Mr. WILSON (Elgin). It will be useless for me to address the House at any length, as I do not think I will be able to offer anything new in criticising the statements made by hon. gentlemen opposite. But I feel that if a measure of this kind should remain on the Statute-book, it should be shown that a strong necessity existed for its retention there. The Postmaster General said we are entitled to a Franchise Bill and to have a franchise for the Dominion Parliament. Admitting that to be the fact, then it rests with the Government to show the necessity of such a measure. Has that been done by hon. gentlemen opposite? I challenge hon. gentlemen opposite to prove that one tittle of evidence has been adduced up to the present time showing any necessity for such a measure. Yet it has been shown, and especially was it shown by the Secretary of State, that it was a very expensive measure, and unless the expenses were reduced materially as compared with the cost of the first revision, it was a question in the hon. gentleman's opinion, whether such a measure should remain on the Statute-book. The hon. gentleman, although he said he did not speak for the balance of the Cabinet, said he failed to see any necessity for a revision each year. So the hon. gentleman practically announced to the House and the country that the Government had placed on the Statute-book a measure which they do not intend to carry into effect. The Act stipulates that a revision should take place every year, and yet we find the Secretary of State stating that he does not think it necessary. What result might that cause? The Government having control of the voters' list, and the Secretary of State in particular, and it was considered that a new revision would be unfavorable to the Government, they might come down to the House and announce that there was no necessity for another revision before next election. From the subservience of the followers of the First Minister, so long as it pleases the First Minister, hon. gentlemen opposite will be prepared to endorse the view of the Secretary of State and deprive the people of those rights and privileges which every subject should enjoy in the Dominion. I say it is opening the door to a wrong which might be inflicted upon every member in this House, and that even his own admission goes to show that there is no necessity for this Bill remaining on the Statute-book, and that, therefore, it should be repealed. My hon. friend from Renfrew (Mr. White) conveys the impression that this Act was as good, if not better than the Act in operation in Ontario, and that there was no more difficulty in getting names placed on the Dominion lists than upon the local lists. I entirely differ with him. I am firmly of opinion that if he will examine the question carefully, he will find that every individual in Ontario, who is entitled under the provincial law to be placed on the list, can be so placed at comparatively little trouble and no expense. Can any one who has taken the trouble to go through the turmoil of looking after a revision of the Dominion lists say that there is no difficulty in getting names on that list? If the Dominion list was as easily revised as the local one, is it to be expected that the Government would have had only one complete revision since 1886? I contend that the last revision was not a complete one, and the Government knows it, for, if report speaks true, it is one of the reasons why they were not in a position to appeal to the country on account of the incompleteness of the last revision. If we have had only one revision it is evidence that it was because of the difficulties of the revision, or else that the supporters of the Government opposed it. My hon. friend from Algoma (Mr. Dawson) seems to think that the Ontario list is a very bad one, and that in that vast region of Algoma it was almost impossible for any one to be placed on the local list. I would like to know if the Government of Ontario is to blame because of the extent of territory in Algoma?

Mr. DAWSON I said it was no better than the Dominion list, and that there were mistakes in the one as well as in the other.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Although, I may not be able to convince the hon. gentleman, I think I will be able to show him that the Ontario list is the better one. I was about bestowing a compliment on the hon. gentleman when he interrupted me. I was about telling him that although Algoma was a very extensive territory it had an influential representative here to speak for all its interests. Does the hon. gentleman pretend to tell me, that the various municipal officers in the district of Algoma are not much better able to determine the names of those who shall be on the list, than the single revising barister under the Dominion Act? Will he pretend to tell me that it is as easy to approach the Dominion revising officer as it is to approach the assessor and municipal clerks in the various municipalities of the extensive territory which he represents? Let us consider the arguments offered by the hon. Minister of Public Works, the first hon. gentleman who replied to the remarks made on this side of the House. I have read his speech over and over again, with the hope (I was almost going to say with the desire) that I might find some argument in it which would show a reason for this Act being continued. True he said that we had an election upon it, and that they, on the other side of the House, were well satisfied with it. So well he might be, because he knew that the First Minister intended and desired, when he introduced this Bill, that it should bring grist to the Government mill. If they are quite well pleased with the result of that revision, it is no more than what the First Minister intended. The object of the First Minister has been to keep the Minister of Public Works and other members of the Government in power year after year, by reason of his ingenuity, his great influence and the strong hold he has upon the country. They might well be satisfied with the Act; but let me ask was the same opportunities and the same conveniences granted to the opponents of the Government as to its friends? I contend that the Government of the day, having in their hands the appointments of the revising barristers, who were to prepare and to revise these lists, took an advantage of the Opposition in this House, and we need not be surprised at the Minister of Public Works offering the argument which I have referred to, as the sole reason why this Act should continue upon the Statute-book.

Mr. TAYLOR. Question.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). You will get the question as soon as I get through, and not sooner. Let me refer to the arguments offered in defence of this Bill by the Secretary of State. He admitted honestly—and I will give him credit for it—that it was a very expensive measure. He stated that the first revision was more expensive than he expected, and that it cost somewhere about $413,000. He says the second revision costs a great deal less. Have we had a full report of the cost of the second revision? It was the duty of the hon. Secretary of State, when this matter came up for discussion, to bring down a full return showing its cost; but he did not give us the information which he ought to have given to a free Parliament, so that Parliament might be in possession of all the facts in coming to a decision. He says it cost $151,000 odd. Does that cover the whole cost? A return brought down showed that up to last February between $80,000 and $90,000 had been spent, and we find by the Estimates, that the Government took to themselves the right of expending $260,000 more. Perhaps we shall find the Auditor General's Report giving us a detail of the expenditure for the second revision, and showing that instead of costing $151,000, it will have cost between $300,000 and $400,000, as the first revision did.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I beg pardon of the hon. member. I would not like him to speak in error, as it would lengthen the debate, but the report has been put before the House, and it is the report of the Auditor General himself, not mine.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). The hon. Secretary of State knows that we have no account for the expenditure up to the present time in the Auditor General's Report. He knows that the larger portion of his expenditure has taken place since the 1st of July.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I am sorry to again interrupt my hon. friend. It is not the report of the Auditor General which is published; it is a report which I have laid before the House, and which gives the expenditure to the 31st of January, I think, and if my hon. friend does not know it, it is before the House.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Perhaps the hon. Secretary of State has brought down a report in the last two or three days; but what does it show? Does it show the total expenditure? Are all the accounts of the various revising officers and all the accounts for printing included in it? Does the hon. gentleman intend to imply that it covers the full amount of the expenditure that has taken place? I think not, and I think it will be found that it is not a full account of what the second revision has cost. Is the revision of 1889 a true, and correct, and honest revision of the voters' lists? Is it equal to, or will it in any way bear comparison with the revision of the municipal lists that has taken place in the Province of Ontario or in the other Provinces? I say it does not. I say that the hon. Secretary of State by his own confession has proven to this House the absolute necessity of repealing this Act; because he says that if the future cost is likely to be at all as great as it has been, it will be a serious matter. Although he has given us the amount paid up to the present time, he has not given us complete figures, as a very large number of bills have yet to be paid. Now, Sir, I might refer to the statement made by other hon. gentlemen. The hon. Minister of Finance said that there had been no arguments presented against this measure except the argument of cost. I would ask him whether any argument has been offered by the Government or their supporters, to show any necessity for this measure remaining on the Statute-book. If they cannot offer any such argument, it ought to be repealed. The most remarkable argument I heard was that offered by the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale). He said we ought to rise superior to party feelings, and display a national sentiment in this matter. What are a few dollars and cents, he asked, in comparison with the national sentiment which ought to animate the members of this House? Sir, I was quite surprised to hear a gentleman who had claimed to monopolise almost all the loyalty that was to be distributed in this country, making the admission on the floor of this House that this Act was really necessary to sustain a national sentiment of loyalty in this country. The thought struck me had there never had been any national sentiment before 1885, either before or after Confederation, and after the passage of this Franchise Act, were we suddenly to inaugurate a national sentiment, which was going to develop this country into a great nation? That was a very powerful argument in favor of sustaining this measure; but I would like the hon. gentleman to understand that there was a strong national sentiment existing in this country prior to the passage of this Act; and if it was not a deep, earnest and abiding sentiment, the injustice that was about to be perpetrated by the First Minister in inflicting such an Act as this on a civilised community, would have almost destroyed that national sentiment, which I am proud to feel exists amongst the Opposition members of this House to a much greater degree than among the Government members. Sir, it is unnecessary for me to make any further remarks.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). The hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) says "hear, hear." I know it is unnecessary to try to use arguments sufficiently strong to convince that hon. gentleman against anything that is put before him by the First Minister. But let me say in closing that I believe there is a strong feeling in the country adverse to this Bill. In the various Conservative conventions which have been held throughout the country, no approval of this measure has been recorded, but resolution after resolution has been passed by those conventions condemning the Dominion Franchise Act. When we find upon the public platforms not a single supporter of the Government attempting to defend a measure of this kind, its unpopularity is evident, and I hope the good sense of this House will vote to repeal this Act which has been a source of discord and dissatisfaction in the country ever since it was placed in the statutes.

House divided on motion of Mr. Wilson (Elgin):

That, in the opinion of this House, the Electoral Franchise Act ought to be repealed, and that it is preferable to revert to the plan of utilising for the elections of this House the provincial franchises and voters' lists.

Motion negatived.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for Albert has not voted.

Mr. WELDON. I paired with the hon. member for King's, N.S. (Mr. Borden).

Mr. AMYOT. The leader of the Third Party has not voted.

Mr. MITCHELL. I made a conditional pair with the hon. member for Montreal West, that if he was out of the House when the vote was taken, I would pair with him, as he was not sure that he could be present. Otherwise I would have voted as I always do in the interests of the public, with the minority in this case.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 1 a.m. (Thursday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 27th February, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PRIVATE BILLS—EXTENSION OF TIME.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved:

That as the time for presenting reports from Committees on Private Bills expires this day, the same be extended to Thursday, the 27th March next.

Motion agreed to.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 96) for better securing the safety of certain Fishermen.—(Mr. Jones, Halifax.)

CANADA TEMPERANCE ACT.

Mr. DICKEY moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 102) to amend the Canada Temperance Act. He said: This Bill is purely of a local character. It applies only, in its practical effects, to a few counties of Nova Scotia, where a doubt has been raised as to whether or not the Act is in force. In the revision of the statutes a former statute was left out, and the omission has given rise to some doubts, which I propose to remove.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Mr. LAVERGNE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 103) to amend the Canada Temperance Act. He said: My object is to allow, in cases where a prosecution is brought under section 104, two justices of the peace to adjourn the case if the sitting magistrate is sick or absent. At present, if the sitting magistrate cannot attend, the case has to be withdrawn, and considerable inconvenience and defeat of justice has been caused in our section by this provision. I wish also to amend section 107, under which cases taken under the Summary Convictions Act cannot be adjourned for longer than eight days. The consequence is that in some sections where the district magistrate, who is the person most competent to deal with those cases, can only hold his court once a month, as he may have several districts to attend to, and if a case is not ready it has to be withdrawn, since it cannot be heard within the eight days. I propose to give power to the magistrates to adjourn the cases for a longer period.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

NEWFOUNDLAND AND CANADA.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Whether there has been any correspondence between the Government of Canada and the Imperial Government, or the Government of Newfoundland, respecting relations between Newfoundland and Canada; and whether any such correspondence will be brought down forthwith?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is some correspondence, but of a limited character, between the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland, and it is now going on. We cannot well bring it down in a perfect state, and would require to have the consent of the other Government.

DEFENCES OF BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Whether there has been any correspondence between the Government of Canada and the Imperial Government with reference to the defences of any part of British Columbia; and whether any such correspondence will be brought down forthwith?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In answer to the hon. gentleman, I beg to state that there has been correspondence between the Canadian Government and the English Government, with reference to the defences of British Columbia. This correspondence is of an official nature. Negotiations are still going on, but it would not be in the interests of the public service to bring it down at present.

CANADA AND JAMAICA.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Whether there has been any correspondence between the Government of Canada and the Imperial Government respecting relations between Canada and Jamaica; and whether any such correspondence will be brought down forthwith?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is no recent correspondence between the Imperial Government and Canada on this subject.

LEGAL SERVICES IN PETERBOROUGH.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, What amount of money has been paid to the following legal gentlemen respectively, namely:—W. H. Moore, A. P.

Mr. DICKEY.

Poussette, Q.C.; John O'Meara, John Green, E. A. Peck, and John Burnham, Q.C., all of Peterborough, on account of legal services, or otherwise, rendered by those gentlemen, or any of them, on account of, and in regard to, the following works, or any of them:—1st. The purchase of the site and the construction of the Peterborough Post Office; 2nd. The purchase of the site for the construction of the Custom house at Peterborough; 3rd. On account of the Trent Valley Canal, distinguishing if paid on survey or construction, or damages to land consequent on construction; 4th. On account of any other services within the last five years.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I cannot give the hon. gentleman the answer to these four questions to-day, but I would suggest whether he would not do better to move for a return, instead of putting this in the form of a question. In the last paragraph, he asks for a statement of these fees for the last five years from all the Departments, and that would take some time to prepare.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I might meet the views of the hon. gentleman, if I dropped the fourth question, and then probably to-morrow he could give me an answer as to the other.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I will.

FIRE AT ST. SAUVEUR, QUEBEC—DAMAGES SUSTAINED BY "B" BATTERY.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec) asked, 1st. Whether the Government are aware that on the occasion of the fire at St. Sauveur, Quebec, on the 16th May last, the men of "B" Battery, under the command of their officers, worked heroically in endeavoring to arrest the flames; 2nd. That they destroyed or damaged their uniforms at the said fire; 3rd. That, by order of the Officer Commanding Regiment Canadian Artillery, Colonel Montizambert, Commandant of the said "B" Battery, wrote on the 6th December last, to the Mayor of Quebec, claiming $478.37, being the amount of the damages done to the said uniforms, and leaving it to be inferred that the men were to pay, or had paid, the amount of the said damage? Whether the Commandant acted under instructions from the Department of Militia in dealing with this matter? Have the Government made the men of the said battery pay the amount of the said damage, or is it their intention to make them pay the same; and if they have already paid the amount, is it the intention of the Government to refund the money?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In reply to the hon. gentleman, I beg to state, first, that the Minister of Militia is aware that, on the occasion of the fire at St. Sauveur, Quebec, the men of "B" Battery, under the command of their officers, worked heroically in endeavoring to arrest the flames; on that occasion, one of the best officers of the corps unfortunately lost his life in his efforts to save property, also a very meritorious non-commissioned officer. Secondly, it is reported that their uniforms were damaged to a considerable extent. Thirdly, a report has been asked by telegraph from the officer commanding the battery, as to what course he has taken in reference to an application to the Mayor of Quebec, claiming an amount for the damages done to the said uniforms. The Commandant did not act under instructions from the Department of Militia in dealing with this matter. A yearly issue of clothing is made to each man. The additional clothing to cover the claims of those who suffered in consequence of this fire will be settled at the same time.

THE FISHERIES QUESTION.

Mr. MITCHELL. I understand that a telegraphic message has been published in the newspapers from which it appears that the Government at St. Petersburg has directed its Ambassador at Washington to take part in the negotiations which have reference to Behring Sea, and to enter into an attempt, at all events, to establish a close season. I suppose, from that, that the question of this being a closed sea, belonging to the United States, must have been practically abandoned, but it would be gratifying to the House and to the country to know if the Government have any information to that effect.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think it is in the interests of Canada or of that question that we should enter into a discussion of it, or should even state precisely what we believe to be the condition of affairs. Anything which is said here will be published in the United States, and whatever is said will assist those who are attacking the administration of the United States or the action of that Government. It is infinitely better that the matter being now under discussion there, Canada being represented and England being represented, and the United States, of course, being represented, while Russia is naturally interested in the matter, as to the best means of preventing the diminution or extermination of the seal, it should not now be discussed here. All I can say to the leader of the third party is, that I am sure he knows the importance sometimes, when everything is going on satisfactorily, that certain documents should not be produced.

Mr. McMULLEN. I take this opportunity of suggesting that, when questions are put and answered which are of an important character, such as this, the speakers should allow their voices to be heard. We on the back seats cannot hear a word that he said, and might as well be out of the House. It is highly desirable that the House should be permitted to hear what is said on these important questions. The only way we have to ascertain what has been said is to read the Hansard on the next day. For myself and for other hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, I would request that when hon. gentlemen on the front benches speak on these important matters, they should let us hear what they say.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is quite right, and I shall endeavor in future to raise my voice so that I can reach him. The effect of the answer I gave to my hon. friend (Mr. Mitchell) is that everything at Washington is as pleasant as any Canadian could wish, so far; but I think it is not for the interests of Canada, and that it would not assist the progress of negotiations at Washington, that a statement should be made from time to time of what the state of the negotiation is exactly from day to day.

TRADE WITH JAMAICA.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). My hon. friend from West Bruce put a question on the paper as to the relations of this Government with Jamaica. I would ask the First Minister whether any communication has taken place between this Government and the Government of Jamaica in reference to an exhibition which is to be held there next year? Having large commercial connections with Jamaica, I was asked by the Government there if I would act in concert with other gentlemen on the commission which is dealing with that exhibition. I replied that, while individually I would be willing to render any assistance in my power, I thought the best thing for them to do was to place themselves in communication with the Government of Canada, who would naturally, in a matter of that kind, if they took an interest in the matter, appoint their own commissioner. Perhaps the right hon. gentleman could inform me now, without my giving notice of the question, whether anything of that kind has transpired.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There has been a communication respecting that exhibition, and on its receipt it was referred to the Minister of Agriculture, who will report upon it.

WRECKING, &c., IN CANADIAN WATERS.

Mr. CHARLTON moved second reading of Bill (No. 2) to permit reciprocity in wrecking and towing of vessels and rafts. He said: Mr. Speaker—

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. With the permission of the House, I will make a statement respecting these three Bills. The Government have had communication with Her Majesty's Government, and Her Majesty's Government are carrying on a correspondence with the authorities at Washington on this whole subject of wrecking and coasting. That correspondence is now in progress, and I think that the Government must ask that these Bills be postponed for the present, because it is a little absurd that we should be legislating here while Her Majesty's Government are pressing upon the United States Government the strong views of Canada on the subject of reciprocity in wrecking, and reciprocity in coasting as well.

Mr. CHARLTON. I might suggest to the leader of the Government, whether it would not be proper to enter upon the discussion of these Bills, and after discussing the merits of the case, to refer the Bills to a special committee, and there let the matter rest until we see what is the outcome at Washington.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have not the slightest objection.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I do not think there is any use in referring the Bills to a special committee. If the Government will say that we shall have time to move these Bills later on in the Session, so that, if the House consents to them, we may send them to the Senate, I would let them stand while that correspondence is in progress. But if we are to have a discussion, we must have a vote, and either pass the Bill or reject it. If the Government, upon their responsibility, say that the matter is engaging their attention, and that negotiations are now in progress with the authorities at Washington, upon this very subject, of course I would not wish to press the matter. I am so anxious that the question of reciprocity in wrecking should be favorably considered, that I would not like to injure it by premature discussion.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Perhaps it would be as well, then, to place the items at the foot of the list, with the understanding that we shall give the earliest information on the subject, so that, in case the negotiations do not result as we would like, the hon. gentleman can bring these Bills up again.

Mr. CHARLTON. I would object to putting them at the foot of the list.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Let them stand at the head.

Mr. CHARLTON. I think myself it would be in the interest of the country to have this matter discussed now, or whenever we have time to attend to it. It is not likely that at a later stage of the Session we will have time to devote to a full discussion of this question.

PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.

Mr. BROWN moved second reading of Bill (No. 5) to make further provision as to the prevention of cruelty to animals, and to amend chapter 172 of the Revised Statutes of Canada. He said: In moving the second reading of this Bill I may be permitted to make a few observations upon it, although I do not intend, at this stage, to make any lengthy observations. Should, however, the occasion require, by action that may be taken in the course of this discussion, I shall take another opportunity of replying to any statements that may be made. Hon. gentlemen will remember the singular career of this measure in the House last Session, when it was carried on one occasion by a vote of one, and then reversed by a vote of one, and then, when it became a tie, the Speaker kept the measure before the House. Afterwards when it came to Committee, the House was in such a state of excitement that my hon. friend from Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran), who was in the Chair, was so convulsed with laughter at the scene around him, that he could not observe that I was speaking. All that was required on that occasion was a few moments of speaking to the House, in order that the hon. gentlemen who were out of the building might have time to come in and record their vote. My hon. friend the genial member for Montreal did not only not see me in the crowd of members that were standing up, but he did not hear the Minister of Customs telling him that I was speaking. However, I may state now that the object of this Bill seems not to have been understood by some persons. I am sorry to say that in many quarters of the country the object of the Bill, from statements made, seems to have been misapprehended, although I do not wish to make any charges against any one. I wish to state at the outset, that the Bill does not affect in any way true and real sport. The object of the Bill is one which all true sportsmen throughout the country will support, and do support. The Bill is mainly to provide against trap-shooting. We all know that the first element of sport consists in a contest between the man and the animal, where the man does the best he can, and the animal does the best it can. But in this case which the Bill designed to meet, the animal has no chance for its life, has no chance to exert its instincts to do the best it can. The object of the Bill is to prevent the cooping up of birds in boxes, and putting them into traps, and giving them no chance for their

ives. As I will be prepared to show you, this trap-shooting business is attended with acts of great cruelty, to say nothing of the degrading and debasing associations of gambling and, in some cases, disturbances. I am also able to prove that in the large cities and in country towns, too, where this trap-shooting is followed, it is creating a band of young thieves all over the country. Some persons are fond of doves and have dove-cotes, for the good training of their children, and creating a love for these innocent birds, and when trap-shooting matches take place these dove-cotes, in many instances, have been robbed by boys and the birds sold to these trap-shooters, and no questions are asked. Many a man having doves costing $20 a pair, has lost them, and they have been sold for 15 or 20 cents and no questions asked, the birds having been stolen by a band of young thieves and sold to trap-shooters. I have letters in my possession from gentlemen of position in the city of Toronto and other places, giving absolute proof of this fact. I know that my hon. friend who will follow me will tell you that there is no cruelty in trap-shooting. If he has the courage to say on the floor of this House what he says elsewhere, he will tell you that this measure has been promoted by cranks and those who know nothing about sport. Since I introduced this measure last Session, the press of the country on all sides has spoken out in support of it; the people have spoken in support of it. I have presented to this House petitions containing between three and four thousand signatures, and on those petitions are the names of the Chief Justices of New Brunswick and Manitoba, of all the leading clergymen of the country, of leading school teachers and professors of universities, professors of Trinity College, Toronto, of Knox College, Wycliffe College, McMaster Hall; and all the leading teachers who are interested in the education of the youth of the country have signed petitions to this honorable House praying us to pass this measure. They ask us to pass this measure because they consider that the practice that is aimed at is degrading to grown-up society, and they consider that it is in the interest of the youth of this country that a measure should be passed that will educate the youth of the country properly in regard to what is legitimate sport and what is debasing sport. No one knows better than hon. gentlemen in this House that a child's course through life is largely influenced by the first impression it receives. I ask the hon. gentleman who will follow me, and any hon. member who opposes this measure, if he would take his child to see a trap-shooting match, or a cock fight, or a dog fight, and if he would point to it and say: My child, that is the way I wish you to grow up, and I want you to encourage cruel sport like that. Hon. gentlemen may oppose this Bill, backed up by influences to which I do not care to refer; but there is not an hon. member here who would take his child to witness such an exhibition. I claim that this Bill does not interfere with true sport. I hold the opinion that concentrating or driving animals into limited space and confining them is not sport. We often hear of cases abroad where animals are brought into a narrow compass so that they cannot readily escape, and men sit at their ease and shoot them. Is that sport? I say it is nothing of the kind. But, perhaps, one of the most degrading exhibitions is that of trap-shooting birds which, when relieved from captivity, have no chance of saving their lives. In the United States a case was decided where a man was brought up for cruelty to animals by shooting a pigeon at a trap-shooting match. He defended the suit. The decision is of importance to this House. Here is a summary of the decision, which was given by Judge Yerkes in Bucks county court sitting in quarter sessions :

"To make out the offence, 'the Commonwealth must show, first, that the pigeon was ill-treated or abused; second, that the manner of the treatment was wanton or cruel. One of the pigeons was wounded and alighted upon a tree, and as soon as its wounded condition was discovered it was killed. Is it ill-treatment or abuse to wound a living creature so that it lingers in that condition for a period, long or short?' Speedily answering the question in the affirmative, the judge next proceeds to consider whether the action was wanton. 'There is wantonness,' he argues, 'wherever pain is caused without cause or good reason.' Warming up to his task, the judge then disposes of the plea that pigeon shooting is necessary to develop marksmanship. He suggests that clay pigeons or glass balls would answer as well as live pigeons, and further hints that if the members of the Philadelphia Club are training themselves for army service in time of war, it would be a good scheme for them to use rifles rather than shotguns. Denying this as a sufficient argument for the shooting, the judge as speedily overrides the point that the shooting was done to prepare the birds for food. 'When pigeons in captivity are needed for food,' he argues, 'there are quicker and surer ways of killing them than by shooting.' The final blow is dealt to the defendant's cause when Judge Yerkes approaches the point made in his favor that he did not intend to wound, but to kill. It appears to the legal mind that the holding of a shooting contest pre-supposes that some will shoot better than others—that while some will kill their birds others will wound. Summing up his points, the judge decides that a misdemeanor was committed by Mr. Lewis."

I may dwell for a moment longer on the question of non-cruelty or otherwise, because I know it is a subject that will be referred to by the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale). In the Massachusetts House of Representatives a commission was appointed to satisfy themselves respecting the cruelty that was practised on birds shot from traps, and evidence was taken under oath, and a report was made to the Governor of the State. In the evidence given, a statement was made to this effect:—Mr. Matthews of Winthrop, Mass. :

"One morning, after a pigeon-shoot, I found three pigeons on the coving of my stable, right on the eaves. During the next night they died and dropped down. I examined them. One had a leg broken and had two shots through the body. Another had a leg broken and had one eye put out. After one of their shoots, four birds came to my place in just the same way. I live a mile away, in an air-line, from the shooting grounds."

"When the Winthrop Club was started I was one of the members, and belonged to it three years. I got sick of it and left it. Then, about one bird out of eight would get away."

"Q. You said you got sick of it?

"A. Yes."

"Q. On what account?

"A. Well, because I did not like the treatment of the birds. I thought it was not right."

"Q. From your experience, during three years, what is your opinion about the humanity of the thing?

"A. I think it is cruel."

"Q. In what particular point does the cruelty consist?

"A. In the first place, of their catching these birds with the snares, and of boxing them, and keeping them the way they are kept for three or four days. I think there is cruelty in taking and confining any animal in a spot, and for a man to take a loaded gun, and stand and pull away a trap for the bird to come out, and then shoot at him where he cannot have any chance to help himself. But if a man is out after wild game, then the bird has got a chance to take care of himself."

"Q. Is this pigeon shooting cruel above the shooting of wild game?

"A. It is; because the bird is caged and housed. He is convicted to be shot, the same as a man is convicted to be put upon the gallows to be hung. He does not have a chance to take care of himself."

"This practice of pigeon shooting has a bad influence on boys. Where boys are offered 15 or 20 cents apiece for birds, if you have some very nice pigeons on your place you will find the boys snaring them to get this 15 cents."

I have already stated that this Bill has been largely supported by the country. I have spoken of the support I have received in the form of petitions which I presented to this House from all quarters and from the very highest people in the land, the highest in law, in church and in commerce; and the other day, when I presented a petition from the city of St. John, the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) stated that he had never before seen a document containing 161 names of greater weight and importance from that city. I have a letter from the Humane Society of Fredericton, stating that they have been too late to be able to send a petition, and that they are in favor of the passage of this Bill as being a step in the right direction. And this communication, I may say, states that the Most Reverend Metropolitan Bishop Coadjutor of Fredericton, the Chief Justice and other Judges, and others support the Bill. I cannot for the life of me see why any objection should be taken to this measure, because, in asking support for it, I am simply asking support for a law promoted in the interest of humanity, in the interest of mercy to God's dumb creatures, and as a good example to our young people. I have in my recollection a statement made to me by a public official, who has seen many of these pigeon matches in the course of his duty, and he declares that a more depraved and demoralising sight it has not been his lot to witness, and that the influence upon those who have anything to do with it is bad. In England they have taken hold of this subject in a thorough manner, and in the right way. Not only have they prohibited this cruelty, but they are educating the children of the land to realise its demoralising influence. In one school in England, where the teaching of kindness to animals has been made one of the principal subjects and is taught the same as a lesson in geography or in any other subject, they have traced the career of 7,000 pupils who have passed through the institution into the battle of life, and so far as the authorities could learn anything about the career of the ex-scholars, they have made a declaration to the Humane Society of England that not one of those 7,000 children, so far as known, have ever been convicted, or even charged with a criminal offence. I repeat again, although it has been chosen to be made a sort of ridicule in relation to this Bill, that a society has been formed in England to promote the education of children in kindness to God's dumb creatures, so that they may be taught this noble principle from their youth up. These children pledge themselves that they will be kind to any dumb animal, that they will feed the birds in winter, and that they will never rob a bird's nest. That organisation is called "The Dickey-Bird Society."

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BROWN. Some hon. gentlemen have thought, that because they choose to call this "a Dickey-Bird Bill" they offend me, but they are mistaken in that; they do not offend me. I am proud to say that there is such a society in England, and I hope there soon will be a similar society in Canada. I venture to say that any young man or young woman, who grows up in the early training of being kind to animals, the chances are greatly in their favor that they will be better citizens and better fathers and mothers. I hardly believe it possible that a man who has become a hardened criminal, has ever had the advantage in his early life of this kind of tuition. As I said before, I do not propose at this stage of the Bill to detain the House longer, but I may inform hon. gentlemen that when this Bill reaches the Committee, I propose to eliminate this last clause. I was prepared, last year, to strike out this clause, had it not been for the exciting scene in the House, when the Bill was in Committee. The clause which I propose to omit is as follows:—

“3. Any person may lawfully destroy or cause to be destroyed any animal found to be abandoned, or not properly cared for, when, in the judgment of two justices of the peace, called by him to view the same in his presence, it appears to be injured, disabled or diseased past recovery.”

I may tell you, Mr. Speaker, that in bringing forward this measure I did so at the request of nine Humane Societies in Canada, and each of these societies had their suggestions to make. The Toronto Society, the Hamilton Society, and, I think, another, stated that they had, occasionally, cases where a person having used a horse until that horse became worthless, discarded it and left it to linger and die without food or water. It was thought well, in consequence of this, that such a clause should be introduced. Representations have, however, been made to me that this clause might be productive of harm in more ways than one, and I feel disposed to meet the views of certain hon. gentlemen by eliminating that clause from the Bill. I take my stand upon this measure in the interests of common humanity, and in the belief that killing for killing sake is wrong. I believe that killing for the need of man is right, but that it should be done, even then, with the greatest possible mercy to the animal. The fact that this brutality in killing pigeons is done, merely because it reduces the physical exertions of those who participate in the so-called sport, makes it more objectionable morally. I mean by this, that the real sportsman looks with perfect horror on any kind of so-called sport or amusement which simply confines animals in order that he may shoot them in his laziness, and without the possibility of giving the animal a chance for its life. I can prove, and I will prove, if I have the opportunity at a later stage of the debate, that this is brutalising and immoral, from the speeches delivered in the British House of Commons by such eminent men as Mr. Anderson, of Glasgow; the late Mr. W. E. Forster, Chief Secretary of Ireland; Earl Percy, Lord Randolph Churchill, and others, who condemned this brutal sport, and, as a result of whose exertions, a Bill similar to the one now before this House, passed the House of Commons in England by a vote of 195 to 40. I may point out again, that the object of the trapper in these pigeon-shooting matches is to make the bird fly as eccentric as possible, and that in obtaining this object, the grossest brutality is perpetrated. When the trapper takes the bird from the trap he sometimes twists his tail, or pulls a handful of feathers from its bosom, so that the bird in its excitement and pain may fly in different directions, and make it all the more difficult for the gunner to hit. It is said that there is no cruelty in this sport, and the petition which has been presented by my hon. friend states, that when a bird is wounded it is retrieved. If it is not, I suppose a boy goes after it with a stick and hammers it on the head, until he kills it. Cases have been mentioned to me of birds, after having been shot at a shooting match, fluttering away in a wounded state and being picked up in the agonies of death, a mile and a half from where the shooting took place. Will any one say that that kind of a sport is not cruelty to birds? In a shooting match, it must be expected that some birds will be killed and some wounded, and we know with what anxiety the fate of a bird is watched by those who have their hundreds of dollars laid on the result of the match. At a shooting match with live pigeons, which took place in New Jersey the other day, $16,000 was put up, to be gambled away in the shooting of those doves which have been the emblems of innocence ever since the days of creation. I hope this Parliament, by its action in relation to this measure, will rebuke such cruel sports, and give the weight of its opinion in favor of that which will tend to the moral good of the community, the putting an end to practices which no legitimate sportsman has ever asked for. I have letters in my possession from men who have been engaged as sportsmen all their lives, who have shot live pigeons out of their trap, but who, through the brutality of the scene, became so ashamed of the so-called sport, that they have never gone back to it. A clause of this Bill defines what an animal is. My hon. friend, in his jocular way, may perhaps tell you that this Bill punishes a man for overdriving a hen. Well, that is a very ridiculous and stupid thing to say; but I will tell you what this Bill will do: it will punish a man for overdriving or acting cruelly to a horse or a dog. I do not think hon. gentlemen will differ from me when I say that man can never repay the debt that he owes to the horse; and yet, go into our streets, and you will see brutes in human form overloading their horses, and lashing and cursing them if they cannot draw the load, forgetting that while they are outraging society, their curses and lashings are heard by the pitying ears of a God above them, who will see that justice is done. I know that last Session this measure did not receive its full consideration by many hon. gentlemen. I know that there was a good deal of amusement and fun taken out of the measure; but I know that, beneath all the fun and sport, there were warm hearts beating in many breasts that felt that the measure was right; and I think that to-day they will realise its importance, and consider it in a serious way. Indeed, I am convinced that they will, and that the hour for serious action in this matter has arrived. I will take the liberty here of saying that I do not quarrel with the participators in such sports; I believe there is a great deal of thoughtlessness about them. I have found more good than evil in the world, to tell you the truth; I think the world is growing better as it is growing older; and I have never condemned men who somehow or other have got into the groove and participate in sports of this kind. But I want to stop the sport, and then the men will not be there to take part in it. Let us declare, what the consensus of public opinion affirms, that everything which tends to make a man indifferent or unkind to any of God's creatures is wrong—that the sport which coops up an animal and makes a target of it is wrong—that the practice of killing animals for killing's sake, is contrary, not only to the whole spirit of humanity, but contrary to the will, the law and the design of God. In moving the second reading of this Bill, as I have said, I am here as the spokesman of the humane societies in Canada, which are supposed to represent the humane people of the localities where they exist. I know that they do, and without any reflections on those who are opposed to me, I know that the petitions sent to this honorable House in support of this measure come from men of all classes, and from men who adorn the classes to which they belong. Now, I hope that this House will, by its vote to-day, show its appreciation of this measure, and will do its duty in providing for the prevention of cruelty to animals, who are too patient to complain, and too helpless to protest. I am here to speak for those who cannot speak for themselves, and I hope this House will take a calm and considerate view of this important question. I could go on for a longer time in substantiating the position I have taken; but, as I have said, I will not weary the House by giving further extracts, but will simply move that the Bill be now read the second time.

Mr. TISDALE. I can congratulate the hon. gentleman upon one thing, at all events: we have got the same Bill that was thrown out of the House last Session. Previously I could not find out exactly what he was after; but this time we can see that he is after the same thing that he was after last Session. I quite agree with the remarks of the hon. gentleman in the opening of his speech, that this Bill has had a singular career; and hon. members will agree with me, I think, that he has already made hon. members weary of the Bill, both in the House and out of it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. TISDALE. Perhaps not, but I am expressing my own view; and if hon. members do not agree with me, they have more patience than I have. After the consideration the House gave to the Bill last year, I think the hon. gentleman should have discovered that the House was weary of it, and should have accepted its verdict in a matter of no greater importance than this, and not have troubled the House with it again.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. TISDALE. Well, it is for the House to say. I am not at all complaining that the House has not the right to so consider it for three weeks if they choose. I will join cheerfully in the discussion from the start to the finish, and see that the subject gets proper justice. Before alluding to the particulars of the Bill, I want to disavow, on behalf of the sportsmen of Canada, England and all civilized countries, the implied allegation—the hon. gentleman did not make it directly, but he, no doubt, intended it as a direct allegation, because he brought it forward in support of his Bill—that the sportsmen of Canada, England and the United States are cruel. I may say that the Bill—and I will give reasons in brief why I make the assertion—is intended to cover up its true objects, and appeals to the public and this House on grounds that the Bill itself does not legislate about; in other words, the hon. gentleman alleges it is for the prevention of cruelty to animals, yet in his remarks he does not offer a single argument except against trap-shooting. If the hon. gentleman had brought in a Bill for that purpose, and petitioned against that sport, he would have simplified matters very much. But he has not done so. Before proceeding, however, to criticise the Bill, let me say that I heartily concur in the hon. gentleman's remarks about the necessity of educating our youth in kindness and gentleness to all God's creatures. But I deny this allegation, that there is in this country, either among the sportsmen or the people who handle animals, any cruelty which is not guarded against by the law that he re-enacts; for the important part of his Bill is already law, and additions are only made to it to give importance and draw our attention from the real matter he is aiming at—the abolition of trap-shooting. Did he say one word, beyond some allegations about cruelties in England or the United States, to show that it was cruel to shoot an animal? Not at all. Lest I forget it, I wish to correct the hon. gentleman in one point, for I do not think it is right, in discussing a measure, to let the House hear only half the proof. He told us that this Bill was thrown out of the House of Commons in England.

Mr. BROWN. The hon. gentleman has not been listening very carefully to what I said. I said that the Bill was carried in the House of Commons, instead of being lost.

Mr. TISDALE. I meant to say that the hon. gentleman said it was carried; but he forgot to tell the House that it was subsequently thrown out in the House of Lords by a majority of three to one. He would have led this House to believe that it had become law in England.

Mr. BROWN. Not at all.

Mr. TISDALE. When an hon. gentleman stands up and quotes the action of another Legislature, and gives us to understand that the Bill had been passed by a large majority, without stating that the other branch of the Legislature had rejected it by a vote of three to one, he evidently wants us to understand that the measure became law, or why would he quote it as a precedent at all? In England they legislated in a logical manner. They declined to say that shooting a bird out of a trap, after it has flown, is cruel. The hon. gentleman says: If you ask me whether shooting a bird is cruel, I will say, certainly not. That is the whole question. If the birds are ill-used in the trap, or in being brought to the trap, the logical remedy is the one the English Parliament adopted. They said: We deny that it is cruel to shoot a bird when it has flown from the trap, but we will pass as strong a law as you wish to punish anybody who uses the birds cruelly before they are set free. The hon. gentleman knows that this House will pass as strong a law as is required for that purpose, if the present law is not strong enough. What has been the result in England? They refused to abolish the sport, but they passed a law so stringent that since then, neither in the press nor in either branch of the Legislature, has anybody raised the question of abolishing trap-shooting. If the hon. gentleman wants a law here I will guarantee that the sportsmen of this country will take more trouble than he would, to have such a law passed and see that it is enforced. The hon. gentleman failed to explain his Bill except with regard to trap-shooting. But that is only a small part of it. There are other very serious provisions which he inserted, in order to give an importance to his measure in the eyes of those who are not aware of the law as it exists. He re-enacts the very strong law against cruelty to animals, which is now on our Statutes, and of which I heartily approve. In fact, the principal provisions of his Bill are re-enactments of clauses that have been law for a long time, and the best proof that these clauses are severe, is that the hon. gentleman could find no words to change or improve them. But then he adds three clauses, which do not affect trap-shooting, and then he adds the trap-shooting clause. The sum of his Bill, which he tells us is aimed at trap-shooting, and in respect of which one clause would have been sufficient, is that he re-enacts the preamble of the present law, adding a few words which do not, in my opinion, cover any more ground than the general terms of the present law, and then he adds three new clauses. Let me read what the present law is, because I find very few hon. gentlemen have taken the trouble to look up the law, but have taken it for granted that there was no law on the subject. When they see the very stringent law which is now in force, I think they will agree that it is not necessary at all to reopen the question :

"Everyone who wantonly, cruelly, or unnecessarily beats, binds, ill-treats, abuses, over-drives, or tortures any cattle, poultry, dog, domestic animal or bird,—or who, while driving any cattle or other animals, by negligence or ill-usage in the driving thereof, the means whereby any damage, mischief or injury is done by any such cattle or other animal; or who in any manner encourages, aids or assists in the fighting or baiting of any bull, bear, badger, dog, cock, or other kind of animal, whether of domestic or wild nature, shall, on summary conviction before two justices of the peace, be liable to a penalty not exceeding $50, or to imprisonment for any term not exceeding three months, with or without hard labor, or to both."

That is the present law. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that the very law he speaks of, under which the American judge convicted a party for maiming a pigeon, is not as strict as the present law. What more does he ask us to enact? These are the three new clauses :

"(d.) Having the charge or custody of any animal, unnecessarily fails to provide the same with proper food, drink, shelter and protection from the weather; or—

"(e.) Being the owner, driver or person having the charge or custody of any animal, wantonly and unnecessarily leaves disabled or abandons such animal; or—

"(f.) Wantonly and unnecessarily carries or causes to be carried, in or upon any vehicle, or otherwise, any animal in a cruel or inhuman manner; or—

I ask whether there is any evidence before the House—certainly the hon. gentleman has not brought any—to support the declaration that the farmers of this country, the stock raisers and breeders, and the cattle dealers, starve or ill-treat their cattle in carrying them. That is what the hon. gentleman asserts.

Mr. BROWN. No.

Mr. TISDALE. The hon. gentleman says "no." Then, why does he ask this House to adopt this provision? The hon. gentleman dare not send any of his petitions to a rural constituency. I say this statement is a wanton and deliberate misrepresentation of our people. This is the serious part of the Bill. He wants us to say, that the people of this country are so cruel and inhuman in the treatment of animals, that it is not sufficient to have the provision which has been law for years, and under which I have not heard any pretence that ample punishment could not be meted out to any offender. What does he petition us to do? Here is the petition :

"To the Honorable the House of Commons of Canada, in Parliament assembled:

"The petitioner of the undersigned humbly prays that your honorable body may pass the Bill for the further Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, introduced by Adam Brown, Esq., M.P."

Is there any statement there that our farmers, stock raisers or breeders, ill-use, starve or inhumanly tie their animals? I am sure that out of 2,000 or 3,000 people who have signed those petitions, very few have read the wording. Nearly all these petitions came from Toronto, Ottawa and Hamilton. How does the hon. gentleman get them? I am told that in Toronto two or three boys were hired to go around with them and get signatures, and that this was the modus operandi of the hon. gentleman. It is very simple: "Will you sign this petition?" "What is it about?" "A Bill against cruelty to animals." "Oh, certainly I will." Of course anyone would sign a petition of that kind, but I believe that very few would sign who had any idea of its meaning. I want to correct the hon. gentleman in regard to some statements which he has made this Session and last Session. I suppose he misunderstands the law, or he would not make those misstatements. He says this Bill will prevent cock-fighting and things of that sort, but that is provided for in the law at present, under which not only the man who organises the cocking-main is liable, but also every one who is present at it. I have seen the law enforced, and have seen all parties, not only those getting up cock-fights, but also those who were present, hauled up before the magistrate. The hon. gentleman wants the House to understand that he is bringing in that as something new. The new clauses have nothing whatever to do with that. In regard to trap-shooting, let me explain. In the Province of Ontario, and I suppose in most of the other Provinces, there is a law, which is much stronger than the proposal of the hon. gentleman, providing that you shall not shoot a bird except game birds or birds required as articles of food, with the special exception of sparrows and black-birds. Those birds were not at first excepted, but they became such a nuisance that people were hired to kill them if possible. If any of the other Provinces have not such laws now in existence, they can pass them if they choose. Is there any evidence in the petition which I have quoted that the people who signed it knew they were asking for the abolition of trap-shooting? I do not think petitions are worth much, because people frequently sign petitions without knowing what they are for, but, at least, they should have the opportunity of knowing what they are signing by the information being given in the petition itself. Do these people say they want trap-shooting abolished? They say nothing of the kind, but simply that they desire the House to pass the Bill introduced by Adam Brown, Esq. It is true that doleful consequences may result to us if we do not agree to this, because there are some names on this petition which would affect a strong-minded man as well as a tender-hearted man. We find that Emma Sweetlove is in favor of this Bill, and so also is Sophia Savage; so we must be very careful as to what we do. It must be observed that a great majority of those who signed the petition are ladies, and I should like to ask if the ladies are to legislate or the members of this House? If you take the evidence against the Bill, and read the petition, you will find that it does not ask the House to reject the Bill simply, but it states why the petitioners think the Bill should be rejected. This petition has been signed by several thousand people, and it is as follows:—

"To the Honorable the Senate and House of Commons of the Dominion of Canada, in Parliament assembled:

"The petition of the undersigned, residents of the Dominion, humbly shows:

"That your petitioners are informed that certain persons are seeking to obtain amendments to the law for prevention of cruelty to animals for the purpose of preventing the shooting of certain birds;

"Your petitioners assert that such persons are acting upon a mere sentiment, and without a knowledge of the subject;

"That gun clubs and sportsmen take pains to avoid the practice of any cruelty in regard to birds used in trap-shooting, and that with modern close-shooting guns birds are usually killed instantaneously, but if wounded, are retrieved and killed with the least delay possible;

"That if pigeons are not so used they will rapidly increase and cause great loss and injury to farmers and annoyance to townspeople; and that sparrows have already become such an injury and nuisance that farmers, gardeners, and people of all classes are anxious for their extermination;

"That the use of the birds mentioned for trap-shooting affords the only efficient and comparative humane means of checking their increase;

"That to stop such shooting would be a great and unwarrantable interference with the business of those engaged in the gun trade and manufacturers and dealers in shooting materials.

"Your petitioners therefore pray that no legislation may be passed to interfere with or prevent shooting birds from traps."

The hon. gentleman has seen fit to attack this practice as being one of great cruelty. He mentions no case, refers to no club and to no town in which this cruelty has taken place, and I defy him or anyone else to mention any place in Canada where cruelty has been practiced. I am not a member of any gun club. I never shot a bird out of a trap, but four or five gun clubs sent me a list of their members and some other information, and I find that there are about 150 gun clubs in Canada with about 15,000 members. I received information from the gun clubs in Toronto, Montreal, Guelph and Chatham. These are from Toronto, Montreal, Guelph and Chatham. The Dominion Gun Club Alliance sent it to me as an illustration of the occupations of those whom these gentlemen indirectly accuse of using inhuman means. I would not have alluded to it if the hon. gentleman had not brought it up in the House, and I may say that he never could have got his petitions signed, he could never have got the sympathy of the ladies in regard to this Bill, if untrue reports had not been circulated about the cruelty of people in handling birds. One lady who spoke to me about the Bill wanted to know why I opposed Mr. Brown's Bill, and when I explained the matter to her, she said: "I never understood it before. I do not think there is any cruelty in shooting birds in that way, but I do not like their eyes to be put out or their wings broken." There is an impression growing up among many that this sort of thing transpires among these gun clubs. Now, there have been sent me the occupations of 200 members, belonging to four gun clubs, some of which occupations are these: Two judges; one high sheriff; twenty-two gentlemen; thirty manufacturers; thirty-five merchants; four lawyers; four physicians; eight city officials; four commercial travellers; four merchant tailors; nine railway conductors and officials; nine bankers; twelve clerks; seventeen farmers; four court officials; seven dentists; nine insurance agents and officials; three veterinary surgeons; eight contractors; two cattle dealers; three printers and journalists; six brokers; five real estate dealers; two civil engineers; two artists; two architects; five jewellers; five painters. The balance of the members are made up of these occupations: builders, photographers, machinists, gardeners, millers, bricklayers, bakers, nurserymen, druggists, florists, shoemakers, marble cutters, students, carpenters, blacksmiths, accountants, auctioneers, tailors, plumbers, tinsmiths and bill posters. There are about sixty occupations represented by these members, and yet the hon. gentleman would have the House of Commons and the country believe all these men are guilty of cruelty. He has not brought forward one petition, one letter from a man or a woman, to prove that gentlemen constituting these gun clubs have been guilty of cruelty to animals. This is a serious thing. The hon. gentleman asks me if I would like my own son to go trap-shooting. I certainly would. I say that it encourages him to engage in manly sport, and it teaches him how to do it. Young men drink less, they play cards less, they learn less evil habits, if you teach them how to carry on field sports. Their morals are better, they have more manliness in every way; and I repudiate the charge that this sport tends to make them cruel. Let me read, in this connection, a short extract from the Field newspaper, written when a Bill was before the English House of Commons, a precisely similar Bill to this one, so far as trap-shooting is concerned. The Field made these remarks:

"Our readers will hardly need to be reminded that Mr. Anderson's Bill is the thin end of the wedge."

We can say the same of Mr. Brown's Bill here—

"In its original state, it aimed at the abolition of pretty nearly all sports; and, should the Pigeon Shooting Bill be passed, it will most probably not be long before some measure is introduced to put a stop to something else, and the passing of the present Bill will be used as an argument for passing others of a more sweeping character. We repeat that we argue this question on a broad ground, and do not identify ourselves in the least with the pastime of pigeon shooting. We insist upon the elements of cruelty and sport being kept distinct in this matter, and object to sentimentalism usurping the place of common sense."

Mr. BROWN. What is the date?

Mr. TISDALE. I have not the date. There is a long article, and I would be glad to read it to you if I had time. It was written when the Bill passed the House of Commons, and before it went to the House of Lords. Now, there are one or two other matters that I must mention in justice to the hon. gentleman, because he claims that they tell in favor of his Bill. Last year he told us that the Hubert Gun Club of Ottawa was in favor of his Bill. I have no doubt he thought they were, but about the same time a communication appeared in an Ottawa paper stating that the Hubert Gun Club were not in favor of his Bill, though individual members might have been. But a gentleman who belonged to a gun club here writes to the public and says :

"The Ottawa Gun Club does not shoot live birds, and is in favor of Mr. Brown's Bill."

"Yours truly,
"Dr. McPHEE,
"President Ottawa Gun Club."

This tender-hearted doctor! I mentioned this to the talented and witty member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran). He said: "The doctor should not pose as a great humanitarian. I know a much better gun club than that. I know a gun club that does not shoot at all." That is, a gun club who do not use powder and shot; and a club that never shoots live things does not amount to much. I come now to the last class who support the hon. gentleman's Bill, and I do so with great diffidence—I allude to the ladies. I find that the hon. gentleman had a meeting in Ottawa, and the ladies passed a resolution, in which they said :

"It is the earnest wish of the Women's Humane Society, of Ottawa, that the Bill to be introduced by Mr. Adam Brown should pass both Houses and the Council."

Now, bless their dear, sentimental tenderness of heart, they want Mr. Brown's Bill to pass. They do not say anything about hard-hearted farmers, or horse dealers, or stock men who have been guilty of cruelty to animals. I am sure they do not know what is in the Bill, but they know that it is against cruelty to animals. Now, we all admire, I am sure, the tender-heartedness of the ladies. We know that we have to appeal even more to their tender sympathies and their goodness of heart than to their judgment, and probably it is very well that is so, because if we did not succeed in that way, a great many of us would go unmated for our lives. But when it comes to a matter of sympathy, then good-bye to their judgments, take them as a whole. Probably they go upon the same line as one tender-hearted lady, who wrote to an hon. member in favor of the Bill. She wrote him in the anxiety and the interest that she had taken in this Bill; and what do you think she asked? To oppose a Bill to prevent cruelty in driving animals, or in starving animals, or in trap-shooting? No. She said: "I hope you will support dear Mr. Brown's Bill." Now, I cannot blame the ladies. I want to make a confession; they say that confession is always a proper thing, and I want to confess honestly that I believe that, if I were a woman, and the hon. gentleman should approach me with his genial manners and beaming smile, I would certainly surrender at discretion; so that I cannot blame the ladies at all. But I would ask the hon. gentleman, how about the men? Now, the dicky-birds have been whispering about the corridors of the House for the last few weeks that hon. gentlemen were going to support this Bill—not because they believed it was necessary, not because it was wanted, but because, like the resolution of the ladies, and like the letter I have read, it was "Dear Mr. Brown's Bill." I would, then, ask hon. gentlemen in all seriousness, whether they do not think this comedy has been on the legislative boards long enough. There is great danger that, if it stays on much longer, the comedy may turn into a farce.

Mr. BROWN. You mean your comedy,
Mr. TISDALE.

Mr. TISDALE. The comedy of this whole Bill, and the circumstances surrounding it, and the canvassing for it. I will finish with one short quotation taken from the debates in the English House of Lords when a similar Bill was before it. Earl Fortescue, in concluding a speech against that Bill, said :

"There were important measures which the time of Parliament might be usefully employed upon; but he protested against the time and labor of the Legislature being wasted upon a proposal of this kind. Nero fiddled while Rome was burning."

I, therefore, move in amendment :

That the word "now" be struck out of the motion, and the words "this day six months" added at the end thereof.

Mr. TROW. I rise for the purpose of asking an explanation from the promoter of the Bill. I desire to ask him whether he intends, if the Bill should get into Committee of the Whole, to expunge sub-section 3 of section 3. In this sub-section there is embodied a dangerous system of legislation, for it not merely applies to birds, but to all animals; and the definition of animals includes any horse, mare, gelding, bull, ox, cow, heifer, steer, calf, mule, ass, sheep, lamb, goat, pig, hog, sow, dog, or cat, and every other domestic animal, fowl or bird, or wild animal, fowl or bird, tamed or domesticated. In fact, it includes all animals. I have known in my part of the country, and particularly in the backwoods settlements, cases where sheep have been worried by dogs, and the poor animals, in order to escape their vicious pursuers, had gone into the bush and remained there. Under sub-section 3 of this Bill, power is given to two magistrates as follows :—

"Any person may lawfully destroy or cause to be destroyed any animal found to be abandoned, or not properly cared for, when, in the judgment of two justices of the peace, called by him to view the same in his presence, it appears to be injured, disabled or diseased past recovery." Frequently animals go astray. Your horse may leave your stable and get into the woods and be unprovided for and uncared for, and some vicious and ill-disposed person may capture the animal and have it destroyed under this sub-section. This Bill would be bad legislation unless this clause were expunged. If this were done in Committee, I would support the Bill.

Mr. BROWN. I am glad my hon. friend has drawn the attention of the House to this clause. In the remarks I made on moving the second reading of the Bill, I stated that I proposed to eliminate this clause. I propose that sub-section 3 be totally expunged. The arguments of my hon. friend and other arguments submitted to me privately by an hon. gentleman opposite, are so convincing that I shall expunge the whole of it.

Mr. HUDSPETH. As the hon. gentleman who spoke last very properly said, a considerable portion of this Bill is a re-enactment of the present law. That being the case, we need not trouble ourselves about it, and if the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Brown) chooses to make a little change in the arrangement of the clauses, it can do no possible harm. Then we come to the new clauses in the Bill, one of which deals with starving animals. The hon. gentleman who spoke last seemed to think that this was casting a reflection on our farmers and all the inhabitants of this country. I do not think it does anything of the kind, for it can only apply to an inhuman person who starves animals, and there are such persons in the country. From my personal knowledge I can give two examples which have occurred within recent winters. Adjacent to my dwelling there is a house which is occupied by tenants who removed after remaining there a short time, the winter before last. One day I heard a whining noise, and on proceeding to the house I found a dog, unable to walk, which had evidently been left there to starve. I had the dog fed for two or three days, and then I got the chief constable to kill it. Last winter a similar case occurred, but the dog was a very handsome spaniel. I sent my children several days to feed it, and then I got a person to take charge of it, and it is well and happy now. These facts show that this is not a mere matter of sentiment, but it is a matter that requires the adoption of a law under which offenders may be discovered and punished. It is casting no imputation on our people to say that in cases of such cruelty being practiced the party should be punished. With respect to shooting birds from traps, I hold that no person has been more fond of sport than I have been, but I must confess I never shot a bird from a trap. I would not allow one of my sons to go to a trap-shooting competition, not on the question of cruelty, but on account of the evil influences which, I believe, are connected with such meetings. It is not sport in any sense of the word. If a sportsman goes after deer or goes duck shooting he has exercise and shows much labor and skill, and it is not merely the shooting of a deer or a duck wherein lies the pleasure, but it is in the keen sense of sport, and the great exercise it gives sportsmen, not only in Canada, but in Scotland and in other countries, which produce keen sportsmen. Whoever would think of a Scotchman in the Highlands tying a deer and going fifty yards away and shooting it. Would you call that sport? Would you call it sport if a few wild ducks were taken to a pond and strings tied to their legs and then shot? I deny that this is sport. I think there are evil influences surrounding such meetings. You do not find men in the country who go duck shooting take an interest in gun clubs, but the people who take interest in such clubs are people in cities, such as Toronto and Hamilton, who know nothing about sport, who congregate in taverns and bet large sums of money on the result; and that is the kind of so-called sport at which the hon. gentleman is aiming in introducing this Bill. When the very objectionable clauses which the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Trow) has pointed out, are expunged, I will, with very great pleasure, support the Bill.

Mr. ELLIS. A greater amount of cruelty is practiced on domestic animals, both in captivity and transportation, than people are aware of. It is well known that people in such cases frequently defy the officers appointed to carry out the law. Sometimes the magistrates before whom the cases are brought are very much embarrassed from the lack of distinctness of the law on the Statute-book. The main object of the re-arrangement of the sections and the additions made is to endeavor to point out clearly, for the use of magistrates, what the law really is. I trust the House will allow the Bill to pass. Pigeon-shooting is a most objectionable sport in every way, and it is besides a brutalising spectacle: these pigeon-shooting matches. In the first place, the birds, by the fact of their long confinement, have lost all their wild nature, and are rendered incapable of protecting themselves. They frequent and build their nests near the resorts of man, and a great many of them have been used for scientific purposes, to show the variations which nature makes in her progress. We know very well, Mr. Speaker, that there is no bird which is so much used in the interests of science as the pigeon, and no bird which is trained for such a variety of purposes to beautify nature. These birds when shut up by the so-called sportsmen, are utterly unprepared to use the defences of life which nature has given them. Men who stand up in the face of Heaven, and in the sunshine of the day, to shoot these defenceless creatures, do not deserve the support or the countenance of men like the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale), who is, I believe, a true sportsman. Another objection to these pigeon-shooting matches is the temptation which they place in the way of children in the cities to steal birds. Very often these are valuable birds, in the way value is counted in this matter, and it is on record that youths are often tempted to steal them to supply the demand of those interested in such shooting matches. The hon. member for Perth (Mr. Trow) proposes to strike out the last clause of the Bill with reference to animals which are allowed to stray, and to suffer for want of food and shelter. I live near a long sea beach, and it is a common thing in the fall of the year to find horses or other animals turned out to die. If a person destroys an animal, the owner in all probability will turn up, and very likely declare that a valuable horse has been killed. He may have abandoned the animal, but when he has a chance to get paid for it, he probably comes to the front and claims it. That is the reason why the Humane Societies ask that this provision should be made in the Bill. We ask from the House a fair consideration of this measure in which so many people are interested, and which will do so much to protect dumb animals from cruelty.

Mr. SCRIVER. Before the question is submitted to the House, I desire to say a word or two. I agree with much of what the hon. member for South Victoria (Mr. Hudspeth) has said in regard to the Bill. I believe with him that this so-called sport—I will not debase the word by calling it “sport”—of shooting birds from a trap is brutalising. I have been enabled to judge somewhat of its character, and I am as much opposed to it as any member of this House could be. With regard to what has fallen from my hon. friend in reference to the practice of shooting birds for the sake of practice and skill, and as to the character of gun clubs and other such associations, I believe, from personal observations, that he has been much too sweeping in his condemnation. I believe that practice of this kind with the gun is necessary in order to enable one to acquire skill in shooting. Modern inventions have been of a character to enable sportsmen to acquire that skill without resorting to the brutal practices in which they have been engaged in the past. The use of these discs, sometimes called “Peoria blackbirds,” has been pretty universal among gun clubs, and practice of that kind has enabled young men to acquire the skill which they need, for the successful pursuit of what may be called "wild" sport. I have had the opportunity of attending these gun club meetings. I may say that they are not confined to the cities, but that they are to be found very frequently in rural districts as well. I can assure the hon. gentleman that they are not at all attended by demoralising circumstances. Young men assemble solely for the object of attaining the skill of which I have spoken, and I have seen no betting nor drinking at any of the meetings I have attended. My own sons—I have three of them, grown-up young men—have, I may say, an inherited fondness for "wild" sport, and, so far from forbidding them attending those gatherings, I have rather encouraged them to do so, and given them my own countenance by attending the meetings myself. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Hudspeth) must have been unfortunate in his observations, or he must have been unfortunate in the character of the clubs which exist in his part of the country, when he has been led to pronounce the sweeping condemnation he did to-day.

Mr. COCKBURN. I do not rise for the purpose of taking any part in the debate before the House, but rather to correct the extraordinary statement of the member for South Victoria (Mr. Hudspeth), that the people of Toronto are not true sportsmen, and know nothing about sport. I speak for Centre Toronto in particular, and I can assure the hon. gentleman that there are to be found in that division some of the keenest and truest sportsmen on this or any other continent. Further, I may state that these keen sportsmen have no sympathy with the objects of the Bill now before the House, and that they consider it unnecessary. While I express this feeling with reference to the keenness of the sport as practiced by men in Centre Toronto, I may also state that the same feeling exists in other large cities with reference to this measure.

Mr. MULOCK. Before this motion is put to a vote, I desire to say that, last Session, I opposed the Bill for two reasons. First, because I objected to the third sub-section of section 3 in regard to the nature of the legislation, even if it were within the jurisdiction of this House; and, secondly, because I thought that clause was beyond the jurisdiction of this Parliament. The hon. gentleman who moved the Bill has given me to understand, both before the discussion began, and also during the debate, that he now intended to abandon that sub-section, and I, therefore, intend to vote in favor of the second reading of the Bill. When it gets into the Committee I shall endeavor, as far as I can, to see that the objectionable clause shall be struck out.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Tisdale, (six months hoist):

Amendment negatived, and Bill read the second time.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT.

Mr. JONCAS moved second reading of Bill (No. 7) further to amend the Dominion Elections Act.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the hon. gentleman explain what changes the Bill makes?

Mr. JONCAS. The Bill is purely of local interest. Its object is to place Gaspé on the same basis as the district of Algoma and the district of Cariboo, as it was before the passing of the Act of 1888, amending the Dominion Elections Act. At that time, I think through an oversight of the hon. Minister of Justice, Gaspé was put on the same basis as all the other constituencies in the Province of Quebec. But the condition of things has not changed in the county of Gaspé; the means of communication are not any better than they were before 1888; and it is physically impossible for the returning officer of the county to post up his proclamations in eight days, as the Act at present requires him to do.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Magdalen Islands are a portion of the county of Gaspé, and it is almost physically impossible to have proper communications there at certain seasons of the year.

Mr. JONCAS. There is a special clause with regard to the Magdalen Islands; but I am speaking of the mainland, where there is a distance of about 70 miles, which has to be travelled in winter on snow shoes, and which even in summer is almost impossible.

Mr. MITCHELL. How much time do you ask?

Mr. JONCAS. The same as is given to Algoma and Cariboo—15 days.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It seems to me that what the hon. gentleman desires is simply to restore the law as it stood in the Revised Statutes of 1886, and all that requires to be done is to repeal a certain section of the Act 51 Vic., and to reenact section 4 of the Revised Statutes, chap. 8.

Mr. JONCAS. It would mean the same thing.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

FOREIGN CONTRACT LABOR.

Mr. TAYLOR moved second reading of Bill (No. 8) to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in Canada. He said: The House has been occupied for some time in dealing with a Bill entitled an Act to prevent Cruelty to Animals. The Bill of which I am moving the second reading deals with men. In the Statutes of the United States there is an Act similar to the one now before this House, and that Act, whether it was the intention of the people of the United States in passing it or not, has been so interpreted as to deal cruelly and hardly with many residents of the counties of Leeds and Grenville, and not only with them, but with the workmen of Canada all along the line. I am and always have been a protectionist, believing that the policy of protection is the true policy for any young country to adopt. Therefore, I hailed with delight the introduction of the National Policy into this country, believing that by giving protection to the industries of Canada we should benefit the laboring classes as well as the agriculturists by creating a home market for the products of the farm. The constituency which I have the honor to represent borders on the River St. Lawrence. Opposite that constituency is located that beautiful world-renowned spot, known as the Thousand Islands. Perhaps ninety-five per cent. of those islands lie directly opposite the county I have the honor to represent. During the last ten or fifteen years, owing to the policy adopted by the American Government of disposing of the islands on the American side, there are, within a radius of twelve or fifteen miles, no less than five summer resorts, namely: Clayton, Round Island Park, Thousand Island Park, Westminster Park, and Alexandria Bay. I presume, within that distance, there has been expended during the last twelve or fifteen years, not less than $7,000,000 or $10,000,000 in improvements, chiefly by persons who go there to reside during two or three months of the summer. No doubt, many hon. gentlemen have visited this beautiful summer resort, and know that what I am saying is correct. I believe that our Government purposes dealing with the islands on the Canadian side as the Americans have dealt with theirs, by disposing of a certain number, which will thus be improved and aid in building up the pleasure resorts of Canada, for it is well known that the fishing on the American side is not good, owing to the fact that the channel there is narrow and the current swift, while on the Canadian side the contrary is the case. For the last ten or fifteen years, many residents of the county which I have the honor to represent, have sought employment on the American side—some waiting at the hotels, others working on the grounds, and the greater portion rowing tourists who come to spend a few weeks or months there, and pass three-fourths of their time fishing in Canadian waters. To my surprise last year, some 250 or 300 of our people were driven home and not allowed to work on the American side. I will just read a report from the Gananoque Reporter at the time, which was the first intimation I had of there being on the American Statute-books an Act known as the Alien Labor Act:

"The United States law in reference to the employment of foreign laborers has been given an unexpected interpretation along the border in this vicinity. Heretofore it was understood that the prohibition of foreign labor applied only to such as was imported under contract. And we have seen this given in United States papers as the true interpretation; with the further explanation that men who voluntarily went to that country, without pre-engagement to work, could lawfully be employed at any occupation. But the law is now being very differently administered, and all along the line those who have Canadians in their employ have been officially notified to discharge them or suffer a penalty of $500. This is a serious matter, as between carpenters, boatmen, farm hands, and others, two or three hundred men have been thrown out of employment about Alexandria Bay, the Parks, and on farms and islands in that section. Many of those men have their homes in the Townships of Lansdowne, Escott and Yonge, on the Canadian side of the line, and have for years been faithful assistants to employers in New York State. We are informed that even a Canadian oarsman will not be allowed to row for fishermen in American waters. And if this is true, it will only be a fair return for the Dominion Government to insist that American oarsmen and fishermen shall confine their operations to their own side of the line."

As soon as this Act was put in force on the American side, a deputation of the men who were driven home came to see me about the matter. I was not at that time acquainted with the law, and I asked that matters should be allowed to remain as they were for a few days, and in the meantime I would visit Ottawa and interview the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the Minister of Customs about the matter, so as to see what could be done. I immediately came to Ottawa and had a conference with these gentlemen, the result of which was that the Customs officer at Gananoque was instructed to visit the American side of the river and find out the facts. While this was going on, and while a correspondence, I presume, was being had with the authorities at Washington, our people were remaining at home out of work and unable to return. Knowing, as I did, that if the tourists residing at the American hotels were not allowed to fish in Canadian waters, these hotels would soon close up, and knowing the hotel-keepers were not in favor of having the Act enforced, I took it upon myself to issue the following notice, a copy of which I sent to the Government here, and copies of which I sent to the American hotel-keepers on the American side :

"WARNING TO AMERICAN FISHERMEN.

"Owing to the fact that the Alien Labor Act of the United States is being enforced by the people of both Saint Lawrence and Jefferson Counties of the State of New York, in the said United States of America; and also owing to the fact that a number of Canadians, resident in the County of Leeds, Province of Ontario and Dominion of Canada, who have been in the habit, for some years past, of working on the American side of the river during the summer months at different occupations, such as rowing, fishermen, &c., and returning to Canada on Sabbath day, have been driven home from the United States by the Customs officials of that country, I hereby give notice to all persons interested that any boat found fishing in the River St. Lawrence, opposite the South Riding of Leeds, which embraces all that part of the Canadian waters of the said river lying west of a point five miles west of the town of Brockville to a point three miles west of the town of Gananoque, both in the said county of Leeds, on and after the 15th day of the present month of July, 1889, if the oarsman rowing said boat or the persons fishing in said boat are not residents of Canada, they will be dealt with according to the terms of the Fisheries Act of Canada, which means confiscation of boat and fishing tackle, without further notice; also, that this law will be strictly enforced in these waters until such time as the American authorities apply and enforce a different construction to the Alien Labor Act and allow our people to resume their avocations without let or hindrance; then so soon as this is done and the same friendly relations allowed to continue, which have been observed for so many years past, the Fisheries Act will be allowed to stand in abeyance, as it has in the past; but in justice to many of my constituents who have thus been dealt with by the people of the United States, no other course is left but to protect our own people."

"GEO. TAYLOR, M.P.
For South Leeds."

"GANANOQUE, 2nd July, 1889."

Mr. CHARLTON. Signed by whom?

Mr. TAYLOR. Signed by myself.

Mr. SCRIVER. Under what authority?

Mr. TAYLOR. Under the authority of the Fisheries Act, the sections of which bearing on the matter I will just read:

"1. The Governor in Council may, from time to time, grant to any foreign ship, vessel or boat, or to any ship, vessel or boat not navigated according to the laws of the United Kingdom or of Canada, at such rate and for such term not exceeding one year, as he deems expedient, a license to fish for, take, dry or cure any fish of any kind whatsoever, in British waters, within three marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks or harbors of Canada, not included within the limits specified and described in the first article of the convention between His late Majesty King George the Third and the United States of America, made and signed at London, on the twentieth day of October, one thousand eight hundred and eighteen."

"2. Any commissioned officer of Her Majesty's navy, serving on board of any vessel of Her Majesty's navy, cruising and being in the waters of Canada for the purpose of affording protection to Her Majesty's subjects engaged in the fisheries, or any commissioned officer of Her Majesty's navy, fishery officer or stipendiary magistrate, on board of any vessel belonging to or in the service of the Government of Canada and employed in the service of protecting the fisheries, or any officer of the Customs of Canada, sheriff, justice of the peace or other person duly commissioned for that purpose, may go on board of any ship, vessel or boat within any harbor in Canada or hovering in British waters within three marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks or harbors in Canada, and stay on board so long as she remains within such harbor or distance.

Mr. TAYLOR.

"3. Any one of the officers or persons hereinbefore mentioned may bring any ship, vessel or boat, being within any harbor in Canada, or hovering in British waters, within three marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors in Canada, into port, and search her cargo, and may also examine the master upon oath touching the cargo and voyage; and if the master or person in command does not truly answer the questions put to him in such examination, he shall incur a penalty of four hundred dollars; and if such ship, vessel or boat is foreign, or not navigated according to the laws of the United Kingdom or of Canada; and (a) has been found fishing or preparing to fish, or to have been fishing in British waters within three marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks or harbors of Canada, not included within the above mentioned limits, without a license, or after the expiration of the term named in the last license granted to such ship, vessel or boat, under the first section of this Act; or (b) has entered such waters for any purpose not permitted by treaty or convention, or by any law of the United Kingdom or of Canada for the time being in force, such ship, vessel or boat and the tackle, rigging, apparel, furniture, stores and cargo thereof shall be forfeited.

"4. All goods, ships, vessels and boats and the tackle, rigging, apparel, furniture, stores and cargo liable to forfeiture under the Act, may be seized and secured by any officers or persons mentioned in the second section of this Act; and every person opposing any officer or person in the execution of his duty under this Act, or aiding or abetting any other person in any such opposition, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable to a fine of eight hundred dollars and to two years' imprisonment.

The last section of this Act applies it to the inland waters of Canada.

"This Act shall apply to every foreign ship, vessel or boat in or upon the inland waters of Canada."

Mr. MULOCK. Were you one of the persons named in the Act to give a notice?

Mr. TAYLOR. It did not require any notice for me. I took legal advice in regard to it. The police magistrate of Gananoque was a legal officer there. A fishery officer said he would seize the first boat that would cross the line after the notice was given.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. TAYLOR. Before the House took recess, I had read a few extracts from the Canadian fishery laws, and, as I interpret those laws, they apply to the inland waters of Canada, to the River St. Lawrence, to that part of this country to which I had my special attention drawn in reference to the working of the Alien Labor Law. I also read a copy of a notice which I had sent to a prominent hotel-keeper on the American side, who I knew took a deep interest in the fisheries, knowing that his guests, as well as those of all the other summer resorts, spent a great portion of their time among the islands in the River St. Lawrence, on the American side of the line. I knew that he knew that, if the fishery laws of Canada were to be enforced, he and the rest of the proprietors of those summer resorts might almost as well close their doors. I knew that from a letter which I had seen from the Collector of Customs of the district, a copy of which I have in my hand, and an extract from which I will read. This is from Mr. Morse, Collector of Customs, Cape Vincent, and was addressed to his sub-collector, Mr. Thomson, at Alexandria Bay. In pointing out to him how he should work the Alien Labor Act, he says :

"1st. In prohibiting the landing of persons under the contract labor law you are to act as in the execution of the customs laws, upon the personal examination of the persons you prohibit and upon information and observation. As a basis of prosecution for penalties, or the return of a person who has landed here, you are to report to me the facts. All facts from others than yourself to be made by affidavit.

"2nd. The law does not prohibit aliens or foreigners voluntarily coming into this country seeking for employment and contracting for work after their arrival here.

"3rd. If, however, aliens from Canada enter the United States under a contract made previous to such entry to perform labor or service of any kind (except such as is exempted by law) in the United States, such entry and such contract are in violation of the law, and it does not make any difference that such entry is only for a day, and is renewed or repeated from day to day, or other short intervals, providing that previous to such entry a contract has been made to perform the labor."

Then he quotes the sections of the American Alien Act :

"4th. If an alien comes here from Canada after a job of rowing on the waters within the United States, and makes a contract here to row, and, while such contract is in force, returns to his home in a foreign country, and again enters for the purpose of performing the contract and pursuant to its terms, the latter entry being under a contract previously made to perform labor in this country, is prohibited by the said law.

"5th. You, however, state a case different from the above, and more difficult to answer, viz.: Suppose an alien comes here from Canada and makes a contract here to row a man to fish in Canadian waters, then to return the fisherman to this side at night, the oarsman then returning to his home in Canada, repeating the same thing day after day in pursuance of a contract previously made; or, to put the case more strongly, suppose the oarsman was, previous to his entry, employed to row as aforesaid, how does the law apply to the case? There is some necessary labor performed on the waters within the United States, but much the larger part is done on Canadian waters. Technically, perhaps, there is a violation of the law by so doing. I do not believe the Department would advise any action in such a case, neither do I believe a person can be convicted in our United States courts for so doing. The labor is upon a great inland river, a boundary between two countries, and cannot be said in this case that the contract is to perform the labor in this country. It seems to me that the oarsmen of Alexandria and Clayton would prefer to make no complaint, and take no notice of the labor of Canadian oarsmen fishing or rowing in our waters, when much the larger amount of the work is performed in Canada. A retaliatory measure would spoil, or largely injure, the business of oarsmen on the River St. Lawrence within this district. As an officer I should not notice a case like the one last above stated, without orders from the Department."

This is signed by Mr. H. E. Morse. I knew, as well as Mr. Morse knows, that, if a retaliatory Act were adopted, or if we were to enforce the Canadian fishery laws against Americans, the business of the oarsmen and hotel-keepers on the United States side would be practically ruined. As soon as the gentleman had received a copy of the notice that I had sent to the Department, he called a meeting of hotel-keepers, and a deputation started for Washington the next morning. The result was that after having an interview with the officials at Washington they returned, and the report was sent to me, that all along the frontier, so far as my constituency was concerned at least, our people could return to their work in the United States as heretofore, and they did return and work there during the entire season. The law was not enforced against either our oarsmen or the people doing work on the islands, or in the hotels, or other resorts over there, during the entire season. But still I felt it my duty to represent my own county in particular, and I also feel it my duty to look after the best interests of the workmen and of the Canadians generally throughout the length and breadth of our country. I will read you extracts from papers and letters that I have in my possession, showing that while the law was withdrawn in so far as it referred to that portion of the river opposite the South Riding of Leeds, or the Thousand Islands, it was not so applied in other parts of the country, and I think that a Canadian is as good as an American any day, and a little better. I think I can prove by the debates of the American Senate when this Bill was before Congress, that it was not the intention to enforce the Act in the way it has been enforced by the American people this year. I hold in my hand the correspondence which has passed between the American Government and the British Government in reference to the enforcement of this law; and I have also a précis of the debate in the Senate on the Foreign Labor Contracts Bill. I will read one or two extracts which go to prove that it was not the intention, when this Act was being passed, that it should be applied to isolated people such as I have referred to—cases of workmen coming over from Canada and working a few months and returning to the States; but it was intended to apply to laborers working on large jobs, railway employes, and so forth. The Act was passed to prohibit contract labor being brought in for that purpose :

"Senator Blair, who had charge of the Bill, said that it was not aimed at immigration, but at slavery, at the introduction of servile labor. Wages should be protected from the effects of imported gangs of laborers.

"Senator Morgan opposed the Bill. There were, he said, men on the floor of the Senate who had come to the United States as day laborers and miners.

"Senator Sherman defended the Bill. It was not directed against free men, but against men who, under contract, were not their own masters."

I gather from the debate that it was not intended to apply the Act to every man, but only to those who came in bound under a contract to perform certain labor. The great bulk of the men who went into the United States this year were driven back over the line, men who went there seeking employment, many of them living on the Canadian side of the line, who went across in the morning to perform their day's labor and came to their homes in the evening. At several places in Canada, such as Brockville, Prescott and Windsor, many Americans who live on the American side do the same thing. They come into Canada in the morning, bringing their dinner with them, and after performing their day's labor they return home at night, and there is no notice taken of them by the Canadian Parliament under any Act now upon our Statute-books. But I claim that while the Americans have this law on their Statute-books Canada should have one equal to it, in order to protect our own laborers; if they wish to enforce it meanly, as I think they are doing, then I think we have a right to pass a similar law to protect our own laboring men. I have here a notice issued by the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada :

(Copy.) "GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY OF CANADA.
"NIAGARA FALLS, April 17th, 1899.

"DEAR SIR,—I have been notified by the Superintendent that as your duties are on the American side of the river, you will not be permitted, hereafter, to live in Canada, and that you will either have to move to the American side, or resign from the company's service.

"This is to comply with the United States law, and to prevent yourself and the company from being subjected to the penalty prescribed for infringement of the law."

"(Signed) J. H. MURRAY,
"Agent."

That notice was served on one of the Grand Trunk Railway employes, living on the Canadian side, who was going over to the American side, and, after performing his day's labor, returning at night. He had either to move over into the United States and become a citizen of that country, or to leave the employment of the Grand Trunk Railway, which I have no doubt he did. I have another letter which I received within a few days, and which I will read :

"St. CATHARINES, 24th February, 1890.

"Mr. TAYLOR, M.P.

"Sir,—I am glad to see that you have taken a step in the right direction as regards the Alien Law as a setoff against the American Alien law. But if you can only get the Bill to pass, you will confer a great boon on the working-men in Canada, and thousands will thank you for doing so. Here is a case close to Dr. Ferguson's door. Henry Hayes, Niagara Falls Centre, was watchman for I. Davis at the Museum, Niagara Falls, Ontario. The Government bought the land and Mr. Davis moved his museum across the river to Niagara Falls, New York. Henry Hayes went as watchman across the river. The American authorities ordered Mr. Davis to discharge the man or stand the consequence of the law, $1,000 fine, and fifteen days to comply with the law. But as Mr. Hayes had a home on this side of the line and did not want to leave it, he was discharged. I wanted Mr. Hayes to make an affidavit before a magistrate and send it to Dr. Ferguson last March. But no. I have written Mr. Rykert to support you in this Bill. Can you let me have a copy of the Bill, and oblige,

"Yours respectfully,

"JAMES BROWN."

Then we have the celebrated case of Bouck, which was the first intimation we had that the Alien Labor Law was being put into force against Canadians. I have the particulars of that case, which were submitted to Mr. Inspector Hepburn, and declared strictly correct. The facts are as follows :—

"The strictness with which the Alien Labor Law in the States has been administered has, in certain cases, been a trifle ridiculous. The law, as applied to the wholesale plan of contracting for cheap labor among the off-shootings of Europe, may have much to justify it from the standpoint of the American native workman. But the way in which it is occasionally strained, so as to exclude individuals who may cross over from Canada, seems to be below the dignity of a great nation. The New York Times recites a case in point. One Harrison Bouck, who had been living in Canada, entered New York State in search of work, and was hired as a farm hand by Mr. Brown, of the town of Lisbon. Thereupon he went to his father's home in Canada to get certain clothing that he had left there, and promised that he would return to Lisbon before the end of the week. On his way back he was intercepted at Ogdensburg by an astute Inspector of Customs, and the case was referred to Secretary Windom, who applied to Mr. Hepburn, the new Solicitor of the Treasury, for an opinion. The Solicitor found that the labor contract was made in the United States after Bouck's arrival at Lisbon. He did not find that Bouck had been led to cross the boundary the first time by any agreement as to his future employment. But he held, Secretary Windom concurring, that the man should be sent back, and his argument deserves to be published intact :

"It is not necessary, in order to constitute a violation of this law, that the contract for alien labor should be made in the foreign country from whence the laborer migrates. The unlawful contract may be made here. The character of the contract must depend upon the fact whether the agreement was antecedent to the actual importation or migration. In the present case it appears that the hiring was subsequent to his first coming to the United States, but it may well be doubted, from the circumstances of the case, whether the actual immigration of Bouck was not subsequent to his employment, and when he returned to the United States with his wearing apparel. His first visit without his wearing apparel would strongly indicate that it was experimental and prospective, and that his actual immigration to this country depended upon the contingency of obtaining employment, which he secured, and which was secured under the contract referred to, before making more permanent arrangements. Therefore, unless it can be shown that Bouck's first visit was made with the bona fide intention of becoming a resident of the United States, and was not contingent upon any special employment, I am of the opinion that his case comes within the prohibition of the law, and that he should be returned to his own country."

There is a case where a young man went over there seeking employment, found it, made a contract, returned home for his clothing, and on his way over was intercepted and sent back to Canada. I think that of itself is enough to arouse the feelings of every Canadian, and I say we should have on our Statute-book a law that will treat the Americans in the same way—if they so deserve it. The Bill which I have introduced is, as I have said, a copy in every particular of the Bill passed by the Congress of the United States. I think it would be better if some further amendments were made to it ; what I ask is, that the House will pass the second reading, go into Committee of the Whole upon it and then refer it to a sub-committee, which can investigate the subject thoroughly and hear the representations of parties who might be affected by it. A deputation waited on me stating that if one clause of the Bill was put into force it would prevent some industries in Canada now in operation receiving skilled labor from the United States to perform certain work, and then return there. That is something we should guard against, for we should not cripple any industry by prohibiting skilled workmen being brought in to do specific work for which we cannot procure suitable labor here. I do not understand why laborers from Canada should be excluded from the labor market of the United States, and yet we should give laborers from the United States free ingress to our market, which should be controlled by and kept for Canadian workmen. I hope the House will deal with this Bill in the interests of protecting the laboring classes and our Canadian workmen, and I have pleasure, therefore, in moving its second reading.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman has made out a very strong case in the course of his very exhaustive speech on this subject, and I have no doubt the attention of hon. members has been more prominently called to it by his speech than by the illustrations of the existence of the law in the United States. It certainly seems to be very unneighborly, and I am not at all surprised that a good deal of indignation was felt in various quarters, especially along the frontiers of Canada, at this legislation. I rather believe that the legislation in the United States was in the first place not designed for Canada, that it was caused by the overflowing of European immigration, perhaps of Chinese immigration as well, and that really the case of Canada never occurred to Congress at the time they were dealing with the evil, when the scum of Europe was overflowing into the United States, and that law was adopted without any special exemption of Canada. However, there the law is, and it has been put into force. From what little I have heard from time to time I believe the authorities of the United States will be inclined to exempt Canada, but they have no power to do so ; that can only be done by Congress, and whether Congress will be inclined to do so or not, I cannot say. There is this difference between Canada and the United States—the United States do not want any more people there, and we do; and this is a very marked difference between the two countries. I should like to hear a general expression of opinion in this House on this subject, but, in the meantime, I would say to my hon. friend that I would prefer the debate to be adjourned so that hon. gentlemen, including myself, may read the hon. gentleman's speech, and not come to a conclusion for a little while.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is one point mentioned by the hon. gentleman, which, perhaps, deserves the attention of the Government, and that is this: if I understood him aright, he caused to be issued, or he induced some officer of the Government to issue, a sort of proclamation warning all Americans off Canadian waters. I should like to know under whose authority that was done, and whether it was done with the approval of the present Government of Canada?

Mr. TAYLOR. I beg to state that I did not cause any officer to issue the notice. I issued the notice referred to, taking full responsibility for it, over my own signature, and it had the desired effect. But I said further, that I had secured the services of a police magistrate, a gentleman, who, under the Fisheries Act, is authorised to act. I had also secured the services of the fishery officer to accompany the police magistrate in the expedition, as we intended to capture the first steam yacht that entered Canadian waters from the American side towing some dozen small boats, for the purpose of going into Canadian waters to fish for the day. We intended to make a seizure, and see how the law would bear us out. The fishery officer, who is chief constable at Gananoque, and the police magistrate, had interpreted the law as I did, and we intended to make a case there if the notice that I had sent to the hotel proprietor on the other side, signed with my own hand, would not have the effect I expected it to have, for I knew they would not want to close their hotels if fishing could not be done in Canadian waters.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We have a Minister of Marine, but I was not aware we had a Lord High Admiral of the fleet. I trust the hon. gentleman, in signing that proclamation, appended to it the name of "J. Taylor, chief whip of the present Administration."

Mr. MITCHELL. I think the statement of the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) is the most extraordinary I ever heard in this House. Here we find an hon. gentleman, for the reason that he happened to be a whip for the Conservative party, and an influential one, too, and one who takes a very active part in whipping the boys when they are wanted to vote, occupying the position of a filibuster on the raging St. Lawrence, and issuing circulars to a nation of 60,000,000, warning them against coming into the waters of Canada, and, I suppose, threatening them with all sorts of dire consequences if they did come in. I hope the hon. gentleman has realised about this time the folly of the course he pursued. It was one that might have led to very serious consequences, and I hope the hon. gentleman will not repeat the great mistake he has made in issuing circulars, and in interfering with what is specially the duty of the Government of this country. What I would like to know is this: The right hon. gentleman has very properly stated the view taken by the American Government, or rather the construction put by the American officials upon the law passed by Congress. He has stated that Congress has passed that law and are bound by it, and that we are also bound to take the consequences of the law passed by the Congress and Senate of the United States and assented to by the President. I would like to ask the right hon. gentleman, if he felt as deeply about this matter as one would infer from his remarks, and if he felt that an injustice was done to Canada by the construction put upon the law by the officers of the United States Government, whether he or his Government has made any representation to the United States Government with regard to the injustice done to the constituents of the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor), a gentleman who has served the Conservative party so faithfully, inside this House and outside of it? I would like to ask the Premier, whether any correspondence has taken place between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States with reference to the injustice perpetrated by the severe construction placed upon that law, and its harsh operation against Canadian workmen? I do not believe that the Congress of the United States ever intended, when that law was passed, that it should be construed in the manner it has been against the people of Canada, and in this I agree with the right hon. gentleman. I am sure there is too much liberality among the people of the United States to perpetrate any such iniquity as that. Here are two countries located alongside of each other, in the utmost unanimity and good friendship, and such a state of things as the hon. gentleman has referred to could not possibly occur with the consent of the people of either country. The right hon. gentleman, sitting there with that placid smile on his countenance which he can so well command when it suits his purpose, could not, I am sure, allow such an injustice to be perpetrated without some remonstrance on his own behalf, and on behalf of the Dominion. However, he has not told us that he ever sent any such remonstrance to the United States in regard to this matter. The right hon. gentleman, who so well understands the diplomatic course that ought to have been pursued, is responsible to this country for neglecting his duty in not having remonstrated against the injustice done to the constituents of the member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor), who is his fidus Achates, and his principal whip. I have the highest respect for the people of the United States, but, at the same time, I think it is the duty of the Government of Canada to tell them, in a case such as this, that they are not doing justice when laws of a stringent character have been more stringently applied than was ever intended by Congress. I believe that the Government of the United States should be told that their officers have enforced the law in such an unreasonable manner as to interfere with the people of a friendly neighboring country, who legitimately and of their right, go into that country to seek employment. It is the duty of this Government to tell the House what steps they have taken to prevent the continuance of this injustice, or whether or not they have remonstrated against the continuance of the injustice, which not only the hon. member for Leeds, but the right hon. gentleman the Premier himself has referred to. I shall await with some little interest to know what steps this vigorous Government, with such a large majority behind them, have taken to defend the interests of Canada, and to uphold the rights of the people.

Mr. LAURIER. There can be no necessity, in my opinion, that this matter should be adjourned for another day, for surely there can be no two opinions upon this question. I am sure, from what the Prime Minister himself has stated, that he would not be prepared to vote against such a measure as this. I believe the right hon. gentleman was right when he stated that the measure to which the hon. member for Leeds has alluded, never was conceived by the Congress of the United States in any hostility towards Canada. It was, as was well said by the Prime Minister, conceived against Chinese immigration, and against a certain very objectionable class of immigration from Europe. The right course for the Government to follow in this matter would have been the course suggested by my hon. friend for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), namely, to send a remonstrance to the United States Government to the effect that the legislation passed by Congress to protect the United States from a certain class of immigration, was taken advantage of by certain of their officials, to carry it out in a spirit not calculated to promote friendly relations between the people of this country and the people of the American Union. I would be sorry if we should hesitate to reject this motion, because it might carry the impression that we want to retaliate against our neighbors when there is no such intention here. If an Act has been passed by Congress, not with the intention of injuring Canada, but which is construed to injure Canada, I think that by simply remonstrating against this abuse to the United States Government, we would have our remedy. The hon. gentleman may not think this, but I do. I believe that by showing we have a desire to maintain friendly relations with our neighbors, and by showing that an Act of theirs not so intended, has been construed against us, they would be disposed to meet us half way, and to do what would be necessary on their part to maintain these friendly relations. For my part, I shall object, so far as I can, that consideration of the Bill should be adjourned. I desire to have an expression at once from this House upon the question.

Mr. HESSON. I think the House owes a debt of gratitude to the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) for bringing this matter forward. This is an important measure which he proposes, and I think it is worthy of serious consideration by the House. I happen to know a great many circumstances, very much in the same direction as the hon. member for Leeds has represented as existing in his own constituency, and I believe that the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister), in his experience must know that such a state of things does exist, and that many persons have been compelled to abandon their own country and go to the United States, in consequence of the line of policy the American Government has pursued in this matter. I am not inclined to believe that the Congress of the United States ever intended that this law should operate against the Dominion of Canada. I presume that they have had no reason to do so, because I believe that we give employment to as many Americans as they give employment to Canadians. While, however, they may not have intended that Canadian laborers should give up their employment or reside on the other side of the line, still the fact remains that this has been the effect of the law, and the Customs officials have so interpreted it that working people who happen to be employed in the United States are compelled to give up their homes in Canada. These are facts which every member in this House is cognisant of; some hon. gentlemen are more directly interested in the matter, as they reside on the frontier, where the injustice is more felt. I do not wish to express an opinion that this Government should retaliate, but I think that we should feel it our duty to consider the position of our workmen who are compelled to abandon their allegiance to their country in order to obtain employment in the United States. I do not know whether or not this Government has made a protest to the Government of the United States, but if they have not done so they ought.

Mr. MITCHELL. Quite right.

Mr. HESSON. I agree with hon. gentlemen opposite that this Government should have made a protest against the operations of this Act of the Congress of the United States. We know those grievances do exist, and know that very many valuable citizens have been lost to the country in consequence. I do not ask the Government to retaliate, although if we were forced to take that course, I think we could very well afford to take it; because, I think, we should obtain from them as many citizens as they will obtain from us. I do not think it was the intention of the American Government to make this law apply to Canada in the way it does; but that is the effect of it; and, I think, it is time we heard from the Government as to whether they have made a protest against it or not. I, as a supporter of the Government, would like to see them stand up for the true interests of Canada and Canadian labor, and let the American Government know that if they carry out that law as against Canada, we shall have to legislate in the interest of our own labor and our own homes. I think the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has only performed his duty as a representative man, who witnessed what was going on before his own doors. My hon. friend from West Lambton (Mr. Lister) must have experienced the same thing, both at Sarnia and Port Elgin, where many of the employes of the Grand Trunk Railway were obliged to abandon their homes in Canada and go to Detroit and Port Huron in order to retain the employment they had before that order was enforced. The American Act is still in operation, and, I think, the Government should enquire whether it is to be continued against Canada or not; and if so, they should take some steps to counteract it. I, at any rate, protest against it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Why do you not get your chieftain to tell us what he did?

Mr. HESSON. That is what we are now doing. The matter has now been brought to the attention of the Government, and if they are not in a position to answer now, I hope they will soon be, and, in the meantime, I think this Bill should be allowed to stand.

Mr. LISTER. There is a great deal of truth in what the hon. gentleman has just stated. I think the hon. member for South Leeds is entitled to a good deal of credit for bringing this matter to the attention of the Government and the House. Whether the law passed by the United States Congress was intended to apply to Canada or not, the American officials have applied it to Canada, and there is no question but that they have enforced it in a very harsh way indeed. In the county I come from, there is a town of some 2,500 inhabitants, composed almost entirely of employes of the Grand Trunk Railway Company—men who have lived on the Canadian side all their lives, and who had acquired homes at Point Edward of considerable value. These men, owing to their employment being on this side, and the works where they were employed being on the other side, were suddenly compelled to abandon their homes on this side and go to the other side to live, entailing upon themselves great expense and loss. Now, Sir, I do not believe in the law of retaliation. I am inclined to take the view of the matter which the First Minister has given to the House, namely, that the law was not intended to apply to Canada; and if the Government take steps to lay the state of the case before the American Government, something may be done that will accomplish the end desired. With regard to my hon. friend from South Leeds, I think we ought to be very much pleased that he did not come into conflict with the American authorities on the occasion to which he referred, because if he had acted in the way he threatened to do, somebody might have been put on trial for murder, and that person might have been my hon. friend. However, he seems to have alarmed the Americans in some way, because this odious order was not enforced. If the American Government insist on enforcing this law against Canadians, our Government ought to pass a like law and enforce it with equal stringency. But, not knowing whether the Government have made representations on the subject to the Government at Washington, I do not think it would be wise or prudent on the part of this Parliament to enact a law that would only increase the possible friction now existing between the two countries. I believe that if proper representations are made to the American Government, the law will be repealed, at all events so far as Canada is concerned.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There can be no doubt that in the cases which the hon. gentleman who introduced the Bill has brought to the notice of the House, very great inconvenience has resulted to the people he represents. That inconvenience has been repeated to a less extent in various other parts of Canada where the two countries approach each other. But however serious my hon. friend from North Perth (Mr. Hesson) may be, he can be perfectly safe in relying upon one fact, namely, that when the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), and the hon. leader of the Opposition gravely charged the Government with dereliction of duty in not representing to the authorities of the United States that their law ought not to be enforced in their own country, they were entirely in a jocular mood, and were endeavoring to perpetrate a joke on the House. There can be nothing plainer to anyone who reads the United States Statutes than that this law applies as much to Canada as it does to Italy. There can be no point clearer than this, also, that Canadians cannot be exempted from its operation unless all British subjects are equally exempted. What rights we in Canada possess in relation to the United States are possessed by every British subject; and the difficulty that would be presented, in regard to the non-enforcement of that law, would be that Canada would be simply made the place of entry into the United States for every British subject, and, possibly, for every other foreigner who might claim to come in any way under allegiance to the British Crown. This is not the only subject in respect of which the enforcement of the laws of the United States, passed for their own protection, has been inconvenient to the Canadian people. Cases were brought to our notice not many months ago of inconvenience from the unequal operation of the laws of the two countries with respect to the currency of the two countries. At several points we find neighboring cities, one under the Canadian flag, the other under the United States flag. In the Canadian city the American currency passes as freely as our own; in the city under the flag of the United States Canadian currency is not only subject to various legal restrictions, but, by a statute of the United States, is subject to taxation, as personal property, even if it be found in one of the banks. For instance, in Windsor the currency of the United States circulates just as freely as our own, while in Detroit, just opposite, an officer of the United States goes into every bank and levies a tax for United States purposes on the Canadian currency he finds there. Is it to be contended that, by any remonstrance whatever, we can prevail on the Government of the United States not to enforce the laws they choose to pass for their own protection? While these laws were not passed by the United States for the purpose of harassing the people of Canada or imposing restrictions on the relations between the two countries, they were passed for the protection of the people of the United States—the one for the purpose of promoting the circulation of the national currency, and the other for the protection of the labor of the United States, under the circumstances into which the United States have grown, of having an ample population and an ample supply of labor of their own. That being her condition, having an ample population, having a large surplus supply of labor, this very strict contract labor law was passed at the instance of the labor organisations. Would the Congress of the United States, would the people who were at the back of the agitation, and who eventually succeeded in procuring the passage of the contract labor law, submit, for one moment, to the law of the United States being put in this condition, that while it is necessary in the interest, as they deem it, of the people, especially of the laboring classes of the United States, that the importation of contract laborers should be prohibited as against all countries in the world, the importation shall not be prohibited provided it comes from British territory. To expect such an amendment to the law as it exists in the United States would be exceedingly unreasonable. As regards the enforcement of that law by the officers of the United States and the hardships that have arisen through those officers taking steps to enforce it in the way complained of by the hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill, and as regards the taxation of Canadian currency in the banks of the United States, those subjects have been, as promptly and as strongly as possible, brought to the notice of the United States authorities—not with the hope that we could reasonably expect them to fail to enforce a law of their own country, but that they should instruct, if it should be in their power, their officers on the frontier, to exercise some discretion as regards that enforcement, and to limit if possible the enforcement of the law to the purposes for which it was passed. Not many months ago two members of this Government waited upon the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, and brought this matter, with as much formality and force as could possibly be used, to his attention. He gave the subject full consideration. He examined the statutes upon the subject, he made an enquiry into the circumstances under which the law was in force; and the answer which he gave was one of which this Government could not, under the circumstances, complain. It was this, that Congress had deliberately adopted legislation of that kind, with the view of enforcing a policy which was thought necessary in the interests of the people of the United States, and that Congress, having adopted that legislation, it was as much binding upon the President and every member of the Cabinet and every officer of the United States as any law of the country could possibly be; that as regards the enforcement in a harassing manner against the people of Canada, of these laws of the two descriptions to which I have referred, nothing could be further from their wish or intention, and that the enforcement had not originated in consequence of any instructions from the Administration at Washington. But he pointed out that the law of the United States being so, it was in the power of the humblest citizen of the United States to compel the officers of the United States to do their duty and enforce it, and in the very case which occurred in Detroit with regard to the taxation, and in the cases to which the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has called our attention to-night, if they were investigated to the bottom, it would be found that, not under any instructions from Washington, and not by the excessive zeal of the United States officers on the frontier, but on the complaint of some person on the frontier interested in the stringent enforcement of these laws, the officers of the United States were compelled to do the duty which these statutes impose upon them. Is it reasonable that any member of this House, under these circumstances, should ask us to represent to the President of the United States or his Cabinet that his officers ought not to be allowed to enforce the law? Any person who has examined this subject carefully must see that it requires no instructions from Washington and no superfluous zeal on the part of the frontier officers to carry out laws of this description, in the state of the labor movement in the United States at present. Only a few months ago I entered, for the first time, in a steamer from my own Province, the city of Boston. We were met at the entrance to the harbor by a tug which brought to the side of our vessel the quarantine officer of the port, the Customs officer of the United States, and an officer of the Knights of Labor organisation, the latter for the purpose of seeing that this contract labor law was enforced. That officer came clothed with the authority of the state, though appointed by the organisation of the Knights of Labor, for the purpose of seeing that, on every vessel that entered that port, there was no citizen of a foreign state who was going into the city of Boston under contract with any of the people of the United States; and when that officer of that labor organisation, clothed with that authority, and acting side by side with the officers of the United States, found a person who, under any circumstances, seemed to be open to the suspicion of having violated the contract labor law, that person was sent back, at the expense of the vessel which brought him into port, even if he had to be sent to the farthest part of the earth. Under these circumstances, it will be seen that it does not require any specific instructions from the authorities of the country or any superfluous zeal on the part of their officers to enforce this law. The people of the United States who procured the passage of these labor laws and who are interested in their enforcement, take care that they are most diligently enforced from day to day, and compel the officers of the United States to carry out the statutes to the fullest extent. Therefore, it is a simple question, not of the enforcement, but of the repeal or modification of the law, and any person who knows the present attitude of those connected with the labor movement in the United States to-day, knows that it would be unreasonable to expect Congress to depart from this policy at present, merely because, in isolated instances here and there, there have been, on the frontier, cases in which the execution of the law has gone beyond its intent. But if hon. members have any doubt upon that subject, or want any official confirmation of what I have said—if the hon. gentleman who intimated to-night that the citizens of Canada suffer this inconvenience on account of the laxity of the Government of Canada, and that the administration at Washington is unaware of the law being so enforced against the Canadian people, is still of that opinion—he need only take up the blue-book on this subject, which was laid before the Imperial Parliament in 1889, and there he will find, not only that the enforcement of the law with regard to Canada, was brought to the notice of the American and the Imperial authorities, by representations—as regards Washington, from their own consuls, and, as regards the Imperial authorities, from their consuls—but they will find there stated fully, on the part of the labor organisations in the United States, and endorsed by the persons connected with the administration of the United States, in a higher or lower capacity as the case may be, the reasons for the policy on which it is contended, against the Imperial remonstrances, that these laws ought to be enforced against Canada. The case they would make in that regard, I do not for a moment intend to endorse, even by implication; but their case is that, not only is there a continuous movement from Canada to the United States of laborers seeking employment and going into the United States under labor contracts, but there is a continuous exodus from Canada to the United States of paupers and mendicants of various kinds, who, it is alleged by the United States authorities, are filling the charitable institutions along the frontier. I not only do not say that these statements are correct, but I do not believe they are correct. I merely mention the fact that they are expanded on the record here and show that the subject of the enforcement of those laws against Canada has been fully considered, fully represented to the authorities at Washington, that the matter has been deliberately decided upon and has been brought to the knowledge of the Imperial authorities as well. Still, however, that is quite consistent with the statement made by the First Minister that these laws were not adopted at first in any spirit of hostility to the people of Canada or to their entering the United States. As to the cases which have been brought forward by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor), I quite admit the hardships which he shows has characterised these cases; but, with great deference to him and those who agree with him in believing that some measure of this kind might be justified by irritating and hostile legislation, I think it would be an unwise course for us to adopt harsh and irritating legislation against the United States, because irritating legislation has been adopted against the people of Canada. In this country, we have not, as the First Minister has pointed out, a surplus population, it has not become a matter of anxiety with us as to how we shall check the influx of population into the country. On the contrary, in many parts of the country, we have a great need for immigration and the very restrictions which have been put on this immigration into the United States are turning day by day in the interests of Canada, by turning immigration in this direction. I think it would be unwise to impose restrictions on immigration. Besides, the hon. gentleman will see that this Bill, as drawn now, and indeed in any way in which he could draw it as a measure of retaliation, would injure many interests in Canada. I do not refer particularly to the industry to which he specially referred, but a Bill of this kind, if drawn as a full measure of retaliation, would extend so far as to prevent the railways and steamboats which pass between this country and the United States, bringing American citizens into Canada who might be in their employment. When a train came from the United States in charge of the conductor, the engineer and a staff of men who were not citizens of Canada, but were under contract, this Bill would apply to them and they would be released from their contract, if the Bill could be passed by this Parliament effectually for that purpose. I would also have grave doubts as to the power of this Parliament to pass the second section, which makes null and void all contracts entered into between persons in Canada and persons out of Canada, looking to the importation of persons affected by these contracts into Canada. For these reasons, I think that, while admitting the case to be as strong as the hon. member for Leeds has presented it to the House—and certainly, from the cases which he presented, it is as strong as he represented it—it would be unwise for Parliament to pass an Act extending to the whole of Canada such a measure, because these grievances have arisen in certain localities.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to correct the hon. gentleman on one point. He seems to imagine that I assumed that a distinction could be made in favor of Canada against all the other nations of the world by the Government of the United States. I have never assumed that. I have contended that, while the contract law of the United States applies to the labor of Canada as it does to that of all other countries, still, as applied to this country, whence people go voluntarily over to seek employment themselves, the application of that law by the officials of the United States has been an unjust, an unreasonable, and an unfair one, and, if the hon. gentleman had represented that fact to the Government of the United States, I believe there is too much honesty and fairness in the Congress and the people of the United States to make such an application of the law which should never have applied to this country, and, I believe, does not legally and strictly apply to it. Then the hon. gentleman referred to the fact, that the currency of Canada deposited in a bank at Detroit or anywhere else within the American boundary is liable to taxation. It is only liable to taxation if that bank reissues it.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We are aware of cases where Canadian currency lying in the bank was assessed by an official of the United States, and taxed. The hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver) shakes his head, but I know it, and it was represented to the Treasury at Washington, by whom it was investigated through a commissioner, and not only was it admitted that this was done, but they said they were bound by the law to have it done.

Mr. MITCHELL. Of course, if the hon. gentleman knows it, I am bound to accept his statement. However, I am satisfied that there is too much fair play and too much of a spirit of justice in a neighboring people such as the American people are to make the Foreign Contract Labor Law apply to cases such as my hon. friend from South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has laid before the House, and, if a proper representation of those cases had been made to the United States Government, I am satisfied some satisfaction would have been given, or there would have been some relaxation of those laws. I agree with the hon. Minister of Justice that this law should not pass. We are not in a position to create a spirit of retaliation with the people of the United States. We should rather tolerate even injustice, while making a remonstrance against it, but we should above all things maintain peace and friendship with the great country on our border, kindred with us in interest, in trade relations, and in everything of importance in such a great continent as this. At the same time, it is the duty of the Administration of Canada to see that, in cases such as the hon. gentleman has brought under the notice of the House, a proper representation is made to the United States of the stringent application of that law, which should not apply in such cases at all, and I believe does not apply, and I do not believe that such an application could be maintained in any court in the United States. The Government should bring this to the notice of the American Government and try to get a modification of the regulations, if there are any regulations, or of the application of the law which is made by the officers who control it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I agree with the Minister of Justice as to the meaning and extent of the operations of the American law upon this subject, and as to the impropriety of undertaking here to pass any retaliatory measure. I think any such course on the part of this House would be extremely prejudicial to the interests of the people of this country. In my opinion, it would be quite out of our power to strengthen our hands in dealing with the action of the American Congress and the law on this particular subject if we were to follow their example in this respect. I know that the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches some twelve years ago laid down the doctrine of retaliation with a great deal of clearness and energy; but I am glad to learn from the observations made by the Minister of Justice this evening, that the Government are receiving new light, and that they begin to discover that, after all, the policy of retaliation is one which is not always in the interests of the people who are being governed. The hon. gentleman has pointed out the provisions of this Bill; and I entirely agree with the observations made by the Minister of Justice that much of this Bill lies beyond the competency of this Parliament. We, in this respect, differ from the Congress of the United States. They, being authorised by the constitution to legislate upon the subject of trade and commerce generally, according to the construction put upon these words of the constitution by their courts, have a much wider jurisdiction than we possess here in dealing with the same subject. The power of our own Legislature to deal with the subject of property and civil rights makes it, I think, more than doubtful that we should have power to interfere with contracts in the way proposed in the second section of this Bill. Then, it is to be observed that the Congress of the United States, in passing this Act, have legislated generally; they have not legislated against Canada specifically. The legislation that prohibited contracting with laborers in this country, prohibited contracting with laborers in every other country as well, so that if we were to undertake to pass a retaliatory measure against the United States, confined to contracts with citizens of the United States—assuming, for a moment, that such legislation would be within our jurisdiction—we would be adopting a measure wholly different from that which they have adopted. It is true that the hon. gentleman proposes to legislate to prevent contracts with all aliens, and also with foreigners. I do not know whether he meant by foreigners, all who are not citizens of Canada. We know that by the construction put upon those words in the issue of a writ in the United Kingdom, people of the colonies are accounted foreigners, all who are outside the realm, as well as those who are of foreign and independent states; and I am not sure whether the hon. gentleman means by foreigners to include persons who are British subjects not residents of Canada, as well as those who are residents or citizens of foreign countries. But if it is his meaning, I feel quite sure that the legislation proposed would be extremely mischievous, if this House were to adopt it. Now, I could not help noticing the observations made by the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson). The hon. gentleman seems to think that a great hardship was imposed upon the Canadians by the legislation of the United States. If I remember rightly, that hon. gentleman has over and over again declared that we had adopted a fiscal policy in this country which was to give employment to all our people here, that they were not to go abroad to seek employment, that such legislation was intended to keep them at home. But the hon. gentleman now complains that so many of them want to go abroad that a great hardship is inflicted upon them because they are not at liberty to enter into contracts with parties residing in the United States. I do not know how the hon. gentleman reconciles his complaint of this evening with his contention on former occasions; but it does seem to me that if the hon. gentleman is right to-night he has been wrong for the past ten years. Now, I do not agree with one contention put forward by the Minister of Justice. He says that Congress was within its rights in doing as it has done. I admit that. It had power so to legislate, and it is responsible to the people of the United States for the legislation it had adopted. I also agree with him when he says that the President of the United States has no option in the matter; the executive authorities of the United States must administer the law as they find it. But I do not admit that it is wholly beyond the power of this House, or of the Government of this country, to take some action in the matter. It seems to me that if the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches had taken as much care to establish close relations with the people of the United States, with the Congress and President of the United States, as they have taken to establish relations with the Government of the United Kingdom, many of these difficulties that we are now called upon to confront, never would have risen; and if there was a commissioner at Washington attached to the British Embassy, representing the people and the Government of this country, those difficulties of which we complain would, in many instances, be got rid of. I do not think that the people of the United States generally, or their representatives in Congress, are hostilely disposed to the people of this country; I believe they are anxious to remain on terms of good neighborhood; and that it only requires a well informed person who is fairly capable of representing us at Washington, to secure a removal of all those difficulties of which we complain. It seems to me that such a measure as one dealing with contracts or agreements with aliens residing abroad at the time the contracts were made, is a measure the modification of which might have been secured, if the Government of Canada had been represented at Washington. Now, the Minister has said, that representations were made by the foreign officer through the British Embassy, with regard to this subject, and that the Government of the United States laid down two propositions, one was that they had a very large immigration to the United States from Canada of persons who went there for the purpose of making the United States their home, and that a large number of paupers left Canada with a view of settling in the United States, or at least of obtaining employment there, and that the object of that legislation was to prevent the United States being made the refuge for Canadian paupers. Well, I do not know what answer the Government of Canada has made to that. It seems to me that it was the duty of the foreign officer, if any such representations were made to the British Embassy at Washington, to have communicated these representations to the Government of Canada, and it was the duty of the Government of Canada to take immediate steps for the correction of any evil of that sort. Now, while I agree with the observations of the Minister of Justice, that the measure was one upon which Congress was competent to legislate, and that the executive authorities of the United States were called upon to enforce this law at the instance of any private party who chose to prosecute persons for its violation, I also maintain that it was the business of the Government to take active steps to secure the modification or the repeal of that law, and I think they are open to the censure of this House in having failed to take such steps. In my opinion the step that ought to be adopted is to appoint a commissioner, or to secure the appointment of a commissioner representing Canada, specially interested in the affairs of Canada, at Washington. Sir, there can be no doubt whatever that the foreign representatives of England everywhere feel that they have discharged their duty if they do what is looked for and expected of them by the English people and their representatives in Parliament. It is to them that they are responsible and not to this Parliament or the Government of this country; and until we have parties appointed who represent the people of this country, who are responsible to the people of this country, to the Government and Parliament of this country, we will never have our affairs quite satisfactorily attended to at Washington. Now, I think that this measure and what has happened with regard to it, are sufficient to justify the Government in taking active steps to secure the appointment of a commissioner at Washington, and to obtain the consent of the English Government to that appointment, in order that the interests of this country may be properly protected; and that where legislation is being initiated, calculated to breed friction between the neighboring Republic and ourselves, we ought to have a party there directly responsible to us, thoroughly well informed in regard to all these matters, and capable of taking such steps as may be necessary to prevent wrong being done, and to secure the correction of any wrong that Canada has suffered. While the hon. gentleman who brought forward this Bill, did well in bringing the subject before the House, I think it is unfortunate he should have brought it before the House in this form, because I cannot conceive anything more detrimental to the interests of this country, than that this House should seriously entertain a measure like this, with a view to placing it on the Statute-book.

Mr. DENISON. I think every hon. member of the House must recognise the force of the remarks that have fallen from the hon. Minister of Justice, and we must all recognise the difficulty of dealing with this subject; at the same time, I think we are bound to bend our energies to the subject and see if some means cannot be taken to ameliorate the position of affairs at the present moment. When we find our neighbors to the south are competing with our people, while our people cannot compete with them on the same terms, it is certainly desirable that something should be done to remedy the grievance. It is now possible for a man employed on the Grand Trunk at Windsor to live in Detroit, but it is not possible for him to live in Windsor if he is employed on the Grand Trunk at Detroit. That seems to me to be a most unfair, unjust, and bad arrangement. While I consider the Government of the United States never intended this law to apply to Canada, I can also see the difficulty pointed out by the hon. Minister of Justice, that, if a change were made and Canada were exempted, this country might be made a channel through which to import laborers from Europe to the United States. While seeing that difficulty, it seems too bad that a minister should be mulcted in a fine of $1,000 because he came to the United States to preach the Gospel. It seems too bad that 60 Canadians employed at Port Huron should be compelled either to resign their positions or remove to the other side of the line. It is a fact that 8 of our citizens did move to the other side rather than lose their employment at Port Huron. There is no doubt this subject is attracting much attention throughout Canada, and we know the people are becoming alive to the situation. I have here a letter from W. T. Cohn as follows:—

"BELLEVILLE DISTRICT ASSEMBLY, K. of L., No. 235,

"OFFICE OF RECORDING SECRETARY,

"GANANOQUE, 31st Jan., 1890.

"GEO. TAYLOR, Esq., M. P., House of Commons, Ottawa.

"DEAR SIR,—At the annual meeting of the D. A. 235 recently held at Kingston, a resolution was moved by delegate Wm. Kelly, seconded by Wm. Helm, and unanimously resolved, that this D. A. fully endorse the Anti-Alien Bill of Geo. Taylor, Esq., M. P., and at the same time recommend the addition of a clause shutting out American contractors. And a copy of this resolution be forwarded to Mr. Taylor, and to the Legislative Committee.

"Most respectfully, yours obediently,

"WM. HELM,

"K. S. D. A. 235."

I have also had placed in my hands the following letter, addressed to Mr. Taylor by R. R. Elliot, Chairman of the Legislative Committee of the Knights of Labor. He says:

"OTTAWA, 26th February, 1890.

"GEO. TAYLOR, Esq., M. P., House of Commons.

"DEAR SIR,—On behalf of organized labor in the Dominion of Canada I beg to thank you for your effort to secure the passage of an Alien Contract Labor Law. We earnestly trust it will receive favorable consideration at the hands of the House.

"Yours faithfully,

"R. R. ELLIOT,

"Chairman Legislative Committee."

While I recognise the difficulty of passing such a Bill as is proposed, at the same time I think that if we had such a measure on the Statute-book, it might be interpreted in such a way as not to exercise undue pressure on our neighbors, and yet be the means of securing some arrangement with them by setting off one against the other.

