid him every cent I received from your Department for himself and family. I hold receipt from Valiquette for the moneys, and will forward it to you if necessary. I never received any communication from the Department on this subject."

I wish also to state that the cheque which was paid to Valiquette was in the usual way made payable to his order. It was sent to him directly, and any transaction which may have occurred between him and Colonel Hughes was a matter between themselves. I wish also to state that, after the cheque had been received by Valiquette, Colonel Hughes sent in his resignation as a member of the militia force, and was no longer under the control of the Department. I think it proper to make these few remarks, so that the matter, from the standpoint of Colonel Hughes, could be explained immediately. I will bring down, as soon as I receive it, the receipt which Colonel Hughes says he has forwarded to me, and also the papers which have been collected in the Department, explaining the whole Valiquette matter.

Mr. BLAKE. I perfectly understood that the cheque was made payable to Valiquette's order, because that was the reason a power of attorney was required. While it is satisfactory to know that the money was all paid, the complaint of Valiquette was that it was paid in dribblets, and, therefore, I wanted to know when it was paid.

PRIVATE HURRELL'S CASE.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Before the Orders are called, I should like to lay on the Table some information which the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) required in the case of Private Hurrell. It is a memorandum addressed to me by the Deputy of my Department, Colonel Panet, and it says :

"The undersigned has the honor to report, that the papers now laid before Parliament comprise all the official letters and documents received and sent in the case of the claim of Private Charles T. Hurrell, 90th Battalion, for compensation on account of illness contracted during the North-West campaign of 1885."

THE BUDGET SPEECH.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It would be convenient, if the hon. Minister of Finance would state now definitely, on what day he proposes to take up the Budget.

Mr. FOSTER. My present intention is to deliver the statement on Thursday of next week.

PRIVATE BILL LEGISLATION.

Mr. BLAKE. Before the Orders are called, I wish to call the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite to a suggestion which I took the liberty of making in a debate the other day, and which may, perhaps, be deserving of some further consideration. It was with reference to an improvement in the method of originating Private Bill legislation. At this stage of the Session it is impossible for any private member, except with the consent of the Government, to advance any measure he has in hand. I wish to say, that if I received an intimation that it would be assented to, I would undertake to propose the appointment of a select committee to sit in conference with a committee of the other Chamber, for the purpose of endeavoring to prepare some scheme by which that could be effected.

TRAD ERELATIONS WITH THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. MITCHELL. Before the Orders are called, I would direct the attention of the Government to a very important communication from Washington, which I have seen, in regard to a report made by a committee over which Mr. Hitt presides—I believe the Committee on Foreign Relations—in which, it is stated, they have unanimously agreed to recommend that the President of the United States be authorised to appoint three Commissioners to meet and consult with three to be appointed by Canada, should the Government of Canada choose to appoint them, with the view of enquiring into, and, if possible, improving the business relations between Canada and the United States. I should like to ask hon. gentlemen if any such information has come to their knowledge, because it is a matter which largely affects the prosperity of the country, and in which the public are deeply interested?

Mr. FOSTER. I may say that we have had no intimation of that kind.

Mr. MITCHELL. I regret very much to hear it, because several private telegrams have been received to that effect

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would like to ask the Finance Minister if it is his intention to have the Banking Bill distributed among the members before the adjournment? If it is intended to carry the Bill this Session, it is very important that members should have it in time to send to the outlying portions of the Dominion, the furthest away from the Capital; and if not distributed until after the adjournment, and after the hon. gentleman makes his financial statement, it will be utterly impossible to those interested in many parts of the Dominion to receive it and return it in time to members here with any comments they may desire to make on it.

Mr. FOSTER. The Bill is being pushed through at the printing office with all possible dispatch. The very first moment that copies are available they will be put in the hands of members, but I am afraid that will not be to-day.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Salaries of Officers and Inspectors of Excise.....$277,881 25

Mr. COSTIGAN. The first increase is $650, distributed as follows:—

Powell, J. B., Guelph.....	$ 45 00
Girdlestone, R. J. M., Winnipeg.....	50 00
Dowling, Thos., Donald.....	135 00
Cahill, T., Peterboro.....	150 00
Hicks, W. H., Toronto.....	20 00
Nichols, J. T., Stratford.....	250 00
	650 00

There were twelve new appointments made during 1889-90, as per schedule B:

Bayard, G. A., London.....	$ 500 00
Boucher, O. N. E., St. Johns.....	600 00
Codd, H. J., Montreal.....	500 00
Gatien, E., St. Johns.....	500 00
Leighton, W. R., Victoria.....	300 00
Raircot, C. E. G., Montreal.....	500 00
Saucier, F. X., Winnipeg.....	500 00
Sexton, John, Quebec.....	600 00
Verner, F., Montreal.....	500 00
Weir, James, Windsor.....	600 00
Winter, A. W., Toronto.....	500 00
Waller, John, Ottawa.....	500 00
	6,100 00
3 new Excisemen.....	$1,800 00
1 Messenger, Toronto.....	400 00
	2,200 00
Total.....	$8,300 00

There were four new appointments proposed, amounting to $2,200. By putting them under the head of proposed appointments, I mean that the appointments were recommended at the time the Estimates were prepared, but not completed. Then there are eight additional excisemen to the staff for next year, which represents $4,800. The special increases in schedule C, amount to $350, and are as follows:—

Deputy Collector at Donald.....	$200 00
McNamara, Quebec.....	250 00
Patrick Cullen, Montreal.....	200 00

The first of these items was to bring the salary of Mr. Dowling, deputy collector at Donald, to something near the salary of his predecessor. It is proposed to give Mr. McNamara, of Quebec, $250, because at the time of the construction of the Department of Inland Revenue that officer had been in the service, and had passed an examination and obtained a first class certificate; but for years his pay has been that of a third class exciseman. His case was brought to my attention and put before the Council and the Treasury Board, and in view of the fact that he had long possessed a certificate of first class exciseman, his legal right to the salary was undisputed. I propose, therefore, that $250 be paid to give him the maximum of that salary, which he would have reached many years ago. To Patrick Cullen, of Montreal, the $200 is his salary as caretaker. The regular increases represent $5,263, being increases provided for under the Act and according to the regulations of the Department. That would make a total increase of salary in the year of $19,663. With the exception of the eight appointments I have mentioned, specially recommended as an addition to the staff, the appointments in all cases were to replace officers who had died or left the service.

Mr. MITCHELL. I did not observe any names that I recognise as belonging to the county I have the honor to represent. How is it that county is left out?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The special increases for the whole Dominion are only $600.

Mr. MITCHELL. You should not leave out Northumberland altogether.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Northumberland comes in with the rest. The amount of $5,265 applies to all the Dominion. I may say, that in the Department of Inland Revenue the salaries are regulated strictly under the Civil Service Act.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does the County of Northumberland get any of that amount?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It gets the same consideration as any other portion of the Dominion?

Mr. MITCHELL. But under this vote, does any one in that county get anything at all?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes; every official will receive an increase of a regular percentage on his salary. The provision is that the chief officer shall report that the officer who is discharging his duty has been intelligent and attentive. In that case he receives the increase. There have been some cases where the increase has not been given, because the chief officer did not report that the employé was entitled to it. The total increases were $19,663, and from that you have to deduct $9,383.75, made up as follows:—There was an amount of $200 which was provided and not paid, and there were four deaths. There is no necessity for me to read all the names.

Mr. CHARLTON. I think you had better do so.

Mr. COSTIGAN. There was G. V. Ellwood, London, $1,000; there was Mr. Lafontaine, Joliette, $400; there was Mr. Richard, Montreal, $950, and there was Mr. A. St. Louis, Montreal, $1,100, making a total of $3,450 of a reduction there. Then there were four superannuations. There was Mr. McEachern, of Beauharnois, at $500. The reason he was superannuated was, in the first place, that he was pretty well advanced in years.

Mr. CHARLTON. How old was he?

Mr. COSTIGAN. He was beyond the age which entitled him to claim superannuation, but, I think, he was not physically unfit for the performance of his duty, but it was found to be more economical to amalgamate that division with the Montreal division and to superannuate that officer, whose salary was $500 a year. Then there was Mr. Regnier, of Iberville, whose salary was $650. He was retired. He was considerably past the age when he might claim to be retired. His memory had become defective, and, although he had remained in the service for many years without any increase in his salary, he admitted himself that he was not able to keep up with the changes which have been made in the duties performed by excise officers; so, being considerably over the age, he was retired. Mr. J. D. Kennedy, of London, who received a salary of $850, was retired. I cannot, from memory, state the reasons in his case. Mr. M. E. Brougham, of Guelph, who had a salary of $750, was also retired. I presume that these two officers were retired for similar reasons. At any rate, I have no hesitation in stating that none of these officers were retired in order to make room for any one else, or for any purpose inconsistent with the proper carrying out of the public service. There were two resignations, and two dismissals. The resignations were those of Mr. G. W. Carver, of Toronto, who was receiving a salary of $750, and of Mr. J. J. Heney, of Ottawa, who was also receiving a salary of $750. There were also two dismissals.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Who were dismissed?

Mr. COSTIGAN. There was Mr. J. B. E. Ste. Marie, of Montreal, who was connected with excise work at Lachine, and Mr. James Williamson, of Toronto, who, I think, was a messenger.

Mr. McMULLEN. I observe that there have been sixteen superannuations in the hon. gentleman's Department this year. The hon. gentleman has given us the names of some officers who have been superannuated, but there are a number whom he has overlooked. I do not say that, in some cases, there may not have been a good reason for superannuating old officers, but when he states that a man fifty-seven years of age should be superannuated, after seventeen years' service, at an amount of $248, and the office is filled by a man at $600, when his predecessor was receiving $750, I cannot see where the saving comes in. It has been contended that, wherever the Superannuation Act is brought into force, the result is a saving to the Department. In this Department there has been a perpetual addition made to the expenditure of $5,322 in the way of superannuation. If you were to apply that to all the Departments, you would find a very serious increase. I contend that, unless there is a positive necessity that a man should be retired because of advanced years or ill-health, or unless there are good grounds to believe that he is totally incapable of performing his duties, there should be no such additions to the superannuation list. We have already an enormous number of men placed on that list, and, in most cases, they are as capable of performing any ordinary duty as they were at any time of their lives. I am not charging that the hon. gentleman has been making superannuations in order to find places for other people, but I think that evidence should be given that a man is utterly incapable of performing the duties of his office before he is placed on the superannuation list. For instance, we have here the case of a man who was retired on the ground of old age at fifty-seven years. I would not call a man sixty years old a very old man. A good many men of that age are able to perform very efficient services.

Mr. COSTIGAN. There are several officers of seventy.

Mr. McMULLEN. Here is one man retired on account of old age who was only sixty, another on account of old age at sixty-seven, another for the same reason was retired at sixty, who had only served seventeen years. He is now drawing $255 of an allowance, and a man was put in his place at $600. Now, the original salary paid to him when he was discharging his duty was $750, so that the outlay in that office is now $855; there is a jump upwards of $105 under the operation of the superannuation. Now, if you imagine that this system is going to reduce the annual outlay, you will have to present a different set of figures from the one I hold in my hand, which is a copy of the return laid upon the Table of the House at the commencement of this Session. This shows that you have superannuated sixteen men, and you have added to the perpetual drain on the country's resources $5,332 a year. Now, I say it is time that some stop should be put to this practice of superannuating men who are, to all appearance, quite able to perform their duties. I find here a man superannuated at the age of fifty, another at fifty-three, another at fifty-four, another at forty-five, another at sixty, one at thirty-four, one at thirty-three, and so on. Now, I say that these are not ages at which men should be superannuated. I am surprised that men should claim a retiring allowance at these comparatively early ages. It is evident that there is a screw loose somewhere, and I would like to hear what the hon. gentleman has to say.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I am very glad the hon. gentleman has made that statement, and I am quite ready to give him all the information I can. The hon. gentleman will remember that I was quite candid in giving the names of the officers superannuated. The item that we are discussing, covers the salaries of excisemen; but the hon. gentleman, according to his figures, which are, no doubt, correct, has gone over all the different branches of my Department. We have not yet come to some of those branches from which the hon. gentleman takes his figures. For instance, he includes in the number of officers retired, every officer who is retired as an exciseman, and that is the only class we are discussing under this item. He includes, also, those who have been retired under the Weights and Measures branch, which item we have not yet reached. When we do reach it I will be able to give explanations to the hon.

gentleman, and when these other items come up I will give the other names and all the information regarding them, and the reasons for the retirement under the Superannuation Act of any of the officers. It would be more regular if the hon. gentleman would take the names of all of them, and I will endeavor to give him satisfactory information with respect to any particular individuals he may mention, if he thinks, from the record, that their ages would not justify their retirement. Now, with regard to one of those men, Officer Mulligan, of Toronto. I was in Toronto and consulted with my chief officers there, and Mulligan's case was brought under my notice. Of course, like any other head of a Department, I acted largely upon recommendation of the head officers of division, but in the interest of the service. These officers represented to me that Mulligan, although he had only reached the age mentioned by the hon. gentleman, was completely unable to perform the services for which he was receiving the salary. Under these circumstances, I do not know that it was any loss to the country or any loss to the service, to retire this man and put a younger and a more active man in his place. I do not think the country lost anything by giving the new appointment $100 more to do the work, instead of continuing the old salary to a man who, according to the doctor's certificate, was unable to perform his duties. With regard to the other cases of superannuation, when the items came up under which they took place, I will be very glad to afford all the information I can. I have one more remark to make, and that is, that there is a very strong feeling on this side of the House as well as on the other, against superannuating officers until a fair claim has been made out for such superannuation. I can tell the hon. member that I am a member of the Treasury Board, and when these cases come before us they are carefully sifted, and a good case has to be made out before the superannuation is granted.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am glad to hear the Minister's statement with regard to superannuation, and I earnestly hope that he will act upon that conviction with regard to the superannuation system. I am sorry to say that, by this list, I am not convinced that the Government have been guided by the principle he mentioned, in the superannuations that are taking place in the hon. gentleman's own Department. Take the case of John Lane, belonging to the Cullers' office in Quebec. He was in receipt of a salary of $1,600. That man had been only five years in the service, and was, consequently, not entitled to superannuation. No man is entitled to superannuation unless he has had ten years in the service. Now, in order to put that man upon the superannuation list the hon. gentlemen have gone to work and added five years to his term of service, and granted him a superannuation allowance of $350 a year, after he had been drawing a salary of $1,600. Why was that man not granted a gratuity, if it was thought necessary to retire him? I think $1,600 a year was a good salary for a man of that stamp, but, notwithstanding, we find the Government stretching a point and adding five years to his term of service in order to put him upon the superannuation list.

Mr. COSTIGAN. That man has gone now to another branch. The hon. gentleman must remember that during the last few years repeated effort has been made upon both sides of the House, to reduce the expenditure in connection with the Cullers' office at Quebec. The hon. gentlemen who are now on the Opposition benches, when they were governing the country, felt the necessity of this action, and they made a reduction in the number of cullers and provided for their retirement at $200 a year, which was a very wise and fair transaction. The square timber trade had fallen off every year, and there was still an annual expenditure of $48,000, while the receipts only reached $15,000. It became necessary to further deal with the question, and the House a second time made a reduction. Still complaints came that the expenditure was excessive, and a proposition was made last year by which a further reduction took place, not only among the cullers, but in the staff of the office, and also a reduction in the salaries of the higher classed officials. The House, accordingly, authorised my Department to retire as many of those officers as it was expedient should be retired. A great reduction was made, and if the hon. gentleman will turn back to the records, he will find that after the Estimates had been submitted with an item of $48,000 for culling square timber, it was reduced, at the desire of the House, to $28,000, a saving of $20,000 being thus effected by a stroke of the pen. The whole saving could not, of course, go to the country, for it was our absolute duty to provide for those men who had been appointed permanently in the service. The cullers were retired under the Cullers' Act and a vote of Parliament, while the higher officers took advantage of the Superannuation Act, because they had paid into the fund. Take the case of Mr. Lane. He was not retired on account of old age or incapacity, but because it was in the public interests that he should retire, with many other officers, and I was called upon to perform the very unpleasant duty of discharging twenty or twenty-five men from permanent positions. This, of course, appeared to be harsh treatment; and if ever an officer should be able to take advantage of the Superannuation Act, this was the particular case. This is one of the special cases in which the action of the Government is justified.

Mr. McMULLEN. I thought it my duty to call attention to this matter on account of the number of abuses of the Superannuation Act which have occurred during the last few years. I claim that the Government should exercise the power vested in them under that Act with the greatest caution and care, for I have drawn attention to the fact, that a very large number of allowances under the Superannuation Act have been drawn from the Dominion treasury; and when abuses have taken place so frequently, we are naturally aroused when we notice such a case as this under consideration, and we are liable to come to the conclusion that another abuse has occurred. I can understand that, because an office is abolished, the Government may consider that some allowance should be made, but in no case should the law be administered with unnecessary liberality so as to cause a drain upon the treasury. In this case, owing to the abolition of the office, there may have been a kind of justification for the course followed; at the same time, I would have preferred that the man should have received a gratuity, as he had been for some years in the receipt of the large salary for a culler of $1,600 a year.

Mr. COSTIGAN. He was deputy supervisor and second in charge of the office.

Mr. McMULLEN. He was, at all events, receiving a liberal salary, and he might have been paid six months' salary instead of being placed on the superannuation list.

Mr. LANDERKIN. This case brings up the question of the dismissal of all the officials under the Weights and Measures Act. They were dismissed, and no one was superannuated or received an allowance. After holding office six or seven years, they were legislated out of office; and if this gentleman in question has a claim because he was in office five years, his case is not stronger than that of the officers under the Weights and Measures Act. Those officers were nominated by the Government of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), and they performed their duties for several years. When a change of Government took place an Act was passed depriving them of their offices, and I never heard that any of them were superannuated. If the Government see fit to superannuate a man who had been in office five years, how can they refuse to grant allowances to those inspectors who were in the service a longer period, and who were then legislated out of office?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I was about to express similar views to those presented by my hon. friend, and, I think, the Committee should have an explanation from the hon. Minister.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The two cases are entirely different, to my mind. The case brought forward by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) was one which required an explanation. The hon. gentleman called attention, very properly, to the great care that should be exercised in keeping down the expenses in connection with the Superannuation Act; but the hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Landerkin) thought the Government should go further, and superannuate all the former officers under the Weights and Measures Act.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Why make fish of one and flesh of another.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I am only stating the difference between the positions taken by the hon. gentleman. In the one case Parliament dealt with the Cullers' office and ordered a reduction of $20,000 in one year, and at the same time Parliament agreed that the men retired should receive allowances. In the other case, Parliament did not so decide; the whole law was reconstructed, and there was no saving to the country because the law was still to be carried out, only in different form, and Parliament had not provided for the retirement of those officers. The difference is a very marked one.

Mr. LANDERKIN. At that time the offices were abolished by Parliament for the purpose of effecting a saving, or, at all events, that was the ostensible reason given. I presume the same reason was given regarding the cullers. If the reason given was that it was done for the purpose of economy, such result has not been obtained, because there are more in office than were legislated out of office.

Mr. McMULLEN.

Mr. COSTIGAN. No.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I think so. At all events, the expenditure for the Weights and Measures Department is more now than it was then.

Mr. COSTIGAN. A long time has elapsed since those officers were retired. Another reason why Parliament did not think fit to grant them retiring allowances was that the Act was a new Act, and a very small amount of work had been done under it. The Act, like many new Acts, was unpopular at first, and very little work was done. It might be considered that the men who had received their salaries during all that time, and rendering little or no service, were very well paid without being put on the pension list.

Mr. LANDERKIN. They were not paid such salaries as the present inspectors and deputy inspectors.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman complains that we are spending more now than before the change took place. I question whether the vote for that service has ever been as high, since that change of the law, as before. I know it went down from $70,000 to below $50,000, and you will find that now the staff is doing three times the amount of work that was done at that time, if we judge by the receipts.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The Minister now manifests a good deal of concern for dealing fairly with public servants who have been in the employ of the Department, and he gives as a reason to the enquiry of the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin), that he did not like to dismiss these officers without placing them on the superannuation list.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I did not say quite that. I had no authority for that, because Parliament would not allow me.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. gentleman says that Parliament directed him, but it was under the direction of the hon. gentleman's own Government that Parliament so directed, and it was himself, I believe, who asked Parliament to change the law. He wiped out of existence a class of officials against whom no charge of neglect of duty laid. He says that was not his doing, as Parliament did it. But the executive act was the appointing of the officers under the new law that Parliament had passed, and the hon. gentleman made those appointments. Did he exercise then the same anxiety for the welfare of those public servants that he claims to be possessed of now? Did he fill the positions under the new Act, by reappointing the servants who had done their duty faithfully before, and who, from their experience in the service, would be more valuable than new men? Did he appoint any of these to the new positions, or did he appoint them all? It is a fair question which the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Landerkin) has brought up. It is a question of fair dealing on the part of the Department, and in order to ascertain whether this is a rule that is applied generally to all cases, or whether it was not most flagrantly violated in the case of those men who were summarily deposed from their offices without any fault of their own.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. member for Grey (Mr. Landerkin) claimed that they had a good right to be superannuated, if the argument in favor of the cullers is good, and the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) says that the officers who had been displaced by the reorganisation of this branch of the service should have been appointed under the new law. That, I think, is a very fair argument, but I do not know how far that policy was carried out, as it was before my time. The hon. gentleman will see that the reorganisation of the Weights and Measures districts must have made a great change in the location of the officers.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That would not affect it.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Oh, yes, it would. You could not appoint an inspector, living in one division, to be inspector for another.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That has been done. An hon. gentleman here says that the officers were removed from Halifax to Yarmouth.

Mr. COSTIGAN. There were ninety-five divisions under the old Act, and those were reduced to forty, so that it would be pretty difficult to reappoint all the officers. I can tell the hon. gentleman that, after I took charge of the Department, one of the old inspectors, who had been deprived of his office, was appointed to a vacancy which occurred.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That is one out of forty.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It was one out of two or three, to my own recollection. The reorganisation took place, and the appointments were made, before I came into office. I had no doubt they were made for good reasons; but, as I said before, it was impossible to reappoint the inspectors of the ninety divisions and distribute them over the forty divisions.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The point raised by my hon. friend (Mr. Paterson) has not been answered by the Minister. When the change was made by the present Administration, and these parties appointed by a Liberal Administration were dismissed—because that is the only word to be used in this case—they were not treated in the same way that these officials are now treated by the Government. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Landerkin) wants to know upon what grounds these inspectors, who were appointed by the Liberal Government, are placed in a different position from the others. We know that when that Act came into force under the administration of Mr. Mackenzie, all the appointments were made by his Government, and I have no doubt they were all good appointments; but they were all Liberal appointments, of course,—I say of course because I assume they were. When the present Government came into power, it did not suit them to have Liberals in these positions, and they simply legislated these men out of office and appointed their own political hangers-on instead. I am not arguing now, or at any time, in favor of superannuation. There has been too much of that already, but I desire to see that the same principle which applies to one branch of the service should be applied to all, and that, if the hon. Minister has seen fit to allow these officers to be legislated out of office, and to give them no remuneration in the shape of a pension, he is not acting in the public interest now in proposing to superannuate other officials. The whole Weights and Measures Act, in my judgment, was a huge mistake, and I did all I could to prevent my hon. friend (Mr. Mackenzie), the then leader of the Government, from carrying the Act into effect. However, when the change of Government took place, the machinery was provided, the law was passed, and everything was ready to carry the Act into operation. I always thought it was a retrograde measure, and I think so still. The Government in carrying out this Act, have increased the expense attending it, and have used the grossest favoritism in every branch connected with it, and in this, as in everything else, they have shown that they preferred party to efficiency in the public administration.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think that the point raised by the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Landerkin) is a very proper one to bring forward. I know that when the old inspectors were dismissed some years ago, there was one case in my town which I thought was a very hard one. There was a gentleman there who had been for many years inspector of weights and measures, and who was admitted by all persons to be one of the most competent men that could possibly be appointed. He was a very careful and painstaking officer, but when the new law was introduced he was dismissed, and when they appointed the new officials, instead of appointing him, they gave the office to a gentleman in Windsor. Now, the man in Windsor has to come to Chatham to inspect the weights and measures in that neighborhood, and it would not be any more difficult for the old officer to go to Windsor than it is for the man in Windsor to come down to Chatham. The old official always performed the duty of the office faithfully and well, and to the entire satisfaction of every person who had anything to do with weights and measures. Still further, when they found it necessary to appoint an assistant inspector, instead of appointing this old and deserving officer, they appointed a new man living at Chatham, who now has to go to Windsor to perform his duties. If you superannuate the cullers who have served only five years, and to whose term you have to add five years in order to entitle them to superannuation, you are doing a very great injustice to these old officers in not treating them in the same way. I am not in favor of superannuation at all; I believe the whole system is a grand fraud, and ought to be abolished. These gentlemen, who have only been serving five years or thereabouts in the public service, have no right to be made a burden on the treasury of this country for the rest of their lives. I know of no class of business men who have such a system of superannuation, and the nearer we come to carrying on the business of this country on business principles, the better it will be for all. I have no sympathy whatever with the system of superannuating officers who are thirty-five or forty years old, men in the prime of life, after they have been drawing large sums of money from the treasury of this country. I say it is all wrong, and the Government ought to take a stand on the question and abolish it altogether.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The hon. Minister has the idea that a great saving was effected by legislating the old officers out of their offices to the number of about eighty, and appointing forty in their places. I notice that the estimate for the salaries of deputy inspectors of weights and measures in 1877-78 was $53,500, and in 1878-79, $54,300, and that to-day it is $52,800, so that there has not been a very large saving.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman will save time if he will just state the receipts of those different years.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I have not got the receipts, but I fancy that the Minister will find that they were treble at that time what they are now. I hope the Minister will give us the receipts from 1874 to 1878, and then compare them with the receipts at present. We shall then find out how much we are paying for this piece of economical party legislation, whereby a number of people are legislated out of office, merely because they belong to a certain political party and another set of people are put in their places. With regard to the gentleman in my district, I was told by the Department that he was a most reliable and capable officer, and yet, although perfectly able and willing to discharge his duties, he was dismissed, and a person was put in his place who is not fit to wipe his shoes, who is in no way equal to him, mentally or otherwise, who has not the standing or the capacity to perform the duties which the other man has. He was, however, a supporter of the Administration, while the other man was not, and that is the only reason that I know of why the change was made.

Mr. KIRK. It appears to me that the reasons given by the Minister for not appointing these men to office who were legislated out of office cannot hold good. It is true he said there were only forty new officers appointed.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I did not say there were only forty officers; I said there were forty divisions.

Mr. KIRK. That was the meaning of what the hon. gentleman said.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). How many officers are there?

Mr. COSTIGAN. There are sometimes four or five or six in some large divisions like Montreal.

Mr. KIRK. That makes the matter very much worse for the Minister. These gentlemen were not dismissed because there were not places for them. If the officers were required and the old men were not reappointed, then there must have been some reason for appointing new men. Why were the old men not appointed? Was it because they were not fit to fill the positions, or was it because they were Liberals? It is generally believed in my district that the officer there was dismissed because he was appointed by a Liberal Government, and that the new man was appointed because he was a supporter of the present Government. The gentleman appointed was a near neighbor of the old officer, but he had no experience, and knew nothing at all about the business. I have not a word to say against him; I have no doubt he made a good official; but the reason the Minister gave for not reappointing the old officers does not hold good in Guysborough.

Mr. ELLIS. There was the case of the inspector in St. John, a gentleman appointed by the former Administration, who had carried on a mercantile business for a long time, and had the confidence of the commercial community on both sides of politics. He was not an extreme party man, but when the reorganisation took place he was not reappointed, but a new man was appointed. The Minister must know that there was never a more glaring injustice committed than there was in the case of Mr. Macfarlane.

Mr. McMULLEN. Under the old system the inspector in my county lived in Guelph, but at the present time the new inspector lives at Cayuga, which is fifty miles to the south, and, I think, outside of the district altogether. The Minister said that the reason some of these men were not reappointed was because they did not live in the district; but that reason does not apply in this case.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The connection between the two cases is this: The Minister says that Parliament changed the law; he had to dispose of some cullers in consequence of that change; and, therefore, he thought justice demanded that they should be placed on the superannuation list. Then the question is asked, if that is the Minister's idea of what is just and right, how is it that when Parliament, at his request, changed another law and wiped out the officials connected with the Weights and Measures Department, these officials were not placed on the superannuation list? We are not saying that that should have been done. But the answer of the hon. gentleman is, that as these officials had been in office some five years, during which time they had not done a very great deal of work, and had received fair salaries, he could not see that they were very unfairly treated. Would not the same argument apply to these cullers, who have been five years in the service and have received good salaries during that time? I find $1,600 a year was paid.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Use the singular number. Do not apply that to the whole staff. That is only one man.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Here is another at $1,500, and so on. How does the Minister reconcile the treatments of the two cases? These cullers have been in the employ of the public service. Parliament has changed the law and dispensed with their services, and, therefore, he said, it would be treating them very unjustly not to put them on the superannuation list. But when we find that Parliament, at the request of this Government, passed a law by which eighty or ninety officials in the Weights and Measures Department were wiped out of existence, and none of them placed on the superannuation list, he says: Oh, well, a person need not complain when he has only been five years in the service and drew a good salary during that time. Here is another injustice: That while these men were dismissed through the change of law, that change was made, not with the view of saving the Government money by dispensing with the services of these or similar officials, but with a view of reorganising the Department, and to enable the Department to fill these offices again with other men. When the Department was reorganised these men, who had been dismissed by this change of law, against whom there was no charge, and who had faithfully performed their duties, were not only not put on the superannuation list at the time of their retirement, but were not reappointed to the offices which it was necessary some officials should fill. How does the hon. gentleman account for that? He shields himself behind the fact that this was done before he took charge of the Department. That may be, but the hon. Minister is responsible for his Department; he must bear the responsibility of what was done by his predecessors in office. If his reason be good, that these men cannot complain of not having been put on the superannuation list, because they only served five years and received fair salaries during their service, how will he justify these cullers, who have served only a like time and received far larger salaries, being put on the superannuation list? That is the point, and that is a fair comparison to draw the hon. gentleman's attention to.

Mr. COSTIGAN. As I have said before, I deem it my duty to give every explanation and information I can with regard to the item under discussion, and I have endeavored so far to do so, in as courteous a manner as possible; but I do complain of the course taken by the hon. gentleman who has just sat down. He is known to the older members of this House as a gentleman very well able to state his case in Parliament. He is not a new member, and he ought to rest on the strength of his own case, and not take both sides of the question into his own hands. I have made several statements in regard to this matter, and explanations, which I thought—though I may be wrong—very reasonable. The hon. gentleman does not deal with my statements, but he goes to work and reconstructs my argument, and then tries to demolish it. That is not the way to criticise these matters. The hon. gentleman draws a comparison. He says we have superannuated men who have only served five years in connection with the Cullers' office, and declares that, comparing the treatment received by them with that received by the old officers of the Weights and Measures Department, the latter were treated unjustly. The hon. gentleman seeks to create a bad impression on the public mind by making a statement of that kind. I do not wish to say that he wished to misrepresent the facts, but the statement he has made to this House is misleading. The facts are, that the officers superannuated in connection with the Cullers' office did serve for a maximum of thirty-five years down to five years, and there is only one who served the latter period. Five years has been the shortest service. That is a very different statement from that which the hon. gentleman made, namely, that all the cullers served only five years. The hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Kirk) tried hard to persuade me that I had stated we were going to reduce the weights and measures staff from ninety, under the old Act, to forty, under the new Act. I never said that. I stated that the weights and measures division had been cut down from about ninety-five divisions, into which the Dominion was divided under the original Act, to forty divisions. The whole reduction was not made at the first change, because, since I came into the Department, I recommended further reductions, and will give the reasons why. Of course, the number of officers is very large, because in nearly every division there is an inspector and an assistant inspector, and in some of the larger divisions, such as Hamilton, Toronto and Montreal, there is a staff of from eight to ten men employed in the office, as each of these divisions covers a large district. Another hon. gentleman complained that I gave as a reason why the old officers could not be appointed, that they could not be sent from one division to another. That was not the whole reason. I mentioned that when we disturbed the old organisations so radically as to reduce it from ninety-five to fifty or sixty divisions, it was very inconvenient to place the same men in the same offices. I stated then, with regard to the two cases, that there was one great difference, and I repeat it. The hon. gentleman went back to a case of which I have a very limited recollection. He said I shielded myself behind the fact that I was not the Minister at the time the change was made. I do not remember shielding myself behind anything. I am quite willing to assume all the responsibility it is my duty to assume. I said, among other reasons, that the reorganisation of the divisions made it difficult to appoint these same men again, but I did not give that as the whole reason. I gave another reason. When the reduction took place, to which the hon. gentleman refers, with regard to the Cullers' office, I showed it was a question which had been repeatedly dealt with by this Parliament, and by both sides. Hon. gentlemen opposite, when in office, dealt with it, the present Government dealt with it twice, and both agreed on the necessity of reduction. There is this difference between the case of the reduction on the Weights and Measures staff and that of the Cullers, that on the reduction of the staff in the Culler's office in Quebec, hon. gentlemen opposite thought it necessary that provision should be made, and thought rightly, because it was exactly what I was prepared to ask, and Parliament decided that they should be retired on a gratuity, in some cases, and with pensions in others. In the other case, not one single man came under the operation of the Superannuation Act. When I was called upon to deal with the Cullers' office and to make this reduction, I tried to do it in such a way as to meet the wishes of the House.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am rather surprised to hear the hon. gentleman state that none of the men employed in connection with Weights and Measures came within the operation of the Superannuation Act. He must know that any public servant may receive a gratuity, though he does not get a superannuation. If he serves for ten years, he can get a superannuation, but, if not, he may receive a gratuity in proportion to the time he has served. The hon. gentleman says that none of the men employed under the Weights and Measures Act were entitled to superannuation, but there was a man who served only three years and one month to whom he granted a gratuity amounting to $565. My hon. friend has claimed that these men were unceremoniously dismissed, that they were legislated out of their offices, and that, instead of receiving any gratuity or superannuation, they were not granted anything at all.

Mr. KIRK. The Minister stated that I tried to misrepresent him in the few remarks which I made. I have no desire to misrepresent him.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I did not put it as strongly as that.

Mr. KIRK. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that, when he legislated these men out of office, there were forty officials appointed where there had been ninety before, and that that was his reason for not appointing the same number of inspectors of weights and measures that had been appointed by the Liberal Administration. He now explains that he was talking about the divisions and not about the officials, and that in the forty divisions there were more officers employed than were required. Then I pointed out that the reason for not appointing these old officers, and appointing inexperienced officers in their stead, was, that there was no ground for that except that the new men were supporters of the Government. That is perfectly clear, no matter what the Minister may say.

Mr. LANDERKIN. In regard to the revenue derived from the inspection of weights and measures, the hon. gentleman sought to convey to the House the idea that it was much larger in the later than in the previous part of the operation of the Act. I have the Public Accounts before me, and I find that the statement does not justify the observations of the Minister. I find that in 1876-7, the revenue was $50,423.90. In 1877-8, it was $30,054.10. In 1878-9, it was $31,685.97. Last year, 1887-8, it was $37,810.39, showing a falling off of $13,000 from 1876-7. For the year 1888-9, it amounted to $36,040.91, showing a still further falling off. Here we find that, instead of an increase in the revenue by a change in the system under the new legislation which was brought in, there was not a realisation of the hopes expressed by the Government at that time, though they taxed the people almost as much, or even more, than they did in the previous years. There is one blot on this system, and I think it is the duty of the Government to remedy that as soon as possible, and that is the injustice which has been committed against the former inspectors of weights and measures. No matter what light you may regard that in, it does not redound to the credit of the Government, and it would be only just to those officers who discharged their duties with efficiency and ability, that the Minister, who is superannuating various officers in his Department, should remember that these men have claims which should be considered. I looked up the Public Accounts, and I find that these men have not been properly considered.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman would deal more fairly with the House if he were to state that the fees were reduced one-half, and, therefore, the receipts could not be as large.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The fees were reduced before the hon. Minister came into power.

Mr. BOWELL. No, I beg your pardon.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I beg yours. I remember going to the Government of that time to ask that that should be done. Now take it back.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman asked for the receipts during the years which he has mentioned. I asked the Commissioner to get the figures from the returns and send them to me. This he has done, but he has only sent them for two years. I will get them for another year.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I have got them here.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The figures do not seem to agree. I will read my own figures, if the hon. gentleman will allow me.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I will read yours, too,

Mr. KIRK.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I would like a little order. In 1878, the revenue was $33,404, and the expenditure was $81,187, leaving an excess of expenditure over receipts of $47,873. In the year 1889, which the hon. gentleman has also quoted, the receipts were $50,033, and the expenditure, $66,353; excess of expenditure over receipts, $16,321. There is the difference between the two years, in the management of that branch of the Department. I do not claim that every year shows the same results, but I do believe that all through there is more service rendered and at a less cost to the country, than formerly.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to call the hon. gentleman's attention to this point—I took down his figures, and he stated that the total receipts for 1889 were $50,000.

Mr. COSTIGAN. $50,033.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Now, I find in the Public Accounts, Weights and Measures, 1889, the total receipts were $36,040.91.

Mr. LANDERKIN. They have got two sets of accounts. They keep their books by double entry.

Mr. COSTIGAN. As I stated before, I have taken these figures from the Public Accounts. The Commissioner explains that this is an expenditure for gas and weights and measures, the two services included. Both are administered in the same way at a little cost to the country.

Mr. LANDERKIN. That is rather strange, because in another part we find gas set down—

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If you will excuse me until I settle this matter with the Minister.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I began, and I thought I would settle it myself.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have not the least objection, but I would like to settle this little question first.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I can settle it secondly.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No doubt you will settle the other. I was correct, then, in saying that the expenditure was $66,000.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not know the exact figures. The Commissioner tells me that $50,033 includes gas; and the expenditure of $66,000 covers both.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The expenditure, the hon. gentleman says, is $66,000. Now, here again I find a little difference. I find that, under the statement in the Public Accounts, the expenditure for weights and measures and gas, amounted to $85,990, as the hon. gentleman will see himself. So that in neither way am I able quite to make the hon. gentleman's figures tally with those here. As I should suspect, the expenditure for weights and measures alone would run to something like $66,000, and the receipts at $36,000, leave a deficit of $30,000. That appears to be the case, but I suppose the hon. gentleman may have explanations.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The only explanation that I have is that the hon. gentleman is quite right. As I stated, I asked my commissioner to get the figures before the discussion; he has got the figures, but, as the Finance Minister suggests, I think he has done it a little hastily.

Mr. LANDERKIN. In this comparative statement of the receipts of the Consolidated Fund, I find there is $12,242.10 for gas inspection, in addition to the $36,491 I have referred to. I would like to say, while on my feet, that I do think it is about time for the Government to consider the propriety of abolishing the Weights and Measures branch altogether. I do not believe it is in the interest of the people of this country that the fees should be collected as they are now. This is a special tax upon the merchants and others who use scales, and I think they should be relieved from the payment of the inspection of their scales and of their weights and measures. If it is thought to be in the public interest to continue this system, then I say the public, and not the merchants and those who use scales and weights and measures, should pay for it. I think it is the duty of the Government to consider the desirability of abolishing these petty imposts upon classes, as is done under this system. I think the Act in its conception was not a brilliant thing, and I do not think the operation of it has been a success.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I am anxious that a fair treatment should be extended to every one of the civil servants, either inside or outside; I think it is only just and fair that similar treatment should be meted out to them all. I cordially agree with the statements made here that the Minister's treatment of these cutlers, as compared with those he has dismissed wholesale by the repeal of the Act, is unfair and unjust. But that is not the question to which I wish to call the attention of the Minister. He will remember that after the new law came into force, the Government appointed certain officers in the section of the country that I have the honor to represent. They appointed Mr. Egan as inspector of weights and measures—a very efficient man. They appointed in St. Thomas, Mr. Boggs as assistant. He was a faithful servant, and attentive to his duties, as I understood. He remained in that position for a number of years, performing his duties in a very capable manner. He must have occupied that position for four or five years; but for some reason unknown to me—though, perhaps, known to the Government—Mr. Boggs was removed. Was he treated as fairly as these cutlers, one of whom had only been five years in the service? Was there any compensation granted to Mr. Boggs? He had performed his duties under this Act in an efficient manner, and it would only be reasonable to expect that if the Government were going to superannuate any one, they would have superannuated Mr. Boggs. But they dismissed Mr. Boggs, and appointed another man. Why did they dismiss Mr. Boggs? He is an old man, but not too old to perform his duties efficiently, and they dismissed him even without allowing him a gratuity on account of the time he had served the country. I cannot impute to hon. gentlemen opposite the reason alluded to by some hon. gentlemen, because this man was a Tory of the Tories, and his whole family were ready and anxious to render aid to the Conservative party. He was always an active worker against me. I have no particular interest in advocating his case further than this: that the Minister has done an injustice, and a gross one, to that man. The Minister superannuated the cutlers, but he dismissed this officer in his old age, when he was not fitted to perform other duties, throwing him, if he had not had any means, upon the corporation for support and he did this with perfect indifference. This is a gross wrong, perpetrated on a good citizen of St. Thomas, and it is, moreover, a violation of the pledges of the Government. The Government neither gave this man consideration for his services to the Department, nor for his past services to the Government of the day, which he has always supported in season and out of season. So this is the way they treat a man who, having arrived at advanced years of life, is considered to be of no more use to them politically. They had no longer any use for him, and although he had served them faithfully, yet they sent him adrift and appointed another man who was more energetic and would, perhaps, be able to exercise more influence in favor of the Government. I repeat, that I regard this as a transaction shady in the extreme on the part of the Government, it is a wrong, it is not a moral transaction, it is unjust and cruel, and a hardship on the individual in question.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I think it is my duty to thank the hon. member who has just taken his seat. Every hon. member who has listened to his remarks will not fail to find in them a complete answer to the charge made by some hon. gentlemen opposite, that the dismissal was made for political purposes. The hon. gentleman has answered that point very effectually by pointing out that, when changes become necessary, we even discharge a Tory of the Tories, and an assiduous supporter of the Government. No better answer is required than the one given by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). The hon. gentleman should understand that I adopted no such reasoning. The present Government dismissed, for political reasons, the official appointed by the previous Government, and Mr. Boggs was appointed by this Government after they had dismissed a Mr. Campbell, appointed by the previous Government. Mr. Campbell had performed the duties efficiently, and was a very useful and capable man, but he was removed for political reasons. Then they appointed Mr. Boggs for political reasons. I heard no complaint that he was not competent, but when it was found that his usefulness to the party was not as great as it promised to be, then the Minister found it necessary to appoint another officer. These actions show that the conduct of the Government is such as it has been described by hon. members on this side of the House. They are still pursuing the same course, and, no doubt, will continue to pursue it; they feel they are justified in doing anything so long as they are able to retain power. They will immediately lop off the head of one of their supporters if he stands in the way of the interests of the Government.

Mr. BOWELL. I desire to set myself right in regard to a remark I made in reply to the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin), a few moments ago, when I said that, comparing the years to which he had called the attention of the House, the later years, the fees had been reduced one-half. That was the statement I made. The hon. gentleman at once rose and said that the reductions were made by the previous Government. He was correct in the statement. I misunderstood him at the time, and the hon. gentleman having called my attention to it, I desire to set myself right. The comparison to which I desired to call the attention of the House was the calculation made on the previous years to which the hon. gentleman referred and that made on the later years, that of the former being under the higher rate and that of later years under the lower rate.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It is possible that the hon. gentleman, having fallen into so many errors to-day, will, perhaps, have a little more confidence in statements made by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House; and they will understand they are not made in a captious spirit, but in order to ascertain the true facts of the case.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I congratulate the hon. Minister of Customs on the explanation he has given.

Mr. BOWELL. I thank the hon. gentleman for what he has said, and for this reason: I lay it down as a principle that when I make a statement to the House, and find that, even through some misunderstanding, it is inaccurate in any particular, to make the correction immediately, because I do not wish to have anything on record which I may find afterwards not to be strictly correct. I find in a speech made by myself in 1883, when arguing the same question with the then hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross), that I pointed out the same facts and spoke in the same sense.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am pleased to hear the statement of the Minister. I may say that we are always so exact and correct in making our calculations that we never make any mis-statements, and so we have nothing to take back.

Mr. BOWELL. I must tell the hon. gentleman, that if he has any regard for veracity he will never repeat that statement.

Mr. FLYNN. I entirely concur with the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) in regard to the charges made by the inspectors of weights and measures on traders. I rise to ask the Minister of that Department the reason why every other officer of the Government is paid a fixed salary for the discharge of the duties imposed upon him, and that an exception is made in the case of these inspectors of weights and measures? I believe that the trader who uses scales is bound to pay the inspector his fees when he goes around to adjust them. Why is this departure made from the general rule? Why is it, if all other officers discharging public duties in different branches of the public service in every part of the Dominion are paid a stated salary, that in this case alone the salary of the inspector is made a tax on those who have weights and measures to inspect? I hold that the principle is unfair and unjust, and unless the Minister can give some good reason for it, the law should be changed in this respect, and the traders of the country relieved of this imposition.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman, as I understand, asked the question: Why these officers are not paid a fixed salary like customs, excise or other officers?

Mr. FLYNN. I did not ask that. I asked rather, why you pay these inspectors out of the pockets of the people who have weights and measures to inspect, and why you impose a tax upon them for this purpose, while all other officers are paid out of the general revenue?

Mr. COSTIGAN. That is the same question as the one put by the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wilson), and the question of salary does not arise at all. Parliament has decided years ago that there should be an inspection fee, and has adhered to it, and both sides of the House are responsible for it. It may be wise to change the law in this respect, but, so far as I know, no proposition to change it has ever been made. The staff of the Weights and Measures service are paid out of the general revenues, but, to recoup the country for that expenditure, a certain fee is charged for the inspection of scales, balances and measures. The result has been, that while the trading portion of the community bears about two-thirds the cost of that inspection, the country generally supplements it by the other one-third, and the fees charged are not expected to meet the whole expenditure. To a certain extent, an admission is made in the direction of the argument of the hon. gentleman, because Parliament has always seemed willing to supplement the fees for this service, by a grant to pay the full expenses.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I think the Minister has not given me any reason for his having removed Mr. Boggs, and appointed some other person as assistant mechanical inspector. There is no doubt that Mr. Boggs has paid a certain amount every year into the superannuation fund, but yet he is removed from office and he is not placed upon the superannuation list. If the Minister will promise me that he will look into the matter, and that he will place Mr. Boggs in a similar position to that in which he has placed these cullers, I will be satisfied. I want to know why Mr. Boggs was removed, and was not allowed a certain amount of superannuation when he left the Department? or, why he was not refunded the money he paid in, and also, why a Mr. Coghlin or a Mr. Thomas was appointed in his place?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I may state to the hon. gentleman that I will look into the matter. If Mr. Boggs has contributed to the superannuation fund, I certainly would, personally, be in favor of refunding any payments he has made, because that principle has been acted upon before, wherever the officers were not superannuated. For instance, I think Parliament made a vote to refund to the inspectors, under the old law, the amount they paid into the fund. This case, I think, would come under the same head, and if Mr. Boggs has a claim of that kind he is entitled to consideration. Mr. Coghlin was not appointed to replace Mr. Boggs, but it was, I think, a Mr. Thomas, from Brantford.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I am thankful to the Minister for that promise, and I think he is anxious to act fairly. I want him, when he is refunding the amount, not to forget that this man has been kept out of his money a number of years, and that he ought to have compound interest on the money, as the Government have had the advantage of it.

Mr. COSTIGAN. We will look into that too.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not wish to detain the House, but we have had a very interesting discession with regard to this matter. I think that the law ought to be changed with regard to the system of inspection of weights and measures. The entire public of this Dominion are equally interested in proper and just scales being maintained in every place where trade is carried on. It is desirable that the Government should see that the fee for the inspection of scales is not extracted from the men who use them, but that the burden of expenses should be equally divided among those who are generally interested in trade. I believe it to be unfair that a man who happens to be the owner of a scale, should be victimised to the extent of squeezing out of him a fee of one, two, or three dollars, for the inspection of the scale, and that all those who are interested in doing business with that particular man should go scot free. It does not lie within the reach of any member on this side of the House to introduce a Bill to do away with the system of collecting these fees, because it strikes at the revenue of the country, and a question of that kind should come from the Government themselves. I think it is well that the Opposition should fully make known to the Government their views upon this question. In my opinion, it would be proper and right that the law should be changed at once, and that an efficient inspection of all scales throughout the country should be made at the expense of the country, because the whole public are equally interested. I have known some poor people in my part of the country doing a two-penny-half-penny business, who could not afford to pay two or three dollars for an inspection, and who put their scales out of the way when the inspector went around. Perhaps one scale would be presented to him for inspection and the others put under the counter. There is no doubt that thousands of cases of that kind occur, simply because the party using the scales does not want, or is not able, to pay the fee. Now, it is desirable that in every establishment where business is done, a proper and correct scale should be used, and it is the Government's duty to step in between the buyer and the seller and see that the measures and scales used are kept in a proper and honest condition, and that justice is done between them.

Mr. ELLIS. I do not agree with my hon. friend.

Mr. FOSTER. He spoke for the Opposition.

Mr. ELLIS. I do not think it is at all the duty of a Government to step in and settle all these little matters. I think there should be a standard provided by the Government which could be sought by men who do business; but that the Government should appoint officers, at great cost, to see that justice is done between man and man in all these small transactions of life is perfectly absurd, because if you appoint an inspector to see that justice is done between the buyer and seller, he would not only have to inspect, but would have to stand beside the seller while he weighs out goods to his customers. If all the transactions of life were regulated in that way by the Government, it would make the conditions of life worse than politics does now. It is utterly absurd that the Government should inspect gas. You might as well have inspectors of oils and electric lights, and everything else used in the ordinary concerns of life. In the last five years we have paid out for the inspection of weights, measures and gas, $429,442, and have received $216,504, leaving a balance of $212,938 to be borne by the country. The way to remedy the difficulty is to abolish the offices entirely. Let the Government provide these standards at particular places, and let the people apply them as they want them.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I quite agree with the hon. member for North Wellington, that weights and measures should be inspected. A great many people have to depend altogether on the accuracy of the seller's means of measuring or weighing a particular article, and, I think, it is only right that the Government should protect the buyer, who is unable to verify the accuracy of the instruments used. The Government simply stands as the protector of innocent persons who are unable to protect themselves. Therefore, I think, the principle of letting the country pay a certain proportion, and those who own the instruments, pay another proportion of the cost of inspection, is a correct principle. I was glad to hear the Minister say, that he would look into the case of Mr. Boggs, of St. Thomas, as I believe the hon. member for East Elgin made out a very strong case; and while looking into that case, I hope he will look into the case of Mr. Thomas Nichol, of the town of Chatham, which is even a stronger case. Mr. Nichol was an old and faithful officer, who deserved and received the entire confidence of the people who had dealings with him, and he was dismissed without notice, and Mr. Hayward of Windsor, was appointed in his place. If the Minister looks into this case, I am sure that he will do what is right by Mr. Nichol, and if he can place him on the superannuation list, as he did the cutlers, he will render him such assistance as he deserves.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I will enquire into the case.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). A vote of $4,800 is taken for eight third-class excisemen. Where are they to be stationed?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman how they are to be distributed. Some six months before we were called on to prepare our estimates, I had a letter written to the different inspectors throughout the Dominion, asking their particular attention to the organisation of the staff in their districts, because we sometimes get applications for additional excisemen in certain districts. I asked the chief inspector to report the divisions where he thought additional officers were required, and also those which he thought could spare any officers, who could be transferred to where they were needed, without our making new appointments. He has reported only one division where an officer could be spared, but he has reported the absolute necessity of appointing eight additional men for the whole Dominion.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I suppose the vote of $695 to increase the salaries of excise officers in Manitoba, in lieu of board allowance, is not an increase, but is simply a change.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The board allowance is an old question. In the early days of the Province of Manitoba, excise officers and the officers of the Post Office Department were appointed on the scale of salaries prevailing in the older Provinces. But representations were made, and, I think, properly made, that the cost of living there was so far in excess of the cost of living in the old Provinces, that what would be a fair salary in them, would not be a fair salary in Manitoba. Therefore, a special board allowance was granted to these officers for a number of years. But it was considered by the House and the Government that the condition of things there had changed, and that that system should be abandoned. It was abandoned in my Department two years ago, but continued in the Post Office Department. The officers have not received the board allowance for the past two years, but this sum is to be given to them as an increase in their salaries in lieu of that board allowance and as a final settlement of that claim.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Are they receiving as good salaries as similar officers in other places?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes, the same scale exists all over the country, except in British Columbia, where we make a little difference in the salaries. We keep constantly to the scale, but used to make an allowance on account of increased cost of living. We think that in future that will be avoided, although they claim that the cost of living is greater in Winnipeg in many ways than in the older Provinces; but this is a final settlement.

Preventive Service $15,800

Mr. LOVITT. I notice that the Hon. John Costigan is down for preventive service last year, $200. Is that the hon. gentleman?

Mr. COSTIGAN. There are not many of that name, and I believe I am the person referred to.

Mr. LOVITT. Is that special pay besides his regular salary?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not ask for any special pay, and I do not think that the hon. gentleman presumes I receive this for services performed in the preventive service. It is charged there as one or two items were charged before, the payment being made through me direct for the secret service. The cheque passed through my hand on my authority on one or two occasions, one or two payments have been authorised through the commissioner, with my knowledge, on his signing the cheque. The information was received which led to seizures and was considered secret in the Department, and the name of the informant was not divulged. I think this is the third payment in nine years of a strictly secret character in that service, and there are reasons why this should be done.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Have there been any seizures during the year of illicit stills?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is there a special number of men engaged in the preventive service, and that alone? Or have the seizures been made through the instrumentality of different excise officers? Or are there special men to devote their whole time to this work?

Mr. COSTIGAN. There are twenty-one or twenty-two men who are placed in certain localities and are paid certain small amounts for their work.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Do they share in the seizures as the Customs officers do?

Mr. COSTIGAN. They do not share so, generally. The highest class of officers in the Inland
Mr. COSTIGAN.

Revenue have no participation in the seizures at all.

Mr. McMULLEN. I see that Mr. C. Curliss, who receives a salary of $800, was paid for information, travelling expenses, &c., $2,550. That was a very large amount.

Mr. COSTIGAN. We have one officer who is the whole year round actively engaged in that service, and his services are utilised in any part of the Dominion where there is hard work to be done. He is a most active officer and has done good work. Without making any reflection upon the other officers, I think he has done more active work in that respect than any of them. The seizures made are very numerous, but the receipts from them are not very great. A great many of them are made with a view of enforcing the regulations of the Department, as, for instance, in the selling of tobacco. With regard to illicit distilleries, where they are seized, I have laid it down as a rule that the Department would allow the law to take its course. In all these cases, prosecutions have taken place, but the returns are very small. In many cases the offenders are imprisoned, but the informer has to be paid whether a penalty is recovered or not. With regard to tobacco and other small cases, we do not prosecute on the first offence, but still we must impress the public with obeying the law. With the second offence we deal more heavily.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. gentleman has a very efficient officer evidently in Cape Breton, judging from the number of seizures there compared with other parts of the Dominion.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Some places are better fields for operations than others.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I see that the fines vary. Some of them are moderately light. I suppose they are for first offences?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). In some cases the penalty is a month in goal. In one case a fine of $50 was imposed and no term in goal. In two cases there was a release, probably because the seizure was not justified. In another case there was a fine of $100, and in another a fine of $100 and five months in goal. The difference was, no doubt, due to the fact of the offence being a first offence in one case, and the second in another, or to other mitigating or aggravating circumstances.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Most of these cases, I dare say, have gone to the court, and perhaps that will explain why the penalties vary. The minimum penalty is, I think, $100, and the maximum, $500. As I said before, we seldom settle these cases, except it is for the first offence, but we confiscate the goods, and in some cases $100 has been imposed. Sometimes we might get part of a still, and it is a question whether that was used legitimately. But you cannot afford to be liberal and let them get off easy, because otherwise there would be great temptation to defraud the revenue.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice on the same page of the Auditor General's Report the name H. A. Costigan, $998.05, for travelling expenses. Who is he?

Mr. COSTIGAN. He is the Collector of Inland Revenue at Winnipeg. The reason the amount for travelling expenses was so large last year, is because he was obliged to make repeated visits all through the North-West, in connection with the manufacture of beer in that country, and in connection with some seizures made there. He is my son.

Extra duty, pay of officers at large distilleries and factories..... $5,000

Mr. McMULLEN. What is that for?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The same explanation I gave before applies here. The sum paid for extra duty is really in the interest of economy; it is a special vote given to pay these men without raising their salaries as excisemen. These men have to give much longer hours in distilleries than in their ordinary employment. In the cities excisemen only work from 9 to 4, but in the distilleries they have to be on duty from 7 in the morning to 6 or 7 in the evening every day. When they go to discharge that particular duty, we pay them this extra allowance.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is their fixed salary without any allowance?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It may differ. They are all general excisemen. We might want a first-class exciseman, and we would take him out of the Toronto office and put him in a distillery; he would then get a proportionate increase out of this vote. A third-class exciseman might be wanted there also. If he went there and performed these duties, he would get his increase proportionate to his salary.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think it would be better that an arrangement was made in some way, that they would be allowed so much an hour while engaged in this service. I dare say that sometimes in these distilleries they are called upon to put in longer hours than in other places. I notice there is a general disposition on the part of public service, outside as well as inside, to charge, from time to time, any little additional sum that they possibly can charge, over what they would be entitled to within a certain limited compensation. I see that tendency is growing. Last year I drew attention to the fact that we have on our list a large number of officers who are drawing good salaries, and they have got the idea that if they do a little overplus work they can get paid extra for it. At the commencement of the Auditor General's Report he states that there are four or five hundred officers who are in the habit of making extra charges, although they are getting good salaries. If the Government encourage this sort of thing, we will have every officer in the country endeavoring to take advantage of this practice which has grown up in the service.

Mr. COSTIGAN. While I do not question the right of the hon. gentleman to make this complaint, his complaint does not apply in the present instance. It is not for one hour over service during a particular day that we pay these men extra. The same book of attendance is kept in the distillery, that is kept in the office here; and when the officer goes to that distillery in the morning, he must sign that book at 7 o'clock, and if he puts in twelve hours a day all the year round, the book is there to show it. There is a guarantee that he has done this additional work, and, consequently, he is entitled to additional pay.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I suppose this is done only at half a dozen places?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Not more.

Travelling expenses, rent, fuel, stationery, &c.; also stamps for imported and Canadian tobacco..... $70,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I desire to call the attention of the Minister to the fact that a great many complaints have been made to me, and, I think, to other members of the House, as to the oppressive manner in which retailers are dealt with in this matter of collecting stamps. I am not quite certain that I exactly understand the nature of the complaint, though I have no doubt that the Minister does. But as I understand, under his regulations, a very great particularity is observed, and, as it appears, a rather needless particularity. I have been told, if my memory is correct, that you must open the package of stamps in a particular fashion, at a particular end, and in a great variety of ways something like traps are laid for the retailer, who is often harshly dealt with. No doubt the Minister is conversant with the nature of these complaints, and also with the fact that many members of the retail trade consider they have been very harshly dealt with by some of his officers.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman is quite right in supposing that I am familiar with the complaints he has alluded to. The complaint is one, of course, which may be natural. It arose through the difficulty of enforcing the law under the preventive service I have just referred to; but while I know it to be difficult to enforce that law, and inconvenient to some extent, on account of other circumstances, I believe it to be absolutely necessary in the interest of the revenue. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will be satisfied if I tell him now that this subject will be dealt with during the present Session, in a Bill amending the Inland Revenue Act, which I propose to ask this House to pass. When that comes up we can discuss it very fully. These complaints have been brought to the attention of the Government, and the Government intend to see if something cannot be done by which the operation of the law may be attended with less inconvenience to the trade—without prejudice to the collection of the revenue.

It being six o'clock, the Committee rose, and the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to ask the Minister to explain the payment of $150 to A. Fréchette, for translation of circulars, Orders in Council, &c.

Mr. COSTIGAN. This was an amount paid to a gentleman who, it is true, is receiving another salary. It is very difficult to obtain any one familiar with the technical terms of the Department of Inland Revenue to do this work of translation, especially in the Foods and Drugs branch. So we are obliged to ask this gentleman to do the work. He refused to do it unless he was paid, and we could not do otherwise than ask Parliament for a vote of money. I repeat that this officer is peculiarly qualified, having had fifteen years' experience in the Department, and the Government, therefore, asks a vote of $150, out of which will be paid the amount the work is worth.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that the Law Clerk and Translator of the House of Commons receives a salary of $1,500 a year. No doubt, his time is fully occupied while the House is in session, but during the recess this cannot be the case. I fail to understand the ground on which an extra payment of $150 is made to this man for doing a little work when he is not otherwise occupied. This is an example of the same principle as that to which I objected this afternoon. We have no less than 616 clerks on the pay-list of the Dominion drawing double salaries, the number having increased from 480 last year. This is a most pernicious system, and I cannot understand the justice of men receiving double salaries. There are many examples of this practice. An excise officer at Winnipeg has drawn, for inspecting weights and measures, $200 in addition to his ordinary salary. The Collector of Customs at New Westminster has drawn $150 for receiving $3,998 of excise duties. The Collector of Customs at Newcastle was paid $119 for collecting $2,300 of excise duties, he already receiving a salary of $1,000. I also see that he received $72.45 for distributing bounty cheques to fishermen. That is another absurdity. A Government officer is entrusted with a number of cheques to distribute to the fishermen, who will be very glad to receive them, and for doing this work a charge is made of four or five per cent. I also draw attention to the case of I. Johns, Customs Collector at Vancouver, who receives a salary of $1,200 a year, and who is paid $250 for collecting excise duties. The Commissioner of Customs receives a salary of $3,200, and he draws $800 for being chairman of the Board of Commissioners. F. H. Hesson, Brandon, receives a salary of $1,200 as Collector of Customs, and he draws a sum for collecting excise duties. I draw the hon. Minister's attention to these payments, not because I consider his Department is worse than the other Departments, but because I entirely object to the whole system. It is wrong that any officer should draw double salary, and it should be distinctly understood when they are engaged that their whole time must be devoted to the service of the country in any capacity in keeping with the position they occupy. If they are required to do a little extra work outside their ordinary duties, it must be remembered that their time belongs to the country, and they should not be encouraged in the direction of obtaining double pay for their services.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman to the full extent, in his remarks, that economy might be secured in the public services by following the course suggested. I present this point as being worthy of his consideration. In a town a Customs office is first established. If there is business of the Inland Revenue Department to be done, the question arises, whether the volume promises to be such as will justify the appointment of an officer at a salary upon which he would be able to live. In 1883 this principle was embodied in the Inland Revenue Act, and authority was given, in small towns where it was found to be necessary to appoint excise officers, to utilise the services of the Customs officers by giving them a small percentage on the collection. That was done with a view to effecting economy, and we have followed on that line. With respect to gas inspection: on opening the gas offices at all towns, instead of appointing an inspector at each, the small sum of $100 is given to one of the officers already in the service in addition to his present salary. Economy is thus secured. The hon. gentleman may not agree with me, but it is to be hoped that his views might be modified to some extent.