Mr. CASEY. I differ in some few respects from the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills). First with respect to the appointment of commissioners. I am not aware from the past history of Canadian commissioners that they have ever been able to exercise any real influence on what was done by the British Embassy with which they were conjoined. In the case of the last Fisheries Treaty it was clear that the Canadian Commissioner had very little to do with the framing of the treaty. In the case of the coming fisheries treaty I am afraid the same result will occur; and, moreover, in case of dispute the presence of a Canadian commissioner joined to the British Ambassador, will merely enable the Americans to say that any arrangement arrived at had been agreed to by the Canadian as well as by the British representative. I do not think the Canadian commissioners, whether to England, Spain or elsewhere, have shown themselves to be such a success that we should seek to multiply the number. As to creating friction between this country and the United States by passing a measure of this kind, I think hon. members have attached too much weight to that consideration. It is, of course, desirable that friction should not be created, but I do not see how friction will be created between the two countries by the fact that we had passed a law similar to theirs, and one not directed particularly against the United States, because it is not directed against the United States, but applies to all foreign countries. I do not see why any friction should arise from the passage of such a Bill, unless the Bill were passed with a professed and declared intention of retaliating against the United States. In that case I would protest against its passage in every possible way. I abhor the idea of retaliation as much as possible. If the United States have been so mean as to have treated us meanly in this connection, that is no reason why we should so treat them. If the passage of this Bill rested on the ground of retaliation, every self-respecting member of the House should vote against it. It is not on that ground I regard the Bill with any favor, but on quite another ground. The Minister of Justice has told us that remonstrances have been made by the British Government and by the Canadian Government on the United States Government in regard to the enforcing of this law; at all events, whether those remonstrances were made by both Governments or not, remonstrances have been made. In reply it was pointed out by the United States Government, fairly enough, that they could not prevent their officers from executing the law. But I must say that is not the only ground of complaint. It is not only a complaint that the law is carried out, but it has been complained by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) and by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), that the law has been applied to cases to which it should not have been applied. In that case a remonstrance would have an effect, and if the attention of the Government has not been called to that fact, it is well that their attention should be called to it now. It is to be hoped and believed that the Government of the United States will restrain their officers from abusing the law to the disadvantage of Canadians who wish to enter the United States. It has been stated that men going over there, not under contract, but to seek employment, have been shut out by this Act. That I believe is an abuse of the law, and is not only against the spirit but against the letter of the law. All the remonstrances against the spirit of the law might doubtless be unavailing in the United States, yet remonstrances against the abuse of the law would be efficacious; and we hope that if such remonstrances have not been made by the Canadian Government, they will soon be made. It is a very sad thing that we have to discuss this question at all. As my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has pointed out, it has been claimed all along by the present Government that their fiscal policy would prevent such an exodus as this from our country to the United States. If all that they told us were true, there would not be an opportunity for the Americans to apply their alien law against Canadians, and there would consequently be no reason to ask for retaliative legislation. I am, in one respect, sorry to have to state that I do not believe that this retaliatory legislation will have any effect if passed. I do not fear that, if this Bill should pass, it will cause a friction between the two Governments, because, unfortunately, there is no immigration from the United States into Canada. The flow of immigration is all the other way. There is no danger at present, that an alien law passed by this Government would ever be applied against United States citizens, and that is the unfortunate part of the affair. While the United States Government are maintaining at London—falsely, no doubt—that the Canadians go over there as paupers to be supported by the charity of the people of the United States, no such complaint can be made on this side, for the Americans do not come here even to fill our poor houses. Therefore, if this law should pass, there is no immediate probability of its ever being applied. After all these considerations I come to one reason which leads me to support strongly—not perhaps this measure, but a measure in this direction—and that reason is, that a Bill of this kind is a necessary complement of what is called the National Policy, now in force in Canada. I do not admit the justness of that appellation of "National Policy." I do not admit that it is "National," but, at all events, it is certain that the policy is one of protection to the manufacturers of the country. It protects the manufacturing industries beyond all doubt. Now, Sir, I say, that while we have this policy in force, which (call it by any name you like) protects the manufacturer, it is necessary in all fairness, and in all justice, that we should add to that policy some measure to protect the operative who works under the manufacturer. If you protect the man by whose capital manufactured goods are produced, you should protect the laborer who produces them. It was for the purpose of protecting the laborers from the competition of alien workmen, that this law was passed in the United States. It was found, that if there was a strike of operatives in any factory, the manufacturer was in the habit of hiring laborers abroad to replace the native workmen. This produced difficulties and complaints, which this law was passed to remove. I hold that, under a high protective tariff, some such law as this we are now discussing, should be adopted for the protection of the laborer. The laborer has to pay an increased price for everything he drinks, eats, and wears, in consequence of the protection given to his employer, and some protection should be given to the laboring men to protect him against the employer, who is at liberty to go abroad and to select his laborers to replace the native workmen. I claim that to omit such a piece of legislation as this now proposed, is to give the lie to the professions of those who have introduced and sustained the National Policy. The whole object of that policy, as announced to the country, was to secure employment for native labor, and to prevent our people from going into the United States. When an hon. member of this House now proposes a measure to prevent the importation of foreign labor to replace the native laborer in those very industries which are said to have been created by a protective tariff, I think that no member of a protectionist Government, and no member who supports that Government, can reasonably or honestly oppose such a Bill. I do not say that I, myself, approve of the Bill in its detail. I think there are very many objectionable features in it, but I believe it to be an integral part and a necessary consequence of the so-called National Policy—that is, if you have protection as a part of that policy. I do not, by any means, believe either in protection, or in the limitation of immigration, and taking each by itself I hold that neither is a sound principle, but if you have the one you must have the other. Two poisons may sometimes counteract each other, and if we must have the poison of protection, we must also have the poison of limited immigration to counteract it. I would not go the length of discouraging immigration of every kind, but I believe that if you protect the manufacturer, the possessor of capital and the employer of labor to the extent of 35 per cent. on an average, you ought also to protect the laborer who works for him. Of course these propositions are contrary to my principles of free trade, but those who adopt the principle of protection must, in all logic, in all justice, and in all fairness, adopt the other. I believe, that while the majority of this House seem to be determined to adhere to the false principle of protection, it is only right, in view of the disabilities placed on the laboring men of this country, that we should adopt the antidote of a limited immigration. I believe further that this is not a Bill which ought to be in charge of a private member. If the Government be true to its principles, it is a Bill which they should introduce on their own responsibility. If the Government is to retain the confidence of these laboring men, whom they have led to believe that their only salvation lies in the maintenance of a protective tariff, they should take the responsibility of defending their rights. It must be apparent to every one that the Government refuses to give to the laborer the protection they give to his employer, for if they were willing to stand by the workmen they would introduce this Bill themselves, and not leave it to a private member. Moreover, a Bill of this kind, which may involve international difficulties, should be introduced by the Government of the day. I throw the whole responsibility upon them. If the Government say that the House will be more prepared to vote upon this matter in a few days, when they shall have more information to give us, the responsibility is upon them for the postponement. But I do not see why we should be any more ready at a future time than we are now. The hon. Minister of Justice has told us everything that can be told about it, and what is there more to know except to go on with our own policy? But I should, perhaps, have dropped that point, because my argument goes to prove that, whether the United States maintain their Act or not, whether they enforce it stringently or not, we, as a protectionist Legislature, speaking in the sense of the majority, to be consistent with our protectionist principles, should adopt a measure of this kind, and put the laborer on an equal footing with the employer. Without postponing the question, therefore, we should throw the responsibility on the Government, either of introducing a measure of this kind—one which would, perhaps, be better digested than the measure before us—or else of admitting once for all that their professions of being the friends of the workingman are entirely election “highfalutin,” simply intended to catch the votes of workingmen for the occasion, and not intended to bring about any practical legislation for their benefit afterwards. I will not venture to name all the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House who represent industrial constituencies; they are too numerous to mention; but I might take, for example, my hon. friends from Hamilton, who represent a peculiarly protectionist city, whom the workingmen of that city sent there to support a protectionist Government under the belief that it would benefit them. I ask them how they feel about this Bill. Are they prepared to sustain the Government that refuses to protect the workingman as well as his employer? I might ask scores of others on that side of the House the same question, but I suppose their answer will be in accordance with whatever course the Government choose to take in the matter. It is highly probable that instead of consulting their workingmen constituents, as they should do in a matter of this kind, they will consult the wishes of the Government, and will follow any course the Government choose to take. Considering the imperfections of this Bill, I shall reserve my opinion as to whether I shall vote yea or nay on this particular Bill; but as a measure of this kind is desirable, it is very possible that I shall vote for the principle of the Bill, though not for its details. But no protectionist can consistently vote against a measure of this kind, and no Government that professes to be a friend of the workingman can consistently refuse to take charge of it.

Mr. HESSON. Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Spoken.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has already spoken on the question. If he desires to make a personal explanation he can proceed, but not otherwise.

Mr. HESSON. I desire to make an explanation. I think I have spoken with great moderation on this question, and if there is a desire to get information, I think hon. gentlemen on both sides should be willing to hear it. But if hon. gentlemen are not willing to hear me, I suppose the adjournment of the House can be moved. I exceedingly regret that an important question of this kind should be made the occasion of raising a debate on the National Policy.

An hon. MEMBER. That is not a personal explanation.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I must call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that he rose for the purpose of making a personal explanation.

Mr. WALLACE. I move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. HESSON. The hon. gentleman having relieved me of the responsibility by moving the adjournment of the debate—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That cannot relieve you.

Mr. HESSON. When my hon. friend moved it, I was not speaking.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. SCRIVER. I desire simply to say, that in expressing dissent from the statement of the hon. Minister of Justice that foreign currency was taxed in banks in the United States when lying there, I did so on the authority of the cashier of a National Bank, who lives across the border close to where I live. He told me some months ago that the tax was imposed only on the currency taken out of the bank, and not when it was received or while it was lying in the vaults of the bank. Further, I know it to be a fact, that in that particular bank, and in other similar institutions on the border, Canadian currency is received at par, and is paid out by the banks at par to their Canadian customers, so that the tax in those cases is not imposed.

Mr. LÉPINE. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, allow me to say a few words in reference to the Bill just brought up by the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor), in order to limit the immigration of foreigners under contracts or agreements respecting work to be done in Canada. I do not quite share the opinion of the hon. members who suggest that the consideration of the Bill should be postponed. In the speeches delivered this evening, we have an evidence that the members of this House are fully cognisant of the Bill. Besides, a similar law has existed for several years in the United States; every hon. member of this House is aware of its working, and I see no reason for postponing the consideration of the measure now submitted to this House. We should, therefore, proceed at once with the discussion of this Bill, proposed in the interests of the laboring class, which is certainly the most numerous of our commonwealth. This Bill, which has been asked for for a long time by the laboring class, in no way contemplates to restrict immigration into Canada. The Canadian people, Mr. Speaker, have always declared themselves earnestly in favor of immigration. We want immigrants. The people acknowledge that from immigration they will draw elements of prosperity and serious guarantees of improvement. Canada, it cannot be denied, possesses vast tracts of land. We have the North-West Territories, the Saskatchewan Valley and Manitoba, which contain treasures of fertility and riches which, to become public property, require to be worked. And, Mr. Speaker, when one considers that Canada, with an area as large as that of all Europe, as yet only numbers 4,500,000 inhabitants, one is inclined to think of the number of years which must elapse before all these resources can be put into working order; before we can work our mines, our lakes, our prairies, and our rural fields. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the laboring class are in favor of immigration. Every one is agreed on this point; but it is necessary that we should know well the points to which that immigration should be directed. It is necessary above all, Mr. Speaker, that we should know that it is the country that has need of immigration, not the cities. It is above all necessary that we should know that it is not mechanics that are wanted, but agricultural laborers. The Bill proposed by the hon. member for Leeds, has no doubt for its object to check the flood of immigration of the mechanic class, which steadily increases and is altogether detrimental to the interests of Canadian workmen. An enlightened glance is sufficient to force the conviction that the mill and the workshop will always find the hands they require among Canadian workmen. Why then, Mr. Speaker, should we go abroad to seek for mechanics? Why should we desire to multiply the number of mechanics in Canada? Would it, perchance, be with the object of causing wages to be lowered? Here is a singular way of being useful to the laboring class! That is not, I believe, the mission that the representatives of the people have to fulfil. And besides, it would be a singular system of colonisation; it would be a singular means to take to improve the material position of the laboring class in Canada. No, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the hon. members of this House would do an act of justice by taking into immediate consideration the Bill proposed by the hon. member for Leeds and above all, by passing it. If, as pointed out by the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Casey) we have the right to protect the Canadian products against the competition of foreign products; if we have the right to protect our industries; we ought also to protect the laboring classes. We should apply the same principle to the workmen of our country. I am far from being actuated by any feeling of exclusiveness; but, after all, if in the large cities and in all the industrial centres of Canada, there are hundreds of mechanics out of employment; if we see every year a certain number of Canadian mechanics still forced to leave their country—although for some years, thanks to the National Policy, the number of such has considerably decreased—I do not hesitate to say that by continuing to apply the National Policy to workmen, we shall see the number of Canadians who go to the United States not only decreasing, but perhaps disappearing altogether. And, moreover, we may perhaps see what we all hope for, a considerable number coming back to our country. I say, then, that if we still have workmen who are out of work here, it is altogether useless to go and seek for any abroad. The Bill which is now before the House, if it should be passed, would considerably protect our working classes. I remember, some years ago, certain Canadian manufacturers crossed the Atlantic for the purpose of bringing out 300 or 400 German and Italian workmen, whom they brought here under false representations, to replace Canadian workmen. The National Policy had enabled these manufacturers to considerably increase their business; it had put them on the road to fortune, and yet these men, from selfishness, I am inclined to believe, would not allow Canadian workmen to profit by the advantages which the National Policy had secured to them. Well, Mr. Speaker, I firmly hope that this House will consider this Bill which is earnestly asked for by the laboring class; this Bill which is indispensable to them, and the need of which has been felt for a very long time. The laws of the United States prevent American manufacturers from coming here to engage Canadian workmen by contract. Well, why cannot we retaliate? We actually retaliate in all that relates to manufactured articles; we can do precisely the same thing for our workmen. Besides, the United States have passed that law several years ago. France, last year, passed a nearly similar law for the protection.

of its workmen against the competition of Italian and German workmen. England is on the point of passing a law similar to that which exists in the United States. I am at a loss to know why Canada should not adopt the same course. Is it because we do not feel as much interest as other countries in the well-being of the working classes? Is it because we do not desire as much as they do to see them prosperous and happy? I hope we do. Well, if such is the feeling of the hon. members of this House, if they really desire to see the working classes happy and prosperous, they certainly ought to give their most earnest consideration to the Bill now proposed to them, and which, without injuring any one, would be useful to thousands of citizens.

Mr. HESSON. I rise for the purpose not only of making an explanation, but replying to the remarks of the hon. member for Bothwell.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The hon. member is not in order and I have the floor. He has spoken already.

Mr. WALLACE. I move the adjournment of the House.

Mr. HESSON. If the hon. gentleman had allowed me the privilege, which is usually given to hon. members, I would not have put my hon. friend to the inconvenience of moving the adjournment of the House, in order to afford me a few moments of explanation in reply to the observations made by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) and the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey). I thought that this question was of sufficient importance to have caused hon. gentlemen opposite to refrain from dragging in the effects of the National Policy on the labor markets of Canada. I had hoped that this question, one of such vast interest especially to our laboring classes, was of sufficient importance to have called for the quietest and calmest consideration of the issues involved. But both these hon. gentlemen were bound to have their fling at the National Policy, and stated that the laborers of Canada were forced to emigrate to the United States in spite of the hopes thrown out when that policy was introduced that it would give employment to our own people. I regret exceedingly that no question can be brought before this House which hon. gentlemen opposite will consider on its own merits. In a matter of such importance as the one under consideration, I should have expected the hon. gentlemen opposite to assist the Government in framing some policy—whether of the kind that would involve legislation similar to that which the Americans have adopted, and which would prevent American laborers coming into Canada for employment, unless they brought their families here, or of any other legislation deemed suitable under the circumstances—without wandering into a discussion of the National Policy. If hon. gentlemen opposite would reflect, they could not fail to perceive that if our laborers, with the slight taxation imposed upon them in this country, seek a field for employment in the United States, where there is a protective tariff of the most rigid description, their course cannot be prompted by any desire to escape the burden of taxation here. The hon. member for Bothwell knows, as well as any hon. member in this House—for he lives in the western part of Ontario—that we have lost valuable Canadian citizens, not because we did not try to give them employment, but because the tariff in this country was probably too low to afford employment to all those who sought it, and they consequently went to the American side. The hon. member for Lambton and the hon. member for South Essex could inform the House that there has been a large emigration to the American side on account of the law compelling men who work in the States to live there with their families; and they know that many of these men are employes of the Grand Trunk Railway, which is purely a Canadian enterprise, and all the capital invested in which is English or Canadian capital. These men are, in their daily work, obliged to cross the St. Clair and Detroit rivers, and on the American frontier they are informed that before they can be allowed to continue their work they must bring over their families. If there is anything lacking, it is that our protective policy has not been as strong as that of the United States, or it would, perhaps, have given more employment to our people than it has. Hon. gentlemen opposite should assist this Government in their course towards the American authorities, and in their endeavor to urge upon the American authorities, that if this labor law was not intended to apply to Canada, it should be withdrawn, or the officers on the frontier should be advised by the Washington Government not to enforce it against Canadians. They should assist the Government in some way to get even terms, at all events; and if it must come to that, I will support the Bill of my hon. friend if nothing better can be done, and have an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth. If the Americans, with their sixty-five million population, can afford to disregard the good feeling that ought to exist with their neighbor who, though smaller in numbers, has as great capacities and as great a future—if they can afford to disregard what is fair and just to a country which has treated them justly and fairly, there is no reason why we should not adopt similar legislation in our interests. That the Americans should enforce such a policy against a neighboring country and prevent our laborers living on the Canadian frontier from crossing the line to their work and returning to their families at night, is a most contemptible proceeding towards a country which, though smaller in point of population, has as great a future and as much independence as their more powerful neighbor.

Mr. GILLMOR. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken said, the other day, that if he had his way he would not allow a bushel of wheat or oats to come into Canada from the United States. He wants an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth. That is the foundation of the policy of the Government. They have practiced retaliation from the beginning, and retaliation is a natural outcome of protection. This labor law of the Americans is the natural result of their policy. The laboring classes in the United States have found out that they are not protected by the high tariff, and that the thirty-five and fifty per cent. duty has not benefited them, and, consequently, they are now seeking for protection by keeping out foreign labor. I am a free trader, and opposed to retaliation. The policy I would advocate towards the United States is one of conciliation. But the present Administration seems to be drawing in their horns a little.

They were very bold when they put the duty on fruit baskets, and no doubt they had good reason for doing so, because our friends across the border were small enough and mean enough to put a duty on tin cans used for canning fish. That game has been going on for a long time, and now we are coming to the natural fruits of protection on both sides of the line. Of course, I do not know what is the best to be done, but I think the Government should have some policy on this subject. As to the question of labor, we know something about it in my country, because we have suffered there. Our lumbering men have been in the habit for years of going to the State of Maine and taking their horses and men there to operate in winter time. Now they have been stopped. One of my constituents last year took a contract to lumber in some part of Maine or New Hampshire—I do not know which—he went there with his crew of men from Canada; and, while he was there, some information was given against him and he had to flee from that country. His operations were broken up, and he had to get back to Canada as quickly as he could, in order to save a fine of something like $2,000. He dare not go back to that country. Conciliator as I am and free trader as I am, I must say this is very trying. These friendly relations, so far as workmen going from New Brunswick to Maine and from Maine to New Brunswick, have existed for so many years, that it is very annoying to have this law operating against us, and it is very injurious to our interests. It is particularly annoying in view of the fact that, in the cotton mill in St. Stephen's, which was placed there, as it was supposed, to give employment to Canadians, we have 200 or 300 operatives employed—not as skilled laborers—who live in Calais, in the State of Maine. They receive their money in Canada, they are employed in Canada, and live in the State of Maine. Yet, when our people go over to work in lumbering, the law is enforced and they are driven back or compelled to become citizens of the United States. In fact, I am informed that some have had to go there and become citizens before they could hire their men. Then the men go across and are hired there, and then they can go on with their operations, but they must become naturalised before they can do what they have been accustomed to do there for so many years. I know this is a difficult matter for the Government to deal with, but I am pleased to see that they are beginning to look at these matters reasonably. This makes manifest the close and tender relations between Canada and the United States, and shows that this policy of stand-off, of Canada looking out for Canadians and the United States for their own subjects, should cease. This policy of protection and of retaliation is ripening, and I think we should pursue a policy of conciliation instead of one of retaliation. I do not know whether the Government have been informed in reference to what I have stated in regard to my county, but the people I represent complain that, while they are prevented from going over to the States to labor there as they have done for so many years, they see half the employés in the large cotton mill in St. Stephen's, who are Americans living in Calais, in the State of Maine, obtaining labor and money from a Canadian institution. Even for free traders who would like to get on harmoniously with the neighboring Republic, this is hard to bear. It is very irritating, but I should think it would be the duty of the Government to look into the matter, and, if any relief can be afforded or any arrangement come to, they should see that our people are treated there as we treat the citizens of the United States here.

Mr. FERGUSON (Welland). This is a matter of very great and vital importance to my constituency. I quite disagree with the hon. member who has just spoken (Mr. Gillmor) on the subject of conciliation. We have done a great deal in the way of conciliation, we have paid much for conciliation, we have deprived our citizens of many of their rights for the sake of conciliation, and I am certain this country can never purchase conciliation. The only way in which we can get fair play is to stand on our broad territory and assert our rights. When we do that to the fullest extent, I am sure we will be respected by the American people, and I am sure that, if we require anything for our national existence, which I deny, if we require anything for our future prosperity and comfort in this country, we shall only get it by standing on a broad ground of Canadian nationality in this country. We shall never get it by bowing at the altar of the American Government, or of the American parties, whether Democrat or Republican. We shall never get it by kneeling at their feet and begging for something in the interests of our people. We have been trying the plan of conciliation for a number of years, and my constituency has paid a large price for the sake of conciliation in the way of abandoning all duties on fruits and fruit trees. I tell the House that the abandonment of those duties by the American Government was a delusion and a snare. They professed to have complied with the conditions of the old Act of Parliament which was enacted in this country in 1848, which crept into the Act which made it a part of the National Policy of this country. Taking advantage of this old clause in the Act, the Americans took off, as they said, the duty upon fruits and fruit trees. After that was apparently done, they put such heavy charges upon the papers required to make entries, upon the entries themselves, and so forth, that the fees you had to pay amounted to a protection of from 25 to 100 per cent. in favor of the fruit-growers in the United States. There is no good faith kept by them in any of these things. Take the case of the Grand Trunk at Niagara Falls, which has been running since about 1856. The terminus is on the American side of the river. The employés who have been at work on that road for about 30 years have been given notice that, unless they domicile themselves in the State of New York, they cannot be employed on that side of the river. These are people who are paid by Canadian money, who work on a road built by Canadian and British capital, and yet they are told they cannot domicile within British territory and do the work of Canadian employers in the State of New York. I have a petition from the Board of Trade of Niagara Falls, setting forth these facts. These employés have their little homes on the Canadian side of the river, which they have built up by their industry and their hard-earned money, and they have to abandon those homes and go and board on the other side of the river, or they will not be allowed to work any longer on that side. This was put in force not by the protectionist party of the United States, not by the party which adopted the National Policy of the United States—the Republican party. This great obstruction was put in force by the Democrats, the free trade party of the United States, if there is such a thing as a free trade party in the United States at all. It was the late President and Democratic party of the United States who adopted this principle. They sent a man monthly to the yards of the Grand Trunk Railway, to examine where people are domiciled who work there. If they are not domiciled in the United States, the companies are given notice that they must dismiss these people, or they will be liable to a fine of $1,000 for every man that they employ. Sir, it is a source of very great aggravation, it is something that one can scarcely understand and believe in this nineteenth century, that people professing to be the most liberal people, the most democratic people, the most generous people in the world, should deprive a man of the privilege of earning bread and butter, simply because his house did not happen to be built within the United States. I am anxious that something should be done by which this evil may be remedied; but I am just as well satisfied as I am satisfied of my existence, that nothing can be done in the way of prostrating this country before the American people. The only course you can take is to live in this country independently, just as if no such country as the Republic of the United States existed at all. We have all the resources necessary to greatness, we have everything that is essential to our well-being, to our happiness, to our comfort, to our prosperity; and I must say that after holding out the hand of good-fellowship for years, when we find that we are spurned, that we are despised, it is time for us to withdraw our hand, and say to the people of the United States: We can live as if you had no existence at all, and our intention for the future is to live independently of you.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I am very much surprised at the speech of my hon. friend. He has spoken from a western standpoint, but if his views were carried out in the Maritime Provinces, dissatisfaction as the people are there now with Confederation, that dissatisfaction would be increased tenfold. My hon. friend speaks about a remedy by means of this Bill; if he would be consistent, let him push forward and bring in a Bill cutting off all intercourse between Canada and the United States. In spite of all restrictions upon trade, our trade with the United States is increasing every year. The hon. gentleman says we ought to stand upon our Canadian nationality. Sir, we are handicapped continually in our Canadian nationality by the position we occupy as a colony of Great Britain, and we find that the very rights we are contending for are to be given away in the interests of the Imperial Government. I say that, so far as we are concerned, let us work for our own country, and, as was suggested by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), let us take such steps, that we can appoint our own commissioners to the United States; men who will look after our rights, and pay that attention to Canadian interests which I do not believe they have received from the present diplomatic service of the mother country, I believe when we get that done the spirit of retaliation which, to a large extent, is evidenced by this Bill, will very soon disappear. Now, this Bill is bad in principle and bad in detail. It has been put forward by my hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Casey), and in effect admitted by hon. gentlemen opposite, that this is simply the outcome of the National Policy, that it is a necessary result of our policy of protecting manufacturers, while the laboring classes are to be crushed between the upper and the nether millstone, and the consumers, the farmers, the fishermen, the lumbermen, and all others who are not engaged in certain manufactures, are to be taxed continually for the purpose of protecting the manufacturers. Now, the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Hesson) has stated that we are very lightly taxed, if so, how is it that people go to the United States, where they are so much heavier taxed than we are? It used to be contended, at one time, that Canada was a cheap country to live in, in order that we might get a foreign immigration. But that system has been done away with, and a heavy system of taxation has been adopted that is sending our people elsewhere. What we want to-day is population, this country is starving for population. Yet here we are asked to enact laws which will keep out not merely the people from the United States, but the people of the whole world. We are now trying to induce immigration from Europe, the Mennonites, the Scandinavians, the Germans, and yet we are asked to place upon our Statute-book a law which, if it is put in operation like the laws in the United States, will prevent all these immigrants from entering our country. If, as has been urged, undue advantage has been taken of this Act by parties in the United States, that is a matter which the Administration of this country ought to take hold of. It is true that after that law has been passed by Congress, the executive is obliged to put it in force; but if it has been used for improper purposes to the injury of our own people, then it is the duty of this Administration to take the matter up and defend our people in the courts of the United States. Let them protect our people and assist them in having this wrong construction of the law abandoned; let them call to it the attention of the American Government, so that the injustice may be remedied. The hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Denison), spoke of the case of the clergyman in New York, who was sued for this penalty. So far as I understood, that action was brought for the very purpose of showing the absurdity of such a law as this. I say that such a law as this is a humiliation and a disgrace to the United States, and I contend that we should not be guilty of a similar legislation, but we should rise above such a policy. My hon. friend from Welland (Mr. Ferguson), speaks of retaliation. Why, for the last ten years we have had nothing but retaliation. We were told this National Policy would bring the United States to our feet. When it was started in 1878, Sir Charles Tupper said that in two years it would bring the Americans to sue of this country for trade relations. It has failed to do so. We have gone on in that spirit, and the result has been to create a hostile spirit instead of that amicable feeling which ought to exist between the two countries. Instead of legislation of this sort being adopted, we ought to live in amity, and endeavor to work together in harmony. A short time ago we asserted on this side of the House, that a large number of Canadians had gone to the United States, and the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) asked to have that question investigated, and to test the assertion about a large exodus from this country to the south of us. We were then told, over and over again, that the exodus was greatly exaggerated, but to-day it is put forward with regard to this law, that it prevents our people from going into the United States to seek employment. We were told that under the National Policy our people would remain at home, that they would not need to go to the United States, that they would find sufficient employment in this country. All that now turns out to be a mistake. As I said before, we are battling the whole world. I am not sure but that under the construction of this Bill we might not keep out people from every country. I do not say such is the case, but it may be that when this Act is put in force we would find that not only would it prevent people from coming in from the United States, but it would also prevent them coming from the mother country, and from every other country. I do not mean to say that that would be the construction placed upon it, but it might be open to that construction, and this circumstance shows that the principle in an entirely vicious one. I agree with the Minister of Justice that the second clause of the Bill does not come within the power of this Parliament to enact. There are also other matters of detail deserving serious consideration. If this Bill were put into force, manufactories which have been claimed as having been created by the National Policy might be closed, because skilled workmen could not be imported from the other side of the line. The hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor) has pointed out that the great cotton mill in New Brunswick obtains its skilled workmen from the United States; and in other large manufactories throughout the country there are very many workmen from the United States, and from England and Scotland, and yet under this Bill that labor could not be imported. The details are, however, unimportant as compared with the principle of the Bill. That principle is vicious. The principle of retaliation is one that is unworthy of our position. Let us rise above any such principle; for it is no reason that because others do wrong, we should do wrong. Let us base our laws on the principles of peace, order and good government, and not on the principle of retaliation, or on the principle of endeavoring to build up a Chinese wall to entirely exclude one country from dealing with the other; for it would be necessary to carry out the principle put forward by the member for Welland (Mr. Ferguson), to actually pass a law to prohibit our railway trains and steamships entering the United States.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I desire to offer a few remarks upon the Bill of my hon. friend for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) now before the House. During the summer of 1889 I was quite cognizant of the high degree of injustice meted out to Canadian mechanics and workmen in some of the border towns lying opposite the constituency I have the honor to represent. During the months of July or August, I think, a dozen or so of mechanics went across to Ogdensburg to obtain employment in connection with a public work in course of erection there. At the same time, I may remark, that Americans were coming over from the village of Morristown, on the other side, to Brockville, where some public works were in course of erection, and were there obtaining employment. Our citizens were justly indignant when one morning—one Monday afternoon I think it was—those workmen appeared in somewhat of a hurry at Brockville, declaring that they had been approached by one of the United States officials on the other side, who, in a most peremptory manner, told them to leave that country for Canada. They were not even allowed to go to their boarding house; they were not allowed one hour in which to remain in the country. They were guarded from the place where they were working to the cars they were to take for Morristown, and they were guarded until they boarded the ferry for the Canadian side. What rendered this case especially onerous, and apparently unjustifiable in the minds of those who were not aware of this Act, was the fact that we were granting employment to Americans, who came from the other side, in the town of Brockville at this very time. It must be remembered that from the head of Lake Ontario down to Montreal the Canadian side furnishes more employment, in this reciprocal way for labor, than the towns on the other side of the river. I make that statement fearless of successful contradiction; because, with the exception of Ogdensburg, there is between the city of Kingston and Montreal, no town of any considerable importance whatever on the American side. I, at that time, deemed it my duty to communicate with the Government and urge upon them the necessity of taking some action in the matter. I was glad to hear they had done so. It occurred to me, as it must occur to almost every person who reflects on the subject, that the legislation in the matter proposed by the hon. member for South Leeds, must be attended with very great difficulty. First, it must, to say the least, be very doubtful whether this Parliament has any jurisdiction to pass and enact such a law. I do not think it has that power. In the second place, if this Parliament did have jurisdiction to enact such a law, would it be in the best interests of the Canadian people that any such law should be enacted? Two wrongs do not make a right; and I can only repeat what I said in a communication addressed to the Herald, not the Montreal Herald, but the next best paper, the New York Herald, at the request of that paper, during the time those difficulties were exciting considerable attention throughout the entire country. I said then, and I wish to repeat it now here, because I have not changed my mind on the subject, that the whole difficulty was not so much in the enactment of Congress as in the manner in which the American officials interpreted it. I do not believe that in the case of those workmen who went from Gananoque and Brockville to the other side and there obtained work, the Act was properly enforced. The men were living in Canada; they left this country and went to the United States in search of work; they did not go to the United States in pursuance of any contract previously entered into. Upon that point I addressed the following letter, which was merely the expression of my opinion as a lawyer on the subject. Whether it was owing to the attitude assumed by my pugnacious friend from South Leeds (Mr. Taylor), who is always seeking to protect the interests of his constituents, whether it was owing to anything I may, in my humble way, have contributed or not, I know very well that after these efforts had been put forth, and the Government of this country had made representations—and I had been assured they were making representations—those difficulties ceased, and to-day we have practically very little trouble along the border, at least along the border of the constituency I represent. I stated in that letter as follows:—

“The main object of the United States Alien Contract Labor Law was to prohibit the importation of aliens under contract to compete with American wage-earners by working for less wages in the United States. Such, at least, is the impression which prevails regarding the law in foreign countries, and such was the understanding of some Canadian workmen who, living along the border, crossed over to the United States and engaged in work there as they had been accustomed to do in previous years.

“I may say that the privilege, if privilege it can be considered, is reciprocal on the part of both countries, especially among the people on either side of the River St. Lawrence. Great, therefore, was the surprise and indignation of some Canadian mechanics, who, while employed in Ogdensburg, were approached by a United States official, ordered to quit their work and leave the country forthwith. And so careful was the official to see that his orders were carried into effect, that the Canadian workmen were not lost sight of for a moment, until they boarded the boat that was to take them from Morris-town, N. Y., to Brockville, Ont., where they lived.

“This unlooked for and summary treatment of these men excited a great deal of indignation among people on this side of the border, the utmost cordiality having always existed between the communities bordering upon either side of the river.

“As stated above the main object of the Legislature appears to have been to prevent the importation of aliens under contract to compete with American workmen. Now, these Canadians, who were dismissed from their work and ordered to leave the country, voluntarily left Canada, and were not under contract to any Americans, but obtained the work for which they went into the foreign country, on their arrival there. This took their case outside the scope of the law in question. I believe it has been urged on the part of those acting in the enforcement of the law against those Canadians that they were in the habit of crossing the river and going to their homes on Saturday nights, returning to their work on Monday morning, and by coming into the country in this way after they had entered into a contract for the work had been guilty of violating the law. But this is not to be entertained for a moment. It was a violation of neither the spirit nor meaning of the law which was in the mind of the Legislature at the time of its enactment.

“In those portions, respectively, of the State of New York and the Province of Ontario bordering upon the River St. Lawrence, there is very little difference in the rate of wages, and it is not an uncommon thing to find American workmen seeking to obtain employment on the Canadian side. In fact there were instances of this to be seen here at the very time when the Canadians were sent from the United States back to their own country. In view of the very close business relations between the people on both sides of the line, it will be, in my opinion, most unwise, if not impossible, to strongly enforce the said Act as against Canadians.

“The instructions contained in the letter of Acting Secretary Batcheller to the Collector of Customs at Cape Vincent, N.Y., indicate that the United States Government are sensible of the difficulty, not to say impossibility, of enforcing such a law between the two countries.

“I am satisfied that, in its application to Canadian workmen in the St. Lawrence district, the Act has met with a strange interpretation at the hands of the United States officials. To say the least, it has a very unneighborly look, causing ill-feeling and accomplishing little or no good.”

Now I have not changed my views since that time, and I quite agree with the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) in the remarks he has made to-night. What this Government ought to do, and what this Government I believe has done, in the interest of these workmen who have been annoyed in this way, is to make a representation, as strong as diplomacy will permit, in order to let the United States authorities see that a proper and a reasonable interpretation has not been placed upon this Act. I can quite understand, Sir, that an official—perhaps at the instigation of interested parties—may act unjustly or arbitrarily and contrary to the spirit of the law. I have, however, faith enough in the good sense of the people of the United States that, if the matter is brought to their notice, in the proper spirit, the harsh enforcement of these regulations will be relaxed. In reference to some remarks which have fallen from our friends on the other side, I may say, before concluding, that I do not see how unrestricted reciprocity would remedy this state of things, because with the largest measure of unrestricted reciprocity, we would still be foreigners coming under the operation of this Act. No matter what our trade relations are, whether we are governed by the system of protection or whether we have unrestricted reciprocity, that is not going to at all relieve us of the present difficulty. The only thing which can in any sense lessen what is a very great inconvenience, and a very great loss to some of our people, is that the United States Government be impressed with the great necessity which exists of so enforcing a regulation, or a law of this kind, so that the pleasant relations existing between the two countries may not be disturbed.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). I coincide to a very large extent in the tone of the remarks of my hon. friend who has just taken his seat. I think my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) when he unfolded to us to-day the efforts he had taken, at an early stage, to protect the rights of Canadians, will be apt in the history of this country to take rank with Governor Foraker, and those gentlemen of the United States who have declared that we were on the verge of war. I tremble for the interests of this country, if my hon. friend in his raid down through these peaceable waters, had succeeded in apprehending any American boats, and I fear the results which must have followed from that encounter. I think it is fortunate for us on this occasion that his warlike demonstration has succeeded so effectively in frightening the Americans from coming into Canadian waters. Aside from that, I really do not think my friend has very much to complain of. The shoe pinches in this particular case in his own locality; and, after all, let me ask, are the Americans not doing exactly for America what he and his friends claimed they were doing for Canada: keeping Canada from the Canadians—while they are simply keeping the United States for the Americans. If the protective system as advocated by him and his friends, is to be of any value at all, it must be built up for the special purpose of having everything for ourselves. I believe that occasions like this, and discussions like this, must clearly show to every unprejudiced mind, that if our relations are to continue as they have for years past with the United States, something more friendly than this system of “fencing off” each other in this fashion, will have to exist between the two countries. I think this is one of the strongest evidences that the National Policy, when carried out in its entirety, does not exactly work in the interests of all parties, as these gentlemen would lead us to believe. The current of our trade relations with the United States, for the last three years especially, goes to show, most distinctly, that, in spite of the two great walls we have built up on each side of the boundary line, the people of the United States, and we ourselves, find it to be in the interest of both parties to trade more and more with each other every year. If any one will look at the last trade returns of Canada with Great Britain, as published in the Montreal Gazette of to-day, he will find (while the Finance Minister has been rejoicing in the increase of exports and imports, and the consequent bounding revenue into the Treasury for the last seven months of the fiscal year) that for the month of January last our trade with Great Britain has shrunk immensely as compared with the corresponding month of last year. On the other hand our trade has correspondingly grown with the United States. I would like to remind my friend from the County of Welland (Mr. Ferguson) when he speaks so feelingly—and I confess from his standpoint with very good grounds, of the manner in which the workmen employed by the Grand Trunk Railway, paid by Canadian money, are treated by the Americans in their relation with them, just across the boundary of his own county—of this increased traffic between the United States and Canada, as witnessed by the returns of the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway. And when you remember the operation of the inter-state law upon American trade within the United States boundaries, it is not much wonder that they look around for another process by which they can squeeze these railway companies while keeping themselves within the bounds of the law. This whole matter goes to show clearly to my mind that it is to the interest of both Canada and the United States to cultivate friendly relations—that it is our future destiny, however much we may kick against it, and it is to our interest to extend and enlarge those friendly trade relations at the earliest possible moment, so that we shall arrive at a more equitable basis on which to discuss our fisheries and labor relations. Just so soon as we place ourselves in that position there will be a clear gain to both countries, and I do not care how soon that reality comes. In the history of the development of this country, sooner or later, the common sense of both parties will lead to that result. While I am pleased that this discussion has taken place, and pleased at the tone with which the hon. member for Brockville (Mr. Wood) has discussed it, I do feel satisfied that it is not along the lines laid down by the hon. member for Leeds that we should be found travelling in order to overcome this difficulty, although we may attempt to carry out the National Policy in that line; but I believe that we are to find a solution of the difficulty in cultivating those friendly relations which are steadily growing and increasing between the United States and Canada, and which will be productive of benefit to both countries.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I beg to move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The motion for the adjournment of the House is not withdrawn, and before it is, I wish to say a word on the observations made by the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Ferguson). I think the hon. gentleman must be under a misapprehension, because there is nothing in the United States Contract Labor Law which at all interferes with a contract between an alien and any person in the United States, if the contract is made within the United States.

Mr. HESSON. The hon. gentleman is out of order. He has already spoken on the question.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman forgets that the motion for the adjournment was made at his instance.

Mr. HESSON. And the hon. gentleman who made the motion has withdrawn it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The motion is not withdrawn.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I heard the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace), who moved the motion, withdraw it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). He could not withdraw it without the consent of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand that the motion was not put from the Chair.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It was put from the Chair, and it was not withdrawn. Now, I know cases of contractors in the State of Michigan being prosecuted for employing Canadians. They pleaded that the contract between themselves and the Canadian laborers was entered into in the State of Michigan, and their contention was upheld by the court that that contract did not come within the provisions of the law. And I know that to-day there are hundreds of persons living in Windsor who are employed in Detroit, and no objection is made to their employment, because their contract was entered into in the city of Detroit, and not on this side of the boundary.

Mr. TISDALE. Last year the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) introduced into this Parliament a measure, the principle of which I supported, in favor of extradition, even if the United States would not grant the same thing to us. The present Bill is in the same direction, and while I do not approve of the action of the United States, I do disapprove of a similar action on the part of this Parliament, because two wrongs do not make a right. I do not think there is any necessity at the present time for any law of this sort. I understand from public report that negotiations are now going on at Washington; and while any hon. gentleman in this House knows that I am not in favor of trucking in any way to the United States, I am, on the other hand, decidedly against any legislation that will excite feelings of irritation until it is known whether the negotiations between the two countries will come to anything or not. Therefore, I hold that any legislation of this kind at the present time is injurious, improper and uncalled for. Let us wait to see if we can arrange matters; and whatever the result may be, though it should involve force, I am prepared, as my past record shows, to stand up against the United States if necessary for the rights of Canada; but until then, the same arguments which led me to support the measure of the hon. member for Albert last year apply to the motion now before the House. Until the negotiations now going on prove to be abortive, I regret that any such Bill as this should be brought before the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It appears that there is a motion for the adjournment of the House before the Chair, and as the hon. gentleman desires to withdraw it, I presume the House will allow him to do so, in order that I may move that the debate be adjourned.

Mr. LAURIER. I think we had better adjourn now. It would make a bad impression if we adjourn the debate.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think it would make a bad impression if we did not adjourn the debate.

Motion to adjourn withdrawn.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. Before that motion is carried I should like to ask that the next Order be called. It is only a very short Bill.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I intended, if that order were reached, to ask the hon. gentleman to allow it to stand, as there will no doubt be legislation on that subject brought down by the Government, and it will be better to consider it then.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. If the Government will include my Bill in theirs, I am quite willing.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The Government are still considering that subject, and I am not able to give the hon. gentleman an answer, but I will give him an answer later on.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 11:15 p. m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 23rd February, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE DEBATES.

Mr. DESJARDINS moved:

That the first report of the committee appointed to supervise the official report of the Debates, be adopted.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. If I read the report rightly, it recommends that the Government Printing Bureau should appoint a special proof-reader for the Hansard. The Government have no objection to that, but I am at a loss to know whether it would not be better for the Debates Committee to ask authority to appoint that officer themselves, so that he might be completely under their control, instead of being an officer of the Printing Bureau. Of course, if the suggestion of the Committee be carried out, so much will be added to the expenditure of the Printing Bureau, and I shall be obliged to ask a vote of the House for that appointment.

Mr. ELLIS. I understand the report to mean that the proof-reading, being a mechanical thing, should be done by the office itself. I do not understand it to recommend the appointment of a special officer to do the work.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The report reads:

"Whereas complaints have been made to the effect that the revised edition of the French edition of the Debates is not correctly printed—"

Mr. ELLIS. The Committee do not say so. They merely say that it is reported to them.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The Committee would not ask the House to remedy defects if they did not recognise that defects existed. They recommend that, as the work is now done at the Government Printing Bureau, the head of the Department be requested to take the necessary steps to secure the services of a competent proof-reader.

Mr. INNES. The action which the Committee took was taken on a communication which was sent to them complaining that the proof-reading was not correctly done. That is the true position of the case, and it was on that communication that the Committee considered the matter and framed their report. The majority of the Committee agreed with what the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis) has said, that it was mere mechanical work, that the first correction of the proof in English was done at the Printing Bureau, and the same should be done in regard to the French proof. That was all we recommended, our desire being to have an accurate correction of the first proof in French in the same way as in regard to the English proof.

Mr. LAURIER. I think there is some misapprehension as to the nature of the report of the Committee. As far as I understand, the Committee recommend that the head of the Department should take steps to see that certain errors in the printing should be remedied. My hon. friend the Secretary of State comes to the conclusion that this authorises him to have another proof-reader added to the staff of the Department. I do not know that that is the conclusion to which the Committee came.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The only fault of the Printing Department is, that they have printed too correctly what was incorrectly sent to them.

Mr. LAURIER. As to the recommendation which has been made by the Committee, there seems to be some difference of opinion as to what is intended, and perhaps the report had better stand over until we can understand better what is intended.

Mr. DESJARDINS. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I think this is a portion that concerns somewhat the French language, and there seems to be some misunderstanding as to what it is all about. Here are the facts of the case: Complaints were made to the effect that the general correction of the French edition was not made in such a way as to comply with what is required, in order that the volume containing the French version should be a document giving the correct idea of the French language, such as it is spoken or written in this country. Now, what some members asked for, was, that steps should be taken to secure the services of a competent person to do the proof-reading so as to make the phraseology perfect. That is what is asked for by the resolution as passed by the Committee, and by reading it, the hon. leader of the Opposition will see the object of it:

"Whereas complaints have been made to this Committee to the effect that the revised edition of the French version of the Debates is not correctly printed after being translated. Your Committee would recommend, with a view of remedying such defects, both in the present and future issue of that edition, that as the work is now done at the Government Printing Bureau, the head of that Department be requested to take the necessary steps to secure the services of a competent proof-reader."

That is all the resolution.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The thing is very easily understood. The correction of the revised proof of the Hansard is left to the translators themselves. They have their work to do, and everyone who is experienced in that kind of work knows that a man who does the work of translation, if mistakes are made, will fall into the same mistakes in reading the proof. The necessity is that some one should be there to look over the whole of the proofs and revise them, outside of the translators themselves. The ordinary proof-readers of the Printing Department are not such as would do that kind of work. If there was at the head of the Translators' staff of the Hansard, a man who would have charge of that work, it would be all right, and it could be done well; but it has not been done as well as it should have been done. The Committee require that officer, but I suppose they do not want to take upon themselves the responsibility of asking the House to make that expenditure, and, therefore, they ask the Printing Department to undertake it. I say that what has been sent to the printing office has been correctly printed, but there were a number of errors in the phraseology, in the French, in the way in which it was translated, and these errors were well printed at the office, but the work was not well done before it went there.

Mr. LAURIER. It is manifest that, if this report is adopted, my hon. friend the Secretary of State concludes that he is enjoined to have a new proof-reader added to his staff. This is not the way in which the report is understood by the members of the Committee.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I want them to find him.

Mr. LAURIER. There seems to be a misapprehension, and, therefore, the report had better stand over until we understand what it does mean.

Mr. DAVIN. We discussed this question very fully, and there are four or five gentlemen on the Committee who may be regarded as experts in regard to a matter of this kind. We had no idea of recommending that any new officer should be added to the printing establishment, or to the revision of the printing. What we said was, that a competent person should be employed to do this work. That might be taken—although I do not think it could possibly bear that construction—to be a positive instruction to employ a new officer, but it might also be taken to imply that a new officer would not be necessary, but that the person who now revises the proofs is not competent, and that, instead of him, a competent person should be employed. The view we took, whether just or unjust, was that it was not our function to deal with this matter, and that it properly belonged to my hon. friend who is at the head of the Department. While speaking on this subject, I may say that on the whole the proof-reading in English has been done very well, but some proofs have come in which the proof-reading had not been done well. These are called first proofs, and what printers call literals—that is to say, letters—were in a very demoralised condition. For example, you would find "o" where "e" should be, and "u" where "n" should be, and some of the words might have been worshipped without idolatry, because they were like nothing in Heaven above, on the earth beneath, or in the waters under the earth. It is just as well that this matter has come up, because I am sure that, as the attention of the Secretary of State has been directed to it, he will give direction that no first proofs shall come up here to be corrected by an hon. member, in such a condition as to put the hon. member in the position of breaking one of the commandments. I hope the proofs will come up in such a condition as to show that the printing is well done. The corrections of unavoidable mistakes of reporters, or of mistakes made by members speaking extemporaneously, which may be made in these proofs by these members or by Mr. Boyce, are another thing, but certainly we should have nothing to do here with the technical or mechanical work which belongs to the printer.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Two or three years ago, complaints were made to the Committee that the French translation was not properly attended to, that there was no uniformity in the translation; and the Committee, having taken the matter into consideration, relieved the chief translator of the duty of performing the ordinary work of translation, and appointed him to perform the duty of supervising the work of the translators so as to make it uniform, and to make the translation what would be considered a good translation by the French members of the House. Now, this year, application was made to the Hansard Committee that a proof-reader should be appointed to supervise the proof-reading of the French translation. The Committee contended, and justly, I think, that the proof-reading of the French translation ought to be done by the proof-reader in the Bureau; that there ought to be a competent proof-reader there to discharge the duties, not only of reading the proofs of other matter, but of matter containing the official reports of the House. The proof-reader is not supposed to change the translation, to change the wording, or the sense of the translation, at all. The proof-reader is a mechanical operator, and when the manuscript is handed to the printer from the translators, it is supposed to be in perfect condition, the translation is supposed to be perfect, and all the proof-reader has to do at the Bureau is to see that the printing is in accordance with the manuscript which has been handed in to him, and which is supposed to have been perfected by the supervision of the chief translator who looks after the work of all the translators. I think the matter is a very simple one, that it is a matter which can be attended to in any ordinary printing office, and I must say that no ordinary printer would expect that a special expert should be appointed to look after the proof-reading of this particular work which is printed at the Bureau the same as any other work. I think the matter is quite plain, and that it is the duty of the head of the Printing Bureau to provide this proof-reader; and certainly any ordinary proof-reader ought to be competent to read the proofs of the French translation of the Hansard. With regard to the English edition, I will say that I think that the proof-reading is done very well, indeed. I have had occasion during this Session to read the proofs of a number of speeches delivered by hon. gentlemen in the House, and I have found that in many cases the typesetting was extraordinarily correct, that it was admirable, and I want to give the chief head of the Bureau credit for having done so well in this respect; so that I think, taking all in all, the English proof-reading is very well done. Of course, I cannot speak for the French proof-reading, but if the French proof-reader sticks to his copy and sees that the proof is in accordance with the translation, then he discharges his duty, and I have no doubt that no fault will be found with him. If any fault is to be found with the translation, then we must go back to the translators; if the work is not correctly turned out to the Bureau, it must then be the fault of the translators, because they are supposed to furnish a correct copy to the Printing Bureau, and it cannot be the fault of the proof-reader if he follows the manuscript just as it is furnished to him. I think the matter is a very simple one. If the Bureau provides a good proof-reader and the translators discharge their duty perfectly, there can be no difficulty whatever. It is supposed the translators do their duty, because, as I said before, we appointed, two Sessions ago, a chief translator to perform the task of supervising the work of all the different translators that are employed on the Hansard.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. There is where the mistake was. My hon. friend is excusable, because he did not probably see where the error was and what the complaint was. The complaint was not about errors in printing that might be attributed to the proof-reader in the printing establishment; the complaint was about the revised proofs; the work of finishing the revises to be sent to the printing offices had not been properly attended to. My hon. friend says that then it must be the fault of the translators. I do not think so. The translators do not see the revises, and I think there should be a man specially charged, as Mr. Boyce is for the English part of the Hansard, to look over the work before it is finally sent to the printing office. There is no need of a proof-reader, but there is need of a man to read over the proofs here after the translation is completed and printed, and ready to be put into the book form of the Hansard.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. That is just what we did two years ago. We appointed a chief translator to do the work which the Secretary of State says now should be done by some one. We then relieved one of the translators from the duty of translating, and we appointed him to supervise the translations of all the translators who were engaged in translating the Hansard. He is now performing the duties which the Secretary of State says ought to be performed by one particular individual; and that individual we now have in the person of the chief translator.

Mr. BLAKE. I think this might be settled by some communication between the two conflicting parties. The Hansard Committee insist that they have established proper arrangements under which a good translation in proper form is furnished to the Printing Bureau, but they say that it is not well proof-read. The Secretary of State, on the other hand, stands up for his Department, and says that it is too well proof-read, that it is accurately reproduced, and that the difficulty is that he does not get it in proper shape from the staff under the control of the Hansard Committee. I think, under these circumstances, it is impossible for the House to solve the difficulty. It certainly will not be solved by another proof-reader, because the step which has been taken, as explained by my hon. friend who has just spoken, is one which exactly meets the condition which the Secretary of State required, namely, the chief translator was relieved from the duty of original translation and was assigned to the duty of taking up and putting together the finished translation, and making it ready for the printer. Well, when that is done, if the Secretary of State's officer is a good proof-reader, and the work is perfectly reproduced, then we will have to go further back and find that the mistake was in the original speaker.

Mr. DESJARDINS. The report makes only a recommendation, and there is no action to be taken by the House. The recommendation is, that the printing establishment ought to do the proof-reading correctly. I think the position taken by my hon. friend from North Brant (Mr. Somerville) is exactly what the Department understood, that is to say, that the Department should secure a good proof-reader, because we have already secured a good translation, so far as we were able to do it.

Mr. LAURIER. We want to get at the real recommendation of the Committee. The Secretary of State understood that the Committee recommended that a new proof-reader should be appointed and added to the staff.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Yes.

Mr. LAURIER. As I understand it, the Committee does not recommend anything of the kind, but they recommend that the Secretary of State should provide them, with the means now at his disposal, some one to do the proof-reading properly. The two things are quite dissimilar. It is important to know what we want. If the report simply means that the Secretary of State is to see that the officers of his Department do their duty properly, as they can do it now, I am quite ready to adopt the report; but if the report means that a new officer is to be added to the staff, then that is another thing, but I do not think that is the meaning of the Committee. Therefore, it is absolutely important to know what is really wanted by the Committee. If the Committee recommend that there is ample material in that staff, as now constituted, to do the work, but that the work is not properly done, and that the Secretary of State ought to see that it is properly done, then I am quite willing to adopt this report, but not otherwise.

Mr. FOSTER. I would suggest that as there is a difference of opinion in the Committee itself, the matter should be allowed to stand over for to-day. We are taking up a good deal of valuable time.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. There is no difference of opinion in the Committee; the Committee are unanimous.

Mr. FOSTER. It is impossible for the House to come to a decision at present, and I think it may be as well to let the question stand over.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The Committee were unanimous in the opinion that they had discharged their duty in the matter of furnishing correct reports and correct translations. They say that if there is to be any other proof-reader appointed, it is not for them to appoint him; that they furnish the manuscript translation to the Printing Bureau in a perfect state, and that it is the duty of the Printing Bureau to turn that manuscript out perfectly printed. The Committee do not want a proof-reader; all we want is that the Printing Bureau shall do the work in a workmanlike manner.

Motion allowed to stand.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Compensation to Pensioners in lieu of land. $1,800

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I should like to know from the Minister of Militia, whether he has taken any action in the matter of the pension to the family of Sergeant Valiquette, which, we contend, was improperly granted. The First Minister promised, when the matter was brought before the House during the temporary absence of the Minister of Militia, that it would be looked into; and he said there evidently had been some mistake.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The matter was discussed last Session to the fullest possible extent; and I gave the hon. gentleman all the information I could obtain. We discussed it from the standpoint of the statute, and from the standpoint of the regulations, and I do not see what further information I can submit to the House.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. gentleman certainly gave us all the information he appeared to possess. He did not satisfy the House, however, that the family of Sergeant Valiquette should receive a larger pension than would have been coming to him if he had lived; and he did not satisfy the House that pensions should be given to father, mother, brother and sister. It was an utter and gross violation of the intentions of the Militia Act; and neither the hon. gentleman nor any hon. gentleman opposite could defend it on the ground that it was in accordance with the Act. The leader of the Government, when the matter was brought to his notice, expressed the view that it required explanation; that it did appear to be a rather unusual payment, and it should be looked into.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am prepared to repeat to the House the explanation I gave last year, and I have no other means of doing so than by laying before the House the statute, and the regulations, and the facts, as they were submitted to the Department of Militia, when the pension was discussed and passed. Sergeant Primat Valiquette, No. 4 Company, 65th Battalion, entered the Active Militia at about the age of eighteen years, and was twenty-two when he left with his battalion for the North-West, 2nd April, 1885. Was most robust. Had never been sick. Wages between $1.50 and $2.00 per diem, all went to his father. On the march from Beaver River to Fort Pitt, thirty-seven miles, marched in one day, 25th June, 1885; took sick with gastric enteritis, of which he died on the 4th July, 1885. His father, Antoine Valiquette, is fifty-eight or sixty-eight years old. He is unable to work since twenty years on account of chronic asthma. His wife is fifty years old, manages all the affairs of the family, and works outside for their living. Children: four girls, sixteen, eighteen, twenty and twenty-two years; two boys, twelve and fourteen years. All, with the father and mother, working the best they can, but family is poor, and, at times, has been depending upon public charity. Board (4th March, 1887) recommend pensions as per sections 15, 16 and 17 of Order in Council of the 8th July, 1885. Father, half widow's pension, that is, $51.33 per annum, and a pension at the same rate to the two boys until they attain the age of 18, and a pension, at the same rate, to the three youngest girls until the age of twenty-one. Then, in regard to the case of Ryan, I have this:

"Gunner John F. Ryan, No. 2 Battery, Montreal Brigade Garrison Artillery, enjoyed good health up to 23rd May, 1885. When at Regina, he was seized with symptoms of acute bronchitis, which resisted treatment owing to unfavorable weather. The patient growing worse, was admitted to the hospital on the 13th June, 1885, improved there, returned to camp and fell ill again. He was discharged and arrived in Montreal on the 29th June, 1885. He is now permanently disabled—tubercular disease of the lungs. Cannot follow his ordinary occupation as a moulder nor any heavy work. Was paid up to the 31st July, 1885. Has no means of support except his parents. Married man, wife twenty-six years old; he is now twenty-eight years old; no children. His salary was $10 to $12 per week when working. The Board (26th October, 1885) recommended that he be put in the second class, Regulation Orders 1,009. By Order in Council of the 21st January, 1887, the widow was granted an annual pension of $68.44, being the three-eighths of a daily pay of a gunner during twelve months, and, as it was afterwards found that she had a daughter, the Minister of Militia and Defence had an Order in Council passed (23rd August, 1887) granting to Mary Elizabeth Ryan, the daughter in question, a pension of $14.60 per annum, being calculated at the rate of one-thirteenth of a pay of a gunner. Paragraph 7 of General Order No. 14 of the 19th July, 1885, contains two scales of pensions: 1st, in the case of a soldier killed in action or who died from wounds received in action; and 2nd, in the case of a soldier who died from illness which can be traced to exposure in active service. This last scale is the lowest, and applies to both Valiquette and Ryan, but Mrs. Ryan's question was calculated upon the rate of pay of a gunner, whilst that of Valiquette's father on sergeant's pay, at the rate of half the pension given to a widow; and the brothers and sisters of Valiquette received the same rate of pension as per Paragraph 16 of General Order 12,214."

My hon. friend will see that in one case, the pension is calculated upon the pay of a gunner, and in the other case the calculation is made upon the pay of a sergeant.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will my hon. friend tell the House what was Sergeant Valiquette's pay, all told?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Seventy-five cents per day.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Exactly. Now, the hon. gentleman will note that he has committed the House to this extraordinary course, as I understand the case: Sergeant Valiquette's pay amounted to 75 cents per diem, or a little less than $300 a year, and, if I understand correctly, the pensions assigned to Sergeant Valiquette's collateral relatives amount to $355 a year, being $55 a year more than the total pay of the sergeant. Now, I have never heard before of a pension system which has granted pensions to the surviving relatives on a larger scale than the actual pay which the deceased enjoyed in his lifetime. It is very difficult to say how that principle can be maintained.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman knows that when the pension list was prepared, it provided in certain cases for the children or for the parents of the man who died. The basis upon which every calculation was made, was upon the pay of the deceased, because we had to establish one universal rule upon which all the pensions would be calculated.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Quite so.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It was also provided that in certain exceptional cases, the children, and father and mother of the deceased would be entitled to some pension for the loss of a person upon whom they depended absolutely for a living. It was also stipulated that when the children came of age, or if they could do for themselves after a certain time, that the pensions would cease. I can give no other explanation, because that is the explanation that was given to me by the Board. My recommendation to Council was simply laying before Council, as a matter of course, the report of the Committee appointed for the purpose of investigating every one of those individual cases, which were adjudicated upon. In making up the pensions, I knew no more of the facts of Valiquette's case than I knew of Ryan's case, but I took the facts as laid before me, and verifying that his rank in the service had been as reported to me, I had no other option than to lay the report of the Committee before Council, and to have the Order in Council passed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman does not exactly answer the point which I took, namely, that we are now granting pensions considerably in excess of the total income paid by the Government to the man when alive. This is, I submit, a thing unknown and unheard of. I have never yet heard of a case in which a pension had been granted to the relatives of the deceased, larger than the pay received, but that is what has been done in Valiquette's case. I think the decision, on the face of it, is one which appears to be absurd. The pay of a man is $300 a year while he is alive, yet you grant to his collateral relatives—neither son, daughter, nor wife—pensions collectively larger than Sergeant Valiquette received during his lifetime as his pay. As to the other point which the hon. gentleman has alluded to, if the Government, or if any Government could venture to lay down the principle that they were going to compensate a family for the loss sustained by the death of a relative, it is quite clear it might lead to very remarkable consequences. There is no doubt that cases have occurred, in which volunteers in particular, who have lost their lives, inflict a loss on their families perhaps double, or treble, or quadruple the pay they receive in their lifetime would amount to. But no Government has ever felt itself safe in adopting a principle like that.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is, however, a distinction between the general principle and the practice as admitted in this case of Valiquette. If Valiquette had been a soldier in the regular service, or in any of the permanent corps, then the rule would properly apply. But this man was, as I understand it, a tradesman in Montreal, and a volunteer in the regiment of which Mr. Speaker was colonel. Seventy-five cents a day was his pay as sergeant only.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I know that.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That was, I take it, but a small portion of his income.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Quite possibly.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If he had been a soldier, and if his pay were the whole sum which he received for the support of his family, it would certainly look rather extraordinary to give a larger pension to the family than he earned himself, and out of which he supported his family. Sergeant Valiquette, from the fact of his being a sergeant, must have been an educated man, and most likely a tradesman of some standing whose income would be much larger than 75 cents a day. I take it that upon that ground the Commission, which settled all these matters, awarded the sum which the Minister of Militia sanctioned.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman has laid down a principle which is far-reaching, and which the House should understand. He has laid down the principle, in defence of the large pension granted in the case of Sergeant Valiquette, that the Government are to consider the losses sustained by the surviving relatives. I am not at all disposed to advise that this House should be stingy in dealing with men who hazard their lives in the public service, but I am informed that there are cases in which it can be clearly and distinctly shown that the losses sustained by the surviving relatives are altogether out of proportion to the pay received by the deceased in his lifetime, and I want the Government to understand how far that rule may carry them. They cannot make fish of one and flesh of another, and if it is good logic in Sergeant Valiquette's case, there may be other cases in which it is equally good, and in which, on the same principle, the rewards given would have to be revised.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am not at all inclined to lay down a general rule from this case. I was merely accounting for the fact of the Commission awarding this sum, and the Minister of Militia recommending it. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman, that it would not do to lay down any such general rule, which I agree would be too far-reaching in its application.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I understood that there were rules governing this case, and that the Commission to whom the matter was referred were governed by those rules. Will the hon. gentleman, the Minister of Militia, say that this case comes within the regulations that have been made?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then, they are altogether different from what my recollection of them is. If the hon. gentleman has them, will he please read them to the Committee?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Paragraph 7 of General Order No. 14, dated 19th July, 1885, contains two scales of pensions. First, in the case of a soldier killed in action, or who died from wounds received in action ; secondly, in the case of a soldier who died from illness which can be traced to exposure in active service. The last scale is the lowest, and applies to both Sergeant Valiquette and Mrs. Ryan ; but Mrs. Ryan's pension was calculated on the rate of pay of a gunner, while that of Sergeant Valiquette's father was calculated on a sergeant's pay. As I understand, there is no discussion as to the rule that applies to the rate of pension which has been decided by the Board and submitted by the Minister to Council, but the discussion arises as to the pensions given to the brothers and sisters of the dead man, making, as I understand from the hon. member for South Oxford, the pension received by Sergeant Valiquette, larger than was his pay when living. As was explained, besides his pay of 75 cents a day, he had a stock-in-trade, from which his family received an income. He was receiving $1.50 per day when he was working at his trade, and it was, no doubt, considered by the Board, that the family was left without any resource. I am giving the hon. gentleman the explanations which I sought to obtain from the Board, and I think the regulations and instructions received explain the case.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The explanations given by the Minister do not touch this case at all. The power to grant a pension was a conditional one. It is conditional on the fact of the person being the support of a family or the head of a family, or leaving sisters who are dependent upon him for support. In this case the Minister had no right to grant one cent of pension to Sergeant Valiquette's family. He was not the support of the family, according to the meaning of that clause of the Militia Act. His father was alive, his sisters were grown up, he left two brothers, and, therefore, it cannot be said that he was in any sense the main support of the family. I contend that the granting of this pension was a complete and utter violation of the spirit and intention of the Militia Act, and the hon. gentleman has not been able, to-day, or on any previous occasion, to explain satisfactorily to this House the grounds on which that pension was granted to all the members of this family. The hon. gentleman says he was a poor man. He may have been poor, and there are other poor people, but you are not obliged to pension every man because he is poor. How poor was he? Had he a farm or a shop, was he prosperous, and what was his age? The truth is that this is one of the grossest acts of misappropriation of the public funds that has ever come to the knowledge of this House, and the hon. gentleman may attempt to explain it as many times as he likes, and he cannot move me or remove from the minds of the disinterested and fair-minded men of this House, that it is an act of favoritism that cannot be defended.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I would not attempt to convince the hon. gentleman, but, as he speaks of fair-minded people, I am prepared to lay my case before fair-minded people. The hon. gentleman has stated that I did not know whether this man had a shop or a farm, or whether his business was prosperous or not prosperous. If the hon. gentleman, instead of making such statements, had asked me to lay on the Table the report which was submitted to me by the Board who took the evidence in every individual case, then it might have been fairer on his part to have read the evidence and consulted the records before attempting to argue his case. The papers are all there, and the evidence was taken by a Board who knew no more about Sergeant Valiquette than they did about Mrs. Ryan, or vice versa. The difficulties which resulted from the unfortunate troubles in the North-West are mending and rectifying themselves every year. For instance, this year Valiquette draws only $54 ; because one of his children is over age, and ceases to receive a pension. I have given, as frankly and openly as possible, all the explanations in the matter, and when the hon. gentleman speaks of favoritism, he is stating what it is impossible for him to substantiate. How could there be favoritism when the whole case was submitted to a Board composed of men, most of whom came from Ontario, and only one from Quebec, and who, after looking into the evidence, agreed in the report on which the Order in Council was based?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Will the hon. gentleman bring down the report?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Certainly.

Mr. BRIEN. I do not at all accuse the hon. the Minister of Militia of any favoritism in the matter, but there cannot be any doubt in the mind of anyone who looks into the Military Regulations, that the Board made a very serious mistake in their report, because the pension given cannot be justified on any pretence whatever under the regulations. To say that we are to grant pensions according to the standing of the men when they went into the service, would be to adopt a principle which would not be fair, and, if attempted to be carried out, cannot fail to land the Government in no end of confusion. I wish to bring to the notice of the hon. gentleman, the case of a man named Hurrell, which has been already before the House. It appears that this man was invalidated on the 14th June, 1885 ; that he was in the hospital until the 7th February, 1886 ; and that, after a long delay, he was allowed $1 a day from the 1st July, 1885, to the 30th April, 1887. Subsequently, on the 13th November, 1888, he was allowed a pension of 55 cents a day, which he has since received. That would leave a period of 560 days during which he received no pension, but during which time he did receive, as hospital allowance, or allowance on some ground or other connected with the service, the sum of $199 in gratuities. I say that if the man was entitled to a pension at all, he was entitled to it from the time he left the hospital, and if so, he would be entitled to the sum of $308 or thereabouts, whereas he only received the sum of $199. This would leave $109 to which he is still entitled. If he was entitled to the pension on the 13th November, 1888, the probability is he was—and according to his own statement he was—entitled to it from the time he left the hospital, and it is clear he was in the hospital in consequence of illness he had contracted during service. Therefore, it seems to me, unless special grounds be shown to the contrary, he ought to get the arrears of pension back to 1887.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In answer to the hon. gentleman, I would draw his attention to this fact. He knows that in most of the cases brought before the Commission, at first, it was found impossible to investigate every individual case sufficiently to be able to decide whether the man who had been invalided on account of his wounds should be given a gratuity or a pension. In most of the cases it was decided to grant a gratuity up to a period of time when the cases could be gone into properly and decided. In the case of Hurrell, an Order in Council was passed, if my memory serves me aright, granting him a gratuity, and paying certain dues to the hospital and the doctor which had been incurred by him, and this was to be in full of all claims on his part against the Government. Subsequently, upon representations made to me, I consented to re-open the case, and to this gratuity was added a pension, which he receives to-day, according to his rank. He now claims that the gratuity and the pension should have run concurrently. I say, no. I say, that he could not receive his pension, until it was determined whether he would get a pension or a gratuity, and he could only receive a pension from the period of time fixed in the Order in Council. That pension he received, and then his gratuity ceased. I have received a long and elaborate pamphlet explaining the case. I only got it yesterday, and have not yet been able to look into it; but, speaking from memory, the facts are exactly as I have stated. Several friends of his and mine came to me on his behalf, and I was anxious to give them every possible facility to urge their case, by furnishing them with the documents, reports, and all the information I had. I have reopened the case on more than one occasion, being anxious to do ample justice, and I have done what I consider the law allows me to do.

Mr. O'BRIEN. It seems to me that this man has been a little hardly dealt with. If, as is evident from the fact of his getting a gratuity, and from the fact of his having been in hospital and receiving medical attendance for which the Department paid, he is entitled to a pension, it would be only fair, once a pension was granted, that it should run during 560 days, from the time he left the hospital until it was granted, if, during that period, he was unable to earn his living. In any case, $199 was a very small compensation, and I think the hon. Minister would only be dealing fairly by giving this man the same pension he is now getting and dating it back to the time he left the hospital. If entitled to it at all, he was entitled to it all along. The hon. gentleman is certainly not treating this man in the same spirit as that in which the last claim was treated.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is his pension?

Mr. O'BRIEN. Fifty-five cents a day.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So that he is wholly incapacitated from doing anything to earn his own living?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Not so. He has been to see me several times.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have been furnished with a little memo. of his, and I am bound to say that the right hon. the First Minister appears to have taken some interest in him. I see a note from him as follows, to the Minister of Militia:—

"I feel much interested in the bearer, Mr. C. J. Hurrell, who has suffered so seriously since Fish Creek. The pension given him is altogether insufficient for his injuries. May

I request you to take a personal interest in the case, and much oblige."

If the statement made on this man's behalf, and which the First Minister has endorsed, is correct, he is unable to earn enough for his own living. If the First Minister, of his own knowledge, says he is, that is another affair.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He is less capable than he was formerly, but he is not altogether incapacitated from work.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. He is not incapacitated from work?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Not altogether. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the First Minister states that he is not incapacitated from doing some work, I would not press the question now, but I was informed that he was quite unable to work; and certainly a man who has suffered severely from rheumatic fever is unable to do much, at all events, in the way of manual labor. It all rests upon that. I understand that this man was senior sergeant of his company; and would it not appear rather curious, if it should turn out that the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) is right and the First Minister is wrong, that the Government should have been paying $190 or $200 to this man, supposing him to be incapacitated, while they are paying $350 to the relatives of Sergeant Valiquette?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman is mistaken in one thing. This man was not a sergeant but a full private when he served in the North-West.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Minister himself calls him a sergeant in the correspondence.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I understand that he is a sergeant in some of the corps here, but his pension is based upon his pay in the North-West, where he was simply a full private.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Minister speaks in one of these documents of Sergeant Hurrell, late of the 90th Battalion, and the man himself says he was senior sergeant in some company. Of course, he may have accepted a lower rank, but I judge that the Minister would be acquainted with the rank which he held.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am quite prepared to bring down the papers and lay them on the Table. Mr. Hurrell received the money which was provided by Order in Council. He was paid during the period he was in the hospital. The period during which he was not paid was when he was out of the hospital and was presumed to be well. He was receiving a gratuity when he left hospital, and he was supposed to be all right, and, therefore, he got no pay for that time. He has been paid for the whole period which has been certified to by the medical board.

Mr. MULOCK. To return to the case of Sergeant Valiquette, the member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) made rather a serious charge against the Department, and I suppose, from his recognised position in the service, he speaks from knowledge and authority when he says there is no law to justify the rate of pension at which the collateral relatives of Sergeant Valiquette are being paid. I would ask the Minister of Militia to state what are the provisions in the statute or the regulations which would make this clear ; or, if he cannot do that, I would ask the member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) if he can make good that statement which he has made ? Otherwise we have a direct issue. The member for Muskoka declares that these payments are illegal. In the Queen's Regulations, I find that the principle laid down is that pensions shall be based on the rate of pay and not upon the value of the person who may be killed or wounded, that is, his value in his civil capacity.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have given all the explanations which I considered I could give, and I am quite prepared to bring down the regulations and the papers connected with this case.

Mr. MULOCK. If the Queen's Regulations of 1887 contain the authority upon which the payments were made, perhaps the hon Minister, who is so well acquainted with the law, will point out the particular regulation under which they were made.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I will send it to you.

Mr. MULOCK. We will have this out in the House. If the Minister is unable to find the provision in the law which will sustain his action in this matter, I will refer him to the regulations which I find dealing with such cases, and I think there is nothing in these regulations to warrant the application made of them by the Minister, and endorsed by the First Minister, that the payment is to be based upon the value of the life of the person, instead of upon the rate of pay he has received in the service. The payment must be either legal or illegal, and, if these regulations are applicable, they are very clear that the payment is in proportion to the pay and nothing else, and in that case the member for Muskoka must be right. The hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) has declared, no doubt from his position as a member of the force, who has served many years in the service, that the Minister of Militia has proceeded illegally. There is a charge made by one of your own friends, and the authorities appear to me to sustain the hon. member for Muskoka. Of course, I may not be able to strike upon the exact law bearing upon what has taken place, and I make my statement subject to correction—perhaps the hon. member for Muskoka will state on what he bases his assertion—but I would point to Regulation 923, which declares that the rates of pension for a deceased officer or soldier who has been killed in action, or died of wounds received in action, within twelve months, shall be : to a widow, a pension annually equal to one-half the pay of the deceased, and to each child an allowance equal to one-fourth the pay of such officer and soldier. Then, Regulation 928 applies to the cases of children. Regulation 932 refers to the rate of pension to the mother, who is to be given half the rate of a widow's pension. Regulation 933 refers to sisters, and the provision is that a pension may be granted equal to half the rate of the widow's pension. So far as these regulations go, the rate of pension is based upon the rate of pay. The hon. member for Muskoka assents to that, and I ask whether there is anything else which warrants the application of the principle of pensions—which the country to a large extent will endorse—to any larger degree than is pointed out in these regulations ?

Mr. MULOCK.

Mr. LAURIER. As to the case of Hurrell, I do not know the man ; I met him to-day by accident, and, in justice to him, I must say that he appeared to me to be what we call in French a rhumatisant, that is, a man who is suffering from chronic rheumatism. I do not know whether the pension that is granted to him is sufficient to meet his case, but it is stated that he served faithfully at the time of the rebellion, and the Minister now says that his pension was calculated, according to the rule, on the pay which he received. I notice, in the case of Sergeant Valiquette, that his social condition had been taken into consideration when the present pension was allowed. The pension was not calculated simply on his right as a soldier and a sergeant, but consideration was also take of the fact that he had previously occupied a certain position, and the Prime Minister said he had some education. This shows that you apply the rule in one case and not in another. All these pensions should be granted upon certain stated regulations. The Minister says that he followed the regulations in the case of Hurrell, but that he did not follow the regulations in Valiquette's case, but he followed a new set of rules. As my hon. friend from Oxford stated a moment ago, if we deviate from the rules, we are opening the door for consequences which may be damaging and far-reaching.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman himself considers, as I understand it, that the cases of Hurrell, Valiquette and Ryan were decided exactly upon the same regulations as those contained in the Regulation Book of 1887. Other individual cases came before the Board and were reported upon, and the rate of pay in every one of these cases was based upon the Order in Council providing for pensions for wounded men and the families of men who had been killed in action. Paragraph 17 reads :

"In instances which the regulations do not meet the circumstances of the individual cases, they may be specially considered by His Excellency the Governor General in Council."

Mr. MULOCK. Does that apply to privates and non-commissioned officers ?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It applies to everybody.

Mr. MULOCK. Did you read the whole book ?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I did not read the whole Order in Council, because it contains ten pages, but I read the whole paragraph affecting this question. In the case of Valiquette, his family were left in very straitened circumstances. I am not in a position to say whether Hurrell has a family or not ; that is a matter that can be easily ascertained from the report which was submitted by the Commission who investigated the cases, and made their report to me, and upon which report I made a recommendation to the Council.

Mr. BLAKE. I understand the Minister of Militia to allege that after having had his attention called to this subject last Session, or the Session before, he remains of the opinion which he then stated, that these pensions which were assigned in the case of Sergeant Valiquette, were within the regulations.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. I am not at present prepared to argue the point ; I will only say that my impression, gathered from the discussion at a former time, was quite in accordance with the view of the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien). It appeared to me—though, of course, I do not venture to say so after what the Minister has said—very clear that these pensions were mistakenly in excess of what the regulations allowed. Now, such things may happen by error or otherwise, and they may pass unobserved by the Minister; but we are face to face with the question now, whether a mistake was made by the Board of whose report the Minister now avers the accuracy and the regularity of whose transaction he affirms. It seems to me that the better course would be for the Minister to carry out at the earliest moment what he has expressed his willingness to do, namely, to lay upon the Table all the Orders in Council, and every other papers relating to this matter. I would recommend, for the convenience of the House, that he also furnish us such regulations as he deems, will apply to and cover the case; and then let us dispose of it. I do not know whether he has sought counsel of the Department of Justice as to the legal effect of this transaction, or whether it has been settled purely as a departmental matter, in which he now reaffirms the view that the transaction is a legal one. Let us have all the materials upon which we can discuss the matter, and with those materials before us, if any member is prepared to challenge the view of the Minister, he will be able to do so in a definite form.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am quite willing to bring down all the papers at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I do not think the report justified the action of the Department. The hon. gentleman read, or pretended to read, the Queen's Regulations in regard to this subject. In No. 932 of the Regulations it is provided:

"The mother of an officer or soldier killed in action, or dying of wounds received in action within twelve months after such wounds shall have been received, without leaving widow, or legitimate child, such mother being herself a widow."

Well, the father of Sergeant Valiquette was living at the time, consequently he did not come under that regulation. Then the next regulation applies to sisters:

"The sister or sisters collectively of an officer or soldier killed in action, or dying of wounds received in action within twelve months after such wounds shall have been received, without leaving widow, legitimate child, or mother, and provided she or they be an orphan or orphans, without surviving brother."

Now, in this case his father was alive, his mother was not a widow, and his sisters were not orphans, and they had surviving brothers; therefore, I cannot see under what clause of those regulations the hon. gentleman can justify his action.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I think the Minister ought to read this pamphlet that has been placed in the hands of members, with regard to this officer who was permanently disabled in the North-West. He ought to have read it before this item came up for discussion, because the charges made in this pamphlet are very serious. Mr. C. J. Hurrell, late hospital sergeant and night nurse of the North-West field force at Saskatoon, North-West Territories, says many hard things of the Minister of Militia. If the hon. gentleman has not perused the pamphlet, I will make a few quotations from it to enlighten him with regard to the charges that are made. Now, this volunteer, who seems to have served his country faithfully, gives us, in this pamphlet, a detailed account of the course of the Minister of Militia towards him. It appears he must have been treated harshly by the Minister. He says in one paragraph:

"That in order to show his animosity to me personally, he, for nine months after my return from the North-West, refused to pay me a cent for sitting up at night in charge of the hospitals of the North-West field force, as nurse and hospital sergeant, although I held a requisition from the Deputy Surgeon General Roddick, and a letter from Dr. Bell, backed by Dr. Bergin, M.P. The Surgeon General said it was I who washed and carbolized the killed and confined them prior to their transportation and final burial east. That on one occasion, after being three weeks in bed ill with inflammatory rheumatism, I was able to call at the buildings to see him, with the assistance of two sticks, as I could hardly walk. I sent in my card at half-past nine and waited outside till two o'clock, suffering severe pain. He would not see me then on business, but insultingly told me: Go home, you can't walk, you are drunk; which he well knew was not true."

These are certainly very serious charges made by a sergeant against the head of the Militia Department of the country. He goes on, at page 7, to say:

"That after the Medical and Military Board had finally reported on my case very favorably on the 1st or 2nd day of August, 1888, the Minister withheld them from the Privy Council till 13th of November following, although repeatedly asked by myself and friends to do so. He still refused to give me a dollar for those months, during which time I suffered from pain, hunger and want of proper shelter. I was confined to my bed."

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am quite prepared to discuss any question on the floor of Parliament, but I am not going to permit Mr. Hurrell to take part in the proceedings from the stranger's gallery; and I consider such is a breach of the privileges of the House, and I, for one, am not prepared to stand it.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I do not know Mr. Hurrell.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. He has been taking part in the discussion which is going on here, and, I think, if this is permitted in one case it will be found to be very inconvenient. There are occasionally questions which excite public opinion, and if members who express their views on the floor of Parliament have to answer all attacks made from the galleries, I am afraid we will find it very inconvenient to conduct the proceedings of this House. I draw your attention to this fact, Mr. Chairman. The first time it occurred I took no notice of it, and it has been repeated on two or three different occasions since, and I would repeat again that this offence is one which I consider a very grave one against this House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman. It is highly intolerable that anyone in the galleries should interfere with the proceedings of this House, and it cannot be permitted for an instant. If the hon. gentleman wants a precedent for dealing with a very gross offence of this kind, he may recall a certain celebrated case in which J. A. Macdonnell figured, who interfered in the grossest and most disreputable manner with the proceedings of this House, who was hereafter brought to the bar of this House and was cheered by numbers of the hon. gentleman's supporters for his gross disrespect to the House. I agree with the hon. gentleman; but if he wants a precedent for dealing with this man's case, I suggest the precedent he can follow.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I do not know that this interruption has anything to do with me.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. This matter should be disposed of first.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I wish to say that my attention having been drawn to the matter, I have taken steps to stop this discussion in the galleries, and to prevent our deliberations being interrupted by any such improper conduct. I have, therefore, ordered the Sergeant-at-Arms to see that such proceedings cease.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I hope the Minister of War will feel safe now that this dangerous man has been removed. I will now return to the paragraph I was reading. The writer says :

"I was confined to my bed at the Royal Exchange for a month (October), without care of nursing, and during that month repeated applications were made to the Minister, and I gave written orders for a small amount, but without any effect; not a cent would he allow Col. Panet to send me, so I again sent for Sir James Grant, who ordered me back to the hospital, where I suffered the loss of both legs till December."

I do not exactly know what that means—

"I wrote in November to Col. Panet that I did not think I could survive the winter. He replied to me in the most tender and kind manner, expressing deep regret that my extreme loyalty and patriotic devotion to my country had given me such disappointment, pain and suffering. It was then, and not till then, that the Minister, thinking my days would soon be numbered, would consent to bring my case before the Council for a private pension."

If this man really states the truth, that the Medical and Military Board authorised a pension on the 1st or 2nd August, 1888, and that the Minister persistently refused to bring the matter before the Privy Council until 13th November, I say the man has been very badly treated, and the Minister should offer some explanation to this House. I should judge, from the way the pamphlet is written, that the writer is speaking from the fullness of his heart and is telling the truth, and feels very indignant at the treatment he received. He says in another paragraph :

"That the unkind, ungenerous, and inhuman treatment which I have received as a loyal British volunteer,—" I suppose this means at the hands of the Minister of Militia, because he says all the other officers of the Department treated him with great tenderness and care. He proceeds :

—"crippled for the rest of my life, having offered it up in the service of my adopted country on the field of battle, and gradually dying with a disease contracted, is a great contrast to the liberality of the United States to her citizen soldiery; and at my age, nearly sixty, I think, will not find a parallel in any other civilised country, not even in Russia."

It is the duty of the Minister to offer some explanation in regard to this matter. These are charges of a very serious character, and should be met with some answer, when the hon. gentleman is charged with ill-treating this worthy volunteer.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I think the hon. gentleman should give me a chance to answer by pamphlet also. It would not be fair to ask me to explain a case so elaborately put before the House as this has been, and so eloquently read by the hon. gentleman. I am not at all prepared to do so. I have given my explanation, and I am not going to enter into all the case of harsh and cruel treatment inflicted on that unfortunate loyal volunteer.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

I have given my explanation. I stated that he was paid exactly what the Board decided he should receive; that he was paid for a period of time for which he was entitled to be paid; and as to the attacks made, and the serious charges, as the hon. gentleman calls them, made against the Minister, I am accustomed to a few of these serious charges. I will postpone my reply until I have had time to read this volunteer's able contribution to Canadian literature.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I think we are entitled to some further information in regard to this matter. The writer says :

"That in order to show his animosity to me personally, he, for nine months after my return from the North-West, refused to pay me a cent for sitting up at night in charge of the hospital."

He says further :

"That after the Medical and Military Board had finally reported on my case very favorably on the 1st or 2nd day of August, 1888, the Minister withheld from the Privy Council till the 13th November following, although repeatedly asked by myself and friends to do so."

The Minister should know whether this is a fact or not. If it is a fact, he has treated the man very sadly; at all events, the Minister should be prepared to answer this simple question: Is it a fact or not, that the Medical and Military Board reported favorably on this man's case on 1st or 2nd August, 1888, and the Minister refused to bring it before Council until 13th November? That is a simple question.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have answered.

Mr. MULOCK. What is the answer? I did not hear the Minister answer. If he answered, would he be kind enough to repeat the answer?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I will repeat it for the benefit of the hon. gentleman, as I am always anxious to meet his views. I stated that I had answered the questions which were put to me by members of Parliament, affecting the case of this man Hurrell. I stated that I treated his case as I treated every other case, upon the report of the Board appointed for the purpose of investigating all such cases. I stated that he was paid for the period of time which he is entitled to be paid for, that he received the amount of money he was entitled to receive, and that I, therefore, acted according to the law, and have no jurisdiction outside of what the law traced to be my duty in this case.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister has stated that he treated this case as he did every other case. We are told that, in this instance, the Minister neglected his duty for three and a-half months, and inasmuch as the Minister does not contradict this statement, it must be true. I take the one charge that the Board reported on the 1st August, 1888, in favor of this pension, and for three months and thirteen days the Minister made default in bringing that report before Council. In other words, for over three months he withheld from this man the pension he was entitled to. The Minister told us that he dealt with this man as he dealt with every other pensioner, and, consequently, he admits that in every case he has neglected for three and a half months to discharge his duty.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I did not admit it. The hon. gentleman knows that he is making a statement which is incorrect.

Mr. MULLOCK. Will the hon. gentleman have the goodness to say, when he did lay the report before Council? and then we will see whether he is correct or not.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am not going to.

Mr. MULLOCK. If the hon. gentleman will not, don't want to press him to-day, as perhaps he has not the information; but I suggest that the item stand over until he gets the necessary information, and until we can have this matter properly discussed. I can conceive no part of the public service in which the country is entitled to a more faithful discharge of the duties, than that which pertains to the head of the Militia Department. In the hour of trouble that is the Department in which, above all others, the best of good faith must be exercised towards those who stand by their country and towards the relatives of those who are sufferers by reason of the faithful discharge of duties by the civilian soldiery of Canada. This matter cannot be passed over lightly. The Minister is now on his trial for this transaction.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. You have tried him already.

Mr. MULLOCK. Yes, he has been tried and found wanting; but he has a force behind him at present which has succeeded, some way or other, in keeping him in his Department. We are trying him on this specific charge now, which may or may not be well founded. The Minister said his conduct in this fairly represents the manner in which he has discharged his public duties. It is now charged that he has been three and a-half months in default in doing justice to this poor man's case—the Minister who has a salary of $7,000 and perquisites.

Mr. LISTER. And the perquisites are pretty large.

Mr. MULLOCK. Yes, they are. With the hon. gentleman's salary and perquisites, he may be able to afford to ignore the day and the hour of receiving pay, although I believe that even in his case he would consider it a hardship if he were kept out of his salary for three and a-half months. His position, however, cannot be compared to that of a poor person invalided in the public service, who was depending on that service for his daily bread. It is an act of cruelty on the part of any Administration, apart from it being a disgraceful reflection on the public service, that what is due to a poor man by his country shall be withheld from him by a negligent, careless and an indifferent head of a Department. I cannot find words strong enough to do justice to the subject, or to characterise such a transaction as the Minister has admitted on the floor of the House, by his silence and by his attempt to burk an enquiry. I again suggest that this item be allowed to stand over until the Minister can tell us when he made his report to the Government. If he delayed it for three and a-half months, let him offer an explanation if he can. If he cannot offer an explanation, I have not half said what the country ought to say about his conduct. I shall be glad to accept any reasonable explanation, and I hope he will be able to give one; but as one of the people's representatives here, I think it is my duty, and the duty of every hon. gentleman, in the name of our grateful country, to repudiate any act of ingratitude by a Department of the public service, towards men who have risked their lives and lost their health in the service of their country.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do not wish to burk any enquiry, nor do I wish to refuse upon this case, or upon any other case, all the information that can be furnished by the Department of Militia. Now, I would ask hon. gentlemen to allow the item to pass, and I am prepared—

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Hon. members say "no," before they are aware of what I am going to propose. This does not show a spirit of fair play on their part. I was going to say that, if it meets the wishes of the House, and in order to save time, I am prepared to bring down all the papers, the Orders in Council, the recommendations to Council, and everything connected with the case, and the dates will then speak for themselves. This matter can be thoroughly discussed on concurrence, and we can have the same opportunity to treat it, as if it were now held over.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I fancy that the members of this House will agree with me, that leaving matters over to concurrence is a very poor way of discharging our duties. I have heard that recommended during a good many Sessions, and I have always found that when it came to concurrence, it is generally proceeded with on the last day of the Session, and the items went through like one of the Minister's bomb-shells, and no information was offered on them. If the Minister has not the information, there is his deputy sitting on the floor of the House, and he knows all about the matter. If the hon. gentleman steps over to his deputy and asks for the information, I have no doubt he will be told whether it is a fact that the Medical Board reported on this case on the 2nd August, and the Minister refused to allow it to be presented to Council until the 13th November. In order that this man's case may be more fully presented to the House, I will read an extract from this pamphlet which will interest the Minister himself if he has not read it. It says:

"That, in compliance with the law I handed the Minister four medical certificates in April, 1888, from Sir James Grant, Dr. H. P. Wright, Dr. McDougall and Dr. Chipman, house surgeon, on my discharge from hospital as incurable and unable to earn a living or support myself. He (in the presence of Colonel Panet, the Deputy Minister) denied ever having received them. That was in July, three months afterwards, and in the interval, he refused to advance me a dollar for the purchase of food, or even bring my case before the Privy Council, after the Medical and Military Board's report in August, till the 13th November following, when he heard my end was approaching on a sick bed in the hospital."

There is another serious charge. This man says that he presented the certificates to the Minister, and that the Minister afterwards denied that he ever received them. This poor man stated that the Minister neglected his case; that he refused to listen to him; that he kept this man, who was barely able to crawl about the Department, sitting outside the door from nine in the morning until two in the afternoon, and that when he did obtain an audience he only did so to be insulted by the Minister, and to be told that he was drunk, when the man was not drunk, according to his own statement. And, further, he states that the Minister persistently refused, for three months after the Medical Board had passed on his case, to recommend his case to the Privy Council. I think the Minister should give the information before he asks us to pass this item. I believe the feeling of the House is that we are entitled to this information before the item is passed.

Mr. LISTER. I believe that the Minister should accept the suggestion which has been made and allow this matter to stand over. During the eight years that I have been a member of this House my experience has been that this suggestion from the Government benches, of letting matters stand over until concurrence, is a delusion and a snare. When we get to concurrence, hon. gentlemen on both sides are anxious to get away, the Estimates are rushed through, and nothing is heard of the matters which were deferred. Now, a specific charge has been made against the hon. minister of Militia, a charge which he has refused to answer, but which he said he is willing to answer if we allow it to stand until concurrence. That charge is: that he received the certificate of the Board in the month of August, and held it in his Department, and did not lay it before the Privy Council until the month of November. If that charge is true, in the face of the fact that the man in question was severely injured, that he was in indigent circumstances, that he was in want of the ordinary necessities of life, that he had volunteered to serve his country and had served it in the hours of danger, the hon. Minister was guilty of a dereliction of duty, if nothing worse. It was an unkind act on his part; if it was not intentional it was thoughtless. If there is anything which this Parliament must regard as a duty, it is to see that the civilian soldiers of the country are properly and fairly and generously treated by those in power for the time being; and the members of this House will neglect the duty they owe to the country if they do not insist on the strictest explanation being given by the Minister in charge of this Department. The Minister, in justice to himself, if he has an explanation to make, and he tells us he has, ought to allow this item to stand until that explanation can be made. I am sure every member of this House will be heartily glad if that explanation is such as to remove from the minds of the public the suspicion that the Minister has not treated this unfortunate man fairly.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Really, all the information and all the explanation I can give must come down in the papers which I have promised to lay on the Table, because my recommendation to Council, the Order in Council, the dates referred to, and everything else must appear in those papers; and hon. gentlemen must give me credit for this. I knew no more about this man than I did about any other man who served in the campaign. I had no personal interest in being harsh to him; there was no reason why I should be, and I am quite prepared to say that every one of the charges which have been made should be explained, and can be explained. But it is impossible for me to speak from memory about the proceedings of the Department of Militia, extending over an agitated period from 1885 to the present day; and the only way in which I can possibly hope to give the information to the House which I want to give is by producing the papers, and leaving every hon. gentleman to judge for himself. If I am guilty, then I can be attacked; if I am not guilty, as I assert I am not, then hon. gentlemen will see that the charges which have been made are the result of a little irritation on the part of this man.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I do not think it was possible for this man to keep up his irritation from 1888 to the present time, and it looks to me as if he means everything that he states in this pamphlet. I will read to the hon. Minister another paragraph, which I think should be on record:

"I have asked for, and have been refused, either to read or obtain copies of any reports of the Medical Board appointed to examine me, which I desired to have for my own guidance in regulating my future mode of living, as to diet, &c."

It appears from this paragraph, that the Minister did not want to give this man a pension, but actually wanted him to die, because he took the proper course to bring about his death by refusing to listen to his appeals, or to let him see those reports, in order to guide his mode of living. This man winds up his appeal in these words:

"Out of my small pension of 55 cents per day, my rent costs 15 cents, with the use of a stove to cook my own food, as no one will board me for the full amount of my allowance, and my ailments require bandages cleaned every day, besides the cost of medicines and medical attendance when required, which is very often, leaving me the balance of about 20 cents a day for the rest of my life to feed and clothe myself."

Now, it may be all very well for the hon. Minister of Militia, who enjoys a salary of about $8,000 a year, and who revels in luxuries every day of his life, to treat a poor soldier belonging to the ranks in this contemptible way; but I say it is not creditable to the head of the Militia force of this country to treat a private in such a way, and I think it is due to that force, and due to this House, that this item should not pass until the hon. Minister gives us the necessary explanation. I think he will find that it will be easier for him to let the item stand over until he brings down his explanations, than to attempt to force it through the House.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. As a rule, I try to avoid taking up the time of the House, and I suggested that it would be far better not to go into these irresponsible charges without the papers. Now, I can tell the hon. gentleman—and I make the statement upon my responsibility as a member of Parliament—that this same man Hurrell told two highly respectable and highly responsible people, who considered it their duty to come and disclose the fact to me, that if he met me on the street he would shoot me on sight. Hon. gentlemen laugh at what I am saying, but they believe the statements of Hurrell, of course. The gentlemen who came to me begged me to have him arrested. I said: "It is all nonsense; Hurrell would do nothing of the kind; he was, perhaps, a little excited." The two gentlemen who made that statement to me are still living in the city of Ottawa, and they can be called upon at any moment, if necessary, to repeat the statement. Now, why should hon. gentlemen go on reading that pamphlet of Hurrell's, and charge me with having done everything that Hurrell says I have done, and when I make a statement, why should the hon. gentleman laugh it off in the unceremonious manner he has done? I think it is unfair.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I wish to call the attention of the hon. Minister to this fact: that although he has listened to all the charges which are made by this man Hurrell, he has not denied or attempted to deny the truth of a single statement. There is, therefore, all the more reason why the item should stand.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I do not rise to make any accusation against the hon. the Minister of Militia. For my part, I was living in Lindsay when the Midland Battalion went to the North-West, and knew the officers very intimately, and I have never heard from any of them but the highest praise of the Minister of Militia for his conduct during the outbreak. I do not know anything about this man Hurrell's complaint, but I think it is only fair play to the hon. Minister to give him an opportunity of putting this matter in its true light. I have read very carefully this man's statement, and I would not be inclined to place the most implicit reliance upon it. It is hardly fair to the hon. the Minister to take an ex parte statement made by this person, who has behaved very unbecomingly in the gallery, without giving him an opportunity of bringing down the papers and meeting the charges. While this matter is up, I wish to call the attention of the hon. gentleman to a petition from a young man in Lindsay, Wm. Henry Veitch, which I sent to the Governor General in Council at the opening of the Session. This young man is twenty-eight years of age, and has one child. He went to the North-West with the Midland Battalion on the 1st April, 1885. He served during the whole campaign, and with regard to his conduct, I cannot do better than read the statements made by Col. Deacon of the Midland Battalion:

"LONDON, 10th Feb., 1890.

"ADAM HUDSPETH, Esq., Q.C., M.P.

"SIR,—I think it is a matter of simple duty which I owe you to bring to your notice the case of young Veitch, in whose behalf a petition was sent you last week. In March, 1885, the riding which you represent had four full companies under arms, and willing to proceed to the North-West, on the news of the trouble on the Saskatchewan. Only one company was required from the 45th to complete the Midland Battalion then placed under the command of the late Lieut.-Col. Williams. Among the young fellows who formed "C" Company of the Midlanders was young Veitch. I watched his career during the expedition. He stood the fatigues of the crowded and cold cars, marches through the gaps, and never for a moment left the ranks. I know that he suffered a good deal, but was kept up by his pluck and desire to do his duty. He is now suffering from the effects of the fatigue and exposure which he endured. I feel certain that the hon. the Minister of Militia and Defence, who so generously provided for our wants while serving in the North-West Field Force, who worked so hard in our interest while away, and who met and cheered us on our return, will not hesitate to take the case of Private Veitch into his careful and favorable consideration, and that he will recommend that a brave young fellow who lost his health in the service of his country may receive either a permanent or temporary pension, an act in which we all feel interested and for which we will feel thankful. The company to which young Veitch belonged was one of the two companies under command of Col. Williams at Batoche.

"I have the honor to be, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

(Signed) "J. DEACON,

Lieut.-Col. late Midland Batt."

I hope that the hon. the Minister of Militia will not overlook this case. A considerable time has elapsed since the volunteers went to the North-West, but that is no reason for not granting the pension asked for, if it be proved satisfactorily that this young man did contract this rheumatic complaint while serving through the rebellion, and is now incapacitated for work during three or four months every year. The fact of the matter is, the young fellow would never have asked for anything, expecting that his health would improve, but I have a certificate from the doctor to show that there is not much hope of his recovery. The facts of the case are simply these: He left Lindsay in April, 1885, and was through the whole campaign, and at Batoche. In May, 1885, he first felt the pains of rheumatism in his legs. He had been lying on the damp ground and got wet marching. He never had rheumatism before that. In 1888 he was laid up over three months with chronic rheumatism, and his lungs became affected. He did not work, owing to this rheumatism, for over three months in 1888 and 1889; was nine weeks in bed, and tried to work, but had to quit, and was laid up for three weeks more. He is entirely changed in his state of health, is weak and not able to work as he did formerly, and has a poor appetite. He is a carriage painter by trade. Dr. McAlpine, his medical attendant, says there is very little hope that he will recover. I know him to be a very temperate young man, and I have known him all his lifetime, as he was born and brought up in Lindsay. The petition I presented to the Governor in Council is signed by many respectable persons in Lindsay, on both sides of politics, as all desire that this young man should receive some consideration at the hands of the Government. I have here a certificate, signed by Dr. McAlpine, which reads as follows:—

"This is to certify that I knew William Henry Veitch as a healthy and vigorous young man prior to his service in the North-West rebellion as a volunteer. While on service he contracted rheumatism, from which he is still suffering, and as his heart has been affected thereby he is not likely ever to be strong again. I am convinced that the cause of his ill-health is due to his exposure and hardships during the campaign.

(Signed) "M. J. McALPINE, M.D.

"LINDSAY, 30th December, 1889."

This young man has no means of living except what he earns by his trade. His parents reside in Lindsay, but his father is not able to support more than his own family, so that this young man has to depend entirely on his own efforts to keep himself and his wife and child, and, being incapacitated during three or four months every year, and his health being broken down by his service in the North-West, his case is one that I think the Minister should favorably consider. I only ask justice. I am not asking that he be treated as a pauper, but as a young fellow who did his duty to his country, and, now that his health is shattered, has a claim on his country. I am prepared to prove all that I have said if I be given the opportunity, and I hope that the hon. gentleman will see that this case is attended to.

Mr. WATSON. I suppose the case the hon. gentleman refers to is another one which has been standing for five years, as the case of this man Hurrell has. I have known Hurrell for the past nine or ten years, and I know that previous to his engagement in the North-West he was in good health, and that since then he has been in poor health, suffering from a very painful disease contracted during the rebellion. I believe the statements made in this pamphlet are perfectly true, and, that being the case, I am not at all surprised that Mr. Hurrell, suffering as he does from a painful disease, having been almost at the point of death, and maddened by the treatment he has received at the hands of the Minister of Militia, should have threatened to shoot him at sight. I do not suppose that Hurrell, suffering as he was, and indignant under the treatment he had received, cared whether he lived himself or not. The letters attached to this statement are signed by hon. gentlemen whose representations ought to be taken into consideration by the Minister. This man Hurrell was living, in my county, on a farm, and was just getting things into shape when he joined the 90th Battalion. I see that letters are here signed by a number of gentlemen, one of which I may read, as it will testify to the standing and character of Mr. Hurrell. It is addressed to the Minister of Militia, and says :

"The bearer, Mr. C. T. Hurrell, I have known for over twenty-five years, and he has been a strong and active friend of our party. He tells me he was in the last rebellion in 90th Regiment, and is suffering severely from disease and exposure in the service of his country. May I ask you to take his case into your favorable consideration, and much oblige.

Yours truly,

"K. McCALLUM."

I do not know who this K. McCallum is, but probably it should be L. McCallum, the present Senator, because Mr. Hurrell comes from his section of the country. This request is also signed by Thomas Scott, M.P.; James Beaty, M.P.; W. Wood, M.P.; Dr. Ferguson, M.P., and J. H. Bell, M.P. As to the services rendered by Mr. Hurrell, I would call in the evidence of Mr. William Clark, captain in the 90th Battalion, a very good man, and one of those who bore the brunt of the fight in the North-West. He says :

"DEAR HURRELL.—In parting from you on our leaving hospital, I wish to express to you my very sincere thanks for the care and kindness bestowed by you over the wounded since our engagement at Fish Creek. In your position at Saskatoon, in the night charge of the hospital, you were able to be of good service to the wounded; you understood the responsibility of your position, and I am sure all will long remember your great kindness during those weary weeks. Personally I feel your efforts in the interest of all the men to be a kindness done to myself.

Yours truly,

"WILLIAM CLARK,

"Captain, 'F' Company, 90th Battalion."

There are two letters that testify to the services of Mr. Hurrell, and I think he has been harshly treated by the Minister of Militia. I am not surprised at his having threatened to do some very severe things to the Minister of Militia, and, as the Minister of Militia has stated that he is quite prepared to justify his course in this by bringing papers before the House, this item should be allowed to stand until the Minister can explain the whole thing. This is only one case of harsh treatment. I know of two or three myself in which the treatment by the Minister of Militia has been very harsh. He should be careful to do justice to our volunteers. They go to the front in cases of danger, they receive very small pay, and, when they are disabled, they should receive consideration from the Government. I have seen Mr. Hurrell here for three or four Sessions, and I know he is in a very feeble state. When a man has rendered services to his country, not only in the North-West rebellion, but in his past life—and he is now 55 years of age—I think he is entitled to the care and protection of the Government, who should see that he does not end his days in starvation, suffering from diseases contracted in the service of his country.

Mr. WATSON.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I heartily agree with the last speaker as to the duty of the Government to look into the case of those volunteers who have been disabled in active service, and also the families of those who have been removed by death. In the past, this Parliament has been very generous in this matter. In one or two instances connected with the North-West rebellion, I think this Parliament has been more than generous. I do not know anything about the merits of the present case. I have known Mr. Hurrell by sight for a number of years, but I have no acquaintance with him to speak of. Still, the Minister of Militia, as a member of the Government, is responsible for the honor of the country. The Government are the custodians for the time being of the honor of the country, and its good name, and Parliament, which supports them in that position, is also responsible for the honor of the country. I do not for a moment pretend to say whether there is any truth in the charges brought by Mr. Hurrell or not. I know nothing about the case. I come to it entirely unprejudiced. But, whether these charges are true or false, it is a duty the Minister of Militia owes to the country, to give the fullest and fairest explanation in regard to them. If these charges are true, it is a reflection upon the honor and the justice of this country. If they are untrue, they ought, in the interests of the country, to be refuted, and, if they are true, the injustice should be rectified. I, therefore, hope the Minister will allow this to stand over until he has given the fullest and fairest explanation.

Mr. CASEY. It may be very easy for the Minister of Militia to pooh-pooch the complaints of this individual, when he goes to him personally and sits like Lazarus at the gate, outside his office, from nine o'clock in the morning till four o'clock in the afternoon, waiting to see him, and is then ordered off on the ground of being drunk. It may be easy to pooh-pooch the complaint when presented in that way, but the Minister cannot so pooh-pooch a complaint preferred in this House, and a demand made by members of this House. He cannot be allowed to do it, and this item cannot be allowed to pass until the explanations which he says he can give, are given to the House. He says there is nothing but the unsupported statements and threats of this Sergeant Hurrell, who, it appears, made dire threats against the Minister, personally. The Minister is mistaken. Here is proof of his services, of his injuries, of his inability to support himself, and of the insufficiency of the pension that has been allowed him. It is for the Minister to show why an insufficient pension was allowed to him. The leader of the Government was satisfied that it was insufficient, for he says in a letter given to Mr. C. T. Hurrell :

"MY DEAR SIR ADOLPHE.—I feel much interested in the bearer, Mr. C. T. Hurrell, who suffered so severely since Fish Creek. The pension given him is altogether insufficient for his injuries. May I request you to take a personal interest in his case, and much oblige,

Yours very sincerely,

"JOHN A. MACDONALD."

If the head of the Government was satisfied that the pension was insufficient, surely that was sufficient reason for the Minister to investigate the case. The Premier might have been wrong in his opinion as to the insufficiency of that pension, but his expression of opinion was sufficient to reopen the case and to secure further consideration. We want to know whether the case was reopened, whether a second investigation was had, and whether, and on what ground the Department was satisfied that the pension was sufficient. It is quite patent that 55 cents a day is not the pension allowed by the regulations to a man under these circumstances, and that men who were much less incapacitated for work have received very generous pensions indeed. I do not say they were more than they should receive. I know very well the person referred to by Mr. Hurrell—but there is no occasion to drag his name into the discussion—as receiving a pension of a thousand dollars a year. It is true that he lost an arm, but he is still able to pursue his duties as architect, notwithstanding that. I do not say that he received too much. On the contrary, I think he was fully entitled to what was granted to him, but I think that this man, who appears to have had a higher standing in society at one time than now, which he gave up in order to serve his country, should have a great deal more than has been given to him. Now, if we go outside the militia service, we find gentlemen receiving pensions from the Government who are still actively engaged in other occupations and obtaining large salaries. We find an hon. Senator receiving $1,600 as a pension for past services as a judge, although he is still sitting as a member of the Senate and getting a sessional indemnity. We find another gentleman, Mr. Clark, formerly a county judge, receiving $1,600 pension from the Government, while he is also receiving a large salary as solicitor for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Yet here we find a poor man, utterly helpless, incapacitated for work, and I think he ought to receive not only the largest pension allowed by the regulations, but some consideration over and above. As the regulations point out:

“In instances where the regulations do not meet the circumstances of individual cases, they may be specially considered by His Excellency the Governor General in Council.”

That is paragraph 934 of the Regulations. So that the Minister had it in his power to give Sergeant Hurrell even more than the regulations allowed. As to the threat said to have been made, there may have been something in it, or there may not; we only have it on hearsay evidence. But supposing it were true, we all know—though I hope we may never know it personally—that in cases of inflammatory rheumatism the disease affects the whole system, and sometimes even the brain, so that a man should not be held responsible for what he says under those circumstances. But this threat reported to have been made against the Minister—if it really was uttered—was made long after Hurrell had been subjected to the treatment which he complains of, which appears to be unjust on the face of it. But it would be equally unjust to the Minister to condemn him without giving him a chance of producing the official papers; it would be unjust to Mr. Hurrell, unjust to ourselves, and unjust to the militia force of this country, if we allow this item to pass until the Minister has brought down all the papers relating to it in his Department. Let him bring down the reports of the different boards of examiners, and all the official papers connected with this case, and then we will be in a position to clear him, if the papers show that he ought to be cleared, and we will be in a position to do justice to Sergeant Hurrell, if the papers show that he has not received justice. For these reasons I urge that this item be laid over until these papers are produced.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I think the Minister had better consent to let this item be postponed.

Mr. FOSTER. Hon. gentlemen opposite seem to be so determined to have these explanations, that I think we had better let the item lie over in order to appease them.

Extra allowance to W. Wallace, ex-
Postmaster at Victoria, B.C. $240

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not rise for the purpose of criticising this particular item, but I do think that the attention of the House ought to be called to the enormous charge that is being made to the superannuation fund, now amounting to nearly a quarter of a million dollars, as the service for 1890-91 asks for $240,000. Now, it is utterly impossible for us; I think, to acquiesce in the way the superannuation system is managed, without some criticism. It appears to me that in a great many cases which are recorded in our Public Accounts and in the Auditor General's Report, superannuation allowances have been granted without due consideration; that men who are quite able to serve the country for many years to come, have been put in the receipt of large sums of money from the public chest. I am very much inclined to believe, for my own part, that the prodigal abuse of this system, whatever might have been said for it in the commencement, is likely to stir up a feeling in the minds of the public which will lead to the total abolition of the superannuation at present granted to public servants, and the cause of that will be that the superannuation system is being very gravely abused. I do not want particularly to criticise this special item, but I do want to enter a protest, and I think we will have to enter it in the most formal manner possible, against the mode in which the Government are dealing with the superannuation allowance, which appears to me to have attained proportions far in excess of the needs of our service.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think before this item is passed we should have some information. In the first place in regard to the amount of the superannuation allowance to Mr. Wallace, and also with regard to the reason why it was necessary to place him on the list? Now, it is well known that an hon. member who once sat in this House has been superannuated by the Government in order that he might get a permanent position. I notice by the Postmaster General's Report, that the man who has been put in Mr. Wallace's place as postmaster at Victoria, gets $2,286 a year. Now, when we add to that the amount of superannuation allowance that is allowed to Mr. Wallace, we find that it amounts altogether to a considerable sum that we are paying for a Postmaster at that point. At the time the superannuation was made, I asked what allowance was to be granted to Mr. Wallace? The Government replied that although he had been placed upon the list, they had not yet decided as to the amount he would receive. I quite endorse the remarks of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). The superannuation system has been grossly abused for the purpose of making room for men who have been pressing their claims upon the Government; and instead of legitimately using the system for old and worn out servants, who had performed arduous and responsible duties in the service of their country, and were getting too feeble to hold it any longer, the Government have used the system to give soft allowances to their servants, in order to get them to retire to make room for men who are pressing their claims upon the Government. We have now something like 450 names upon the superannuation list, and this year we are asked to pay something over $240,000. We see by the returns brought down to the House within the first fifteen days of the Session, as provided by statute, that the increase of that fund this year is something like $30,000. I think it is time that a complete change should be made in this system. When it was first introduced there may have been some reason for it, simply because we had not at that time the opportunities for Government servants to take advantage of life insurance, as they can do at the present time. When it was first introduced in England—and our Act was largely copied after the English Act—there was not the advantage of life insurance that they have to-day, or at least not in the same form. I hold that any servant who wishes to provide for old age and infirmity, if, in place of deducting the small pittance which is taken from his salary, he applied that amount in payment for a policy of life insurance, it would be more satisfactory to him, and this superannuation allowance would be completely wiped out. We cannot afford to continue the system as it has been carried on for a number of years. We have to-day on the pension list men who are as capable of performing the ordinary duties of life as is any member of this House, and yet many of these men are drawing superannuation allowances and living at the expense of the country. Very many of them are living in other countries, in France, England, and elsewhere, and they are drawing money from this Dominion for their support. I have brought this whole question of superannuation before the House on many occasions, and I have endeavored to impress on hon. members the necessity of wiping out the whole system. The Session before last the then leader of the Opposition submitted a resolution to the House, suggesting a complete change in the superannuation system, if we should continue it in any form. The Government, backed by their supporters, rejected that proposition. It was, in brief, that 2 per cent. should be deducted from the salaries, and that this amount should go into a fund, which would be held in reserve as a guarantee for the faithful and efficient service of the officials, and when it became necessary for any of them to withdraw from the service, that money, with the accumulated interest from the time they entered the service, would be paid over to them. In this way the country would not be called upon to pay a cent. I cannot understand why it should be otherwise. The average salary of a civil servant is equal to that obtained in other walks of life, and it will average about $100 a month, which should be quite sufficient to support a man and enable him to put away a small sum in the way of providing life insurance or in some other way, so that he may not become a burden on the country, as is the case at the present time. This particular case before the Committee at present is a most aggravated one. Mr. Wallace was superannuated on no justifiable ground whatever. I can easily understand that when vacancies are required, the Government may represent to a man holding a position that he had better apply for superannuation. It is hinted that his place is wanted, and rather than subject himself to the possibility of being removed, or of having unpleasant relations with the Government, he is driven into making application to be placed on the superannuation list. The result is that he is superannuated, and another man is placed in the position. It has been the rule that the man appointed in the place of the superannuated officer did not receive a salary equal to the superannuated one; but we find that Mr. Shakespeare, the new postmaster at Victoria, receives the same salary as his predecessor, $2,000, and also $286 for extra services. In past years the Government have endeavored to show that advantage accrued by the operation of the Superannuation Act. They would superannuate a man receiving $2,000 a year and appoint a successor at $1,200, and adding the salary and superannuation allowance together the amount scarcely exceeded that of the original salary. In this case they have violated that principle. It is wrong that superannuations of this kind should take place; it is a gross fraud on the people that the Act should be so abused; and, under these circumstances, it is the duty of the Opposition to draw the attention of the House and the country to these cases, in order that the Government may be compelled by the force of public opinion to terminate the abuses which have taken place, and are taking place under the Superannuation Act. I contend that we should abolish the whole system; it is wrong, and it can never be used to the advantage of the country. We should have a change, and that change should take place now. This case in question is one which shows conclusively that this system is abused, and will be abused so long as the Act remains on the Statute-book. We have evidence of that fact here with regard to the clerks of this House. We have the clerk, to whom we are paying a respectable salary, and we have an ex-clerk who is drawing $2,300 a year. We pay a deputy clerk a superannuation allowance of $1,400, and another deputy clerk is drawing $400 a year; so that for the clerk, and the deputy clerk, and the three clerks who have allowances, we are paying $10,000 a year under the superannuation system. The resources of the country are being strained to meet the requirements of a system which should be wiped out. This year there have been more additions than there were last year or the year previous. I cannot tell how this has come about. I suppose there have been more applicants for the service, and, consequently, more pressure has been brought to bear on the Government, and accordingly more pressure has been brought to bear on those holding office to make application for superannuation. Before this item is carried, we want to know what amount of superannuation has been granted to Mr. Wallace. Last year the Government were not in a position to answer this question, for it was stated that while the order had been drawn it had not been passed.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the chair.

After Recess.

ORANGE INCORPORATION BILL.

Bill (No. 32) to incorporate the Grand Orange Lodge of British North America (Mr. Wallace) was considered in Committee and reported.

Mr. WALLACE moved that the Bill be read a third time.

Mr. CURRAN. I beg leave to move, Mr. Speaker :

That it be an instruction to the said Committee to provide that this association shall not hold public processions in any Province where Party Procession Acts are now or may be hereafter enacted.

In making this motion, I wish to state that I do so, feeling the responsibility that is incumbent upon me, and nothing but an imperative sense of duty would cause me, at this moment, and under existing circumstances, as manifested since this Bill was introduced during the present Parliament, to bring forward the amendment which I have now placed in your hands. I take this course as a measure, which I consider to be a precaution for peace in the community. I have no desire at this moment, and, in fact, it would be out of place, to discuss the underlying principles of the Bill now before the House. The change that has taken place with reference to this measure of incorporation since the year 1883, when it was first introduced into the House of Commons of Canada, and since 1885, when it was introduced a second time, and on both occasions defeated by very large majorities, is indeed a marvellous one. The discussion on both these occasions revealed the fact that we were being asked to incorporate a society, which is well known to be extremely distasteful to a large section of the people. It showed also that it was proposed, as it is now proposed by this Bill, to repeal a statute of Lower Canada, chapter 10 of the Consolidated Statutes of that Province, which has been in force there for a long time, even previous to Confederation, and by which no secret association whatever (with the exception of the Masonic Society) is a legal association in that Province. We must remember that it is proposed to repeal that statute without the consent of the Local Legislature of the Province of Quebec, and without the consent of the majority of the members from that Province, in this House—I may say, in fact, that only a very small, indeed an insignificant minority from that Province, has voted for the second reading of this Bill. The circumstances now are, that all the old adherents of the Bill still support it, whilst a number of those who formerly opposed the measure are found voting for it, and a number of others feel, that while they cannot vote for it, they prefer to abstain altogether from voting, on the ground that it is far better that the grievance which this association has complained of, in not being able to get an Act of incorporation—whether that grievance be real or imaginary—had better be removed. That is the feeling of a very large number of members in this House now, and although a large number still feel that this obnoxious legislation should not be enacted here, we have existing, the changed circumstances which I have just referred to. This Bill will inevitably become law ; but before it does, I should like to have this motion carried as a precautionary measure ; and to justify my action, I feel that I cannot do better than refer to a few facts which, though well known to most of the members of this House, may very well be brought back to their memory when we are about to enact so important a measure. Until the year 1877, although I was born and brought up in the city of Montreal, I never heard of any such thing as a procession of Orangemen in that city, nor any attempt at a display on the part of that body. Along towards the 12th of July in that year certain letters appeared in the public prints of the city, calculated by their tone to arouse hostility. Those letters announced that it was the intention to have a 12th of July procession there. Naturally—because such is the history of this association, and those opposed to it—those letters begot others, and before the day for the display had arrived, we found the two parties arrayed in armed hostile camps. The doings of this organisation had caused a hostile organisation to spring into existence, and on the day in question a tragedy took place in the city of Montreal, which was followed by a series of most regrettable events. Nearly every man, and I may say nearly every boy, armed himself with a revolver, and shooting and wounding were the order of the day. The peace of the city had disappeared ; it was, in fact, in a state of siege. Things went on thus, not for weeks, but for months, until finally on the 28th of April following, another terrible tragedy took place, in which life was lost and several persons were wounded. The man who was killed was entirely disconnected, I believe, with the cause of the trouble. Some women also were injured by bullets. So much was the peace of the city disturbed, that the Board of Trade and other public bodies called public meetings and demanded the most stringent legislation in order to protect the commerce of the city and re-establish law and order. The consequence was that a measure entitled “The Crimes of Violence Prevention Act,” was brought before this House by the present member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), on the 1st of May, 1878, immediately after the last painful circumstance to which I have just referred. In presenting that measure the hon. member for West Durham said :

“He believed that from whatever part of Canada they might hail, they were all proud of the city of Montreal. They were proud of its situation, placed as it was in a commanding position at the junction of an unrivalled system of ocean and inland navigation. They were proud of the zeal, the enterprise, the public spirit of its citizens, and the beautiful city they had made for themselves. They had been proud of the cosmopolitan character of its population, in which different nations and creeds have mingled together, co-operating for the general good.”

But, said the hon. gentleman :

“For nearly a year past the city had been the scene of frequent violent attacks in the streets by different parties, in which fire-arms had been used with the utmost recklessness. Excepting the other night, little loss of life had resulted from those difficulties ; but there might have been serious loss of life. But the events of the other evening were premonitory of far more serious events in the future, unless some steps were taken to repress those circumstances. He was not called on at this time and under these circumstances—perhaps he would not be called upon at any time and under any circumstances—to weigh the merits of the contending parties. All the disorder, all the violence and use of fire-arms, were not to be attributed to those classes, since it was obvious there existed a degree of lawless use of fire-arms in that city entirely irrespective of the circumstances to which he had alluded."

He pointed out the danger of that practice and its fearful results going on and spreading, and proceeded :

"As a Canadian of Irish descent it gave him an additional pang of humiliation that his own fellow-countrymen of both creeds should be prominently concerned in those troubles. He would only say that if his feeble voice could reach beyond the limits of this hall, and he could hope that it would have any weight, he would ask them to remember that, although belonging to different forms of Christianity, the cardinal principle of that religion is love and charity, forbearance and self-sacrifice."

He went on to explain that the measure was one of great severity, and that its severity was justified by the circumstances and by the events which had just taken place. The present hon. Minister of Public Works also spoke of it as a very severe measure. He said :

"It interfered to a great extent with individual liberty ; but, on the other hand, the intention was to strike terror into the minds of those who were disposed to trouble society, break the peace, and perhaps commit such violence as might lead to bloodshed and perhaps loss of life. Under these circumstances it was with the greatest reluctance he consented to this Bill."

There were various speeches at different stages of the discussion on that Bill, and amongst others who spoke was Mr. John White, a member of the organisation which is now seeking incorporation. Appalled at what had taken place, and struck, no doubt, with the magnitude of the difficulties which this attempted procession had originated, he said :

"He would unhesitatingly say that when any Orangemen walked in Montreal, and the band played, or the Orangemen encouraged the playing of such tunes as 'Kick the Pope' and 'Croppies Lie Down,' it was injurious to the institution, to society, and unbecoming, and he condemned such conduct in the strongest terms. He did not blame parties for being annoyed at it. If they professed to be liberal-minded and Christians, why should they wish any party kicked?"

Well, that law was passed, and was rigorously carried out, and it required, I think, a year or more of the most stringent enforcement of that law to restore peace and order and harmony in the city of Montreal. So serious was the condition of matters that the Legislature of Quebec felt obliged to introduce legislation in connection with this matter, and they passed the law to which I am about to refer. It will be found in the Revised Statutes of the Province of Quebec of the year 1888, intitled : "The Party Processions in Montreal." Article 2,940 of the Revised Statutes provides that :

"No assemblage of persons shall parade the streets of the city of Montreal, or march in procession therein, to celebrate or commemorate any political anniversary or event having reference to religious or other distinctions existing between any class of the subjects of Her Majesty, or to make any demonstration of such religious or other distinctions."

And it proceeds further :

"No one shall carry and display banners, flags, ensigns, or emblems of a nature tending to create animosities between subjects of Her Majesty of different religious beliefs, or be accompanied by any band of music tending to excite feelings of such a nature."

It goes on to provide for power to justices of the peace to enforce the Act, and penalties for disobedience of its enactments. By the passage of this Act through the Legislature of Quebec, peace and harmony were at length restored, and since then we have had no trouble and no hostile feeling in the city of Montreal. Although this organisation is under the ban of the law, they have met in their lodges and transacted their business without being troubled by anybody, and no doubt they will continue to do so, so long as no public exhibition is made in the streets offensive to the overwhelming majority of the people. My motion now asks that this association shall not hold any such public procession in any Province where a Party Processions Act, such as the one I have just read, now exists, or where such an Act may be enacted at any future period. I may be asked, since we have this law upon our Statute-book in Quebec, why seek to have it confirmed here? I reply, because we ought to legislate here upon the basis best calculated to promote the peace and order of the community at large. We have to deal with this subject in the light of events that have taken place within the memory of everyone in this House, and if we are to remove from this association the ban under which it has labored in the Province of Quebec for so many years, and grant the demands they have been making year after year, certainly we ought not to do so without imposing such conditions as will ensure that the granting of those privileges will not entail disorder, damage and loss to property, and perhaps life, in any part of the Dominion. If this association are going to obtain all that they ask for now, there can surely be no objection to this House confirming the legislation I have referred to ; there surely cannot be any objection to our taking these precautionary measures which are deemed an imperative necessity in the opinions of those best entitled to respect. Otherwise there will be, I am satisfied, members of this organisation over whom the hon. mover of this Bill or his colleagues in this House cannot hope to have any control, who will be liable to be carried away by their desire to parade ; and this society, which is declared to be a benevolent society, an insurance company, an educational society, will surely not insist upon retaining their right to parade in our public streets, when such parade can only lead to disorder, and when all the disabilities in other respects under which they labor, are removed. No one will contend that the motives which appear in this Bill as those that animate this body, in seeking this legislation, are not good ones, namely, to unite fraternally all persons entitled to membership, to give material aid to distressed members, to educate the members socially, morally and intellectually, to inculcate loyalty to the Queen, and to enable the association to establish a fund for the relief of the sick, and to enable the association to establish an insurance fund out of which to pay a sum not exceeding $3,000 to the widows, orphans and the other beneficiaries designated. All these are very good things if we could disassociate them from the history of the association in the minds of many of our fellow-subjects in Canada. It is our duty to provide against what may be the rash conduct of some uncontrollable members—not necessarily the members of the senior organisation, but of the organisation which figures occasionally under the wing of the parent society, and is known as the "Young Britons." These and kindred spirits will certainly endeavor, under the pretences I have set forth, to hold processions, which will be productive of results we must all deplore. These are not merely my opinions and views—and I know something of the state of feeling in the part of the Dominion from which I come—but they are the opinions and views of many others more competent to speak authoritatively. I have received, within the last forty-eight hours, from a venerable clergyman, a letter, in which he states that if we have Orange processions in the Province of Quebec, we shall most certainly have bloodshed, and in which he asks me to see that, in the Bill incorporating the Orange body, the possibility of Orange processions is provided against. The clergyman, whose letter I have just read, is one whose opinions deserve to receive consideration at the hands of the people of Canada. He is one who has now reached his seventy-fifth year, who has devoted the greater part of his active life to the benefit of this Canada of ours, and who is recognised on all hands, by all persons of all creeds, as a peacemaker in this country. I will, therefore, read his letter, in order that it may have its effect upon those who may not believe that bloodshed and violence will be the result if these processions are not provided against, in those quarters where they have already given so much trouble and caused so much loss to life and property in the past. We have in this Bill the principle enunciated that the association is essentially a loyal one, and that one of its objects is the inculcation of loyalty. Now, what is loyalty if it be not respect for the law more than anything else? The word loyalty is derived from the word loi, and respect for the law is the best means of showing our loyalty. The hon. mover of this Bill, who has managed so skilfully, and without whose singular diplomacy and great influence and hard work and perseverance, this Bill never could have reached the stage it has now reached, will not, I am satisfied, be slow to show how loyal is the association to which he belongs. He will say: We are anxious to show that we are loyal; here is an opportunity to show it; we are asked to make provision that the laws of the Provinces shall be respected in connection with party processions, and we are only too anxious and we seize this opportunity of showing that we are only too delighted that this motion has been made in order to give us an opportunity of manifesting that we are anxious to obey and respect the law, to demonstrate that our loyalty is not merely printed in our bill or uttered by our lips, but is in our hearts, and that we will inculcate on all those who are connected with us a desire to obey the laws by having this clause inserted in the Bill. I shall be very much surprised if my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) does not avail himself of this opportunity to show his respect for the law. I have, at all events, endeavored, without passion and without exciting anybody's prejudices, without attempting any oratorical effort, but, in plain words, to do what I consider to be my duty. I have presented this motion, knowing the circumstances of the case, knowing exactly the nature of the great evil that I am endeavoring to deal with. Certainly we have had a great deal of trouble with the attempts at legislation of this kind which had been made in the past. The excitement attendant upon that legislation seems now to have passed away. The question which now presents itself to my mind, and which I have endeavored to lay before the House, is this: Are we, with the history of the past before us in regard to this branch of the subject, going to take the necessary precautions to prevent the recurrence of the terrible results of attempts at processions which have been made in Montreal before? Under these circumstances, I submit that, in view of the Act of 1878, just referred to, and the Party Processions Act in the Province of Quebec—in view of the fact that it may be necessary in the future, in other Provinces, to enact similar measures, it is not necessary for this House to provide that, wherever it is or may be necessary to pass such legislation, this association, which now receives its charter from us, shall not attempt to hold public processions. I leave the matter in the hands of the House, satisfied that they will deal with it as men who feel that a great deal of responsibility rests upon them.

Mr. WALLACE. I desire to say a few words before the vote is taken. In listening to the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran), I was wondering whether we were living in a free country like Canada or were living in the Middle Ages. This Bill proposes to incorporate an organisation which is "to give all material aid in its power to distressed members and those dependent upon them; to educate its members socially, morally and intellectually; and to inculcate loyalty to Queen and country; and to enable the association to establish a fund for the relief of sick and distressed members." That a measure with such an object should receive the opposition of the hon. gentleman, and a proposition that such a totally unnecessary amendment as this should be asked to be added to it, is what we could never expect. I would prefer that the Bill should be defeated rather than that such a humiliating provision should be added to it. The member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran) told us that one of the reasons why the Bill should not pass is that the organisation is distasteful to a large portion of the people of Canada. Does not the hon. gentleman know that we have incorporated bodies of every religious denomination, and that Parliament has never asked whether the organisation was distasteful to members of this House or not, but simply whether it was right that incorporation should be granted? Why should a different argument be applied to the Orange Association of British America? We do not interfere, or attempt to interfere with the rights of others, and there is no body of men more tolerant of the opinions of others. Their obligation teaches them toleration of the opinion of all who may differ with them in religion or in any other way, but, while we have been tolerant in our views, in our feelings and our good intentions, in regard to our fellow-citizens of different religious beliefs throughout Canada, we will not accept any amendment of this kind. The hon. gentleman refers to the proceedings in Montreal in 1877 and 1878. I did not wish to refer to those proceedings, and I am really surprised to find that the hon. member for Montreal Centre should refer to them. They are of such a character as I will not characterise in this House, but the hon. gentleman's co-religionists in the city of Montreal have certainly no reason to pride themselves upon the Hackett murder and the subsequent events, when freedom was denied—a freedom to which we are all justly entitled in Canada—to people who were exercising what they considered to be the rights of Canadian subjects in a free Canadian city. The Act passed by the Quebec Legislature has been referred to. I do not know whether that is good law or not, and I do not care; but we claim that we are entitled to all our rights by the Act as it stands now, and we ask that these should be accorded by the Parliament of Canada, not as a favor, but as a right. We have had a second reading of this Bill, and, after a strong discussion, we have passed it in the Committee, and I hope it will be made the law of Canada.

Mr. KENNY. I have only a very few remarks to make. I see the House is impatient, but I was not here when the Bill was under discussion, and this may be the only opportunity I may have of making a reference to it. My hon. friend from Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran), in introducing this amendment, has given as his reasons for doing so the history of certain events which occurred in the city of Montreal, which every well-wisher of Canada must deplore. Therefore, I consider that the member for Montreal Centre was only discharging a duty which he owes to this House, to lay before the House the incidents which had happened in his own city, of which he was cognisant, and which, as I said, every citizen of Montreal, every tolerant man in Canada, must regret. As regards my own Province I may say, for the information of the House, that, in 1875, the Legislature of the Province of Nova Scotia passed an Act incorporating the Orange body; and I may say further that since that date, so far as the Orangemen in Nova Scotia are concerned, or at least those of the city of Halifax, they have not given us any trouble. But ours is a model Province, and the city from which I come is a model community. We may differ politically in that community, but I am happy to say that a great spirit of tolerance exists there. We boast that our civilisation comes from the east, and I think it would be well for the western Provinces in this Dominion occasionally to look to the east for a lesson in that particular. No matter what my opinions may be about this Bill—I am certainly not in favor of it, yet I recognise the fact that there are a vast number of men in Canada who differ with me, and that they are fully entitled to hold their opinions as I am to hold my view of it. My hon. friend from York (Mr. Wallace) just now accused my hon. friend from Montreal Centre of "intolerance" in introducing his amendment. Now, the hon. member for Montreal was exceedingly careful—I heard that portion of his speech where he reviewed this Bill—he was careful to tell the House that in the Bill itself, there was nothing so very objectionable; and, Sir, if we could be sure that this organisation would be always led by a gentleman of the moderation and tolerance of my hon. friend from York, I have no doubt that we would have more confidence in the future with regard to it. But the hon. member for Montreal has placed before this Legislature the simple statement that there is great risk; that in a certain city in the Province from which he comes, if processions of this organisation take place, violence and bloodshed may ensue. Therefore, instead of blaming the hon. member for Montreal Centre, I consider that he simply discharges a duty which he owes to this House, to place plainly before them the facts, and then allow the House to deal with the question. Now, I am not a lawyer, but I have heard it said by lawyers—and we know that lawyers differ—that these party processions are a matter that each Province in its own Legislature can deal with. Of that I know nothing, but I simply rose to say that I hardly thought it was fair in the hon. member for York to accuse the hon. member for Montreal of "intolerance" in proposing this amendment, and also to point out to this House that in the Province from which I come, we gave this body an Act of incorporation without disturbing the peace and harmony of our community. I feel bound to support the amendment, and I do hope that it will be possible so to regulate the Bill, that there can be no repetition of such deplorable events as occurred in the city of Montreal.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I regret that the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran) should have deemed it his duty to propose this amendment at all; I regret it, because it seems to me that the amendment is not only totally unnecessary, but it is pernicious. The House in its wisdom has seen fit to pass the second reading of this Orange Bill. It has come up here year after year, and has created a good deal of excitement and a good deal of feeling; but there appears to have been this year a general and a widespread desire on the part of members of this House, that this organisation should receive that for which they have been asking for a good many years—that is, an Act of incorporation. We have assented to the principle of the Bill, and I have not heard in this House, although I did hear in the Committee to which the Bill was referred, any objection to the details of the Bill; so that as far as the principle and details are concerned, the hon. gentleman raised no objection. Now, what did he say? This Bill does not give the Orange body a right to walk in the streets of Montreal or in any other place; it merely incorporates a certain body known as the Orange body for the purposes contained in that Bill. If they choose to walk in the streets of Montreal, and the municipal law of that city, or the local law of that Province enables them to do so, well and good. If the municipal law of that city or a local Act of that Province prohibits them from walking in procession, they will not be allowed to do so, and this Bill does not confer upon them the power to do so. Therefore, I say that it is no use throwing down this bone of contention, which can only have the effect of raising up bitter feelings and dissensions. It rests entirely with the Province of Quebec to say whether they will allow these Orangemen to walk or not. All we do is to incorporate the society, and although the Local Legislature cannot pass any law which will infringe upon a right we give the society, still a city can pass municipal laws regulating the manner in which their streets shall be promenaded, and everything of that kind; and we do not pretend to confer any power upon the Orange Society by this Bill, to walk in the streets of Montreal or anywhere else. I think the hon. gentleman will see that it would be a very bad precedent for us to insert in a Bill of this kind any such clause as he proposes, and it will be legislating in the best interests of those whom he represents, if he withdraws the amendment entirely.

Mr. LISTER. I listened with a good deal of interest to the speech of the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran). I believe that hon. gentleman and myself had the honor of coming into this House together for the first time in the last Parliament. On one occasion when a Bill involving the same principles as the present measure was offered to this House by gentlemen who are promoting the present measure, I remember the zeal, nay, I might almost say, the bitterness, with which that hon. gentleman opposed that measure. Sir, I was not a little surprised to see that hon. gentleman to-night rise in his place and take it for granted that the Bill now before the House is to become the law of the land. One is forced to the conclusion, one is driven to the conclusion, that an arrangement has been made by the Government and members promoting this Bill, for the purpose of satisfying the Orange body in this country who are now opposed to the Government on account of their action in the Jesuit matter. Now, we find hon. gentlemen upon the Government benches apparently opposing this Bill, but in reality consenting to it. It is a part and parcel of the compact which has been entered into by the leaders of the Government and their Orange Protestant followers in the country. They say to the Orangemen who are opposed to the Government—or many of them who are opposed to the Government; because they believe the Government did wrong in not disallowing the Jesuits' Estates Act—they say to these Orangemen: Do not blame us for that, and we will give you Orange incorporation. Sir, the leader of the Government for years has trifled with the Orange body of this country; an Orangeman himself, he has trifled with the body of which he is so distinguished a member. You know that long ago he promised the Orangemen of this country that, in consideration of their support, he would give them incorporation; and we know how he carried out that promise, by voting for it himself and letting his followers vote against it. The whole country knows that if the leader of the Government was sincere in his promise to the Orange body, this measure would have become law years and years ago. The people know perfectly well that if the Government was honest in its representations to the body, there need be no question as to this being the law of the land in the way the Orangemen want it. They know it would not be necessary to come and ask for incorporation in the shape of a benevolent association, as they do in this Bill, but they would have had incorporation as they wanted it on several occasions before this, being incorporated as an incorporated body without the benevolent provisions in the present Bill. They know that if the right hon. gentleman was honest in his statements to them, if he was honest in his promises to them, all he had to do was to have introduced this measure as a Government measure, and the members who sit behind him would have supported it, and it would have become law. He knew he could do it, but he would not do it. What he told the Orangemen was: Why, bless your simple hearts, I voted for the Bill. Look at the division lists, time and time again, and you will see the name of John A. Macdonald voting for the affirmative; but Sir Hector Langevin voted on the other side. Sir, the right hon. gentleman has trifled with the Orangemen for years, and now when he finds he has got into a little scrape over the policy of his Government on account of the Jesuits' Estates Act, he says to his amiable and almost blind follower, the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace): We will make it all right with the Orangemen, and I will allow the Orange Bill to go through. And the hon. gentleman allows it. When the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) told the people that the Orangemen are a unit in asking for incorporation, under the circumstances as they exist, he is not aware of or does not state the true facts of the case, because there is a large division and a great difference of opinion among Orangemen of the Province of Ontario, as to the propriety of accepting incorporation from this Parliament. They know it is a sop thrown out by the sagacious leader of the Government. They feel they are demeaning and humiliating themselves under the circumstances to ask for incorporation, and the very day I left home for Ottawa, an Orangeman said to me: "Whatever comes up, do not vote for that Orange Bill; vote against it, if introduced." It appears to me that some strange influence has come over the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran). I wonder if we will see the hon. gentleman on the Treasury benches before long, in view of the very moderate speech he made to-night. In order to show his consistent record, he presents to this House an amendment making a certain provision, if the Orange Bill becomes law—which he concedes here to-night, as he says it is to become law—but he says: For goodness sake, do not let them march in the Province of Quebec. I say, that if the Orangemen are to have incorporation, we have a right to give them every power which any other association in this country possesses. It is childish to say to these people: We give you incorporation, but you shall not exercise the rights that other societies have in the Province of Quebec. If they get incorporation, they have a right to walk where they please, so long as they do not break the law, and commit a breach of the peace; and the amendment of the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran), is utterly unnecessary. It was moved, as lawyers say, to give color to the pleadings; it was to impress his friends in Montreal with the impression that he was doing something for the Catholics of that city, that he was facing the inevitable, but was struggling to the last to help his co-religionists in that section of the country. Why, he will say, I introduced an amendment asking that Orangemen should not be allowed to walk in Montreal; I supported it by a powerful oration; I did all in the power of mortal man to protect you from what you consider to be an invasion of your rights, or, at all events, an Act offensive to you as citizens of Montreal. The hon. gentleman has adopted this course for the purpose of giving color to the position that he was opposing this measure, when in the same breath he admitted that it is to become law. How does he know it is to become law? Is it because he is aware that this matter has been fixed by the Government with their supporters? While some of them are pretending to oppose the measure—and they will, perhaps, vote against it—they have not arrayed against it the powerful influences of members of the Government. They have agreed, for the purpose of leaving them in the fat positions they have occupied so long, to swallow this obnoxious measure. The Minister of Public Works, a man who prides himself on being the defender of his race and religion, sits quietly in his seat. There is no man in this House who appreciates the honorable and lucrative position which he occupies more than he does, and if it is necessary that the Orange measure should pass, if it is a question as to whether the Orange Bill should pass or he should lose his office, he helps the Orangemen. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that hon. gentlemen opposite believe they are so firmly entrenched there, the seats are so soft, the positions are so nice, that it would take a hand-spike and many men to get them out. They will not go. They will swallow principle or anything else if they can hold those positions; yes, they will swallow an Orangeman if they can hold on to the position they like so well. I am sure the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran) has not given this matter consideration, or he is not acting with perfect frankness. If he had given this matter consideration he would know this: That the fact of the incorporation of this society by the Dominion Parliament does not over-ride the laws of the Province of Quebec. He is too astute a lawyer not to have seen that point. The Province of Quebec has a perfect right to say what societies and bodies of men shall march in the streets of the Province, shall carry flags, regalias and banners, and the passing of this Act does not confer on the Orangemen any greater rights than they have by the laws of Quebec as regards marching in the streets. As he is a clever lawyer, what can we think of the hon. gentleman who has introduced such an amendment? Is he throwing dust in the eyes of this House? What can be his possible motive in moving such an amendment, when he knows as a fact that the laws of the Province of Quebec—against party processions—and he knows as a fact they have a right to pass those laws—must over-ride this Act of incorporation, I say again, so far as the Orangemen of this country are concerned: if this House makes up its mind, that that body shall be incorporated, then I unhesitatingly hold they are entitled to every right, and to every privilege which any incorporated body in this country is entitled to. There should be no distinction, and there should be no exception. If the Legislature of the Province of Quebec thinks proper to say: We will not permit the parade, and marching, and exposure of banners and flags in party processions upon the public streets, that Legislature has a perfect right to say so and this Parliament has no power to enforce upon them in that regard, laws contrary to the laws they passed themselves. That being the case, it is amazing that the hon. gentleman should have introduced this resolution. The only conclusion I can draw from his action in this matter is, that he is pretending to be what in fact he is not. He is pretending to be opposed to this Act of incorporation, when in fact from the considerations I have offered he is not opposed to it. His opposition is colorable, not real. For these reasons I will oppose the amendment of the hon. gentleman.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question.

Mr. LAURIER. The time has passed, Mr. Speaker, to further consider this matter.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. LISTER.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. COOK. I beg to call the attention of the House to a question put by me on the 12th February, to the hon. Secretary of State, and his reply thereto. The question and answer were as follows:—

“Mr. COOK asked. Whether the P. LeSueur who draws $1,024.30 for annual superannuation allowance is the same person who enjoys the combined offices of Civil Service Examiner and Secretary to the Examiners at a salary per annum of $1,258.33? If so, is the arrangement to be continued?”

“Mr. CHAPLEAU. Mr. LeSueur is a superannuated officer, and therefore, cannot, by law, be compelled to do official duty except at a salary not lower than he received in his former position. He receives $1,024 of superannuation, $400 as a commissioner and $700 as secretary of the commission for the Civil Service examinations. He receives a lower salary than he received when he was in office.”

I wish to draw the attention of the Committee to the fact that the Secretary of State in this answer attempted to mislead the House, and to mislead the country. Mr. LeSueur does not receive as much now as he did before he was superannuated, by the sum of $117.37. His salary before superannuation amounted to $2,400, but there has been another Mr. LeSueur, whether a brother or a son I do not know, appointed in his place at the same salary of $2,400. The country is, therefore, the loser to the extent of $1,034.30. I hold that if this Mr. LeSueur, who has been superannuated, is fit to perform the duties assigned to him at the present time, he is quite able to perform the duties which he did before he was superannuated. He now receives a salary of $2,282.63, and the whole thing shows that there is an attempt on the part of the Government to deal unjustly in this matter. I wish to cite this question particularly, because it is supposed that if a gentleman who was in the public service is superannuated, he is no longer fitted for his employment. We know that the present duties of Mr. LeSueur are more onerous than before he was superannuated, and that it requires a more capable and a stronger man to discharge them. This superannuation fund has largely increased since last year, and has reached such enormous proportions that the country is pretty sick of it. There was set apart, last year, $240,240 for the purpose of superannuating men who are quite able to discharge their duties if they were not disturbed. I believe that the system is a pernicious one, and I for one would like to see it abolished. There are many men in the country who are working for far less salaries than these Government officials have, and who have to support large families, but not being Government employés, they have to do without a superannuation allowance. I wish particularly to draw attention to the fact that the intention of the Secretary of State, as shown by his answer, was an attempt to make the country believe that the services in this case were performed much cheaper than before this gentleman was superannuated, whereas the gentleman who occupies the same position as Mr. P. LeSueur is getting the same salary, and at the same time we have to pay the superannuated Mr. LeSueur nearly the same salary as he obtained before. The fact is, that by this change the country has to pay the salaries of two men instead of one, as previously.

Mr. McMULLEN, When the House rose at six o'clock, I was pointing out some reasons why I considered it necessary that a change should take place in the superannuation system. I was drawing attention to the fact that Mr. Wallace, of Victoria, had been superannuated for the purpose of making room for a man who had been previously a member of this House. Now, I contend that this system of superannuating officials, in order to make room for others who are anxious to get offices, has been kept up too long in this country. I hold in my hand a statement showing the additions which have been made to the superannuation list during the last ten years. I find that in 1878 the number on the list was 272, while in 1888 it was 484, an increase in the ten years of 212. The amount paid for superannuations in 1878 was $106,588.91, and in 1888, $218,933.65, showing an increase in the ten years of $112,344.74. It is quite clear that if this expenditure should continue to increase in the same proportion in the future, the drain on the resources of the people of this country will be very seriously increased year after year. I also hold in my hand a list of some of those who have been superannuated by hon. gentlemen opposite within the last ten years, and I will mention a few of them. Mr. William Agnew was 59 years of age when he was superannuated; he had a salary of $1,200; he drew altogether for his services over $30,000, and he receives a superannuation allowance of $588 a year, having drawn from the superannuation fund altogether $5,880. Mr. Bramley was superannuated when he was 68, he drew a salary of $2,200, and is now drawing a superannuation allowance of $1,121 a year, and he has drawn altogether $11,211 of superannuation money. Mr. F. M. Passow was superannuated when he was 67 years of age; he had a salary of $2,200, he drew altogether in salaries $4,000, and he has drawn $15,400 of superannuation money. Mr. Norris Godard was superannuated, in 1880, when he was 64 years of age, he received a salary of $2,400, and he has drawn since 1880 $16,800 of superannuation money. Mr. John Howe was superannuated in 1880 at the age of 62, he was drawing $2,000 a year, and he has since drawn in superannuation money $13,999. Mr. Joseph Lesslie was superannuated in 1881; he was formerly postmaster of the city of Toronto, and was superannuated to make room for a gentleman who was then on the editorial staff of the Mail, Mr. Patten, and since his superannuation he has drawn $24,500. Mr. W. H. McRae was superannuated in 1881, when he was only 39 years of age, and since then he has drawn altogether in superannuation money $5,050. Mr. Patrick, a person to whom I alluded before, who was formerly Clerk of this House and was drawing $3,400 a year for a great many years, although he never paid a cent to the Superannuation Fund, has drawn from it since 1880 $23,800. Mr. Leprohon, who was once deputy Clerk of this House, was superannuated in 1882, and since then he has drawn from the superannuation fund $15,439, and I understand that he is still quite an active man. A great many of these men have been superannuated, not because they were incapable of performing their duties, but simply because there were some other persons pressing for the positions they occupied. Therefore I contend that as this system has been abused, it is the duty of this House to make a move towards doing away with it altogether. A system of this kind is a source of political corruption and debauchery, as it is not used for the purpose it was originally intended, but is only abused. I considered it my duty to bring these cases before the House, and I think they contain sufficient evidence to convince any reasonable man that it is wrong to continue this system any longer.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It does appear to me that something should be done with the superannuation system we have in this country. I, for one, as a Canadian, born and living in this country, do strenuously oppose, and will continue to oppose the superannuation of any person who resides out of this country. I think that is one of the greatest outrages in connection with the superannuation system. I believe it creates, on the part of the people, a good deal of heart-burning and discontent and envy towards the system. I feel certain that the people who live in this country and subscribe to its revenues will not be satisfied to superannuate people who leave the country to live in France, in the United States and other countries, and spend, in those countries, the money that belongs to the people of this country. I think it is high time that the Government should look to that branch of the superannuation service at any rate, and if those people who receive superannuation money cannot remain and live in this country, we should cease to grant the superannuation allowance to them.

Mr. KIRK. I agree with the hon. gentlemen who have spoken on this side with reference to the corrupt manner in which the superannuation system has been applied. I do not know upon what principle the Government apply the system, but this I do know, that it is applied very unfairly. It appears to me to be applied without rule or regulation at all, and simply with the view of finding positions for friends of the Government. A few years ago, I think in 1875, the Province of Nova Scotia was set apart as an inspection district for the purpose of fish inspection, and an inspector and a deputy inspector were appointed for that Province, including Cape Breton. The inspector received a salary of $1,400, and his deputy $800. Now, that inspector did his work faithfully and well until 1879, when he was dismissed, and no reason given for his dismissal but that of economy, the Government claiming that it was unnecessary to have an inspector for Nova Scotia. I maintain that, after having served in the office four years and faithfully performed his duties, if there was no use for an inspector he should have been superannuated, and given the benefit, at least, of the money that was taxed on his salary during those four years. But this was not done, and fair play was not meted out to him. But what became of the plea of economy? Within two years after, the Province of Nova Scotia was divided into two sections; Cape Breton was set apart, and an inspector appointed for Cape Breton at a salary of $500, and one appointed for Nova Scotia at a salary of $1,800 a year. Where is the economy? I have no fault to find with those inspectors who, so far as I know, have well and faithfully performed their duties; but I find this year that the inspector of Nova Scotia has been superannuated. I do not know whether it was because he was too old to perform his duties, but I doubt very much if that was the reason. I believe the true reason was because he made a report to the Government on the question of sawdust which did not agree with the ideas of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries—a report which that hon. gentleman suppressed. I believe, although I do not say it for a fact, that Mr. Rogers, after he made that report, was requested by the Government to resign or to accept a superannuation allowance, because in his report he claimed that sawdust did not kill fish. He was superannuated, and returns which have been laid on the Table so far do not show what amount of superannuation he received. But the Province has been again divided, and instead of one inspector for the whole Province of Nova Scotia, we have now two inspectors. The superannuation of Mr. Rogers made places for two played-out politicians supporting the Government, one of whom sat in this House for four years, and the other in the Local Legislature of Nova Scotia, and as they could no longer find seats they were given positions at the expense of this country. I suppose those two gentlemen will now report that sawdust does kill fish, and will continue to be an additional burden to the Dominion, so long as they agree with the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. This superannuation system ought to be abolished altogether, or else some rule should be laid down which would prevent any partiality in its application.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). This superannuation system is assuming very serious proportions. In the case of persons who have been in the service of the Government and have become incapacitated by age or disability, there can be no objection to a reasonable allowance being given them during their declining years; but the mode in which the system is carried out is open to great objection. We find continually parties put on the superannuation list who are well competent to discharge their duties and others put in their places, thus entailing additional burdens on the country. In the Auditor's Report, we find that persons have been superannuated who are perfectly capable of performing their duties for years yet, and who are in fact doing work in other capacities just as onerous as those they filled under the Government. We find one gentleman who was pensioned off as a judge, and then appointed to the Senate, he being supposed to have sufficient ability to legislate for the people, but not sufficient to perform the duties of a judge. There are many instances in the Province from which I come of capable people being superannuated in order to make room for political adherents whom the Government wished to reward for political services. We all know the case of Mr. McNab, a young man, who, ten years ago, was pensioned off at a pension of some $1,700 or $1,800 a year, and who to-day is one of the engineers constructing the canal between Manchester and Liverpool, occupying a position which no one but a person of considerable ability in his profession would be allowed to fill. Instead of this system being applied, as it was intended, to make provision for those who may be incapacitated by age or infirmity, it is used as a means of providing places for Government supporters, and thus the country is saddled with the pensions of men whose services could have been retained with advantage and with the salaries of political supporters who are put in their places.

Mr. KIRK.

Mr. PERRY. I have the same complaints to make with regard to the manner in which the superannuation system is conducted in the Province from which I come, as hon. gentlemen who have preceded me have made with regard to their Provinces. I know of a man, Colonel John Duvar, the late Inspector of Fisheries for the Province of Prince Edward Island, than whom a more capable man for the business could not be found through the whole Dominion, who was superannuated without just cause. In fact one of the Ministers himself stated that he was a most competent official, and knew more about the fisheries than any other man in the service, and I believe the Government made use of his knowledge in establishing their hatcheries; yet this man, who was in full vigor, who travelled over the whole island in the discharge of his duties, who attended the courts to enforce the laws, and was a most active man in every respect, and who, when I saw him a few days ago, seemed in full health and vigor, was superannuated in order to make room for another gentleman. I believe that Colonel Duvar is now drawing a pension or a superannuation. If he is not, he ought to be. He is entitled to superannuation. I have yet to learn that the Government can show the House that Colonel Duvar was not able to perform his duties. I know he was capable, and that he did his duty well. He was dismissed simply to make room for a defeated candidate. He was shelved to gratify—I will not say what—but it is well known that Colonel Duvar was not removed from his office for incompetency. I suppose he was getting about $1,200 a year, and, therefore, I suppose he is receiving a superannuation of $400 or $500. I condemn the system of superannuation altogether. It is a rotten system, and I find we are asked to vote $220,000 a year of public money for the superannuation allowances of men who are for the most part well able to perform their duties. A few years ago, we found an official on the Prince Edward Island Railway, a young man of 38 years of age, who, on the statement that he had wrecked a train, through the negligence or parsimony of the Government, was superannuated, I suppose for fear that he would disclose some secrets against the Government, and he received a superannuation allowance of $1,600 or $1,800 a year. Is it right that the people should have taxes wrung from them to pay superannuations of this kind? How many farmers or tradesmen are superannuated, though they are men who have spent their time and worked hard to develop the resources of this country? The system is rotten. If the civil servants do not receive enough money to enable them to live and provide for the future, in the name of common sense increase their salaries; but do not adopt a system of superannuation which is got up simply for the purpose of enabling the Government to make room for defeated candidates—hungry seekers after office—and for that purpose they get rid of those who occupy the places, and make them these allowances for fear they might tell the secrets of the Government. The system is a bad one; and in a few years, instead of voting $220,000, he will have to vote half a million for this purpose. This country should not be called upon to pay this amount or any of it, and I hope the system will soon fall to the ground.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It was my intention during the Session to move a resolution on going into Committee of Supply in order to obtain the view of the House on this question. I did not suppose that this would be reached so soon, but, as so much has been said on the subject now, it is just as well that we should express our opinions on this occasion instead of having to go over the subject again when the time comes for moving the resolution to which I have referred. In 1878, when Sir Charles Tupper did us the honor of attending a public meeting in Halifax, he occupied a considerable portion of the time in pointing out the extravagance of the Mackenzie Administration in adding $10,000 or $15,000 to the Superannuation Fund, and he read over the names of those who had been superannuated, and pointed out that, although nearly all of them were over sixty and most of them over seventy years of age, they could still do their duty, and it was, therefore, an outrage upon the taxpayers that they should be called upon to pay this amount. Well, the amount which the Mackenzie Administration placed upon the taxpayers of this country was very small indeed, in proportion to that which has been imposed upon them since. This item has now grown to such proportions, and the system has been abused in so many ways, that it is necessary that it should be placed fairly before the country so that they may realise in which way we are drifting. When the Government desire to obtain a situation for a political supporter or hanger-on, they are not, by any means, choice in the mode by which they seek to obtain it. My hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Kirk) has pointed out the means adopted in the case of Mr. Rogers, the fishery superintendent of Nova Scotia. He had been there for a long time, he was a very efficient officer, and he was at a time of life when, from his matured judgment and his experience, he was likely to be of great value to the fishing interests of that Province. But it happened that at that time there were two defeated candidates in Nova Scotia. One had occupied a position in this House at one time, Mr. Kinney of Yarmouth, and one had been a member of the Local Legislature, Mr. Hawken of Pictou. These had to be provided for, and the Government thought the best way to provide for them was at the public expense, by superannuating Mr. Rogers, and placing those two utterly untried, completely incapable men in these important positions. I say they were utterly incapable. They had no training or knowledge to fit them for the position. Even from their previous business or occupation, they had nothing to qualify them in any respect whatever for the position they filled in succession to Mr. Rogers; but the country, for that little exercise of Government patronage, had to bear the expense of Mr. Rogers' retiring allowance and the increased amount paid to these people. I have no doubt that, if hon. members were in the House to-night attending to the Estimates—and I am sorry to see the practice coming into use so much here that, when the Estimates come up, members think there is no necessity to attend here and leave the Chamber, though the Estimates are the most important part of our political duty here in guarding the interests of the country, and watching the disposition of the funds of the people—I have no doubt, I say, that, if the members were here, everyone could turn over in his own mind some half dozen illustrations which would be applicable to the question under discussion. In my own experience I know of a considerable number. Reference has already been made to Mr. McNab, an engineer on the Prince Edward Island Railway, a very efficient man of 38 years of age. It was very well known in Nova Scotia why Mr. McNab was superannuated. There was never a doubt in the mind of anyone who took an interest in public matters there as to what was the reason which induced the Government to superannuate Mr. McNab. Mr. McNab had been engineer of the Pictou Railway at a time when the present High Commissioner, by a most arbitrary act, took it out of the hands of the original contractors, and for which he was denounced, in terms so strong, by the present member for Colchester (Sir Adams Archibald) in this House, and by the late member for Colchester as well, in terms which are familiar, no doubt, to almost every hon. member of this House. I say that Mr. McNab was engineer of the Pictou road, and it was very well understood that his connection with the road under the direction of the High Commissioner had been of such a character that it was eminently desirable that he should be out of the country, it was eminently desirable for Mr. McNab's connection with the High Commissioner in that direction, that he should be provided for elsewhere at the country's expense; so he was superannuated and went to London, and, as has been mentioned by the hon. member for St. John to-night, he is now consulting engineer on the canal between Liverpool and Manchester. Now, if there can be pointed out in this country a more glaring abuse of the powers of the Government than in superannuating Mr. McNab at the age of thirty-eight, and giving him $1,600 a year for the term of his natural life, to be paid by the taxpayers of this country, I would like any hon. member to point it out. It is a thing that will live in the memory of everyone who takes an interest in public affairs, and it will live because of the circumstances associated with it to which I have referred, and which have given color to it. I may also say that in my own Province there are other cases of superannuation of an equally objectionable character. There was the collector at Weymouth, in the county of Digby (Mr. Stearns Jones). He was collector at $600 a year, a man of about my own age, some ten or fifteen years younger than the right hon. gentleman at the head of the Government; and I have no doubt that if the right hon. gentleman is able, as we are glad to see he is able, to discharge the high and responsible duties of his position, a man who was ten or fifteen years his junior at that time should have been able to discharge the not very onerous duties of collector at a very small seaport town. But his office was required for a political friend and he was superannuated, and another young gentleman of the same name, but belonging to the opposite side of politics that supports my hon. friend the Minister of Customs, was appointed in his place. The old collector is living, a hale and hearty man, and likely to remain so for many years. Then, again, there is Mr. Sydenham Howe, of Halifax, son of the late Hon. Joseph Howe. Mr. Howe was superannuated on the abolition of his office in connection with the Receiver General's Department. I do not object to Mr.

Howe, by any means, having his salary, or being given employment in the Government service; but what I object to is the fact that Mr. Howe was not transferred to some other branch of the public service in Halifax, where his services, which were valuable, would have been utilised. Mr. Howe was a young man, probably about forty or forty-five years old—although I do not know much about his age—and he has $1,200 a year superannuation. Since that time there have been a great many vacancies in the custom house, post office, and other public departments in Halifax, in which the Government could have placed him, and saved the country the superannuation which they are now paying him. In addition to his $1,200 a year, I find by the Public Accounts that he is now getting $600 as an extra clerk in the post office. I do not object, I repeat, to his getting any salary that his services entitle him to, but I do object to that superannuation being given him at his time of life, when he could have been transferred to any other branch of the public service in Halifax, many of which branches have become vacant. But that would not satisfy the Government, or, I suppose, their supporters in that city. They wanted all these offices for their hangers-on, for the people that were pressing them for appointments, and the Government were, I will not say compelled, because they were willing instruments in this matter, the Government gave Mr. Howe his $1,200 a year, and appointed some other person in his place. Now, we will take the case of Judge Gowan. Judge Gowan was an old judge of the county courts here. I have no doubt he was entitled to a pension for his services if he desired to retire, but if it has come to this, if the Senate is brought down to that position, that a person who is incapable of performing his duties in the position he had occupied is good enough for a Senator and a legislator, one of the men of this country who is to make our laws, one of the men whom people ought to look up to, then I think the Senate will fall very much indeed in the estimation of the people of this country. Then again, take the superannuation of County Court Judge Tremaine, of Cape Breton. Mr. Tremaine was a comparatively young man, and he was able to perform his duties, but when he was given to understand that if he would retire he would get $1,600 a year for life without moving out of his little country village, he considered whether it would not be better for him to accept that annual sum and make way for another former member of this House, the present Judge Dodd, of Sydney, who, I have no doubt, makes a very good judge. These cases were all matters of arrangement, they were all so arranged that one might step out and another might step in, but the country had to pay the expense of it, in this case as in the others; and unless the people fully realise the abuse of this system they will never awaken to its enormity. Then again we have in this category the salary of $1,600 a year to Judge Clark. Judge Clark was also a county court judge, a very able judge, I have always understood he was—I have not the pleasure of his acquaintance—but it seems he was required to fill a more lucrative position as legal adviser to the Canadian Pacific Railway, where report says he has a very handsome income of some $15,000 or $20,000 a year. Be that as it may, it is well known that he has a very large income as legal adviser to that company. Now, would it be thought possible that under these circumstances a man in the prime of life, a man of his ability, knowledge and experience, who desired, not to retire on account of his health, not to retire on account of long services, or anything of that kind that the Government should have consented to the retirement of Judge Clark merely to enable him to take the position of legal adviser to the Canadian Pacific Railway at a much larger salary? I do think that every reasonable man in this country, when he comes to look at it, when he comes to see the Government a party to a transaction of that kind, cannot but feel indignation at this abuse of Governmental power and use of superannuation. If Judge Clark had been a man in ill-health, or an old man and required to retire, that would be a different matter. I repeat, without knowing very much about it, that his time of service may have entitled him to that favor, but when he asked for his retirement on the ground that he might take a more lucrative position, I do not hesitate to say here, that it was an abuse, a shameful abuse, of the powers which Government possesses in regard to this superannuation. The time will come when the people of the country must regard it in that light. I repeat, that on a later occasion, in Supply, we propose to offer a resolution condemning this system, and pointing out the abuses which have arisen under it. The discussion which has taken place to-night will obviate the necessity of any repetition at that time; but the House will see the ground on which we propose to base our resolution, and we will let the country see how the Government are increasing this amount and how they are abusing the power which the people have entrusted into their hands.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am very glad to hear the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), give notice that he intends, at a future day, to bring this matter before the attention of the House. It is one of the most important subjects that can engage the attention of hon. members, and it is a very proper one to bring forward. I have no doubt whatever that the question of superannuation is becoming a very important question to the people of this Dominion. The increase that has taken place within the last few years has been very alarming indeed, for the amount paid for superannuation has more than doubled in the last ten years, and it has now assumed such large proportions that it behooves us to see if we can adopt some system by which this large expenditure can be avoided. I do not intend, at this moment, to bring any charge particularly against this Government, because I think it is a system which has grown up gradually; but I hold that the time has arrived when some solution of the difficulty should be arrived at. When the superannuation system was first introduced it was supposed that the amount received from the civil servants would almost equal the sums paid out to them; but we find that during the last few years the amount has reached $240,000 a year. That is a very serious expenditure. When we look over the public accounts and find name after name of men in receipt of large superannuation allowances for a few years' work in the public service, it must strike every well-wisher of this country that there is something altogether wrong in the system. If the case was that of a man in receipt of an ordinary salary, who was disabled and not fit to perform his duties, it would not be so bad to give him a certain amount after many years of work to maintain him in his old age. But when we find comparatively young men, energetic men in the prime of life, who are still well able to perform all the duties devolving upon them, superannuated and other men appointed in their places, it points to a system that should not be tolerated a moment. I find, for example, that in 1887 G. W. Wicksteed, in receipt of a salary of $3,400 a year, was superannuated at $2,379 a year.

Mr. BOWELL. He is only about 90 years of age.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Again, J. B. Cherriman, who during many years drew a salary of $4,000, was superannuated in 1885, and now draws $1,759 for the rest of his life. Then there is J. W. Dunscomb, who was superannuated in 1883 after he had received for many years a salary of $3,540. He now draws $2,478 from the public chest. Then we find W. R. Mingaye, superannuated in 1887. He was only sixty-three years of age, and had been in receipt of a salary of $3,800. He draws a superannuation allowance of $2,508. Another, Lindsay Russell, who was superannuated in 1884, at only 43 years of age. He was receiving for a number of years $3,200 a year, and he now draws a superannuation allowance of $1,549. Reference has been made to Joseph Lesslie, late postmaster at Toronto. He was receiving a large salary for many years, and he now draws a superannuation of $2,449. And so we might keep on reading name after name from the public accounts and might give instances of men who have been superannuated at thirty, forty, forty-five, fifty and fifty-five years of age and are now a burden on the people of the Dominion. As the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) intends to bring the subject forward at a future date I will not say more than this, that the time has arrived when the Government and this House should take a stand upon this question and should abolish superannuation. I see no reason whatever why men in the public service receiving large salaries should subsequently be saddled on the people and draw large superannuation allowances. No such system prevails in the business community, and if it is not adopted by our bankers and other business men, there is no reason why it should be pursued by the Government of this country. I sincerely hope that some step will be taken to arrive at a solution of this question.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I desire to add a few words to what has been said on this question. I look upon the superannuation system as a very bad one, and the more I examine it the more I am convinced that the system should be abolished. Instead of the system having been curtailed during recent years, it has been extended; last year it was extended to the North-West Mounted Police and also to the lumber cutters in the Province of Quebec. In fact I believe, that if we obtained the private opinions of the majority of the members who support the Government, we will find that they desire to return to the system which obtained previous to 1871. I was told last year by a Conservative member, that he knew about thirty members of the party who would like to vote for the abolition of the superannuation fund, if they only had liberty to do so. Permit me to give an instance or two, of the abuse of this system. I do not wish it to be understood that I contend that the present Government has been the only guilty party, because the system is of such a character that if used by any Government, there would be such influence brought to bear upon it by outside parties interested in getting positions, that it might be constrained at times to act against its own judgment. I know a gentleman, named John Gordon, who was superannuated from the London Post Office, when he was only fifty-six years of age. He was in the post office, according to his own statement, for thirty years, and he was as sprightly, as lively, and as capable of discharging his duties when he was superannuated, as he was thirty years ago. He is at the present time engaged in another business in the city of Toronto, and he was superannuated for the purpose of making room for another person to take his place. Since his superannuation, he has drawn between three and four thousand dollars, at $600 a year, and he is just as capable to-day of discharging his duties in the post office in the city of London, as he was at any time during his service. We all know something about Mr. Joseph Lesslie, of Toronto, who held the important position of postmaster of that city for thirty-five years, and who, when he was superannuated, was a robust, healthy and vigorous gentleman of sixty-four years of age. In fact, he said himself, when he was offered superannuation, that he was just as capable of discharging the duties devolving upon him in the post office, as he was at any time during his life. However, an outside gentleman, who was making application for the position, brought such pressure to bear on the Government that it superannuated Mr. Lesslie, and opened the position for him. That gentleman was a strong political supporter of hon. gentlemen opposite. He was at one time a journalist, and he wrote very strongly for the Government, and thus he got his reward. Mr. Joseph Lesslie is living at the present day, in good health and well able to attend to his business. Since he has been superannuated, he has drawn nearly $20,000 from the Government, and the Postmaster appointed in his stead has drawn $30,000, making the expenses of that post office, during the last nine years, about $50,000. Let me give you the case of Mr. Gilbert McMicken of the city of Winnipeg. He was sick some years ago, and was superannuated on account of his sickness. Afterwards he got well, ran successfully for a constituency in Manitoba and was elected. He was appointed Speaker of the Local House. Then he was drawing three salaries. One of $1,579 for superannuation, $1,000 as Speaker of the Assembly, and $500 for his indemnity, and all because he was too sick to discharge the duties of the office he held under the Government. I ask, is not that an abuse of the superannuation system? I see the hon. Minister of Customs taking a note, and he will, in all probability, tell me that Gilbert McMicken was superannuated under the late Government. I do not care a fig under what Government they are superannuated, for it only shows that the system is bad which will enable any Government to superannuate persons who are not entitled to superannuation. Again, we pay $4,300 for the superannuation of Clerks of this House. Mr.

Alfred Patrick receives $2,400 a year, Mr. Leprohon $1,558, if I remember aright, and there is another superannuated assistant clerk receiving $400. That is $4,300 for which this House receives no value whatever. I believe it would be in the interest of the Government, as I am sure it would be in the interest of the country, to have this Act repealed, and to allow these men to earn their money as other people do. If they fail during their service to provide a competency for their families, they are only placed in the same position as other clerks engaged in the various departments of business life. The farmers of the constituency which I have the honor to represent are every day working just as hard in the interests of the country as any civil servant, and if at the age of forty, fifty, or sixty years they fail to make a competency for themselves, is the Government going to come to their rescue and say that it is prepared to maintain them and their families during the balance of their lives. I do not think the Government is prepared to say so. The whole system is wrong, and the sooner we set it right the better for the Government themselves, and the better for the country. I am very glad that my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Jones) intends to move a resolution in this direction. I shall support it by my vote with the greatest degree of satisfaction.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). What pension does Mr. Wallace, the late postmaster at Victoria, receive altogether?

Mr. HAGGART. His superannuation is $672, and $240 added. He was superannuated on the 1st January, 1887, on the recommendation of my predecessor, Mr. McLelan. He had fourteen years' service, and his salary was $2,400 a year. The allowance on that would be $672, and he was recommended, I think, to have five years added.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What age is Mr. Wallace?

Mr. HAGGART. I do not know at present, but you will find it in the Auditor General's Report.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Auditor General's Report fails to give the age, which it would be desirable it should do.

Mr. HAGGART. Last year it gave the age.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I wish to call attention to this, because it is inconvenient not to have the ages given. What was the cause of Mr. Wallace's superannuation?

Mr. HAGGART. All I know is that he was recommended for superannuation by my predecessor, on 23rd November, 1887, after fourteen years' service.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Who is the present postmaster of Victoria?

Mr. HAGGART. Mr. Shakespeare.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). A former member of this House.

Salaries, Militia Branch and District Staff.....	$12,400

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the reason of the decrease of $1,700?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The decrease was caused by the fact that one of the deputy-adjutants general was not replaced. The vacancy was created by the death of Colonel Lamontagne, and Mr. MACDONALD (Huron).

I followed the practice in that instance, which I had followed in regard to other districts, in putting it under the control of the commandant of the Military School at St. John's, Quebec, charging him also with the administration of Military District No. 6.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In that case, what allowance is made to the officer who discharges the duty?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. About $300 a year. In these cases I allow what is considered to be the allowance which the Deputy Adjutant would have been entitled to for travelling, inspecting, &c. In that way we save a whole salary.

Ammunition, Clothing and Military Stores.....	$200,000

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I noticed in a paper lately, a synopsis of some of the reports from the different military districts, several of which found fault with the ammunition. In one district it was said the ammunition would not reach half the way to the target, and some other very strong expressions were made use of with reference to it. That is a very regrettable condition of affairs. I should like to ask if it has been brought to the notice of the Department, and, if so, whether any steps have been taken to remedy it?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The expressions were very strong; I have seen some of them, but they were not warranted by the facts. The results of the last meeting of the Dominion Rifle Association here, showed that the Quebec Cartridge Factory is a success in every respect; and I can tell the hon. gentleman that I have received, privately and officially, from several officers who take a prominent part in Rifle Associations, letters stating that they were thoroughly satisfied that we had arrived at such a state of perfection that our Canadian cartridges might be said to be equal to any that had been imported.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. Minister's statement is not very complimentary to the commanding officer of the district who made the complaint, because he implies that the commanding officer did not know what he was writing about, or was entirely in error. Does the hon. Minister mean to say that the officers who made that complaint were not competent judges of the value of the ammunition furnished to them when they were conducting their usual target practices? Seeing how strong the expressions were, and coming from the source they did, I supposed the hon. gentleman would hardly have applied to them the words he has. I would hardly like to think that he has in his service commanding officers so incapable of judging the ammunition supplied to them.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It is difficult for me to know, unless the hon. gentleman specifies the commanding officers he refers to. If he can point out to me any commanding officers in the service who have expressed strong opinions on the cartridges manufactured at Quebec, I am ready to take up the case and discuss it with him; but when he speaks of commanding officers and asks me whether I have confidence in them, I cannot answer him unless he specifies them.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I can mention one case. I see on page 22 of the hon. gentleman's own report that Capt. McLean, musketry instructor, reports as follows:—

“The poor quality of the ammunition also interfered with accurate shooting; 2 per cent. of it was worthless, it being impossible to explode it, and 5 per cent. dropped short.”

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. He must have been unfortunate in falling upon some old cartridges, which must have been served out instead of those which have been manufactured at Quebec, and which were considered so good at the last meeting of the Rifle Association. I can tell the hon. gentleman that there have been no complaints except possibly a few; the consensus of opinion being that the cartridges manufactured in Canada are equal to the English cartridges, and I think we have a report stating that they are superior to any that we have imported from England. But it very often happens, as the hon. gentleman knows, that old cartridges get mixed up with the new ones in the stores, or while being sent from one district to another.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The subject of clothing is one which, I think, the House should ventilate again. We had a pretty full discussion of this subject last year, when it was shown by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) that we were paying 55 per cent. more for the clothing made in Canada than the army clothier in England offered to supply it for. It also appeared to be a fact, which was well known before, that the Imperial clothing, on the whole, was very much better than the Canadian clothing, as regards material, style and color. The hon. Minister reported that the supply of clothing by Canadian contractors continues to give satisfaction; and then he added, with charming naïveté, that the extension of the contracts for three years, had had a good effect. A good effect, I suppose, for Messrs. Sanford & Co., O'Brien & Co., Shorey & Co., and two or three other Canadian firms, who, by the continuance of this system, have taken just $50,000 out of the Government of this country. We are asked to-night to vote $90,000, and if the hon. gentleman will calculate 55 per cent. on that amount, he will see that $50,000 is what he is paying Canadian manufacturers in preference to importing the superior article from the mother country. I think the country will recognise that this is rather an expensive operation to the taxpayers, and though the system will no doubt continue while the present Administration occupies the Treasury benches, I think the people will, when given the opportunity, express their disapproval of this system of paying so large an amount to the manufacturers in this country, when we can import better clothing from the army clothiers of England at fifty-five per cent. less. I need not emphasise that point any more. The fact was admitted before the Committee, and cannot be contradicted now, that as regards style, material, color and cheapness the Imperial clothing is far preferable to that contracted for. When, therefore, the hon. gentleman said that the extension of the contract for three years has had a good effect, he must mean it has had a good effect on those manufacturers who are known to be so ready at election times to contribute to election funds.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman has spoken of admirable naïveté, and he has shown himself possessed of that quality to a very great extent, when he expects this House to put faith in the statements he has made concerning what took place last Session. This matter was thoroughly ventilated last Session, and ventilated in such a manner that the witnesses brought forward by the gentlemen who were attacking the administration of the Militia Department, stated themselves that the Imperial goods were nothing else but rubbish as compared with the goods manufactured in Canada.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). No.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes, and the hon. gentleman was present in Committee when this evidence was given by the very witnesses who were brought forward to run down Canadian goods. This is no time to discuss the advantages or disadvantages of the National Policy, and I do not wish to be drawn into a discussion of that subject, but I can tell the hon. gentleman that a three years' contract is a great advantage. The hon. gentleman was not long enough in the Department to see the advantages of a three years' contract. That system was adopted upon the report of such men as Col. Macpherson, and men of vast experience in the stores of our Canadian service. These men stated that if we changed our contractors every year we would be taking each year men who had no experience and had not all the machinery required for the purpose. The reports show, and these reports were submitted to that great Committee of investigation, which was going to destroy the utility of every officer in the Militia Department, not excepting the head of the Department, that since the three years' contract system had been introduced the goods were far superior to what they were before; and the reason is quite obvious. If, for instance, you were to give a contract for ten years, it would become the interest of the manufacturer to improve his machinery and make it as perfect as possible, just as in Pimlico you find the most perfect machinery, because the manufacturers there manufacture not only for England but for the continental armies also, so that, having standing contracts all the time, they can afford to make every improvement. This applies also in a lesser degree to the system we have introduced into Canada. This system permits a man who is desirous of doing justice to his contract to lay out a certain amount of money to purchase the machinery required to carry it out to the best advantage; and I can tell the hon. gentleman that every manufacturer with whom I have discussed the system has told me that the vicious side of our system was that we gave contracts only for one year. We had such a long discussion on this subject last year, and the circumstances not having changed since, I will not take up the time of the House by entering further into the question.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. gentleman has not touched the question of cost. He has merely referred to that portion of it relating to the quality. I admit frankly there was a discrepancy of opinion with regard to the quality of Imperial clothing as compared with the Canadian clothing, but on the whole the preponderance of testimony was in favor of the Imperial, as it naturally would be. The hon. gentleman will remember that evidence was given by the officers of the Queen's Own, the crack regiment of Toronto, to show that they would not take the Canadian clothing at a low price, but imported their own clothing from England, because it was a better material and a better fit, and the hon. gentleman will remember also that on that occasion it was shown that there were eleven military boards held in different parts of this Dominion, and that all of them condemned his clothing. Now, those military boards surely had no object in view in condemning the clothing supplied by the Government, if it was good. The hon. gentleman cannot pretend that these military boards, consisting of military men, doubtless of both political parties, were animated by any desire to destroy the reputation of Canadian clothing. I have no doubt that the vast majority of the officers composing them were supporters of this Administration; still with an unanimity unparalleled they condemned the Canadian clothing. If such was the opinion of these gentlemen, the fact remains beyond doubt that we are paying $50,000 a year for the advantage of getting this clothing in Canada. Even admitting, for the sake of argument, that it was as good as Imperial clothing—which I think will hardly be contended—I would ask is it worth while to continue paying $50,000 a year for the benefit of two or three clothing firms in this country. The hon. gentleman says the question was discussed fully last year. I admit it; but the hon. gentleman made a statement last year which was entirely inaccurate, because he said, in his speech in reply to the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock), that the Imperial army clothiers only gave a quotation, and did not offer to furnish the goods at that rate. The hon. gentleman will remember.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do not remember that.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Probably not.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I can tell the hon. gentleman what I did say.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. gentleman stated in his speech that they only gave a quotation but did not offer to supply the goods at that price, and yet I have the letter before me in which they say: "We shall be happy to receive your esteemed orders at the price we have given." It comes down to this: that we are paying $50,000 a year to put that money into the pockets of a few Canadian manufacturers, and that is what I want the House and the country to understand.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I cannot speak as to the price of the clothing. That should be settled by the Minister or his assistants as to the difference between the price of the clothing manufactured in this country, and the English clothing, to which, I think, in fairness to the Canadian manufacturers, should be added the duty with which the Government should charge themselves. But, as to the quality of the clothing, I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Jones, Halifax) when he speaks of the quality being condemned by the boards, refers to issues of some years ago. The clothing was condemned at that time, and it was of an inferior quality, but a marked improvement has taken place, and, speaking as a volunteer officer, I do not think there is any complaint whatever now in regard to the clothing. In fact, everyone who has anything to do with it is very well satisfied with it. It is quite up to the standard of the clothing we used to obtain from England. The cloth is of an excellent texture—strong and good. The scarlet dyes, which were so difficult to get at first, and which it was so difficult to put into the cloth, have been obtained at considerable expense, I believe, to the manufacturers, and I do not think the coloring now compares unfavorably with that of the English goods. When the samples were shown here last year, the representatives of the Queen's Own were satisfied, and their master-tailor who was here at the time, admitted that, if that was a specimen and if that was to be the Canadian tunic in future, he had no complaint to make. That is owing to the fact that a trial has been given to the Canadian manufacturers, and that they have succeeded should be a source of great satisfaction to the people of Canada, as we know that the money is expended in this country.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I must say that it is the most preposterous thing I ever heard, to state that the Government of Canada are bound to charge duties for the clothing imported for the use of the volunteers of Canada. It is important that the best clothing possible should be issued to the volunteers, but there is no possible ground for charging a duty upon it unless for the purpose of putting money into the pockets of Sanford & Co., and others of that kind, who send the money back again to the Government for corrupt purposes.

General LAURIE. I was for some time on the militia staff, and, therefore, know something about this matter, and, when I hear a charge brought against the Militia Department that the clothing boards condemned certain clothing and, therefore, the Department is to blame, I think the charge is most unfair. These boards must have been assembled under the instructions of the Minister of Militia. Without instructions from headquarters they would not assemble, so this shows that the Department was exercising a proper supervision in asking these boards to meet and pronounce upon the quality of the clothing. Instead of deserving blame, the Department deserves credit, as it has, in this way, protected the interests of the country.

Mr. DENISON. In my corps, the clothing has always been good, and we have no fault to find with it. I have much pleasure in saying so.

Drill Instruction.....$40,000

Mr. CASEY. This item has been discussed year after year, and the Minister has admitted that it is an improper and absurd one. He knows very well that the cheques which are issued nominally for drill instruction are issued to the officers of companies, who do not instruct their men at all except when in camp, and that the amount, instead of being paid for drill instruction, is handed over to the band fund or to some other fund for regimental purposes, unless the officer chooses to pocket it himself without having rendered any service for it. This is the sixth year that I have referred to it. What I contend is that the amount should be charged to the band fund or the extra care of armories, or anything of that kind to which it is devoted, and should not appear under the head of drill instruction.

Public Armories and care of Arms, &c. $60,000

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I should like to ask the Minister what preparation he or the Government is going to make in reference to the drill shed at Kingston. The one there now will pass away from the possession of the Government on the 1st July next, and no arrangement has been made, as far as I know, to provide any place for the local volunteer corps to drill in or to provide armories for them. I called attention to this matter last year, and I hope that, in the Supplementary Estimates, we will find a vote to provide for this. It is a very small encouragement to officers and men if they do not find suitable accommodation, and if the Government do not provide armories and drill sheds for volunteer battalions, those battalions must go down. I understand that the city of Kingston has offered to give a very suitable piece of land adjoining the Artillery Park, in exchange for a piece of land which is not of much value adjoining the Central School. I do not know whether that offer has been accepted or not. We have had no public intimation of what steps have been taken by the Government, but I now ask the Minister to tell us, and I hope he will be able to give a satisfactory answer, and to state that a suitable place has been found for the volunteers of Kingston.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. This question is one which has already engaged the attention of the Government. I cannot exactly say what will take place, but, probably, my hon. friend will see the result of our deliberations when the Supplementary Estimates are brought down.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What does the Minister intend to do with the drill shed and armory in the town of Chatham? He will remember that last year when the Estimates were voted, he promised that he would fix up the armory and the drill shed in the town of Chatham, which are in a very bad state and quite untenable. The armory has fallen to pieces and is no place for keeping arms or clothing in at all; they would be utterly destroyed if left there. I think if it is the intention of the Minister to keep up the battalions throughout the country, at least a place ought to be provided wherein they could drill, and where they could keep their clothing and arms properly. I would also like to ask the Minister about another matter to which I have frequently called his attention, and that is the claim of Capt. Coogan of the 24th Battalion. The Minister will remember the case. Capt. Coogan, finding that the armory was utterly unfit to keep the arms and clothing in, two years ago rented a building to which he removed all the clothing and arms of the battalion. For this building he has been obliged to pay a rent of $40 a year; he has put in a claim to the Minister, and I think the Minister ought to entertain it. It is a trifling matter, but it is a just claim, and the man ought to be reimbursed for the amount of the rent. If he had not rented this place, of course the clothing and arms of the whole battalion would have become utterly unfit for use.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. About the claim of Capt. Coogan, I may state to the hon. gentleman, that it has engaged the attention of the Department. It is true that it was represented to the Department, that Capt. Coogan had rented a place for the purpose of securing the clothing and arms of his company, but the hon. gentleman must remember that he is getting from the Government $40 a year for that purpose. Each company gets $40 a year for the identical purpose for which Capt. Coogan rented that place and paid $40. I think he was merely doing his duty and nothing more. The question of the drill shed is an important one from the standpoint of the force in the hon. gentleman's constituency. I can say that there is an estimate this year to make the necessary repairs in the drill shed, so that it may become a fit place for storing clothing and arms. I would not like to be discourteous to my hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Casey) in not referring to the question he has asked. He and I have already discussed that point. He says five years. I would not be sure about that. We have discussed it more than once, but the hon. gentleman admits himself that it is more technical than anything else. From his experience of military matters, I know he would be very loth to withdraw the $40,000 from the force. If I understand his argument it is merely a question of putting it under a different heading. The deputy has taken a note of it, and it is possible that we may change some items, but not many. There are some items that cannot be changed, as the hon. gentleman will understand. Now, this $40,000 is used for several purposes: drill instruction, allowances to officers commanding corps of active militia under the Militia Regulations of 1887, paragraphs 390 and 395, 18 batteries at $200 each, making $3,600. That is for real drill instruction. Then 650 companies of garrison artillery, infantry and cavalry, receive each $40 a year. I know it to be a fact that, in some instances, some portion of that $40,000 may have been utilised for bands. The hon. gentleman knows the difficulty and trouble encountered by officers who wish to keep their force up properly, and I think a small encouragement of that kind can be allowed. Our force is always very ready to turn out whenever the citizens require, and I think we cannot refuse them this small amount. There is an allowance to commanding officers of rural battalions for battalion instruction, 416 companies at $25 each.

Mr. CASEY. They do not give the instruction.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. They get a great deal of instruction. In other countries the instruction which our men get would cost a great deal more than it costs in Canada, and the corps which do not get annual drill are entitled to only one-half the allowance for drill instruction. I have told the hon. gentleman how it is made up in our estimates, and it is a matter that may be easily adjusted. If the hon. gentleman would suggest the changes which he considers could be properly and conveniently made, I have no objection to it, provided the $40,000 will cover the expenses.

Mr. O'BRIEN. On several occasions I have called the attention of the Minister and the House to this particular item, and suggested a way by which I think justice might be done. I contend that this money being given properly for drill instruction, ought to be so given that the lazy man who does nothing should not be in the same position as the active man who does a great deal. Speaking for myself and from my own knowledge of the force, I know that of the captains who have been under my command a certain number have steadily and regularly devoted their attention to keeping up their companies, and have always given as much instruction as it was possible for this small sum. On the other hand there are many others who, whenever they do anything, do as little as they can. I, as the officer commanding a battalion, have no power over these men; under the present system I can do nothing. I have no check over this allowance, and have no power to deal with the lazy man, or to make him do his work and earn his money as the other man does. I have suggested to the Minister on two or three occasions, so often, indeed, that I am almost ashamed to mention it again, that if he would only adopt a system, which could easily be carried out, of giving this grant according to efficiency, we would stand on a very much better footing and we would get rid of a great many officers of the force who seem to remain in it for the sake of this small fee, and whose only sacrifice is the time of going to camp. Now, if such officers were compelled to give to their companies the care and the attention which others give to them voluntarily, they could either do their duty or we could get rid of them. When the regiment comes to camp, all we have to do is for the officer commanding the brigade or battalion to appoint a board of two or three officers to go through the different battalions and inspect each company in rotation. One company could be inspected in this manner in twenty minutes or less, so many sections of company drill, so many sections of squad drill, so much manual exercise and firing exercise. The men should be tested that way, and if a half or one-third of the men were found to reach a certain standard of efficiency the officer should have a certificate and get his money, and if he had not done his duty efficiently then he should not get it. Every time the regiment goes to camp that system could be carried out without any difficulty. We would then get rid of what is an unpleasant thing, the knowledge that careless and lazy officers stand on the same footing as those who are efficient. Of course it could be done much better if the whole force was drilled every year, as it might be, I think, if the Government would only make up their minds to ask this House and the country for the small additional sum necessary to drill the whole force. There are members of this House who occasionally speak sneeringly of the militia, but the best test of the popularity of the force is to be found in the fact that if the Minister, even in the discharge of a public duty, finds it necessary to interfere with the existence of a rural corps, he soon finds a hornet's nest round his ears. Why? Because the force is so popular, and because each county has so much interest in its own regiment that it will not allow the regiment to be interfered with even, although it may appear to be necessary. This is evidence which should convince the Minister that he should ask the House to vote such additional sum as may be necessary to drill the whole force every year, and that such sum would be readily granted and the country would never grudge it, and, therefore, no man need be afraid to vote cheerfully for such appropriation. I think the Minister will admit that such a measure would be cheerfully voted by this House, and I can assure him that the country would back him up in submitting such a proposition. It would relieve us from a very great difficulty that stares us in the face. If a man is enrolled during a year his regiment is not going to camp, his three years' service would have expired and he would have attended only one drill. So the money is practically thrown away. Another suggestion is this: additional pay should be given to men who have served three years. At present a man who attends one drill is on the same footing as a man who has been ten years on the force, and is a thoroughly efficient man. Some little alteration in this particular, which would cost a comparatively trifling sum, would immensely increase the efficiency of the force. I wish to say a few words in regard to the clothing, as I did not happen to be present when that item was passed. Without any reference to past transactions or complaints, I am satisfied, from a careful inspection of the clothing now in use, that the clothing department is as good I think as it is possible to make it, and the Minister need not be ashamed of the clothing of the force. I desire to call attention to another very important matter. Every one acquainted with the force is aware that there is not a single regiment now equipped for active service. What I would suggest to the Minister is, not that he should go to any great expense in this direction, but that he should set aside $5,000 a year, and in three or four years he would be in a position to obtain proper equipment. He could obtain an equipment either made in this country or an equipment in use in the Imperial service, and $5,000 a year for a few years would make a good beginning, and in the course of some years the force would be well equipped. As the matter now stands, the force is not in possession of proper means to go into the field, especially in view of our rifles. There is no proper method of carrying ammunition by the men of the force, and it is no use to give men even Sniders unless you have a proper method of carrying ammunition. I wish the Minister would make up his mind to adopt these two suggestions: first, to ask the House for a sufficient sum to drill the force every year; and, second, to set aside a small sum each year for the purpose of procuring the necessary equipment. On examining the clothing the other day, I found a new pattern patrol jacket for some of the permanent corps. The hon. gentleman would save a good many thousands of dollars if he would supply the force in future, at all events to a certain extent, with that class of clothing. This new jacket costs one-half the sum charged for the regulation tunic, and it would be very much better for our service to have this new garment introduced, and not only would a great saving be effected, but it would contribute to the convenience and comfort of the men. There is one point of equipment remaining a difficulty, and that is the head-dress. We have no proper one at present. The forage caps may be good in England, but they are unsuitable either in barracks or in camp here, and considering that a good helmet can be got for $1.25, I think the Government should make a commencement of the issue of helmets. All these suggestions mean money, but it must be expended if we are to have a force in reality and not in name, and if we are to make the service one which the country will heartily support.

Mr. DENISON. I desire to add a word in regard to the drilling of the militia every year. I agree that the Minister of Militia should take this subject into his serious consideration. The present custom is to drill the city corps every year and the rural corps every other year, or, as the member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien said, every third year, which frequently happens, I believe. This, of course, places the rural corps at a great disadvantage. Of course, as I represent a city corps, we are not affected by it; but taking an interest in the whole militia system, I think it is most trying to the officers commanding the rural corps to keep up their corps when drill comes only every other year. I hope the Minister of Militia will impress this matter on the Government, and the Government will see fit to increase the Estimates this year to a sufficient amount to ensure that all the militia of Canada be drilled this year. In order to show that this would be a popular movement, if that has any weight with the Government, I may mention that in many parts of Ontario we find the county councils voting sums of money to assist in maintaining the county battalions. That shows the great interest they take in those battalions, and their readiness to aid in a popular movement, because if they did not think it was a popular movement the county councils would not assist the corps. I can instance the case of the county of York, within which my constituency lies, and notwithstanding the character that attaches to that council of being the meanest and richest county in Ontario, the members have more than once granted money to the county battalion. It is the best proof that can be given that such a change would be popular, and that the expenditure would be approved by the people. I hope this year, and if possible next year, the Government will place a sufficient sum in the Estimates to drill all the militia force in Canada.

Mr. BARRON. Unlike my hon. friend who has just spoken, I represent a constituency where there is a rural battalion, and I can tell the Minister that there is intense dissatisfaction among the volunteers in my district on account of the fact that they are not called out annually. We might as well dispense altogether with the expenditure on the rural corps if we are not going to call them out yearly. The result of the present system is, that when they are called out the officers have to go around the country to get recruits to attend the drill. Before the next time for drill comes round those who were in the ranks have left and a new set of men have to be got, and the result of this is that discontent is caused among the rural battalions. I feel sure of this, that if we are not going to have the rural battalions called out annually, or every two years at all events, the money expended is just so much wasted and might as well be thrown into the sea.

General LAURIE. I cannot agree with my hon. friend who has just addressed the Committee. I consider the rural battalions are marvellously efficient for the time they are able to give to the service. I do not hesitate to say it; but at the same time it is very unfair, to both officers and men, that the rural corps should be only called out once every second or third year, thereby placing them at an immense disadvantage compared with their comrades of the city corps. An examination of the Estimates show that $1,288,000 are spent in all on the militia, of which only $250,000 are expended on the men of the force, the balance, practically one million, being required to work the machine by which the men who receive $250,000 are drilled. That is the position of affairs. For that sum we get 20,000 men drilled. Give another $150,000 and you can drill 40,000 men. You can double your force by simply adding that small amount to the large expenditure—that is comparatively large as to the number of men drilled—which we make on the militia. I, therefore, feel bound to add my voice to those of the hon. members who have spoken, urging that the rural battalions shall be trained every year. I believe it to be of excessive importance to the country that these battalions, so ready as they proved to be in 1885 and previous years, shall be made as efficient as possible.

Mr. HESSON. I fully concur in all that has been said on behalf of the rural battalions, for I think that it is of very great importance to Canada that they should receive the countenance and support of the Government. As has been pointed out by the hon. gentleman who has just sat down, much more is expended on the machinery than in preparing the men for the patriotic work which may devolve upon them in discharge of their duties as soldiers in the field. As has been pointed out by some hon. gentlemen, there is very great difficulty indeed in getting young men to enter into the spirit and enthusiasm which should actuate a successful corps, in consequence of the fact that they are simply sent out for a few days in the year, and then not treated as liberally as they should be. I believe that the increased expense would be amply repaid to the country by a more generous treatment of our volunteer forces. I know that the feeling of the counties in western Ontario is, pretty generally, that the volunteers are badly paid, and in many of the counties they contribute something in addition to the Government grant. That principle has not extended to all counties, as some are not so liberal as the others, but I regret that it is not the custom everywhere, as I also regret that the Government do not pay the men better. We should remember that it is purely from patriotic feelings that these young men abandon in many cases lucrative employments, to pursue their drill for twelve days of the year. The country battalions suffer under many serious inconveniences, and I hope that the Government will put the Minister of Militia in possession of sufficient funds to improve their condition. It has come to be a question whether or not the training of some half of the battalions should not be abandoned, but I believe it would be a most injudicious course to reduce the force for the purpose of saving a small sum of money; $100,000 may seem a large sum, but when we consider that it is to build up in this country a force necessary to protect its honor, and to form the nucleus of a great national militia, I do think it is the duty of the Government to provide sufficient funds to keep the force already enrolled in active existence. I am satisfied that the best portion of our militia will be found among the country battalions, when they are called into service. They are composed of men who have immense endurance, great fortitude, and a wonderful ability to undergo fatigue, and their experience of country life suits them beyond all others for the duties of volunteers. I think that, to be niggardly with our militia force, would be a very unwise policy for the Government to pursue. I am sure the sympathy of the Minister of Militia must be with the rural battalions, and I trust the Government will supply him with the means of placing them on a proper footing.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am glad that the Minister of Militia has proposed an estimate for repairing the armory and drill shed in the town of Chatham, and I am sure that in doing so he is acting not only in the interests of the battalion but in the interests of the whole country. In reference to the claims of Capt. Coogan, I may say that I am aware that $40 a year is allowed to the captain of each company, but I understand that this is given to be expended on the cleaning and taking care of the armories. The Government is, in addition, supposed to provide a place for the company to drill, and where their arms and accoutrements can be stored. In the town of Chatham there has been no place provided by the Government. The armory was in such a state that, for the last two or three years, it was impossible to keep the arms and clothing there; and, therefore, the captain either had to remove the arms to another place or allow them to be destroyed. It was for the purpose of storing the accoutrements that Capt. Coogan rented this building. He did it at his own expense. He has been in the habit of drilling his company there, and now he only asks that the Government should recoup him the very moderate rent of $40 a year. I think that, under these circumstances, the Minister should not hesitate to pay this small claim. Capt. Coogan is one of the most efficient and patriotic officers in the service. He has been a long time in the volunteer force, and I believe that previous to that he was for a number of years in the British Army. He is one of the most faithful and enterprising officers in the militia service. He has taken good care of the arms and clothing; he has kept his company together, and he has drilled them frequently, and as a result of his energy the company has been a credit to the volunteer force whenever they have been called out for duty. I think it would be a very great hardship indeed if the Minister of Militia would not recoup him for the rent of that building. He provided this place for the comfort of the men and for the safe-keeping of their accoutrements, and his enthusiasm should be acknowledged. I do not believe there is another company, in Ontario so situated as the 24th Battalion.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Lots of them.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The hon. gentleman knows better than I do, but if there is any battalion so situated as the 24th, I must say that they ought to be better treated by the Government and by the country. It is unfair that Capt. Coogan should be expected to supply a place in which the arms and clothing of the battalion should be safely kept. This claim to which I refer to is a very small matter, and I sincerely hope that the Minister of Militia will see the necessity of making a small allowance for that purpose.

Mr. ELLIS. I wish to call the attention of the Committee to what appears to me to be a very great lack of competency on the part of the persons who control the camps. The matter came to my attention specially in consequence of a serious outbreak of illness at the camp at St. Andrews. In looking through the militia reports I find that there has been a great deal of mismanagement or carelessness on the part of those persons, which has resulted in a great deal of sickness among the men. While we hear much about calling out the country militia once a year, it seems to me that the damage which is likely to be done to the health of the country, if these reports are of any value, should be taken into account as largely counterbalancing the benefit of the camps. For instance, the medical officer of the Loudon camp says:

"A digest of the daily sick reports shows that a total of 77 cases were reported, chief ailments being diarrhoea, colds, sore throat, rheumatic pains, chest pains, measles and mumps. Of these 12 only were really serious and required admission into the brigade hospital tent for special treatment—the remainder being cases not requiring any such measures. * * * The supply of some of the medicines furnished in the chest served out, as usual ran short, and I was obliged to obtain a fresh supply under requisition."

The officer in charge of Military District No. 2 says:

"Surgeon-Major Maclean reports the necessity for an issue of rubber sheets to the men and a supply of camp beds, splints, instruments, &c., for field hospitals, in all of which recommendations I most fully concur."

I notice that at that camp, as well as at two or three others, there were deaths from drowning. I do not know whether the men are trained in swimming or not. The officer in charge of Camp Niagara reports:

"The men have generally suffered great discomforts from lying on damp ground, and I cannot too strongly urge the issue of a rubber sheet to each man during the encampment. It should not be forgotten that these men are entirely at the mercy, and completely and absolutely dependent upon the supply furnished by the Department, not only for their comfort in camp, but to protect them against future suffering and disease from unnecessary exposure while doing their duty. The immediate effect of such exposure as the men have just gone through is, in a large number of instances, not sufficient to compel men to go off duty, and yet the ultimate effects may be serious. The issue of a rubber sheet might also be urged on economic grounds, as it will not only protect the men from dampness, but will save the woollen blankets from contact with mud in many instances. Many of the tents in use are too old and thin to resist rain, and should be condemned."

Then he recommends that among other things the camp hospital should be supplied with—

"Twelve camp beds, or stretchers, for the use of sick in hospital, as it is absolutely inhuman to place men suffering from sickness on damp ground without other protection than a woollen blanket affords."

The officer in charge of Military Districts Nos. 3 and 4 at Camp Gananoque, which the Minister himself seems to have visited, says:

"Owing to the bad state of the weather, the Honorable the Minister authorised the issue of an extra blanket and waterproof sheet to each man, which added much to their comfort."

"The instructor of musketry and sergeant were most assiduous in their arduous duties, and many of the officers informed me that they had never received such good instruction in any camp before."

"The Honorable the Minister of Militia and the Major General Commanding inspected the camp, but were unable to have the corps out for drill, owing to the wet state of the ground, which was, in places, under water."

The medical officer at Kingston reports with reference to the Gananoque Camp:

"The promptness with which rubber sheets were issued immediately after the storm of 21st June added much to the comfort of the men, and I have no doubt contributed materially to prevent any ill-effects from their being compelled to sleep on the wet ground. I would suggest that in future a supply should always be in store, to be issued if occasion arise for them. The issue of two blankets to each man instead of one, as in former years, was also a great improvement, and should always be adhered to."

"I desire to call attention to the present unsatisfactory method, or rather want of method, of supplying the medicine chests."

He goes on to point out what the trouble is, saying

"There should also be a few minor surgical instruments supplied for the use of the hospital, for the proper care of which the principal medical officer should be personally responsible, and which should not be allowed to be removed from the hospital. At present none are supplied, and many surgeons come to camp unprovided with them, being unwilling to expose their own property to the risk of damage or loss."

The officer in charge of the camp at St. John's, P. Q., says :

"On my arrival in camp on the 25th June, I was much disappointed at finding that a great portion of the long meadow grass was still standing on the ground to be occupied by the troops, both for camping and drill purposes, and my Brigade Major, Lt.-Col. Mattice, who had preceded me by a couple of days, with a view to getting everything in order, reported to me that he had been unable to get anyone to cut it, the man (M. Bourgeois) who had undertaken to have this work done a week previously, having failed to carry out his agreement, cutting and removing only such portions of the meadow as were most profitable to himself. This proved all the more detrimental in its effects upon the camp from the fact that it rained in torrents all that night and part of the next day, reducing the whole camping ground to little better than a lake, completely drowning out the 50th Battalion, and compelling both officers and men to seek shelter where best they could, principally in the tent of the Young Men's Christian Association, which was fortunately in their vicinity, and placed at their disposal by the kindness of Mr. Corbett, in charge. All the troops in camp spent a miserable night, but bore it with the greatest good humor, starting to work in the most cheerful manner possible to try and drain their tents and camping ground as soon as the breaking of day permitted them to see what they were doing. The whole of the second day (26th) was taken up by this work, as the long grass and spongy, saturated level ground made drainage a most difficult and tedious matter, and in many situations I was obliged to have the tents removed to dryer spots, wherever they could be found, without regard to the uniformity or appearance of the camp. By evening the camp was in a pretty fair condition, and I had a ration of straw served out to the men, the rubber sheets for which I had telegraphed the previous evening at the request of the principal medical officer, not having yet arrived, though they subsequently did so, about midnight, and were of great service during the remainder of the camp."

He adds :

"I beg to call attention to the report of the principal medical officer herewith attached, marked Appendix A, more particularly in reference to the state of the camp on the night in question, and the necessity for waterproof sheets for the men on all occasions when going under canvas, with which, I beg respectfully to state, I fully concur."

As will be seen from the reports of the principal medical officer, above referred to, the general health of the camp was good, notwithstanding the state of the ground and the inclemency of the weather, and this, I think, may be in a great measure attributed to the supply of rubber sheets which, as before stated, arrived in time to be used on the third and subsequent nights of the encampment.

I would strongly recommend that the entire Government property outside of the barracks be turned into a pasture, and no longer retained as a meadow; the nature of the ground would thereby be greatly improved for camping and drilling purposes for which this year it was quite unfit. It should also be subjected to a complete system of thorough drainage, for which there is every facility, and it would then be a first-class camping ground indeed."

He also says that the bread and meat supplies were not satisfactory, but he had them improved. The medical officer at that camp says :

"On the 24th June I visited the camp ground, and found it in the worst possible condition for a camp. The ground was meadow land, from which the hay had just been cut (in fact, some portions were still uncut). It was all damp and sodden; some of it actually very wet. On enquiry I ascertained that rubber sheets were not to be issued, and considering that the health of the troops would be seriously endangered by their camping on this ground without them, I at once wrote you on the subject, and you communicated my views to the Government who promptly ordered them forward. Unfortunately, before they arrived heavy rain set in and the men suffered greatly. The troops were nearly all in camp by the afternoon of the 25th, and the camp quartermaster and myself urged the necessity of promptly trenching the tents, especially as the weather seemed threatening. This was done to a certain extent, but some were so occupied with other duties that the order was not fully carried out. Early on the morning of the 26th rain fell in torrents, and continued to do so for hours. As you are aware, accompanied by yourself, I visited the camp between 4 and 5 a. m., and found it in a terrible condition. It was impossible to move about without sinking ankle deep in mud and water. Many of the tents contained from 4 to 6 inches of water, and were positively uninhabitable. Many men had not had any sleep, having had to stand up all night, the quantity of water in their tents making it impossible to lie down. Prompt measures were at once taken to drain the ground, and so far as it was possible to have it done with tools at command—it was done. Fortunately this morning was succeeded by a very warm day with strong wind, and by the evening matters had improved considerably. Had the rubber blankets or sheets been on hand, the men would have passed a good night. They did not, however, arrive till the morning of the 27th (following morning). Straw was issued to such tents as seemed to require it, and the men good naturedly made the best of the situation. Early next day the rubber sheets were served out, and for the rest of the camp the men were reasonably comfortable. Before leaving this part of my report I desire in the strongest possible language to draw the attention of the Militia Department to the necessity of always having rubber sheets form part of the equipment of every camp. They are an actual necessity. I have had many years' experience in camping, and would as soon think of going without my tent as without my rubber blankets. Their issue would surely save the country money. Their use preserves health, and in this way would reduce the possibility of claims for compensation. * * * The supply of medicines was, on the whole, ample, and the medical staff expressed themselves satisfied. To obtain this result I was, however, compelled to draw to a very slight extent upon the local drug store."

At Camp St. Andrews, after the camp broke up, typhoid fever made its appearance in several parts of the Province, and several men—I do not know how many, but three or four at any rate—died. There was considerable discussion in the local papers over the question, and the militia officer endeavored to prove that the fever had existed before the camp was formed, and that the men had brought the fever to it. He said :

"Owing to the presence of typhoid fever in different parts of the Province during the months of August and September, and some men who had previously attended the camp having unfortunately contracted the disease, the opinion prevailed in some quarters that this disease had been contracted in camp, in consequence of alleged impurity of water in the vicinity of the camp (no one seems to have doubted the purity of the water in the camp wells), and also as to the absence of straw in some tents. I, of course, lost no time in calling the attention of the principal medical officer to the newspaper reports expressing this prevalent opinion."

From the discussion in the local press it appeared that while there was a pure spring of water where the camp was situated, there was a large amount of impure water surrounding the camp, and there was no straw for the men and no preparations made to provide them even with beds of spruce or other green boughs. The officer commanding this battalion reported :

"The supplies afforded by the camp medicine chest were lamentably deficient in many respects, and in none more so than in the lack of bandages, splints and surgical appliances generally."

The officer commanding the camp in Aldershot, N. S., says :

"As usual, the medicine chest was meagrely and inefficiently supplied, though containing from year to year a good many articles which are never needed."

I do not want to read the whole report through, but if any hon. gentleman is at all interested in finding out whether this service is efficiently done or not, I beg to refer him to the reports of these camps. Therefore, I cannot concur in the suggestion that it would be in the interests of the country to have the rural corps drilled oftener. In our Province these camps caused a great deal of disease. I do not like to find fault with the hon. the Minister of Militia, for I have usually quite an admiration for the way he carries on the service, but he should look after the officers who have charge of the camps.

Contingencies and general services not otherwise provided for, including Grants to Artillery and Rifle Associations and Bands of efficient Corps.....	$38,000
---	----------

Mr. CASEY. In regard to this item, I think the grants to rifle associations should be estimated for and not put under the head of contingencies. The Department must know now pretty well what they will have to pay the rifle associations, and even to efficient bands, and so on each year, and should estimate for these items separately. I cannot find anywhere in the Auditor's Report a list of the rifle associations which have been aided and the amounts paid to each.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I will give the figures to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. CASEY. I find a very large part of these contingencies is made up of cab-hire and travelling allowances. For instance, I find that the Major General charges for hotel allowance, ninety-four days, at $5, and for cabs $109, and Pullman's $86. I find that about $800 altogether are paid for his cab-hire and Pullman's, exclusive of railway fare, and for hotel allowances, &c. He also charges for charger hired for parade, which, I think, is small on his part, as I should suppose he ought, as Commandant of the Canadian Militia, to keep a horse. There are also considerable contingencies for Capt. Wise, in the way of cab-hire, Pullman and hotel allowances, &c., and for Col. Murray and Col. Otter and others. These items ought to be separated, and charged under different headings, such as $14,975 to rifle associations, $7,625 for efficient bands, $2,000 for transport, and so forth, instead of them all appearing under contingencies. The contingencies themselves are excessive—$800 to the Major General, in addition to travelling expenses over the railways, is excessive.

Mr. DAVIN. Before the hon. the Minister of Militia replies to my hon. friend, I will draw his attention to an item which I think the committee and the country would be glad to see under the head of contingencies. In the North-West we have rifle associations. We have the Assiniboia Association, whose headquarters are at Regina. We have rifle associations at Moose Jaw and on the Saskatchewan; and if the Minister's attention were directed to the shooting of these bodies, he would see that we have many first-rate shots among them, and these associations are in a high state of efficiency, although the members have to pay all the cost out of their own pockets. I think the country will be quite willing to see some encouragement given to such efficient men as these have proved themselves to be. When His Excellency the Governor General visited us, he shot with our rifle association, and I believe he expressed his pleasure at witnessing the high state of efficiency in which our rifle association is. I would urge upon the Minister that he should give them rifles. If he will not give them rifles, let him lend them rifles. We have only a few rifles, and we get no encouragement whatever. There is another thing which I would like the Minister, when he is replying, to deal with. Our association has an idea that the Prince Albert Association gets a grant from the Government, whereas ours gets none whatever. Whether that be correct or not, I think the Committee will see that the rifle associations at Prince Albert, at Battleford, the Assiniboia Association, whose headquarters are at Regina, and the association at Moose Jaw, should at all events be equipped with rifles. I am told that the rifle associations, and the volunteers in other parts of the country, are not only equipped with rifles but with clothing as well.

An hon. MEMBER. No; not the rifle associations.

Mr. DAVIN. But the volunteers are. Our rifle association is also composed of the Regina volunteers, and we never got any clothing. We got rifles during the war, and we had to give them up afterwards, and it was doleful to see those North-West warriors going with their weapons to lay them down at the feet of their commanding officer. I hope my hon. friend the Minister of Militia will adopt the suggestion I have made and will give them rifles, or if he will not give them, that he will lend them rifles. Surely it is necessary that these men should be able, in case of a disturbance in that country, to settle the difficulty without calling upon the chivalry of the East to suppress it.

Mr. DENISON. If you once admit the proposal of the hon. member, we would have civilian rifle associations all over the Dominion, in every town and village.

Mr. WATSON. The Minister of Militia might consult Commissioner Herchmer in regard to arming the Regina volunteers. I do not know whether Commissioner Herchmer would trust the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) with a rifle or not.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. My hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Casey) enquired what amounts the different rifle associations received from the Government annually. The Province of Ontario Rifle Association receives $1,800; the Quebec Association, $1,700; Nova Scotia, $1,500; New Brunswick, $1,300; Prince Edward Island, $500; Manitoba, $750; and British Columbia, $500; making a total of $8,050. Local and battalion rifle associations number about 80, at an average of $75 each, making $6,000 in all. In reference to what my hon. friend, the member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) has just stated, I believe I could not answer his application in a more practical way than it has been answered by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Denison). The great difficulty in dealing with rifle associations is that the association must be under the absolute control of the Department of Militia. Otherwise, in every village in the Dominion there would be applications for rifles for the purpose of organising rifle associations which would not be under the control of the Department. I should feel disposed to lend the rifles; but, as the law now exists, I consider I have no power to do so. The Militia Act makes it imperative that the arms shall only be placed in the hands of an organised force under the absolute control of the Department of Militia. If we were to lend our rifles to one civilian organisation, any other civilian association would have the right to apply to us and claim the same privilege. I have taken particular interest in the organisations to which the hon. gentleman refers. I know their members are good shots, and that they have shown great zeal and energy in forming these associations; but, unfortunately, I am tied down by the regulations of my Department. However, I am prepared to take up the matter, and to see if by any possibility we could not, by associating these rifle associations to some military organisation in the district, find the means of providing them with arms. I cannot say how much I would like to meet the views of the hon. gentleman in regard to this. I think we cannot develop too much the practice of rifle shooting in this country, and anything which will encourage it should receive the consideration of the Government.

Mr. CASEY. I agree with the Minister of Militia, and I think he may find it possible to organise these bands in the North-West after their loyalty has been duly certified to, or at all events to give them a grant as rifle associations. Rifle shooting is the essence of warfare in these days. A good shot can do wonders even without discipline. We cannot have any doubt about that, after the example of what was accomplished by the Boers in South Africa against the British troops. They had no discipline or training, but they went out and shot down the British soldiers as if they were blesbok or springbok, or any other bok that might be found in that country. There is no doubt they shot very successfully, and routed the pick of the British army. The same is very true in reference to those poor men, who were very poorly armed, in the North-West, who inflicted very much more damage upon our troops than they should have, according to their numbers. So far from finding any fault with these figures of the Minister as being too large, I should be inclined to say they are too small, as I think more encouragement, and better distributed, should be given to rifle shooting. It should not be confined to associations connected with the volunteers, because a man who is a good shot and who does not belong to the volunteers is very apt to go to the front when required. I hope the Minister is giving satisfactory grants to the associations, and that he will see that next year they are published separately, so that we will not have to ask for this information across the floor. In regard to bands, there is a large item—$7,635, all in a lump sum; and while we find sums as small as $2.50 accounted for separately in other parts in the contingencies, no details are given of this large sum. These amounts to bands and rifle associations should be accounted for separately.

Mr. BRIEN. I must totally dissent from the view expressed by the hon. member for York. I do not see why, if rifle associations are to be encouraged at all, they should not receive aid, no matter in what section of the country they are. I presume that it is desired to confine them to the cities, but in the rural districts we have a right to have associations. There is one in my constituency, whose range has cost them about $250, and so far they have received no aid from the Government. I think that is unfair and unjust. Certainly it is a practice that should be encouraged. If the volunteers are no good at shooting they cannot be of much service for any other purpose. I would like to see the associations encouraged and receive assistance. I think it would add very much to the efficiency of these battalions if the drill would take place every year. With regard to the point raised by the hon. member for St. John, certainly the man who made up the report with regard to the diseases that were prevalent did not know what he was talking about, because the men do not remain long enough in camp to propagate typhoid fever. It must be an entire misunderstanding on his part. As to the efficiency of the rural battalions, I may say that the one in the county of Essex, the 21st Battalion, is second to none in the Dominion. The colonel deserves a great deal of credit for the care he has taken of the corps, and he does everything in his power to promote the welfare of the battalion, and certainly feels very proud of it. His officers are efficient as well as the men, and the county feels proud of the battalion. I hope they will receive every encouragement as regards their rifle range. I think they have made an application to the Department for some aid, and it is only fair and just that they should get it.

Mr. WATSON. I think it is of the utmost importance for the Minister to devise some means whereby rifle associations in local districts can be recognised. I think they should be allowed to receive rifles on giving a satisfactory guarantee that they would take care of them, and they should receive their ammunition for practice at the lowest possible price. With regard to the remarks from my hon. friend beside me in reference to loyalty, I do not think his suggestion necessary. So far as the people of Manitoba are concerned, I can certify to their loyalty, and I have no doubt that the member for West Assiniboia will certify to the loyalty of the people in that district, even though he and the Commissioner at Regina do differ occasionally. With regard to rifle associations and camp drill, the Minister has had some battalions in the Province of Manitoba ever since 1885, and they have not had a camp drill yet. We have the 91st and 95th Battalions, and for want of drill they are becoming disorganised; it is impossible to keep the men together when they do not drill at least once in two years. Now, if there can be some system devised whereby these associations can be kept up in local districts, I think they will be greatly benefited, and if occasion requires again—and we all hope that it will not be required—that these troops should be called out, they will then be good marksmen, and be able to render efficient service in the field.

Mr. TYRWHITT. My idea of the best way to assist the different rifle associations, would be to incorporate them with the militia, and allow the rifle associations who wish to enjoy the same benefits that are enjoyed by the militia to join the force. With regard to the remarks made by some hon. members as to the best means of protecting the volunteers from damp during their residence at the annual camps, I would say that, in my experience, flooring, such as was provided a good many years ago, would be much preferable for the annual camp. It could be put in store and used for a good many years, and not only would it protect the volunteers from damp, but would afford a better flooring for them, even in dry weather. The hon. gentleman, no doubt, with the very best intent, has recommended straw to protect volunteers from damp. In my experience that is one of the very worst things that can be selected, for the reason that it requires to be changed every day, whereas the floor would be permanent, and last a great number of years. I must also dissent from the remarks of the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) with regard to reducing the allowance to company officers. I consider that the company officers require all they get, and I would prefer rather to see the allowance increased than diminished. It would be necessary that the allowance to commanding officers should also be reduced, from the fact that they receive an allowance for every efficient company. I believe that rule would hold good in all the higher grades. We know that the captains of companies have a great deal to do, and in addition to drilling their men we know that they have many ways of disposing of their money, and this small allowance which they receive goes but a little way in providing the men with proper uniforms. I entirely agree with what has been said by several hon. members as to the desirability of drilling the corps oftener than at present. It is impossible to keep our men in an efficient state when they only meet once in two or three years, and I hope that some means will be devised by which rural corps can go into camp oftener in the future than they have done in the past.

Improved Rifled Ordnance..... $2,000

Mr. CASEY. How many guns will the hon. Minister get for this amount each year?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. We get a couple every year. Sometimes we can get only one; it depends altogether on what kind of gun we get.

Mr. CASEY. Are they new guns?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes.

Mr. CASEY. Is that conversion of cannon going on also?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No; it has been abandoned.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). What size?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. They are two 54-pounder rifled guns—breech-loaders.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Where are they placed?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. They have not come out yet. These guns are intended for fortifications, and we are annually devoting a certain amount towards these guns.

Military Property, &c..... $97,000

Mr. KENNY. I call the Minister's attention to the fact that, last year, I expressed the hope that he would authorise some expenditure on the drill shed at Halifax. I observe by a recent newspaper that it is in a very bad condition. I do not know what information the Minister may possess from his officers, but it is stated publicly in the press that the floor is positively rotten. I hope the Minister will see that the drill shed is put into proper repair, and that proper accommodation is given to the armaments, for I know that commanding officers complain of the difficulty of keeping arms in proper order.

Mr. TYRWITT.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman's information is perfectly correct. The drill shed is in a very bad condition, and it is the intention of the Department to devote such sum of money as is absolutely necessary to place it proper order, but to expend as little money as possible, as I believe, within a comparatively short period of time, it will be necessary either to increase the present drill shed or to build a new one.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I notice in the Auditor General's Report that one or two of the drill sheds have been sold. One was at Clinton and another at Mono Mills. Why were these sold—have the companies been disbanded?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Drill sheds are being constantly sold. Sometimes the headquarters of a company change from one place to another. Generally the site is given by the municipality, and upon that site the Government build a drill shed. When the drill shed is sold the price is divided between the municipality and the Government proportionately to the amount contributed by each. I cannot state the precise reasons why the two drill sheds in question were sold; but reports are sent to the Department by the officers of the company, giving reasons why the drill shed should be disposed of, and if those reasons are considered satisfactory, an Order in Council is passed and a sale takes place.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Have you a volunteer company in Clinton now?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I could not tell the hon. gentleman now, but I can bring the information down at the next meeting of the Committee.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Surely it is not due to the treatment of the soldiers by the Department that these drill sheds have been closed up. We had a little discussion this afternoon as to the treatment a soldier received. Is it due to the crushing out of the martial spirit of the community, that the volunteers are going out of the military business and the drill sheds are being closed up? Is that the result of the management of the military affairs? If such treatment is meted out to the volunteers, as appeared in the case discussed to-day, I do not wonder at drill sheds being sold. To-day I visited a law office in this city and made an affidavit in regard to a soldier who served in the American war, and who is now applying for pension, and, although that service occurred twenty-five years ago, I believe he will get the pension. I do not believe his injuries are so severe as those of the volunteer whose case was before us to-day. It is all very well to talk about training our force every year, but if our volunteers are not fairly treated by the Department such drilling would be useless. I do not know why the Minister, who has not evinced such spirit before, should have so forgotten his high position and have so treated, on personal grounds, any one who has served his country and carried his life in defence of this Dominion. It is enough to cause the force to disband, and, if continued, it will eventually close up a great many drill sheds.

Mr. WATSON. The 95th Battalion is one of the finest battalions which went to the front in the rebellion in 1885, and its headquarters are at Portage la Prairie, a very convenient place and railway centre. They are a very fine body of men and of officers, but they have no drill shed. If it is intended to encourage our volunteers, this want should be supplied, so that they may have a place in which to drill and to store their arms. Last year I was surprised that the Minister of Militia should have formed the 91st Battalion, with Mr. Bedson as colonel. That was no more needed than it is to-day; in fact, they have not met, and the battalion has not been formed. The 95th, on the other hand, are in existence; it was unnecessary to form another battalion. That new battalion was only formed for the purpose of giving honorary positions to some men as officers. I hope the 95th Battalion will receive some attention at the hands of the Militia Department and be allowed to go into camp, and in the near future will have a proper drill shed, so that the corps may be encouraged and kept together.

Military College, Kingston..... $77,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I want to call the particular attention of the Minister of Militia to certain statements that have been made to me with respect to the promotion of a couple of officers who were lately cadets of that college. I will state what I have been informed, and then the hon. gentleman can give what explanation he can offer, if there is any explanation to present. I am informed that a couple of cadets, who, I am sorry to say, were unable to pass their examinations, were lately promoted to positions in one or other of the permanent corps. Is the hon. Minister aware whether that is the fact or not?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is a fact?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, I do not want to say anything against these young gentlemen themselves, but I do want to impress upon the Minister, and I want to impress upon the House, that if you wish to render the large expenditure which is now going on in the Royal Military College worse than useless, you cannot take a better plan than to promote, under any circumstance whatever, gentlemen who have been unfortunate enough to fail in passing the examinations. That is a distinct discouragement to every young man who is there, and who expects to qualify himself for a position in our service, or in the Imperial service, by good conduct and attention to study. If they find that, under any conceivable circumstance, the Government of Canada will appoint to commissions young men who have failed in that examination, the Government inflicts as grave an injury as it is possible to conceive on the discipline and morale generally of the cadets of that college. I am sorry indeed to find such a thing has occurred, and I think explanation is due to the House of the reasons which have induced my hon. friend to have made these recommendations. It appears to me that there is a very grave error of judgment in doing this, and that the college has sustained a serious injury.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am rather disposed to agree with the hon. gentleman as to the principle which he lays down, that every possible effort should be directed by the Department to giving every encouragement to the cadets who are successful in passing their examinations. But my hon.

friend knows that the system is not universal to appoint to the permanent corps only cadets of the Royal Military College, and if this system be not universal, as I have just stated, these gentlemen who had belonged to the force already, and had to qualify to take their certificate, were placed exactly in the same position as any other member of the militia force, who would have been selected outside of the Royal Military College to be given a commission in our permanent corps. One of the young gentlemen referred to was appointed to our permanent force, and the other to the Mounted Police. I think the hon. gentleman will give me credit that, ever since I have had control of the Department, I have done everything within my power to give to the cadets all the chances that could possibly be given them. The number of appointments which have been made by myself as Minister of Militia to the permanent corps selected from the cadets, indicates that in very many cases I have given them the preference. Of course, it may be better to establish a different system, and to say that none but cadets will be commissioned to these permanent corps; still, I think it would be wrong not to recognise the services of the militia force of Canada who have devoted a great deal of their time to militia matters, and shown their loyalty and their zeal in answer to the call of duty whenever they have been required. I think that we should not leave them in the cold altogether, but that we must try and work the two different classes so as to make our force as efficient as possible. The cadets have got great advantages over the others, and I think that the system we have adopted so far has worked well. I do not believe that it would be right or proper to build up an exclusive class composed of the cadets, who would alone receive the positions we can give in our permanent corps.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman does not quite take the point I made, which is one of great moment to the future of this military college. I am not disposed—and I want him to understand this distinctly—to lay down the principle that none but cadets should receive appointments. I do not think that this can be done in the present state of public feeling, and in view of the fact that we have to rely on the voluntary exertions of many militia officers, who take great pains to my own knowledge to qualify for the proper performance of their duties. I do not insist at all that none should be appointed who are not cadets. That is not my point. The point which I made, and which I am sure the Minister must see himself, is this: here were two young gentlemen who had entered that college, and who failed in obtaining the requisite number of marks to qualify themselves in the various examinations. Their position is wholly and entirely different from that of ordinary militia officers, for they were members of the college. I dare say they were both of them naturally of good abilities, but I am afraid they were not diligent enough to qualify. The Minister, and the House must see, that to take men who had served two or three years in the college, and had failed to qualify themselves, and to give them commissions, is a direct discouragement to all others who have been diligently striving to qualify themselves. I may tell my hon. friend that so far from desiring to say anything against these young gentlemen, it is quite the contrary. One, at any rate, I took rather a fancy to, for various reasons; but notwithstanding this, I think that a grave injury has been done to the discipline of the college, and I felt it my duty to call the attention of the House, and the attention of the Minister, to the mischief that will assuredly ensue. I think it ought to be distinctly understood that any cadet who enters that college, and who will not take the trouble to qualify himself to pass the examinations, should not be promoted to a place in our permanent corps, so long as there are other cadets well qualified, and diligent students, who have received the approval of their professors and of superior officers, who are able to take the places. This is a reasonable and sensible proposition, and I am quite sure the hon. gentleman knows that I am right in laying it down. It is only due to the hon. gentleman, who has received a good deal of sharp-shooting to-day, that I should say that in my opinion since he became Minister of Militia he has taken much more pains than his predecessors to appoint cadets whom he found suitable to fill such positions. I frankly say that the claim he has put in on his own behalf I believe is just, but in this particular instance I must say that in my opinion a serious error has been committed.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do not suppose the case is likely to occur again.

Mr. DENISON. I should like to call the Minister's attention to a complaint which has been made to me, that the young gentlemen going to the college are not fed as well as they might be. I believe it is done by contract. I would suggest to the Minister that some plan might be adopted under which a person would be employed to purchase food supplies for the cadets in some such way as a mess is conducted. Under the contract system, if a contractor is not generous or fair, he may make a very exorbitant profit out of the matter. The General might be asked to report upon it.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I shall be glad to consider the hon. gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I am glad to hear the hon. Minister say that this occurrence is not likely to happen again. I think it would be very regrettable if it should. The military college was established with the idea of securing a class of trained officers in this country, in the hope that they might be absorbed into the various services of the country. It was expected at that time that our railways and telegraph departments would afford suitable positions for these young men in the country, so that the country would retain the benefit of their services in case they were ever required. I am glad to find that the Minister has in several instances appointed to positions in the college officers who held commissions in the Imperial service, and I think the same rule might apply to the permanent force. With all due respect to the militia officers, who no doubt take great interest in their work, they do not give that length of time to their profession which is required at the college to teach the cadets their profession, and, therefore, if we are to have an effective service I think the officers of the outside permanent corps should be taken from the college, when they are available.

Mr. CASEY. I would like to emphasise two points in connection with this subject. The first is, that we have a very large expenditure in proportion to the number of cadets educated. The staff is quite sufficient to educate a much larger number. I think it would be true economy to enlarge the college buildings, though not expensively, so as to turn out a much larger product with a very slightly increased expense. In the second place, every possible inducement should be held out to these cadets to remain in Canada after they have been educated. I think it has been shown by the returns that most of them are now living out of Canada, and giving other countries the benefit of the education they have received at our expense. There is no common sense at all in educating cadets at the public expense, or in any expenditure connected with this college, if we are not going to keep them at home and get our money's worth out of them. To this end I would urge, as my hon. friend has urged, that cadets should be appointed to some position in the outside service, which need not necessarily be the military service.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Not being a military man, I very rarely take part in the discussion of the militia estimates, and I merely wish to say one word with reference to a remark made by the hon. member for South Oxford. I suppose if there is one branch of the service of Canada from which all parties agree that political or other influences other than merit should be excluded, it is the Militia Department; and if those influences creep in in connection with the promotion of any officers, either cadets or others, it will be a bad day for the service. I am very glad to hear the Minister say that the evil which has occurred will not occur again, because by promoting young men, who, from whatever cause have failed to take their degrees, over the heads of other young men who have attended assiduously to their studies, you take away every incentive that should be offered to those cadets to apply themselves assiduously to the study of the military matters which they go there to learn. To do that means simply to introduce political, or social, or other outside influences, which should never be allowed to interfere with the promotion of any officer in the militia service.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I wish to enquire of the Minister whether this charge of $77,000 is exclusive of the fees paid by the students, or whether the sum they pay is to be deducted from it?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The whole of what they pay is to be deducted and paid into the hands of the Receiver General.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So that, practically speaking, the college costs us about $50,000 a year?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. That is all.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What number of marks are assigned to the various grades of corporal, sergeant, brigade-sergeant and major? I believe there are four different grades.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I will bring down the information to the hon. gentleman on Monday.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are those marks included in the aggregate of marks according to which commissions are given?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are these commissions, as we may call them for convenience sake, although the officers are non-commissioned officers, given according to the standing of the men in their classes or at the pleasure of the commanding officer?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. That is a matter of regimental discipline. I cannot state now how they are selected, but the selection is not according to points. I think it is made by the adjutant of the college.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman cause to be prepared a memo. stating in what way these various grades are conferred? He will see the importance of this from the fact that if as much as 1,400 or 1,500 marks are given to whomsoever is appointed sergeant-major, or brigade-sergeant, &c., and if the commissions are distributed according to the number of the marks, some of the men who are running closely are exceedingly badly handicapped. For instance, out of two competitors who in three or four years' service had within two or three marks of each other, one might be handicapped by an addition to the other of nearly 1,500 marks in this way, and it is worth knowing on what principle these marks are given.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I will bring down a full statement.

Permanent Forces—Pay and maintenance of "A," "B," and "C" Batteries, Schools of Artillery at Quebec, Kingston and Victoria, B.C., and Cavalry and Infantry Schools at Quebec, Fredericton, St. John's, P.Q., Toronto, London and Winnipeg,..... $484,000

Mr. CASEY. I see that Sergt. Kinsella, in British Columbia, has multiplied considerably, but I cannot gather to what extent.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. There are one hundred Kinsellas.

Committee rose and reported resolutions.

STATIONERY AND CONTINGENCIES OF THE SENATE.

Mr. SPEAKER read the following Message from the Senate:—

Resolved that a Message be sent to the House of Commons to inform that House, in answer to its Message requesting the Senate to grant leave to the officers in charge of the stationery and contingencies of the Senate to attend before the Select Standing Committee of the Commons on Public Accounts, at their next meeting, to give information respecting the distribution of such stationery and the expenditure for contingencies, as set out on pages D-17 and 18 of the Report of the Auditor General on Appropriation Accounts for the year ended 30th June, 1889; and to bring with them all records relating to such items;—that all matters in relation to the internal economy of this House are under the control and supervision of its Committee on Contingent Accounts, subject to approval of the Senate; that the said Committee is now engaged in examining the accounts and vouchers of the Clerk, including the distribution of stationery and expenditure referred to in the said Message, and that as soon as the Report is submitted by the said Committee to this House it will be transmitted to the House of Commons for the use of its Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) In this matter this House is evidently, in the opinion of the Senate, to have no control over the expenditure at all. Here is a case in which this House voted $5,300 for certain services of the Senate, and yet, although we have control over the expenses of every Department, that vote has been exceeded without our authority, the Senate expenditure amounting to $12,000. That matter was brought up in the Public Accounts Committee, and it was suggested by a member of the Government that an explanation should be called for from those who have control of the expenditure. The Committee requested that those gentlemen who had spent more than double the sum voted by this House should appear before the Committee on Public Accounts, and explain their course, in order that the Committee might report to this House how it was that the vote of this House had been so flagrantly abused. If every official in the Senate can spend what he pleases, irrespective of the checks this House puts upon him as to the amount, there is an end to our control of the expenditure altogether. I do not think this matter should be allowed to drop quietly, and that we should submit to this indirect refusal of the honorable Senate to comply with our just request. If we have the control of the expenditures of every Department we must take steps to see that that control is efficient, and that irresponsible officers of any other Department do not laugh this House to scorn and spend what they like.

Mr. FOSTER. I think my hon. friend is a little hasty. The Senate has been asked for certain information. They have chosen their own way to send that information in a very respectful manner, and when it comes this House can send it to the Select Committee on Public Accounts. It will not come in the manner my hon. friend wishes it to come, but he cannot say that it is not in process of preparation.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The Committee on Public Accounts did not ask for information, but they asked that the officers of the Senate, under whose control this expenditure was, should appear before them to explain their reasons for spending 50 per cent. more than the House of Commons authorised them to spend.

Mr. FOSTER. What the Committee wanted was the information, and they were not so particular about the officers coming before them.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is another point which the hon. the Minister of Finance must bear in mind. We require also, in the Public Accounts Committee, to know by whose authority our vote was exceeded. On that point, as I understand, no information or satisfaction has been given. I know of no authority other than a Governor General's Warrant under which this money could be properly expended. It appears to me there is a serious abuse here.

Mr. FOSTER. I have heard a partial explanation, but I will not give it here, until we see what may come down from the Senate.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then it should come down very promptly, because there are only two ways by which money can be expended—one by a vote of the House of Commons and the other by a special Warrant of the Governor General issued under peculiar circumstances, which are prescribed by Act of Parliament. It is not within the discretion of the Senate, or of anybody, to spend even a few thousand dollars over the vote granted to them.

Mr. FOSTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 12.40 a.m. (Saturday).

REPORT.

Annual Report of the Minister of Railways and Canals for the past fiscal year, from the 1st July, 1888, to the 30th June, 1889, on the works under his control.—(Sir John A. Macdonald.)

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 104) to amend the Railway Act.—(Mr. Shanly.)

Bill (No. 107) respecting the Provincial Proident Institution of St. Thomas, Ont.—(Mr. Ward.)

FRANCHISE ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 108) to amend the Electoral Franchise Act. He said: At the last revision in the Province from which I come, when the lists were finally revised, some 200 or 300 notices were given to strike out names from the list, and, when the hearing of these notices came before the judge, it appeared that the reason why they were objected to was that, having been resident in one polling division, they had moved across the street to another polling division. They were not in the polling division where their names appeared on the lists. Therefore, an attempt was made to strike them off the list altogether, and an application was made to the judge asking him to hear evidence to the effect that they were qualified voters, although they resided in another voting division than that in which their names appeared; but the judge declined to hear those applications, alleging that he had no power to put any voter's name in a different polling division, unless a special application had been made to do so fourteen days before the Court. An application was then made for a mandamus to the Supreme Court to compel him to hear evidence, and the Supreme Court, by a majority decision of two to one, determined he was not bound to receive evidence. The only object, therefore, of this amendment is to provide, that when application is made to strike off a voter from the list on the ground that he is in his wrong polling division, if it appears to the revising officer that he is a properly qualified elector within the revision district then being revised, the judge shall put his name on the proper polling division, and not strike it off entirely, making him pay such costs as he thinks fair. In the case to which I have referred there were over 200 voters, who had been voting, some of them for the last 20 years, struck off the list because they did not give the notice required by the statute that they had changed their polling division. The hon. gentleman will see that the law requires that notice be given fourteen days before the court meets. The notices objecting to their names were given on the night of the fourteenth day, and these electors only received their notices the following day, which would be thirteen days before the revision court, and too late for them to make application to have their names put on. Hon. gentlemen will see that the Bill is one to carry out the real object and intention of the Franchise Act, that is, that qualified voters should be placed upon the list in the polling divisions where they reside. Some revising officers take a generous view of the law, and, I think, carry out the spirit and intention of the law by themselves making these necessary changes; and I have heard from some hon. gentlemen who sit near me that the revising officers in their districts make the alterations themselves from the assessment lists and otherwise, so that when they came to revision there was hardly any work to do. In my district the returning officer took a different view. He made no changes excepting those where application had been specially made by the voter, or on behalf of the voter. He did not take the assessment lists and make the changes, and the consequence was that hundreds and hundreds of voters who were in the wrong division, were not changed; and the further consequence was that immense delay, labor and expense were unnecessarily thrown upon those who had the management of the lists. I think the Bill I have introduced will meet the difficulty without doing injustice to anybody.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). A similar difficulty has occurred in my constituency. In the city of Portland the Canada Temperance Act is in force; a petition has been presented to repeal the Act, and the election is to be held during the present month. During the last year the city of Portland was united to the city of St. John, and in the revision of the lists this year, many parties were placed in the different polling districts where they reside. The result is that persons who are non-resident voters and had a right to vote upon the Canada Temperance Act, cannot now vote because they are on different lists, and two or three hundred voters, who were entitled to vote in this election, are disfranchised. In the outcome a very serious question might arise as to whether the Act was properly appealed, in case a majority votes against it. I think a provision should be made by which those parties should have a right to vote as non-residents. For instance, my colleague and myself are voters in Portland and entitled to vote as non-residents, but we are now disfranchised because we are registered in districts in the city of St. John. There are two or three hundred persons who are disfranchised by reason of this annexation of Portland to St. John, and I would like to see some arrangement made by which similar difficulties may be avoided in the future.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

PRIVILEGE—HALDIMAND ELECTION.

Mr. TISDALE. My attention has been called to a communication published in the Toronto Globe of the 26th instant, in which the writer, speaking of the late contest in Haldimand, alluded to myself as follows:—

“In the Indian Reserve the corruption during the day was most barefaced. The polling took place in a private house. Within ten yards of this was a small log shop, provided with lock and key, the latter being in custody of the Conservatives. Into this Colonel Tisdale, M.P., would take an Indian voter, lock the door, and try and persuade him to vote for Montague.”

Now, Sir, where I am known it will be unnecessary to contradict this vile slander, but for the information of those who do not know me and in self-vindication, I desire to say that these allegations are wilful, malicious and deliberate falsehoods, written by some coward who dare not sign his name to the letter. There are reflections in the same communication about another hon. member of this House who is not present, that is, Dr. Montague, which are equally untrue, and I desire to say that to-morrow he will be introduced to the House, when, I have no doubt, he can defend himself, if a majority of 227 is not a sufficient defence. I wish further to add, with the permission of the House, that during the four days I stayed in the riding I neither did nor saw any illegal, corrupt or improper act on behalf of Dr. Montague.

ORANGE INCORPORATION BILL.

House resumed consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. Wallace for the third reading of Bill (No. 32) to incorporate the Grand Orange Lodge of British America, and the motion of Mr. Curran in amendment thereto.