Mr. McMULLEN. Take the case of Mr. Hesson, Collector of Customs at Brandon, who receives a salary of $1,200 a year. I am sure that his time is not occupied more than two hours a day in transacting the work of the office. On what principle of justice or right to this country, do you pay him an extra sum for collecting a certain revenue of the Inland Revenue Department there? Why cannot the Government, when they employ a man, make an arrangement with him, so that if he has not much business to do at his office, he shall be required in addition to perform other duties for the public service until such time as the volume of business of his particular office reaches the extent that it will occupy his whole time? Why should not the Government say to the collectors of Customs at these small places: We expect you to do your duty in the service, and we will not allow anything extra for that duty. That would be a reasonable thing to do. But it appears quite clear that in every case throughout the whole country, these Customs officers, Excise officers, and clerks in Departments, both in the inside and outside service, have got the idea into their heads that they ought to make an extra charge for any little service they render. The system is a bad one. Some of these men may not, perhaps, have an hour's work in the day, and if they are asked to perform some other service in the country's interest they ought to be compelled to do it without extra charge. With respect to this next item for an allowance of $3,500 to collectors of Customs on duties collected by them, it is exactly in the same position as the last. Will the hon. gentleman say how it is that he asks an extra vote for the purpose of distributing money among collectors of Customs for rendering some little service to the Department?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The only answer I can give is that it is the same item, and that there are the same reasons against it and the same reasons for it. This is the same vote given year after year and for the same reason, that we think it much cheaper to give a percentage to those officers than to appoint officers of our own.

Mr. McMULLEN. That shows that we have established a pernicious system which is encouraged and kept alive by the Government. There is nothing to prevent the Minister of Inland Revenue and the Minister of Customs making an arrangement so that this $3,500 should be saved to the country.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I think there is much in what my hon. friend from Wellington (Mr. McMullen) says. Of course there is this difficulty: Perhaps the Minister of Customs will not allow the Minister of Inland Revenue to have one of his servants do work for him without getting paid. I believe that many of these collectors engaged at small ports do not occupy their whole time in the service of the country, and if they have spare time, I do not see why they should get extra pay, because they happen to collect inland revenue instead of Customs. No matter how small the revenue from a place may be, you have to give a man a salary adequate for maintenance, and sometimes you have to give more than you think the work is worth. In such a case, he ought to perform the additional work without extra pay. I blame the Government, as a whole, for this system, and not the Minister in particular, and I think they ought to take the matter into consideration and make some reform. I do not think that there is anything in what the Minister says, in reference to appointing a special person for doing special work. The Collector of Customs is a servant of the Government, and he ought to be called upon to do work for the Government, no matter under what Department it may be.

Mr. WALDIE. I understand there is an arrangement by which officers of the Customs Department who receive salaries higher than $600 a year are not allowed to engage in any other employment. After listening to the discussion to-night, I think that some arrangement might be made between the Customs and Excise Departments, so that in small places where the business is limited, and the salary less than $1,000, a commission might be allowed; but where the salary is $1,000 or over and the business is small, I think the collector should do the excise work without any commission. Some such principle as that might be adopted by the Government, and it would result in a saving of the public expenditure.

To enable Department to supply methylated spirits to manufacturers, the cost of which will be recouped by the manufacturers to whom they are supplied.....	$5,000
--	---------

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I would like to have a pretty full explanation about the working of this system. How do the receipts compare with the expenditure; how is it worked by the Department; what satisfaction has it given? As far as I have been able to ascertain myself, it looks as though this system is being worked at a loss; but the Minister can probably explain.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Speaking from memory only, and from the information I have obtained from my own officers, I can reply to the hon. gentleman, that I am under the impression that it is not administered at a loss. The arrangement made for importing wood alcohol, mixing it and distributing it to manufacturers when required, was that 10 per cent. margin above cost should be charged to cover expenses. If the hon. gentleman's idea should turn out to be correct, I should be surprised, for I am under the impression that the business is about self-sustaining. The change made has placed the production of methylated spirits in the hands of the Department.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). On page 20 of the Public Accounts, the receipts of the Excise Department from methylated spirits are stated to be $28,178, and in the Auditor General's Report the expenditure is stated to be $58,493. I find by the report of the Minister's Department that the quantity of methylated spirits manufactured during the year was 100,283 gallons, of which 97,472 gallons were sold, leaving 2,811 gallons in the warehouse, so that almost all that was manufactured was sold. There is a discrepancy there which, I think, cannot be actual, but which I am unable to explain.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The discrepancy would not be as large as would appear from the figures given, because there is a portion of the manufactured methylated spirits still on hand, and I am under the impression that a considerable portion of the wood alcohol is on hand also. I may add that the Department took control of the manufacture of methylated spirits because there was good reason to believe that the privileges given had to some extent been abused, and that the revenue had suffered, and the change resulted in an increase in the revenue from $400,000 to $600,000, which increase is fairly attributed to that change.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What is this $5,000 wanted for, then, when there is an annual expenditure of about $58,000? A larger amount than that must be required to purchase the supplies necessary for consumption during the year.

Mr. COSTIGAN. That is to purchase the imported wood naphtha.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is there not a debit and credit account kept, showing all the transactions during the year? The $5,000 would not cover all those.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It would not, of course, cover the whole expenditure. The receipts coming in enable the Department to carry on the transactions to a much larger amount.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). We do not work our other Departments in that way. The total expenditures and the total receipts, I think, ought to be shown.

Mr. COSTIGAN. This is an exceptional item. The work was tried as an experiment a couple of years ago.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The apparent excess of the expenditure over the receipts, however, is still unexplained. I can understand that the discrepancy might be accounted for by the stock on hand. Does the hon. Minister know whether, from the inception of the undertaking, he struck a scale which fully remunerated the country, or did we work it at a loss for a time?

Mr. COSTIGAN. We struck a scale which we had reason to believe would enable the Department to mix the ingredients and distribute them to the manufacturers without any loss to the country, and the 10 per cent. provided for in the law has been quite sufficient to cover the expenses. I will give the hon. gentleman a full statement further on, to show exactly how the balance stands.

Culling Timber..... $29,150

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I very much regret to see that, after reducing this vote to $20,000 last year, nearly $10,000 are added to it this year. We were certainly given to understand that $20,000 would be the maximum. That requires an explanation.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I am glad to be able to offer the explanation, and I want to do it at the earliest possible moment. During the discussion of the Estimates last year, the statement was very clearly made that the business was expected to be done for $28,000, which was $20,000 less than the previous cost. $28,000 was the sum my estimate was based upon, and it was a mistake which made it appear as $20,000. Therefore, the difference between last year's estimate and this year's estimate is only about $1,150.

To pay the salary of W. J. Macdonald,
Assistant Inspector at Pictou, N. S. $500

Mr. JONES (Halifax). What is the necessity for an assistant inspector at Pictou?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I have stated already that from the creation of the divisions, in most of the divisions there was an inspector and an assistant inspector. Pictou was one of the few divisions where there was no assistant at all, and it was provided to appoint one, as the inspector was quite unable to do the whole work. We enlarged the district last year, and it was absolutely necessary to appoint an assistant.

Mr. McMULLEN. How many districts are there?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The last reduction made was made since I had charge of the Department. We reduced the number by enlarging the districts. Whenever an inspector in one division dies or retires we do not replace him by a new man, but we add that district to the adjoining one. There were forty-one throughout the whole Dominion, and we reduced the number by one or two.

Mr. McMULLEN. I see that in the Hamilton district the number employed is very large. There are seven assistant inspectors and two inspectors. If it is necessary to appoint so many assistant inspectors, I fail to see where the saving is made in enlarging the districts.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Suppose we have two districts and two inspectors, at a minimum salary fixed by law of $1,000, and reaching a maximum of $1,300, by combining the two in one, we will have only one inspector at a high salary, and the additional men will only get $500 and a maximum of $800.

Mr. McMULLEN. I see that the receipts of Hamilton are $10,000, double those of Montreal or any other place.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

Mr. COSTIGAN. That can be partly accounted for by the fact that in Hamilton a very large number of scales and balances are manufactured there, and the inspection takes place in the factory.

Mr. McMULLEN. There is a large factory in Hamilton.

Mr. COSTIGAN. There are several.

Mr. McMULLEN. There is also one in Toronto and one in Montreal. There must be a very large amount of inspection done in Hamilton compared with Montreal, where the receipts are only $5,000, and with Toronto, where the receipts are only $2,500.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman does not complain that we collect too much?

Mr. McMULLEN. No; but I do not understand why such a large amount is collected at Hamilton, and so little at the other points.

Rent, fuel, travelling expenses, postage, stationery, &c., for Weights and Measures..... $18,000

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Taking that and the next item together, I would ask whether the weights and measures and the gas inspection could not be in the one building, and thus save extra rent and fuel?

Mr. COSTIGAN. To a large extent, of course, there are public buildings provided in towns which have gas accommodation, but where there are none we have to rent them. If I could make arrangements to rent one building which would accommodate both or all of the departments, as a matter of economy I would adopt that system.

To meet expenses of Adulteration of Food Act..... $25,000

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What are the fees under this item?

Mr. COSTIGAN. There is no comparison between the receipts and the expenditure. It was never contemplated that this branch could be anything like self-sustaining, although I propose this year, and have done something in that direction, to make the receipts more than they have been.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). What has been the amount of expenditure during the last year under this Act? Does he really know whether he requires this $25,000 or not?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Judging from the expenditure last year, I think this is about the same amount, and will be sufficient to carry on the work of that branch.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I see that about $23,000 were expended last year.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It would be about that.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). What was expended in 1889-90?

Mr. COSTIGAN. We are limited by the vote of Parliament in regard to this expenditure. If Parliament voted $50,000, I have no doubt we could expend it. The expenditure is made in getting samples and analysing them all over the country. The operation of the Act has been very largely extended, and I think, from the notices in the press, this is very favorably viewed by the public. Out of this vote we pay the salaries and expenses and provide for the analyses of drugs, medicines, food and water. If Parliament went further and voted a larger sum, we could utilise it by extending this system, but we are limited by the vote of Parliament.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). The hon. gentleman can easily come down with an additional amount in the Supplementary Estimates.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I will not do anything of the kind.

North-West Mounted Police.....$709,250

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I observe that there is a considerable decrease in the pay of the force, which was $332,176, whereas now only $320,000 is asked. I would like the hon. gentleman to be good enough to state how that reduction has taken place—whether it is by a reduction in the number of men, or by a reduction in the wages.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This arises from the fact that in this year nearly 400 men will become entitled to their discharge. They are now receiving from 60 cents to 75 cents a day, according to their length of service. No doubt a considerable number of them will be re-engaged, but the recruits receive the minimum pay.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do you call recruits those who re-enlist?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; those who re-engage have the same salary as they had before.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What is the idea of the Minister in regard to retaining that force at its present strength? Some time ago we increased its numbers, but now that the Territories are getting settled, it might be that such a large force need not be maintained for all time to come. Can the Minister state that he has any idea of reducing that force?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am afraid that it would be a great mistake to reduce that force. Before the influx of settlers into the North-West, the force as originally organised had simply to look after the Indians, to preserve peace, and to protect the few straggling settlers who were going in there, from Indian outrages. Now there is an influx of people from across the border—people with all kinds of habits, and the raiding, the stealing of cattle, and the smuggling—especially of intoxicants—are continually on the increase. In fact, the force is now more hardly worked than it ever was before. It has to protect the peaceable whites from the raiders, from the people who cross the line and commit all kinds of outrages. If we had not the most friendly relations with the American force on the south of the border, the situation would be almost intolerable. I do not think the strength of the force could be reduced without danger to the peace of the country. It is also expected that there will be a great influx of miners from the south, in view of the mineral resources of the North-West.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I see that the hon. gentleman's commissioner reports in regard to the matter of preventing the introduction of liquor into the North-West. I do not know whether the First Minister fully endorses that report, but, at all events, he presents it to Parliament. I will read to the hon. gentleman what his officer says in this report, and then I will ask him if he endorses it:

"The liquor question is in nearly the same position it was last year. There is still a considerable outcry against the enforcement of the Act in the various towns, but not nearly as much as last year. The facility of obtaining permits for the sale of four per cent. beer, and the great improvement in the quality of the article, has, to a large extent, lessened the demand for stronger beverages, and I think there has been much less drunkenness in the country."

If he had not said that, we might, perhaps, have inferred that the four per cent. beer had, in some mysterious way, become stronger than four per cent., and had done away with the demand for strong liquors. He adds:

"It is generally conceded that permission to brew beer in the Territories under proper restrictions would have a beneficial result, besides in a great measure allaying the considerable discontent that undoubtedly exists. Barley grows well, and in some sheltered places, hops; but at present they are unsaleable. Home breweries would keep a considerable amount of money in the country, and afford a market to farmers for grain which they could with great advantage grow, as it can be sown long after the season for sowing wheat and oats expires. I myself have sown barley on 12th June and reaped a good crop on 10th September."

Then he goes on to speak of contraband liquor:

"A good deal of contraband liquor has been captured and spilled, the largest consignment, valued at $1,700, being seized and destroyed at Calgary last month. Great inducements are held out to our men to allow liquor to come in without permit, and in one instance $1,000 was offered to a corporal to go on pass for three weeks. This corporal has been particularly successful in capturing liquor, and is greatly in the way of professional smugglers. Very few instances have come to our notice in which liquor has been given to Indians. Hop beer has frequently, however, been sold to Indians, but the vendors have generally proved that the beer was doctored with tobacco, &c., by the Indians before drinking, and the prosecutions have consequently fallen through."

That is the point upon which I would like the Minister to give us his opinion, as to the desirability of the manufacture of this four per cent. beer up there—as to whether he agrees that it is beneficial or otherwise.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. From all I can hear I think it is very beneficial. Personally, I quite agree with Colonel Herchmer, though I do not wish to get up a discussion on teetotalism on this report. The matter is to be left to the Local Legislature, and they will decide it for themselves. Moreover, that discussion will come up on the North-West Bill.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That is coming down?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is coming down; it has been introduced in the Upper House. I would say to my hon. friend, speaking about the service of the force, they patrol steadily from the foot of the Rocky Mountains to Emerson. They watch the frontiers; they seize horses and cattle that have been stolen from the United States; the officers of the United States follow, and the animals are surrendered. In the same way, when cattle and horses have been stolen from Canada, the American force, which is a very large one along our frontier, help to recover the animals stolen, and to hand over the offenders. I believe that the use of this very mild alcoholic beverage, this four per cent. beer, has actually rooted out the horrible stuff that was smuggled across the line. It is sufficiently stimulating, too, as a substitute, except for very hard drinkers.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. gentleman speak from personal knowledge of the four per cent mixture?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I never tasted it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We would like to have a sample. Or, can the Finance Minister supply the requisite information?

Mr. FOSTER. It is against my principles to supply it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I suppose it is very much like lager beer.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is it, when analysed, of about the same percentage of alcohol as lager beer? Where is the Minister of Agriculture? He ought to be able to give us some useful information?

Mr. CARLING. I never tasted it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am told by the Comptroller that this four per cent. beer is like weak lager.

Mr. MACDOWALL. I would suggest that the hon. member for South Oxford should go up to the North-West and reside there; then, perhaps, he will find that anything like weak lager is not very tempting.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do you speak from experience?

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). No doubt the hon. member who has just spoken is a very fair judge of the quality of four per cent. beer; no doubt experience has taught him whether it is good or not, whether it will stimulate or not. Now, I wish to call the attention of the First Minister to some points in this report, which is a very interesting report, and shows that the Commissioner has devoted a great deal of thought and attention to the subject, and I think it may, to a certain extent, be relied upon. But I cannot understand why one of the First Minister's strongest supporters, an hon. gentleman who would put himself out of the way every time to support the hon. gentleman, attacks his Commissioner most unmercifully, on the floor of the House, and in every other place, and in his subsidised paper in the North-West. I cannot understand that. It would appear to me that either the Commissioner must be wrong, or else the representative must be wrong.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Perhaps they are both wrong.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I am glad to hear the Minister say that, perhaps, they are both wrong, because I think I can find some recommendations in this report which he would hardly agree with; I am inclined to think that some of the recommendations are not in the interest of the North-West, as I hope to be able to show. I think the course pursued in reference to our Mounted Police in the North-West, is an extravagant course and, to a certain extent, a reckless one. When we take up the list, what do we find? The Commissioner recommends that all the salaries ought to be increased. He says the men are getting too small an amount, and he recommends that those receiving $1,000 should get $1,300, those receiving $1,400 should get $1,800, and those receiving $1,600 should get $2,000 or $2,400, according to the length of service. He recommends an increase of salary all along the line. He presents a glowing report of the manner in which the force is conducted, the economy, as he would call it, that is exercised by the Commissioner and the officer in charge. But my object is more particularly to draw the attention of the Government to the manner in which the medical staff in the North-West is being managed. I think the system pursued there is not a judicious system. I think we have 900 men employed there.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. 1,000 men, besides officers.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Well, I may say, in the neighborhood of 1,000 men. Quite a number of them have escaped. Senior Surgeon Jukes receives $1,400; Assistant Surgeon Aylmer, $1,000; Dr. Dodd, $1,000; Dr. Fair, $1,000; Dr. Fraser, $1,000; and three others at salaries, respectively, of $800, $720, $720, or, in all, an expenditure of $7,640 for salaries of attending physicians. Add to that the amount of incidentals that must occur, or take the contract physicians, who are employed by the month, and you add another $1,000, or, in all, $8,640. This is not all the expense in this connection. Each of the medical men who is employed at an average salary of $1,000 requires a horse. The cost may be placed at $100. The cost of the physician's maintenance may be placed at $175; coal will average $100, light $25, and other sundry necessities $100, or in all $1,500 is the lowest estimate that can possibly be placed as the cost of the physician's service in the North-West. If you consider the duties these physicians have to perform, the sum appears to be a very large one indeed. Taking the force at 1,000 men there will be an average of about 100 to each physician, during the year, each physician costing, as I have said, $1,500. These physicians make their visits at certain specified hours; and I venture to say, that not more than one hour per day is devoted by each physician to attendance on the force. For one hour a day during the year he obtains $1,500, and that hour is generally in the morning, unless special circumstances should arise. Further, in reading over the Commissioner's report, I find that he represents that this force consists principally of young men about twenty-five years of age, who are hardy, strong, and among whom very little sickness prevails. I remember last year, when this matter was under discussion, the First Minister said the Mounted Police had to perform very laborious work, to travel from one end of the North-West to the other, exposed to all the hardships of out-door life in the North-West. I do not read so in the Commissioner's report. There they are represented as hale, hearty, strong men, very few of whom are sick. For his attendance on the very limited number, perhaps five men each year out of the 100, each physician obtains $1,500. I suggest that it would be a much better system to employ contract physicians. We have employed them at Lethbridge, Calgary and one or two other points. They attend the force in that vicinity for a payment of $60 per month each. Whenever a member of the force is sick a physician attends him, and under this system a great saving is effected, from the fact that the incidentals equal to $500 a year are saved, and very likely the force is more efficiently attended to than under the regular staff as now provided. I also desire to call attention to the manner in which the Government provides the stock of drugs in each locality. The system is a bad one. In fact, you cannot call it a system at all. The various staff surgeons at the different stations send in their requisitions in November to Regina. Senior Surgeon Jukes gives the order to Montreal for the drugs required, and they are sent in the spring. It might be imagined that a large amount might be saved by purchasing drugs in quantities from Montreal, but such does not seem to be the fact, because the various surgeons at the different posts, when sending in requisitions are very likely to ask for a larger supply than is needed, lest the supply should run out, and thus they keep a much larger stock on hand than is necessary. Not only that, but the attending physicians are frequently changed and removed from one post to another. We know that a physician takes a fancy to certain drugs and uses them more frequently than other physicians do, and so when a new physician arrives at a post he finds the stock of drugs is not such as he desires, and he, therefore, sends to the head of the Department for a different assortment. Thus it comes about that at each post there is an extensive Government drug store. That system might have been a prudent one a few years ago, but the time is past for such a system to prevail. When it was established, there were few drug stores, but you can now find drug stores at almost every post in the North-West. The First Minister shakes his head. Let the hon. gentleman go to Calgary, and he will find a large drug store; also at Battleford, Regina, and at Prince Albert there is a contract physician, and an extensive private drug store. I think you can hardly find a single point there, where you would not be able to get all the drugs required for the force. If you adopted a system of this kind you could always get all the drugs you want, because the contract surgeon, or the regular attending surgeon, could at once send to the drug store and get the necessary medicines for the treatment of the patients. What is the necessity of the Government keeping up these drug stores at Calgary and other posts? Are they going into the drug business there? If you look at the enormous amount of money expended in the North-West, it will astonish you as to how in the world a thousand men with ten or twelve physicians in attendance could possibly do away with that enormous amount of drugs in a year. This money is squandered, and I say that the system could be changed with economy and with benefit to the force. It is time that the First Minister should consider whether it is not in the interest of the service, and in the interests of economy, that some other system should be adopted. Before there were drug stores in that country, the Government had no other course than to adopt the present system, but there is a different state of affairs in the North-West now to what there was then. In many places the physicians could use the private drug stores established there, and if it were necessary to have a surgeon in some of the outside posts where there is no civilisation yet, one could be sent there. I would advise the Government to consider this matter between this and next Session, and see whether they cannot adopt some other system by which they can exercise more economy than is being displayed in the North-West. I call the First Minister's attention to the fact, that if the Commissioner is all that he says he is, a good judge of four per cent. beer, and an efficient officer, the right hon. gentleman should call off his supporters, and not allow them to pursue Colonel Herchmer in the future as they have done in the past.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I listened with the greatest respect, of course, to the recommendation of my hon. friend, who, as a professional man, understands this subject. The hon. gentleman truly says that, when the force was first organised in the North-West, the country was comparatively a wilderness, and there were no drug stores or shops there at all. Now they are beginning up there to establish themselves as respectable and trustworthy dealers. The hon. gentleman knows that there are all kinds of drug stores and all descriptions of drugs, and it is of the first importance, more than the price of the article, to have these medicines of good quality. We do not want to get brick-dust for quinine, or any of the substitutes for wholesome medicines that are sold by small and needy druggists or apothecaries. The Department, having a just regard for the health of the men, thought the first requisite was to get the best article possible, and they purchased from Kenneth Campbell & Co., of Montreal, who, as the hon. gentleman, perhaps, knows, are dealers of the first rank and respectability, with great capital and enormous business, and cannot afford to sell an inferior article. The same thing may be said of the firm of Hooper & Co., of Toronto, and the orders are always given to one or the other of these. The requisition for the medicines required up there come from respectable and responsible medical men. I do not know if my hon. friend knows his professional confrère, Dr. Jukes.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Yes; I have not a word to say against him.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He is, professionally and socially, a man of the first rank, and he takes the greatest care possible with respect to his requisitions for medicines. I can tell the hon. gentleman that there has been a large saving since he was appointed surgeon to the force. Before his time the orders were very large, and I believe made with very little regard to economy. Dr. Jukes, I am satisfied, keeps that constantly in view, and I do not think it would be well for the Department to criticise his order. He understands his business, is a thoroughly honorable and honest man, and he will not order medicines that he does not think are required. I am informed by the Comptroller that in one or two places there are respectable drug stores, and we will, as those stores grow, follow the advice of my hon. friend, and when it is thought proper by the responsible medical officers, we will transfer the business by degrees from the Montreal and Toronto houses to the local druggists. I agree with my hon. friend that that system must be adopted by degrees, when the responsible medical officer thinks it ought to be done, and to the extent he thinks it proper. I am quite sure that if the force had the good fortune to have my hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Wilson) as the senior surgeon, we would listen with complete credence to his requisition. Certainly, we would not doubt the economy of his orders in any way. Now, with respect to the medical men, I think, that for a regiment of infantry consisting of about 600 or 700 men there is a surgeon and two assistant surgeons. Here, there is a senior surgeon and four assistant surgeons for a force of 1,000 men wandering over a continent. My hon. friend says, that these five surgeons are not wanted for the force, but yet they are continually employed. The force, as I have already stated, is not only watching the frontier from the foot of the Rocky Mountains to Edmonton; and sometimes at the request of the British Columbia Government, a portion of the force is sent there; but they are obliged to send divisions of these men hundreds and hundreds of miles from Regina, the headquarters, where the recruits are trained, to Edmonton, to Prince Albert, to Calgary, to Fort Macleod, and to all the various posts which are occupied by this force. As a proper precaution, whenever a body of men of any size is sent, say from Regina to Prince Albert or Edmonton, there is always a medical man sent with them, taking with him some medicines and surgical appliances which might be called for. So that there really cannot well be, in justice to the force, a smaller number of surgeons at present. It would be miserable economy to have any squads or divisions of this force without a medical man accompanying them. The cost is not great, and the service is well worth the expenditure.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I would not have the hon. First Minister imagine that I was saying anything derogatory of the senior surgeon. So far as he is concerned, he is required by all means, and I do not think a more efficient man could be got than Dr. Jukes. But there are two contract surgeons already, and does the hon. gentleman say that the service they perform for $600 a month is not well performed, or that they in any way impair the service? Do these contract surgeons not serve the force quite as well as the regular surgeons, and at a much less cost? The hon. Minister should have enquired and found out whether that is the case or not. If it is, it is his duty to try and adopt this system as soon as possible, though keeping the senior surgeon to look after the junior branches. Is it likely that respectable drug stores in the North-West, which are anxious for a reputation for supplying proper drugs as the firm in Montreal, would fail to supply the force with good and reliable drugs, when they would be largely depending upon it for their business? I do not think there is much in that consideration of the hon. First Minister. I think the druggists up there would be anxious to supply as good drugs as those got from Montreal. I am inclined to think that the hon. First Minister will consider this matter before another Session, and if he does, I think he will come down with a proposition to save this expenditure.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Certainly, I will consider it.

Fisheries..... $236,500

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It is unfortunate that we have not the Fishery Report down yet.

Mr. COLBY. I am very sorry to say that I am afraid that will not be down for some time yet. As hon. gentlemen are aware, the report is made up to the end of the calendar year. It is now in the printers' hands, but the Deputy informs me that it is doubtful if it can be laid on the Table in less than ten days, or possibly two weeks. I would suggest that we go on with the vote, and if there is any information required on any item on which a satisfactory explanation is not given, the item might stand over.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It would have been more fitting if we had the report before us before discussing the items, although I am not disposed to offer any objection to proceeding without it.

Mr. COLBY. The hon. member will find all the details of the expenditure in the Auditor General's Report.

Fisheries, N.S..... $20,000

Mr. COLBY. The vote of $18,000 last year was found to be insufficient, as $20,201 was expended.

Mr. KIRK. It has been stated this Session that Mr. Rogers was superannuated, and two others appointed in his place. What salary do they receive?

Mr. COLBY. $600 a year each.

Mr. KIRK. How many fish wardens are there in Guysborough, and what are their salaries?

Mr. COLBY. That will be fully set out in the departmental report for 1889.

Fisheries, N. B..... $20,000

Mr. WELDON (St. John). What is the revenue from the fishing licenses?

Mr. COLBY. The largest item is for smelt licenses in Miramichi.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Must every fisherman take out a license in Miramichi?

Mr. COLBY. They are all required to take out licenses for river fishing, and also for salmon fishing.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I have had a communication from Digby, asking for information respecting the order restraining fishermen in St. Mary's Bay, from setting their trawl nets from October to June. It seems a recent order has been issued preventing the fishermen from Long Island and the Deep Passage, and all along Sandy Cove, from setting their trawl nets as they have been accustomed to do for years past. Was this an Order in Council or a departmental regulation, and what is the reason for it, and have the Department received remonstrances from the fishermen of the district against it? I am informed these people, who had made all their preparations, will, if this order be enforced, either have to starve or emigrate to the United States. I am not aware that hitherto it has been the custom to restrict the trawl fishing in a bay so large as St. Mary's Bay.

Mr. COLBY. I am informed that was done on the recommendation of the overseer, but I am not in a position to give the reasons assigned. I will, however, give the information at a later stage.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I would suppose the Department had better grounds than the mere recommendation of an overseer, for with all due deference to that class, they are not always the best judges. They are sometimes influenced by local considerations and prejudices.

Mr. COLBY. While it was done on the recommendation of the overseer, it was not done until after careful enquiry, and full particulars of the reasons will be furnished the hon. gentleman.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Who is the present inspector of fisheries in New Brunswick.

Mr. COLBY. Mr. Chapman and Mr. Morrell are the names of the two inspectors.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Mr. Morrell resides some distance up the St. John river.

Mr. COLBY. He resides sixty-five miles from the mouth of the river St. John, but he has supervision over the fisheries.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). What are the salaries of these gentlemen?

Mr. COLBY. $600 each. The two combined get less than Mr. Perry did.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Has Mr. Morrell made any report with regard to seining in St. John river?

Mr. COLBY. Yes; his opinion is against seining at all in the St. John river.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Then I cannot see why they should now abolish the weirs. I think they have existed for about 90 years.

Mr. COLBY. The practice which has hitherto existed has been contrary to the regulations.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). This existed long before Confederation. In regard to Mr. David Morrow, I know him personally and have no objection to him, but he has been in the woods, and it is an extraordinary thing to put him in charge of the fisheries, because he has no acquaintance with the subject.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). What decision has the Minister arrived at in regard to the sawdust question? Has any change been made, or do the Government adhere to the views which they expressed last year?

Mr. COLBY. I think there will be a Bill on that subject submitted to the House on the next Government day.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I had previously called attention to the speech of the Lieutenant Governor of the Province in regard to the claim of the Province.

Mr. COLBY. I was informed that this correspondence was in the hands of the Minister of Justice, and would be immediately laid on the Table of the House.

Fisheries, P. E. I. $3,500

Mr. ROBERTSON. Is it true that the fine imposed in Prince Edward Island on the lobster catchers has been $50, while it has been only $10 on those on the west coast of Nova Scotia? I would also ask if it is the intention of the Government to place an inspector in each lobster factory during the season?

Mr. COLBY. The fines imposed in Prince Edward Island ranged from $2.50 to $20. That was for having lobsters below the size provided by law.

Mr. KIRK. Is that the practice in the different Provinces? Is it uniform? I have heard of several fines of $50 being imposed in my county.

Mr. COLBY. I suppose that is within the discretion of the court. The law is applicable to the whole country alike. There might be mitigating or aggravating circumstances, or the courts might take different views.

Mr. FLYNN. I think the overseer, if he discovers an undersized lobster, imposes the fine without going to any court at all.

Mr. KIRK. Have not the overseers power to let some good Tories go free while they fine others?

Mr. COLBY. They might have the power, but they would be departing from their duty if they did so.

Mr. KIRK. Have they not done so?

Mr. COLBY. If the hon. gentleman will refer to any officers who have done so, it will be soon shown that they have not performed their duty.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The Minister has not answered my question. I asked whether they were not fining people in my county $50, while on the western coast of Nova Scotia they were only fining them $10 for the same offence.

Mr. COLBY. I think I showed the hon. gentleman that the maximum fine in Prince Edward Island was $20, which, I understand, is the maximum under the Act.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I am aware that two people in my county were fined $50 each, one for having three small lobsters only a quarter of an inch under the legal size.

Mr. COLBY. I am informed that the fines in those two cases were reduced by the Minister to $20.

Mr. FLYNN. I desire to bring to the notice of the Minister a case which occurred in my own county last year, which, I think, was one of very peculiar hardship. A person there who owns property leased the establishment for five years to a person who was engaged in the lobster packing business. The latter, like most men engaged in that business, had some undersized lobsters, and he was fined once or twice for that. The second or third time he left the country, left all the people to whom he was indebted, and the officers exacted from the proprietor a fine of $20. He had nothing to do with the business. He had simply leased these premises. He lost his rent, the person to whom he leased the premises absconded, and the fine was exacted from him.

Mr. COLBY. That is the law.

Mr. FLYNN. I think that is a case of peculiar hardship. In addition to losing his rent, the proprietor has to pay the penalty imposed upon the person who absconds.

Mr. COLBY. There are many analogies to that in our civil law.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I wish to bring to the notice of the Minister the case of a factory run by Mr. J. W. McPhee, of King's County, who was fined $50 for packing lobsters under size, although he maintains they were full size.

Mr. COLBY. The memorandum that I have in my hand shows that John W. McPhee was subjected to two fines of $20 each. Very likely his case was one of those which were reduced by the Minister, as I stated before, where the magistrate had fixed the fine at some $50, but the Minister subsequently looking over the case thought it was excessive, and reduced it to $20.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Has the money been refunded?

Mr. COLBY. If it was paid it has been refunded, or it will be refunded.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I consider this case one of considerable hardship. This is a very important industry in our Province, particularly in my county. If the inspectors go around and fine men for such trifling faults as this, it will be almost impossible for these men to conduct their business. I think I am within the mark in saying that in our Province there is half a million of capital invested in these factories and in supplies for these factories which are to be run next year, and if an inspector is to be placed in each of these factories the result will be that they will have to be closed and the Island will suffer the loss of half a million dollars. If in some cases they pack lobsters that are a little under size, I think it would be much better for the Department to make an arrangement to allow the matter to be settled between the lobster fishermen and the packers. The packer cannot take any lobster that is too small for use; anything under nine inches, or a little under nine inches, would be of very little use for him to put up. I agree with the Government in trying to protect the fishery as much as possible, but the practice of tyrannising over the fishermen in this way, will ultimately destroy the business altogether, and cause the loss of a great amount of money to the people of that Island. I have another little complaint to make in regard to cutters. I have been very credibly informed that these cutters are acting in a very partial manner: they pass some factories and go to others. I do not mean that they are actuated by political motives, that they pass by factories run by Conservatives and go to those run by Reformers; but I mean to say that some of them seem to have their particular friends, that they pass by some men and pounce upon some others, and fine them in the most arbitrary manner, if they find a lobster a quarter of an inch or an eighth of an inch under size. This practice will ultimately prove the destruction of that business in our Province, if the rules are carried out in the future as they have been in the past.

Mr. COLBY. The question the hon. gentleman raises involves the whole question of lobster protection. He states there is a large amount of capital invested in these canneries in his county in that Province. What the Department is endeavoring to do is to protect those gentlemen who have invested their capital in that way, and to protect this very industry, and as at present advised, the true method is to protect the lobsters. If we allow the fishery to be exterminated, as the Department is informed would take place within a very few years if precautionary measures were not taken, all that capital would be wiped out, and the industry would be destroyed. It is possible the Department is not adopting exactly the best methods, but it is endeavoring to do the best it can, as at present advised, in order to protect the industry in which the hon. gentleman is so much interested. Speaking of the limitation of the size of the lobster, the limit we have adopted is smaller by about one inch than that adopted by the United States authorities; ours is nine and a half inches as against ten and a half in the United States. If these young lobsters are permitted to be taken, we shall have to give up all idea of maintaining the lobster fisheries. That is the opinion of the Department. However, I think this question would be more properly discussed on some substantive motion, or on the occasion of a Fishery Bill, than incidentally upon an item of this kind. To show the hon. gentleman how much some protection is needed, I have only to cite the great falling off in the catch in his own Province. The figures placed in my hands show that in 1881 there were 6,312,820 one-pound cans packed; in 1882, that quantity fell to five millions; in 1883, there were three millions; in 1884, the quantity was four millions; in 1886, three millions; in 1887, two millions; in 1888, 1,446,000; in 1889, two millions, showing a great falling off in the packing; and this decrease is, to a considerable extent, owing to the fact that the law which the Government desires to enforce in the interest of this very important industry, as a matter of fact cannot be, or is not, as thoroughly enforced as it should be. This great falling off certainly shows the importance of strengthening the hands of the Government, in their laudable efforts to protect, in the best way possible, this important industry. I regret that the hon. gentleman, coming from a Province which is so largely interested in this industry, has to find fault with the administration of the law. I cannot conceive that the officers of the Department, in those cases he has mentioned, could have intentionally and deliberately wronged those men engaged in that industry. He says, they did not discriminate on political grounds, but that they seemed to have their friends. It may be that they are more friendly with some than with others; and it also may well be that they have information that some were doing a greater amount of injury than others, and that they give their attention to those who they believe are doing the most mischief. I am not as conversant with the facts as the hon. gentleman is. If he desires to have them investigated, the Department will look into them. Certainly the officers will not be upheld in discriminating between individuals, upon any personal ground whatever.

Mr. COLBY.

Mr. FLYNN. I regret that the Minister at the head of the Department is not present when these items are being discussed. Now, I have never known, and, I believe, no one else has ever known, the reason why the size of the lobsters has been reduced from 9½ inches to 9 inches. I say no reason has ever been made public.

Mr. COLBY. I have here the regulation of the Department, declaring that it shall be unlawful to catch lobsters under nine and a half inches in length. The length has not been changed, as the hon. gentleman appears to imagine.

Mr. FLYNN. I said the limit before was nine inches, and it is now nine and a half inches.

Mr. COLBY. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that a change had been made from nine and a half inches to nine inches.

Mr. FLYNN. The length is now half an inch more than before, but no reason has been assigned for the increase. About ten or eleven years ago the fishermen had a right not only to fish up to August, after which there was a close season of six or eight weeks, but they had also the right to fish in the fall. In 1879 it was stated by the head of the Department that it was necessary to have a close season and no fall fishing, and that the length of lobsters taken should be limited to nine inches. The Department adopted that course on the best information they could obtain. They considered a nine-inch lobster was a good one for packing, and from information obtained from the packers they established that limit. For several years that limit remained in force. Every one was satisfied, until last season the Department added half an inch to the length, making it nine and a half inches. No reason has as yet been assigned for the change. I do not understand how you are going to preserve the lobsters by changing the limit from nine to nine and a half inches. The lobster fishermen have been very unfairly dealt with. A large number of fishery overseers and wardens have been appointed in every county. Surely they are sufficient in number to enforce the lobster fishery laws. We pay $150,000 for half a dozen cruisers and the steamship Acadia.

Mr. COLBY. $69,000.

Mr. FLYNN. Whatever the sum is. For what purpose do we pay it? We pay it for the purpose of protecting, as I presume, our fisheries from the encroachments of foreign fishermen, and with a view to keep them outside the three-mile limit. This year on several occasions, notwithstanding the fact that these overseers have been appointed to see that the fishery laws are not violated, the steamer Acadia has entered the port of Arichat when she should have been in the ocean, and when at the same time Yankee fishermen were seen along the coast. Some of the other cruisers adopted the same practice. I hold they were not commissioned to do such work. I do not think the cruisers were commissioned to harrass and annoy our own fishermen, and to see if they can find an under-sized lobster in our factories. That is what they did do, while I maintain they should have been outside protecting our fishermen from the encroachment of foreign fishing vessels. I have a further complaint to make on behalf of the fishermen of a large portion of the Island of Cape Breton. Last year the departmental regulation limited the season to the middle of July. A petition was sent here from the County of Cape Breton, very numerously signed, asking for an extension of time until the last of August. The petitioners stated their reasons for presenting this request; among others, that there were certain conditions existing, such as the presence of ice and other matters, which entitled the fishermen on the coast, from a given point to a point near Cape North, to an extension of time until 1st August. This petition was presented early in the season. Some of the parties interested and myself had interviews with the Minister of Marine and with his deputy. The Department considered there was a good deal of force in the contention, and they would consider it. They did consider it, and an Order in Council was passed extending the time for fishermen from a point starting west of St. Peter's Island, and running east to Cape North, extending the time to 1st August, which concession was made in accordance with the prayer of the petitioners, and the people were satisfied. Those packers west who had to close their factories two weeks earlier were not displeased. This year an Order in Council was passed, some time in April, again extending the time of the fishing season until the last of August within the limits I have mentioned. Under that Order in Council these people made their preparations. Of what did these preparations consist? They had to obtain boxes and tins; they know the number of fishermen they employ and the limit of the fishing season, and they made all their preparations on this Order in Council. I am speaking from information obtained from a lobster packer who had done packing within these limits. After they had made these preparations another Order in Council was passed, returning to the date of 15th July. These people complain, and very properly so, that the season is too short, because on that part of the coast when there was ice, the traps must be taken up, or they will be destroyed. The regulation nominally gives from the 1st April to the middle of July as the fishing season; but on our part of the coast it is very often the middle of May before the traps can be set. I say on behalf of these people that they have a great deal of which to complain. I should like to know why the order was changed, after having been made on statements contained in a petition signed by 5,000 people, and on representations of some of the packers themselves, and after interviews with the Minister and his Deputy and that after having extended the time, because of certain conditions, which existed there and which did not exist further west in the county, until last of August, and again by Order in Council in April extended it again, they then reversed it. These are the facts as given to me and I present them to the House.

Mr. McKEEN. There is something in the contention of the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Flynn). I remember last year having had charge of the petition, and it was alleged by the petitioners at the time, that the reason they asked an extension of time on the north shore of Cape Breton was that the season is nearly one month later than it is to the west. This petition was very numerously signed, and we succeeded in inducing the Minister of Marine to grant the extension of time asked. Considerable dissatisfaction existed when the time, after being lengthened as the hon. member states, was restricted to the usual limit. I remember having heard it stated, that the reason why the Government was induced to go back to the old limit of time, was that the ice last year went off the coast a good deal earlier than usual. That may or not be the case, but it was one of the reasons given. The contention of our lobster fishermen is, that notwithstanding the ice goes off earlier, yet the season at that time of the year is so stormy that usually very little fishing can be done until June. The hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Flynn) knows whether I am correct in that or not. I must endorse some of the remarks that the hon. gentleman has made; but, on the other hand, representations have been made to me by fishermen, that unless protection is afforded to lobsters, in a short time our fisheries will be in a similar position to those on the Prince Edward Island coast, where they are, if I am not mistaken, practically extinct. Many of the thinking men among our fishermen uphold these regulations with regard to the close season, and also with regard to the size of the lobster. I am not at all practically posted on the question, but I have had some correspondence with our lobster packers during the past few years, and they have frequently made representations to myself and to my colleague on the subject. I know that one or two small fines of $5, I think, were imposed last year, but I believe that when proper representations were made, in one case anyway, the fine was remitted. I do not think, as far as I know, that it is the desire of our inspectors to be unduly harsh in imposing fines; but, at the same time, they believe it to be necessary that, if the regulations are to be carried out, the law must be upheld.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The statistics given by the Minister in reply to my hon. friend, with regard to the catch of lobsters in Prince Edward Island, is the best answer with reference to the necessity of increasing the size of the lobsters. Of course, the Government, like every hon. member who is discussing this question to-night, have but one object in view, namely, the preservation of the lobster industry, which has grown to very large proportions in the Maritime Provinces. I have always advised with and assisted the Government in the regulations with regard to these fishery questions. I believe that we know very little more about the habits of the lobster than we did some years ago, but it has been tolerably manifest that if there is to be indiscriminate fishing at all seasons of the year, and if lobsters of all sizes are permitted to be taken, we shall have soon very few lobsters on our coast. That is, I think, a pretty well established fact, and under these conditions I think we have to meet this question frankly. Is it not better to have a close season, and to fix the limit at which lobster shall be taken, and to adhere rigidly to that? I am quite well aware of the difficulties which my hon. friend for Richmond (Mr. Flynn) has referred. I know of the complaints that are made by the fishermen all along the coast, and it does seem hard, as I intimated the other night, that when the first of July comes and the fishermen find that after a boisterous spring and perhaps only a month or six weeks' fishing, they have very little success for their labors, and for their very arduous undertakings, precarious at the best of times. But I believe that the law must fix a time, and it would be inconvenient to these fishermen whether it was a little later or not. I do not object, under certain conditions, that the time shall be extended when the season is exceptional as in the case referred to in Cape Breton. Sometimes, from the fact of there being ice on the coast, and on account of the weather being boisterous, the fishermen have been unable to do much, and I think, under those circumstances, the time should be extended on the special report of those who understand the subject well. I start with this idea, that the Government should be firm in carrying out all their regulations, and not yield too much and not be too arbitrary at the same time. I cannot imagine that there is any disposition on the part of the Government to be arbitrary in a matter of this kind, because their object must be the object we all have: that is, to preserve the fisheries. I have not referred to the statistics from Nova Scotia for the last six or seven years, but I am given to understand that the fishery has fallen off considerably there. If it is anything like the alarming proportion of the falling off in Prince Edward Island, I think every one interested in that industry will come to the conclusion that it is time to cry halt, and to see what we should do to preserve that fishery before it becomes extinct.

General LAURIE. My hon. friend who has just spoken says, with a great deal of truth, that we know but little about the habits of the lobster. That is a fact. We do not know as much about their history as we should like to, and we do not know enough to frame regulations that will satisfy those who make their living by catching lobsters. It is in their interest that the lobster fishery should not be destroyed, and it is in their interest, also, that the lobsters they do catch shall go into the market in good condition. These are two points we have got to bear in mind when we are considering the subject. The packers now will not buy lobsters in bad order, because, when the lobster is not good, it costs more than the lobsters canned will sell for afterwards. It takes nine pounds of soft shell lobster to make one pound canned in the lobster factories, and the price which the canners pay, and the price for which they sell the canned lobster, will not leave them any profit if they attempt to use bad lobsters. There is a large trade in live lobsters sent to the United States which also protects itself. The laws in the United States require that lobsters shall be ten and a half inches in length, and purchasers there will only buy lobsters when they are sound and fit for market. Not only will they refuse to buy them out of season, but they go further than that; they will charge every expense on the consignment of all bad lobsters against the consignor, and he will charge it against the fishermen. Consequently, the fishermen find that it is not in their interest to send to market any fish but those that are thoroughly good. I spoke of our not knowing much about the habits of the lobster, and to show how difficult it is to fix a time, I may say that last year, on the coast of the county I represent, the first consignment of lobsters taken off Seal Island, one of our best fishing stations, was only received early in June from that point, and actually they had only two consignments of lobsters from there before, by law, they were compelled to discontinue fishing, and just when the lobsters were commencing to be good. We now ask that the time should be extended for fifteen days. I hope I have shown that bad lobsters are not likely to be purchased, and that, therefore, the fishery protects itself to that extent. There was a time when bad lobsters were bought by the canneries, when anything would do. The fishery did not then protect itself, but now it does, so that the time may reasonably be extended for fifteen days. Lobsters are good up to the 15th of July, and the time might be extended to that date. We are told that there is a shortage in the lobster fisheries last year. Of course there is, because the time is shortened during which we can catch them. We have plenty of time at the beginning of the season, but it is practically worth nothing to us, because we cannot go out and catch lobsters then; what we want is a longer time at the end. Therefore, I hope there will be a reconsideration of this matter, and that we may have an extension of the time, say, to the 15th of July, because, if the lobsters become unfit for market, the trade will protect itself: if the fishermen find that they cannot sell their catch, as bait is expensive, they will take up their lobster pots and stop taking them.

Mr. COLBY. I must express my thanks to the hon. senior member for Halifax for having, with the very great knowledge which he has on these matters, given the House the benefit of his judgment. I think it is the duty of hon. members, representing constituencies where the enforcement of the law is somewhat difficult, to strengthen the hands of the Government in their honest endeavors, and so far as they can get information, their intelligent endeavors, to encourage this great industry. As the hon. member very properly suggested, the Government do not expend this $69,000 on the fishery protection service out of mere wantonness. They have only one object in view, that is, to protect this very important industry for the benefit of the country at large and the fishermen in particular. They are obliged to act in accordance with the best information they can obtain from disinterested sources, and they are obliged to attach some credence to their own officers, who are presumed at any rate to be disinterested. With regard to this lobster business, when the Government saw the falling off in the product in Prince Edward Island from 6,000,000 lbs. in 1881 to 1,400,000 lbs. in 1888, it became a serious question as to whether it would not be necessary to prevent the catch for a certain number of years in order to allow the lobster to recover itself and prevent its entire extermination. The Government at that time did not consider it wise to take that extreme step; but they became convinced that it would be necessary, for the preservation of that great industry, to make their regulations more stringent, and to see that they were efficiently enforced. I think it hardly fair for my hon. friend from Richmond (Mr. Flynn) to blame the Government, because having in an exceptional season, when the ice was late in departing, extended the period a little for his constituents, they did not make the extension permanent. The Government will have to be very careful if it is to be made a reproach to them that they do not continue at all times and in all circumstances those privileges and relaxations which they have only made temporarily. The hon. gentleman well knows, as I understood him to say himself, that the relaxation was granted in that instance owing to the lateness of the ice, and it was done in response to strong pressure which was brought to bear on the Minister; but it was not intended by him that there was to be a permanent change in the policy of the Department. My hon. friend who has last spoken thinks that the season should be extended along the coast of his county. Great weight should be attached to his views, because he lives in the locality; yet I am told that they are quite at variance with the opinion of the lobster commission who were expressly deputed to examine into this question. It was their opinion that in certain localities the lobster began to be soft-shelled by the 1st of July, and at the latest by the 15th of July. I think the Department are acting intelligently in this matter. They have only one object in view, that is, to protect the lobster industry for the benefit of the country at large, and especially for the benefit of those who have invested their capital in it. I am quite aware that it has been said, and properly said, that the habits of the lobster are not as well known yet as those of other fish; but the Department are obtaining all the information possible: and, as they are making these regulations in the interest of the fishermen, I think they are entitled to expect the moral support of every member representing a fishing constituency. Perhaps there is no law more difficult to enforce than this fishery protection law. I suppose every member in Parliament who represents a fishing constituency finds his constituents continually pressing upon him their views, which are always in the line of a further relaxation of what are deemed by them to be stringent regulations; and it requires a good deal of moral courage, I know, in a member of Parliament, not to fall in with the current sentiment among many of his own constituents; but I think, on reflection, we must come to the conclusion that the sound, conservative way, if we are to preserve and perpetuate these valuable fisheries, is to secure a proper enforcement of the regulations, which are conceived by the Government in the interests of the fishermen, and under the best advice they can get.

General LAURIE. As the hon. Minister has referred to the report of the Fishery Commission, I wish to say, in regard to that report, that the commission spent but half a day in Shelburne county, and took the evidence of one gentleman largely engaged in the trade, who was reported to have said that the lobsters were soft-shelled after the 1st July. That gentleman wrote to me to say that he was incorrectly reported, and that the season for catching lobster should be continued until the 15th or 20th. That is the only evidence given in that district on which the commission based their recommendation. I may say further, that I went to Boston the year before last and spent a week or ten days there in order to investigate this particular subject in the market to which the fish was sent, and I found that the receivers of those fish which are purchased there, while they took account of every soft-shell fish that came to their market, stated that none came before the 15th. I think that in this case we could take the fish themselves as, on the whole, better evidence than the reports of the commissioners.

Mr. FLYNN. I am perfectly in accord with the views of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) as to the necessity of protecting the lobster fisheries, and I agree to a great extent with those of the hon. gentleman representing the Fishery Department, but I would particularly call the attention of that hon. gentleman to two facts. I stated that when this matter had been fully represented to the Government as far back as ten years, and they found that necessity existed for fixing a close season and limiting the size of the lobsters caught, they found that a nine-inch lobster should be the limit of size. They continued that for ten years, and then, without assigning any reason, they made the limit nine and a half inches. If they prevented fishermen from taking lobsters that are spawning, I could understand their action, but when they prevent one season the taking of lobsters of only nine inches, and the next year increase the size to nine and a half, how can the lobster fisheries be protected by just adding this half inch? Nothing in this discussion has tended to show me how you are going to preserve the lobster fisheries by adding this half inch. If you would prevent, by imposing stringent regulations, fishermen from taking the lobsters in spawn, you would perpetuate the lobsters to a great extent. But that is not the point I wish particularly to bring to the notice of the Minister. There is another point. The Department, upon representations made in 1888—upon the petition spoken of by the hon. member for Cape Breton—found a condition of things existed on the eastern part of Nova Scotia which demanded an extension of time. But I would call the attention of the hon. Minister to the fact that where this extension of time was given is very nearly in the hon. gentleman's own county and the County of Victoria. The western limit commenced in my county, St. Peter's Island—a very small portion of it—and then got into the County of Cape Breton, and then into Victoria. Therefore, the extension of time was a benefit to the constituents of my hon. friends from Cape Breton and Victoria, and not in my county. The other point I would specially call the attention of the Minister to is that, having extended the time for a year by an Order in Council in April, when these men were making their preparations, why not carry it out for the year? If the Department found it necessary in the interests of the lobster fishery to go back to the old limits and to restrict lobster fishing to the 15th July, they should have given these people timely notice. These men told me they had got all their materials, calculating on being able to fish until the last of August, and mark you, Sir, where you have a fishery that does not practically continue more than two months on that coast, one-fourth of the time is a very large portion taken. The packers had all the material required for the taking and preservation of lobsters, and were then told that another Order in Council was made restricting to the 15th July. These are the two points I complain of. I do not complain of the Department making all the necessary regulations for the sake of preserving the fish. I am willing to do all in my power to assist them in carrying out these regulations. I know that some restrictions are necessary, but I mean to say that the regulations should be neither arbitrary nor capricious as they have been in this instance. I will say nothing with regard to the overseers who enforce the regulations. The gentleman who occupies that position and lives in the County of Cape Breton, I believe, enforces the law as mildly as he possibly can. If he finds a man with an undersized lobster in his possession, he is simply the instrument of carrying out the law. These are the only points I call the attention of the Minister to. There is no reason assigned why by taking nine and a half inch lobsters in place of nine inches, you are going to perpetuate the fishery.

Mr. KIRK. I do not wish to prolong the discussion on this subject, but coming, as I do, from a county largely interested in this industry, I cannot allow this vote to pass without saying a few words. I regret very much that the report of the Fisheries Department is not in the hands of hon. members, because I think it would likely throw some light on the subject under discussion. The hon. Minister has appealed to members of this House representing fishing constituencies, to assist the Government in enforcing the laws which are made to protect the lobster fisheries. I think there is not an hon. member in this House representing the fishing constituencies, who is not willing to support the Government in any proper regulation the Government may make to protect the fisheries. It is in the interest of the fishermen that proper regulations should be made, and, when made, strictly adhered to. But it is not in their interest that regulations should be made which they cannot possibly respect, and to observe which would entail starvation on their families. The hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Flynn) has complained, with regard to Cape Breton, and I think justly, that the time is so short, that it would be better for the fishermen if they were not allowed to fish at all. I find in the report of 1888 that the fisheries inspector for Cape Breton reports that the fishermen had but twenty-five days in the whole year to fish for lobsters. Will any hon. gentleman pretend to say, that in twenty-five days a fisherman is going to make a living for his family? Fishermen have represented to me that they cannot afford, many of them, to keep sufficient plant in order to follow other fishing industries as well as the lobster, and in this connection I will read what Mr. Bertram says in the report of 1888:

"This fishery was by no means remunerative. The ice remained somewhat late on the coast, and fishing did not commence until the 1st of June, when it had not even then become general. Frequent storms prevented anything like a steady prosecution of the fisheries. The most disastrous occurred early in July, and destroyed a large amount of lobster fishing appliances. After this, but very little was accomplished for the remainder of the season. Packers say that, owing to frequent storms, they had not, along the coast line from Cape North to St. Peters, more than 25 days out of the entire season to carry on their work. The fish were large and plentiful, and there were no indications of an exhausted supply, either in quantity or in quality. No soft-shell fish were found up to the close on 28th July. Lobsters inhabiting the deep and cool waters outside the headlands are not subject to the annual changes of softening and shedding which affect those inhabiting the warm waters within the bays. By a careful inspection of the canning factories and other safeguards pointed out in my report of 1887, lobster fishing on the coast of Cape Breton is likely to remain a permanent and unimpaired source of supply."

It will be seen by this report that after all these cannot be any great necessity for shortening the time so much. Mr. Bertram points out that the lobsters are large and the supply plentiful. Why, then, should the fishermen be confined to so short a time? The Minister refers to the report of the commissioners who were appointed a few years ago, and says that the lobsters were found to be getting soft by the end of July.

Mr. COLBY. In some places on the 15th of July.

Mr. KIRK. That may be true, but it will be seen that these commissioners simply gave their own opinion, and that opinion does not correspond with the majority of the witnesses whom they examined. The hon. member for Shelburne (General Laurie) says that they paid only a flying visit to Shelburne, and only examined one man, and that they did not report him as having told them what he really did say. Guysborough County, which I have the honor to represent, is a very large fishing county. The commissioners only visited two points in that county. I believe they took evidence from two or three parties, all of whom are engaged in canning, and none in fishing. If you look at all the evidence, you will see that only a few fishermen were examined. Nearly all the witnesses were packers. Was that the kind of evidence which these gentlemen were sent to gather? The Government could have obtained all the evidence they wanted from these packers by issuing a circular. While the evidence which these gentlemen took is valuable, their report, apart from the evidence, is valueless, except as to the southern coast of Nova Scotia, where I believe their opinion in regard to soft-shell lobsters is correct. Our people do not complain that the spring season for fishing is too short. They are quite satisfied that fishing should be prohibited on the 1st July, because they admit that lobsters are beginning to get soft at that time, and that they remain so until some time in September, but they claim that, by the 1st October, lobsters are as good as they are at any other time of the year, and they ask that the close time should cease on the 1st October instead of on the 1st January, as it does at present. That would give them six or eight weeks of fishing in the fall. It is true, as the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Flynn) and the hon. member for Cape Breton have stated, that the lateness of the season interferes with the fishing on account of the ice and the stormy weather. I have myself seen, in the Strait of Canso and on the coast of Guysborough, ice jammed up to the 6th June, and no lobster fishing could be prosecuted at all under those circumstances. What the fishermen complain of is the shortness of the season. I do not agree with the hon. member for Halifax that the time might be extended later than the 1st July in special seasons, because, I believe, that it would be detrimental to the fisheries. I believe that the killing of one lobster in the month of August would do more to destroy the fisheries than to kill a dozen at any other season. I remember that Mr. Hamblin, who was a large packer in Pictou County, pointed out, in a letter which was published in the press, that the system of extending the fishing to the end of August—which had been done by the Government on the application of the packers, in order to enable them to continue their canning—would exhaust the fisheries of Prince Edward Island, and, in fact, that system was continued until the fisheries were nearly exhausted. Mr. Hamblin pointed out that more lobsters were destroyed during the month of August than during the whole of the rest of the year. He pointed out that if this fishing were not prevented during that month of August, the lobster fishery would be killed, but the Government did not take his advice until they finally awoke to the necessity of it and prohibited this fishing for that month and for some other months. As far as the southern coast of Nova Scotia is concerned, the lobster fishing has not been exhausted. The lobsters there are just as large and plentiful as ever. Hon. gentlemen will find that Mr. Rogers, in his report of 1888, in regard to lobsters, says :

“There is a small decrease in the yield of this important item, caused by limited time given by the law in which to take them. They were very plentiful on most of the coast, and of a good size.”

That is to say, that, while the lobsters were very plentiful and of a good size, still, as the hon. member for Shelburne (General Laurie) has stated, the falling off was caused by the shortening of the time allowed by the Government for the catch. The fishermen feel that to be very hard. Providence has provided lobsters in abundance on their coast; they float immediately in front of their doors; but the Government say you shall not take them. That does seem hard, and the fact is that so far as the County of Guysborough is concerned, this last two or three years, at any rate, since the time has been cut short, if it were not for the fact that the lobster packers advanced very largely money upon the strength of the next year's catch, many families would actually be in want. Is that a condition of affairs that ought to exist, seeing that the lobsters are as plentiful as they ever were, and as large? When the Government steps in and says: You shall not take them, you must find some other means of getting a livelihood, it is a great hardship for the fishermen, and they complain bitterly about it. They feel that the law is very arbitrary, and I think if the Minister would make some enquiries of the fishery officers in the County of Guysborough, he would find that they have difficulty in enforcing the law, a difficulty which might be avoided by a change in the law.

Mr. FREEMAN. I think, the Committee will excuse this extended discussion, when they remember that the lobster fishing interest is an exceedingly important one in the Province of Nova Scotia, and those hon. members who have never been in that part of the country, and who have not seen with their eyes and heard with their ears the complaints that are continually made by the fishermen, can hardly understand the importance of that fishery. I have listened to this discussion and endeavored to gather information from it, and I have observed that the conflicting views of those hon. gentlemen who have spoken on this question, resemble the conflicting views of the fishermen themselves, with regard to the protection of the fisheries. They all agree that the fishery must be protected; they differ, however, as to the mode of protection. In the eastern part of Nova Scotia they differ as to the time; in some places the fishermen contend that the claims of other places are unreasonable; each portion, however, desires to have the time for catching lobsters lengthened. There are, however, a good many fishermen now who are considering the propriety of allowing fish to be taken in the fall of the year. I think that by-and-by, when the Fishery Department has a more extended and a more complete report of the fisheries, they will be in favor of giving the fishermen an opportunity to catch lobsters in the fall of the year. With regard to the commissioners' report, I have very little confidence in it, indeed. I have no particular charge to make against the commissioners, but I know that in Queen's County, which I represent, a very important county so far as the lobster fishing is concerned, we have men engaged in canning, and men engaged in fishing, who have observed the habits of the lobsters and could have given very important testimony; but they were not consulted at all. I doubt very much whether any evidence was taken, or any person consulted, in the County of Queen's; I never heard of any, but I heard a good many who complained that they were not consulted, that their views were not taken. I have heard other straggling complaints and particulars given, but they are not of such a character as that it would be wise to name them now. I will say this, however, that I have very little confidence in that report, and while I am not prepared to say that it was an improper report, it does not secure my confidence, at least. There is another point to which I wish to call the attention of the Minister. The law forbids the catching of fish under nine inches and a half.

Mr. COLBY. The regulation is that if they are caught they have to be thrown back.