Mr. BARRON. I confess to some little disappointment that the time allowed for discussion of the Orange Bill does not admit of my proceeding to answer, in my feeble way, as well as I can, some of the arguments which were adduced to the House on former occasions, in 1883 and in 1885, against a similar measure. I confess to disappointment, owing to the circumstances which were referred to by my hon. friend for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran) himself, and which took place on those two occasions. It is true, Sir, he did not enlarge upon those arguments, but he brought them out and was successful; he intimated, with others, in convincing the hon. gentlemen then in the House, that it was advisable to vote against Orange incorporation. Sir, I am rejoiced to know that time has done that which arguments failed to do on that occasion; time has resulted in convincing the majority of hon. gentlemen, I think, that it is desirable and advisable in the interest of justice, and only proper and fair, that the Orangemen of the country should receive incorporation. I need only refer to the fact that the hon. member for Montreal Centre himself, although he was foremost in opposing the Bill on the two occasions to which I have referred, has shown himself willing, the other night, to concede the principle of the Bill now before the House. I am glad that it can no longer be argued in this House, that this House itself has not the inherent right to grant incorporation. I am rejoiced that no longer can those difficult words "property and civil rights," as found in the British North America Act, be looked upon as forming an obstacle to incorporation by this House. I am also rejoiced to know that no longer is the argument made in this House that the Orange Society is an illegal society. Still more am I rejoiced to know that the word "secret," which was applied in an obnoxious manner in the arguments addressed to the House in the years mentioned, is no longer used as an argument against the incorporation of this society. I am further rejoiced to know that it is not said on the floor of this House, on this occasion, that the fact that the Orange Society is a society for the advancement of the Protestant religion is, therefore, a reason why incorporation should not be had. I want to take this opportunity of saying that I, for one, and I know there are many others like me, would not for one moment longer belong to the Orange Society if we felt and knew that its Protestant principles in any way interfered with the dealing out of justice to those who happen to be Roman Catholics or opposed to us in our religious views. I have said that the hon. gentleman who spoke against the Bill the other night and introduced an amendment, himself admitted the principle of the Bill. But what did he do? He introduced an amendment which I am glad to know the hon. gentleman who introduced this Bill, who has so skillfully managed it, and who has done so in a fair and candid way, speaking for the Orange Society, refused to accept, and it is an amendment which I think is a most insulting one. I desire to refer to the argument used the other evening, that the effect of incorporation by this House passing this Bill would be to repeal to a certain extent, if not entirely, a statute known as chapter 10 of the Consolidated Statutes of Lower Canada, which makes certain societies illegal. Let any hon. gentleman read the Bill now before the House, and he will see there is nothing whatever in it—and the Bill is also a fac-simile of the Forsters Bill—repealing in any way possible the Act to which I have referred, namely, the Act declaring certain secret societies to be illegal. But there is nothing in this Bill which will in any way incorporate this society, except for benevolent purposes, and it is obvious that this House can pass this Bill without in any way interfering with the laws of Lower Canada. Let me refer to the case of Loranger vs. Colonial Building and Investment Association, which goes to prove the position I have taken. It was a case wherein the Colonial Building and Investment Association was incorporated by this Parliament. It was granted power to hold lands and buy and rent houses, and so forth. The Attorney General of the Province of Quebec petitioned against the society, arguing that it was an illegal one, inasmuch as it should have been incorporated by the Province of Quebec, and contending that this Parliament in granting such powers to the society was doing that which was illegal. The case was taken to the Privy Council in England. I will read to the House part of the judgment rendered:

"It was urged that the operations of the company contravened the Provincial law, at the least in two respects, namely, in dealing in land, and in acting in contravention of the Building Acts of the Province. It may be granted that by the law of Quebec corporations cannot acquire or hold lands without the consent of the Crown. This law was recognised by this board, and held to apply to foreign corporations in the case of the Chaudière Gold Mining Company vs. Desbarats. It may also be assumed, for the purpose of this appeal, that the power to repeal or modify this law falls within No. 13 of section 92 of the British North America Act, viz., property and civil rights in the Province, and belongs exclusively to the Provincial Legislature; so that the Dominion Parliament could not confer powers on the company to override it. But the powers found in the Acts of incorporation are not necessarily inconsistent with the Provincial law of mortmain, which does not absolutely prohibit corporations from acquiring or holding lands, but only requires, as a condition of their doing so, that they should have the consent of the Crown. If that consent be obtained, a corporation does not infringe the Provincial laws of mortmain by acquiring and holding lands. What the Act of incorporation has done is to create a legal and artificial person with capacity to carry on certain kinds of business which are defined, within a defined limit, viz., throughout the Dominion."

That is what I say this Bill does.

"Among other things, it has given to the association power to deal in land and buildings; but the capacity so given only enables it to acquire and hold lands in any Province, consistently with the laws of that Province relating to the acquisition and tenure of lands."

Further on the decision says:

"The object was merely—"

Speaking of the judgment in a previous case—

"—to point out that a corporation should only exercise its powers subject to the law of the Province, whatever it might be in this respect."

So I say that by the incorporation of this society, as it is proposed to be done, this Parliament will incorporate it subject to the laws of the Province, and only to such an extent can a corporate body carry on its business. The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran) is, as I have said, one not acceptable to the Orange body in this country. It is to add a clause restraining them from holding processions in any Province where there is a law against processions, or where there may be a law hereafter against them. There is nothing in this Bill whatever authorising the Orange Society to hold processions, and so it is entirely unnecessary for the hon. gentleman to propose the amendment. There is a law in the Province of Quebec, affecting Montreal only, providing that a society such as this cannot hold processions. That provision will not be interfered with in any way by this Bill, and I assert without fear of contradiction—and I do so for the benefit of those who have been asking my opinion on this question—that that law will still remain the law; and when the member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran) asked us to attach to this Bill his proposed amendment, he was only proposing to duplicate what is the present law as regards the Province of Quebec, because the provision which he seeks to have inserted by this House is that which is already the law, and that which will remain the law in the Province of Quebec. I say, therefore, that his amendment is entirely unnecessary and uncalled for, and should not be attached to the Bill now before the House. The hon. gentleman referred to the Crimes of Violence Prevention Act, introduced by the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), which is a Dominion Act; but I think the hon. gentleman was a little unfair in the inference he drew, when he sought to make it appear that the Orange body was responsible for the introduction of that Act. On the occasion to which he referred—and I am sorry he referred to it, because there was no necessity—the Orangemen were not the aggressors; but, on the contrary, they were acting on the defensive from the beginning to the end, and were in no way whatever responsible for the sad event which took place at that time. I desire to refer to another matter by way of privilege, and I do so because the hon. gentleman who spoke a few minutes before me referred to another matter concerning himself by way of privilege. I refer to an article which appeared in the Empire of Saturday last, in which there was stated that there was a clique on this side of the House whose intention was, and whose efforts were directed to defeat the Bill by pressing it to a vote on Friday night. I say that, so far as I am concerned, that accusation is utterly false and untrue from beginning to end. I know that hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, at all events, will know how anxious I have been time and again to have this Bill pass the House, and it was most unjust and unfair, and I would use stronger language, if I were permitted, in denial of the statement which, so far as I am concerned, or any hon. gentleman is concerned, is absolutely false and untrue. In conclusion, I wish to say to my friends in this House, who may in any way be guided by what I may say, that this Bill is nothing more nor less than a benevolent Bill. You might have any other name attached to the Bill than that of the Orange Society, so long as you have the names of the gentlemen who are there set down as incorporators. I say, Sir, that the object is simply the same as the Bill which was before this House in the case of the Foresters Society, entirely and exclusively a benevolent one. As the hon. member for Montreal Centre said, there was nothing objectionable in the Bill itself. I hope, Sir, it will not be said that this society, which, as the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Curran) stated the other night, was a loyal one, will not be refused a measure of a benevolent nature such as is now before the House, inasmuch as other societies have been allowed to have similar Bills passed in their favor.

Mr. AMYOT. I do not intend discussing the merits of the Bill, because they have been fully discussed before. My hon. friend from North Victoria (Mr. Barron) says, that any other name might have been chosen than that of the Orange society; and I believe that it would be well if another name had been chosen, because in the minds of many inhabitants in this Dominion the word "Orange" means aggression against the Catholics. However, as I said before, I will not go into details. I will vote against the amendment of the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran), for the following reasons: 1st. This amendment, establishing an exceptional provision, virtually admits the principle of the whole Bill, and I cannot accept any part of a Bill which I believe unconstitutional, infringing upon the exclusive rights of the Provinces, and which seeks to give legal existence to a secret society. The Catholic Church, to which I belong, condemns all secret societies, for reasons of public order, safety, and welfare. 2nd. I believe that this amendment tends, itself, to infringe upon the rights of the Provinces, which alone have the right of legislating as to who shall or shall not hold processions, &c. It is a municipal and police matter, exclusively belonging to the Provinces. At least the amendment throws a doubt as to the exclusive jurisdiction of the Provinces in the matter, and uselessly affirms a right created by a Royal statute in favor of each Province. 3rd. The amendment is useless, as far as my section of the country is concerned at least—a Provincial law duly in force already settling the matter involved; and 4th. It contains a standing and dangerous provocation, of a nature to perpetrate agitation and to cause new trouble. The situation to my eyes is very clear. Either this Bill is constitutional or not. If it be unconstitutional, it will confirm no incorporation at all. If it be constitutional, every lodge created or existing in any Province will receive by it a legal standing, will become a moral person, subject, as all others, to the laws of the Dominion, but also of the Province in which it will operate. I will not accuse the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran) of making a political dodge, because I am afraid it would not be parliamentary, but I will say that it looks very like it. He supports most faithfully the hon. leader of this House, although he knows that that hon. gentleman would have only one word to say, or one finger to raise, to prevent that Bill from coming into law, I presume the hon. member will go on supporting his chief; but, to redeem his position, to give change to public opinion, he wants to throw some golden sand in the eyes of the Catholics of the Province of Quebec. I do not think that will prove a very successful trump card.

Mr. LAVERGNE. It seems to me that the amendment of the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran) has reference altogether to powers which should be exercised by the Local Legislature. It appears to me that it does not condemn the principle of this Bill, but is intended only for the purpose of catching votes, and trying to please everybody. I do not discuss the merits of this Bill, because they have been already thoroughly discussed in this House on several occasions; but, to comply with my own wishes on this question, and with the wishes of many of my hon. friends, I beg to move as an amendment to the amendment:

That all the words after "That" in the main motion be omitted, and that all the words in the amendment be struck out, and the following substituted therefor: the Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be read a third time this day six months.

Mr. TAYLOR. The members for Inverness, Northumberland, Kent and Pontiac have not voted.

Mr. CAMERON. I am paired with the hon. member for South Wentworth (Mr. Carpenter). I am in favor of the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL. I paired on Friday last with the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. McGreevy) —a time pair. I am in favor of the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. LANDRY. I am paired with the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I am in favor of the amendment.

Mr. BRYSON. I paired with the hon. member for Russell (Mr. Edwards) on Friday evening. I am against the amendment to the amendment.

Amendment to amendment negatived.

Mr. BÉCHARD. I wish to state that I am opposed to the amendment, because by voting for it I should be admitting the principle of the Bill, to which I am strongly opposed. I am sure that during the course of my life I have never had a feeling of personal animosity against any man because he was an Orangeman. Since I have had the honor of a seat in this House, I have become acquainted with a number of gentlemen belonging to that order, and I have had no reason to complain of my relations with them; and I must say of some, with whom my relations have been familiar, that I have learned to appreciate them as honest and honorable men. But, notwithstanding that consideration, I object to the Bill now before the House, on the ground that it provides for the incorporation of a secret society. On principle I am opposed to all secret societies, especially in a country like Canada, where the greatest political and civil liberty is enjoyed by every one, and where the existence of a secret society is uncalled for.

Mr. CASEY. My reason for voting against the amendment is, in part, the same as that of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down. I consider that in voting for the amendment, I should be taking for granted that the Bill was going to pass, thus destroying my protest against the Bill in any form. But there is another reason. I do not believe we have the power in this House either to prohibit or to allow processions in any of the Provinces of Canada. That, as I understand it, is a matter of civil rights with which the Provinces alone have power to deal. If any of the Provinces have Acts against party processions, those Acts will be enforced whether we tack this amendment on to the Bill or not; if they have no such Acts, and choose to allow party processions, that is their own business, not ours. I must say, however, that if we had the power, I should be glad to see processions of this kind prohibited in all the Provinces of the Dominion. I believe that processions of this sort, which are necessarily irritating, not only to religious feelings, but to race feelings—I do not refer to the French race alone, but to the Irish race as well—should not be allowed, as they are not allowed in Ireland, where this order originated.

Mr. McNEILL. Yes; they are.

Mr. CASEY. They may be now, but they were not a few years ago, and I believe that these processions, which are necessarily insulting to certain members of the community, should be disallowed. But I do not believe that we are justified in using words which are either meaningless or mischievous. If the words of this amendment have any meaning at all, they assume that this House has the right of prohibiting processions in the different Provinces. If they do not mean that, they mean nothing, and they form a useless addition to the Bill. In reference to the Bill itself, the changes which have been made in it this year have not at all removed the objections which I, as well as most of the gentlemen around me, have had to the Bill in former years. The addition of the clauses referring to mutual insurance does not change in any respect the nature of the Act itself. It remains an Act incorporating a society which, to me at least, seems to be mischievous and unsuited to the conditions of this country. We know well that the Orangemen do not come here with this Bill for the sake of the mutual insurance scheme. That is not what they want; what they want is a recognition from this House of their corporate standing in this country, and the mutual insurance scheme has been just tacked on to it to make the constitution of this body resemble those of societies which are purely benevolent in their nature, and nothing else. A comparison has been made with the Foresters Bill, which we passed last year, and it is held, and apparently admitted by many hon. members, that, because we gave the Foresters an Act embodying a scheme of mutual insurance, we ought to give the Orangemen a similar Act. But, look at the difference in the nature of the two societies. The Foresters are a mutual benefit society; their object is benevolence, mutual insurance, and a little harmless jollification once or twice a year, when they have their picnics. Can anyone compare that society with the Orange society? The Orange society in its nature is essentially a politico-religious society, and the mutual insurance scheme is a mere addendum tacked on to make it resemble benevolent societies like the Foresters. The two societies are as different from each other as the society of Jesuits is from a Methodist class meeting, and they cannot be made to resemble each other by anything you can put into this Bill. If you should take something away from the objects of the

Mr. CASEY

Orange Society, you might assimilate it to the Foresters, but not otherwise. I would ask my Orange friends to consider this: Suppose the Jesuits were not satisfied with their incorporation from the Legislature of Quebec, and applied to this House for incorporation throughout the Dominion. Of course my Orange friends would oppose that application; but suppose a Bill for that purpose had been presented here for two or three Sessions and defeated, and it had been decided to add to it a mutual insurance scheme, would my Orange friends consider that that changed anything in the nature of the Bill? Would they, having voted against it for two or three Sessions, vote for it because of the addition of such a scheme? I call on any Orangeman in this House to say whether he would vote for the incorporation of the Jesuits because a scheme of mutual insurance was included in it? I do not believe that one of them could honestly do so, and I oppose the incorporation of the Orange Order for the same reason that they oppose the incorporation of the Jesuits, because I consider it a politico-religious body, which it is not at all desirable to establish in the Dominion of Canada. When I say it is a politico-religious body, I am borne out by the facts. That order originated in Ireland after the conquest, and in Ireland it has always been a badge of distinction, not only between religions, but between races—between the Anglo-Saxon race inhabiting the north of Ireland and the Celtic Catholics; it has been a sign of conquest, a necessarily irritating and insulting organisation, even in the country where it originated, and where there was possibly some excuse for its formation in the angry passions then existing. But, Sir, when it is transplanted here and worked in the interests of politics largely, when its promoters go so far as to organise lodges among our Indians on the reserves, it has ceased to have any character as a benevolent or a friendly organisation or as a merely loyal organisation, but has become a machine to be used for political purposes, at the bidding of whatever party may happen to have control of it. That has been proved by the vote we have just had. Large numbers of gentlemen who have voted against the six months hoist-to-day voted for it on former occasions. What a change! It is a change not to be accounted for by any change in the Bill itself, for no rational man would say that was a reason; but it is evidently because these hon. gentlemen feel that they must do this to counteract the effect of their vote last year on the Jesuit Bill. It is a bargain and sale, which has been carried out faithfully by the supporters of the First Minister—by those Protestant supporters of his who did not formerly support the Orange Bill. They have all now fallen into line, and the result will be, what it is intended to be, that no Orangeman will dare, henceforth to lift up his voice in opposition to the course pursued by those supporters of the Government, who refused to disallow the Jesuit Act last year. The scheme has been well arranged and has succeeded admirably. The wind has been completely taken out of the Orange agitation on the Jesuit question, and, having received their quid pro quo, these men will say no more about the Jesuits, but will fall again into line, and be, as they have hitherto been, good loyal supporters of the First Minister, in the first place, and of the Orange Order, in the second place.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Curran :

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but be re-committed to the Committee of the whole House for the purpose of amending the same, by providing that this association shall not hold party processions in any Province where Party Processions Acts are now, or may hereafter be enacted.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. members for Inverness (Mr. Cameron), Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), Kent (Mr. Landry), and Pontiac (Mr. Bryson) have not voted.

Mr. CAMERON. I paired with the hon. member for South Wentworth (Mr. Carpenter). I am in favor of the amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL. As I have already explained, I made a time pair with the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. McGreevy).

Mr. CASEY. Do you know how he would vote ?

Mr. MITCHELL. No ; but I know that I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. LANDRY. I would have voted with the minority, if I were at liberty to vote.

Mr. BRYSON. I am in favor of the Bill and against the amendment.

House divided on motion of Mr. Wallace for third reading :

Motion agreed to, and the Bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. members for Inverness (Mr. Cameron), Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), Kent (Mr. Landry), Pontiac (Mr. Bryson), and Glengarry (Mr. Purcell) have not voted.

Mr. CAMERON. I have paired with the hon. member for South Wentworth (Mr. Carpenter). I am opposed to the Bill.

Mr. BRYSON. I have paired with the hon. member for Russell (Mr. Edwards). I am in favor of the Bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. I give the same reason for not voting as I did before. I am against the Bill.

Mr. LANDRY. I am against the Bill.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 72) respecting the Summerside Bank.—(Mr. Davies, P.E.I.)

Bill (No. 59) to change the name of the Vaudreuil and Prescott Railway Company to the Montreal and Ottawa Railway Company.—(Mr. McMillan, Vaudreuil.)

Bill (No. 36) to confirm an agreement between the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway and Steamboat Company and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.—(Mr. Davis.)

Bill (No. 71) to incorporate the Brandon and South-Western Railway Company.—(Mr. Scarth.)

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 99) to incorporate the Owen Sound and Lake Huron Railway Company.—(Mr. Masson.)

Bill (No. 101) to incorporate the Louisburg and Richmond Railway Company.—(Mr. Small.)

INVERNESS RAILWAY.

Mr. SMALL moved second reading of Bill (No. 100) to incorporate the Inverness Railway Company.

Mr. CAMERON. The introduction of this Bill in this House is, I have no doubt, a great surprise to the people of Inverness. This, however, is not the stage at which the Bill should be opposed. There is no great reason why the Bill should not be read a second time, though I consider it is not only an infringement on Provincial rights, but is also a violation of vested rights. In 1882, a Bill was passed by the Local Legislature of Nova Scotia, covering the ground which this Bill proposes to cover. A Bill was also passed in 1886 by the Local Legislature covering the same ground. Two Bills were passed in 1887 also covering the same ground, and in 1887 power was given to the Local Government of Nova Scotia by an Act of Parliament to grant an Act of incorporation to any railway company that would propose to build a railway over the same ground. The section which refers to this power is section 7, of chapter 1, of the 49th Victoria. It proposes to give the Local Government power to this effect. Section 7 provides:

“A charter may be granted, if satisfactory proposals for the construction of railways mentioned in this part be made to the Governor in Council by persons who are not incorporated; the Governor in Council may grant to such persons, under such corporate name as he shall deem expedient, a charter confirming upon them, in whole or in part, the franchises, powers and privileges granted under any existing laws of this Province to any company, as respects the construction or operation of lines of railway or steamships, and such charter, when published in Royal Gazette, by order of the Governor in Council, shall have force and effect as if it were an Act of the Legislature of Nova Scotia.”

Now, Sir, there are not only four charters passed in the Local Legislature of Nova Scotia over the same ground, but this extraordinary power is also given to the Local Government to grant similar charters over the same ground. I hold, therefore, that it is an infringement on the rights of the Local Government of Nova Scotia to pass charters over this ground. It is altogether an anomaly, and during my experience in Parliament I do not know of a single charter which has been passed by this Parliament to two companies over the same ground. It is a principle which has governed the Railway Committee since I have had the honor of being a member of that Committee; and I am not a little astonished at this Bill being introduced here. I am aware that its introduction here has been for the purpose, I am sorry to say, of making confusion worse confounded. A very large number of charters already over the same ground seem not to have been sufficient to prevent the construction of a railway over it; but this one is also introduced here, as I apprehend, for the purpose of making me express an opinion relative to it. I have no fears in doing so; I am opposed to the Bill just because there are surely a sufficient number of charters over that ground already, and also because it is not necessary that any railway company should secure a charter from this Parliament in order to enable them to build a road, if necessary.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AT PETERBORO'.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, What amount of money has been paid to the following legal gentlemen respectively, namely: W. H. Moore, A. P. Poussette, Q.C., John O'Meara, John Green, E. A. Peck, and John Burnham, Q.C., all of Peterboro', on account of legal services or otherwise, rendered by those gentlemen, or any of them, on account of, and in regard to, the following works, or any of them:—1st. The purchase of the site and the construction of the Peterboro' Post Office; 2nd. The purchase of the site for the construction of the Custom house at Peterboro'; 3rd. On account of the Trent Valley Canal, distinguishing if paid on survey or construction, or damages to land consequent on construction?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I can only answer the third question to-day; I would ask the hon. gentleman to allow the other two questions to stand until to-morrow. In answer to the third question, Mr. Moore has been paid $1,539.77; Mr. O'Meara, $153.82; both chargeable to damages to land consequent on construction. The other gentlemen have received nothing in connection with the work.

WHARF AT ILE AUX NOIX.

Mr. BOURASSA asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to place in the Supplementary Estimates this year a sum of money for the construction of a wharf at the end of the road leading to Ile aux Noix, in the parish of St. Valentine, county of St. John's, on the Richelieu River, in order to facilitate the approach to Ile aux Noix and the trade of the adjoining parishes?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is not possible for me to give the hon. gentleman an affirmative answer at present. He will have to wait until the Supplementary Estimates come down, when, if he finds an answer in them, it will, I believe, be in the affirmative.

WORLD'S FAIR AT CHICAGO.

Mr. INNES asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to make an appropriation in order to secure a proper representation of the manufactures, arts, natural and other products of Canada at the World's Fair, which, by vote of the United States Congress, is to be held at Chicago in the year 1892?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Whenever it is ascertained beyond a doubt that the World's Fair is to be proceeded with, it will be the duty of the Government to call the attention of the House to it.

REVISION OF THE DOMINION VOTERS' LISTS.

Mr. INNES (for Mr. PLATT) asked, Whether the Dominion voters' lists will be revised during the year 1890?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. By the law the Dominion voters' lists must be revised this year.

I. C. R.—RECEIPTS AND EXPENSES.

Mr. LAURIER (for Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT) asked, What are the receipts and working expenses of the Intercolonial Railway for the seven months ending 31st January, in the years 1889 and 1890, respectively?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In 1889 the receipts were $1,771,684.85, and the working expenses, $2,064,701.58. In 1890 the receipts were $1,745,786.79, and the working expenses, $2,161,082.03.

I. C. R.—PAYMENT OF EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. DAVIES asked, Whether it is the intention of the Minister of Railways to pay employés of the Intercolonial Railway more frequently than once a month? If not, is it his intention to authorise a deputy, in the absence or illness of the General Superintendent, to sign the pay-roll, so that the employés may receive their pay at an early period of each month?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is not the intention to pay the employés of the Intercolonial Railway more frequently than once a month.

When the Chief Superintendent is unwell and unable to attend to business, and when he is to be absent for any length and period, arrangements are made for a deputy to sign the pay rolls. The men, as a rule, are paid with great regularity about the middle of each month.

"A" BATTERY, KINGSTON.

Mr. INNES (for Mr. PLATT) asked Whether rooms or quarters originally set aside for the accommodation of officers joining "A" Battery, Kingston, for instructional purposes, have since been allotted to permanent officers of the battery by authority of the Minister of Militia and Defence? If so, have other rooms or quarters been accorded such joining or attached officers, or will compensation be granted in lieu of quarters to such officers as may hereafter be attached to "A" Battery for instructional purposes?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The quarters set aside for the accommodation of the officers joining "A" Battery for instructional purposes will be available for those officers, and there will be no occasion to grant compensation to anyone in lieu of the quarters.

BRESAYLOR HALF-BREEDS' CLAIMS.

Mr. LISTER moved:

That a Select Committee be appointed to enquire into the claims of the Bresaylor Half-breeds for losses sustained during the rebellion in the North-West, and also in reference to furs taken from Charles Bremner, a half-breed residing at Battleford. That the said Committee consist of Messrs. Barron, Watson, Denison, Landry, Macdowall and Lister, and that they have power to send for persons and papers, and employ a stenographer, and report from time to time to this House.

He said: The matter involved in the resolution has already been brought before the attention of this House on at least two occasions; but the hon. gentlemen who made the motions were actuated by a desire simply to bring the attention of the Government to the fact that these claims were in existence and were unsettled, and to urge the Government to take such steps as might be necessary for the purpose of having an adjustment of the claims made, if, in fact, the claims really existed. I may say that in bringing the matter now before the House in the way I do, I am animated simply by a desire to have the claims of these people investigated, and if, upon that investigation, it turns out that they are entitled to compensation, if it turns out that they have not been properly dealt with by the Government, or if the officials of the Government have acted in an improper way whereby these people have sustained loss, then it will be the duty of the Government to do what is right under the circumstances. In going over the facts connected with this matter, the names of eminent men are necessarily brought in. The name of General Middleton, an officer of Her Majesty's army and commander of the Canadian forces, the commander of the forces at the time of the half-breed rebellion, must necessarily take a prominent place in remarks which I have to make. The names of other officials of the Government—Mr. Hayter Reed, a Commissioner of Indian Affairs in the North-West, and Mr. Bedson, the keeper of the Manitoba penitentiary—must also appear, and, if, as I am instructed, and I believe it to be a fact, and I state it upon my responsibility as a member, I am able to establish that the conduct of these men has been unbecoming that of an officer, and unbecoming that of the officials of the Government—in other words, that the conduct of the general in command amounted to nothing more and nothing less than a looting of the property of the half-breeds; he can be no longer fit to occupy the position he occupies, and the other officials of the Government ought to be dismissed. It is a surprising fact, that this claim and this charge made against these high officials in the employ of this Government, should have been permitted to be made Session after Session for the past three or four years, and no attempt have been made to satisfy the public mind that they are foundationless, and, in fact, do not exist. If these charges are foundationless, then it was the duty of the general to have investigated them, and, for the purpose of satisfying the public, an investigation should have taken place, in order that his character and reputation should be cleared from the aspersions which this charge makes upon it. The Government have stood quietly by, and, so far as I know, the general has not asked for an investigation, but has allowed the charges to be heralded, from one end of the country to the other, without any utterance on his part. In order that the House may properly understand the position of matters and the facts as I have them, it will be necessary to go back to the close of the rebellion of 1885. At that time, General Middleton was in command of the Canadian forces in the North-West, there was a settlement there known as the Bresaylor half-breed settlement, which consisted of Scotch half-breeds and French half-breeds. Immediately on the breaking out of the rebellion, the Scotch half-breeds, taking all their movable property, went to Battleford, leaving the French half-breeds in the settlement. It is said that the French half-breeds did not go to Battleford for the reason that their horses were some thirty or forty miles away from where they were living, and that it was impossible for them to go, in consequence. They consequently remained where they were; but if the investigation is granted it will, I believe, be shown that the French half-breeds sent a messenger to Colonel Morris, who was in command at Battleford, telling him they wanted protection. The messenger was arrested and kept under arrest by the Commandant, and no word was sent back to the half-breeds by the military authorities; subsequently, and before the battle of Cut Knife, a messenger was sent, in the night time, to the fort at Battleford, telling the military authorities that the French half-breeds were loyal to the Government. They sent word by this messenger that they had been compelled by the Indians to go on to the reserve. I may say, that in the meantime, the story of Bremner and others is that the Indians surrounded them and threatened them with violence to such an extent that they compelled the French half-breeds to go on the reserve. After going on to the reserve they sent a messenger to the military authorities at Battleford, telling them that they had been compelled to this course, and also telling that their tents were of white canvas, that they were not along with the Indians, that they were loyal to their Government, and that the military authorities would know when they made an attack where their camp was, on account of the distinctive color of the tents, in addition to which means of recognition they would hoist a white flag. Now, that was the message sent by these French half-breeds to the militia authorities at Battleford; but, as I am informed, when fire was opened, instead of striking at the Indians, the military authorities directed their fire upon the encampment of the half-breeds, notwithstanding the fact that the white flag had been hoisted in accordance with the message they had sent. I believe, Sir, it is true that when the half-breeds found that their flag of truce, as they considered it, was not respected, two or three of them joined the Indians and resisted the attack made by the military. It may be said that it was the duty of the French half-breeds to have gone to the fort when the Scotch half-breeds went, but the answer that these men make to the charge is, that it was impossible for them to go, inasmuch as their horses were a long distance away from the camp; and they say, moreover, that after the Scotch half-breeds had gone into the fort, there being two reserves to pass between their settlement and Battleford, and the Indians being hostile, that it was dangerous for them to have crossed these two reserves for the purpose of getting into Battleford. For this reason, they sent a message to the fort for protection, and, subsequently, they sent a message that they were loyal to the Government, would take no part in resisting the military authorities, and indicating where they were encamped, so that the military authorities would know they were not resisting the Government. On the surrender of Poundmaker, the French half-breeds went to the fort at Battleford and Charles Bremner, one of these half-breeds, a fur-dealer in his business, whom, I am told, had four or five stations and who had gathered his whole winter's catch, brought down all his furs along with him to the fort; he erected his tent at the fort, and shortly after doing so some of the soldiers commenced to take away his furs. General Middleton himself came upon the scene, and Bremner appealed to him to protect him against the volunteers or soldiers who were taking his furs; and that by order of General Middleton the furs were taken into the fort. The Government took control of the furs, by taking them out of his possession and taking them into theirs. Having assumed the control of that property, it became the duty of General Middleton and the others officers in command to take care that the man was not despoiled of his property; but, according to the statement which I have received, such was not the case. The furs were taken into the fort and Bremner was immediately arrested. He was sent to Regina and lodged in jail, and the military authorities took his stock of silver fox and others of the most valuable furs which the North-West produces, and worth from $4,000 to $6,000. Bremner was released, afterwards, without even the form of a trial. He and the other half-breeds, who had been arrested for complicity in this rebellion, were released on their own recognisance to appear when called upon; but from that day to the present moment they have never been summoned to answer the charge of disloyalty made against them by the military authorities. After Bremner was released he went to Battleford to see about his property, and great was his astonishment, when arriving there, to find that the officers of the Government, the officers in command, instead of keeping the promises which had been made to him to take care of his furs, informed him that these furs were disposed of by order of General Middleton. Bremner went to Winnipeg, when the Minister of Militia was there, as we all know, and he interviewed the Minister, who told him that he had nothing to do with the matter. This poor half-breed, then saw General Middleton, and General Middleton disclaimed any knowledge of the furs, and further said that he had never ordered Bremner's arrest. General Middleton was the officer in command. Bremner says he was arrested by order of General Middleton, and he says further that it was by order of the General that the furs were taken from the camp and carried into the fort. There was a large quantity of furs of a most valuable character; and if this House gives me a committee, I pledge my word upon my responsibility as a member, having investigated this claim, that I believe I shall be able to prove that the furs were taken by order of General Middleton. Now, the question is, what became of those furs? I have evidence to show that from time to time friends of the officers in command received letters or notes to the men in charge of the furs, authorising them to let those persons take the furs, and they would go and select for themselves a valuable fur and carry it away. I think I shall be able to prove that when General Middleton was leaving the North-West to go to Winnipeg, all that remained of that large quantity of furs were put up in four boxes, of which, by order of General Middleton, two boxes were for himself, one box for Mr. Hayter Reed, and one box for Mr. Bedson, of the Manitoba Penitentiary. I know that I shall be able to prove that they were put up in compliance with a letter of which this is a copy:

"DEAR WARDEN,—General Middleton has instructed and authorised me to send you the present letter, desiring that you put up bales of furs for the undermentioned: two bales for General Middleton, one for S. L. Bedson, and one for myself. Please select the best and pack them down, as we will be down there to-morrow by boat.

"HAYTER REED,
Assistant Commissioner of Indians."

I can prove that, in accordance with this letter, those four boxes of furs were put up, and that two of the boxes were addressed to General Middleton, one to Mr. Bedson, and one to Mr. Hayter Reed, and that those boxes were put on the boat that took General Middleton and Mr. Hayter Reed down to Winnipeg. What became of the furs afterwards it is impossible to say, and it is for the purpose of ascertaining what has become of them that I ask the House to grant this Committee. The Government appointed a commission to investigate the claims of the Bresaylor half-breeds, and the payment of the claims of those poor miserable half-breeds was refused. The commission refused to consider them, and refused to take evidence under oath, accepting the unsworn statement of men to whom they went to talk about the matter. Moreover, I am directed to say that if payment of the losses of these half-breeds depends on their loyalty, they are willing to make that the test, and unless they can show that they have been loyal from first to last, they are willing to forfeit their claims. They claim that they were and always have been loyal, and, therefore, they ask to be put in the same position as the other half-breeds of the country, and to be paid some compensation for the great losses they have sustained. Now, Sir, it does seem to me extraordinary, under these circumstances, that the Government should refuse to investigate their claims. If it is within the range of possibility that a wrong has been done to those men, surely it is the duty of the Government to take whatever steps may be necessary for the purpose of having that wrong righted. Now, Charles Bremner makes this statement:

"I had been trading during the winter of 1884-85, and had secured fur to the value of $8,000. It is not necessary here to go into detail as to my imprisonment and attending losses. At the time of Poundmaker's surrender, he also surrendered his prisoners. I with others, was permitted to camp near the barracks of the North-West Mounted Police. I was arrested the same evening, without any knowledge of any indictment. General Middleton came into our camp the same evening, and as the soldiers were endeavoring to take my furs by force, Mr. Caplette (my clerk) asked General Middleton if he had given the men authority to take the furs. General Middleton replied, that no such order had been given. He asked to whom the furs belonged, where they had been got, and other questions. Caplette explained their existence. The General then said that he would send some men to protect the furs. He sent three men and team, and removed the furs without permission to the barracks. Later on we were tried at Regina, and were let off on our own recognisance. On my return to Battleford, I went to Inspector Morris of the North-West Mounted Police, who had been in charge at the time the furs were taken, and demanded my furs. He replied that they had been disposed of, by order of General Middleton, whose instructions were in his possession. I then went to Winnipeg, and with Mr. Howell, a lawyer, met the Minister of Militia. In reply to my request for information re furs, he stated that he had nothing whatever to do with the matter, and in reply to another question, he said that I should apply to General Middleton for information. I saw General Middleton. He denied any knowledge of the furs or of having any connection with them. He also stated that he had never ordered Bremner's arrest or any of his party. Getting no satisfaction, I returned to Battleford. I again saw Morris, who repeated his assertion that Middleton had given instructions as to the disposal of the furs. I made a claim to the Government for the furs, charging less than they cost me: and although I have frequently corresponded with the Department at Ottawa, I can get no satisfaction from them."

Now, Sir, I have in my possession petitions from the people of that country—from men of the highest standing and respectability—who represent that this man Bremner is a respectable man, and that his claim ought to be paid by the Government. When the late Hon. Mr. White was in the North-West, a deputation waited upon him, and he promised that this matter should be investigated, and that the wrong should be set right. Shortly afterwards, however, as we all know, Mr. White died, and so far as he was concerned, nothing more could be done. About that time, a petition to the following effect was forwarded to the Government:—

"To the HON. THOMAS WHITE,
Minister of the Interior.

"SIR,—We, the undersigned, by this our petition, humbly represent—

"That we settled in the neighborhood of Battleford, at a place known as the Bresaylor Settlement, in the years 1883-4. That having sold our property in Manitoba at the time when property was very high, we brought with us here considerable horses, cattle and cash, and were in a very prosperous condition until the rebellion broke out.

"That at the beginning of said rebellion we were made prisoners to the Indians, left destitute, and forced into their camp.

"That since rebellion the Government has paid or indemnified all the settlers for the losses they sustained on account of said rebellion.

"That on the supposition that we joined the Indians of our own free will, and that we acted as rebels in connection with them during said rebellion, payment for our losses has been so far withheld unjustly, without enquiry of any kind, and on mere suppositions which have no foundation whatever.

"Your petitioners strongly protest against such a course. We are British subjects, and as such we should be considered innocent until we are proved guilty; and we consider it arbitrary and unfair to be thus condemned without a trial.

"Although the onus probandi does not, or should not rest on us, we have always been ready, and are still ready to appear before Government Commissioners or a jury of our fellow-citizens and prove to their satisfaction that we were forced to follow the rebel Indians as their prisoners, and never ceased to be loyal to Her Majesty's Government.

"To better satisfy you as to the genuineness of our pretensions, your petitioners take the liberty of herein stating a few of the leading facts relating to doings and movements during the late rebellion which will help you to form some idea of the circumstances of our case.

"As our settlement is twenty-five miles from Battleford, with no other settlement between us, we were not made aware of the movements of the Indians until a large number of them were assembled at Battleford on the south side of Battle River, and when Payne and Tremont had already been murdered.

"That as two Indian reserves were between us and Battleford at a spot where the Battle and Saskatchewan Rivers are only about three miles apart we could not avoid passing through these reserves without considerable risk to our lives. As soon as informed of the movements and warlike attitude of the Indians we sent for our horses, which were herded twenty-five miles west of our place, and made ourselves ready to start for the barracks, when Indians appearing to be friendly came to us declaring that we were watched by the Indians and that if we attempted to move towards Battleford we would be all killed, but would not be troubled or interfered with if we remained at our homes.

"On this information we wrote a letter and sent couriers to Capt. Morris, the commanding officer at Battleford, explaining our position, our desire to reach the barracks, and asking assistance to help us to make our way to Battleford. No answer came, and as we learned later, our communication was looked at with distrust, and our messenger put in jail.

"About one week after the sending of our letter to Capt. Morris, one Angus Miller and Edward Spence obtained a pass from Capt. Morris and came to our settlement to look after their property. On being asked why the help asked for had not been sent, Miller replied that they could not have spared any of their men, and that some were suspicious about our designs. Miller and Spence did not know if we could follow the road safely with our families, as they themselves had not thought safe to follow; yet after some discussion we decided to attempt going to Battleford with them. We had our horses hitched up ready to go when seven or eight Indians suddenly broke on us, followed by about two hundred and fifty others. Miller and Spence left at once full speed for the barracks.

"The Indians surrounded us, took possession of our cattle, and ordered us to follow them or be shot. We were also ordered to deliver up our arms, but as we persistently refused, and declared that we would fight before doing so, were finally allowed to keep them. We followed them, surrounded all the way to their general camp at Poundmaker's Reserve.

"Towards the 18th of April, a few days before the battle at Cut Knife Creek, we sent during the night one Samuel Denison, with instructions to proceed to the barracks and inform Capt. Morris that we were prisoners of the Indians; that if they were to come to fight not to shoot at us; that our camp would be at one side and could be easily recognised by our square canvas tents while the Indians had tepees; that if a favorable occasion offered during the battle we would join the troops and fight the Indians.

"On the following day the Indians, taking notice of Denison's disappearance, became suspicious about our intentions. They held a council and decided that we should remove our tents to the centre of the camp. On our refusing to comply with this order they rode around in a threatening attitude, yelling and firing, Indian fashion. We showed that we were determined to fight them rather than comply, and seeing that we could not be intimidated we were finally allowed to remain where we were encamped.

"On hearing the firing of the cannon on the morning of the battle Charles Bremner put up a white flag to indicate to the troops the position of our camp. The Indians wanted us to pull it down, but we resisted, and to avoid a possible conflict we had to assure them that it meant nothing.

"Notwithstanding our message to Captain Morris, through our messenger Denison, firing was kept up at our camp by the troops during the battle. Incensed at what was considered a breach of faith or an unpardonable distrust, a few amongst us—two or three—decided to take part in the fight against the troops, saying: "Since the Police do not take any notice of our letters and messages, we are not to remain exposed to be killed by both the Indians and the Police."

"Your petitioners are ready to substantiate these facts before a court of enquiry, and we feel that if such an opportunity is offered to us we will be able to dispel all doubts about the loyalty of our intentions; and prove besides that our firm attitude and our influence over the Indians has been instrumental in saving lives, and in preventing cruelties of any kind on prisoners and on the bodies of the soldiers left on the battle-field.

"Wherefore your petitioners pray that an investigation be opened, and, if practicable, before men acquainted with the country and our circumstances, to hear any evidence for or against our pretensions, with the ultimate object of being paid and indemnified for our losses on account of the rebellion, if we succeed in proving our allegations and our loyalty to the satisfaction of your Government.

"And your petitioners will never cease to pray.

"Battleford, 25th August, 1887.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. LISTER. When you left the Chair, I had read the petition of the Bresaylor half-breeds. Attached to that petition was the following writing:—

"To the Hon. THOMAS WHITE,

"Minister of the Interior.

"SIR.—We, the inhabitants of Battleford, take the liberty of recommending to your favorable consideration the within petition of the Bresaylor Settlement.

"Though we looked with some distrust at the doings of the petitioners during the rebellion, we firmly believe them to have been led astray owing to the intense excitement and general distrust then prevailing, and we do not hesitate to admit that subsequent developments and a better understanding have dispelled the erroneous impressions we had formed on their loyalty. Though some may still retain the belief that a few amongst them took part and acted as rebels, we are fully convinced that the greatest number never ceased to be loyal in mind and in action.

"That the facts as stated in the within petition are in substance true, and that the granting of the conclusion of their petition would be an act of justice to which they are entitled; and your petitioners will never cease to pray.

"J. McDONALD, R. C. MACDONALD, D. L. CLINK, ED. RICHARD, T. CLOUSTON, C. WILLIAMSON, B. A. LAWSON, M. YOUNG, C. GALLAGHER, EM. RICHARD, E. BOURASSA, D. ARCAD, A. B. MACKAY, A. SETTEB, J. MCGINNIS, R. LYNNE, B. PRINCE, J. BELLIVEAU, W. SKELTON, J. M. SKELTON, J. H. SULLY, JOHN HOGG, Presbyterian minister, W. WILLIAMS, J. CRAIG, J. CLINKSKILL, W. PETERSON, W. J. BARKER, W. NELSON, W. MCKAY, J. C. SKELTON, C. AUCHERSON, T. E. MAHAFFY, A. H. BIGONNESSE, O.M.I., L. COCHIN, O.M.I., A. P. FORBET, H. H. MILLIE, A. C. SCHNEIDER, J. F. PRITCHARD, Missionary, P. C. PAMBRUN."

Now, that petition was forwarded to the Government, and it has been in the hands of the Government ever since. And the half-breeds complain that, notwithstanding their petition, notwithstanding ing its endorsement by the most reputable settlers in that country, the Government have failed to take any action to investigate in any particular the claims of these unfortunate people. I hold in my hand a letter, dated 15th February, 1887, addressed to myself, from a prominent resident in Winnipeg, in which he says :

"During the rebellion the people in the barracks, amongst whom were my brother and six cousins, not knowing the circumstances which made the Bresaylor settlers to follow the Indians, were all under the impression that they had done so of their own free will. When the rebellion was over, these circumstances were explained, and I don't believe there is one man in Battleford to-day who still entertains the idea that they were rebels.

"Their settlement is twenty-five miles from the barracks. The Saskatchewan and the Battle Rivers are nowhere more than four miles apart within this distance. Between Bresaylor and Battleford proper, between the two rivers, there are three Indian reserves. To escape meant fight with these Indians. They held council many times and decided to go to the barracks if the police would protect them. They sent a courier with a letter, who was at once put in jail. The Indians came and they were forced to follow them. A few days before the battle at Cut Knife they sent another courier (Denison); he was also put in the lock-up. The Indians saw the next day that he was missing, suspected treachery, and a fight between the Indians and these settlers was very near being had. Captain Morris never let us know that these couriers were such; he treated them as spies, and nobody thought otherwise until the rebellion was over and everything explained.

"During the two years after the rebellion I did my best to investigate the matter for my own satisfaction, and I have no doubt whatever these people were loyal.

"When Hon. Mr. T. White came to Battleford, I drew two petitions, one for the settlers and one for the citizens. The last one was signed by everybody, and it expresses the facts and belief that these people were not rebels. I presented these petitions to Mr. White, who told me that there was such an appearance of truth in the case, that he would recommend to the Government to grant an enquiry. He told me also about Bremner, that, rebel or not, he had a right to be paid the value of his furs. I have no doubt he would have acted that way had he not died soon after."

On 17th December, 1888, at the annual meeting of the Battle River Agricultural Society, the following resolution was carried unanimously :—

"On motion of Mr. R. G. Speers, seconded by Mr. Chas. Smith, it was resolved to petition the Dominion Government to have dues on hay reduced, scrip granted to Home Guards, dues abolished on fence rails and dead wood used for fuel, rebellion losses claims re-opened, payment of rebellion losses to the Bresaylor half-breeds, payment to Mr. Chas. Bremner for furs taken by General Middleton.

"That the officers of this association be, and are hereby instructed to have said petition prepared and forwarded to the hon. the Minister of the Interior."

This is signed by J. M. Skelton, Secretary-Treasurer of the Battle River Agricultural Society. In accordance with that resolution a petition was forwarded to the Government bearing date 7th January, 1889, and amongst the allegations in the petition I find the following :—

"That, on the arrival of General Middleton in Battleford he took over a large quantity of furs from one Charles Bremner, representing that they would be kept safe for him.

"That we are informed, and can substantiate, that said furs were at General Middleton's request shipped to his address, and we are informed, and verily believe, that said furs were appropriated to said Middleton's own private use.

"We would, therefore, request that the Government give this matter their earnest consideration and have justice done Mr. Bremner."

Then I find that, at a public meeting held at Battleford on the 30th December, 1889, a petition was prepared and signed, and forwarded to the Government, and that petition contains the following statements :—

"With reference to the position of the Bresaylor half-breeds during the rebellion: From all that can be learned, it was the intention of all the settlers of that district to remain at their homes and protect their property, not anticipating so serious an outbreak, and it was only by pressure being brought to bear on one of their number who happened to be in town on the day previous to the outbreak, that any of the Bresaylor people came to the barracks.

"The Indians then being on the warpath, these people sent a messenger to the officer in command of the North-West Mounted Police fort here to say they wanted to go into the barracks, and requested that an escort be sent to protect them and their families on the way.

"The messenger was kept a prisoner at the fort, and no answer was sent to them.

"Poundmaker's men then took them into their camp, where they remained till the surrender to General Middleton. With the exception of three or four, the whole settlement took no part in the rebellion, but rendered assistance to most of the prisoners taken by the Indians; and in some cases saved their lives.

"We believe that it was through their persuasion that Poundmaker's men were prevented from following Colonel Otter's troops on their return march from Cut Knife Creek, to a large ravine, where in all probability a large number would have been massacred.

"When the Minister of Justice quoted, in one of his speeches, the allegation that when the Bresaylor half-breeds came to Battleford (after the surrender of Poundmaker) they brought with them their flocks and herds, he doubtless quoted what he conscientiously believed to be the fact; however, if an opportunity be given them, the settlers in the locality can prove that such was not the case.

"These people came before the late Hon. Thomas White on his visit to Battleford and requested to be treated as loyal men, or to be placed on trial and given an opportunity of proving that they were loyal. They are willing to rest their case on the fact that they were loyal, and say that if given an opportunity, if they cannot establish the fact that they took no part in the rebellion they will ask no indemnity for their losses.

"It is a fact that their cattle were taken and slaughtered by the Indians in common with all other cattle. Some of their cattle rescued from the Indians at the close of the rebellion were slaughtered and used by the North-West Mounted Police. Some of their horses were taken by General Middleton's officers for scouting purposes, and have never been returned, and they have had no indemnity for either horses or cattle.

"The present Minister of the Interior in his report to the House at the last Session said that the reason these claims were not paid was because these people were a party to their own losses.

"We beg to inform the Minister that claims have been paid to men who went into Poundmaker's camp and offered their services to fight against the loyal forces, claims have also been paid to men who remained out of the fort, bearing arms, until taken prisoners and were kept in close confinement till the close of the rebellion. The claim of Father Cauchon upon whose advice the Bresaylor people remained at their homes, and who remained with them, was also paid.

"The taking of Bremner's furs by General Middleton, and the refusal of the Government to give him (Bremner) redress in the matter is an injustice that is keenly felt by every right-thinking man in this district. We have the proof that General Middleton took these furs under the pretence of keeping them safe for Bremner.

"We have the proof that these furs were shipped by General Middleton's orders to himself and others, and when a deputation brought that matter before the Minister of the Interior we were assured that Bremner would be paid for his furs, whether he would be paid for his other losses or not."

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. By whom was that written?

Mr. LISTER. It is signed by James Clinkskill, member of the North-West Assembly, chairman, and J. M. Skelton, secretary. Such are the statements which are made on behalf of these people, and which are supported, in the main, by the testimony of residents of that locality who are intimate with the facts and circumstances, and about whose credibility there can be no doubt.

James Clinkskill is a member of the North-West Assembly, a leading and prominent member in that section of the country, and the names which are here, endorsing the petition which I have read, I can say with perfect safety, are the names of the leading people in that section of the country. They pledge their word to the Government and to the public at large that the statements which have been made by the Bresaylor half-breeds have been true in every particular. I ask the Government to-night whether the statements contained in these petitions do not demand an investigation. Is it not the right of the humblest subject of this country who has been wronged, or who thinks he has been wronged, to demand an investigation of his claims? How are these half-savage men, removed thousands of miles away, to understand how these wrongs are to be rectified? They look upon the First Minister as representing the Great Mother, and when he goes on their reserves, he is the Great Father; and, after shaking hands with them, he coaxes them to vote for him. Why, then, should he not do as much justice to them as to any other portion of the people of this country? I say that, if any portion of our people is more entitled to consideration than another, it is the half-breeds of the North-West Territories. Whether their complaints are well founded or ill-founded, the least consideration which this Government can show them is to say: We will investigate your claims, and, if they are just, and right, and lawful, if they are claims which this Government can recognise, we will pay you to the uttermost farthing. The Government of this country, in view of the history of the past few years, cannot afford to ignore the rights of these unfortunate people. This Government has already spent millions of dollars in putting down a rebellion, which originated simply because the claims of a few unfortunate half-breeds in the North-West were disregarded. If those claims had been properly considered, that rebellion would never have happened; and, I think, the Government owe it to every section of the country, to consider these half-breeds' claims and settle them if they prove to be just. It will not do for the Minister of the Justice to say that he left this to a commission. I tell him here to-night that the commissioners appointed to investigate the half-breed claims refused, so far as the Bresaylor settlers were concerned, to take evidence upon them, refused to listen to the evidence that was produced by these people, and instead of that evidence, if they reported at all, it was upon statements made by certain people to the commissioners, but not under oath. So far as the claim of Mr. Bremner is concerned, it is not a question of loyalist or rebel. That question is not involved in his claim. Whether he was a rebel or whether he was a loyalist, his right to be paid for his furs exists just the same. The Government took possession of his furs by their officers in the North-West, by the military commanders there, and they took them under pretence that they would take care of them for this half-breed. Having taken the possession of the furs they are bound in law, they are bound in equity, they are bound by everything that men cherish as good and right, to recompense that man for those furs, if they were lost while in the custody of the Government by those officials in the North-West

Mr. LISTER.

Territories. There is no question but that this man's furs were taken possession of. There may be a doubt as to the value of the furs, it may be contended by the Government that he over-valued the furs, that he has stated there were more furs than there were in fact, but that is not the question. That there were furs is beyond any doubt at all. It is not denied but that there were furs, and that they were taken possession of by General Middleton. What became of them? Does the Government pretend for one moment to say that Mr. Bremner ever got one single skin back that had been taken possession of by General Middleton and taken into the fort? It is not pretended that such was the fact. Then what became of the furs? The man himself has searched in vain, he has enquired from the Minister of Militia, he has enquired from General Middleton, he has enquired from the man who was in charge of the fort at Battleford, he has enquired at every point where it was necessary to make enquiries, where he thought he could get information, and at every point he has been cruelly replused. General Middleton, the man who ordered him to be arrested, the man who said that he would send and take his furs, and who did it, answers by the statement that he knows nothing about it, that he never ordered his arrest—poor satisfaction for an unfortunate man arrested and imprisoned for weeks at Regina, and turned loose upon the public highway without a trial, charged with being a rebel, and for that reason deprived of the compensation which the meanest subject of Her Majesty is entitled to. So then I say, so far as these furs are concerned, it is a matter of no consequence whether Bremner was a rebel or loyalist. If the furs were taken in the way indicated, the Government is bound to make compensation for them; it was as Mr. White stated, when there. Mr. White said it made no difference, he told the delegation who waited upon him that it made no difference whether Bremner was a rebel or a loyalist, that having taken the furs the Government was bound to pay for them. What became of the furs? It is not pertinent to this motion to say what has become of the furs, but we do know, I state it here again to-night, that I am prepared to prove that the furs were put up into four boxes and Mr. Hayter Reed writes a letter in which he states that it was written by command of General Middleton, that upon the strength of that letter the four boxes of furs were put up, two of them were addressed to General Middleton, one to Mr. Bedson, the Penitentiary Warden, and the other to Hayter Reed, and that these furs were put upon a boat, and carried by the same boat that carried General Middleton down the river to Winnipeg. I ask any man: Is it difficult to draw a conclusion as to where the furs went? Under these circumstances, is there any hon. gentleman in this House who is not ready to draw his own conclusion from those facts? If that letter was written by command of General Middleton, and those furs were shipped on that boat, is there any doubt at all that they were shipped in accordance with the instructions given by that letter, and that General Middleton got the benefit of the furs? Sir, other half-breeds in that settlement sustained damages, and the Bresaylor claim is only one. If the Government appointed a commission to investigate what took place during that rebellion, the wrongs and the injuries that were perpetrated upon the half-breeds during that rebellion, it would astonish the people of this country. Other half-breeds in that settlement have claims against the Government. They contend that their horses were taken, that their cattle were taken, that their waggons were taken and appropriated, and they say that they, in common with those who have been settled with, are entitled to compensation for the goods and property taken by the Government troops during that time. Their claim is not different from the claim of Mr. Bremner, and I agree with the Minister of Justice that if these men joined in the rebellion and were assistants in their own losses, they are debarred now from coming to Parliament, or any other authority, and asking for compensation. But they say they are willing to let their claims stand upon the test of loyalty or no loyalty, and that unless they are able to prove that they were loyal they will forego their claims against the Government. But they say: We were loyal, and we can prove our loyalty, and we should not be treated in an exceptional way; we should not be treated as we have been, our claims rejected, while the claims of others have been paid who are no more just than our own. Now, let us look for a moment to the position of affairs. I do not charge General Middleton with having taken those furs. I state the facts, and let the House draw its own conclusion. Here we have General Middleton, the commander of the forces in this country, a general in the British army, a man honored by the Queen for the part he took in that so-called rebellion in the North-West, and in addition, a man to whom the people of this country have given $20,000—I say that if he has been guilty of this conduct, if he has been guilty of taking the furs of this unfortunate and wretched man, he has been guilty of an act which, for all time, will cast a dark blot upon his character and reputation. If General Middleton is not guilty of this charge, if it is foundationless, then I say you owe it to General Middleton to have an investigation. You are doing a wrong to him to allow his character to be besmirched for all time by a charge of this kind. It is his duty to demand from you, and it is your duty to him, as the head and commander of the forces of this country, to see that a man against whom such a charge as this is made is either proven to be innocent of the charge, or, if he be guilty, that he cease to occupy the high and distinguished position which he holds in this country. I say that whether General Middleton took these furs or not, I care not; they were taken in possession by the Government and it was a wanton act of spoliation on the part of the Government officials to take those furs and appropriate them to their own use. Unless the Government grant the Committee that has been asked for, they are making themselves a party to this, and I say in justice to all concerned, to the Government, to Mr. Bremner and the other half-breeds, it is the duty of the Government not to refuse the investigation that is asked for by this motion. It may be said, and with some show of reason, that the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall) should have brought this matter up. That hon. gentleman, to my knowledge, has been in this House for four long years, and according to my recollection this matter has been brought up not by him but by other hon. members in this House. As the representative of that constituency, and as a gentleman having peculiarly the charge of the interests of the people of that section of the country, I say unhesitatingly that it was his duty to have brought this matter before the House, and I would have been glad had he done so. But it has been going on these three or four years, and that hon. gentleman has made no movement in the way of bringing the wrongs of his constituents before the attention of this House. What he may have done privately, working under the surface, of course I do not know. There is an underground way between members supporting the Government and the Government itself; perhaps he has been working there, but so far as we have been able to see there has been no work done that we can discover on the part of the hon. gentleman. I ask him to raise his voice to-night in defence of that petition of his portion, the poorest portion of his constituents, those who most require his advice and help at this time, and I ask him to assist me and to use his powerful influence with the Government in asking the Government to yield to the request we make to-night for an investigation of the claims of these unfortunate people. These people appeal to the sense of justice in this House to see that their claims are investigated, and I feel that in asking for this investigation, I am asking for that which is to the interests of those gentlemen charged by those people with having appropriated their furs, it is in the interest of the men charged that this investigation should take place, and we would not be doing justice to the position we occupy in this House did we refuse to appoint the Committee asked for. Its investigation will result in a knowledge of the facts being obtained, and a conclusion reached as to whether they are entitled to compensation or not, and it will also be the means of either clearing General Middleton or of proving his guilt, if he has been guilty of the foul charges which have been made against him.

Mr. MACDOWALL. After the challenge that has been offered to me by the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister), I could scarcely restrain myself until the hon. gentleman had resumed his seat. I have always looked after the interests of my constituents, and I challenge him, or any other hon. gentleman, to point to any occasion when any of those interests have been neglected, whether it was the public interest of the district as a whole, or whether it was the individual interest of any man, however poor, within the district I represent. I do not wish to find special fault with the hon. gentleman for the manner in which he has brought this matter before the House. He had facts laid before him, no doubt, which he considered justified him, as a humane man, in taking action, and far be it from me to find any fault with him for having taken this action. I consider it is the duty of every representative in this House, who considers his country's interests are worthy of attention, to look after the interests of the poor and oppressed, even in a district he does not represent. But the hon. gentleman has been misinformed or mistaken in some particulars. The hon. gentleman has appealed to our French confères in this House for their sympathy, because, he said, these were French half-breeds, who resided a few miles from Battleford. I can correct him on that point, and I tell him that the settlement was called Bresaylor because it was founded by three families of Scotch half-breeds, the Bremners, Sayers and Taylors; they mixed the three names and called it the Bresaylor settlement. These were Scotch half-breeds, and I believe the House will agree with me when I say that, having the blood of Scotch forefathers, that was enough to protect them against improper influences or discouragements. I have very great sympathy for those half-breeds, and indeed for the half-breed race throughout the North-West, because I have learnt in a very peculiar manner their interests. I have recognised that they were the original people of the North-West, who, before the white man came in to take possession, lorded it throughout the whole country. I know they were the princes of that wilderness, that the Indians never dared to meet the half-breeds in battle, and the half-breeds were always the bravest of the brave throughout that country. In the olden days when the country was full of game and they could pursue their sport and make their living by hunting which they learned from their forefathers, they were facile princeps among the people of the country; but nowadays civilisation has come in, the ways of civilised man have come among them, and they find it difficult to make a subsistence. I have seen them in the old days when they were proud men, but to-day they find it difficult to struggle against the effects of civilisation. I maintain, therefore, I am capable of having a just and proper sympathy for those poor people. But, I must say, that in listening to the remarks by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lister), the whole tenor of his remarks appear to be directed against a man for whom I have the very highest respect, General Middleton, and also against Mr. Hayter Reed, whom I believe to be a thoroughly good servant of the Government. I consider that I should be equally wrong if I did not endeavor to maintain the uprightiness and honor of those men in whom I believe, as I would be considered wrong if I did not maintain what I believe to be the just rights of my constituents. The hon. gentleman said, that Mr. Hayter Reed, among others, had taken furs from the Bresaylor settlement, or from the Bremners'. I think he will find it very difficult to prove that those furs were taken. I do not believe Mr. Reed ever took a fur from that settlement, and, I do not believe he ever took one of Charles Bremner's furs; but, at the same time, I quite agree with him that Charles Bremner has a claim against the Government for payment of furs taken from him, supposing that he can prove his loyalty, and that he was not a party to his own loss. I remember well, at the time the rebellion took place, that after the troops returned from Battleford, there never was such a large fur trade driven as was carried on at Prince Albert. There was scarcely a man from any part of Canada who took part in putting down that rebellion who did not, when passing through Prince Albert, have a little bundle of furs to sell to the fur dealers there.

Mr. LISTER. Where did they get them?

Mr. MACDOWALL. That is the question. The hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) says General Middleton took those furs.

Mr. MACDOWALL.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. MACDOWALL. Where did they get them? Probably they got them from Chas. Bremner's stock. I may say that although the hon. gentleman says that I may have been working in an underground course, I believe I have been working in the best interests of my constituents; at all events, I did not work in any underground course, but I simply represented the case to those who had the means and power to relieve it. I represented the case of Chas. Bremner to them, and I got from Chas. Bremner a list of furs he had lost and the claim he puts in. I took this list of furs to various fur dealers here, and I had the list of furs priced, and when this had been done I found the claim was for a very much less sum than was demanded. And I, therefore, in urging his interests, would never exceed the sum which I think justly due to him. Another question occurred, and it is one which the hon. gentleman omitted, and that is, how many furs are usually taken in the district in a year. If you take the returns of the Hudson Bay Company, which is the largest and most powerful fur-trading company within that district, you will find that that company during the winter preceding the rebellion did not claim they had taken as many furs as Chas. Bremner claimed, and it is unreasonable to suppose that an humble trader, who is said to be a poor man, was likely to obtain as many furs as the wealthy Hudson Bay Company, the principal fur-trading company throughout the North-West. This being the case, it would be just to make some reduction from the account that Chas. Bremner has sent in. I think that if that were allowed for, and if the Government would consider the claim of Charles Bremner and place in the Estimates a sum that would cover a fair amount for the loss, it ought to meet the requirements of the case.

An hon. MEMBER. We should find out the thieves.

Mr. MACDOWALL. An hon. member says we should find out the thieves. Well, Sir, I can tell him that there was hardly a single soldier who came down from Battleford who had not some furs to sell when he got to Prince Albert. Does he mean to say that the whole of Canada are thieves? Does he mean to say that the gallant 65th Battalion, and the Queen's Own, and the 90th were thieves? Does he mean to say that the men who went at the call of duty to shed their blood for the country were thieves?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It was you said that.

Mr. MACDOWALL. I said no such a thing.

Mr. LISTER. You said all the soldiers had furs when they came to Prince Albert.

Mr. MACDOWALL. I say it is a fact that the furs were disposed of in that way, but I do not think that the hon. gentlemen have any ground whatever for attacking General Middleton, or Mr. Hayter Reed. I understand that General Middleton has been served with a summons to appear in court to answer this charge. I believe he is an honorable man, and I believe that when he appears in court he will be able to defend himself, and to maintain the honor which he has won, and which he deserves. At one time Mr. Bremner wished to have this question settled, and he believed that I would do what was right and just on his behalf. I do not know whether he now thinks he has had any cause to alter that decision, but I have in my hand a paper which Bremner addressed to James Clinksill, the gentleman already referred to, and it reads as follows :—

“24th Mar'ch, 1889.

“SIR,—I hereby authorise you to telegraph to D. H. Macdowall, M. P., to accept $3,000 in payment of my claim for furs lost during late rebellion,

“I have the honor to be, Sir,
“Your obedient servant,

his “CHARLES x BREMNER.

“Witness : G. H. GIBSON.”

It would, therefore, appear that although Charles Bremner put in a claim for $6,000 for the furs lost, yet he is willing to accept $3,000. I do not know whether this argument should be accepted to show whether his claim is just or not. I believe he had a claim for a certain amount, but I do not believe it amounts to $6,000. I think he could justly claim about $3,500, and I hope that sum will be put in the Estimates. In the remarks which I have made I do not wish it to be understood that I am attacking the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister). It is true that the Bresaylor settlement is within my district, and if the hon. gentleman knew me, he would probably not bring the charge against me, that I am neglecting the interests of my constituents.

Mr. LISTER. I am not bringing any charge against you.

Mr. MACDOWALL. You did. I have not neglected the interests of my constituents whose confidence I possess and whose confidence I still believe I possess, and I think this itself is an evidence of that. Mr. Bremner, however, appears to have been advised otherwise, by whom I know not. I telegraphed to him when I came down this Session to ask him if I should continue to do the best I could for him, and I received the following reply :

“BATTLEFORD, N.W.T., 24th February, 1890.

“D. H. MACDOWALL, M.P., Ottawa.

“Telegram received; claim is now in my solicitor's hands for collection.

“CHARLES BREMNER.”

If he chooses to go to a solicitor, he may, but I do not think he will receive one cent more than his just due, which I believe he would have received if his claim had been left in my hands and submitted to this House. He will doubtless incur much more expense besides, if his solicitor takes the course that has been adopted in this House by the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) and by certain members. Bremner appears to think that he can do more than to take an action to recover his just rights, and that he should also endeavor to blacken the character of a distinguished and an honorable man, who did his duty to Canada when he was called upon, and who, I think, will be able to withstand these charges, and to come out with all the honor which a straightforward and honest man is entitled to.

Mr. WATSON. As I took some interest in the debate on this question, when it was before the House two years ago, and as I have information of some other facts connected with it, I feel it my duty to occupy the attention of the House for a short while in this discussion. The hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall), who has just taken his seat, states that the member who brought this matter in the House made an attempt to blacken the character of an honorable gentleman. The member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) simply asks for a committee to make enquiry, and he stated on his responsibility as a member of this House, that he could prove that the hon. gentleman referred to by the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall), as well as others, had been guilty of possessing themselves furs which did not belong to them. The member for Saskatchewan states that all the soldiers who took part in that rebellion had furs to sell at Prince Albert; and he says that he has no doubt that a great portion of the furs now in question were the furs which these soldiers had to dispose of to the merchants of Prince Albert. The hon. member has not attempted to deny that General Middleton took possession of Mr. Bremner's furs and had them brought into the fort at Battleford. If the General took possession of the furs, how did the volunteers get them, if not by order of General Middleton? It is one of the charges made by the member for Lambton (Mr. Lister), that these furs were dealt out to the General's friends, by the order of the General himself. The member for Saskatchewan also states that he had taken the trouble to examine the list of furs, as presented to the Commission, by Mr. Bremner, and he has gone to all the fur dealers he could find, for the purpose of lessening the claim of one of his constituents.

Mr. MACDOWALL. I must call the hon. gentleman to order. I certainly would never do that. I simply wished to ascertain the real value of the furs; and if the hon. gentleman imputed anything else to me, he is imputing something that is most utterly false.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. WATSON. I do not know that such language should be used on the floor of Parliament, and as a point of order I ask if the hon. gentleman is entitled to use such language?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is not entitled to use that language.

Mr. MACDOWALL. I say if he has imputed any such thing to me, it is utterly false.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Withdraw.

Mr. WATSON. When I was addressing the House before the interruption, I was simply using the language used by the hon. member for Saskatchewan himself. I will repeat what I did state, if he misunderstood me, that he informed the House that he had taken a list of the furs as presented to the commissioners, and had taken it around to the furriers to ascertain their value, with the view of reducing Bremner's claim. Then, he states that Bremner is a poor man. No doubt he is poor, after having lost his furs, and after having been used in the way he has been. The hon. gentleman also speaks of him as a small fur dealer. Well, he had six outposts for the collection of furs, and he probably does as much as the Hudson Bay Company at that point, who trade with the people when they come to the stores of the company. Now, it might be well to put the House in possession of the list of furs for which Bremner claims compensation. The claim he presented to the Commission included the following furs: badger, 21, $16; bear, 54, $540; beaver, 479, $1,916; fisher, 10, $100; fox, silver, 3, $150; do, cross, 6, $30; do, red, 200, $250; lynx, 377, $1,131; marten, 19, $48; mink, 604, $604; muskrat, 1,836, $156; otter, 8, $80; skunk, 239, $179; wolf, 20, $25; wolverine, 35, $140; making a total of $5,365. Besides that, there is a long list of implements and stock which Brenner lost, making his total claim against the Government $19,859. There are other matters which might be brought before this Committee if it is granted. Amongst other things, I am credibly informed and believe that evidence can be produced to prove that horses were taken by the officers, that the officers refused to deliver those horses to their owners, that some of the horses were taken to Toronto and some to Quebec, and that some of those horses can be found to-day in the Quebec Cavalry School. I am also informed that one of the Battleford settlers saw a pair of his ponies driven on the streets of Toronto, and on his enquiry of the man who was driving where they came from, the man informed him that he had purchased them from an officer who had come from the North-West. The hon. member for West Lambton omitted one point with regard to the position of the Bresaylor half-breeds while they were in the custody of Poundmaker. At that time they went to Captain Morris and informed him as to their position as prisoners in Poundmaker's camp, and stated to him that if an attack should be made on Poundmaker's camp, they would on the first opportunity join the loyal forces; but they did not get that opportunity, because their messenger was taken prisoner at Battleford and retained as a spy. The hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall) has not attempted to answer the charges made by the hon. member for West Lambton. That hon. member has stated, and I feel satisfied from information in my possession that, if a Committee is granted, he can prove that furs were shipped to General Middleton, Mr. Hayter Reed and Mr. Bedson. Those furs were taken from the stores at Battleford, and they were packed in four saddle boxes, which, I believe, were about four feet square, and any hon. gentleman who has a knowledge of furs knows that a very large quantity of furs can be packed in a space of four feet square. One of those boxes was addressed to Mr. Hayter Reed, one to Mr. Bedson, at Stony Mountain Penitentiary, and two to General Middleton, and they were brought down on the boat as far as Winnipeg; they were traced that far. In addition to those furs, a large quantity were taken possession of at Batoche, which, I have been informed, by men on the ground, were put on the boat at Prince Albert and brought down to Winnipeg. I am also informed that a large quantity of furs, which were taken at Batoche, were shipped on the Canadian Pacific Railway at Qu'Appelle Station and addressed to General Middleton at Ottawa. The people up there have another claim, which, I think, is a just one; that is, that while many of the rebels who took up arms against the Government have received compensation at the hands of the Government, many men of undoubted loyalty have not been paid for their losses; and one reason to which I attribute that fact is that those poor people had not as much influence as some of the disloyal people had. I am informed that at the time of the outbreak the

Mr. WATSON.

Hudson Bay Company, which had had experience of previous rebellions in the Red River settlement, and which had claims against some of the French half-breeds, took an order on the Government for the amount of their claims, and used their influence with the Commission to get them paid, although the men making them had actually taken up arms against the Government. At the time Poundmaker was taken prisoner, he had pillaged the settlers' houses for miles around, and had taken possession of everything he could find, amongst other things firearms; and in that country almost every man is possessed of a good firearm. Those arms were taken to the stores at Battleford when Poundmaker surrendered. There were 250 stand of arms. I believe a considerable number of them belonged to loyal settlers, whose houses had been pillaged by Poundmaker and his followers. Those arms were stacked in the barracks, at Battleford, and they were given out by order of General Middleton, to friends of his who wished to bring back a trophy or souvenir of the rebellion. Those persons were allowed to go in and select any arm they saw fit; and you can easily understand, that instead of taking an old flint musket, they would select a breach-loader which had probably cost the settler $50 or $100; and the people who owned those arms have not been settled with to this day. Now, I think it is of the utmost importance that a committee of this House should be appointed to investigate these matters. The members of this House should consider whether it is well to allow charges of this kind to be made against the highest military officer of the land, against the warden of a penitentiary, and against an officer who holds a very responsible position in the North-West. I say it is due to these gentlemen that a committee should be appointed so that they may be allowed an opportunity to prove their innocence. I am credibly informed that Major Bedson has in his possession a pool table which had belonged to Batoche; that another pool table which belonged to Gabriel Dumont, is now in Toronto, in the possession of a gentleman who received it as a present from an officer who was in the North-West; also that a number of horses were taken forcibly from the settlers, and that certain officers benefited by the sale of those horses. One instance, I believe, is well known to gentlemen in this House, who were on the ground. One of the Queen's Own, of Toronto, though I will not mention his name, had captured a white horse, a race horse, which belonged to Batoche, and he was riding past on this horse when the General hailed him, and asked him where he got it. He said he got it on the prairies. The General said: "Take that horse up to my camp, and stake it there." Accordingly it was taken to the General's camp and staked there. I understand that it was afterwards put on the boat, and I believe it was brought to Ottawa; and then, as the rumor got about that certain horses had been taken by officers in the North-West, I believe it was sent back with a circus that was going to Winnipeg, and was given to Major Bedson. If these things are true, and I believe they are true, it is only due to these gentlemen, if they are innocent, to give them an opportunity to prove their innocence. For my part, I will not believe them to be innocent until a committee of this House has been appointed and has made a thorough investigation. I have had information from various sources, from men who were on the ground, in regard to the pillaging and the most outrageous conduct which was carried on by officers high in military rank, and which was a disgrace to any civilised country. I hope the Government will allow this committee to be appointed.

Mr. EDGAR. A very large question has been opened up by the remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Watson), which I have no doubt will receive the attention of the House and of the Government on another occasion; but it is not possible, under the motion we are now considering, that we could enter into all these questions which have been mentioned by my hon. friend. My object is to confine myself to a brief consideration of the points which have been raised to-night. A couple of years ago, I brought before the House the questions which have been raised by this motion for a committee. I did not ask for a committee because I thought, when these matters were brought before the attention of the Government, that they would be sufficiently and properly dealt with by the Government. I found that these Breslayor half-breed claims were naturally divided into two classes. There were certain claims for losses during the rebellion, when the goods and chattels of these people were plundered by the Indians. That subject was investigated to a certain extent by the Commission which was appointed to enquire into the rebellion losses in the North-West. I took the trouble, at a great expenditure of time, to look through the evidence taken by that Commission on the subject of these rebellion losses, and I must say that, if I had been in a judicial position as these gentlemen were, I do not think I could have come to the same conclusion as they did upon the evidence. I do not think that I could have believed that these Breslayor half-breeds were rebels; I do not think it was clear at all that they willingly joined Poundmaker's forces; and especially what has occurred since, the evidence which has been given by their neighbors and friends which was not before the Commission at the time, but has been made public since, would absolutely convince me that the Commission was wrong in finding that these men were rebels and were therefore not entitled to compensation for the losses they incurred during the rebellion. Therefore, I am inclined to think that, although there was some evidence upon which the report was founded, still I do not think the commissioners made their report against those half-breeds according to the weight of evidence; and I think, if the Government had looked over that evidence and had considered what has been brought forward since in favor of those people, they ought to accede to a further enquiry being made on that point, and ought to allow those half-breeds to prove their loyalty on that occasion. I think, when British subjects claim that they are loyal and that they can prove it, the least that can be done is to give them full and ample opportunity to do that. I think it is only British fair play to allow them to do so. That is the first portion of the motion of my hon. friend, and I think it ought to prevail on that ground. I do not say that the Commission had no ground for making their report. I do not claim that they had not some evidence to show the disloyalty of this people, but I think they had not enough. Then, coming to the other branch of the case, the question as to these furs of Bremner's, it is clear the rebellion has nothing one way or the other to do with that. Whether these men were rebels or were not, a large quantity of valuable furs were brought into Battleford when Poundmaker surrendered. These furs belonged to Charles Bremner and they were delivered into the custody of the Government, into the custody of the Mounted Police, or whoever was in charge at Battleford after the rebellion. This was in July, 1885, and whether these men were or were not rebels, the Government were trustees for them, or for the country, or for somebody, in regard to these furs. If these men were rebels, and a law had been passed confiscating their goods and property, that would not justify the Government for refusing to account for these furs. In that case they would be the property of the state and should be accounted for. But no one claims that they were confiscated. They were the property of the Bremners, and they or their value should have been returned by the Government, who get them from the Bremners. There can be, therefore, no answer to the claim that restitution should be made to these people. Two years ago the Minister of Justice promised the House that this enquiry should be made. The lamented death of the then Minister of the Interior has, I believe, delayed the progress of the enquiry. But there is no excuse to-day that the Government can possibly make for not having had some enquiry. They may, however, have had an enquiry. I hope they have. I hope we will hear from the Government that they have made an enquiry, and that they have traced up those furs and found where they went, and who got them. If they have not done so, if they cannot explain to the House and the country who got these furs, so that these charges which have been so freely made may be cleared up, then it is undoubtedly our right to have this Committee of enquiry. The hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall), who spoke to-night, referred to charges which have not only been made by the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) but myself two years ago against Gen. Middleton. On that occasion I read a letter which most distinctly and positively implicated General Middleton; and unless General Middleton and his friends have thought fit to press for an enquiry and to give evidence exculpating themselves, General Middleton cannot, nor can the hon. member for Saskatchewan, complain of that accusation hanging over the General's head so long. These poor half-breeds have been kept for nearly five years out of the value of their furs, and we have yet no satisfactory explanation of the reason why. General Middleton has been publicly accused in this House of having taken part of those furs, and no satisfactory explanation has been given to exonerate him, and I think it is high time that we should have a committee to enquire into the matter. I did not bring in General Middleton's name from hearsay, for I would have been exceedingly sorry to do that. I would not have brought a charge against him unless I had the documents placed in my hand on which I based it; and, in case there should be any doubts in the minds of hon. gentlemen as to why I made that charge, I take the liberty of reading again the letter which, two years ago, I read to this House. On the 5th July, 1885, the following letter was received by A. Warden, Quartermaster-Sergeant of Police in Battleford. It was dated Fort Pitt, 4th July, 1885:

"DEAR WARDEN.—General Middleton has instructed and authorised me to send you the present letter, desiring that you put up bales of furs for the undermentioned:—two bales for General Middleton, one for S. L. Bedson, and one for myself.

"Please select the best and pack them at once, as we will be down there to-morrow by boat.

(Sd.) "HAYTER REED,
"Assistant Com. of Indians."

Now, this letter was publicly read in the House by me, and I stated that it had been shown to several parties, that the bales were packed up, and that the furs were chiefly Charles Bremner's; and I have never heard from anybody interested that that letter was not absolutely genuine. In fact, I heard it was absolutely genuine. I hope, therefore, the hon. member for Saskatchewan will understand, if he did not know before, why General Middleton was brought into this matter. I also stated then that on the 6th July the boat arrived with General Middleton on board, that the furs were packed, but that there were not enough, that they got some boxes filled with bear and other choice furs, and that those bales and boxes were sent on by that boat. I am not going into the question of other furs, horses and arms, but will confine myself to the simple point that those furs, which were chiefly Charles Bremner's, were taken out of the custody of the Government by General Middleton, or somebody else, that Bremner never got the value of them since, and that the matter should no longer be allowed to stand, but that the fullest explanation should be given, and the result of the investigation, if any were held, given to this House, and if the investigation held was not most ample and complete, this committee should be granted.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat has very properly called the attention of the House to the fact that the observations made by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) have no relevancy to the question under discussion, in so far as they relate to other charges than those connected with the Bresaylor settlement. We have had the case of the Bresaylor settlers brought to our notice this afternoon, not for the first time, but with more than usual warmth and zeal by the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister). I think that I had reason to complain once before, when the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Edgar) presented this case to the House, that the statements then made were somewhat highly colored. But the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) this evening has been carried away by excessive zeal far beyond what the facts of the case warrant. He has doubtless been misinformed as to some of the particulars connected with this case. He was surely misinformed when he presented this as a case in which enquiry could not fairly be refused—as a case under which a number of humble people in this country were simply asserting the right of petition, and asking that their petition should be heard. He was surely misinformed when he thus put the case to the House. He said that these people have had their claims refused on the ground that they were disloyal, and they are willing, if opportunity be given them, to withdraw their claims, if they are not in a position to prove their loyalty.

Mr. EDGAR.

I say that the hon. gentleman must have been misinformed when he put the case upon these two grounds, for I am able to inform the House that the case has been fully investigated, and that these people have had the same opportunity of proving their claims as every person in that country has had who presented a claim for rebellion losses. Now, Sir, let me call attention to the two divisions into which this claim must be classed. We have, in the first place, the claims of the Bresaylor half-breeds generally, and these claims are in the nature of rebellion losses. I may here remind the House of a fact which is amply known. I am sure everybody who has followed the course of these enquiries knows that persons who suffered losses during the course of the insurrection in the North-West had no legal claim upon the Government or the country for redress, but that it was conceded, as a matter of grace and of liberality, that those persons in that country who had sustained losses by reason of the rebellion, and who were not guilty of complicity in the rebellion, should be indemnified at the public expense. I need not explain how necessary it was that that limit should be made. I need not explain the principle that those people in the North-West who had aided in the rising, had helped to contribute to the losses of others, and must be held to have contributed to their own losses, and must not be deemed to be deserving of the liberality of the Government. What followed the recognition of that principle? The issue of a Royal Commission constituted of Mr. Mackay, Mr. Ouimet—now Judge Ouimet—and Mr. Muma. All the claims presented to them in that wide country were fully investigated, and a large number of those claims were compensated for. The claims of these half-breeds—and I am distinguishing now between the claims of the Bresaylor half-breeds, generally, for rebellion losses, and the claims connected with these furs—were fully investigated; and the result arrived at and reported on by the Commission was that they ought not to be paid, because the claimants had been participants in the rebellion, and had contributed to their own losses, and had contributed likewise to the losses of other people, as I shall presently show. Under these circumstances it was the plain duty of the Commission to report that they came to that conclusion; and yet the hon. member has put the case to the House this evening as a case of humble claimants who have long been denied an investigation and who are now seeking to get it for the first time at the hands of a committee of this House.

Mr. LISTER. I did not.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. member may not have intended to state that the claim had never been investigated before. If he were informed of the fact that those claims had been presented to a Royal Commission and adjudicated upon, I am sure it would be far from him to assert to the House that the claims have never been investigated; but I put it to the House that his argument that these people should have an opportunity of proving their case, and should be allowed to prove their loyalty, implied that they had never had that opportunity. The substance of the evidence that was presented to that Commission, I detailed on the 17th May, 1888, when this matter was brought before the House very forcibly and very fairly by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Edgar), who has spoken this evening. What was the case on which the Commission reported against these half-breed claims? I do not want to weary the House by reading long passages from the Hansard; I will, therefore, trust my memory to repeat it in substance. That Bresaylor settlement, as was stated by the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall) consisted of two classes of people—the Scotch half-breeds and the half-breeds of other races; and when the warning came to these people that they were likely to be molested by Poundmaker's band, that they would probably be despoiled or driven into the enemy's lines, they were urged to go to Battleford, where they could not only secure ample protection for themselves and for their property, but aid in the defence of the other inhabitants of the country. A portion of those settlers complied, and a portion of them went loyally to Battleford in accordance with that summons; they entered into the defence of their country, and the result was that their property was pillaged, burned and destroyed. The remainder of that settlement, the people whose claims are now being pressed for the consideration of a committee of this House, preferred to take the chances of war, they preferred to remain where they were—the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) says, because they had not their horses with them and could not be removed; but I have a letter before me signed by Mr. Remner and by Mr. Sayers, two of the principal claimants, in which they assert, as late as 9th April, 1885, that "they have all their horses and cattle, 300 in number, and intend to remain where they are, and have no fear of molestation from the savages." At a subsequent date they were found in Poundmaker's camp; their houses were not burnt and destroyed, their goods were not pillaged; but when, at the close of the rebellion, peace was restored, they returned to their habitations with long trains of animals loaded with their personal property, and with the personal property of other people, too. Sir, one of the most striking circumstances connected with all this was that they were proved to have accompanied the rebel scouts from time to time, armed and mounted, miles from the camp, those persons who were asserted this afternoon to have come into Poundmaker's camp under terror of the savages; they were found in the capture of loyal prisoners on whom they fired while in pursuit; they captured and seized Government and private property. Some of them, according to their own admission, took part in the battle of Cut Knife Creek, and were fully recognised as firing on the troops at 30 paces distant. They were present in the Indian Council; they followed the trail with the Indians, and among the property which was found was some of the property of loyal officers of the Government who were killed in the attempts to put down that rebellion. Now, Sir, this being the evidence before the Commission, what are we told by the hon. gentlemen who are supporting this motion? We are told by the hon. member for Ontario who has spoken to-night—candidly admitting that there was evidence on which the Commission had come to that conclusion—we were told that if he had sat on judgment on the evidence, scrutinising it as he has no doubt done, he would have found difficulty in coming to the same conclusion. That may be so; it may be that I might have found difficulty in coming to that conclusion too. But we were not the judges, and they were. They saw the witnesses, they were in the North-West, they knew all the circumstances connected with that investigation a great deal better than we do. Surely their integrity, their fairness, their liberality in dealing with these claims, have never to this hour been impugned; and we have reason to believe, from the cases we have revised, that they were most liberal and generous in dealing with these rebellion losses. But, Sir, the curious circumstance is this, that while that case has remained upon record, doubtful as one member or another may consider it to be, but stamped with the decision of these commissioners, the half-breed claimants of Bresaylor, although they have never ceased to press their claims upon a committee of the House, have never presented to the Government, or to the Department of the Interior, one tittle of evidence that had not been presented to these commissioners, or have asserted that there was a tittle of other evidence that could be produced before a committee of this House. Now, what is the obvious conclusion to be drawn from this? The obvious conclusion is this, that the investigation which was made by the commissioners was a thorough investigation, and I submit it to the House, as a fair presentation of the case upon which this motion stands for an investigation for the claims of the Bresaylor half-breeds, and I think this motion ought not to be granted by the House unless some evidence is upon the Table, unless some evidence can be produced by the hon. gentleman who introduced the motion, to show that that investigation was not a thorough one, to show that it was not a fair investigation, to show that new evidence has come to the knowledge of hon. gentlemen, or to show some reason for re-opening that investigation, which must be assumed to be fair, and which ought otherwise to be considered closed. The hon. gentleman, it is true, has brought to the notice of the House this afternoon a petition in favor of these claims by two gentlemen, one of them Mr. Clinkskill, and another whose name I forget, and that petition asserted that the claimants can prove their innocence. A great many other assertions are made, but it is obvious that these gentlemen know nothing more of the facts connected with the claim than we know ourselves. They presented their petition as that of the officers of an agricultural society in the North-West; they are very desirous, from motives of kindness and sympathy, no doubt, that this claim should be paid; but they do not profess to have any knowledge whatever of a single fact which was not before the commission which made the enquiry, and they do not pretend there is any evidence forthcoming in support of the claims, that was not presented to that commission. I say, therefore, to the House that it is to be regretted that those who claim to re-open an investigation, judicially conducted by fair and honorable men, on which a report was made two or three years ago, and before we are asked to open it all up again, it ought to be shown that some new evidence can be adduced. I do not hesitate to recognise the fairness of the argument presented by the other side thus far, that the claim ought to be re-opened, and the Government I am sure will re-open it when they can present to the Government or to the Department of the Interior any evidence to show that the conclusion was wrong, or that something has transpired since the investigation closed. Until they have done that, I think no case has been made out on which this House ought to grant a committee. Coming to the other branch of the case, the question as to these furs, I agree perfectly with what was said a few months ago, that it stands in an entirely different position. It has nothing to do with the rebellion, it has nothing to do with the rebellion losses, it stands on a different principle. This claim is made by Bremner as the owner of a large quantity of furs, which he alleges he put in the custody of the Government officers after the rebellion closed. The question does not, therefore, stand on the footing of rebellion losses; nor is it, I conceive, in any way affected by the question as to whether Bremner was participating in the rebellion or not. If the rebellion had then closed, before we could confiscate or lay our hands on his property we had to convict him of felony, and after conviction, if his goods were forfeited, they would be forfeited to the Crown and not to any military or civil officer. That being so, I realised the fact, in 1888, when, in consequence of the death of the late lamented Minister of the Interior, which had taken place a few weeks before I was called on to speak to this question, on a memorandum handed to me from one of the officers of the Department of the Interior, I realised that fact distinctly, and I was aware, from personal intercourse with the late Minister of the Interior, that he had made enquiry into Bremner's claim, and was desirous of pursuing it further at the time of his death. I informed the House that the enquiry would be proceeded with further. It was proceeded with further. We obtained all the information we could secure in regard to the question, and it was only last summer that we were able to ascertain, assisted by the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall), what the probable value of the furs was that had been deposited by Bremner in the custody of the Government officers. The claim had varied all along from $7,000 down to $3,000, and, as the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall) has said, the nearest approach we could obtain was that the furs would be probably worth $3,000. As to the circumstances under which those furs were taken, as to how many of them were taken, and into whose possession they came, the House will understand from what my hon. friend has said, that it was very difficult to arrive at a conclusion; and the Government was unable to pay the claim at that time, because it had no vote of Parliament at its disposal from which the money could be paid. The matter, therefore, had to stand until Parliament met, and the question which was before the Government when this motion was made, and which is before it still, is whether the actual value of the furs which were deposited by Bremner should be provided for in the Supplementary Estimates to be submitted for the consideration of this House. A preliminary question had to be considered in dealing with that one, and that preliminary question was this: Whether we should pursue the enquiry for the purpose of ascertaining what persons should contribute to the loss or whether we should leave Mr. Bremner to his remedy at law against the persons and the officers who have been named to-night, who, Mr. Bremner says, were guilty of having taken his property. While that question was under consideration, and it has not been deecided yet, for the simple reason that the Government has not yet come to a conclusion as to the Supplementary Estimates which are to be submitted to Parliament this Session, Bremner made his choice, and within the last few days, he has preferred, instead of pressing his claim against the Government, to bring a suit at law against those parties who have so deprived him of his property. For my own part I am inclined to think that Bremner was not well advised in that respect. He might, perhaps, have been better advised if he had chosen to press his claim on the liberality of the Government, and have asked the Government to make good his damage, not only for the amount which he may have been able to prove he lost by the acts of the particular officers, but likewise for the value of the furs which were lost through negligent keeping, the end of which was the dissipation of the property in the way described by the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall). But within the last few days, perhaps advised in consequence of circumstances of which I am not aware, Bremner has chosen to bring his action against those officers. If the claim should be recognised by the Government and be presented to this House for payment of the actual value of the furs which he left with the officers of the Government, it would no doubt be the duty of the Government, and their duty in the interests of those officers themselves, to cause a strict enquiry to be made on the statements which has been presented to the House this afternoon as to the treatment of Bremner's property by officers of the Government. If, on the other hand, it should be considered proper that he should be allowed to take the course which he has preferred to take, of bringing his action against the officers themselves, in the course of the trial all the facts will transpire, all the evidence will be laid before the court, accompanied as it will be for the first time, so far as the public is concerned, by the answers which those officers have to give in their own defence, and it will be for the Government and the House to consider, at a subsequent period, whether, if Bremner should not recover the full amount properly due, it may not be proper to supplement any sum he may have recovered, for the purpose of making good his entire loss at the actual value of the furs. But, under these circumstances, careful enquiry, pursued to the fullest extent, with the assistance of the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall), without whose assistance I must say it would have been exceedingly difficult to conduct it, showed the value of the property. With all the facts placed in the hands of the Government, and the Government not denying justice to Mr. Bremner, but willing to consider the matter favorably and fairly, I think the case is not one which the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) would have been disposed to press to a division this afternoon, if, at the outset, he had been fully aware of the circumstances I have intimated. It is not my duty, and it is certainly not my inclination to make here any defence of the officers whose conduct has been impugned. Enough has been said to put them on their defence; and as I assume them to be men of honor, who value their reputation in this country, I leave them to make their defence for themselves. I have said enough to show that no enquiry is necessary by the House, because the facts have been fully investigated. In so far as the settlers' claims are concerned an investigation by the House ought not to take place, and the Government should not be required to make further investigation unless some further subjects for investigation beyond those already investigated be revealed; and as regards claims for the furs, the Government is in possession of all the facts with respect to the disposal of the property in the hands of officers of the Government, and also with regard to the actual value of the property disposed of, and the question remains before it whether that matter should be brought to the attention of the House at a later period of the Session, or, whether in consequence of what Bremner himself has done within the last few days it may not be better in the public interest, in his own interest and in the interests of those officers whose conduct is impugned, to allow the matter to go to the legal tribunals of the country for investigation.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister), in view of the declaration just made by the Minister of Justice, has every reason to be satisfied with the result of the motion which he has to-day submitted to the House. This is not a new question, but it is one which has been brought on on one or two occasions to the attention of the House, and at last we have the admission by the Government of the fact, which has been affirmed time and time again on this side of the House, that Charles Bremner had been despoiled of his property. This is a fact which has long been an issue between the two sides of the House, and at last we have it admitted. I am of the same opinion as the Minister of Justice that Charles Bremner would have better consulted his own interests if, instead of taking legal proceedings, as he is alleged to have recently commenced, against the parties who are said to have appropriated his property, he had continued to hold the Government liable, because, undoubtedly, if this man has been despoiled of his property by the officer commanding the troops at the time they were in the North-West Territories, who, at that time, was holding a high position under the Government, undoubtedly the Government and the people of Canada are responsible to Bremner for the losses incurred. He would no doubt have served his interests better if he had continued to ask his remedy, not in a private way, as he has now done, but in a public manner, as he had done before. But the fact that this man has sought to obtain in the courts a private remedy for the injury done him, does not in any way alter the other fact, that the people of Canada are interested to know what may be true about this matter, and whether or not the complaint of Charles Bremner is as he states it, because there has been committed not only a private offence, but a public offence as well. Charles Bremner, as we are now told by the hon. Minister of Justice, is seeking his remedy for the private offence which he has suffered, but the people of Canada, I submit, have a duty to perform, to see whether or not there has been such a public offence committed as is now stated has been committed.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is not the motion.

Mr. LAURIER. The motion requires that there should be a committee to investigate.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. To investigate a trial?

Mr. LAURIER. The investigation is asked as to whether a public offence has been committed, and that is why a committee should be granted. A great wrong is alleged to have been perpetrated by an officer of our army, discharging a great public duty, and I submit to the fairness and to the spirit of justice and equity of every man, that if there has been such a wrong perpetrated, it is the duty of the people of Canada to see that this man, poor as he is, should be indemnified not only by the court, but out of the exchequer of the country. Since the facts are these, and in view of the admission made by the Minister of Justice, that indeed this man was despoiled of his property, I see all the more reason at this moment, to prosecute the enquiry which is demanded by my hon. friend; to see who are the guilty parties; to see who are those who have prostituted their uniform, and brought shame to the British name in this manner, and further to see that when they are known, they shall be dealt with as they deserve. Canada has not been sparing, nor stingy in the distribution of rewards to those who have quelled the rebellion, but I submit, that, on the other hand, Canada should also see that justice should be done against any offender whoever he be, great or small. Now this disposes in my opinion of the second branch of the case. The other branch which refers to the claim of the Breslayor half-breeds, is of a little more difficult nature. That these half-breeds have suffered in the rebellion, and in consequence of the rebellion, and that they have lost property, is out of the question and cannot be doubted. That they have made a claim, and that their claim has been rejected for no reason, than that it is alleged that they were rebels, and had been participating in the rebellion, is also certain, and, of course, if they had been participants in the rebellion, they had no claim upon the mercy or upon the justice of this Government. I do not admit altogether the principle laid down by the Minister of Justice, a moment ago, that in settling for the losses sustained by the people of the North-West, in consequence of the rebellion, the Government was not discharging a principle of duty, but simply exercising an act of grace. I do not admit that principle. It was more than an act of grace; it was, I think, a principle of abstract justice that if, in consequence of the rebellion, any subject of Her Majesty had lost anything, the people of Canada should make that loss good to him. We have precedents of a celebrated nature among us to confirm this opinion which I now express. The Government, in sending a commission to the North-West, to investigate the claims and determine the losses of those who had suffered, was not, therefore, exercising an act of grace, but simply exercising a duty which devolved upon them. It is said that these men who presented their claims to the commissioners and whose claims were refused, were so refused because they had been participants in the rebellion. That may be or it may not be the case; but to some extent the evidence is against them. There is the fact against them, that notice had been given to the half-breeds in that settlement, and some of them had withdrawn to Battleford, and others remained. Those who withdrew to Battleford, as the hon. Minister of Justice has stated, had their property pillaged, and they were indemnified by the Government. Those who remained, also lost their property, and it was natural, perhaps, under such circumstances, that they stayed at home, to protect their property. Most certainly, in my opinion, no imputation can be made against them, because they chose to remain to defend their homes. That, however, is the only imputation that can be made against them. Be this as it may, they made their claims and their claims were rejected by the commission. The Minister of Justice says that the judgment of the commission upon this point must be final and cannot be re-opened again. I am happy to say that I have no reason to believe, nor do I for one moment believe, that the commission did not do justice to the best of their conscience and judgment. I have no reason at all to impugn the conclusions at which they arrived; but because they have discharged their duties fully, and to the best of their intelligence and conscience, surely the Minister of Justice will not presume to affirm that the verdict which they gave was the only verdict which might have been arrived at. He will surely not affirm that they did not make any error when it is possible that they may have made an error, nor is it extraordinary that judicial investigation should not satisfy a litigant, and that he should claim to be heard a second time in his defence. That is not anything extraordinary, it is a matter of daily occurrence. In this present matter, the half-breeds, who have been stigmatised with the stigma of rebellion, come before this Parliament and ask to disprove the charge made against them. They ask to be given another hearing; they say they are able to prove, and to justify their pretension that they were loyal, that they were the victims of fatal circumstances, and that they did not participate in the rebellion. Under such circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I put this question to the fairness of every member of this House: Is there a man in this House, at this moment who is disposed to refuse to these people the privilege which they ask of proving their innocence? Is there a man who is disposed to act with severity against them and to say: "No; they have been heard once, they shall not be heard once again." It seems to me that that would neither be justice nor fairness. Such a conclusion must be repugnant to the sense of right of any man. When people in such condition—especially, poor people, the victims of recent losses, uneducated, possibly unable to defend their own rights, probably unable to present their own case as it might have been presented—have been the victims—because in my judgment they were the victims of circumstances—and are stamped with the stamp of rebellion against them; when such people come before Parliament and ask justice, should not justice be quickly rendered them? This is the time to give these poor people an act of grace, and that is an act of grace which they ask of the Parliament of Canada. It may not be strict justice, but it is an act of grace when they ask to have the privilege of disproving the charge brought against them, and confirming their innocence. It seems to me that in a sense of right and in a sense of fair play, there should be no objection to give them the privilege they claim, of affirming their innocence, and that is all they ask at this moment. At all events, the committee should be granted, for the first reason I have stated, to investigate the charges of Charles Bremner, and to enquire into the public offence which was done against him on that occasion; and also to afford to the half-breeds of Bresaylor the opportunity of proving their innocence and enjoying all the results to which their innocence may entitle them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, Mr. Speaker, a commission was appointed to enquire into the claims of these Bresaylor half-breeds. The hon. gentleman does not deny that it was a fair commission. At the head of it was Mr. McKay, one of themselves, a well-known man, who stands very high among the half-breed people of the North-West, I suppose as high as any one there; the other commissioners were Mr. Ouimet, a man of equally high character, and Mr. Muma, whom we all know as a trusted appraiser and arbitrator in all Government matters. They went to the spot, heard all the evidence, gave every opportunity to parties to prove their claims, and decided against these men; and now the hon. gentleman asks that we should set aside their judgment, and have a committee sitting down here in a committee room, when every man who has a claim will come down here and press it. Are we going to have a re-trial, under circumstances which are certain to be unfavorable to getting a correct judgment? There is no reason to suppose that these three men have not given a good judgment. They were carefully selected by the Government; their very names show that the Government took every care to get men who would be without any prejudice at all, who would be rather favorable to the claims than otherwise; and that that judgment should be set aside, and this matter brought down here and made a football for political parties to fight about in this House is, I think, abhorrent to the idea of fair and impartial justice. That is my opinion. Then, the hon. gentleman speaks about this case of Mr. Bremner. As regards that, the Government have no desire to protect any person who has injured Mr. Bremner; it is not their interest, nor is it their wish to do so. Mr. Bremner has taken his own course; he has brought his action before the court, and will be able to present his case on oath there; and if he establishes his case he will not only get a judgment for any losses he may have sustained, but the evidence will enable the Government to deal with any parties in the employment of the Government who have acted improperly, and who may be deserving of censure at the hands of the Government of Canada. There is no case or ground for this committee. It will be, as I have said, simply a political committee obtained for the purpose of making some little political capital out of the matter. I say that the commission was a fair one; it was well selected; the evidence was taken on the spot; every man who had a claim had an opportunity of proving his claim; judgment was rendered against these men upon the evidence; and this attempt to re-open the case is, I think, most unfortunate, most unjust, and ought to be resisted. As regards Mr. Bremner, he has taken his own course, and, I think, he must be governed by it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am rather surprised at the position taken by the hon. First Minister with reference to this case, at this period. The hon. gentleman will remember that I brought Mr. Bremner's case to the attention of the House early in 1887, and the Government have had from that day to this to enquire into this claim. The House is aware that Mr. Bremner was committed to prison as a participant in the rebellion. It was open to the Government to establish his guilt on that occasion. The Government, however, came to the conclusion that there was not evidence to convict him, and he was discharged without a trial. Under these circumstances it would have been an extraordinary proceeding for the Government to authorise a commission to enquire into the loyalty of Mr. Bremner's conduct. The House will remember very well two very important historical cases in this country in which indemnity was given to parties who had sustained losses in rebellions. In one case indemnity was paid by a government of which the hon. Premier was a member, and in the other by a government which he very strenuously opposed, but both governments acted on the same principle. They authorised a commission to enquire into the character of the losses, and instructed the commission to be governed in every case by the decision of the courts with reference to the guilt or innocence of the parties. In cases where no legal proceedings had been taken against the parties and no guilt or innocence had been established, the commission was not to enquire into the guilt or innocence of the claimants; their duty was simply to enquire into the character and extent of the losses sustained. I have not looked at the instructions given to this commission, but I apprehend that they would not differ from the instructions given in the two preceding cases, and that the commission would have no authority to act as a court of justice for the purpose of establishing the guilt or innocence of the parties making claims. Now, the hon. Minister of Justice has undertaken to draw a distinction, which in one respect is well founded, between losses sustained during or preceding hostilities, and losses sustained subsequent to hostilities. It is a well established rule that it was not open to any officials of the Government to destroy or use any property existing after the rebellion was put an end to; but it was their duty to protect it and to see that it again went into the possession of the legal owners. Now, so far as the furs in question are concerned, it is stated that they were put into the hands of the North-West Mounted Police. I have a short memorandum which I made in 1886, a year after these losses were sustained, from information given to me at the time by a merchant at Winnipeg, a Mr. Macdonald, and by his factor who resided at Battleford, and who stated what was within their own personal knowledge. And the statement was that the furs were taken by order of Gen. Middleton, and placed in the stores of the Mounted Police at Battleford, that they remained there until after the surrender of Poundmaker, until Gen. Middleton returned from Fort Pitt, that they were placed in the charge of one Stephen Warden, who was the Quartermaster of the Mounted Police, that he was ordered to place them in the charge of Mr. Hayter Reed for the purpose of shipment, that they were shipped in boxes in which saddles had been sent to the North-West, that two of the boxes were marked as the property of Gen. Middleton, that one was marked as the property of Mr. Bedson, and one as the property of Mr. Hayter Reed. Now, here was an appropriation by officers of the Government of property which belonged to another party. The question whether Mr. Bremner was guilty or innocent of being a participator in the rebellion is wholly without the question. That is not a question of any importance in this matter. Mr. Bremner may have been a participator in the rebellion. He denies that, and his friends deny it, and his friends say he could establish his innocence if the evidence had been received, but that the evidence he submitted to the commission in this matter was not taken, that the witnesses were not examined, and that he is prepared to produce those witnesses before the committee and establish his innocence, if it is a matter of importance that he should do so in order to acquire possession of his property. But there were other properties existing after the rebellion was over which were appropriated to the use of the Government—cattle, horses, &c.—and it seems to me that he has a legal claim to these also, whether he was guilty or innocent, so far as the rebellion is concerned. The First Minister assents to that proposition. I think it is too well established to admit of question. With regard to these furs, what right had General Middleton to them? He was there for the purpose of protecting property and life, and not for the purpose of robbing any one of property which he owned, and confiscating to his own use such property. That was not his mission; he was not there for services of that sort. It was not for services of that sort that this House voted to him $20,000 in addition to the amount he was receiving from the Government as a commissioned officer. Well, that property was taken. Those parties say it was taken; they say it was appropriated by these three individuals; they say they are ready, if a committee be granted, to establish that proposition. I mentioned this matter in the beginning of 1887, and the Government promised to investigate it. Have they investigated it? Have they ascertained whether General Middleton took any of this property or not? Have they instituted any enquiry? What steps have been taken for the purpose of bringing these parties to justice? For it was as much the duty of the Government to enquire into the misconduct of those whose duty it was to protect life and property, as it was to enquire into the extent or character of the losses which were sustained. Now, this is the question we ask, and there is no tribunal in the world more appropriate to enquire into the matter than a committee of this House. Who are these officers against whom these charges are made? Are they not officers paid by the people of Canada? Is not the money they receive yearly for their services money which was appropriated by this House for the purpose of paying them for these services? I would like to know who has a better right than this House to enquire into their conduct or misconduct, and what more appropriate way there is of making that enquiry than by the appointing of a committee for that purpose? The right hon. the First Minister and the hon. the Minister of Justice will observe that this resolution is not confined to enquiry with reference to the losses sustained by Mr. Bremner or to losses sustained by other half-breeds of the Bresaylor settlement. The motion is this:

“That a select committee be appointed to enquire into the claims of the Bresaylor half-breeds for losses sustained owing to the rebellion in the North-West, and also with reference to the furs taken from Charles Bremner.”

In that enquiry it will be very important to know by whom and how they came to be taken. It is not merely an enquiry for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of Mr. Bremner's losses, but it is also to ascertain how those losses were sustained and through whose agency. Why, the right hon. the First Minister and the hon. the Minister of Justice are as much interested—in fact, ought to be more interested—than we, on this side of the House, to ascertain how those losses were brought about. There is no doubt that the property was placed in the care of the North-West Mounted Police, that that care was not properly taken, that the property was taken out of the custody of the police, and that it was appropriated by somebody; and it could only be appropriated by officers connected with the public service, or by persons who succeeded in conquering and taking possession of the property. Had there been any hostile possession?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is there any evidence that the North-West Police Force, or any military force at Battleford, were compelled to retire, and that the property in their possession was taken by the enemy? Every person knows that is not the case, but that, on the contrary, the property was put in the possession of men who were masters of the situation from the time they got it until peace was restored, and that although that property was put in their possession it has never been accounted for. Mr. Bremner has sustained the loss and at the hands of the officers of the Government of this country. There is no doubt about that. The right hon. the First Minister says that Mr. Bremner ought to be left now to his remedy in the courts. I do not think he should. If Mr. Bremner has sustained the loss by private parties, and we did not know how that loss was sustained, I say that then that proposition might be a reasonable one; but this property was put in the hands of the Government officers, who remained masters of the situation, and it is not forthcoming. It does seem to me that, under these circumstances, it is the duty of the Government and this House to ascertain the amount of the loss, so far as those furs are concerned, and to take proper steps against the parties through whom the loss was sustained. It is upon them the burden should fall, and not on Mr. Bremner. We have this further question: Do the Government want to screen those parties against whom those charges are made? Have they any special interest in the matter?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Not the slightest.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The right hon. the First Minister says, not the slightest. I have no disposition to charge that they have; but I say it is very important now that the First Minister and his colleagues should make that point perfectly clear, and they can do so by granting this committee, and furthering this enquiry, at all events so far as those men are concerned. Give them an opportunity of establishing their innocence, or give those who make the complaint an opportunity of establishing the guilt of those complained against; and if their guilt be established, let the Government take proceedings against them for the purpose of making them pay for what they have improperly taken, and dismiss them from the public service. That would be a perfectly straightforward, honest, common-sense proceeding. That is a proceeding which the country can stand, and it will have a very wholesome effect upon the public service when it is known that those who were employed to protect life and property are compelled to discharge that duty efficiently and honestly, and will not be allowed to appropriate the property of others to their own use.

Mr. DAVIN. The speech made by my hon. friend from Bothwell is a speech which would be suitable to support a different motion from this. This motion asks for an enquiry into the losses sustained by certain half-breeds, and also with reference to furs taken from Charles Bremner, a half-breed residing at Battleford. It would be a very important thing to know whether those half-breeds ever asked for an enquiry. I believe as a fact they have never asked for that enquiry, and that my hon. friend from West Lambton (Mr. Lister), comes forward gratuitously to ask for an enquiry on behalf of people who never said they were aggrieved.

Mr. LISTER. That is not so. I am asked to make this enquiry.

Mr. DAVIN. By whom?

Mr. LISTER. By Mr. Bremner.

Mr. DAVIN. There are two parts in this resolution. The first alludes to the half-breeds generally, and the second to Mr. Bremner. I am not dealing with Mr. Bremner. I am simply dealing with the Bresaylor half-breeds. I repeat that the hon. gentleman has not been asked by them to propose this motion, and he comes forward to demand an enquiry into their losses gratuitously. What the Prime Minister said is quite cogent, that to appoint such a committee would be to appoint a fishing committee in order to get something up for political purposes. The speeches of my hon. friend the member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) and my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition were couched in that logical form and embellished with that charm of language which always distinguish those hon. members, but they would have been more to the point if they were supporting a wholly different resolution from that which is before the House. The leader of the Opposition asked for an enquiry into the conduct of men who had "prostituted their uniforms," and the member for Bothwell demanded the same thing. But, if my hon. friend from Lambton (Mr. Lister) who is a distinguished lawyer wanted an enquiry into these men's conduct, he should have put it on the paper, and should not have asked us to support a motion in one set of words, and then, with those who support him, stand up and speak in a sense which would support a wholly different resolution. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) does not seem to see the point of the Prime Minister's remark that Mr. Bremner had gone before the court. If Mr. Bremner has gone before the court, Sir Frederick Middleton and Mr. Hayter Reed will be defendants in that court, and, as these hon. gentlemen are so anxious to have an enquiry into the conduct of these gentlemen, it would not be right to do anything unfair to them, or to prejudice their case, as any action taken by the Government now would do, especially after the speeches which have been made, in which charges of a very grave character have been preferred against Sir Frederick Middleton and Mr. Hayter Reed. I consider that hon.

gentlemen have taken up a very illogical position here to-night, one which they cannot justify.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Yes.

Mr. DAVIN. Their course cannot be defended before the country. You cannot say that Mr. Bremner can eat his cake and have it. He cannot go before the courts and remain in the same position as he was before. The hon. and learned gentleman the Minister of Justice has made a plain and unvarnished statement of the case. He has shown that the Government had it before them, and my hon. friend from Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall) showed that he was pressing it upon the Government and that they were considering it. Coming from the North-West, I may say that half-breeds and others who have any claim upon the Government never lessen their claim, and it would be simply traitorous on the part of the Government to at once jump at a sum named by Mr. Bremner and give him that amount. Every one in this House and every one in the North-West knows that my hon. friend who represents the Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall) represents it with great benefit to the Saskatchewan, with great credit to himself and with pleasant associations in this House, because, however strongly he may press his claim upon the Government and upon the House and however strong may be the stand he takes, it is always taken with the demeanor of a gentleman and the charm of a kindly nature. My hon. friend said he had gone around to price furs; he had got a list of furs and had priced them in order to ascertain what was the exact claim that Bremner could have. He read a letter which showed that Bremner was willing to take $3,000. If that is so, from what I know of the North-West it is morally certain that that was the butt and sea-mark of the utmost sail that justice could take. If Bremner made his first claim lower than he should, he stands unique amongst half-breeds, and I must say he stands unique amongst North-West men. My hon. friend from the Saskatchewan, after making his enquiries, came to the conclusion that Bremner was entitled to $3,500. He was then in a position to go to the Government, and press Bremner's claim, and I re-echo the statement of the leader of the Opposition that Bremner's wisest course would have been to have left the matter in the energetic hands of my hon. friend from the Saskatchewan. But my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Watson) tried to show that my friend from the Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall) went round to these places in order to lessen the amount of Bremner's claim. Now, it is evident that my hon. friend took that course with a view to fairness and justice. It would be monstrous that any member of Parliament should urge a claim on behalf of any of his constituents which was greater than they were justly entitled to. My hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Watson)—of course unconsciously—misrepresented the position of my hon. friend from Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall). I cannot vote for the motion which is before us—because I learn that, if Bremner had not taken the course he has, and even though he has taken that course, the Government will do justice in this matter. They have enquired into it. They have all the knowledge which is necessary to enable them to come to a just conclusion upon it, and, therefore, I cannot vote for the second part of the resolution. As to the first part of the resolution you ask the half-breeds who have never themselves asked for an enquiry, to come down here and then do—what? I suppose they are to state under oath that they were never engaged in the rebellion. Suppose that men were engaged in an act of treason, suppose they were engaged in committing one of the gravest crimes known to the law, according to any knowledge we have of evidence, what weight could be placed upon their testimony, and what sort of testimony would they bring in their favor if they did not give testimony themselves? They would bring other half-breeds who would be in the same suspicious circumstances as themselves. I know Thomas McKay and some of the other members of the commission. I have often talked with Thomas McKay in the North-West and I know that, instead of leaning towards the Government, he had the greatest possible leaning in the other direction. He had the greatest possible sympathy with these people, and I am sure that, if Thomas McKay put his name to a report and did not give a half-breed—and especially a Scotch half-breed—what he claimed, it was because he could not conscientiously do it.

Mr. CASEY. My hon. friend who has just sat down has not added a great deal of light to the subject, nor did the right hon. Premier, because he only passed over part of the ground that had been previously travelled over by the Minister of Justice in a thorough and able manner. Still, I must dissent strongly from most of the conclusions that that hon. Minister drew. In the first place, as to the general claims of the Bresaylor settlers—he says that they did not prove their loyalty before the commission. Now, my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has shown by precedents, one, at least, in which the right hon. Premier is personally implicated as having been a member of the Government who set that precedent—that it is not usual to authorise any commission to enquire into the loyalty or disloyalty of people who make claims. On the face of it, it would be outrageous to do so. When a man is to be tried for treason, he must be tried before a competent tribunal accustomed to taking evidence, accustomed to sifting evidence, and before which counsel is heard for the accused as well as for the Crown. That is the only tribunal which can legally or properly decide that a man was disloyal in any case of this kind. These men had no authority whatever to decide that this or that man was loyal or disloyal; they were directed, no doubt, not to give compensation to disloyal half-breeds, but I do not think there was anything in the commission or if there was it certainly should not have been in it, it was utterly unconstitutional that there should be anything in the commission, to authorise them to decide, on evidence brought before themselves, whether a man had been disloyal or not. To authorise the commission to do that was to take away all the safeguards for a man's character, though, of course, it could not affect his life or property at that time on account of the amnesty; but it took away every legal safeguard, and those poor half-breeds have just as good a right to the protection of their character as the Minister of Justice or General Middleton, whose character has been attacked in this connection. Each one has as good a right as the other to protection from the imputation of disloyalty. However, granting for a moment the ungrantable, admitting that which cannot be admitted, that this commission had some authority to enquire into the loyalty of these half-breeds, it does not at all follow that they had a fair trial before that commission. The commission may have meant to do all that was fair, but after hearing a few half-breeds, quite ignorant of legal proceedings, not knowing how to present their case, without counsel to enable them to present it, it does not follow that with the best intention on the part of the commission, the case was fairly stated before them, that everything possible was advanced in favor of the loyalty of these half-breeds. The fact remains that the Government have assumed on the report of this commission, that the men were disloyal, though, as the member for Bothwell has pointed out, the Government were not able to prove, and did not attempt to prove, that Mr. Bremner was disloyal when they had him in their custody, and could have brought him before the court. Nevertheless, they have overridden their own action in that matter, by accepting the report of the commission, and now they say that the matter must not be reopened. The Minister of Justice says, if there is any new evidence offered he will reopen it; but he says, no evidence is offered. Why, Sir, in the petition laid before the House, these men said that they could bring new evidence. You do not expect they will put all their evidence in the petition, that is not the place to put their evidence. They ask for a tribunal before which they can produce evidence to show their loyalty, they say they are now in a position to prove it. That, I think, is a very good reason for asking for a committee in regard to that part of the case. But as regards the looting of the furs, the stealing of the furs, I think there is no doubt the committee should be appointed. The Government admit that they have discovered, at last, that the furs were taken by somebody—they say it is difficult to find out by whom, or what they were worth. I think that there would not be much difficulty in finding out by whom they were taken. It has been a matter of public notoriety, and not denied since the year 1886, that they came into the possession, at all events, of the three parties named, Sir Frederick Middleton, Mr. Hayter Reed and Mr. Bedson, Warden of the Manitoba Penitentiary. This has been asserted in the press and in the House, time and again, for four or five years back, and never denied by anybody. Yet the Minister of Justice says there is a difficulty in finding out by whom they were taken. Sir, they have had plenty of time to find out. I moved a resolution in this House in 1886, calling for a return relating to those furs, and a return of the ponies, cattle of all sorts and other property belonging to the half-breeds, disloyal or otherwise, that had come into the hands of the expeditionary force, for an account of what became of them, whether they had been sold and the proceeds returned to the Government, or what had been done. In answer to that order of the House I got one sheet of foolscap containing an order from General Middleton to some parties at Edmonton, I think, in regard to the furs stored there. They absolutely refused to give any information about it at the time, although they must have had information, as it was the year after the rebellion. If they had no information in their hands then as to the disposal of this property, they must, at least, have had the means of getting it, and they have refused to produce it from that day to this. It appears to be only now, within the last year, according to the statement of the Minister of Justice, that they have taken steps to make enquiries about the matter. My hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) thinks that Mr. Bremner is greatly mistaken in taking this case out of the hands, out of the energetic hands, of my hon. friend from Saskatchewan, (Mr. Macdowall). Well, I am inclined to agree with him as to Mr. Bremner's course, but I can hardly agree with the epithet used by my hon. friend from Assiniboia, hardly agree that the energy displayed by the member from Saskatchewan in pressing this claim was such as to justify Mr. Bremner in leaving the case entirely in his hands. I cannot admit, either, that the action of the Government in postponing the investigation of this matter for more than four years, was such as to impress Mr. Bremner and the half-breeds generally at Bressaylor, with the idea that they were going to get prompt and sufficient justice in the case. I am not at all sure, either, but that Mr. Bremner felt himself driven, as a last resort, to sue the individuals whom he charged with this theft instead of pressing his claim upon the Government who seemed to be so tardy in taking cognisance of it. But supposing he was misguided in taking this course, supposing it was unwise for him to take a private remedy instead of pressing his claim upon the Government, does that relieve the Government of their duty in the matter? I think not. The duty of the Government remains the same, no matter what private remedy Mr. Bremner may seek. The Government are the parties responsible, in the first instance, for any damage done by our troops, or by any officers of this Government. It is their business, after having settled such claims, to seek out and punish the individual who has brought this loss upon the Government. The fact that the party aggrieved has taken a mistaken course in prosecuting in the courts the actual instrument of his wrong, instead of continuing to hold the Government responsible, does not relieve the Government in the slightest degree of their responsibility and their duty to see justice done in the matter. And if they refuse to go on and enquire into this matter and do justice to Mr. Bremner for the simple reason that he had another action in the court, I say it is a proof that they are anxious to postpone the matter, anxious to avoid a parliamentary discussion of the matter, anxious to avoid a parliamentary enquiry into the matter, and anxious to shield the individuals who have been accused in this case. They are doing injustice to those parties as well as to Bremner in refusing to go on with this enquiry. The Government owe it to the country and to this House, as well as to Bremner, to have this investigation conducted immediately, no matter what course Bremner may be taking, and an investigation should be made into the action of our own officers, and this could be carried on here as well as in the courts and as well now as at any future time. I consider, therefore, that both in regard to the general question and the question of loot there are grounds for the motion. If the principle is to obtain that no enquiry is to be made into what has become of the property of insurgents because they happen to be such, then this House will admit the principle known as loot, that our troops have a right to loot the property of insurgents wherever they come across it, and give no account. The House does not want to recognise that principle, and it must, therefore, in order to sustain its own dignity, the dignity of the Government, and the reputation of the parties accused, proceed immediately with this enquiry.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I do not propose to go over any of the grounds traversed by those who have preceded me. With respect to the motion for a committee proposed by the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister), I think the reasoning of the Minister of Justice and the leader of the Government is conclusive as to whether we should or should not grant that committee. What I wish to say, however, is this: the claims for compensation can easily be met by money grants, and they can be disposed of in a manner which will not bring about any injury to this country; but the serious charge made by members of the House against a gentleman who occupies the high position of commander of Canadian forces, is one that cannot and ought not be passed by in silence. It is one which ought either to be withdrawn, or those who make it should be compelled to establish it. We in this House resent any charge made against any member or any officer of this House by any one, either inside or outside of it, and the officers and members of the active force should be equally jealous of the honor of that force; and I, as an officer in that force, feel bound to say that I cannot permit charges of this kind to be made in this House and allowed to pass without notice, because the effect is not confined to the individual against whom the charge is made, but it is reflected on those who hold command under him. Were this motion simply to enquire into the conduct of General Middleton and the other officers, who with him are charged with an offence, which, if it is not a felony, is certainly a very gross breach of trust, for the charge I understand to be that this officer took out of the possession of Government officials property and converted it to his own use, and what particular species of crime this is held to be by law I am not prepared to say, but if it was done, and done in the way it is alleged to have been done, it was a matter which the House should deal with vigorously, and in a manner in proportion to its enormity, there would be reason for the appointment of this committee. But as the case is now apparently before the courts, and as General Middleton and the others concerned will be called upon to answer these charges, or I would prefer to say will have an opportunity to answer these charges, which they have had no opportunity hitherto of answering, that fact of itself entirely deprives this motion of any force as regards the appointment of a committee. But what I particularly wish to say is, that the lesson cannot be too seriously and too soon impressed upon members of the active force of this country, whether officers or privates, that the system of looting, which certainly did prevail to a very great extent in the North-West, is one disgraceful to them as subjects and also disgraceful to them as soldiers. It is a practice and a doctrine unknown to the earlier traditions of the British army, and it was because this would not be permitted that Wellington gained his great victories in the peninsula, and it was only in the Indian mutiny and the Chinese war we ever heard anything of the practice, which I am sorry to say has prevailed to a very great extent on several occasions since. I trust that the force in the beginning of its career will not allow any such imputation to rest upon it, as now rests upon it in regard to the troubles in the North-West. I have no doubt, and there is no doubt, that a great many things were done during that affair which had much better have been left undone. The hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall) has said that every man who came into Prince Albert from Battleford had a package of furs with him. If that statement is true, and no doubt the hon. gentleman made it believing it to be true, although I cannot believe such a thing is possible—it was practically impossible—but, if it were done, it certainly argues a very great want of discipline in those commanding the force, and a serious lack of duty on the part of those constituting the force. What I particularly wish to impress on the House and the country is, that there should be a very strong expression of dissatisfaction at any such practices as those alleged to have prevailed during the campaign in the North-West. I should like our men distinctly to understand that the Government and the people of this country, both in this House and out of it, on whatever side they may happen to sit, will in the most strenuous and emphatic terms condemn—and, if necessary, punish—any practices similar to those which are alleged against gentlemen in high positions in the force of Canada. For my own part, I think nothing can be worse, and certainly nothing can be worse in a military point of view, than that sort of insubordination or want of discipline which will permit such acts to be done with impunity. I hope an expression will go forth condemning any such practice, no matter by whom it is carried on, and that the young men now in the force, or those who may join it hereafter, will remember that this practice of looting is one that must be strongly condemned, and if followed, must be as severely punished.