Mr. FREEMAN. However, it says that you are not to catch them. I have given my views to the Minister of Fisheries, he knows them well, and I need not repeat here what I said to the Minister. However, I will observe that the fisherman is forbidden to catch fish under nine inches and a half. Half an inch is a very small portion of a fish, and those who have never caught lobsters will find that they are a fish not very easily measured; any fish is not very easily measured. As some officers carry out the regulations, when a fisherman takes his pot up in which he catches the fish and takes them out, he is required to measure those fish exactly within half an inch. Now, I ask the members of this Committee to consider the difficulty, and the labor, and the hardship of the fisherman who goes on a cold morning, perhaps, to pull up his pot, and the possibility is that there may be ice about when he is taking his fish out of the pot; he has to have a measure, and every fish he takes out he has to lay the measure upon it exactly within half an inch. I ask whether that can be fairly expected of a fisherman. The habit of the fisherman, however, is not to lay them on the measure or to lay the measure on the fish, but to measure the fish with his eye, and we can well understand that the fisherman wishes to secure every fish that will come within the law, and he is very likely to let his eye favor himself. That is very reasonable, but to say that if he takes any fish that happens to be a little under nine inches and a half, he is to be fined, is exercising too much severity towards him. In many cases he goes alongside the cutter with his fish, for in many places the cutters buy the fish from them, and the captain of the cutter comes down and takes all the fish in his little boat that are nine inches and a half, he places them on his vessel and he leaves what is under nine inches and a half. I know a case where the officer of a cutter jumped into the boat of a man who had a few fish that were just under nine inches and a half, he took them out and would not allow the man to throw them overboard, but he took him off to a magistrate and made the poor fisherman pay a heavy fine. There is a hardship for the fisherman. Now, I am not blaming the Government, or the officials of the Government at Ottawa, who carry out that law; but I want to present this enforcement of it as a hardship for the fisherman, as it is sometimes improperly administered. I do not attach any blame to any one, nor make any complaint against any one except the officer himself. I did make some effort to have this matter investigated, but there was a good deal of difficulty about it, and I did not press the matter. But there is danger here as well as difficulty, and this is the place where the fishermen and their interests must be represented and protected. Reference has been made here to the fishermen presenting their views to the members who represent the counties. Well, Sir, it is a good thing for the fishermen that they have somebody to represent their claim and to represent their views, and to represent the hardships which are imposed upon them. I have no doubt but that the Minister of Fisheries, and those acting with him and under him, are ready, at all times, to give relief; but they are a long distance from the fishermen, and we feel it is our imperative duty to bring those matters from time to time before the Minister of the Department, and his officials, and I must say I have received all the consideration I could have asked when I have made my representations, as I have made them. I feel that the Minister of Fisheries and his officials are desirous—and when I say officials I do not speak of the officials who are looking out as regards the measurement of the fish—and I have no complaint to make against them in regard of a sincere desire to protect the interests of the fishermen and to promote the fishing industry. Let me say one word with respect to the alleged falling off of lobsters in the western part of Nova Scotia. The experience of the fishermen in my county agrees with the experience of the fishermen of Guysborough, as stated by the hon. member for the county (Mr. Kirk). The general report in my county is that the fish are not falling off with regard to numbers, but the fishermen have to go in many cases further out to find them. The fish are quite as large as formerly—they vary in different years, for which I cannot give a reason—and last year the fish were of very good size, being somewhat larger than the year previous. I repeat there was no scarcity; but the fishermen had to go further from shore for them. It would be unfortunate if the western Nova Scotia fishery should be linked with the Prince Edward Island fishery, or that the Prince Edward Island fishery should be taken as the groundwork on which to frame regulations for the western part of Nova Scotia. The coast is entirely different, the feed for the lobsters is different, and the home for the fish is very different; our coast is rocky, which, I believe, is not the case on the Island coast, and there is abundance of shelter and lodging places for lobsters on the Nova Scotia shore which is not the case in the Island. I am satisfied you could hardly extirpate the lobsters, with the laws we now have, in the western part of Nova Scotia. While I would not advocate, because the opinions of fishermen are conflicting on that point, an extension of the time after 1st July, I would certainly impress on the Minister the necessity of taking the matter into consideration, as to whether it would be wise—I am not prepared to recommend it, but a good many of our fishermen ask for it—in the interests of the fishermen, and without injuring the fisheries, to allow them to fish during a few weeks in the fall of the year. I feel assured the Minister will take this matter into his consideration, and arrive at such a decision as will promote the interests of the fishermen, and at the same time not injure the fisheries.

Mr. CAMERON. I have no opinion of my own to express on this subject, but I have lately received a letter from a lobster packer, who runs two factories on the north-west shore of Cape Breton, and I desire to express his views as given to me. The letter is dated 12th March. He says:

"I am anxious to find out if the lobster season is to be extended in this Gulf. I see by the papers it is not to be on the southern and eastern shore of Nova Scotia. I take it that means south of Canso. If the season is not extended to the middle of September, in the north Gulf, the business will have to be abandoned. This is the opinion of all the packers, and the fishermen too. I can get a strong company to take my factories if the law is changed in this way. As it is now, they are all going to Newfoundland, and something should be done at once. Last year the business would have paid if we could have fished during the fine weather, after 15th July. As it was, our boats only fished twenty-two days, and consequently a heavy loss to all concerned. They have two months of a start on us to the south, and that gives them the benefit of the market which is always good early, and that should satisfy them. Packers for their own sake will not put up fish that are unfit to can. The day for reckless packing is past and gone, as no fish can be sold unless properly handled, and no factory can run unless there are fish enough on the ground to make it pay. So you will easily see to continue the business in our Gulf there must be a change made in the law. Please let me know what the Government intends to do."

By this letter, the Committee will observe that the fishermen of north-west Cape Breton had only twenty-two days' fishing during the past season.

Mr. KIRK. And twenty-five days the year before.

Mr. CAMERON. They complain that when the ice is late in the gulf and in St. George's Bay, they should be allowed a longer time.

Mr. COLBY. To what date do they wish the time extended?

Mr. CAMERON. Until the middle of September. I quite concur in the opinion that the packers disagree and that this is a difficult question to settle. That is the reason I presented the views of a packer who has had a very long experience in the business, and I believe, to a very great extent, he is correct, so far as the north-west shore of Cape Breton is concerned. If the ice is late in North Bay, an extension of time should be allowed, at any rate until the middle of August.

Mr. McINTYRE. I desire to ask the Acting Minister if he can tell me who is the fishery warden at Bay Fortune River and adjoining streams in King's County, Prince Edward Island?

Mr. COLBY. Not having the report before me, I am not able to inform the hon. gentleman, but I will give him the information.

Mr. McINTYRE. The reason I ask the question is this: the fishery warden for Bay Fortune River and adjoining streams sold out his farm a year ago and left for the United States, so that this river, which is one of the most valuable in the Island, was left without a fishery warden last summer. I merely bring this subject to the attention of the Department for the purpose of having a fishery warden appointed there, because this is one of the most valuable rivers for trout fishing and is a great resort for sportsmen. I do not know whether there has been any representation made to the Department in this regard, I deem it my duty, in case the Department has not been advised in reference to it, to bring the question to their attention. Of course, I have many friends there, but it would be useless to make any recommendation. However, so far, as the hon. gentleman is concerned, a large number of his own political friends are there, and any of them in fact would be willing to take the position if they could get it.

I think I have now discharged my duty so far as this question is concerned, and I hope the Department will take immediate action and see that an appointment is made within a very short time.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I do not wish to prolong the discussion on this important question, but as the Minister has been so kind as to give us his marked attention, I wish to say that all the restrictions you have put on the lobster fishery are utterly useless, and that the money expended in maintaining them is wasted, because the fishermen will catch these fish that are under size no matter what you do. When they see your cutters and your fishery wardens coming, they will destroy the fish that are not of size, so that the money spent in enforcing the regulations is lost. It would be much better to leave that matter entirely between the fisherman and the packer, and neither is so foolish as to do anything which would utterly destroy his own business. It is very easy to account for the great amount of fishing carried on in Prince Edward Island during the years mentioned. The lobster fishing business had then first commenced, and at that time there was a large amount caught, but now it has come to be a regular industry and there is not much fear that either the fishermen or the packers will utterly destroy their own business. The best way to protect the men employed in the business would be to close down on it altogether for some time, and to give the packers and fishermen ample warning that you intended to do so, in order that they will not invest their capital and lose it, as they will do if the present regulations are strictly enforced.

Mr. LOVITT. I am surprised to hear my hon. friend make the remarks he did. It is not the fishermen who are fined. The inspectors go to the packers pots, and if they discover lobster under size, they fine the packers. The warden in our county fines the factory men and does not fine the fishermen.

Fish-Breeding Stations, Clearing Rivers,
&c..... $40,000

Mr. JONES (Halifax). This question has been discussed several years, and we do not seem to have made much progress in arriving at any satisfactory conclusion with regard to the expenditure on these salmon hatcheries. I am not criticising the vote in any unfriendly spirit, because I have always taken the greatest interest in those hatcheries, but I have come to the conclusion with a great many others, that the advantages gained have not been commensurate with the expenditure. I know that we have one establishment near Halifax, which was started by the Government of which I was a member, and I was very hopeful that it would be of use in distributing salmon fry to the rivers in the immediate neighborhood and along the coast, and that we would in time reap advantage from it. Those who have watched that hatchery carefully up to the present, have come to the conclusion that there has been no advantage from it at all, and I am very sorry that it is so, because I was very hopeful that it might be the means of increasing the salmon catch all along our coast. I wish merely to enquire, if the Government have any further information with reference to the mode of procedure as to the time for keeping the young salmon in the hatcheries. I saw a correspondence some time ago with the head of a similar establishment in France, and he expressed the opinion that possibly we have been putting out our salmon fry too early, and that they become a prey to the fish in the rivers in which they are placed. I ask whether the Government could not make further enquiry on this very important point. I do not think it would be desirable to abandon now what was considered a very promising undertaking, but I think the Government should endeavor by experiment, or by correspondence with similar establishments elsewhere, to ascertain where the fault lies, and what was the cause of the failure, because failure it has been, I am very sorry to say. My own impression is that probably we are aiming at putting out too much of the salmon fry, and that we should keep them in for a longer time in the hatchery, until they have grown a little more, and are better able to take care of themselves. I would ask whether the Government has taken any means to ascertain what has been the experience of other places in this matter?

Mr. COLBY. I would say that this matter of fish-breeding is, of course, even yet experimental, but I think that evidences are accumulating, not only in this country, but in other countries, that such undertakings have been, on the whole, very beneficial.

Mr. GILLMOR. How long is it since it has been started?

Mr. COLBY. Twelve or fourteen years. I think a greater interest is being taken in this matter in the United States than ever before, as a result of the experiments that have been made by the various states. Congress itself is making very large appropriations for this purpose, and among the States which have taken an interest in the matter, and are making appropriations for it, I find the following: California, Colorado, Illinois, Michigan, Nevada, New York, Ohio, Wisconsin, and Wyoming Territory. The officers of the Department here are in almost constant and certainly in very frequent communication with all these states, and they are most interested in these experiments. They are comparing notes constantly. They are exchanging the fish and fish fry, and they are solving the problem together, each availing itself of the experience of the other as best it may. I may say to the hon. member, that when the report of the Department is published, I think he will be pleased to see the evidences which have come from various parts of the Dominion, and particularly from British Columbia, as to the success of the methods which have been adopted there. A few brief extracts have been handed to me which I will read. The Board of Trade of New Westminster, British Columbia, says:

"The success is so great that another hatchery is wanted. The Kirkland Canning Company ask that the present hatchery be kept and others built."

Mr. W. H. Viance says:

"Have fished for thirty years and caught more last season than ever before. I am convinced that this is attributable to the hatcheries."

Many others use very strong expressions, some speaking of the result as remarkable and phenomenal. There seems to be very great enthusiasm in British Columbia as to the results of the hatchery, which have been obvious during the last year. These statements may be exaggerated, or may in some instances come from interested sources, and therefore should perhaps sometimes be taken with a grain of allowance. But I know that lakes and ponds in my own county contain fish which are not indigenous to them, but which have been propagated from the local hatchery; I speak of the Ontario whitefish, which are becoming very numerous in some of our lakes and ponds. I believe the officers of the Department, who have watched this subject very carefully, have been strengthened in their opinion that this system will be a success. Of course they are availing themselves of all the knowledge and information they can obtain from their own experience, and from others, and every year they are learning something new.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I am glad the Government are alive to this question, and are acquainting themselves with the progress made in the United States and elsewhere. I would ask whether the attention of the Department has been drawn during the past year to the question I brought to the notice of the Minister a year or two ago, namely, the advisability of their seeking some concerted action with the United States, with the view of prohibiting the use of purse seines and drag nets. There seems to be an impression, which I believe is well founded, that our fisheries along the coast are being destroyed by the use of these things; and when I brought the matter to the notice of the Minister a year or two ago, he said that the Department had it under consideration. Of course, nothing we could do on our own part would avail unless the United States would join heartily in the arrangement. It is easy to understand that when these purse seines are drawn, for instance, for mackerel, they take in herrings and all other kinds of fish, and the fishermen take out the best fish, and throw the rest overboard. In this way a great variety of fish, on which, it is said, the larger fish feed, are destroyed and pollute the water, driving the fish from the coasts. It is well known that during the last few years the mackerel have hardly frequented our coasts at all. They seem to have gone over to the coast of Ireland, and the Americans, instead of sending their mackerel vessels into our waters, are sending them to Ireland. It is evident that these fish are changing their habits, whether from the cause I speak of or not no one can determine. I think the Government would act wisely if they would invite the attention of the United States Government to this subject, because they are equally interested with ourselves, and I have no doubt, from the vast interest which they attach to this important industry, they would be disposed to join heartily in some such arrangement. I hope the Government will not lose sight of the matter.

Mr. COLBY. No person can have stronger opinions in the same direction as the hon. gentleman than the Minister; and the reports of the Department, and all the information we have on the subject, fully corroborate the impression the hon. gentleman has with regard to the destructiveness of purse seines, which, if they continue to be permitted, will lead to the total extermination of the fish in a very few years. The destruction is almost incredible, and it is believed that the authorities in the United States are becoming alive to the importance of the subject. They have already gone a considerable length by prohibiting the use of purse seines on the Atlantic coast until the 1st June. The Minister has such a strong feeling on this subject that I have no doubt he will avail himself of every opportunity to impress his views on the Government of the United States.

General LAURIE. There is a precedent for action in this matter in the practice followed by the Governments of countries engaged in the fisheries of the North Sea between Great Britain and the continent. The North Sea Convention, which has been entered into by all the nations fishing in those waters, contains very stringent rules with regard to the destruction of immature fish. There is also a National Sea Fish Protection Association organised in England, and largely composed of men interested in those fisheries, who have devoted themselves to obtaining full information as to the best way of protecting the sea fisheries, as we are striving to protect the river fisheries.

Mr. KIRK. I should like to know whether this Government have authority to prohibit the use of purse seines within the three-mile limit, and if they have, why they do not exercise that power?

Mr. GILLMOR. We have heard a great deal about our fish becoming exhausted. When we look at our Trade and Navigation Returns, we find that we are exporting and selling more than ever before. There is no danger of exhausting the herrings. We have heard this alarm for many years, but our fish are not going to be exhausted, and you must allow the fishermen to take fish where they can catch the most of them. Preserve your spawning grounds, but let the fishermen catch fish where they can in the cheapest possible way.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). While on the fisheries, it would not be respectful to the Government to pass over the report of the Herring Commission which they have presented to the House. Can the hon. gentleman tell us what it cost? Because I am not disposed to attach much value to it. One of the commissioners I think belonged to Ontario. He may have had some knowledge of the herring fishery. Who is Mr. Gunn, and where is he from?

Mr. COLBY. He is supposed to have been very competent to take information on the question. He was from the county of Bruce.

Mr. EISENHAUER. I think in one place in that report they recommend the curing of the fish before they are taken out of the net.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Where is Mr. McLeod from?

Mr. COLBY. Cape Breton.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I have gone very carefully over this report. It is chiefly valuable for the plates it contains of some trawls used in the old country which our people would laugh at. I am sure our fishermen would consider them curiosities. You may gather the value of the report from one or two recommendations. On page 67 it says:

"There should be imported and established in each sea-board county, where the importance of the herring fishing may so warrant, a thoroughly trained Scotch herring cooper, of long experience in the herring curing business, who should act as head inspector for his district, with power, after instructions, to appoint his deputies."

The idea of importing a Scotch herring cooper to teach the coopers of the Maritime Provinces how to put up herrings is a very good joke. Again it goes on to state:

"There should be imported from Scotland for each such county a crew of expert gutting girls."

If the Government are going to pay for an expensive commission such as this, they should pay some respect to the recommendations of the commissioners, and not fail to bring out these girls. I read this report very carefully for this reason: A year or two ago a member of my firm happened to be in Italy, in Genoa, and was much interested in observing that large quantities of herring came there from Scotland, which he found were all put up in a patented preparation. I believe it was an American invention. He could not find out exactly what it was. It was not a pickle, but a different sort of process altogether. There is a very large consumption of herring in Italy put up in that way; and I looked naturally in a report of this kind for some reference to this, and some suggestion as to how we could discover the methods used in the preparation of those fish, but I looked in vain. If the commissioners had given us some information of that kind, their report would have been of some value.

Mr. COLBY. The report has not been entirely unprofitable, since it has furnished the hon. gentlemen some amusement and may likely furnish the fishermen with entertainment as well. I believe it is a fact that the herring packages recommended in that report are superior to those used in this country, and it would be a good thing if they were introduced here. It has not been a very expensive commission, and if it has done a little emigration work for the Minister of Agriculture by promoting the immigration of a class of respectable girls from the other side, that should not be brought up as a charge against it.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The packages they make in the old country will cost about six shillings or eight shillings sterling, or half what the herrings are worth. The packages we use, and which answer every purpose, cost from 30 cents to 40 cents. The hon. member from Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor) would tell the hon. gentleman that he could get a barrel of herrings down there for $1.50.

Mr. MCNEILL. With regard to Mr. Gunn, who has been referred to in this discussion, I believe he is a gentleman specially well qualified for the work. He was brought up on the coast of Scotland, where herring fishing is carried on, and is particularly well informed with reference to the way the herring fisheries are conducted there. He has been in the habit of going down frequently to the coast of Nova Scotia, and is really an expert on the subject.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). So I should think.

Mr. MCNEILL. He has taken great interest in the matter for years past, and is a man of very good judgment and particularly suitable in every way.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Before passing this item I wish to bring to the notice of the Minister some complaints with reference to the difficulty of procuring blanks from some of the agents throughout the country. I wrote to the Department, and they gave me a prompt and courteous reply enclosing the blanks I required. The practice seems to be, and it is a very objectionable one, that these blanks are placed in the hands of certain persons who will only give them to the fishermen, on their paying to have them filled up at the rate of 20 cents each. This should not be allowed.

Mr. COLBY. The agents have no right to charge anything, and the person who was guilty of this has been reprimanded.

Cost, maintenance and repairs of fishery protection steamers and vessels..... $100,000

Mr. WELDON (St John). I see that little vessel called the Dream seems to be rather expensive. The Acadia's crew costs only $2,700, and that of the Dream costs $1,166, or about half of the other. The whole expenditure on the Dream is $7,351, and she is only of five or six tons. In fact, she was a pleasure yacht, and it seems to me that the expenditure is very large. She is so small that I do not think she could carry the Ontario contingent of members here now, and that is the smallest I have ever seen. They appear to flit away on account of the holidays.

Mr. COLBY. The Dream runs the whole year round, and the Acadia only for a few months.

Mr. GILLMOR. The Dream is needed the year round. She is a beautiful little steamer, and the principal cost in connection with her is the charter, for which I think they pay $300 a month. If that is deducted from the total cost, I think it is very moderate indeed. There could not be a vessel that would suit the service in the Bay of Fundy better than the Dream. She is small, and handy in going around the islands, and is most suitable for the service in which she is employed. I have no hesitation in saying that she is doing very good service, and that it is important to have just such a vessel as that in that place. There are hundreds of American boats that were in the habit formerly of fishing in our waters, but the service of watching them has been very faithfully performed by the commander of the Dream, and, I think, very economically. I think the price paid for the charter is rather large, but she is a splendid boat and the commander can get her ready and under way in a wonderfully short time.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before this amount of $100,000 for the protection of the fisheries is passed, I would enquire from the Ministers whether they can give the House any information as to the negotiations with the United States in regard to this matter, and as to what they propose to do in regard to the continuation of the modus vivendi?

Mr. COLBY. I think it would be better to ask that question when the First Minister is here.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not press the question. I only asked whether the Ministers could give the information.

Mr. COLBY. Not at present.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I brought a matter to the attention of the Minister of Marine last year. Along the shores of Lake Erie a great many American fishermen have nets, and it is said that the mesh is too small and that they throw overboard the small fish as well as those which are of no value. Complaints are made that the waters are polluted in that way, and the fish which are thrown overboard are driven on the shore and become a nuisance to the people. I asked the Minister of Marine last year to instruct the fishery overseer there to look after this matter, and to see that the fishermen were prevented from creating a nuisance along that shore.

Mr. COLBY. I will have a note made of that subject.

Mr. ELLIS. There is a similar complaint in regard to the gaspereaux which are taken at the mouth of the St. John River, that the small fish are destroyed by the traps. Undoubtedly all the fish that enter the weirs, whether great or small, are destroyed, and if there were any means of setting free the young fish it would be a very good thing.

Mr. COLBY. I understand that the Department is now considering the adoption of a method that will allow the young fish to escape.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Has that been tried?

Mr. COLBY. It has been tried and has been found to answer very well.

Services and expenses in connection with the distribution of the fishing bounty, and collection of statistics.. $6,000

Mr. JONES (Halifax). That appears to be a large item for that service.

Mr. COLBY. I believe there will be a Bill introduced, probably on the next Government day, by which the fishery overseers will be made justices of the peace in order to undertake this duty.

Committee rose and reported resolutions.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 12.15 a.m. (Saturday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 26th March, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

Mr. SPEAKER communicated to the House the following letter which he had received from His Excellency the Governor General's Secretary:—

"OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SECRETARY,
OTTAWA, 24th March, 1890.

"SIR,—I have the honor to inform you that the Honorable Sir William Ritchie, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber on Wednesday, the 26th instant, at 4 o'clock p.m., for the purpose of giving assent to the Bills which have passed the Senate and House of Commons during the present Session,

"I have the honor to be, Sir,

"Your obedient servant,

"CHARLES COLVILLE, Captain,

"Governor General's Secretary.

"The Honorable

"The Speaker of the House of Commons."

GODERICH AND STRATHROY POST OFFICES.

Mr. LANDERKIN (for Mr. BARRON) asked, How many tenders were received for the heating of the Goderich and Strathroy Post Offices respectively? What were the names of the different persons who tendered? What was the amount of each tender?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There were twelve tenders for each of these works. The lowest tender in each case was that of Messrs. Garth & Co., of Montreal. For Goderich, $950; for Strathroy, $1,220. As these works are not executed, it is not found proper to give, now, the prices of the others, but they are much higher.

MANITOBA MUNICIPAL ACT.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron) (for Mr. WATSON) asked, What are the reasons for the disallowance of an Act of the Legislature of the Province intitled: "An Act further to amend chapter 52 of 49 Victoria," being the Manitoba Municipal Act of 1886 and amendment?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There are several reasons, which are set out in my report to Council. That report was approved, and will be brought down to the House.

BELLE CREEK HARBOR.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) asked, Were there a survey and report made upon Belle Creek harbor and breakwater last summer? If so, by whom was it made, and will the Minister lay copies before the House?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have received a note from the Department saying there was no survey made. Has the hon. gentlemen heard that a survey was made?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understood that Mr. Coste, or some engineer from the Department, made a survey of the place at the same time that he made a survey of Wood Island.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will enquire again.

MR. TOURIGNY, M.P.P.

Mr. GAUTHIER asked, Whether Honoré Tourigny, Esq., M.P.P., Provincial Land Surveyor, of Gentilly, is employed by the Dominion Government, or any Department thereof? If so, in what capacity, since when, and how much money has he received since he has been so employed? Has the said H. Tourigny any contract with the Government, and what is the purport and amount thereof?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Mr. Tourigny is not employed, nor has he any contract with this Department.

TRAWL FISHING.

Mr. JONES (Halifax) asked, Upon what principle has the Government prohibited trawl fishing in St. Mary's Bay, County of Digby, from 1st October to 1st June, the width at the entrance being nearly twenty miles? Was it done under Orders in Council or under departmental orders? Have representations been received from fishermen, or other parties, complaining of said regulations, and do the Government intend to continue or to amend and abolish the order?

Mr. TUPPER. About a year ago, an Order in Council was passed prohibiting trawl fishing in St. Mary's Bay, and very recently a subsequent Order in Council was passed defining more accurately the limits of St. Mary's Bay. No complaints had been received with regard to this regulation until after the second Order in Council was passed defining the limits, when the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Jones) brought to my attention the fact that this Order was very much complained of. Since then, I have asked for a further report in the matter. The first Order was passed on the report of the local overseer, the former inspector of fisheries, Mr. Rogers.

MILITIA—PRIVATE HURRELL.

Mr. MULOCK asked, When was Private C. T. Hurrell notified by the Government of the passage of the Order in Council of the 13th November, 1888, granting him a pension? What moneys have been paid him by way of gratuity or pension? On what dates were such payments made?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Most of the information required is contained in the papers already brought down. As to the amounts paid, it is very inconvenient to give them in the shape of an answer to the question put; but if the hon. gentleman wishes to move for a return, I am quite prepared to bring down an extract from the books containing these things.

Mr. MULOCK. The first question is in no way answered in the return. With the consent of the House, I beg to move for:

Return showing when Private Hurrell was notified by the Government of the passage of the Order in Council of the 13th November, 1888, granting him a pension? 2. What moneys have been paid him by way of gratuity or pension? 3. On what dates were such payments made?

Motion agreed to.

CAPE TRAVERSE WHARF, P.E.I.

Mr. PERRY asked, How much money was expended in 1889 in repairing the Cape Traverse Wharf, P. E. I.? Was the work let by tender? If so, who was the contractor? If by days' work, who had charge and superintended the work?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There was expended on the wharf in 1889, $13,017.44. The work was not let by tender. There was no contractor. The work was done by day labor. Track-master John Macpherson had general charge and supervision of the work, A. Strong being the foreman of the men employed.

BAIE DES CHALEURS RY. CO.'S SUBSIDY.

Mr. GUAY asked, 1st. Have the Government paid to the Baie des Chaleurs Railway Company for the twenty miles of railway, the whole of the $300,000 they undertook to pay to that company for the twenty miles of railway comprised between Metapedia and Cross Point? 2nd. On what dates were the several sums paid, and to whom? 3rd. If the $300,000 have not been paid in whole, what balance remains to be paid?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. To the first question the answer is, no. To the second: 1886

—September 28th, $60,000; November 3rd, $60,000; November 30th, $60,000. 1887—February 4th, $40,000; August 17th, $20,000; December 28th, $6,700. 1888—December 3rd, $15,200. 1889—February 27th, $17,100; August 2nd, $18,950; October 21st, $1,850; all paid to the Baie des Chaleurs Railway Company, $299,800. To the third: $200.

Mr. GUAY asked, 1st. What sums were paid on account of subsidy to the Baie des Chaleurs Railway Company, from 1st July, 1889, to 15th March, 1890? 2nd. On what dates were the payments made, and to what persons were the sums paid?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, $148,675. 2nd August, 1889, $94,360; October, 1889, $54,305. Paid to the Baie des Chaleurs Railway Company.

GREAT NORTHERN RY. CO.'S SUBSIDY.

Mr. GAUTHIER asked, Whether the Government have received an engineer's report for that part of the railway of the Great Northern Railway Company comprised between the village of New Glasgow, County of Terrebonne, and the parish of Ste. Julienne, County of Montcalm, traversing the parish of St. Lin, County of L'Assomption? If so, what is the purport of the said report? Have the Government paid to the said company any part of the subsidy granted to it for the construction of its railway, and, if so, what is the amount so paid?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; the Government have received an engineer's report, the purport of which is that the subsidy applicable to the ten miles is $32,000; that the value of work remaining to be done to complete on the amended location, is estimated at $12,000; that the balance of subsidy represented by work done is $20,000, and that payment has been made to the amount of $20,000.

I. C. R.—NEW TARIFF OF RATES.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I would ask the Minister of Railways, if, before he takes the final votes on the Intercolonial Railway, he will lay on the Table the new tariff of rates on that railway? I think he must have been led into some inaccuracy the other night, when he stated that there had been no average increase in the rates charged by the Intercolonial Railway. I know he must have had his information from the engineer, who was then present, but information which I have since had leads me to infer that there has been a very large increase in the average rate, which seriously affects the trade of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. If the hon. gentleman will lay that tariff on the Table before we discuss the item finally, we would have a better idea of the way in which the matter stands.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The information which was communicated to me, and which, I have no doubt, is accurate, is that the proposed alteration in the classification of the rates was to bring that classification in accordance with that of the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, so that throughout Canada the classification made should be the same. The different classification made it very inconvenient and disturbed the whole of the relations between the Intercolonial Railway and the other railways of Canada. That is the first point. Then a statement was made to me that, on the whole, the alteration of the classification does not increase the rates, but rather diminishes them. On some articles the effect would be to diminish the rates, while on others it might be to increase them, but that on the whole it was a fair average. The hon. gentleman asks me to bring down the rates as settled. I cannot well do that, because they are not yet settled. The representations which had been made from every interest that has been affected in any way where there has been the slightest increase, has been such, that I am now considering the whole matter. I do not think any remonstrance has been made by any persons who are interested where the rates have been reduced. Strange to say, not a remonstrance has been made against the reduction, but there has been a continual stream of remonstrances where the tariff has been increased. These remonstrances deserve consideration, and are receiving consideration, and when the tariff is settled, I will bring it down.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). There must be some schedule under which the Government are now acting, and that should be made public. It is very important that we should get it and understand the rates which they are now charging. There are very serious complaints from the trade of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick that this tariff is seriously interfering with them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This matter will be attended to at once, but it would be very inconvenient to bring down a tariff which might possibly be altered the next day.

REVISED VOTERS' LISTS PRINTING.

Mr. COOK. I see the Secretary of State is in his seat, and I congratulate the hon. gentleman on having so far recovered from his illness as to be able to put in an appearance here. Some time ago I sent a letter to the Queen's Printer asking for a copy of the revised voters' list for the County of East Simcoe. In course of time, I received a reply stating that the list was not yet printed. My constituents are very anxious to have a copy of the revised voters' list so as to compare it with the voters' list before this revision. Of course, in a business-like manner, they wanted to see that no clerical errors are being made in the Department of Printing.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I have just received a statement of the printed lists of voters which have been completed, and I see that East Simcoe is on the list. The hon. gentleman has the right to obtain his copy from his revising officer.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would ask when the hon. gentleman expects to have that list completed? My constituency is about the end of the list, if it is treated alphabetically.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The list is not dealt with according to the alphabet, but according to the order in which they are received from the revising officers who make the lists. I see on the statement I have just received, that the lists for North, South and Centre Wellington are completed and printed.

Mr. COOK. Do I understand the Secretary of State to say that a copy can only be obtained through the revising officer?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The revising officer is obliged, by law, to send a copy to each member of the House, because it must be certified. At the printing office it can be obtained at any time, at a price fixed by the Queen's Printer.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Can each member receive only one copy?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. According to statute.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What will it cost for a riding to buy them?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. You must ask the Queen's Printer.

Mr. CASGRAIN. When I was in my constituency the revising officer told me that the law provided that copies should be sent to the members elect, but he did not know by whom, and, therefore, he did not send me a copy.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It stands to reason that where the regular copy must be certified by the revising officer, he is the party who must send it to the member.

Mr. CASGRAIN. He does not know that.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Well, he should.

SUPPLY—LOAD-LINE FOR CANADIAN SHIPPING.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Marine to a Bill now before the Imperial Parliament, and which, as I am informed, will very seriously affect the shipping of Canada. It is a Bill to amend the Merchant Shipping Acts relating to the load-line. The Bill leaves it in the hands of the Board of Trade from time to time to indicate the maximum load-line, in salt water, of ships. This will very seriously affect our vessels, which are principally, as the Minister is well aware, under the French Bureau Veritas classification, and not under Lloyds' classification. Then, again, our vessels are somewhat different from the English vessels, which are principally iron and engaged on long voyages, in which there is very little competition with foreign vessels, or in the coasting trade, where there is no competition at all. On the other hand, our vessels have to compete with foreign vessels belonging to Norway, Italy and Germany, and the result of this Bill may, therefore, be very seriously to affect our shipping. I have received several letters on the subject, but I will only read an extract from one firm, who are largely engaged in the shipping of New Brunswick:

"We presume you have read in the papers of the proposed 'compulsory Load-line Bill,' now being promoted and likely to pass into the law this sitting of Parliament. It is intended to apply to all British registered vessels, and as the placing of the maximum load-line is to be left in the hands of Lloyds' Registry, we fear that it will discriminate against wooden vessels, particularly Colonials, who, as a rule, are not classed in their Book. We do not know if Canadian shipowners are aware of the proposed measure, or if so, whether they have considered its probable effect upon their interests. Our idea is that so large a ship-owning country as Canada should have something to say about such a Bill before it passes into a law that will affect their citizens' interests, and at least, insist upon the right to appoint its own surveyors and mark its own vessels, without the interference of either English Board of Trade or Lloyds' officials, either of whom are pretty sure to be unduly prejudiced against Colonial wooden vessels. We are also mentioning the matter to our other St. John and Yarmouth friends, as we deem it our duty to endeavor to give a timely warning, and we hope some concerted action may be taken to represent the matter to the Canadian Minister of Marine, who may possibly get the home authorities not to extend the Act to Canadian registered vessels. Shipowners on this side who are opposed to the Bill have compromised matters by agreeing to Lloyds' marking the ships instead of the Board of Trade, and as this association has, for the past two or three years, been marking iron vessels for owners on application, and allowing them a reasonable load-line from owners' point of view, we do not think it will affect their interest very much, but we fear the case will be different when they get hold of what they consider unclassed wooden vessels, and that this class of shipping will be seriously handicapped, not only in carrying such dead weight cargoes as coal and iron, but also with timber and deals. We have been unable to, so far, get a printed full draft of the Bill, but expect to do so shortly, when we will send you a copy. The Act is also proposed to be applied to foreign vessels, loading in a British port, but we don't see how that is going to work."

Now, the Bill is a very short one, two sections of which read as follows:—

"The centre of this disc shall be placed at such level below the deck line, marked under the provisions of this Act, as may be approved of by the Board of Trade from time to time, and shall indicate the maximum load-line in salt water, to which it shall be lawful to load the ship, until the position of the disc is altered by direction of the Board of Trade.

"The Board of Trade, from time to time, may appoint any of their surveyors or other officers, or any surveyors or officers of any corporation or association, for the survey or the registry of shipping, to approve on their behalf, from time to time, the position of any such disc as aforesaid, and any alteration thereof, and may appoint fees to be taken in respect of any such approval."

This Bill was introduced on the 12th of last month. Now, it seems to me that, under the British North America Act, Canadian shipping is entirely under the control of this Parliament, and it is proper that we should have something to say about that Bill. As I said before, English shipping is composed almost entirely of large iron and steel vessels and steamers. Wooden ships are principally owned by the colonies, and chiefly by Canada, and it is very important that we should have control of the load-line as regards ourselves. As I have pointed out, our vessels have to compete with foreign vessels, while the English vessels do not; our colonial vessels have to compete largely with Norwegian vessels, particularly in the timber trade between Canada and England, and with German vessels in other trades, and if our vessels have to be subjected to these regulations of the Board of Trade from time to time, it is going very seriously to affect our trade. I hope the Minister of Marine will take some steps to bring this matter to the notice of the English Government, to see if Canadian vessels cannot be exempted from the operation of this law.

Mr. TUPPER. I fully appreciate the great importance of the matter to which the hon. gentleman has called the attention of the House. During my recent absence from Ottawa my attention was called to the subject, and I gave directions to obtain a copy of this Bill, but, so far, I have not had an opportunity of seeing it. I have given instructions to the Department to look into the subject, so that I may be able to decide what representations to make to the Imperial authorities with regard to this matter. I shall lose no time in looking into the question and taking what action may be deemed necessary.

Mr. KENNY. In this connection I desire to point out to the hon. Minister, that most of the wooden ships that have been built in Canada—and I understood the hon. member for St. John (Mr.

Weldon), when he asked for an explanation of this proposed Imperial legislation respecting colonial ships, to refer only to wooden ships, because a certain number of iron ships have been built in England and registered in Canada—have been constructed under the inspection of Bureau Veritas. There is a certain amount of jealousy existing between that office and the office of the great English Lloyds, and one apprehension which the owner of wooden ships feels is this: that, under the new law, as I understand it, I have not yet had an opportunity of reading the English Act, it is contemplated that a surveyor of English Lloyds shall be sent to survey any vessel when the load-line is not considered satisfactory by the Board of Trade. I would suggest to the hon. Minister of Marine that, when he places his views on this matter before the Imperial Government, he should endeavor to secure what the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) asks, that this Parliament should regulate all matters pertaining to our own shipping; but if that cannot be obtained, at least he should ask that when a survey is required in consequence of any dispute arising between an officer of the Board of Trade and the captain of a ship, and an additional surveyor is required, a surveyor from the office from which the ship is cleared should be selected to survey the vessel. This practice of placing a load-line, as a matter of fact, has been in existence for several years, and we have not experienced any great difficulty in regard to the load-line. The rule has been that the line should be fixed by the master of a ship. This question concerns us mostly in regard to colonial ships engaged more particularly in the coal trade of Great Britain, that is, with Wales and Newcastle, and with regard to certain cargoes of cement and mixed cargoes from London and other ports. I should be very glad indeed if the hon. Minister of Marine could secure for Canada the entire control of her own shipping.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Experimental Farm $75,000

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I observe that $80,000 were voted in 1887 for buildings for the model farm, $70,000 in 1888, another $70,000 in 1889, or a total of about $220,000, of which amount, according to the report of the Auditor General, $94,481 have been spent. I think it is due to this Committee that the Minister should state what contracts are in existence, if any, and how much of the $30,000 asked for extra buildings is to be spent on the different farms; also how much is required to finish the buildings on the farms. There is a large sum of which no statement yet appears in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. CARLING. The appendix on the model farms, prepared by the director, has not yet been brought down to the House, a delay due to no fault of the Department because it was placed in the hands of the printers six weeks ago. That report will give the details of the expenditure. I understand the hon. gentleman to ask the amount that will be required to complete the buildings on the farm. The estimate is $30,000 to complete the buildings on the different model farms in the different Provinces. The amount asked this year by the Department of Public Works, $30,000, is expected to complete all the buildings.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). The hon. Minister gave this answer last year: that we would obtain the detailed statement of the expenditure and the experiments in the appendices to the report when they are brought down; but those appendices did not contain the information. The hon. gentleman should be ready to make a statement in regard to all the contracts, before the Committee voted this large sum.

Mr. CARLING. The estimate for the buildings mentioned comes under the Department of Public Works, and when that item is reached, no doubt the Minister of Public Works will be quite prepared to give all the details. The appendix to my report will be in the hands of hon. members tomorrow or the following day, when this item of public buildings will come up, and will there find details in regard to all the contracts made and the amounts required to complete them.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). Then the Minister should allow this vote to stand over until these documents are before hon. members.

Mr. CARLING. The item to which the hon. gentleman is speaking, namely, contracts for buildings and amount required to complete, is not in my estimate, but in that of the Minister of Public Works. We have not reached that item yet, and we will not reach it until the appendix is brought down. If it is the wish of the hon. gentleman that the matter should stand over until the appendix is laid before the House, I have no objection.

Mr. LAURIER. I understand that the hon. gentleman says we will have a good deal of information in this appendix, and if that be so, it is quite proper that the item should stand over until the appendix is brought down.

Mr. CARLING. Very well.

Mr. COOK. Who is doing the printing?

Mr. CARLING. It is being done in the Government Printing Office.

Mr. COOK. I understood that when we would have this Printing Bureau there would be no more delays in printing. We are just now in as bad a state as before we had the Bureau. It has cost the country a great deal of money, and we have not benefited by it in the least, and the hon. gentleman makes the same excuse as he did in other years. I would advise the Minister to send the report to be printed in the Montreal Herald office, and the gentleman who owns that paper will see that the printing is done in good time.

Mr. MITCHELL. Hear, hear.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). Better let the matter stand over until we get this appendix, so that we can discuss it intelligently.

Agricultural Societies, North-West Territories $10,000

Mr. McMULLEN. How is this money distributed among these societies?

Mr. CARLING. In the same way as the grant in the Province of Ontario is distributed. When a certain sum of money is subscribed by each society, and when it has fifty members, we give so much to that society. Last year we gave something like eight or nine thousand dollars to the twenty-seven agricultural societies in the North-West.

Committee rose and reported resolutions.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

MR. CARLING. Before the House proceeded to the Senate Chamber, I said there were twenty-seven agricultural societies in the North-West Territories, and we granted $3 for every $1 they raised by subscriptions. Finding that the societies were struggling to get along in that new district, and that we had sufficient in the vote, we gave them one-third more last year than the $3, which amounted to $8,854, out of the $10,000 voted for these twenty-seven societies.

MR. McMULLEN. That would be $4 for every dollar they raised, and that is much in excess of what is given to the other societies throughout the Dominion.

MR. CARLING. It must be remembered that these societies in the North-West Territories extend over a very large tract of country, and that they have a great deal to contend with. We raised the grant to the societies last year, as we found the vote had not been all expended, and I do not think the House will object to our giving them that encouragement.

MR. McMULLEN. We have no objection to encourage the development of the North-West Territories, in offering prizes for products that may be successfully produced there. At the same time the North-West has cost a great deal of money, and we should be careful that we should not deal out with, perhaps, too liberal a hand. It is desirable that this money should be properly expended, and some basis should be laid down for its distribution. I do not think the Minister of Agriculture should ask the House to consent that he would distribute it in whatever way he wished. Last year he gave $3 to every one subscribed and then increased it to $4. What is the intention for next year?

MR. CARLING. We gave them $3 for every dollar they subscribed, and finding we could give them more out of the vote we increased the grant.

MR. McMULLEN. That is virtually discouraging subscriptions on their part.

MR. CARLING. Not at all. They must have a society of fifty members subscribing a dollar each before they can get anything. This year the societies may number a great many more than last year, and we may consequently have to reduce the amount given to each society.

MR. McMULLEN. Could the Minister say about what was the average number of the members of each society?

MR. CARLING. About eighty-three, I think.

Census and Statistics.....$200,000

MR. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Will the hon. gentleman state whether any Order in Council has been passed, to declare how this census shall be taken, whether on a de jure or de facto system?

Mr. CARLING. No; because we do not take the census until next year, and we do not make any appointments until next year.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Has the hon. Minister made any recommendations on the subject?

Mr. CARLING. No.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Has any determination been come to with regard to what principle shall be adopted?

Mr. CARLING. It is the intention to take them in the same manner as the last census was taken, that is, by the de jure system.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Is that system in force in England or in the United States?

Mr. CARLING. It is the one in force in the United States, but not in England.

Mr. LANGEЛИER (Quebec). I think that system was found to work very unsatisfactorily at the last census. The enumerator is made the judge to decide whether a party is to be entered or not, and the enumerators differ widely in their judgments. I know in some cases young men who have been absent from Canada for years, and who do not belong to Canada in any sense, were still returned in that census as belonging to Canada. In many cases names of parties who are absent in the States, are entered or left out at the mere caprice of the enumerator, who is left to say whether such persons are to be counted as belonging to Canada or not. Under that system we cannot really know what the actual population of this country is, and the census is worthless unless it gives us that information. From this country there is a large outgo of population to the United States, and the de jure system, so-called, as applied to Canada, is not, in fact, a de jure system, but it is an imaginary system which gives to Canada an imaginary population. I think, if it is desired to keep that system, we should also have a de facto system at the same time, so that we may ascertain what is the real population of Canada, and also how many of those who would be counted as belonging de jure to Canada, belong de facto to this country.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) If the statute upon this subject is carried out in its spirit, the system my hon. friend has just referred to, gives us the enumeration of the actual population of Canada on a given day. The fifth section of the Act provides that the enumeration shall be taken so as to ascertain with the utmost possible accuracy, with regard to the territorial divisions of Canada, their population at a given time. Now, we in Canada occupy a peculiar situation with regard to the neighboring country. We know that there has been, for a number of years back, a steady flow of population from this country to the United States, people who are not temporarily to reside there, but permanently; and if the census is taken in the same way it was taken before, the results will be largely inaccurate and largely misleading. Now, speaking on matters which came to my knowledge with regard to the last census, I noticed that many enumerators, taking, as they said, their returns under instructions from those who appointed them, took from the head of the house, not only the number of his family and of the servants who were at home with him, but the names and numbers of those who had left many years before; the only question being asked was: "Do you think that he will ever return?" Well, "ever" is a big word, and the father of the house did not want to banish all hope that some time or another his son, who had left home to make a living abroad, and was continuing to make his living abroad, and to be a resident of another country, might at some future time return; and in this way the names of hundreds and thousands were put down who had, for all practical purposes, left Canada, made a new home for themselves in another country, and become naturalised in the United States. So far as my knowledge goes, and I took pains to enquire at the time, all these names were entered in the enumerator's list and returned as comprising a part of the population of Canada. Well, if the same system was followed in the larger Provinces, from which a larger exodus had taken place, the total results would be so misleading that no one could form even an approximate idea of what the population of this country was. I think, myself, the hon. gentleman should reconsider his determination in this respect, and if he desires that the census is to be of any value whatever, so far as the population is concerned, he should adopt the English system, which will give us a fair idea of the number of inhabitants in Canada on a given day. Possibly there might be a few thousands, one way or the other, who would be abroad for temporary purposes, and he might include those; but if the de facto system is adopted, on the other hand, he would have nearly the same number of people who were here temporarily from other countries. At any rate, we would have a knowledge of what the population was on a given day; but under the system the Government proposes to carry out, we will get a return which will be very misleading.

Mr. CARLING. I think my hon. friend must have been misinformed as to an enumerator taking parties who had permanently left the country.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) No; I was not.

Mr. CARLING. Then the enumerator went contrary to the instructions given by the Department, because the instructions are to take the parties living in the house at the time, and those that are temporarily absent—those, for instance, who are away fishing, or travelling, or who may be out of the country for three or four months only. But parties who have left the country and been absent all through the year, are not to be taken.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Are there any terms of limitation in the Orders in Council, giving an idea to the enumerators what length of absence would preclude a party from being taken?

Mr. CARLING. There was no fixed time in the Order in Council, but instructions were given each enumerator to consider those who were absent on employment during the summer as temporarily absent, and to include them as belonging to the house. The enumerators are sworn, and receive instructions as to how the census shall be taken. There may be mistakes, but I am sure every precaution was taken and will be taken that none shall be entered on the lists but those that are in the house at the time and those who are considered temporarily absent for a month or two during the summer.

Mr. BLAKE. Quite a number of communications were sent me, after the last census, intimating that if such an understanding as the hon. gentleman has just told us existed at the head office, it did not reach the enumerators in many quarters. I am very glad to hear what the hon. gentleman has said, as he has taken a reasonable view of the matter; but the information I received from many parts of the country is that people who had been more than twenty years away, and were permanently away, were put on the enumerator's list. As the hon. member for Queen's County has said, if a father were asked whether he expected his boy, who had been away some fifteen or twenty years, never to come back, of course the father, in the hope of having his son pay him a visit, would say that certainly he expected him back. The son's name would be put down. That is the report I have received from many parts, and my hon. friend from Quebec (Mr. Langelier) confirms it with regard to that Province. Under these circumstances it would be very important for the hon. gentleman to prescribe a maximum of absence, not within which everybody should be counted—because a man who left yesterday may have gone permanently, and others may leave with the intention of remaining several months and coming back—but after which no man should be counted. It is impossible, from the information I have received, to come to any other conclusion than that, by reason of this system, a laxity, or discretion, was exercised which was grossly misleading. You can put no greater restraint upon the exuberant patriotism of some enumerators, who may be disposed to count a great many more than he ought as likely to come back, than to adopt a check system. I recommended such a system on the occasion of the last census, and I reiterate, with added emphasis, from past experience, the necessity of having the enumerator report every absentee he enters on his list. The mere statement of the total number of absent persons who are counted in the population of any particular district would be a great check. It would enable us to know to what extent the population of the country is supposed to be—not merely a transitory population, but a population living away from its fixed abode. This would involve no extra trouble, and would not require even another column. You need not mark those who are present at the time; but if you make some particular mark against those who are absent, and give us the figures in each district, that will be a security against laxity and against intentional over-stating, and will of itself form an important element in the formation of a conclusion as to how far the census is really correct.

Mr. CARLING. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that it is of the greatest importance that we should have our census properly taken, and I think the instructions which were given, and which we intend to give were that the greatest care should be taken in the enumeration of those who were present and those who were absent. I am informed that the enumerator was instructed to take those actually living in the house and those to whom the house was their place of abode, but who were temporarily absent on work or on leisure. I promise the House that the greatest care shall be taken in the instructions given to the commissioners and the enumerators to see that a correct and proper census shall be taken, and people who have gone to the United States for any length of time cannot be considered as belonging to the house. The same system is adopted in the United States, and it is most important that we should have our census accurately taken.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is the hon. gentleman prepared to accept the suggestion of the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake)?

Mr. CARLING. I would not say positively just now, but I think the suggestion a good one and shall give it every consideration.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Has the hon. gentleman a copy of the instructions furnished by his Department to the Census Commissioners, and the Order in Council passed previously to the last census?

Mr. CARLING. I shall be glad to furnish them.

Mr. CHARLTON. I hope the Minister of Agriculture will not forget the suggestion of the hon. member for West Durham. It is a most important one: that all absentees' names should be checked. It is of the highest importance that instructions should be given to the enumerators with regard to persons who have left, and who may have left permanently, although they left but the day before. The errors that undoubtedly exist in the last census render it, to a great extent, untrustworthy—as a report of the population—in one Province at least.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. Minister appears to have shown that reasonably fair instructions were given to the enumerators, but the trouble seems to have been that the system itself was defective, and under it there was no certainty of the instructions being carried out. In fact, there is almost a certainty that they will not. The hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) alluded to the exuberant patriotism of the enumerators. It is very probable that patriotism might not be so general as local, and that an enumerator might wish to show a large population in his own neighborhood. It is also within the limits of possibility that the amount paid per name to the enumerator might have something to do with the number of names he counted. With regard to absentees, we all know that a large number of the population do spend, notwithstanding the benefits we enjoy under the National Policy, a very considerable part of the year in the United States—especially our French Canadians of the Province of Quebec. A great many of our young men from Ontario do the same thing, and some of them are actually engaged on American sailing vessels during the summer. If you adopt the de jure system at all, this fact of course leads to a great deal of trouble in order to ascertain what time is to be allowed for the return of these people. As my hon. friend from West Durham (Mr. Blake) has pointed out, the de jure system, without any time being specified, leaves the census open to a great deal of misrepresentation; and if, on the other hand, you adopt a time limit, a sailor on the great lakes, a servant girl from Ontario who hires in Michigan for a period of the year and then returns home, a sailor from the Maritime Provinces who goes on a voyage around the world, and the local fisherman from those Provinces who may be absent for no particular time, may not be properly counted. In fact, it is impossible to adopt any fair system of that kind, and therefore the only logical system appears to be the system of a de facto census, by counting the number of people in each house on a particular day. The circumstances of England are not more favorable to that system than are the circumstances of Canada. There is no country in the world that has a greater number of seamen abroad than England. Their sailors are countless, their fishermen are numerous, a great many of their population are away from the country as soldiers. I do not know whether there is any special arrangement for counting the sailors. Of course, the number of soldiers is known by the Army List. If it is possible to work a de facto system in Great Britain without missing many names, it is possible to work it here without missing a great number of those who are temporarily absent. In any case, the burden of proof rests upon the Government to show why they have, from one census period to another, refused to adopt the plan which has been followed in the mother country so easily. The burden does not rest upon us to show that the present plan is mischievous, or even to show that the scheme which has been pursued elsewhere has been a good one. The simple plan pursued in Great Britain is to leave the schedule some time in advance at each house, and allow the head of the house to fill it out. If he has neglected to do so at the time when the enumerator calls, he can be assisted by the enumerator. The fact of this schedule being before the people for a little time enables them to enquire what it means, and to discover that it is simply a matter of statistics, and that does away with any feeling against it. I think all the arguments to be drawn from experience and from theory and from practical utility are in favor of the de facto system. I would be glad if the Minister of Agriculture, after his long study of this subject, could give us some information as to the reasons why we should any longer adhere to the antiquated system which has so far been adopted.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I think, at all events, it is desirable to have an accurate census if we have one at all. We should certainly observe the suggestion which was made by the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), and ascertain those who have left this country. It would be most important if we could find out how many of our people have gone away and are not likely to return. It is also important that we should find out how many have gone away temporarily. Let us have something to show for the money we are expending. Let us have an accurate statement of the facts as they exist. That is what the country wants, that is what the House should desire, and that is what the hon. Minister should endeavor to bring about. Whether it shows that the country is progressing or not, let us know how we are going on, and whether our population is increasing or not. There is another point in connection with this matter. In all the census enumerations which we have had, under all the origins of the people which are set forth, there is not a single column in which a Canadian can be found. Is there no Canadian sentiment in this country? Is there an idea on the part of the Government to crush out Canadian sentiment, and not to give a single subdivision which would show the number of the people who are born in Canada? That is a matter which should be carefully looked into. We find here that we have the African, the Chinese, the Dutch, English, French, German, Icelandic, Indian, Irish, Italian, Jewish, Russian and Polish, Scandinavian, Scotch, Spanish and Portuguese, Swiss, Welsh and other origins, but there is nothing for those who are Canadian born. I think that should be amended. If a stranger were to take this book up, unless he looked at the back of it, he would not know where the census was taken. When we take a census of Canada, I think we ought to show how many of these people were born in Canada, and I also think that, above all things, we should know how many people we have in this country, how many of our citizens have gone to other countries, how many have made their home there permanently or temporarily; and I do not think that any other census than one made in that way is of any use or should receive the sanction of the House or of the country. I hope there will be an amendment moved, and another division on this subject, and I feel determined, as far as I can, to see that there shall be a division on the question, that the enumeration shall be so made as to show how many Canadians we have in this country. I think that, in order to cultivate a Canadian sentiment in harmony with that of the British people with which we are in accord, it is proper that Canadians should be enumerated with the other nationalities. To ignore Canada altogether is hardly in keeping with a Government which is charged with protecting the interests of this country. While I am proud of our attachment to the mother country, I will not be satisfied unless the origin of those who are born in Canada is shown. I want an accurate census. I think the suggestion which was made by the member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), and by other members, should be taken into consideration when the enumeration is being made.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I concur in the sentiment expressed by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Landerkin), as to the desirability of having some division in the census which will show all those who claim to be Canadians. In my own constituency, when the last census was taken, there were many who came to me and said: "When the census enumerator comes to us and asks what nationality we are of, we say we are Canadians." He says: "I have got no division in this census paper that will enable me to put you down as a Canadian. You must be either an Englishman, a Scotchman, an Irishman, or of some other nationality, but for Canadians we have got no division in this census paper at all." I think it is very desirable that there should be some heading in the census paper that would indicate those particular citizens who claim to be Canadians. Referring to what was said by the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey), respecting the advantages of the de facto system, I would like to say a word or two. Our circumstances in Canada, I take it, are not similar to the circumstances in Great Britain. The enumeration we have in Canada is not taken merely for the purpose of indicating what the whole population of Canada may be, but it is also an enumeration for the purpose of indicating the number of inhabitants in each particular Province, for the purpose of adjusting the representation. I would like to point a case as an illustration, that the de facto system would not be a proper one to adopt in this country. Take the case of the Maritime Provinces, where, perhaps, a large number of the population might be absent upon the seas at the time of the taking of the census. It would not, I think, be a proper thing for us to leave out those people, as inhabitants of the Maritime Provinces, that are upon the high seas at the time of the enumeration; if they were left out the result might be, that the Maritime Provinces would not have the representation in this House to which their numbers entitled them. Let us also take the case of the Province of Quebec. A comparatively large number of the population of that Province might be engaged in the lumber woods of the Province of Ontario, and if they were counted in the Province in which they were working, it would swell the numbers in the Province of Ontario and diminish those in the Province of Quebec, and consequently give to Ontario, perhaps, a larger representation than it was entitled to, and to Quebec a lesser representation than it was entitled to; so I think that the de facto system, which might work very well in England, would not be satisfactory in this country.

Mr. CASEY. I do not think the hon. gentleman has established any such difference between the circumstances of Great Britain and Canada, as would justify his contention. Of course, it is the object here to ascertain the population of each Province; so it is the object of a census in the United Kingdom, to ascertain the relative population in England, in Scotland, and in Ireland; it is just as necessary there, for many reasons, to ascertain the correct population of each locality, as it is here. The British census is not merely directed to finding out the total number of people in the country, it is directed also to finding out the distribution of it. In regard to sailors, as I said when I spoke before, the argument against the de facto system would apply in England as much as here, because they certainly have as large a proportion of the population at sea as we have, and, I think, a much larger proportion. I do not know what means are adopted in England to ascertain the number of sailors, or whether they are counted at all; but I think it would be very easy to ascertain the number and residence of the sailors, from the shipowners, treating each Canadian vessel as a Canadian home, and taking the number of people present on that vessel on a fixed day, although she might not be in Canadian waters at the time. I take it for granted that every shipowner has the means of ascertaining who are on board ships at a certain time, as sailors—of course, I would not count the passengers. That plan, I think, would entirely dispose of my hon. friend's argument as regards any possible loss to the Maritime Provinces. But probably a stronger argument exists in the fact that members here from the Maritime Provinces do not seem to feel that they would be under any disadvantage from the introduction of this system. As regards Quebecers being employed in Ontario lumber camps, I fancy that about the border here, the number in each Province would pretty nearly balance itself. I have no doubt that a good many of the inhabitants of Ottawa go up the Gatineau, in the realm of our revered friend, the King of the Gatineau, as many, perhaps, as those from the other side of the Ottawa river who go into the lumber camps in Ontario. I do not think the difference between the two, at all events, would be so great as to make any difference in the representation of the Provinces.

General LAURIE. I must emphatically disagree with the proposition of my hon. friend who has just sat down, that the members from the Maritime Provinces would be satisfied with a de facto census. We should not be at all satisfied—it would not work, Sir. The proposition of my hon. friend defeats itself in his own argument, because he suggests that if a de facto census is adopted, an allowance should be made for sailors who are away. Well, is not that, per se, a de jure system? When the men are at sea, as my hon. friend says, they are not at home. But I would point out that we could not rely upon record of the crews of vessels registered in one county, because many men sail in vessels registered in other counties. Also, there is a large proportion of fishermen from the Maritime Provinces manning fishing vessels of the United States, and I do not know how we could take a record of these. Still, they are certainly inhabitants of our Province, and have their homes there. Therefore, I am satisfied that the hon. gentleman's suggestion would work a great injustice to the Maritime Provinces.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). A great many of our ships are manned by men who are only transient residents of Canada. The officers, as a rule, are Canadians, and I think their number can be very easily ascertained. The difficulty of the de jure system is, that a great many people are put down who have practically ceased to reside in Canada. It seems to me there would be very little difficulty in employing both systems, so as to ascertain the number of those who are temporarily absent, and of those who are to be counted by the de facto system. I think hon. members on the opposite side ought to be glad to adopt that suggestion, because, according to their contention, very few Canadians have left this country.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. member for Grey speaks, and I can understand his speaking, of a growing desire on the part of Canadians to be returned as belonging to the Canadian nationality, but I was surprised to hear the member for Renfrew (Mr. White) second the observation, that we should find this evidence in the census, because he with his sentiments must have been gratified to feel that we can find the true elements of Canadian nationality and unity in another part of the Statute-book, that is, in the Tariff Act. There it is that, according to his view, we find our common bond, or rather our most uncommon bonds. That is our national unity, and it is in that Act that we find the signs and symbols of our being, at the same time, one and a self-separated and a self-contained people.

Mr. CASEY. For the word "bond" my hon. friend might substitute the word "mortgage." Our National Policy is more of a mortgage on our nationality than a bond of union. But, in regard to the suggestion of the hon. gentleman, I think the Government would certainly have no logical reason for rejecting it. If they do not want to adopt the de facto system in its entirety, there can be no objection to stating on the face of the return how many people were in Canada on a certain day, and how many were temporarily absent, and where they were reported to be. Take a given entry. It should show that there were, for example, six of the family at home, that two sons were away, that they were at a certain place, either in the United States or in the woods, or sailing. These facts and statements might be given with great advantage to the country, and they would supply information which we have a right to demand. When the Government maintain, from year to year, that the policy they have pursued has had the effect of keeping Canadians at home, and of providing them with employment within our own borders, and that if there was an exodus, even a temporary exodus for the purpose of obtaining work, it was not such as occurred under the old regime, when such claims are made, the Government should furnish a definite information as to the existing state of things. We should know how many people were domiciled in Canada at a fixed date, and how many others were temporarily absent, and, as far as possible, the reasons of their absence. If hon. gentlemen opposite have the confidence they profess to have in the effects of their policy, they can have no objection to furnishing this information. If they refuse we can only believe, and we will be thoroughly justified in asserting, and I intend to assert, that they refuse to furnish this information for fear of showing a state of things the contrary of which they are constantly ascribing to their policy. If they choose to refuse this information, which is necessary, they must take the consequences. I do not know which will be more hurtful to them; if they think the facts will be more hurtful to them than the suspicions, they will choose the former; if not, they will choose the latter; at all events, they must take their choice.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. Minister has stated that no instructions have as yet been issued with respect to the census. I have observed in the public journals a statement that sometime ago a circular was issued to medical men throughout the Dominion with respect to the approaching census, asking them to obtain and transmit to the Department certain information in regard to sanitary matters, hygiene, mortality, and so forth. Is that so? If it is so, will the hon. gentleman bring down the papers?

Mr. CARLING. I shall be glad to bring down the information. The circular was sent out by Mr. Johnson, statistician of the Department, in order to ascertain more correctly the returns as to the number of deaths and the causes of death.

Mr. BLAKE. Having to do with the census?

Mr. CARLING. I suppose it is an enquiry having relation to the census. No steps have been taken in regard to the census; but Mr. Johnson, statistician, has sent a circular to medical men, asking them to furnish him with such information as they possess with respect to deaths and causes of death.

Mr. BLAKE. I must say this: The census is a solemn operation which ought to be entered upon and executed as a whole, and the information sought, and enquiries made, with respect to the census, ought to be authorised and sanctioned with that object and aim. The hon. gentleman says that certain information has been asked by the statistician of the Department, and he supposes it will have some relation to the census. Whatever is going to be done to form a part of that compilation, which is to form our decennial census, ought to be done under Order in Council or departmental regulation, and with direct reference to the census, and under all the sanction and arrangement necessary for the procuring of that especially accurate information which belongs to such a national transaction.