Mr. LISTER. The Minister of Justice and other speakers have taken exception to the motion before the House on the ground that it was too wide. I say to the Minister that so far as the motion is concerned, I am willing that it should be confined to the question of furs alone, and I say that so far as we are concerned, it is our duty not only to investigate the value of the losses that Bremner has suffered, but it is our duty further, in view of the charges made, to proceed and see whether an officer occupying a high public position in the country has been guilty of appropriating the property of this half-breed. If General Middleton has been guilty of this charge, if Hayter Reed and Mr. Bedson are guilty, they are unfit to occupy any public position in any civilised country; and it is a most suspicious circumstance that the Government are attempting to defeat the motion as regards General Middleton. If that man's honor were perfectly clean he would be the first man to invoke the power of Parliament for the purpose of sweeping away and clearing up what to him, if he is innocent, is the greatest slander that can be offered against an officer. And the mere fact that he remains silent under the charge made, and that the Government are attempting to burke this investigation, is, to the mind of every independent man, ground for suspicion as to the guilt of General Middleton and the other men charged. The hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall) has told us that so far as Hayter Reed is concerned he got none of the furs. Probably that hon. gentleman has heard the same story that Reed has told to other people, that when he wrote that letter at the instance of General Middleton he felt convinced he was doing something wrong in taking the furs, and that so far as he was concerned he would not take any of them. But, if the box of furs nailed up for him was not taken by him, it was taken either by General Middleton or by Bedson. I have this offer again to make to the Minister of Justice: If his objection to the motion is that it is too wide, I will content myself with an investigation as to the charges against General Middleton, Hayter Reed and Bedson; and if the Government do not accept this proposition, they are placing themselves in the position of confessing that those men are guilty of the charges made against them, and I repeat that I believe I can prove, if this committee is given, that these men did take the furs as has been charged. It is a very disgraceful thing to think for one moment that men receiving large salaries from the Government and occupying high positions have been charged with looting these wretched miserable half-breeds in the North-West of their wordly possessions. This is a disgraceful charge, and one the Government should not allow General Middleton to rest under. If he is an innocent man, he should be the first to ask Parliament to have it investigated. The opportunity is now given, and if the Government vote this motion down they are showing that there is something about this which they do not wish to be made public. The responsibility is with the Government. If they vote down this motion, let the blame rest on them.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think Sir, that the suggestion made by my hon. friend from West Lambton, ought to be accepted. I have not been able to listen to the entire discussion, and, therefore, I am not in a position to express an opinion as to the first part of his motion, not having heard his argument; but it does appear to me that such statements as have been made on the floor of this House by that hon. gentleman and others with respect to the alleged loss sustained to Mr. Bremner, no matter what private action may be taken by the courts, makes it the duty of this House on the part of the country to investigate. In order to obtain the opinion of the House on this particular question, I move:

That the motion now in your hands be amended as follows:—"That a select committee be appointed to enquire into the statements made in this House in reference to the furs said to have been taken from Charles Bremner, a half-breed residing in Battleford."

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is a new proposition and involves other considerations. I do not know whether the hon. member who moved this amendment is aware of the fact that proceedings have been taken in the courts.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes; I was aware.

Mr. LISTER.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, as Sir Frederick Middleton's name has been brought up, I think it would present itself to that hon. member's sense of justice that Sir Frederick Middleton should not be subjected to a trial here, and then to a trial in the courts, and that he should be obliged to defend himself here, and perhaps that his case may be prejudiced before the courts. Such a thing as having two trials going on at the same time, or nearly at the same time, is an innovation, and abhorrent to the principles of justice as it is administered in British courts and under British law. The Government had never any desire, and they could have no desire, to protect any officer, whether civil servant or military servant, who had committed any breach of the law, or who had behaved improperly. I wish, therefore, to move the adjournment of the debate to give Mr. Bremner an opportunity of considering his position, and it may be that he may drop his proceedings in the court.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I understand no proceedings have yet been taken.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I understand they have.

Mr. DAVIN. Yes, the writ has been served.

Mr. LAURIER. Do I understand that if Mr. Bremner withdraws his suit the committee will be granted?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not say that. I move the adjournment of the debate in order that we may consider the new position as presented in the motion of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). We can consider what the course should be.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Your motion was to adjourn, and I presume I have the right to reply.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Certainly.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It must be remembered that this is not the first time this question has been brought up. Year after year these statements have been made, and it does appear to me that this House should cause an investigation to be made at once into the alleged pilferings or looting of a quantity of valuable property in the North-West. There might be some force in the right hon. gentleman's statement if these charges were now submitted to the House for the first time, but as they have been made on several occasions, I see no reason why we should not have an enquiry at once. These charges against prominent officials under the control of the Government have been made as far back as 1886, if my memory serves me aright. They were made again in 1887 or 1888, and the whole country has rung with the alleged scandal that has taken place with reference to this thing. So far from the enquiry being premature, my impression is that it has been far too long delayed. We do not know when this action, which Mr. Bremner is supposed to have taken, will go on. According to the usual legal mode, it may be protracted for a year before anything is done. We have charges made by an hon. member of this House on his own responsibility, gravely affecting the honor and character of two or three important officials in our employ, and I submit that whatever course Mr. Bremner may choose to take, the duty of this House is clear, namely, to investigate the charges made by my hon. friend, unless he withdraws them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. What I say is that the hon. gentleman has changed the question before the House altogether, and, under these circumstances, I move the adjournment of the debate, in order that we may consider the effect of the hon. gentleman's motion. It is a mere matter of fairness.

Mr. EDGAR. I am sure the hon. First Minister has not closely examined the question before the House, or he could not possibly have stated that my hon. friend's amendment has changed the question. The question, as the hon. gentleman will see, refers to two points of investigation: one is the rebellion losses of the Bresaylor half-breeds, and the other is the disappearance of the furs of Charles Bremner. The amendment of the hon. member for South Oxford, as he avows himself, drops the former point, and restricts the enquiry to the latter. The answer of the hon. First Minister is that we should not go on, because Charles Bremner has issued a writ against Gen. Middleton. Why, Sir, is the jurisdiction of this high court to be ousted because one individual chooses to issue a writ against another on a subject which it is of paramount importance we should investigate? It would be absurd if this House could be stopped in an investigation of charges against the highest military officer in this country except the Minister of Militia, of malversation in office, and the hands of this House should be paralysed because Mr. Bremner has issued a writ against that gentleman. Why, Sir, if that suit had gone to trial and the claim had been paid by General Middleton, that would be no answer. How, then, can it be an answer when a writ has merely been issued? The writ might be issued in collusion. If General Middleton might happen to be really guilty, and might be of opinion that the issue of a writ would stop enquiry, he would of course have a writ issued, and as long as he kept that writ hanging, our hands would be paralysed, and enquiry would be stopped. That is no answer, and I am sure that the country will not accept it as an answer.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman the First Minister must see that if we adopt his motion to adjourn the debate, the question would be killed for this Session.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Not a bit.

Mr. LAURIER. Yes; if the debate is adjourned, the motion will be put at the foot of Public Bills and Orders, and it could only come up every Wednesday evening.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will take care that the motion shall have every opportunity of coming up.

Mr. LAURIER. Under those circumstances we will agree to the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

RETURN ORDERED.

Statement showing for each year since 1878:—1. The number of vessels which has passed through the Chambly Canal, and their tonnage. 2. The amount of and the description of freight carried by these vessels. 3. The amount of tolls collected in the said several years on the said canal.—(Mr. Préfontaine).

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like to enquire of the First Minister when the revised and expurgated edition of the correspondence between Mr Hugh Macdonald and himself is to be laid on the Table. I must remind him that a very long time has elapsed, and I deferred taking action expressly on his statement that he desired to place that correspondence on the Table of the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I got a letter from my son, but it was a letter which he had written without any idea that it would be laid before Parliament. I showed it to his partner, Mr. Stewart Tupper, who has been here, and I said: "This won't do, and when you go home, make my son write me a letter;" and I am expecting it every moment.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I must remind the hon. gentleman that his statement was an official statement made in this House on a telegram which he had received from Mr. Hugh Macdonald, and a week has transpired since then.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The only consequence, if I do not get another letter, will be that I shall have to read some portions of my son's letter, which I have in my pocket, but I should like to have a letter in an official form.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have no doubt that Mr. Hugh Macdonald is an excellent letter writer, and I should like to hear the whole of it.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 11.10 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 4th March, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

NEW MEMBER.

Mr. SPEAKER informed the House that the Clerk of the House had received from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery a certificate of the election and return of Walter Humphries Montague, Esq., Member for the Electoral District of the County of Haldimand.

AGRICULTURAL FERTILISERS.

Mr. HAGGART moved, That, to-morrow, the House resolve itself into Committee to consider the following resolution:—

Resolved, That it is expedient to provide, in respect of the Bill intituled: "An Act respecting Agricultural Fertilisers," now before this House:

(1.) That with every sample transmitted in conformity with section three of the said Act, the manufacturer or importer shall, at the same time, transmit to the Minister a fee of three dollars;

(2.) That the inspector shall be entitled, for each package to which a tag is attached under his supervision, and for each bill of inspection delivered by him, if the fertiliser is in bulk, to such fee in either case as the Governor in Council directs;

(3.) That every person who sells or offers fertilisers for sale shall, before so doing, register his name and address once in each year with such officer as the Minister directs, and shall at the same time pay a registration fee of one dollar;

(4.) That all fees paid and penalties recovered under this Act shall form part of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

MEMBER INTRODUCED.

WALTER HUMPHRIES MONTAGUE, Esquire, Member for the Electoral District of Haldimand, introduced by Mr. Patterson (Essex) and Mr. Tisdale.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 17) to amend the Patent Act.—(Mr. Carling.)

BILLS OF EXCHANGE, CHEQUES AND PROMISSORY NOTES.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 6) relating to Bills of Exchange, Cheques and Promissory Notes.

(In the Committee.)

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I ask the attention of the Committee to a subject which I called attention to when we were passing section 19. We had some discussion during last Session, and this year also, with respect to acceptances payable at particular places. The provision of the draft Bill, as introduced last year, was that an acceptance to pay at a particular place is a general acceptance, unless it expressly states that the bill is to be paid there only and not elsewhere. That is now the law in the Province of Ontario, and under it a very convenient practice has grown up of persons accepting their bills at particular banks, not with the intention of restricting liability upon the bill, but with the intention that the banks at which they keep their accounts ordinarily, shall pay the bill when it matures, as the banks frequently do, without cheque and without further instructions. I am informed that has been found to be a very convenient practice, and, as a matter of fact, although that was the law in the Province of Ontario only, the practice has been followed in the other Provinces, and in many cases where acceptances have to be procured in country places at a considerable distance from the bank, the bank stamps upon the acceptance "Accepted, payable at the bank of so-and-so," in order that they may not, when the bill matures, have to send four or five miles to present the bill. The feeling of the Committee was very strong last year against the insertion of the Ontario law in the Bill, and I accordingly dropped it from the Bill as introduced this year, but I promised that on account of the importance of the change, which I thought would be effected if we drop that section, I would bring the subject to the attention of the Committee again. I would call special attention now to the importance of the change which will thus be made. The practice, which has heretofore existed, of acceptors making their acceptances payable at a particular place, will have to be discontinued to a very great extent, unless the clause which I now propose is inserted in section 19. Hon. members will see that that must be so, because by a provision of the Bill which we have already adopted, the bank receiving the bill and presenting it is not allowed to take a limited acceptance. If it takes a limited acceptance it is responsible, and serious consequences may ensue, as regards the liability of parties on the bill. If we do not adopt the section which I am now proposing there will be limited acceptances, and no bank can hereafter take a limited acceptance, and the practice, which I am informed is a very general one, and has grown up in consequence of the existing law, will have to be changed. Although I think I have pretty fully given the necessary information to the House, I will read a letter received by me which places the subject in a very concise form. The writer says:

"I desire to draw your attention to the great inconvenience which will result if section 19, sub-section 2, paragraph (c) of Bill No. 6, 'An Act relating to Bills of Exchange, &c.,' now before the House, is passed in its present form. The custom has long been in force here for the drawer not to designate any bank or place for payment, leaving the drawer in his acceptance to state the bank or place of business at which the bill will be payable. This is a great convenience both to the drawer and the bank which may hold the bill at maturity. The acceptor making his arrangement with his own banker to honor his acceptances, and the holder of the bill being only required to present the bill at bank designated for payment. Again, there are many millers, manufacturers and others, carrying on their business in small places where there are no banking facilities, who have their banking accounts in some neighboring city. On bills being drawn on these parties they are notified by mail to come in and accept the bills payable at their own bank, where, in due course, they are presented at maturity. Of course, it is not to be expected that any bank would undertake the presentation of bills ten or twelve miles in the country for payment. If they did, and bills paid on presentation, how could they collect expenses? If above section is passed in its present shape the above convenient usages will be done away with, as under section 44, sub-section 2, the drawer and endorser would be discharged unless they assented to the qualified acceptance, and the risk of a subsequent assent is something no holder would take. The difficulty would be entirely overcome by leaving the section as it was in the draft Bill before the House last Session."

I, therefore, submit the matter to the Committee for very serious consideration, and I am inclined to think that those who expressed themselves last year in favor of a change of the law and practice prevailing all over the country, had not given due weight to the inconvenient results which would follow. The immediate result of this would be a discharge of the drawer and the endorser by the taking of what will now be a limited acceptance, but what never was a limited acceptance during the continuance of the present law in Ontario.

Mr. EDGAR. I am glad to hear the Minister of Justice express the views he has done on the section now before the Committee. I am sure that the people of the Province of Ontario who are mostly interested, the bankers and the mercantile community, would be greatly prejudiced if the law were changed in the way the Bill proposes. If it is desirable that the law should be as proposed, an exception should be made in favor of the Province of Ontario. I know it is unfortunate not to have uniformity in laws of this kind, but rather than upset the whole custom of the banks and the mercantile community in the Province of Ontario, I think the balance of convenience would be in favor of allowing the exception to remain as it has been in that Province for a number of years.

Mr. BROWN. I am very glad that the hon. Minister of Justice has re-inserted this clause, and I am authorized to state, on behalf of a large number of the mercantile community in my town, that they were very much disappointed at the prospect of the Bill being passed without this provision.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I understand that the hon. Minister wants to provide that an acceptance at any particular place is a general acceptance, unless it is understood that the bill is payable there and not elsewhere. It seems to me that that is a great inconvenience. I understand that the English law, which was settled a great many years ago, is that when an acceptance is made payable at a particular place, the bill must be presented at that place. It strikes me that by this provision it must be presented either there or to the acceptor at his office, which would be a great inconvenience.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We have provided farther on that the bill may be presented at the place designated.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But the party is not obliged to present it there.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). But the difficulty is this: If I presented it at the bank at which it was made payable, I should not feel safe unless I also presented it to the acceptor personally, and at his office as well as at the bank. As the matter stands now, before an action could be brought against the acceptor, the party would have to show that he presented the bill at the bank at which it was payable, and that there were no funds there.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. If a bill is drawn, made payable at the Bank of Ottawa, there must be a presentation, either there or to the acceptor himself. If it is presented there, and if the acceptor has funds there, the bill will be paid there. If it is presented to himself, all he has to do is to give a cheque on the Bank of Ottawa, and the thing is done. We do not make a presentation necessary or unnecessary. We leave the law as it is now as to that, but we adopt the principle that, if a man accepts his bill payable at a certain bank, it is a general acceptance, precisely as if he had designated no place of acceptance. By omitting this clause we should be revolutionising the whole practice with regard to these bills in the Province of Ontario. As a matter of fact, in the Lower Provinces—I am not speaking so much of the banks in the cities—take the agencies throughout the country, one of the bank managers who was here the other day informed me that the universal practice—I am referring to the Bank of Nova Scotia—was to require the acceptors to accept, payable at an agency of the bank; and he was not aware that by so doing he discharged all the parties to the bill.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Before it presents the bill, the bank has no right to make it payable at its own bank or agency. It has no right to say where I shall make it payable; but, suppose it is presented to me and I make it payable at the Bank of Montreal, I have the right to do that?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The bank cannot take that acceptance from you. It must be accepted according to its tenor.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Does my hon. friend say that the acceptor cannot accept, payable at a particular place?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We provide the contrary by this Bill.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). What section?

Mr. IVES. I should say that any change in the law which will disturb the practice in drawing drafts by city merchants on their country customers will be a very serious thing. In the Province of Quebec the practice is for the city merchant to draw upon the country merchant without indicating the place of payment. Say it is a draft by a Montreal merchant on an Eastern Townships merchant. It is sent to the city of Sherbrooke, where there is a mother bank and where there are two branch banks. The draft is, perhaps, on a merchant residing in Cookshire, twenty miles away, where there is no bank agency. A notice is sent to the merchant that the draft is in the bank at Sherbrooke for his acceptance, and with that notice is sent a power of attorney authorising some official of the bank to accept for him, and it is accepted under that power of attorney payable at the bank at Sherbrooke. The practice has worked admirably. It has enabled the Montreal merchant to make his collections with facility. It is a convenience to the country merchant and is safe to the bank; and if a change were made by which this practice could not be continued with safety, it would be a very serious matter both to the wholesale merchant and his customer.

Mr. MASSON. There seems to be some misunderstanding on the part of hon. members from other Provinces as to the existing law in Ontario on the point under discussion. I think it is clearly admitted in Ontario that if a draft, drawn without being made payable by the drawer at any particular place, is accepted by the acceptor, payable at a particular bank, in order to bind the drawer and the endorsers, that note has to be presented where the acceptor makes it payable, although he does not make use of the words "not otherwise or elsewhere." But if the acceptor is anxious to have it presented there, and to be not liable unless it is presented there, he adds the words "not otherwise or elsewhere." Then it must be presented there, or he is not liable. It would appear that some are under the impression that when it is made payable at a certain bank, not only his endorsers are interested in its presentment there, but he, the acceptor, is. As far as the acceptor is concerned, I understand the law to be clear, that whether it is presented at the bank or not, he is liable if he accepts it payable at a certain place, but does not say "not otherwise or elsewhere," but his drawer and endorser to the bill are released absolutely unless it is presented there. The hardship which has been referred to, of a person making his bill payable at a particular place being sued upon it, I do not think is of much importance. We do not find it so in the Province of Ontario, because, if he wishes to be relieved of that, he has the power to add these words; and, at any rate, it stands to reason, that these bills passing through a bank, the bank will take care not to discharge the drawer or the endorser and will always present the bill where it is made payable by the acceptor, and there is nobody released, even if he is only an accommodation acceptor, because the bank or merchant who holds the bill presents it where it is payable. In fact, we have found it work admirably, and I am happy to hear that the practice has extended not only over Ontario, but over the Provinces where the law was different in that respect.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) No doubt the question is largely one of convenience. The objection taken here is that throughout a large proportion of the Dominion the law of Ontario does not apply. It is not necessary in any of the Maritime Provinces. If I accept a bill payable at the Bank of Nova Scotia, that is where it is payable, and you have not to add the words, "otherwise and not elsewhere," and it will take years before the people of those Provinces will understand this new law. Suppose this law declares an acceptance payable at a certain place without these negative words, a general acceptance, you need not present the bill at the place where the man has made it payable before suing him. The acceptor may make it payable at the Bank of Montreal, and may provide funds to pay it there, and yet the holder need not present it there at all, but put it in a lawyer's hands and sue him at once. That seems to your untutored minds, not having the practice the hon. gentleman referred to, most dangerous. There seems to be no reason for the introduction of these negative words. The practice we have hitherto followed has been that where a man makes a bill payable at a particular place, it should mean what it says, and it should be payable there, and when you present the bill there the party should be bound to pay it. I acknowledge that the other practice seems to suit Ontario very well, because it is well understood there, but if it is made to extend to the Maritime Provinces it will not be understood, and a great deal of irritation and discontent will ensue. Perhaps it might be as well to make the Province of Ontario an exception under the law. Let their law and practice remain as it is, and let our law and practice, which is very well understood, remain as it is, and I think everybody will be satisfied. We do not want this provision introduced; I have not met a man in the Maritime Provinces that wants this new law.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I think, also, that a good deal of inconvenience would be caused in the Lower Provinces by this amendment. The English Act does not apply to promissory notes; it only applies to bills of exchange.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The present English Bills of Exchange Act does, in section 87.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I have not got the last Act, but the original Act applied only to bills of exchange. In England there might be reason for it; but in this country we have bills of exchange and promissory notes drawn by everybody. If I draw upon a man and say that it is payable at the Bank of Montreal, for instance, and he accepts it, then it is to be presented there; but if it is to be payable generally, and he accepts payment at the Bank of Montreal, that is not specified in the bill; and if that clause is put in, it is not bound to be presented there. Suppose a manufacturer in an out-of-the-way place makes a bill payable at his counter in his factory, and he has the money there to pay it, if it is not presented there but presented at the bank, the first thing he would receive would be a lawyer's letter, although he might have the money and be ready to pay it. I venture to say that even in Ontario, outside of the bankers and mercantile men, you will find that the ordinary people throughout the country will never put in those words which the amendment proposes. I think the general public would be satisfied if the bill is made payable where the parties are supposed to have funds.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

Mr. DALY. If any exception is to be made in favor of Ontario I should like to see Manitoba and the North-West Territories included, as we have the same practice that prevails in Ontario. I think it would be unfortunate if the amendment of the Minister of Justice is not carried. Bankers, who have met the hon. gentleman in relation to this Bill, have represented that the Bill, as it stands now, is an inconvenience to the public generally. I do not wish to say that the most intelligent people in Canada live in Manitoba or the North-West Territories; still, since the Ontario practice has extended into the western Provinces, as the hon. gentleman admits that it has extended to some of the banks in the eastern Provinces, I think the people ought to be allowed to retain the practice.

Mr. MASSON. I fancy that the trouble the hon. member from Prince Edward Island seems to anticipate, will never be realised. We have found the present practice to work well in Ontario, namely, that if a man was sued who had money in the bank, and ready to pay his bill, his bill not being presented, it would be simply a matter of costs; and if he made the plea that he had money there waiting for the bill, and if he paid the money into court and claimed to be relieved from the costs, I think any judge would relieve him of the costs. It is a mere matter of convenience. All the man would have to do would be to have the money ready in his desk to pay the bill, and the fact that the bill was not presented there has never been found to cause any difficulty anywhere. Why should the maker of a note, or the acceptor of a bill of exchange, be released, because, through negligence or otherwise, the holder of the bill failed to present it at the place where it was payable? There is no reason why he should be relieved.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If you put in the words "not elsewhere" he would be relieved.

Mr. MASSON. He would be relieved if he put it in that way, but he has not done so. In an ordinary mercantile transaction, why should the man primarily liable, be relieved? I can see no reason for it. The other parties are secondarily liable, if the holder does not carry out the strict technical requirements. But the maker of the note, or the acceptor of the bill, is the man who owes the debt and is primarily liable; and why should carelessness or negligence on the part of the holder release him?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The same meaning attaches to the acceptance when it is accepted payable at a bank in the Maritime Provinces; the same legal meaning attaches to it now. But suppose you apply this law to the Maritime Provinces. For the last half century the people have been accustomed to accept a bill payable at a particular bank; now, you propose that he need not present it to that bank at all, but you can sue on it if it is not presented at the bank. If you make an acceptance payable at a particular place a general acceptance, then you cannot sue as against the endorser unless you present it to the drawer. It is to avoid the necessity of presenting it to the drawer that you make it payable at a particular place, but you satisfy the requirements of the law and put the party in a position to sue the endorser, if you present it at the place where the acceptance is made payable.

Mr. TISDALE. As I understand the law, where the bill is payable at a particular place without the limiting words, you can either present it there or to the maker, as you please. As to the hardship of having to make a note payable at a particular place, not otherwise or elsewhere, I think the hon. gentleman misunderstands the idea of this commercial law. The object of the commercial law, which makes promissory notes different from ordinary contracts, is to enlarge the convenience, so as to make those notes a certain kind of circulating medium. I know that, in Ontario, the limited acceptance almost takes a draft out of the category of the ordinary understanding of a promissory note. No one is bound to take such a note, and, I think, the same thing exists wherever the commercial law exists. If you give a note, and you make it payable at a particular place, and not elsewhere, no one is bound to accept it. This would, therefore, change the whole system in Ontario. I agree with the hon. member for Grey, also, that you are magnifying the difficulty in regard to a man not having the money ready. Most men are only too glad to have the money paid. This only brings up one complication, and I do not say what the remedy should be. There seems to be a difference in the law in the different Provinces; and, if the law is to be made uniform, I think the proper principle to adopt would be the greater convenience to the greater number. In Ontario, there is a general consensus of opinion that no change is desired. Many bankers have represented this to me; and every person I have heard speak of it in Ontario has had the same views. I have been asked by a number of solicitors of banks, and bankers, and business men, not to allow the present law to be interfered with in this respect.

Mr. IVES. I do not think the real difficulty has been touched in this discussion. As the Bill now stands, the acceptor cannot fix the place of payment without modifying the contract, and, if he does that, and the bank accepts it, the drawers and endorsers are discharged. Unless we avoid that difficulty, we are going to make drafts impossible in the case of people who live at a distance from a bank. Now, the acceptor cannot say that the draft shall be payable at a certain place, because that modifies the contract. If that could be done without discharging the drawers and endorsers, it would be all right, but, if the acceptor goes further and adds the words "and not otherwise," the bank may refuse the acceptance.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Would not that be a modification as much as the other?

Mr. IVES. In that case the bank could protest for non-acceptance; but what I am anxious that the Committee and the Government should see to is that the very general custom which has prevailed, and which has been of the greatest advantage to business men, should not be disturbed, that is, the custom of allowing the acceptor to indicate where he wants to pay, and to do that without disturbing the contract or releasing the endorser or the drawer. As to the other words which have been referred to, let it be left to the bank to accept or refuse as they please, but let the general words "payable at so-and-so" be permitted to be inserted by the acceptor without modifying the contract.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not think that does modify the contract.

Mr. IVES. If I understand the Minister of Justice, it does, according to this Bill.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If the hon. gentleman draws on John Smith and John Smith accepts the draft payable at a particular place, I do not think that modifies the contract.

Mr. IVES. That is the whole question.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) No, that is not the whole question. The question we have been discussing was whether an acceptance payable at a certain place means what it says as it does in the Maritime Provinces, or whether it means, as it does in Ontario, a general acceptance, unless the acceptor writes in "not elsewhere than" the particular bank where he makes it payable. If the banks and merchants of the Maritime Provinces were educated up to this new idea, it would be easy to carry it out, but I can see that a great deal of difficulty would result there.

Mr. MASSON. The merchants and bankers of the Maritime Provinces are now educated up to that.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think not. I have not heard of it. There is the president of one of the leading banks of the Maritime Provinces sitting on the other side of the House; but I have not heard a word in favor of this provision from anyone with whom I have any acquaintance.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). As I understand, a qualified acceptance is taken at the risk of the holder of the bill. If a bill is drawn on me and I accept it, payable, say, at the Bank of Ottawa, that is a qualification of the acceptance. Then, if I accept a bill for my own convenience—and there is no question as to the convenience—making it payable at the bank where I do my business, if that relieves the drawer and endorser there should be some change so as to prevent such a result. I perfectly agree with the Minister of Justice that the practice which at present prevails, and which is a very convenient one for all business men, should be continued. As regards the argument made by the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), and the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon), would not an acceptance to pay at a particular place be a qualified acceptance, and one that would prevent the bank from taking the bill as accepted? If so, what convenience will it be to the Maritime Provinces or any of the other Provinces, to let the law stand as in the original draft of the Bill, and relieve the drawer and the endorser of a bill from liability, if accepted in the qualified manner referred to in the Act?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I must ask my hon. friends from the Lower Provinces to reconsider the statements made by them in regard to the inconvenience that would result. The bills which are accepted, payable at a particular place, are very rare.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). No.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I understand they are not more than one in five hundred. The hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), has stated that five, ten or fifteen years will be required before the public will understand the changes made. I think the hon. gentleman exaggerates the importance of this objection. This would be the practical working of the measure: Five months will elapse before this Bill will become law. It will surely be understood by every banker in that time; and, as I have said, the bills which do not go into bankers' hands, but are made payable at a particular place, are very few indeed. The banks will decline to take an acceptance payable at a particular place, "and not elsewhere;" and the matter will easily adjust itself, because the transaction, in ninety-nine out of every hundred cases, goes through the banking institutions. I think my hon. friends from the Lower Provinces will likewise see the importance of securing uniformity in Canada in framing an Act like this, with respect to negotiable instruments which are, to a large extent, inter-provincial and international in their character. But hon. members will see this, also, that what I propose is demanded in Ontario, Manitoba and the North-West Territories; and if we say that that shall be the law there, as I propose to do in this section—I will omit British Columbia for the present—it comes down to this: that we shall have one law in Great Britain, Ontario, Manitoba and the North-West Territories, and a different law in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, as regard bills of exchange and promissory notes. Admitting that some inconvenience will result, I think it will be very small, and that we should run that risk, in favor of having uniformity, not only in our own country, but with the mother country as well.

Mr. KENNY. I have never had the advantage of discussing this particular Bill with any person who is a professional banker. I happen to be connected with the management of one of the banks in the Maritime Provinces, but my duties are simply advisory. The hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), has explained the practice which prevails in the Maritime Provinces in connection with the acceptance of drafts; and as our interprovincial trade is increasing, it is most important that we should clearly understand what we are now enacting. The custom is that a merchant in the Province of Quebec or Ontario draws upon his correspondent in the Maritime Provinces. These drafts invariably pass through the hands of the banks. It frequently happens that the party on whom the draft is drawn lives a distance of from ten to forty or fifty miles from any bank agency, and when the bank sends the draft to the party on whom it is drawn, it has been the habit—and the Minister of Justice tells us it is irregular—to mark on the face of it words to the effect that it is payable at a certain bank. The banks in the Maritime Provinces have been obliged to adopt that custom for their own protection. It would not be possible for them to send a special messenger a distance of twenty or thirty miles to collect a special acceptance. The custom which prevails is one of very great convenience to the manufacturers and merchants of the rest of Canada; and what appears to me to follow, from a remark which fell from the Minister of Justice, is that the clause now under consideration will positively legalise the custom which prevails in the Maritime Provinces—that is to say, that it will now be proper, regular and legal for the bank, when it sends a draft out for acceptance, to make it payable at a particular agency.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). No.
Sir JOHN THOMPSON.

Mr. KENNY. There is so much difference between lawyers in this House that there can be no wonder if a layman is puzzled. The hon. Minister of Justice, however, says I am right. If we can legalise the system which has been found convenient to the banks and to their customers, and which is certainly convenient to merchants and manufacturers who are supplying their customers with merchandise, I think we should adopt it.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The hon. gentleman has pointed to a practice which prevails in the bank in Nova Scotia, that when the bank receives a draft they stamp it payable at their agency before sending it out for acceptance. I have always entertained doubt as to the right of the bank to do so. But I entirely fail to understand how the Bill would legalise it.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The clause says that that shall not be a qualified acceptance, but we leave out that section and it is a qualified acceptance, because section "c" says: "An acceptance is qualified when it is local;" that is to say, an acceptance at a particular place.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I suppose it was from imperfectness of hearing that I could not understand the argument of the hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. White). I understood him to say that he could not accept the view of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) or myself; and he turns to clause 19 and finds that when an acceptance is qualified it is conditional, that is to say, it makes payment by the acceptor dependent upon the condition therein stated. I think that, if the amendment of the hon. Minister of Justice should pass, an acceptance is general, unless it states that it is payable at a particular place, and not elsewhere.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). What I understand the Minister of Justice to propose is, that where a bill is drawn upon me or upon my firm, and no place is specified for the payment, and for my own convenience I accept it, payable, say, at the Bank of Ottawa or the Bank of Montreal, then that is a general acceptance; but under the provisions of this section 19, if my hon. friend looks at clause "c" of sub-section 2, he would find it would be a qualified acceptance, and one that would relieve the endorser and drawer from liability, if the bank accepted it with the condition that it was payable at a certain place. I understand the Minister of Justice to desire to amend this section 19, so as to make such an acceptance as I have referred to a general acceptance, and not one that will relieve the drawer and the endorser. What I wish to point out in reference to the views advanced by the member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), and St. John (Mr. Weldon), was, that if the Bill stood as it is at present, then a mere acceptance payable at a particular place, would relieve the drawer and endorser, and that the banks would have to take it—if they took it at all—subject to the risk that the drawer and endorser would be relieved. The proposition of the Minister of Justice will, I am sure, confer a great boon upon the commercial community of the Province of Ontario, (whether it does so in the Eastern Provinces, I cannot say), and unless a stronger objection is offered to it, I think we should adopt it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would like to ask the Minister of Justice whether a qualified acceptance, naming a particular place, is sufficient to discharge the drawer and endorser? It seems to me that would be a very extraordinary proposition, because it is really not such a modification of the contract as to put these parties in any worse position than they were before. The effect of that would be to render a qualified acceptance impossible without the express authority of the parties. I do not think that ought to be the case.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). If this section is passed, I think it would be important to make the matter more clear under section 45.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). That is, in reference to the suggestion of the member for St. John (Mr. Weldon), that the presenting of the bill at the place specified, either by the endorser or drawer, would be a proper presentation?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understand that what before was a particular acceptance with us in the Maritime Provinces is now made a general acceptance, and if we attempt to make it a particular acceptance, we shall not be in the position we always have been in to discharge the drawer and endorser. In the Maritime Provinces when a bill has been drawn on a man, and he has accepted it payable at a particular place, that has been a special acceptance, which did not discharge the drawer and endorser under the common law.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think it did.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Well, if it did, all the practice has been wrong for many years.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am inclined to think it would, under the common law; but when everybody knows that a bill is accepted with the limitation that it is payable at a particular place and nowhere else, the holder takes it at his own risk.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. In the case of a qualified acceptance, I understand that this Act will discharge the endorser and the drawer; but it is for the bank to say whether it will allow a qualified acceptance. By the proposed amendment of the hon. Minister of Justice, we are practically making all acceptances payable generally, because it is not once in a thousand times that a man adds, "and not otherwise or elsewhere." This is practically never used, and, therefore, what we are doing is to apply to the whole Dominion the law that is in force in Ontario, of making all acceptances general, and providing that those words must be added in order to make a qualified acceptance. So that we are not practically interfering with the practice in the Maritime Provinces. The amendment will not interfere with the security or the practice of the banks in those Provinces.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I understand that, practically, these words are not used at all, and, therefore, we are introducing new ideas, which may be very profitable to the lawyers, but not to the community at large. The hon. Minister seems to say that an acceptance at a particular place discharges the drawer and endorser. I have known all kinds of objections raised to get rid of the liability of an endorser and drawer, but I never knew that to be raised. The difficulty that presented itself to my mind was that a general acceptance would necessitate the Bill being presented to the acceptor to make him liable. But the Minister says he will make a change to meet that difficulty.

Mr. MULOCK. In the clause which the hon. Minister proposes to add, allowing the acceptor to accept the bill at any place or at any bank, there are no limitations whatever. I ask whether it would not be possible to assign some geographical limits, otherwise a bill might be made payable 3,000 miles away.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. If it is made payable too far away, it will amount to nothing; but we are providing for the further convenience of the holder, that he may present it where it is made payable.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). These changes may be understood by bankers and legal men, but they will hardly be familiar to a large part of the mercantile community. It seems to me regrettable that any change should be made which may place a large class of the business community at a certain disadvantage, and throw them into the hands of the legal men who look after the interests of the banks. It appears to me that any change like this should be made as plain as possible to the trading community of the country, who will be the real sufferers in the event of anything being complicated in the new arrangement.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think the change we are making is in the interest of that class, because we are providing that the drawer and endorser shall not be discharged by taking an acceptance payable at a particular place, unless it is declared on the face of the acceptance that it is to be payable there and not elsewhere. Therefore, we are removing a difficulty, and requiring that a limitation in a bill shall be plainly expressed on the face of the bill itself.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not think the hon. Minister has quite removed the objection I raise, as to the latitude allowed to the acceptor to name a place. It appears to me that the acceptor ought not to be at liberty to name a place of payment different from the place named in the bill itself.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The clause does not permit him to accept wherever he pleases. Let us see how it will work out. A bill is presented to me to-day by the Bank of Montreal in Ottawa, and I wish to accept it payable at the Bank of Montreal in Halifax. The bank simply refuses to take it if the acceptance is too far away to satisfy it. But this provision is to permit the bank to take it, if a particular place is named, without affecting the parties to the bill.

Mr. MULOCK. It appears to me that the drawer of a bill has discharged his duty if he gives a general acceptance; and, if the holder accepts generally, he has done all he is bound to do at that stage, and the holder of the bill, the bank, would not be entitled to refuse this acceptance. I think the right of the drawee to name the place should be qualified to the extent that he should not have that right where the drawer has specified in the bill a place of payment.

Mr. MASSON. My hon. friend is surely mistaken as to the existing law, or as to what is proposed by this Act. I do not understand that either this Act or the present law requires that where a drawer names the place of payment in the bill, an acceptor has the right to change that to another place. The acceptor names the place, but still makes a general acceptance when there is no place named in the bill, but if there is a place named in the bill, then to make a general acceptance, he has to make the acceptance without naming any place.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Let us suppose that a bill is presented for acceptance payable in Ottawa, and, through perverseness or otherwise, the acceptor accepts it payable at the Bank of British Columbia in Victoria. The bank, under this clause, has the right to disregard that, and present it to the acceptor himself, or it may present it at Victoria, British Columbia. The acceptor, by making a draft payable at a place different from that mentioned in the body of the draft, makes a general acceptance, and the bank can present it to him, as if there was no place named.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I would like to ask the hon. the Minister of Justice if he is going to introduce a clause, referring to bills of exchange or promissory notes, by which, on the words "given for patent rights" being written across the bill, the transferee takes it subject to all the rights that exist in favor of the original holder?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I submit that as this is a Bill relating simply to bills of exchange and promissory notes, it will be out of place for us to deal with the prevention of a particular class of frauds. It is unwise and unnecessary to engraft those provisions on this Bill. We leave them in force, but, if we undertook to say that a particular class of notes, which have, according to past practice, been somewhat affected by fraud, shall, under penal provisions, have certain words stamped on their face, we must take the same ground in relation to all classes of frauds. We must say that, if a promissory note be given for lightning rods, that must appear on the face; if a promissory note be given for family bibles, which fall to pieces the first time a fire is lighted in a room, that must appear; if a promissory note is given for gaudy maps, which fall to pieces before they can be hung; if a promissory note be given for pitchforks, hayforks, ploughs, or for miraculous seed grain, which fructifies five minutes after it is sown, that must appear on the face; and that while we are legislating in regard to notes, we must also legislate in regard to frauds in other contracts.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I cannot agree with the Minister of Justice. This is a Bill relating to bills of exchange and promissory notes. Why should we not incorporate in that those matters which affect bills of exchange and promissory notes, particularly where the bills say that the transferee must take the bill subject to all the sets-off which exist in regard to any part of it. This is the place to make that provision. If we simply put this provision in a law relating to patent rights or in the criminal law, the persons affected will not be aware of it. This is the very place to put it in, where we deal with cases after consideration given for a bill, and where we state that the transferee of a bill is to be liable for it under all circumstances. That is the place where we ought to make the exception, if there is to be any exception. But my hon. friend the Minister of Justice proposes to change the law. He says we are not going to change it; but he is going to repeal the present law by the schedule of this Bill. If we are going to repeal the whole of that Act except sections 12, 13 and 14, why should that provision not be placed here? The objection of the Minister of Justice seems to be that this is making a certain offence penal. You might take that provision out and make it part of the criminal law, but it is very desirable to let every person know that anyone who takes a note for a patent right does so subject to all the equities which existed between the original parties. This has been found of great advantage in the country parts of Ontario in the past. It may be right to extend it, but the hon. gentleman has not given us any reason to show that it is not a proper provision in regard to patent rights, though he says that, in that case, we ought to extend it to seed grain and other matters in regard to which frauds are committed. I would be quite willing to see the provision extended even to that seed grain possessing the miraculous powers which the hon. gentleman has referred to.

Mr. SPROULE. There is one very important consideration in connection with this matter which shows that it would be an advantage to have that provision here. That is, that the business men all over the country will probably have this Bill in pamphlet form, and will study it and will carry out their business according to the law as they find it here. Tens of thousands will carry out the provisions of this Act who will never see a copy of the criminal law; so that men who are taking notes, or having notes, or doing a banking business, would become better acquainted with the law under this Bill, and I think, if this provision were inserted here, it would come to the notice of many more than if it were left in the criminal law.

Mr. MASSON. I cannot agree with the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). I do not think this is a proper place in which to insert penal clauses, or to have legislation as to what notes should be given for. There is a provision that a person cannot give ordinary promissory notes for these articles which have been referred to. If a person is selling a patent right or anything of such a doubtful practical value, and takes a note for it, he is liable to a penalty, but he is allowed to take something which resembles a promissory note, though it must have stamped upon it something which destroys its value as a promissory note. It is no longer a promissory note in the meaning of commerce. It is, therefore, altogether different from negotiable securities. If this Bill is, as my hon. friend says, to be printed in pamphlet form, there might be an appendix giving a reference to the patent right documents, because those are not promissory notes in the sense which is understood by the commercial world. It would be a great disadvantage to this Bill to cumber it with a lot of criminal law and penal enactments. This is a Bill referring to bills and notes, and let it refer to them simply and not to other matters.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). If the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) is correct in saying that this Bill repeals the present Act, we should see that it does not repeal those provisions to which he has referred.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I see that I was mistaken in saying it did not repeal those provisions; but I understand that my hon. friend from Hastings (Mr. Burdett) is proposing to insert some such provisions in the criminal law, and I think it would be better to put them all together.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). It seems clear to me that this Bill repeals the former one. I would point out to the Minister of Justice that section 123 of 49 Vic., provides that such notes as have these words written across them are to be taken subject to those words. I understand that to mean that a transferee who accepts these notes should accept them subject to all the conditions between the original parties.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. If you incorporate these clauses in another Bill, you are in effect altering and amending this law by other measures.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We will allow this section to stand over for the present.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. If a bill is drawn upon him in the wrong name and he accepts it in that wrong name, is he liable?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes, under this Bill.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. You only say he may accept it in this wrong name, but it does not say that he shall be liable.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is a question of identity.

On section 42,

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That section stood for the reason that the words "within the customary time" are too vague. I propose that the section shall read "when a bill is duly presented for acceptance and is not accepted on the day of presentation or the next following business day."

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is the effect only to give two days for the acceptance of a bill?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Suppose the person is not at home, and there is no power of attorney to accept a bill.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is not presented in that case. At present the practice is to leave the bill for acceptance and to leave it until next day. The English Act says "the customary time," and we think that is too vague. There must be some limited time beyond which the bill shall not be allowed to remain without dishonor.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). For instance, in case of a member of this House not leaving at home a power of attorney to accept a bill, and it has to be sent here for his own acceptance—how would it work then? Is a bill not to be considered as presented until it reaches a member here, or is it presented when it reaches his place of business?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is not presented in that case. Section 41 regulates the subject: "presentment must be made by or on behalf of the holder to the drawee, or some person authorised to accept or to refuse acceptance on his behalf."

On section 45,

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. In sub-section 1, I propose to insert, after the word "bill," the words "or acceptance."

Mr. MONCRIEFF. In regard to section 45, I think it might be extended, so that when the place of payment is a township the bill should be presented at any post office in that township.

Mr. IVES. I should object to any such change, for in that case the bill should be presented to the man himself.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). The presentment at a post office would not be sufficiently definite; it should be either at the residence or place of business of the individual.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I will read an amendment which has been drafted, as follows:—

"Where the place of payment is not specified, as any city, town or village, and no place therein is specified, the bill is to be presented at the drawer's or acceptor's known place of business, or known ordinary residence, and if there be no such place of business or residence, the bill is to be presented at the post office or the principal post office in such city, town or village."

Mr. IVES. I think the presentation to the post office is a mere matter of form, for the purpose of holding the endorser responsible. It is no part of the duty of the postmaster to receive a deposit of money to meet a note, and, therefore, it is simply a bare form. Why not say that if a man has no residence and no place of business, that shall be in itself sufficient? You are not going to arrive at anything more by the compliance with the mere form of presenting the note at the post office.

Mr. DALY. I desire to call the attention of the Committee to section 87, which seems to me to revolutionise the whole law in connection with the presentation of promissory notes. The section now reads as follows:—

"1. Where a promissory note is in the body of it made payable at a particular place, it must be presented for payment at that place in order to render the maker liable; in any other case, presentment for payment is not necessary in order to render the maker liable."

That at present is not the law in the Province of Manitoba, nor in Ontario, though it may be in England as I understand. Particularly in our part of the country, the whole custom of carrying on business by accepting notes would be revolutionised by this section. I will give you an instance of what might occur. The Bank of Ontario at one time had a number of agencies in the Province of Manitoba, and some years ago they withdrew them. One of these agencies was at Portage la Prairie, and a number of machine notes were made payable there, and subsequent to the dates of these notes becoming due the bank had withdrawn its agency. The consequence was that in order to hold the makers of these notes responsible we had to present them before we sued, and there was no bank to present them at. If section 87 remains as it is, the maker could not be held responsible at all in such a case. It does not seem to me at all necessary that a note should be presented at a particular place, if it is made payable at that place, in order to hold the maker liable. It is a fact that, in order to recover from the maker of a note, you must present it before action at the particular place where it is made payable, or to the maker himself.

Mr. TISDALE. It would be a most extraordinary doctrine—and I do not think it can be the intention—to say that if I owe a man money, and give him a note payable at a particular place, I should be free from the debt, if I do not present it at that place on the date mentioned.

Mr. MULOCK. The Bill does not say anything about a particular date.

Mr. TISDALE. We are surely not going to relieve a man from a debt he owes on a technicality like that.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I do not think the section is at all as clear as it should be, and I think that some words should be inserted, so as to make the intention clear.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The stipulation is simply in accordance with the law?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

On section 26,

Mr. WELDON (St. John). In the case of persons acting in a representative capacity—for instance, as executors, who have to endorse notes—it ought to be made clear that they are only liable in their representative capacity, and no further.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The question is whether we should not adopt the existing law, or whether we should change the law, not only with regard to bills of exchange and promissory notes, but with regard to contracts generally. I think it is simpler to leave the law with regard to these contracts as it is with regard to other contracts.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The difficulty is that persons who sign notes as executors or agents do not suppose themselves to be personally liable, but find out afterwards that they are.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Executors who endorse notes are personally liable under the law, and I do not see what form of endorsement would relieve them.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). It seems to me, in reading this clause, that there is no more effective way of describing a man's character as an agent or representative than by using the very words which are mentioned here as not exempting him from personal liability.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The general doctrine is, I take it, that if a man merely puts an addition to his name as an agent or representative, that is merely a description of the man, and does not relieve him of personal liability; and he can only be relieved by using terms which show clearly that he is not signing as John Smith merely, but as the agent of somebody else. But an executor stands in a unique position: if he signs a note, he signs it in a capacity in which he must be personally liable; and I do not think you could use a form of words which would exempt him.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. If we had to make the law of contracts from the beginning, we might regard the philosophy of the view expressed by the hon. member for North Renfrew (Mr. White). But people often make additions to their names as mere descriptions, and I think there would be great difficulty in changing the law with regard to contracts, especially with regard to bills of exchange, which are contracts of an international character. It would not do to have the law on this subject here which would be different from that in England, without risk of very great inconvenience.

Committee rose and reported progress, and it being six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Bill (No. 109) respecting the Board of Trade of the city of Toronto (from the Senate).—(Mr. Small.)

SUPPLY.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. LAURIER. Before you leave the Chair, Sir, I desire to call the attention of the House to the expenditure lately incurred by the Government in connection with the Short Line Railway.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend will allow me, I would like to state to the House that the subject of the motion of which he has just given notice is one which affects the Minister of Railways, and for which he is responsible; and I am sorry to have to say that the right hon. the Minister of Railways is quite indisposed to-night and obliged to remain in his room. Under these circumstances, I am obliged to ask my hon. friend if he will postpone his motion until the next time we take up the Estimates?

Mr. LAURIER. I am sorry, and everybody will be sorry to hear that the right hon. the First Minister will not be in the House this evening, and, under the circumstances, I will accede to the request of the hon. gentleman. I give notice that the next time the House is asked to go into Committee of Supply, I will make the motion I intended to make to-night, provided the right hon. gentleman be present.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Salaries and contingent expenses of the several ports in the Province of Nova Scotia	$115,160
--	-----------

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I observe that in all the Provinces there is an increase in the expenditure. We were accustomed from time to time to have a small increase in one Province, but this seems to be such a general system of increase all over the Provinces that we should have a full explanation.

Mr. BOWELL. In Nova Scotia the increase is not very large, $2,605, and it is due to the following causes: A new port has been established at Spring Hill, in Amherst, which means an additional increase in the Estimates of $400. There was a preventive officer appointed at Fouchat, at $100; an additional preventive officer at Baddeck, at $100; and at Barrington, two preventive officers, for Shag Harbor and Wood Harbor, at $100 each. At Halifax, the small increase in the expenditure of $800, in connection with contingencies, has been unavoidable. The hon. gentleman knows that during the winter season the work at the port of Halifax is much greater than during the summer, and it has been found absolutely necessary to add an additional officer to attend to the vessels which arrive in the winter. At Liverpool, a preventive officer has been added, at $100, for Matoon; and at North Sydney there is an increase to the collector of $100. At Pictou, there is an increase to two officers—Mr. Russell and Mr. Johnson—of $100 each. Mr. Russell was appointed during the term of office of my hon. friends opposite, and has been in the service for ten or fifteen years, at $500 per year. He was recommended to me for an increase as being a first-rate officer, and I thought he was entitled to it.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Is he a good Tory?

Mr. BOWELL. No; I believe he belongs to the hon. gentleman's party.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). He is entitled to it, then.

Mr. KENNY. The hon. gentleman has no party. The Repeal party is dead.

Mr. BOWELL. I am glad to hear it. I only wish it were dead in other parts of the Empire as well as this. At Shelburne, there is an increase to Mr. Bolman of $100. He is an effective preventive officer, and entitled to more than $50, which he was receiving. At Truro, a new landing waiter had to be appointed at $500. I need scarcely explain that Truro is now the third important port at present in Nova Scotia, and the work is increasing so rapidly there that it was necessary to make this additional appointment. He will have to attend at the railway station. At Yarmouth, there is an increase of $50 to one officer and $100 to another, making a total increase of $2,605. There is a decrease in Annapolis. One man who had a salary of $500 died, and a new one was appointed at $400; and there has been a falling off in contingencies at Lunenburg of $100, making a net increase of $200. In New Brunswick the outports of Caraquet and Shippegan have been added to Bathurst; so that while there is an apparent increase, there is really no increase, because there is no estimate taken for those outports as ports. At Moncton there was an increase of $100 which was given to one of the officers. At St. John, owing to changes in the staff and sundry increases, there was an increase of $450. At St. Stephen, an additional man was found necessary to protect the upper bridge, at a salary of $500. At Woodstock, the changes in the staff necessitated an increase of $100, making a total of $2,810. From this you must deduct the saving by the adding of Caraquet and Shippegan to the port of Bathurst, amounting to $1,080 in the one case, and $630 in the other. At Dalhousie the place of one officer who received $310 has not been filled. At Newcastle, there has been the superannuation of McGruar, who received $600, and there has been an increase given to Wheeler of $100, but McGruar's position has not been filled, nor do I propose to fill it, so there is a saving there of $500. In Richibucto, the collector, who was receiving $1,100, has been superannuated, and a new man has been appointed at $800. An increase of $200 has been made to the salary of one of the preventive officers who performs duties at another portion of that port, making a net decrease of $100. There is, therefore, a saving of $2,695, leaving the net increase only $115.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). What was the age of the man who was superannuated at Newcastle?

Mr. BOWELL. I do not remember just now, but he was of an age which justified his superannuation. Mr. Rusk was superannuated at Richibucto, not so much on account of his age as because of his illness. He was unable longer to continue the work, and, when he applied for superannuation, his application was accompanied by doctors' certificates which justified it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Was Mr. Rusk's superannuation voluntary? I have been led to believe that he was practically forced out of the position.

Mr. BOWELL. No; as far as the Department is concerned, he was never even asked to retire. I know nothing of any outside influences that may have been brought to bear. Some four or five years ago, there were applications made to me to retire Mr. Rusk, but I refused. This retirement of his was voluntary, as far as I know.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have the best information, outside of the Department, that Mr. Rusk's retirement was forced upon him. The plea was his ill-health, but he did not wish to retire, and claimed that he could continue to perform his duties.

Mr. BOWELL. As far as I am concerned, this is the first intimation I have had of it, but I will take the trouble —

Mr. MITCHELL. To write to Mr. Rusk?

Mr. BOWELL. No; but to lay before the House whatever documents I have in reference to the question.

Mr. McMULLEN. That will not explain it.

Mr. BOWELL. Perhaps the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen) knows more about it than I do. I know of no pressure being brought to bear upon Mr. Rusk by anyone.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The general impression in the Province is that which has been stated by my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell).

Mr. BOWELL. I have no knowledge, directly or indirectly, that any pressure was brought upon Mr. Rusk to retire from the service.

Mr. MITCHELL. Speaking from memory, though I cannot say positively, I think I received a letter from Mr. Rusk himself complaining that he was being forced out of the Department, and that ill-health was made the plea, though he was still perfectly able to do the work.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Who is the person appointed in his place?

Mr. BOWELL. I think his name is Johnstone, but I will not be positive.

Mr. MITCHELL. Was that Reuben Johnstone? I would ask whether Mr. McGruar's superannuation was voluntary or was forced upon him?

Mr. BOWELL. I cannot answer positively at this moment. I know it was reported to me that he was not necessary, and his position has not been filled; so the office was not vacated for the purpose of filling it up.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. McGruar was a most reliable and faithful officer who had been there for years, and when I saw him last he was as capable of performing his duties as I am of performing mine, and I think I perform mine pretty well. Of course he may have asked for this, but I know he was a faithful officer and one who understood his duties much more than the person who succeeds him.

Mr. BOWELL. Does the hon. gentleman say that Mr. Wheeler is a man whose age would justify his superannuation?

Mr. MITCHELL. No, he is a younger man than Mr. McGruar, and he is perfectly competent to do his work; but what I complain of is, that an old and faithful servant, who is still qualified to perform his duties, should be forced out of the service while others who came in after him are retained. I do not think there were too many officers at that port, and, if Mr. McGruar did not ask for this superannuation, it was unfair that he should have to go out, when others who had come in afterwards and who were no more fit than he to perform the duties—perhaps not quite so fit—should be allowed to take his place.

Mr. BOWELL. As a general principle, I agree with the hon. gentleman, but if there are officers in a port and some of them are not wanted, the easiest and best way to deal with the matter is to superannuate the old officer and allow him to retire on whatever allowance may be due to him. I do not think the Government, or a Department, is justified in keeping a number of officers anywhere who are not required. If they were to be turned out without any consideration, there might be a very serious question as to whether it would be just to an old servant to deal with him in that way, but the object of the Superannuation Law, as I understand it, is to provide for just such cases as that of Mr. McGruar. If he were unable to perform his duties, he would retire on the amount provided by the law, and if he is not required, the law is clear as to how he should be provided for. I could not well act upon the rule laid down by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell). If this man could be retired, and the other was not old enough to be retired, while both stood equally well, the only course was to take the oldest man, and not to leave him in a position where his services were not required. At present my memory does not serve me as to why this was done, but I will let the hon. gentleman know.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). What is the amount of Rusk's superannuation?

Mr. BOWELL. He has been twelve years in the service, and he was receiving $1,100—it would be between $260 and $300. His successor was appointed at $800. I always thought that the salary paid to the collector at Richibucto was higher than the port demanded, and I told applicants distinctly that I would not appoint a successor at the same salary received by him.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. gentleman has made the plea of a non-requirement of so many officers at Newcastle a reason for dismissing Mr. McGruar. Of course, the hon. gentleman is judge of the number of officers needed, and of their character and education, and if he says they were not wanted, then I can say no more about the superannuation, except that I desire to know whether it was voluntary or not. It is my impression that there were not too many officers at that port, looking at the position of the port, at the long distance these tide-waiters have to go to watch vessels, and looking at the fact that a good deal of smuggling has been done all along the coast, of which one very notable case occurred a few years ago. My hon. friend may feel that he was perfectly right in lessening the number of officers in that place, but with all due deference to his official responsibility, I must differ from him. The hon. gentleman has chosen to give a definition of the object of the Superannuation Act. I regret very much that in carrying out that Act, other Departments of the public service have not acted in the same rigid manner in which the hon. gentleman's Department seems to have acted, particularly in the case of some of these Lower Provinces officials. I think if there is any one Act of this Legislature that has been abused and misused, it is that Superannuation Act. So far from economies having resulted from the operation of that Act and its application by the Administration of the day, I have no hesitation in saying that men have been discharged from employment and others put in their places when the former were as fit to perform the duties as many of those who have been appointed, and they are now actively engaged either in business, or in professions, or other work for which they are competent, and they are still drawing superannuation allowances. So far from the amount of the public charge for this service having been reduced, the superannuation list shows that a large amount of money has been appropriated, when it was necessary to create a vacancy for the purpose of serving some political party or friend. That has been my experience of the application of the Superannuation Act. Perhaps later on during the Session it may be necessary to make some reference to it, with a view of having the evil remedied for the future.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Do I understand that the hon. gentleman allows a superannuation allowance to this gentleman who was relieved of his office at Newcastle?

Mr. BOWELL. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He was removed, but not from any incapacity or bodily infirmity?

Mr. BOWELL. I am not aware that there was any bodily infirmity, but his age, his length of service, and the non-requirement of his services, justified his retirement.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Did it also justify the hon. gentleman in allowing him a superannuation allowance?

Mr. BOWELL. Certainly, you cannot well refuse him that. If he has served the requisite time and paid into the superannuation fund, the sum required by law, he should receive his superannuation allowance if there were no good reason for withholding it. He had reached the age which justifies a retirement; and, as I informed the House a moment ago, the position has not been refilled for the reason that I did not deem it necessary to add an additional officer to the staff at Newcastle, notwithstanding the influence of the representative from that constituency. I know that years ago there were four or five officers at that port. That was a time, as my hon. friend knows very well, when there was a large amount of ship-building, and a great deal more business done at Newcastle than there is at the present time. The smuggling to which he refers, occurs far beyond the jurisdiction of the officers at Newcastle, down the Miramichi. The two ports of Newcastle and Chatham are but a few miles apart, and I utilised the appraiser at Chatham, paying him an additional sum out of the contingencies, to go back and forward whenever his services are required as appraiser, and if I had deemed it necessary to appoint another officer I should not have superannuated McGruar, unless he had been reported to me as unfit for the service.

Mr. MITCHELL. You made an observation in reference to Mr. Rusk. You admitted that pressure had been brought to bear some few years ago. If my memory serves me aright, Mr. Rusk stated that the pressure had been going on for years with the object of getting him forced out, so as to make a vacancy for a friend of the Administration.

Mr. BOWELL. I should be very much obliged to the hon. gentleman if he can give me the information he has, in order that I may verify it if it is correct. I may say that it has been reported to me that Mr. Rusk's health was such as not to enable him to attend to the duties of the position he held. He was also savings bank agent, and he was obliged to entrust his work, in a great measure, to a clerk, whose reputation, as reported to me, was not such as justified me in retaining him.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). What is the cause of the increase in St. John? There are three officers superannuated this year; and the offices, I understand, are not filled up.

Mr. BOWELL. I have not filled all these positions. W. H. Olive was superannuated, saving $650; Isaac Olive, superannuated, $600; proposed increase to S. Robinson, gauger, $150; a new officer, Mr. McCart, $500, to take charge of the post office parcels, which, as the hon. gentleman knows, have swollen to a great number; in fact it is the distributing point to the most of Nova Scotia, the whole of New Brunswick, and part of Prince Edward Island. Mr. Gallagher was transferred from Woodstock at $600. There was an increase to G. H. Snider of $150, he having been promoted to some position in the statistical branch; and there are also some increases of $50 each. The net increase is, therefore, $450 after deducting superannuation.

Mr. ELLIS. Why does Mr. Stevens get such an increase? He was brought from Albert County, I think.

Mr. BOWELL. Because he is a first-class officer, and has been placed in an important position in the Department. The report says that he is an officer well fitted for the position he now holds, and he does not receive more than that to which he is entitled, considering the work which he has to perform.

Mr. ELLIS. The circumstance that he was brought to St. John created much jealousy among the local officers, and his appointment was not considered a fair one. Will the Minister take into consideration the claims of the tide-waiters, who complain that they do not get enough to live on. They have applied several times for a small increase, and while other officers obtain increases, no increase is given to those officials.

Mr. BOWELL. Several of the officers included in the list I read, covering those who received advances, are tide-waiters or landing waiters, and I have increased their salaries as the vote at my command would justify. The hon. gentleman says that repeated applications have been made for an increase. That is not an uncommon circumstance. There are about 1,000 Customs officers throughout the Dominion, and an advance of $100 to each represents $100,000. In spite of the considerable increase of business throughout the Dominion, only a few thousand dollars more than last year are asked; and the Committee will find that I have not been over-extravagant, but, on the contrary, have watched the expenditure pretty closely.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Has Mr. Roxborough been appointed to a position?

Mr. BOWELL. No. From what I hear of the gentleman, however, I would be very glad to appoint him if there was any vacancy to fill. With respect to Prince Edward Island the amount asked, $19,885, is an increase of only $300. That increase arises from the Department having to rent a larger examining warehouse and appraisers' room in Charlottetown.

Mr. ROBERTSON. It appears that officers in Prince Edward Island are treated differently from those in New Brunswick. There was an officer removed at Georgetown, but he was not superannuated.

Mr. BOWELL. I discussed the whole question referred to by the hon. gentleman last year. Perhaps it will be better to leave the discussion why that gentleman was superannuated, to the time when the question of superannuation will come up, as has been intimated by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell). I shall be very glad to repeat what I said then; and I may say that if any other officer was placed under similar circumstances, and similar reports were presented to me by the officials, I would not hesitate to act in the same way.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. Minister stated to the Committee last year that he knew of no other instance where a man had been employed by the Government at a salary of $400 or $500 a year, at all events in his own Department, who had been so dealt with. This official at Georgetown was appointed in 1873, and contributed to the superannuation fund from that time until his dismissal in 1889. I rather gathered from the remarks of the hon. gentleman at that time, although he did not say it in so many words, that this being the only instance, he would take it into his consideration, although he did not say his favorable consideration. Although by no means an advocate of the maintenance of the superannuation system as it at present exists, still I think that to select a man who had been seventeen years in the service, during which he had paid to the fund, and to dismiss him without any charge being made against him—for the Minister does not allege any charge of incapacity or lack of attention, but his discharge was simply in the interests of the Department, as the Minister thought there were more officials than were required—appears to be a harsh proceeding. The question is whether it is fair and just, when a Superannuation Act is on the Statute-book, and contributions had been received for seventeen years from an employé, to dismiss him without any gratuity, while day after day we are removing men and granting superannuation allowances. Unless there are some distinct facts taking this case out of the ordinary category, it seems as if the Minister had not done justice to this Georgetown official. It seems a harsh and unjust proceeding to sentence him to dismissal and not allow him anything. If that principle is to be applied, let it be applied all round. Some Government officials receive superannuation allowances sufficient to enable them to live in ease and luxury in any country. While I do not desire to open up the general question, I must say that while this statute remains part of our law, the Minister should apply that measure of justice to this officer which he metes out to other officials in different parts of the Dominion.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I do not know that I can take exception to the explanations of the Minister so far as Nova Scotia is concerned. The increases are small under the circumstances, and we must be prepared for the ordinary statutory advances which are made to those in the public service. I desire to call the attention of the Minister to another matter. I received a letter shortly before leaving Halifax, in which it was stated that several of the officials in the Customs Department, who had been there for a short time, had received advances in salary, while those who had been appointed by the previous Government were omitted. I cannot make that statement from my own knowledge, because I have not the letter this moment at hand, but friends of one of the parties who feels aggrieved wrote me and asked me to bring this matter to the notice of the Minister of Customs, which I now do. I trust those who have been in the Department for a long time, and have proved themselves efficient public servants are not to be deprived of increases simply on the ground that they do not hold the same political views as the Minister of Customs. I should like to ask the Minister whether Mr. Garrison, the surveyor of the port, has yet passed his examination and obtained his position?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes, he has. He passed the examination, and since he obtained a certificate he has been promoted to the position of surveyor. The promotion was made shortly after the last examination during the present season.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). At all events, he is indebted to the Government for three years of probation, to enable him to learn what an ordinary intelligent man would have acquired in a very short time. If he has passed his examination, and is regularly appointed, I have nothing more to say, although the hon. Minister of Customs knows the views I entertain on that subject.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think it will commend itself to the sense of justice and fair play of the hon. Minister, that an employé who, for years, pays into the superannuation fund a certain allowance, and who is dismissed without any charge of wrong-doing or incapacity against him, should, at least, receive the sum which he paid in, with interest, if he does not get superannuation. There is an implied contract between the Government and the man who, year after year, pays into this fund, and it should be respected. I do not say that it is compulsory on the Government to take this course, but I do say that the conduct of the Government, since this Act has come in force, has established precedents from which it is to be inferred that "may" will read as "shall," and that every man who comes within the terms of the Act should receive the allowance which the Act provides. There is no ground on which the Government can retain the money paid in by an official, year after year, to the superannuation fund, when that official is relieved of his office. If you do not grant him an allowance, surely, in common justice, you must return the money with interest, that he has paid. I happen to know this gentleman of whom I am speaking, personally. He is as honest a man as you can find anywhere; but he has the misfortune, in this instance, to be a very good Liberal, as he has been all his life, and I know of no other reason why justice should be withheld from him. I cannot imagine what could enter into the mind of the Minister of Customs to deprive him of the superannuation allowance; but now that the matter has been brought to his attention, I trust that the hon. gentleman, if he does not grant Mr. Hesson an allowance, will return to him the money, with interest, which he has paid into the fund. I cannot see how this policy of making fish of one and flesh of another can be justified.

Mr. BOWELL. Allow me to refer to the remarks made by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), and then I shall endeavor to give the reasons why the gentleman to whom he has referred from Prince Edward Island, was not superannuated. I do not know that I can be responsible (and I trust he is not) for the correctness of the contents of letters which he may receive from officials, or from anyone else in Halifax. I scarcely think there is any member of this House who will accuse me of having treated the officials in the Customs Department in any other way than that which I believe they deserved, irrespective of their politics, or of who appointed them. When a case of that kind can be pointed out, I shall be prepared to deal with it. If the hon. gentleman will tell me who this party is who has not received justice, I shall be better able to dispose of his case.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I think it was Mr. Cronin.

Mr. BOWELL. I don't know who he is or what his politics are. I generally act on the reports I get from the collector, as to increasing salaries, when they are increased, or on the report of the inspector as to the efficiency of each of the officers. In reference to the Prince Edward Island case, I may say an hour or two was occupied in fully discussing it last year. I told the House then, that the reason I did not recommend Mr. Hesson to be put on the superannuation allowance was because of the fact that he had been drawing $400 a year for a number of years, and literally did nothing for it. I thought if he was a pensioner at $400 a year at any port, without returning any service for it, that it would be neither right nor proper to place him during the remainder of his life upon the superannuation list, or, in other words, to keep him a pensioner as long as he lived, when he had been drawing a large sum of money for years and years without giving any return for it. I read the report made by the inspector then, and I found that, in fact, Mr. Hesson had been engaged in farming, and had done little or nothing for the Customs Department. I am not prepared to say that I blame Mr. Hesson for not going to the Customs house, because, as it was reported to me, there was nothing for him to do, as the collector and the other officer were quite sufficient to discharge all the duties required at that port. I came to the conclusion that if a man had been drawing $400 a year, less what he paid into the superannuation fund, from the Government, or from any private individual, for sixteen or seventeen years, and that for the last eight or ten years he had done comparatively nothing in return for that money, that he was not one of those cases which justified me in placing him on the superannuation list. I have no objection to bring down all the papers connected with this matter, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davies) will then see whether or not I was justified in the course I pursued. The hon. gentleman cannot, surely, lay down the principle that if a man is appointed to a position, where there is nothing for him to do, and he does it, and also draws remuneration for that kind of labor, that that man should be put on the superannuation list and remain a burden on the revenue. I do not hold myself responsible, even individually, for the superannuation law as it stands on the Statute-book. I was one of the few, when it was introduced in 1869, who opposed it very strongly for reasons which have been advanced by gentlemen of the Opposition. I must, however, say frankly that where the power is properly exercised, in many cases it is to the advantage of the public service that it should continue to be the law; and if I should find others in the service occupying precisely the same position as that occupied by Mr. Hesson, drawing a salary for years and doing nothing for it, I think I should be quite justified in retiring them without allowing them pensions.

Mr. PERRY. The reason given by the Minister for not employing Mr. Hesson is a very reasonable one; but the reason he gives for not allowing him a superannuation in return for the money he had paid in for years is a very lame one. So long as this superannuation business is continued, if a man who is not a friend of the Government is to be deprived of the benefit of it, we ought to know it. It is a reflection on the Department if they keep men in office who are not wanted.

Mr. BOWELL. I accept the castigation. The hon. gentleman is quite right: I ought to have dismissed him five or six years ago.

Mr. PERRY. Thank fortune, I am right for once. I shall say no more on that subject, because the hon. member for Queen's County has put the case so strongly that I need say nothing more about it. But I want to call the attention of the Minister to another matter. It appears by the Auditor General's Report that last year the sub-collector for Alberton got $50 extra, while the sub-collector for Tignish got nothing extra, although, in addition to his duties as sub-collector, he does the work for which there is a preventive officer at Alberton. There was a preventive officer at Tignish two or three years ago, but the Minister dismissed him. I asked him why he had done so, and he said that he was not wanted, as the revenue could be collected without one. I understood then that the $50 that had gone to the preventive officer would go to the sub-collector, who has been doing the work, but he has not got it. Although he is a friend of mine, unfortunately for myself he is not a Grit, but a red, raw Conservative; but I stand up here to represent the Tories of Tignish as well as the Grits, and I want the Government to do justice to them; if they do not, I am afraid they will lose their votes next time. The sub-collector at Tignish is a very excellent officer, and why he should be deprived of the $50 which is given to the sub-collectors at Port Hill and at Alberton should be explained. If he is not a good officer, dismiss him. I will not say appoint a Grit; but while he is there, he has a right to justice and fair play, and he should receive his lawful allowance, such as others are getting under the same Government for doing the same work.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I should be very much pleased if the hon. Minister would bring down the report of the Georgetown case, because I feel satisfied that he has been led astray with regard to it. The report was made by his inspector, but, as I took the opportunity of informing myself last summer, the inspector was there only for half an hour or an hour, and obtained his information from the other officials, who were very anxious to get Mr. Hesson removed, and their report will be found to be a cooked report, which has led the Minister astray. I have made enquiries with reference to Mr. Hesson, and I have learned from the inhabitants of Georgetown that he was always at his post when there was work to be done, and that he spent no more time on his farm than the head of the Department did. He was made to attend the steamer Northern Light during the whole winter while she was running, while the others were not taking any hand in the matter. This I think I shall be able to prove. I think it is very unjust indeed that Mr. Hesson should have been removed, while an official who was appointed at a later date was kept on to do the work. If there was not enough work for two men, why not dismiss the one appointed later, and retain the older official? I think a great injustice was done to this man, and I hope the Minister will bring down the report, so that we may see it and get an opportunity of contradicting it.

Mr. BOWELL. I read it to the House last year, and the hon. gentleman can see it in Hanward. I have no objection to bringing down the report, although the hon. gentleman has had a whole year to contradict it.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I made the same contradiction last year, but I informed myself more fully on the subject during last summer, and I am in a position to contradict it again.

Mr. SCRIVER. I desire to call the attention of the hon. Minister to a fact which I should have spoken of when the items for the Province of Quebec were under consideration, and that is some changes which have been made by which some of the ports on the frontier, which were formerly independent ports, have been made outports, and are now reporting to the principal port on the frontier. This new system increases the work of the collector, to whom the reports are made, very materially, and I would like to ask the hon. gentleman whether he has considered the propriety of compensating that officer somewhat for that extra work. In this one instance—although that gentleman has not complained to me in any way, and I do not think he has ever, being a most modest man, made any demand on the Department—it is to my knowledge that his work has been materially increased, and he is certainly entitled to compensation.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman is referring to Hemmingford ?

Mr. SCRIVER. Yes.

Mr. BOWELL. In order to lessen as much as possible the work at the head office in the statistical branch, so as to avoid the necessity of putting on additional clerks, I have reduced, wherever I possibly could, the small ports in the different Provinces to outports, and the consequence is that the work, which otherwise would be done here, is done at the principal port. Hemmingford, for instance, has had two or three small ports attached to it as outports, and they report to Hemmingford instead of to Ottawa, so that we get one statistical return instead of several. This has two effects. It reduces the work here and it reduces the contingent expenses, such as for books and stationery, formerly supplied to the different ports. The case mentioned by the hon. gentleman I have not forgotten. In fact I consider that an officer of that kind, who has much additional labor and responsibility imposed upon him, should have his case considered, and I shall take it into consideration. I may mention in connection with other ports in the eastern portion of the Province of Quebec, that they have been attached to the port of Montreal wherever it was convenient to do so. I shall not forget what the hon. gentleman has called my attention to.

Mr. SCRIVER. I should like to refer to one other matter of more importance, with reference to which I have had some private conversation with the hon. Minister, and that is the great abuse existing upon our long frontier at what are called line stores—stores built upon the boundary line, partly in Canada and partly in the United States. They are numerous, and are made the means of illicit traffic, not only in general merchandise, which is of lesser importance, but in what is a great deal worse, the sale of liquor; and under the existing state of things it is almost impossible to reach the proprietors and punish them. My hon. friend, the President of the Council, who, like myself, represents a frontier county, must know how great this abuse is and how desirable it is to reach and to correct it. I know there are some difficulties connected with it. I suppose the only way will be to have a small part of territory on either side of the line set apart, and regulations made to prevent any building being constructed upon it. This, of course, could not be done without some conference with the Provincial and State authorities; but it is a question well worth being made the subject of negotiation between the two Governments, calling in the Provincial and State Governments, and I trust the hon. gentleman will give it his attention again. I know he did, some years ago, attempt to remedy the evil by legislation, which I had to tell him at the time, I thought, would be inoperative, and which proved so. I trust he will not be discouraged, but will, in some way or other, communicate with the authorities at Washington with regard to this question.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman very properly states that I did attempt to introduce a clause into the Customs Act, to prevent, as far as possible, the abuse to which he has called the attention of the Committee; and he will remember that the question of Provincial rights at once was raised. It was contended that the Dominion Government had no right whatever to declare where a man's house should be built, nor have we any authority similar to that contained in the Customs Act of the United States of pulling down houses built upon the line, where they considered smuggling was being carried on. The hon. gentleman might have gone further and said, that, after the discussion in the House, it was found absolutely necessary to withdraw that clause; but the question of preventing smuggling and the abuses which do exist on the frontier has not been lost sight of by the Department. While there have been no direct negotiations with the United States Government, there have been negotiations carried on by some of my officers, under my instructions, with the special agents of the United States, in order that they might co-operate, as far as possible, within the law, in preventing these abuses; but it is almost impossible, where there is a mere imaginary line, and where these line buildings exist, to prevent smuggling going on. It has been known that in the cellars of these buildings they have their barrels of liquor set upon little tramways, so that when the Canadian official goes into the Canadian portion of the building, these barrels are run into the United States and cannot be touched; and the reverse practice is followed when an American official goes into the American part of the building. Sometimes the officials of both countries enter the building together, then the proprietor has no chance of escape; but, with such a long frontier and such a number of buildings along the line, it is almost impossible to accomplish the object we have in view. If in the past there had been half a mile or a mile a side set apart, on which it was declared these houses could not be built, the difficulty might have been prevented, but I scarcely think it can be now.

Mr. SCRIVER. I do not at all think it necessary to declare so large a territory as that as neutral.

Mr. BOWELL. Even five or ten rods will scarcely prevent it. There are very few people outside this House who think it is any particular harm or sin to smuggle.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Under a preventive tariff only.

Mr. BOWELL. I suppose that is a greater incentive; but I do not think any one in Canada knows better than the hon. gentleman that, under his 17½ per cent. tariff, there was a great deal of smuggling carried on in this country. If he has any doubt he can examine the records of the Customs Department, and he will find that seizure after seizure was continually made along the frontier, and will continue to be made, whether the tariff be 5, 20 or 30 per cent. I can assure the hon. gentleman that everything which can be done departmentally will be done to put a stop to that kind of smuggling.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I would like to ask what amount of salary the preventive officer at Port Burwell, in my county, who is named Backhouse, receives, and what amount he collects? I believe he receives $200 a year. I should also like to know the amount of revenue collected at Port Stanley, where, I think, the collector receives $300 a year. There is also Port Bruce where the preventive officer receives $100 a year, but what services he renders I cannot say. I would also like to ask why the Minister finds it necessary this year to take an increased vote of $800 for the laboratory in the Customs Department, when only $4,691 was expended in 1888-89? Does the hon. gentleman expect that the Department will be more extravagantly run, or that more business will be transacted, or that higher salaries will be paid, or what is the reason for his making this increased demand?

Mr. BOWELL. If the hon. gentleman had turned to page 25 of the Trade and Navigation Returns, he would have obtained all the information which he has asked for in reference to the port and outports of St. Thomas. I need scarcely tell him that the port of St. Thomas is increasing very rapidly. Formerly the present collector was receiving nearly $900 a year at Port Burwell, but the business there had fallen off to such an extent as to justify his removal to St. Thomas, where he now receives $1,200 a year, and collects nearly $70,000. Port Burwell was reduced to an outport, where the officer receives $200, and last year he collected $187.77. The officer is kept there more as a preventive officer to protect the revenue than to collect duties. At Port Stanley the collection amounted to $539.44. The present sub-collector takes the place of Mr. Finlay, who was removed from Port Stanley to St. Thomas, being a very good officer, and the postmaster at Port Stanley was appointed preventive officer there at $300, while his predecessor received $500 or $600. The outport of Bruce is referred to by the hon. gentleman, who says he does not know what the officer there does. Neither do I. I am precisely in the same position as the hon. gentleman. I know nothing more than that I found him there when I came into the Department, as a preventive officer to prevent smuggling at that point. Last year he collected $12. I must inform the House that there are many points along the frontier, more in the east than in the west, and particularly in the Maritime Provinces, where preventive officers are employed, receiving from $100 to $200 and $250 a year, who make no collections, but whom it is necessary to have on the border, in order to prevent the illicit traffic which would otherwise be carried on. As to the Customs laboratory, I will not detain the House by reading the account I have of the work which is done there. I have increased the salary of the two young ladies who perform work there by $60 a year each. We have now an immensely increased work arising from the testing of molasses from all parts of the country, and that will devolve an extra amount of work upon the officers. If the system is adopted of testing molasses by the polariscope, it may be necessary to place another officer on the staff to carry on the work. We lay it down as a principle that, no matter how many samples may arrive during the day, they are all tested and the reports forwarded by mail or telegraph that night, whether it takes the officers to six o'clock, or to ten, or eleven, or twelve o'clock at night. We never allow the receipts of one day to remain over for the next. I could give the hon. gentleman, if he desired it, a full statement of the number of tests and the amount of work performed in that laboratory. I am quite certain that there is no department of the Customs, either in Canada or elsewhere, where so much work is performed, and is done as well, for so small an amount of expenditure, as the work which is performed in the laboratory of the Customs Department here. The contingencies will necessarily increase, because we pay the express charges upon the samples of sugar and molasses which are sent from different parts of the Dominion to the laboratory in Ottawa. We anticipate a large increase in that, and, consequently, the contingencies must increase in proportion.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I can understand the increase of the two $60. I am not going to complain of my hon. friend the Minister of Customs for increasing the ladies' salaries. That is what most of us would do, but that would only amount to $120. He says there is an increase in the cost of testing molasses, but he has not given us any data to show that that will amount to the difference between his expenditure in 1889 and his estimates for the present year. What I wanted to know was where the increase was likely to take place in the laboratory, amounting to between $1,000 and $2,000.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman is wasting his time. The increase is only $800.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). The hon. gentleman's estimate last year was greater than his expenditure in 1888 and 1889. The hon. gentleman referred me to a blue-book, and, if the hon. gentleman himself will look at the Auditor General's Report, he will get all the information in regard to this matter. He will find that the expenditure was only $4,691.94, and yet the estimates for the years 1889 and 1890 were $5,200, and for 1890 and 1891 they are $6,000, showing a continual increase, and showing also that the expenditures do not warrant the estimates which the hon. gentleman has made.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman knows that no matter how much I ask for, I never spend more than is necessary. I always make it a rule to ask for all I think is necessary in order that I may not have to come down for supplementaries. I am glad to be able to inform the House and my hon. friend that in the 11 years of my experience I have never had to ask for a supplementary to my ordinary expenditure; if there has been a supplementary, it has been for extraordinary expenditure.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I want to ask the hon. gentleman about this vote for the administration of the Chinese Immigration Act. I remember some years ago we appointed a commission to examine the question, of which commission the Secretary of State was the head, and the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) was the secretary. They presented a very elaborate report that cost the country between $25,000 and $30,000. Parliament, in its wisdom, saw fit to throw that overboard, and legislate on lines altogether different from those recommended by the commission. So far as the Chinese Immigration Act is concerned, he would be a pretty clever man who would be able to justify it on the report of the commission we appointed. But taking the Act as it is, I find that we have in the hon. gentleman's Department a controller of Chinese immigrants at a small salary, and we have an interpreter at a salary of $1,000, and another interpreter at $300, making altogether an expenditure of $2,000 a year. I would like some information as to the work done by these officials, for I am much inclined to think some of them are in a similar position to poor Hesson at Georgetown, and that they are appointed to draw their salaries, and that is all they do.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman is just about as far astray in his estimation of this Act, as he was in reference to the gentleman who was superannuated on the Island of Prince Edward. I know of no one who receives the salaries to which he refers. The Act provides for the appointment of controllers at every port where the Chinese were likely to arrive in Canada. I appointed one controller, that is the Deputy Minister here, and in addition to his salary he gets $400 per annum. I did appoint an officer at Victoria who received $1,600. He was a joint officer of the Customs and a collector under the controller, Mr. Hamley. The Chinese business having fallen off in Victoria to such an extent, I did not deem it necessary to continue that officer, hence he was retired without being superannuated.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He was not within the Act.

Mr. BOWELL. No, perhaps not. I utilised all the collectors in British Columbia, by making them controllers in addition to their position as collectors, but I gave them no additional pay. They act as controllers under the Chinese Act, and they act as collectors of Customs without any additional remuneration. In Victoria at present, the only person employed is the collector, who, when a vessel arrives, has power to employ some one who understands the Chinese language to go and receive the certificates of those who come in, or to collect what may be termed the poll-tax. In Vancouver, there is an employé, who is not permanent, who receives a dollar a day for performing the same work under the collector, but the collector receives no extra pay for what he does. There are only three officers in the employment of the Government, under the Chinese Act, who receive any remuneration whatever. The work the collectors do can be better understood when I state the number of immigrants who arrive and the certificates which have been granted. During the year ending 30th June, 1889, there came to Vancouver 739 immigrants; there were 235 registrations, 300 certificates of leave, and the collections amounted to $37,367.50, for which the collector received no remuneration for the work he performed. At Victoria, there were only 34 immigrants, 509 registrations, 991 certificates of leave, and a total collection of $2,945.50. At New Westminster there were no immigrants, but 26 registrations, 27 certificates of leave, and $40 collected. In Winnipeg there was one immigrant, one certificate of leave, and $51 collected. In Emerson, Manitoba, there was one immigrant, and $50 collected. At Montreal, there were six immigrants, one registration, one certificate of leave, and a collection of $301.50. In Ottawa there was one immigrant, one registration, two certificates of leave, and a collection of $52.50; making a total of immigrants during the present year of 894; registration, 772; certificates of leave, 1,322, and a total collection of $40,808. I might deduct, however, the amount collected, in error, from five immigrants exempted, under the law, from payment of fees, at Vancouver, $250. This is the work that has been performed, and the hon. gentleman will see from the statement I have made that the insinuation thrown out by him that there have been appointments merely for the sake of paying them out of the Chinese fund, and that they are living there, as Mr. Hesson was, without doing anything for the salaries they receive, is not founded in fact, nor is it correct in any one particular. There is no Chinese controller other than the one I have mentioned, who is receiving any salary, and that is the assistant commissioner in the city of Ottawa, who receives $400, and the $1 or a $1.50 a day that is paid to the gentlemen in Victoria and Vancouver, where they are required to interpret Chinese invoices, or to assist, when the immigrants arrive, to see that no frauds are committed on the revenue. The interpreter in Vancouver is Chinese. So that really the only expenditure for this purpose during the whole time has been some five or six hundred dollars.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I wish to correct two statements the hon. gentleman made, not of very much importance, but it would be just as well that he should not have made them. One is that I insinuated that there were a number of employés administering this Chinese Act who were not doing anything; and the other was that Mr. Hesson, to whom I referred, did no work in Georgetown, and, therefore, he was dismissed. Taking the whole statement, as the hon. gentleman must have heard it, as made by the hon. member who represents the county, the work Mr. Hesson did was to attend on the wharf where the steamboat arrives that plies between Georgetown and Nova Scotia. And, therefore, I repeat the statement is inexcusable. As regards the alleged insinuation, I made no insinuation; I simply asked a question in regard to the administration of the Chinese Act. I have my own opinion as to the justice or injustice of exacting the poll-tax, and, in my opinion, that amount is unjustly taken from those immigrants.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman does not pretend to say that I corrected him unjustly.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I was expressing my opinion as regards the injustice of the Act. I should like to obtain some explanation of an item which appears on page 189—E, Auditor General's Report, "extra services to J. C. Rykert, $1,000."

Mr. BOWELL. So far as my recollection goes, that amount was to cover travelling expenses in connection with visiting different parts of the coast. He is an officer placed on the boundary between British Columbia and Washington Territory, near the Columbia River, from which goods are carried from Sandpoint on the Northern Pacific up the Kootenay River to the miners' camps in the interior. He is a salaried officer, but not on the permanent list. The hon. gentleman is aware that the cost of travelling in British Columbia is very large. I believe the $1,000 in question is an expenditure that was incurred a year ago, and it was in connection with the officer's journey from Victoria to the place where he is now stationed, and for other services rendered while at that point.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He is an officer there?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) When was he appointed?

Mr. BOWELL. Three or four years ago.

Public Buildings, Ontario.....$202,875

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the total cost of the Almonte post office?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The total cost, including the site, will be about $30,000.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I notice that $6,500 is asked for Brantford public building. I suppose the same necessity did not exist when Mr. Fleming represented that constituency as exists now?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I suppose the matter was being investigated at that time.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I notice a vote of $10,000 for the Brantford Battalion drill shed. The necessity was pointed out last year, when it was shown that the drill shed was on leased land, and that the lease expired last spring. The battalion is a very live and active one, but the quarters are altogether insufficient, and the new drill shed is absolutely required. Plans have been prepared and approved, and I believe the battalion is exceedingly well pleased with the plan. The members are very anxious, however, that work should be commenced. Perhaps the Minister will state in what condition the works are, and whether he expects the new building will be commenced at a very early date?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The plans having been received specifications are being prepared, and as soon as they are prepared, which cannot be long, tenders will be called for.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Is the amount, $1,625, sufficient to complete Cobourg post office?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The work will cost $24,000, and $10,000 more will be required.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). How much more will be required for the Gananoque post office beyond the $750 now asked?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That sum will complete it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How much has the Government Printing Bureau cost up to date?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have only the cost of the building; I have not what was expended by the Department of the Secretary of State for the plant and machinery. The cost for the building is: in 1888, $53,000; 1889, $182,000; 1890, $26,000; balance due on the contract, on the first January, 1890, for additional works carried out in connection with the erection of the buildings, inclusive of the fittings and furniture, $27,000. Introduction of the Edison electric light system, as recommended by the Chief Engineer, $8,575. The vote required to meet the final payments for erection of buildings, and to provide for the introduction of electric light, is $32,000. From that it appears that this amount will complete the building as far as we can see now.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). How much did the London military building cost up to date?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. From the 1st July, 1886, to the 29th June, 1887, $82,000; 1888, $30,000; 1889, $115,000; 1890, $3,790. The vote of $8,800 is for building the school, stables, stores, &c., called for by the Department of Militia and Defence.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I do not wish to complain, but I must remark that it is strange, indeed, that all of these very large appropriations made annually, or nearly all, are for constituencies represented by Conservatives. I may say that Brantford is, perhaps, an exception; but we know that the representative for Brantford (Mr. Pater-son) is deserving of an extra amount of respect at the hands of the Conservatives. I maintain that the system adopted by the Government in this respect is hardly fair to the country, though it may be fair to the supporters of the Government. I may call the attention of the Government to the fact we have in Woodstock one of the finest towns in Western Ontario, where we have a large amount of revenue from the Customs and Post Office, but on account of its being represented by Oliver Mowat in the Local Legislature, and by an opponent of the present Government in this House, no effort is being made by the Government to erect any public building there. This is a sufficient proof of the course which the Government is adopting in this matter, and I hold that it is neither fair nor just that a donation of this kind should be made to those who are willing to come here and support the Government of the day.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Before this item is adopted, I would like to make a remark or two, with reference to a request which I believe has been made to the hon. the Minister of Public Works for the erection of a public building in the very important town of Paris, Ont., to accommodate the Post Office, Customs house and Inland Revenue, similar to the buildings which have been erected in other towns of the same size and from which about the same revenue is derived. My hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Wilson) has alluded to the fact that there has been an exception in the way the Government has dealt in the erection of public buildings in counties represented by supporters of the Government and those who do not support them. He seems to think that the county I have the honor to represent has been treated exceptionally, as there is a vote in the Estimates for a drill shed in the city of Brantford. My hon. friend will remember that the people of Brantford have dealt very liberally in that matter, by granting $10,000 of their own money before asking the Government to make a grant, and it has been an understood rule that a municipality which would come forward and aid the Government in that way would be entitled to consideration, and I am very happy to bear my testimony that Brantford did receive consideration. I understand that the town of Paris met the Minister in the same way, in reference to a public building, by offering to provide a site. That, I think, very few, if any, towns have done; and if the hon. Minister looks at the receipts he will find the position in which that town stands as compared with other towns. In Almonte, Brantford, Gananoque, Cobourg, Prescott, Strathroy, Walkerton and some others which I might mention, I think the receipts are less; and in none of these cases that I am aware of has the municipality met the Minister with an offer to provide a free site. I think there is a great deal of force in what has been urged from this side, that there should be a fair system pursued in regard to grants for the erection of public buildings. All parts of the country contribute to the revenues out of which these public buildings are erected, and while the demands of all points cannot be met at once, it does seem fair that towns approaching in population, in business importance, and in revenue, to towns to which like favors have been given, are entitled to consideration at the hon. Minister's hands. I quite agree with the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Wilson) that the town of Woodstock, which will soon be a city, is almost exceptional in the treatment it has received. Its revenue is about $14,000, and I think it presents a clear and patent case for a public building. That matter has been brought to the hon. Minister's attention by the hon. member for that riding, who, I think, is well able to attend to it. But I think the hon. Minister will see that the town whose claims I am urging on his consideration, though not standing in as strong a position as that town, stands in quite as strong a position as a dozen or more other towns whose claims have been considered. I believe the representations came too late for him to consider with reference to the original Estimates, but I should like some information from him, if he is at liberty to give it, as to how he views the application in connection with the offer made by the town in regard to procuring a free site.

Mr. TAYLOR. I want to correct a statement the hon. gentleman has made with reference to Gananoque, that it, among other towns, had done nothing towards providing a site. The town of Gananoque provided a free site worth $2,000 on which to erect a post office.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I do not need to be corrected, for I spoke subject to correction. I stated that few, if any, had provided a site. I think in the great majority of cases I was probably right. Gananoque may be an exception.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. My hon. friend is right when he says that other places have offered sites. In several instances we have erected buildings upon them, but in other cases we did not feel at liberty to erect buildings, as we thought the amount of the revenues at present received would not justify the expense. I do not remember the circumstance of Paris offering a site, but the hon. gentleman says it has, and I suppose it is so. I have taken a note of the case, as I did of the case of Woodstock. I do not suppose these cases were brought so prominently before my Department as other cases, and I have not laid them before my colleagues; but I have made a note of the different cases brought before me, and I will not fail, as soon as they are ready, to lay them before the Privy Council for its decision. That is all I can say just now.

Public Buildings, Manitoba..... $36,000

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Why is this large vote of $15,000 taken for immigration buildings at Winnipeg? Almost every year we have a very large sum expended on these buildings.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is nothing expended. The hon. gentleman will see that we had a vote of $5,000 last year, and we ask a re-vote of the same sum this year, with $10,000 additional, because we expect to go on with the buildings this year.

Public Buildings, N. W. Territories, $134,500

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). How much is the residence for the Lieutenant Governor at Regina going to cost before it is completed?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is expected that it will cost about $42,000 altogether.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Would it not be just as well for the Government to consider whether it is in the interests of the public that an expensive building should be erected in the North-West Territories for the Lieutenant Governor? The Lieutenant Governors receive liberal salaries, and they might provide themselves with residences the same as anybody else. I think the country will consider this a very extravagant and unjustifiable expenditure.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). One of the difficulties about an expenditure of this kind is that there is no certainty of Regina continuing to be the seat of Government when a division of the North-West Territories takes place. The Government have already marked out, for certain purposes, four districts into which the Territories are divided. If the settlement of the country goes forward with any rapidity at all, the time will come when it will be necessary to establish a Province, and the Government will not undertake to embrace the whole of that territory, from the western boundary of Manitoba to the Rocky Mountains, in one Province. That will be inconvenient, and the probability is that the trade and intercommunication of the people of that territory will not lie in any one direction, or to one central point, and a natural division as well, which ought to be the basis of a political division, will no doubt take place. We have no assurance that this point, at which this expenditure is taking place, will be the seat of Government at all. It may not be the capital of the Province when the Province is established. It may not be a convenient or a central part; and it does seem to me that before that fact is clearly established it is an unwise proceeding to expend a very large sum to any such purpose.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It must take several years before that territory is divided into Provinces, and during that time the Lieutenant Governor of the territory must have a proper residence. The expenditure of $40,000 or $50,000 for that purpose is not an excessive amount. He must be put in a suitable position to do the honors of his position, especially as there is now a Legislative Assembly there. It will be eight or ten years before the population is large enough to make a Province there, and, after all, the amount cannot be very much for every year that the Governor will reside there. Appearances are that it will be the capital of the Province. Of course, we cannot expect that all that territory will be under one government, and when the population is largely increased there will probably be five or six Provinces.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is the population increasing very fast?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is, and I hope it will increase faster after this. The territory is so large that the population going in is scattered, and does not appear as large as if it was confined to a more limited area, such as Manitoba; but altogether, I think the amount asked for this residence is not excessive.

Mr. DAVIN. As for the paltry amount that is down in the Estimates for the important purpose of giving us a fit residence for our Lieutenant Governor, I may say that long ago that amount should have been in the Estimates; and when the hon. the Minister of Interior was Lieutenant Governor, and since Mr. Royal has been Lieutenant Governor, the residence is one which would not be considered fit for a private gentleman in the East.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). How much did it cost?

Mr. DAVIN. That I cannot tell at present; but I know, whatever it cost, the amount spent annually on the Territories is nothing like what they are entitled to, if a calculation is made on the same basis as the calculation with regard to the Provinces.

Mr. MITCHELL. But we bought you; you must not forget that.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend, the leader and the head and front of the third party, who carries that party under his hat, who has such control over his party that it surpasses even the control the right hon. the First Minister has over his—

Mr. MITCHELL. And they do not vote against their own amendments.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend says that he bought us. Now, I have sometimes heard that stated in this House, and I will deal on another occasion with remarks of that sort; but I may say now that we in the North-West do not acknowledge any such position as that; and statesmen like the leaders of both parties, and especially the leader of the Opposition, who, I think, lapsed the other night into some such statement, know very well that that is a position which cannot be defended. But I wish to return to the question of the house at Regina.

Mr. MITCHELL. Better get something you understand.

Mr. DAVIN. I know that my understanding is very feeble, but I hope to be equal to discussing the question of the position of the Governor's residence at Regina. At present it is quite inadequate for the hospitality dispensed by the Lieutenant Governor. We have a Lieutenant Governor who is very hospitable and very popular socially all over the Territories, and who has proved himself a most energetic and efficient Governor; and he gives what would interest a great many gentlemen around here—very good dinners.

Mr. KIRK. Does he take in 4 per cent. beer?

Mr. DAVIN. I do not think that would be strong enough for my hon. friend. I think by the time he visits the Territories we will require to have it 6 per cent. or 8 per cent.; but if he visits Lieutenant Governor Royal at his dinner table he will find he will not get 4 per cent. beer, but the very best wine. After all, the Lieutenant Governor of these Territories represents the Queen; and if he dispenses hospitality at all, there should be a certain Vice-regal air and substantiality about all he does. All I can tell you is this: that Governor Royal, by his courtesy and open-hearted hospitality, as well as by the energy he devotes to his work, fills the bill. We are building a Government House there, and the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), who is apt to drop into a prophetic mood, anticipates the time when those vast Territories will be divided into two Provinces. I grant you that, and you will have, I hope, the Province of Assiniboia; and, if you have, where could you have a better seat for the capital than Regina?

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Is that where Pile of Bones Creek was?

Mr. DAVIN. A rose by any other name will smell as sweet; and the hon. gentleman's own name—I hope I will be excused, though it is unparliamentary, in mentioning it—but his own name, Somerville, is one which is redolent and suggestive of all the pleasantness of the most charming season of the year; and we must admit that, on looking at the hon. gentleman, he suggests all the gracious qualities with which that name is associated. But suppose he had another name, one not so suggestive of all that is pleasant and charming, he would still be just as charming a person as he is now, and just as handsome. I do not care whether you call it Pile of Bones or not. The chief thing is, that if we are to have a Province, Regina is likely to be the capital. We have had now seven or eight years' trial of that site, and what has been proved? The judgment of its location has been fully justified. The country around it is the richest, not merely in Assiniboia, but in the North-West Territories.

Mr. MITCHELL. Very expensive, though.

Mr. DAVIN. I do not think we have been expensive to you. The position of the Territories is, and I must insist on the House knowing it, that of a ward in Chancery, and the amount we are entitled to is far greater than what we receive to-day, but I will deal with that question at a more suitable time. What the Government should do would be to capitalise the sum in excess of what is absolutely necessary for our needs, and to use that to develop our vast resources on a large and productive scale. Suppose we have a Province there—

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Suppose we have not—that is the difficulty.

Mr. DAVIN. There is no difficulty about it, unless it is in the mind of faithless people like my hon. friend the member for Bothwell. We are certain to have a Province there, and you will need a Government house larger than you are actually building to-day. You will also have to build a Government house for Alberta and another for Saskatchewan; but the idea of the hon. gentleman objecting to the sum which has been placed here for the Government house in Regina is absurd. I do not think my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) could have reflected upon the situation, or he would not have objected. I can only assure the Committee that a substantial Government house is being erected at Regina, and that the money which has been voted is not being wasted, but is being properly expended.

North-West Mounted Police Buildings... $50,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is the hon. gentleman prepared with a detail as to where these buildings are to be erected? The sum is considerable, and it is within my recollection that we have already paid in the past large sums for buildings for the Mounted Police.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The details I have are these: Regina district, $7,250; Battleford district, $5,450; Lethbridge district, $7,500; Calgary district, $2,400; Prince Albert district, $1,200; Fort MacLeod district, $3,000; Fort Saskatchewan district, $2,800; Medicine Hat district, $300; Maple Creek district, $5,500—making a total of $35,400. Then there are the outposts: MacLeod district, $5,150; Prince Albert, $6,000; Battleford, $1,000; Calgary, $200; Maple Creek, $200; Wood Mountain, $850; Lethbridge, $1,200—making $14,600, which, added to the $35,400, makes a total of $50,000.

Public Buildings, British Columbia.. $18,000

Mr. WELDON (St. John). What is this expenditure of $15,000 for the Victoria military buildings for, and how much will they cost altogether?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is for "C" Battery. The appropriation was $21,000, and we require $15,000 to complete during the fiscal year the works in connection with the officers' quarters which are to be erected at Victoria.

Public Buildings, generally.....$15,000

Mr. MITCHELL. Does not the Minister think he could do without that vote, after enumerating so many public buildings for which he takes a vote?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is the reserve.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am afraid you will reserve very little of it.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There must be something voted for small repairs and additional work required on all public buildings.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). It is probably more readily expended on election campaigns than on public buildings.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The remark of the hon. gentleman does not apply. The election took place in 1887, and there is none going on now.

Public Buildings, Nova Scotia—Annapolis Post Office, &c..... $12,500

Mr. WELDON (St. John). This is a large amount, and some time ago I called the attention of the Minister to the contract which was made for that building. The specification was for grey granite, but after the contract was awarded the stone was changed to red sandstone. The Minister then stated that the stone came from a quarry in the United States, but I am informed that it came from Cumberland county. It was certainly unfair to the other contractors that the change should be made, as will be seen by the following statement of the difference in cost:—

Mr. DAVIN.

	Granite	Freestone
Basement of building now constructed.....	$673 00	$135 00
Cutting door-jambs, belt corners and window sills.....	888 00	468 80
Trimming on rear of buildings	64 80	20 00
Tools, sharpening and wear....	312 00	126 00
25 per cent. for waste and loss (usual charge).....	484 45	187 25
25 per cent. profit.....	605 50	234 00
	3,027 75	1,171 05
In favor of freestone.....	1,856 70

The difference in the tenders was, I think, only about $500, but those who got the lowest tender saved by using freestone $1,856 on their contract. I contend it is unfair towards the contractors that after specifications have been put in that a certain quality of stone should be used, and the arrangement has been made, immediately the contract is awarded, a change is made in the quality of the stone to be used, making a saving to the contractors, according to experts, of nearly $2,000, as the difference between granite and freestone. Then, with regard to the site of the building. As I understand, the Government have ground of their own, which is practically in the business part of the city, on which they have a small light, which could have been utilised for that purpose. But instead of that, the Government have purchased a lot of land, not quite so convenient, giving $3,300 for it. I find that the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Mills) owned that lot, with other parties, until June, 1888, when he conveyed it to another firm, called Puckett & Mills. This lot was bought by the Government for $3,300, while the lot right across the street, with only a railway between—a similar lot—was offered to the Government for $1,500, as I am credibly informed. So that here we find the Government paying $1,800 more for a site than they might have paid for another one equally convenient. If the Government had built that upon their own land and made the original specifications of freestone, they would have saved over $1,500. Assuming they purchased the lot for $1,500, there is a difference of nearly $4,000, as regards the building, which costs over $12,000. With regard to the contract, the Government asked for public tenders, and asked that a certain quality of stone should be used, and then they turned around immediately and gave the contract for a different quality of stone to a favorite firm of contractors, Rhodes, Curry & Co., and if you turn up the Public Accounts you will find that firm appearing on almost every page. Immediately after the contract was obtained by them a different kind of stone was substituted, which, as I pointed out, made a difference of nearly $2,000 in the contract. I complain that the Government have not shown fair play to those who tendered for the contract, and that they changed the specifications in favor of those who did receive the contract.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If the hon. gentleman had asked me for information, which I was able to give him, I would not now be obliged to show that he was wrong. The hon. gentleman says that we could have obtained a site at a much lower rate than the site we did obtain. That may be so, but we could not have obtained as good a site as the one that was selected. The hon. gentleman says we paid for this piece of ground $3,300, whilst we could have had a lot at the next corner for $1,500. If the hon. gentleman knows the locality he will remember that the lot we have obtained, and which is the best one we could obtain, was at the corner of Church and St. George streets, which, being a corner lot, was worth more than the other. He says that we could have obtained the other lot at $1,500—that was the Whitman lot. The information from my Department is that the Whitman lot was tendered to the Government for $2,000; I find that in our books. That lot was at the next corner right opposite. The hon. gentleman forgets, perhaps he does not know, that not only does the street separate the two, but there is a railway, and it would have been very inconvenient for the people to have to cross that railway constantly to reach the building. That is the reason why we selected the other, where the people would not have to cross the railway, and, therefore, we paid $1,800 more than we would have paid for the Whitman lot. As regards the tender, we accepted the tender of Rhodes, Curry & Co., of Amherst, N.S., for $12,497. The specifications required approved grey granite from Lawrencetown, or other approved granite of an equal quality. We were not obliged, therefore, to take the Lawrencetown granite, if other approved granite of equal quality could be obtained for the whole of the external work and dressings. The contractors submitted a sample of red sandstone from North Port, N.S., which was found very hard, equal in quality and durability, more pleasing in color, and better adapted for use in conjunction with the red brick, and adding to the effects of the building when completed, as the greater portion of the exposed surface has to be quarry-faced, that is to say, without dressing. Mr. Fuller, the Chief Architect of the Department, says: "This stone offers a pleasing color, and for durability, must be considered one of the finest stones on this continent." The change will not cost an additional expenditure, and, therefore, that stone was selected.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman read in the statement that granite was to be substituted, not that freestone was to be substituted.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. "Or other approved granite of equal quality."

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In other words, a grave departure has been made on his own showing from the conditions on which the contract was given.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Because they were not allowed to substitute sandstone, but they were to substitute granite of equal quality.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. "Approved grey granite from Lawrencetown, or other approved granite of equal quality." That is the stone that was selected.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Sandstone is not granite. Any person knows that there is a difference in durability—that granite is harder and more durable than the other. I pointed out the difference in working, and taking the work done on that building, it amounts to a difference of nearly $2,000. The Minister says the contract was $12,500. The next tender was $13,250. Those gentlemen were prepared to supply granite, but the Minister accepted another kind of stone, and accordingly the contractors have obtained an advantage of nearly $2,000 on the contract. This is unfair. Other contractors were put to considerable expense. I am told by parties that they expended in making estimates and preparing their tender $200, and after their tender was rejected and a contract was made with another firm, the terms were changed by red sandstone being substituted for granite at a saving of $2,000. With respect to the Minister's observations as to the positions of the lots in connection with the railway, it must be remembered that there was a population on each side of the track, and that part of the population had to cross the railway to reach the present post office. The lot belonging to the Government is really as near the business centre as that purchased and it could have been utilised without involving any expense for land. Thus there was an expenditure of $4,000 beyond what was necessary.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Minister has not in the slightest degree explained the charge made, nor has he asserted to the Committee that the country is receiving the benefit of the difference in cost between the red sandstone and granite. If my hon. friend is correct, or is even approximately correct, in his statements, there is a difference as between the sandstone and granite of $2,000, which should go into the pockets of the people who are paying for this building, and should not be secured by the contractors. In the face of these facts, it looks as if a very scandalous job had been perpetrated. This vote should be reduced by that sum, unless the Minister is able to afford a better explanation than he has offered, and I would recommend my hon. friend for St. John (Mr. Weldon) to move that the vote be reduced by that amount. As to the other point—the value of the land—I should like to know the size of the lots?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. About ninety three or ninety-four feet, I think.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). When was the lot purchased?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In March, 1889.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There remains a question, and it is a question of importance, as it affects other transactions and our whole dealings with contractors. Here a change has been made that, in violation of the terms of the contract, red sandstone has been substituted for grey granite, and it is a very great hardship to other contractors that this change should have been made. But, apart from that point, if any benefit accrues from the change, on every principle of justice and common sense, the saving should go to benefit the public, and not to benefit the contractors. I do not understand the Minister to have alleged that the contractors' price has been reduced by the difference in value between red sandstone and granite.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Chief Architect brought the matter to my attention in this way: that the red sandstone was equal to the grey granite of Lawrencetown; that it was found not only equal in quality and in durability, but it would be more pleasing in constructing the building. That being so, and the Chief Architect stating that the sandstone was equal in quality and durability, there was no reduction made.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That answer does not meet the point made. It may be a very good reason, in the opinion of the Chief Architect, for substituting red sandstone for granite, but it is no answer to the point, that, if the substitution were made, about $2,000 would have been put into the pockets of the contractors; nor does it meet the point taken, that a great injustice has been perpetrated on other contractors. This is not the first or the second time when such a change has been made to suit the favored children of the Government. Rhodes, Curry & Co. have obtained whatever contracts they pleased in the Maritime Provinces, and everyone knows the reason. Tenders are sent in, and they secure the contract, and afterwards cheaper material is allowed to be introduced, and they pocket several thousands of dollars. This appears to be a most flagrant case. The facts seem to be indisputably proved before the Committee, and the Minister offers no justification whatever for the conduct of the Department in substituting a cheaper material, but the Government allow the contractors to pocket $2,000 and do not make any reduction on the contract price. It is well known that it has been charged in this Committee year after year, that this same system has been pursued, and that this firm can obtain the contract for nearly every public work in the Maritime Provinces. Everybody down there knows it, and is satisfied that it is no use competing with the firm, because they obtain the contracts, and if they hand in a low tender the Government will make it up to the firm by allowing them to substitute a cheaper material. The Committee cannot overlook this flagrant neglect, and I will cheerfully support a motion to reduce the amount of this vote, in order to mark my disapprobation of the very censurable conduct of the Department.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman said it is a cheaper material; but I do not admit it. On the contrary, I say it is as good and as durable, that the quality is as good, and the offer having been made to the Department to substitute the red sandstone, the Chief Architect, who knows whether it is as good or better material and as durable and capable of giving a good effect—for he is the judge of such matters, and I cannot be the judge of them—recommended red sandstone, and the change was made. I stated that to be the case, and I admit it. The Chief Architect is, however, the officer to judge of such matters. He told me it was as good a material as the other, as durable and equal in quality; and more than that, he said the appearance of the building would be improved by using it. I am sure that the quality of this material is as good as that of the other.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I wish to ask how it comes that the Chief Architect did not discover that this red sandstone was equal to the granite before he asked for tenders? I think that is a pertinent question. If the red sandstone was considered as good material as the granite, why did not the Government ask for tenders for the construction of the building with red sandstone in the first place?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That red sandstone had not then been laid before the Chief
Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

Architect, and he did not know it. When it was brought to his notice he examined it, as he examines every material so brought before him, and he found that this was as good a stone as the other and that the appearance would be better.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Then why, after this discovery was made, did not the Chief Architect advise the Government to call for new tenders? Such a course would not have cost more than five or ten dollars, and justice would have been done to all parties tendering.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Wholly apart from that, the Minister must see that it was in his own power, and in the power of his architect to require from these people a corresponding reduction in the tender. The contract as he read it, and as my hon. friend also stated, left it in the hands of the Minister and the architect to demand granite of an equal quality. Everyone who has experience in building knows that sandstone can be cut at a less cost than granite, and the Minister himself must know that perfectly well. The Minister and his architect have the power to say to these contractors: "If we allow you to alter the terms of your contract and to substitute red sandstone for granite, you must give the public the benefit of the alteration." There was nothing to prevent the Minister doing that, and it was his duty, and the duty of his architect, to see it was done. Not merely has the contract been altered to the advantage of his favorite contractors after it had been tendered for, and the alteration made without giving the others an equal chance, but the public have been defrauded—there is no other word which will meet the case—of the difference between the cost of the red sandstone and the granite.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The statement made by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) demands a more explicit explanation than that yet given by the Minister of Public Works. There was, in the first place, Government land in the town of Annapolis that would have answered the purpose equally well as that purchased. There were two lots of land at opposite corners, one of which had belonged, a few months previous, to the hon. member for Annapolis; and, according to the statement of my hon. friend from St. John, the hon. member for Annapolis transferred his interest in that property to a second party, and that second party was able, probably on account of the political influence which that hon. member can exercise, to secure the sale of that lot to the Government for $3,300; while at the same time a lot on the opposite side of the street, of equal size and just as desirable in point of situation, was offered for about one-half the money. It is stated by the hon. the Minister that there was a railway between, but the hon. member for St. John took away that objection when he stated that there were just as many people on one side of the railway as on the other, and, consequently, whichever lot was taken, a certain number of people who frequented the post office would have to cross the railway, which was no great detention after all, as the roadway was blocked. So far as regards that transaction, which appears on the face of it undesirable, the Government have not been able to show upon what ground they took a lot for double the sum for which they were offered another lot on the opposite side of the street, which was equally desirable in every point of view. Until the Minister can show for this a better reason than he has already shown, his Government and himself must labor under the imputation that it was one of those pieces of political favoritism and jobbery which sometimes happen in connection with that Department.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Often happens and sometimes discovered.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Then, with regard to alteration of the contract. No one knows better than the hon. Minister of Public Works the difference between red sandstone and granite. The one is very hard material, difficult to cut, while the other is of much more pliable nature and can be worked for less cost. The hon. Minister has said that the red sandstone was equally good, but he has not admitted that it was cheaper. He could not say that he did not know that it was cheaper, because he knows too much about the construction of public buildings to be ignorant of that fact, and if he did not know that the red sandstone was much cheaper than the granite, then he is not entitled to the credit which he has so often received in this House. Messrs. Rhodes, Curry & Co. come on the scene when this contract was taken, and here comes political influence again. They say they did not tell (perhaps they did tell) that they possessed a quarry of their own, and the granite that would have to be purchased would have to come from other quarries; but they could bring a stone which they put in in place of the original from their own quarry, at a very much less expense, and of a cheaper quality, and the hon. Minister allowed them to substitute the stone from their own quarry, which is much less expensive than the granite. I repeat that if the hon. gentleman did not know his business he knows less about the construction of public buildings than the hon. members of this House have usually given him credit for. As has been said before, this is only part of the system; it is not the first, or second, or twentieth time this has happened. Every public building that has gone up in Nova Scotia for a long time has been almost always obtained by the celebrated firm of Rhodes, Curry & Co., of Amherst. I believe they are a very capable and enterprising firm, and in that respect I have not one word to say, but they seem to have the advantage of always getting the Government contracts. I know that not very long ago, in the city of Halifax, there was a large freight shed put up for the Intercolonial Railway, and Rhodes, Curry & Co. obtained the contract for a small sum below the tenders of the other contractors belonging to the city. I asked some of the contractors of the city how it was they had abandoned the contract—why they did not take it at a less sum. They said that the whole specifications had been changed—that the material they were required by the specifications to use was changed for Rhodes, Curry & Co., and that was the course taken with regard to every contract given to that firm. I remember being down in the town of Baddeck, in the county of Victoria, where I saw preparations going on for a public building, and I was told that the corner lot for the building had been purchased from the sitting member of that day, not the present member, for $1,000 or $1,200, and I was shown a lot on the opposite corner, more favorably situated, which had been offered for $300. This is just another illustration of the Annapolis case, and the way in which the hon. Minister of Public Works allows his Department to be managed in the Province of Nova Scotia; and I presume that Nova Scotia is no exception to the general rule, and that it may be fairly inferred that what takes place there also takes place in New Brunswick, in Prince Edward Island, and doubtless in that highly favored Province of Quebec, and throughout the country generally. Therefore, I think it is time that this Committee should mark with its sense of the highest disapprobation this job—for it is nothing else—that has been exposed here to-night, and insist on this vote being reduced.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would like to ask the hon. Minister if it is not a fact that in all the contracts for the construction of Government buildings there is a clause providing that if a material of a cheaper nature than that called for in the original contract is substituted a proportionate reduction is made in the cost?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not think so.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There is such a clause in some Government contracts. I have seen it in printed railway contracts particularly.

Mr. MULOCK. I should like to ask the hon. Minister of Public Works if he took steps to ascertain whether freestone would cost less than granite; and, if so, what steps?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Chief Architect told me that it was as good a stone and as durable, and that its appearance would be better than that of the granite. I understood that one stone was as good as the other, and of equal value. If he had told me that it was worth less I would of course have taken care that the contractors should have made a reduction. But it was not so stated to me, and I did not think it was, and I do not think so now.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I must say that as between granite and sandstone I have great doubts as to the durability of the sandstone. But the sandstone is more easily worked, and the Chief Architect should know that. I understand that this red sandstone came from a quarry belonging to Rhodes, Curry & Co., and that it cost them nothing but the expense of quarrying it. It seems to me that in this matter the other contractors have been very unfairly treated, because they were ready to supply the granite according to the terms of the specifications. In regard to the site, it has been pointed out that the Government had lots there lying useless, and that a large part of the town and the public wharf are on the other side. I am told that $3,300 was given for a lot, while a more convenient lot could be got for $1,500, while the Government lot I am told—I speak subject to correction—was more convenient than either of those lots, and could have been utilized, and the expense saved. Between the contract and the lots nearly $5,000 has been lost to the country. I want to test this matter, and I move that the vote be reduced to the amount of $11,000.

Mr. MULOCK. I asked the Minister whether he had taken steps to ascertain whether the freestone could be got at a cheaper price than the granite. It is quite material to know that freestone would answer the purpose, but if the Minister had been spending his money, and there had been a proposal to change the material, I am sure he would have ascertained whether the substituted was worth less or more than the material originally contracted for, and if he found that it was worth less he would have taken good care to get the benefit of the change. Now, I ask him whether he took any steps to ascertain whether the substituted material could be procured at a less price than the granite. It was his plain duty to ascertain that, before he undertook to pay public money for the article that was used. It is a breach of trust on the part of the Minister of Public Works; it is a fraud on the part of the Minister of Public Works.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman forgets himself there. He has no right to speak in that way with regard to a member of the House, and probably less with regard to a Minister of the Crown, who has his responsibility. I hope the hon. member will withdraw that.