Mr. DUPONT. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I heard some of my colleagues criticise with much severity the manner in which the last census was taken in the Dominion, and the patriotism of my hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Landerkin) was shocked by the fact that in the census there was, so he says, no column for the classification of the Canadian-born subjects of Her Majesty; because, as he alleges, no care was taken to ascertain the Canadian population of the Dominion. With a little more attention and care in the study of the last census taken in the Dominion, the hon. member, and others who have expressed the same views, would feel satisfied that the wishes of their patriotism were fully complied with, for any one might find out in the last census the Canadian-born subjects of Her Majesty, those born in each of the several Provinces, and those born in foreign lands. So that, in this respect, the last census is perfect. Moreover, we have the population by origin, as stated by the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Landerkin). We have also the population as to creed. As to the population residing in the country at the time the census was taken, I think the Government might also obtain the statistical data. But it is of the utmost importance that the enumerators should include in the Canadian population those Canadian citizens who are absent but for a time, either in the United States or elsewhere, and that with respect to each Province, at the time of the taking of the census, there may be a larger number of temporary absentees in one Province than in another, and by not including those in the Canadian population, we might be exposed later on, when fixing the representation, to act unfairly towards one Province which might, at the time, have a greater number of temporary absentees than another Province. I therefore think, Mr. Chairman, that it is important, with respect both to population and representation, to include in the census as Canadian citizens those who are but for a time away from the country. I wish to make another observation in reference to the census. I have noticed a missing feature of the last census with respect to one branch of our agricultural industry. I readily agree that, at the time of the taking of the census, that particular industry had not the extension it has to-day. I am referring to the dairy industry. Thus we find that the last census contains no statistical data showing the quantity of cheese and butter manufactured in each of the Provinces of the Dominion. The dairy industry has become one of the most remunerative to the Canadian farmers and the export of the products of that industry ranges among the largest. The Canadian citizens who have taken to farming in the several Provinces of the Dominion are interested to know what districts manufacture the largest quantity of cheese or butter, and it is important that the hon. Minister of Agriculture should take some means to ascertain how far each Province supplies the dairy industry; what quantity of cheese for consumption or export is supplied by each Province, or, at all events, that the census should give the total production of cheese manufactured in each Province; the total quantity of cheese manufactured, not only by the factories, but also by the home dairy; the quantity of butter manufactured by the butter factories, and the quantity of the same manufactured by the home dairy on the farm. I think it is important, in the interest of that industry, that the next census should give us all these informations.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member I must say that I fully agree with the remarks he made on the question of absentees. Of course, abuses must be avoided on that point as much as in any other matter, but there is no doubt, as the hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. White) pointed out, that if absentees are not to be put down in the census, for instance, those parties who leave for the woods for lumbering during winter, and who are absent from their homes during five, six or seven months of the year, we would do an injury to those who are engaged in that trade. Moreover, there are in the Province of Quebec workmen whom we call ship laborers and who leave during winter for Pensacola, Baltimore and other places in the United States, to work at their trade, having then nothing left to do here. Their absence lasts from five to six months. Those workmen leaving for winter time, absent only during winter, return every spring to resume their trade. There are the fishermen, too, as an hon. member mentioned, and I do not allude to the maritime Provinces only, but also to the Province of Quebec, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. Well, all these fishermen are people who leave their homes to carry on their trade on Newfoundland banks or elsewhere. If the census was to take place after their departure or during their absence, it would not be a reason not to include them in the census. On the contrary, it would be an injury made to the Provinces. We have still quite a number of young men travelling in foreign countries, such as merchants, who go in the midst of winter, to make their own business through England, France and Germany, or elsewhere. They are absent for two, three, four months, and sometimes more. Those people should have their names put down in the census. I am sure that amongst those hon. members who spoke on the matter, who have insisted to prevent all abuses on that point, none of them meant that those parties should not have their names registered in the census. As to the second observation, relating to butter and cheese trade, it has been developed and regulated since the last census has taken place. I was just talking about it with my hon. colleague, the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Carling); he told me that in previous censuses a special statistics had been made about that trade, but not as extensive as the hon. member for Bagot would desire. There is no doubt that, considering the development of that trade in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, there should be in the census a special mention to that effect. It would be probably hard to make what the hon. member desires, that is to say, statistics gathered from door to door; but it could be done by counties or by parishes separately, and then the total quantity that will be most approximate possible could indicate the bulk of cheese and butter manufactured in each county and parish; and thus we would have the total for each Province. I think that the hon. Minister of Agriculture is well disposed to accept with good feelings the suggestion of the hon. member for Bagot, and to see what is practically to do, but it will not be possible to collect this statistics for each house, because the trouble would be too considerable.

Mr. BLAKE. There may and will be great difficulty in getting the correct amount of the quantity of butter and cheese manufactured in the different farm houses, but certainly it would be still more difficult to do what the hon. Minister has as just suggested, that is, to give the total for the parish or county, without getting the returns from the houses. You must get the details, in order that you may get the totals. My own impression is, that if it is proposed to obtain an account of the strictly domestic manufacture, it will be found to be very vague and far from approximate. I would suggest, while not dissenting from the notion that this should be attempted, that there should be made a separate account as to the condition of the creameries or factories, for by getting these returns, we will know exactly what is produced. The rest will be to a large extent guesswork.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is what I intend. I do not know what is the system in Ontario, but I know that in a number of parishes in the Province of Quebec, there are one, two or three factories. The farmers take their milk to factories, and a record is kept of the quantity. From that, you can have a fairly correct return.

Mr. BLAKE. Certainly.

Mr. CHARLTON. I rise for the purpose of making a suggestion to the Minister of Agriculture with regard to the enumeration. I do not know whether the suggestion will be deemed of any worth or not, and I should not make it, but for the fact that the United States superintendent of the census intends, in the census to be taken in the present year, to enumerate all persons of British American birth, distinguishing those of French Canadian origin from the others, in order to show the number of persons in the United States of French Canadian birth. I would suggest that it might be interesting to make such a separation in the enumeration of this country. It would make the statistics, which the United States Government propose to take in this respect, complete. Otherwise the census would not be complete as to the number of French Canadians in America. I mention this fact in the way of suggestion to the hon. Minister.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The Minister of Public Works referred to the unfairness that would ensue, if the fishermen and persons in such employment were to be excluded from the census. That, of course, cannot be permitted under any circumstances, because they are only absent for a short time. The hon. gentleman also pointed out, that travellers would come under the same category. There is no disposition on the part of the House, or of the country, to exclude persons engaged in such employment who are only out of the country for a short time, but there does seem to be an impression, that a great many people who leave Canada for the United States, and who remain there for an indefinite period, say four or five years, and longer even in many cases, are put down in the census.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, no.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. gentleman says "no." I am glad to hear it, but that is the impression which has been generally entertained in the country.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I am glad to hear that such is not the case, because that would render the census returns very unsatisfactory and misleading. Those persons who leave Canada stand in a very different position from those who, in their ordinary occupation, are obliged to travel, and who are kept abroad for a short time only.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Such as stevedores.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Yes. These would stand in a very different position from others who have left the country to be absent for years. As it seems to be understood that the Minister is going to consider the proposal of adopting the maximum period of absence during which such persons shall not be considered as belonging to the country, the difficulty I have referred to may be obviated. I am glad to understand, from the hon. gentleman's statement, that the view which is generally entertained with regard to the census is not correct.

Mr. CHARLTON. At what time of the year is it proposed to take the census?

Mr. CARLING. Next April.

Development of Dairying interest in Canada..... $5,000

Mr. INNES. I would ask the hon. Minister how he proposes to expend this money? Is it to be devoted to the Dominion Dairymen's Association which was organised last year, or is it to be expended in connection with the new Department recently created by the Government? A short time ago, the Department made an engagement with Professor Robertson, who, while Professor of Dairying at the Agricultural College of Ontario, rendered very important services to the dairying interests of the country, and whose connection with the Experimental Farm will, I am sure, be a decided acquisition to the Department and to the country at large. In what way does the Minister propose to expend this money? Is it in connection with this new Department, or is a portion to go to the Dairymen's Association, and a portion to be spent in connection with Professor Robertson's work. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will be good enough to explain, also, the nature of Professor Robertson's duties, as to whether he is to be engaged entirely in work at the Experimental Farm, or in connection with the branches throughout the different Provinces?

Mr. CARLING. This vote of $5,000 is to pay the salaries of the Dairy Commissioner and the Assistant Commissioner, as well as their travelling expenses.

Mr. INNES. Who is the Assistant Commissioner?

Mr. JONES (Halifax).

Mr. CARLING. A gentleman named Mr. Chapais, from Lower Canada, has been appointed. He is a prominent gentleman in connection with agricultural matters there.

Mr. INNES. What will be the nature of Professor Robertson's duties?

Mr. CARLING. Professor Robertson's duties are to take charge of the dairy interests of the Dominion, and it is possible that we may have a practical dairy establishment at the farm. He is to give lectures in different parts of the country, to correspond with the farming community, and to visit the different Provinces. These are chiefly his duties.

Mr. INNES. Will there be any grant made this year, as there was last year, to the Dominion Dairymen's Association?

Mr. CARLING. The Supplementary Estimates will state that, when they are brought down. The association has applied for a grant, similar to the one they got last year, and that matter is now under the consideration of the Government.

Mr. INNES. The Minister will notice that in regard to this vote the printer evidently made a muddle of it. The Estimates say, that last year $5,000 were granted, and that this year that $5,000 are asked, and it states that this is a decrease of $3,000.

Mr. BOWELL. That is an error.

Mr. CARLING. The hon. gentleman will find that in the Supplementary Estimates last year, there were $3,000 for the Dairymen's Association, $2,000 for the Fruit Growers' Association, and this is $2,000 decrease from the grant to the Dairymen's Association last year. This vote is now to be applied separately from the vote to the Dairymen's Association and the Fruit Growers' Association, which will both be considered when the Supplementary Estimates are brought down.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the agriculturists of this country owe a debt of gratitude to the Minister of Agriculture and to the Government, for the initiation of this system, and for appointing a Commissioner of Dairying. I think, also, that the selection made for this position is the very best that could be made inside of Canada, and, perhaps, outside of it either. The gentleman selected as Dairy Commissioner, we in Ontario know, is eminently fitted for that important post, and, no doubt, when he becomes known all over the Dominion, as well as he is in Ontario, he will be appreciated elsewhere as he is in that Province. I would beg to recommend in this connection that the means should be adopted which were suggested by the Dairy Association, not long since, when they met in Ottawa, for the purpose of giving greater stimulus to the manufacture of butter. The manufacture of cheese has been established for a great many years, and the education given our people in that line has proved most valuable, whereas the manufacture of butter has been neglected. Last year, while the agriculturists of the Dominion received over $8,000,000 for the cheese they exported, they received less than $1,000,000 for the butter they exported. It seems to me that the difficulties in the manufacture of butter and in placing it on the market at the proper time, are so great, that we are destined for a long time to receive only a partial reward for our labor expended in that line. It was suggested by the Dairy Association that the Government should vote a much larger amount than is placed in the Estimates to-day for dairy purposes, and that part of the sum should be used to indemnify a certain number of creameries, which would agree to supply an amount of butter weekly to be shipped to the old country; so that it could be put on the English market in the best possible condition. It was suggested that a number of creameries might be selected throughout the country, and arrangements made with them to supply every week or month, butter in a proper condition suited for the English markets, and at the end of the season, indemnify those creameries, in the event of the butter having sold for less than other creameries around them obtained. By this means, our butter will be put on the English markets in a proper condition, which is not the case to-day, as to-day it is kept too long before being shipped. It is also suggested that the manufacturers of butter should market their stuff at an earlier part of the season. I hope the Minister of Agriculture will consider these suggestions of the Dairy Association, and consider whether or not it will be advisable to adopt the suggestion made by that important body, the dairymen of the Dominion. They pressed it very strongly, and, I believe, a resolution was moved to that effect, but after considerable discussion, it was thought better to withdraw it, and bring it to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture, and the Dairy Commissioner, who was present.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). As far as the cheese interests of the Province of Ontario is concerned, the greatest benefit we ever derived in that connection was, in the first place, from the labors of Professor Arnold, who was engaged by the Ontario Government to educate our people to operate that industry. He went from factory to factory, giving previous notice of his coming, and invited all the cheese makers to be present. At the factories he took the milk as it came from the waggons and put it through the whole process until it was put into the vat; and cheese making in Ontario received a great impetus from this system of education. Before he visited the factories, a large amount of leaky cheese existed in every factory, but after he had given instructions this leakage cheese almost entirely disappeared. With respect to the creamery interest, Professor Robertson should give a considerable portion of his time to visiting the creameries throughout the country and giving the people practical information in butter making, in the same manner as they were given in cheese making. As many of the farmers' wives and daughters as possible should collect and receive practical lessons in the making of butter, and I believe this system of education would be more beneficial to the country than to establish a creamery or a cheese factory. I do not think it would be wise to establish a cheese factory. If there is to be a dairy established, I hope it will be for the making of butter, and I hope Mr. Robertson will devote a great deal of his time to going through the country giving instructions in the art of butter making.

Mr. MULOCK. I congratulate the hon. the Minister of Agriculture on the choice he has made for Commissioner of Dairies, and, to that extent, endorse the sentiments of the hon. member for East Grey. I congratulate the Minister of Agriculture upon the prudence with which he is proceeding in developing his Department, by following so good an example as that of the Ontario Agricultural College; for, I believe, that was the model on which the hon. gentleman founded his experimental farms. Many of the features of that worthy institution have been copied, and to that extent I commend the Minister of Agriculture for his action in connection with these experimental farms. I congratulate him, and through him, I think, we can fairly congratulate the Ontario Agricultural College, that members of its staff are picked up as soon as possible by the Dominion Government and enter upon a larger field of usefulness; and as long as the Department of Agriculture here proceeds on these safe lines, following the example of the Ontario Agricultural College, I think the people will join in the congratulations of the hon. member for East Grey with regard to the work we may expect from the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. CASEY. It may be on account of my natural dullness, or on account of the extreme brevity of the hon. Minister's explanation of this item, or the considerable length of the remarks of the heir-apparent for the same portfolio, or on account of the amount of floating curd in both explanations, that I do not see exactly why this item should appear in the shape it does.

Mr. CARLING. Last year the item was $3,000 for the dairy interest, and $2,000 for the fruit-growers' interest in the Supplementary Estimates, and they did not appear in the ordinary Estimates. This is a mistake in the Estimates this year. We have $5,000 for the dairy interest, and this is for salaries of the commissioner and assistant commissioner, and travelling expenses. The salary of the commissioner is $3,000, and of the assistant commissioner, $1,200.

Mr. CASEY. We are having this year the same amount of money as last, only differently applied?

Mr. CARLING. We only voted $3,000 last year to further the dairy interest, and we are voting $5,000 this year—an increase of $2,000.

Mr. McMULLEN. I can hardly endorse what has fallen from the hon. member for North York with regard to the qualifications of the gentleman whom the Minister of Agriculture has chosen to superintend the dairy interest. The production of butter under the creamery system is a matter of vital importance, and I should like to see Professor Robertson devote his time largely to that subject. Our cheese has now taken a high stand in competition with other countries, which our butter does not, owing to the fact that we had not given our attention to the production of creamery butter. If the gentleman appointed would devote his time largely to that matter he would accomplish great good for the farming community. It is well known that in producing cheese you cannot raise stock, whereas you can produce butter and raise stock at the same time. I would like very much to see a great increase in the number of creameries throughout the Dominion. Wherever they are established they are doing admirably good work. It is highly desirable that the commissioner should spend the principal portion of his time in urging on the farming community the necessity of forming associations for the purpose of getting creameries established amongst them, and turning out a much larger percentage of creamery butter than they now make. I believe that we could make great improvement in the right direction if the commissioner would do this.

Mr. CASEY. I see $3,000 for the salary of the commissioner, and $1,200 for his assistant's salary. I think that the allowance of $800 for travelling expenses would only go a short way. It is not proper to put travelling expenses under an item of this kind. They should come under the general contingencies of the Department, or the estimates prepared for the travelling expenses of officials.

Mr. CARLING. This is only an experiment. The amount may not be sufficient, as this is merely experimental.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is it the intention of Professor Robertson to act in concert with the professors of other colleges, such as the Ontario College? They have got a gentleman presiding over the dairy interests, and it would not be at all desirable that these two gentlemen should come into collision.

Mr. CARLING. I fancy they have only one object in view, and that is the improving of the dairy interest in different localities and parts of the country, and will be only too glad to give each other mutual assistance.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

Immigration..... $101,525

Mr. McMULLEN. How many officials are employed at Quebec?

Mr. CARLING. I will give the hon. gentleman the information presently.

Mr. McMULLEN. I see by page 31-D of the Auditor General's Report, that Mr. P. Doyle is paid $1,100. What does he do?

Mr. CARLING. He is the assistant agent.

Mr. McMULLEN. Who is the agent?

Mr. CARLING. Mr. Stafford.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. And a very good agent, too.

Mr. McMULLEN. There seems to be a good deal charged for travelling expenses in connection with this agency. There is a large amount charged for Mr. Doyle, and then I see that George Hayden is paid for 365 days at $1.50. What does he do?

Mr. CARLING. Mr. Doyle is largely engaged in travelling from Halifax to Quebec. The other gentleman was the guardian for that year.

Mr. McMULLEN. I suppose there is more travelling in connection with that agency than in connection with any of the others?

Mr. CARLING. Yes.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I see there is $660 asked here for an interpreter. Is that the Norwegian interpreter?

Mr. CARLING. Yes; and other Scandinavian languages, also German.

Mr. McMULLEN.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I know Mr. Andersen—I think that is his name—is a very efficient interpreter, but I do not see that there is much necessity for his services there, because immigrants pass through Quebec without stopping any length of time.

Mr. MULOCK. Under the subject of immigration, I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to certain statements contained in a book entitled "An Official Hand-Book of Information relating to the Dominion of Canada; published, with the approval of Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies, by the Government of Canada (Department of Agriculture)." That book is in the hands of the public. Turning to page 59 of this book, I find this paragraph, speaking of the requirements of the Province of Ontario:

"Men to work and develop the agricultural and mineral resources are, therefore, the kind of immigrants Ontario is most in need of. Agriculturists, from this being the leading industry, stand in the first place. But, as well as wanting men to clear its forests and cultivate its soil, it requires men to build its houses, to make furniture and household goods, and to open up communication from one part of the country to another by the construction of roads and railways."

Here we have an announcement made by the Dominion Government, a portion of which I can entirely agree with, but a portion of which I think is questionable. I think the Department is correct in saying we require agriculturists here, and I suppose the writer has reference to the virgin soil which is in the gift of the Government, and which may be properly developed if those who come here are able to cultivate it. But where he says we are in need of mechanics or artisans to build houses, to manufacture furniture and household goods, then that is a question about which there may be a very considerable difference of opinion. This amounts to a statement that this country is at present short of all the class of workmen necessary for that kind of thing, such as carpenters, joiners, masons, bricklayers, plasterers, painters, plumbers, gas-fitters, tinsmiths, and so on, and the same thing holds good in regard to the manufacture of household goods and furniture. The Department has given notice to the world that this country is short of all this class of workmen, and is inviting them from the rest of the world to our already overstocked markets. Is the state of the building trade, or of the furniture trade, or of the manufacture of household goods, in that state of prosperity that we are not able to supply the demand at present, but that it becomes necessary for the Government to advertise it to the world, and to ask for assistance from outside? If that is the case, then, of course, the Government is justified in making the announcement and calling for help from outside. But, I venture to say, there are those in this country to-day who will not endorse this statement. I believe there are carpenters in this country who are out of employment. I believe he will find mechanics of various kinds, such as he is advertising for, to come into Canada, who are at present unable to find employment wherewith honestly to maintain themselves and their families. I believe that this state of things is not confined to one part of the country, much as I regret to have to say so; and I think it is due to those who are at present living here, due to our own citizens, to enter a protest against an appeal of this kind being sent broadcast to the world, asking others to come in and divide with our own citizens the limited employment which is not even now adequate for the skilled laborers within our borders. Therefore, I think it is the duty of the Department, at the earliest possible moment, to correct this statement—unless, of course, the Department take the ground that this statement is true, and that we require such assistance. Such is not my opinion, and I doubt that such is the experience of any hon. gentleman in this Chamber.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is a good deal in what my hon. friend says, and I think it is a mistake that this paragraph should be placed under the heading of the Province of Ontario. I quite agree with my hon. friend that for Ontario alone, what we require are agricultural laborers, farmers, men to work in the mines; I agree with him that these are the chief purposes for which immigrants are wanted in Ontario. But if this paragraph that has got in under the heading of Ontario, were placed under the heading of the Dominion, I think it would be very proper, because we have got a great North-West which is just opening up, wanting settlers of all kinds, wanting farmers, wanting farm laborers, wanting miners, wanting artisans of all kinds. Therefore, since my hon. friend has called the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to this matter, if this hand-book is to be reprinted—I suppose it will have to be, because there is a great demand for such things—I hope this sentence, so far as it applies to the building of houses, or to the manufacture of furniture, will be transferred to the general heading of the Dominion and especially excluded from Ontario.

Mr. McMULLEN. I endorse what has been said by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock). I have personal knowledge that some factories in the Province of Ontario have been recently running on half time, I think there are a good many of them yet running on half time, and so I think it would be imprudent to lead people from the other side of the water to suppose that men of that class would receive ready employment in that line here. With regard to the North-West, I think the First Minister will admit that the establishment of factories there for the production of furniture would be rather premature at this period in its history. The furniture used there is mostly sent from Ontario, and will be for a good many years to come, I fancy. With regard to the class of immigrants that we want to come to this country, I think the better class of tenant farmers, the crofters from England and Scotland, would be the best, and they should be encouraged to come here, men who would take the places of the farmers in Ontario who are going to the North-West, and where they make the best pioneers. We notice every day by the papers that large numbers of farmers and their sons are moving to the North-West, not merely as a matter of choice, but in some cases as a matter of actual necessity. They have, for many reasons, found themselves in financial embarrassment, which necessitates their moving to the North-West. Now, if you could encourage immigrants to come out and take up the places of these men, pay a moderate sum down for the land, and go to work systematically as intelligent agriculturists, they would be, in my opinion, the best class of immigrants that we could encourage to come to this country.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No doubt that is so.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think we should do that. I would like to see the Government try, if possible, to encourage men of that stamp to come here, and take the places of those that are moving to the North-West, and so prevent the land in our Province, at least, from dropping down to a very low price, which it is evidently doing just now. It has been running down considerably. In my own section there are farms which, I have not the slightest doubt, will remain uncultivated this year. Some of the people are going to the North-West, and some of them have got to leave their places for one reason or another. It is a pity this thing should be, and in order to prevent the land from lying idle we want a class of immigrants that will go in and replace those who are moving away.

Mr. MULOCK. I am glad the First Minister has admitted the inapplicability of this condition of affairs in the Province of Ontario, but I regret that he insists upon its being fairly applicable to the Dominion. I regret that he thinks it necessary to apply his proposition to any part of this Dominion. I think he would be making a mistake in inviting the skilled laborer of the outside world to rush into Manitoba or the North-West Territories or into any other part of the Dominion, to the prejudice of that portion of the skilled labor of this Province. The First Minister, perhaps, will not think it worth while to consider the conditions of the skilled laborers of this Province, for I see he does not approve of my proposition. For the present, Ontario and some of the older Provinces supply the North-West and the newer parts of the Dominion with manufactured goods such as furniture and household goods—the word “household” is a most comprehensive term—and it is a mistake to urge the skilled foreign laborer to go to the North-West Territories and to that extent close up the factories, the infant, struggling industries which have been established at such a cost to this country in the older Provinces. Yet that must be the consequence of the First Minister's proposition. We tell him that the older Provinces are overstocked with this skilled labor, and that they are manufacturing more household goods than there is a market for; part of their market is the North-West, but the Minister's answer to this is: We will let the outside workmen go to our Territories, establish themselves in the North-West and there set up industries which will close up those in the older Provinces. Now, does the First Minister think that is fair to those who have borne the heat and burden of the day? Does he seriously mean to say that it is in the best interest of this country? Why cannot he say candidly: This is an entire mistake, that it ought to come out, that it shall come out, that there shall be no more chance of this paragraph deceiving and misleading foreign immigrants? I hope now, as he has agreed to a part of my proposition, that he will go further and endorse the rest of it, and so prevent further trouble.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am afraid I cannot do that. The hon. gentleman says that this is not only a mistake with respect to Ontario, but a mistake with respect to the North-West, and his line of argument is this: that no one is to go there but farmers or farm laborers. He says it is very wrong that we should hurt mechanics in Cape Breton, or the Maritime Provinces, or Ontario, or Quebec, by having a single blacksmith or carpenter go to the North-West. When the hon. gentleman settles in the North-West, as I dare say he will do some day, and buys a magnificent ranche and have a great many horses, it will be very hard to compel him to send his horses to Ontario to be shod. And the hon. gentleman's argument goes to that extent. He could not get a box made or any mechanical work done, because it is very wrong, he says, to encourage skilled labor to go to the North-West. But they want skilled labor there, as in other parts of Canada and they must have skilled artisans there. My idea is that, for the future of the North-West, we should encourage every healthy man with strong hands and a willing heart to go up there to work, whether he be a tradesman, artisan or farm laborer. There they are sure to work out a good future. I remember well what immigrants have done when placed under favorable circumstances. Look at the County of Lanark, which is close to us here. That county was settled in consequence of starvation among the Paisley weavers of Scotland, my country. They came out here. They were not farmers; all they knew about work was to throw the shuttle from right to left, and yet see what the County of Lanark is now. They were placed on the soil, they had active hands and willing hearts, and they made that county what it is to-day. And so my strong opinion is this, that we should encourage, for the settlement of the North-West, every kind of settler, no matter whether he has worked at a trade or not, for he will soon find the occupation that is most useful to himself, and that which will prove most useful to the country.

Mr. MULOCK. The First Minister does not quite touch the point I raised. I am not objecting to skilled labor going to the North-West; on the contrary, I endorse to that extent the First Minister's remarks. What I do object to is that steps should be taken to attract that kind of labor which is most desirable to the North-West from without the Dominion of Canada, and to that extent displace the skilled labor of the older portions of the country. We have plenty of that kind of labor to send to the North-West, and why, therefore, should we close up that avenue to our own people by inviting to the North-West people, not only from the Empire, but from other countries in the world. That is the effect of the proposition of the First Minister. I do not think it is one in the interests of the country. I do not think it is one which is fair to the older Provinces, and I exceedingly regret that the First Minister is determined to take his stand upon that proposition.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) is exceedingly unfortunate in his statement, that this is an attempt to close up certain avenues in the North-West, a country consisting of over 300,000 square miles of territory, where there is scarcely a settler for every 15,000 acres. That does not look very much like closing up the country. But if the hon. gentleman expects that that country is going to be settled from the settlers, laborers or mechanics of Ontario, he will have to wait a long time before it is done. It would be a most parsimonious policy, on the part of the Government, not to invite the people of other countries to come and settle in our North-West, where almost every man can settle and do well if he is only willing to work. The hon. gentleman, in company with hon. gentlemen on the opposite benches, appears to be very much afraid of our having too many people in this country. The whole argument this afternoon was directed towards showing that some change should be made in taking the census in order to show there are not so many people in the country as claimed to be. The contention of hon. gentlemen now is in the same direction, and their whole argument is directed with a view to presenting our population at the smallest possible figure. In no part of Ontario is there lack of demand for farm laborers, or for any one to buy farms. There is no part of the Province where there is an adequate supply of domestic servants. As regards Manitoba, the North-West and British Columbia, we could continue almost for centuries to carry out a much more active immigration policy than has been pursued in the past, without filling up the country; and it must be remembered that this is the only hope of our country, and it is the only way in which the North-West can be built up rapidly. We should invite people of all classes, creeds and races to go there, and we should encourage immigration to the fullest possible extent.

Mr. WATSON. As regards the question whether a mechanic will make a good farmer in the North-West or not, I may say, from personal knowledge, that some of our best farmers are men who have been mechanics; that any man who is willing to work, and who has learned some trade or calling requiring manual labor, will make a first-class farmer. He has no lack of intelligence; for he must be something more than the ordinary farmer to have been able to qualify as a mechanic. It is, in fact, very important that the new settler should be able to build his own house, do his own blacksmithing, and so forth. It has appeared to me for some time that the opinion of some members of the House appears to be that we should proceed, as we have proceeded during the past two or three years, and obtain little or no settlement in the North-West. If that country is ever to be of any use to the Dominion, or to itself, we must have people there; and I hope the Government will act differently from what they have acted during the past two years, and no longer listen to the representations of some hon. members, who have a few mechanics in their constituencies and a few votes to be influenced, because they say we do not want skilled labor to come to our country. We should use every effort to bring all classes of people, who are intelligent and willing to work, into our Canadian North-West, and it is only by adopting a policy which will settle that country, that we will be able to make it what we expect it to be. There are no men more capable of settling the country than those who are skilled in some trade, if they are willing to work. The only class, I think, not suitable for settlers, is the class called the English dude. We do not want them there, unless they have a supply of sovereigns. If they are sent there with lots of sovereigns, we can make good use of them for a short time, but as soon as the sovereigns have disappeared, these dudes are the most helpless individuals on the face of the earth, and they utterly fail to earn an honest living for themselves. Any man who is willing to work, even if he comes with small means and takes up a piece of land, will, in the very near future, be able to make for himself a comfortable home, and thus assist in building up Manitoba and the North-West to that position which we expect them to reach.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). As regards the Province of Ontario, I say it is in a condition in which I have never seen it since I came to it. I have lately been up west, and there I found for the first time a surplus of labor, because every farmer is endeavoring to perform his own labor; and there are a number of workmen in the settlement from which I come who have hardly had a day's work during the winter, and a large number will have to seek employment elsewhere. The immigration we want into Canada consists of men with a small amount of capital, men from the Province of Ontario, who can purchase farms; and from what I know of the North-West, I believe it is folly to encourage men without any capital to go to that country, because in its present condition the farmers are not able to engage laborers and pay them for their labor. We had a noble example, in the report last year, of what became of those who went there without any capital, when we found that over 30,000 who had gone to the North-West and British Columbia, had found their way into the Northern States of the American Union. These were men who could not find that employment which they were promised. No greater injury could be perpetrated on people who come to this country as workmen, than to encourage them to come here, when in reality they cannot find employment. What the country wants to-day is men who will be able to go to the North-West with a small amount of capital, to make a start, or men who will go to Ontario, able to purchase farms, where there are plenty of them to be purchased to-day. No other class of immigrants should be encouraged to come here under any circumstances at the present time.

Mr. BLAKE. I see that the Government have themselves declared their policy—and I am glad to notice that they have obtained the approval of the Secretary of State for the Colonies—in a pamphlet which has just been distributed to the House. At page 28 of "An Official Hand-book of Information relating to the Dominion of Canada," and under the head of "Advice to Emigrants," I find views stated, which I do not think are far removed from some of the views I have heard expressed on this side of the House. It reads thus:

"Young men should go to Manitoba, the North-West or British Columbia. Older men, with capital, and young families, should go to one of the older Provinces, and either buy or rent an improved farm. This, however, is only a general statement, and individual cases must be decided by the special circumstances of each. In Manitoba and the North-West, and in some parts of British Columbia, pioneer life on free grants, or away from railways, is attended with a certain amount of inconvenience, and an absence of those social surroundings which may be obtained in the older settled parts of these and other Provinces, and this fact should be borne in mind by those who are considering the subject. It is difficult to lay down a hard-and-fast rule as to the amount of capital necessary to start farming. The answer depends upon the energy, experience, judgment, and enterprise of the person who is to spend the money, the Province selected, whether free grant land is to be taken up, or an improved farm rented or purchased, and many other details. It may safely be said, however, that if a man has about £100 clear on landing, he is in a position to make a fair commencement on the free grant land in Manitoba and the North-West, though not on a large scale. A larger capital is, of course, necessary if an improved farm is to be taken."

I think that is a much more moderate statement, and much more in accordance with the general position of things than some statements which have been made in times past.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. WALLACE. I think, Mr. Chairman, that the position of affairs in Canada is also very fairly stated on page 29 of the book referred to by the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake). The member for North York (Mr. Mulock) has referred to some supposed statements in the pamphlet regarding mechanics and laborers. It says here:

"These are advised to obtain special information as to their respective trades before going out. The demand for these classes is not now so great as it was a few years ago, and such men, especially with large families, are not encouraged to go out on the chance of finding employment. Any men of the callings alluded to may be safely advised to start if they are going to join friends who advise them to do so, or if they have the inclination and the knowledge to enable them to change their callings and become agriculturists. * * * The Government agents in Canada (page 24) should be consulted by all new arrivals immediately they land. It will be found to save much time, trouble and expense, and be in every way to the advantage of the settler."

I think that is a very moderate, and not at all an exaggerated statement of the condition of affairs in Canada.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I see, according to the Auditor General's Report, that a very large sum of money was paid last year for assisted passages of immigrants. The Allan Line received $34,000, the Torrance Company $14,000, together with some sums paid to others. I would like to know if the Minister can give the House any assurance that this money is spent in the interest of the country, and that the parties who immigrated on these assisted passages intended settling in the country and remained here? Is it not a fact that a very large amount of money is wasted in bringing immigrants here who merely pass through the country and settle in the United States? Is there any check on the immigrants coming to the country, in order to see that those who obtain assisted passages remain here?

Mr. CARLING. That $48,000 was not paid for assisted passages last year; it was for arrears of passages previous to April, 1888. We have assisted nobody since that date, and we have evidence that the parties who came out to this country appeared before the High Commissioner, and made a statement that they intended to emigrate and reside in Canada; and on that statement a ticket was issued by the High Commissioner at a reduced fare. All that we paid on the ticket was something like $4 or $5.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Am I to understand that there are no assisted passages paid at all now?

Mr. CARLING. Not since April, 1888.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Is it the intention of the Government to continue the system of paying $2 each for children brought out here? I see by the Auditor General's Report that the following amongst other sums, were paid last year for this purpose:—Barnardo Home, Peterboro', $1,322; E. A. Bilborough, Belleville, $244; Mrs. Birt, Knowlton, $460; James Burgess, Brockville, $740; J. Rossel, $70; and M. L. Ryan, Niagara, $340. Now, as I understand, in a large number of places in Ontario, at all events, the parents of children have great difficulty in finding employment for them, and many children who are grown up are unable to obtain employment in consequence of the influx of the immigrant children, who are hired out to farmers and others in the towns and cities. These immigrants simply displace the children of our own people, who are obliged to find work in the United States. I know it to be the case in the town in which I live, that a great many young people have to leave the country to obtain employment. I think the system of paying bonuses for bringing out these children is wrong, and I believe it is not in the interests of the people of this country that it should be continued. I see also that, on page 38-B of the Auditor General's Report, bonuses of $5 each, amounting to $365, were paid to Paul Watelet for bringing out immigrants. Is that system to be continued, or what is that money paid for?

Mr. CARLING. That means the bonus that has been given for immigrants from the Continent of Europe. We do not give any assistance to the immigrant himself; but there are a large number of steamship agents on the Continent of whose services we avail ourselves to induce immigrants to come to Canada, instead of going to the United States and other countries; and on the arrival of an immigrant at Winnipeg, having a certificate from one of these Continental agents, the sum of $5 is paid to the agent, instead of a salary, for having sent the immigrant to Canada.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. With regard to the bonus to the boys of $2 each?

Mr. CARLING. That arrangement has been carried on for some years. It has been discussed in this House, and it was fully discussed before the Agricultural Committee last year and the year before, and I think it was approved of by the majority of the Committee on both sides. That system has been continued to the present time. Whether it will be continued for another year or not, remains to be decided; but thus far, I think, it has been beneficial to the country. Large numbers of these boys and girls have been brought to the country, and we have had very favorable reports regarding them from the people with whom they have been placed.

Mr. MULLOCK. Can the hon. Minister tell us what the prospects of immigration for this year are?

Mr. CARLING. I cannot say what the prospects are. There is at present great competition in England from Australia and the Argentine Republic for immigrants, and great inducements are being offered to them to go to those countries. Besides, agricultural laborers are in greater demand and are receiving better pay in England at the present time than hitherto. These things make it more difficult to move people from the old country to come to Canada.

Mr. MULLOCK. Can the hon. gentleman tell us what the immigration has amounted to this year to the present time?

Mr. SOMERVILLE.

Mr. CARLING. The total number of people who have come into the country as settlers, from the 31st of January to the 31st of December, 1889, has been 91,000.

Mr. MULLOCK. Have there been any statistics for this year, from the 1st of January?

Mr. CARLING. No. I might explain to my hon. friend that we have statements from the collectors of Customs showing the number of people who came across the border to settle in Canada, bringing their effects with them; and the number of those, together with the number who came by the St. Lawrence, and the number who came by Suspension Bridge, altogether amounted to about 91,000.

Mr. MULLOCK. How many went out during the same period?

Mr. CARLING. It is reported that 176,000 came into the country altogether, of whom about 91,000 remained.

Mr. MULLOCK. I notice in the papers from time to time reports, said to have been obtained from statistics taken by officials, showing the number of Canadians leaving Canada to settle abroad. For instance: last year I observed frequently in the press statements that so many people had left the Ottawa district to settle in the United States! Those statistics, I supposed, were obtained from the United States Consul here, in consequence of the emigrants obtaining certificates from him to enable them to take their household effects into the United States duty free. I do not know whether the Government have a system for acquiring such information.

Mr. CARLING. No; we have no statistics showing the number of people who went out.

Mr. BLAKE. Do I understand that the 91,000 referred to comprise, first, those who come from the other side of the water to settle in Canada, and, secondly, those who come from across the border, either Americans, or repatriated Canadians?

Mr. CARLING. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. And what is the proportion of the two classes—how many come from the other side of the Atlantic, and how many from the United States?

Mr. CARLING. The number from the United States, reported by Customs officers as bringing in settlers' goods, was 38,000, and the number from the other side of the Atlantic was 52,983.

Mr. BLAKE. Then, to understand the net gain we have to ascertain how many we lost during the year, as to which the hon. gentleman has no information.

Mr. MULLOCK. Can the hon. Minister explain the increase of $6,300 in the estimated immigration expenses?

Mr. CARLING. The amount of money voted last year was not sufficient.

Mr. MULLOCK. Have there been any new appointments of agents?

Mr. CARLING. No.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). We will now return to the question raised by the hon. member for North Brant (Mr. Somerville). We were asking for information in reference to assistance given to immigrants coming from the old country to Canada. With regard to the question of bonuses granted to children, the hon. Minister stated that the discussions and the reports received from different parts of the country, indicated the general opinion to be that these children were a benefit and a gain to the country at large. Admitting that to be the case, and that the hon. Minister said, quite correctly according to the book, that no aid had been granted since April, 1888, I would call his attention to page 40-D of the Auditor General's Report, and ask him how we find there an item of $2,150 granted in aid of 430 immigrants sent out to this country at $5 a head, through the High Commissioner's office?

Mr. CARLING. I explained that some time ago. This was a bonus given to steamboat agents on the Continent to induce people coming to America to come to Canada. On the certificate of the Winnipeg agent that they had arrived there, that money was paid to the steamboat agent on the Continent for services rendered.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). When was that paid?

Mr. CARLING. I do not know the date it was paid. We are paying it now whenever such immigrants are sent by these agents.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). This is $5 a head, or over $4,000 paid to the High Commissioner's Office in England, and must be for aid granted. These men do not pay their way out, or the company get $5 per head, to enable them to bring these men out, under the actual amount of fare. It may be a handy way for the Minister to cover this up, and lead the people to believe that the Government are giving no assistance.

Mr. CARLING. I have tried to explain that there are no assisted passages.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). What is this?

Mr. CARLING. We have agents in Great Britain to whom we pay salaries, but on the Continent we have none. There are, however, those steamboat agents all over the Continent inducing people to come to Canada instead of to the United States. They act really as agents for Canada, although they receive no salary; but when a passenger is landed at Winnipeg, through their means, we send home to the High Commissioner an order to pay $5 which he pays to these steamboat agents.

Mr. DALY. Before this item is passed, I must say, in my position as a representative of a constituency in Manitoba, in which Province immigrants are required almost more than anything else, I cannot agree with the policy of the Government in reference to immigration. We find by the Estimates that there is a total of $101,525 for immigration purposes, and we find, towards immigration and immigration expenses, the insignificant, infinitesimal amount of $55,000. The hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock), drew the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to the fact that there is an increase of $6,390 between the estimate of this year towards immigration and the expenses of last year; but when we have expended millions of dollars in opening up that great country, this insignificant amount of $55,000 towards bringing immigrants out there, and not only there, but to the Province of Ontario as well, is altogether out of proportion. The time has come when this Government must take a most active and vigorous policy with reference to immigration. The hon. the Minister of Agriculture said, in reply to a question put to him a short time ago, that we had to meet such competition on the part of the United States, and upon the part of representatives from the Cape Colonies, and from Australia and the Argentine Republic, that our immigration was necessarily more limited than it otherwise would have been. But all that we require, Sir, to meet this competition, is that the Government should contribute more money towards immigration. To spend $1,250,000 on the Department of Militia and Defence, and only the insignificant and altogether inadequate sum of $101,521 on immigration, causes one to wonder what the Government really proposes doing towards building up and developing this great country. Every other colony in Her Majesty's possessions is making the most vigorous efforts to obtain immigrants from England, Ireland and Scotland. I have frequently made representations to the hon. Minister on the necessity of more vigorous action in this respect, but he has been unable to carry out my ideas, owing to the small amount placed in the Estimates towards what he himself feels should be our proper policy. I have asked the hon. gentleman to allow myself and others from the North-West and Manitoba, to give him the names of men who have come from England, Ireland and Scotland and settled in our country, and have lived four or five years there, so that he might send these men back to the various countries and districts from which they came, and let them report to their own people and illustrate from their own practical experience what a glorious country this is for any man to come to. For, Sir, ours is indeed a glorious country. Hon. gentlemen from Manitoba and the North-West will bear me out in saying that the men who came out there with the least capital are those who have been the most successful. Men of every class, so long as they are industrious, sober and willing to work, have succeeded. I do not care what a man's profession or calling may be, he will find he can get along and succeed better in our country than in any other, provided he chooses to work. I can cite numerous instances of men who came there not long ago with scarcely a dollar in their pockets and are to-day practically independent. Any person who chooses to come to our country and expend there the same amount of courage and industry which would gain him but a mere subsistence in the older world, will make himself solid with us and establish a home for himself and family such as he could not make in any other land in the British possessions. Let me read a letter from a gentleman I well know, and who is well known to other hon. gentlemen in this House, and which was written under these circumstances: Last autumn a Mr. W. Douglass, living near Alexander, Manitoba, wrote to a local paper in Eastern Canada, the Gananoque Journal, complaining as to the result of his farming operations. On investigation it turns out that he had rented two farms in that neighborhood, and, like most such tenants, expected to get a good return from the smallest possible outlay in cultivation. His complaints were promptly taken up by two of his neighbors. One of them, Mr. J. H. Griggs, living on section 19, township 9, range 21 west, wrote as follows:—

“ Mr. W. Douglass had two farms rented, and in going from one to the other he had to pass the crops of R. Y.

Griggs and J. Bedford. If he had told about their crops instead of the worst he could find, his letter would have had a different tone. From 71 acres of wheat, Griggs had 1,075 bushels, while from 37 acres of wheat Bedford had 700 bushels; on neither of these farms was there any new land under crop. The land was well worked both before and after seeding. The result was over 14 bushels to the acre in one case, and over 18 in the other. Part of Griggs' land, which was a good deal better fitted than the rest, yielded 22 bushels of wheat to the acre. I am confident that if Mr. Douglass' land had been as well fitted and the seed as well put in his crop would have been as good. It is a deplorable fact that the farmer who, considering the way he worked his land, should least expect a crop, is the quickest and surest to complain of a dry year like the present when it affects the crop."

Another neighbor, Mr. Alex. Nichol, Reeve of Whitehead Municipality, wrote :

"As I live only about seven miles from Mr. Douglass and know the farm well, I would just say that the land was not in good condition for a crop, and was not well put in; and further, in a dry season like the present he could not expect to get a crop. In a good season it would have given a fair crop; but in Manitoba, like all other farming countries, it will pay to have the work done well. I raised my first crop in 1883 from land broken in 1882, and backed in the spring of 1883, and had from 54 acres sown, 196 bushels of wheat No. 1 hard. In 1884 I had 40 acres rented to another party that yielded 32 bushels per acre. In 1885 the yield was 34 bushels per acre. In 1886 (another dry season) the yield was 20 bushels to the acre. In 1887, 160 acres yielded 6,900 bushels, an average of 43 bushels per acre. In 1888 the average was 32 bushels per acre. In the present year the average was 15 bushels on 220 acres sown. I had 125 acres that yielded 20 bushels per acre; the balance, on account of a very hard stubble ploughed under last fall, and a very dry season, only yielded 10 bushels per acre. Now, for seven years I have had a crop, the average for wheat was 29 bushels per acre, and oats 43 bushels. And for five years the average for barley has been 25 bushels per acre. With the exception of 1887, when oats ranged 75 bushels, and the present season at 12 bushels, the general average was 50 bushels per acre. Mine is not an exceptional case. There are plenty of others who have as good a record as mine, and some better."

"The present dry season may be discouraging to newcomers, yet it would be unfair to judge our country by the present dry season, and it convinces me that our soil with proper farming will raise a fair crop, under almost any circumstances. My crop this year had almost no rain, as not an inch fell from seeding to harvest. I came here from near Guelph, Ontario, with a capital of about $700, and now have a farm of about 1,000 acres of land, 450 under cultivation; will sow about 355 acres next spring and break 100 more. I have 11 horses, 7 good colts rising 2 years old, 4 colts rising one year, 12 cattle and 20 hogs, in all worth $2,500. Implements worth $1,000. Dwelling-house, granary and stables cost $1,500. Now, it would have taken me a long time in Ontario to have gathered this much together on my capital. The difference between me here and there—six good crops, and one poor one in seven years in Manitoba, and one good crop and six poor ones in seven years in Ontario. I must say I am well pleased with the country and the prospects before me, and I think that any one who is able and willing to work, and who has some capital to start upon, can do well in this country a great deal easier than in the older country. I can point you to hundreds of settlers who seven years ago had hardly enough money left, after coming here, to buy a yoke of oxen, who to-day have a good half section (520 acres) of land, two good teams and everything needed to work their farms, and living comfortably."

I may have wearied the House by this citation, but this last letter was written by Mr. Alexander Nichol, the Reeve of Whitehead, who is well known to me, and who, I may say, was a good supporter of the gentleman who was opposed to me at my last election. As he says, his is only one instance in a hundred of the inducements which our country up there can hold out to the immigrant. What we want this Government to do in order to give a proper assistance to the whole of Canada, and not simply to the North-West, is not to put this paltry sum of $101,000 in the Estimates for the purposes of immigration, but to put a sum of a million dollars to encourage the influx of immigrants to the country. I do not say that we want them only in Manitoba and the North-West. I think you want them in the Province of Ontario as much, or even more than we do. The best settlers we have in Manitoba and the North-West come from the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec; and when, as you can see by the papers, there are thousands of people going into the North-West every year, they must naturally be draining the old Provinces; and, while the settlers in the old Provinces may be doubling the size of their farms, there ought to be a concurrent immigration to fill up the places of those who are going to the West. Can we expect the country to develop in the way it ought, unless the Government take a better course in regard to this matter than they have done. When you consider the course which has been taken by almost every other British colony towards securing immigration, I almost wonder that the Minister of Agriculture has the temerity to ask us to vote such a small sum as this for such an important purpose. There are, no doubt, two questions to be considered in this matter. A few years ago, at the solicitation of some hon. gentlemen from Ontario and Quebec, the Government did away with the system of assisted passages. It is true that we do not want some classes of immigrants. We do not want mechanics or those who have no taste for farming, or those who have small capital to engage in farming. We want men who have some knowledge of farming, or some capability and endurance and pluck which will enable them to work until they obtain the experience which will enable them to manage a farm and to become successful farmers themselves. I think the Government could not do better than to go back to that system of assisted immigration and my scheme would be that they should pay the passages, or should pay the steamboat companies so much per head for men who would come here in order to settle on our lands, and that the Government should not pay that amount over to the steamship companies until these men had settled on homesteads in the North-West or in Manitoba. You in Ontario and Quebec seem to think that that is not a proper measure, but you are as much interested in the development of that country as we who come from Manitoba and the North-West. I want you who come from Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick to understand that the very best of your people are living in the North-West, that we have representatives from all these Provinces, that there is not one of those Provinces that is not well represented in every walk of life in Manitoba and the North-West. From the Maritime Provinces, as well as from Ontario and Quebec, professional and every other walk of life has good representatives. Every constituency in old Canada is as much interested in the development of Manitoba and the North-West as we are who come from that part of the country. I therefore call the attention of the Government to the absolute, immediate necessity of attending to this matter. I see some hon. gentlemen on the other side smiling at this statement, but we hold out the right hand of fellowship to people from all parts of the Dominion, and we tell any man of energy that he can come up to that country and can build up a home for himself. For instance, take the Scandinavians; they make the best class of immigrants; they assimilate themselves with us and become Canadians, they become British subjects almost at once, they learn our language quickly. You will find those men coming out in immigrant ships this year. You will probably get a man to dig your garden, or to saw your wood, and next year when you want that man you will not find him, you will find that he has made an entry for a homestead and is working on his farm, and in the course of three years you will find that man a very successful farmer. We have got thousands of acres of arable land waiting for settlers, and in order to bring settlers there the Government must assist them to come. I do not agree, as you are aware, with the policy of the present Government in power in Manitoba, but there is one thing that I can say on behalf of Mr. Greenway, and that is, that he is adopting a very vigorous immigration policy. We shall have to-morrow, in the Immigration Committee, the pleasure of meeting and examining Mr. Greenway's commissioner, McMillan, a most amiable young man, whom I have known ever since he came to the Province of Manitoba, and whom I had the pleasure of recommending to the Minister of Agriculture a few years ago. That gentleman has been employed by Mr. Greenway, and he is doing a good work all through the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and doing a good work in the old country. I would like to remind the Minister of Agriculture that there is no better field for the Government to work in, if they want to induce immigrants to come to this country, than the United States of America. You will find in the State of Michigan, in the State of Illinois, in Montana and in Minnesota, hundreds of men who are dissatisfied with their lot, and who want to have the reserves of our western Provinces opened out to them. I have not the slightest doubt that they will come in by hundreds and thousands, if proper inducements are held out to them. I would ask the hon. gentleman, in conclusion, to try to bring the minds of his colleagues to bear upon this question; and if he will call upon the members of the North-West and Manitoba, we will give him more facts than I have been able to lay before this House to-night, which will convince him of the absolute necessity of the Government adopting a more vigorous immigration policy than they have done in the past.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It appears to me that the hon. gentleman who has spoken last is very ungrateful to this paternal Government. Have they not been striving to promote immigration in every suitable way for this many years? Have they not more than doubled our taxes for that purpose, these ten years, and more than doubled our debt? Have they not, for the purpose of promoting immigration, maintained a rigorous land monopoly and a rigorous railway monopoly in Manitoba for many years, until they were compelled, by threats of downright rebellion and armed interference, to abandon their policy, which they had declared was essential to the welfare of this country? Have they not been so successful in making Canada a desirable country for immigrants to come to that, whereas Canada, a few years ago, was really a cheap country to live in, it is now among the dearest countries you can find? Have they not exerted themselves in every possible shape to promote immigration? And the hon. gentleman states how well they have succeeded. Now, I want to ask one question of the Minister of Agriculture. He stated a little while ago, if my memory is correct, that 90,000 immigrants had settled in Canada within the last 12 months. I would like to know, if he can inform us, how that immigration of 90,000 was distributed, how many he supposes to have gone to Manitoba, how many to Ontario, how many to the Maritime Provinces, how many to Quebec, how many to British Columbia and the Territories?

Mr. CARLING. I will give the hon. gentleman the figures. Quebec, 26,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Settlers?

Mr. CARLING. Yes. A large number of these were returned Canadians. Ontario, 30,000; Manitoba, 13,000; North-West Territories, 1,033; British Columbia, 1,829; Nova Scotia, 3,801; New Brunswick, 6,015; Prince Edward Island, 454. These figures are made up from the agents' returns, and the arrivals reported through the Customs Department.

Mr. FISHER. Can the hon. gentleman state how many of these 26,000, who were supposed to have settled in the Province of Quebec, came from the United States?

Mr. CARLING. That is the number that were entered in the Province of Quebec by certificate through the Customs house, and including all others.

Mr. FISHER. How many came across the American frontier, and how many came from Europe?

Mr. CARLING. I stated in the House, before the hon. gentleman came in, that 38,000 had come from the United States.

Mr. FISHER. Do I understand the Minister to say that 26,000 came from the United States into Quebec?

Mr. WELSH. I venture to contradict the statement of the Minister, so far as Prince Edward Island is concerned. I do not believe there were ten immigrants, or even five, let alone 400.

Mr. KIRK. The hon. gentleman has stated there were 3,801 came to Nova Scotia. Where did they settle? in what county?

Mr. CARLING. The hon. gentleman will see that I could not answer that. I know we have evidence that they came to settle in Nova Scotia.

Mr. ELLIS. The hon. gentleman stated, as I understand, that 6,015 came to New Brunswick. I beg leave to say that he is about 6,000 astray. It is ridiculous for the hon. gentleman to make such a statement to the House in the face of men who know better.

Mr. BLAKE. I fancy it will be found that a large number of these indignant denials are attributable to the circumstance that the great bulk of the figures the hon. gentleman has mentioned, are figures of repatriated Canadians, people who have come back from the United States.

Mr. CARLING. I dare say a very large number are. In 1889 the following were entered as settlers at the Custom houses in Quebec: 466 English; 220 Irish; 87 Scotch; 65 Germans; 625 from the United States; 15,517 Canadians; other countries, 2,688.

Mr. BLAKE. That would leave 7,000 to have come across the Atlantic.

Mr. CARLING. Yes.

Mr. WELSH. I should like to know who made up those returns for the Island, because, when I get back, I will look into them and see who made them up.

Mr. CARLING. This return from the Island is made by the Custom house officers. We can give the names.

Mr. BLAKE. What are the figures?

Mr. CARLING. Nova Scotia, 1,390: English, 206; Irish, 18; Scotch, 79; Germans, 3; from United States, 80; Canadians, 948; from other countries, 56. New Brunswick: 117 English, 12 Irish, 23 Scotch, 9 Germans, 157 from United States, 942 Canadians; from other countries, 148. Prince Edward Island: 46 English, 15 Irish, 51 Scotch, 25 from United States, 195 Canadians, 18 from other countries.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Are they families or individuals?

Mr. CARLING. They are individuals.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Those figures do not make 6,000.

Mr. CARLING. These are the figures from the Customs houses; they are not the figures by way of Halifax or the St. Lawrence.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). When did the immigrants to New Brunswick arrive? I live at St. John, and I never saw a ship arrive with immigrants.

Mr. CARLING. The hon. gentleman knows that last year there arrived at Halifax 18,000. They came by way of the Intercolonial; no doubt a large number remained in New Brunswick. Those entered by Customs house came via United States.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). What number remained in New Brunswick?

Mr. CARLING. I cannot tell further than reported by the agent.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. How can he tell that?

Mr. BLAKE. The First Minister says: "How can he tell that." But the Minister of Agriculture does tell it, because he gives us 6,015 as the total number of immigrants who settled in New Brunswick; and he now gives the numbers who were reported through the Custom houses; and if he gives the total, and deducts that from 6,015, it will show to a dot the number who came the other way.

Mr. DAVIN. I hope the time of the Committee will not be taken up in cross-examining a Minister on his own blue-book. The hon. gentleman can get all the facts in the blue-book, and I must say that the hon. and learned gentleman who has just spoken is certainly the greatest man in small things and the smallest man in great things with whom my reading has brought me in contact. Even he has come down to this contemptible wrangling about what is in the blue-book. Anybody who wishes it, can get what has been obtained to-night, from the blue-book. Deal with the policy, deal with the Minister, deal with the Government if you like, but the idea of asking questions and cross-examining a Minister about a blue-book, and carefully getting out the facts which are already in the blue-book, seems to me the most ridiculous thing that can possibly be conceived, and it is certainly a waste of the time of Parliament and the Committee.

Mr. MACDOWALL. I wish to call the attention of the Committee to one curious thing. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has urged that immigration to the North-West has been a failure, and the Opposition have always maintained that the young people of Canada have been going to the United States; but the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) has just said that the returns which the Minister of Agriculture has just read, show principally that Canadians are returning from the United States to Canada. That is, therefore, very good evidence that the policy of the Government is, so far, good. But, as a representative of the North-West, I must say that I agree with the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly), in the general tenor of his remarks. I believe it is necessary that a more energetic policy should be adopted with regard to immigration to the North-West. What is needed there is population, and you cannot have population unless you offer the attractions, to the emigrating populations of the older countries, which are presented by other colonies and other countries; and, therefore, what we have to urge on the Government and on the consideration of this House, is that such encouragement should be given as is afforded by those countries which are successful in obtaining immigrants. Immigration is not a matter of a moment, but a growth of time. No man farming in the old country, makes up his mind in five minutes to sell his household goods and stock and go to a new country of which he knows nothing but what he has heard by hearsay or has read in immigration literature. It takes time for him to learn about the country, and to make up his mind to emigrate, and then he determines to go to that country where he thinks he can have a prosperous future. Then the question arises as to the expense of getting out there. That is very much greater than it is to other countries, and the inducements held out to come to Canada are very much smaller than those to go to other countries. We cannot promote immigration by taking a pessimistic view of the question. We cannot induce immigration by abusing our country. I look upon the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway as a great national work, in which all the Provinces of Canada are as much interested as is the North-West; and, at the same time, as regards the North-West, I think only the first round of the ladder was reached when the Canadian Pacific Railway was built. It is the beginning of a policy, but that policy must be continued if we are to obtain immigration; and, therefore, I urge upon this House and upon the Minister of Agriculture the very great necessity of doing something to obtain greater immigration. What is worth having is worth paying for, and if we are to have immigrants we must pay for them, as do other countries.

General LAURIE. Doubts have been thrown, I understand, on two points in regard to Nova Scotia; first, whether we wanted any immigration of labor, and, second, whether we received it. In regard to the want, I may say, as a comparatively large employer of labor, that we very much wanted labor last year. I was in Nova Scotia, unfortunately, very few weeks, but the statement of my foreman was that we must have labor, and that he did not know where to turn to get it. A party of immigrants was sent out to me, and I could have found for each ten or fifteen places; or, in other words, I could have placed ten or fifteen times the number very readily. Hon. gentlemen have asked where they were placed? They went on the public works which were being carried on; for it must be remembered that the Local Government undertook to spend $300,000 last year on a special vote for roads. It was generally understood to be expended because the Provincial elections were coming on, and it was desirable to spend as much money as possible. That employment absorbed the labor that otherwise might have been at our disposal, and we had to replace that labor, and a supply was unavailable to a very great extent. We had to use immigrants, and so scarce was labor that we had to request the Superintendent of Government Railways to have ballasting operations suspended during the haying season in order to be able to gather in the crops. I want to show there was a demand for labor, and although I do not know anything about the actual number arriving, I know from those I saw coming in, from the immigration agent at Halifax and from ladies and gentlemen who sent out immigrants, that there was a large number sent to Nova Scotia, who remained in the Province during the year.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). This statement as regards the enormous number of immigrants to the Province of Quebec last year, must be considered a joke by every one acquainted with that Province. When it is stated that 26,000 have actually come to the Province of Quebec last year, and out of that number that there were 19,000 French Canadians returning from the United States, there must certainly be some misunderstanding somewhere. We who know the Province of Quebec pretty well, find that it is certainly amusing to hear such a statement coming from the Department of Agriculture. It could easily be understood if it was stated that 20,000 or 25,000 emigrated from the Province into the United States, but the idea that 19,000 French Canadians from the United States returned to Canada is simply preposterous. Evidently the Customs house officers have been imposed upon. I can only explain it by the fact that last year there was a great national demonstration at the city of Quebec, and that thousands and thousands of French Canadians from the United States came to be present at it, and also by the fact that large numbers of French Canadians living in the States and who have no idea of returning permanently to this country, have come on pilgrimages to the shrine of Ste. Anne de Beaupré. These people must have been counted as French Canadians coming back from the United States. This matter was recently discussed by the Quebec Legislature, and I am quite surprised that the Department here were not aware of the determination on this matter, which had been come to by both sides of the Legislature. The Local Government appointed a very intelligent gentleman, named Mr. Choquette, as repatriation agent, and he went to the Eastern States of the Union, where the great bulk of the French Canadians are to be found, and tried to induce as many as possible to come back; but in his report present to the Legislature, he states that the idea of bringing French Canadians back from the United States, in any large numbers, is simply a farce; and both sides of the House agreed the other day, when the question was discussed, that it would be a waste of money to make any further expenditure for this purpose. A few might come at their own expense, but they could not be induced to come in numbers. That shows how well the opinion is formed, in the Province of Quebec, that we need not expect any large number of French Canadians to return. The people of the Province of Quebec will be startled when they hear that 19,000 French Canadians returned from the United States last year.

Mr. CARLING. I will just read a certificate from the Collector of Customs at the port of Cornwall. It reads as follows:—

“Port of Cornwall, entry 50. Arrivals 17th September: number of male adults, 1; female adults, 1; children, none. Where from, Chicago, U. S.; place of destination, Vaudreuil, Que.; nationality, Canadians. Value of effects, $250.”

That is the manner in which we obtained those statistics which I have given the House to-night, and it is upon that we base our information. I do not know that there is any better way. We have also a record of those who come by the way of the St. Lawrence and the United States into Canada. These are parties who come from the United States into Canada, and the evidence we have of it is that they enter their goods and give us the value of their effects.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). I think, with the hon. member for Assiniboia East (Mr. Davin), that these immigrants exist only in the blue-books. Every one of us, who has any experience in this thing, knows that there is a fluctuating population crossing to and from the United States, and whatever goods and chattels they take with them either way, they avoid paying duty upon by entering them as settlers' effects. I find in the official report of the United States Consul of the Hamilton district for last year, that 536 persons left that consular district, and that they took goods to the value of $130,000 to the United States. To my personal knowledge, I have known a number of young men who go to work temporarily in the lumber woods of Michigan, to take their teams and equipments with them, and to enter them as settlers' goods; and when they return to Canada they do the same thing. I have no doubt that these men are counted both as immigrants to the United States and also as immigrants into Canada, when they return. I think the sooner the Department drops this system, as an evidence of a substantial gain to Canada in the way of immigration, the better. It is a recognised fact, known to every one living along the boundary line who has taken an interest in the matter, that certain persons, in order to get their goods back and forth across the boundary line, enter them as settlers' effects. It is simply preposterous, if the Department wishes to impress this House with the idea that we are making this substantial gain to Canada's population from the United States. It is no such thing, and the sooner the system is dropped the better for the official records of the Department.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Complaint has been made by the members from the North-West, that immigration is not going into that country fast enough: It seems to me that the Department of Agriculture, by the figures they publish, necessarily gives an impression to the world, which is adverse to the Province of Manitoba and to the North West Territories. As, I think, has been urged from this side upon the Government, and also upon the Committee having charge of this matter, there is nothing which can militate more against our success in inducing immigration to that country, than the giving of false and misleading statistics in reference to this matter. Now, what impression would be formed of Manitoba and the North-West Territories, by any intelligent immigrant who will read the reports of the Department of Agriculture and dissect them for himself? The report of the Minister of Agriculture, for instance, showed that between 1881 and 1885, 154,403 settlers went into Manitoba and the North-West. The Department published that to the world as the actual number of settlers going into Manitoba and the North-West during that period. We know that by the census of 1881, the population of these countries was already given as 122,400. These two figures would give a population in 1885 of 276,803 souls there, without including any natural increase at all. However, in the year 1885, this same Department of Agriculture, under its signature, published to the world in their official document, that the actual count of the people in Manitoba and the North-West Territories, was 173,363. Their estimate of the population of Manitoba five years ago was 125,000, and they now estimate it as only 120,000, 5,000 less than their estimate of five years ago. But taking their estimate at 125,000, added to the population of 48,363 in the Territories at that time, gives a total population of 173,363, whereas, if the figures given by the Department, of settlers who have actually gone into the country, be added to the census population, there should be in that country 276,803; in other words, over the signature of the Minister of Agriculture, the fact is proclaimed to the world that in five years 103,440 settlers had left that country, leaving out of consideration the natural increase. What impression would any-one derive from that? Would it not be naturally inferred that it was a country not habitable? Now, I do not believe that that many people left Manitoba and the North-West Territories; but if I do not, I am forced to the other conclusion, that the Department's figures, showing an aggregate increase of 154,403, are wholly fictitious, without any foundation whatever, and in the same line as the figures the Minister is giving us to-night. I do not say that he intends to mislead the House; but his figures must be wrong. I am not giving my own figures; I am merely putting the figures of the Department of Agriculture against the figures of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. CARLING. I have explained that there is no desire on the part of the Department or the Government to give statements that are not strictly accurate, and I am satisfied that the statements given in the report now before the House are accurate in every particular. In the case of the Custom house returns, the collector signs them, and, I believe, makes an affidavit as to their correctness, as to the arrivals from the United States bringing household effects, and in each case the number of males and females in the family is given. Then, we can easily ascertain the number who come by the St. Lawrence and via Halifax, as well as the number who come from New York by way of Suspension Bridge. The figures given to the House in this report are figures which we have reason to believe are correct in every particular, and I am sure it is very unfair for hon. members opposite to try to persuade the House and the country that false returns are being brought down.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Then, if the returns are correct, 103,440 souls left Manitoba and the North-West Territories during the last five years? That is the other horn of the dilemma, and the hon. gentleman must take one or the other.

Mr. CARLING. It has been stated by the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Bain), that there is a large floating population coming into and going out of the country. I am not here to state how many went out. I can only state the number that came in as returned to us by our collectors and officers at the frontier.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The report of the agent at St. John states that 26 immigrants came into Albert County, 207 into Westmoreland, 164 into Charlotte, 127 into Victoria, 29 into Restigouche, 66 into Northumberland, and 3,093 into York County, including McAdam Junction, making a total of 3,712. The report says that the total settlers in the Province, by all other inlets than Halifax and Quebec, are 3,712, with 183 at the St. John office, making a total of 3,895. Of this number there were 3,093 Canadians, which, I see, is exactly the number represented as coming into York County. Now, York County is close to St. John, and I would like the hon. member for York, or the hon. member for Sunbury, to state where those people are situated in the County of York.

Mr. CARLING. I am sure the hon. gentleman must admit that the whole Province of New Brunswick is not in the neighborhood of St. John. It is a very large Province, and Mr. Gardner, the agent, is a highly respectable man, who would not make returns that are not strictly correct. He does not know anything about the number returned by the Custom house collectors.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I quite agree with my hon. friend that New Brunswick is not all in the neighborhood of St. John, but York County is a river county with which I am familiar, and when it is stated that 3,093 immigrants came into that county, I should like to know where they are. After the Short Line was opened down to McAdam Junction, I suppose the Canadian Pacific Railway Company sent some men there to take charge of their rolling stock.

Mr. WALLACE. It seems to cause hon. gentlemen opposite a great deal of annoyance that a large number of immigrants are coming into this country. Since the hon. Minister of Agriculture mentioned that over 90,000 immigrants arrived in this country during last season, a dozen on the opposite side rose to contradict him, being dissatisfied with such a statement. As patriotic citizens of Canada, I think we should rejoice in any evidences of the prosperity of our country; but these hon. gentlemen do not rejoice to hear of the prosperity of the country. If a little further information will do them any good, I may say that the constituency which I have the honor to represent, at the time the census of 1881 was taken, had a population of 18,800; but I have no hesitation in saying that to-day the population of that constituency is considerably over 40,000, an increase of about 150 per cent. in less than ten years.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). From the United States?

Mr. WALLACE. They must have come from somewhere. If they are Canadians who remain in this country, so much the better, because we know that the Canadians are the best settlers we can have; but if a large portion of them come from other countries, as they do, we should rejoice to see them coming here, and I believe they are all fairly prosperous.

Mr. CASEY. The little bit of bombast with which the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) led off his speech is aptly matched by the delicately cooked statement of the truth with which he wound up. He said that on this side we seemed to be greatly troubled at finding that so many immigrants had come into the country, and that the country was so prosperous; but the hon. gentleman is wrong. What really grieved us was to find that so many of those immigrants, who were stated to have come in, did not come in. I do not accuse the Minister of Agriculture of making what he knows to be a false statement, but evidently matters have been misrepresented to him in some way, for his own returns and the documents of his own Department contradict each other. Both cannot be true, and what troubles us is the lack of immigration, and the lack of prosperity, and not the increase of immigration and prosperity. The hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) told the House that his constituency had grown from 18,800 in 1881 to over 40,000 now. We in Ontario know very well, but hon. members from a distance may not know, that his constituency is largely composed of the suburbs of the city of Toronto, and its growth simply shows the tremendous growth of Toronto at the expense of other towns and rural districts in Ontario. The hon. gentleman asked where they came from, since they must have come from somewhere. Well, they came from every railway centre with which Toronto is connected, and from every farm in the neighboring counties. Not one per cent. came from the States. How many may have come from Europe it is impossible for the Minister of Agriculture to tell us, but the bulk of the increase in the hon. gentleman's constituency simply represents drainage from one part of Ontario to the other.

Mr. WALLACE. Before 1878 the people used to go to the United States. Now they remain in their own country.

Mr. CASEY. We have the authority of the Minister of Agriculture for the statement that 103,000 people left Manitoba in five years to go somewhere else, and the less the hon. gentleman says about any exodus from this country the better for his party. Everyone knows that as many people at least go to the States now as used to go.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). More.

Mr. CASEY. My hon. friend from Quebec says "more;" and I know that more have left my county for the United States than did formerly. A certain number go to Manitoba, of course, but the total exodus is larger now than it was in former days, and a good many of those who go are good strong Conservatives, supporters of my hon. friends opposite, who, in going, pay a left-handed compliment to the National Policy. The Minister of Agriculture has tried to get out of the difficulty by saying his agents are honest and have reported these matters on oath. Well, if misrepresenting reports come in from honest men, there must be something wrong with the machinery, or the masters, from the highest quarters down. The hon. Minister has confessed that he did not believe these figures in regard to Manitoba represented the real state of affairs. He said he was not here to tell us how many people left the country, but only how many came in, and that he could not keep track of the movements of all those that came in. That has always been our opinion, but not that of the hon. Minister and his friends. They have always told us that they did keep track, that a certain number came in and a certain number went out, and the difference remained. Now, however, the hon. Minister has to confess that this method of subtraction does not lead to a very correct result. The Minister of Agriculture has confessed the utter inefficiency of his Department and the uselessness of his officers, so far as keeping a record of additions to the population of Manitoba is concerned. He is not here to tell us how many went out, but only how many came in. It would be much better if the hon. gentleman would dispense altogether with statistics, and give us mere guess work, than to build up in our minds the hope that the population is increasing, and then have the First Minister lay before this House statistics which, compared with other statements from the Agriculture Department, are evidently false.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I am sure the House was much pleased to hear of the great progress made by the constituency represented by the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace). It is gratifying always to hear of the great strides made by the constituencies throughout the Dominion. Every member of the House will be pleased to hear statements of that kind. I wanted to verify the statement of the hon. member by the blue-book, which we are told to look to for information under these heads. The hon. member represents West York, and I believe he resides at Woodbridge. We have blue-books relating to Woodbridge. We have the Postmaster General's report of the postal departments throughout the country. The revenue derived by the postal service is an indication of the population and the business in the different places mentioned, and I have looked at this report. In 1878, the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) says the people left this country for the States, but that now they are flourishing and that his constituency had largely increased in population. I thought I would like to verify that statement. The hon. gentleman talked very candidly, and in a manner which pleased me very much. He told us of the growth, and the development, and the increased revenue of the village so ably represented by himself. I will read the figures. In Woodbridge, in the County of West York, we find that, in 1878, when everybody had gone to the States, according to the statement of the hon. member for West York (Mr.

Wallace), when all the industries of the country were depressed, when nothing but starvation was stalking abroad through the land, and when the hum of industry was no longer heard, the revenue of the post office there was $910.83. But a change came over West York and over the whole of this country. Progress was the watchword of the present Government and was to be carried out by the policy which it initiated. Great strides in progress were made in that division. The result is that, in the town of Woodbridge, we find, by the last return, dated the end of the fiscal year 1889, the revenue, when the times were so good and the people so numerous, was $793.73—a falling off of $120 or thereabouts, under the régime of prosperity inaugurated by this Government, and when all the people had come back from the United States to Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Landerkin) is just about as logical as those on the other side of the House generally. Everything is pressed in to show that people are going out of this country and that none are coming in, and this is a sample of the statements which are made. I showed, when he drew a comparison between last year and this in regard to the town of Woodbridge, that the Abell Manufacturing Company had transferred their operations from Woodbridge to Toronto, and had taken with them about 300 of their people, most of whom would write letters and keep up business correspondence, and that would reasonably account for the decrease in the revenue of the Woodbridge office. The hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) stated that there was an increase in the population of his constituency. It is true that they did not move out of his constituency, but that does not affect the fact that the population of that constituency increased from 18,000 to 40,000. No doubt they did not all come from Canada; some may have come from other countries. Perhaps some were Canadians who may have come back from the United States to live in Canada, finding that they were doing worse elsewhere. Whenever any evidence is given as to the going out of Canadians from this country to the United States, hon. gentlemen insist upon the correctness of the statements, but when evidence is given as to the entrance of people into Canada, they say it is untrustworthy, and they will not even accept the affidavits of those who come in with their goods and state that they are settlers' effects. No matter what the nature of the evidence may be, they will not believe it. We have had a statement as to the difference between the population of the North-West five years ago and the population to-day, and it is said that that is evidence that people are leaving the country. Hon. gentlemen opposite ignore the fact that people came in to work on the railway. Probably they intended to remain in that country when they passed their goods through the Customs. But that railway was completed, and many of those people, who were of the laboring class, transferred themselves to other fields of labor, and it is, therefore, not to be wondered at that there should be a change in the population, and that many of those people should probably be working in other parts of this country. We have heard constantly that there has been a great exodus of Canadians to the United States, and hon. members opposite seem to gloat over it. They are willing to accept the figures of the United States as to the number that are going out, but they are not willing to accept the official figures as to those who are coming in.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I may have done the hon. gentleman injustice in quoting the figures in regard to the town where it appears he lives, because I did not know of the local fluctuations. However, if the operatives have moved from Woodbridge to Toronto, I do not suppose they have moved there from every town in that riding. I believe the village of Kleinburg is in that constituency, and I find that, in 1878, the revenue from Kleinburg was $285.16. According to the statement of the hon. gentleman, there was not anybody in Kleinburg, or, for that matter, in the County of York, or in Ontario, or in the Dominion at that time; they had all gone to the States. At the present time, that revenue ought certainly to be about a quarter of a million from Kleinburg, to correspond with the great growth of population in the County of York. I find, however, that the revenue last year from that village was $248.34, a falling off of nearly $40.

Mr. DENISON. Will the hon. gentleman give us the figures for Toronto in 1878 and 1889?

Mr. LANDERKIN. The hon. gentleman had better keep his seat. I will attend to him afterwards.

Mr. McMULLEN. At West Toronto Junction there are about 150 people from my own town who have settled. The hon. member knows that the Hess Bros. factory, which used to be in Listowel, has now located half of its business at West Toronto Junction, and has taken its men there. In western Ontario, there is not a town or village in which you cannot count men by the dozen who have gone to Toronto, and, particularly, to West Toronto Junction, and that is the reason why the hon. gentleman's constituency has increased as much as it has. I was amazed when the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) made his remarks as to the people who were flowing out of the country in 1878 and those who were coming back now, and complaining that we were finding fault on that ground. The First Minister appeared to be pleased at that statement. I remember once when the First Minister went to the Maritime Provinces and was presented with an address. In reply to that address he referred to the condition of things between 1874 and 1878; he said that during the Mackenzie régime the weevil and the potato bug had made their appearance. Well, Sir, the weevil has gone away, but the potato bug is here yet. However, the hon. gentleman has managed to humbug the people with regard to his National Policy, he has not been able to humbug the potato bug. Now, the Minister of Agriculture has not made any reply to the statement presented by the hon. member for Brant. It is evident that the figures he has been presenting to Parliament from year to year with regard to the influx of population have not been correct; or if they have been correct, if these people have come in here, they have gone out again. The Minister tries to evade the point by saying that they came in, but he cannot exactly say where they are located. He says he has evidence that they came in, but we have evidence from the very same source that they have gone out again. They are not here. Now, a different system should be adopted if we are going to get anything like a correct account of those who come here. I would ask the Minister of Agriculture to turn up page D—38 of the Auditor General's Report, where he will find that certificates of repatriation were issued to four individuals during last year, amounting to $87.50. I was glad to find that so many Canadians were returning from the States to Canada, and I would like to know what made these individuals so valuable that it was thought advisable that certificates of repatriation should be issued to them, one at a cost of $27.50, two at a cost of $22.50, and one at a cost of $15. Now, I want to know where they came from, where they are now located, and what they are now doing ?

Mr. HESSON. I rise to correct a statement of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, with reference to the alleged increase of the population of West Toronto Junction. I was in that factory to-day, and it will not be completed and ready for occupation for more than a month yet. I went through the premises with Mr. William Hess. He has only two men at work besides himself and his son, and that is all the population this factory had added to West Toronto Junction. That factory was originally established in Toronto, after removal from Listowel, until they were burnt out, when they came to West Toronto Junction. Consequently that portion of the population from Listowel that went there with this factory had no influence whatever on Parkdale or West Toronto Junction. There is no possibility of that factory being ready to work for five or six weeks yet. Mr. Hess told me himself that he would not get his engine in for, perhaps, two weeks; the machinery and tables are not yet in. So there is no addition to the population of West Toronto Junction.

Mr. McMULLEN. I beg to tell the hon. gentleman that I know better. I know there are a dozen people living there, anticipating employment in that factory. I could name half a dozen to him, who are living there now, expecting to get work in that very factory.

Mr. COCKBURN. Perhaps I could relieve hon. gentlemen opposite from the anxiety that seems to pervade their minds by giving them some figures from a paper that has just been put into my hands, the Toronto World, which is published at the Hub of Trade. These figures may account for the loss of that 90,000 population that seems to be distressing the hearts of our friends. In 1880, the population of Toronto was only 71,236; five years afterwards, it was 128,179; and to-day it is 216,000. These are figures on which our friends can rely.

Mr. LISTER. That includes the suburbs.

Mr. COCKBURN. Toronto has no suburbs, you may say.

An hon. MEMBER. It has swallowed them all up.

Mr. COCKBURN. Now, with reference to the wealth which is represented by this ever growing population, in 1880 the assessment for the city amounted to $50,533,000; five years afterwards, in 1885, it was $69,533,000; while to-day it is no less than the colossal sum of $137,230,773. Now, let us look at the growth of the schools to meet this ever increasing population. In 1870 there was a school attendance of 4,106; in 1880 it had risen to 8,997; while in 1889, it was 28,287. I think it but right to add, also, with reference to loanable capital in that city, in which hon. gentlemen may, perhaps, take an interest, that there is no less a sum than $65,228,200. I mention these figures to my hon. friends in order to cheer them up a little. If they find their farms so depleted, I may tell them that there is plenty of loanable capital in Toronto. If the people are leaving the country, we have still an army of 216,000 people in Toronto with which to meet any of the growing wants of this ever growing Province.

Mr. LISTER. Give us the statistics for Kingston.

Mr. COCKBURN. The member for Kingston is here, and I have no doubt he will be able to furnish the information. Canada would be the most peculiar country on the face of the globe were every city growing equally. Why, the whole population of Prince Edward Island is not one-half the population of Toronto, and I suppose the loanable capital of that Province is not one-tenth that of Toronto. Still we all admire Prince Edward Island, and we do not look with any jealousy on its growth. We cannot expect the population in every part of the country to be growing with equal rapidity. The development caused by the National Policy and the confidence of the people in the policy of the Government have attracted many persons also from the United States to cast their fortunes in Toronto; and once they are assured by hon. gentlemen opposite that the policy which has been inaugurated by this Government is to be maintained and confirmed, and that manufacturers are not to be terrorised every year with threats of the demolition of that policy, instead of thousands of capital coming from the United States to Toronto, the capital that will be brought over to that city from the United States will be millions, and instead of our having an assessment of 137 millions, we shall in a short time have an assessment of 237 millions.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I should like to know how much has been contributed to the increase of the growth of Toronto by a gentleman who has been drawing a very large salary for some years past in Europe. Hon. Hector Fabre, I believe is in connection with the immigration department, and his salary does not appear among the regular list of salaries under the head of immigration, but it is hidden away among miscellaneous, and with difficulty I discovered it in the Auditor General's Report. At page 167-E I see Hector Fabre received a salary of $2,500, and an allowance for contingencies of $1,000, or a total of $3,500. It is important that this Committee should be placed in possession of any information with respect to the services which this gentleman has performed to the country. He has been drawing this salary for a number of years. I believe it is on record that the Minister on one occasion stated that the Hon. Hector Fabre had been the means of sending one immigrant to this country, and we have never heard since that time that he has sent another. It is of no use to this country to continue paying this salary unless we obtain some benefit from it, and so far as this House is in possession of information, the Committee must come to the conclusion that he has performed no services to this country. It is just possible that he has been the means of increasing the population of Toronto very extensively of late years, and if so we should like to hear from the Government on that point. At all events we should like to know what the gentleman has been doing for his salary.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. After this agreeable and instructive debate I think we should do a little business. We are now getting on towards June, and if we do not proceed with business we may enter July. With respect to Mr. Fabre, that expenditure is under miscellaneous, I understand. We have not reached miscellaneous yet, and if the hon. gentleman will only curb his impatience until we get there, we will give him full information about Mr. Fabre. As to the prosperity of Kingston, I am very glad to tell hon. gentlemen opposite that Kingston is very prosperous and has been growing very rapidly. For a long period of years I must admit it was rather stationary, from causes which can be easily explained; but for the last two or three years it has had a course of steady prosperity and steady growth. I will, however, patiently await the census, and then, I fancy, it will be shown that my constituency has grown very much in population and in wealth, and that it has very good prospects of increased prosperity. No doubt all hon. gentlemen opposite will be glad to hear that statement. I think after this debate, we might, before the small hours arrive, do a little business.

Mr. MULOCK. I am sure the House and the country will be glad to learn that the city of Toronto has made the substantial progress stated by the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn). It is true the hon. gentleman travelled a little out of the record in the quotations he made; we were simply discussing the question of population, but he wandered into the region of finance. However, I can excuse him for that, for we know he is near the very door that leads to the Cabinet, and is of course acting in the absence of the Minister of Finance who is at present engaged in the process of incubation for to-morrow's effort. I was going to say the Minister, but I will say the member for Centre Toronto, has told us much in regard to Toronto's growth of population; and while we should all rejoice in its prosperity, I think there must be some element of regret when we remember that that prosperity is acquired largely at the expense of outlying parts of the country. It was well and correctly stated, in anticipation of that policy which the hon. gentleman so admires to-day, that it would have the effect of destroying small centres and building up large ones, the same as it has had this effect of adding to the wealth of those who have been prosperous, and taking as it were from those who had little. The hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace), who is naturally proud of his own riding, will join with me to a certain extent in regretting that its increased property has been obtained at the expense largely of other districts. I am sure he will admit that, and he would not desire it to go forth to the country that he would hold up his riding as a fair sample of the general growth of the country, however much he and I would desire that the country had grown to that extent. The hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn) has become a strong admirer of the policy of this Administration in all its features. I can well remember when he had no decided views whatever on this question. I remember a paper some years ago which described an interview between the hon. gentleman and the editor. On that occasion the hon. gentleman was a free-lance, untrammelled by party allegiance, and in the course of that interview he intimated to the editor that it was his intention at an early date to enter into public life. When asked by the interviewer into what political camp he was about to enter, he stated that his mind had not yet been made up and that it would depend upon circumstances. Then shortly after this the hon. gentleman, according to a certain utterance of his own, travelled abroad, and took two years to inform himself in regard to all the systems of government in Europe, and he returned, and then, having been offered a nomination for Centre Toronto, he suddenly found he had always loved Conservative principles, had always loved the National Policy, and especially the wards of St. John and St. James, and he offered his hand and heart to that riding, and was accepted. There is not a member on that side of the House to-day, there is not the strongest Conservative and supporter of the National Policy, who can equal in loyalty to that party the hon. member for Centre Toronto, and the fact that he entertains those views, and that he can be relied upon, is made manifest to us, in that he has been pitchforked over the heads of back bench members, until to-day he is just ready to enter the Cabinet. I, therefore, felt it to be my duty, to a certain extent, to refer to those observations made by the hon. member for Centre Toronto, inasmuch as they are semi-official.

Mr. COCKBURN. I cannot thank too highly the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock), for his very kind observations this evening. It is always pleasing to receive a certificate of character from a man who stands so high in the moral atmosphere of political life, and, doubly so, when it comes from one who is so learned, and one who holds so high and distinguished a position in the educational world. I need not say I thank the hon. gentleman for his remarks, particularly when he took care to inform the House that the step I took in political life, was no incautious, no sudden step, but one which was the result of calm, quiet deliberation; that for two years I travelled the length and breadth of Europe, to inform myself of the various systems of government, that I studied this question closely in the various countries of Europe, that after due deliberation and consultation with leading statesmen and others, I came to the conclusion that the only party that could save this country was the great Conservative party. I wish I could say that the opinions the hon. gentleman has expressed in this House, were the result of calm and deliberative study. I wish I could say that he had travelled through the length and breadth of Europe, before he formed the crude opinions, and the still cruder utterances, he has given expression to. The hon. gentleman, burthened as he is with wealth, could not do better than to spend the interval between this and the next session, in going over Europe, enlarging his mind by foreign travel. Perhaps when he comes back after having all the advantages he says I have had, he might then be able to come back to this House, and be of more service to the country that he has hitherto been. I have to thank the hon. gentleman for the prospective title he has been pleased to bestow upon me. I have heard it reported—although I do not give much attention to reports, especially when I find reports of a certain character, associated with certain names—that the hon. gentleman wished a title for himself. If the hon. gentleman has been kind enough to dignify me with a seat in the Cabinet, I must confess that I have been regarding him for some time with reverential awe as having the prospect of a distinguished and high title, such as is enjoyed by several hon. members of the Cabinet. At all events, it is evident that the hon. gentleman has been fishing well around to earn and secure such a title as a due recognition of his loyal, patriotic declarations.

Mr. MULOCK. In reply to the hon. member I might say—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the discussion has now wandered far enough from the subject before the House.

Mr. WALLACE. I desire to say a few words in regard to the remarks of the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin). He was unfair enough to make reference to the postal receipts of the village of Woodbridge—

Mr. McMULLEN. I rise to a point of order. If you rule my hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock) out of order, I call your attention to the fact, Mr. Chairman, that the member for West York (Mr. Wallace) is speaking to a matter quite outside the discussion altogether. If you rule one member out of order you should rule the other out too.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The matter referred to by the member for North York (Mr. Mulock) was a purely personal matter. It is quite in order to speak in connection with the population of a certain district, under a resolution referring to immigration. The personal discussion between the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) and the member for Toronto (Mr. Cockburn) is not in order.

Mr. WALLACE. I was referring to the reference which was made by the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) as to the postal revenues for the village of Woodbridge. He turned to that village, either for the purpose of showing that the population of West York was not increasing, or for the purpose of making a statement, which without the necessary explanation, would be entirely misleading to this House. It is true, Sir, that in 1878 the postal receipts from Woodbridge were $910, and in 1889 they had decreased about nine or ten per cent., but, as has been stated to this House, a large establishment, employing more than a hundred hands, had left Woodbridge, taking away within a few months a population of two or three hundred, out of a population of 1,100. That reduced the postal receipts and the general business of the place for some time, but I am happy to inform the hon. member for South Grey, that Woodbridge has pulled itself together again, and I believe next year will show larger postal receipts than for any previous year. I may also state another fact which the hon. gentleman did not mention to the House, namely, that since 1878 four post offices have been established in the immediate neighborhood of Woodbridge, all of which drew away a considerable portion of the revenue formerly enjoyed by the Woodbridge post office. If the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) was as fair as he professes to be, he might have stated that, in 1878, the Parkdale post office had a revenue of $28.48 while the revenue last year had increased to $3,916. He might also have told you that the Brockton post office, which had no existence in 1878, had a revenue of $1,139 last year.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What did you say the revenue in Parkdale was?

Mr. WALLACE. $28.48.

Mr. LANDERKIN. For a year did you say?

Mr. WALLACE. For a year.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Then you said what was not so. You made a great mistake. That was only for a month or thereabouts. It is well to be correct when you come into figures.

Mr. WALLACE. If I am mistaken, I will be able to correct that before I sit down.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It will be just as well to have it right.

Mr. WALLACE. The post office at West Toronto Junction, which a few years ago had no existence at all, has now a revenue of $1,681. These facts prove the statement I set out with, namely, that the population of West York had increased from 18,800 in 1881, to more than 40,000 people to-day. The population of Parkdale was, I think, about 1,000, according to the census of 1881, and it was over 6,000 in the census recently taken, before the suburb was annexed to the city of Toronto. We have been told many times that there was a great exodus from this country, and that our population was going to the United States instead of remaining in our own country. We have evidence now that a great number of our people are going to the North-West, and we are glad to see them going there; that is satisfactory in this respect. If any portion of the population of this country is moving, it is satisfactory to find that, instead of going to the manufacturing centres of the United States, they are going to the manufacturing centres of Canada. We find, therefore, that places like Toronto, and places in the immediate vicinity of Toronto, are rapidly increasing in population, and that these people who were denied employment in 1878 are finding profitable employment to-day in the cities and the suburbs surrounding the great manufacturing centres of our own country.

Mr. KIRK. I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture how he reconciles the figures he has given to-night, in regard to the immigration into Nova Scotia, with a statement contained in his report which has just been laid upon the Table of the House? He told us to-night that the number of immigrants arrived and settled in Nova Scotia last year was 3,801. I thought that was a very extravagant statement; and I find that there is a discrepancy of 1,406 persons between the figures given to-night, and the number stated in the report. Can the hon. gentleman explain how this large discrepancy occurs? The report submitted to the House shows that there were last year 18,955 arrivals; less United States citizens on coasting steamers, 7,906; leaving 11,049.

Mr. Clay reported that the destination of 8,654 of these people was the other Provinces, and that but 2,395 immigrants were supposed to settle in the Province of Nova Scotia. He will find these figures on page 23 of his report. There is another table, on page 35, which shows the actual settlers to be 1,390. These are the arrivals of immigrants with settlers' goods passing through the Customs house, but of these 948 were Canadians returning from the United States, leaving but 442 immigrants from other countries. Now, we know perfectly well, so far as Nova Scotia is concerned, that a large number of our people go to the United States every spring and return in the fall. So far as they are concerned, I dare say the figures are correct, and I will not dispute the report. But 442 is not a large number of immigrants to settle in Nova Scotia, and it is far different from the number of 3,801 given by the hon. gentleman. I am sure everybody in Nova Scotia will be surprised to hear that that number settled there, for I am sure that it is not the case. The hon. member for Shelburne (General Laurie) tells us that labor was in demand and sadly needed in Nova Scotia last season. I do not know where it was sadly needed—certainly not in the county I come from. He said the Legislature of Nova Scotia voted $300,000 last year for roads, for which a large amount of labor was required, and, consequently, a large number of immigrants came into the country. The hon. gentleman gave us to understand that immigrants were required because the Local Government had voted that sum of money for roads; but he told us that this money was expended on the electors, giving the House to understand that it was not spent on the roads at all, because there was going to be a general election. But there was no general election; the Government knew that there was not going to be a general election last year; and I venture to say that the whole of that money was spent by laborers belonging to the country, and not one dollar by immigrants. If there was ever any money voted by the Nova Scotia Legislature for which the people feel grateful, it was that $300,000 voted last year to put the roads in proper condition to be travelled on. Now, it seems to me strange, if so many immigrants came to Nova Scotia to look for work, and if laborers were so much in demand, that wages were not higher, for we know that the wages of day laborers on the railways and elsewhere was from 80 cents to $1 a day, which would not induce many immigrants to come to the country. I do not dispute that some laborers may have come to the country to work on public works. Mr. Clay reports that some hundreds of laborers were employed on the Amherst Ship Railway. If any immigrants came in, it must have been there that they obtained labor, and not anywhere else. I would like the Minister to explain where he got the figures of 3,801 immigrants as coming into Nova Scotia.

General LAURIE. The hon. gentleman who has spoken has altogether misrepresented what I said. What I stated was that the $300,000 voted as a special grant by the Legislature of Nova Scotia was distributed among the electors, not spent among immigrants, and that it was generally believed, in view of the general election coming on shortly, that it would be very useful to spend it for the purpose of obtaining support for the Local Government. I say so still, and in the county I represent it was so understood.

Mr. KIRK. Did the roads require it?

General LAURIE. Yes, and a good deal more, but, unfortunately, it was not spent to benefit the roads, but the party now in power, which the hon. gentleman supports.

Mr. MULOCK. A coalition Government, is not?

General LAURIE. No, not much of a coalition—just about as much as you have here. I do not wish to be misrepresented, and I thought it well to emphasise the statement I made before.

Mr. KIRK. I do not wish to misrepresent the hon. gentleman, nor did I. I took down what he said, that the money was spent on the electors. Now, he corrects himself; he says he did not mean that.

General LAURIE. Yes; I said it was spent on the electors, and they were employed on the road.

Mr. COOK. The hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) stated that a large manufacturing concern had left the village of Woodbridge where he resides and moved to Toronto, which was the cause of the decrease of population at Woodbridge. But he forgot to tell the House the result of the gentleman's operations who moved to the city of Toronto. He was glorified by the National Policy. Woodbridge was too small a place for him; 300 operatives were not sufficient. He was going to clap on all sail, and become a millionaire in a short time. What is the result? Owing to the National Policy, that gentleman to-day is not worth a cent, and is not employing a single man. Then the hon. gentleman for Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn) glorified the increase in the population of Toronto. He probably forgot the manner in which so many suburbs were taken into the city. If he did, I will give him some information. The town of Parkdale was taken in to assist the citizens to pay the taxes, which are pretty heavy in that city; and that town was taken in by fraud. The gentlemen in favor of the union manufactured 400 votes to override the honest voters of the town of Parkdale, and yet they only carried the union by a majority of 127, showing how faithfully the Parkdadians stood aloof from the city of Toronto. I was very sorry that we became connected with the city of Toronto. We had fine streets, fine sewage, a good waterworks, and everything necessary to live in comfort, but we were dragged into the muddy streets of Toronto, and we have to pay the taxes of the hon. gentleman and others there. It is well known that the city of Toronto has increased very largely in number, but it is not by means of any foreign element, but by people from other sections of Ontario. Toronto has grown at the expense of every other municipality in the Province, and then these gentlemen will hold up their hands and say amen to the National Policy. Why the National Policy has nothing at all to do with it. If you take the manufacturers of the city of Toronto, and even outside of the city of Toronto, they will tell you, when you converse with them fairly and freely, what they think of the National Policy. They say it is an injury to them, because the raw materials are taxed for the sake of revenue, and, therefore, they are not benefited by the National Policy. Parkdale is not the only place taken in. They have extended Toronto clear out to Hog's Hollow on Yonge street. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman has gone into speculations as far north as that—eight miles from the centre of the city? Toronto has also extended east and west from below Leslieville to the Humber. It is large enough to maintain a population of 200,000 no doubt, and probably twice that number, but it has extended in such proportions that to-day the wisecracs, the financial men of the city, are looking forward with great dismay for fear of a financial crisis, and await with caution their investments at present. Many of those with means are paying off their mortgages and putting themselves in a position to meet the contemplated crash that is bound to come upon this country if this iniquitous policy is continued.

Mr. WALLACE. I said that the postal receipts for Parkdale in 1878 were $28.48. In that statement I was strictly correct, but I should have said that the post office was established in that fiscal year, so that $28.48 does not represent the returns of the whole year. The next year, ending 30th June, 1879, the receipts were $125.04, and in 1889 they amounted to $3,916. Now, one word with respect to the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Cook). He speaks of a manufacturing firm which left Woodbridge and settled in Toronto. Surely he does not refer to the John Abell works of Toronto?

Mr. COOK. I do.

Mr. WALLACE. Two months ago, when I left home, he was employing 150 to 200 men, and no doubt he is employing more men to-day. I know he has employed more than 150 men. Yet we have the statement of the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Cook) that he is not employing one man—a statement wholly at variance with the facts.

Mr. COOK. I may inform the hon. gentleman of a fact which, perhaps, he does not know, that Mr. Abell is not doing business at all. He failed because of his removal to Toronto, and the enlargement of his works. He used to employ from 300 to 400 men in his town at Woodbridge. And now the hon. gentleman states that he employed 200 men at Toronto. His establishment has gone into the hands of Rice, Lewis & Co., and Mr. Abell is only the manager.

Mr. WALLACE. I said it represented a population of 300 or 400. He employed 100 to 120 men in Woodbridge, and is employing more than that in Toronto. I have here a letter headed from Mr. Abell—Jno. Abell, Agricultural Works, Ontario. I have no doubt Mr. Abell is as solvent to-day as any member of this House.

Mr. BOWELL. I desire to call the attention of the Committee to a statement made by the hon. member for Centre Quebec (Mr. Langelier) and the hon. member for North Wentworth (Mr. Bain) in reference to the manner in which the returns are made by the Customs Department. These gentlemen, in order to throw discredit upon the returns which are made, or have been made in the past, made these statements. The hon. member for Centre Quebec (Mr. Langelier), stated that he thought the Customs officers must have been grossly imposed upon, if they had made the returns which have been read to the House by the hon. members for East Simcoe (Mr. Cook) and North Wentworth (Mr. Bain), stating that when young men and others passed through this country to the United States to work in the shanties, he had no doubt they took with them horses and other necessary implements to work, and were entered in the United States as emigrants. That may be the case, but if these young men return, they would not return as immigrants to this country and be so entered, unless they made an affidavit before the collector, or some other official, that they had owned certain portions of the property; that is the house furniture, implements, books, professional books, wearing apparel, and that all these articles had been in their possession at least six months before their arrival in Canada; and as to other articles, such as agricultural implements, live stock, sewing-machines, carts, they must have been owned for twelve months. Now, it is scarcely possible that any person coming to Canada would take the trouble to make an entry of his effects as separate effects, and take an affidavit that he had certain portions of them in his possession for six months and others for twelve months, for the purpose of humbugging and deceiving the collector, or whatever Custom house officer may have taken the entry. These returns, which are made to the Department of Agriculture and also to the Customs Department, are made from the records of the entries, and the oaths taken by the settlers in the manner indicated. So, without expressing any opinion as to what becomes of the people and their families, or the individuals who come here after they have made their entries, I do not think it at all likely that people, even Canadians returning to Canada, or foreigners, would go to the trouble I have indicated, in order to obtain free entry of these effects, merely for the sake of deception, and certainly the collectors of the different ports would have no possible reason for making statements other than those indicated.

Mr. WALDIE. I have listened to the debate, and as I do not often take the floor, I feel that I could say a few words to our common advantage. It is important to the country that we should have some reliable statement of our population who go to the United States. I think the Minister of Customs is quite correct in stating that, when a person arrives from the United States and makes an entry under the regular form of declaration, he makes an honest entry, and has had the property which he so enters in his possession for six months or longer before coming into the country. This is quite in accordance with the statement of the hon. member for North Wentworth (Mr. Bain), that these people had the property when they went out of the country—in fact they had it all the time. The mistake is that the same interest is not taken in the outward reports as in the inward reports. If there was some substantial, honest statement made as to the number of Canadians who had gone to the United States with their effects during the current year, and as to Canadians who had come back from the States with their effects during the current year, and these were put side by side, we could see whether we were gaining or were losing population. I think that could be easily got by the Customs officials or by the immigration agents. For instance, the immigration agent at Niagara Falls could get that information as well as the railway people can. The railway people, when they are taking goods to enter in the United States, have got to get a consular statement, and the immigration agent could easily get a copy of that, and so could find out how many people were going out of this country; and I have no doubt, that in some way of this kind, the Government could obtain statistics which could not be challenged by either side of the House. While I think this can be done, and while I hope it will be done, I do not think it is desirable that either side of this House should be charged with speaking against the interests of the country. I do not think it is the desire of hon. gentlemen on this side to speak against the interests of the country. They are only sorry that the development of the country is not more rapid. I am glad that the grants to steamships for bringing immigrants are to cease. I think the best immigrants are the people of means who come here without any assistance at all, and I believe the best immigration agents are those who have resided in this country for some time, and who correspond with their friends in other countries, and induce them to come here by making true representations of what has taken place in their own cases. I think the best mode of getting immigrants is that which has been adopted by the people of Manitoba. That is, to let the Provinces send out immigration agents instead of the Dominion. The town of Brandon is sending an immigration agent of its own, and having the resources of that place and its neighborhood represented. I do not think immigration agents should be paid commissions on the immigrants they send out, as I think a better class of immigrants will come if no commissions are paid.

Mr. FISHER. I had not any intention of saying anything on this question until I heard with astonishment the statement of the Minister of Agriculture that so many people had settled in the Province of Quebec. When I enquired for some details in reference to that, I understood him to say that about 15,000 of this number were French Canadians who were supposed to be repatriated in the Province of Quebec. I have looked over these figures with some care and have taken some time in examining them, and I find it very difficult to make the statements tally one with the other. I do not intend to say that there is any intention on the part of the Minister to in any way mislead the public or this House. I know the Minister of Agriculture too well to suppose for a moment that he would countenance anything of that kind. But I do think that the system which is adopted is one open to so much error that, practically, the tables and figures are worthless. I know a good deal of what is occurring along the border in the Province of Quebec, and especially in regard to the immigrants who are stated to be coming to that Province from the United States. The return makes out that 15,900 have come from the United States to settle and stay. Yet I find, on looking through the reports of the various immigration agents in the Province of Quebec, not one single reference to these repatriated French Canadians.

Mr. CARLING. Of course not. This comes through the Customs officials.

Mr. WALDIE.

Mr. FISHER. I understand that. I understand that these people are supposed to come under the notice of the Customs officials, but we would suppose that the agents at the different points—there is one gentleman at Danville, another at Canterbury, another at Sherbrooke, another at Montreal, and several others—would be aware that these French Canadians had come back and had settled in their respective districts. They refer to others who have come from other countries.

Mr. CARLING. Those are immigrants.

Mr. FISHER. We find these gentlemen telling us all about their different districts, giving the price of labor and the value of land, but we find no reference whatever to these people who are supposed to have come in and settled there. Moreover, everyone who lives on the frontier knows that the French Canadians are constantly passing backwards and forwards between the United States and Canada. Everyone who is acquainted with their mode of acting knows perfectly well that they go to the States to work for a few weeks, for a few months, or a year or so sometimes. They often come to Canada to pay visits to their friends, and to bring them presents. Sometimes they stay for a few weeks or months and then go back again.

Mr. CARLING. They do not bring their household effects.

Mr. FISHER. They do bring household effects. I have seen feather beds and other things of that kind brought in by people who have told me personally that they were going back to the United States in a few weeks or a few months. Hon. gentlemen opposite tell us that we are glorying in the fact that the immigration returns are incorrect. There is nothing of the kind on this side. What we want is to find out the truth in these matters. We believe, if the truth is put before the world, it is better for us in Canada.

Mr. CARLING. Does the hon. gentleman think it is unwise to give the statistics which are obtained from the Customs returns, and to put them before the country and the world?

Mr. FISHER. Most certainly; if those statistics are misleading, I think it is unwise.

Mr. CARLING. When we have the affidavits of the officers of the Department of the number of those coming into the country.

Mr. FISHER. I am showing the Minister that these affidavits do not amount to a row of pins. I do not deny the returns made by the Customs officers, but I say their figures do not truly represent the facts, that the people who were stated to have come to this country from the United States, have not come in to settle, therefore the figures are misleading. When you tell us that 19,000 people have come into Quebec from the United States and settled in that Province, everybody who is familiar with that Province knows that such is not the case. A great many of these people who are represented to have come in, have gone back to the United States. Everybody who is familiar with that Province must know that no such valid and honest immigration of that kind has come into Quebec during the last year. I find in looking over these papers that the hon. gentleman has stated that 26,000 had come into the Province of Quebec. I find in one place he gives, by the Customs returns, 19,600; and in another place he gives the entries at the Port of Quebec, instead of the Province, as 2,474; in another place he gives as entered in the port of Halifax, with the intention of going to the Province of Quebec, 924. That makes 23,000 who intended to settle in Quebec, while the Minister said a little while ago there were 26,000. Now, I do not pretend to say where the error is, but it is very difficult from the figures in this book to make head or tail out of the statements. There is another point to which I wish to allude. The hon. member for Quebec Centre (Mr. Langelier) has spoken about the report of Mr. Choquette to the Local Government, which has been a good deal talked about in the Province of Quebec. That report is entirely contrary to the statement contained in this book, the deductions from which must either be absolutely false, or else these statements are entirely misleading.

Mr. CARLING. What means have they of arriving at the correctness of that information?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot say what those means were. I have only the newspaper report and the debate which occurred in Quebec, but both sides of the House accepted that report as a correct statement. Now, I find in the Minister's own report on this question of repatriation, the report of the Rev. C. A. Beaudry. This gentleman does not say one word about the repatriation of 17,000 people into the Province of Quebec. Instead he talks of the French Canadians who have been going to the west, and whom he would have liked to attract to Manitoba, whereas they went to the western States. But he says nothing whatever about the French Canadians who have been directed into the Province of Quebec. His report contains some startling statements, and they do not at all agree with what the Minister has said, and they do not bear out the accusation that we on this side of the House are the only ones who are depreciating our country. The Minister's own report confirms the statement of the hon. member for Brant, that the Government reports are not flattering to our own country. Mr. Beaudry states:

"It is a fact well ascertained in spite of the several political systems, and denials or affirmations of politicians, that emigration keeps on its devastation at the rate of a national plague. This disastrous stream could certainly be stopped and turned in favor of Manitoba."

Then he makes a suggestion how it could be stopped, and proceeds to say:

"This consideration explains the fact that 30,000 French Canadians have chosen Dakota preferably to Manitoba." I do not know whether this is a correct statement, I trust it is exaggerated. According to the statement of hon. gentlemen opposite, there are not so many Canadians in Dakota as that. According to the statements of members of the North-West and Manitoba, these French Canadians have not gone to Manitoba, or the North-West, and if they have gone from the Province of Quebec, where have they gone to? We find by the Minister's own report that they have gone to Dakota, that they are now under a foreign flag. The question is not as to whether the Customs returns are technically correct. The Minister of Customs himself was too careful to say where these people had gone to that were represented to have come into the country. He also asserted that his own officials had given correct Customs returns; but we say that these returns do not represent an honest and clear immigration into this country, and until the hon.

Minister can give facts that will disprove the charges of the member for Brant, we shall be justified in asserting that his report in this respect is misleading, and that the figures are absolutely worthless.

Mr. BORDEN. I agree with what has fallen from the hon. member for Brome (Mr. Fisher) as to the unreliable character of the statistics given by the immigration agents. Take, for instance, the agent at Halifax, and I would ask the Minister's attention to statement A in his report. The immigration agent there says, that 6,627 immigrants arrived at Halifax, and he gives particulars of these in a table headed "Statement of immigrant arrivals at Halifax." Now, I find that of this total, 5,368 were stated to have come from the United States, so I think it is very evident that these were simply tourists, travellers who came from the United States to Canada via Halifax, during the past year. I find that during the months of May, June, July and August, a very much larger number came than during the rest of the year. Now, bond fide immigrants usually come much earlier in the year, in February, March or April. I cannot see what possible good can arise from publishing a table of that kind. It seems to me that it is very misleading, and does not give any reliable information whatever. The agent does not pretend to say where those people have settled in Nova Scotia, I cannot find that he states where a single one of the alleged immigrants has settled in that Province. In regard to New Brunswick, the report condescends to some particulars. It states that they settled as follows:—Albert county, 26; Westmoreland, 207; Charlotte, 164; Victoria, 127; Restigouche, 29; Northumberland, 66. Now I come to a most interesting point: "York county, including MacAdam Junction, 3,093." It is very clear that those people have not settled at MacAdam Junction, and I have not heard of any such wonderful increase of population there. It is very evident that they were going through the country and out of the country, and gave their destination as MacAdam Junction, and out of the total for the Province of 3,712, no less than 3,093 are put down for York county, including MacAdam Junction. In all seriousness I would impress on the Minister the importance of carefully investigating these reports. They are entirely misleading, and I must say in reference to the expression that has fallen from the hon. member for York (Mr. Wallace) that I do not think it is a disloyal act to point it out to the Minister, in fact, I consider it my duty as a member of Parliament to do so. I do not believe any statements of this kind put forward can be of any possible utility, on the contrary they must be injurious.

Mr. BOWELL. The statement is not that they settled at MacAdam Junction. I understand the entries were made there. The member does not pretend to say, nor is it pointed out in this report, as to what became of them afterwards. They simply were entered there.

Mr. BORDEN. Why then put it in the report?

Mr. BOWELL. Because the entry was made at the Customs there. Where their destination was, the Customs officials do not pretend to say.

Mr. BORDEN. I am discussing the utility of publishing these statements.

Mr. BOWELL. That is the only statement that could be made.

Mr. BORDEN. If we are going to have lists of all the tourists published, let us have them stated. The statement in the report is headed: "Statement of immigrant arrivals."

Mr. BOWELL. These immigrants must have made entry there, or they would not have appeared in the report.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I desire to ask the member for York county whether he can state where any of those immigrants now are?

Mr. TEMPLE. I cannot say, of course, where the immigrants settled, but I know they are not settled at MacAdam Junction but are scattered throughout the county. York County is a very large one, and has a very great many back settlements, and they are settled throughout the county from one end to the other.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Did the hon. gentleman say that that large number of immigrants came into that county last year?

Mr. TEMPLE. I am not saying how many came in, I did not keep count; but no doubt there are many scattered throughout the length and breadth of the county.

Mr. McMULLEN. I should like to obtain an answer to a question I put to the Minister about two hours ago, respecting payments on page 38—D of the Auditor General's Report, the payments of $87.50 for certificates issued. I desire to know who these individuals were, where they were settled and what they are doing?

Mr. CARLING. I cannot state where they settled. This money was not contracted for last year. It was a disputed account, and we did not pay it until we had obtained the necessary further information.

Mr. McMULLEN. Will the hon. gentleman be able to furnish the names?

Mr. CARLING. I will bring them down.

Mr. WATSON, I should like to ask the Minister if the same means are adopted for gathering these Custom house figures as were employed between the years from 1882 to 1885.

Mr. CARLING. Yes; I presume so.

Mr. WATSON. Then, I say, the hon. gentleman should not be surprised that we should discredit the figures, because we had a discrepancy in the statement made by the hon. Minister in his reports to this House from year to year, of 103,000 as regards the number of persons who settled in the Province of Manitoba, and I feel satisfied a great portion of those people never went there. I pointed out year after year that those statements yearly made to the House were not accurate and reliable, and we found this to be the fact when the census was taken in 1885, and that our contention was correct. I believe our present contention will be found to be correct when the census is taken in 1891. So strongly did the Deputy Minister feel on this point that when before the Immigration and Colonisation Committee he attempted to bring me to book for a statement made by me in this House, that the figures given by me were not accurate. That gentleman cannot prove that I ever made a statement that was not correct, and the census has proved conclusively that my statements were perfectly accurate. I am glad the member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) referred to the immigration policy of the Local Government of Manitoba, and said they were doing a good work in regard to drawing settlers to the country. The Local Government is alive to the importance of settling the Province of Manitoba, and are adopting other measures in the interests of settlement, and are endeavoring by every means in their power to remove all obstacles out of the way of intending settlers. I do not propose to discuss the National Policy on this occasion, but I desire to call attention to the fact that the Local Legislature of Manitoba, including the Conservative members, has unanimously passed a resolution in favor of petitioning this Government to endeavor, if possible, to secure unrestricted trade with the United States, as one of the great means by which Manitoba can be settled and peopled. I hope the hon. Minister will take this matter into consideration. A statement was made by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) with which I agree, as to the necessity of employing suitable immigration agents. A compliment has been paid to the Local Government for securing the services of a very able gentleman who has been engaged in immigration matters for some years, and who was employed, to a limited extent, by hon. gentlemen opposite, and who has done good work in the old country in securing immigrants for Manitoba. He is to be examined before the Committee on Immigration and Colonisation to-morrow, and no doubt he will give good evidence. The Minister should be very particular as to the class of men he employs as immigration agents, and he should employ only practical men, who have a knowledge of the country to which they are directing others. There have been good grounds in the past for criticisms by the Opposition in regard to the action of the Government in spending large sums to little or no purpose, that the settlers who have come to this country have been very few in proportion to the large amount of money expended in inducing them to come here. I am told that this is mainly due to the class of immigration agents that are employed by the Government. I have been informed by gentlemen who have visited these agencies in the old country, that the men who are in charge of these offices are men who have no knowledge of any portion of Canada, men who are not practical at all, and that if an intending emigrant asks for advice as to what he should do with reference to any part of the Dominion, he is simply thrown a pamphlet which he can read for himself.

Mr. CARLING. Will the hon. gentleman give the name of any one of those agents who has not a knowledge of Canada.

Mr. WATSON. I will not name now.

Mr. CARLING. Why not do it now?

Mr. WATSON. I make the statement, believing it to be true, as I make every other statement on the floor of this House.

Mr. CARLING. The agents we have at the present time are: Mr. Dyke at Liverpool, who I think every one admits is a most competent emigration agent. The agent at Glasgow, who represented a constituency in the Ontario Legislature for a number of years, and had the confidence of the people of York, and the agent in Belfast who represented a constituency in eastern Ontario, and had the confidence of the people there. I think it ill-becomes the hon. gentleman to say that these gentlemen know nothing whatever about Canada.

Mr. WATSON. I would like to ask what these people know about the North-West or Manitoba.

Mr. CARLING. You said the whole of Canada.

Mr. WATSON. I made the statement on the authority of credible gentlemen who have told me what they themselves have seen in those offices. I must say that I do not think some of these are competent agents, even though they had the confidence of some of the constituencies in the Province of Ontario. I call the hon. gentleman's attention to Mr. J. F. Metcalfe, who has to-day the confidence of one of the constituencies of Ontario, and is at the same time an immigration officer of this Government. I find that, last year, he was paid $1,400 for acting as immigration agent in the office at Winnipeg. He received a salary from July 1st to December 31st of $900, and from April 1st to June 30th, $450. I believe that this money, voted for the purpose of immigration, is not judiciously expended. I do not think it is fairly or honestly spent, because Mr. Metcalfe is a representative in the Local Legislature of the Province of Ontario; he is engaged in that House attending to his sessional duties at a most important time of the year, when he should be in the city of Winnipeg, if he is a competent man. He is in Toronto to-day, when immigrants are going to the North-West by the thousands. Some 1,400 immigrants left Toronto for Manitoba last night, while this intelligent gentleman is probably engaged doing his duty to his constituents in the city of Toronto. I find, also, that the Minister allowed Mr. Metcalfe his expenses from the city of Winnipeg to Kingston, for the purpose of attending his sessional duties in the Local Legislature.

Mr. CARLING. He is not employed by the year.

Mr. WATSON. I find that Mr. Metcalfe has been engaged all the time during the last twelve months, with the exception of three months he sat in the Local Legislature.

Mr. CARLING. He was not employed then.

Mr. WATSON. I find that Mr. Metcalfe received travelling expenses from Winnipeg to Kingston on January 3rd, 1889, about the time the Local Legislature in Ontario opened.

Mr. CARLING. He was employed up to the first of the year and allowed his travelling expenses home.

Mr. WATSON. When was he employed again?

Mr. CARLING. In April or May.

Mr. WATSON. Yes; immediately after the Local House adjourned. I find that on May the 16th, just after the Ontario Legislature prorogued, he was allowed $52.45 for travelling expenses from Kingston to Winnipeg. I think the hon. Minister must know that from April to May is the most important part of the year for an agent to be in Winnipeg to look after immigrants, because they are the months that the largest number of immigrants go to Manitoba and the North-West. I do not know that Mr. Metcalfe possesses any qualities which fit him more than anybody else for this position. I believe his time has been occupied at home in being an auctioneer and schoolmaster, and he is known to be a pretty good sport. I do not find any fault with him for that, but I believe more suitable men could be employed for one-half the salary—men who have a practical knowledge of farming, and who could give more information to intending settlers than Mr. Metcalfe could. I believe there are practical men there who have such a wide knowledge such as possessed by Mr. McMillan, who is employed by the Local Government of the Province of Manitoba, and who has several years' experience in farming as an old country settler, and knows thoroughly the necessities of immigrants going into Manitoba. I believe that even the small amount voted for the purposes of immigration is not judiciously expended. I have cited one case here, in which I believe Mr. Metcalfe receives a good deal more money from the country than he gives a return for. Two men could be employed for this salary in the city of Winnipeg, either of whom would be able to give more information in this office than Mr. Metcalfe can.

Mr. CARLING. Mr. Metcalfe's services have been very highly appreciated by members on both sides of the House. Hon. gentlemen who have gone to Winnipeg and who have visited the immigration office and have seen what Mr. Metcalfe has done, have spoken to me, highly approving of his occupying that office, and referring to the services he has rendered to that country. I think no man has done more to divert the attention of our Ontario people from immigrating to the United States than he has, and in inducing them to move to Manitoba in preference to the United States. Mr. Metcalfe being well known in Ontario, and being a member of the Local Legislature, has come into contact with people from all parts of the Province, and he has been enabled to explain to them the great advantages that were offered in the North-West for people who wished to leave Ontario, as compared with Dakota and other States. I think Mr. Metcalfe has rendered good services. He is a man who is well thought of; a man that is popular in his own district, and I am quite satisfied that the Government could not spend money better than in paying Mr. Metcalfe for the services he has rendered.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Agriculture Committee meets to-morrow, and Mr. McMillan, who is immigration agent for the Manitoba Government, will, I presume, appear before that Committee. I am satisfied that if any member of that Committee asked Mr. McMillan his opinion as to Mr. Metcalfe's abilities, he would refute every statement the hon. gentleman has made, and would speak in the highest praise of Mr. Metcalfe's abilities. I was in Winnipeg last season, and made enquiries throughout the city in regard to Mr. Metcalfe, and the universal opinion was that no better man could be selected for the office.

Mr. DAVIN. But for the speech of the last speaker, I should hardly have intruded myself into this debate ; but it really trenches upon the inquisitorial power of Parliament. This Parliament is the highest court in the realm, and its most ancient and important function is that of enquiring into every detail of public action. It so happens to-night that we are discussing one of the most important matters that could possibly occupy the attention of the House, and how are we placed? All the leaders of the Opposition are gone, and all the Government leaders are gone, with one or two exceptions. Anyway, we are discussing a question that is at the heart of Canada—a question that is at the vitals of Canada—without the leaders on either side being present. I know that my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works is there, but after all he only represents a section of the Cabinet. I say it is a serious thing for Canada, that we should discuss the greatest question that could possibly be discussed in this country, and that the leaders of the Opposition and the leaders of the Government are practically absent. We look for them—where are they? I am sorry the question is forced upon us, but now I have to discuss it a little. On this question of immigration, I agree with what my friend the hon. member for Marquette said as to its importance. As far as his speech was political or made against the Government, I did not agree with him. That was the only weak part of his speech—where he tried to make a point against the Government. Hon. gentlemen may laugh at that, but I will show them in a minute that that is a thoroughly logical position. Every Government that has attempted to deal with this immigration question has made great mistakes. You cannot discuss the policy of this Government, or the policy of the Mackenzie Government, with regard to immigration, without putting your finger on spots which show that they both made great mistakes. In this country we have not yet solved the problem how to deal with this question of immigration. There has never yet been a Minister that understood how to grapple with it. We have had at the head of the Government a great Minister, a great manager of men, a brilliant man, a statesman, yet this question has not been solved. Take the portfolio of my hon. friend. A more amiable man or a finer man you could hardly dream of ; and take my hon. friend at the head of the cognate department, the Department of the Interior. Sir, at this moment we ought to have at the head of one or other of these Departments a man of genius, a man of great energy, but at the present moment we have a Cabinet of antiques ; I do not care how broadcast it is sent to-morrow morning, it has to be spoken out—we have a Cabinet of antiques. We have one splendid brain in the person of my right hon. friend the Prime Minister, and power and knowledge in the person of the Minister of Justice. Now, I speak here not only as a representative of my own constituency, but I speak for Canada, I speak for the young men of Canada, and I say that what we want here to-day in Canada is a strong, vigorous Government. We could save a million dollars, nay, two million dollars a year, if we once fell back on the true principle of putting capable men at the head of affairs. My idea is that we could save $2,000,000 a year to this country if only the proper policy were adopted. I say it is a thing not to be stood any longer, and I am very glad I find an echo in the House. I say that the proper plan to manage a department is for the Minister, who is responsible to this House, to control it. But ours is a government by deputy Ministers, who are not in any way responsible, and we are bossed by deputy Ministers. The thing must be stopped. I am very sorry this immigration question has forced itself on the House, because I had a motion on the paper and had arranged with my friends from Manitoba and the North-West that I would introduce the question in a few words, and then they would discuss it, but my hon. friend from Selkirk has brought this question before the House. I want to tell this Committee that they are utterly mistaken if they think we in the North-West are in a position of dependency or mendicancy. Instead of coming to them as mendicants, we can come to them as masters. That is our real position, because we have the resources. You may say, Sir, by law, that we cannot control our land, but do you mean to suppose for one moment that once the population come in any law will prevent our having control of our land? We come as men who hold in our hands the destinies of Canada. I say that the great question of the day is the immigration question. I am not going now to discuss any scheme. You may ask me, what is your scheme? Well, I am not a Minister. I have no responsibility, and I agree with Mr. Burke, who said : There is nothing more ridiculous than for a man who has no responsibility to propound a scheme. I only lay down general principles, and I say there ought to be a great system of immigration to bring people in and to keep them in, and that whatever aid be given should have a relation to their settlement. Canada will not tolerate any Government that is not determined to deal vigorously with pressing questions like immigration. I will explain at a later period my views about immigration, because I have a motion on the paper, and have arranged with my friends about it, but I will say that is the heart, the vital thing, the only sane, far-seeing policy, and any Ministry—I do not care whether the right hon. gentleman is at the head of the Government or not, or whether the Minister of Public Works is at the head or not—cannot be true to Canada if they do not deal with that question.

Mr. WATSON. I will just say in answer to the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) that I do not care what Mr. McMillan will say before the Committee on Agriculture. I stated what was correct ; that two men, each of them as competent as this Mr. Metcalfe, could be employed by the Government, and would give more information to intending settlers than he. I do not care what Mr. McMillan or anybody else says, I speak of what I know.

Agent at Ottawa$1,800

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice we have an interpreter at Ottawa. What particular language is he to interpret? I can understand that it might be necessary to keep an agent here at Ottawa, but I do not see why there is any necessity for an assistant or an interpreter.

Mr. CARLING. There is Mr. Akerlindh, who is acquainted with the German and Scandinavian languages, and is a very excellent young man. He has charge of the office when the agent is away.

Mr. McMULLEN. I can understand that, at a point where immigrants arrive, it may be necessary to have a man of that stamp, but I cannot understand the necessity for keeping a man of that stamp at such a place as Ottawa.

Mr. CARLING. I do not know what the hon. gentleman means by "a man of that stamp." He is very intelligent, and acts as messenger and attendant to the office, and he speaks German and Scandinavian, and writes well.

Mr. McMULLEN. Do any German or Scandinavian immigrants stop here?

Mr. CARLING. Quite a number.

Mr. McMULLEN. But this is not the first place that they stop at?

Mr. CARLING. They come from Quebec to Ottawa, and there is quite a large settlement of Germans and Scandinavians in this agency.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). The Minister ought to be able to make some statement as to the number that arrive here every year. Is it one hundred?

Mr. CARLING. Oh, yes; more than that.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). We ought to know the number. Is not the agent competent enough to do the work?

Mr. CARLING. Yes; but he has to go off into the country very frequently, and to look after the settlement of the immigrants.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Has the agent here more work to do than the agents in Toronto, Hamilton or London?

Mr. CARLING. They all have assistants.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). At the same salary?

Mr. CARLING. Perhaps not quite so much, though I am not certain. This is a very intelligent man.

Agent, Halifax.....$1,000

Mr. JONES (Halifax). What does the Minister propose to do with the vote for the immigrant shed in Halifax?

Mr. CARLING. The contract has been let and the work is going on.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Who has the contract?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Mr. Connor, who was the lowest tenderer.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Was it let by public tender?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Agent, Winnipeg.....$1,000

Mr. MULLOCK. Who is the agent at Winnipeg?