Mr. MULOCK. I will withdraw to this extent: if the hon. Minister has either intentionally or by negligence allowed the public money to be wasted, I say that in the eye of the law that is a breach of trust, and any breach of trust in a court of equity is a legal fraud, and to that extent—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. MULOCK. I am in order. I am here to defend the public treasury, and I propose to defend the public treasury. We have a duty to perform, and we do not propose, even at the dictation of a majority, to allow breaches of trust to take place.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. MULOCK. I dare say hon. gentlemen opposite do not like to be told of these things, but they will not escape by their violence and their noises. We propose to do our duty here, even if Ministers of the Crown neglect their duty. The hon. Minister does not say that he took the proper legal steps that a private individual would have taken under the circumstances. I ask him now if he can give any proof that he obtained the advice of any competent person that the material would cost as much as that which was originally called for. He admits that he did not take the first steps to ascertain what the freestone would cost, and now he gets up in virtuous indignation to try to deceive this Committee and make us believe that there was not a fraud at the bottom of it.

Mr. HESSON. I think the hon. member ought to take back what he said.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. HESSON. I rise to a question of order. I think the hon. gentleman ought to take back the language he used to the Minister of Public Works. I say that the word "fraud," as applied to the hon. the Minister of Public Works, is a breach of parliamentary language, and the hon. gentleman ought to withdraw it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman did not impute any personal fraud to the Minister at all. The hon. member for North Perth is trying to leave the impression on the Committee that my hon. friend imputed some personal fraud to the Minister.

Some hon. MEMBERS. He did.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He imputed no personal fraud whatever.

Mr. MULOCK.

Some hon. MEMBERS. He did.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What he said was that there had been a fraud perpetrated on the public and on the tenderers who tendered against Rhodes, Curry & Co., and that the public had been defrauded to the extent of some $1,800.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman said that there had been a breach of trust on the part of the Department in not insisting on a proportionate deduction being made for the substitution of freestone for the granite demanded for, that the public had lost so much money by that want of attention on the part of the Department, and that that amounted to a fraud on the public.

Mr. HESSON. He said the Minister had committed a fraud.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He said that, so far as the management of the Department was concerned, the public were defrauded. If his language imported more than that, he did not intend it.

Mr. HESSON. Will the hon. gentleman take it back?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does the hon. member for Perth mean to say that if the hon. member for St. John is correct—

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is not the question. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am speaking to a question of order, and that must be disposed of first.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I rise to a question of order. The hon. gentleman is not debating the question.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am; and if the hon. member will excuse me, I am going to show that I am speaking to the question of order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It must be understood by this Committee that the Chairman here has no power to make any hon. gentleman withdraw an offensive expression. All he can do is to report to the Speaker the language used, if some hon. members asks that the words be taken down. The Chairman of the Committee can then report to the Speaker, who must be called in, and whose duty it will be to ask the hon. member who used the offensive expression to withdraw it. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House has but the power to rebuke an hon. gentleman for the use of such expression, and I must say that I regret the hon. member for York (Mr. Mulock) was most unfortunate in the choice of the expression he used. All I can do is to rebuke him for having made use of it, and I do so.

Mr. HESSON. I ask that the language of the hon. gentleman be taken down and reported to the Speaker.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There has been a discussion between the time the language complained of was used and the motion to have the words taken down, and they cannot be taken down now.

Mr. SCARTH. I ask the Chairman to report to the Speaker the closing words of the hon. member for York (Mr. Mulock), which were that the Minister of Public Works was endeavoring to deceive this Committee.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I repeat what I have said, that an hon. gentleman having spoken between the time those words were used and the point of order raised, it is now too late for me to report to the Speaker.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The only person who spoke between was the hon. gentleman who called your attention to the language objected to.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not wish to protect myself behind any rules. I do not wish to prevent the Committee resorting to whatever course may be deemed advisable, nor do I wish the Committee to be under any misapprehension as to what I had in my mind.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. MULOCK. I am always desirous of doing justice and of doing what is right; and if I have created any false impression, I am not so cowardly or ungentlemanly or unfair as not to make the necessary amends, and even if the hon. member for Centre Toronto does not approve of a man making amends, I approve of it.

Mr. COCKBURN. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. MULOCK. I understood that the hon. member for Toronto was interrupting me in the course of my remarks.

Mr. LANDERKIN. He ought to apologise.

Mr. COCKBURN. I was only too delighted to see that the hon. gentleman had the gentlemanly feeling to apologise.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. MULOCK. I wish to tell the Committee what I desired to say. It was this: It appears to me that the hon. the Minister of Public Works, as trustee of the public funds, has not taken those proper steps that he should have taken to protect the public treasury. We were, on this side at all events, insisting on the necessity of enforcing the principle of competition in the awarding of public contracts as the safest way of ascertaining the cost of obtaining service from the state. That principle was departed from in this case, and the hon. Minister allowed a larger sum of money to be paid for work done for the public than appears, on reliable statements, to be proper. The Minister of Public Works has not been able to produce the evidence of any expert to show that the public have obtained full value for the money he has expended, and without going further into the evidence I say that what has been disclosed before this Committee shows that there has been improvidence and maladministration of the public money, to that extent, and a waste of the public money; and, as I proceeded to say—and I repeat it now—I draw a distinction between a legal fraud and a moral fraud. The distinction is too plain to require to be explained, but I say that the Minister of Public Works, if he has wasted any of the public money by improvidence or negligence, has to that extent been untrue to the trust imposed upon him, and to that extent has been, it appears to me, as guilty as any trustee would be under similar circumstances of a breach of trust. A breach of trust under those circumstances is, in a court of equity, admitted to be a fraud. To that extent, and that only, did I propose to go, and that is the whole extent I have gone, and I am sure that any hon. gentleman who to-morrow reads the remarks I have made preceding these will find that that is the fullest extent to which I have gone. I say again, it is the duty of any Minister of the Crown who is entrusted with the public money to adopt all safeguards and precautions in order that the public may get full value for the expenditure of that money; and if he does not adopt those safeguards he clothes himself with all the responsibility of his omission and must expect that his administration will be characterised in such a way as his conduct would be in a court of justice.

Mr. GILLMOR. It is evident that freestone is not as good for the foundation of a building as granite, and it cannot be possible that the Minister of Public Works does not know the difference between working freestone and working granite. Any hon. gentleman who knows anything about stone knows that granite is the hardest stone to work; that freestone is soft, and that a workman can dress four feet of freestone as easily as one of granite. I, therefore, cannot believe that freestone would bear the weight of a building as well as granite. With regard to this offering for tenders, it is very important that the public should be treated fairly with regard to tenders. There is no branch of the public service in regard to which the public have a right to expect fair play more than they have in offering tenders, and there is no branch of the public service where a Government or an official can act properly or improperly with greater ease than in reference to public tenders. I do not believe that freestone is as good for a foundation of a large building as granite. It is quite as ornamental, and may cost as much in the quarry, but you might as well ask for maple or mahogany, and then supply white pine, as to ask for granite and accept freestone. I think a gross injustice has been done to the parties who tendered, and also to the public, who ought to have the advantage of the difference between the cost of working the freestone and the granite.

Committee divided: Yeas, 36; Nays, 77.

Halifax Dominion Buildings $1,500

Mr. WATSON. I would call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the unfairness of giving public buildings to places which have a very small revenue. I find that there is a vote for a post office, &c., at Annapolis, and another for South Sydney. The first vote is $12,500, and its revenue is only $2,285; and in South Sydney, for which $9,000 is asked, the revenue is only $2,738. In the town in which I reside the post office revenue is $6,927, but it has not a post office or public building. I again protest against this system of spending the public money, as I think the revenues derived from post offices ought to have some weight with the Government when they are erecting public buildings.

South Sydney Post Office, Custom House,
&c. $9,000

Mr. KIRK. Will this be sufficient to finish that building?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; we will require about $500 more.

Mr. KIRK. What will be the cost of the whole building?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. About $25,000 or $26,000.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I observe that $5,000 for an immigrant building at Halifax, which was put in the Estimates last year by the Minister of Agriculture, and which it was understood would be expended immediately, is not in the Estimates this year. During the visit of the Minister of Justice to Halifax last year I called his attention to this matter, and he promised to bring it to the notice of the Government. Will the Minister of Agriculture inform us now whether the Government intends to drop this altogether, or what is being done in regard to it?

Mr. CARLING. I really cannot say, but I believe they are going on. I know that instructions have been given that the building should be proceeded with.

Mr. KIRK. I believe this building in South Sydney is the second building which the Government is erecting in the one county of Cape Breton. They have already a Custom house and post office in North Sydney, and now they are completing one in South Sydney in the same county. I think that is unfair to other parts of Nova Scotia which are paying as much and some of them more to the revenue than the county of Cape Breton. Does the Minister think he is acting fairly to other counties which have no public buildings? Perhaps he is giving two buildings to this county of Cape Breton because the Government have two supporters here from that county. Is that the reason?

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I would like the hon. Minister of Public Work to give me the information for which I have asked in regard to the immigrant building in Halifax.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. So far as I can recollect, we do not ask any more money this year, because we expect $5,000 will be sufficient until the 1st of July.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Will the hon. Minister let me know what is being done, because when I left Halifax there was no evidence of a commencement of that work, and the time is nearly passed when it will be required.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will take note of it.

Repairs, furniture, heating &c.....	$496,200
Repairs, furniture, heating for public buildings.....	$170,000

Mr. SOMERVILLE. $170,000 seems to be a large amount for repairs, for public buildings, in Ottawa.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is for all the public buildings throughout the Dominion.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Does this include the repairs at Rideau Hall?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman agreed to make a statement in his place with respect to the course to be pursued as to the repairs and furniture of Rideau Hall. This appears to be the time it should be done?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Last year the question came up in the Committee and the Committee seemed desirous that some new mode should be adopted of keeping up the repairs and furniture and the general expenses of Rideau Hall. During the recess the Finance Minister and myself had an interview with His Excellency the Governor General, to see whether some arrangement could be made that would change the position of affairs in so far as my Department was concerned. It was seen that it would not be the proper thing for the Governor General to assume the repairs or the furniture of the building—that if the Government were to allow a certain amount to the Governor General for repairs and furniture of the building it would subject him, for the time being, to criticism, and after he went away there might be complaints or objections made about the disposal of the money. Therefore, it was understood that that scheme could not be accepted. We discussed with His Excellency the expenditure that we have been in the habit of making about the castle, and His Excellency, as usual, showed himself perfectly disposed to help my Department as much as possible to curtail the expenses. Amongst other things, we suggested that whenever there is a change of Governors there is supposed to be a time when some of the small articles, and perhaps larger articles, of furniture, or other matters in the building, are disposed of and disappear. At all events, when we took an inventory in 1886 we thought that was the best mode to adopt under the circumstances. It is thought there should be every year an inventory made of the furniture and other property belonging to the state in the Government House, as at that period His Excellency, his staff and family are away from Government House, and with an officer belonging to the Government and an officer belonging to the suite of His Excellency, we might make an inventory and know every year the quantity of furniture remaining and the additions that would afterwards be made. For that purpose it is suggested, and it is intended, that a book shall be opened in which the articles found by the inventory shall be noted, along with the additions made each year, and then if there is any article that is destroyed, or is put away, or is not to be used any more, an entry will be made to that effect. Another suggestion is, that the articles should be stamped with a Government stamp. Another suggestion, is that we make a contract with a house in England to provide us, for example, with the crockery or the glassware that would be necessary for Government House, and these things should be kept there. These articles should all be stamped with a certain monogram showing that they belong to the Government House, and if anything disappeared, no matter how, it could be traced by the monogram upon it. Then there is another arrangement. During the recess a contract was made with the head gardener of Rideau Hall and his assistants, under which they are to take care of all the gardens, lawns, roads and everything connected with the grounds. The contract has been made for a year, and will terminate on the 1st of July, and after it is completed we shall be able to see how they have performed their part, and we shall decide whether the contracts shall be continued.

Mr. KIRK.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. What is the amount?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. $4,500 for taking care of the grounds, lawns and contingencies. For that sum the implements required will be provided. With respect to furniture, we think that for carpets, tableware, &c., between $2,500 and $3,000 will be the ordinary amount required, and that is a reduction on previous years. The cost of repairs to buildings, fences, sidewalks, drains, &c., may be placed at between $10,000 and $20,000; painting, including materials, $2,000; plastering, $500, sundry expenses, $500. We believe that with these sums we will be able to meet the expenditure of Rideau Hall. That, of course, is independent of the sum of $8,000 voted for fuel and heating of the Governor General's residence.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. What is the total amount to be expended on Rideau Hall?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The total will be from $22,000 to $23,000, plus $8,000 for fuel and light.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Is that amount supposed to cover all the purchases that may be required for glassware and other articles.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; the ordinary expenditure. There may be some extraordinary destruction, and that of course would be a separate matter.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If the hon. Minister has made anything like an approximately correct estimate, we have been spending from $10,000 to $12,000 a year more than we should have expended. The expenditure last year, outside of fuel and light, was $31,000 odd, and it is about the average expenditure of years gone by. Now, the Minister proposes to establish a new system, by which $10,000 will be saved.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We hope so.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I repeat that if the Minister hopes and believes that his estimate is anything like a correct one, we have been squandering from $10,000 to $12,000 a year. There is one unfortunate matter connected with the Rideau Hall expenditure which should be freely stated. It is a somewhat unpleasant subject, and comes up year after year. A general report goes through the Dominion and a general impression is conveyed that the Governor General and his staff, or rather his staff, are more or less responsible for this extravagance. We who are members of the Public Accounts Committee, who have investigated the subject, know that this is not the case, and that whatever extravagance there has been in that Department the Minister of Public Works is directly responsible for it. The Governor General has no control over it whatever. The Clerk of Works was examined before the Committee, and it appeared that when any article is required at Rideau Hall a requisition is made to the Public Works Department, which takes the whole matter into its sole control, and the Governor General and his staff have no control or responsibility with respect to the articles purchased, either as to where they are purchased or their cost. So, for the past extravagance in connection with Rideau Hall no man is so responsible as the Minister of Public Works, and I have no hesitation in stating that from the evidence submitted to the Public Accounts Committee there has been the grossest extravagance in connection with the Department from year to year. A year or two ago the subject was mentioned in a mincing way, and there was a disposition to hush up the matter, because it was one connected with Rideau Hall, it being intimated that the Governor General had some connection with it. Let us be honest to him and to his staff, and state publicly that neither directly nor indirectly is the Governor General or his staff in any sense or way responsible for the extravagance and for the loss of public money in connection with Rideau Hall. When the matter was mentioned a year or two ago a pledge was given by the Minister that when a new Governor General arrived a new system would be introduced, and there would be no longer cause for the complaint of extravagance made yearly from this side of the House. I regret that this pledge was not carried out. I regret it the more because not only did the Minister of Public Works fail to carry out the pledge given to the House, but when a new Governor General came no kind of an inventory or list was made of the Government property in that building. The old Governor General went away, and it is wonderful to think that the head of any Department which has expended $30,000 or $40,000 a year on Rideau Hall should not have made an inventory of any kind of the public property. We know what took place. That which we expected took place — a large amount of property disappeared. Who is responsible? Let the Minister of Public Works say why that which is the rule in all other establishments should not have been carried out at Rideau Hall. What does the British Government do? If an admiral takes charge of a new station a careful inventory is taken of the Government's property by the outgoing and incoming secretaries, and if there is any property missing they are held to a strict account. Nothing of the kind was done here, and it is stated, and I believe it is stated on very good authority, that the new Governor General found some of the rooms entirely stripped, and that the property had been taken away. We maintain the condition of Rideau Hall by yearly votes of money, and therefore when a new Governor General arrives and takes up his residence no extraordinary expenditure should be necessary, unless the property has been removed. I am told here, and it is a matter of public information, that the hon. Minister sends down from his Department at election times dozens and scores of men to do painting and such work, and scores and scores of washerwomen, who fill the house and do what they like. The hon. gentleman now says the Government intends to introduce a new system of stamping the articles with a Government mark. I was told a story by an Ottawa gentleman which illustrates this point. At one of the clubs an ice pitcher was broken and a messenger was sent to one of the city stores to purchase another. One was obtained for 50 cents. It proved to be a beautiful cut glass pitcher, worth from $5 to $10, with the Government mark on it. This is the talk everywhere in this city. There must be flagrant neglect and absolute absence of all control, and no attempt is evidently made to take care of the public property, and thousands of dollars year after year are thus wasted; and I have no hesitation in stating here, and telling the hon. Minister of Public Works that I hold him responsible for the $40,000 or $50,000 wasted during the last ten or twelve years, and that he is the man who is responsible. The greatest extravagance has been practised and the grossest carelessness has been practised, so that in effect thousands of dollars have been lost. I, with other members of the Public Accounts Committee, will expect that a careful inventory be made each year of the Government property, and that steps will be taken to protect it, and that those in charge of it, on behalf of the Government, will be held responsible, and no other system can give satisfaction. The whole system under which Rideau Hall has been managed is disgraceful and scandalous to the Minister of Public Works, and I am sorry the hon. gentleman has not a better account to give.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman tries to have the Committee understand that I endeavored to put on the shoulders of others the responsibility which I have as Minister of Public Works. I did nothing of the kind. I am responsible for my Department, and if there is anything wrong in my Department I am responsible for it. I have not, to-night, tried to put a portion of that responsibility on the shoulders of His Excellency, the present Governor General, or on any other Governor, nor did I ever do so in my life. The hon. gentleman need not try to lead the Committee under that impression, because it is not so. As to the expenditure in that building, I may say that we do not go to make repairs, or to purchase furniture, or anything of the kind, until a requisition is made from the officers of Rideau Hall. When they ask what they want—if they are articles which are usually furnished by the Department of Public Works—the requisition is assented to. So much for that. When the hon. gentleman speaks of the gross expenditure, he should go a little further back and see how it was in years past. In 1873-74 the expenditure was $56,000 a year; in 1874-75, $39,000; in 1875-76, $36,000; in 1876-77, $35,000; in 1877-78, $39,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Go on.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Under the régime of the previous Government it was about the same as it was later on. In 1878-79 it was $56,000; in 1879-80, $61,000; in 1880-81, $15,000; in 1881-82, it was $22,000; in 1882-83 it was $31,000; in 1883-84, $35,000; in 1884-85, $31,000; in 1885-86, $26,000; in 1886-87, $29,000; in 1887-88, $23,000; and last year it was $31,000, which shows that the expenditure varies. There are certain years when the buildings require more extensive repairs and when there is a larger expenditure. The hon. gentleman must remember what is the extent of these buildings and of this property. The ground covered by the buildings at Rideau Hall is 89,500 square feet. The extent of the roofs to be kept in order and repair is 96,500 square feet. The yards of carpet required to cover the rooms, halls and corridors are 4,180, and 340 yards of oil cloth. The number of windows to be kept in repair and on which to put up double windows in winter and blinds in summer are 273. The number of gas lights, 570; the number of stoves, furnaces, boilers and grate fires to be kept in order and attended to, 120; the length of the drains on the property is 6,850 feet, or a mile and a quarter; the extent of pavements and sidewalks, 4,400 of block pavement and 9,200 of plank walk, or a mile and three-quarters. The fencing to be kept in repair is 22,400 feet, or more than four miles; the length of gravel roads, 23,100 feet, or more than four miles; the total extent of the Rideau Hall property is 85 acres, consisting of 2 acres of flower garden, 4 acres of vegetable garden, 47 acres of grass and 32 acres of wood, and shrubbery; so that the hon. gentleman must see that it is a very extensive property, and, therefore, it is not surprising that for the past seventeen or eighteen years this expenditure has been required to put the property and the buildings in order. As the hon. gentleman sees by the statement I have given, some years we have had only $15,000 and others $60,000, caused by the rebuilding of certain portions of the property. The buildings are far from being new, and the necessary repairs must be made to keep them in order.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I care very little for the comparison made by the hon. gentleman between this and previous years. Where the expenditure was large in previous years it was no doubt an expenditure on capital account in adding to the buildings. The hon. gentleman must see that he has made a very unjust comparison, because we know from what occurred before the Public Accounts Committee that for the last five years the $8,000 for fuel and light is in a separate item, and is not included in the expenditure, so that he would have to add $8,000 a year to these items which he read. In the years from 1873 to 1878 the items for fuel and light were included in the expenditure he read. However, this does not touch the point at issue, as to whether the proper steps are taken to prevent the property from being stolen.

Mr. BOWELL. It was true, as the hon. gentleman said, that this matter was before the Public Accounts Committee, but the statement made by the officer of the Public Works Department there was that he was unable to say whether the cost for gas, &c., was included in the amount, $8,000, read to the House by the Minister of Public Works, and he was instructed by the Committee to make enquiries into this and to report on it at the next meeting. I think, therefore, it is hardly fair to say that the facts came out before the Committee, as stated by the hon. gentleman. It may be true that the $8,000 did not cover gas, but I say that that fact was not elicited by the evidence which was produced before the Committee.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman will bear me out when I say that we do not want any evidence to convince us that the item of $8,000 is not now charged in the total sum, and has not been for years past. We can take the Auditor General's Report and see so.

Mr. BOWELL. Not at all.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Excuse me. On page D-206 of the Auditor General's Report we find an item for $8,000 for additional allowance for fuel and light for the Governor General.

Mr. ELLIS. There is no difference between one side of the House and the other in this matter. The true way to reform this system is to abolish it altogether. The Governor General is called on to perform duties which are not necessary to his office at all, and the best course to take is to change the system—to make the chief executive officer of this country a Canadian, who shall perform his duties like other officers. The Governor General is required to support his office by duties which are to no purpose, so far as the general interests of the country are concerned, and if both sides of the House would agree to take the action I suggest, the results would be more beneficial to the country, and would meet with the approval of the country. It seems to me absurd to suppose that any social duties which the Governor General can discharge here, in a small corner of Canada like this, can have any effect on the country generally. I would, therefore, prefer to see the office, as it exists to-day, re-constructed, and given to some capable Canadian, and let him receive a certain sum to discharge his executive duties, and those duties only.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister of Public Works has not, I think, cleared up this transaction. He has stated that he responds to the requisitions of the officers at Rideau Hall, but he has not said that he takes any steps to verify those requisitions, and to see whether they are well founded or not. The officers at Rideau Hall who make these requisitions are, I suppose, gentlemen who come out with the Governor General, and of course they are desirous that Rideau Hall should be in every way suitable, and should be supplied with everything that can add to the personal comforts and luxuries of the occupants. They are not concerned for the taxpayer. The taxpayer is represented or ought to be represented by the Minister of Public Works, but the Minister says that of course he acts on the requisition of those officers. Well, as long as he proposes to hand over the expenditure of these moneys to those young gentlemen who come from England, so long will these complaints be well founded. It is his duty to investigate those requisitions to see whether they are well founded or not. I ask him if he can justify the employment of 25 men the whole year round at Rideau Hall. Here is a list of the persons employed, including a clerk of works, half a dozen carpenters, a dozen laborers, and others. Suppose you did require six garden laborers in the summer, what are you going to do with them in the winter? Those gardens are locked up by nature for half the year and more. It is true, there are, I suppose, some hot-houses, but surely you cannot require six garden laborers all through the winter. It would appear from the explanation the hon. Minister has given that he has been wholly indifferent to the expenditure, and has been leaving it to be controlled entirely by those exotic plants from England who make the requisitions. With regard to the heating, I would ask if there has been any investigation made as to the comparative cost of heating the public buildings in Ottawa, including Rideau Hall, with wood or coal. I would also ask whether the hon. Minister has made any investigation to ascertain whether $8,000 is necessary to supply Rideau Hall with heat and light. It seems to me that $68,000, which we are asked to vote this year for heating the public buildings in this city, is an enormous sum. I think the Minister ought to be able to answer some of these questions.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. What I said was that when the officers of Rideau Hall, I have no doubt properly authorised, make their requisitions, those requisitions are complied with, but they are always examined by the officers of my Department, by my order, to see how far they can be met. If we find that there is something that should not be allowed, there is then a conference between the officers of my Department and the officers of Rideau Hall as to what is required. When there are large repairs to be made, an officer of the Department goes through the building in company with an officer of the Governor's staff, and they make a survey of the building to see what is actually required to keep it in a proper state of repair. An estimate is made of the different items, which is laid before me, and if I find it correct, it is passed. With regard to the sum of $8,000 for fuel and light, I know by experience, having had conferences with the occupants of Rideau Hall on the subject—I do not speak of the present incumbent alone—that $8,000 is not too much. I know that one year the expenditure exceeded that amount by several hundred dollars. With regard to wood or coal, I had that question examined twice, with the view of ascertaining whether we could save money by using coal instead of wood. The result of the investigation has been, that if we were to use coal we should have to make large changes in our heating apparatus, and the saving would not be much, if any, while the smoke from the burning of coal would produce the effect that the burning of coal produces—for example, in London, England, where the buildings are all darkened, and their appearance impaired by that cause. I asked my chief officer in charge of that matter whether there was any discovery made by which the smoke could be avoided. That has not been found yet, as far as I can understand, from my mechanical engineer, and, therefore, we have continued to burn wood. I would prefer by far to have coal, because by burning coal we would perhaps have better heat for an amount of money which would not exceed what we pay to-day. But just now the question is: first, we would have to make a large expenditure in changing the heating apparatus, and secondly, the appearance of the building on the outside would be damaged greatly by the smoke.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The hon. the Minister of Public Works is altogether misinformed on this point. If Rideau Hall were heated by hot water or steam the coal used would not be soft coal, but hard coal, which does not give much smoke. The hon. gentleman seems to have great regard for the appearance of the building down there.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I was speaking of these buildings here. At Rideau Hall it would be still worse, because besides some furnaces, there are a large number of stoves there, and we would require to make a great change in the building to have new apparatus, and as the building is old the expenditure would no doubt have to be large.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. It is not by the use of hard coal this smoke is caused, but by the use of soft coal. While speaking of Rideau Hall, there has been a vast amount of extravagance in the expenditure there for many years, and it is high time some new system should be put in operation to reduce this expenditure. Apart altogether from the expenditure on the inside of the House, the management of the garden—concerning which I was pleased to hear the Minister say he has adopted a new system—has been in past years marked by the grossest extravagance. The hon. the Minister of Customs will bear me out when I say that it was shown before the Public Accounts Committee that the hon. the Minister of Public Works had entirely neglected his duty in this regard. An officer from Rideau Hall stated in that Committee that thirteen gardeners were employed there all the year round, for whom they could not find work, and that he had repeatedly reported this to the Minister of Public Works, or the officer in charge of Rideau Hall matters here, and yet the Department had persistently refused to authorise him to discharge these men. These men were kept on the whole year round, winter and summer, although there was no work for them to do, and the Minister of Public Works refused to authorise their discharge. The same system of neglect has marked the whole expenditure at Rideau Hall. No doubt the whole system has been managed in the most extravagant manner, for which extravagance the Minister of Public Works is responsible. The hon. gentleman says that this $170,000 included the expenditure on public buildings all through the Dominion for heating. Now, I see another item further on, headed "Dominion Public Buildings, $60,000."

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That has been the heading of the vote for years, but it is not correct. The word "heating" should not be there in the first instance, and we shall strike it out.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Then the whole heating of the public buildings is done for $60,000. Does that include the Parliament buildings?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. On page 52 there is an item for heating public buildings in Ottawa, $60,000, and another item for heating of the Dominion buildings, $60,000. That makes $120,000.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) From the evidence given in the Public Accounts Committee with respect to Rideau Hall and the public property there, it is evident that unless an exact inventory be taken of all the property and an account opened in the hon. gentleman's Department, in which every article supplied on requisition will be entered, he will never be able to carry out an efficient control.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I stated that an account would be opened and an inventory made, and any articles that may be set aside will be sold and credited to the account.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. When will this inventory be made?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. As soon as the Government House occupants go away for the summer.

Mr. WATSON. It seems to me, judging from the cost of heating Rideau Hall, namely $120,000, it would be a good thing to destroy that building and put up a new one. It is a miserable rookery at the best, and I see in the Auditor's Report that $3,790 was paid for papering and painting alone, and the amount paid for heating was $8,000. If the amount used on that building from year to year were capitalised it would represent a sum sufficient to put up a very respectable residence, and it would be better for the hon. gentleman to decide whether it would not be better for him to do so.

Mr. MULOCK. Is the wood purchased by contract?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The wood for years has been bought by contract.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Who is the contractor?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think it is Mr. Heney. Rideau Hall we have nothing to do with.
Mr. SOMERVILLE.

Mr. WATSON. Is the wood delivered here supposed to be four feet long?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think so.

Mr. WATSON. I have observed that the wood I have seen is not more than three feet six inches long.

Mr. FOSTER. Have you measured any of it?

Mr. WATSON. I have measured some. If the Government are paying for four foot wood they are paying a great deal more than they should, and the contractor must be having as soft a snap on the Government as those gentlemen in Nova Scotia who put in freestone instead of granite.

Removal of Snow, Public Buildings,
Ottawa..... $3,000

Mr. SOMERVILLE. What is the reason for this increase of $1,000? Are we to have any more buildings?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We have more buildings.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. We have one—that is the new departmental building; but I suppose the city cleans the snow from the sidewalks.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; this is for the public buildings, for these grounds, for the Supreme Court, for the Geological Museum, for the sidewalks on Cartier square, for the fish-breeding establishment, and so on.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) According to the details which are given in the Auditor General's Report, the total expenditure last year was $1,600, and you are now asking for $3,000. That is $1,000 more than you asked last year and $1,400 more than the Auditor General's account shows you spent. What is that for?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have not here the details for each place.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Surely the hon. gentleman will not ask $1,000 more than the vote of last year, which appears to be $400 more than he spent, without giving some explanation for the increased vote.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. My officers have stated that this amount is required, and they refer to the Geological Museum, the new block, the fisheries building, Cartier square, the city post office, the Printing Bureau and Parliament Hill. I cannot give the details for each of these. Sometimes the work varies.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) The expenditure appears to have been $1,600 last year including everything.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is the Printing Bureau and the new building.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. There is no sidewalk in front of the Printing Bureau.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. At all events we must clear the road.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The only place where this is required is at the new departmental building.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The roofs have to be cleared after every heavy snowfall.

Heating Public Buildings, Ottawa..... $60,000

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Is the coal contracted for

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The coal is let by contract.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Is the soft coal Canadian or American ?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is Canadian soft coal.

Gas and Electric Light, Ottawa.....$27,000

Mr. WATSON. I would ask the Minister of Public Works why the grounds between this building and Wellington street should not be lit by electric light. The gas is very poor.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If we put the electric light on these grounds we would have to put wires, which would disfigure the square. Later on, having the apparatus here or in one of the other blocks, we might light the square by the electric light as well as the buildings, but at present it would certainly disfigure the square. The hon. gentleman will see that we took care, in lighting Wellington street, that the lights should not be on this side of the street, but on the other side, in order to avoid disfiguring the square.

Mr. WATSON. These wires could be conducted under ground.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will think about it.

Telephone Service, Public Buildings, Ottawa.....$3,200

Mr. SOMERVILLE. What is the rent paid for each telephone ?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think it is $30.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. How is it that more is charged here than in other cities ?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not know, but we do not pay more than they pay in the town.

Major's Hill Park, Ottawa.....$6,000

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I must renew my protest against that expenditure as utterly unjustifiable. If you go to other cities of the Dominion, just as important as Ottawa, you will find public gardens very much prettier and much better kept up than these, but kept at the expense of the respective cities. If any hon. gentleman goes to the city of Halifax he will see most beautiful gardens kept at the expense of the city, where the citizens go to take recreation and to enjoy themselves, and they do not come crying to the Parliament of Canada asking us to keep up their gardens. Go to the city I belong to myself—we keep up our own gardens, and do not come cringing to Parliament asking for assistance. Now, on what grounds can the taxpayers of Canada be asked to pay $6,000 to keep up the gardens in Major's Hill Park ? The thing is utterly indefensible. If the citizens of Ottawa want to keep up a garden, if it adds to the beauty of the city, well and good, but let them keep it up themselves. We all know that they have enough of the public funds of Canada already ; the taxpayers of the Dominion all contribute to maintain Ottawa ; and I say this item is utterly indefensible, unless you choose to vote money for a similar purpose to all the other cities of the Dominion.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We pay this money on an arrangement made with the city of Ottawa some years ago by which certain properties of the city are taken care of by the Government in consideration of the public buildings being exempted from city taxation. Therefore, the city asks that some consideration should be given it for that reason. This property was handed over to the city of Ottawa 17 years ago, but the city could not keep it up. Though they have the capital, they have not the means of doing it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) They are as rich as any other city.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. But this property having belonged to the Government, they handed it back at that period, and a bargain was made with the city by which we would keep up that property as a park, unless we required it for some other purpose ; because there was then some thought of building a new residence for the Governor General on that site, but we have still continued to use the old residence. The park adjoins the Government grounds here, and certainly it is a property that we should keep in good order. I do not think we should refuse the sum of $6,000 for that purpose.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I fail entirely to see that the city of Ottawa has been such a loser by an expenditure of four or five millions of public money in erecting the Government buildings here, and by maintaining a regiment of something like a thousand men with all their wives and children, at an enormous cost to the public. The long and the short of the matter is, that the city of Ottawa has received extraordinary benefit, as everybody knows, from the Government being established here. The value of every lot in Ottawa has been doubled, trebled, and quadrupled by the Government's coming here. It is the height of absurdity for the citizens of Ottawa to advance this claim after all that has been done for them.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The same argument for a relief from taxation would apply to every city. The city of Ottawa gave up nothing. In every city Crown property is exempt from taxation, and there is no reason at all why the citizens of Ottawa should not, like the citizens of every other city, maintain their own public parks.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The Minister of Public Works says this was an arrangement made some years ago with the city of Ottawa. If he had stated that it was part of an arrangement made by the present Government with the city of Ottawa he would have stated the whole facts. But he should have stated that during the administration of Mr. Mackenzie he made an arrangement with the city of Ottawa that the citizens should take charge of this Major's Hill Park and ornament it themselves. He proposed, in the first place, to do one of two things—either to dispose of that property for public purposes and put the money into the revenue of the country, and let any speculator buy it, or to allow the city to take it ; and while we held a nominal ownership, to allow the city to ornament and beautify it to whatever extent they pleased. That is the arrangement to which the people of Ottawa were glad to agree under Mr. Mackenzie's administration. But when the Government changed, unfortunately for the interests of this country, the present Administration thought they would make another arrangement with the people of Ottawa, and they relieved them from the undertaking which they had deliberately entered into, and they have expended, as hon. gentlemen are aware, for many years, sums varying from ten thousand down to the amount we are now called upon to vote. Now, during the discussion that took place here with regard to the Admiralty courts, we contended the other day that in respect to those courts the same treatment should be accorded to one part of the country as to the other. That view was admitted by the Government, and even the Minister of Justice contended it was not fair that public money should be granted to one part of the Dominion for a certain purpose and should not be granted to another part of the country for a like purpose. This park is in that position. There is no other park in the country which receives a public grant for a like object; and the contention that the city of Ottawa suffers in consequence of the large expenditure of public money here is too absurd to call for attention. In fact, Ottawa has been built up, and is now largely maintained and sustained by the money which comes from Parliament in sustaining the number of people who are in the civil service, and if it had not been for that expenditure it is well known that the city of Ottawa would never have attained the very respectable proportions it has reached to-day, and on that ground alone it cannot be upheld for a moment. I will move that this amount be struck out of the Estimates, and if I fail to obtain the concurrence of the Committee on that point, I will move on concurrence again, so that the names can be formally recorded. I move that this item of $6,000 for Major's Hill Park be now struck out.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). It is fair and right that the Government should reconsider their course on this matter, and should decide whether it is really in the interest of the people of the country that $3,000 or $4,000 should be expended yearly on this park. This park is really for the city, and the city should be able to maintain it in a reasonably good condition. The people of Ottawa have many advantages from the capital being located here, and they should be able to maintain their own park. There is no reason whatever why the Government should continue to maintain it, and I hope, therefore, the Committee will adopt the resolution.

Committee divided : Yeas, 35 ; Nays, 37.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I ask the hon. Minister of Public Works if it is not advisable to apply to this park a similar system to that he has adopted in maintaining the grounds at Rideau Hull, namely, by letting the work by contract. The hon. gentleman expects to make a large saving by this system, and I trust he will look upon its adoption favorably for this park.

Mr. WELSH. There is a nice flower-house in the grounds, and I should like to know to whom the flowers are supplied.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) You are not a Minister.

Mr. WELSH. I do not profess to be a Minister, and if I could not make a better Minister than one hon. gentleman I am looking at, I would not be a good one. He has had a good raking over, and he will have many more if he does not mend his ways. I want to know who gets the flowers, what they are for, who has a right to them, and who does get them; also, whether I can go and ask for a flower for my button-hole, as I see hon. gentlemen opposite wearing them.

Mr. LOVITT. I can tell the hon. gentleman that I went there the first Session I came here, and I was distinctly told they were for the Ministers.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. We should have the declarations of the hon. Ministers on this question. I have been in the conservatory several times, and have seen some very fine flowers there, but I have been utterly unable to discover who has a right to them. We should have an official declaration from the hon. Minister who has charge of the Department as to the persons who are entitled to those flowers, and for what purpose they are kept in the conservatory.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The plants are kept in the conservatory until spring, when they are transplanted to ornament the grounds.

Mr. FISHER. If the hon. Minister visited the conservatory he would find that the bulk of the plants were not suitable for bedding out in the spring, but were for winter blooming. The Minister has not answered the hon. member's question as to what is done with them, and for whose use they are kept, and who has permission to use them.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No one.

Mr. WELSH. I want to know from the hon. Minister of Public Works if I call in the morning and ask him for one of those flowers if he can give it to me?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No.

Mr. WELSH. Well, who can give it to me.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Nobody.

Mr. WELSH. Then nobody has anything to do with it. I want to know who this conservatory belongs to, or who has control over it? I intend to go there to-morrow morning to ask for some flowers, and if I do not find out who has control I will lay hold of all I can get, and then we will see who is in charge.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. Minister may think that an item of $5,000 or $6,000 for flowers sent to Minister's tables may be very trifling. It may be objectionable or it may not be objectionable, but we want to know if it is the case.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is not so.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Where do the flowers go, then?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not know.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Then the hon. gentleman is the only ignorant man in the House on that subject.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Well, the hon. member for Queen's is very learned.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I ask why the hon. Minister is asking for an increase of $10,000, in this vote.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I answered this already. The hon. gentleman has no right to repeat question after question, which I have already answered. He may think it is a very nice thing to do so, but he cannot take advantage of his position to do that when I have already answered.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman is altogether wrong on this point. There is an opinion prevalent everywhere that these flowers are sent to Ministers' tables. I do not know whether that is true or not, but my hon. friend (Mr. Davies) has only quoted that impression, and he has a right to be answered, in a manner different from that in which he has been answered by the hon. Minister.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I answered the hon. gentleman in a civil way. I told him that these flowers were not sent to the Ministers that I know of. I know that they are not sent to me, and I do not see what other answer I could give.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That makes the matter worse. If these flowers, were sent to the Ministers' tables it might not be so objectionable, but if they are not it is quite time for the House to know what is done with them. If we spend public money for private parties to get these flowers it is still more objectionable, and if they are not sent to the hon. Ministers, I want to know what becomes of them.

Mr. WELSH. The same here.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You will observe, Sir, that my hon. friend from Brome (Mr. Fisher), who understands these floricultural matters, in connection with a good many such subjects, stated of his own knowledge what, I believe, is a fact, that there are a very large number of plants in that conservatory which are of no possible use for bedding out. It is absurd to say that they keep expensive and costly plants simply for the pleasure of the gardener to look upon. We know that cannot be so, and if it is so, it is a gross piece of wastefulness. These flowers may or may not be for the hon. Ministers; I do not know and I do not care, but they cannot be for the purpose of bedding out in these grounds which would be a legitimate use for them. They must, therefore, be for the purpose of handing over to some parties who have no right to have them grown for them at the public cost.

Mr. BOWELL. I do not think that at all follows. I know there are semi-tropical plants in that conservatory in winter, which are bedded out during the spring, and remain until the cold weather comes when they are taken back to the conservatory. The hon. member for Brome (Mr. Fisher) may undoubtedly be a better floriculturist than I am. I have not been in the conservatory for years, but I know that on two or three occasions I tried to pay it a visit, as the hon. member for Queen's did, and I did not get in. I never had a flower out of that garden, either for my table or for any other purpose. I do think the answer made by the hon. Minister of Public Works should have been sufficient for any gentleman. When the question was put to him by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Somerville) as to whether these flowers were used for the benefit of the Ministers, the hon. Minister of Public Works said he had no knowledge of their having been used for such purpose, and that as far as he knew they were for the purpose of bedding out on the grounds during the summer. Surely that ought to be a sufficient answer to hon. gentlemen opposite, unless they are prepared to establish the fact that the hon. Minister of Public Works is not telling the truth. If that be the insinuation, and there be evidence of that, I find no fault with hon. gentlemen opposite, if they say so distinctly and positively, they are not blamable in trying to find out the facts.

Mr. WELSH. I really think so, honestly, myself.

Mr. BOWELL. I think we should treat each other at least as gentlemen. The hon. Minister says he has no knowledge of any abuse of the kind referred to by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Somerville), and that ought to be sufficient. I am sure my hon. friend from Queen's would accept it if I told him so.

Mr. WELSH. I would if you say so; I would not if he said so.

Mr. BOWELL. I am sorry the hon. gentleman should say that. It is well known that in all conservatories gardeners take a pride in having rare plants, and it really is not more expense. A man occupying the position which Mr. Robertson—who, I think, is a strictly honorable and straightforward man—does, takes a pride in that. I have no doubt that although there may be tropical plants there, as stated by the hon. member for Brome, they are only such as are to be found in other conservatories. It is a question for Parliament to say whether these grounds should be decorated as they have been for the past twenty years, so as to present a pleasing appearance, or that they should be allowed to go to grass.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The dandelions would cost more than the flowers.

Mr. BOWELL. I think so, too. I believe that these grounds should be kept in such a condition in the summer that they will be a credit to the Dominion.

Mr. WELSH. The same here.

Mr. BOWELL. There is not another capital in the world which I have seen which does not decorate the grounds of the seat of Government; and I think this money is well expended in decorating our grounds, so as to make them creditable to the country.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I am sure the members of the Government will feel obliged to the members of the House for having ventilated this question, because there has been an impression, and it is believed by the members of this House generally, that those flowers were used by members of the Government. Hon. gentlemen deny this, but this information was given by the gardeners themselves. My hon. friend from Yarmouth (Mr. Lovitt) happened to be strolling in the neighborhood of the greenhouse one day, and going there, he saw some plants that were apparently drooping, and from which the flowers had been pretty well stripped, and he asked how it was that they were not as fresh as the other flowers. The man in charge told him with perfect frankness: "Those have just come in from one of the Ministers, and we have had others put in their places." That statement has been reported around the corridors of this House ever since. The hon. Minister of Customs may not get any of these flowers. He boasts sometimes that he has no cab hire, but other Ministers have cab hire, and other Ministers may have flowers, and it would appear from the evidence of the persons in charge of them that they did have them sent to their homes when they require them. If this is denied and cleared up to-night, the members of the Government will be relieved from this supposition. At all events, I think it just as well that this explanation should be given.

Mr. SCARTH. There seems to be difference of opinion between the hon. member for Queen's and the hon. member for Halifax. The hon. member for Queen's rather thinks Ministers should have flowers, while the hon. member for Halifax thinks they should not.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I did not express any opinion one way or the other. I said that it might not be objectionable, but I know a couple of ladies who asked for flowers, and who were peremptorily refused by the gardener, who said: "No, I cannot give them to any but Ministers; these are all reserved by order of the Minister of Public Works for the Ministers of the Crown." An hon. Minister says to-night that the gardener has made a false statement to everyone who went to this conservatory, and if the flowers do not go to the Ministers, I say it is the duty of the Ministers to find out where they do go.

Mr. DAVIN. It appears that the great grievance is that the hon. members of the Opposition, when they go to the conservatory, cannot get a flower—especially that my genial friend from Prince Edward Island could not get one for his button-hole. I am very glad that the hon. gentlemen of the Opposition have at last found a policy with which they can destroy the Government. The great Liberal party, which has been hitherto known as the Grit party, will now be known as the bouquet party, and one hon. gentleman after another will go before the free and intelligent electors on the hustings, and, holding up his button-hole, and shedding deciduous tears, will say to them: "I went there to get a flower, and I was denied a flower;" and when the free and intelligent electors come to comprehend the outrage, they will rise in their might and fury and sweep this dishonest and unfair Conservative Government out of existence; and when we come to see that Government entombed, we shall be told: "It was but a little foolish flower." I think this debate is really a happy circumstance for Canada. In England they have a "Primrose" party; in fact, the great Conservative party is now almost synonymous with the primrose party, as henceforth the great Liberal party of Canada will be the "bouquet" party. There will be a tender element about their policy henceforth. What they have wanted in the past has been sweetness and light, and a certain aroma of cultivation; but now, associated with their rigid Grit principles and their somewhat severe views, there will be associated all the charm of the flower garden; and I have no doubt that the popular fancy, running riot in this direction, will take the hon. members one after another, and will christen them, according to their various moral and intellectual qualities, with the names of certain flowers. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), owing to the delicate and gracious manner with which he always deals with questions of this kind, I have no doubt will be known as the lily from Queen's. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), who, when he deals in rhetoric, is strong in color, but who is yet without that delicate aroma exhaled from some natures, will be known as the tulip of the Reform party; and my hon. friend who is so dreadfully cut up for not getting anything for his button-hole, will be known, as the rose of Prince Edward Island. And the popular fancy will take to the study of horticulture, so that their nomens and cognomens will all be perfectly suitable. I have no doubt that not only they, but the Conservative party and the people at large will have to study horticulture, and we shall all go armed with rosebuds and lilies into the fray, and fight our battles on this great issue. But, speaking seriously for one minute, positively it is hardly creditable that we should see great men like my hon. friend from Queen's, and great and fashionable men like my hon. friend from Brome (Mr. Fisher), at this hour of the morning, discussing in the Parliament of Canada, the question of flowers for their button-holes. It may be that the favorable view I take as to how they will stand before the country will not be correct. It is barely possible that a people so serious and grave as the great Canadian people, may, after all, think that men who will spend so much time at one o'clock in the morning discussing whether they can get a flower for their button-hole may not, after all, be the proper persons to be entrusted with the great and important issues with which Ministers of the Crown have to deal.

Mr. WELSH. I wish to know simply for what purpose this flower garden is kept. If it is kept for the use of the members of the Government, I am quite satisfied, because I know that the members of the Government have to entertain and show hospitality to many who visit Ottawa during the session. But we have got no satisfactory reply to that. We have only got the flowery speech we have just heard from the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Davin). He does not know what name to call us by. I do not know what name we will call him—dandelion or something else. I notice the hon. gentleman, ever since he has been in the House, gets up on various questions and speaks. He will speak on every motion, and approve of every motion, and will vote on every motion. He puts me in mind, always, when he gets up to speak, of something like the question of a dogma in the church:

You will and you won't;
You shall and you shan't;
You can and you can't,
You'll be d— if you do; and You'll be d— if you don't.

It was a grand chance for him to get up and make a flowery speech, but I do not think he has thrown any light on the subject at all. He has not shown us what these $6,000 were used for in keeping this conservatory. I want to know under whose control it is, and what service it is to the country? Will his speech give any information on the subject to his constituents at Regina? If I had some of his fine language with which to express myself I would characterise it as buncombe; and if I were up in Regina, and he presented himself again before the people, I would ask the people to get him to explain why he voted this $6,000. For what purpose did he vote it? He looks very serious, and is not so cheerful as he was a moment ago when talking of primroses and that sort of thing. What answer would he give his constituents when asked for what purpose they grew the flowers? He is a jolly, good fellow—too jolly, sometimes. Let us hear a little common sense.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. We must have the gardener of the flower house before the Public Accounts Committee, and we will then be able to get the real facts of the expenditure. I would say with regard to the statement of the hon. member for West Assiniboa, that although he has been announcing a policy for the Opposition to present to the country, we all know what his policy has always been, and what the policy of hon. gentlemen on that side who support the Government has always been. They are looking out for public buildings, railway charters, timber limits—everything that will put money into their pockets; and I think the hon. member for West Assiniboa stands pre-eminent among all these gentlemen. He stands out more boldly in the Auditor General's Report every year. He is a favorite of the Government. He rejoices in the flowers which fall to his lot on the Pile of Bones out west. He draws annually from the Dominion Government from $6,000 to $8,000 for advertising and printing, and can afford to buy his own flowers and button-hole bouquets at Ottawa. I often see the hon. gentleman with a button-hole bouquet in his dress suit, and I think it becomes him admirably.

Mr. DAVIN. It is always given me.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. When he announces the policy of the Opposition, he ought to remember what his policy has been. It is always to put money in his own pocket. We have had various illustrations of his consistency in this House. Not longer than last week he proposed an amendment in this House, and the Government proposed an amendment to his amendment, and he actually voted against his own motion. He is always willing to support the Government, because, forsooth, the Government support him, and it is very desirable for him to pursue the policy he has always pursued of supporting the men who support him. Nobody knows what becomes of these flowers. It was reported during last session that the senior member for Hamilton (Mr. Brown) had the run of the conservatory when his little dickey-bird Bill was before the House for the protection of pigeons, and that he presented to all those who voted for it a pigeon-hole bouquet every day, and sent them a circular thanking them for their support. If it was the case that the senior member from Hamilton secured this advantage from the Minister of Public Works, I would like to know it.

Mr. GILLMOR. Did he get them at that conservatory?

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I want to find that out, and if the Minister of Public Works cannot inform us on this point, as the senior member for Hamilton is not present, perhaps the junior member for that city (Mr. McKay) can tell us whether his senior obtained the run of the conservatory last Session, and presented those who supported his little bird Bill with those bouquets? I know the junior member was not favored in this regard, because he opposed the Bill; but still he may be in the confidence of the senior member, and can inform us whether his confrère secured this advantage from the Minister of Public Works of using the conservatory.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). There is this point in the matter. Hon. gentlemen on this side accept the statement of the Minister of Public Works that he did not receive those flowers, but will be as ready to accept the statement of hon. gentlemen on this side, who said that the gardener told them expressly—one speaks from his own knowledge, and the other says he had his information from a number of ladies—that the Minister of Public Works did receive them; and the hon. gentleman will then see that he is retaining in this employ an official who not only labels the Government, but makes statements without foundation to members of this House. Is it proper to retain a person of that kind in the public employ?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I ask for an explanation of the increase of $12,000. The hon. member for Assiniboa, who was not in his place to-night—

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. He was in his place.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)—when we voted half a million dollars, has chosen at this late hour to make a flippant speech about the manner in which the Opposition conduct their proceedings. If he had been in his place discharging his duties—

Mr. DAVIN. I was in my place the whole evening.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)—he would have learned that we had voted over $500,000 of public money. I want to know what reason there is for this increase of $10,000?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman put that question three or four times, but he must see that I had no opportunity of answering him. Last year, in Nova Scotia we had fifteen buildings to provide for; this year we have eighteen. Last year in Prince Edward Island we had six; this year we have six. Last year in New Brunswick we had fifteen; this year we have eighteen. Last year in Quebec we had twenty-five; this year twenty-seven. Last year in Ontario we had forty-eight; this year we have fifty-seven. Last year in the North-West Territories we had one; this year we have four. Last year in Manitoba we had four; this year we have two. So that makes twenty-two more buildings this year than last, and this is the reason.

Material for Repairs, &c., in connection with ventilation and lighting public buildings, Ottawa.....$6,000

Mr. CASEY. In regard to this item for ventilation, I think it is absolutely necessary to call the attention of the Minister to the fact that, in spite of all this expenditure, these buildings are abominably ventilated. In spite of all the machinery which we have down stairs, and of the repairs which are made from year to year, the ventilation does not improve. In this chamber we are either subjected to draughts and have cold falling on our heads, or we are roasted. We get the benefit of all the smells that arise from what goes on in the various offices connected with the buildings, as well as from the cookery. If the hon. the Minister of Public Works would devote his energy to this subject, and would get a competent man to devise a plan, the air might be made purer. I say a competent man, because the present engineer, Mr. Arnoldi, has been trying to ventilate these buildings for many years, and has not yet succeeded, and I think it is time to try some one else, to get an expert in the matter, because the present state of things is injurious to the health of members. The present man has been a failure, and we must call in somebody who has larger experience, and see if he could do something with these buildings.

Committee rose, and reported the resolutions.

THE BUDGET.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would enquire whether the Minister of Finance is able to state when the Budget speech will be delivered.

Mr. FOSTER. I am sorry to say that I am not, but, to avoid future trouble for the hon. gentleman, I will inform him that I will give a week's notice of the delivery of the Budget speech.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is very proper, and I am obliged to the hon. gentleman for the promise he has given; but my reason for putting the question was not simply for my own convenience or for that of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. It was with a view of pressing upon the Government the propriety of having the financial statement made without further delay. We have been here nearly two months, and we will probably be kept a much longer time than is desirable unless that financial statement can soon be made. While I am on my feet, I would also like to know whether the hon. gentleman expects shortly to bring before us the banking Bill. That is a Bill which, for obvious reasons, should be before us for some time before it is discussed.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope to be able to bring down that Bill within a week.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 1.40 a.m. (Wednesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 5th March, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PRIVILEGE—THE MEMBER FOR LINCOLN.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think, Mr. Speaker, the time has come when we should take into consideration, or fix a day for taking into consideration, certain papers and documents appearing in our Votes and Proceedings with respect to the case of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert). I might ask the First Minister whether he has any additional document to submit? He expected, when I last interrogated him, to have one in a day or two.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have received a telegram that the letter has been mailed. I suppose I will get it to-morrow.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is a question, although it may not be absolutely one of privilege, which is, nevertheless, very closely allied thereto, involving, as it does, the position of an hon. member of this House. It seems to me that it would be right we should fix a day for discussing it. Of course, it is a matter in which the convenience of the House and Government must be consulted. It has now been before the House for nearly three weeks, in a sense, and, under the circumstances, the discussion of it should not be delayed. I would like to know if the Government will consent to have this matter taken up, say on Friday, by which time the hon. gentleman will be in possession of the letter.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have no objection to Monday.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That would be a very inconvenient day for a great many members. If the hon. gentleman objects to Friday, say Tuesday.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You would be taking a day from us then.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This involves certain reflections on the Government, and would most properly come up on a Government day for that reason.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not agree with that. Say Wednesday, if Tuesday does not suit. We are not near the end of the Session yet, I am sorry to say, and business must be proceeded with.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am sorry to think that we are only half through, as far as I can judge.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will give you Monday or Wednesday to discuss the matter.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The matter is particularly interesting to the right hon. gentleman, in right of his son, at all events.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It will be as interesting on Wednesday as on Tuesday.

Mr. LAURIER. The right hon. gentleman must remember that if he has contemplated to take Wednesday away from us he will take away the only day we have now. This motion will come up next week or the week after; and if Wednesday is taken away, private members will have no day left.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Very well, I will give you Tuesday. I would say, however, that this is either a question of privilege or it is not, and I think the hon. gentleman ought, at a convenient time, in justice to the member whose name is mentioned, give him and give the House notice of the course he is going to take.

Mr. BLAKE. Contemporaneously with this, an arrangement might be made to put the motion on the Orders of the Day.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do I understand that the arrangement made with the hon. gentleman is that this matter should take precedence on Tuesday?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I may just say the motion will be calling attention to the fact of those letters published in the Globe, and now placed on our Votes and Proceedings, and I shall then demand that the hon. gentleman's conduct shall be dealt with by the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the hon. gentleman should formulate the motion and put it on the Votes and Proceedings, in justice to the hon. member.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I shall endeavor to have that done at a reasonable date.

The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) has pretty ample notice of all this, and it ought to be quite sufficient if the motion is put on the paper on Friday or Saturday, which will give him two days to consider the case.

Mr. RYKERT. Go on as fast as you like. I am not in the least alarmed about your motion. I will deal with you afterwards.

OBSERVANCE OF THE LORD'S DAY.

Mr. CHARLTON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 110) to secure the better observance of the Lord's Day. He said: I shall claim, Mr. Speaker, the privilege of following the custom in the British House of Commons, and make a few remarks on the first reading of this Bill. The Lord's Day Alliance of the Dominion of Canada was organised nearly two years ago in Ottawa, and at the meeting of this Alliance the following subjects were selected for consideration, and the following motions made:—

"On the evening of Friday, 20th April, 1888, a conference of representative men from the different religious bodies was held in the City Hall, Ottawa, for the purpose of discussing the question of united effort in promoting the due observance of the Lord's Day. There were representative clergymen present from all the denominations, and among the laymen a number of Senators and Members of Parliament.

"The Hon. G. W. Allan, Speaker of the Senate, was elected chairman of the meeting.

"At this meeting it was agreed, on motion of Archdeacon Lauder, seconded by John Charlton, M.P.: 1.—To organise an Alliance for the protection and preservation of the due observance of the Lord's Day.

"On motion of the Rev. Dr. Armstrong, seconded by Senator McKay: 2.—To issue a circular to the directors of the various Railway Companies, calling their attention to their duty in regard to the Lord's Day.

"On motion of Rev. J. Scanlon, seconded by Dr. Thorburn: 3.—To appoint a Committee to examine into the legal aspects of the Sabbath question, and to report as to the possibility of obtaining additional legislation; this Committee to consist of Hon. Speaker Allan, Hon. John Macdonald, John Charlton, M.P., George Jamieson, M.P., Prof. Weldon, M.P.

"On motion of Hon. J. Macdonald, seconded by Rev. J. Wood: 4.—To seek to educate public opinion with regard to Sabbath observance by means of the pulpit, the press, and petition.

"On motion of Dr. Armstrong, seconded by Rev. H. Pollard: 5.—To ask the various religious bodies to appoint delegates who shall represent them in the Alliance.

"The following officers were appointed:—President, Hon. Speaker Allan; Vice-Presidents, Hon. John Macdonald, John Charlton, M.P., Archdeacon Lauder, Hon. J. Macdonald (B.C.). These, with a committee of resident ministers, were to submit a constitution for adoption at the next annual meeting.

"The following officers were chosen for this organisation:—President, Hon. G. W. Allan; Vice-Presidents: Ontario, John Charlton, Esq., M.P., Quebec, Rev. John Scanlon (Montreal); New Brunswick, President St. John's Society for promoting the due observance of the Lord's Day; Nova Scotia, President Halifax Lord's Day Observance Society; Prince Edward Island, Hon. David Laird; Manitoba, Right Rev. Bishop Machray, D.D.; North-West Territory, Right Rev. Bishop Pinkham, D.D.; British Columbia, Hon. W. J. Macdonald, Secretary, Rev. Dr. Armstrong (Ottawa). Treasurer, George Hay (Ottawa). Executive Committee: Rev. Jos. White, Rev. H. Pollard, Rev. John Wood, Rev. G. McRitchie, Rev. T. W. Winfield, Rev. W. J. Crothers, Mr. John Charlton, M.P., Sheriff Sweetland, Dr. Thorburn, Messrs. John A. Cameron, Wm. Porter, Frank P. Bronson, Paul M. Robins, Neil McKinnon."

At a meeting held the year afterwards a committee was appointed to report as to the power of this House to legislate with reference to the Lord's Day observance, and the following report was presented:—

"Resolved, That, in the opinion of this meeting, the Parliament of Canada is competent to enact laws to secure the better observance of the Lord's Day. Section 91, subsection 27, of the British North America Act, empowers the Parliament of Canada to enact criminal laws. Parliament can, therefore, clearly bring Lord's Day legislation within the scope of this sub-section, by making breaches of the law, in such matters, misdemeanors. We are further of the opinion that the powers to make laws for the peace, order and good government of Canada, includes the power to secure the due observance of the Lord's Day by proper legislation. We are also of the opinion that legislation securing the better observance of the Lord's Day, in matters pertaining to general railway traffic, the management of the postal service, and the management of the railways and canals belonging to the Dominion, is, in the highest sense, necessary for promoting peace, order and good government in the Dominion of Canada."

A committee, consisting of the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) and myself, was appointed to prepare a Bill in pursuance with this resolution. This subject of the Lord's Day observance unquestionably elicits the active sympathy and co-operation of all the evangelical communities in this Dominion. The feeling evinced by these bodies is indicated pretty clearly by the resolutions introduced into the Dominion Synod of the Anglican Church with reference to this subject. The motion was made by the Hon. G. W. Allan, and, as it is brief, I will read it, as a specimen of the action taken by the various religious bodies in the Dominion:

"That this Synod do petition the Parliament of the Dominion, at its next Session, to enact such laws as will secure the better observance of the Lord's Day in the Dominion in all matters pertaining to general railway traffic, the management of the postal service, and in the management of the railways and canals belonging to the Dominion, as well as in all other matters over which Parliament has control, and that such petition be signed on behalf of this Synod by the presiding officers of each House."

This motion was seconded by Dean Carmichael, and passed unanimously. The Lord's Day Alliance of this Dominion is co-operating in this work with the Lord's Day Alliance of the United States, which is attempting to influence public sentiment in that country, as the Lord's Day Alliance of the Dominion is in this country.

It is not necessary for me, to-day, to enter into any discussion as to the religious aspect of the Lord's Day question. The Sabbath, unquestionably, was instituted by the Creator at creation, as we are informed in Genesis, second chapter.

Mr. AMYOT. It was Saturday.

Mr. CHARLTON. It was the seventh day. The language is: "The Lord rested from His labors on the seventh day and sanctified it." The change of the Sabbath to the first day of the week, which was made at the time of the Resurrection of our Redeemer, was a change which all Christian bodies, both Catholic and Protestant, have accepted as proper. They accept it on the ground that the Resurrection of Christ was a greater event than the creation of the world. But this Bill takes lower ground, if I may use the term. It bases the necessity of the observance of one day in seven on the interest of the public merely, in securing a day of rest for all who may be engaged in labor. I need not stop at this moment to attempt to prove what is universally accepted, that it is a physical necessity that man should have a day of rest at regular intervals; and experience teaches that one day in seven is the natural period, the observance of which is for both his physical and moral well-being.

I may say that the delay in introducing this Bill has been due to the absence of my hon. friend from Albert (Mr. Weldon), who was to act in concert with me in this matter. The Bill, however, is prepared, and I beg briefly to call the attention of the House to its provisions. There are only a few clauses in it, and I do not know that I should be trespassing on the patience of the House unduly if I were to read them :

"Whereas it is desirable, in the interests of religion, morality and the public welfare, that better provisions shall be made for securing the observance of the first day of the week, hereafter called the Lord's Day, as a day of rest: Therefore Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:—

"1. Whoever on the Lord's Day shall either labor himself, or shall compel his apprentice, servant or other person under his control or charge to labor, or perform any other work than the household offices of daily necessity or other works of necessity or charity, shall be deemed to be guilty of a misdemeanor.

"2. Whoever on the Lord's Day sells, or publicly shows forth or exposes or offers for sale, or purchases, any goods, chattels, or other personal property, or any real estate whatsoever, or does any work or business of his ordinary calling, works of necessity and charity only excepted, shall be deemed to be guilty of a misdemeanor.

"3. Whoever shall on the Lord's Day be guilty of promoting, directing, or causing horse racing, foot racing, cock fighting, or dog fighting, or shall engage in any noisy public game whereby the peace and quiet of the Lord's Day is disturbed, and manual labor made necessary in preparing for and conducting the same, shall be deemed to be guilty of a misdemeanor.

"4. Whoever shall on the Lord's Day, tipple in any inn, tavern, house of public entertainment, or shall allow or permit tipping in any such inn, tavern, or house of public entertainment, or shall revel or publicly exhibit himself in a state of intoxication, or shall brawl or use profane language in the public streets or open air, so as to create any riot or disturbance or annoyance to Her Majesty's peaceable subjects, shall be deemed to be guilty of a misdemeanor.

"5. Whoever shall on the Lord's Day hunt, shoot, or pursue, or take or kill any game or any wild bird or animal, or shall discharge fire-arms, except in the just defence of person or property, or in the performance of military or police duty, or shall use dogs, net, trap, or other appliance for the abovementioned purposes, shall be deemed to be guilty of a misdemeanor.

"6. Whoever shall on the Lord's Day go out fishing, or shall take, kill or destroy any fish or use any gun, fishing rod, net or other appliance for that purpose, shall be deemed to be guilty of a misdemeanor.

"7. Whoever shall on the Lord's Day, either as proprietor, publisher or manager, engage in the printing, publication and delivery of a newspaper, journal or periodical; and whoever shall on the Lord's day engage in the sale, distribution or circulation of any newspaper, journal or periodical published on that day, shall be deemed to be guilty of a misdemeanor."

This latter is an important section, which will now, if adopted, be embodied for the first time in Sabbath legislation. The Sunday newspapers, in the experience of countries where its publication is permitted, notably in the United States, is found to be one of the greatest sources of demoralisation that exist. One of its evil effects is, that it keeps up the strain pertaining to daily business every day in the week. It interferes with Sabbath rest and quiet, and tends to destroy the sense of withdrawal from worldly employments, excitements and occupations. It leads to the desecration of the day in numberless ways, and is known to be in that country a crying evil of giant proportions, one that the Christian people of the United States would gladly put down. Could they have foreseen the extent to which that evil has grown to-day, they would not have permitted it to exist at all. We, in Canada, are at a point where we can prevent this evil arising in our country. There are, I believe, two Sunday newspapers in the Dominion—one at Victoria, B.C., and one at Vancouver, B.C.; with these exceptions, we have none, and if we profit by the experience of our neighbors, we shall take steps to prevent this fruitful source of irreligion and disquiet being established in this country.

"8. No canal belonging to Canada shall be open for traffic or business on the Lord's Day; but this provision may be set aside by Order in Council after the first day of November in each year."

This qualification is introduced because, in the case of vessels coming down the lakes, it is often a matter of great importance that they should reach their destination at a certain time towards the close of navigation, and one day's delay might prevent them doing so.

"9. No post office in Canada shall be open for the delivery of letters or the transaction of business, other than the reception of mails, on the Lord's Day."

It is supposed that it is necessary to receive mails on Sunday if they are delayed. But it is deemed in the highest degree important that the Government should, in the management of the canals and post offices of the Dominion, set a good example to the public, and should themselves avoid being guilty of the sin of Sabbath desecration.

Section 10, with regard to railway traffic, is one of considerable importance. The subject is one with which it is very difficult to deal. The question is an important one, because a great many men are employed on our railways. I suppose from 25,000 to 30,000 men are employed on the different railways of Canada. The majority of these men are compelled to work on the Sabbath, to a greater or less extent, which is a very serious injury to their social and religious interests. The railway man who is obliged to leave his home on the Sabbath cannot feel otherwise than degraded by the character of the work he is engaged in. I have frequently talked with railway men, and they lamented the necessity they were under of laboring on the Sabbath, and of their inability to remain at home with their families and go to Sabbath school and to church. They felt they were debased by being compelled to do business on that day. It is a cruelty and a hardship that more than twenty thousand men in this Dominion should be deprived on the Lord's Day of worshipping with their families in the various places of public worship which they might wish to attend. The railway companies, in their operations, attract the attention of a great many people, and the influence they exercise on the observance of the Sabbath is of a most demoralising nature. But there are many very serious difficulties surrounding the case. There is, for instance, the through traffic in connection with the American roads. Our railways are helpless in this respect, for if they wish to put an end to working on Sunday, they will require the co-operation of the American roads, or will be obliged to sacrifice a large portion of their through traffic. Unless we can have concurrent legislation on the part of the American Government, it will be impossible to deal with this branch of the question. Then there is the transportation of perishable goods, which is a work of necessity, and no law can properly prohibit the transportation of these goods on the Lord's Day. Then there are various contingencies, such as snow blockades, which may delay traffic for days, and thus compel the use of the Sabbath for the forwarding of traffic thus delayed. There are also accidents and stress of weather, which cannot be avoided. Now, I am happy to be able to believe that our railway officials in this country are enlightened Christian men, and not averse to any practicable legislation in the direction of securing more perfect observance of the Sabbath on their lines. They are, on the contrary, anxious that everything practicable should be done. A circular was addressed by the Secretary of the Alliance, the Reverend Dr. Armstrong, to railway managers, and replies were had from Sir Joseph Hickson and Mr. Van Horne, the President of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I will take the liberty of reading these communications. Sir Joseph Hickson writes as follows:—

“GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY COMPANY OF CANADA, “GENERAL MANAGER'S OFFICE,
“MONTREAL, 25th March, 1889.

“REVEREND SIR.—The question of Sunday labor on the railways of Canada is one beset with many difficulties, and it is hardly practicable to deal with it exhaustively within the compass of an ordinary letter.

“Personally, I have been, and am, opposed to Sunday labor, and would be very glad to see the running of all trains on the Lord's Day discontinued, but I believe this to be impracticable, and especially so in a country situated as Canada, with a population holding so many different religious views, and a considerable portion of which do not, from the moral standpoint, look upon the running of Sunday trains with disfavor.

“There are very few regular passenger trains run upon the Grand Trunk Railway on Sundays,—I may say none are started on their journey on that day, but such as the company have been seriously urged by the public to run. Trains which have started on their journeys on the preceding day, are run through to some central point on Sunday mornings, in some instances.

“As regards merchandise traffic, there are certain perishable articles which the company has felt compelled, when in transit on the preceding day, to move forward on the Lord's Day, and which if they refused to go forward, they would simply not carry at all. Then, it sometimes happens that, from blockages from snow, stress of weather, or accident, traffic which has been seriously delayed, has, in order to prevent loss to the owners, to be moved forward on the Sabbath.

“Over probably 2,100 out of 3,250 miles of the Grand Trunk Railway there are no trains run on Sundays, and over probably 430 more miles, the only trains are one passenger train passing in the early morning to the end of its journey begun on the preceding day.

“I am not satisfied that combined action of the railway companies in Canada would have the effect of curtailing materially the amount of Sunday labor on the railways of the country. Such action must necessarily extend to railways in the northern portion of the United States, to affect in any appreciable degree such work as is done on Sundays on the railways of Canada, as a result of competition for traffic.

“As any men who have to do a day's work on Sunday have the opportunity of taking some other day for rest, physically, I do not consider them in any sense suffer.

“That the Railway Company would suffer pecuniary loss if all traffic on its lines was entirely prohibited on Sundays, I think cannot be doubted. Most of the railway is a single track, and there is not the same elasticity of expansion of its capacity as there is in the case of double track railways; and when from the effects of storms or accidents the business is interrupted at some particular place, the limit of work which can be done in the six working days may easily be, indeed as at times exceeded on some portion of the railway. It is manifest that in addition to the loss to the Railway Company, the loss in such cases to the owners of commodities in transit, might be very serious, if under no circumstances was such traffic allowed to be moved on Sunday.

“I very sincerely wish your Association success. Many years ago, as you will see from the small volume which I have taken the liberty to send herewith for your perusal, efforts were made in England to effect reform in the matter of Sunday labor. Amongst other railway workers at that time (1852) this volume was sent to me. I have ever since taken a deep interest in the subject of it.

“I am, Reverend and dear Sir,
“Yours faithfully,
“Rev. Dr. ARMSTRONG,
“Ottawa, Ont.” J. HICKSON.

Mr. Van Horne replied as follows:—

“THE CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY CO.,
“MONTREAL, 11th June, 1888.

“Rev. Dr. W. D. ARMSTRONG, “Ottawa, Ont.

“DEAR SIR.—Your circular of the 22nd ultimo has been received and will be laid before our directors at their next meeting. I think, however, that I may anticipate their action by answering your three questions as follows:—First, our Sunday traffic is already limited to clear cases of necessity. Second, it is impossible to define the extent of the Sunday traffic on the railway, as such traffic largely depends upon emergencies, few of which can be anticipated. Our passenger trains when they start from the termini are obliged to run through without laying over, and as between five and six days are required for the through trip it is impossible to arrange these trains so that they will not, to some extent, run on Sunday somewhere on the line. We have arranged, however, so that no main line trains will arrive at Montreal Sunday morning or leave there Sunday night. This arrangement is made with a view to avoiding Sunday trains on the main line in the most populous district traversed by it, namely, between Montreal and Carleton Place. I may say generally, in answer to your second question, that our train arrangements, to the extent that trains are required to intrude more or less on Sundays, whether on the main line or elsewhere, are forced upon us by the action of the American lines with which we are competing for traffic, and I can see no way to overcome this difficulty without destroying our through business, upon which the railway largely depends for support.

“As to your third question, I beg to say that there are very many local lines in the United States as well as in Canada that can stop Sunday traffic entirely without pecuniary loss, but I do not see how a line of, say, five hundred or a thousand miles in length, forming part of a great through route can do so. It has been tried in a number of cases without success.

“So far as the effect of Sunday work on railway men is concerned, I have never observed any ill effects from such Sunday work as the emergencies of the service may require them to perform. They look upon it as emergency work, and accept it as such. An experience of more than thirty years in railway work has convinced me that the railway men both in Canada and the United States are, as a class, above the average in point of sobriety and morality. This is doubtless to some extent due to the discipline which is maintained in all branches of the service.

“In conclusion, I beg to assure you that those responsible for the management of the railway are as anxious as anyone can be to avoid all Sunday work, and that no effort has been or will be spared to restrict it to the closest possible limits.

“Yours truly,

“W. C. VAN HORNE,
“Vice-President.”

Mr. Ledyard, the President of the Michigan Central has stated that he was opposed to Sunday traffic, that he never had permitted excursion trains on that day over his road, and, so far as it lay in his power, he discouraged Sunday business. I am happy in thus being able to say that it is evident the managers of the great railway lines in Canada are not wilful trespassers upon the Divine law in this respect, and do not allow Sunday traffic, except in what they deem to be cases of unavoidable necessity. However, it is well to make some provision with regard to this matter. We may safely aver that there is a growing tendency to Sabbath desecration on the part of railway companies, and the section I propose with regard to this matter is one to which I would ask the attention of the House:

“10. Any railway corporation, superintendent, traffic manager, or person or persons by virtue of whose authority and command railway cars or trains shall on the Lord's Day be loaded at any railway station in Canada, or despatched from such station when loaded, or permitted to continue a journey, (except in the case of perishable goods) with Canadian local freight; or any person or persons as aforesaid who shall direct local passenger trains to be run on the Lord's Day (except one mail train each way, and one milk train on each road), or shall direct empty cars to be moved from station to station, within the territory of Canada, shall be deemed to be guilty of a misdemeanor. But two through passenger trains each way, with their necessary connections, shall be permitted on any trunk line of Canada, when American through passenger train connections render such trains necessary."

Then there is a provision that,

"At such time as the laws of the United States shall make corresponding provision, no through freight in transit from one point on the frontier of the United States to some other point on the said frontier shall be allowed to pass over Canadian roads on the Lord's Day, except live stock and perishable goods."

These provisions, in brief, amount to this: The movement of local freight, except in regard to perishable goods, is prohibited. The movement of empty cars is prohibited. The loading of cars on the Lord's Day is prohibited; and the movement of cars on the Sabbath Day is prohibited locally; but no restriction is placed in regard to through freight, because it is impossible to deal with that matter except when it is dealt with by the American Government. I am afraid that this provision will not meet the views of some of our religious friends, but my hon. friend Mr. Weldon and myself could not see how it was possible to deal with the matter in a more drastic way. The 11th section is practically the law of Ontario now. It is in regard to excursions, and was introduced into this House some years ago by myself:

"11. Excursions upon the Lord's Day by steamboats plying for hire, or by railway, or in part by steamboat and in part by railway, and having for their only or principal object, the carriage of passengers for amusement or pleasure, and to go and return the same day by the same steamboat or railway, or any others owned by the same persons or company, shall not be deemed a lawful conveying of passengers within the meaning of this Act; and the owner or corporation, superintendent or person, by virtue of whose authority and direction such excursion is permitted or ordered on the Lord's Day, shall be deemed to be guilty of a misdemeanor."

These are the provisions of the Bill in regard to the infractions of the law which it is proposed to enact. I am clearly of the opinion that Sunday excursions are unnecessary and demoralising, that they involve unnecessary labor, and that they are destructive of the Sabbath quiet and rest. Christian people will not go on these excursions, and they are generally scenes of riot and disorder. These excursions also deprive the employes of the railway and steamboat companies of the rest to which they are entitled.

The rest of the Bill provides for the mode of procedure. Any person convicted under the sections from No. 1 to No. 7, may be fined $50, or imprisonment in default. Under sections 10 and 11, there may be a fine imposed not exceeding $400. I say, without hesitation, that this Bill is demanded by the Christian sentiment of this country. I do not believe there is a provision in the Bill which will not be accepted by the Christians of Canada. Even the Catholic Church, even Cardinal Taschereau—

Mr. AMYOT. We can manage our own affairs.

Mr. CHARLTON. It may be true that they can manage their own affairs; but the Christians of this country, including, if I am not misinformed, Cardinal Taschereau, believe that a uniform Sunday law should prevail. The Sabbath Day Alliance has taken a stand on this matter, and has instructed me to introduce the Bill which I now introduce. I introduce this Bill believing it to be for the good of man; for the good of the laborer; in order to get for the laborer his weekly rest; in order to save him from merciless employers who would take seven days' labor out of him for six days' pay. This is in the interest of the laborer, and it is also in the interest of the employer; because it is in the interest of the employer to have a religious laborer, a sober laborer, a God-fearing laborer—one who keeps the commands of God. It is also in the interest of the State to have a community of God-fearing, moral citizens; and nothing is more calculated to produce that result than the observance of the Lord's Day. It is in the interest of the State, and it is in the interest of humanity at large. Moreover, and this is not the smallest consideration, it is in consonance with the command of the Creator to observe one day in seven as a day of rest; and, therefore, whatever may be thought of the Bill itself, I move its first reading.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

PETERBORO' PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, What amount of money has been paid to the following legal gentlemen respectively, namely: W. H. Moore, A. P. Poussette, Q.C., John O'Meara, John Green, E. A. Peck and John Burnham, Q.C., all of Peterboro', on account of legal services or otherwise, rendered by those gentlemen, or any of them, on account of, and in regard to, the following works, or any of them:—1st. The purchase of the site and the construction of the Peterboro' Post Office; 2nd. The purchase of the site for the construction of the Custom House at Peterboro'; 3rd. On account of the Trent Valley Canal, distinguishing if paid on survey or construction, or damages to land consequent on construction?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. In January, 1886, there was a payment to Mr. Peck of $152.38 for legal services in connection with the purchase of sites for public buildings at Peterboro'. Nothing has been paid to the other gentlemen.

SURVEY AT NORTH CARLTON POINT.

Mr. YEO asked, Whether the Government has caused a survey to be made at North Carlton Point, P.E.I.? If so, has the Engineer made a report of the same?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There has been no survey.

ERECTION OF POST OFFICES.

Mr. McMULLEN asked, Seeing that the Government of the Dominion have erected, or have in course of construction, post offices in the following places in Quebec and the Lower Provinces, at a cost of about twenty-three thousand dollars each, the average receipts of which are $1,415.38, viz. :—

Annapolis, Nova Scotia, receipts	... $2,026 85
Dalhousie, New Brunswick	... 1,153 00
Joliette, Quebec	... 1,967 50
St. Henri	... 1,269 56
Aylmer	... 1,345 70
St. Jérôme	... 1,295 76
Lachine	... 825 18

Do the Government intend, in the Supplementary Estimates, to provide for the erection of post offices in Ontario in the following places:—

Listowel, receipts	$4,348 78
Mount Forest "	3,716 98
Harrison "	2,973 65
Palmerston "	1,925 12
Arthur "	1,949 15
Clifford "	1,102 00

If not, why not ?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am not in a position to answer that question now. When the supplementaries come down, there will be an answer one way or the other.

LIEUT.-COL. DUVAR.

Mr. PERRY asked, Whether Lieut.-Col. John Hunter Duvar, late Inspector of Fisheries for Prince Edward Island, is superannuated? If so, what is the date of his superannuation, and what amount? Whether the same Lieut.-Col. John Hunter Duvar is still in the employ of the Government? If so, in what capacity, and at what salary?

Mr. COLBY. Lieut.-Col. John Hunter Duvar was superannuated on the 6th July, 1889, at an allowance of $200 a year. He is not now in the employment of the Government.

FORTIFICATION OF ESQUIMALT.

Mr. PRIOR asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to proceed shortly with the necessary works for the fortification of Esquimalt? Whether any arrangement has been arrived at with the Imperial Government in regard to the same?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The question of the necessary works for the fortification of Esquimalt is still the subject of correspondence between the Imperial and Canadian Governments. Under the circumstances, it is impossible to give any definite information in reference thereto.

SCRIP FOR VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. DAVIN asked, Whether the Deputy Minister of Justice has yet reported on the reference respecting scrip for volunteers and others, made to him by the right hon. the Prime Minister at the request of Messrs. Sproule, Davis, Macdowall and Davin? If so, when it will be laid before the House?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. A report has been made upon it, and that report is now before Council.

COMMISSIONER OF NORTH-WEST MOUNTED POLICE.

Mr. DAVIN asked, Whether an humble Address to His Excellency the Governor General, from the Legislative Assembly of the North-West, praying for enquiry into serious statements made in the said Chamber reflecting on the conduct of the Commissioner of the North-West Mounted Police, has reached His Excellency?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. A resolution of the Legislative Assembly of the North-West on that subject was transmitted to the Secretary of State in the usual way.

CLAIM OF MRS. A. A. DOIG.

Mr. DAVIN asked, Whether the papers in the case of Mrs. A. A. Doig's claim to the amount paid for improvements on west half of section 22, 21 west of Second Principal Meridian, were referred to the Minister of Justice to determine whether or not the money paid for the house by the person to whom she sold it, and which money was paid into the Land Office at Regina, should or should not be paid to the said Mrs. A. A. Doig? Whether the money has been paid to anybody? If so, to whom, at what date, and why; and was it paid before any report from the Department of Justice was received?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The papers were referred to the Department of Justice on the 29th April and 13th June, 1889. The money, it now appears, was paid by the agent of Dominion Lands at Regina on the 3rd March, 1889, to John Burns Doig, who had at one time a homestead entry for the half section mentioned, who erected the house, and who, according to the rule of the Department governing cases of this description, was entitled to receive it. It will thus be seen that the money was paid over before the date of the reference to the Department of Justice, but that fact was not within the knowledge of the Department until quite recently. The Department of Justice has now been requested to advise whether, in paying the money over to Mr. Doig, it has incurred any liability to Mrs. Doig, who claims under a marriage settlement. The amount involved is $60.

RANK OF QUEEN'S COUNSEL.

Mr. AMYOT asked, In conferring on advocates the rank of Queen's Counsel, is it the intention of the Government to appoint them as such in courts created or maintained by the Provinces, or merely for courts created or maintained by the Dominion?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is the intention, in making such appointments, to continue in use the form of commission heretofore used. That commission is understood to confer the right and precedence to which the persons receiving it may be entitled by law, by virtue of the appointment to be Queen's Counsel.

MAILS FROM READ TO SHANNONVILLE.

Mr. BURDETT moved for:

Return of all advertisements, contracts, petitions and correspondence touching or relating to the carriage of Her Majesty's mail from Read to Shannonville.

He said: I should like to ask the attention of the House while I offer a few observations in support of this motion, in order that hon. members and the country may understand the position in which a large number of my constituents are placed. Something over five years ago a contract was let to carry the mail from a post office called Read, in the Township of Tyendinaga, from there to Melrose and thence to Shannonville, and return the same day, going twice a week by way of a post office named Blessington. It was the people of Read, desiring a daily mail, sent a petition to the Postmaster General, and tenders having been asked, the service was granted to them at an annual cost of $225. The service was efficiently performed, the mail starting from Read each morning, going to Melrose, a distance of some six miles, and then to Shannonville in a southerly direction, returning in the afternoon, and going twice a week by way of Blessington. Tenders were subsequently asked for the same service, and the contract given to a gentleman who resides at Melrose. I have no objection to this gentleman having the contract to carry the mail; and he performed the service for some time efficiently and properly. The contract was then changed in order, it is said, to give Blessington a daily mail; and the mail carrier, instead of starting from Read, the most northerly post office, in the morning, was permitted to start from Melrose, where he lived, and he was allowed $34.60 extra for carrying the mail daily by way of Blessington. Had this service been let by contract, I am instructed to undertake that it could have been performed for the same or less money, the mail carrier starting each morning from Read instead of from Melrose. The reason the carrier was allowed to start from Melrose was simply because he lives there and not at Read. The difficulty is this: A person writing a letter from Belleville to Read cannot get an answer, under the present system, within from three to four days. If a letter is written on Friday afternoon at Belleville, it goes to Shannonville, and is taken out to Melrose on Saturday, but it will not get to Read until Saturday night, and, therefore, an answer cannot be received in Belleville until Tuesday evening's train, and the reply will not be in the hands of the writer before Wednesday morning. There is neither telegraph, telephone or railway communication at Read, the nearest communication of this character being at Shannonville. Very great inconvenience is caused to the people by this arrangement, especially in case of sickness or death; but it is one of great advantage to the mail carrier. He obtains $34.60 more than previously, or $263 to deliver the mail, to start at Melrose, going out to Shannonville in the morning, coming back and going to Read by way of Blessington, and dropping the mail in the evening and returning to Melrose at night. So the person who gets a letter at Read has no opportunity to reply that day. The mail carrier, moreover, saves a distance of seventy-two miles a week, besides obtaining $34.60 additional. What is asked is, that the Postmaster General should look into this matter. I will guarantee that the service can be performed for the same money, and good security given, and have the mail start at Read every morning instead of at Melrose. I have no objection to the gentleman at Melrose having charge of the mail; he is a good, active supporter of the Government. I make no complaint in regard to the Government employing him, and I offer no serious objection to a little extra money being given to him; but if he receives extra money for performing extra work, the service should not be so changed that during the year he receives $34.60 additional, or $263.60 for the year's service, and has 3,600 miles cut off the distance. This is a great advantage to him, but a very great disadvantage to the people. It is a thickly-settled district; every farm is occupied, and has been occupied for fifty years; and the people are entitled to a daily mail, especially when they are entirely without any railway or telegraph communication, and when it takes so long to obtain a reply to a letter sent from Belleville, considering that the distance by road is only about eighteen miles. I am satisfied the Postmaster General will remedy this matter now that it has been brought to his attention.

Mr. HAGGART. There is no objection to all the correspondence on the subject being brought down. The change in the mode of performing the service between Read and Shannonville was made, as the hon. gentleman states, in order to give Blessington Post Office a daily mail. At that time the carrier between Read and Shannonville passed over the route daily, a detour being made every few days in order to serve Blessington. An offer was made by the contractor to serve the place daily at an increased rate—I think, $34.60 additional. On 21st November, Mr. White laid before me an offer from the contractor to carry the mails daily from Melrose and from Read and Blessington to Shannonville and return for an additional sum of $40. This offer was accepted, and the inspector at Kingston was ordered to carry it out. The inspector, however, stated that Mr. Ray had misunderstood the proposition, and his offer was to carry the mails from Melrose direct to Shannonville and return via Blessington and Read. The inspector thought this proposition was not as good an offer as the other, and he did not recommend it. However, on consulting with some parties there, it was thought that the service as proposed by Mr. Ray would be as acceptable as the other one, and we resolved to try it. It is at present being tried. It is true I had a letter from the hon. gentleman (Mr. Burdett), protesting against the arrangement and enclosing a petition. I gave him the information that we would try the arrangement, as at present existing, for a short time; and if it did not answer, we would try to accommodate your views in the matter.

Mr. BURDETT. There is another matter to which I would call the attention of the hon. Postmaster General. A merchant in Melrose writes to me, that he sends about $6,000 a year through the mail, there being no bank or any other means of sending the money, and that, besides him, many other persons are obliged also to send their money through the mail. I personally know the postmaster at Melrose, and I know him to be a man above reproach; but that money lies over night at Melrose, and he has no vault or safe in which to keep it. If that money were lost, through robbery or fire, it would be a serious matter for these people; and I would like to know who would bear the loss? I know the money will not be lost by any want of care on the part of the postmaster, but, nevertheless, precautions should be taken so as to prevent any possibility of its being stolen by burglars or destroyed by fire. I am glad to hear the Postmaster General say that if the present system is found to be inconvenient, after a trial is given, it will be changed.

Motion agreed to.

DAMAGES DONE BY STEAMERS, &c.

Mr. COOK moved for:

Return of all claims made by the Government since Confederation against individuals, companies or corporations, for damages, done to Government property by steamers, vessels or other craft; giving the names of vessels, &c., their owners, dates and items of each claim, distinguishing those paid and unpaid.

He said: In connection with this motion, I have only to say that I understand there is a very large amount due to the Government by parties whose vessels have done damage to Government property, and from whom the damages have not been collected. I understand also that, in some instances, persons who were of a different political stripe from the present Government were made to pay up immediately, while it was not collected from the Government's friends. Be that as it may, when the return comes down we will be placed in possession of all the facts, and if the case is as I am informed, I will have an opportunity of discussing it at greater length.

Motion agreed to.

DOMINION FRANCHISE ACT.

Mr. CHARLTON moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, in all cases where an election is held in any riding in Canada for the return of a member to the House of Commons, if the voters' list for such riding, prepared under the Dominion Franchise law, have not been prepared, revised and published within twelve months of the time of holding such election, that then and in such case the said election shall be held upon the last Provincial voters' list, provided the same is a more recent list than the latest Dominion voters' list.

He said: I think, Sir, the nature of this amendment must commend itself to the approbation of both sides of the House, and I cannot see that any objection can be made to its adoption. The right of every citizen who has the necessary qualification to vote, and who is 21 years of age, cannot be questioned by any man. If it should happen again, as it has happened before through the negligence of the Government, that the voters' lists were not revised annually, and that in consequence citizens of the full age of 21 years should be deprived of the rights of suffrage, some other provision should be made to secure for them the right of the franchise if they are justly entitled to it. During a period of three years no revision of the lists was held, and if a general election had taken place, which might have been the case, for we are liable at any time to have a dissolution of Parliament, the Government would have gone to the country on a list three years old, and many persons of 23 and 24 years of age, having, in addition, the required qualifications, would have been deprived of the right to vote. That is a condition of things which should not be tolerated for a moment, and if there is any possibility of such occurring again, a safeguard similar to that I now propose in this motion ought to be adopted without delay. The election previous to the last one in the county of Haldimand, was held upon a list under which, I venture to say, no man in the county under 24 years of age voted. There was a large percentage of votes cast in that election which would not have been on the revised list, and a large percentage of the voters entitled to vote were not able to do so. The same thing would have occurred in every constituency in this Dominion, if there had been a general election, in consequence of the failure of the Government to revise the list between 1886 and 1889. We have been distinctly told by the hon. Secretary of State this Session that the cost was so great, the Government were not justified in revising this list every year, and he foreshadowed most distinctly that it was not the intention of the Government to revise that list next year. It is, therefore, more than probable that the next general election will be held on the list which has been lately revised. The Government stand aghast at the cost of preparing this list; they shrink from subjecting the country to the enormous expense, and I venture to say, they do not intend to do so. If, then, they do not revise the list, why not make the arrangement I propose in this motion, and which would be a safeguard against the probability or the possibility of perpetrating a great wrong on the electors of this Dominion? The adoption of this motion would have another advantage, because, if we were obliged to resort to the Provincial lists, it would give us a better list than the Dominion list. In the Province of Ontario, it would give us a list based upon the broader principle of universal suffrage, a list more popular with the people, a list in accordance with the public sentiment in Ontario, and a list which the Government ought to adopt, if they were governed by the principles of right and justice. There is another consideration in the matter which is not the least one, and which I had in my mind when I was preparing this motion. I will give the Government a chance to gracefully and quietly drop this white elephant, the franchise law. They do not like to retrace their steps, or to acknowledge that the Bill is what it is, a bungle and a fiasco, and one that they should repeal. But if they would adopt my substitute, they would be able to revert to the Provincial lists without the necessity of any action on their part, and without the necessity of any direct legislation on the subject. I am sure that nineteen-twentieths of their supporters would be pleased to see this amendment adopted, and to return to the use of the Provincial lists. We have here not only a safeguard against the recurrence of such abuses as have occurred in Haldimand, of holding an election on lists which are two or three years old, but a means by which the Government can drop gracefully the bungling legislation which they have placed on the Statute-book, and return to the Provincial lists. I beg to move this resolution, seconded by Mr. Paterson, of Brant.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the hon. gentleman bases his resolution on untenable grounds. He bases it upon the assumption that the Dominion voters' lists will not be revised every year. If the hon. gentleman was in possession of information which would satisfy his mind that they would not be revised every year, then there would be some good grounds for his moving this resolution. But, with the improvements that have been made from time to time in the Dominion Franchise Act, and the consequent reduction in the cost of revising the lists, it is not at all improbable that they will be revised annually as the Provincial lists are, besides the law provides for it. Therefore, I do not think it would be wise to adopt the course suggested by the hon. member for North Norfolk. It would cause confusion in the minds of the electors, because they would mix up the one franchise law with the other, and have to learn the provisions of both, whenever they wanted to hold an election. I do not see that there would be any great injustice done to the people, even if the lists were not revised every year. Supposing they were not revised for two years, it would be no greater injustice to ask the people to return a member to this House by the electorate found on the existing lists, than it would be to ask them to return a member on a franchise entirely different from one under which they would elect a member to this House. We know that the different Provinces have different franchises, and the result would be that, as was the case before the Dominion Franchise Act was enacted, members of this House would be elected on different franchises; and I think there would be less irregularity in electing a member on the Dominion lists, even though they might be a year or two old, than by adopting a new one. I think this is only another attempt, made in a roundabout way, to discredit the Dominion Franchise Act, which I believe is growing more and more popular every year. I think it is a law that is based on sound principles and that it ought to be sustained by this House. If this innovation is allowed, it is only one step, and then the ingenuity of hon. gentlemen opposite will suggest something else in the direction of discrediting this law. Therefore, I think this first step should be opposed by the House, and the Government should retain the Act for the purpose for which it was intended.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I certainly do not agree with the remarks made by the last speaker with reference to the resolution before the House. I consider it desirable, as, no doubt, every member of the House well knows, that we should revert to the Provincial lists for Dominion election purposes; but failing that, I should prefer doing what this resolution proposes—reverting to the Provincial lists in cases where the Dominion lists have not been revised for over a year, as that plan would give, to persons having the right, an opportunity to record their votes in the event of an election taking place. It is the right of every individual of good standing in society, who has attained the age of 21 years, to be placed on the voters' list, if he complies with the requirements of the law. It is the duty of the Government to place him in a position to record his vote, and if they fail to do that, through no fault of his, they inflict a wrong upon him. I believe this resolution embodies a principle we ought to resort to, and I regret exceedingly that the Government cannot see their way to adopting it, and utilising the provincial forms and rules as far as possible without infringing on the rights of the Dominion. My hon. friend who last spoke says that, by a reduction in the expenses of revising the Dominion lists, we shall very likely have a revision every year. I dissent from that view. I say it is the duty of the Government to revise those lists every year, and they have no right, by failing to do so, to deprive any person of his privilege of being placed upon it. We ought to have a revision every year; but if any circumstance should occur in any locality, by which, either from neglect on the part of the officials or from any other reason, the list should not be revised, then this resolution would give the people the right to record their votes under the Provincial lists. My hon. friend says that this Franchise Act is becoming very popular. I ask, where is the evidence of that? Is it at any Conservative convention or annual meetings, or in the speeches made by any Conservative candidates on the hustings? Not a single one ever dared to get up on the public platform and defend the Franchise Act.

Mr. RYKERT. Yes, they did.

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). They knew that the Act was conceived and brought forth in iniquity and intended to deprive the people of their rights. The hon. member dared to speak about the popularity of this Act. Why, it is as unpopular an Act as any Act could possibly be; and although the Gerrymander Act was one that should never have been placed on the Statute-book, the Franchise Act was intended to strike a blow at the liberties and rights of the people, which the Prime Minister knew full well would be its effect, if carried out according to its original inception. The hon. gentleman says: "Oh, we have this Act, and if the local lists are to be used, that would create confusion." Have we not confusion now? People living in the same municipality, side by side, permitted to vote on the local lists, and under the impression that they are on the Dominion list, when they come to record their votes for their candidate in the Commons, they are quietly told they have no vote. I do not wish to detain the House, the majority of which is, I am aware, very much wedded to this Dominion Franchise Act. It operated in their favor considerably during the last election, but the feeling of the country is aroused, and unless some means are adopted of lessening the enormous expenditure necessary to carry it into effect, the people will protest at the next election, and instead of the Act being beneficial to hon. gentlemen opposite, they will find it an injury. If I cannot get the Act repealed, I am strongly in favor of this resolution, so that every individual entitled to be placed on the list, shall not, by arbitrary application of the Act, be disfranchised.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I can quite understand the motion of my hon. friend who introduced and did not carry the resolution the other day. He based his resolution upon the principle that it was preferable to adopt a Provincial electorate than to have one Dominion electorate. He pressed that resolution with his usual ability and earnestness, and his resolution was quite intelligible. But I must say that the resolution now before us is beyond my comprehension. In the first place, it tries to bring in a small slice of the proposition of the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wilson), and, in the most ridiculous form, it next brings in the proposition that if in any constituency there happens to be a later Provincial list than the Dominion list, then the Provincial list must prevail; and in that county or constituency, for that election, there is to be quite a different electorate, so that for one single election in one single constituency there may be a different body of men voting for the Dominion elections from the electorate in all the other counties. The hon. gentleman supposes that there is going to be no revision during the present year. That is a supposition which the hon. gentleman has no foundation for indulging in.

Mr. CHARLTON. I have the declaration of the Secretary of State to that effect.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Nothing of the kind; and the answer that I gave to the question, the other day, ought to be sufficient for that purpose. The law says that there has to be a revision every year.

Mr. LAURIER. The law said so in 1887.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It was not the Government, but Parliament that changed it. I am not at all aware—I do not see it written on the faces of any of my hon. friends on either side—of any resolve to withdraw the law or to interfere this year. If there be interference, there must be a revision. All these reforms and all these revisions come from Ontario. They look at the lists of Ontario and at the electorate of Ontario, and my hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Wilson), and the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), both happen to like the franchise in Ontario better than the franchise of the Dominion. They propose, without reference to the other Provinces, without reference to whether it will lower a constituency for a particular occasion, or a particular election, at a particular time, to hand over one election at one time, to one set of voters, when, perhaps, in case, which is not improbable, the Liberal member would be elected, he would be unseated by the court, and a new election for the same constituency held, there would be quite a different electorate. This stepping in here with this resolution seems to me most ludicrous and most absurd, and I am surprised that my hon. friend from North Norfolk would think of making such a hand-to-mouth change, which may disturb the electorate in twenty, thirty or forty constituencies after a general election, and then, in case of another election, quite a different body of electors will be called on to return their representatives.

Mr. LAURIER. The motion of my hon. friend, ludicrous as it may be to the right hon. gentleman, would not have been moved at all, I am sure, if the Government had done their duty by the country. My hon. friend was induced to make this motion, and it was a proper inducement, by the course the Government have taken. Time and again, as the hon. gentleman knows, the Government have been afraid or ashamed—I do not know which—to carry out the law. We are not sure at this moment whether we will have this year a revision. The only assurance we have is the statement made by the Prime Minister, who this moment and only a day or two ago said that the law requires there should be a revision every year. But the hon. gentleman forgets that the law required that in 1887 and in 1888 there should have been a revision; and yet, though the law imposed that as a necessity on the Government, the right hon. gentleman knows that in those two years there was no revision, and it is because there may be no revision this year that my hon. friend provides that we should have the best lists to be had under the circumstances. We have had the declaration of the Secretary of State, three weeks ago, that, in his opinion we should have no yearly revision, and that declaration has not been contradicted so far by any member of the Administration; and, under such circumstances, the hon. gentleman has no right to characterise as ludicrous the motion of my hon. friend. Let the hon. gentleman state at once if we shall have a revision this year, and my hon. friend will withdraw his motion.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The statement made by the hon. the Secretary of State on the subject of the annual revision of the Franchise Act, furnished the text to nine-tenths of the debate on the resolution of the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wilson), and we had the changes rung by hon.

gentlemen opposite on this statement, which was given by them with variations entirely astray from the speech itself, and it seems now that the same observations are to be made the text of this debate and the foundation for this resolution. We have had just announced to this House, that in the previous debate the Secretary of State declared that there ought not to be a revision every year. I presume these gentlemen have been misled, not by the observations of the Secretary of State, but by those of the gentlemen who followed him in that debate, because the Secretary of State said nothing of the kind. He declared, in the first place, that he was speaking not for the Government, but for himself; and, having guarded himself to that extent, he said it would not be justifiable to have a revision if the cost would amount to as much as that of last year, but he said then that he believed the cost would be reduced 30 per cent. So, instead of stating that there would not be a revision every year, the statement of my hon. friend would lead to the contrary conclusion. The observations which were presented by the Prime Minister in regard to the inconvenience and inconsistency of having a double franchise for this Parliament, can be further supplemented by a glance at the result which would happen in any constituency where, by delay, neglect or accident, the revision was not completed. There are constituencies where, by reason of the distances and the inconvenience of travel at certain times of the year, the revision is delayed for months beyond the time prescribed by law. The delay caused by the occurrence of any accidents to the mail, or the death or illness of the revising officer while the revision was to be completed, might result in disfranchising many voters if the Provincial lists were resorted to, though it might enfranchise some. That would be the case if a member were unseated and another election had to be held. The result of the proposition of the hon. gentleman would be, in that case, that we would have 214 members of this House elected upon one franchise and one member elected on another franchise.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). You have that now.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman knows that it does not exist now. He knows that, for the purpose of having a proper franchise for this House, we have established the franchise upon which members here are elected. Under the circumstances to which I have alluded, if the hon. member will glance at the remarks of the Secretary of State, as they are reported in the Hanward, he will feel himself called upon to withdraw this resolution.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The First Minister has been pleased to characterise this motion of the hon. member for North Norfolk as a ludicrous motion. The hon. gentleman must have overlooked the fact that I seconded this motion, and, therefore, being a grave person myself, it could not be a ludicrous motion; and I see that the Minister of Justice treats this as a grave subject. I, therefore, think it is taken out of the category of ludicrous motions. I may say that I did not see the usual jollity which we observe on the part of the First Minister when a ludicrous motion is before the House. The right hon. gentleman cited the arguments which had been advanced on both sides. I can see some force in what he advanced in reference to a bye-election being run, provided that the motion before the House should prevail, upon a list of the Province. That being contested, the election being voided, another election might be ordered in which the Dominion list would be used. I can see that there is some little force in that. But what harm would, practically, be worked by it? Besides, while objections may be urged against almost every measure, nothing has ever equalled the everweighing arguments against the use of the Dominion voters' list during the past few years. The history of this measure shows that these lists, instead of being revised every twelve months, as the law provides, were not revised for thirty-six or perhaps for forty-eight months. I have never given my assent to the principle of this Bill, and I believe the vast majority of the members of this House do not approve of it or assent to it. It is a costly and expensive measure. The expense reached the figures which the Opposition predicted, about half a million dollars, and then the Government themselves were alarmed and adopted provisions overriding the law, postponing the revision of the voters' list for two or three years. Now we are told that the law compels the Government to have a revision every year, but we were told that in the first year after the adoption of the Act, and yet it remained a dead letter for two years afterwards. The next year the hon. gentleman brought down a proposal to postpone the revision for another year, and he did the same thing a year afterwards. So that, in fact, that list which was prepared from the assessment rolls was virtually the same at the bye-elections which were held two years after its date as it was when it was prepared, and it was unrevised for the best part of four years. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) does not desire that to occur again. We have had a motion made to return to the use of the Provincial franchises, but that was lost, and now we are shut up in the use of the Dominion list, with almost a certainty, notwithstanding what the Minister of Justice has stated, that this Dominion voters' list will not be revised every year, but that there will be seen in this Parliament in the future the spectacle we have seen in the past—that the Ministry will come down and propose to suspend the operations of the Act for a year, and perhaps for another year, and so the same state of things will prevail. Perhaps the First Minister was not in the House when the Secretary of State spoke on this subject, and said that it was probable that we would not have a revision of the voters' list again. The Secretary of State, who was the prime defender of this Bill, when it was attacked by the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Wilson) the other day, said, according to Hansard :

"I do not see that it is necessary, I do not see that it works harder for one side or the other, that a revision should take place every year."

The Minister of Justice will see that the Secretary of State was speaking as a member of the Government, and not for himself alone. But when we are talking of a Government measure, and a member of the Government gives his view in reference to the matter, and when he is the gentleman more particularly charged with this measure, when he says that he himself does not see that, as a matter of policy, it is necessary it should be so, the plain, obvious inference is that it is not intended to have a revision of the voters' list every year. I cannot come to any other conclusion. The Secretary of State, I believe, did, in another part of his speech, state that if the revision was to cost the amount of money that it had cost, or even approaching it, or, I think, he said that if it cost even $100,000 a year, it would not be desirable to have a revision every year, but he hoped to reduce the expenditure. Well, Sir, we have no guarantee, we have no expectation, we have no hope—at least, I have not—that we will be able to have a revision of the list at a cost of anything like that amount of money. Therefore, we are to face the fact that the member of the Government primarily charged with this Bill and all connected with it, does not give us any indication, does not afford us any hope, that we are to have this annual revision. Well, if we are to have that annual revision, what harm does the motion of the member for Norfolk do? Why, Sir, his motion does not propose that if the Provincial voters' list should happen to be newer than the revised Dominion voters' list, that it should be used; it provides that if it is newer, or if, in that municipality, the Dominion voters' list has not been revised for more than twelve months before, then you say, use the Provincial voters' list. It does not mean, for instance, that if you have a finally revised Dominion voters' list completed in October, and a finally completed Provincial voters' list revised and completed in November, that, therefore, you will use the Provincial voters' list. It would only be in case there had not been a revision of the Dominion voters' list within twelve months of the time the bye-election is held, that the Provincial voters' list would come into operation; and, therefore, if the Ministry wish us to understand, if they wish their followers to understand, that there is to be a revision of the Dominion voters' list every twelve months, then my hon. friend's motion would be inoperative. But if, on the other hand, we are to see in the future, as we have seen in the past, a suspension of this rule, lists not revised, running on for two or three years, where the electorate of a county has wholly changed; men voting that have no right to vote; young men that have grown up and become of age, entitled to the right that a free-born Canadian citizen is entitled to, but denied it by the operations of the law placed upon the Statute-book, kept upon the Statute-book by a Ministry powerful in this Parliament, but working under that disadvantage,—then I say that it is necessary that we have a motion something like the one introduced by the hon. member for North Norfolk. Why, the First Minister cannot be insensible of this fact, that it is a possible thing that his Government may be defeated—perhaps not today, perhaps not to-morrow; but he will admit that it is a possible thing that he may be defeated, and it is a possible thing that, instead of gracefully submitting to it and advising His Excellency to send for the leader of the Opposition to form a new Ministry, he might take the other course and advise His Excellency to dissolve the House and appeal to the country. Well, Sir, what would have been the result if, a year or two ago, that had happened, before the last revision of the list last year? Why, we would have had a general election over the whole Dominion to elect members to this House of Parliament, and the constituents voting for them would be voters, in a vast majority of cases, having no proper right to vote; but we would have had hundreds, thousands, tens of thousands, having a right to vote, but who would be debarred from it. Why, Sir, there would have been people living in the United States, living at the ends of the earth, who, when they came here, would have a right to say who should represent Canada in the Canadian Parliament; and there would have been tens of thousands, hundreds of thousands, perhaps, in this broad Dominion, of Canadians living here, whose whole interests were here, subject to military duty, volunteering for the defence of the country, contributing to its revenues, who would have no right or title to say who should represent them and make the laws which they are to obey. That would have been the position of things we would have been in. It may arise any time; I believe we are warranted by the expression of the Secretary of State in saying that such a state of things will arise. Viewing the question in that light, my hon. friend has taken the precaution to offer this resolution, which will secure to this Parliament that if you have an annual revision of the Dominion voters' lists, the elections will have to be under the Dominion voters' lists; but if the lists are not revised every year, why, then, it says that there shall be a list used that has been revised within a year; and that will give to the citizens of Canada within that municipality a right to cast their votes at that election, and withhold that privilege from those who, having left the country, have forfeited their right to vote in the country in which they no longer have any interest. I cannot see that the proposition is ludicrous. I think the proposition, under the existing state of affairs, is one that should commend itself to the wisdom of the House. I will not, however, express the conviction that the House will see it in the same light; I will only say that, I think, the House ought to see it in that light, and so to declare their opinion.

Mr. COLBY. Whether the proposition is ludicrous or not, I think the position of this House, if it should pass the resolution, would be an extremely ludicrous one after the action we took upon the proposition of the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wilson) a few evenings ago. The hon. member who introduced this resolution cited, as one ground for its necessity, the fact that a general election might be held after a period of one year from the latest revision and publication of lists had elapsed; that was one reason why he urged that there was a necessity for a resolution of this kind. Would not this House stultify itself most egregiously to state by one resolution that the next general election shall be held under the existing franchise, and then affirm another resolution, a few evenings afterwards, by which a general election might be held under a totally distinct franchise? What reason can the hon. gentleman have to expect that the lists will not be revised according to law? Is it because the Secretary of State, the other day, speaking individually and casually in reference to this subject, expressed the opinion that perhaps, under certain circumstances, it would be better that they should not be revised than that an expense which he did not anticipate should be incurred? The law has hitherto been carried out in the matter of the revision of the voters' lists; the revision has been made according to the expressed will of Parliament in every instance hitherto. Why, then, should the hon. gentleman infer that the expressed will of Parliament will not hereafter be carried out as it has hitherto been in every instance? The Franchise Act, to be sure, made one provision, but this House afterwards deliberately modified the operations of the Franchise Act; and the Government acted in accordance with the latest expressed will of Parliament on that subject. The hon. member anticipates that even now the Prime Minister may come down with a proposition that no revision be held this year. When the Prime Minister comes down with a proposition of that kind, then it will be quite proper for the hon. gentleman to propose his alternative proposition, if he sees fit. If there ever can be any propriety for such a proposition, that might be some partial justification for it; but I am sure that the electors of this country, and the Parliament of this country, do not want a patchwork franchise law, using in some elections a law which Parliament, in its wisdom, has decided is the best for the country at large, and using in bye-elections a totally different law. Another thing that Parliament, I am sure, does not want, is, that those people who are electors under the existing law shall be disfranchised by the operation of Provincial franchise laws. The hon. member cites the possible case of some young men who have just come to the age of twenty-one years, and who, in case a revision of the voters' lists were not made, might be excluded. But, on the other hand, let him consider the case of the employes of the Dominion Government, at the case of postmasters, at the case of railway employes, and, in fact, of all employes of the Dominion Government, who, under our law, are entitled to vote and should have the privilege of voting at elections for members to this Parliament, but who have, by the legislation of the Province of Quebec, been disfranchised. If we go back to these Provincial lists we find that men forming a numerous and respectable class whom, we have deliberately stated after having discussed the question, are entitled to the right of the franchise, and we have given them that right, will be deprived of it, and we will be deliberately stultifying ourselves by saying that, in any alternative whatever, we will accept a franchise which disfranchises them. I say that, in every aspect of the case, the proposition is uncalled for at the present time. There is no reason to suppose, and no person has a right to suppose, that the law of the land will not be obeyed by the Government, as it has been in every instance hitherto.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. COLBY. I say, that it has been obeyed by the Government; and no person has a right to draw so violent an inference as that it will not be obeyed in future. I repeat, that it would be the height of unwisdom to consent to any proposition which would effectually disfranchise those to whom we have deliberately given the franchise.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The President of the Council thinks it would be inconsistent on the part of this House to accept the proposition of the hon member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), after having given an adverse vote on the proposition of the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wilson) to abolish the Act. I cannot agree with the hon. Minister, that there would be anything inconsistent in the House adopting such a course. The proposition of the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wilson) was to abolish the Act entirely. The House, in its wisdom, and to my great regret, voted down his proposal. Now, another hon. member makes a proposition, that a certain section of that Act should be amended so that those lists which had been completed for the past twelve months by the Provincial Governments might be accepted as part of the Dominion list. I fail to see there would be anything inconsistent in the House accepting the latter proposition. It would only be providing for a contingency that might arise, and this House and the country would generally recognise the fairness and the necessity of giving the broadest franchise to the people who are called upon to elect members to represent them in this House. The Minister of Justice stated that if we were to adopt this proposal, members would be sitting here under different franchises; and when I ventured to remark, in reply, that that was the case now, the hon. gentleman made answer to me that such was not the case. I was surprised, I must confess, to hear the Minister of Justice make such a reply, when he was aware, and no one knew better, that there were hon. gentlemen sitting here from New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Ontario under one franchise, and members from Prince Edward Island and British Columbia under another franchise entirely. The hon. gentleman, I think, was, therefore, not at all correct when he so emphatically contradicted the statement I made with respect to that point. But we have seen the results of the neglect of the Government to revise the lists in days gone by. We found in Nova Scotia, for instance, and in other Provinces as well, that previous to this revision all the elections were run on the lists of 1886. The hon. gentleman, I am sure, will recognise the fact that from 1886 to 1889 there must have been a very material and important change in almost every electoral district. People had acquired the right to vote by becoming tenants, by purchasing property, and by coming of age; yet all these people were disfranchised, and in Nova Scotia we saw election after election contested on lists that were three years old. I venture to say that in no part of the British Dominion, certainly not in England or in any place where there is a healthy public opinion, would the Government have ventured to sustain such a view of the Act. The First Minister and the President of the Council have stated that they have followed the law and carried it out. They have carried out a law which they themselves created by their majority in this House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We could not create it by a minority.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The right hon. gentleman has made a very wise observation, as he usually does, for which I am obliged; but if the minority had been allowed to create the law, it would not exist in its present shape. The Government created this law by virtue of the majority which they possess in this House, a majority which has always proved itself ready to carry out the
Mr. JONES (Halifax).

Government's suggestions. I repeat what I said on a previous occasion, that there is as much discontent among supporters of hon. gentlemen opposite, with respect to this law, as there is among hon. members on this side of the House; and if the First Minister were to leave his followers free, and if this were not viewed as a party question, this Franchise Act would be swept from the Statute-book. We found during the last discussion that several hon. members who usually support the Government, exercised their independent right to vote for the repeal of this Act. They saw the expense it was entailing on the country, and they recognised that it was a very important matter to spend $250,000 or $300,000 a year on revision. Does any one suppose, with our past experience, that the list can be revised any cheaper in the future than in the past? We know very well that with two hundred revising barristers, and all the printing and the patronage and expenses attendant on the carrying out of the work, it will never be done for less money than it costs already; and while hon. gentlemen opposite may say that they have carried out the law, they have carried it out to suit their own party purposes, and the country has had to bear the expense. This proposal is a declaration for a wider franchise. If hon. gentlemen opposite could point to any one of the Provinces and say that this Dominion Act would give a greater majority of the people a right to vote, there might be something in that view of it; but in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island the franchise is on a broader basis,—that is to say, that if we adopted the Provincial franchises there would be more men exercising the right to vote than there would be on the Dominion list, there would be more names on the local list than on the Dominion list. Accordingly, there is no harm and no injustice done to the public at large. The proposal before the House is a reasonable one, and it is one to which the Government could assent, because they have the remedy in their own hands. They could have the list revised every year, and then this proposition would not come into operation at all; but if they did not revise the list, and bye-elections came on, then the lists which had been last revised would afford the best index of the wishes of the people with respect to those whom they desire to represent them in this House.

Mr. SMITH. I desire to say a few words in relation to the motion of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). My only excuse for doing so is, that the vote I intend to give upon it might be misunderstood. Some of us remember the efforts put forth by hon. gentlemen opposite to defeat the Franchise Act in 1885. They have attacked that Act on more than one occasion since, and it was, of course, within their right to do so. On two occasions I voted for the resolutions put forward by the hon. gentleman opposite. But it appears to me the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) has made a mistake in introducing the resolution now under discussion. We were told in 1885, and during the elections of 1887, that one of the principal reasons urged against the Dominion Franchise Act was its expense. And whilst a double franchise might not greatly increase the cost to the country, it certainly would be very expensive to the candidates and those interested in election matters. I opposed the motion upon that ground; I oppose the proposition of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) because it increases the expenses of candidates and others interested in political life. The difference in the qualifications required between the Dominion and the Provincial franchises was fully exposed by the Premier, and by the President of the Council, and I shall, therefore, do nothing more than refer to it. I cannot support such a mongrel scheme as that propounded by the member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), and I shall feel it my duty on this occasion to vote for the Government and against the resolution.

Mr. HESSON. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) has made a statement which, if allowed to go to the country uncontradicted, would leave the wrong impression on the minds of the people, that the Dominion Franchise Act is not as broad in its provisions, and does not give to the voters of Canada as fair a representation in the selection of candidates for this House as a number of the Franchise Acts in operation in the Provinces do. I am prepared to dispute that with the hon. gentleman. I have gone carefully through the list for my county, and I know whereof I speak, when I say that our franchise list is much more liberal, and much wider in its provisions, and gives us a better class of electors, than the Manhood Suffrage Act in Ontario. The Dominion Act is based upon the intelligence of the country, upon the wealth of the country, and upon an honest representation of the interests of the individuals who intend to make this country their home. Let us consider the illiberal provisions of the Ontario Franchise Act. There is not a civil servant of the Dominion Government under that Act but who will be prohibited from using his franchise. Why should this class of men, who are selected for their ability, for their knowledge and for their intelligence, be denied the rights of free men; and yet they are so wronged, because of the illiberal Franchise Act passed by the Local Legislature? Then again, as to property holders—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order. Question.

Mr. HESSON. I would like to know what is the matter with hon. gentlemen on the opposite side?

Mr. BARRON. Our minds are being changed.

Mr. HESSON. I can assure hon. gentlemen on the opposite side of the House, who, year after year, are trying to undo the work of the long and hard Session of 1885, that they will find hon. gentlemen on this side of the House who will answer them. It has been said that we have not the courage to defend this measure, and that we are forced to vote for it because our leader chooses to sustain it. I deny that any hon. gentleman has the right to say that, because I believe, on principle, that the Dominion Franchise Act is a more honest franchise, and a more liberal, and better one, than the Act in force in Ontario. I may point out that the Ontario Act disfranchises every man who has property in a county and who may have his family living in that county, but who does not reside there himself. I say that this is a gross injustice. I know hundreds of men in my own riding, who have property and large interests there, and who cannot vote because they are not residents. Some of the best men we have got in Canada are in this manner disfranchised by the local Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh!