Mr. CARLING. The agent is Mr. Bennett.

Mr. MULLOCK. What are the duties of the agent?

Mr. CARLING. To take charge of the agency, and all those who are connected with the office, and to make reports to the Department, and to see that immigrants are properly cared for, and to assist in having them properly located, and to give them all the information possible.

Mr. MULLOCK. Does he come personally in contact with the immigrants or is he simply in charge of the office?

Mr. CARLING. He is a very industrious man, and looks after all the details of his work.

Mr. MULLOCK. What are the duties of the intelligence officers?

Mr. CARLING. The intelligence officers are employed for the purpose of giving information to immigrants on their arrival, to assist them to their locations, to communicate with them, and to make themselves generally useful to the immigrants.

Mr. MULLOCK. I observe that at Winnipeg there are a great many officers employed. On page D-32 of the Auditor General's Report of 1888-89 I find the following: Anderson, Baldwinson, Bardal, Bennett, Grahame, Herbert, Jacobson, Metcalfe, Ohlen, Peterson, Robinson and Savage, in all thirteen persons. Might I ask the Minister who is at the head of these thirteen persons?

Mr. CARLING. All we have at Winnipeg are eight. Mr. Grahame is not connected with the Department. He was, but he is not in the service of the Government now. Mr. Bennett is the agent, and Mr. Tétu, the assistant agent. Mr. Ohlen is also assistant agent and interpreter, Mr. Robinson is a clerk in the office, and Mr. Herbert is a caretaker. Those are all the permanent officers we have there. That is all the permanent officers we have. Mr. Metcalfe is employed temporarily.

Mr. MULLOCK. Is there any one appointed in the place of Mr. Grahame?

Mr. CARLING. Mr. Bennett. He was on the staff at Brandon, and was put on at the same salary as Mr. Grahame.

Mr. MULLOCK. At the agency at Winnipeg, the highest salary, I find, any one receives all the year round, is $1,400, and certain allowances; but I find Mr. Metcalfe gets $1,400 for a much shorter period; he is paid at the rate of $1,800.

Mr. CARLING. He is paid by the month. He is paid $150 a month for 8 months in the year. He is not in a permanent position.

Mr. MULLOCK. Last year Mr. Metcalfe was absent from Winnipeg from the first of May to the first of June. He left to return to his duties on the 16th May, but his new salary began on the first of June. Who discharged his duties from the first of May till the time when he resumed his duties?

Mr. CARLING. Mr. Jacobson, who was in the office.

Mr. MULLOCK. Then if Mr. Jacobson could discharge the duties for Mr. Metcalfe—

Mr. CARLING. He did not alone, he did it with the assistance of those connected with the agency.

Mr. MULOCK. Was any person employed to discharge Mr. Metcalfe's duties during the time he was absent?

Mr. CARLING. He was absent during the winter time. He left on the first of January, and returned in May.

Mr. MULOCK. Is there anything required from Mr. Metcalfe until the 16th May each year?

Mr. CARLING. We do not pay him when he is absent. I explained that Mr. Jacobson, Mr. Bennett, Mr. Rowland, and those gentlemen connected with the office, discharged the duties.

Mr. MULOCK. To my mind it is most incomprehensible that it should be necessary to employ Mr. Metcalfe in the dull season, from June to January, when business is on the wane, and to relieve him and let him go away from January to June, the time when business is brisk.

Mr. CARLING. It is only for a short time.

Mr. MULOCK. Mr. Metcalfe may be a very efficient officer, and we must have his services if we pay for them. I presume he is employed in order to give intelligence to incoming settlers; and if those duties can be efficiently discharged by the remaining members of the staff during the busiest portion of the year, I cannot conceive any reason for his being appointed during the dull portion of the year. The Minister has not made that clear. I do not want to say what the transaction appears to my mind to be, but the Minister must feel himself that the only conclusion one can draw from this is not favorable for his Department. I think this item should stand over till the Minister gives a detailed statement of the duties of that office. I think we should have statements showing the times when immigration is brisk. I presume the books in the office in Winnipeg will show the number of immigrants that passed through the office daily, would they not?

Mr. CARLING. I fancy so.

Mr. MULOCK. We ought to know what the business of the Winnipeg agency is, the number of immigrants passing through the office, and then we can see whether this whole staff is necessary. That we should employ a man when business is dull, contrary to all business principles, and relieve him when business is brisk, contrary to all business principles, is something that I cannot understand. I ask the Minister if he can give us the information?

Mr. CARLING. I cannot give such details. The hon. gentleman wants us to bring the books down from Winnipeg to know the duties of Mr. Metcalfe, is that it?

Mr. WATSON. Surely your Department knows the duties of Mr. Metcalfe here.

Mr. CARLING. I stated that he is employed nine months in the year at $150 a month. He is an outside man, he is not confined to the office. Immigrants are arriving there every month and week. If he was not there in the month of April, he was not paid for it. He is only paid for the time he is there. He is a most efficient and active officer, and he looks after the immigrants to see that they are properly located and get their location tickets. He acts between the immigration department and the land department, and all parties who have been there, whether friends or foes of the Government, have said that he has done excellent service, and rendered great assistance to the immigrants who arrive there.

Mr. CARLING.

Mr. WATSON. Who will give information to the immigrants now?

Mr. CARLING. Mr. Bennett and his staff.

Mr. WATSON. Have they any more leisure time now than they will have three or four months hence?

Mr. CARLING. I do not know that Mr. Metcalfe will need any more assistance.

Mr. WATSON. Will the hon. gentleman tell me why Mr. Grahame severed his connection with the Department.

Mr. CARLING. Mr. Grahame sent in his resignation and it was accepted.

Mr. MULOCK. Was he asked to send it in?

Mr. CARLING. I do not know that he was asked officially.

Mr. WATSON. Was Mr. Grahame an efficient officer?

Mr. CARLING. He had been there for some time.

Mr. WATSON. I think we should have this information. When a member asks why Mr. Grahame was dismissed, I think the Minister should tell us.

Mr. HESSON. We are not voting money for Mr. Grahame.

Mr. CARLING. We considered that the present man would suit the position better.

Mr. WATSON. Was Mr. Grahame asked to resign?

Mr. CARLING. Mr. Grahame wrote a letter stating that he intended to embark in another business, and we accepted his resignation.

Mr. WATSON. Was it suggested that he had better do so rather than be dismissed?

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Was there any complaint made as to the manner in which Mr. Grahame had performed his duties?

Mr. CARLING. There were some complaints.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Under these circumstances we should have information as to what complaints were made. It is due to the Committee that if an employé, who has long been in the service of the Government, is removed, an explanation should be made by the Minister of the reasons of his resignation. Further, if Mr. Metcalfe's duties at Winnipeg are required during nine months of the year, were they not required during twelve months, and during the most busy part of the season? Mr. Metcalfe was only retained in that position to suit his convenience, and because he happened to represent Kingston in the Ontario Legislature. It is the duty of this Government to ask him to resign one position or the other. This Government, moreover, are so generous as to pay his travelling expenses to Winnipeg and return, and in the Auditor General's Report will be found several accounts for his travelling expenses. This item should be allowed to stand until full information is submitted with respect to Mr. Grahame and Mr. Metcalfe.

Mr. CARLING. Mr. Metcalfe is not at present in the employ of the Government; there is no understanding that he shall be employed; but if the Government think it necessary to have an efficient man like Mr. Metcalfe again, they will employ him.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Does the Government consider it necessary that Mr. Metcalfe should be employed again from June or July.

Mr. CARLING. April is the time.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). May last year.

Mr. BOWELL. The Auditor General's Report says he was employed since 1st April.

Mr. WATSON. He did not go to Winnipeg before 16th May.

Mr. McMULLEN. My hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock) has made the very reasonable proposition that this item should stand over until the Minister is prepared to lay on the Table a report as to the arrivals of immigrants at Winnipeg during the several months of last year. This information is necessary, in order to consider whether the Government were justified in employing Mr. Metcalfe from 1st July to 31st December.

Mr. CARLING. There is no undertaking before the Committee to employ Mr. Metcalfe; there is no salary in the Estimates for Mr. Metcalfe; he is not now in the employ of the Government, and he has no intimation that he will be employed. If it should be thought necessary to employ Mr. Metcalfe subsequently, that would be another matter. At present he is not in the employ of the Government in any way whatever, and he has no promise of any such employment.

Mr. McMULLEN. There was no vote before the Committee last year with respect to Mr. Metcalfe. The question connected with his employment only came up because it appeared from the Auditor General's Report that he had received $150 a month from 1st July to 31st December. We want the reasons why he was so employed.

Mr. CARLING. The Government thought it necessary to employ him, or they would not have employed him; and if the Government think it necessary to employ him, they will employ him. That is the information I have given to the House, and that is all the information I am able, at this moment, to give.

Mr. McMULLEN. We have a right to demand this information, for it is our duty to enquire into these matters. The Government have no right to say they will employ a man and the Opposition have nothing to do with it. We have a right to enquire into these matters and to get satisfaction on the different points. We now ask a reply from the Minister with respect to the arrivals of immigrants at Winnipeg during the 12 months, which will enable us to decide whether the Government were warranted in employing Mr. Metcalfe during that period or not.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman is very exacting, and I doubt whether he knows himself what he wants. The item under consideration is one connected with immigration to that part of the country, and the Minister has explained very elaborately what is intended to be done, what is intended to be paid, and what has been done in the past. Every intelligent man knows the months during which immigration is most likely to flow into that country, during April, May and June, and if the Government decide to employ certain additional officers at busy seasons, the time to criticise the items is when the Government puts an item in the Estimates for that purpose, but in this case no sum is asked; therefore, the information asked is decidedly unreasonable.

Mr. McMULLEN. Last year no intimation was made to the Committee that the Government intended to employ Mr. Metcalfe, and his name was not in the Estimates before the Committee. It fact, it was only known from an item appearing in the Auditor General's Report, showing that he had received $150 per month from 1st July to 1st January. The Committee are now enquiring as to the reasons why the Government saw fit to employ him during that period. The Minister does not ask us to consent now to the passage of any item to pay Mr. Metcalfe, even though he should consider it necessary to employ him, and consequently we are justified in enquiring into his employment in the past. The hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Sproule), seems to constitute himself the funnel of the Minister of Agriculture, as the member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) did for the Government last session, but he has not answered the question. We want to know why it was considered necessary to employ Mr. Metcalfe—who is a member of the Local Legislature, and an out-and-out follower of the First Minister, representing the same constituency in the Provincial Parliament that the right hon. gentleman does here—at $150 a month, to go to Winnipeg and sport himself there for six months, or to discharge certain nominal duties in the immigration office? We want to know, was there such a rush of immigrants to Winnipeg between the 1st July and the 31st of September, that a man occupying the distinguished position of member in the Local Legislature, had to be sent there to meet that emergency? The only way we can find out if such an emergency existed, is for the Government to comply with the request of my hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock).

Mr. CARLING. I may say, as I have said before, that Mr. Metcalfe is not now in the employ of the Government. His employment ceased on the 1st January, and he may or may not be employed again. If the hon. gentleman thinks the Department has been wrong in employing Mr. Metcalfe as assistant in the immigration office at Winnipeg, he can vote want of confidence condemning the Government. Mr. Metcalfe has been paid for his services and has ceased to be in the employ of the Government.

Mr. McMULLEN. When the Minister refuses to give the reasonable information we have asked for, the only thing we can conclude is that the engagement of Mr. Metcalfe is nothing short of a barefaced job. Any man who lives in Winnipeg, or any one who knows anything about the immigrants coming to that country, knows that from July to December is not the period at which immigrants arrive.

Mr. CARLING. Immigrants arrive at all periods of the year.

Mr. McMULLEN. The early part of the spring is the time the immigrants arrive, and I am informed that some 1,400 left for Winnipeg last night. If a man like Mr. Metcalfe is required at all, he is required in April, May and June, and not between July and December.

Mr. CARLING. Did you say we employed him in July?

Mr. McMULLEN. He was employed, according to the Auditor General's Report, from 1st July to the 31st December.

Mr. BOWELL. Read the next item.

Mr. McMULLEN. The next item says that he was employed from 1st April until the 30th June, and we find that on the 16th May he was paid his travelling expenses from Kingston to Winnipeg. It would thus appear that he was engaged on the 1st April, and that he did not start for Winnipeg until the 16th of May. That bears out the statement I have made that there is a job about this matter. He was a month and a half in the employ of the Government, at $150 per month, before he went up there at all. Will the Minister of Customs, who drew my attention to the second item, explain on what ground the Government paid him wages for a month and a half when he was not at his office at all?

Mr. BOWELL. I will try to.

Mr. McMULLEN. We want the explanation.

Mr. BOWELL. If the hon. gentleman had the ordinary courtesy of a member of Parliament, he would not continue to interrupt before a Minister, or any member of Parliament, from whom he asked a question, has been able to give a reply. That is the ordinary course the hon. member pursues, especially with regard to myself, and I am not at all astonished.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). We are waiting for the explanation.

Mr. BOWELL. I expected better from the member for Elgin. Whatever he may be here, I know what he is outside.

An hon. MEMBER. Order.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) is not in the Chair and I do not propose to be ruled by him.

Mr. MULOCK. I did not say "order."

Mr. BOWELL. The account as it appears here, shows that Mr. Metcalfe was employed from the 1st April to the 30th June, for which he received $150 a month. It shows that he was afterwards employed from the 1st July to 31st December, and there is an item for travelling expenses from Kingston to Winnipeg on 16th May, 1889. From this last item the member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) infers that he did not go to Winnipeg until that time, and that he received his pay from the 1st April to the 16th of the following month without doing anything for it. I am not prepared to answer that question, because I know nothing about it. It may be that he was in Winnipeg and was called on to return for some purpose, but, at all events, I have no doubt that the Minister of Agriculture, when he enquires into the matter, can answer, and will no doubt answer that question satisfactorily. It strikes me that the items before the House at present are for the payment of an agent and an interpreter at Winnipeg. What the employment of Mr. Metcalfe has to do with these items I do not understand. I am as ignorant on that point as I am as to the whereabouts of Mr. Metcalfe from the 1st of April to the 16th of May. The hon. member for North Wellington says there is no vote in these Estimates out of which Mr. Metcalfe is to be paid.

Mr. CARLING.

Mr. McMULLEN. I did not say that. If the hon. gentleman will allow me I will tell him what I did say.

Mr. BOWELL. I certainly understood him to say so. There is the last item, under which this discussion, I think, would fairly arise. But I do not wish to be understood as saying that the information asked for by the hon. member for North York is not properly asked for under this item. If the question were put with the view of ascertaining whether there are sufficient immigrants going to the North-West to justify the retention of an agent at that point, I could understand the force of it, and the necessity for an explanation by the Minister of Agriculture; and when you come to the last item in the Estimates, the propriety or impropriety of employing any assistants to the agent at Winnipeg might very fairly be brought to the attention of the Committee and the Government. I know, from a little personal knowledge I have of Mr. Metcalfe, that he is a very active and energetic man in the performance of that work and every other which he undertakes. I know also that during my visits to the North-West I heard him spoken of in the most laudatory terms, as being the very best man we could have for the peculiar position he occupies, that is, to inform and instruct immigrants as to where they can locate. He is not only at Winnipeg, but he goes to Calgary, Fort McLeod, and almost every other section of the North-West, giving necessary information to immigrants. Whether it is necessary to have such an officer is a fair question for the Opposition and the Government to consider. It has been said that Mr. Metcalfe knows nothing of the North-West, or not as much as others who have lived there longer than he. I believe there are few men in Canada who have a better general knowledge of the capabilities of the different localities, and the best places to which to direct immigrants, than Mr. Metcalfe.

Mr. McMULLEN. I just wish to correct the hon. Minister of Customs with regard to some words which he put into my mouth. He said that I had stated that there was no item in the Estimates out of which Mr. Metcalfe could be paid. I did not say anything of the sort. I stated that there was no item in last year's Estimates with which Mr. Metcalfe's name was associated so as to enable the Committee to understand that it was the intention of the Government to engage him. The hon. Minister endeavored to read me a lecture on parliamentary etiquette. I have heard the hon. gentleman called to order as frequently as I have been. I have endeavored to be courteous to him, and although I have not been as long in the House as he has, I think I understand parliamentary etiquette as well as he does, and he need not read me a lecture on the subject. I still contend that before we pass this item, the Government should supply us with the information we ask. We know from the Auditor General's Report that Mr.

Metcalfe was engaged on the 1st of April, and that he did not leave Kingston to go to the North West until the 16th of May, and we do not know that he started then; we only know that he drew $52 for his expenses. What we want to know is why his visit is deferred until then, when the seeding is all past, and the period for the influx of immigrants is past also. Why is it necessary to send him there then, and keep him until the 30th of December at $150 a month payable from the 1st of April? My hon. friend at my left suggests that before we pass the item we should have laid on the Table the number of immigrants who went into the country during each month, so that we could see whether his employment is justified or not. If the Minister does not produce that information to the Committee, we have a right to come to the conclusion that it was a job to find Mr. Metcalfe a place.

Mr. CARLING. If the hon. gentleman looks at page 82 of the report, he will see the number that arrived at Winnipeg in each month.

Mr. MULOCK. While the hon. gentleman is looking into that, I would like to bring the Minister back to the question I asked him some time ago in reference to the removal of Mr. Grahame. I understood that Mr. Grahame's withdrawal from the public service was not voluntary. Perhaps the Minister will inform us exactly under what circumstances he left the public service?

Mr. CARLING. I do not know that I can give all the information the hon. gentleman asks for. I know that Mr. Grahame was an officer for some years, and that he was not altogether satisfactory to the people; and we thought, and he thought himself, that it would be better to retire, and he sent in his resignation to the Government on the 1st January, and was allowed to continue up to the 1st July.

Mr. MULOCK. Would the hon. gentleman say when the Government came to the conclusion that his management was not satisfactory?

Mr. CARLING. At the time he sent in his resignation.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. Minister a moment ago said the resignation followed that. We may as well strip the transaction of the gauze thrown over it. I think the hon. Minister knows pretty well why Mr. Grahame left the service, and I think it would only be candid on his part to tell us. If he does not, somebody else must tell the Committee for him. It is well known that Mr. Grahame was an honest and candid officer, who in his reports told the truth, but because they did not commend themselves to the Administration, he was crowded out. That I understand to be the reason he left. I ask the hon. Minister whether that is the case or not?

Mr. CARLING. Mr. Grahame was not removed from office for the purpose of putting some one else in his place. A reduction was made in the service; Mr. Bennett was brought from Brandon to Winnipeg, and Mr. Baker from Qu'Appelle to Brandon. We did away with the immigration office at Brandon and at Medicine Hat, and sent Mr. Sutherland to Vancouver.

Mr. MULOCK. Was the change made in the interests of economy so as to reduce the staff?

Mr. CARLING. The reduction was made in the interests of the public.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. gentleman must see that his explanations are lacking in candour. First of all he told us that Mr. Grahame's administration was not altogether satisfactory, and that he was induced to send in his resignation. Now the Minister tells us that the change was made in the public interest. A moment previous he gave us to understand that the change was made in the interest of economy, in order to reduce the staff. They removed Mr. Grahame and removed the agent at Brandon to Winnipeg, and from Qu'Appelle to Brandon.

Mr. CARLING. The Qu'Appelle office was done away with.

Mr. MULOCK. So, in consequence of there being no business at Qu'Appelle to require an agent, that agent was removed. If there was to be a reduction made in the staff it should have been made in the office where the reduction should take place. If the object was economy, the Minister did an unfair thing in sacrificing the man at Winnipeg, whose services were wanted, and putting in another person from another office which he closed. The hon. gentleman admits that pressure was brought on Grahame to induce him to resign. First of all he admitted that the change was made in the interests of economy, and when asked the question blank, he says, in the public interest. It is forced upon my mind that the man was removed because he had the courage to do his duty. I would call the attention of the Minister to another very unsound doctrine. When my hon. friend asked for information with regard to certain expenditure, and as to whether or not it was the intention of the Government to continue a certain policy, the reply was that the Government had decided on its course, and if the Committee was not satisfied, they could move a motion of want of confidence. We have certain rights and obligations with respect to public expenditure. It is our duty to see that the Government give the information required by the people's representatives and the Minister of Agriculture repudiates that doctrine when he declines to give the information required. His Department will not stand such a mode of procedure. It is costing the country a great deal of money, and, if the Minister chooses to continue that course, it will ruin his Department.

Mr. McMULLEN. I wish to draw attention to the immigration report. This report, at page 82, gives a record of the immigrants who arrived at Port Arthur en route for Manitoba and the North-West Territories:—

January	529	July	2,422
February	700	August	1,282
March	6,521	September	1,841
April	4,907	October	1,157
May	4,167	November	1,125
June	2,369	December	659

There are not more than one-third in the other months over April and May, and he was not there then at all. March, 6,800, and April 4,900, and he was not there. We want to know why, in the months when the arrivals were least numerous, it was necessary to engage Metcalfe?

Mr. TAYLOR. A great number of the immigrants who went in in March and April were immigrants who had been out there the year before, and made their locations, and then came back in the spring. The same thing is going on to-day. I know of great numbers from my own county who were out there last year, and went with Metcalfe through the country, settled their locations, and are leaving this spring with their families for those locations.

Mr. WATSON. It appears to me we are getting further evidence all the time, even from hon. gentlemen opposite. We now find that hon. gentlemen who have been out there last year, and are going out again this spring, are still counted as immigrants.

Mr. TAYLOR. No.

Mr. WATSON. Yes; the Minister of Agriculture tells us that he counts them at Port Arthur. That is the way in which these statements are misleading to this House. I think I can throw some light on the manner in which Mr. Grahame was dismissed. He was giving satisfaction to the people of Manitoba, and, when occasion required it, he made a true statement in his report. In the report of 1888, I was surprised to find that he would dare to make such a statement as he did, but he did not refuse to do his duty. In his report, dated the 31st December, 1887, Mr. Grahame says:

"During the present year there has been a large amount of work performed, and this, I may say, under great difficulties, which was chiefly owing to want of proper accommodation for the immigrants, the old sheds having been partly destroyed by fire, and the remaining portion being unfit for human habitation. You will readily understand that, had it not been for the strenuous exertions of the medical attendant, myself and staff, during the past three or four years, and by a large expenditure for drugs, disinfectants, medical attendance, scavenging, &c., &c., the premises would have been the scene of a large amount of disease, most of it doubtless ending in death to the sufferers. These difficulties necessitated the almost constant attendance of the medical officer, while either myself or staff were in or about the premises in most cases until after midnight. We are still compelled to be at our posts for very long hours, but as soon as the new immigration premises will be completed, we expect the necessary conveniences for making the immigrants comfortable during their stay with us. I regret to have again to call your attention to the fact that we get too many of the laboring class without means, and not a few who are physically unable to earn their own livelihood."

And further on he says:

"Several of these people came to me on their arrival, complaining that persons calling themselves immigration agents induced them to come to this country with a promise of immediate employment, at fabulous wages."

Now, I submit that that report of Mr. Grahame's was the cause of his dismissal. He reported there contrary to the wishes of the Minister of Agriculture, and contrary to the views advanced by his deputy. The other day before the Immigration Committee we had such men as Mr. Webster making comparisons between Manitoba and Dakota, which to my mind are exaggerated. It is on the strength of these exaggerated reports that men are induced to go there, and they find they are deceived, and then they curse the Department or any one else who has induced them to go there. The Government should be very careful to select men as Government agents who are thoroughly conversant with the country, who can advise the immigrants well, and can prove the truth of what they are telling to them. It is not at all necessary to exaggerate the true state of affairs in the Province of Manitoba in order to induce men to go there if they are advised by competent men who know all about the country to which they are advising them to go.

Mr. BORDEN. I understood the Minister of Customs to say, with regard to some strictures of mine on the tables of the officer at Halifax, that these tables were made up from entries in the Custom house, and, therefore, these people could not be tourists or ordinary travellers. Since then, I have had an opportunity of examining the tables further, and I will call further attention to the report of the Minister of Agriculture at page 27. If these people entered at the Custom house as immigrants, I presume they would bring with them certain effects, particularly as I find they were cabin passengers. I find in this table, effects, nil; cash, nil; total, nil. I think that establishes beyond a question that these people were not immigrants but were tourists. They were cabin passengers who, it is alleged, came into this country as immigrants with absolutely nothing. I would further point out that of these people the nationality of 5,368 appears under the heading United States citizens, and there are 1,180 English. The declared destination of 5,840 is Nova Scotia. Who can pretend to say for a moment that 5,368 citizens of the United States, and cabin passengers at that, came to Nova Scotia and settled there last year as immigrants? The thing is perfectly absurd. The fact is that these people entered Nova Scotia via the city of Halifax as tourists, passed up through these Provinces, and went home to the United States by some other port. It is worse than useless, because it is misleading, to supply information of this kind to this House.

Mr. CARLING. If the hon. gentleman will look at page 23 of the same report, he will see that the tourists have been deducted from the total number.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The facts which appear to have been disclosed in relation to the retirement of Mr. Grahame from the public service seem to indicate a state of affairs which it is not in the public interest should exist, and I think the Minister would have done more credit to his Department if he had complied with the usage that Ministers should give every information to the Committee, and had disclosed the reason why Mr. Grahame retired. I understood the hon. gentleman to say distinctly that Mr. Grahame was not officially asked to retire. That clearly means that he was unofficially asked to retire. Then, in the face of a report which Mr. Grahame made to this House a year or two ago, and which was made the subject of comment both in this House and in the press, it became the duty of the hon. gentleman to state distinctly whether Mr. Grahame's retirement was asked for because he discharged fairly, fully and frankly the duties which he was asked to perform. If a public officer is discharged from the public service because he tells the truth, it is a system which strikes a fatal blow at the efficiency of the public service altogether. If public officials understand that their only hope of retention or promotion depends upon their making reports satisfactory to the Department, although those reports may be a suppression of the truth, or a violation of the truth, then I say it will be a sad day for the public service at large. Now the facts are before us. Mr. Grahame made a report a year or two ago which was not satisfactory to the Department, but was satisfactory to the public at large, because it disclosed the truth, and it is the truth we are all seeking to obtain. Now, whether that report was palatable or not, it contained a fair statement of facts, and the officer who made that report was entitled to expect that he would be commended by the head of the Department, and not reprimanded; and if it is a fact that because he made that report he was asked to resign, I say it is a circumstance which calls for the fullest enquiry and the fullest explanation. I did myself, personally, regret very much that the Minister should have exhibited a rather uncandid spirit in his answers to the hon. gentleman who spoke on this side, on that point. It is an important point, involving not only Mr. Grahame's personal position, but involving the public interest at large. It is well that public officials should know whether they are to be commended or whether they are to be reprimanded when they disclose fairly the facts with reference to the service in which they are engaged. I will add this further, merely with reference to Mr. Metcalfe. It does appear to me that the facts disclosed in that matter require some further explanation than the Minister has given. It appears that this gentleman holds a position in the Local Legislature, and he is allowed by the Department to return from Winnipeg and discharge his duties as representative of the people in that Legislature, and the hon. gentleman pays him for travelling from Winnipeg down to discharge his duties and back again to his work. I find that in the Auditor General's Report, that so flagrant did the payment of this money appear to the Auditor General, that he called the attention of the Department to it in the most official way, and he asked how it was that this gentleman was permitted to leave his post of duty in Winnipeg and travel back to Kingston, and from Kingston on again to Winnipeg when he resumed his duties, and was paid for these travelling expenses out of the public purse? He travels, not in the public interest, not in the discharge of any duties connected with his appointment, but to carry out some personal object of his own, to attend to certain duties in the Local Legislature with which we have nothing to do. I find under date of 18th November, 1889, the Auditor General calls attention of the Deputy Minister of Agriculture to this charge, and asks him:

"Would you please explain why J. H. Metcalfe, Intelligence Officer at Winnipeg, was paid his travelling expenses from Winnipeg to Kingston in January, 1889, and return from Kingston in May, 1889? Unless this trip was on official business it is not a proper charge against any vote, and the amount, $104.90, should be refunded."

The Deputy Minister replies:

"As respects the item of travelling expenses to Mr. J. H. Metcalfe, Intelligence Officer at Winnipeg, at the dates stated in your letter, in January and May, 1889, I have to say that such travelling was directed and authorised by the Minister of Agriculture. Mr. Metcalfe lives at Kingston, being employed during a certain portion of the year at Winnipeg. I hope you will permit me to observe that we do not recognise your right to enquire into the propriety of any authorisation to his agents to incur travelling expenses by the Minister of Agriculture, he being alone responsible for matters of this nature."

Well, that is not a very courteous reply, I must say, on the part of the Deputy Minister of Agriculture. It is perfectly apparent to the Committee that if the Auditor General has no right to enquire into the propriety of that payment, then the duty devolves still more strongly upon the Committee of this House to ascertain under whose authority this gentleman was paid. Now, I venture to say that the explanation, so far as it is an explanation, which the Deputy Minister of Agriculture gave, was distinctly misleading. This gentleman was not authorised to be paid his travelling expenses, because he resided at Winnipeg. It is in evidence before the Committee that he came back to discharge his duties as a member of the Legislature in Toronto. The Auditor General was not satisfied with that report, and on 27th November, he says:

"Mr. Metcalfe's account of expenses from Kingston to Winnipeg on May 16th, 1889, was not certified as being necessary and in the interest of immigration, by yourself or any one in your Department."

To which the deputy replies:

"You state that Mr. Metcalfe's account for expenses from Kingston to Winnipeg, on the 16th May, 1889, was not certified as being necessary and in the interest of immigration, either by myself, or any one in this Department. On this point I beg to point out that the account was initiated by myself, having been made out in the first place on a slip of paper, and subsequently pasted on one of the Departmental forms, containing the declaration to which you refer."

That explanation appears to have been disingenuous again, and the Auditor General writes again:

"With reference to the account of Mr. Metcalfe for travelling expenses from Winnipeg to Kingston, it appears to me that your initials were put on the account before Mr. Metcalfe's certificate. If I understand your contention rightly, it is that your initials on an account should carry with them the evidence, that unless the contrary is proved, all the requirements of the Audit Act, and every Act affecting expenditure in your Department, have been complied with. Everything affecting the Department of Agriculture is not known to you, just as everything affecting the Audit Office is not known to me, and it is important to know what each of us implies by his signature. An easy, and it appears to me, a rational way of knowing what is conveyed, is by putting it in writing over the signature."

That is a very common sense and very practical statement by the Auditor General. Now, under these circumstances, it does appear to me that the Auditor General having been refused an explanation, the whole circumstances connected with the payment of this gentleman's salary and the payment of his travelling expenses, appears to be, to say the least, exceedingly exceptional and hardly defensible, and this Committee should have the fullest information before they are asked to vote the sum of money in the Estimates here, out of which the same expenditure may be made the next year. If the hon. gentleman says it is not his intention to re-appoint this gentleman, so far so good; but he has not said so, so far as we can gather. He reserves to himself full right to allow this gentleman to travel backwards and forwards at the expense of the public, attending to his parliamentary duties at Toronto. The whole thing appears to me to require very much fuller explanation than the gentleman has deemed fit to give, and I will express the hope that when he does give it, he will do so with his accustomed courtesy, and with full facts the Committee have a right to expect.

Mr. CARLING. I think I have given every explanation which can possibly be expected of me. I may say that the report made by Mr. Grahame had nothing whatever to do with his resignation, I say that most distinctly. With regard to Mr. Metcalfe, his home is in Kingston, and the agreement with Mr. Metcalfe was that he should be employed at Winnipeg at so much a month, and his fare paid there and return. That is a plain statement of the whole case. He was considered a most active and useful man, and it was thought necessary to engage his services. Every one who has been in the North-West testifies to that.

Mr. MULOCK. I wish to call the attention of the Minister to the state of the facts disclosed by the report and statistics embodied herein. The Minister of Agriculture stated that the work of the Winnipeg agency depended on the number of immigrants passing through the office; and, that being the case, by reference to the statistics contained in his report for the year ending December, 1889, we can form a very accurate idea as to the demands made on the staff at Winnipeg for each month during the year. In April last, 4,967 immigrants arrived at Port Arthur for settlement in the North-West, and we may assume that about the same proportion passed through the Winnipeg agency one month as another month. If so, it would appear that the staff, minus Mr. Metcalfe, were able to handle the Winnipeg portion of 4,967 immigrants who arrived in Port Arthur in April. Mr. Metcalfe resumed his duties in May or June following. In June 2,366 immigrants arrived at Port Arthur. In other words, in April you had a smaller staff, or a staff minus Mr. Metcalfe, able to discharge their proportion of the business of dealing with 4,967 immigrants, and yet the Government hired Mr. Metcalfe to come in and help the staff when the work has fallen to less than half that it was in April. This transaction cannot possibly be justified. In the face of these figures, how can the Minister justify the increase of the staff in May? He has stated that Mr. Metcalfe's appointment was a temporary one, and that he was liable to removal at any time. Why was he engaged in May, when the work was less than one-half what it was in April?

Mr. CARLING. I considered that Mr. Metcalfe had rendered such excellent services the previous year that his services would be most beneficial to the Government for that year.

Mr. WATSON. Why did he not go to Winnipeg in April?

Mr. CARLING. The hon. gentleman knows that immigrants are not always distributed immediately they arrive, and that weeks and months elapse before they are located.

Mr. WATSON. I think I know something about the time at which immigrants arrive in Manitoba and the North-West. There are no months when so many arrive as during April and May. The hon. gentleman has stated that some of those who go in the spring have been in the country before. In coming down from St. Mary's the other day, there were 25 young men on the cars who had never been in Manitoba. These people wanted information, and I gave them some information myself. A competent officer is required at Winnipeg to give information to immigrants on their arrival. The report I read from Mr. Grahame should lead the Minister to see that the Public Works Department build at once a new immigration shed at Winnipeg.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E. I.) Will the Minister explain how it occurs that Mr. Metcalfe received payment from 1st April when he only left to discharge his duties on the 16th May? If he was at his home at Kingston, how came he to obtain payment of one and a half month's salary?

Mr. CARLING.

Mr. CARLING. I cannot, at this moment, explain that. I do not know whether he was in Kingston or not; he may have been in Ottawa.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is evident that he travelled from Kingston to Winnipeg on 16th May. Surely hon. gentlemen opposite do not wish us to believe that this man is a pet of the Government, who has received payment for work he has not performed. In view of the Auditor General's statement showing that Mr. Metcalfe went to Winnipeg on 16th May, I am justified in my statement.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman has given no evidence to show that Mr. Metcalfe was not employed during the balance of that time. He has taken up the item of payment for travelling expenses, and he has stated the date at which Mr. Metcalfe travelled. There is no statement as to how he was employed for the balance of the time. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) considers he is asking questions that should be asked, and the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) holds a like opinion in regard to his question; but, after referring to the fact that Mr. Grahame was dismissed, and after enquiring for a long time why he was dismissed and assigning various reasons, he told the Committee he knew all about it.

Mr. WATSON. No.

Mr. SPROULE. And he read the evidence. He is only taking a leaf from the book of his own friends, because his friends in Toronto, when the report of the agent at Hamilton was given, would not allow it to be published but cut it out, because it told the truth and thereby made a point against them. And because the Minister of Agriculture was honest enough to allow his officer to report, and to print that report, and distribute it, they assumed that because he happened to be dismissed, or because he happened to leave the Government employ, his dismissal must have been for that purpose, because they would be likely to do that themselves. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) has been very persistent in asking questions and seeking for irrelevant information, and because he has been interfered with he retorts in insolent and offensive remarks.

Mr. MULOCK. I rise to a point of order. The member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) in accusing the member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) of having used insolent and insulting remarks, is out of order. I think that is not parliamentary language.

Mr. SPROULE. If the hon. gentleman —

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; chair.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hickey). Let it be parliamentary and proceed with the discussion in that way.

Mr. WATSON. Take it back.

Mr. SPROULE. Take what back?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; chair.

Mr. WATSON. I rise to a point of order. The point has been raised that the language used by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is unparliamentary, in his saying that the member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) used offensive and insulting language.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; chair.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The Committee ask for your decision, Mr. Chairman, as to whether the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) had a right to use the language?

Mr. SPROULE. I understand the hon. gentleman gave his decision.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What was his decision?

Mr. SPROULE. The decision was that I was quite within order. I wish to say further—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; Chair; sit down.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hickey). I think the member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is making an explanation of what he intended by his language.

Mr. MULOCK. I would like to ask for the information of the Committee, what was your decision, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. SPROULE. I understand the point of order has been disposed of.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; Chair.

Mr. SPROULE. I made the remark in connection with what was said by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), that the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) is the funnel of the Government, as the hon. member for East Grey is the funnel of the Minister of Agriculture. If that is not an offensive remark, why did he make it? What did he intend to refer to, and what inference did he expect the House or country would draw from it—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; order; Chair.

Mr. SPROULE. If it is not offensive, would any gentleman use it in the sense he did.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; Chair; withdraw.

Mr. SPROULE. If he intended to be insolent I am justified in replying to it, and so long as the member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) shows the same disposition to members on this side of the House, we have a right to criticise him, and I for one will feel it my duty to do so on every occasion where it is necessary. When I was speaking on the agricultural interests of the country the other night, the member for North Wellington acted in the same way.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; Chair.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). We want your ruling on the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hickey). I think this discussion has been a little careless on both sides, and that too strong language has been used. It is better to have this discussion go on and to let these questions pass by.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What is your ruling on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hickey). The insolence was unparliamentary without doubt.

An hon. MEMBER. The use of the word.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hickey). Yes, the use of the word. There has been language quite as unparliamentary used on the other side and nothing said about it.

Mr. WATSON. Take it back.

Mr. SPROULE. Take what back?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; Chair; withdraw.

Mr. SPROULE. In speaking to this question—

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no; order; Chair.

Mr. SPROULE. I repeat it again—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; Chair.

Mr. SPROULE. I repeat, that when an hon. gentleman in this House is entitled to speak upon any question, and he addresses himself to the Chair the member for North Wellington has no right to act as he did. When I spoke on the question of agricultural depression the other night the member for North Wellington also made some unbecoming remarks.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair; order.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. gentleman is setting your authority at defiance, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not. I have very great respect for the authority of the Chair.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I think we had better call in the Deputy Speaker.

Mr. BOWELL. I desire to call attention to the remarks made by the member for King's (Mr. Borden) in which he attempted to set me right as to the question of immigration to Nova Scotia. If he had read the report as he should have done, he would not have spoken as he did. I find on page 23 of the report the following:—

"The total number of settlers in Nova Scotia during the past year pro Halifax, a careful revision of the tables rendered by Mr. Clay gives the following result:—Total arrivals by steamer, 12,328; cabin, 6,627; total, 18,955; less United States' citizens by coasting steamers, 7,906, leaving a balance of 11,049."

After giving Mr. Clay's report of destinations of the parties, it closes with these remarks:

"From this we have the net result that Nova Scotia may be considered to have gained as settlers 2,395. The reason for eliminating the United States' citizens by coasters, is that the probability is greatly in favor of the fact that as many went out as came in, and therefore the nationalities alone and the passengers, by ocean steamers have been considered settlers, after deducting those who have declared their intention of proceeding elsewhere."

The report, I think, is quite clear and quite distinct. It may be possible, as the hon. gentleman says, that all these immigrants may not have reported to the Customs, from the fact that Mr. Clay reports that not less than 2,591 went to Ontario and 1,386 to Manitoba, their entries may have been made at these ports.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). We have quite an important matter as the Minister is referring to before the House. The Minister of Customs is, in a measure, leading the House to-night; and we have had an instance of the authority of the Chair being set at defiance, while he rises in his place to introduce another subject. It is incumbent on him, Sir, to preserve the dignity of the House. The Chair ruled distinctly that the language used by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) was unparliamentary, and he was asked to withdraw.

Mr. BOWELL. Who asked?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The very fact of the ruling of the Chair required him to withdraw it, and he was asked from this side of the House as well. A gentleman, understanding his position in the House, recognises the fact that when the Chair rules he has used unparliamentary language, as a matter of course, and in order to preserve the dignity of the House, he should withdraw the expression. In defiance of that, the member kept on making his speech, and did not withdraw the statement. I think it was the duty of the Minister of the Crown, instead of speaking on another subject, to see that the dignity of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. SPROULE. The Chairman said the language used on the other side was just as bad.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That makes no difference; there was no exception taken.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. member for East Grey, having spoken and put his foot in it very badly, undertakes to set this House at defiance by refusing to withdraw the unparliamentary expression he used. We all use improper expressions in the heat of debate, and the hon. gentleman must see the necessity which rests upon him as an old member of the House of withdrawing the expression. I ask you, Mr. Chairman, to request the hon. member to withdraw the offensive expression which you have ruled to be unparliamentary.

Mr. BOWELL. I should like to know whether hon. gentlemen on that side of the House are to rise whenever they please to discuss questions of order, but the moment a gentleman on this side rises he is called to order. Under the Rules of the House every man has a right to speak to the question of order, or to take exception to the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Not after the ruling is given. He can only appeal to the Speaker.

Mr. BOWELL. He can move against the ruling of the Chair also. What I contend is, that if the gentlemen on one side have a right to rise and address the Chair on a question of order, surely members on this side have a right to do that without being constantly interrupted.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. Minister is quite in error in saying that we discussed the question of order. We did not. That had been discussed and ruled upon by the Chair. We are merely calling on the Chair to enforce its own ruling. It is not open to any member to discuss the ruling of the Chair, only to move a reference to the Speaker.

Mr. HESSON. I think the hon. member for East Grey has been grievously insulted in this House; I have no hesitation in saying that. I say it was insolent of any member of the House—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. HESSON,—to address to a member of this House language that tended to lower him in the eyes of the House; and when he was addressed by the hon. member for North Wellington as being the funnel of the Minister of Agriculture, I would appeal to any hon. gentleman whether he would desire to be put in that unpleasant position. I ask if there is a gentleman on that side of the House who would like to have that hurled at his head; and when the hon. member for East Grey used the language he did, he used it in the truest sense of the word, and I think that the House could not but appreciate the hon. gentleman's feelings.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hickey). I am satisfied that the hon. member for East Grey did not mean to be insulting; but I am quite satisfied that the language is unparliamentary, and in order to preserve the decorum of the House I think any hon.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

member to whose attention such language is called is in duty bound to withdraw it.

Mr. SPROULE. In obedience to your ruling, I withdraw the language, but I believe it all the same.

Mr. MULOCK. I am greatly pleased to find that the hon. member for East Grey has taken this course. It has been a cause of great pain to me to find him using such language, and I trust that hon. members will endeavor to preserve their tempers and in no way get excited.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I wish to call the attention of the Committee to the point we were discussing when the hon. member for East Grey interfered. The hon. Minister informed us that the duties of this gentleman are in Winnipeg. He was allowed to leave there and come to Kingston on his own business; whence he returned on the 16th of May. I asked the Minister how it was that he was paid for the month of April and the first half of May? That is a plain question, which he can easily answer.

Mr. CARLING. I have explained over and over again, that he was only employed up to the 31st of December, and that on the 1st of April he was re-employed for another nine months.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He did not go to discharge his duties until the 16th of May.

Mr. CARLING. I cannot say at this moment, and my deputy says he cannot remember, but that this money might have been paid later than the time he went up.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think that is a reason why the Minister should consent to this matter standing over until he gives us the information, or until he ascertains whether he can get it from his Department.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I think that information really ought to be given. The Minister admits that he knows apparently nothing about it. He is unable to say whether Mr. Metcalfe was there from the 1st of April to the middle of May. He might have been there or he might have been in Ottawa or in Toronto, attending to his parliamentary duties.

Mr. CARLING. We are not on that item at all. We are now dealing with the assistant immigration agent in Winnipeg, and not with Mr. Metcalfe.

Mr. McMULLEN. Will the hon. gentleman agree to furnish the information before passing the item of $48,000?

Mr. CARLING. I will give any information on concurrence.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman has not got it and neither has the Department. Will he furnish the information before asking the Committee to pass the item of $48,000?

Mr. CARLING. I have no information to give.

Mr. HESSON. That is a question for the Public Accounts Committee. The hon. Minister has stated repeatedly that he does not propose to engage Mr. Metcalfe as agent for the current year, and the item we are now on has no reference to any payment to him. The Committee cannot get this information when the Minister declares he is not in a position to give it. If Mr. Metcalfe was not in the employment of the Government last April and was paid for April, let the Public Accounts Committee investigate that. All this Committee have to deal with is the Estimates for next year.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I entirely disagree with the remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down. The Minister of Agriculture asks us to vote a certain amount for a certain purpose, and we have the right to know for what purpose that money is to be used. It is the duty of the Minister and of his deputy to give us the information on this and other questions. Here is a question comes up about a gentleman who was appointed at $150 a month, and it is shown that he received pay for a month and a half for work he never did.

Mr. TAYLOR. I rise to a point of order. The point is that this discussion is not on the item under discussion. We are asked to vote $800 for an assistant immigration agent at Winnipeg. If that amount is not required strike it out, but whether Mr. Metcalfe was paid too much or not has nothing to do with it.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think, Mr. Chairman, you will not consider that point of order well taken.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will ask the Chairman to rule.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). This is a vote for an assistant agent at Winnipeg. I understand that the assistant agent at Winnipeg is required because Mr. Metcalfe is away from his duty there, and is attending to his duties in Parliament in Toronto. I think, therefore, it is quite pertinent to the argument.

Mr. CASEY. The matter under discussion is the vote of $101,525 for immigration. Any point in regard to that can be discussed. We are not confined to the item of the assistant agent at Winnipeg any more than to any other. All the older members of the House know very well that that is the case, though my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Hickey) does not seem to be aware of it. As to the point taken by my hon. friend from Perth—or rather as to the point raised by him—as to the propriety of this discussion taking place here instead of in the Public Accounts Committee, I think he has been long enough here to know—

The CHAIRMAN. Order.

Mr. CASEY. Yes, I beg your pardon; that is another matter.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I move that the Committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. I think the point of order is well taken. The Committee should confine itself to each of the several items. That is the object of dividing them.

Mr. CASEY. Item 75 is the only item before us.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the resolution, but we are discussing a particular item.

Mr. CASEY. I move that the Committee rise, and that this point be submitted to the House with the Speaker in the Chair, and then to the House from the Speaker's ruling if necessary. This is too important a matter to have it decided by a gentleman who is not even really the Chairman of Committees.

Mr. BOWELL. I agree to a certain extent with the hon. gentleman that there is but one item, No. 75, before us, but he knows very well that the practice has been to read each sum under that item to the Committee, and to allow that sum alone to be discussed. If the contention of the member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) is correct, then the item put from the Chair should be the whole of No. 75, and the whole should be discussed at the same time. That, however, has not been the practice, and no one knows it better than that hon. gentleman. It has been ruled over and over again that each item in the resolution should be read to the Committee and then discussed upon its merits, and that those items should be taken up seriatim as you reach them. I know the rule has been departed from, and that, instead of adhering to the particular item, the whole resolution has been discussed. The effect of that departure from the practice has been shown to-night. One item was passed, and the whole discussion was repeated on the next item, and then it was re-repeated, and now we are having the same discussion over again. Remembering the practice in the past, the Chairman is literally correct, unless you were to adopt the practice of taking the whole item at once.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) No doubt that has been the practice in the past, based on considerations of convenience, which should be the controlling rule with both sides of the House; but, if the Chairman rules, as a matter of parliamentary procedure, that a member cannot discuss any other item in the resolution, that is a very different thing. I think it would be a pity to appeal the question. There should be an amount of give-and-take on both sides, and I think the Government should see that it is as much for their interest as for ours that that should be understood. However, the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Casey) is right in his contention, and the matter should not be settled arbitrarily in the way suggested.

The CHAIRMAN. My ruling is strictly in accordance with parliamentary rule.

Mr. TAYLOR. The statement was that Mr. Metcalfe was paid for a month and a-half, and there is nothing about that in this vote.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman fails to see the point, which is that the objectionable vote is taken in this total resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. I find that my ruling that the discussion should be confined to the item was quite correct:

"Sometimes there are a number of items in a vote or resolution, and then these may be generally discussed as forming part of a single question. Each item may then, if the Committee think proper, be taken up as a distinct question, and so discussed and amended. The debate in such a case must be confined to the item, and when it has been disposed of no reference can again be made to it when the subsequent items are under consideration."

Mr. CASEY. Yes, if the arrangement has been made. However, if you rule absolutely that we have no right in this matter, I must appeal to the Speaker.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think, apart from the point taken by the member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey), this discussion is germane to and belongs to this vote. This vote is to defray the expense of an assistant agent at Winnipeg who would not be required if this gentleman were there.

The CHAIRMAN. That has been decided. Question, gentlemen.

Mr. CASEY. I move for a reference to the House for an authoritative ruling on this point.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Lost.

Mr. CASEY. It is not for the Committee to decide. I have a right to appeal.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I desire to say——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CASEY. You cannot speak to that. It is not open to debate. I move that the Committee rise and that the matter be referred to the Speaker.

The CHAIRMAN. Shall the motion be adopted?

Mr. CASEY. There is no necessity to put the question. It goes to the House as a matter of privilege. There must be a reference from the Committee to the full House.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Are we to understand, Mr. Chairman, that on the motion of one member to have the Speaker take the Chair as an appeal from your decision, that that motion must go without a division of the House?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Does the hon. member insist upon that?

Mr. CASEY. To save the convenience of the House, without withdrawing my objection to the ruling, I withdraw my motion to refer.

Assistant Interpreter at Winnipeg..... $500

Mr. CARLING. This gentleman, Mr. Ohlen, is a very energetic and influential man, and he speaks the Scandinavian and German languages.

Mr. WATSON. The hon. gentleman spoke some time ago about these agents at Winnipeg being employed in conducting settlers to their locations; are these interpreters employed for that purpose?

Mr. CARLING. Mr. Ohlen has been employed to assist the Scandinavians.

Mr. WATSON. Do these agents proceed from Winnipeg to the settlements with the people to locate them?

Mr. CARLING. Ohlen pays occasional visits to the settlements to see how they are getting along.

Mr. WATSON. When an immigrant arrives in Winnipeg, do these interpreters proceed to the colonies and assist these immigrants in locating on their lands?

Mr. CARLING. I think Mr. Ohlen goes with the parties of Scandinavians. He goes to the colony with them, to see that they are properly settled.

Agent at Victoria, B.C..... $1,000

Mr. EARLE. I would ask the Minister how it is that the agent at Victoria is only paid $1,000, while the agent at Vancouver is paid $1,200.

Mr. CARLING. The agent at Medicine Hat was appointed at $1,200, and he was removed to Vancouver at the same salary; whereas the officer at Vancouver was getting $1,200.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

Agent at Vancouver..... $1,200

Mr. MARA. I may say that the efforts of the officer at Vancouver are very much hampered from the fact that there are no accommodations of any kind at that place for immigrants. Very often they take the steamer and go over the Sound. On the other hand, they have to go to boarding-houses or hotels, and as their money does not last very long, they often find themselves a burden on the people of Vancouver. I think sheds ought to be erected there for immigrants. It is the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and if immigrant sheds are needed at any place along the line, they are needed there.

Mr. CARLING. The office has only been established a year and a half, and we rented premises for accommodation in the meantime. But I will take a note and consider the matter in order to have sufficient accommodation for immigrants.

Mr. MARA. An application was made for sheds some time ago.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). We had better now adjourn, as it is impossible to pass these large items under this head.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is not worth while to stop now before we reach the end of this resolution. All the items are the ordinary ones, and the small increases which occur in one or two of them will be explained by the Minister, and if on concurrence more information is required, it can be furnished.

Mr. CASEY. The Minister makes a mistake if he thinks that anything is to be gained by attempting to force through these items. They involve a discussion of the whole immigration policy. I think I am able to assure him that if they are allowed to remain to a later date there will be only a legitimate discussion instead of one which will be scrappy and fragmentary, as the discussion has been for some time. Much time has been wasted to-night on account of the excessive zeal of some hon. members who wished to explain everything for the Minister.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think we should proceed. We have already spent much time this evening on the discussion, and the whole question of immigration has been discussed already.

Mr. CASEY. I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman. The general immigration policy has not been discussed except in scraps and patches. If the Minister insists in trying to force this vote through, he will do so simply by virtue of his majority, and by compelling the Committee to discuss the question at an improper hour and in an improper way. It is against the moral sense of the House and the country. If the Minister of Agriculture had been prepared with his explanations, the items would have been passed long ago. The delay is his fault, it being due either to his lack of knowledge or his unwillingness to impart the information he possesses. I move that the Committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. McMULLEN. The request made is a very reasonable one. We have endeavored to gather information from the Minister in regard to many matters of importance, and there remains a general discussion in regard to the whole question of immigration. This is the first night the Opposition have asked the Government to consent to an adjournment, and it is reasonable the Government should grant that request. If the leader of the Government were present he would doubtless consent.

Mr. LANDERKIN. If the Minister is bound to go on, we are prepared to go on, but it is certain that the item will not go on. If the Government will not meet us in a proper manner, we will meet them in a parliamentary spirit and discuss the matter at even an improper hour; but the Minister must not think that because he has a majority he is able to force through items without the same having been properly ventilated and discussed. To-day we are going to have the Budget, and at this hour, three o'clock, we should be preparing ourselves for the reception of that speech, and it is unreasonable to ask us to continue. It appears from the Auditor General's Report that Mr. Metcalfe was paid for nine months when he was employed only seven and a-half months, and that he was paid his travelling expenses from Kingston to Winnipeg and return.

Mr. TAYLOR. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. LANDERKIN. You did that once before to-night; you can only do that once in a night.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is just as much in order as if he was speaking on a motion to adjourn.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I am pleased to know, Mr. Chairman, that your ruling is in accord with my own, for it is very strong presumptive evidence that you are right. When I told the member for Leeds that I knew he was out of order, I felt certain that he was out of order or I would not have told him so. This motion for adjournment is one that requires a good deal of discussion, because it is almost unfortunate that the Minister of Public Works should expect us to finish up all this immigration policy in one evening. I think the requirements of Manitoba and the North-West, demand a more liberal and enlightened policy than has been followed for the past two years. It is about time that a more vigorous policy were adopted, so that that country would be settled up and our countrymen coming back from the United States. Perhaps the Minister of Agriculture could tell us some of the causes which have driven Canadians out of Canada into the United States. I hope this motion made by the member for Elgin (Mr. Casey) will carry, because it has my hearty support, and I think it should have the support of the House.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The motion to adjourn is a proper one, but of course, it has to be regretted that it has to be moved in the face of the declaration of the leader of the House that he wants to finish these items. He was fairly and courteously appealed to by the gentleman leading the House on this side to adjourn, and I think that if the Minister will not now signify his dissent from the proposition, the member for West Elgin will withdraw his motion and permit the Minister of Public Works to substitute a similar one instead. If the leader of the House to-night desires to put items through without discussion at 3 o'clock in the morning, he will find that the country will sustain the members of the Opposition in asking for an adjournment. If the time had been wasted by the Opposition in discussing these items the Minister might have some reason to refuse the adjournment.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Will hon. gentlemen say that the discussion with reference to a gentleman drawing a salary apparently without doing any work, for one month and a half at $150 a month, and of which no explanation is given—will they say that is of no importance to the country? Will gentlemen say that the discussion which took place on the Minister's figures, with regard to immigration has been out of order, when it has been shown conclusively by the Minister's own figures, that he has either misled the country and the House in the statement that 105,000 immigrants had gone into the North-West for five years, or the conclusion must be drawn that there has been an exodus of that amount from the country? I would like hon. gentlemen opposite to point to any single statement made by any gentleman on this side of the House that was not worthy of being made, or that was not pertinent to the subject. If the Opposition had behaved in this matter, as I have known the Minister of Customs and the Postmaster General to act when they were in Opposition, there might be some reason for refusing to adjourn. The Minister of Customs remembers well that on a certain occasion he and his friends then in Opposition were factious, and that they discussed one item all the afternoon and during the long night.

Mr. BOWELL. We did not get out until next night at six o'clock. Sunday was approaching.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I speak only from memory as to the details of the Opposition then, but I know that the Opposition was factious, and when at a late hour they asked for an adjournment the Government of the day would not consent to it. The Minister of Customs shakes his head, but that is my recollection of the incident. There was a motion to adjourn and there was a humorous and witty speech made by the present Postmaster General for two hours, with reference to what Julien had to say or something like that. I say that this side of the House to-night has discussed these matters in a fair manner. If they had acted as the Postmaster General and the Minister of Customs and their friends did on the occasion I have referred to, there might be some reason for the Minister of Customs refusing to adjourn now.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman will remember that the speech of the Postmaster General on the occasion referred to, had nothing to do whatever with Estimates. It was a question of adjournment with reference to the dismissal of his Ministry by Lieutenant Governor Letellier.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. gentleman knows that he did not pursue as fair a course as we pursued to-night. We have treated this discussion fairly, but he did not act then as we have done on this—

Mr. BOWELL. Oh, no, I would not think of

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I am quite sure that if the leader of the House signifies his intention to adjourn now, my friend from West Elgin (Mr. Casey) will withdraw his motion. If the House does not adjourn it will look as if the Government wish to get through some items which will not bear investigation. I have a Committee at half past ten this morning, and another at eleven o'clock, and I suppose most hon. gentlemen present have business to attend to.

Mr. HICKEY. If you had made that speech to the subject, we would have it decided now.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). In all probability there will be a long sitting of the House to-day as the Budget will be brought down. I am, therefore, in favor of the Committee rising, and if it should come to a division I shall feel compelled to vote in that direction. I think, under the circumstances it would be nonsense to go on discussing this question, which will bring in the whole subject of the exodus.

Mr. CASEY. I have stated that if we are compelled to go on, it will be necessary to discuss the general policy of the Government in regard to immigration; but I think with my hon. friend who has just sat down, that the attempt to secure grants of money by physical torture can hardly be endorsed by this Committee or by the public at large. I do not know any phrase which will more correctly describe the conduct of the hon. Minister of Public Works in compelling us to pass these items before leaving this House, under the threat of the most overwhelming fatigue if we go on. I think physical torture to extract money has long been considered contrary to the British constitution; and whether that torture is applied by thumbscrews or by speeches from the hon. member for North Perth, or explanations from the hon. member for East Grey made on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture, I believe it to be equally unconstitutional. We have been delayed by the inefficiency of the Minister in charge of these estimates. He has sat with an expression of apathy on his countenance, apparently the least interested man in the House, while discussions of the most vital nature connected with this Department have been going on; and when he has been at last forced to his feet, he has had to consult the deputy who sits for his convenience on the floor of the House, and has given us the most lame, inconsequential and sometimes contradictory explanations of the questions that have been asked. In other cases he has refused to give us explanations, saying that he did not know whether the information was in his Department or not. It appears that there are a great many things in the Department that the Minister of Agriculture does not know. It is impossible that he should have listened to the impassioned discourse of the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) without having some inkling of his duties. That hon. gentleman said, and I must repeat it with strongest approbation, that the heart, the very vital essence of a truly national, patriotic policy was a good policy of immigration. We have vast, unknown, natural resources, which a good system of immigration would develop by bringing the right people into the country.

Mr. POPE. Spend your money if you want immigrants.

Mr. CASEY. I would recommend to the Minister the axiom that out of the mouths of babes and sucklings he may gather wisdom, and he may gather from the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, and who has not been quite a Session in the House—he may gather even from this parliamentary babe and suckling—

Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The expression is not parliamentary.

Mr. CASEY. If that be not parliamentary language I will withdraw the one or the other. I will withdraw the babe—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Both expressions are out of order.

Mr. CASEY. I withdraw both at your request Sir, though I do not think the language is unparliamentary. Well, even this young member of the House is able to give a pointer to the Minister of Agriculture as to the best means of getting immigration. I hope the Minister of Agriculture will make a note of it. You must spend money in a judicious way, and not by paying a bonus of $2 a head for the pauper children imported from England last year, according to the Auditor General's Report. That is not the way to make the prairie blossom like the rose. I require before the Committee rises a statement as to the reasons for giving a bonus for imported pauper children from the workhouses of England. We have established a great railway company that owns most of the land in the North-West, and the argument at one time was that this company would take active measures to promote immigration in order to develop its own lands, but so far it has left practically everything to the Government, and instead of being an immigration agency the railway line has been an agency for transporting people from one end of the Dominion to the other, and has done a great deal to diminish the value of land in the Province of Ontario by this means. I have yet to learn of any large scheme planned by the Canadian Pacific Railway at its own expense to bring in people to this country. If they did not spend so much money in building competing lines against existing railways, they would have benefited the country, and would have had a large traffic from the North-West, that would have rendered them quite independent of the lines in older Canada and enabled them to pay handsome dividends. They would have had from their own land such quantities of wheat to carry to the seaboard that they would have been independent of all these considerations. The company then have been derelict in their duty in not carrying out their promise—for I believe it was a promise—we were told in this House that it was a promise—to relieve the Government from the burthen of promoting immigration. The Government, on the other hand, failed in their duty in not compelling the company to do that which they agreed to do. Of course it is absurd to speak of the Government compelling that company to do anything. It would be more reasonable to speak of the company compelling the Government to do what it wanted. Still, the Government might have used their influence as benefactors of that company; they might have tried to influence these capitalists, whom they have so enormously enriched, to relieve the taxpayer of the burthen placed upon him. This they have not done, and they are therefore equally to blame with the railway company for this state of affairs. Those of us who then sat in this House at the time may remember the glowing statistics which were presented to the House by the Premier when he was asking us to give further aid to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, in regard to the tremendous influx of immigration which was to come into that country.

Mr. HESSON. I think it is hardly fair to attack the Canadian Pacific Railway Company when its solicitor is not present.