Mr. HESSON. Hon. gentlemen may say "Oh!" but the fact remains that, if you compare the Dominion list with the Ontario list, you will find that the Dominion franchise is wider and broader than the local one.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. HESSON. The hon. gentlemen opposite have brought up the discussion, and they must, accordingly, submit to it. If they challenge us on this side of the House, as to our opinion on the Franchise Act, they will find that we are prepared to defend it.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). I do not propose to occupy much of the time of the House, but the ridiculous feature of this discussion does strike me. I think there is something exceedingly ridiculous, not in connection with the motion, but in connection with some of the features of this question, as presented to the House. We have had a supposed revision of these voters' lists last year, and I would like to ask how many gentlemen there are among the supporters of the Government who would like to go to the electors on the list as revised? I will be bound to say that one-half of them will pray fervently that they may not have the opportunity to face their constituents on that list. Speaking from my knowledge of the revision in a number of counties, I can say that, unless some persons interest themselves in seeing that the names of parties who have the right are placed on the voters' list, the list does not give anything like a fair reflex of the voting capacity of that county. I believe that there are not a few gentlemen on the other side of the House who gave no personal attention to the revision of the list, and if they were asked their opinion, they would say that the list did not reflect the sentiments of their county and that they did not want to go to the polls on that list. I sympathise with the position which the Secretary of State is forced to take in this matter, for even if the Government spent a hundred thousand dollars a year on these precious lists, unless some individuals in the various ridings see that their friends are placed on the voters' list, it will not be a fair representation of the voting community in the various constituencies. That is where the initial difficulty comes in, and it was only the pressure of circumstances which led the House on two occasions to suspend the operation of this Act. I confess that I feel, that unless the qualification of the voter is changed, unless we make the qualification something more approximate to manhood suffrage, justice cannot be done to the electors of this Dominion. We should make the practice approximate to the idea, that the men who pay the taxes shall have an opportunity to say who shall tax them, and not, as it is now, in limiting the franchise to a man who can show that he is a property holder, or is the receiver of an income of $300 a year, as no official report exists on the assessment rolls of the various Provinces to show that he earns this income and is entitled to go on these lists. There are difficulties in the operation of this Act which make it desirable that some other mode should be adopted in cases in which the Government, having respect to public opinion on this matter, and yielding to the necessity of Parliament, may suspend the operation of the Act from time to time. I have no hesitation in saying that if the sentiment of the community were taken to-day in my county, three-fourths of the voters would ask that this Act be suspended for all time, and that the Provincial lists should be used as they come from the hands of the municipal officers. I have no occasion to express my opinion in regard to this Franchise Act, because I remember that in my last campaign my opponent, who was a supporter of the Government, said that he was thoroughly opposed to this Dominion Franchise Act through and through, and that if the people sent him down here to represent them he would support the repeal of that Act. Under these circumstances, I think we should have some provision for avoiding it being made a perpetual burden on the community, as it will be unless the Government modify the qualification, so that the elector will have some reasonable chance of getting on the list. The difficulty is just here—that a large proportion of the electorate are disfranchised under the Act unless they take special pains to see that they are put on the list; and, unfortunately, many men do not take sufficient interest in the duties and responsibilities which the law imposes upon them, to take the pains which are necessary from year to year to see that they are on the list. I warn the First Minister that this difficulty will grow in the years to come, and that this Act will be found to be an unbearable burden on those who take an interest in political matters, unless some mode is adopted of easing us of that difficulty; and at the present moment, I believe the easiest way to remedy the difficulty is to provide that, in case this Parliament sees fit in its wisdom to suspend the operation of the Act in any one year, as it has done on two occasions already, the course proposed by the hon. member for North Norfolk should be adopted, and the last revised Provincial list should be used. In that way the interests of the community would be better served than by using a list two or three years old. Everybody knows how many changes take place in the electorate of our constituencies from year to year, not to speak of the young men who are growing up and becoming electors. Therefore, I think that the proposition of the hon. member for North Norfolk is a wise one, notwithstanding the ridicule which hon. gentlemen cast upon it as introducing an undesirable qualification. The Act as it stands to-day is a standing anomaly in our institutions, and nobody knows it better than the hon. Minister of Justice, although in his position he feels called upon to defend it.

Motion negatived on a division.

MANAGEMENT OF THE NORTH-WEST MOUNTED POLICE.

Mr. DAVIN. It is with great diffidence that I rise to propose the following resolution:—

That it is expedient that a Select Commission of Enquiry, having power to examine witnesses under oath, do issue, to enquire into the management of the North-West Mounted Police, and into the conduct of Lawrence W. Herchmer, Commissioner of the North-West Mounted Police, from the date of his appointment until the 31st of December, 1889.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth).

My hon. friend from South Grey (Mr. Landerkin), when I said that I rose with diffidence to speak on this subject, was good enough to say that I did not look as if I was diffident; but, Sir, appearances are often deceitful, and if I do not appear unwilling to deal with this subject, it is because I exemplify that proverb. A man might be unwilling to put in motion such a vast machine as the Parliament of a great power like the Dominion of Canada against a single individual, especially as that man had at one time been a friend; and, as far as any personal feeling is concerned, my regard for Mr. Herchmer, my desire for his success and welfare, is just as keen as it could have been at any time. In making this motion, I do him, after all, no wrong, for if he is innocent of the charges I shall make against him, he has nothing whatever to fear. When one looks at the individual, a man of family occupying one of the highest positions in the North-West Territories, one may, of course, feel a certain sympathy for him. But you have to take into account the fact that there are a thousand men and more whose interests are to be considered; and if the men and officers of that force are placed in a dangerous position as to their reasonable peace of mind, as to their sense of manliness and their sense of security in the performance of their duty—if all this is in peril—for they do not divest themselves of citizenship when they join that force—then there are greater and graver considerations than any feeling for Mr. Herchmer, or any desire for his prosperity. And there is another point of view. A man occupying the position of Mr. Herchmer is not merely the commander of a thousand men, but is brought in contact with the people of the North-West Territories. He has large business relations with them, and his demeanor towards them is of very great importance; and if that demeanor is—I will not say undesirable, because that word would be inadequate—but marked by insolence, haughtiness, pride, almost ferocity, that is a very grave matter. It must be remembered by hon. gentlemen that the people of the North-West, as Mr. Van Horne once said, are the finest frontier men in the world. They are the pioneers of Empire; they are, many of them, the flower of our older Provinces. From the North-West to the Atlantic, there is not a Province which has not sent us a contingent of their best men to lay the foundations of prosperity and greatness in that great country; and it is not to be borne for a minute, that a man who is a public servant, who is paid by the money, a part of which these people contribute, should treat them as if they were dirt beneath his feet. It is not merely the feelings of the police force, it is not merely the feelings of the people of the North-West that you have to take into account, but the prosperity of this Dominion itself. Mr. Herchmer has, unfortunately, hardly one of the qualities desirable in a man occupying a position so responsible as that which he occupies. If you were to go, Sir, into the North-West Territories—and I am speaking in the hearing of men who travelled through them last year—you could not visit the remotest hamlet, travel where you might, on the Saskatchewan, or into the depths of the northern forests, or south to the boundary, west to Rocky Mountains or east to Manitoba, and you will meet no man, whether French or English, whether half-breed, Scotchman, or Englishman, or to whatever other nationality he might belong, who, if you were to ask him whether Mr. Herchmer were fit for the great position he fills, would not say that he is utterly unfit for it. I do not attach so much importance, but some importance has to be attached to it, as some people, perhaps, do to newspaper criticism; but, one has to recognise the fact, that newspaper writers write for their clientele, they write for the public, and they cannot afford to express opinions about any individual which would not be sanctioned by the public among which the paper is circulated. What is the fact? Throughout the length and breadth of that great North-West, in every portion where a newspaper is published, you hear but one opinion. There is not a discordant note in the unity of expression of disapproval of the conduct of that gentleman, who—I repeat it unwillingly, and solely under a sense of duty—has rendered himself utterly unacceptable to the people. The North-West Mounted Police are one of the finest bodies of men I ever saw. We occasionally have a soldier—men distinguished in war—visiting us: and whether he come from old France, or from England, or from Germany—and we have had some visitors who earned distinction in the German army—we have never had a soldier of distinction visit the North-West who was not loud in his praises of the North-West Mounted Police. Force. They are indeed, as a body, a corps d'élite. We might make of that thousand men a splendid hussar regiment. In fact, I have heard a distinguished gentleman saying that there was nothing you could not do with such men. They are a credit to Canada. The public generally here are little aware of what their duties are. Sometimes a young man will join that force utterly unaware of the heavy duties he will have to perform. I have spoken with young men who took it into their heads to join the force, and who, before they joined it, were full of the idea that they would have nothing to do but ride fine chargers and see the country. I have spoken to them some time afterwards, and they have told me what hard work they had to do, how rude was the discipline they had to undergo; and I may tell you, Sir, that, in summer and winter, by night and by day, they are ready, at the word of command, to go sixty, a hundred or two hundred miles in any direction. Let the glass be twenty below zero, let a blizzard be a contingency not unlikely, it matters not, off they start at the call of duty—sleeping out in the snow, sometimes under canvas, often under the shelter of a waggon, covered by their blankets, and sometimes under the canopy of heaven; and you know very well, Sir, what great dangers are incident to that mode of life. The men, whether you look at their physique, their morale, or at the work they perform, are men who fill you with admiration of their qualities, and who give you a fine idea of what sort of regiments, when we are ten millions or twice that in population, we shall be able to organise in Canada, and what great things we may do.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 69) respecting the St. Catharines and Niagara Central Railway Company.—(Mr. Rykert.)

Bill (No. 54) to incorporate the Interprovincial Bridge Company.—(Mr. Perley.)

Bill (No. 55) to incorporate the Shore Line Railway Company.—(Mr. Weldon, St. John.)

Bill (No. 64) to incorporate the Moncton and Prince Edward Island and Ferry Company.—(Mr. Landry.)

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 97) to incorporate the Montreal Bridge Company.—(Mr. Trow, for Mr. Prefontaine.)

Bill (No. 107) respecting the Provincial Provident Institution of St. Thomas, Ontario.—(Mr. Small, for Mr. Ward.)

Bill (No. 109) respecting the Board of Trade of the city of Toronto.—(Mr. Small.)

RELIEF OF GEORGE T. SMITH.

Mr. SMALL moved second reading of Bill (No. 98) to confer on the Commissioner of Patents certain powers for the relief of George T. Smith. He said: The object of the Bill is to instruct the Commissioner of Patents to renew a patent which had expired by reason of the negligence of the solicitors in not transmitting to the Commissioner of Patents the proper fee, through an error of one of the clerks. He transmitted the sum of $10, when the sum of $20 should have been transmitted.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Who is Mr. Smith?

Mr. SMALL. He resides, I believe, at Stratford, in the county of Perth.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). If that is the case, I would like to know if Stratford is the place of his business, or whether his main place of business is not in the United States?

Mr. SMALL. One of the parties, I believe, resides in the States; I think the other one, George T. Smith, resides in Stratford.

Mr. TROW. The firm reside and carry on their trade in the town of Stratford. The Bill is to remedy a mere oversight on their part, in not having remitted a sufficient sum of money to renew their patent. They employ some 200 men in Stratford, and are doing a good work in this country in the milling interest.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 111) further to amend the Acts respecting the Quebec Harbor Commission.—(Sir John Thompson.)

GREAT NORTH-WESTERN AND CENTRAL RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. SMALL moved that Bill (No. 106) respecting the Great North-Western Railway Company be read the first time. He said: This Bill came from the Senate about a week ago.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first and second times.

PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.

Order for House to go into Committee on Bill (No. 5) to make further provision as to the prevention of Cruelty to Animals, and to amend chapter 172 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, read.

Mr. BROWN. Through a combination of circumstances, the House is very thin to-night, and the absence from their seats of a large number of hon. gentlemen, by causes unavoidable, has led me to let this Bill stand. I desire very much that the discussion in Committee, of this measure, which has excited so much interest in the House, should take place in a full House.

Mr. WATSON. I know that some hon. gentlemen have stopped here to-night on purpose to vote in favor of the hon. gentleman's Bill.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on, go on.

Mr. SPEAKER. There is no motion before the House. There would need to be a motion that I do now leave the Chair, and in the absence of such motion, the Order stands.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 104) to amend the Railway Act (from the Senate).—(Mr. Shanly).

Bill (No. 96) for better securing the safety of certain Fishermen (from the Senate).—(Mr. Jones, Halifax).

THE INDIAN ADVANCEMENT ACT.

Order for second reading of Bill (No. 42) to amend Chapter 44 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, intitled: "The Indian Advancement Act," read.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) Perhaps the hon. member will agree that this Bill be postponed, as the Minister of the Interior is not here. The fact is, every hon. member is tired out this evening. I would suggest that the hon. member should allow the Bill to stand.

Mr. DOYON. (Translation.) This Bill is on the Order paper since the 5th February. I have already on the Order paper several items which were postponed for similar considerations, and were never brought back before this House. I should urge that the second reading of this Bill take place this evening, if possible.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) I should suggest to the hon. member that he be willing to allow it to stand.

Mr. LAURIER. (Translation.) Should the hon. member let his Bill stand, very likely it will not be brought back before this House during this Session.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) Oh, yes.

Mr. LAURIER. (Translation.) If the Government agree to the hon. member that an opportunity shall be offered him to have his Bill considered, very well.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) We shall give him an opportunity to bring back his Bill before this House. The principal reason why it should be allowed to stand is that the hon. members are all tired, after the long sitting of yesterday.

Mr. DOYON. (Translation.) If this is the only reason, I shall not detain the House long.

Mr. LAURIER. (Translation.) Perhaps my hon. friend did not understand that the Government agree to give him an opportunity of moving the second reading of this Bill at another day. Under these circumstances, I think he might agree to let it stand.

Motion for second reading allowed to stand.

BRESAYLOR HALF-BREEDS' CLAIMS.

Order for adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Lister, for the appointment of a Select Committee to enquire into the claims of the Bresaylor Half-breeds for losses sustained during the rebellion in the North-West, and also in reference to furs taken from Charles Bremner, a Half-breed residing at Battleford; and the motion of Sir Richard Cartwright in amendment thereto, read.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The First Minister, who is unable to be present, desires to make a statement on this subject, and, under these circumstances, I would ask the hon. gentleman to postpone this Order.

Mr. LAURIER. I do not desire to be at all critical, but I cannot fail to observe that three or four measures have had to be postponed this evening because Ministers are not in their seats, and are not discharging their duty to the House. It must be admitted that the Opposition is not at all disposed to be factious or severe, but the public business must be discharged. My hon. friend (Mr. Lister) informs me that no action has been taken by Chas. Bremner against General Middleton or any other parties; and, in view of the declaration which was made to this House the other day by the Minister of Justice, and the fact that I am now informed that no action has been taken by Chas. Bremner against General Middleton or anyone else, I do not see why the debate should not be proceeded with and the Committee granted.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am sure the leader of the Opposition has no desire to misrepresent me in the matter, or in any way to make an uncandid statement of the facts. The facts are these: I was informed, the evening I made the statement, that an action had been commenced. My reason for making that statement was that the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall), who had had written instructions to settle the matter on behalf of Chas. Bremner, read to the House a statement that those instructions were withdrawn, for the reason that the claim had been placed in the hands of the solicitor, and that the solicitor referred to had written a letter to General Middleton, asking him to name a solicitor who would accept service of a writ for him. That was a day or two before the motion was made in the House, and the General, accordingly, named a solicitor who would accept service of the writ for him. I think I was justified, therefore, in making the statement that Bremner had proceeded at law, and such was certainly the view of the solicitor for Bremner himself, because he has since—and only to-day, I understand—informed General Middleton that the action would not be proceeded with.

Mr. LAURIER. It seems to me that a Committee ought to be granted now.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman will remember that the leader of the Government pledged himself to give an early opportunity to move.

Mr. LAURIER. The same pledge stands good.
Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I suppose so.

Mr. MITCHELL. It seems that there is something more involved in this, than the simple question as between Mr. Bremner and General Middleton. There is the public interest to be considered in this matter, and the reputation of Canada, and the reputation of the Commander of the forces in Canada. It is due to this House that they should take steps to have a charge so publicly circulated as this (if it is untrue) investigated, so as to wipe out the stain on the character of the General in charge of our forces; and, therefore, a Committee should be granted to enable the gentleman accused to clear himself, and also to vindicate the honor of Canada. General Middleton should have the opportunity to prove that the statements made in connection with the improper taking of these furs, are untrue, if they are untrue. No action at law can oust this Parliament out of the right to deal with a question affecting the reputation of the country, and the conduct of an important official.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The promise made by the Premier stands good. I would ask the hon. gentleman to be kind enough to wait until to-morrow, when the First Minister will be in his seat, and will be able to make a statement as to what course will be taken.

Mr. LAURIER. Very well; let it stand until to-morrow.

THE BEHRING SEA QUESTION.

Mr. MITCHELL. Before the House is adjourned, there is an important matter which I think should be brought to the attention of the Government. I find the following paragraph in the newspapers, dated Washington, 4th March:—

“The President will, in a few days, issue a proclamation, warning all persons against entering the waters of Behring Sea within the dominion of the United States, for the purpose of violating the law forbidding the killing of fur seal or other fur-bearing animals, without authority from the Secretary of the Treasury.”

This is a matter which the Government should take up and deal with at once. If the fishermen of this country are to be excluded from Behring Sea, by the declaration of the President of the United States, we ought to know it. I call the attention of the hon. gentleman now leading the House, to this paragraph, with a view to having some explanation about it at an early date.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The paragraph referred to by the hon. gentleman has not been unnoticed by the Government. The position of affairs, in regard to that proclamation, is this: By a statute of the United States, passed two or three years ago, the President is bound, in the month of March, every year, to issue a proclamation warning all persons against trespassing within the territories of the United States, in Alaska, including all the territory ceded by Russia to the United States. The telegraph announcement, I presume, relates only to the duty cast upon the President by that statute, to issue that proclamation. It by no means follows from that proclamation being issued, that a hostile action is taken by the Administration of the United States with regard to Behring Sea. The President is simply discharging the duty that the statute casts upon him; and, even if the proclamation is issued, it need not interfere with the negotiations now going on.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. gentleman will see that this does not refer to the Alaskan Territory, but to the Behring Sea, over which they claim an exclusive right, and from which all other nations are excluded. I am glad the attention of the Government has been called to this matter, and I trust they will not overlook it. It is a matter of great public interest, that the United States should not be allowed to crawl, by degrees, into getting a recognition of their claim of exclusive rights to the fisheries of that sea.

Mr. EDGAR. I understand the Minister of Justice to state that the proclamation issued this year is the same proclamation issued last year, and which caused, undoubtedly, considerable alarm before it was understood. Are we to understand that that proclamation of last year, as well as the Proclamation of this year, is simply the following out of the provisions of a statute of Congress?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The proclamation of last year was, the proclamation this year has not been issued yet. It is foreshadowed in the telegram read by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), and it is presumed to be a proclamation of the same description.

DISTRIBUTION OF SEED BARLEY.

Mr. MULOCK. I am sorry the Minister of Agriculture is not present, as I wished to draw his attention to a matter in connection with his Department. It is known that the Department has purchased, recently, a large quantity of barley to be sown as an experiment by the farmers of Canada; and a circular has been issued, stating that the price of this barley is to be at the rate of $4 per bag of two bushels. I have received some communications on the subject, and one farmer specially writes to me to suggest to the Government that the distribution of this barley, which is to be grown rather as an experiment than a source of profit, should be a free distribution in the first instance. The circular just issued by the Government states that the barley will only be issued on the payment of the price mentioned. I think that, in view of all the aids the Government have given to the other industries of this country, it is not asking much on behalf of the farmers that this distribution of this barley should be made free. I, therefore, would ask the leader of the House to make this communication to the Minister of Agriculture at the earliest possible moment, inasmuch as now they are offering the barley for sale. If the policy of free distribution is to be adopted, it should be adopted before any of the barley is distributed.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have no doubt that the Minister of Agriculture, when in his seat, will show that there are two sides to that question. I will, however, communicate to the Minister of Agriculture the remarks made by the hon. member.

ADJOURNMENT—GOVERNMENT BUSINESS.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. LAURIER. Under existing circumstances, I do not oppose the motion of adjournment, but I must again protest against the delay of the Government in not bringing forward the measures. There is no reason why we should adjourn at ten minutes to nine. If we do, it is simply because Ministers are not in their seats to answer the questions that are put before Parliament. There are three or four Bills which have to be postponed this evening because the Ministers are not in attendance. I should also remark that we are in the sixth or seventh week of the Session, and we have not yet had the Budget speech, and everyone knows that postponing it is simply postponing the day of prorogation, because many matters have to be put off until it is brought down. Under the circumstances I will not oppose the motion, but I must protest, and I hope that in the future they will be in their places when public business is called.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No doubt the Ministers should be in their places when sickness does not prevent them, but I am sorry to say that four of my colleagues are absent from the House on account of sickness. Three of them could not be in the House at all, and the hon. First Minister is unwell, as he was last night, when the hon. gentleman was kind enough to postpone for that reason a motion which he had to make. This is the reason my colleagues are not here, and I have no doubt it will be considered a sufficient reason.

Mr. MITCHELL. While I have every regard for the statements made by the hon. Minister of Public Works, I entirely concur with the observations made by the hon. leader of the Opposition. We are now approaching the close of the seventh week of the Session, and I have in vain endeavored to ascertain when the Budget speech would be delivered; and the fact that we do not even now know is an indication that we cannot say what the probabilities are of an early prorogation. I do think it is a protraction of the public business which can be hardly tolerated. Everybody knows the ability of my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works. We know that he is always ready with the business of his own Department, and we know the influence he possesses as a member of the Government. We also know the ability of the hon. Minister of Justice.

An hon. MEMBER. What about the Minister of War?

Mr. MITCHELL. With regard to the Minister of War, that Batoche thing is hanging a little, and we do not know anything about it; but with two leading Ministers, including the Minister of War, in this House, we ought not to have it stated that the business cannot go on because one or two Ministers are incapacitated. If the Government have Ministers who are incapable of carrying on the business, it is their duty to resign. Let them give away to men like ourselves, who are not only capable, but ready to carry on the business of the country. They ought not to come to this House and plead illness for the extraordinary delays that have occurred in proceeding with the public business. We ought to have had on the Table long ago the statement with regard to the changes in the tariff. My constituents are most anxious to hear what changes are to be made; and the Government ought to have told us long ago, so that we could understand what we should have to consider, and to enable us to communicate with our constituents, in order to ascertain what course we should have to take in relation to those changes. I am not going to press the Government unduly to-night. They have pledged their inability to go on. We know that they are incapable. We know that there are two or three clever men in the Cabinet, and the rest do not amount to a row of shooks; but those two or three clever men—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Who are they Name.

Mr. MITCHELL. Do you think I am a fool to name them? Not much. The country knows who they are. There are two of them there—you pay your money and you take your choice. I want to say in all seriousness, that I do not think we ought to have the public business delayed in this way; and if there are festivities going on to-night in the town—the Government benches are almost empty, and there are only three members of the Cabinet here—it is not treating the business of the country right, or treating us right, who are away from our business, or treating our constituents right, to have an uncertainty hanging as to what the tariff will be for the next twelve months, or perhaps two or three years. We will let them off this time, but do not plead sickness or inability to be present any more, if untrue. If you are unable to carry on the business of the country, resign. There are lots of us able and willing to take your places.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 9 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 6th March, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY TO PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 112) to authorise the transfer of certain public property to Provincial Governments. He said: I will take the opportunity of explaining the provisions of the Bill more fully when it comes to the second reading, but I will briefly state sufficient now to indicate the subject to which it relates. I suppose nearly all hon. members of the House are aware that the rights of the Dominion of Canada and the rights of the Provinces, in certain territorial waters of Canada, have been in a state of uncertainty for some time. The disputes, so far as litigation is concerned, have been carried on between private individuals. To some extent the right in regard to the fisheries has been held to belong to the Dominion of Canada in some particulars, and in regard to non-navigable rivers, it has been decided to be in the Provinces. For various reasons it is desirable that the foreshores, and the beds of rivers and lakes should be vested in and should be administered by the Provinces as part of the public lands controlled by them. The reasons for this are obvious. The principal reason is that the administration of property of that character requires constant local supervision, as well as the registration of plans and of conflicting applications. This, if undertaken by the Dominion, would necessitate a staff of officers for registration purposes and surveys, being kept up in every Province of Canada, and we should be in constant danger of a conflict of title as regards the boundaries of various applications. To avoid this, we deem it best for all concerned that properties of that character should be transferred to the respective Provinces, providing that all the rights of control which the British North America Act vests in this Parliament are still retained in this Parliament, the bare right of property passing to the Provinces. When I speak of the rights of control, I mean control of navigation, fishing and everything relating to the general interests of Canada, irrespective of the property itself; reserving also our rights to any lands which we have heretofore patented, or on which we have erected any public work, or on which it is desirable that we should hereafter erect any public work, and our right to a sufficient space around any existing public work. It is proposed by the Bill to allow the Governor in Council to transfer, either en bloc or in part, these properties, to the various Provinces of Canada.

Mr. MITCHELL. I did not quite understand the hon. gentleman, as to whether the right of foresore that he speaks of is confined merely to non-navigable waters, or whether it includes navigable waters.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It applies to both.

Mr. MITCHELL. Has any particular emergency arisen to call for this legislation? I have not heard of anything of the kind, and the Bill seems to be very vague in its character. The hon. gentleman speaks of the transference of the foreshores. What does he mean by that term? It may be very comprehensive or very limited in its character.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. On the coast and lake shores. I mean all the land below high water mark, and the Bill comprises also the beds of rivers and streams, so far as we possess them. The hon. gentleman asks me whether any emergency has arisen. Some seven or eight years ago there was a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, that all the harbors of the Dominion, whether natural or otherwise, were vested in the Dominion, and that has been followed by various decisions since, holding that the Provincial Governments are incapable of granting even a site for a wharf. The result has been constant applications ever since to this Government, for leases and patents of water lots, either in confirmation of grants issued by the Local Governments, or for new lots hitherto ungranted. I can hardly speak of it as an emergency, but the difficulty has been a constant source of friction between the Dominion and Provincial Governments. The Provincial Governments do not acquiesce in the soundness of the decision even as to harbors, and they are constantly disputing our rights as to the beds of rivers. We desire, therefore, for the convenience of the public, that that question should be settled. We have had correspondence with the Governments of Quebec and Ontario, in the way of an exchange of views on this question; but, instead of fighting it out by correspondence, we have deemed it better to propose a solution of the whole question, which, we think, will reserve to Canada all the rights which it is desirable Canada should reserve to herself, and transfer to the Provinces that property which they can administer more conveniently. I may mention as an illustration a great natural basin like St. Martin's Bay, has harbors within itself, is it to be considered a harbor vested in the Dominion, or does the decision of the Supreme Court apply merely to the smaller inlets? That illustration can be applied to the lakes, as, for instance, in the case of Toronto harbor. It is almost impossible to define the limits of the jurisdiction of the Government of Canada in that respect. Therefore, instead of having litigation between private individuals with regard to the boundary lines of harbors, and our territorial rights to the beds of navigable streams, we think it better to cut the gordian knot, and relieve ourselves of a kind of property which we cannot administer with advantage to the public, but which the Provinces can and desire to administer.

Mr. BLAKE. So far as I can judge from the hon. gentleman's statement, I think the Bill a highly commendable one. But I was about to ask him with reference to the correspondence which he says has taken place, and which I think he should lay on the Table before he asks us to discuss the next stage of the Bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am glad the hon. gentleman gave us the information he did, because the mere title of the Bill is very vague. I rather approve of the course pursued. I think it is an easy way of solving the difficulties which I know to exist in the Maritime Provinces, and I think the measure will result beneficially. But it would be well to have any correspondence that has arisen on the subject.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). As this is a question largely affecting the Maritime Provinces, I would ask whether it would not be as well that we should have any correspondence with those Provinces as well?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We have had no correspondence with those Provinces on the subject, but they are included in the provisions of the Bill. The correspondence with the Prime Ministers of Ontario and Quebec has been in connection with their assertion of the rights of the Provinces to this description of property, and there has been no assertion of that right by the other Provinces.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). Does the hon. gentleman propose to transfer all those properties by the effect of the Bill itself, or simply to authorise the Governor in Council to do so?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The proposal is that the Governor in Council should be authorised to make the transfer on conditions set out on the schedule of the Bill, and it requires that the Provincial Governments should accept the transfer on these conditions.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Do the Government preserve the control as regards fishing privileges?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We have not only done that, but have provided that any transfer which may be made under the Act shall not change the fishing rights.

Mr. BLAKE. It is not intended or competent for us to surrender our right to legislate on this subject or any of our proprietary rights?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No, and it is carefully provided that, in surrendering our proprietary rights, we are not to be taken as surrendering any proprietary right as regards fishing.

Mr. AYMOT. In the Province of Quebec there are fisheries called stake nets, which are set in the spring and remain until the fall. They are above low water mark. Will the Bill give the Local Government control over those?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The Bill proposes to leave the question precisely as it is.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE WELLAND CANAL.

Mr. FERGUSON (Welland) moved that the report of Mr. A. F. Wood, commissioner to enquire into the management of the Welland Canal, be laid upon the Table of this House.

Motion agreed to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There was a motion made in the Senate for this report, but none made here; but, as I have the return ready, I asked my hon. friend to move for it.

Mr. EDGAR. I think I saw in the Empire of the 4th instant that a supplementary report was published. Does that return contain both reports?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Mr. EDGAR. It is published in the Empire of the day before yesterday.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That may be. I have not seen the Empire of the day before yesterday; but the same return is made in the Senate. I see they are moving in the Senate for a supplementary report. That is not yet brought down.

Mr. EDGAR. Will it be brought down?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It may be; that is under consideration.

PRIVILEGE—ANNAPOLIS LAND PURCHASE.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). My attention has just this moment been called to an article in the Montreal Herald of 6th March, and, before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to give a denial to the statements therein contained. The whole article, I may say, has not a word of truth in it. The reference that is made to myself particularly, I should like to have the opportunity and the endurance to enter into fully to-day, but, suffering, as I am, under physical disability, I cannot do so. I will read what has reference to myself more particularly:

“A second feature of this delectable transaction is worthy of notice. The Government owned a lot of land—”

Referring to the matter of the purchase of land for a public building in the town of Annapolis—

“The Government owned a lot of land convenient for the proposed building, but Mr. Mills, M.P. for Annapolis, and faithful supporter of Sir John,—”

Mr. MITCHELL. Is that true?

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). It is.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thought you said there was not a word of truth in it.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON.

That is not true—

“The value of these lots was said by Mr. Jones, of Halifax, to be $1,500—”

That may be true—

“The Government might have used their own property, but they decided to purchase for $3,300 the lot that their friend Mr. Mills owned.”

Mr. MITCHELL. Is that true?

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). That is not true.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). He had owned it.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). Yes, some years ago.

“This, of course, had to be done by transfer through a third party, but the job got there all the same.”

That is not true—

“The firm of contractors and Mr. Mills, M.P. for Annapolis, should now present the Premier with a testimonial.”

That will go for what it is worth. I can only say that, so far as the imputation upon me is concerned, there is not one word of truth in it at all. I am well aware from whom all this emanates. It has come from a man in Annapolis town who is greatly disappointed at his own lot not having been selected by the Government. That lot, I have no hesitation in saying, if he gave it away, I would not advise the Government to take possession of for the purposes of a public building—

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly not.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis)—because, when a public building is placed in a town, it is there for all time, and should not be placed alongside a horse stable or old rickety buildings, but in a prominent position, well worthy of the dignity of the Dominion Government, and that is where the building is at present. I take this first opportunity I have to contradict the article I refer to. My attention was only called to it five minutes ago, and I entirely repudiate the imputation cast against myself; and it is only right that the party who is supposed to be the inspiration of this sheet should retract those statements when they are denied upon the floor of this House. I regret exceedingly that I was not here at the little scene the other evening.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). This has reference entirely to this question.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must confine himself, according to the Rule followed here, to a strict statement, because the House will see very well that if he enters into a discussion, other hon. members may claim the right to reply, which would be altogether against parliamentary usage, and it is not desirable that such a precedent should be established.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think I am quite in order.

Mr. DESJARDINS. Are you connected with the Herald?

Mr. MITCHELL. I have the honor to be, as your party know very well, to their cost. I think it is in order for me to reply to the attack made upon a newspaper in which I have some interest. Until the hon. gentleman brought up the case, I had not even read the article, for circumstances prevented me getting the paper in time, and a gentleman for whom I have great respect took it away from me before I had an opportunity of reading it. But I have heard something of the facts, which have been referred to by the hon. gentleman from Annapolis (Mr. Mills). My chief editor, who, I suppose is responsible for this article, is one in whom I have the greatest confidence, both as to his ability and his veracity; and I am satisfied that he would not write a line if he had not good ground for stating what he did. Further than that I say nothing. The hon. gentleman has his remedy against the Herald. I may say hon. gentlemen who sit near me, inform me that the lot of land which the hon. gentleman says did not belong to him, was his last year.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). No such thing.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am informed that it belonged to him in June, 1888, and the inference is that it was sold to somebody else to sell it to the Government. I have the greatest opinion of the ability and veracity of the gentleman who conducts this paper, and, if the hon. gentleman is satisfied that these statements are not correct, he has his remedy.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I can only say that I was credibly informed that the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Mills) owned this land, jointly with other parties, up to the 20th June, 1888—

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). It is not true.

Mr. WELDON (St. John)—and it was conveyed to the Government, as the deed shows, on the 20th June, 1888.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). Whoever your informant was, spoke what was false.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. gentleman admits he did own the property?

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. When did he part with it?

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). I am not here to submit to a cross-examination.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have already stopped the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Mills), and I must now call the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mitchell) to order.

BRESAYLOR HALF-BREEDS' CLAIMS.

Mr. LAURIER. I would call the attention of the Prime Minister to the question of the investigation demanded by my hon. friend from Lambton (Mr. Lister), as to the claim of Charles Bremner. The Prime Minister was not in his seat last evening, but I was glad to discover that he was not absent on account of illness, but was accepting the hospitality of some of his supporters in another part of this city. The Minister of Public Works stated, last evening, that the Prime Minister was not prepared to make a statement in regard to this matter, but that he would probably fix a day for its discussion.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am glad my hon. friend (Mr. Laurier) has brought the matter up. The gentleman whose name has been used in this motion has asked that a Committee of investigation should be appointed, and I am, therefore, quite willing that the motion of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) should be adopted, but I do not think the Committee proposed is one we can consent to, especially as the hon. member who has made the charge, who is the accuser, and upon whose statement, as a member of Parliament, the Committee is struck, could not possibly be a member of the Committee. I would submit that the following Committee of seven should be appointed:—The names I had were those of Messrs. McNeill, Tisdale, Girouard, Kenny, Weldon (St. John), Casgrain, and Sir Richard Cartwright. I understand, however, that the other avocations of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) are such that he cannot sit on the Committee, and I, therefore, propose that Mr. Holton should be placed on it instead. If that Committee will suit hon. gentlemen opposite we might have the resolution passed at once.

Mr. BLAKE. I entirely agree with the hon. gentleman as to the impropriety of the gentleman who made the charge being appointed on the Committee, but I think our system at present is very defective in that respect. I believe the practice in England is, that an additional member is added to the Committee on each hand, without having the power of voting, in order that he may take part in conducting the investigation on the one side or the other. By the adoption of this process, the impartiality of those who are to be the judges is maintained, while, at the same time, a standing is given to those who are about to prefer or to repel the accusation. I think that, while it is expedient that the member who makes the charge should be on the Committee, it is equally expedient that he should have the opportunity to conduct the case.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I was not aware that that practice prevailed in England, but I think it is a very proper practice. At all events, there cannot be the slightest objection that the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) should be a member of the Committee, without the power to vote, but so as to allow him to conduct the proceedings, and in such a case there should be a similar selection made on the other side.

Mr. LAURIER. The motion had better stand until to-morrow.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Are the names satisfactory?

Mr. MITCHELL. In relation to the selection of that Committee, there is a very serious charge brought against an officer of the Government, occupying one of the highest positions outside of the Government; an officer who was presented by this House with $20,000 for his services in the North-West; and now the Government ask to be allowed to select their own judges to try the truth of the charges which have been made against him. I do not think that is right; I do not approve of the Committee, but, I suppose, the right hon. gentleman would vote down any motion I might make.

Mr. LAURIER. I am not prepared at present to pass any opinion upon the proposition of the right hon. gentleman, but will leave it until to-morrow.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think it would be the most agreeable way that we should agree upon a Committee, instead of having to resort to the cumbrous mode of selecting one. We could agree upon a Committee very easily; and, I think, these names are very respectable ones.

Mr. LAURIER. If we can agree, no doubt it would be better; but if not, there is a mode provided for selecting the Committee.

Mr. MITCHELL. The respectability of the Committee is one thing; but we want men who will have enough backbone to say what they believe and to stick to it.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE, CHEQUES AND PROMISSORY NOTES.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 6) respecting Bills of Exchange, Cheques and Promissory Notes.

(In the Committee.)

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon), the last time the House was in Committee, proposed to change the definition of the word "bank" in sub-section "c" of the first section. With all deference to the hon. member, I would prefer to adhere to the words in the Bill. The definition which the hon. gentleman proposed was that the word "bank" should apply to any bank to which the Banking Act had application. The objection made then was that saving banks do no business in bills and notes, but that is a mistake. There are saving banks coming under the Savings Bank Act which do business in promissory notes and bills of exchange, and desire to have the provisions of this Bill extended to them. Besides that, I think it would be inconvenient to have the definition of terms in this Act referring us back to another Act, and, indeed when we come to that Act we find that the definition there is a very vague one, and may be changed from time to time without any particular reference to this Act. It seems to me that the definition here is a proper one, and we had better adhere to it.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Do I understand the Minister to say that savings banks do business in promissory notes?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The Montreal City and District Savings Bank do such business.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I doubt very much whether a savings bank has a right to accept discount.

Mr. BLAKE. I know the general custom in that large corporation is not such as the Minister has stated. It may be that they make such loans, but their general custom is to make what are called special agreements, not bills or notes at all, and the real credit is, of course, the credit of the stock or security. I doubt their doing any bill discounting business.

Mr. SPEAKER. Being one of the directors of the Montreal City and District Savings Bank, I may say, that as a rule they always lend on a loan note which embodies certain conditions as to the disposition of the collateral security which is deposited with the loan notes; but it does sometimes happen that the particular note may be an ordinary draft or an ordinary note, accompanied with that collateral security in the shape of a bond or a stock of some corporation. But I have known that notes have been deposited with it, on some very important occasions, when banks, for instance, have had to come to us and deposit, as collateral security, and an additional security, I may add, and deposit their notes with us. We have to collect them, and, of course, the bank ought to come under this Bill in order to be able to carry on that business, which is, I may say, an exceptional one with the bank, but such business sometimes comes to the bank.

Mr. BURDETT. Will the hon. Minister insert a clause about seed oats, or would he prefer to have it in the other Bill?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I thought the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick), when I gave way on this point, would guarantee me against such applications. I am foregoing my own opinion as to the propriety of inserting the clause suggested by the hon. member for Frontenac in this Bill.

Mr. BURDETT. I beg to call the Minister's attention to the fact that, in Ontario, some of the insurance companies have the right by law to sue for notes at the company's chief place of business. This might possibly work a hardship on the makers of the notes, but it is very convenient for the companies. If it is intended that those companies should retain that privilege, I would ask that notes given for subscriptions to churches and colleges should be put in the same category. In the city of Belleville, where a college endowment fund was raised, many notes were given as subscriptions, varying from $10 to $100, the limit of the jurisdiction of the division court, and payable in from one to five or six years. They were dated at the different places of residence of the makers. Before the notes came due, the makers of them changed their views about paying the subscriptions, and there are now in the hands of a Committee of the Board of Managers notes of this kind to the extent of from $10,000 to $15,000; and if they are obliged to sue for them at the various places of residence of the makers, they are practically of no value whatever. I think that notes given as subscriptions to colleges and churches might be sued for at the place where the church or college is situated, as in the case of notes given to insurance companies.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I understand the difficulty to arise in this way. By a statute of Ontario, certain notes to companies may be recovered at the principal place of business of the company, while a suit for the recovery of other notes must be brought in the county where the maker resides. It seems to me that we may safely leave that subject to be regulated, as now, by legislation with reference to procedure. If we undertook to deal with it, we might have to interfere with the legislation in regard to procedure in all the different Provinces. Or we may leave it to the persons who sign the notes, or the persons who receive them, to say where they shall be paid.

Mr. BURDETT. That is not the law of Ontario under the Division Court Act. It is possible the question of jurisdiction might arise; but I would ask the hon. Minister to consider the matter, on further considering the Bill.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I think that is a matter for the Local Legislature to decide, according to the jurisdiction it shall give to the courts. I not think it would do for us to introduce any such measure into this Bill.

On section 51, sub-section 3,

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I propose to amend the sub-section, so that it will read as follows:—

A bill which has been protested for non-acceptance, or a bill of which protest for non-acceptance has been waived, may be subsequently protested for non-payment.

On section 51, sub-section 10,

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I propose to strike out that sub-section, for the reason that a like provision is made in a more complete form in section 94, sub-section 5.

On section 60,

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. This is the section about which the discussion took place, the other evening, touching the question of forgery of endorsements. I do not want to prolong the discussion or to press any further the views I then expressed. I said then, all I could say now on the subject, and unless the Committee have come to a different conclusion from that expressed by the majority the other day, I will drop the section.

Mr. COCKBURN. We ought to have a little interest in the banks as well as regard for our own convenience. No doubt it is very convenient for us to make the banks with which we are depositors, responsible for the endorsements of our cheques, but I do not understand that such is the contract we make with a bank, when we open an account with it. The banks, when we open an account and make a deposit, take the security of having the depositor sign his name in a book, so that when cheques are presented bearing his signature, in cases of doubt, a comparison may be made with the signature in the book, and the bank has to that extent guaranteed the authenticity of the cheque which it pays. But it is a very different matter, when you are asking a banker to guarantee the authenticity or genuineness of any number of endorsements on a cheque. We are trying to impose upon the banks, for our own convenience, a burden which ought not to fall on them. This may be an inconvenience to the poor man, though a great convenience to the rich man. A man comes down from lumbering up the Ottawa, with a cheque payable to his order for fifty or sixty dollars, and he presents it at the bank but cannot get paid, because he has no means of giving the bank assurance that he is really the person to whom the cheque is payable. I have known cases where the men had to return to their homes without the money. I hold, we have no moral right to throw upon the banks a responsibility of that kind, when they are not in a position to acquit themselves of it. It is, therefore, to encourage our own laziness, that we have determined that the banks shall keep our accounts, and it is insisted upon, that they shall be responsible for every endorser whose signature may have been put upon the cheque which passes through their hands. I think the Minister should press this provision of the Bill, as the banks have their rights as well as other people.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) When I first saw this clause I thought it was injudicious to insert it in the Bill, but I have changed my opinion. It is not a question of identification, because, supposing any person through whose hands the cheque has passed has had his name forged, the bank has to guarantee the genuineness of every endorser.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. No; they have only to know the man to whom they pay the money.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If the cheque is made payable to John Smith, and John Smith's name is forged, and the cheque goes through several hands, the bank would be liable. If John Smith had not endorsed it himself, the bank would be liable to pay the amount again, because they had previously paid what they had no authority to pay. Several gentlemen have stated that this provision would be very inconvenient, but it has existed in the English law for over thirty-seven years, and, I understand, it has worked well. As the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn) says, we throw an undue responsibility on the banks. They are bound, of course, to know the signature of the drawer. If they pay a cheque with a forged signature to it, the signature of a man who deals with them, they take the responsibility and have to pay it a second time; but, when they identify the signature of the drawer as being genuine, what means have they of identifying the signatures of several endorsers through whose hands the cheque may have passed? Business men make cheques payable to order for their own convenience, but that seems to throw an undue responsibility upon the banks.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I understand that the bank looks to the last man to whom the money is paid. The bank takes care that the man to whom the money is paid is known, and his signature relieves it from liability. If he has brought a cheque to the bank with a forged name upon it, he will be held responsible.

Mr. COCKBURN. Suppose he is not worth anything?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. They will not pay to a worthless man.

Mr. CHARLTON. I think that, in relieving the bank of the responsibility of scrutinising the name of the drawer—

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Not the drawer.

Mr. CHARLTON—or of anyone whose name is on the note, we will be taking a course which, perhaps, may be in the interest of the bank, but is not in the interest of the public. It is the business of the bank to satisfy itself as to the genuineness of the signer and endorser. It is always easier for the endorser to get himself identified, and if the bank is allowed to pay on any piece of paper, and to get exonerated from carelessness on its part, there is a wrong done to the business people of this country. That is the law in all the American States. The bank satisfies itself of the genuineness of the signatures before it pays, and that is no hardship. If we exonerated the bank from this responsibility, we might be doing something in the interest of the bank, but not in the interest of the people of the country.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We have had this matter under discussion on three occasions, but no attempt has been made by anyone speaking with authority, to show that any inconvenience results from the present system.

Mr. COCKBURN. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think, in that case, the experience of the hon. gentleman is gravely at variance with that of a large number of business men. I think a far greater inconvenience than any which now prevails will be inflicted by our altering the common law in favor of the banks. The banks are asking that they shall be exempted by statute from the liability which the common law places upon them. If the bank chooses, it can refuse to pay cheques payable to order; and, if it did, I have no doubt that twenty other banks would be found to rise up the next morning willing to pay those cheques.

Mr. COCKBURN. They cannot refuse to pay a cheque made payable to order.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My hon. friend near me (Mr. Weldon, St. John) says they would refuse to pay cheques payable to order. If you pass this clause, for which no reason has been given, except that there is an English precedent for it, they would do so. The conditions here are entirely different from those in England, and I am not prepared to accept such a change in Canadian law because it has been found expedient in England to adopt this particular clause. With the exception of the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn), I have not heard any business man state that any serious inconvenience has arisen from the present practice. As the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) intimated, in discussing this question some nights ago, if the banks ask to be relieved from any inconvenience caused, according to my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies), by a number of subsequent endorsements, there might be something in favor of the provision; but, if the cheque is made payable to a particular man, it is difficult to see why the bank should be discharged from its liability to see that the money is paid to that particular man. If it is argued on high moral ground, I think the convenience of the public is as much to be considered as the convenience of the banks. This will also introduce a great deal of confusion and uncertainty in the country, and a material check will be removed from forgeries, because, I think, you are more likely to have forgeries committed under this provision than if you were to leave the law as it is at present.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The hon. gentleman puts forward the current idea that a bank can refuse to cash a cheque until the party is identified. It cannot do it. As a matter of convenience, a man will take the trouble to be identified, but he is not bound to do it, and it is a mistake to imagine that a bank can refuse a cheque unless the man is identified. Thus the banks have to take the responsibility of an act to which they have not conduced. The bank has either to do this or refuse payment of the cheque, and the rumor is spread abroad that the party's cheque has been refused, and then the bank has an action against it, in which the party may recover heavy damages. I say that is possible, and those difficulties have occurred. Banks have got to run that risk and say to a party: You have got to be identified. The bank is bound to know the signature of its customers; but that they should be bound to know the signature of every other individual outside of them, is putting on them a burden that ought not to be. The custom of drawing cheques payable to order is one that has grown up within the last thirty or forty years in England. On account of the Stamp Act they could not draw them until the Act of 1853; in consequence of the operation of that Act they allowed cheques payable to order, and then this section was inserted, which has been the law of England from that day to this, and it has worked well. The banks are not responsible for a cheque being made payable to a party; the party does it for his own convenience, to get a voucher for payment. If he sends it out, it may occur through his own carelessness, or through the carelessness of the payee, that an opportunity is given for forgery, yet the bank, who are perfectly innocent of the transaction, have got to bear the blame. The member for West Durham admitted, the other day, that where a cheque was given to the party himself and he lost it, or it was forged, the payee would have to bear the liability. He suggested the case of it being sent by letter and never received. Any man who sends a cheque through the post office without paying the fee or registration by which the cheque could be traced, is just as careless as if he had dropped it out of his pocket.

Mr. BLAKE. Isolated instances, no doubt, will be found which prove that there may be difficulties both ways; but I maintain, as I said the other evening, that with the vast amount of transactions that are constantly going on in this country in cheques payable to order, remembering the thousands upon thousands of cases occurring every week of the year, it is utterly beyond probability that any very serious difficulty can have been created for the banks. As I said to the Minister, on a former occasion, we want to know if experience has proved that the banks are placed in a position which is intolerable. He has given us no statistics, no information. My hon. friend from Hochelaga (Mr. Desjardins) himself the president of a bank, has stated that he was not aware of any grievance. My hon. friend beside me (Mr. F. Langelier) who is largely concerned in commercial affairs in the Province of Quebec, in his capacity of a public man and professional man, says he has not heard of any case of inconvenience. I do not mean to say there may not be an isolated case in those thousands upon thousands of transactions, in which some inconvenience, some loss, may not have occurred to a bank. But I say that, so far as we are made aware, these are infinitesimal, while the public convenience is enormous under the present system. I say that it is not a question between sound theory and practice, but it is a question in which the practice of thirty or forty years has demonstrated that the theoretical objection is unavailing. The practice has been found to be good for the community, and it should be continued unless it has been found to be seriously injurious to the banks as a whole. I have no doubt whatever that if it were rendered possible for any one bank to avail itself of the proposition, that it should attach the same measure of security which now subsists in the case of a cheque payable to order, that bank would get a great deal of business from its competitors. My hon. friend from St. John says that in England, up to a comparatively recent period, the Stamp Act prevented cheques being made otherwise than payable to the bearer, and almost contemporaneously with the change which rendered it possible for a cheque to be made payable to order, this protection was introduced by the influence of the banks. They never had an opportunity of testing how it would work there. They decided at once that when the system of cheques payable to order was introduced, it should be introduced coupled with this limitation. We have had a system of cheques payable to order without this limitation, it has worked well, and I see no reason at all why we should embark in this enterprise and change it.

Mr. DESJARDINS. As I said the other day, I do not know of any bank—although the bankers have met several times lately—that has asked for the change contemplated in this section. A bank, of course, on receiving a cheque signed by one of its customers, sees that the signature is protected, and the process of identification has never been challenged by any honorable man. When a stranger comes to a bank, he generally brings with him a man who is known to some of the officers of the bank, and when he presents his bill, if he is not known, the clerk asks him to be identified, and he immediately submits to it, because he knows that he must be identified. It is not only his signature which must be known, but he must be identified himself. That has been the custom for many years, and I do not know of one instance where any difficulty has arisen, or where an action for damages has been entered, as spoken of by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon). When a man is refused by a clerk because he is not known, it is easy for him to find some one whom the clerk does know; but a customer who gives a cheque generally takes such precautions as that the bank, to which it is addressed, may be able to pay the proper party. That custom has worked satisfactorily; it has been found convenient to the customers of the bank, and to change that practice now would harm the banks more than it would benefit them. I know many instances where banks have received deposits from people who preferred to pay by cheques just because they found there was a security in paying that way; and the bankers are willing to accept the risk, because there is a benefit attached to it. I do not know any reason why we should change the present system.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I will venture to make a remark because the Minister of Justice, with great good temper, has expressed himself as willing to accept the views of the Committee in reference to this matter, while holding his own opinions. The member for Prince Edward Island has been a convert to the views of the Minister of Justice, through his persuasive eloquence, and I feared that the Minister might think, perhaps, that all those who had taken a different view might have been equally influenced. For my own part, my views remain at they were. The member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) was not a convert; he was wrong from the beginning. With reference to the inconvenience to a bank, although I am not a lawyer and am not fully posted on matters of this kind, I think inconveniences are arising continually. My understanding of the law is that I might buy from a person in good faith anything—a horse, for instance—on which there was a chattel mortgage in a distant county; I buy it in good faith, and I pay him the money. The man to whom I pay the money I may never see again. I think that horse could be taken away from me. But take another case, although it might not run on all fours with the horse—the horse, of course, would run on all fours. But take this case that will be more parallel on the line we are speaking of, in which there is fraud. Supposing a horse has been stolen from a distant county, and I buy it in good faith. It turns out, however, that it has been stolen, and the horse is then taken from me. This is inconvenient, but it is recognised as being just and proper. The present system as regards to frauds has not worked any material hardship on the banks. The argument of a bank president (Mr. Desjardins), and the statement made by the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), go to show that by adopting the system suggested the customers of the banks would be largely increased. The feeling of the Committee remains as it was manifested the other day, and I am glad the Minister of Justice is prepared to yield his views in order to meet the wishes of the majority of the Committee.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am glad to find that two days' reflection has increased our numbers and strength very materially; but still I perceive that the views of the Committee have not been changed.

Mr. LOVITT. I take exception to the remarks of the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Desjardins). I had occasion to have a draft for $500 cashed in Quebec, and immediately I entered the bank I was practically asked if I was a forger. I hold that the customer should be protected. I did not get anyone to identify me on that occasion, but I was obliged to occupy two hours before I was paid the money.

On section 87,

Mr. MONCRIEFF. I see no necessity of making a distinction between notes and bills of exchange. By turning to section 52 of the Bill it will be seen that when a bill is accepted generally, presentation for payment is not necessary in order to render the acceptor liable. If I draw a bill on a person, and he accepts it, payable at the Bank of Ottawa, in Ottawa, this section would apply to that particular bill, and it would not be necessary, in order to render the acceptor liable, that it should be presented. The Committee are now, however, asked to make a distinction between bills of exchange and promissory notes, and to say that a bill of exchange accepted generally need not be presented in order to hold the acceptor liable, while a promissory note must be presented to render the maker liable. I fail to see the necessity of any distinction. The present Act does not make any distinction between the effect of a bill or promissory note, unless the words "not otherwise" or "not elsewhere" are incorporated. By this Bill, however, it is proposed to make, all over this country, a distinction between a bill of exchange and a promissory note, and persons will have to learn that as regards a bill it need not be presented, so far as the liability of the acceptor is concerned, but that a promissory note must be presented in order to render the acceptor liable. I suggest, that in order to make the present clause conformable to the present law with regard to bills, to insert the words "not otherwise or elsewhere," and in this way we may be able to secure uniformity throughout the Dominion. The words I have suggested will make it uniform with the provisions further back in the Bill, in reference to bills of exchange.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. As to this, I think there are very material distinctions between a bill of exchange and a promissory note. Some of my hon. friends across the House suggested that it was unreasonable and unphilosophical that an acceptance payable at the Bank of Montreal should be regarded as an acceptance payable anywhere else. That argument was not so strong as regards bills of exchange, and in that respect there was more show of reason in favor of making the words very precise in the affirmative and in the negative form, before the contract should be held to be restricted. In this case we have the words embodied in the contract, and if a man makes a contract that he will pay at the Bank of Montreal, in Ottawa, I do not see why that should not be regarded as a limited contract. There is the further reason that in dealing with promissory notes, in which this is embodied in the note itself, we are not running the risk which we were as to the bills of exchange, of having the drawer and previous endorser released by the bank taking a qualified acceptance. Here it is the essence of the contract, whereas, with bills of exchange, the danger was that the banks or the holders, or the persons presenting such acceptances, by making the acceptance payable at a particular bank, would be releasing the previous parties to the transactions, and doing so unintentionally. That does not apply to a promissory note. Furthermore, I think that the weight of authority which I pressed on the House as regards the other case, is against this change. I urged on this House that the practice in Ontario, and the practice in England, was in favor of the change I desired. In this case, the practice in England, and in the Provinces, except Ontario, is the same as now stipulated by the Bill, and in changing it, we would be making a change all over to suit the law of one Province.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). Do I understand that it is proposed to leave section 87 stand as it is?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). This clause provides that a promissory note, if made payable at a particular place, must be presented for payment at that place, in order to make the holder liable.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Only before action.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). Oh, that is different.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. I always like to yield gracefully to what the Minister of Justice has made up his mind upon, even though it be not agreeable to my views. I venture to say that in the rural districts there are ten promissory notes to one bill of exchange, and if it becomes an absolute necessity that every promissory note must be presented before action, we are going to have a protest attached to every promissory note, no matter how small the amount may be.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That is where it is made only payable at a particular place.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. I understand that fully. Of course, so far as the endorser is concerned, if there is one on the note, it must be presented, or free goes the endorser. Suppose I promise to pay so-and-so a hundred dollars at my residence, or at such a bank, at a certain date; by this section, I cannot be sued until the note is presented, and proof of presentation must be made. In twenty or twenty-five years' experience as a lawyer, I have never yet experienced any difficulty arising on the question whether a note was presented or not. If the present Bill passes, proof of this presentation must be made at a particular place, and that would entail a great deal more protests. As a lawyer, perhaps I should have no objection of that, but, as a matter of convenience to the community, I think I should. I question if the benefit to be derived from attaching a protest on every small note is going to be a convenience to the public generally.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is the same as a note on demand in that particular.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman sees that, if the maker of a note does not want to make it payable at a particular place, he can make it general, and it can be presented anywhere; but if he limits his contract and says: "I promise to pay you one hundred dollars at the Bank of Montreal," is it not reasonable that he should comply with the condition of his promise, and that it should be presented where he promises to pay? Surely that is the practice known all over the world.

Mr. MULOCK. Theoretically, my hon. friend is right, but he assumes that laymen know the law as well as lawyers. I know that, in theory, everyone is supposed to know the law; but, in practice, few people are familiar with the intricacies of the commercial law. I sympathise with the sentiments of my hon. friend (Mr. Moncrieff). If a protest is necessary, it shall be necessary to have witnesses to prove the presentation and dishonor, at the trial of the cause. This means extra expenses in these small suits, and costs heaped upon poor suitors, or a non-suit may result. The plaintiff may fail to obtain justice by reason of not having complied with this technicality. In other cases, costs may be thrown upon the defendant for necessary witnesses brought to court to give evidence, as required by this section. I know that in country places, a note made payable at a certain place, is often disregarded by those who are not commercial men. As to the technicality, I think, as a matter of convenience, this ought to be considered in the same way as the question of payment on the endorsement of cheques. So far as I know, no evil has arisen under the law in Ontario, as it now is; and, if the experience of the practices of the commercial community guided us in striking out clause 60, the same experience should guide us in striking out the provisions of the Bill as they now exist.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not agree with my hon. friend from East Lambton and my hon. friend who has just spoken. I think, when a person makes a note payable at a particular place, it is only right and proper that it should be presented for payment at the place named in the note; that is one of the conditions of the contract. Certainly, it is much more satisfactory that it should be presented and sued upon after the presentation than that it should be sued without presentation at all, which might be done in the case of a note payable generally without a place being specified.

Mr. MASSON. I quite approve of the law as it stands at present, and I cannot see why the proposed change should be made, especially after the discussion we had on the subject of bills of exchange. There is a distinction, as the hon. Minister of Justice has pointed out, between the two, as regards their custody up to the time of their acceptance. From the time of their acceptance up to the time of their payment, there is practically no difference between a note and a bill of exchange: the acceptor and the maker of a note are practically identical. We have not found any inconvenience in Ontario from the present practice, and I cannot see how it is possible that any inconvenience could arise. On the other hand, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Lambton, if a note is presented before action is taken, then it is material that presentation should be proved, either by a witness called and sworn, or by some other legal evidence. All notes would have to be protested, which would mean a charge of $1 or $1.50 on each note, no matter how small it might be. That would be a great inconvenience to the makers of small notes. For instance, farmers who buy implements from agents give notes, which are invariably made payable at a particular place, and it would be necessary to prove the presentation of those notes before they could be sued upon. That would be a great inconvenience. Besides, the person who makes the note is generally the debtor. Why should there be any reason given for his not paying the note, if he can raise the point, that he had money at a particular place at the time the note was due? He is not subjected to any costs by the non-presentation of the note. In my practice, extending over twenty years, I have not heard of a case of such inconvenience occurring, in which the defendant came into court, and said: I should not pay this note, because I had money where it was to be paid. It seems to me, that to make the distinction proposed, would be a confusion to the ordinary mind—to say that a bill of exchange need not be presented, but a promissory note must be.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). To my mind, there are two phases of this question. In the first place, there is, no doubt, a great deal of force in what has been urged against the clause, if it involves proving the presentation of the note. For instance, in the case of merchants who take notes from their customers, varying in sums from $10 upwards, would it be necessary, for the purpose of making the makers of those notes liable, to have them formally presented to some person in his office, and to have the proof of that presentation before going into court to collect the note? If that is the effect of this clause, it should not be here at all. The other view of the case is this: numbers of notes are given by farmers for agricultural implements and other purchases. In many cases, if there is not some provision that these notes must be presented at the place where they are made payable, either the residence of the maker or some other place where the note is made payable for his own convenience, they might be sued for the note somewhere in the country, perhaps hundreds of miles from where the note was made. I think we ought to consider very carefully the question as to what constitutes presentment. If to render a maker liable, a formal presentment must be made, and evidence of that must be given in some way in court, then I think we should modify this clause. If that is not the case, and the note on falling due does not require any formal presentment, then perhaps the clause might stand.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the number of people who make notes compared with the number who use bills of exchange is as a hundred to one; and they belong to a class who do not understand commercial law. They believe that when a note is made payable at a particular place it must be paid there, and it is a convenience for them to have the note left there. But if the law remains as at present, they may, unfortunately, find that they are sued for that note a long distance from home, and they are subjected to loss, while they have provided for the payment of the note by some commercial agent in the locality, or in some other way. Therefore, I think this proposed amendment to the law is a very good one. It is a convenience to people to have their notes payable at a certain place. It is much more convenient to the maker of a note to have it presented at the place where he has made provision for it beforehand, or where he intends to provide for it, than to have it presented somewhere else, and let him be sued and put to the trouble of defending himself before the courts. If a protest becomes necessary, under this amendment to the law, it is unfortunate, as that would incur expense, and that we want to avoid. One hon. gentleman said that the party who defended his note would be apt to plead non-presentment. I apprehend he would not be disposed to set up that plea in a court of law, because he would know that it would subject him to the costs. If some other way could be found to get over it without imposing the cost of protest of every note it is most desirable that it be done. In any case the number of notes sued would be fewer in number, if it was understood that they were to be presented when made payable and payment demanded, than if they could be sued anywhere in the country, although the party owing the note did not know where to provide for payment.

Mr. BURDETT. The hon. Minister of Justice is entirely right, and the clause should remain as it is. I understand it makes the practice uniform all over the Dominion, which has not hitherto been the case. Cases have occurred within my knowledge in which men have given promissory notes throughout the country, payable at their own homes or at some convenient place, and yet, although they had provided the money to meet the notes where they were made payable, they were sued elsewhere and had to pay costs. It not infrequently happens that men will deposit the money with the officer of the division court and tell him to hold the money and pay it when a man presents the note, and not to sue. Cases have actually occurred, and will probably occur again, in which the maker of many notes may have some enemy or some person evilly disposed towards him, who bought his note, and, without any presentment, sued him, the purpose being to put him to his defence and make him pay costs. That would be avoided by compelling the party who holds the note to present it according to his agreement at the place where it was agreed to be paid, before taking action. I cannot see any inconvenience in this. I cannot see how any man who signs a note can be misled, and I have known of a number of cases where a great inconvenience and costs had to be suffered by the maker of the note, who was entirely ignorant of the law.

Mr. MASSON. If it is the wish of the Committee that this principle which is embodied in this clause should be carried out, there should, for the purpose of avoiding the expenses of protest, be some provision making a presentment presumable unless non-presentment is especially pleaded, because, if, under our Division Court Act, a general dispute will raise that question, then the plaintiff has to prepare his proof. He may not have taken the precaution of protesting, which a prudent man naturally would, and immediately before action he will have to make the presentment and bring his witnesses to the court to prove it, thereby incurring considerable expense. That is an evil which should be remedied by providing that presentment as against the maker of the note be presumed, unless the contrary is especially pleaded.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). No doubt the plaintiff may be put to a little expense, but very little, and that would be a small inconvenience compared with the great inconvenience which at present exists, when a party may have a note payable at his office and have the money there to pay it, and yet, not knowing who holds the note or where it is held, the first thing he gets is a writ.

Mr. MULOCK. He would not have to pay the expenses in Ontario, for by the law there the judge can make the other party pay the costs.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). But in the other Provinces he could.

Mr. MULOCK. You are behind the age.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I do not know that we are, but we do not think that perfection exists in Ontario.

Mr. BURDETT. The wise men came from the east.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That is a proof they are in the west.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I am opposed to the principle, as far as bills of exchange are concerned, but there are more reasons against it as far as promissory notes. When a party undertakes to pay a note at a particular place, it seems to me that that is a condition attaching to the contract which would oblige the holder to apply for payment there before taking action. The hon. member for Renfrew wished to know if, in the case of a country merchant who had a number of his customers' notes payable at his office, the fact of its being payable there would be a sufficient presentment. If the notes are there on the day they are due, or for a day before the action was brought, there is no formal presentment necessary, and that would be a sufficient presentment. There would be no inconvenience. Greater inconvenience would exist by making this change. The only Province that system exists in is Ontario, and you would revolutionise the whole mode of proceedings in the other Provinces. With regard to notes given to agricultural implement manufacturers, they would take care to have the words "not otherwise, nor elsewhere" inserted.

Mr. BURDETT.

On section 94,

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Instead of sub-section 3, I propose to insert these words :

"Notaries may charge the holder of a bill or note the fees recoverable by them before the passage of this Act."

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I am afraid you are destroying the uniformity of the Act. It is provided in a former clause that justices of the peace may protest as well as notaries. In that case, will these other parties who perform the duties of notaries be deprived of the fees?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I did not intend to provide any fees for justices of the peace.

Mr. MULOCK. I think justices of the peace should be paid the same as notaries.

Mr. DESJARDINS. Could you compel them to protest if they were unwilling to do it?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. A justice of the peace will not be liable for any negligence, and, therefore, he should not be paid any fees. He would do this merely as a matter of favor.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not think it is necessary to provide for fees for justices of the peace. It is very rarely that notes will be protested by them. I propose to strike out sub-section 3, and to substitute the following:—

"Notaries may charge the fees in each Province heretofore allowed them."

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I made a suggestion to the hon. Minister as to allowing householders to protest notes.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Unless the hon. gentleman can give some reason for it, I am disposed to restrict the protesting to justices of the peace when notaries cannot be obtained.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I am not able to say that any inconvenience has arisen up to the present, but I thought that, if the power of protesting is extended to justices of the peace, it might be extended a little further.

On schedule 1,

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved that schedule one be struck out.

Committee rose and reported progress, and it being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 6) respecting Bills of Exchange, Cheques and Promissory Notes. Bill reported.

QUEBEC HARBOR COMMISSIONERS.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the second reading of Bill (No. 111) further to amend the Acts respecting the Quebec Harbor Commissioners. He said: The object of the Bill is to make it clear that the Quebec Harbor Commissioners have power to grant warehouse receipts within the meaning of the Banking Act. I understand that they have custody of property of the description mentioned in the Banking Act, but the question is unsettled, as to whether it is beyond their powers to grant certificates and warehouse receipts.

Mr. LAURIER. Have they acted upon this legislation?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. They have been exercising the power.

Mr. LAURIER. I do not intend to oppose the Bill at this stage, but I am not quite sure the principle is one which is acceptable to this House. If the power was requested for the Harbor Commissioners to give space on their wharves for the purposes of constructing warehouses and carrying on trade, I can well understand there can be no objection, but I am not quite sure that the Bill is one altogether free of objection. I will not, however, oppose it at this stage, reserving to myself the right to oppose it at a subsequent stage.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time, considered in Committee and reported.

SUPPLY—THE SHORT LINE RAILWAY.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. LAURIER. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I propose to call the attention of the House to the expenditure which was lately incurred by the Government—an unauthorised expenditure, I must say—on the proposed line of railway between Harvey and Salisbury. Shortly after the close of the last Session the fact became known that the Government were having surveys made over the projected line of railway between those points. The fact, in view of the events which occurred at that time, seemed almost incredible. The Government, by expending money under such circumstances, seemed to be treating Parliament with such full contempt that even those who were the most credulous hesitated to believe that the Government would go to that length; yet the fact was true. In the early part of this Session I enquired whether the report was true that the Government had expended money; if so, what sum, and upon what authority they claimed to have expended it. The answer given was that the Government had expended $22,302.28, and that expenditure had been partly paid out of the vote for surveys and partly by warrant. Now, I charge against the Government that the authority which they claim to have exercised they did not possess. I charge that the Government had no right to apply a single dollar of the money voted under the general head of surveys for that work. I charge, moreover, that the Government had not the slightest excuse whatever for advising His Excellency to sign special warrants to cover any part of that expenditure. I charge this, because the Government were violating the authority of Parliament by so doing. Not only so, but they were violating also their word, which had been pledged to Parliament, that not a cent of money would be expended until this work had been approved by Parliament. I say that the Government have not only violated the authority and power of Parliament, but they also broke their own word, solemnly pledged, and the expression which I now use is not one whit too strong. During last Session, as is within the recollection of members of this House, the Government introduced a measure to build a branch of the Short Line Railway, known as the Harvey and Salisbury branch. The measure was carried through this House, although it was strongly resisted; but when it went to the Upper House, I am happy to say that that House did what this House should have done—it rejected the measure by a considerable majority. Yet, strange to say, scarcely had the vote been given in the Senate before the report was circulated that the Government would ignore that vote and would proceed to construct the work. The rumor prevailed to such an extent that when the Supply Bill came before the Senate, the Government were interrogated as to their intention, and they were asked whether they intended to respect the will of Parliament, or whether, as was reported, they intended to violate the decision of Parliament given with respect to this work. The leader of the Government in the Upper House, Hon. Mr. Abbott, stated most distinctly at that time that not a cent of money would be expended until the work had been approved by a vote of Parliament. In order to establish this point beyond dispute, let me quote what took place in the Senate on that occasion. The occasion was the voting of the Supply Bill by the Senate. The report is as follows:—

“Hon. Mr. ABBOTT moved that the Bill be now read a second time.

“Hon. Mr. MILLER. I rise to a question of order. It would be necessary for the hon. gentleman to get the leave of the House to the suspension of the 41st Rule with regard to this Bill. Before that motion is put, I want to know whether or not there is a grant of half a million of dollars towards the Short Line of railway in the Supply Bill, and, if so, whether any attempt will be made to expend any of that money until authority is obtained from Parliament for the construction of the Short Line road?”

“Hon. Mr. ABBOTT. As to the first question, I shall be obliged to look at the Bill before answering; as to the second question, I may say most positively that no expenditure of any kind will be made on this road until it is sanctioned by Parliament. I move that the 41st Rule of the House be suspended with respect to this Bill, and that it be read the second time.”

“No expenditure of any kind whatever will be made until it is sanctioned by Parliament.” Now, Sir, scarcely had the doors of Parliament been closed, and when the sound of the words pledging the Government to this course were still vibrating within the walls of this chamber, when the Government positively disregarded their own utterances and set to work at once to do this work, which the leader of the Senate declared would not be done, and on which he declared not one cent would be expended until such time as Parliament itself approved of the work. I ask, can there be a greater outrage upon the dignity and power of this Parliament? Can there be anything—I utter the word—so criminal as the conduct of the Government, in not only wilfully and designedly breaking through all rules of legislation, and breaking through all the authority of this Parliament; but even going to the extent of violating the promise they had pledged to the Senate and Parliament of Canada on the most solemn occasion? What is the authority which is now claimed for having sanctioned this expenditure? The right hon. gentleman, when I put him the question some time ago, as to whether or not the fact was correct, as reported, that money had been expended on this survey, stated that they had expended a certain sum of money, amounting to something like $8,000, out of the vote which is taken every year for general surveys. I maintain that the right hon. gentleman has not the power to take one single dollar for this purpose out of the money voted on the general heading of surveys, and I maintain it for this reason: when the Bill was before this House last year, my hon friend for St. John (Mr. Weldon) asked precisely, regarding what has been done since without any authority whatever. He asked that not a single dollar should be expended on that road, until an ample survey had been made as to whether the project was feasible or not. This is the motion which was then moved by my hon. friend:

"That the said resolution be not now agreed to, but it be resolved, that no action should be taken by this House authorising the construction, by the Government of Canada, of another line of railway between Harvey and Salisbury or Moncton, until a proper survey of the proposed line and reliable estimates of its probable cost are laid before Parliament, and until time has established that the existing line of railway between the points named is not sufficient to meet the demands of passenger and freight traffic."

This motion, which was most appropriate, was voted down by the majority of this House. No answer was given to it from the other side; simply the vote came down that the motion should not be granted, and nothing more. But still we have the fact that the Government pretended at that time that there was no necessity whatever for the surveys; and they proposed to go on with their Bill which authorised them to spend half a million dollars on that road. When that Bill was defeated, can it be maintained, for a single moment, that Parliament having refused to make any special appropriation for that survey, the Government had the power to fall back upon the general appropriation for surveys, and take money out of that appropriation for this work? In view of the fact that the Government had rested their whole case upon the Bill, and upon nothing else, and the Bill having been defeated, this fact alone condemned them to remain quiet until such time as Parliament had been consulted once more, and had determined whether or not the project would be carried on. Even though the Government had the authority of appropriating any sum of money out of that general vote, they certainly could not do so in view of the fact I have stated a moment ago, namely: That they had pledged themselves that not a single dollar would be expended until such time as Parliament had been again consulted on the subject. We have the British form of Government here; we have three branches of Parliament; one of these branches pronounced in favor of this road, but the other pronounced against it, and, therefore, the project became null. The plain duty of the Government then was to wait to consult Parliament once more, and if the two Houses of this Legislature had agreed to it, the right hon. gentleman would have been justified in doing what he did, in expending money for this road. In presence of the facts, as they stand at this moment, what excuse can be given by the Government for acting as they have done? What is the value of Parliament sitting and expressing an opinion upon any public subject, if it be within the power of the Government to discard the authority of Parliament and to do precisely what the Legislature had refused to sanction their doing? Sir, there never was a time in England when such conduct would have been ventured by any Parliament. If, at any time in England, the Government had attempted to do what this Government has done since last Session, namely, to expend money without any appropriation for it, and to advise His Excellency to sign special warrants (not for urgent works, but for a work which had been condemned by Parliament), such a Government in England would be compelled to withdraw at once. If such a thing, incredible as it is, had occurred in England, that the Government would disburse public money in face of an adverse vote of Parliament, and contrary to their own pledge that nothing of the kind would be done, such a Government would be forced to withdraw before public indignation and anger. There was a time also, I must say, when even in this House such conduct would not have been tolerated, though I am not sure that the majority will do again, as they have often done in the past—condone such an offence against the public of Canada. I ask the majority: Is this parliamentary government, or is it not simply personal government? Upon what principle of the British Constitution can such conduct as this be at all reconciled? I say that it cannot be reconciled in any way, for such conduct is an outrage upon the Government of this country, and upon British institutions. Whatever the majority may do, such conduct must be denounced, as it ought to be denounced, as an infringement of the undoubted power of Parliament. Therefore, I beg to move:

That all the words after the word "that" be left out, and the following inserted instead thereof:—The measure introduced last Session by the Government for the construction of a railway between Harvey and Salisbury was rejected by Parliament; and after the said measure had been so rejected, the Hon. Mr. Abbott stated in the Senate, speaking in behalf of the Government, "that no expenditure of any kind would be made on the road until it was sanctioned by Parliament;" that since last Session the Government have expended for surveys on the said projected railway a total sum of $22,322.28, in connection with which special warrants have been issued to the amount of $13,782.28; that the expenditure of the said sums of money under the above circumstances is a wilful breach of the pledge given by the Administration to Parliament as above set forth and constitutes a designed violation, by the said Administration, of the undoubted powers of Parliament, and deserves the severe censure of this House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Speaker, the Government have committed no breach of the privileges of Parliament; they have committed no violation of any parliamentary principle; they have violated no principle of any kind; so that we meet this resolution with a negative in every respect. The hon. gentleman says we had no right to expend any portion of the vote for surveys, and still less right to ask for a warrant from the Crown for that purpose. Now, we will look at the case without reference to the action of the other branch of the Legislature on this measure. The Government every year asks for a vote of Parliament for the purpose of carrying on such surveys as they think would be in the interest of the country, whether they be for railways, canals or any other public improvements. Sometimes the vote taken is insufficient; sometimes it is more than sufficient. When it happens to be insufficient, then the Government take the responsibility of asking for a warrant; and any Government worthy of the name will not hesitate to take that course. In this case the money voted was insufficient to meet the expenditure, and, therefore, the Government asked for a warrant, knowing and believing that Parliament would, as in all such cases, indemnify them, and would vote in Supply that this warrant was properly asked for from the Crown. Now, we remember that when this measure for the building and working of a line of railway from Harvey to Salisbury or Moncton was introduced, the Government asked this House to support that measure, believing that the House knew what the wants of the country and the merits of the railway were; and the Government believed that they had sufficient evidence of the feeling of the House to ask for a warrant. Now, although the hon. gentleman says we were very wrong in going on with this survey, hon. gentlemen opposite did not think so last Session. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) moved a resolution to the effect that no action should be taken by this House authorising the construction by the Government of Canada of any line of railway between Harvey and Salisbury, or Moncton, until a proper survey of the said line and reliable estimates of its probable cost should be presented to Parliament. The hon. gentleman who has made the motion of censure now before the House, happened then to be absent, but all the members of the Opposition who were present, voted for that resolution. The House of Commons did not think there was any necessity for such a survey, and, therefore, they voted against the resolution and carried the Bill. Still, it is very odd that hon. gentlemen opposite should object to our carrying out the policy which they themselves recommended and pressed upon this House. The hon. member for St. John drew a proper distinction between an expenditure for the survey of a road and an expenditure on the construction of a road, and insisted that there must not be one farthing spent on the construction of this road until there had been a previous expenditure for a survey. That was the doctrine preached from the other side; they said: Go on with your survey, have a complete and thorough survey; and the expenditure for such a survey must be paid either out of the vote for surveys, or, if there was no vote, out of a general warrant. Yet the hon. gentleman now complains that the Government took the course which was pressed upon them by the other side, and which every one of the hon. gentlemen opposite who happened to be in the House at the time, voted for.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And which you refused to accept.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Let us read the names: Armstrong, Bain (Wentworth), Beansoleil, Brien, Campbell, Cartwright, Casey, Charlton, Colter, Davies, Doyon, Edwards, Fisher, Gillmor, Holton, Innes, Mackenzie, McMullen, Mills (Bothwell), Mitchell, Mulock, Paterson (Brant), Platt, Préfontaine, Ste. Marie, Scriver, Skinner, Somerville, Sutherland, Trow, Watson, Weldon (St. John), Wilson (Elgin). Every one of these gentlemen voted that there must be an expenditure, no matter how—whether by warrant or whether out of a vote for surveys—and a large expenditure, because they demanded a thorough survey. No action could be taken by this House authorising the construction by the Government of another line of railway between Harvey, Salisbury and Moncton until a proper survey of the proposed line, and reliable estimates of its cost, were laid before Parliament, and until time has established that the existing line of railway between the points named is not sufficient for the demands of passengers and freight.

Mr. McMULLEN. That is right.

Mr. LAURIER. You voted it down.

Mr. McMULLEN. Was that fact established?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If the hon. gentleman would allow me to speak, I would say to him that he must remember the story of the clergyman who was preaching on a fine Sunday in summer, with the window open, when an old lady rode up to church on a donkey, and fastened the donkey to the door of the church, which was open. While the clergyman was preaching, the donkey put his head in and brayed. The clergyman did not get annoyed, although he heard the bray, but he said: "One at a time, if you please." The Bill passed this House and went to the Upper House; the Upper House had a considerable discussion upon it; and if hon. gentlemen will look at the debates in Hansard upon it, they will find that one of the strong arguments against that Bill—the argument, in fact, which defeated the Bill in the Senate—was, that there was a great doubt thrown upon the statements which had been made regarding the saving of distance to be effected by building the road via Harvey and Salisbury, instead of allowing it to go round by St. John from Mattawamkeag. The statement made here was that the saving would be at least twenty-seven miles, but it appears from the debates in the Upper House, that it was there said Mr. Van Horne had declared the only saving would be seventeen miles; and the chief reason, I may say the only substantial reason, why the Senate rejected the Bill, was this doubt as to the saving the proposed line would effect. Therefore it was all important that that question should be finally settled. It had to be known whether or not there was a substantial saving which would warrant the expenditure in building that line, and the Government undertook that survey. There was no pledge by Mr. Abbott, that no survey would be made to ascertain that point. The pledge made by Mr. Abbott, on behalf of the Government, was that there should not be a cent spent in the construction of that road until Parliament authorised the expenditure of that cent. But, how could Parliament, in the ensuing Session, decide whether that expenditure should take place or not, unless this doubt was cleared up; unless there was a new survey to ascertain what the saving would be, and whether the Government ought to come to Parliament again, notwithstanding the rejection of the Bill in the Senate last Session? I say we have ascertained that there is a substantial saving of time and distance, and that, therefore, we are in a position to come and ask you to vote a sum of money for the construction of this road. That was the promise of Mr. Abbott—that there should not be anything spent on the construction of the road until Parliament had decided in favor of it. But how could Parliament act intelligently on the point unless in the meantime a survey was had for the purpose of knowing whether this road ought to be built or not? The whole of the hon. gentleman's statement is a mere mare's nest; it has no value, and it only shows the paucity of subjects of attack which hon. gentlemen have to bring against the Government, when they bring up such a flimsy motion as this, without any foundation. We say that we are strictly within the lines of our duty and power. We have offended against no parliamentary principle; we have offended against no constitutional practice; but we have, for the purpose of giving Parliament information on a most important point on which further legislation might be asked for, or ought to be asked for, exercised the power which has always been given to any and to every Government, of making the necessary enquiries by survey and otherwise for the purpose of basing further legislation upon such information. It is quite clear that such is the case. The hon. gentleman has confounded the expenditure of a sum of money for the purpose of acquiring information regarding the construction of the road with the expenditure on the road itself. Let me give an illustration. There is a strong attempt made to build a railway from Winnipeg to Hudson's Bay. But there is a great deal of doubt about that subject, and if the Government were to introduce a Bill for the purpose of building that road, hon. gentlemen opposite would say: Oh, no; there is not sufficient information, and you must not spend a single farthing in building from Winnipeg to Hudson's Bay until you get the fullest information. Well, we say we will not spend a farthing on that road, we will not build a mile of it, we will not build a single bridge, we shall have no expenditure on the railway itself until we have had a thorough survey and acquired the information necessary, no matter at what expense. Would it be said that because we sent our surveyors in order to ascertain whether the Hudson's Bay Railway should be built, that we broke our pledge not to build that line until we got that information? Why, Sir, the fact that my hon. friend has been forced to make this motion shows that he is, unfortunately for himself, greatly in want of subjects for attack against the Government; and I ask this House with every confidence to vote down this resolution.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Numerous as are the somersaults which we have been in the habit of witnessing on the part of the hon. gentleman during the past two years, I do not think even he himself has ever committed, or ever asked his followers to commit a more humiliating, a more discreditable somersault than that which he has now turned. What is the whole argument of the hon. gentleman? What is his whole answer to the evidence laid on the Table by my hon. friend as to the language used by his own colleague? The hon. gentleman comes to us here and tells us that he and his colleagues last year came to this Parliament and asked us to consent to the construction of a road involving an expenditure of several millions of dollars, that they asked us then for a vote of $500,000 for the construction of a road about which they knew absolutely nothing, according to the hon. gentleman's statement, in regard to which they had not taken the common and ordinary precaution which the hon. gentleman now declares to be imperatively necessary in order to be able to announce within ten or twenty miles what the saving in distance would be. The hon. gentleman now says, how can he come to Parliament, and how can Parliament act intelligently in regard to this road without a survey having first been made? Was ever a greater insult offered to his own followers? Last year he asked them to vote this money without a survey having been made. If it were possible, I would say that the excuse was worse than the act which he has committed, and which my hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, correctly characterised as an insolent defiance of all parliamentary usage. The hon. gentleman has deliberately defied the authority of Parliament. After a co-ordinate branch of the Legislature rejected his proposal, the hon. gentleman—in a way which I shall presently show he was not justified in taking—took a sum of money out of the public chest for the purpose of doing what he now admits he should have done before he asked us last year to pass that measure. But, grave as that matter is, it is perhaps not so grave as the other branch of the subject. If there is one thing which the Parliament of Canada should insist upon, though it has been very remiss in that regard in the past, it is to insist that the promises of Ministers made in their places should be carried out. The hon. gentleman says that Mr. Abbott did not pledge the Government not to make a survey. Let me read again what Mr. Abbott said, and let me ask any fair-minded man if my hon. friend was not justified in declaring that his promise had been violated:

"As to the first question, I shall be obliged to look at the Bill before answering; as to the second question, I may say most positively that no expense of any kind will be made on this road until it is sanctioned by Parliament."

Now, if there is anything which is absolutely necessary to be made in the way of expenditure in connection with a road, according to the hon. gentleman's own statement, it is the expenditure on the preliminary surveys. That is a part of the construction. Those surveys are charged to construction expenses. Every penny of expenditure which we made on the surveys of the Canadian Pacific Railway is charged to the capital account for construction expenses. The hon. gentleman knows that no private company ever severs in any way, the cost of the original surveys from the cost of the construction. I say that, in making this pledge, if hon. gentlemen intended—and they ought to have known what they intended—to have made this survey and to bring forward this Act again, it was their bounden duty as honest and honorable men, to have stated to the Senate, that, although they would not make any expenditure for the construction of the road, they intended to proceed with the survey. If they had any spark of honor in them, they would have done this, or they would not have allowed any expenditure to be made on that account. I cannot put the construction which the hon. gentleman does on the use of the Governor General's warrant. These warrants are only to be used for special purposes, and the Act distinctly declares for what they may be used:

"If, when Parliament is not in session, any accident happens to any public work or building which requires an immediate outlay for the repair thereof, or any other occasion arises when any expenditure not foreseen or provided for by Parliament is urgently and immediately required for the public good."

Then the Governor General's warrant may issue. I say it is a most gross abuse of that power which is granted for such emergencies in regard to matters which could not be reasonably foreseen or provided for, to ask His Excellency to issue a warrant taking a large sum of money from the public chest for such a purpose as this. I say that the Minister who advised the issue of that warrant committed a fraud on His Excellency, and made His Excellency a tool to perpetrate a gross wrong and to offer a gross affront to the authority of Parliament. I regret exceedingly that it should be necessary to so stigmatise a pledge given by Ministers to Parliament, but it was their duty to have stated explicitly to the Senate when the pledge was made that, although they would not spend any money in construction, they would have a survey made. Not having done that, they had no business whatever to expend this money.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. When we on this side are accused of having turned a somersault on this question, it is well to consider what was the policy propounded by hon. gentlemen opposite in regard to this road, and to do that it is only necessary to compare the resolution which was moved last Session with the resolution which is now before the House. The resolution which was proposed by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) last year, was that we should not propose a vote for the Harvey and Salisbury road until we had preliminary surveys; and the policy propounded to-night is that we should not make preliminary surveys until we have a vote for the construction of the road. I think, in view of that fact, that the hon. gentleman from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) may congratulate himself on being able to turn a somersault as easily as anyone possibly can. As to the remarks made in the Senate, and referred to by my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition, who evidently had only glanced at them casually, I do not think there is a member of either House who can fail to understand that the pledge given by Mr. Abbott was distinctly limited to the construction of the road. What was the position when this matter was dealt with by the Senate last Session? There was a Bill presented to the Senate involving the expenditure of $500,000 for the construction of the Harvey and Salisbury Railway, and there was not a word in regard to surveys. That Bill was defeated in the Senate, but it was publicly stated in the press and these Chambers, and in the corridors, that the Government had inserted that provision in the Supply Bill in order to force its passage and to put it in such a position that the Senate could not defeat it without using almost unconstitutional means. When the question arose in the Senate, not in regard to the survey, but in regard to the expenditure of $500,000 on the construction, Mr. Miller rose, before he had had an opportunity of examining the Supply Bill, and asked the leader of the Government in that House whether the Government wished to force the Senate to that expenditure of $500,000 for construction. There was no suggestion as to the survey, except Mr. Miller's previous contention that it was unwise to proceed with the expenditure on construction until we had the surveys to lay upon the Table of the House. It would have been most inconsistent under those circumstances for the Senator, an inconsistency which would not have been paralleled excepting by the motion which has been made to-night, after having urged the Government not to force the Bill for the construction of the railway without a survey, to have risen and challenged the Supply Bill on the ground that the surveys were being provided for in that Bill. Everything that took place with regard to the Supply Bill, was a challenge by the Senator from Richmond against the Government putting into the Supply Bill a vote for the construction of the road; and not a single observation was made as to the surveys, or as to the expenditure on anything but construction. It was under these circumstances that the leader of the Government in the Senate gave the pledge that the expenditure which had been the subject of the debate the night before, the expenditure which, it was feared, would be provided for in the Supply Bill, for the construction of the road, and not any other object, and this alone was the subject of the pledge of the leader of the Government in the Senate. The Hon. gentleman who has just sat down has stated the singular proposition, for the purpose, it seems to me, of wresting the language violently which the hon. Mr. Abbott used in the Senate last Session, that there can be no expenditure more directly made on a railway than expenditure for survey. Why, Sir, if, at the urgent solicitation of an important part of the country, the Government made preliminary surveys for the purpose of ascertaining whether a railway ought to be built or not, but decided, after those surveys were completed and after the information was acquired, that it was unwise to construct the road, and abandoned the undertaking—could that be called expenditure upon that road? Could it be said that because the Government had promised not to build the road or to spend a dollar on it, the survey was a violation of the pledge which they had made to Parliament? Now, let me call the attention of the House to the inaccuracy of the observations which have just been made by the hon. member for South Oxford as to the developments in this House last year. This measure for the construction of the Harvey and Salisbury line was not presented to the House in the absence of information, in the absence of authorities, in the absence of even the roughest surveys, as he has said to-night. On the contrary, we had the written opinion, the written report, the written pledge of the ablest officers of the Railway Department, indicating to Parliament that less than two millions would amply suffice to build that road; we had that on the highest authority that the Government could get at the time. That was the authority on which Parliament had been accustomed to make railway votes from time to time. But we were met by the startling announcement from the other side of the House that our calculations were all astray, that instead of saving about thirty-two miles of road the new line would only save about seventeen. That was constantly repeated in the course of that debate, and it was vehemently asserted that instead of building the road for two millions, we should be well out of it if we got it built for four millions; and one gentleman in this House, and one, I think, in the Upper House, went so far as to say that we were actually pledging the country for an expenditure of seven million dollars. With the strong assertion that we were incurring an expenditure of at least four millions, and perhaps of seven millions, and that we were only to save seventeen miles by the construction of this link; with the strong request for a survey backed by the strong vote on the other side of the House, I ask if it was not reasonable that, before presenting that subject to the consideration of the House again, we should enquire whether the alarming statements made by the opponents of the measure were correct, or whether the estimates made by our own engineers were nearer the truth? But there was another consideration. It was not merely incumbent upon us, before deciding whether to go on with the Bill for the construction of the road, it was not merely necessary for us to deliberate whether we should abandon the road or not, but we had in view this circumstance: that Parliament had made by a statute still in force an offer, which was still outstanding, of upwards of $60,000 a year for the construction of this road. As the matter stood after last Session, any railway company might have come forward and asked us to sign a contract for the construction of that railway and to pledge $63,000 a year for twenty years. Were we in a position to say yes or no? We had been met by statements on the other side of the House that we were only going to save seventeen miles of railway, and that the construction of the road would entail not only an enormous waste of money to any contractors who undertook it, but a waste of public money to the extent of $63,000 for twenty years. Would we have been in a position to avail ourselves of any offer made under those circumstances, with that statement made in the House, with that statement backed by the vote of the Opposition in the House, with that statement believed by an overwhelming majority of the Senate? What would have been our censure if we had even availed ourselves of the statutory powers we had, to bestow that subsidy, and made a contract for the construction of this road, by which the public money of Canada should go to the extent of $63,000 a year for twenty years? There was the possible abandonment of the road, or the proposition to bring forward the measure at this Session, or, on the other hand, the possibility of a company coming forward, as a company was likely to do, to ask us to enter into a contract under the legislation existing last year. But, in view of the strong stand taken in this House by the Senate, that any further action on the subject should be preceded by surveys and by detailed estimates, we would not have complied with the will of Parliament, if we had entered into a contract for the subsidy without a survey. If we had done so we should have had, weeks ago, a resolution twice as strong, a resolution of censure declaring that before we pledged the public money of Canada to that extent, even under an outstanding statute, we ought to have made the very surveys which we are now censured for having made.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman says that $63,000 a year had been appropriated for the construction of this particular part of the Short Line Railway. The hon. gentleman knows well, that we had appropriated a subsidy for the construction of that short line, from Montreal to St. John, and he knows well that under an Order in Council, which received a great deal of criticism from this side of the House, the Government had appropriated $63,000 as a subsidy to a company who would build that part of the line; and he knows that the Atlantic Company had refused to construct that part of the line for the amount of subsidy which the Government had appropriated; and he knew, as a consequence of that, that the line could not be built. The hon. gentleman must not argue, and cannot argue, that this Government were authorised in expending any portion of the public money in surveys, because $63,000 a year subsidy had been appropriated to a company if they would construct the line; the hon. gentleman could not argue that, and, therefore, the whole of that portion of his remarks was utterly irrelevant and no answer whatever to the charge which the hon. gentleman formulated in his resolution. The charge made in the resolution is, that the Government have not only acted in defiance of the solemn pledge which, through the mouth of the leader of the Government in the other House, they gave to the country, but they have acted illegally and contrary to the law of the land in expending money on those surveys. The hon. gentleman in defending himself, tried to show that no such pledge was given, and as an exhibition of skill in casuistry, I have never seen him more successful. If the hon. gentleman had taken the trouble to read the question put to the leader of the Government in connection with that matter, he would not have endeavored to establish that Mr. Abbott did not pledge the Government at that time, not to spend a single dollar on the construction of that road. The question put by the hon. Senator Miller was this:

"I want to know whether or not there is half a million of dollars towards the Short Line of railway in the Supply Bill; and, if so, whether any attempt will be made to expend any of that money until authority is obtained from Parliament for the construction of the Short Line Road?" The hon. Senator asked distinctly whether there was to be any attempt made to spend any of the money until authority is obtained from Parliament.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Of the $500,000.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) At that time Parliament had refused to sanction the expenditure of that money. Parliament had thrown out the Bill which the Government had introduced providing for that expenditure, it had stamped that Bill with disapproval, and the leader of the Government in the other House, in answer to a question, said:

"I may say most positively that no expenditure of any kind will be made on this road until it is sanctioned by Parliament."

Not that no expenditure of the $500,000 would be made, but that no expenditure of any kind would be made on this road.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. On this road.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does the First Minister pretend to argue before this House that the expenditure connected with laying out the road and surveying is not an expenditure in connection with that road? Such a contention is absurd. It is an expenditure on the road. It is one of the expenditures which the $500,000 which Parliament was asked to vote would provide for; but Parliament did not pass the Bill granting that expenditure, and Mr. Abbott stated distinctly:

"I say most positively that no expenditure of any kind will be made on this road until it is sanctioned by Parliament."

Parliament did not grant that $500,000 or any other money. The Minister of Justice argued that they had sufficient evidence last year to justify them in asking Parliament to pass the Bill for the construction of this road. What evidence has he? He had about the same evidence which the House had presented to it when it consented to vote some millions for the construction of the Oxford and New Glasgow road. We had then the pledges of Ministers that the road would be of a certain length and cost a certain sum of money, that there would be an absolute saving effected with regard to distance, and we had the absolute pledge made by Ministers that the saving consequent on the construction of the road would be forty-five miles, and upon that solemn pledge given by Ministers, and this House believed that such pledges would not be given unless Ministers had evidence to justify them, Parliament voted the money. What did hon. members find after the money had been voted and expended? They found that the pledges made by the Government were absolutely no good, and instead of a saving of forty-five miles being effected, as the Government had promised, the saving was only seven miles. So we had the evidence before us last year. What is the resolution which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Laurier) asks this House to pass? He asks this House to pass a vote of censure on the Government, because they expended $22,300 without a vote of Parliament. This has been done, not only without a vote of Parliament, but in absolute defiance of a contrary vote of Parliament. The Government had asked Parliament to sanction that expenditure; they had brought in a Bill providing for an expenditure, in the first place, up to $500,000, and although it passed one branch of the Legislature by a majority, it was thrown out at the other end of the Legislature and it never became law. There was, therefore, no authority given, but the expenditure was condemned by one branch of the Legislature, and this condemnation was shown by the Senate throwing out the Bill; and yet expenditure has proceeded in the face of the pledge given by the leader of the Government in the other House, that not a dollar would be expended until the authority of Parliament had been obtained. What authority has the Government for this outlay? We know that every year the Government have been usurping the powers of this House, and there is no greater danger existing at this moment than the danger which exists from the usurpation on the part of the Executive of powers which properly belong to the Commons of Canada. We have evidence of this every year. A year or two ago two millions were spent just before an election, largely to maintain the party in power; and when we challenged that expenditure in this House and showed that it could not properly be made under the Governor General's warrant, hon. gentlemen opposite were left without any defence. We thought, after that experience, that hon. gentlemen opposite would not continue to pursue that course. What do we find to-day? The leader of the Government says: We spent the money, and we now come here and ask Parliament to support us. But the hon. gentleman's contention is utterly unjustifiable, for he has no right to spend money unless it is voted by Parliament, or unless he is able to bring that expenditure within the terms of the statute which authorises the issue of special warrants. He did not get a vote of Parliament; and unless he can bring himself within the section authorising the expenditure by special warrant, he is without any authority, and the money has been spent in violation of the law, as the resolution expresses it. What does the law say? It says:

"No cheque for public money shall issue except upon the certificate of the Auditor General that there is parliamentary authority for the expenditure, save only in the following cases."

There was no parliamentary authority for this expenditure, and, therefore, unless it comes within the exceptions of the Act, the Government have been guilty of spending $22,000 in violation of the law. The Act further says:

"If, when Parliament is not in Session, any accident happens to any public work or building which requires an immediate outlay for the repair thereof, or any other occasion arises when any expenditure not foreseen or provided for by Parliament is urgently and immediately required for the public good."

The expenditure does not come within this section. This expenditure was foreseen and was recommended to Parliament. It was, therefore, foreseen, recommended and rejected. Accordingly the First Minister stands in a worse position than if the Government had never recommended it, because the Government not only recommended it but Parliament stamped the measure with their disapproval, rejected the recommendation of the Government, and gave no authority whatever for the expenditure. Parliament did not provide for it; the whole matter was foreseen, but it was stamped with the disapproval of Parliament. In what position, therefore, do we stand? The First Minister says: I do not care whether it was foreseen or whether Parliament provided for it; if we think the expenditure is an outlay in the public interest, we will make the expenditure, and will ask Parliament to sanction it afterwards. Every member knows that this is one of the most dangerous precedents that can be introduced; it is still more dangerous if it is sanctioned, as no doubt, it will be, by a majority of this House. The First Minister has added a new section to the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act. He says: Although it is true that this expenditure was not sanctioned by Parliament, I am going to show that I had authority to spend that money. What is his authority? He says a certain resolution was introduced by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) and supported by a certain number of members in this House. What became of this resolution? It was voted down by a large majority. And therefore, he says, if a resolution—assuming for the nonce that his construction was at all possible—asking for a vote is voted down, that resolution justifies me in spending the money. Why, the hon. gentleman knows that the very resolution which the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) moved was, that no money should be spent on the construction of the road until proper surveys had been made, and until time had demonstrated its necessity and advisability. There were two conditions: one was, until the surveys had been made; and the second was, until time should demonstrate the necessity and advisability of the construction of the road. No one will say that time has demonstrated its necessity. What is the fact in regard to that resolution? The majority of the House voted it down. The First Minister read the minority names; why did he not read the names of the majority that pronounced against the resolution, headed by the name of the First Minister himself, and followed by those of every Conservative in the House? And, therefore, even if the resolution had passed, the hon. gentleman could take no authority under it for the expenditure of money; but as the resolution did not pass, it is child's play, it is treating the House with contempt, and insulting the House, to say that the expenditure was justifiable, because it was made in compliance with a resolution which was voted down by a large majority in this House. Neither by Act of Parliament, neither by the clause authorising expenditure by special warrant, nor by any resolution sanctioned by this House or by the Senate, could the hon. gentleman spend one dollar. We know why he spent it. He had given pledges, or some of the members of his Government had given pledges, that the work would be constructed. They were annoyed by the check given to their plan by the other branch of the Legislature, in the proper exercise of their powers—and the proposal was defeated by a large majority—and they were determined to proceed with the work. The Government have expended the money illegally, and the First Minister stands to-day, although he tries to laugh the question out and tells funny stories to this House, convicted of having illegally expended this money; and the hon. gentleman cannot point to a section of any Act of Parliament, or to any resolution, or to any precedent worth following, which will justify him in violating that which is one of the most precious privileges of the Commons of Canada—the right to declare when and how the public money shall be expended.

Mr. KENNY. It will be within the recollection of the members of this House—at least those of them who come from my native Province, and from the adjoining Province of New Brunswick, and who take a special interest in the Short Line Railway—that, early last Session, I caused to be placed on the Notice paper, a resolution asking for the papers in connection with this railway. My object in doing so was to bring to the notice of Parliament, in the most formal manner which was at my disposal, the very unsatisfactory position in which that railway stood. It will also be within the recollection of hon. gentlemen, that, subsequently, in the Railway Committee, when a Bill connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway was under discussion, I there held that that Bill should not be granted until some provision had been made for the completion of the Short Line Railway. I, and others, who had then made that proposition, were met by the statement that we were doing a great injustice to the Canadian Pacific Railway in presuming to come before the Railway Committee, until we had the fullest information to give as regards the length, the total cost, and the time which would be occupied in constructing the Harvey, Fredericton, Moncton Railway. We were met by the most extravagant opposition statements at that time. It was true that a preliminary survey had been made, and that the chief officer of railways, a trusted and confidential official of the Government, had stated that it could be constructed for $16,000 a mile, but that would not satisfy certain hon. gentlemen. They contended that a full and a complete survey must be made before Parliament would consent to grant any money for the construction of this railway. My contention then was: that the distance was just the same, and the conditions of the country would be the same, as when, in 1885, Parliament voted a certain sum for the construction of that railway. Finally, the Government brought down a resolution providing for an expenditure for the construction of the remainder of the Short Line Railway. That was met by the motion of my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Weldon) in which he demanded that a more complete survey should be made, and to which motion the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) has just referred. That resolution of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) is divided into two clauses: the first of which is, that a full and complete survey must be made before any vote of Parliament should be granted for the construction of that line. I find that the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Davies) took an important part in that debate. In looking over Hansard I see that that hon. gentleman stated:

"That it could not be emphasised too strongly, and insisted on by the country too carefully, that we are asked to embark on the construction of a road, a survey of which has not yet been made."

Here is this hon. gentleman, who contended from his place in Parliament, that not one dollar of public money should be voted for the construction of this railway (to which Parliament was committed, and in which the people of the Maritime Provinces took a special interest), and that no expenditure was warranted, because a survey had not been made; but, notwithstanding all those contentions he now finds fault with the Government of the country for having that survey made.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) For having it made without the authority of Parliament.

Mr. KENNY. So anxious was the hon. gentleman in the public interest, that the most accurate information should be obtained before the expenditure was made, that he then stated:

"In the absence of correct information as to the length of the line, and without correct information as to the cost of the line, we are not warranted in indulging in so large an expense."

Again he says:

"I say, speaking from the interest of the Dominion at large, that this vote is inadvisable, and that with the information before the House it is more than inadvisable, it is shameful and disgraceful that Parliament should enter into an unknown expenditure for 140 miles of railway."

The hon. gentleman was not finding so much fault with the expenditure as he was with Parliament entering upon an unknown expenditure. Now, however, the hon. gentleman holds a different view—he can always find some excuse for opposing the present Government. He was not the only hon. member who, last Session, seemed to be actuated by a desire for more positive information. We were met everywhere around the House with the contention that it was unfair to urge this expenditure on the Government until the survey had been made. One hon. gentleman stated that the calculation of the Government officers was that the line would cost $2,000,000; another hon. gentleman that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company estimated the cost at $4,000,000, and, speaking from memory, I think that the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), stated that it would cost $7,000,000. I am speaking from memory, and the hon. gentleman can correct me if I am wrong. Now, Sir, in view of these facts, and in view of the great differences of opinion which existed, I hold that the Government, instead of being blamed, should be commended for having, in the public interest, endeavored to ascertain the most positive and correct information possible in connection with this railway. What are the facts in connection with this question? As I understand the right hon. the leader of the House, he has told us that it is usual to put in the Estimates a sum for expenditure on railway surveys, which sum is placed at the disposal of the Government of the day. When an additional sum of money is required for these surveys, a warrant is issued, and we find that in this case, as in all others, this parliamentary custom has been exactly followed. As regards the language used in the other House by the hon. gentleman who there represents the Government, I may state that the hon. Senator Miller—referring to the resolution which had passed this House, and which was defeated in the Senate because sufficient information in connection with the railway was not before the Upper House—asked if any part of the $500,000, which was in the resolution passed by this House, would be expended on the railway? The leader of the Government in the Senate stated that there would be no expenditure on the road, and, as a matter of fact, not one single dollar has been expended on the road. I personally may be very sorry that it was not expended. Last year I certainly urged the construction of that road in the public interest, because I thought the faith of Parliament was pledged to it and should be kept. It is true that since then the other great railway of Canada, the Grand Trunk, has intimated its desire to have access to the Maritime Provinces, and that is a matter which is exciting a great deal of interest there; and the hon. leader of the Opposition—who I regret to say during his parliamentary career has never shown any very great affection for the Maritime Provinces—realising the interest which is being shown in those Provinces by these two rival railroads in their anxiety to come down there, may now be anxious to draw the Government and obtain from them the most positive and accurate information as to their intentions with regard to these railways. The other day a gentleman who attended a deputation that waited on one of the Ministers found very great fault because the Minister did not tell him what he was going to do. Perhaps the object of the hon. leader of the Opposition may be to ascertain what the Government are going to do with regard to the extension of the Grand Trunk system or the completion of the Short Line Railway to the Maritime Provinces. If that was his object, I regret that he has not been more successful. If this resolution had been moved by a gentleman on the back benches, like myself, I would have said that he was not serious—that he was trifling with the House—I would not like to apply that language to the hon. leader of the Opposition—in asking this Parliament to censure the Government for doing the very thing which the gentlemen who surrounded him last year urged the Government to do. The hon. gentleman will remember that, in 1885, he endeavored to retard this Short Line Railway, and he is consistent to-day in his opposition to it. From its inception it was recognised to be a benefit to the Maritime Provinces; from its inception to this day it has met with the opposition of the hon. leader of the Opposition. In 1885, when the Government measure came down, providing for the construction of the Short Line Railway, it was met with an amendment moved by that hon. gentleman, which was characterised by the gentlemen surrounding him as an injustice and an injury to the Maritime Provinces. The object of that amendment was to secure delay and an additional survey was asked for; and yet when more surveys are now provided he is dissatisfied. As I said before, I consider that for having secured this survey, the Government, instead of being censurable, are entitled to the thanks of Parliament and especially to the thanks of the members from the Maritime Provinces.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman who has just sat down has wandered away entirely from the question before the House. He has made a very nice speech, a sort of echo of his speech of last year, in favor of this line, and I have no doubt that before this Session is over he will be asking for a subsidy for another line as a great advantage to the Maritime Provinces—a line which, I think, he will find the hon. leader of the Opposition supporting, as he has before advocated it in this House. But that has nothing to do with the question before the House. The merits of the expenditure it is not necessary to go into at all. The simple question is the constitutional question: have the Government acted within the law, or have they acted without the authority of Parliament? The hon. leader of the Government has laid great stress on the resolution which I brought forward last Session. At a time when the members of the House were anxious to get away, during the dying hours of the Session, the proposition for the construction of this railway was brought forward by the Government. They had made arrangements with a railway company to run that line, by an agreement which I contended was inimical to the interests of the city and county I represent. It was then contended on this side of the House the Government had not sufficient knowledge to justify them in proceeding with the work. We had already had a certain experience in connection with the Oxford and New Glasgow Railway, which a Minister had stated would save a great distance, whereas it turned out that the distance really saved was very much less, and we asked the Government to hold their hands. The amendment I put forward last year embraced two points: first, that no action should be taken by this House authorising the construction of the railway until a proper survey of the proposed line and reliable estimates of its proper cost should be laid before Parliament, and, secondly, until time had established that the existing line of railway between Harvey and Salisbury or Moncton, was not sufficient to meet the demands of passenger and freight traffic. Shortly afterwards, even before the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had an opportunity of developing the traffic over their line, the Government, without the authority of Parliament, commenced an expenditure of money on surveys, in defiance of the pledge given by the leader of the Government in the Senate. But my resolution was voted down, the majority of this House declaring that the Government should go on with this work, and that a half million of money should be expended in the construction of the road. As the hon. member for Queen's, P. E. I. (Mr. Davies), has pointed out, that vote was intended to include the cost of surveys, plans and profiles, which it would be necessary for the Government, before issuing the contracts for construction, to have completed. Yet my resolution was rejected by Parliament; and after voting that those surveys were utterly unnecessary, the Government expended this money on surveys. Now, the hon. leader of the Government said that the objection taken in the other House was that the surveys were not proper surveys; and he endeavored to make out that the language of Mr. Abbott in that House referred entirely to the building of the road, and not to surveys. In looking over the debate, I find that it was the Hon. Mr. Miller who moved the six months' hoist, and in doing so he said:

"I think it will be admitted that the general feeling in both Houses of Parliament, whatever party exigencies may have rendered necessary, is that the expenditure contemplated by this Bill is a useless and wasteful application of the public funds."

Then he goes on to deal with the argument about the saving:

"Therefore it is doubtful if there will be any saving in the length of the line; but supposing they would save twenty miles on the Canadian Pacific Railway between the two oceans, or even say between Montreal and Halifax, the saving in time would not exceed three-quarters of an hour, and I ask this House if, in the present condition of the finances of the country, with the large debt and the heavy burdens which Canada has had to assume for necessary public works—I am not now condemning the Government for these large expenditures, because I believe in a great measure they were the outcome of a wise policy which will have future beneficial results—but looking at the necessary debt that this country will have to assume in connection with those public works, are we in a position, unless impelled by some inevitable necessity, to spend three million dollars on this railway to secure such insignificant advantages."

The argument made by the gentleman who led the opposition to the Bill in the Senate was the absence of necessity for this road. I find the Hon. Mr. Abbott, in summing up the objections, does not say a word at all about the surveys. He says:

"My hon. friend from Marshfield submitted to the House in a condensed form the substance of all the objections that are made to this enterprise. Now, let us see how far these objections have not been already met by what has been done, and I propose merely to glance at that, and at what my hon. friend said, which attracted my attention. This road, it is said, will be a rival with the Intercolonial Railway; it will take away the traffic past St. John; it does not go by the most direct line, inasmuch as it goes by Fredericton; it is not, according to the gentleman's objections, a direct line, and it is not entitled to the name of the short line, because it makes a detour in order to reach Fredericton; and, moreover, it is said: Why build this short line? What is the object of it? What is the advantage to accrue from it? What good is it going to do?"

These are the objections summed up by Mr. Abbott in his reply; and you will find the objections urged by the Senate were based on the utter want of necessity for this line, and that it would be a waste of the public funds, to spend money upon a road running parallel to the Government road at the very time that connection was made with the Government road, and no opportunity afforded for ascertaining whether that did not meet the requirements of passengers and traffic. The Senate, upon those objections, rejected the Bill, and Parliament disapproved of any money being spent on the road. You must read the language of the Hon. Mr. Abbott in this connection. The hon. member for Halifax says there is no expenditure. But my hon. friend carefully leaves out the emphasis which Mr. WELDON (St. John).

the hon. Senator puts on the language he used, "expenditure of any kind:"

"I say most positively that no expenditure of any kind will be made on this road until authorised by Parliament."

Any man who understands at all railway construction, will know that surveys and plans are just as necessary and part of the construction of a road as the very sleepers and iron put upon it; and if the Senate had voted the half million dollars which the Government proposed to spend, a large portion of that money would have been devoted to this very object. Last Session, on the floor of this House, the Government urged that the surveys were all made, and that it was unnecessary to have further surveys, as those they had were sufficient; and yet the Government have dared, without the warrant or authority of Parliament, or without law, to spend $30,000 on surveys, which they declared they did not require. Another point I took in my resolution is, that we should wait until time has established that the existing line of railway between the points is not sufficient to meet the demands of passenger and trade traffic. Shortly after that resolution was moved, a connection was made by which trains were run from Montreal through to Halifax. Inside of six weeks, those trains commenced running and have been running ever since. I appeal to the evidence of every person in the Maritime Provinces if that train has not been run in a most creditable manner. We have now quick and regular communication, and I have not heard one word except in praise of the manner in which that traffic is carried on by the Canadian Pacific Railway. We can now leave Montreal at eight in the evening and arrive in Halifax at eleven o'clock the next night, and be in St. John the next day at two o'clock. So far as the requirements of trade in traffic and passengers are required, time has shown that that road is sufficient for them for some time to come; and for the Government to spend this money without warrant and without parliamentary vote, is simply a waste of money for the purpose of keeping some constituencies in such a position that they will return supporters of the Government to Parliament. This proposed line will be another Oxford and New Glasgow, for the purpose of securing to the Government certain counties by means of this expenditure. My hon. friend has pointed out that the Governor General's warrant can only be employed under the Act:

"If, when Parliament is not in session, any accident happens to any public work or building which requires an immediate outlay for the repair thereof, or any other occasion arises when any expenditure not foreseen or provided for by Parliament is urgently and immediately required for the public good, then upon the report of the Minister of Finance and Receiver General that there is no parliamentary provision, and of the Minister having charge of the service in question that the necessity is urgent—"

I should like to ask where is the urgent necessity in this case? It is only in the two instances mentioned in the Act that the Governor General can issue his warrant. In this case there was no urgent necessity. The road was completed which served the purposes of all the traffic, and there was no necessity whatever for this new line. Were the people of Nova Scotia in any difficulties for the want of this road?

Mr. KENNY. Is that the road the hon. gentleman voted for in 1885?

Mr. WELDON (St. John). In 1885, as I pointed out last year when the resolution was brought forward, there was a certain sum granted for this road. I voted for that. The hon. member for Halifax insisted that this should be part of the arrangement at that time, which was that a certain sum should be granted to the company and not that the Government should build the road; and I said last Session I was prepared to stick to that agreement, and let the company have their $63,000, and build it. But I protested against the Government setting to work to draw away trade from my city and county by building this road. But the merits of the case are not before the House at present. I said, in 1885, I was willing to abide by that agreement, and my hon. friend will remember that I voted against the resolution of the hon. member for Guysboro' (Mr. Kirk). I say this in justice to myself, but this has nothing to do with the present case. It is quite immaterial what passed in 1885. It is quite foreign to the question which is now before the House. The question now is, whether the Government were justified in taking the course they did in regard to the surveys. They had voted down a resolution in regard to the surveys, they had given a pledge in the other House that no expenditure of any kind should be made, and no words could be stronger than those that were used, whether they referred to the preliminary surveys or to the building of the road. The question now is, had the Government the right, without the authority of Parliament, to spend any money upon that survey. If they had no authority of Parliament, they are driven to the Act, and they must show that this expenditure was urgent, and was absolutely required, and the Minister of Railways must have stated a case showing that the necessity was urgent. Anyone who heard the debate last year, anyone who knows the facts connected with this matter, knows that there was no urgent necessity. I, therefore, say that the Government, not having the authority of Parliament, and not having met the requirements of the statute, are deserving of the censure contained in this resolution of my hon. friend.

Mr. KIRK. It is true, as the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) has said, that this is a matter in which the people of Halifax and the people of Nova Scotia are much interested. It is more than five years since the Government brought a measure before Parliament, promising the people of that Province that this road should be built. In 1885 a measure was introduced by the Minister of Railways, to provide for the building of the Short Line through the State of Maine to St. John, and pretending at the same time, to provide for the construction of a line from Harvey to Salisbury. While the Government pretended that they were bound to build that Short Line, to my mind, it did not seem very clear that they intended to do anything of the kind, and I, therefore, moved a resolution in amendment to the proposition laid before the House by the Minister of Railways, which I will read. I intend to show that the policy pursued by the Government in this matter from the first, has been a policy of deception. While the resolution to which I refer was before the House in 1885, I moved the following amendment:—

“That the report be not now considered, but be referred back to the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of amending the Bill by providing that the work on the sections of the line between Harvey, Fredericton and Salisbury shall be begun and prosecuted simultaneously with the portion of the whole line west of the boundary between New Brunswick and Maine.”

The Minister of Public Works on behalf of the Government, requested me to withdraw the motion. He explained that it was the intention of the Government to take power to build that road, and that the passing of my amendment would retard rather than assist the construction. This is the explanation he made:

“I do not think this is an amendment which should be made, as, if it were carried, instead of helping the enterprise, it would throw obstacles in its way. Other hon. gentlemen may come forward and ask that work on other portions of the line shall be prosecuted simultaneously. That is not done anywhere, we see no such provision in any charter; no road is undertaken in that way. After the explanations I gave just now, that the contract which the Government will have to make will be made in such a way as to secure the completion of the line, taking care that the heaviest portions of the line may not be left to be built and paid with an amount only equal to the easiest portions of the line, but that the different portions may be paid for according to the character of the work to be performed—under these circumstances I hope the hon. gentleman will not persist in his motion.”

I did not, however, consider that that was very satisfactory, and I did not withdraw the motion, but it was voted down by the Government. The Government pretended all the while that they intended to proceed with the construction of this line. In 1886, I asked a question in this House which was answered by the Minister of Justice with reference to this line of railway. The people of Halifax and the people of Nova Scotia were led to believe that a contract was entered into to construct this line as well as the line to St. John:

“Mr. KIRK asked, Has a contract been entered into by the Government with any person or company for the building of the Short Line Railway from Montreal via Fredericton to Salisbury? If so, with whom? Will the contract be laid before the House this Session?”

“Mr. THOMPSON. Yes, a contract has been entered into with the International Railway Company, of which Mr. Duncan McIntyre is president. I understand it will not be laid on the Table this Session, unless asked for.”

Here is a declaration by the Minister of Justice that a contract was entered into to build this railway by way of Salisbury to Fredericton. Further, this question came up and was discussed in the elections in Nova Scotia in 1887, when a declaration was made on a platform in Halifax, by the late Minister of Railways, Sir Charles Tupper, who distinctly declared that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was bound under contract to build this section of railway. I quote from a newspaper report of what he said on the 5th February, 1887:

“When I stated last night that the last act I did before leaving London was to sign, as joint trustee with Lord Revelstoke and Lord Wolverton, the bonds for the construction of this line of railway (the Short Line) by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and that it is now in their hands; when I told him (Mr. Jones) that, he felt that it was a death knell ringing in his ears. He felt that with the gigantic work in the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, knowing their enormous resources, and knowing that the moment they had expended their money in the construction of this short line of railway, and carried out their magnificent project of having running to Halifax as fast a line of steamers as crosses the ocean from England to New York, that this harbor must become the entrepot of the traffic and commerce between Europe and the east. He knew that this would become a great transcontinental highway, and that we would not only bring over it the traffic from Europe to Japan and China, but that we should be able to compete with Boston, Portland or New York with regard to traffic, and travel to the cities of New York and Chicago and the Western States.

"I have already told you that this gigantic Pacific Railway Company, with between four and five thousand miles of constructed railway now in operation, with an army of 25,000 men in their employ, and expending money to an extent that is calculated to sustain and develop a country of itself, if we had to rest upon it almost alone. When that company have declared by the most solemn, important and business-like act that it is possible for them to do—by putting their hand and seal to a contract binding them to build, not only the short line of railway that comes to St. John, but also the short line of railway that passes St. John by coming from Fredericton to Moncton, because that is in the bond, and that is the work with which they are immediately to grapple."