Mr. CASEY. I do not think any one could be more solicitous on behalf of that railway company than my hon. friend who has just interrupted me. I think the interests of that company are quite safe in his hands, especially as he has another friend of the company on his right and another on his left, besides an isolated case (Hon. Mr. Bowell) in another direction. I think the hon. gentleman may be quite easy in his mind as to the interests of the Canadian Pacific Railway. However, I was going in another direction when the hon. gentleman headed me off, and I may now have to go in a third direction in consequence of his interruption. There are several things that must be said and that will be said before this item can pass. I will call attention to another class of immigration which I think should be encouraged. I spoke of the importation of pauper children, and of the Government giving bonuses to that class of immigrants, but I desire now to call the attention of the Government to the fact that there are many young men in England with sufficient means to buy farms in Manitoba or the North-West, or even in Ontario, young men with say £1,000 or able to obtain that amount from their friends after showing that they would have a good investment for it on this side. A few of this class have come out to this country and have done well, but the larger number have gone to Australia or New Zealand, colonies which are perhaps better known than Canada to the people of England—better known perhaps, because there have been young men of good means, who have gone there and succeeded, and who, through their relatives, have advertised those colonies and have kept the people of Great Britain interested in the progress of those colonies. They not only take out large amounts of capital with them, but young men of the class to which I refer generally become useful citizens. Now, what has been done to encourage the immigration of that class of young men to Canada? Most of that which has been done has been done by people who have advertised in England themselves, or by the means of agencies, that they would receive young men who desired to learn farming, would give them instruction, and supply them with proper food either for the payment of a bonus, or for a regular payment for a certain time. This business has fallen largely into the hands of irresponsible people. Parents in the old country have concluded bargains with people here about whom they knew nothing, they have paid down large bonuses, and afterwards they have discovered that they have got nothing for their money. This sort of thing has perhaps done more to discredit Canada in the eyes of the English people than anything which the Minister has hitherto done can possibly counteract. It is sad to have to say it, but the very tragedy which occupies so much attention nowadays—the murder of poor Benwell—has a connection with this matter. No doubt that murder has attracted great attention in the old country, and the manner in which it has been discussed in our press has tended to lead people to the view that this was a deliberate plot to bring that poor young man out here for the purpose of murdering him when he got here, and to secure what money he had, or the money that was to be paid for him by his friends. It does not take many of these suspicious circumstances to cause a vast growth of suspicion in the British mind, which is rather home-keeping and insular in the class to which I refer. Rival immigration agents will endeavor to create the impression that any young Englishman who comes out here on such an errand may be enticed into a cedar swamp and shot in the back of the head, and there are many people in England, I am sorry to say, who are so ignorant of Canada as to believe the statement. There may be some things, however, to create confidence. There are now two serious problems before the Minister of Agriculture. First, how is he to get rid of the shade thrown on Canada by this tragedy; and then, how is he to get rid of the lesser scandal as to the way in which these young Englishmen have been treated when they have come here. As to the case of murder itself, I think it will be sufficient to prove to the English people that full justice has been done to get rid of their suspicions on that account. As to the other question, there is some ground for the suspicion which is entertained in the old country. It is clear that these young men have been brought here, swindled out of their money, and turned loose in a country they practically knew nothing about. I would make a suggestion to the Minister in this connection. It would not be difficult to organize in Canada respectable associations composed, say, of respectable stock-raisers or farmers in each neighborhood, who had land to sell. These associations, having plenty of capital and thoroughly respectable, might take charge of the young English emigrant and educate him for farming, and put him in a position to make his living upon the farm. The great question for the people of England is to satisfy themselves that they can safely entrust their sons in the hands of these associations. Now, here is my proposition—that a register should be opened in the office of the High Commissioner in London for the registration of parties willing to accept and to board young emigrants, and teach them farming. The High Commissioner should first satisfy himself of the bona fides of these applicants, and of their standing, and, if found satisfactory, he should then enter their names upon this register, and it should be made known by advertisement to all intending emigrants, that everybody entered on the High Commissioner's register was known by him to be a respectable and proper person to take charge of young men wishing to learn farming. If that policy were carried out, I think we could secure a class of young men very valuable to the country.

Mr. McMULLEN. With regard to this question of agencies in Europe, I have always thought that money has been uselessly squandered in connection with the offices which have been kept up in London, Glasgow and other places. A great deal of money has been spent in distributing pamphlets, in travelling expenses of European agents, in order to encourage emigrants to come to this country. I think that a complete change should be made in that system, and that we could do very well, say, with one agent at leading shipping points such as Liverpool and Glasgow. We are now subject to a debt that requires us to pay something like ten millions and a quarter of interest annually, and in the face of that, it is the duty of the Opposition in this House, and it should be the duty of the supporters of the Government, to seriously consider every item in the expenditure that is proposed. I contend that in connection with immigration a great deal of money has been uselessly squandered. It appears to me that whenever a devoted supporter of the Government wants a position in which he can draw a respectable salary, he is shelved into some position in the Department of Agriculture. I believe we should largely curtail the expenses connected with immigration. It is quite clear that we assist a large number of immigrants who eventually become residents of the United States. This is much to be deplored, and we should endeavor to ascertain the reasons before we vote $48,000 for immigration expenses. At present our people are paying money for the purpose of bringing over immigrants to subsequently leave us. The embarrassed condition of our people, due to our enormous debt, created partly for public improvements and partly for unnecessary works, should forbid further expenditure on immigration unless we are convinced beyond doubt that the people we bring here will remain with us. If we could erect a barrier to prevent them going to the United States, as we have erected a commercial barrier by adopting the National Policy, immigration might be useful. If the Government could change their policy so as to secure beneficial results from this immigration, we might continue the present policy. We all admit the country must be filled with people, and that this is an absolute necessity. The condition of the country is such and our present debt is so enormous that the people can no longer bear it unless we add very largely to our population. Nothing will tend to relieve our burden so much as a large influx of population. If the people brought here are found to remain only a year or two and afterwards leave for the United States that is a matter to be deplored, and if our money is being spent uselessly and the United States are obtaining our immigrants, it is a serious matter. It is highly important in the public interest that full time should be allowed to discuss our immigration policy. We are entitled to the information we have asked from the Minister, and we have already allowed several items to pass without discussion simply because the Minister has not been able to answer questions previously submitted to him. I hold that under these circumstances the Minister should consent that these items should stand over, and that he should present to this Committee a reply to the questions which have been put with regard to Mr. Metcalfe, and other matters to-night, and which have not been answered by the Minister of Agriculture. His deputy sits beside the hon. gentleman, and is no doubt capable of discharging his duty as Deputy Minister, but yet we have been unable to get any information. The Opposition has a high duty to perform as well as the Government, and what would the country think if the Opposition allowed these items to pass the House without getting information. We have a painful duty to perform in taking this course, but we must discharge the duty that devolves upon us. I hold that the immigration policy of the Government is a most important one. We have a vast domain which we want to fill up with settlers, and when we go to enormous expense to bring emigrants out here, we should take some steps to ensure their permanent residence amongst us. It is not right nor just, that people should be brought out here at the expense of the country, and then that they should go across to the United States. Notwithstanding that the Minister reported to-night, that there was a large increase of population in Manitoba and the North-West Territories, yet when we took the census we found they were 103,000 short of the number there ought to be there. We should have some information as to where these people went to. Again, the hon. Minister referred to the increase of population in the different Provinces last year, and we found hon. gentlemen from New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Ontario and Quebec, who thoroughly know the Provinces they spoke of, showing conclusively that this increase in population as stated by the hon. Minister, did not take place. The hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) endeavored to argue that the increased population of the city of Toronto showed the destination of these immigrants, but it was conclusively shown by hon. gentlemen, as I know it to be the case in my own district, that the population of the city of Toronto is increased, not by immigration, but by people leaving the towns and villages adjoining, and congregating in that city. If we pay $300,000 a year to bring people into this country, we should see that we get some return for it, and that the people when they do come, will remain here. Unfortunately we have been making this country a very expensive one to live in, and people from the old country who are induced to come out here, on the representation that it is a cheap country to live in, soon find by bitter experience, that Canada is not the country they had supposed it to be. I should like to see some system inaugurated by which immigrants should be induced to stay in this country, and some evils remedied, the removal of which would tend in the same direction. In place of helping immigrants to come out here to become paupers in many cases, I think it would be much better for us to offer a bonus of ten or twenty or thirty dollars to those who should become residents, erect a house, cultivate a portion of land and make certain improvements. At present many of those who come out have nothing left by the time they come here, and they go around from town to town and from village to village, in many instances contributing to the large army of tramps. That is not a desirable class to bring out. Then, the hon. member for Marquette spoke of that stamp of Englishman known as the "dude," who is a totally useless kind of immigrant. If he has plenty of sovereigns in his pocket he may make a desirable settler, but after he spends the few dollars he has, he becomes a burden to those he has got acquainted with, and turns out to be perfectly useless. There are many possible improvements in our immigration system that we should seriously consider, and it is unfair that the Minister of Agriculture should ask us to consent to the continuation of votes to employ men as immigration agents to dance about from pillar to post assisting the Tory party in elections. Instead of attempting to force through this committee items which should not be passed at all, the Government should consent to adjourn and give the Minister of Agriculture an opportunity of studying the records that he must have in his Department so as to enable him to give answers to many of the questions to which we have received no reply. We have dealt fairly and generously with the Minister of Public Works when passing the items of his Department. Although we have been here some two months, we have not before to-night asked the Government by resolution to agree to an adjournment, and they have refused to grant that simple request, although nearly all the items in the first statement of the Estimates have passed. We are to have the Budget Speech to-day, and we shall be in a very poor condition to listen to it if we should be compelled to sit up all night. So far as I am concerned, I should be glad to see a compromise arrived at, so that we might go home and get some rest to prepare for the duties of to-morrow.

Mr. McMULLEN.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. When the question of adjournment was mooted by hon. gentlemen opposite, the offer I made to them on behalf of the majority of this House, was that the items to complete this resolution should be passed now, because if we do not do it, all the items that we have been discussing could not be reported to-day, but they would remain as if not passed at all. I suggested that the discussion should continue on concurrence, and if this will meet the views of hon. gentlemen, let it be understood between the two sides of the House that hon. gentlemen may speak to this resolution on concurrence as if in the Committee of the Whole, not being limited to one speech. I renew that offer, and I think hon. gentlemen should accept it; otherwise, let us go on.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I cannot agree to that, because we know very well that even though this agreement may be entered into, it is impossible to have a proper discussion on concurrence, because the members are then anxious to get away and will not listen. I think the hon. Minister of Public Works should allow an adjournment. I do not think that in discussing the Estimates we have so far shown any disposition to delay them wherever they have been fair and proper. While the hon. Minister's own estimates were under consideration and were criticised freely, there was no unnecessary delay or undue criticism. The estimates of the Minister of Marine were also passed with very little objection; and as the hon. member for North Wellington has said, this is the first time that we have asked for an adjournment of any votes. The question of immigration is a very important one and ought to be discussed fully and freely, and I think we are not asking anything unreasonable in asking that the subject should stand over for the purpose of fuller discussion. If that is done, the Minister of Agriculture will probably be able to give information which will shorten the discussion, and our duty on both sides will be done.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The discussion can be had on concurrence on this resolution. Where there is an understanding between the two sides of the House it will be kept, so that on concurrence this discussion can be renewed if hon. gentlemen choose. I have no doubt any other information the Minister of Agriculture may be able to give, he will give with pleasure on concurrence. If hon. gentleman will not accept that, but wish us to go on with the discussion, we are ready.

Mr. McMULLEN. The Minister of Public Works cannot deny that the Minister of Agriculture has not been able to answer the questions we have asked him as to why Mr. Metcalfe was paid for work done at Winnipeg, when he never left Kingston. Neither the Minister nor the Deputy is in a position to answer, and all we ask is an adjournment until such time as they can give us the necessary information.

Mr. HESSON. Hon. gentlemen opposite have had a very wide field in discussing the items before the committee, and on the very next vote, that of quarantine, they will be able still further to discuss questions connected with immigration. It would be a waste of time to leave this vote entirely open so that we could have a renewed discussion on every one of the items. We ought to look at this matter in a reasonable light, and nothing can be gained by our sitting here, and if the leader of the Opposition were here, or the gentleman who discusses financial matters on the other side we would not have drifted into the position we are now in. I had hoped the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) would have realised the position and induced his hon. friends to consent to the item being passed. For this is really not such an important question that we should sit up all night over it.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Hon. members on this side are as willing as hon. gentlemen opposite that an amicable arrangement should be come to, and we were willing early in the evening that certain items should pass through, but the Minister of Public Works said that if we did not pass all the items, we might remain here all night. That was a very unfair proceeding on his part, in reply to the very fair proposition of gentlemen on this side. There are many reasons why we should not take this matter into consideration on concurrence. The hon. gentleman has his deputy here, and ought to be in a position to give us the information we require, and, failing that, should allow the item to stand until he is able to give it to us. The hon. gentleman is placing himself in this position before the people, that the Opposition were compelled to keep up the debate the whole night in order to obtain the information necessary to an intelligent understanding of the item under discussion. It would be nothing more than right for the Minister of Public Works to accord that opportunity now to the Minister of Agriculture so that he may not be placed in this wrong position. I do not complain of the Minister of Agriculture, because, no doubt, he relies to a large extent upon his deputy to supply him with this information. For some reason the deputy is unable to give the information to the Minister, and, therefore, we are in the disagreeable position of differing with the Minister of Agriculture with whom we would desire to be on the very best of terms, and to whom we would yield almost anything, because we all hold him in high esteem. We are not blaming him, but his deputy, who could have provided the necessary information. This is a late hour. We have been sitting thirteen hours, and this is a hard strain physically and mentally upon those who take a lively interest in the affairs of the country; but it is the bounden duty of the Opposition to insist that, when full information is not given, a delay shall take place in order that we may obtain the information we require. We are asked to allow this item to pass with the promise that on concurrence we will have every opportunity to discuss it freely, but we know the unusual sounds which occur in the dying hours of the Session, when members desire to return home, and it requires more cheek than either you, Mr. Chairman, or I possess, to address the House at that time and resist those interruptions. That sort of promise is a fallacy. We have been caught in that sort of a trap, and misled in that way before. The innocents on this side have been misled by the astute ones on the other side. My friend from Perth (Mr. Hesson), comes to the rescue of the Minister, and says we have had ample opportunity of discussing this question. No doubt, with his powerful ability, with his large grasp of abstruse and difficult subjects, he may have been in possession of all the information necessary to form his opinions, but it is not everyone in this House who is capable of understanding a subject so readily and so thoroughly as that hon. gentleman. Ample information may have been given to satisfy him, or perhaps he may accept things blindly. Some members are not desirous to have very great information before they form an opinion, and it may be from the intelligent view my hon. friend has taken, or from his zeal to show himself an ardent, a faithful and almost a servile supporter of the Government, that he has come to the conclusion that we have discussed this question long enough.

Mr. HESSON. Not discussed it at all.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I am glad to hear the confession of the hon. gentleman. I think that is about the amount of intelligence he brings to bear upon any subject before the House. He does not discuss any subject, but he tries to lead us to believe that this matter had been thoroughly discussed and that we had all the information we desired. If there be one more important subject than another for us to consider here, it is the immigration policy of the country. We found to-night one of the faithful supporters of the Government, a gentleman of great ability, who frequently comes to the defence of the Government, denouncing their immigration policy, and straightly objecting to their want of ability and their inefficiency. When we find an important question of this kind, on which even the supporters of the Government cannot agree, these items ought not to be rushed through in a few hours. How does the Minister of Public Works know, when he finds one of his principal supporters differing from him on this subject, whether he might not have been defeated in a vote of this committee if the question had gone to a vote? The question then naturally arises whether we ought to continue the system of importing immigrants from the old country to Canada in the manner in which we have been doing it. Then we have another class of immigrants coming from the old country, what is called the pauper class; we have children being imported here from various institutions. I am well aware that some defend the idea of bringing these little waifs out here to be raised in this country, to intermingle and intermarry with the citizens of Canada. Now, so far as I have been able to ascertain, after careful consideration, I am led to the conclusion that the system is a bad one, and that it ought no longer to be continued. Again, we elicited the information to-night that the agents of steamboat companies receive $5 a head for every individual they induced to come to Canada. Now, will the

Mr. WILSON (Elgin),

Minister of Agriculture tell me that that is a proper system, that it is a judicious system, to bring that class of people out here, perfectly regardless of their character or condition, just for the sake of the steamboat agent getting his $5 a head? That is a system which, I think, cannot be defended in the interest of this country. We were told to-night, also, that it was a right and proper thing that an individual should be appointed to a position in Winnipeg, in the intelligence office in that city, and that he should be paid for his time, while occupied in doing something else. The question is as to why Mr. Metcalfe is so highly recommended by the Minister of Agriculture. Is it not because he occupies a position in the Tory ranks and as a member of the Ontario Legislature acts as a sort of lieutenant and follower of Mr. Meredith? We have not heard of any wonderful work he has accomplished in Winnipeg. We found, on the contrary, that the department was able to run many months without his services and that no complaints were received respecting the management during his absence. It is no doubt true that the gentleman was placed in the public service in order to do service to Mr. Meredith and the Opposition in the Local Legislature. It has been shown that he was paid a salary from 1st April although he did not go to Winnipeg until 16th May, and probably during the interval he was doing battle for Mr. Meredith. Although the Minister pretends that his engagement was in the interest of the Department his real object was to do service to Mr. Meredith and the Opposition in the Local Legislature. The Minister of Agriculture has to-night declared that if they wish to do so they will employ Mr. Metcalfe in the future. We know that the Government will so act from our experience in the past, but that is no reason why the Opposition members of this House should not have something to say in regard to all public affairs. We cannot forget that the Budget speech has to be delivered to-day, and that we should have an opportunity for rest before that is delivered. No doubt hon. gentlemen opposite have been waiting information from Washington as to the tariff changes. It may not be so, and I hope it is not. I believe it is their duty to do what is right and proper in the interests of the Dominion of Canada. If it pleases the American people, well and good, but we have rights we ought to contend for, and to uphold, and I do not think we ought to delay the matter, awaiting the course they intend to pursue on the other side. We know that when information is desired on this side of the House, we have been told that it is not prudent in the interests of the country that that information should be given. We have been treated with that reservation of information, and to-night information of the most trivial kind, is withheld from us. I should think that the Minister who is leading the House might consider this matter and allow us to go home, provided we say to him we will reserve the last item, and we will let you pass all the others. That is all we now ask. For my part, if I had my own way, I would not concede any more than to move that the committee should rise, because I feel that we have been treated badly by the Government to-night. If ever there was an Opposition treated unjustly and unfairly we have been treated in that manner to-night. We asked for reasonable information and we were told by the Minister of Agriculture that if we did not like what we got we could move a vote of want of confidence. That is a cool proposition for a member of the Government to make, whose duty it is to give the public information. I really think the Opposition is deserving of an apology from the Minister of Agriculture. A wrong has been committed against us and it should be apologised for. I do not believe that the Minister of Agriculture is cowardly, for his boldness to-night would indicate the reverse, but it is his duty to apologise for his action. We do not want to move a vote of want of confidence in him, because we are not so anxious as that to drive him out of power; but we want the information we are entitled to in reference to Metcalfe and to the dismissal of Mr. Grahame. We heard something about Mr. Grahame's dismissal, but would not have got even that if we did not extract it from him. Now, Mr. Chairman, what would you do under the same circumstances if you were a member of the Opposition? Do you not think we ought to feel aggrieved; would you not under the circumstances feel very indignant? I can imagine your countenance, and how furiously you would look if you were in the Opposition. I am sure that smiling face would not continue if you were placed in the same position as we are. I know that the other Ministers would not treat us in the same manner as the Minister of Agriculture did to-night. They are kind-hearted, generous people, and I thought the Minister of Agriculture was one of them as well, but I am disappointed and I am sorry for it.

Mr. TAYLOR. Give him a chance and he will give you the information.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Did I hear a sound in the distance; not a very intelligent sound, but a sort of breathing as of some person in agony. I think I heard that voice before; it was not long ago since I heard its owner rise to a point of order and he found his point of order as well taken as his knowledge of other subjects which he brings forward on the floor of the House; just a little mistaken. I have here a pamphlet issued by the Government, and sent broadcast throughout Great Britain, inviting artisans and mechanics to come to this country to compete against the workingmen who have to contribute towards the expense of issuing this pamphlet and bringing those men here. I would ask the Minister of Agriculture whether petitions have not been sent to him and, whether deputations have not waited upon him in opposition to such a course, claiming that it is unjust and unfair to the laboring classes. The hon. leader of the Government, when the Knights of Labor waited upon him in Toronto, said that it was right of the workingmen to have ample protection. I would call the attention of the hon. member for West York to the fact that he has many labor organisations in his constituency, and I would ask him to put his veto on a pamphlet like this. But I suppose this book had to be written; I suppose the Minister had some hanger-on whom he wanted to benefit, and some newspaper which had to be subsidised; I suppose, if we could find out, we should learn that this book has been overpaid for. Although the Government appointed a commission to go from one end of Canada to the other to obtain information on which to base legislation for the protection of the laboring classes, and although that legislation was promised in the speech from the Throne, we do not see any sign of it yet, and we have no hopes that they are going to protect as they ought the laboring classes with whom they pretend to have so much sympathy. We find this immigration business a very fruitful source of corruption. You can hardly find a Conservative newspaper from one end of the Dominion to the other which does not receive large sums for printing pamphlets or some other kind of immigration documents; and will any one tell me that a paper receiving large subsidies from the Government will be likely to express an independent opinion on the measures of the day? They will not be as independent as the hon. member for Assiniboia, who, although getting large grants for his paper, came forward and condemned the Government's course; but the majority of these papers will of necessity speak favorably of the Government. Now, we should have some information in regard to the contracts let for printing immigration pamphlets and similar documents. Under the circumstances I do not think any good purpose can be served by the Minister of Public Works in trying to force this discussion through, when we desire to obtain from the Minister of Agriculture information which we are entitled to have. I am perfectly satisfied that if the hon. Minister persists, this discussion must go on, as we cannot neglect our duty by allowing this item to pass without the information we desire. When the information is given and the explanation made, then we should be justified in allowing the item to pass, but until then I think it should stand.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I feel much as my hon. friend who has just taken his seat, that it is a great pity indeed that the hon. Minister of Public Works did not accept the offer made to him on this side of the House early in the evening. We have been discussing a very important question, and one in which the people are deeply interested, and the discussion has been carried on in that calm and judicial spirit that ought to be exhibited in the House of Commons. We made very good progress, but when two o'clock in the morning arrived, the proposition was made that we should adjourn. That was only a reasonable proposition, and it should have met with acceptance by the Government, especially in view of the fact that we have been looking forward to the Budget speech this afternoon, as the most important event of late years, in view of the changes which the Government intimated would be made in the tariff. There are many reasons why these items should be allowed to stand. Here is the next clause which we have been discussing, $5,900 for agents in Europe. There are a hundred questions which will suggest themselves before that is voted. Between business men, in such a transaction as that, it would be asked where the money was to be spent, and how the money which was last provided was spent. These and a hundred other questions would arise, and it is, therefore, reasonable that a question of this kind should have been allowed to stand when it was requested at the hour of half-past three in the morning. One could hardly believe that the Minister of Public Works, who is leading the House, would be so cruel as to compel us to sit until now, when it is a quarter past five in the morning, and to ask us to let these large amounts go through without our asking a question or getting any information in regard to them. The old saying is "better late than never," and I think even now the Minister of Public Works ought to relent and allow the motion to carry. The Opposition would be utterly neglectful of their duties if they did not discuss these items fully and freely. It is our money you are spending as well as yours, and the people have a right to know how the money is spent. It is the duty also of the supporters of the Government to criticise this expenditure. It is not their duty to simply vote blindly for anything the Government proposes. They are human, as well as the rest of us, and, therefore, it is the duty of their supporters to investigate every item, as well as it is our duty. Here is an item of $55,000, and another of $16,000, and the Minister of Public Works asks that we shall allow these to go through without any criticism. Otherwise, he compels us to sit up all night, and endure all this fatigue simply because he has got his back up and is determined to push this through, and throttle the Opposition or make them suffer these consequences. I do not think in this age any Minister can afford to take a stand like that. When we look over the Auditor General's Report, we see an utterly wilful waste of public money. In regard to the item of $5,900 for agents in Europe, a great many questions will come up for discussion. I find in the London agency a gentleman of the name of J. G. Colmer, secretary, who receives a salary of $2,195. One would expect that for that amount he ought to perform his duties very faithfully, but, further on, we find that he also received an amount of money for his fares and his living expenses for so many days, his cabs and telegrams, and even his income tax. It seems strange that this Dominion should pay the tax on this gentleman's income. Surely his salary is large enough to enable him to pay his own taxes. That is only one instance, and I venture to say the discussion of this vote will take at least two days, and yet the Minister of Public Works wants to force it through in a few hours and without any information as to how the money voted last year had been spent. I find another matter which certainly requires investigation. I find the name of Mr. C. C. Chipman, who figures in the Public Accounts, in connection with the London agency in England, for the amount of $422. Now, I would like to know who Mr. Chipman is? What are his duties? What has he been doing? Then I find that Sir Charles Tupper figures here for $210 more. Who is Sir Charles Tupper? There is a gentleman by that name, a High Commissioner in London, drawing his salary of $10,000 from the people of this country. I think probably it is the same gentleman, and he is supposed to take a lively interest in every thing that pertains to the welfare of Canada. On page C—76 you will find that Sir Charles Tupper figures again in the Public Accounts. We have been paying him ground rent of his official residence, $332.15; taxes, $97.33; income tax, $250. Then we paid insurance premium on the house, $35.90; parochial rates of official residence, $324.34. I find we are paying Sir Charles Tupper, besides his salary, $1,250.10, and then we make him an allowance of $2,000. That makes $13,250 that Sir Charles Tupper gets as High Commissioner for Canada. Then you go through the different offices, we find various large sums of expenditure which ought to be thoroughly investigated. An enormous sum is paid in connection with the different agencies which requires explanation. I desire to enter my solemn protest against the proceedings of this evening. They have not been creditable to the Government or to the House or to the Minister of Public Works. An effort has been made to force the Opposition to yield to the pressure of superior numbers and to neglect their duties to the country. During these fourteen years we have spent $3,595,818 on immigration, a large amount of which has been literally wasted. Attention was called to the fact by the hon. member for Shelburne (General Laurie), that out of the militia appropriation of $1,250,000 for militia, only $250,000 went to pay the members of the force. The same remark would apply to our immigration system, a large amount of money being spent each year on maintaining an army of agents in England, Ireland and Scotland, and in this country and elsewhere. It is a useless expenditure to maintain an agent in London or Hamilton. There is no field for immigrants at these places. Some years ago a number of immigrants came to Chatham and remained a short time as a burden on the municipal council, drifting away afterwards to the other side the line. These immigrants do not remain in the country but go to the Western States. The large proportion of the immigrants are literally no good, because they are unfitted for the needs of this country. From 1881 to 1885 the Minister of Agriculture presented a carefully prepared statement of the number of immigrants who had settled in the Dominion during the past year. He stated how many English, Irish, Scotch and other immigrants settled in the North West. They had no means of contradicting the accuracy of those statements, and so it went on from year to year, and the Minister actually told us that from 1881 to 1885, there settled in Manitoba and the North-West 154,403 persons. This statement was said to be from a carefully prepared report, and there was supposed to be no doubt about its accuracy. Unfortunately, however, the census was taken in 1885 and the castles built up by the Government as to the condition of things in the North-West fell to the ground. The census proved that the statements submitted to this House were utterly unreliable and misleading in all their details.

Mr. HESSON. That is awfully stale.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The hon. member for North Perth no doubt does not like that. The medicine may be a little strong for him, but it is good for his health, and I recommend him to take it like a little man. By the census taken in 1881, the population was shown to be 122,400 in the North-West Territories and Manitoba, so that if the hon. gentleman's statements were correct we ought to have had in 1885, 276,803 of a population. When the census was taken in 1885, however, there was only 173,363. With such mis-statements before us, is it any wonder now that we should complain when this same Deputy Minister, who has shown himself incompetent, and ignorant of the simplest details of his office, comes down and tells us he has placed so many in Manitoba, and the North-West, and the Provinces of the Dominion, that we should doubt the accuracy of his statement? I wish to bring before this House the policy that ought be pursued towards settling up our North-West. We have a magnificent and fertile country there, but it struck me when the member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) was speaking to-night as rather strange that we had to pay so much money to induce farmers to go up there. I have no doubt that the statements he made about the prosperity of certain men who have gone to the North-West were strictly accurate; but, on the other hand, a very large number of the people who went up there have had their crops destroyed by frosts during the past few years. I know one smart intelligent young man from my own town who went up there five years ago, and his father told me a short time before I left home, that he just had a letter from his son and that during the last five years he had not one single crop because the frost killed them. The National Policy of the Government has also injured the farmers in that country, because they have got to pay duties of from 35 to 40 per cent. on everything they import into Manitoba for use on their farms. If you could only relieve the settlers of this incubus, you would settle up the country faster than you could in any other way. The taxes are especially burdensome on the North-West, as they have no factories, and are compelled to bring all their manufactured articles from Ontario or the United States. I desire also to call attention to a valuable and authentic work entitled "An Official Handbook of Information relating to the Dominion of Canada, published with the approval of Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies, by the Department of Agriculture." This was published in January, 1890, and I find on page 59 a paragraph which I think ought to be repudiated at once by the Government, and ought never to have appeared, because it inflicts great injustice on the mechanics and artisans of this country. In speaking of the manufacturers and the demand for labor, it says:

"Men to work and develop the agriculture and mineral resources are therefore the kind of immigrants Ontario is most in need of. Agriculture from this being the leading industry, stands in the first place, but as well as wanting men to clear its forests and cultivate its soil, it requires to build its houses, to make furniture and household goods and open up communication from one part of the country to the other by the construction of roads and railroads."

Now, Sir, I do not think the Government ought to have allowed a paragraph like that to appear in an official document intended to be circulated broadcast in all European countries. The Government are using the money of the artisans and mechanics of this country to bring people out to compete with them. We are now protecting the manufacturers by placing heavy duties on imported goods which compete with their products, and instead of granting the same privilege to the mechanics and artisans, we are actually taking money from them to bring competitors into their field of labor. The Government ought to withdraw this document altogether from circulation, because this paragraph is utterly untrue. We have in Ontario plenty of men to build our houses, to make our furniture and household goods, and to open up communication by the construction of roads and railroads without importing a single man. A great many of our mechanics and artisans in the town I come from have been obliged to leave to seek for work in other fields, some going to California, some to Windsor and some to Chicago. Therefore, I think this whole matter of the immigration policy of the Government ought to receive our earnest consideration, and ought to be fully and freely discussed. I think the Government ought even now to accede to the request from this side of the House and allow the Committee to rise and report progress. I am quite sure, if the hon. First Minister had been in his place, he would not have objected to the reasonable request of the acting leader of this side of the House.

Motion that the Committee rise negatived: Yeas, 16; Nays, 24.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The Committee seem disposed to go on with the work. As motions similar to the one just voted on allow a little more latitude in discussion, I intend to close my observations with the motion that the Committee rise. However, before doing so I would say that I am afraid the Minister of Public Works who is compelling the Committee to sit until this unreasonable hour, has not been paying attention to the proceedings of the Committee. He has been anything but active in the discharge of his duties. He folded his arms and did not steal silently away, but fell silently asleep. I suppose he felt conscious of his strength, and wished to show what a grand and magnificent leader he would make, if he were only at the head of the Conservative party. He may have had great dreams in that respect, but I question very much if his tactics were those of a prudent general, because, if he thinks he is wearing out his opponents, he is also wearing out his friends. His conduct can only be susceptible of one interpretation in the country, and that is that when a responsible head of a department found himself unable to account satisfactorily for expenditures, he had recourse to superior numbers at his back in order to prevent a fair and proper discussion of the expenditure of the people's money being made. I cannot tell what the intention of the hon. Minister may be, but the disposition of the Opposition is not, at present, so long as they are able to carry on a discussion in the interests of the country, to allow tens of thousands of dollars of the money of the people to be voted away and expended in a manner not warranted in the public interest, without endeavoring to find out the particulars. We have no desire to delay business; we desire to accelerate business as much as possible consistently with the public interest. The Committee know that when questions were asked with reference to the subjects under discussion, how utterly unable the Government were to supply such information as could be accepted by this side. We could not be charged with being hypercritical. When the hon. Minister announced the figures of the immigration into the different Provinces, the members from the different Provinces could not accept his statement as correct. It was their bounden duty to ascertain, if possible, what machinery had been made use of to obtain these results and produce these misleading statements, which have been placed before the House and the country by the Department of Agriculture—statements calculated to do harm instead of good. The Department of Agriculture declared by these statements that there was a large immigration into the fertile prairies of the North-West, but we had a subsequent statement from the same Department which showed that in five years over 100,000 people had left the North-West and Manitoba, and gone out of our Dominion altogether, so that that Province and those Territories had become depopulated by one-half. We endeavored to ascertain where the mistake was and information was not vouchsafed. Unwilling to believe that there was such a vast migration from the small population of Manitoba and the North-West, I was inclined rather to accept this solution: not that these people had actually left the country but that the Department of Agriculture, when they said they went in, had placed a false and misleading statement before us. There was no reflection cast upon the bonâ fides of the Minister of Agriculture, but his attention was called to the fact that there evidently were errors, and that there must be defective machinery somewhere to have led us astray. It was only right and proper that the Committee should bring its mind to bear on the subject and help the Minister to solve the difficulty, and devise better machinery to obtain better results. Hon. gentlemen on this side pointed out that if the head of the Department found he was right, and that he had ascertained the correct number from the Custom house entries of those who came in, the weakness of his machinery must have been that of having no check of those who went out, and that if he could devise some means whereby the latter would be counted, as well as the former, the result would be more correct. These suggestions were thrown out in the best spirit by hon. gentlemen on this side. We will not say it was an unprofitable discussion. Then we had a discussion in reference to the mode of taking the census. I desire to remind the committee that we had been sitting from 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon to 3 o'clock this morning when the modest request was preferred from this side of the House that we should adjourn, and it was thrice refused. That led to the motion which was made by the hon. member for West Elgin that this Committee should rise, and cogent reasons were given in support of that motion. Your own bodily condition, Mr. Chairman, was proof that this resolution should be passed. The appearance of the Minister of Public Works himself is now such that he has not the bright look in his eye which he generally has. He appears to be sleepy. He is tired. He has been a little cross, and it is not often that he is cross, but, if he is cross, it must be against himself, and, in that case, he deserves it. The Minister of Justice, also, is compelled to sit here throughout the long night, when he knows that it was proper that the House should adjourn. On this side, we have been compelled to remain here until daylight. It is impossible that nature can stand this strain, and, therefore, I move that the Committee do now rise.

Mr. MULOCK. I would suggest to the Minister of Public Works, in the interest of economy, that at this hour instructions should be given to have the lights in this Chamber extinguished. I endorse everything which has fallen from the lips of my hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Paterson). If there is anything which is important in parliamentary consideration, it is the expense of public money, and I am sorry that the Government has endeavored by force to wring from the people's representatives their consent to any expenditure of public money. Any attempt of this kind must receive the condemnation of the country. It is, therefore, the duty of those who have any regard for the public interest to prevent any forced abstraction of money from the public. In a few hours we shall be called upon to meet in a Committee to consider an important matter, the Alien Labor Bill, and yet the mover of that Bill sits here and endeavors to prevent any adjournment. If the desire is to strangle that measure I can understand his action. At a later hour, there is a Committee which meets in the Senate which some members of this House feel it to be their duty to attend. In any case, our presence is desired in bed, in order to be prepared for the serious duties of the day when, we are told, at three o'clock the Budget will be laid before us and the tariff changes announced. What is the meaning of the Minister's action? Is it simply that he desires to tire us out, in order that he may obtain votes for money? Did it ever happen in the history of Canada that the people's representatives were coerced into voting money at the demand of the Government? It appears that we are going back three hundred years in the history of British institutions. If the Minister of Public Works ever expects to succeed to the premiership, he will have to show a better example; he will have to show that he is not altogether an ultramontane, but that he desires to act progressively and constitutionally. The course he is now taking will alarm the people of this country, and deservedly so, and will interfere with his political progress. He may think that he is tactically right in the action he has taken in leading the House, but he will find that, in leading the House, he is losing the country. I agree entirely with what has fallen from my hon. friend from South Brant (Mr. Paterson) and I would urge upon the Minister of Public Works, in order to prevent any further mistake on his part, that he should allow this House to be adjourned forthwith. The action he has taken strikes me as a very peculiar one. I had occasion some time ago to comment on some transactions in his Department in strong language. I do not want to repeat that, but such actions as he is taking now are calculated to justify what I said at that time. I will reserve any further remarks until the Ministry have had the opportunity to express their opinions. If they feel it necessary to go on, it may be necessary for me to review the course taken in other countries, and to compare it with the plan which is now adopted.

Mr. McMULLEN. Perhaps the Minister of Public Works will make some statement in regard to this matter.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have nothing to say except what I said before. If this motion now before the House were carried, it would close the Commons, and we would have to begin again as if we had done nothing at all. We are ready, as I stated in the beginning, if these last items are adopted, to come to the understanding that on concurrence the discussion may take place in the same way as if it were in Committee of Supply. In that case, the Minister of Agriculture will give the explanations he may have to give.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. gentleman knows very well that the discussion on concurrence amounts to nothing but a farce. When the last hours of the Session arrive, members are so anxious to leave for home that they will not stay to discuss these matters. I do not think the Minister has done himself or friends justice in the course he has taken in this matter. We discussed it from a very friendly standpoint. There was nothing said on this side but what was kind, and, when we reached two o'clock, I suggested to the hon. gentleman that we should take the smaller items and reserve the larger. I think, if he had taken the advice of his friends, he would have adopted that course. If he adheres to the course which he has apparently decided on, we must go on, and we are prepared to discuss these items.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman is mistaken in saying that discussion does not take place on concurrence. If he looks at the record of last year, and the year before, he will find that we had motions made on concurrence, and these motions were discussed and were voted upon. Therefore it shows that it is time enough, and the House will have ample opportunity to discuss them on concurrence.

Mr. MULLOCK. According to parliamentary practice, we are entitled to certain information at this stage of the discussion, but the Minister now proposes that the information can only be given at the last stage. This is unjust and unfair.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It will be better to discuss on concurrence, because then the Minister of Agriculture will have all the information that is needed.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I may say that I have taken no part in this lengthened discussion and as an impartial onlooker, I am enabled to give an unbiased suggestion as to the course I think it would be desirable to pursue. An experienced parliamentarian like the hon. gentleman who leads the House knows that rights belong to the Opposition as well as to the Government. It is impossible that legislation can be carried on except by mutual concession, and the hon. Minister of Public Works should have remembered what occurred in this House a few years ago and should have accepted the just and reasonable proposition made by the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) who leads the Opposition to-night, and who made the suggestion at a convenient hour for adjournment this morning. The suggestion of the leader of the Government to defer the matter for concurrence could not be accepted, because any one of experience in this House knows, that on concurrence there is usually no opportunity for bringing very important public matters before the attention of the House, and which matters have been deferred during the course of the present Session. I may say, on behalf of the gentlemen with whom I have the honor to act, and I am quite sure the statement will receive the assent of the House—

Mr. BOWELL. Not much.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Yes; and the assent of the Minister of Customs.

Mr. BOWELL. No.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) The hon. gentleman does not know what I am going to say.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) There was a Mr. Stewart Cumberland here some years ago who was a mind-reader, but I never understood that he imparted his gift in this respect to my hon. friend the Minister of Customs.

Mr. BOWELL. He did not know you as long as I do.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) I dispute with the Minister of Customs the possession of the faculty which he claims, of telling what is in the mind of another man. I was about to say that in the discussion of the Estimates this Session the Opposition have shown a desire to facilitate the business of the House, and for the last eight years the Estimates have never been passed with the same despatch as this year. It should be remembered that after all we have discussed a number of very important items during this sitting, and I have no doubt that many of the suggestions thrown out by the members on both sides of the House may be of service to the hon. gentleman who presides over the Department of Agriculture. We had a very important debate on the census, and I venture to say that the suggestions made by the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) if they are adopted by the Government—as we have some reason to hope they will be, on account of the cordial reception given them by the House—the country will be repaid fifty times over for the delay and the expense of the long sitting, in that one regard alone. The hon. Minister of Agriculture should at least acknowledge that the exposé of the immigration returns which he gave to the House shows, that there is something radically wrong in their compilation and that the system should be changed. He stated that in the little Province of Prince Edward Island from which I come, there were some 454 immigrants last year. My hon. colleague expressed the opinion from his great personal knowledge that there were not ten immigrants to that Island, and I have no hesitation in saying that the statement made by my hon. friend in that regard is absolutely correct. I believe that you cannot find four out of the alleged 454 immigrants in Prince Edward Island. I think where the hon. gentleman has been led astray is that a certain number of Prince Edward Islanders returned to spend a month or two during the summer in the salubrious climate of the Island; a climate that I say is unrivalled in the Dominion of Canada or in the known world. There is no better health resort in the world than Prince Edward Island.

Mr. ELLIS. Could we adjourn there now?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I have no doubt that if this sitting is prolonged to the extent it may be, and if the hon. gentleman requires some ozone, he will no doubt find an adjournment to that place very beneficial. I think that it would be a good thing for the Department of Agriculture if the hon. Minister were to hold an enquiry as to these immigration returns which have been furnished by his subordinates, because it is a very serious thing to mislead the public with regard to these statistics. The hon. Minister found during the discussion that the subject of the repatriation of French Canadians to the Province of Quebec had engaged the attention of the people of that Province. If my memory serves me right, the Minister of Public Works, referring to this matter some years ago at an historical banquet, expressed his sincere desire and determination to repatriate these people. Notwithstanding this it appears that the exodus from that unfortunate province has been increasing every year. Surely the bone and sinew of the country should not be permitted to leave without some effort being made to stay the exodus. I quote the following from the report of the Rev. C. A. Beaudry on this repatriation work, a gentleman who was specially appointed to enquire into the matter and who seemed to have been thoroughly competent for the position. He says :

"During the months of May and June last I visited the New England States with the intention of studying the question on the spot, and of making known the advantages of our Canadian North-West for such of our countrymen as might be desirous of returning and taking up farming.

"During that year I met nearly all the French Canadians of the following cities:—Nashua, Manchester, N.H.; Worcester, Mass.; Gardner, N.Y.; Fall River, Providence, R.I.; New Bedford, Woonsocket Falls, Boston, Lynn, Lowell, Mass., and other places of less importance.

"I found these places filled with French Canadians. The latest arrivals generally came from the poorest parts of the Province of Quebec. Especially from the counties below Quebec.

"The earlier arrivals and those already settled in the United States for some years, and known as skillful mechanics, receive generally good wages, and moreover many of them are now proprietors, and have no wish whatever to move. However, even among those there are some affected with home-sickness, and anxious to go back with the intention of taking up farms."

Then after giving some information with respect to their wages and the number of mechanics out of work there, he says—and to this I wish to draw the particular attention of the Minister of Public Works :

"There is no doubt that among the last arrivals a deduction must be made for families leaving the villages who go and remain in large cities with the hope of getting work; but it is a fact well ascertained, in spite of the several political systems, and denials or affirmations of politicians, that emigration keeps on its devastation at the rate of a national plague."

Now, what conclusion should we draw from this? I draw the conclusion that it behooves hon. gentlemen on both sides of this House, I care not what their political proclivities are, to give their best thoughts to the means for staying that national plague and keeping our people in the country. This gentleman is evidently in earnest, because he winds up his report by saying that he is willing gratuitously, or as he says pro patria, to circulate immigration pamphlets, providing the necessary postage stamps are supplied to him. This is the most moderate offer I ever knew, and even the necessity for stamps could be obviated, because the Minister could frank the pamphlets from his Department. That is only one phase of this vast subject. We were willing, provided the hon. gentleman gave us the facts, to allow him to mature the steps that should be taken. We wish to ascertain something about the $2,000 for the contingencies of the High Commissioner. That subject was brought up in the Public Accounts Committee, but no details of the expenditure were obtained. Then having exhausted all the evidence, we thought it was the proper time to lay before the House our views on that expenditure, and on the policy of allowing any public officer to expend $2,000 or $3,000 of public money without accounting for the details. Then there is the large item of $55,000 for immigration and immigration expenses generally, under which item the broad question of the policy of the Department would be opened up. Judging from the results in the past, there is no defence to be put forward for this vast expenditure, and why? I think the answer was given in the speech of my hon. friend from Brant who showed that the immigrants only come to Canada nominally, but really pass through to make more rich our rivals to the south. If these are the facts, it does not become this House to shut its eyes to them. It is not right that this House should accept unreservedly the statements made by the Deputy Minister of Agriculture from year to year as to our immigration statistics, in which we know that he has been egregiously wrong for many years, and that his statements have become a regular laughing stock both in this House and out of it. Although very little attention is paid to the Maritime Provinces in respect of immigration, I venture to say that if it were pointed out to the farmers of England, Scotland and Ireland who have a little capital, that there has been such an exodus from the Maritime Provinces to the North-West and the United States, that many farms fairly cultivable and improved could be purchased for a very small sum, there would be a considerable immigration of that class into those Provinces. I venture to say that there is no spot in the world where a farmer who knows his business and possesses a small capital could locate himself and his family to better advantage than in the Province of Prince Edward Island or in the fertile valleys of Nova Scotia or New Brunswick. I am not disparaging at all the great agricultural capabilities of the Province of Ontario; but it is well known that the farms in that Province are very expensive, and it requires a large capital to enable an intending immigrant to purchase and carry on one of them, while a valuable farm could be obtained in Prince Edward Island for one-third or one-fourth of the money. It has a soil and climate which admits of farming being carried on profitably if we had a good market. Then, where could a man settle more advantageously than in the Annapolis Valley, which nature has endowed so richly that it is capable of maintaining four or five times its present population? An hour or two of the time of this Committee might be most profitably spent by the members representing these different Provinces in setting forth their advantages for immigrants with capital, and circulating those speeches among that class. In the North-West they are anxious to obtain Canadians as settlers; they prefer them to settlers from the old country; then, why could not the older Provinces supply the North-West with Canadian settlers, and let their places be taken by the incoming immigrants? But the immigration policy of this Government has been almost to entirely ignore the Maritime Provinces, and it would be somewhat to the advantage of the country if some of the $100,000 spent on this matter should be spent with the object of promoting such an immigration to the Provinces down by the sea. I was a boy when the last immigrant ship arrived there in 1851, but since that we have only had the natural increase of population. This evening we were twitted by the member for Toronto Centre (Mr. Cockburn) with the fact that we only had a population of 120,000, but that Island is capable of maintaining in comfort a population of over 500,000. I was in conversation with Prof. Saunders the other day, and he stated that perhaps farming was carried on in Prince Edward Island more carefully and scientifically than it is elsewhere, except in some small sections of Ontario. The farmers have been carefully trained, and understand scientific farming better than most of their confrères in other Provinces. As to the results, he said, I do not know enough to enable me to give you a proper statement on that subject, but you have a very fine soil. I have come to the conclusion that Prince Edward Island is the place for an intending emigrant to come to with £400 or £500. I know no place where he can expend it more judiciously. We have a fine system of education and everything to make life happy. From May to November we have one of the most lovely climates in the world, and more of the faded citizens should come there from the towns and cities, and they would not regret it. We have only touched upon the fringe of this question now, and I will see how some of my hon. friends from the other Provinces feel about it.

Mr. LANDERKIN. If the Government desire to adjourn now, I will not proceed with any remarks. If they desire to continue the debate, it will be well to consider our diplomatic service in connection with the service of immigration agents. We have had recently a Minister at Washington.

Mr. TAYLOR. I just telephoned for him.

Mr. LANDERKIN. As a result of his visit to Washington, I understand there is to be an increased duty on eggs, and I believe he has also succeeded in obtaining an additional duty to be placed upon sheep. I believe the cattle trade also came within the purview of his great intellect and the result is that a duty of $10 per head is to be placed upon cattle. This diplomatic service is like the immigration service, in this respect, that it requires to be very carefully looked after. If the efforts of the Government had been intentionally directed against the freer interchange of products between Canada and the United States, they could not have been more successful than they have been. When our friends opposite came into power, they provided for reciprocity in certain products whenever the Americans were willing to make the same provision. The Americans did that, but the Government of Canada failed to keep their promise. Then the attention of Parliament was called to that outrage, and they were obliged to permit reciprocal trade in those products. For instance, they took the duty off peaches, but they rose equal to the occasion and placed a duty on peach baskets. Another circumstance which was calculated to irritate the people of the United States was that when an employé of the Government at Halifax was courteous to an American there and allowed him to ship some goods in bond on our railways, that officer was dismissed. It may be that they consider this sort of action statesmanship. The book published by the authority of the Government, which has already been referred to, contains suggestions booming the Government savings banks and, at the same time, advocating the introduction of skilled labor in developing the resources of the country. I think this book ought to be referred to the Committee on the Contract Labor Bill, and I call the attention of the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) to it. If the hon. member is out of the proclamation business now, he might induce his committee to issue a proclamation of this kind to the workmen telling them that the market is sufficiently full now. I heard the Premier himself say that there was a great demand for artisans in the North-West. Some of my constituents went to Manitoba and the North-West last year, where they were told they could get steady employment. They went there in the spring, but before the fall they came back again, and were convinced that they had more steady employment at home than they could obtain there. If the North-West was well governed, I think a great deal of employment might be found, but for ten or twelve years past the people there have been injured by misgovernment. While the Liberal Government was in power population poured into that country, but ever since our friends went out of power, the population seems to have gone out of the North-West. We have spent a lot of money to settle that country, but we have had so many monopolies in land and in railways, and in other matters, that I think that we cannot look for much prosperity there until these monopolies are abolished. The Minister of Agriculture might retrieve his reputation to some extent if he would give us the information which has been asked for. He may think that a system of coercion will work here, but he will find it just as objectionable as it is elsewhere. If he is not posted in regard to his Department, his deputy should be. In regard to this hand-book of information, does the Minister intend to cancel those clauses which invite competition with our own workmen? I regret to see that the Government have not extended to the working classes the protection they have given to other classes. We see that they are putting on duties to prevent competition in manufactured articles, but we do not see that they are preventing skilled workmen from entering Canada to enter into competition with our own workmen. If this Government will consent to adjourn this branch of the discussion, until we study the clauses that the Minister of Agriculture thinks are of importance, I will take my seat. I ask if they are willing to adjourn until we study these matters?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We will adjourn when this item is passed.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I am afraid that some of the predictions I heard from my constituents during the recent recess, are going to prove correct. When I visited my county within the last few days I was told by Conservatives and Reformers, that the Opposition had not done their duty in criticising the Estimates, and that the Government got large sums of money voted without due consideration to the interests of the country. The people consider that it is the duty of the Government to give all necessary information to Parliament and to the country on every point. I was amazed at the statement made with respect to Mr. Metcalfe by the Minister of Customs. He said that this gentleman might have been recalled from Winnipeg, during the six weeks that he drew his salary, that the Government could give no account of what he was doing, but I am quite sure, that if he was brought down to Ottawa he would have charged his train fare from Ottawa to Winnipeg, and not from Kingston to Winnipeg. This immigration system adopted by the Government is part and parcel of the National Policy. When I was crossing the ocean in 1888, I met on board of the steamer five young men, just such as we want in Canada. They told me they were not going to settle in Canada, but intended to seek homes in Washington Territory, and as a reason for this they stated that they had friends in Washington Territory who had tried to make a living in Ontario and Manitoba and British Columbia, and had crossed over to the United States. As a reason for this they stated that clothing was dearer in Canada, and that agricultural implements especially were much higher than they were in the United States. I can tell the Government that the reports of immigrants themselves which they send home to their friends, are of far greater value than all the immigration agents they can appoint. We were told by an agent at the Agriculture Committee the other day, that he did not know of a single man who left the Province of Ontario for the United States during the last 12 months. I can inform him that I have a nephew who went from this country some years ago, and after he wrought in the North-West he went across the line. There was another brother of his, who went up there last summer, and after he had gone through the North-West and made enquiries there, they both went to the United States and took up land in Dakota, principally for the reason that it would require so much more money to give them a fair start on a farm in Manitoba than it would take in Dakota. This is a very serious condition of things for Canada. Our system here has provoked retaliatory measures in the United States, but I am glad to see that we have introduced before the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, what is known as the Hitt Bill, by which it is provided that the United States Government shall appoint three commissioners to meet commissioners from the Dominion of Canada, as soon as the Government will appoint such commissioners, to take into consideration the question of unrestricted reciprocity between the two countries. We have always heard since our National Policy was adopted that the Government of the Dominion of Canada, whether Conservative or Reform, has always been in favor of reciprocity with the United States. I hope the Government will stick to that policy now, and that they will consider the very grave position into which they have brought Canada. We have heard from the Treasury benches time and again, that it was in the interest of Canada that if we could not have reciprocity in trade, we should have reciprocity in tariff, and we were told by the First Minister, in 1878, that the only measure we could adopt to get reciprocity with the United States, was to pursue a retaliatory policy. I believe that the Government of the United States has taken a leaf out of the book of the Canadian Government, and that they have come to the conclusion that they will have reciprocity, or cease to trade with us altogether. That policy of the United States is foreshadowed in the draft of a Bill before Congress which I had an opportunity of seeing. Now we have been told by the members from Prince Edward Island to-night, that one of the best places for immigrants to go at the present time is to Prince Edward Island, because the land is so cheap there now. I am sorry to have to say that in the fertile Province of Ontario, the land is nearly as cheap as it is in the Island Province. I have a statement here taken from one of the local papers of the County of Perth which reads as follows:—

“Mr. W. Porteous, of Mitchell, bought a 50-acre farm in Logan a few days ago for $1,600. There is a bank barn and house on the place which would cost at least $1,000. What about farm lands not decreasing in value?”

I know a farm very well. It has a dwelling with good buildings upon it, and five or six years ago it could not have been got for $5,600, while a short time ago that 100 acres of the very best land was sold for $4,500. I believe myself that this National Policy has done more to bring about the present state of things than all other adverse circumstances combined. I have a circular here issued by the Government which says that the taxation is very low in Canada, but as against that I may state that when I was at home a few days ago I met a young man recently out from Scotland, who had travelled all through the Province of Ontario, and who told me that he could live more cheaply at home and buy clothes cheaper than he could in this country.

An hon. MEMBER. He would buy shoddy.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). No shoddy at all. I could show you a suit of clothes that I have on my back, that I bought in Argyle street, in Glasgow, from one of the best furnishing merchants in the country, for $16.30, and I was told by a tailor in Canada that he could not make them for me less than $23.

Mr. BOWELL. I bought a first-class suit in London for $7.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I know a first-class farm hand and he would not work for me longer than he could get back to Glasgow, because he said his clothes were nearly worn out and it would pay him to go over with cattle to England, and buy his clothes there, and come back again, as he could enter them free of duty. I was putting up a farm building this spring, and although we did not advertise, it became known that we wanted to build and we had contractor after contractor driving eight and ten miles asking to get the work. They stated that there were almost no buildings going on in the country, and that they never had such hard experience for ten or twelve years in the County of Huron. I again tell the Government, that all their money spent for the purpose of immigration is of no avail until they can show that Canada is a cheap country to live in. At the present time Canada is one of the dearest countries to live in on the continent of America, and it requires more money to furnish a farm here than in any other place. We are told that coming events cast their shadow before, and if the events which are promising on the other side of the line have the effect of inducing Canada to take a leaf out of our neighbor's book and establish free intercourse on this continent at any rate, it would be of the greatest possible advantage to this country. We used to be told that the policy the Government were adopting with regard to the North-West would have the effect in 1890 or 1891 of returning from that country to the Treasury at least $70,000,000 of the money spent in building the Canadian Pacific Railway. That is one of the predictions that has not been fulfilled. On the contrary, the expenses of surveying and administering the lands of the North-West are greater than the revenue received from sales. The people of the old country are becoming acquainted with the history of Canada and the United States, and I regret to say that in my rambles in Scotland during the last few years, I have found that the reports sent there are inducing a great majority of those crossing the Atlantic to settle in the United States, where the people are not so heavily burdened with taxation as our people, except, perhaps, in woollen goods. We have been told that the Province of New Brunswick is a fine Province to settle in. Why, Sir, we have farm after farm in the Province of Ontario which can be got for 20 or 30 per cent. less than it could be got for six or seven years ago. The kind of settlers we want are men with £1,000 or £1,500, who could get their choice of some of the best lands in the Province to-day at these reduced prices. I hope the Government will so change their immigration policy as to induce many of these people from foreign lands to seek a home in Canada, which is a very desirable country to settle in, either for the mechanic or the agriculturist, apart from the drawbacks of the National Policy. The promises made to the workingmen and the agriculturists of the country have never been fulfilled, and if the present condition of things continues, I am afraid that many of our desirable young men will continue to leave this country and go to the United States, where they secure better wages. I do not intend to say anything more on this very important question at the present time.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the dissertation given by the hon. gentleman who has just sat down is, to say the least, rather inconsistent. I have listened to several editions of his speech on the subject of immigration. At one time he praised the country very much. He held up Canada to be a very fine country—one to which he had come with comparatively little, but with a strong arm and a stout heart, he had worked his way up until to-day he has an extensive farm and may be considered wealthy. He has succeeded so well in this country that he has now a hundred head of cattle feeding for the old country market. He has told the House that we wanted men with money. I believe the openings are better to-day for men without money but willing to work than they were twenty or thirty years ago. If men could succeed so well in a wooded country, where they had so much labor to prepare the soil before crops could be put in the ground, how much better will they succeed on the prairies of the North-West, where it only requires to plough the ground and put in the grain. I say it is very inconsistent in hon. gentlemen opposite to condemn the immigration policy of the Government. Now, with regard to the tactics of hon. gentlemen opposite, I think they are decidedly unbecoming of an Opposition in this House or in any other House. If there is any member of the Government who is distinguished for his courtesy and kindness, and who endeavors to give full and complete information with regard to the affairs of his Department, it is the hon. Minister of Agriculture. Notwithstanding the attacks made on him from time to time, often very unseemly attacks, he invariably rises with unflinching courtesy and gives all the information he can. When he was badgered last night he gave replies which I think should have satisfied any reasonable man, but he was attacked all the more fiercely and offensively, and the hon. gentlemen showed by their opposition that they did not want information, but rather obstruction. I think hon. gentlemen should see that there is no reason for wasting any more of the time and money of the country in this way. We had an unseemly display of this kind a few years ago; but I think hon. gentlemen will have to use better logic in the country than they have been using in the House to convince the people that they have been doing their duty. We have displayed extreme courtesy towards them on this side of the House; we have quietly listened to them, and yet they are not satisfied; but it seems that their determination has been to obstruct the business of the House rather than to obtain such information as might be expected to enable them to discharge their duty faithfully.

Mr. FISHER. I really think the hon. member has not been courteous to the leader of the House. He said we had all the information that we asked for, and had plenty of opportunity to ask all the questions we chose, while the leader of the House told us that while he would not grant an adjournment, he was quite ready to make an arrangement by which this question could be brought up on concurrence, when he would give us all the information we ask for. No man knows better than the hon. Minister himself, that for several years past it has been the policy of his leader and his Government to postpone the business of this House as far as possible to the last moment. He knows that for a number of years past, concurrence has been gone through with lightning rapidity in the last few days of the Session, at a time when the Ministers themselves and their followers, and even the members of the Opposition, are determined to get away to their own business, and will not stop to discuss public affairs; and, knowing this, he has attempted to turn away our demand for information by this offer. But my hon. friend on this side is too well versed in the rules of parliamentary practice to be taken in by such a proposition, even from such an experienced member as the hon. Minister of Public Works. I must say I differ a little from the hon. gentleman as to the manner in which the hon. Minister of Agriculture has met us on this occasion. Far be it from me to accuse him of discourtesy; but he has hardly given us the information which the subject demands, and which it is our duty to call for. There is no doubt that in these two items which have been brought under discussion there are grave suspicions of improper conduct in the Department, and I am quite sure the public will justify us in demanding full information regarding them. There is no doubt that the circumstances of the dismissal of Mr. Grahame demand the closest scrutiny. Then, the simple fact that a member of the Ontario Legislature, who is in political alliance with hon. gentlemen opposite, is in the employ of this Government, is sufficient of itself to throw suspicion on the transaction. Notwithstanding our weariness of this long sitting, I am rather glad it has occurred, because I believe that it will cause the public to more clearly apprehend the nature of these immigration items than they would otherwise have done, and the result will be a much more searching investigation of the affairs of this Department than would otherwise have taken place. I do not remember any Session in which this item has been passed at one sitting of the House. We cannot formulate a motion on concurrence without having the information first. I may repeat what I have already said as to the reported influx of immigrants into the Province of Quebec, that I have never been able to ascertain where they have gone, and the immigration agents do not refer to them. Mr. Beaudry's report says: These men state distinctly that they find themselves better off in the United States than in Canada. No wonder the hon. gentleman finds it difficult to turn the stream of immigration back into this country. After all these discussions, it is absurd for the Minister of Public Works to insist upon a vote of this kind passing through at this hour of the day, and we would be lacking in our duty if we did not insist upon full investigation. I do not desire that the Committee should rise in order to block further work, and, if the leader of the House would yield to a reasonable proposition, I have no doubt my hon. friend who moved the resolution would be willing to withdraw it and allow the Committee to meet again to advance the public business. Until some arrangement is come to, however, I do not see how we can possibly allow this to pass.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). In reply to a remark of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), I say that Canada is one of the finest countries that any man ever set foot upon, but the policy of this Government has interfered with its prosperity. He says I am a newcomer in this country. I think I have been in Canada since he sat at his mother's knee. I have spent nearly 50 years in Canada, and what little I have in this world I got before the National Policy was introduced, at a time when a man got the due reward of his labor, and was allowed to sell in the dearest and buy in the cheapest market.

Mr. BRIEN. A great deal of light has been thrown on this subject during this discussion. We are bound to enquire into all the details of this matter, and I think the Public Accounts show that a great amount of money is expended on useless purposes. I find that at Detroit no less than 2,199 families are stated to have gone into the United States from Canada with effects valued at $261,632. Supposing there are five persons in each family, that would give a total of 10,995. We should be cautious in expending money to encourage immigration as we have in the past, simply that the immigrants may pass through to another country. With the amount of immigration which we have had, added to our natural increase, we ought now to have a population of seven millions and a half. This Committee should seriously consider the cause of the exodus which has taken place. It is not the soil, or the climate, or the institutions of the country, that will induce people to live in it. The better mode would be to make it a cheaper country to live in. We find, that in 1878 the duties of the country amounted to about 14 per cent., while in 1889 it was 21.65 per cent. In 1878 it amounted to $3.46 per capita, and in 1889 to $4.68 per capita. No wonder the people are leaving the country, when we find such an enormous increase both in the duty and in the debt. I hope this motion will not be carried until the question has been more thoroughly discussed.

Motion that the Committee rise negatived.

Mr. MULOCK. I find that at Quebec we have a staff of seventeen people, and I find that Mr. Anderson last year received within $100 of his salary for travelling expenses.

The CHAIRMAN. This item is for salaries.

Mr. McMULLEN. I see that J. G. Colmer has drawn $45 for fares. Where was he travelling when he drew that amount?

Mr. CARLING. I cannot state at the moment where he was travelling, but it was in England, by Mr. FISHER.

instruction from the High Commissioner. Perhaps he was attending the Glasgow Exhibition. I can get the information for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. McMULLEN. The Auditor General's Report shows that he was receiving $4.50 a day, in addition to his fare. I want to find out where he had to pay $4.50 a day. He also puts in charges for cab-hire and telegrams, and I want to have an explanation of all these matters. The Minister, or his deputy, should have been prepared to answer these enquiries.

Mr. CARLING. I think the hon. gentlemen are most unfair. I stated at the commencement that we are prepared to go on with each item in the immigration vote and explain each as we come to it, but the hon. gentleman got up a discussion in reference to the agent at Winnipeg.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) This is for the salaries of agents in Europe.

Mr. CARLING. The hon. member for North York asked a question in reference to the salary of Mr. Anderson in Quebec. If I knew what information hon. gentlemen wanted to get I would endeavor to supply it. There is no doubt we have the details in the Department, similar to those furnished by the Auditor General's Report, but if Sir Charles Tupper sent Mr. Colmer to any place, I am not in a position to state where he was sent to.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is surely reasonable for us to enquire what this expenditure was for, and it is because we find that the Minister of Agriculture is embarrassed that we suggested the adjournment.

Mr. CARLING. The hon. gentleman, I suppose, does not want an answer, and he is doing this for the purpose of killing time.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. CARLING. I have already stated that Mr. Colmer is in Sir Charles Tupper's office and under his control.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Has not the Minister got Sir Charles Tupper's report?

Mr. CARLING. Yes; it is in the hands of the printer.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. Minister of Agriculture is not in a position to give any information on a single question that has come before the House. Had the Minister taken the frank course at first and admitted that the appointment of Mr. Metcalfe, and the dismissal of Mr. Grahame was a political job, to assist a political friend, he would have, perhaps, received different treatment at the hands of the House. Every one must admit that the appointment of Mr. Metcalfe was of a suspicious character, and required full explanation. I think that, under the circumstances, the Minister should consent to the motion which I now make, and which is, that the Committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The Minister is unable to give us any information whatever with regard to these agencies in Europe. From the Minister's own official report we have the direct statement which shows that Sir Charles Tupper's report is absolutely necessary before we can discuss these Estimates. If the Minister of Public Works who leads the House insists on our passing those items without any information whatever, I believe that he will damage his reputation. I bring to his notice now the statement in the Minister of Agriculture's report that Sir Charles Tupper's report which is not yet before the House is of the utmost importance as a reason why he should consent to an adjournment until we get the information. I tell the Minister of Public Works, and let my voice reach the country, that as we have not the report of Sir Charles Tupper, and as the Minister of Agriculture cannot explain these items, it is an injustice to force the House to pass these items.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Yes, I say let my voice reach the country, that both Ministers are to blame if they attempt to force these Estimates through, without giving us information as to their nature. I do not see how the Minister can ask even his own supporters to pass these items, without any explanation whatever. I ask gentlemen on the opposite side of the House are they prepared to do so?

Mr. RYKERT. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) is the only member of the House who has ventured to consent to vote moneys without any information to this Parliament, and without this report of Sir Charles Tupper being before him which the Minister of Agriculture himself says "contains important facts respecting trade and industry in Great Britain which bears on this question of immigration." I suppose if we had Sir Charles Tupper's report we would see what Mr. Colmer has been doing for this money. I am not disposed to blame the Minister because he has not the information in his memory, but he will see the reasonableness of our having such information before we pass this item. The Minister cannot expect this side of the House, and he should not be able to expect even his own supporters to allow these items to pass without giving a reason for them. I submit that, under these circumstances, it is impossible to proceed, unless the House is willing to vote money blindfolded. I do hope that with these facts before the Government they will not persist any longer in the line of conduct they have pursued. How would it be viewed in the country if he allowed such a thing to occur? The Opposition cannot afford to do it, and in my judgment a Minister of the Crown, acting under a responsible government, cannot afford to do it either. I again appeal to the leader of the House that he do not persist in this course.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). This delay is entirely in consequence of our not having the report of the High Commissioner before us. The report of the Department is not complete without the report of Sir Charles Tupper, and we have a right to obtain it before we proceed. Last year on this very subject of immigration, the hon. First Minister suggested that all the items should be passed, except the last one, which he agreed to allow to stand, with the understanding that all the discussion should be had on that, and it stood for the 2nd to the 16th of April, before it was discussed. That is exactly the proposition now made by the hon. member for Halifax, and it is only fair that the same course should be followed. I entirely agree with the remarks that have been made by the hon. member for East Grey as to the courtesy of the hon. Minister of Agriculture; I do not blame him, but I think his subordinates are to blame for not having given him the information which he ought to have had for the discussion of these items. Therefore, I think, the hon. Minister of Public Works should agree to the passage of all the items except the last, until we get the report, and I think I can safely say that if that is done, there will be no disposition to prolong the debate. If hon. members will revert to the discussions which have taken place on the Estimates of the various Departments hitherto, I think they will find that they have been conducted in a fair and reasonable spirit on our part throughout. The case of Mr. Metcalfe is one which would naturally excite discussion. We prevent members of the Local Legislature from being in any way connected with the Dominion Government, and it seems to me equally contrary to correct constitutional principles that a member of a Local Legislature should be in the employ of the Dominion Government. Besides, the peculiar circumstances under which that gentleman was employed, and his return to Kingston for the purpose of attending to his legislative duties justify all the criticisms uttered on that case. The hon. gentleman surely understands also that the general vote on immigration involves some discussion which it is unfair to carry on at four o'clock in the morning. On all grounds I think hon. gentlemen opposite should agree to postpone this discussion.

Mr. CARLING. I wish to call the attention of the Committee to the fact that the item now under discussion is the salaries of agents in Europe, and I can give hon. gentlemen the name of each officer and the amount of his salary.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It is what they are doing we want to know.

Mr. CARLING. The amount for Sir Charles Tupper's office has been voted already under Civil Government. I can give the name of each officer and the salary paid him. I could not give any further information than that, and what other information can hon. gentlemen ask?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The information which will undoubtedly be given in the report of Sir Charles Tupper, when we receive it, namely, the work done by those men.

Mr. CARLING. We know that there are agents at different points. As to the work they have done during the year, I have not the information by me at present.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The information the hon. gentleman proposes to give we can find for ourselves in the Auditor General's Report. But we find that certain sums were charged last year for travelling expenses, and we want to know where Mr. Colmer travelled or spent his time, and what the High Commissioner reports as to the doings of the various agents last year to promote immigration. The same question was raised the other day in regard to the item for the Experimental Farm, which was allowed to stand over until we had the report before us for the last year. The hon. gentleman knows how absurd it would be to have the Estimates for the public works passed before we had the report of that Department, showing how the votes of last year had been applied. It would be a most dangerous system to establish in view of the new practice which now prevails, of passing the Estimates before the Budget speech is delivered. You may talk about courtesy, but there is something more wanted than outside courtesy. I would confidently re-enforce the appeal my hon. friend has made to the Minister, and ask whether it would be reasonable to press these items through under these circumstances?

Mr. CARLING. There is one point which shows the hon. gentleman to be rather inconsistent. He has voted to-night the salaries of the different immigration agents in Canada without asking for information.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman is entirely wrong. The information with regard to them is in the hon. gentleman's report, and the reports with regard to Halifax, St. John, Winnipeg, Quebec, and other place, were fully discussed in the early part of the evening.

Mr. BOWELL. Move to strike it out.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) How can we do that until we see the report?

Mr. BOWELL. If the hon. gentleman desires to have his vote recorded against the expenditure of money, the only course he could pursue would be to propose to strike out that amount on concurrence.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I know I could not put myself on record in Committee, and if, after a discussion there, we were not satisfied, we could put ourselves on record on concurrence; but the hon. gentleman would make Committee of Supply of no use at all.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman and one of his colleagues have made an appeal to me, as leading the House for the time, to change the decision to which I came last night, that is to say, to ask the Committee to pass these four items forming part of the resolution, and then to adjourn. The hon. gentleman gives as his reason that the report of Sir Charles Tupper, the High Commissioner in London, is not before us. As far as the expenses of that office are concerned, the hon. gentleman has the report of the Auditor General, which shows all the details, how the money was expended, and what was voted last year. The Minister of Agriculture is not asking one cent more than was voted last year, and he is ready to state the use which he proposes to make of the vote. If the hon. gentleman finds that the explanations given are not satisfactory, he may afterwards move to reduce the amount, and I do not see why this should prevent our going on. He says he cannot record his vote in committee, but in any case he would have to make his motion and record his vote on concurrence. I could understand the objections which have been raised if these were extraordinary votes, but they are dollar for dollar the same as last year except in the last item of $6,390, and the Minister of Agriculture said he would explain that when we reached it. I think hon. gentlemen should accept the situation, and, under the circumstances, we must ask the House to pass these items.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The Minister, then, assumes the responsibility of requiring the House to sit to this time of the morning in order to pass votes the results of which we cannot have any account of. Up to 3 or 4 o'clock this morning, questions of interest were reasonably discussed, but, when details were asked for on this subject, members from the different Provinces recognised that the figures given in the report were inaccurate, and legitimately criticised the statements which were made, but further information was refused. I prefer to take the view which does not reflect upon the country, and to believe that the number of people who appear to have left the country have not left it, but that rather for five years misleading statements have been given to us by the Department of Agriculture as to those who have gone in there. Member after member has pointed out that the statement that 96,000 have been added to the population there cannot be true. That is not with the object of disconcerting the Minister, but simply to point out that it is evident that the machinery which we have had for ascertaining the immigration was defective; that, while the Ministry had a machinery by which they could count the ins, they had none by which they could count the outs. We have had statements of a large increase year after year of a population which we do not believe is here, and the census taken in the North-West clearly shows that. Surely that is legitimate criticism. The discussion of the amount asked for the taking of the census was also criticised, and it was surely legitimate to discuss whether the de facto or the de jure system was the best. The items were discussed in this way until a very large number were passed. When 2 o'clock arrived, the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) proposed that we should adjourn, but the Minister of Public Works did not desire to adjourn then. At 2.30, the hon. gentleman again suggested that we were wearied and tired, and should adjourn, and it was not until 3 o'clock that the motion that the Committee rise and report progress was made by the member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey), and on that the discussion proceeded, until about 9 o'clock this morning the motion was withdrawn. Then we asked if the Minister could give us the information required, but he could not. We asked for information on several subjects, but could not get it. We wanted more information in regard to the dismissal of Mr. Grahame. If a public servant is to be dismissed because he proves his efficiency and truthfulness—I do not charge that that is the case, but it is the suspicion in the minds of some members—we ought to be made aware of it. An hour ago an attempt was made to go on with the next item, which the Minister says must be forced through, right or wrong—the salaries of agents in Europe. We asked what Mr. Colmer did last year, and the Minister's reply was that he could not tell us. He said the report of Sir Charles Tupper was in the hands of the printer, and we ought to be content with the fact that last year the same amount was paid. That is not an answer. We want to know whether it is in the interests of the people to pay a dollar for this service, or whether it is in their interests that instead of $5,000 we should spend $50,000 on immigration agents there. We cannot be satisfied to vote this or any other amount without any information at all, and the Ministers place themselves in a very invidious position by demanding that this money should be voted without giving any information whatever. It is true that we voted the salary of Mr. Stafford and others, but we had the information in those cases, and we have no information as to the work which has been performed in Europe. Yet the Minister who is now leading the House assumes the responsibility of saying that Parliament must go on sitting from 3 o'clock yesterday, when we are to be wearied out and grants of money are to be forced through this House by wearying out members of this House. If they get their votes in this way, it will not redound to their credit in the country. What was the offer made by the Minister when he said: Let these items pass and on concurrence you shall have the same latitude as you would have in committee? What time would be saved by that? Might we not as well have discussed the question the next time in committee as to wait until the Speaker is in the chair?

Mr. COLBY. But you would have the report before that.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Ministers are perfectly aware that members have been charged with neglecting their duties in allowing moneys to be voted at lightning speed on concurrence. Although items were allowed to pass quickly through concurrence, it was because those items were discussed fully in Committee. There seems an attempt by the Government to force these items through, without giving the slightest explanation as to the work done by these officials. It will be for the hon. gentlemen opposite to support the Ministry in this or not. As far as I am concerned I feel that I have done my duty in the matter. I have not spoken in order to take up the time of the House, and so far as I am aware I think that my colleagues on this side of the House, have been fair and candid in their criticisms. After the precedent read by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) in which the First Minister admitted that it was an unreasonable thing to ask money to be voted before an explanation was given, and with that recorded on Hansard, I think that it was the duty of the leader of the House to consent to an adjournment. We have not tried to be factious in our opposition, but we leave the responsibility on the Ministers for asking us to vote sums of money without giving us any explanation as to what they are for.

Mr. CHARLTON. I have not had the great privilege and advantage of hearing this discussion on through the night, but it is quite evident to me that the Government is standing on a mere question of punctilio. I think it is a reasonable question on the part of the Opposition, and in fact on the part of each member of the House, that they shall have reasonable information before they vote money. I believe that, beyond all question, the Government is wrong in this matter. I think they should have acceded to the reasonable request, which was made by the Opposition, to postpone this matter, and they should have remembered the consequence of their obstruction in the memorable franchise debate. I can assure the hon. gentlemen opposite, that the Opposition is not disposed, in this matter, to allow these items to pass, without obtaining full information as to what they were for. It would be a reasonable and a gracious act on the part of the Government to allow this item to stand, and it is an act which they will have to perform whether either graciously or ungraciously. I appeal to the Minister of Agriculture that he should allow these items to stand until he is able to afford the House information.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). We cannot allow these items to pass without getting the information from the source from which we are entitled to get it. It would just be the same principle, if the Estimates were brought down without a single blue-book being laid on the Table, and if we were asked to vote it without that information. As guardians of the public treasury we are bound to protect the rights of the people, and we maintain that Parliament cannot vote money without knowing what it votes it for.

Mr. COLBY. The members of this House are not asked to vote these items finally, for they will have an opportunity of discussing them later on.

Some hon. MEMBERS. We have heard that before.

Mr. COLBY. These items are almost identically the same items as were passed last year, and there is nothing in them which ought provoke any special criticism on the part of the hon. members opposite. They are asked simply to vote them pro forma.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. COLBY. There is a fact entirely beyond the control of the hon. Minister at the present time which renders it impossible for him to give that full information which hon. gentlemen opposite say they ought to have. The fact is, that the report of Sir Charles Tupper is now in the hands of the printer. However, that information will be forthcoming in due time and before the members of the House are asked to concur in these Estimates. It seems to me that, under these circumstances, obstruction at this late period of the Session is something very near pure captiousness. Suppose we should adjourn until the afternoon and return to this question; that report would still be in the printers' hands and we would find ourselves in the same position as we are in at the present time. Consequently the adjournment would not be productive of any advantage to hon. members. I think hon. gentlemen opposite should not ask an unreasonable thing, and I think that the threats used by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) are entirely unworthy of the position he occupies. He has used threats to delay the business of the House, as upon a memorable occasion, unless the members of the Government can see their way to accept his wishes. I think that is no spirit in which to approach this matter. I believe that it is in the interest of the progress of the business of this House that these being ordinary items should pass this Committee, and that we should be permitted to proceed with the business of Parliament. When Sir Charles Tupper's report is laid before Parliament I have no doubt that hon. gentlemen will have no reason to complain that they deferred this matter if they now agree to do so.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I think the request made by the Opposition is a very reasonable one, and I think the speech which has just been made by the President of the Council will not stand discussion, for the simple reason that the members of the Government, if they are desirous for the despatch of business, can send a messenger down to the printing bureau and have the report of Sir Charles Tupper here in ten minutes. Is there anything unreasonable in this proposition? Should we be asked to vote blindfolded sums of money without any information whatsoever. It is quite clear to my mind that in this matter the Government is pursuing a factious course and not the Opposition. We are told that because these sums were voted last year it is right to vote them this year. That is no reason why this Committee should neglect its duty to investigate the votes in every possible way. If the report of Sir Charles Tupper is of the value placed upon it by the Minister of Agriculture himself, why not give the Committee the information it contains? If he cannot get the printed report, the printer has no claim on the manuscript copy, and he can send his deputy for it, and demand it for presentation to this House. There are large sums of money represented in these items which require explanation. The travelling expenses of a number of gentlemen mentioned ought to be explained. If I am not mistaken, J. G. Colmer, whose head office is in England, was travelling in the North-West last year, and we have a right to know what he was doing there. Then, there are the removal expenses of Mr. Reynolds, who was removed from Brandon to the office in England. Why was it considered necessary to remove him? Is it possible that there is such a scarcity of applicants, that the Government must go to the prairie Provinces to get a man to fill an unimportant position in the High Commissioner's office? It is necessary for the Committee to have this information, and I accuse the Government of displaying a factious opposition to the business of this House, in refusing to give the Committee the information which it is entitled to. It is a paltry excuse to say that it cannot be obtained because it is in the hands of the printer. The hon. Minister knows that it can be obtained, and he knows that by giving us the delay we ask for until that report is presented, the Committee will be placed in a position to intelligently vote on the question.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I have been very much surprised at the demand made by the President of the Council, and the argument with which he supported it. There is no man in the House who knows better than he does that there will not be the slightest opportunity to discuss this question on concurrence.

Mr. HAGGART. You have two opportunities before concurrence: you have the Supplementary Estimates.

Mr. BOWELL. And you can move to strike it off the Supply Bill if you want to.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The Government go on the supposition that the members of Parliament are only here to register decisions: but I say it is the duty, not only of the Opposition, but of every private member of this House, to insist on the fullest investigation of every appropriation before it is passed. If we are to vote every item that the Government demands without discussion, then we are of no use here, and only an unnecessary expense to the country. It would be better to abolish all the private members of the House and let the Government do as they please. Do the Opposition ask anything unreasonable, when they ask that the item should stand until the information is brought down to the House?

Mr. MITCHELL. I have heard with a great deal of regret the attitude in which this question stands before the House. It does appear to me that the members of this Parliament have been acting like school-boys in this matter. It is possible that not having been up all night with the rest of this committee, I do not thoroughly understand the question; but so far as I understand it, I will repeat it. In the early part of the evening up to 12 o'clock I sat listening to the discussion, thinking the House would adjourn about one o'clock, as usual, and I must say I thought the criticisms of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House were not captious, but were reasonable and just. In old times, when I used to take an active part in these discussions, before so many bright young statesmen grew up on this side of the sea, I felt that had I done anything less than they have done I should not have been doing my duty to my constituents or to the country. As I understand, all these items have been practically assented to except the last one of $55,000 towards immigration and immigration expenses. An establishment is maintained in London at very considerable expense, with agents all over the country, having extensive duties to perform. The Minister has stated that the report of Sir Charles Tupper on the subject of immigration is in process of being printed and will shortly be submitted to the House; and the contention of hon. gentlemen on this side is that Parliament has the right to the fullest information the Government can give on the subject before the vote is passed. Now, that is the one blue-book which I contend of all others should be placed before the House before it is asked to vote money. The Government now control every day in the week except Monday, and why should they insist on going on with this debate until they are able to lay that report before the House? I am very glad to see the great seer of this House, the hon. First Minister, come in, and I hope he will pay some attention to the utterances of one who has not taken part in this exciting debate, but has enjoyed a good night's sleep. Now, the whole kernel of the matter is this: is the contention of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House based on constitutional and just principles? If it is, I contend that my hon. friend who has led the House since last night has allowed his temper and his determination to get the better of his judgment. It is the first time that I have known the hon. Minister of Public Works take that position. He has led the House generally with a discretion and a tact which marks him as a statesman, and I am surprised that he should have kept hon. gentlemen here to so late an hour in the morning on so frivolous a pretext. What harm can it do to let this vote stand over until to-morrow's sitting? I contend that the Government should not insist on the committee passing this vote without first giving them the fullest information they can give, and I trust that the leader of the Government will see the propriety of allowing the vote to stand over until the report of Sir Charles Tupper is given to the House.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I have been absent during the night while this discussion has been going on, and I have only gathered the essence of the discussion since I came in about an hour ago. When the vote for the Experimental Farm was before the House the other night, the hon. Minister of Agriculture consented to let it stand over until the appendix to his report relating to it, which he said was in the hands of the printer, should be brought down; and if that rule was followed in that case, I ask in common sense if it is not right that the same rule should be applied in this case? Moreover, is it not surprising that on the 72nd day of the Session the reports giving the necessary information on the items which we were called on to discuss are not in the hands of the members? I think the Government are standing in their own light before the House and the country, in not allowing the item to stand until the information is ready. Therefore, I think, taking the whole matter into consideration, it would be right for the Minister of Agriculture to allow this to stand over until this report of Sir Charles Tupper is before us.

Mr. MULOCK. I think, if the First Minister had been in the House when the President of the Council gave his opinion, he would have dissented from the doctrine laid down by that hon. gentleman. He says that we should pass this pro forma in Committee of the Whole without knowing what we are about or having any investigation. I think that is a dangerous proposition. If it were assented to, all a Minister would have to do to get any questionable item passed would be to say that the information cannot be given and the item should be passed. I protest against that proposition. The responsibility for this report not being here appears to rest on the Printing Bureau—in other words, on the Secretary of State. It is all in the family, and the hon. gentleman is only shifting the responsibility. I cannot agree with my hon. friend from Brant, that the original report should be read here as a way to relieve the Government of the difficulty, because I think that reports should be in the hands of all members of the House if they are to be valuable. What reason has the Minister of Agriculture for suppressing this report?

Mr. CARLING. I have not suppressed it. I endeavored to have it here a week or two ago. It has been in the hands of the printer, and I have been waiting for it.

Mr. MULOCK. The President of the Council made a very absurd proposition when he asked if the House was to wait for this item to be passed before the business of the country could be proceeded with. Is this the only business for consideration? Surely the Government have some other business to go on with.

Mr. LAURIER. I think it must strike the Minister of Public Works that he has not, on this occasion, displayed his usual fairness. At two o'clock a motion was made to adjourn, and there can be no reason whatever why this House should not adjourn at 2 o'clock in the morning. If the majority of the House insists upon sitting at that hour, it abuses its power and makes a comedy of our proceedings. One of the most important items we have to discuss is the item of immigration, and after that has been discussed for several hours, it is not unreasonable to ask for an adjournment at 2 o'clock. The majority would not adjourn simply on a matter of mere stubbornness. The Minister of Public Works is doubly wrong. He is wrong in refusing to adjourn at 2 o'clock, and he is wrong in insisting that an item should be carried, upon which no information could be given. It is not fair for the Government to insist that such an item should be discussed, but it is their duty to supply all the information necessary for its intelligent discussion. If they are not ready to supply that information, the least they can do is to allow the matter to stand until they can. I believe that the Minister of Public Works knows in his conscience that our attitude is right, and I think I am justified in appealing to him to consent to the adjournment. If he does, I pledge myself and my friends to discuss it in a business-like way, so that it will not retard for one moment the end of the Session.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not think the hon. member should refer to the action of this House as a comedy. Otherwise, I cannot find fault with what he said. No doubt it was a lapsus linguae, when he used that word. If the hon. gentleman had been here—and I know it was the state of his health which prevented him—I have no doubt he would not have reasoned as he has done. There is no rule that the House should adjourn at 2 o'clock, though it is not an ordinary thing for us to sit up to this time. In this case, I offered, if hon. gentlemen would pass the balance of these items pro forma, so that they might appear in the Votes and Proceedings, that they should have the opportunity of discussing them on concurrence, and then hon. gentlemen would have the right to propose, to amend the resolution, or to strike it out. The objection as to the absence of Sir Charles Tupper's report, was not made until after 7 o'clock this morning. If the hon. gentleman would consent to pass this resolution, we would see that, as soon as the report to which so much importance is attached, is laid before the House, we would call concurrence on this resolution, so that hon. gentlemen could not say that we would defer the opportunity of discussing it. I think hon. gentlemen opposite should accept this proposition. Sometimes we pass a Bill pro forma through its second reading, with the understanding, that the principle is not involved. Let this resolution be reported to the House, and we will pledge ourselves to call for concurrence on it within a few days afterwards, so that they may have every opportunity of discussing it in the same way as they would in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman objected to the use I made of the word "comedy," but what is his offer but a comedy? He offers to pass this now on certain conditions, but that is not the way of doing business in Parliament. Why should the minority be compelled to yield to the demand of the majority in this matter? The hon. gentleman knows he has a majority behind him who are ready to support him, but it is only abusing the power of numbers for him to insist upon passing this vote. I will leave it to the fairmindedness of any hon. gentleman, whether it is proper to dictate to the minority that they must pass this resolution pro forma or must be compelled to sit. I protest against conduct of this kind. Hon. gentlemen opposite may be stronger than we are, but we can stand it as long as they can.

Mr. MITCHELL. I could understand the action of the Minister of Public Works if the policy of the Opposition during this Session had been to obstruct public business, but I have never seen less obstruction shown to the Estimates in any Session that I have been here since 1867 than has been shown this Session. Of course, there has been criticism, but it is the duty of those gentlemen to see that the Government do their duty. The only justification the Minister of Public Works could have for what I call his obstinacy—he may not like the word, but it is true—would be that the Opposition had pursued a course of obstruction, and has delayed public business unnecessarily. I say there has been no obstruction during the present Session. The hon. gentleman speaks of it as not being an extraordinary thing to sit after two o'clock. I say it is an extraordinary thing, it has not often occurred, and it is only in emergencies that the thing is justifiable, looking at the health of the members, and at the progress of public business. Therefore, I think the hon. gentleman has not pursued either a prudent or a judicious course in refusing the reasonable request of the leader of the Opposition. The other day when the right hon. gentleman, not now in his place, was putting through his Estimates, he was unable to reply to some of the questions that were asked. It was evident that the right hon. gentleman had not been able to master the details of his office, yet, with remarkable forbearance, we allowed him to go on, giving such information as he could. It cannot be said that hon. members on this side of the House have in any way retarded the business of the country. As the leader of the Opposition has truly said, the course of the Government on this occasion is simply exercising the power of numbers. The Government have every day of the week but one, they control the business of the House absolutely, and is it to be said that they shall ask us to sit here, day after day, at the expense of comfort and health, unless we pass, blindfolded, without information, the Estimates they present to us? If the hon. gentleman persists in what I cannot help describing as childish obstinacy, I think it is the duty of hon. gentlemen behind him to remember that they have some rights also to be considered in this matter. This question is one of principle, the principle that every man in this House has a right, when he is asked to take the responsibility of voting such a large sum of money as $55,000, to have all the information necessary in order to enable him to judge of the wisdom of that vote.

Mr. McMULLEN. For the information of those who were not here when this trouble arose, I will give a short account of the proceedings that took place in the Committee. Item 75, on page 36 of these Estimates, was moved. We took the first item, and went on to the item of the assistant agent at Winnipeg, on which there was an extended discussion. Then we came to the assistant interpreter at Winnipeg, on which there was considerable discussion. When we came to the item of immigration agent at Victoria, and an hon. member from that Province asked why the agent of Victoria was only receiving $1,000, while the agent at Vancouver was receiving $1,200, the Minister made some explanations, and when he had finished two o'clock had arrived. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) courteously suggested an adjournment, but the Minister of Public Works refused to grant it. The hon. member for Halifax drew attention to the next three items as being important, and upon which an extended discussion would take place, and tried to induce the hon. Minister to consent to an adjournment, but the Minister persistently refused to consent to an adjournment. Then the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) moved that the Committee rise and report. That motion was discussed for some time, and a vote was taken, but still the Minister of Public Works refused to adjourn. Another motion was moved that the Committee rise and report progress. That motion was discussed until 4 o'clock this morning, when those on this side decided, in order to meet the Government as far as possible, that we would consent to the passage of all the items from the item concerning the agency at Vancouver, if the Government would reserve the item of $55,000. The Minister would not consent to that unless all the items were passed. Then the Chairman called the item of $5,900, and I asked the Minister of Agriculture with regard to J. G. Colmer, secretary in London. I pointed out that he had drawn certain moneys for travelling expenses, and we wanted to know how it was that he drew that money. The Minister replied that Sir Charles Tupper's report would show that he was in Sir Charles's office, and would show what the money was drawn for, and where he was travelling. Then we asked that Sir Charles Tupper's report should be produced, and the Minister replied that it was in the hands of the printer. Then we again suggested an adjournment, and asked that the Minister should not press the consideration of that item; from that time up to the present the Minister has endeavored to force this Committee into adopting that item, although the Minister of Agriculture declares that he has not in his possession, that he has not in his office, and neither has his deputy, the necessary information to answer the questions we have put.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I think hon. members will agree that in discussing the Estimates I have never offered any factious opposition. Perhaps I have hardly done my duty in that respect, but there are so many hon. gentlemen on this side of the House so anxious to discuss the Estimates, that I have allowed them to do so. But, on the present occasion, I cannot keep silent. This House is being asked blindly to vote the Estimates of the Government without having any information respecting the way the money is to be expended. That is the question that the Committee is now discussing, and it will be taken as a precedent for the action of the Government in the future. I submit that the Government have had plenty of time to bring down the needed information. They called this House together on the 16th day of January, and we may assume they believed that they had all the information necessary to lay before the House, to enable us to discharge our duties to the country in a faithful manner. But they were not in possession of it. They have not yet given it to the House, and they have failed to perform the first duty of a government towards the representatives of the people. The Postmaster General said that we would have two opportunities to discuss this question. What does he mean by that? As I understand, there are two Supplementary Estimates to come down. I ask : Is this item going to be in the Supplementary Estimates? If not, how are we going to discuss it when these Estimates are before the House? Such talk is merely childish. The Minister of Public Works says: "Vote it now and discuss it afterwards." Is that consistent with the dignity of a House like this? When we vote an item it is passed to all intents and purposes, and the only way to undo it is to move an amendment to strike it out when it comes up for concurrence. A vote of that kind is looked upon as a vote of non-confidence, and every member of the other side is expected to vote against it.

Mr. WATSON. Coming from a Province interested in this matter of immigration, I feel it my duty to protest against this item going through without the fullest information of what the Government are doing in Europe in regard to immigration. The hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) has admitted that it was almost impossible to get an answer, or to get satisfaction from the Deputy Minister of Agriculture. We also had the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) who found fault with the Government for the manner in which they were carrying on their immigration policy. We had the member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), who dealt the most severe castigation to the Government that I ever heard in Parliament. The Government should realise that in this important matter we should have the fullest possible information in regard to these items. The Minister of Agriculture has not given us that information, and I have reason to suppose that the officers who are employed by the Minister and his deputy know little more about immigration matters than they do themselves. We discussed last night the salary that was being paid to Mr. Metcalfe. It was shown that he had been drawing $150 a month from the 1st of April to the 16th of May, and the Minister of Agriculture cannot state that he had rendered any service at all for that money. If the agents that are employed in the old country are similar to those employed in this country, I think it is a question to consider whether we ought not to remodel the whole immigration system of the country, and the whole staff. It appears to me that the time for such a man as the Deputy Minister of Agriculture has gone by. If we are to compete in Europe for immigration, we must have men who are a little more alive, more able to grasp the situation, than the present Minister of Agriculture and his deputy. We have received very little information with regard to some of the agents in this country who are practically under the immediate supervision of the Department at Ottawa. I am prepared, if the Ministers do not yield, to sit here until Saturday night at 12 o'clock. The Opposition is comprised of an able body of men, and we can sit day and night if necessary, as I hold that we are entitled to obtain from the Minister the information asked.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken boasts of his physical endurance. I cannot make the same boast, I am sorry to say, and, therefore, I am anxious that this little deadlock—it is a small deadlock, but it is a deadlock for the present—should be unlocked. It appears to me that the proposition made by the Minister of Public Works was a reasonable one.

I can quite understand the position of the hon. member for South Middlesex (Mr. Armstrong) that if it was the rule, as he suggested, that the House was committed to this vote finally and irretrievably, because it was passed in Committee. That is not the case. Every one who has been in Parliament one Session knows that arrangements are continually made by which votes are passed in Committee to be afterwards settled on concurrence. I hear an hon. gentleman say, that, from his experience, members are impatient when we get into concurrence, and that even his own side are impatient. We can avoid that. Let it be understood that this item is passed pro forma to get it through Committee; let it be understood that this item shall be brought up separately, that it shall be brought up before any Supplementary Estimates are asked to be voted, and let it be understood also that there shall be the same full discussion as if we were still in Committee, although the Speaker is in the Chair. The majority will then not be subjected to the humiliation of fighting a battle and being defeated by the minority. And you can well understand the feeling of the majority. On the other hand, the minority will feel that they have substantially succeeded in carrying what they wanted, and we will resume our old position of joint action for the good of the country. I think that is a reasonable proposition. My proposition is simply this: pass this pro forma in Committee, and let it be reported. It will then be brought up again, before any attempt is made to go into Committee on the Supplementary Estimates, and, therefore, there is no chance of its being kept over till the end of the Session when both parties might be impatient, and it would go through. Further, that when the question of concurrence in this item comes up, full discussion can take place, and hon. gentlemen can speak as often as they like upon it, as if we were in Committee. I know it is an unpleasant thing that we should be in this fix. If this proposition is adopted, the majority will have in one sense their way, as majorities ought to have; and, on the other hand, the minority will succeed in carrying their point.

Mr. LAURIER. It is evident that the First Minister is not aware that this offer has been made again and again from that side of the House. The hon. gentleman says it is not pleasant to the majority to submit to the minority. It is also not pleasant for the minority to submit to the majority, although they are sometimes compelled to do it. It is right, however, that the party which is in the wrong should submit, and if the majority are in the wrong they should submit all the more gracefully because they are the stronger party in the House. I leave it to the judgment of the First Minister himself. This vote is composed of twenty-six items, and it is one of the most important that can come up for discussion. It was discussed in a fair and temperate manner, and I appeal with great confidence to the First Minister that he cannot charge the Opposition with unduly obstructing the business of the House. We have discharged our duties throughout this Session to the best of our judgment, and the First Minister cannot say that on any occasion there was an obstructive spirit displayed by the Opposition. This group of items, twenty-six in number, was discussed up to 2 a.m. Was it not right that when the Committee had reached that hour it should rise, and a proposition to that effect was made from this side of the House. How was that met by the other side? It was met by a refusal, and a declaration that the whole item should be passed. It was objected by this side of the House that it was not proper to discuss the subject at that hour. Under these circumstances, I am satisfied that if the First Minister would give his fair and unbiassed opinion, he would agree that the Opposition, in thus acting, was quite within its privilege and its right. I firmly believe that if the First Minister had been in his place, this request would have been granted at once. While I quite admit that the Minister of Public Works is usually a fair-minded man, every one can be impatient sometimes and get out of temper and the hon. gentleman did so on this occasion. I know it is hard for any party to admit, and especially so for a majority, that it is wrong. It is hard for men to believe they are in the wrong. But they are not infallible, and the First Minister should agree that the proposition from this side of the House is a fair and reasonable one, that the item should stand over for further information and discussion.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman is not quite correct in the statement he made in the beginning of his speech, that this proposition submitted by the leader of the Government had been repeatedly made previously. That proposition was only made by the Minister of Public Works the last time he spoke. The proposition which had been made by the leader of the House during the night, was that the question should be considered and fully debated on concurrence. To that proposition the members of the Opposition took objection, on the ground that concurrence generally occurs at the close of the Session when there was not time to give the subject full consideration. That objection was met the last time the Minister of Public Works spoke, by his statement that if it would meet the wishes of hon. gentlemen opposite he would pledge the Government to move concurrence on item 75 as soon as the report was laid on the Table. That was the first proposition, and it was considered a proposition which might fairly and honorably be accepted by those who have taken the position they have taken on this question, because the objection urged about 2 o'clock this morning was that no time would be given for the full consideration of this question on which they contended they had not sufficient information. The leader of the Opposition was comfortably snoozing, I have no doubt, during the night, but I had the great pleasure of sitting here without a wink of sleep since the House opened yesterday. But I feel about as fresh as the hon. gentleman, and I am quite able to stand another 24 hours if necessary.

Mr. LISTER. Go on. You have thrown down the gauntlet.

Mr. BOWELL. I have not thrown down any gauntlet. What I was going to point out to hon. gentlemen opposite was that the discussion for from four to six hours was upon the item for an assistant immigrant agent at Winnipeg, upon which the question arose as to the propriety or impropriety of employing Mr. J. H. Metcalfe, a member of the Local Legislature of Ontario, and the whole night until the motion for adjournment was made, was wasted on that question alone.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Not wasted.

Mr. BOWELL. That is a matter of opinion; I say wasted. The demand was made on the Minister of Agriculture that he should give certain information in regard to the whereabouts of Mr. Metcalfe from 1st April until 16th May, when it appears, according to the Auditor General's Report, he proceeded to Manitoba. The Minister stated that he was not in a position to give the information as to what that gentleman was doing during that period, but he would at the earliest moment obtain it and inform the Committee. It is true I said there might be reasons, with which I was not acquainted, being in another Department, why he could not give that information; but the Minister of Agriculture gave all the information in regard to the employment of that hon. gentleman, what his business was in the North-West, how he had been employed, how long he had been there, and the necessity which the Government considered sufficiently strong to justify his employment. When asked the question as to his re-employment by the Government the Minister further stated that if the Government deemed it necessary in the interest of the immigration department that he should be employed, they would re-employ him; and he promised further, and he pledge himself as straightforwardly as a Minister could pledge himself, to give to the Committee that information which hon. gentlemen sought. But that was not satisfactory. The system pursued was one of cross-examination that more became the pettyfogging of a police court than anything else, and it was a system of badgering not creditable to the House nor respectful to any Minister. Had that badgering been directed to me, I should not have through it very strange, because I am very apt to strike back, but my hon. colleague the Minister of Agriculture is of a mild disposition, exceedingly courteous and never loses his temper.

Mr. LISTER. You were the worst man from 1874 to 1878 in the whole Opposition.

Mr. BOWELL. That statement comes from a gentleman who was not here at that time, and who consequently knows nothing about it. Had it come from a gentleman who knew something about the proceedings of the House then, I would treat it differently. But the hon. gentleman on this occasion, as on most others, has spoken either from hearsay or recklessly. In Opposition I did what I considered to be my duty, but I never badgered any Minister as the Minister of Agriculture has been badgered to-night. When the Minister of Agriculture had given all the information in his possession to hon. gentlemen opposite, when he had stated the reasons for the employment of Mr. Metcalfe and had offered other explanations, it was then the threat came from the other side of the House that the item should not be allowed to pass and no further work should be done until we had acceded to their request. No threat came from this side of the House further than what I said in the way of being able to remain another twenty-four hours if necessary. Although older than some hon. gentlemen opposite, I have the good fortune to be able to stand a little fatigue, and I am quite prepared to do so in the interest of good government.

Mr. LAURIER.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. Minister has been a little inaccurate in some of his statements just addressed to the House, and I desire to give my version of the affair, so that members who are now present and the country may understand how the discussion proceeded. This is not a contest on the part of the Opposition for supremacy over the Government, but it is a contention on their part for the principle that before we vote the people's money we have a right to obtain information as to what is to be done with that money; while the position of the Government, led by the Minister of Public Works, was this: We, by force of our superior number, will compel you to vote money without giving the information. That was the plain, straight, clear issue last night. I agree that there will be a compensating advantage to this debate having been carried on all night, in the fact that the attention of the people will be called to the subject of immigration and to the conduct of Government business in a more marked manner than could otherwise have occurred. If the First Minister were to read the proceedings as recorded in Hansard he would admit that no factious opposition had been offered, and that no speeches had been delivered except such as were justly called for by the circumstances of the case and the information sought to be elicited. As to the relevancy or irrelevancy of the speeches made by members of the Opposition, you will not find, Sir, on the pages of Hansard of to-night's proceedings any evidence to show that this debate was conducted by the Opposition with the view of wasting time. I was out of the House for a little while and heard nothing of the taunt which the Minister of Customs said was thrown across the House in reference to the Metcalfe matter, that if the Government would not adjourn no more items would pass. If the hon. gentleman is correct in that statement, I beg to remind him that after that several items were passed. That taunt was made over the item concerning the agent at Winnipeg, but after that the item regarding the salary of the assistant agent at Winnipeg and of the agents at Brandon and Calgary, and Port Arthur, and Victoria, and Vancouver were passed. My recollection of the matter is that at 2 o'clock in the morning—and I am able to speak the more freely because I took no part whatever in the discussion with reference to Mr. Metcalfe—when we were endeavoring to elicit information from the Minister which he was either unwilling or unable to give, the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), who was leading the Opposition, said in the most courteous way to the Minister of Public Works: It is now 2 o'clock and I think we had better adjourn, as we cannot hope to carry all these items to-night. To this the Minister of Public Works replied, in my judgment rather curtly: No; we will take the whole item. The discussion went on; the items I have read were passed, and the member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), again at 2.30, suggested that as it was evidently impossible to finish all the items to-night, we had better adjourn. Again as firm a refusal came from the lips of the Minister of Public Works; and it was not until 3 o'clock, when the Minister of Public Works had announced in the same imperious manner that this item had to go through, information or no information—by sheer force—because he, the great acting First Minister, willed it, then and not till then was the motion moved by the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) that the Committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again. A discussion took place over that motion; about 4 or 5 o'clock we had a vote, and the Chairman declared, I think correctly, that there was a majority against us, both of members asleep and awake. Another motion was made to rise, and at 7 o'clock or 8 o'clock that was also declared lost. We then endeavored to go on with this item of salaries to agents in Europe. The First Minister will admit that it was with a laudable desire for information, the hon. member for North Wellington asked with reference to the amount paid to Mr. Colmer, Secretary of the High Commissioner's office, what services had been rendered by him. The Ministers of Justice and Customs will bear me out when I state that the Minister of Agriculture replied that he could not tell what Mr. Colmer or any of these agents did, but only what they were paid. We insisted on knowing what services were performed by these gentlemen, and he again said: I cannot tell you. I asked: Is there not a report of Sir Charles Tupper, under whom these agents are commissioned, for in previous years we always had such a report. The Minister replied that it was in the printers' hands. Very well, I said, it is necessary that we should have that statement of Sir Charles Tupper, and as evidence of that necessity I read what the Minister of Agriculture said of it in his report:

"The report of Sir Charles Tupper and those agents acting under his instructions affords many interesting details respecting trade and industry in Great Britain which affect more or less immigration to this country."

That is what we want, and the Minister recognises the fact that it is something Parliament should be possessed of, but he asks us to vote this sum before that report is in our hands. Not having that report, we are forced to ask the Minister to tell us what these agents have done, and he replies that he cannot, but that the information is in the report. If the First Minister insists on our going on without the report, he is insisting on our acting in opposition to what they laid down as the correct principle the other night, namely, that when a sum appeared in the Estimates and the House was asked to vote that sum, if the report bearing on it was not in the hands of members, it was right, reasonable and proper that that item should stand. If the First Minister insists on this item being now voted; he insists on a course being taken which he himself has condemned. At 8 or 9 o'clock this morning we said: if it was necessary for the despatch of business, we are prepared to sit here night and day, and will take up item after item, on which you can give us information. Let us go on with those, but not with items on which you can give us no information. Oh, no, simply because the Minister of Public Works attempted to act as an autocrat, and said this matter must go through, it must, forsooth, go through. The Minister of Public Works said we could debate the item on concurrence and have as wide a latitude then as in Committee of the Whole. But if we did, there would be no saving of time, and that only shows the unreasonableness of the Minister in attempting to force the vote through to-night; and besides in concurrence we all know that the items are passed with great rapidity, merely as a matter of form, and that in all probability the Minister relies on this item, sharing the same fate as the others in that respect.

Mr. CARLING. The hon. member for North Brant (Mr. Paterson) requested me to send to the printers for the manuscript report. I have it here and am prepared to answer any question respecting it.

Mr. CHARLTON. We must be put in possession of the contents of the report, and I would call on the hon. gentleman to read it.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. If the Minister is in possession of the information the Committee is seeking to obtain, he ought to proceed to give it to us.

Mr. LISTER. We are asked to vote an expenditure of $55,000, and it would be impossible for hon. members to interrogate the Minister on every particular item. The only way we can examine into the question is by reading the report, or being made acquainted with its contents. The Secretary of State abolished the system of printing by contract and took into his own hands the public printing, not for the purpose of saving expense, but for the purpose of acquiring patronage. Every one knows that if there is a man in the world who loves patronage, it is the Secretary of State. We know he wants to be Minister of Railways because it is the biggest patronage department in the whole Government. It is simply amusing to hear the Minister of Customs get up and badger the Opposition. Why, Sir, of all the members on the Government side, the Minister of Customs is the last man in whose mouth such a charge should find such an utterance; because if there was a man in the old days, between 1874 and 1876, who felt his duty to act as the division court lawyer or a petty cross-examiner, that man was the Minister of Customs. He has no right to charge the Opposition with being guilty of factiousness. We are here in the discharge of a public duty, and before we vote items of this kind we want the fullest information. The Minister of Customs says he will be as fresh in forty-eight hours as he is to-day. Perhaps he will. We know that in 1885 the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Fisheries, who were then private members, brought pillows into this room, and if there had been a space in their seats they would have brought in beds upon which to repose themselves. Perhaps the Minister of Customs means to resort to the same device now. It is merely begging the question to ask the House to put this discussion off till concurrence, because everybody knows that we will then have less time to discuss it than we have now. Now, I would remind the Minister of Agriculture, who pretends to be the special champion of the farmers of Canada, that he is spending their money recklessly in refusing to give the members of this House an opportunity of judging as to the propriety of the expenditure. Sir, it is pitiable to see an hon. gentleman who has been so long in Parliament as the Minister of Agriculture, sit perfectly dumb in his seat unable to give any information upon the subject under discussion. I have no doubt that he has never read the report which he has in his hands. He knows no more about that report than any member of this Opposition, who has never seen it. For the sake of his own reputation the hon. gentleman ought gladly to have accepted the suggestion of the Opposition to let this item stand over, at all events, until he himself had acquired some information as to what that report contains.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

Mr. CHAPLEAU. If the remarks of the gentleman who has just sat down, are a sample of the oratory that has been inflicted upon this House during the night, I think those who were not present have escaped a severe trial. I think the time of the House should be better employed than in listening to such elucubrations as we have just heard. The hon. gentleman has spoken of my ambition to be Minister of Railways. I do not thank him for interfering with my own affairs. Judging from his own dignity, and his own pomposity when he is addressing this House, we might conclude that nothing short of the position of Prime Minister would satisfy his ambition. He has a chance to see patience tried. The hon. gentleman says that I wished to be Minister of Railways because of my love of patronage.

Mr. LISTER. Everybody knows it.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The hon. member does not know it. The character which he attributes to me is entirely foreign to my disposition. If there is one man in this House who hates patronage more than another, that man is myself. Nothing like the possession of patronage so quickly wears a man out in political life. When I proposed in this House to establish a Government Printing Bureau, I simply proposed to follow the precedent established in other countries, and particularly in the United States, a country which the hon. gentleman admires so much, where the institution has proved a great success. The hon. gentleman complains that he is not able to read the report of the agents in Europe. When the hon. members of the Opposition get this report, they will see that our agents in Europe have been doing for the past year pretty much the same as they have been doing for the last ten years; they have been trying to bring immigrants to this country, and have been doing as well as they could. Their instructions have been the same as they have received in previous years. I am perfectly sure, that when the report is in the hands of hon. gentlemen opposite they will find nothing in it to complain of, I dare say they won't read it; still, for the last twenty-four hours they have been calling to see that report, and they refuse to pass this vote until they do see it. Why should they not allow this item to go through now, and after they have seen the report they can object to it on concurrence, if they deem it their duty to do so. They must know, that it is only on concurrence that an item is finally accepted or rejected, and the sense of the House tested by motion. I remember, that when Sir Charles Tupper was Minister of Public Works, items involving great sums of money were allowed to pass the Committee and taken up again on concurrence, under the promise of the Minister that he would give full information at that stage, and I think we might well do the same with this unimportant item.

Mr. TROW. The more this subject is discussed the more mysterious it appears to be. The Opposition proposed, very reasonably, that we should get some more information before passing this item. The hon. member for Brant proposed to send a messenger to the Bureau in order to get a copy of the report. It appears that the Minister of Agriculture has sent for that report, and now has it in his hands. That makes the matter still more mysterious, because, although he has the report in his hands, he still declines to read it. I have been struck with one thing during the progress of this discussion, and that is to see the Secretary of State come to the relief of the Minister of Public Works. We have been informed that those gentlemen are not on the best of terms, but it is evident that a conciliation has now taken place, and this discussion has done that much good, at all events. The members of the Government charge the Opposition with being factious. There is no factiousness in our course at all. Even the Minister of Customs charges us with being factious, but we all remember that during the Mackenzie Government he was one of the most factious of men. I have seen the present Minister of Customs, spend three or four hours in discussing paltry items, not amounting to more than $50. He was, in fact, the most factious member of the Opposition. After this discussion that has taken place, I think, the First Minister should allow the matter to stand over.

Mr. COOK. When any difficulty arises with the Government, it is now always stated that the Printing Bureau is at fault. We remember when the bureau was inaugurated, it was contended by the Government that delays in printing would not occur. I have been very anxious to see the revised voters list for my county from that bureau. An opinion prevails that there will be a great many clerical errors in connection with the voters' list, and that they will be almost invariably on one side of politics. I warn every Reform association in Canada to get a revised list, and compare it with the voters' list and see if some names are not left off. I believe the Government inaugurated this bureau to perpetuate their lease of power, and they made a good selection when they selected the Secretary of State as its head. Has the hon. gentleman forgotten an article published with a portrait of himself, and giving a description of his political doings? Was that article written by the hon. gentleman, or did he get one of his employés to write it?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. What article?

Mr. COOK. If ever there was a piece of egotism displayed it was in this case. "The Pericles of Modern Days." I wish to emphasise this question of voters' list, and if I find one name of a friend off the list, the Secretary of State will have to give an account of himself. I warn him in that regard. I was surprised that the Minister of Customs should have made such statements in regard to the Opposition. The Opposition have been very lenient in dealing with the Government, and they might be censured for allowing items to pass, as they did not wish to offer factious opposition. When the member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) stated that the Minister of Customs was one of the most factious opponents in the time of the Mackenzie Administration, he spoke by the book. Then the Minister had the hardihood to say that this was like all the hon. gentleman's statements, as he was not here. I was here, and I remember well, as stated by the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Trow), that he dealt in small things, that he was engaged in two-penny-half-penny business. He has enlarged a little since he got into the Government where he handles millions of the people's money. I remember the way in which he worked himself from seat to seat until he forced himself into the Government, and in fact he played his cards pretty well. It was stated by the Minister of Public Works, that it was not until after seven o'clock this morning that the demand was made for the report in question. It is only by such discussions that we get at the underground workings of the Government; they have so many underground wires it is impossible to discover them until brought to light accidentally by one of themselves. During the earlier part of the discussion efforts were made by the Government to show that the country was prosperous and was filling up with immigrants, and Toronto was cited as an instance. The hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn) gloried in the increased number of people that came to that place. I glory with him. But they were not immigrants; they were Canadian people, who came there from different sections, lured by a class of people who would make Annanias tremble for his supremacy to-day. I refer to the land-sharks and speculators, and the hon. gentleman is one of them.

Mr. COCKBURN. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I did not understand the hon. member to use the word land-shark to any member of this House.

Mr. COCKBURN. He said I was one of them.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If so, the hon. gentleman must retract the word.

Mr. COOK. Yes.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has withdrawn the expression, if he did use it, and the House must accept his withdrawal.

Mr. COOK. The cap appears to fit the hon. gentleman. From what I have gathered, I think the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) has given the most true statement of the Government's abilities ever given by any hon. gentleman on this side of the House. I understand that hon. gentleman stated that they had not brains enough to manage one department if all their brains were rolled into one. The Agriculture Department is a disgrace to this country. In regard to the management of the Agriculture Department, a gentleman, who knows more about it than I do, states that the officials are not capable men, that they are either too old, too inexperienced, or too dishonest.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I must ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw the word "dishonest."

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. gentleman did not apply it to any member of the House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am advised and believe that it is against the rules of the House.

Mr. COOK. I do not wish to violate the rules of the House, and if it is a violation of the rules I withdraw it; but I was speaking of a Department, not of a member of the House. But I may say this of the Minister of Agriculture, that he has either shown a lack of ability in his Department or else a stubbornness that does not become a Minister of the Crown. He is a pretty smooth man with a clean shaved face and he usually gets his items through the Committee without a great deal of trouble; but he is like all the other members of the Government. He must not hold himself up as a paragon of perfection because, like all the rest, either he does not know anything about his Department, or he does not care to give the information which the House desires. He must, therefore, not think he is an exception to the rule; he must be judged according to his acts, and I am glad to say he will be so judged. This affair is a sad commentary on the wisdom of the Government so far as their interests are concerned; but, so far as the interests of the country are concerned, it is the very best thing that could happen. This will lead the people to look into this immigration matter, and perhaps the Minister of Agriculture may be the means of defeating this Government at the next election, and he would feel very badly over that. Although the hon. gentleman may be perfectly pure and truthful and high-minded, I do not see why he should say to the Opposition that these items must be passed, because not only have the Opposition, but members of his own side have criticised the management of his Department. The country will notice that members of the Government, in administering public affairs, have made statements one day and contradicted them the next. I will not refer to particular Ministers, but I could mention more than one who this Session has made statements one day which were truthfully contradicted the next. How can we believe them when we find they have committed acts of that sort? I believe, even at this late hour, the Government should submit to the will of the Opposition, and I use the word "submit" advisedly, because they are in the wrong. If we were in the wrong I would rise at once and ask the leader of the Opposition to submit. Hon. gentlemen opposite talk about factious opposition. I have not heard a speech during the debate that was not to the point, but I remember during the Mackenzie Administration, from 1874 to 1878, that members of the Opposition talked six hours at a time on an item, but they did not talk, but read from musty books from the library hour after hour. We have not attempted to prolong the Session or offer factious opposition, but we do want to get the plain honest facts, and to know exactly what we are voting upon and for what purposes we are voting away public money. In my own business I would not allow an employé to expend a dollar, without knowing for what purpose it was expended. If I would not do that in my own business, why should I allow public money to be voted away by a set of men in whom I have no confidence?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I would forgive readily the aspersions or insinuations which the hon. gentleman who has just sat down has cast upon myself, for I know that if the scales in which he weighs his words were inspected by the proper officer they would be confiscated; but I cannot forgive him the unjustifiable and undeserved slander which he has thrown upon as faithful and loyal a body of men as there is in this Dominion—the printers of the Printing Bureau. The hon. gentleman said that the voters' lists were likely to be, if they had not been, tampered with in the printing office, and that the Government, in selecting for the head of the Printing Department the Secretary of State, had made the right selection for the perpetration of that infamy. What concerns me I can readily forget and forgive, knowing the source from which the insult comes; but what concerns the officers of my Department I cannot leave unnoticed and unavenged. If the hon. gentleman knew what he was talking about, he would know that the voters' lists are not completed until they have been carefully compared, corrected, and reconsidered by the revising officer and bear his signature.

Mr. COOK. I understand all that.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The hon. gentleman understands it now, and will understand it better when called on to withdraw his charge. He may find himself in the same position as that in which he was placed a moment ago when, having misrepresented a member of this House, and being forced to withdraw what he had said, he meekly withdrew his aspersions. I repeat that the hon. member for Simcoe did not know what he was talking about, because if those lists be tampered with at all, they would be tampered with by the revising officers, who, in the case of the hon. gentleman's county, is one of the county judges of Ontario. I leave these judges to say what they think of the aspersion of the hon. member. The hon. gentleman said he had long ago foreseen the difficulties of the Printing Bureau, and that the printers in the Department were always on strike, or on the eve of a strike. This is again a slander against these men. Printers have done what they had a right to do in forming part of a trades union. They made their representations in a calm and clear manner; we discussed the question with them, and we came to an agreement honorable to the Government and creditable to the workmen; and I know who are sorry that an amicable settlement was come to, and no opportunity given to cast discredit on the Government among the workmen! It is well, when we see erratic public men and newspapers trying to set employes against their employers, that the workmen should know who are their slanderers! I will not follow the example of the hon. gentleman and go outside this discussion as he did, I would have to go too far. I would have to go into the forest, and there he would have the advantage over me.

Mr. COOK. You would not say that out of the House.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I know that whoever meets the hon. gentleman in the forest has always got the worst of it. I know that he got the best of no less a shrewd man than the leader of the preceding Administration in a timber limit deal, and afterwards brought to grief no less shrewd men than Scotch capitalists when the timber was taken out of the limit. I cannot say it in Gaelic, and I do not wish to use the language of the courts in relation to that transaction of his, or I might have something to say to the hon. gentleman which it would not be pleasant for him to hear, and which would create a greater impression than even my Printing Department has created on the hon. gentleman.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I think we ought to settle down to work and not lose the time of the Committee in useless discussion. The hon. Minister has now the report which we all desire to see, and he should proceed to make us acquainted with its contents.

Mr. SPROULE. Hon. gentleman opposite are either inconsistent or dishonest or both.

MR. CHAIRMAN. The hon. gentleman is out of order.

Mr. SPROULE. If the word "dishonest" as used here is unparliamentary, I certainly withdraw it.

MR. CHAIRMAN. A statement made hypothetically is contrary to the rule.

Mr. SPROULE. I bow to your decision, Sir. They are inconsistent for this reason: that while they complained previously that the Minister could not answer the questions they put, now that the Minister has the report of the Department in his hands and is prepared to answer their questions, they will not put them, but insist that he should read this voluminous report through. These hon. gentlemen are merely trifling with the dignity of the House, and with the business of the country, in making such a proposition.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What I desire to point out is, that were this a mere question of personal feeling between the two sides of the House I would use all my influence with my friends to induce them to waive their objections, but really this is a question of grave importance, although the amount involved is small. I would ask the First Minister whether the rule has not always been that, when Ministers brought down any item on which reports had been presented, the Government would not, unless by consent of both sides, press these items without submitting the report? The reason is obvious. Before members are called upon to discuss a particular item, it is only just that the report of the work performed by the officers, whose salaries we are called on to vote, should be in the hands of members. It is quite true that, in Sir Charles Tupper's time, the Opposition at his request, and as a matter of courtesy, have often waived the production of the report before voting the item, but I do not think the First Minister can point to any instance in which a Government insisted on forcing through an item before the report of the Minister was laid before the House. In the present case my hon. friends, while willing to dispense with having that report in their hands, insist that they should have cognisance of its contents, if the Minister chooses to read it. That certainly is as great a concession as they can make, having reference to parliamentary usage and custom which has hitherto prevailed. I do not know what the Ministers are going to do. Within two hours and a half we are to have an important deliverance of the Finance Minister, for which the public are anxiously waiting, and it is unfortunate that we should be called upon to discuss so important a matter when members are exhausted by a long night's sitting and unable to give it that attention it demands.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In answer to the hon. gentleman I must state that he is quite correct in saying that items are not forced through when reports connected with them are not before the House, but there is no attempt in this case to fight the vote through. A proposition was made that the whole item should be adopted, pro forma, and that it should be reconsidered with the Speaker in the chair. It was alleged, and truly, that, as a general rule, concurrence comes late in the Session when both sides are weary of discussion, and when there would be little opportunity for criticism. In answer to that my hon. friend made a proposition this morning, which I repeated, that this item should pass, pro forma, and that when it came up on concurrence, it should be dealt with fully, and that it should be discussed before the Supplementary Estimates came down. Therefore, the objection that if it was postponed to the end of the Session, it would not be fully discussed, was done away with. It got to be a matter of feeling on both sides. I made a suggestion that the majority would be satisfied by the pro forma acceptance of the motion in Committee, and that later we should discuss it very fully before the Supplementary Estimates came down.

Mr. CHARLTON. Where is the saving of time by that proposition?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We do not save any time, but we have a resolution to report. There would be no feeling of humiliation on either side. In the first place, the majority would be satisfied by getting the resolution adopted pro forma; on the other hand, the Opposition will have full opportunity to discuss the item after the report has been brought down. That is a pretty fair compromise, I think, on the whole.

Mr. LAURIER. It is no compromise at all.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not want, in the slightest degree, to humiliate hon. gentlemen opposite. I think it is better to follow our parliamentary usage and to accept the proposition which was made by my hon. friend behind me, and which was this: Let us pass all the items in this resolution except one or two in dispute, and, if you like, all but the last one, so as to save the feelings of hon. gentlemen, and then let the Committee rise. I am contending simply for the custom which the hon. gentleman contended for when he was on this side, and that is the custom that the reports of the various Ministers should be in our hands before the items are discussed to which those reports refer.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, would be a reasonable one, that is to say, that the item of $5,900 should be passed, and, if necessary, the next two items also, and leave the last item of $55,000, to be considered hereafter.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think both sides are anxious to get out of this little rut. Suppose we split the difference.

Mr. MITCHELL. You have done it already. We have given you three items out of the four.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In this item 75 there are a great many sub-items. Suppose we take all these and pass them as one resolution, and let the others stand over as resolution 75a, to be considered afterwards.

Mr. MULOCK. That proposition I made about half-past two o'clock this morning, but the Minister of Public Works would not accept it.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think it should be understood that if we pass, pro forma, these salaries of agents in Europe we ought to be allowed to discuss that question again when we get the report.

Mr. LAURIER. As I understand it the proposition of the First Minister is to allow the sub-items which have been passed already, to be reported as resolution 75, and the others to stand for discussion as resolution 75a.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. LAURIER. 75a will be composed of these items which are not passed. The last item passed was the agent at Vancouver. This will be reported as resolution 75 and the others will stand as 75a.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As I understand from my hon. friends around me, the proposition made last night was that if the last ones were allowed to stand, the others would be passed.

Mr. LAURIER. The proposition was made, as I understand, to carry the whole item except the last sub-item, but that was not agreed to. I agree to the proposition of the First Minister to report sub-items which have been passed as resolution 75, and let the others stand as resolution 75a.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The First Minister will see that this item of salaries to agents in Europe has not passed, and the whole fight has been that we have not got anything printed in relation to them. When the Experimental Farm was called, the hon. member for Huron, who desired to speak upon it, was told that the Minister of Agriculture was not in possession of the needed information, but that it would be found in an appendix to his report. It was pointed out that the appendix was not yet down; hon. gentlemen opposite saw that was reasonable, and they let the item stand. This report of Sir Charles Tupper dealing with the salaries of agents in Europe, is not down, and there is the trouble.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. My proposition is to pass all the items except the last one, and that the last one should stand as 75a. The hon. member for South Oxford will see that, under that item regarding immigration and immigration expenses, every possible subject connected with immigration can be discussed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do I understand that no objection will be raised under the last item to the discussion of the three preceding ones which have not been discussed?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No objection whatever.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That being understood, I would suggest to my hon. friends that the proposition be accepted.

Resolutions reported.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 12.50 p. m. (Thursday).