There is the statement made by Sir Charles Tupper himself, who was Minister of Railway, at that time, declaring that not only had they entered into a contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to build the road from St. John, but also had entered into a contract with that company to complete the branch from Salisbury and Fredericton to Harvey. After the elections were over, Sir Charles Tupper, on the floor of the House, in 1887, made an almost similar statement in discussing the Estimates. I will read from the Hansard what was stated by him on the question which has been brought up here :

"Mr. JONES. I see there is an item here for the Short Line Railway; and while we are on that subject I would like to ask the Minister of Railways to give us some information with reference to the Short Line Railway which is now going on to the cities of St. John and Halifax, and which, it was expected, would shorten very much the distance from Montreal to those cities. There is a good deal of anxiety at present, on account of the report that they were about connecting with the Maine Central Line, instead of proceeding with the work as originally contemplated to Fredericton, Salisbury and Moncton; and if that is the case, it would appear from the information which reaches us indirectly, that while the road would have an advantage in connecting with the American line, the distance to be gained by the connection with St. John would not be anything like what was originally contemplated. I have heard it stated by a person who pretends to be well informed, that the line has been deflected so much, owing to the lack of accuracy in the original survey, that the distance to Halifax would not be shortened fifteen miles. I should like to have some information from the Minister of Railways on that point, because the expenditure can only be justified on the ground that it would shorten the distance to Halifax and St. John by over 200 miles; and if, as is said to be the case—I speak not from personal knowledge—it will not shorten it more than to the extent I have named, I think the intention of Parliament will not be carried out. If the hon. gentleman is in a position to give any information on the subject, I know it would be very acceptable just now, when the question is being discussed a good deal in the Lower Provinces.

"Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is aware that that work is in the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, with whom a contract has been made, and that contract is on the line originally agreed upon by Parliament to carry the road to Mattawamkeag and from Mattawamkeag, the company, as I understand, have made arrangements with the Maine Central Railway and the New Brunswick Railway to go to St. John. That was always the intention. The road is, therefore, being constructed precisely on the line and in the terms of the contract approved by Parliament, and the work is going on vigorously; and I am informed by the company that the line will be completed by the end of this year. The other portion of the contract requires the line to go from Harvey to Fredericton, and from Fredericton to Moncton, for the Halifax connection, and that the company are also bound under their contract to construct on the line originally laid down by Parliament.

"Mr. JONES. If my information is correct, they are constructing the branch from Mattawamkeag to the Central Railway, and no progress is being made on the other branch. I am aware that it is said to be under the charge of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, but it appears to me that the Government should exercise supervision over those roads when public money is expended on them.

"Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Certainly, the contract is with them.

"Mr. JONES. I would like the hon. gentleman to inform the House whether progress is also being made on the line from Harvey to Fredericton? I am informed that it is not.

"Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I understand that they are concentrating their attention on the main work first, and that they will then take up the other; but they are bound by the contract to take up the other and prosecute it vigorously, and complete it within a certain time."

Here, then, is the statement of the Minister of Railways on the floor of Parliament, confirming what he stated on an election platform in Halifax, that the Government had entered into a contract to build the railway from Harvey to Salisbury. The following summer the people of Halifax and Moncton became uneasy with regard to the progress that was being made. They saw that no work was being done, and a delegation was sent by the municipal councils of the city of Moncton and the city of Halifax to Ottawa, to interview the Government with regard to building this line. These delegates came to Ottawa and had a consultation with the First Minister with regard to the construction of this road, always under the impression that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were under contract to build the road. The whole blame of the delay was laid upon the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and not upon the Government. Under that impression, they came here and pressed upon the Government the necessity of seeing to it, that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company should perform their contract and build the road. I have not the exact words of the answer of the First Minister to that delegation, but it was in substance that the Government would see to it that the company would be compelled to perform their contract. He did not tell the delegation that the company was not under any bond to build that Salisbury branch, to secure the building of which was the object of the delegates' visit here. He simply put them off by telling them that he would see to it that the company would perform their contract. They went home, I believe, perfectly satisfied that the road would be built. But nothing was done, and it was not until last winter when, in the Railway Committee room in this House, the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) put the question plainly to the Minister of Public Works, who was chairman of that Committee, whether the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was under bonds to build the road. The people of Nova Scotia and the people of Canada were, until that time, under the impression, believed until that day, that the Canadian Pacific Railway were under bonds to build that road, but the Minister of Public Works, in answer to the member for Northumberland, stated that they were not under bonds; and that was the first the public knew of the fact that the Government had done nothing to secure the completion of that road.

Mr. MITCHELL. I often draw a good deal of light out of them, you know.

Mr. KIRK. You did that time. Owing to the answer given to the hon. member, the people then saw the exact position they were in. They saw they had been deceived from the start; they saw there was a necessity for the motion that I had moved, binding the Government to see that the road was completed simultaneously with the other. Now, I do not see that the Government can expect that I, at least, can vote with them on a motion of this kind. I believe they deserve the censure of this House, not only for spending money unauthorised by Parliament last year, but for the manner in which they have been deceiving the House and the people with regard to this matter from the inception of this business.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Had the Government submitted a proposal for the consideration of this House simply for a sum of money to survey that portion of the line between Harvey and Moncton, I should most undoubtedly have voted for it, as I did for the proposal of the Government last year to expend $500,000. But when the question comes before us in the shape we find it to-night, under the present resolution, and when I have to choose between my judgment as a public man standing here in the defence of the independence of Parliament and the questions which affect my own constituency in Halifax, whose people are undoubtedly interested in this question, I must, to be consistent with myself and with the duties and obligations imposed upon me here in defence of the independence of this House, take a different view of the question. This matter has been from its very first inception a piece of deception on the part of the Government. The present Government proposed a resolution to this House providing for the construction of that road, and when the question was brought up here by the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Kirk) and by other hon. members respecting the disposal of this money, the Minister of Public Works, on behalf of the Government, made the most emphatic declaration that a public man could make in his place in Parliament, that the Government would take care that the contract to be made would ensure the construction of that road all the way through to Moncton. The position occupied by the Minister of Public Works in this House was such as to give great force to his observations, and there was not an hon. gentleman who listened to him at that time but believed that the contract to be entered into, would embody the provisions which the hon. gentleman said it would contain. Later on, as has been detailed this evening by the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Kirk), the present High Commissioner, who was then Minister of Railways, in his speeches in this House on two occasions which have been quoted, at public meetings in Halifax, at a very critical time during the elections, made most emphatic and positive declarations not only that the road was going to be built, not only that we might expect the money voted by Parliament, applied for the purpose Parliament intended, but that the contract had been signed and settled, and that he had signed the debentures on the other side with Lord Revelstoke, which secured the money for the completion of the line. Taking those two declarations in connection, and taking them in connection with the exposé made when the papers were brought down to the House, in return to a motion moved by my hon. colleague from Halifax (Mr. Kenny), I repeat there never was, there never could be, and I hope there never will be again such an exhibition of disregard for every public obligation, for everything that should influence a public man, for everything that should entitle a public man's utterances to be received with acceptance as the declarations which those public papers contained. It was found then that so far from an engagement having been entered into with the Canadian Pacific Railway or with an other company for the construction of the road to Moncton, it never had been contracted for at all; the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had never undertaken to build it beyond a certain distance, they were in no way obliged by their contract with the Government to build one foot of road beyond what they had already completed; and, therefore, despite the statement of Sir Charles Tupper, then Minister of Railways, now High Commissioner in England, repeated twice in this House, that the agreement had been signed and sealed, there never had been an agreement and there never had been a contract made and sealed, and the Canadian Pacific Railway was under no obligation whatever to construct a foot of road beyond that they have already built. Here was a melancholy exhibition, one discreditable to this country and highly discreditable to the Government, and more than discreditable, I might say, dishonorable, if the phrase were not unparliamentary, to the hon. gentlemen who made the statements in different places to secure party advantage. So matters passed, and after the elections were over, my respected colleague came to this House and he very properly moved for these papers. I do him the justice to believe that he was under the impression, as I was, and as the people in Halifax were, that this contract had been signed. I have no doubt whatever that my colleague, when he moved for those papers, expected a contract to be produced with the Canadian Pacific Railway for the construction of this road, and I could imagine the chagrin and disappointment of my colleague when, on the papers being produced in Parliament, it appeared that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were completely exonerated from building a foot beyond what they had already completed. I watched with great interest and attention the speech which my hon. friend and colleague delivered on that occasion; I listened with very earnest attention to see whether he would rise superior to all party considerations and would denounce the Government, or express his independent opinion with respect to the Government of which he was a supporter. But I watched in vain for any expression of condemnation of the Government. On referring to the hon. gentleman's speech it will be found that my hon. colleague was very careful to condemn the Canadian Pacific Railway, to observe that the Canadian Pacific Railway should carry out its contract, when he had in his hands at that time all the documents that had passed between the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway, and knew that they completely exonerated that company from building a foot of the road. If the hon. gentleman had stood up in the interests of the city which he and I mutually represent and had denounced the Government at other times in respect of views which he did not entertain or support, if he had risen superior to party considerations and had exercised the powerful influence he is well known to possess on the Government of the day, I cannot say what the result of such an independent course might have been. But, instead of doing so, he was most careful to avoid by imputation or insinuation, directly or indirectly, any reference, to the responsibility of the Government in that transaction, and endeavored to show that the whole matter rested on the shoulders of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which had no legal obligation in that respect. The hon. gentleman has spoken to-night of the delegation which came shortly afterwards to interview the Government here, that deputation including the mayors of Fredericton, Moncton and Halifax. The hon. gentleman gave a graphic description of their trip to the capital in his speech last year. He said :

"Many hon. gentlemen now listening to me, and members of the Cabinet, are aware that the chief magistrates of Fredericton, Moncton and Halifax made a pilgrimage up here in a most inclement season of the year, to interview the Government and place before them the importance which their people attached to the early completion of this contract. I am glad to say that when these gentlemen returned they came back with their heads erect and their hearts elated, and satisfied with the assurance which had been given them that the contract would be carried out. So far as I am personally concerned, I believe in the very positive assurances that were given in Parliament by the Ministers of the day, and it is for that reason that I have quoted the remarks of the Hon. Sir Charles Tupper and Hon. Sir Hector Langevin, who are leading Parliament in these debates."

I have no doubt my hon. colleague relied on the statements made by the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Railways. He said: The mayors of those three cities came back with their heads erect and hearts elated at the very positive assurance which had been given to them that the contract would be carried out, and the road would be completed all the way to Moncton. I ask my hon. colleague what he thought of it when he got the contract before him, and what he thought when he had found that he been deceived as I had been deceived, as this House had been deceived, and as the country had been deceived, by the statement of the hon. Minister of Public Works, and the statement of the Minister of Railways of that day? I know that the hon. gentleman was deceived, and the reason I took exception to his course was: that he did not stand up as an independent member of this House, occupying the high position which he does in the country and the city he comes from; and say to the Government: You are pledged by the highest member of the Cabinet to stand by this road. Your Minister of Railways made the direct statement that the contract had been signed for it, and I shall not be satisfied until that road is carried out on the original lines." The hon. gentleman instead of doing that, which would have reflected honor on him, as an independent representative of the important city of Halifax, was very anxious to save the Government all he could, and to throw the blame on the Canadian Pacific Railway, which had nothing to with it at all. The policy with regard to this road has been a mistake from the very beginning. If was a mistake in my judgment to have ever built the line at all, for I maintain that it was not done in the interest of the country. It is well known that the amount originally granted, was granted in consequence of members of the Government being connected with roads which were interested or which were going to be absorbed in the new line. It is known, and it has never been denied, that there were members of the Cabinet of that day who drew very important financial advantages in consequence of these large grants. We find the Government giving a sum equal to about $6,000,000 to build a rival road to the Intercolonial Railway through a foreign territory, instead of spending the resources of the country in further equipping and developing the Intercolonial Railway. That was a mistake, and every day is demonstrated to the country that it was a positive injury to that great public work. On many occasions I have complained of the working of the Intercolonial Railway. I pointed out to the late Minister of Railways that we should be able to come from Halifax to Montreal in thirty hours, instead of forty hours, which was occupied in the journey at that time. The then Minister of Railways assured us, in the most positive manner, that the shorter run was utterly out of the question, because of all the stops we had to make along the line. What do we see now? The moment a rival road was opened, constructed as it was by the money of the country, the Government of the day found that they could make the run on the Intercolonial Railway from Halifax to Montreal in twenty-seven hours. If that had been done before, this new road would never had existed. It was only in consequence of the great length of time in making the distance from Halifax to Montreal, which gave any reason in our part of the country, and I believe in this part of the country as well, for the vote of Parliament, to secure a shorter road. I am told that the present quick service on the Intercolonial Railway is going to involve a very considerable outlay every year, and this will be an additional expense which might have been avoided, if the same service were given at first and no rival road constructed. I believe further that, according to the present arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway, to divide the through traffic and the freight traffic as well, a larger deficit will each year be incurred on the Intercolonial Railway. In order to make the deficit greater, and to render our own public works of little value, the Government gave $6,000,000 to build a rival line to a foreign country. Coming back to the original proposal, I repeat that I would not object to the survey of this line if the Government had made the proposal to vote a certain sum of money to establish an instrumental survey in place of the preliminary survey which existed previous to that time. If the Government had made such a proposal, I would have said: "Very well; let us have the survey and let us see what the result will be." There was considerable difference of opinion as regards this line, and it was stated by various authorities that the distance to be saved by its construction was all the way from fifteen miles to thirty miles. I repeat that it was important, in the interests of the country, to ascertain what the actual saving of this distance would be; and, therefore, if it were only a question of the survey itself, I should not condemn it. But, as one of the representatives of the people, I am here to guard the privileges of Parliament above all things. I value too highly my position in this House to violate, for one moment, the principles which have been held sacred in every representative assembly from time immemorial, for the sake of gaining even a paltry temporary advantage in the district I represent. I will go back to my people in Halifax, if my action here to-night is questioned, and I will explain the whole transaction from beginning to end, and I am not afraid, here or elsewhere, before those who value principle above expediency, to justify the course I intend to take in voting for the amendment of my hon. friend. Such a course is one that every honorable man who prides himself upon the liberty of Parliament should take. This question has gone so far, now, that we would like very much to see the end of it, and to know exactly what the views of the Government are. It is no secret, and it was no secret last year, that many members of the Government were opposed to this appropriation of half a million dollars, and that it was defeated in the Upper House by the action of members of the Cabinet, and by the Government whip in that House bringing the members who support the Government there to vote it down. Does any one suppose for a moment, that if the Government were in earnest, and that if they desired to pass it in the other branch of the Legislature, it would have been defeated? The history of this country gives a different lesson entirely. It was known that the members of the Government spoke of the measure in light and sneering terms, as done to conciliate a certain member of the Cabinet from Nova Scotia. The Government went through the farce, it would seem, of passing the Bill in this House, knowing that it was going to be defeated in the other branch of Legislature. Then, came the promise which was made by the leader of the Government in the Senate, and that promise has now been attempted to be distorted by the First Minister, and by other gentlemen who have spoken on this subject. I think that anyone who reads for himself, and who understands plain English, will arrive at the conclusion that the Hon. Mr. Abbott, when he made the declaration on that occasion, meant that no money should be expended directly or indirectly on the road itself or for surveys, or for any other purpose. The Government cannot, therefore, hope to make any such contentions as they have made, because it cannot be borne out by the statement made by the Hon. Mr. Abbott, last Session. Be that as it may, I say that the intentions of Parliament should be respected; and if we are ever going to maintain any authority at all over the expenditure of this country, that authority must be vindicated on every occasion. Hon. gentlemen who have preceded me have referred to the objects of the Governor General's warrants. Will the hon. First Minister say that this survey was a matter of such urgent necessity that he should ask the Governor General for his warrant to carry it on? The hon. gentleman, as well as every member of this House, knows that the Governor General's warrant is only intended to be used for purposes of great public extremity. If a lock should break on our canals, or a bridge should be carried away on our railways, or a public building should be burnt down, or any great public exigency should arise, which was unforeseen and for which money was not provided, then and only then would the Government be justified in asking for a Governor General's warrant. To use it for anything short of such things is a misappropriation, and is putting His Excellency the Governor General in a false position; and the people who would place before the Governor General a request for his warrant for expenditures which are not of the most urgent public necessity should be condemned by Parliament and the country. I should like to see that road built, and the intention of the Government, as pledged by them and by this House time and again, carried out; but I regret extremely that out of this question has come an exhibition of unfairness and misrepresentation on the part of the hon. members of the Cabinet that can reflect no credit on the country and no credit on themselves.

General LAURIE. I do not intend to follow the hon. gentleman, who has just sat down, through his speech, because a large portion of it falls under what is usually designated as ancient history, dealing with matters which are four or five years old. I propose just to touch upon one point. A definite charge is brought against the Government to-night, and it is with that we have to deal. The Government, I believe, did make a very serious mistake in the division of the subsidies for this road.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Do not be too hard on them.

General LAURIE. I will, of course, speak my own views, whether they are hard on any member of this House or not; that is for the members themselves to consider when they hear what I say. I say I think that the Government made a mistake in the division of the subsidies. They did their best to make amends by proposing to this House to complete the road as originally designed — by a somewhat different method, certainly, but according to the understanding which had been come to with the city of Halifax and the city of St. John. It was late in the Session when that resolution passed, and when it was sent to the Upper House it was there thrown out. It was then too late to bring a fresh proposition before this House for surveys. But a desire had been expressed by this House that a survey should be made preliminary to the construction of the road. The measure was thrown out by the other House, on expressly different grounds. Those grounds are put forward to-night by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon), as reasons why the road should not be constructed. Why did he not advance those reasons last year, instead of proposing something entirely different. But the hon. senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), says he does not object to the road. Of course he does not, as his constituents want it; but he charges my hon. friend, the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny), with subjecting himself to the exigencies of party in acting as he has done. I am a constituent of the hon. member, and I can tell him that in acting as he has done, he has been going against the interests and desires of his constituents; he is acting most injudiciously, as far as they are concerned. The hon. gentleman, like several previous speakers, refers to the law relating to the Governor General's warrant, and he says that the necessity in this case was not urgent. I maintain that the necessity was urgent. Fresh propositions were being made for another road to the Maritime Provinces, a road which had been previously proposed, and which is now again proposed as a most desirable one. Surely, in such circumstances, it was most desirable that the Government should ascertain which was the most advantageous road for carrying out the original intention of securing the shortest possible route from Montreal to the Atlantic. With that view, I take it that the Government most properly had that survey made, and I think their action will meet with the views of all our friends from Nova Scotia unless party considerations supervene. The cloven-foot was shown to a certain extent in a remark that fell from the hon. member for St. John. He said he most earnestly protested against the trade being drawn away from his own city. There is the point: the question is not whether the money should be spent, but whether St. John should have the monopoly of that trade—whether it should go to St. John and go out again, instead of passing by the shortest route from Montreal to the Atlantic. I do not object to St. John having its share; but I desire that the shortest route should be taken, so as to put Nova Scotia in communication with the interior by that shortest route, whatever it may be, and I think it was desirable that the fullest information should be obtained by the Government, in order that when the different companies should be pressing their respective routes upon the consideration of this House, the Government would be in a position to afford to this House—and it is their duty as an executive to do so—the fullest information to enable us to vote intelligently on the question of the best line to be chosen. Therefore I do not think that the resolution proposed by the hon. leader of the Opposition should be passed by this House.

Mr. MULOCK. The debate has taken a somewhat wide range, and with the permission of the House I will give my view upon the point under discussion. I understand the question to be whether the warrant under which this expenditure was made was a valid one or not, whether it was one within the provisions of the Act authorising the issue of the Governor General's warrant for the expenditure of public money in the absence of any parliamentary provision for such an expenditure. I think all hon. gentlemen will admit that it is the duty of Parliament to guard the public treasury and to see that no public moneys are expended except under the sanction of the law. The law requires certain precedent conditions to exist in order to justify a warrant; they are the foundation, the authority of a warrant; if they do not exist, such a warrant issues, then it is the ordinary case of a trustee misapplying funds at his disposal; and, whilst in the case of a private individual there may be a remedy in the ordinary courts of the land, the only remedy for a misappropriation of public moneys by the Government of the day is to be found in the high court of Parliament in the first place, and afterwards before the grand jury of the country. Now, I regret extremely that on this occasion the Minister of Justice has, with a degree of astuteness more creditable to his ability than to his interpretation of the law, held that the warrant in question was valid. The Act providing for the issue of warrants requires four conditions to exist in order to make a warrant valid. They are as follows: the expenditure must be unforeseen; it must be urgently required; it must be immediately required; and it must be required for the public good. All these conditions must exist under the Act. The First Minister so admits, and, therefore, I need not press that point any further.

General LAURIE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They all did exist.

Mr. MULOCK. Let us see if they did. The expenditure must have been unforeseen. Was it unforeseen? It was for the purpose of making a survey for the construction of a railway from Harvey to Salisbury over a route that had been the subject of discussion in Parliament last Session. Parliament last Session refused to vote money to aid in the construction of a road over the route on which this money for surveys has been expended during recess. Parliament rejected the scheme. The Government for four years previously had had this scheme in their minds. There was nothing unforeseen whatever in regard to it. The next point is, was this expenditure urgently required? In what sense was it urgently required? Who stated it was urgently required? The Cabinet, I presume. But they have not laid on the Table the report on which this warrant was issued. The law requires that a certain report be laid before the Governor in Council before the Government can obtain a special warrant. I presume such a report was made by them; and if so it ought to contain the statement required by the law that such an expenditure was urgently required. When did the Council declare it was urgent? Its urgency is a question of fact. Parliament decided last Session that it was not urgent, and refused to tolerate such an expenditure. Where then does the urgency come in? The Government last Session asked for the money and Parliament refused to give it. The First Minister knows well that it was reported that the Senate refused this grant owing to a hint from the Government.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Mr. MULOCK. I accept the hon. gentleman's denial. We know that the leader of the Government in the Senate, declared the Government were pledged to the measure and sincerely desired its passage, and yet the Senate refused to sanction the expenditure, so that when Parliament adjourned in May last, it had, by its decision, refused to authorise an expenditure on the proposed line. Therefore, Parliament declared that the construction of this work was not urgently required in the public good. Who gave the Government power to override the decision of Parliament, and say that a certain work is for the public good when Parliament has decided to the contrary? A third requirement of the law is, that such expenditure shall be immediately required, and that it will not do to wait until Parliament assembles. The urgency must be great and arise during recess. The First Minister knows full well that that is the spirit and letter of the law. He knows that the Governor General's warrant can only be resorted to when the matter is so urgent that it cannot wait until the people's representatives assemble in Parliament to consider it. The only possible excuse for the issue of this warrant is that the construction of this road is so urgent that the public interests would suffer if it were delayed until the duly accredited agents of the people assembled. What made this expenditure so particularly necessary during recess? The scheme is not a novel one. It was conceived a short time before the general elections, when a pledge was given by the late Minister of Railways, Sir Charles Tupper, that work would be begun shortly, and who declared that at the very time he spoke a firm contract had been entered into, by which the Canadian Pacific Railway was bound to put the work through. On the pledge so given, no doubt many supporters of the Administration were returned to this House. But it remained unfulfilled until last year. How did it become so urgent in the summer of 1889, when it was not so urgent in 1885? How is it that it became suddenly urgent on the eve of a general election? If it can be argued that the maintenance of an Administration in power is one of the urgencies actually contemplated in the Act, then, of course, the warrant was properly issued; but as a matter concerning the public good, irrespective of party considerations, it cannot be argued that this scheme could not, without detriment to the interests of the country, when it was held over for four years, from 1885 to 1889, be held over a year longer, and, therefore, there was no justification whatever for the Government alleging in their report to the Governor General that it could not wait until the people's representatives were assembled in Parliament in 1890, to give their opinion on the matter. The Act requires that the expenditure should not only be urgent and immediately required, but that it should be required in the public good. Now, there has been a decision given on that point a short time ago in this Parliament. In 1889 in the Railway Committee of the House of Commons, in this House, and in the Senate, all the merits of this question as a matter of public interest were discussed. Several issues were presented, on all of which Parliament pronounced. It was alleged that the effect of the construction of this railway would be to injure the leading city in New Brunswick, the city of St. John; and Parliament pronounced that, having regard to that city, it would not construct this road. It was also alleged that the construction of this road would destroy a non-paying property of the Dominion, the Intercolonial Railway, of which it would be a rival. It was proposed to construct this line from Salisbury to Moncton to connect with the Intercolonial Railway, then to give the Canadian Pacific Railway running powers from that point, with connection to Halifax; and that the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway were to enter into partnership for the purpose of running fast through trains from Halifax to Montreal, in rivalry with the Government road, the Intercolonial Railway, which has been a losing concern for years, and which has lost more money during the last seven months than during the preceding, and the loss on which during the current year will not be under $500,000. Parliament decided last Session that the construction of this road as a rival to the Intercolonial Railway would be an injury to the property of Canada, destroy to a large extent the earning power of the Intercolonial Railway, and, therefore, Parliament, for that reason, refused to sanction that expenditure; and further, because it would have added an enormous sum to our already large debt. In all these ways Parliament declared that it was not for the public good, because it was not necessary, because it would injure existing interests, because it would destroy a portion of the Dominion property, and because it would add to the public debt. Thus we have the declaration of the people's representatives in May, 1889, against this expenditure, and thereafter, I ask, what change in the condition of affairs took place to justify the Administration in saying that this expenditure was urgently required? We have a declaration of the highest authority, a decision of the people's representatives in Parliament, negating this expenditure only a few days before this expenditure was authorised. I am compelled to say that this expenditure, of all the expenditures I have seen made, is one which I most deplore, not for the amount of it, but as indicating a disregard on the part of the Administration for one of those trusts which, above all others, they are bound to be true to—the dealing with the public moneys of the country. There is nothing which strikes more at the independence of Parliament, there is nothing upon which the liberties of the people are more dependent than the control of the public money. That is the only safeguard as between the liberties of the people and an arbitrary Government. It is that which compels the Government to call the people's representatives together. What is the meaning of the provision that certain appropriations for expenditures shall expire on a certain day? What are the provisions the neglect of which have caused bloodshed in the past? The illegal levying of taxes caused the expenditure of so much life and so much blood. That trust is one which every administration which appreciates it will carefully guard. A fine sense of honor is necessary in dealing with such matters, and I deeply regret that on this occasion it fell to the lot of the hon. Minister of Justice to express as his opinion that this expenditure fell within the spirit or the letter of the law. Whatever Parliament may do, we cannot as an assembly be too careful in dealing with the public funds, and I trust that, though in this case I have no doubt Parliament will endorse what has taken place, the discussion will be productive of some good effect, and that it will be many long years before we will be called upon again to consider what I believe to be a gross violation of the law authorising the issue of Governor General's warrants.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Call in the members.

Mr. MITCHELL. Before the members are called in, I desire to make a few remarks on this subject.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Too late.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The members have been called in, and, therefore, the hon. gentleman is too late.

Mr. MITCHELL. I knew the First Minister did not want to hear me, but he shall have it some other time.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Laurier :

Amendment negatived.

Mr. TROW. I observe that the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor), the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister), and the hon. member for Queen's (P. E. I.) have not voted.

Mr. GILLMOR. I paired with the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Mills). I would have voted for the resolution.

Mr. LISTER. I paired with the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Ferguson). I would have voted for the resolution.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. MULOCK.

(In the Committee.)

Harbors and Rivers, Nova Scotia—
Cove Bay, Repairs..... $3,500

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Is that for ordinary repairs, or has there been any accident to the wharf there?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There was a storm last year and some damages took place to the pier.

Port Maitland or Green Cove..... $1,000

Mr. LOVITT. Four or five weeks ago I asked the Minister of Public Works if the tenders had been accepted, and he said the Government were about to accept them.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This must have been done by day's work.

Mr. LOVITT. It has not been done at all. The wharf has never been touched. The hon. gentleman asked for tenders returnable in November last. The work had not been touched up to Christmas, when I left home, and I know it could not have been touched since.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We had not the money sufficient to do it. The whole amount required was $5,200 and the estimate of $4,200 was voted last year, and we are asking an additional thousand this year.

Mr. LOVITT. I would like to know if the Minister is going to do this work. It laid all last summer after the money was voted.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The work will be done.

Mr. LOVITT. Let it be done as soon as possible.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It must be done before the first of July, or the vote will lapse. I am asking for one thousand dollars more in order that the whole work may be done at the same time.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). There is something that requires explanation. The hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Lovitt) says that the work has not been commenced, and as he comes from that place, I should feel disposed to place great reliance upon any statement made by that hon. member. I am disposed to think that the Minister of Public Works is, perhaps, looking at some other expenditure, because his statement is so utterly at variance with the statement of the member for Yarmouth, that it would lead one to suppose that there must be some misapprehension.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We had not money enough under the vote of last year, because I have a note here stating that of the three tenders received for this work, the lowest was that of Mr. McKinnon, $5,400, and I am placing $1,000 in the Estimates for next year in order to cover the amount required in excess of the appropriation. The work was not commenced, because the estimate of last year was too small.

Mr. LOVITT. I will remind the Minister of Public Works that he ought to accept a tender right away, because it is hard to get timber there after the season gets later.

Mr. KENNY. I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the application which I made to him some time ago—I do not trouble him very often—for a breakwater in the immediate harbor of West Chezzetcook, situated in the eastern portion of the County of Halifax. It is a harbor where there is a large amount of local shipping, employed in coasting and in fishing, and there is very great risk that if something is not done to prevent the accumulation of sand, the harbor may be choked and the entrance become useless. I hope the Minister has taken into consideration the application which I made to him, and that the amount will appear in the Supplementary Estimates.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That question has been studied in the Department. Though I cannot say to the hon. gentleman what will be done, he may be sure that the matter is not lost sight of.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I do not, for a moment, suppose that anything coming from me would add force to the application of my worthy colleague; but I rise for the purpose of reminding the Minister that there was a work undertaken by the Government of which I was a member, and it was discontinued at the change of Government. I think there was considerable dredging done, and as my colleague says, it is a place that deserves consideration, and I hope, with his strong recommendations, the matter will not be overlooked. I would like to ask the Minister if contracts have been taken for all these votes that were passed last year—Barrington, Cheticamp, East River and seven or eight other places. If contracts have been given for these works, are they under way and are they likely to be completed with the sums voted last Session?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am under the impression that the reason why the votes are not renewed this year, is that the works are progressing, or have been completed.

Harbors and Rivers, P. E. I. $8,200

Mr. PERRY. I wish to ask how far the work at Cascumpec Harbor has gone on? I find in the Auditor General's Report last year that there is a great discrepancy in the prices paid to the men. I see by the Auditor General's Report that a diver was paid 89½ days at $3 per day, and another diver, was paid 61½ days at $2.25 a day. I do not understand why one of these men has been paid 75 cents less than the other, except that one happens to be an Irishman, and a friend of the Government, and the other is not. I have known the men well for 25 or 30 years, and the man receiving the smaller sum is as competent as the other. Last year I observe $3,000 were expended in blasting rock in Cascumpec Harbor. The rock blasted was allowed to fall back into the channel, and the result was that one vessel grounded in the harbor and was very nearly lost. I fail to see any use in spending money on rock blasting if the rock is allowed to fall back into the channel, because it reduces the depth of water from what it was formerly, and where there were fifteen feet of water before the rock blasting there were last summer not over ten feet. It is quite proper to expend money on the harbor, but it should be expended under proper control. In regard to the diver to whom $2.25 a day was paid, I believe he was induced to come back from the State of Maine on the promise that he would receive big wages, but when he returned he received 75 cents a day less than the other man, no doubt because he was a poor man and was not able to fight against the Government. I should like the Minister to explain why this man was paid 75 cents a day less than the other man, and why such gross neglect occurred last summer at Cascumpec Harbor in allowing the stone blasted to drop back into the water and cause obstruction to the channel.

Mr. WELSH. Ever since I have had a seat on the floor on this House I have been advocating the claims of Prince Edward Island to have their wharves and piers properly attended to, but with very little effect. I notice in the Estimates this year the sum for this purpose is $6,000 less than last year. I see no amount entered for dredging the harbor of Pinette or Wood Island. Before Confederation the Local Government expended a considerable sum at this point, and the Dominion Government expended a sum consequently to complete the breakwater, but it has never been finished and the harbor has never been dredged. The breakwater is there without any road upon it, but the Government have taken care to appoint a wharfinger and to collect wharfage, although it is impossible to take a horse or waggon on the wharf and the people have to carry the freight. It is in a most disgraceful state. Last year I used some strong language to the Minister of Marine in regard to these piers. At the opening of this Session I asked for the report of the engineer to be laid on the Table. Last year the Minister of Public Works stated that a survey of the harbor of Pinette and Wood Island would be made before the ice left, but it was not done, as, in fact, every promise made in regard to those piers has failed to be carried out. In the summer there was a survey made of those harbors, and I obtained an Order of the House for a copy of the report of the engineer, but up to the present I have seen nothing of it. A junior official in the Department of Public Works could have completed the return in half an hour, but there seems to be a determination on the part of the Minister to work against the interests of the people and to shirk his duty. I was in that Department once or twice, but I did not know whether I was going into a lunatic asylum or a museum; there were some old fossils and some other things there, and out of respect to the old gentlemen I will not say more about them. I do not know whether any amount will be placed in the Supplementary Estimates to complete those works. On referring to the Auditor General's Report I find these items under the heading "Vernon River": "Sounding lines (2), $2.56; balance, $8.60; revolver (2), $40; cartridges, $3.10; repairing cupboard, $5." This is the way our piers are repaired. When I ask in regard to repairing piers, two revolvers are presented at my head. What is the meaning of this? Will the hon. Minister please explain, for the people of the Island would like to know how revolvers are connected with piers. I must say that I have no confidence in the Minister of Public Works. When I first came to this House, I had an interview with him, and he received me very courteously and kindly, and entered into all the details connected with the wharves and piers, and said he saw the necessity of these works being attended to. I pointed out to him that by expending $200 or $300 on China Point Wharf, a large sum might be saved. He promised that this sum should be spent, but it was not expended. People wrote to the Examiner newspaper—they are mostly Conservatives there—complaining of the neglect of the Department. I went to the office and told them not to publish any more complaints, as the Minister had passed his word that the work would be done. On the following year the Minister admitted that the work had not been carried out, and he asked me to go over to his office. I had an interview for an hour with the hon. gentleman and with Mr. Perley, and we discussed the different works required. I told him I would not ask him to spend money until surveys had been made. He promised the matter would be attended to and the piers repaired. Afterwards I wrote to him across the House, asking him if I understood these matters would be attended to. He wrote me back saying that they would be done that year. I was perfectly satisfied, and I told the people of the Island so. The people afterwards came to me, and said they were not able to ship anything. At about the first July I again called the attention of the Minister to the fact that the time was passing and the shipping season was commencing. He never took one step to fulfil his promise. What is the consequence? Instead of $200 which would have kept China Point in proper order, they have to ask for a vote of $1,200 because of his neglect. Now, what am I to do? I am really astonished. I could not have believed it possible, that any man with the pretensions of a gentleman should have acted—well, that he should have acted in such a negligent manner. It is a fact, and there is no nonsense about it. Here is Prince Edward Island which has got more harbors than all New Brunswick and Nova Scotia—

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Oh, oh.

Mr. WELSH. Well, do not quarrel about it. Do not kick up a row. Here is $6,000 for the removal of this rock at Cascumpec and for the repairs of nearly thirty piers and breakwaters; $6,000, Mr. Chairman! Divide thirty into six thousand, and you will get about what each pier will require. There is not one word about the important work on the Harbor of Pinette, or the important work on Wood Island breakwater. I do hope that the Government will give me some assurance that these things will be attended to. By the way, I was nearly forgetting to ask the Minister of Public Works when I may expect these papers that were moved for last January.

An hon. MEMBER. To-morrow.

Mr. WELSH. Well, I suppose I will have to abide by that. The people of the Island are anxious about this matter and they know when they are treated fairly and when they are treated badly. I have very little hope, I must say, from the Minister of Public Works, judging by his past conduct, whatever it may be in the future.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In reference to Cascumpec, the hon. gentleman says that he believes that one of those divers received seventy-five cents a day less than the other because he belonged to a certain nationality. I know nothing about that. I do not know whether the man is English, Irish, Scotch or French, but I shall enquire why one receives seventy-five cents a day less than the other. The hon. gentleman says that the $2,000 voted last year was not expended with all the care possible. That may be, but there was a foreman in charge of the works, who my officers tell me is a good man; but if the hon. gentleman states that the work we have been executing there does not produce the effect we have expected, I shall not expend a dollar of this money until I see by examination through the proper officers what may be the result of the work. If the work is useless the money will not be expended. I thank the hon. gentleman for calling my attention to it, for at this distance from Prince Edward Island I cannot look after it myself, but I will see that the matter will be investigated. The papers which the hon. gentleman has asked for will be brought down on Monday, if not to-morrow. Unfortunately, two of my officers are on the sick list, and they cannot attend to those returns just now, but I think we will be able to have them before the House on Monday.

Mr. WELSH. What about the revolvers?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. My colleague, the Minister of Finance, told me that this matter had been mentioned in the Public Accounts Committee, and the explanation is this: The paymaster, who had to travel to pay on the different works, had to pass through certain portions of the country that were very solitary, and as that officer was known to have a good deal of money about him, it was thought proper that he should have a revolver to protect himself.

Mr. WELSH. I don't think he could have a good deal of Government money about him, judging by the way the piers are neglected there. If he had a great deal of money it must have been his own. I think it is an insult to Prince Edward Island for the Minister to say that any man should have a revolver to protect himself. The man ought to have been taken up and tried for his life, for he was most likely trying to rob somebody else. Why, a child ten years old might travel all over Prince Edward Island and protect himself without a revolver. I think everyone will agree with me that it is a disgraceful thing to charge these two items to the expenditure on the Vernon River works.

An hon. MEMBER. What about the cupboards?

Mr. WELSH. It is the same thing. Charge up everything to the Vernon River. I will be bound to say that if this man took $500 with him he could not buy a revolver in all the district of Belfast. The people don't require such things down there. I want to know how the Minister can explain that this item for revolvers is charged to the Vernon River works? Can he give me any explanation of that? No; he cannot, and I guarantee he will not answer that question. If he does not do so I want some other member of the Government to give me his word about this, and I will take it. I have had the word of the Minister of Public Works; I have had his promise, I have had his note at hand, but it is not worth the paper it is written on.

Mr. PERRY. The hon. Minister of Public Works says that he will enquire why one man received seventy-five cents a day less than the other. I can tell the hon. Minister that he is well aware of that, because there was some correspondence with his Department on the subject. The man who is complaining is a countryman of the hon. Minister, and is that the reason that he has been robbed? I have papers in my possession to show that this correspondence has taken place, and the Minister ought most decidedly to know the nature of it. There is something rotten in the State of Denmark, in connection with this matter. It is all very fine for me to be told that the Minister will enquire into it to-morrow; it should have been enquired into long ago. The gentleman to whom I am alluding now, the man for whom I am fighting this battle, has complained long ago, and he has had a letter from that Department giving some nonsensical reason why he should get seventy-five cents a day less than the other man. If that kind of partiality is to be carried out in Prince Edward Island I am afraid we shall have to make use, not of revolvers, which my hon. friend from Queen's county has spoken of, but of constitutional means to bring the Government down on their marrow bones, and make them give us justice. As the Minister has promised that to-morrow or some other day he will do justice in that matter, I will leave it in his hands. But I will come to the next item, that of $6,000 for repairs to piers and breakwaters in Prince Edward Island. Why, Sir, it is a mere farce to propose such a sum, and when I take up the report of the Department of Public Works, what do I find? I am only going to refer to the piers and breakwaters of Prince county. We have seven or eight piers and breakwaters in that county, but this report only makes reference to two. Where am I to find out what has been done during the last year or the year before on the others? I have gone to the expense of travelling over the whole county to find out, as I cannot get any information in the hon. Minister's report. There is no report here about the West Point breakwater or pier, and although the Local Government have spent $4,000 or $5,000 upon it, it has all gone away. There is no report on the wharf at Higgins Shore, either, or on the wharf at Miminingash. The hon. gentleman knows that I complained last year about this wharf, and I told him that it would require $500 or $600 to repair it; but no money was spent on it, and the consequence is that the whole of the cover and half of the ballast has gone. Now he tells us that the repairs of the breakwater are under consideration. I am afraid that nothing has been done to that wharf yet, and whether he will do anything to it this year I do not know. Then there is the wharf at Hurd's Point, about which there is nothing in the report. What inference can we draw from all this? Just this inference: that the Government do not care what becomes of these wharves and breakwaters—that they are quite willing to let them go to destruction. Let me compare the amounts expended by the Local Government of Prince Edward Island on wharves in 1877, 1878 and 1880, and if I am wrong the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), will correct me, because in two of those years he was in the Local Government. I find that they spent in 1877 $19,998, in 1878 $10,000, and in 1879 $14,000, or $43,998 in the three years, whereas this Government vote $6,000 a year, or $18,000 in three years. Sir, while such penuriousness as this is shown by this Government, it is impossible for the people of Prince Edward Island to be in good humor with them. Now, I wish to allude to the petition of the people of Summerside for a breakwater. It was supposed that it was no use for them to send petitions to the members representing the county, and what did they do? They got the hon. member for Colchester, N. S. (Sir Adams Archibald) to represent that constituency in the matter; they had to appeal to one knight to appear in state before another knight in order to present that petition, as none of the members from Prince Edward Island were dignified enough to do it. What was the consequence? We were told the other day that it was not the intention of the Government to build a breakwater at Summerside. But I am here to speak of the great necessity that exists for a breakwater at that place, for it is undeniable that if a breakwater were built there, navigation would be kept open for six weeks later in the fall, and would open two or three weeks earlier in the spring. The Government are willing enough to vote $3,000,000 for a ship railway in order to carry two or three counties, but when an expenditure is wanted for Prince Edward Island, there is nothing for us. We are told that we do not pay anything into the revenues. Sir, we pay one-fortieth of the revenues, and we want a reasonable share of the expenditures. The hon. Minister of Public Works is very liberal on the eve of a local election. He takes a cue from his leader, who gave us to understand in 1887 that if we voted strong for the Government we should have that subway. Sir Charles Tupper telegraphed on two occasions, "I am strongly in favor of the subway;" and the next telegram was, "you must send a solid phalanx, or you will not get the subway." This year, just before the local elections, the hon. Minister of Public Works was stated to have given an order for a breakwater at St. Peter's. That statement was sent to a paper which is paid by the Government $2,000 or $3,000 a year—I do not know what for, unless for printing some imaginary things.

An hon. MEMBER. What paper is it?

Mr. PERRY. The Examiner—I am almost ashamed to say so; and if that paper misrepresents the Government, they have no right to subsidize it. Two or three days before the election, on 27th January last, it said:

"The Minister of Public Works has given instructions to his engineer to hold a survey at St. Peter's Bay with a view to the construction of a public wharf, as asked for by a largely signed petition forwarded to the Department by R. N. Cox, Esq., of Morell. Electors of that district in polling their votes on the 30th for Sullivan and Underhay, will be strengthening the hands of the petitioners for the new wharf. The Dominion Government being Liberal-Conservative, the electors will support candidates for the Local who have influence at Ottawa. The Opposition men have none. Our advice to electors there is, vote the square ticket for Sullivan and Underhay. Let no Conservative split his vote with the enemy."

If that is not correct, if the Examiner is misrepresenting the hon. gentleman and his Government, they should withdraw the subsidies they give to that paper. I contend that it is a slur on the Government if it is not true, and I feel sorry to see the Government placed in that position. I contend that $6,000 is no amount at all to repair our breakwaters and wharves. In fact, I find that one-third of the money voted for repairs to breakwaters finds its way into the pockets of private individuals, friends of the Government. When the Government spend $1,000, $300 of it goes into the pockets of these gentlemen. Why not do this work properly? Why not give these contracts by public tender instead of allowing private individuals to do, early or late as it suits them, this work? I asked for a return from the hon. gentleman's Department five or six weeks ago, and for another from the Postmaster General almost months ago, and have not got either yet, nor may I get them next Session. And if I do, what benefit will that be to me? Most of the returns I asked for last year have not come down yet. What is the good of our asking year after year for information and only getting it the Session after we ask for it? The hon. Ministers are not so remiss in drawing their pay, which they take good care to get when it suits them. If the Government expect the people of Prince Edward Island to be—I will not say true lovers of the present Government—but true and loyal subjects,—if they expect Prince Edward Island to remain in this Confederation much longer, they had better do justice to our people. Otherwise the people will battle, not with rifles or pitchforks, or revolvers, but in a constitutional way; and I hope that when our delegates go back to London to the foot of the Throne, they will not meet with the opposition they encountered four or five years ago from Sir Charles Tupper. When the people of Prince Edward Island take up their cause, the First Minister will find that it will be useless telling us that we cannot break up the bonds of Confederation, if we do not get justice from Canada, for we will do it, but in a constitutional way. We are one of the parties to this contract of Confederation, Her Majesty herself is a party to this contract, and she will see that justice is done us. I am in earnest, and the people of Prince Edward Island are in earnest, and all I am sorry for is that they have not a stronger advocate for their rights than myself, for if they had they might be more successful in obtaining their rights. But even if we get only a small portion of what we require; if my hon. friend, will repair that breakwater at Miminigash, and begin to build the West Point wharf, and if he will see that the stones blasted at Cascumpec are taken away from the bottom, he will do something towards allaying the spirit of discontent which now prevails among our people.

Mr. WELSH. I would like the hon. Minister of Public Works to give me his reason why his promises are not carried out.

Mr. MCINTYRE. I quite agree with all that has been said by the hon. gentleman who immediately preceded me. Any reasonable person, looking at what has transpired in the past few years, cannot fail to agree with what fell from the lips of the hon. member for Prince County (Mr. Perry). It is notorious that our public works under the present Administration have been going to ruin. As is well known, we are an agricultural and a fishing community, and have none of the wealth derived from the mines and pine forests such as are possessed by other Provinces of this Dominion. Under these circumstances, it is the duty of the Government to look after our public works. In the fall of the year, as in most other places, our roads are in extremely bad condition, and it is of the highest importance that our harbors should be looked after and new harbors constructed where they are most required. As far as the fishing community are concerned, they are in the same condition. For thirty or forty miles along certain shores of the Island there is not a single harbor, and in the morning the fishermen have to ballast their boats and in the evening haul them back again. Under such circumstances, it would be only common justice that the Government should take into consideration the wants of our people. For the last two years I have been bringing to the attention of the Minister of Public Works, two works which the people specially require in King's County. I brought to his attention the case of the Bay Fortune breakwater, and hon. gentlemen will remember that on that occasion I stated that the people of that locality had already constructed several feet of that breakwater at their own expense. They spent an amount in the vicinity of $1,000, and all their money then being expended, they had a right to expect that the Dominion Exchequer should come to their assistance. They forwarded several petitions to the Minister of Public Works and I brought the matter to his attention on several occasions, and on these occasions I obtained a kind of quasi promise that something would be done as quickly as possible. The other work was one at a place called Naufrage, on the north shore of King's County, and the object of the people there in trying to form that harbor, was to do so by connecting Naufrage Pond with the sea. There is a sandbank of some 30 or 40 yards which requires to be cut through in order to finish the connection, and a survey was made some years ago to find out what it would cost to do this, but the estimate arrived at by the survey was found to be a little too high. A year or so ago I asked the hon. Minister to have another survey made, and the result was that the first estimate was cut down to about a quarter of the amount then stated. The people have urged the necessity for this work repeatedly upon the Government, and I brought it to the attention of the hon. Minister on several occasions, and yet nothing has been done. It appears to me that, considering the condition in which we are placed, deriving no advantage whatever from the enormous yearly expenditure in the deepening and widening of canals, especially in Ontario, and in the granting of millions of dollars of railway subsidies, the Minister of Public Works and the Government generally should give some little attention to the public works required by the farmers and fishermen of Prince Edward Island. I wish to direct the attention of the Minister to the work at Souris, which is being repaired year after year. I do not say that too much money is expended there, because that was one of the most important works in the Island at the time it was built under the Mackenzie Administration, and I may say that most of the works in Prince Edward Island were built under that Administration. That work cost about $100,000 to the country at that time, and the present Government must, for very shame, make a show of keeping up the work. Last year I see nearly $5,000 was expended there. It appears to me that a large portion of that money, like a large portion of other money which is expended in Prince Edward Island is uselessly expended, that it is expended in the interests of the bumper and the heeler more than in the interests of the people. A man named John Cantwell has been foreman of that work for some time. He employs his two sons, mere boys, to do work there, and he gets $2.50 a day for that. I see that last year he received $282.50 on that account, and he supervises the work which his two boys are doing, and I do not suppose he is too exacting in regard to them. There is a very curious item in connection with that, "photographs, $52." It is difficult to know what this means, whether these were photographs of the breakwater or of Mr. Cantwell and his two sons. It would be interesting if the Minister would let in a little light on that point. There is no doubt that this money is uselessly squandered year after year upon political favorites, and everyone there is aware of the fact. Even the Conservative party are getting ashamed of it, but year after year this man is appointed. Personally, I have no objection to him, as he is as good to me as any other Tory, but I do object to the way in which these men are employed to work on that breakwater. A great many of them are boys, including his own. When their farm work is over, they commence this work, and continue it on short days. Every two or three days they have to leave off work, because none can be done, as the spray is driven in by a south-east storm. Reference has been made to an article published in the Examiner newspaper, the Conservative organ of this Government and the Local Government of Prince Edward Island. That paper, a few days before the last election, came out with an article in reference to the district of St. Peter's, where I live, trying to induce the voters to elect the Conservative candidates by promises that, if they did so, new works would be commenced there. It is notorious that no new work has been commenced in that Island by this Government. They may have patched up some old works, but I am not aware of any new work that they have initiated in King's County. This newspaper to which I have referred, the Examiner, has good reason for being a supporter of this Government. I find that in 1886-87, $1,796.96 was paid to the Examiner for printing and lithographing; in 1887-88 the amount was $1,669.85, for subscriptions, printing, advertising and lithographing. In 1888-89, $1,318 were spent for printing and publishing, so that that newspaper has a very good reason for advocating what the Government chooses to put into its mouth. It has lived by hoodling for many years, and I believe that to-day it receives more from the Dominion Government than it does from its weekly subscriptions from one end of the year to the other. I think that is a poor exponent of public opinion, and the sooner it stops prating about its opponents the better, but we cannot expect much better from a subsidised organ. It would be in the interest of the public of King's County generally if the Minister of Public Works would try to assist the people of that county. Their harvest has been very bad last year, the fishing has gone back on them for the past three years, and the general condition of the people is very bad. The Examiner will say that the condition of the people is very flourishing. No doubt the condition of the Examiner is, but it is quite different with the people.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I regret that I cannot say that the management of the Public Works Department in Prince Edward Island is very creditable. I am not going to make any request to the Government or to present petitions to the Department. I have asked for some public works in my county and have had no favorable response. In regard to the matter now before the House, I may say something with respect to this revolver business. It seems a small amount, but when the amount of $97 is charged for repairs to Vernon River Bridge, and $43.10 of that goes for the purchase of two revolvers, it is no use hiding the fact that this is simply a question of hoodle. There is no part of the Dominion in which less crime is committed, and people can go about with more safety, than they can in Prince Edward Island, and the idea of a man buying two revolvers for $43 to use there, is insulting to the intelligence of the House. Then we have $5 for repairing a cupboard. There is no cupboard at the wharf at all. It cannot be defended. The hon. gentleman at the head of the Department must make some enquiry as to the manner in which the money voted by this House is expended. I regard the expenditure as disgraceful. I am sure there is not a member in this House but is absolutely ashamed to see the Public Accounts come out showing that money is spent in that way. The money was simply stolen, there is no use of trying to avoid the word. The Souris breakwater is the most important work on the Island. That is the harbor where all the fishing fleet, numbering sometimes over 200, come in to shelter. We find $52 for photographs. That is simply robbery, simply stealing; no other word can be used to explain it properly. I regret to say that I was not satisfied with the statement the hon. gentleman made respecting the rather grave charges which the hon. member for Prince County (Mr. Perry) brought with respect to Cascumpec Harbor. Hon. members may not be aware that Cascumpec Harbor is of more than provincial importance, for the reason that it is the harbor on the north side of the Island where the large fishing fleet of two or three hundred vessels, when they are caught in a north-easterly gale, have to run for shelter. That harbor, at low water, has a depth on the bar of ten feet, and at high water, of fifteen feet. These vessels must go into that harbor to get shelter. Before the hon. gentleman commenced the expenditure of public money in blasting, it was safe enough for fishing vessels. He spent six or seven thousand dollars in blasting, and owing to the maladministration of his subordinates, the rock which is blasted is left in the channel of the river. The consequence was that last year two vessels went ashore in trying to get out of the harbor, and it is owing to God's mercy alone that the fleet were not driven in last year in a storm—there is a storm there every year. If the fleet had been driven in there, one or two hundred vessels driven upon the north bend of the Island, dear only knows what would have been the result. The hon. gentleman can see by the report of the Minister himself that I am not exaggerating the importance of that harbor. The report says:

"Casumpec Harbor, Prince County, is situated on the north coast of the Island, about 17 miles to the southward of North Cape, and about 20 miles to the north-westward of the entrance into Richmond Bay. The town of Alberton, the second one in importance in the county, is located at the head of the harbor, and is a station on the Prince Edward Island Railway which has a branch to the railway wharf, where vessels can load and discharge. A large amount of produce is shipped yearly from the wharves at Alberton, and the harbor being commodious and perfectly safe, with a depth of water sufficient to accommodate sea-going vessels, it is sought as a harbor of refuge during easterly gales, and as many as 100 fishing vessels, principally American, have been counted at one time."

I look upon my hon. friend's statement as one of the most serious made in this House for some time, and I urge upon the Minister not to allow the summer to go by and the fall storms to come on, when very serious accidents will follow, but to take immediate steps to see that the rocks which have been blasted are removed from the channel of that harbor, and that the harbor itself is made safe and deepened. I wish also to refer to the vote for the repairs of piers and breakwaters. In the county that I have the honor to represent conjointly with my hon. friend, there is a very important breakwater at Wood Island. We brought the matter before the attention of the hon. gentleman last year, and told him the condition that breakwater was in. They have appointed a wharfinger and have charged wharfage for landing at it. I went to see it last year, and you cannot drive a horse and cart over it. Every box landed on the breakwater has to be carried on the back of a man over stones and logs for two or three hundred yards, at the risk of the man's neck. It is simply disgraceful. A man ought to be paid for taking his vessel there, instead of being charged for it. The hon. gentleman must see that this kind of thing cannot go on. He has been expending $2,000 a year there every year. He has been placing it in the hands of Tory wire-pullers down there to distribute among their friends, while the work has been going to ruin and decay. The fact of the matter is it will take now $10,000, at least, to put that wharf and breakwater in anything like decent repair. If the hon. gentleman does not take the matter in hand properly, instead of laying out $1,000 piecemeal, and giving Tory wire-pullers carte blanche to expend it among their friends, the consequences may be serious. We want the breakwater put into decent repair once for all, and that can only be done by giving it out properly at contract, and when that harbor is dredged properly there will be some accommodation for vessels for the 30 or more miles around that coast. There is no other harbor in which these people can ship their produce at all, on the south coast. This was commenced some years ago by the Local Government, and after we came into Confederation it was carried on by the Dominion Government, but they never carried it on with efficiency, it was all done by dribbles. You get a dozen or two men down there hauling some loose stone, and it is all washed away. It would be a great deal better to keep these small amounts until a vote of $5,000 or $10,000 is passed, and a contract entered into to place the breakwater in proper repair and put a dredge there, so that the people may derive some benefit from the money expended. I do not, however, expect very much from the present Government. The Minister of Public Works has not treated the county from which I come with ordinary fair play. Last year I only asked for a small wharf at Mount Stewart, costing $1,200 or $2,000. The hon. gentleman gave me an evasive answer. No amount appears in the present Estimates for that work. The total amount entered for Prince Edward Island is $8,200. It has not been put in proper state of repair yet. With respect to the harbor of Cascumpec, about which the hon. member from Prince (Mr. Perry) spoke, I may say that it is called a harbor of refuge; it is the only harbor of refuge the fishing vessels have upon the north side, and if, by the maladministration of his subordinates in that

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

Department, that commodious harbor has been destroyed, I say it is a matter calling for very serious comment. I regretted to hear the Minister make this remark: "I will make enquiries as to these facts which have been disclosed by the member for Prince County; I thank him for making them, and if I find that they are correct, I will not spend any more money."

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is not what I said.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman did not intend it, surely.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I said I would not expend a single cent of that money until an investigation was made.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) When a member of Parliament living in the vicinity, having a personal knowledge of the facts, makes the statement my hon. friend did, and looking at the importance of the harbor as a harbor of refuge for the fishing fleet, it is indispensably necessary to take immediate action in the premises, to ascertain if the facts are correct, and ask this House to vote a sum which will enable him to undo the wrong which the mismanagement of his subordinates has caused, and to complete the work so that the harbor may be a safe and commodious harbor of refuge, and not a trap which may be the grave of hundreds of fishermen. It is appalling to think of it. Hon. gentlemen smile at my statement, but let me tell them that it is within my recollection when over fifty-four American vessels went ashore on the north coast of that Island because they could not get into this harbor, and the shore was strewn with the dead bodies of the seamen. I can tell the hon. gentleman that if this statement is true, and that harbor has been destroyed, he ought to call to a very severe account at once and dismiss those men who have had charge of that work, and take immediate measures to prosecute it in an efficient and speedy manner, so that the harbor may be restored to its former usefulness. This is not an ordinary matter about repairing an ordinary wharf. We do not expect, down in Prince Edward Island, to get justice, but we do not want to see our harbors destroyed and ruined. The Government may expend money in buying revolvers, but when it comes to renewing one of the best harbors in the Dominion, the only harbor of refuge the fishermen have, the Government have no money.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). How about post offices?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There is not so much expended on post offices as there is on planting Major's Hill Park with flowers for the people of Ottawa. The whole state of things is disgraceful; the wharves are going to ruin, the people are discontented, and all we can do is to voice their discontent. The Minister of Public Works seems to ignore Prince Edward Island, and yet the Island people have proved good friends to him in days gone by, when they sent members to support the Conservative Government; and this is the return they receive. The people watch public affairs, and they know well whether their interests are attended to or not, and whether they receive money for public works; but I hope there is a better time coming, when some one else will occupy the Minister's position and when justice will be done.

Mr. MITCHELL. I observe there is no item for the county I represent. For years I have been endeavoring to get a small vote, which the hon. gentleman will recollect he promised me on one occasion, for a steamboat wharf at Neguac, and also for the deepening of the harbor and river of Miramichi. Will the hon. gentleman bear this in mind, and amend the Estimates?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot amend the Estimates, which are the regular Estimates covering work already entered upon. Any new votes will not be found there, but in the Supplementary Estimates.

Mr. MITCHELL. One of these works, dredging of the Miramichi, is not a new work; it is a work that has been commenced and should be completed.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There was no vote last year for Miramichi River, or for Neguac, and, therefore, they cannot appear in the regular Estimates, but only in the Supplementary Estimates.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then, you will do it?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot say that; I must consult my colleagues in regard to it.

Mr. MITCHELL. You had better tell your colleagues they will have to do it.

Committee rose and reported resolutions.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 113) to authorise the Toronto Savings Bank Charitable Trust to invest certain Funds (from the Senate).—(Mr. Small.)

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 12.40 a.m. (Friday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 7th March, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

ELECTORAL FRANCHISE ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. BRIEN) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 114) to amend the Electoral Franchise Act.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain the Bill.

Mr. TROW. I have only received the Bill about fifteen minutes ago, but, so far as I can see, the amendments proposed are very trifling and are absolutely necessary. The first proposes that, instead of 300 electors constituting a polling sub-division, the number shall be reduced to 250; the next provides that, if there is no newspaper in the county, notices may be published in the adjoining county; and the third is that, in the event of the unavoidable absence of the returning officer, through sickness or otherwise, the municipal clerk shall have the right to adjourn the court. These are all the amendments proposed in the Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE LOWER PROVINCE MAILS.

Mr. ELLIS. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to ask the hon. Postmaster General if he could not do something to facilitate the delivery of the mails from the Lower Provinces, which come by the Short Line Railway. They are now detained seven hours at Montreal, so that the mails which should be here at two o'clock in the afternoon are not here until eight or nine in the evening. It would not be much trouble to have them brought here as soon as passengers.

Mr. HAGGART. It would necessitate the expenditure of a largesum of money to pay for another mail train between Montreal and Ottawa. I think it would cost between $6,000 and $7,000.

Mr. ELLIS. The hon. Minister might at least enable members during the Session to get their mails as soon as passengers arrive. I do not think it would cost anything like that.

Mr. HAGGART. We had negotiations with the company with that view, and if my memory serves me, we found that it would cost fully that.

Mr. WATSON. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to call the attention of the House to an item in the Toronto Empire accusing one R. W., M.P., of allowing his frank to be used for the purpose of having matter passed through the post office. As far as I am personally concerned, I never authorised or allowed anyone to use my frank. A year ago the postmaster called my attention to the fact that matter which he believed should not pass through the post office here, was passing through with my frank on the envelopes. I informed him that I had not authorised anybody to use my frank, or franked matter for anybody, and if he saw any matter going through the post office, which he considered was being passed through by somebody else with my frank, he was to stop it and let me know. I wish to contradict this item in the Empire. I believe the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) has been accused of the same thing. I deny entirely the truth of the statement.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 6) respecting Bills of Exchange, Cheques and Promissory Notes.—(Sir John Thompson.)

QUEBEC HARBOR COMMISSIONERS.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved third reading of Bill (No. 111) to amend the Acts respecting the Quebec Harbor Commissioners.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I was not here when this Bill was read the second time. It gives the Quebec Harbor Commissioners power, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Acts respecting them, to carry on the business of warehousemen and issue warehouse receipts, but I think there will be something better and more in the interest in the trade of Quebec. It is to my knowledge that some gentlemen occupying high positions in the trade of Quebec have tried to lease some of the properties in question from the Harbor Commissioners, but could not get any satisfactory answers. The best course for the Commissioners would be as much as possible—though there may be cases in which they cannot do it—to lease those wharves to merchants or other parties instead of being wharfingers themselves; and in order that there should be no special protection given to anybody, the leases should be put up at public auction. I beg, therefore, to move:

That the Bill be not read the third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee of the whole House, with instructions to amend it by making it obligatory for the Harbor Commissioners to lease at public auction and in convenient lots, the wharves and warehouses belonging to the said Harbor Commissioners.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. If the hon. gentleman has no objection, we will postpone the third reading till Monday, to hear what may be said on the other side. I beg to move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

DUTY ON CORN.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. FISHER. Before that motion is put, I would like to say a few words on a question of considerable importance. It is commonly understood that there are going to be some changes in the tariff, and I think it but fair and right, that this House should have an opportunity of assisting the Government by passing such resolutions and tendering such advice with regard to these changes as it may deem necessary. We can quite understand that the Government may take the ground that they have on former occasions taken this Session, of desiring to leave all such matters until such time as the changes in the tariff may be declared; but I think it is well within the competence and authority of this House that we should take upon ourselves to express our views, and thereby assist the Government in coming to correct conclusions as to what changes in the tariff are advisable. A little while ago I heard an hon. gentleman, who is somewhat prominent on the floor of this House, state that the agriculturists and farmers of this country have not come to the Government in deputations, or had not formulated their demands, in regard to what they believe to be their interests in the changes of the tariff. This is true to a certain extent. It is quite true that the farmers have not sent deputations to the Government, as the manufacturers have, to explain personally their needs and demands. But other means have been taken by the farmers; and I need only refer to the number of petitions which I had myself the honor of presenting to this House in favor of certain changes in the tariff—petitions which were signed, under direction, by the officers of the various agricultural societies in the Province of Quebec. I need only, also, refer to the expression of opinion formulated by what I might characterise as that great Parliament of the farmers in Ontario, which met in Toronto a few weeks ago—a meeting of the Central Farmers' Institute. At that meeting the farmers expressed themselves with no uncertain sound as to what they believed to be the condition of the agricultural interest at present, and the necessary steps which it is within the competence and the power of the Government to take to aid them in removing the disabilities that interest is laboring under. I have no doubt whatever that the farmers are, to-day, fully appreciative of their situation. For a long time back, I may say, without casting any reflection upon the farmers whatever, they have not been fully appreciative of the difficulties under which they have been laboring, or of the cause of those difficulties; but, to-day, I find that the farmers of the country, meeting, as they do, constantly in convention, in institute meetings, and in dairy conventions, are awakening to the full difficulties which they are suffering under, and are investigating and formulating the disabilities under which they labor, and the way in which those disabilities can best be removed. This being the case, I desire to lay a few remarks before the House, in reference to the removal of the duty on corn, and before I sit down I shall move an amendment to the motion which is before the House. The circumstances of our industries have changed a good deal in late years. Not to allude to other troubles and difficulties, I would point to the fact that, in consequence of the immense strides in advance in improved communication that have been made all over the world, the product of distant lands is now brought into competition with that of lands which are closer to the market in which they compete. This country, and the United States to the south of us, have spent enormous sums of money in developing the two countries, in building railroads for the express purpose of developing new countries and bringing the products of those new lands, those virgin soils of the great west, into direct competition with the fertile lands of the eastern part of this continent. I will not dwell upon that point at present, which, perhaps, is more galling and more unjust to the farmers than any other, namely, that we, in eastern Canada, and the people in the eastern States are bearing the burden of taxation caused by this expenditure, which has directly helped to incapacitate them for bearing that taxation. I grant that the farmers of the eastern Provinces of this country are, like all the rest, committed to that policy; I grant that we have acknowledged the justice and wisdom of the expenditure which has been made by this Government and by the country in the development of the North-West; but, unfortunately, the development of a new land where these things may be produced more cheaply than we can produce them, leaves the fact existing that we are thereby injured, and our circumstances and our means of competing in the markets of the world are weakened and hurt. That fact remains, whatever may be the reason, and, although we ourselves are, to a large extent, I confess, sharers in the responsibility for the expenditure, the only way in which we, in the eastern part of this continent, may be able to meet this competition, the only way in which the farmers of our eastern Provinces can have the same chance as they had before these cheap products of the west came into competition with them, is to lessen the cost of production for ourselves. The end we must aim at, the goal we must strive to reach, is that we should produce as cheaply as the virgin soil in the western part of this Dominion. That the farmers have come to that conclusion is, I think, evident to any one who has followed the discussion and the propositions which have been laid down in the meetings of the farmers during the last year or two. Wherever they meet and discuss their interests, we find that the men who are best able to state what is required lay down this view, and I concur in this line of conduct. There is no question that the only hope of the farmers in the eastern part of the Dominion, in order to be able to compete with the cheap lands and the cheap products of the North-West, is to lessen the cost of production. There is no doubt, that to-day the system of farming in the eastern Provinces has changed. In days gone by, our farmers have produced grain very largely, and in doing that they have to a large extent exhausted the fertility of the soil. Expedients have been resorted to, to remedy that. They have endeavored to remedy it by giving a rest to the land by summer fallowing, by tilling, so as to take another and a deeper layer of soil, by deeper ploughing, and also by trying to have a more systematic rotation of crops, by which no one ingredient in the soil shall be exhausted to so large an extent, and also by trying to use such artificial fertilisers, such mineral manures, as are within their easy reach. But with all this, they have not succeeded in maintaining the fertility of their soil or of maintaining competition in the markets of the world. They have, therefore, had to turn to what is probably the only, as it certainly is the best, solution of the difficulty, and that is, making and using a large quantity of barnyard soil. It is not necessary for me to show in that connection the absolute necessity of a large stock. Instead of being able to raise grain as they were formerly, they are going to be, and are to-day, obliged, instead of producing wheat, to produce the finished product of their soil instead of merely the crude material. I may say that it is a good sign that this is the case. I am rather glad that our farmers have come to this, because I am convinced and know well that the farmer who takes the crude material of his soil and works it up to the highest point within his legitimate reach, and sells it as the finished article, is evidently getting larger prices for it, and not only that, but he himself is a better man and a better citizen. In this connection, there is abundant scope for the very best intellect, education and business capacity in farming as in any other business, or even in the liberal professions. If any man in this country desires that his son should be successful in his career, that he should have a large scope for his intellect, that he should shine and show himself a great man in this country, I do not believe that a farmer can give his son any better opportunity than to put him into his own business, and by means of good attention and abundant opportunity let him study that business. If every opportunity were given to these young men to study their business, this country would be made more prosperous to live in, and the business of the young man would be more prosperous than any other in the land. I am, therefore, not at all sorry that to-day the best farmers of our land must assume the position, that if they are going to succeed to the greatest possible extent, they must be educated, they must study and learn, not simply to do as their fathers and grandfathers did, but they must adapt themselves to new conditions, and must study those new conditions and methods which are necessary to ensure success. In this connection it would not be out of place for me to talk a little shop. I know it is not quite the thing to talk shop, but I think it is allowable when, as in this case, the shop is the whole country in which we live, when it is only limited by our boundaries and the sea coast of our land, and when it is the workshop of the great bulk of our population. I say that farming to-day is the chief industry of this country, and, in saying that, I do not wish merely to repeat a truth that is so often and so lightly repeated, without any just appreciation of its importance. I will mention a few facts in regard to the agricultural industry in this country, and in regard to our trade, to show that farming in Canada is King. I have no later statistics than the census of 1881, but I find there that, in regard to the occupations of the people, those connected with agriculture are more than half of all those classified, they are more than twice the industrial class, more than six times the commercial class, and more than thirteen times the professional class. If I go to our Trade and Navigation Returns, I find that nearly one-half of the whole exports of this country are the products of the agricultural class; that they export eight times the exports of manufactured goods, eight times the product of our mines that are exported, five times the product of our fisheries that are exported, and one and a-half times the product of our forests that are exported. Although I have not got the statistics to prove the statement, I know that I am well within the limits when I say that the farmers of this country also produce much the larger supply taken by the home market to be consumed in the country. Not only is their production thus great in comparison with the productions of other classes of the country, but their consumption of the products of this country is, by far, greater than the consumption of any other class. Our manufactures and other industries are all largely dependent upon the home market afforded by the farmers. We hear hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House declare that manufactures are best promoted by a home market; and where is the home market of the manufactures of this country? The farmers and the agricultural classes afford this home market in a much greater degree than any other individual class in the community. I stated a few minutes ago that in consequence of the new conditions of our farming here, the farmers must take to the keeping of stock, and this is essentially a good thing. Even in the past, though we have not turned our attention very much in that direction, and though the farmers have, to a large extent, tried to carry on their business in the same way as their fathers did, still we find under these conditions, even under the old régime, our farmers did produce a much larger proportion of animals and their products than of products of agriculture pure and simple. If you examine the export table of our Trade and Navigation Returns, you find that while the agricultural products amount altogether to about $37,000,000, the products of animals, and the animals themselves, amount to $23,800,000, in round numbers, thus showing that the products of stock kept on the land formed nearly two-thirds of the whole export of our agricultural productions. We see, therefore, the immense importance of that portion of our agricultural industry involved in the keeping of stock. With these facts before us surely we ought to desire to remove all the disabilities under which farmers labor in regard to the keeping of stock in our eastern Provinces. I am glad to be able to say, that the Government have acknowledged this fact in establishing an experimental farm here at Ottawa, and several in other parts of the country. They have shown an appreciation of the great importance of the keeping of stock, by laying out a large sum of money, and incurring obligations for future expenditures in this direction, in order to show farmers in the country how they can best go into stock-keeping and stock-raising. The Government have, during the past year, appointed a dairy commissioner, whose business it will be especially to study the best means of manufacturing butter and cheese. They have shown by their bulletins, and by the interest they have taken in farmers' institutes and farmers' conventions in all parts of the country, that they believe this to be most important and essential to the interests of the great agricultural industry. Sir, it is certainly a good point in favor of the Government that they thus appreciate the agricultural industry, and I congratulate the Minister of Agriculture that he has taken this step; I congratulate him that he has thus acknowledged the need of the farmers of the country turning their attention to stock-keeping in the future more than they have done in the past. This has been evidenced on the floor of this House, and we see by the growing interest of the farmers themselves in farmers' conventions, that this is the trend of opinion amongst them. I think it is a most desirable thing that these conventions should be encouraged and that they should be continued. When our farmers exported simply the surplus of the grain which they raised in the field, without putting that grain through processes which it might have been put through in Canada, they exported actually each year a large portion of their capital, because, in that grain, there was actually contained a very large amount of the elements of the fertility of their soil; and when they exported the grain they were not able to return those elements of fertility of the soil from which they took them. While they pursued that method of farming they did not attempt to utilise their brains and their business capacity to the fullest extent; they did not sufficiently understand that as the elements in the soil are the raw material for the production of grain, so the production of grains are the raw material for the manufacture of butter and cheese. It is better for the farmers of this country, as a class, that they should employ their brains and their business capacity in elaborating, as much as possible, all their raw material in the finished product, before they pass it off into the hands of strangers to be used. There is no question, as I have pointed out, that the farmer to-day is using his brains more than formerly, and it is necessary, in order that he may have an opportunity to exercise his greater brain power, that the Government should assist him as far as possible to put into a condensed form the products sent out of the country. The exportation of condensed agricultural products, such as beef, cheese and butter, takes out of the country an almost inappreciable amount of the fertile elements of the soil, while coarse grains exported by the bushel contain a very large proportion of such elements. This state of things is very extraordinary; and it is only by feeding coarse grains, and by keeping stock on our lands, that we will be able to preserve our farms in the highest state of fertility. I may point out a few facts contained in our Trade and Navigation Returns in this regard. It will be found that our finished products of beef, which were sent to England, the most fastidious market in the world, reached last year 60,000 head, which were valued at $4,992,000, or an average of about $80 per head. On the other hand, we sent to the United States our unfinished beef in the shape of store cattle, to the number of 37,360 head, but the value was only $488,250, or $13 per head. Here is distinct evidence of a case of farmers utilising their brains and sending to England the product of their skill in the shape of the finest cattle, of an average value of $80; while, in the other case, our farmers sent to the United States the raw material for beef, the frame, bones and hide, and only sufficient muscle to carry the animal, and no attempt was made to finish it, but it was sent to the farmers of the United States, who will turn it into good beef and reap the larger profit. These are examples of the two kinds of farming—one, the crude, unskilled, ill-judged; the other showing the highest skill and the greatest application of skill to the product in order to utilise the raw material. Not long ago, at a farmers' institute, one of the members stated that we want to export, not simply the raw material, but the finished products of our farms. In order that this result may be obtained, I appeal to the Government to express their opinion that the raw material shall, as far as possible, be obtained at the lowest price, and that the farmers shall have the benefit to the full of the raw material they need to carry on their business; and to-day they need to have corn free of duty. Hon. gentlemen opposite will, no doubt, reply that the farmers are in a first-rate condition to-day, and do not need assistance. No one acquainted with the people will, however, say so. I will merely allude to one or two facts which have come under my personal knowledge in the county which I know best. Last spring, I travelled through Compton County at the time the election was being held there, which resulted in the return of the present member. I drove many miles through the county, spending some days there, and I saw the state of affairs prevailing, and I will give one example as being perhaps the most intense, but only in degree greater than other cases I saw. I drove ten or twelve miles to a village, accompanied by a gentleman living in one of the adjacent villages. As I went along, I noticed house after house with windows barred up and doors fastened, and the whole condition showed they were not occupied or used. I asked the reason. I was told the farms were lying idle, and that the owners had gone to the United States, because they could not carry on their farms successfully and maintain their families on them. I asked if the neighbors were running the farms for them. I was answered in the negative, and it was stated that the farms were altogether deserted; and in twelve miles I counted ten such houses which were barred up, and ten such farms which were deserted. In the evening of that day I attended a public meeting. I spoke of the fact, and asked if such a state of affairs was really true, and if the facts were as represented. A young man, thirty years of age, rose in the meeting and said to his friends and neighbors, everyone of whom knew him: I am going away to-morrow, because I cannot make a living on my farm and maintain my family; I am going to the Western States, and there are several here who are going with me. This case of a young man of thirty years, living in an Eastern Township village, deserting his farm because he could not make a living, gives force to my argument. It is true the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope) was returned at that election, and I suppose this circumstance will be pointed to by hon. gentlemen opposite as proof of the prosperity of the people there. Those who know the county are well aware of the influence and power of, and strong attachment to his family, and these circumstances, combined with the fact that the hon. member in his business employs a certain number of men, explain his election. I am not going to make any statements which might be taken as being made from a party standpoint on this matter: I am not going to quote writings tinged with partisan feelings, but I have an editorial here written by one of the staunchest Conservatives in the Eastern Townships, published in a newspaper fully devoted to the National Policy, and which has consistently supported and endorsed the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives). I refer to the Richmond Guardian. Referring to the remarks made by the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope), in moving the reply to the Speech from the Throne, that paper said:

"Mr. Pope, in moving the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, congratulated the country on the good times prevailing, and, particularly, on the prosperous condition of the farmers of the Dominion. We have a sort of liking for optimistic men; there is generally a hearty geniality about them that influences their surroundings and makes those who come in contact with them 'feel good,' even when the commercial weather is cloudy. 'Better be merry than sad,' is a very comfortable maxim to act upon; but it is never wise to 'live in a fool's paradise.' And we cannot help thinking that Mr. Pope has got into that retreat for over-wrought optimistic thinkers. There are lots of people who hug the same delusion; they are generally those very fortunate folks whose fathers were born before them, and have a comfortable surplus to handle, as well in bad times as good. But those not so favored—who have to live day in and day out by their labor, or on the profits of business, know that these congratulatory assurances of optimistic members of Parliament, Ministers, and Governor Generals are mere palterings with the truth. Times are hard;—have not been so hard for a dozen years as they are now. If those good people who dispute these facts honestly believe that Mr. Pope's statement is true, we invite them to run a country store in the Eastern Townships, or a rural newspaper, or to purchase a farm, and if after a year's trial they do not come out of the ordeal 'wiser and sadder men,' we will turn Annexationist, or submit to any similar torture to our loyalty to Canada. Outside of the born-with-a-silver-spoon-in-the-mouth fraternity, every son of Adam, at least in this part of the world, knows that business is very depressed, and that farming profits are at the lowest ebb, and that the banks are carrying half their customers. We cannot see what good object is served by keeping up this delusion about the prosperous condition of the country. No country can be said to be prosperous when the classes whose labor creates the wealth are living from hand to mouth; and it is of no use denying the fact that this is the condition just now of the producing class. This may be a gruesome thought; we do not know but it is. We are not pessimistical, and no more disposed to look on the dark side of things as the most benign and resigned of our neighbors. The truth forces itself upon us in spite of our inclination, and we repeat, with the confidence born of a conviction, that we are experiencing very hard times in the Eastern Townships.

"The depression is from the very bottom, and is felt upwards in every avenue of industrial and speculative life; and it must be when the tillers of the soil are unable to 'make the two ends meet.' In our view the depression is ascribable to three principal causes: 1st, Over productiveness in manufactures; 2nd, reduced productiveness of the soil in new countries, and the enlargement of the area of supply, causing a thrusting out of the natural productions of the older countries; and 3rd, chiefly to the extravagant expenditures on public works all over the world."

Now, Sir, from what I know myself, I can say that the storekeepers of the Eastern Townships are finding it harder this year than ever before to get paid for what they sell. I know one prominent storekeeper in my neighborhood, who has had a business experience of nearly half a century, and this year he has been obliged to dismiss two of his clerks because he could not afford the expense of retaining them in his service. This is a specimen of what is being done all through the Eastern Townships. I will now refer to the report of the committee appointed by the Farmers' Institute of Toronto to consider the prevailing agricultural depression. Now, Sir, if there was no depression, that great parliament of the farmers of Ontario, which I have referred to before, would not have named a committee to enquire into it and to find remedies for it. The following resolution was adopted by that committee:—

"That the agricultural industries of this Province are severely depressed, no one will deny who is at all acquainted with the agricultural interests of this time. Your committee believe that the chief causes of that depression are—among other things—excessive taxation to meet the expenditure required to open our Western Provinces and meet the payment of interest upon our over-increasing public debt; this taxation being levied in many instances in a manner which is very unjust to the agricultural interests of this country.

"As to the proper remedy for any or all of these causes, opinion may differ to a wide extent, but your committee believe that the following suggestions are along the line in which at least a measure of relief might be obtained: (1) Free entrance to the markets where our products have to be disposed of; and your committee would strongly advise that in future all legislation in regard to import duties be in the direction of lowering those duties."

I will also read to the House the following petition to the Government, adopted by the Central Farmers' Institute of Ontario:—

"Whereas, we consider the present high tariff is very injurious to the agricultural interests, making what we buy proportionately dearer than the products we sell; and

"Whereas, the present high tariff has given rise to the combine system by which competition is to a great extent prevented; and

"Whereas, the agricultural interest is suffering under a serious depression and unable to bear the strain occasioned by the tariff and the combine system aforesaid, and as the agricultural interests represent the larger majority of the population; that, therefore,—

"This, the Central Institute do respectfully ask the Government to reduce the duty on articles of prime necessity to the farmer, such as iron, steel, coal, cottons, woollens, rubbers, sugars, corn and salt, to such an extent as to relieve the agriculturist of the unequal burden under which he is now laboring."

This resolution was carried on a vote of 70 to 4, which was practically unanimous. There were 100 leading farmers present from Addington, South Brant, Bruce, Dufferin, West Durham, Elgin, South Essex, Frontenac, Glengarry, South Grenville, Grey, Wentworth, Winona, York, Halton, Milton, Huron, Seaforth, West Kent, East Lambton, South Lanark, Lincoln, Middlesex, Monck, Norfolk, Northumberland, Ontario, Oxford, Peterborough, Perth, Renfrew, Simcoe, Stormont, Waterloo, Wellington. And there were delegates from the following branches of the farming industry: Ayrshire Breeders, Clydesdale and Shire Horse Association, Dominion Draught Horse Association, Eastern Dairymen's Association, Ontario Creameries Association, Ontario Fruit Growers' Association, Ontario Beekeepers' Association, and the Ontario Hog Breeders' Association. We find also at that meeting that, on the motion of Mr. William Stewart, seconded by Mr. James

Ewing, it was proposed to reduce the duty on corn; there was an amendment to raise the duty on corn not imported for cattle-feeding, and this amendment was lost, and the main motion carried by a large majority. That is the opinion of the farmers in Ontario, and from the districts which were represented, and we cannot conceive a more thoroughly representative meeting than that was of the farmers of Ontario. Just the same expression of opinion has come from the farmers of the Province of Quebec wherever they met to discuss their present condition. These resolutions of the farmers of Ontario, do, I believe, express the feeling as to the depression of the agricultural interests all over the country. I wish to place this matter clearly before the House, so that it may be thoroughly understood, and that the taunt thrown across the floor of this House, that the farmers of the country were not taking an interest in the tariff resolutions of the Government, and were not desirous of having their views laid before Parliament, may be answered. I take this course so that this House, representing, as it ought to represent, in a large degree, the agricultural interests of the country, may be enabled to give a full expression of its views on this matter, I may say, further, that if the farmers have to resort to stock-breeding, the procuring of cheap food for the stock is primarily essential to their success. The feed of this country is largely obtained from forage which we produce ourselves. We have already had a discussion in this House with regard to the system of ensilage, when it was shown how much that system tended to cheapen the production of the higher class of agricultural products in this country. It was also proved that, as that system is used in conjunction with the old plan of growing hay and straw to provide the rough forage, it is necessary to the feeding of stock that supplementary foods should be provided, and in those supplementary foods corn plays a very important part. Corn is not produced in this country to a very great extent—in fact, scarcely at all, except in two or three counties in Western Ontario. We in the Eastern Townships do raise corn, but the crop is not a safe one. In a large part of Canada to-day, the land which used to be applied to the attempt to raise corn for grain is coming to be applied to the production of ensilage, and I submit that that is the true way to utilise it. It is, therefore, probable that in the future less corn will be produced in our land. But that part of Canada which can grow corn cannot come anywhere near producing enough to supply the demand in Canada. We import a large quantity of corn from the United States, and we shall continue to do so, notwithstanding the duty upon it; and if there were no duty, we should import a great deal more. We know very well that corn is the basis of the fattening process. We know very well that the great hog products of the Western States are almost entirely produced on corn, and it is owing to the cheapness of their corn that the people of those States are able practically to control the whole market. A very curious state of affairs exists in this country. Although ours is an agricultural country, which exports a large quantity of agricultural produce, it also imports a very considerable quantity, but it is a finished product which we import, not a raw material. We import beef, bacon hams, mutton, pork, dead meats, and meat in the carcass. It seems an extraordinary thing that an agricultural country like this should do so; and what is the reason for it? It is because, by putting a duty on the coarse grains which come from the United States, we enable the farmers of the United States to compete in those animal products in our own market at an advantage over our own farmers. But if our farmers could buy corn in the cheapest market, and use it for the production of cattle and swine, for the raising of which Canada is unrivalled, they would not suffer under this disadvantage. In Canada, which is unrivalled for the production and growth of animal life, it is a manifest absurdity that we should be obliged to import annually about $2,500,000 worth of animal products; and were it not for the fact that cheaper corn enables the people of the United States to produce those things more cheaply than our farmers, we should not be obliged to do it. Therefore, let us take the duty off corn, which is the farmer's raw material, so that he can put it into the production of animals, and make the finished product in this country. I understand that there have been deputations urging the Government to put a duty on meat—that some farmers are asking that they should be protected, and should be enabled to produce beef to better advantage than it can be imported from the United States. I want to say "Amen" to their efforts, but in a different way. Instead of putting the duty on meat, and thereby making it dearer to those who consume it, I want to take the duty off the material that goes into the production of that meat, so as to enable our farmers to produce it at its present price, but to produce it at a profit instead of at a loss. This is the gist of the whole. We import from the United States a large quantity of the products of corn. Instead of importing the product, let us import the corn itself, and let our farmers apply their skill to converting that into the finished product of lard, beef, mutton and hams, which will enable them to sell the finished product to our own people at the same price as now, but at a profit instead of at a loss. There is another side to this question. Ours is an agricultural country, as is the United States, and we compete in the same market in Europe in agricultural products; but do we export to Europe anything like our fair share of the agricultural products of this continent? Do we have a fair chance in the competition in Europe with the United States? What is the fact? I have looked up the relative exports of the products of animals from the United States and from Canada, and in making the comparison, I have taken the United States as having twelve times the population that we have, so that we ought to export, at any rate, one-twelfth of what they export. Therefore, by multiplying our exports by twelve, and comparing the result with actual exports from the United States, we shall obtain a fair comparison. The result shows the relative exports of the two countries to be as follows:—

	From Canada. (Twelve times actual exports).	From the United States.
Lard.....	Lbs. 96,000	Lbs. 30,422,370
Bacon.....	4,332,000	36,320,774
Beef.....	324,000	16,902,448
Hams.....	240,000	5,590,570
Pork.....	216,000	5,010,767
Canned meat.....	348,000	6,026,979
All other meats.....	756,000	956,640
Tallow.....	60,000	4,717,229

Of cheese I am glad to know that we export more relatively than they do; but it is the only product of animals of which we export, according to our population, anything like the quantity which is exported from the United States. Therefore, I contend that there is something wrong in our system, when we, an agricultural population, having natural conditions just as favorable, and being just as capable mentally and physically, can only show such a comparison as that. But, Sir, I trust that, instead of putting a duty upon meat and thereby making it dearer to the consumer, our Government will remove the duty from the corn and enable our farmers, at better advantage, to produce the meat. That is the line that I believe to be the right line of policy in the interests of our agriculturists. Hon. gentlemen opposite are very fond of increasing the duties. They yield to the representation of deputation after deputation clamoring for increased duties. Will they now yield to the representation of one great class of the community, not to put on, but to remove the duty, and so enable a cheaper production to be made. I say this is not only in the interest of agriculturists—although I speak for that class, and I believe if it were only necessary for that class, it would be a just demand on the Government—but it is in the interest also of every other class in the community. Every man, woman and child who has to eat meat, butter and cheese, will be benefited by getting a cheaper article, which they will get through the removal of the duty on the raw material, which goes to make up those products, whereas, by increasing the duty on those articles, the farmer will not be in a better position. By removing the duty on corn, the product itself is made cheaper to the consumer, and the farmer has just as good a chance, or a better chance, to make a profit. It is often said that the manufacturers in this country require protection. I claim that the farmers are the greatest manufacturers we have. The agricultural class produce more valuable products than any other manufacturing industry in the country; and if the other manufacturers are to be aided, certainly we should not refuse to aid that most important manufacturing industry, the farmers and agriculturists. Holding these views, though not believing I am going the whole way I should have gone, but to make the first step in this direction, I move:

That the Speaker do not now leave the Chair, but that it be resolved that, in the opinion of this House, corn should be put on the free list.

Mr. POPE. I am very much pleased that the hon. member for Brome (Mr. Fisher) has directed the attention of this House to our agricultural industries. They are worthy of every consideration, and, although I cannot agree entirely with what the hon. gentleman has said, I am glad that he has given us an opportunity of considering these industries. I am afraid that he is not agriculturally honest in the way he has brought this matter before the House. I am afraid he has been tainted with party politics to a certain extent, in being induced to bring this motion before the House as a party motion, whether as a vote of want of confidence in the Government of the day or otherwise; but this is not the only question in which the hon. member for Brome has deceived this House and attempted to deceive this country. There is a great moral question which he has often mooted before this House—the temperance question—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. POPE—in which he has been as indiscreet as on this question. He had the opportunity of visiting the constituency I have now the honor to represent, last May, for agricultural purposes. At the first meeting held there at Johnsville, he informed the agricultural community of the County of Compton that he was there as an advocate of the great cause of temperance. Quite true, he was a Liberal in politics, but he said that whenever the question of temperance arose he should always separate himself from his party, if necessary—that he would bury his party affiliations and come out boldly and freely in the interest of the cause of temperance. Well, he came out in that county, and went from one place to another. Not that I have any jealousy or ill-feeling owing to his visit, for, with one exception, in every place he visited I received a larger Conservative majority than was ever given at those districts before. Therefore, I am not at all jealous of his visit; and if I should ever contest another election in that county, I ask him to come there and assist me, for I do not know of any greater strength I can have in Compton County than the presence of the hon. member for Brome. With regard to this temperance question, the hon. gentleman had an opportunity of showing his sincerity, for there was a local election since then held in his own county, in which Mr. England and Mr. Duffy were the candidates, the former being the Conservative candidate chosen by the Conservative party and endorsed by the Temperance Alliance. Under those circumstances, we would naturally expect so strong a temperance man prepared to separate himself from his party entirely in the cause of temperance, and to support the candidate of the Dominion Alliance. But, it was surprising in one who always poses as the honest agriculturist, to find him supporting Mr. Duffy and opposing Mr. England in that contest. He has said that the county that I represent was a desolate section of the country, that the people had left there and gone to foreign parts to reside; and that this was owing to the fact, I suppose, that we had not free corn in our section. If the hon. gentleman had taken the opportunity of counting the houses inhabited, and spent as much time in looking over those as he did those uninhabited, he would have given us credit, I think, for having the majority of houses in that county so well populated that, since the introduction of Mr. Mercier's policy to donate a hundred acres to those families which number twelve children, I have had several letters from my constituents asking me to apply for the Mercier grant on their behalf. But I am afraid that, under this policy of Mr. Mercier, it will be some time before the hon. member for Brome will be able to apply for a lot. In that respect I am ahead of him. Young man as I am, I am entitled to at least half a lot, and if nature continues to favor me as I expect she will, I intend to win in the future one of the lots Mr. Mercier is offering. He poses in our section of the country as an adept or a scientific agriculturist. No doubt he is scientific. He is so extremely scientific and so devoted to the great cause of agriculture, that upon a certain occasion, which perhaps is not known to this House but is well known to our section of the country, he concocted an artificial food on which to maintain the life of cattle cheaper than it can be maintained by the use of that material which engenders the cud. No scientific was this that in its operations it was something like the principle which was adopted by the old man who tried to teach his horse to live upon sawdust, but, unfortunately, when he had got the infernal brute almost educated to that point, the horse died. The hon. gentleman goes further. He attends our agricultural societies there, and we are always pleased to see him; and during the last election in Brome, he stated on several occasions that he had received from Mr. Mercier a promise of $400 to assist an agricultural society there. In the proceedings of the House the other day, I saw that a question was put to Mr. Mercier by Mr. England, as to whether it was true that Mr. Fisher was authorised to state that Mr. Mercier, or any other member of the Government of the Province of Quebec, had, directly or indirectly, promised $400 for an agricultural society; and the answer of Colonel Rhodes was that it was not promised.

Mr. FISHER. That is not correct.

Mr. POPE. I suppose the hon. gentleman is more correct than the record of the proceedings.

Mr. FISHER. More correct than the quotation.

Mr. POPE. The hon. gentleman compares our country with the United States. I have no objection to that; but, though I am not quite so great an admirer as that hon. gentleman of the great republic, I will take the trouble to compare some of the agricultural productions, and some of the prices paid in our section of the country, with those of the States which adjoin us. It is an undeniable fact that the price of a farm which you can buy on the American side for $2,500 is worth not less than $4,000 on the Canadian side of the line. They say that is an imaginary line. If so, it is a fortunate thing for the people of this country that it is there, whether imaginary or unimaginary, so that we can realise for agricultural lands in the section of country in which I live nearly double what the Americans can get for land 35 miles from my house. By profession I am a butcher, and I have some knowledge of the price of meats in that country. I know that I am enjoying good healthy three meals a day out of the profit I make on my butchering. I know that I can buy beef or pork—not shipped from Chicago, but from the farmers in Vermont and New Hampshire, which adjoin our part of the country—and I can pay the cent a pound duty imposed upon it, and have it brought to my door and made ready for the market, at a less price than I can buy from the farmers in my county. No one can contradict that; for, to use the language of the hon. member for Simcoe, I speak by the book. The hon. gentleman says that if we had free corn we would have cheap pork, and, perhaps, cheap whiskey. Well, there is a country which has free corn, and that is the United States. I have spoken of the Eastern States. It may be said that that is an old section of that country, that the soil there is run out, and that we have no right to expect to find there the same fertility that we would find in the great west. We will glance for a moment at the banner State of the whole Union, which is Indiana. We find that the farm mortgage indebtedness in that State increased by $60,379,000 between 1873 and 1879; that between 1882 and 1888, the increase was $46,476,000, a total of $106,855,000. Interest on those loans is at the rate of 7 per cent., and the farmers of the State are paying annually $7,480,000 in interest. Nearly all these mortgages are held by foreign companies, thirteen of which, in three years, foreclosed mortgages aggregating one million dollars. Indiana is one of the banner States of the Union. She has the benefit of commercial union. She has all the benefit to be derived from being centrally situated in such a great country, as the hon. gentlemen opposite say the American republic is. Yet we find her farmers paying an interest on mortgages amounting to almost as much as the interest on the entire debt of Canada to-day. When we can buy these articles on the other side for less money than we can buy them in this country, what benefit will it be to the farmers here to have free corn? The hon. gentleman says that would be a benefit to the consuming community in this country. Let us look at that question for a moment. Swift & Co., and Armour & Co. of Chicago, practically control the meat market of the United States. Mr. Swift was a small butcher in Boston and Lowell, but he established himself in Chicago, and is now at the head of his firm. In the East he established his agents, who were then known as the agents of Swift & Co., but are now wholesale butchers. They sold to merchants in Boston, Lowell, Manchester, and other points in the east. After Mr. Swift had severed the connection between the farmers, and drovers, and the butchers in the Eastern States, he said he was going to have his own prices, and the result is that you pay from 18 cents to 25 cents a pound for choice roasts in the New England cities, while in this country you can buy them from 13 cents to 15 cents per pound. That is the practical result. That same Swift & Co., of Chicago, are now trying to monopolise the markets of this country. You can find their meat in every city—Toronto, Montreal, and even down to Halifax. He is trying to play the same trick on the people of Canada as he did on the people of the Eastern States. So serious is this matter there, that when I was talking to a butcher from that section the other day, he said: We are trying to find means of ridding ourselves of this monopoly. How are you going to do it? I asked. He said: We have an idea that this is bruised beef, and that it is not healthy beef, and that we are going to propose that the meat shall be slaughtered in the State where it is sold. This was a man from Vermont. That is what they are trying to do in regard to that; and that system, which has been spread over the Eastern States, is likely to be spread over this country. If there is anyone entitled to the markets of this country, it is the farmers of this country, the men who own this country, and we are going to have it. I hope the leader of the Opposition will listen to this. We are going to have it. Whether under this Government, or some other Government, we intend to have it. The hon. gentleman says we import from the United States into this country, that we are capable of importing agricultural products into Canada, notwithstanding the duty placed upon them, and, yet, at the same time, he says our country is fearfully depressed. What, then, must be the condition of those people on the other side of the line, who have to pay a cent a pound to get their meat in here, and yet can get a cent a pound more here than they can get at home? The physical capacity of our farmers, and the mental capacity of our farmers! Beautiful theoretical idea—the physical and mental capacity of our farmers! I say that, physically, not only our farmers, but everybody in this country, are equal to those of any other country on the face of this earth, I do not care where that country is. Mentally, we are superior to a great many nations of the earth; and the people of the constituency that I have the honor to represent, are evidently superior, mentally, to the hon. member for Brome, as was evidenced by the verdict of my constituents at the last election in my county. There is another subject to which I wish to refer, and the member for Brome referred to it a moment ago. In looking over the debates of this House, I ascertained that he takes a great interest in the dairy interest of this country, that he has studied it, that he keeps dairy breeds of cattle, that he makes a specialty of dairying. While he says that he does not wish that the dairying interests of Canada should be fostered to the detriment of any other industry of this country, at the same time, in order to illustrate the great generosity of the man, the noble character of the man, he is able to meet this House, and to meet this country, and say: I am a dairyman and get my living from dairying, my constituency gets its living from dairying, but, at the same time, I am perfectly at liberty to say that I should not oppose the importation into this country, and the manufacture in this country, of that beautiful stuff called oleomargarine.

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. POPE. He says "no." He started in that direction, and if he drew back, the start shows the true heart of the man. Now, he wishes to cover it up under the same deceit with which he has covered his temperance principles and his agricultural principles.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member, must refrain from using the word "deceit," since it has been objected to.

Mr. POPE. I withdraw it. I crave the indulgence of this House and the pardon of the hon. member opposite. As you know, Sir, I am not accustomed to speaking here; I am a born agriculturist and accustomed to speak frankly, and perhaps my language may be too forcible for a Legislature of this kind. I have a letter in my hand from a farmer in the County of Compton, a resident of the township of Compton, a township that gave a majority against me, and the signer of the letter is the man through whose influence that majority of 17 was obtained against me. This is what he says:

"I see some of the farmers are asking to have the duties taken off corn."

This is a man who feeds and exports cattle.—

"I would prefer to have it doubled, and one cent per pound added to beef and pork brought from the United States, which, I think, would help farmers more. I do not know as this is exactly in keeping with Liberal views.

"Yours respectfully."

The farming community of this country, as I said before, I think, are entitled to the kindest consideration from this or any other Government. We furnish the markets for the cities of this country, for the manufacturers of this country; and we furnish the traffic for the railroads of this country. We are perfectly prepared to do it. We believe that, in establishing these manufactures within our limits, we are increasing our home market; we believe that in building up these railroads we are developing this country, and in its development we are going to gain some benefit; we believe that the employment of labor upon those railroads is going to furnish a market for our produce, and that we are going to have the privilege of selling our produce to those laborers; and all we ask from this or any other Government is to give us this market, to give it to us untrammelled, to shut out from us undue competition, and let the Canadian farmer have the privilege of feeding the Canadian population.

Mr. McMULLEN. I shall not attempt to follow the hon. gentleman in his wandering address. I may say that his remarks brought to my mind an incident that once happened in my own experience. I was travelling along the road, and, while resting at a hotel, one morning there sat opposite me a man who appeared to enjoy his breakfast very much. After taking half a dozen cups of coffee, the waiter came along and said to him: "Why, sir, you appear to enjoy your breakfast. Will you have another cup of coffee?" "I will," said he; "and certainly I never had to drink so much slop for a little coffee in my life before." Well, Sir, we have listened to a tremendous amount of slop from the hon. gentleman, who has not entered into the question at all. He never touched a point. He wandered all around it; but he never came to the question before the House. He did not attempt to deny that, even in his own constituency, there were empty houses. He never said, for a moment, that the statement made by the hon. member for Brome (Mr. Fisher) was not true. On the contrary, he admitted the statement he had made. He said, however, that if he counted the houses that were occupied and then compared them with those that were empty, he would find there were a great many more occupied than were empty. Now, that does not at all refute the statement that had been made by the hon. member for Brome with regard to empty houses in his constituency. Then he says that he can buy beef across the line from where he lives on the American side, cheaper than he can from his next-door neighbor. He says he can buy beef cheaper across the line than he can afford to feed it. Now, we want to alter that condition of things. We want to place the farmers of this country in such a position, by free importation of grain, that they can feed beef on our own soil, and prevent our neighbors across the line from bringing it in. We want to place our farmers in such a position that they can produce beef upon our own ground. Then the hon. gentleman referred somewhat to the indebtedness of the State of Indiana. He said the mortgaged indebtedness of that State had risen very rapidly, until it has now reached an enormous sum. Well, all we have got to say is, that the State of Indiana lives under the burden of a National Policy the same as we do, and the farmers of the United States have been robbed by the operation of a protective tariff the same as the farmers of Canada are robbed, and the results to the farming communities in both countries are precisely the same. The people there have been subjected to an enormous strain from year to year, and they are beginning to realise that fact. The people of this Dominion have been subjected to the same strain, and they are beginning to realise that fact also. The hon. gentleman says also that some of the States are talking about legislation for the purpose of preventing beef slaughtered at Chicago from finding a market throughout the United States and Canada. That is not new. The State of Illinois, years ago, attempted legislation of that kind, but after the people of Illinois had seen through the intended legislation and the effort that was made by the butchers of that State to bring the people to pay an increased price for the beef they had to eat, they opposed the legislation and it did not pass the House. They were afraid of a monopoly being created in that State, from the results of which the people would suffer. I will draw the attention of the House to the question that is properly before it, because the remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat rather led us away from the point at issue. It is patent to everyone who has taken any interest in the financial interests of the farming community of the Dominion, particularly of those living in the older Provinces, that a complete change must be made in the manner in which the farmers work their farms, and there must be a change in their ordinary annual operations in order to enable them to make money. Since the opening of the North-West, wheat-growing has become unremunerative to the farmers of the older Provinces, and, in fact, the older Provinces are undergoing the same experience as was passed through by the Middle States some years ago. We remember when Indiana, Illinois and Missouri exported large quantities of wheat and corn. After some time, they were unable to compete with the western States, and, in order to place themselves in a position in which they would be able to maintain their families, they were obliged to take up stock-feeding. As regards the farmers of Ontario, I am satisfied that unless some very decided change is made, in order to facilitate the farmers in helping themselves financially out of their present position, very serious disaster will ensue. They cannot possibly relieve themselves by growing crops and selling them. The only thing they can do is to turn their attention to feeding stock, and feeding hogs. In order to do that successfully, they must be able to obtain feed as cheaply as possible, and if the farmers of Ontario are given corn free, they can produce a much larger volume of their present products. The hon. member for Brome (Mr. Fisher) spoke of bacon. I notice that last year we shipped bacon to the value of $360,000, but we imported the same article from the United States to the value of $335,000. We want to be able to import our corn free of duty and lay it down on the farms, and with it grow pork and produce bacon, instead of importing it from the other side of the line, and the only way we can accomplish that result is by allowing the farmer to have his corn free. With respect to cattle, it is well known that throughout the Dominion there is no better feeding section than can be found in Ontario. If the farmers had the advantage of cheap feed, they could raise beef in almost unlimited quantities. They have all the necessary accommodation in the way of commodious, convenient and comfortable barns; the best water to be obtained in the Dominion—flowing springs in all directions; the best pasture in the Dominion, and, everything considered, if they can be induced to give up the present system of trying to grow crops and sell them for the purpose of releasing themselves from their financial embarrassments, and turn their attention to cattle feeding, they will improve their condition very rapidly. In order to do that, we want to give them the opportunity of bringing in what corn they require free of duty, and they will then be able to double the quantity of cattle now exported. I have already alluded to feeding hogs. I contend that if we allow corn to come in free we can feed hogs in place of importing bacon from the United States, to the value of $335,000 last year, and we will be able to export very large quantities to our advantage. With respect to butter and cheese, I am glad to notice that this Dominion has become a large exporter of cheese. Our trade in that commodity has, indeed, increased rapidly during late years; but, in order to still further promote the trade, it is specially desirable that the farmers should be given the opportunity of using the corn for feed. Any one feeding cows knows that they must be fed during the winter with a reasonable portion of corn or grain, in order to enable them to give the necessary quantity of milk during the summer months, and thus the requisite quantity of cheese. Any one knowing about the production of cheese is aware that it is an absolute necessity that the cows should winter well and be fed with grain, if the farmers are going to realise remunerative profit from the cows, in the shape of butter and cheese, during the summer. It is well known that cows will produce more milk and butter fed on chopped corn than on any other feed, and it is an absolute necessity, in the interests of the production of these commodities, that we should have cheap corn. With regard to bacon, I have stated the importation from the United States last year. Even with the duty that is now on that commodity coming in here, 2 cents a pound on bacon and 1 cent a pound on pork, that product is brought in here; but if our farmers are allowed corn free, they will be able to produce four times the quantity at present raised. I observe that our exports of sheep and lambs have also greatly increased. I am glad to notice that our shipments to the British market have increased, and I hope they may continue; but, in order to encourage that trade, it is desirable that the farmers should be allowed to have their corn free, because it would facilitate the feeding and preparation of the animals for the British market. It must also be remembered that, owing to the limited size of the farms in Ontario, the farmer cannot possibly grow sufficient feed on his farm for a large quantity of stock, and if he goes into the feeding business he must purchase feed for his cattle beyond that which he can grow himself. You cannot grow on 100 acres a sufficient quantity of grain, roots and hay and straw to meet the requirements of a large number of stock, such a quantity as would prove remunerative and require the employment of two or three men all the year round, and it must be remembered that one man can attend to forty head as well as twenty head. If the farmers are able to obtain corn free of duty at the low price at which it can be purchased in the Western States, they will be placed in a position much more favorable financially than in the past. I contend that we have been drawing very largely on the resources of the farming community. We shall, perhaps, have an opportunity to discuss the whole question on the Budget speech, and I should have liked to have heard the statement of the Finance Minister before this hour of the Session. I contend that the farmers are beginning to awaken to the fact, as it has been presented by the hon. member for Bromo (Mr. Fisher), that the National Policy has very seriously militated against their best interests. They are beginning to realise that the increased duties on iron, and on almost everything they purchase daily, add to their burden. The farmers are beginning to realise that there have been very large amounts deducted from their resources, and that they are gradually being pauperised.

Mr. DAVIN. What about Haldimand?

Mr. McMULLEN. My hon. friend asks me to account for a certain election. There is no accounting for things that occur in certain places, and if I were to enter into the minutiv of the question he referred to, it would take me too long, so I decline to be led from the thread of my discourse.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The courts will probably give him the explanation about that.

Mr. McMULLEN. Yes; I believe they will. I say that the Canadian farmers are beginning to realise that this National Policy has virtually robbed them. The farmers of the United States have realised that long ago, and they are awakening to the fact that reduction has got to be made in the duties imposed upon them. The Canadian farmers, through their institutes, are beginning, apart from their political leanings, to discuss the effects of the National Policy upon their resources, and one by one they are pronouncing, in the most emphatic terms, that the National Policy is not doing them any good. Three years ago, when a resolution with regard to the increased duty on iron was introduced, the Minister of Finance of that day stated that we would soon have plenty of blast-furnaces making iron, and that we would be able to get it cheaper or as cheap as before the increased duty. That promise has not been fulfilled. There has been no increased production of iron in Canada, and the farmers are compelled to pay excessive duties on everything made out of iron which they use on their farms. It is high time that this Parliament should begin to consider the interests of the farmers; and I have no doubt that, in view of the expressions of opinion of the Farmers' Institute in Ontario, the Minister of Finance, in his coming Budget speech, will give some indication of a consideration for that particular class of the community. I have no doubt that he will feel it his duty to bow, to a certain extent, to the remonstrances the farmers have made, and that he will realise that the Government cannot longer dally with those people, and they cannot be treated with indifference in the future as they have been treated in the past. I hope that no mere sop will satisfy the farmers, but that they will insist on sweeping changes being made, and continue to demand their rights and privileges until the Government grants them. A very good example has been set to the farmers by the manufacturers of this country. Year after year, the manufacturers have urged their interests upon the Government, and we do not know that the Government ever denied them an increase in the duties which they asked. The farmers have been taught the lesson that they must combine for their own interests, and that if they do not do so their interests will be neglected by the Government, and ten years hence they will find themselves in the same ditch as they are in to-day. If the farmers combine, as they are now combining in their institutes, and press upon the Government their claims, the result will be that the Government must accede to their demand. I am exceedingly sorry to have to confess that the farming community of the country is in a deplorable state. It is much to be regretted indeed that the farmers find themselves embarrassed to the extent they are. I know that hon. gentlemen opposite have, for years past, been endeavoring to persuade the House and the country, that the statements we made with regard to the financial embarrassments of the farmers were not true; but the evidence of every day proves that the statements we made with regard to the injurious results of the operation of this tariff upon the resources of the agriculturists, are fully realised, and the proof is very plain that this policy strikes at the root of their resources, and tends to impoverish them year after year. Every man on this side of the House should advocate these changes in the tariff which will relieve, to some extent at least, the unfortunate agriculturist of this Dominion and give them a chance for their life. I have no doubt that the Government will, sooner or later, be compelled to allow the farmers of this country to import what they require free of duty; and, after the discussion we have had to-day, I believe that the Government must take into their consideration the propriety of taking off the duty on corn for feeding purposes. I am not advocating that corn should be admitted free for the manufacture of liquors, but if you admit corn free for the purposes which the farmers require, you can easily meet the deficit in the revenue in this respect, by increasing the duty on the manufactured spirits. This House would only be discharging its duty to the farmers of this country, and granting them what they are justly entitled to, by relieving them of the bondage under which they have so long suffered. If they discontinue to subject them to the heavy burdens now imposed on them, I have no doubt that before many years the farmers will be in a better position. As I have said before, the day of wheat-growing has passed away in Ontario, and has now to be limited entirely to the North-West, so far as this Dominion is concerned. Our farmers have, therefore, to take to stock-breeding, and if we encourage them in this industry and remove the barriers against its success, I have no doubt that success will attend their efforts. We see from the returns, that our stock productions are growing every year, and that our export of sheep and horses to the United States is largely increasing. If we cannot get him to drop grain-growing and turn his intention entirely to feeding, I have very little hope that he will get out of the difficulty that now surrounds him. I felt it my duty to make these few remarks, simply because I represent an agricultural district, and I consider it my bounden duty, every time there is any question before this House affecting the interests of the agriculturists of this Dominion, to endeavor in my feeble way to put in a word on behalf of that class of the community.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member for Brome (Mr. Fisher), in moving this resolution, appears to be about as consistent as he usually is in the discharge of his parliamentary duties. It was only a few evenings ago that we heard the melodious and stentorian voice of that same hon. member raised in this House, in condemnation of a Government who would allow corn to come in comparatively free of duty, because that corn was manufactured into alcohol or whiskey; or, in other words, because the Government would allow a rebate of the duty on the small amount of corn used in the manufacture of alcohol or whiskey which was exported from the country. He endeavored then to make a strong point against the Government on his temperance principles; but to-day he asks the Government to take the duty entirely off corn used not only for the manufacture of whiskey to be exported from the country, but for the manufacture of whiskey to be used in the country, so as to make it as cheap as possible. If the hon. gentleman was consistent in the argument he used then, he is not consistent to-day; but his course on this subject is only in harmony with the argument he usually presents when party interests and the interests of the community are at variance. The hon. member for Compton dissected that argument. He told us at the outset that he was only a butcher; but I think he might have said that he was an anatomist, for he dissected it to such an extent that the refuse left was only fit to be put out of sight. The hon. member for Brome (Mr. Fisher) is reputed to be a scientist—one who analyses his subjects from a scientific point of view, and so effectually that, in the language of chemistry, they only amount to a conglomeration. A gentleman once asked a chemist: "What do you understand by a demonstration in chemistry?" He said, "I will give you an illustration: take an effervescent, add a deliquescent, there will be a precipitation, which is a conglomeration, and that's a demonstration." That is about as clear as the scientific arguments presented on behalf of the farmers by the hon. member for Brome; they really amount to a conglomeration. What does the hon. gentleman's argument mean? It means simply that the Government should allow corn to come in free of duty. For what purpose? He says, for the feeders of the country. Now, it may not be out of place if I analyse this motion a little closely, and see how far it affects the great agricultural interests of the country. Are they directly interested in it? It is true, that the man who engages solely in feeding, and who exports meat to a foreign country, would be benefited by the free importation of corn; but the moment he engages in that business he becomes a competitor of the cultivators of the soil, having antagonistic interests to theirs. We have a few distillers and brewers in this country who are engaged in the feeding of cattle, and we have a few farmers, like the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan), who turn their attention exclusively to that line; but in number, they are as one to five hundred in comparison with the cultivators of the soil; and while you might benefit that one, by removing the duty from corn, you would be injuring the interests of the remaining 499. As soon as men become feeders of cattle, their interests become antagonistic to those of the agricultural class; it is to their interest to obtain cheap feed, but to that extent they are impoverishing the market for that great class of people who must live by the cultivation of the soil and the raising of grains. The hon. member for Brome, as an argument in favor of the free importation of corn, spoke of the large exports of our agriculturists compared with the total exports of the country; he said that they amounted to nearly one-half of the whole, of which he said the exports of cattle form a very large proportion. But he forgot to tell the House that probably four-fifths of the exports of beef from this country are virtually the exports of distillers and brewers, who feed cattle from the refuse product of another line of manufacture, and not the exports of farmers at all. The farmer's interest is in raising stock which supplies the home market, and which they raise and feed on the products of the soil. Now, about $500,000,000 worth of products are raised and manufactured by the people of this country annually, of which they export about $72,000,000 worth; therefore there is $4 worth consumed in the country to every dollar's worth exported, and the farmers of the country are engaged in raising the food for the cattle which are consumed by the people of Canada. It is not the agriculturist who exports cattle largely; it is largely distillers, brewers, and men in other lines who are turning out a product which, I am sorry to say, is, to a limited extent, coming into competition with the products of the agriculturists of the country. If there is anything in the argument that in benefiting the larger number you benefit the whole, the very fact that the cultivators of the soil must represent over a hundred to one as compared with the feeders of stock, would indicate to us the importance of looking after the interest of the larger number instead of the interest of the smaller number. What are we doing to-day? We are endeavoring to induce the farmers of the country to produce a cheaper kind of feed for cattle for dairy purposes, to which they are turning a great deal of attention. When the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) stated that there is nothing better than corn for butter and milk, I thought the hon. gentleman must know very little about farming. If it were not known to me that he has spent the most of his life in commercial pursuits, I should conclude that his experience of farming was of the most limited character, because he must know that the juicy foods, such as grasses, roots and ensilage, are the great sources of dairy products—milk and butter—instead of grains; and hence we are teaching the farmers how to raise those things cheaply, and thereby reduce the cost of dairy products, and thus benefit the country. The hon. gentleman said that every farmer wants to raise as many cattle on his own place as his men can fairly attend to. He says that one man can attend to forty head and do it nicely; then, he ought to be able to raise on a hundred-acre farm enough food to support those forty head the year round. Well, if he is an intelligent farmer and possessed of the information the Government has endeavored to inculcate in him, he will be able to raise that feed, because I know that practical farmers are doing it to-day easily. Take my own locality, I know of a man who is this year keeping thirty-five head of cattle, and all the portion of the farm he is cultivating, including hay, is only thirty-five acres, representing one head to every acre, so that, with the pasturage in the summer and the feed he raises, he is enabled to feed the cattle the whole year round. We are raising a better class of feed and producing better milk and butter now than if we imported corn from foreign countries. One hon. gentleman, for the purpose of strengthening his argument, made reference to the report and the resolutions which were carried by the Farmers' Institute in Toronto. Perhaps all hon. gentlemen in this House may not be as well acquainted with the designs of those institutes and their application as we in Ontario are. I regret to say that we have, unfortunately, found, during the last few years, that these farmers' institutes, like the grangers before them, which were organised ostensibly for a good purpose, but were turned into a political purpose, are being used in the interest of party politics and are suffering from the same baneful influence which destroyed the grangers. No better evidence of this could be had than the vote given the other day in Toronto. Forty-six members voted in harmony with the principles of free trade, and every man, I am told, was known to be a Reformer, and voted to strengthen the hands of the Reformers in this House by making a point against the Government. Twenty-three voted on the other side, and forty-six voted to carry this resolution for the purpose of embarrassing this Government. Unfortunately for the interests of the farmers in our Province, every attempt is being made by the Ontario Government to control those institutes. I have ever strongly protested against this since the time these institutes were organised. We see it, and know it, and regret it. We fear the same result awaits them which overtook the Grangers' Association, which died from inanition, because, when it was found they were nothing but political institutions, people would not attend them, and they soon came to an end through sheer lack of interest. In this way, the farmers' institutes are being destroyed to-day. They were hatched by the Central Institute, which is controlled by the Local Government. No hon. gentleman in this House, knowing as well as I do the constitution of those institutes, would take the arguments based on their proceedings as having any weight, controlled as these institutes are by political influences. The hon. gentleman said that at a meeting of the Central Farmers' Institute at Toronto, the proposition was made to take the duty off iron and other articles, and that it was carried by a majority of seventy to four; and he further said there was an attendance of one hundred. What became of the other twenty-six? They would not vote at all I presume, because, as they said, it was a political dodge, and not having the numbers to vote it down, they were powerless to give an expression of opinion as representing the great agricultural class. Therefore, I presume they withdrew. I have it from members of the institute who were there and voted against the resolution, that it was only a political dodge, which they were powerless to prevent, and they were obliged to let it go and enter their protest against it. So much for the argument with reference to the farmers' institutes. They are simply a tool in the hands of the Opposition. Should this resolution pass, it would effect great injury to the agricultural class, because there are four hundred of our farmers who sell the coarse grains, instead of feeding for export. It is, therefore, in their interest that coarse grains should be quoted at the highest possible figure. Those who intend to feed cattle can, by giving their attention to the regular means, raise feed enough on their farms to feed their cattle the whole year round. Any one can do it by cultivating on proper intelligent lines. We are spending money yearly to teach our farmers those lines, and are doing it successfully. As representing a very fruitful agricultural district of Ontario, I am satisfied that nine-tenths or forty-nine-fiftieths of the farmers do not want this resolution carried, but are strongly opposed to it, as they feel it would be against their best interests. I hope this resolution will be voted down, and that we will continue to carry out the policy we have been carrying out during the past eight or ten years in its entirety, and which has proved to be of the greatest value to our agricultural population.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I cannot allow this resolution to pass without saying a few words on it. I am sorry that the hon. gentleman who has taken his seat has misrepresented our farmers' institutes. Allow me to explain, and I claim to be better posted than that hon. gentleman—although he said there was not a gentleman in this House better posted than he—how these institutes are worked. I have been in his locality, and I do not know of any institute meeting which was better attended than the one held there. At that meeting the Conservatives numbered three to one Liberal. These farmers' institutes were established by the Ontario Government in each riding in which the county council would vote $25, the Ontario Government giving a like sum; and each institute was given two directors at first, of which one was a Conservative and the other a Reformer. In many of the institutes which I attended last winter, the president was a Conservative. I was appointed by the Agricultural College of Guelph to visit these institutes, and of those sent out, twenty-one gentlemen in all, eleven were Conservatives, nine Reformers and one doubtful; so that the Conservatives were in the majority. My instructions were not to introduce party politics, and I have never done so, unless they were first introduced by local men. The Government of Ontario do not want party politics discussed at those meetings; but it is almost impossible to discuss the important questions brought before them without bringing in politics. Let me show how politics come in. Last summer a gentleman visited some of those institutes and asked the farmers to give their consent to an increase of the duty of 50 cents per barrel on flour. This gentleman preface his remarks by saying he did not want to introduce politics, but only to have a little talk with the farmers about the duty on flour; but that naturally led to politics, and he was a strong Conservative. I say no institution was ever established in the Province of Ontario from which the farmers have derived greater benefit than from those institutes, which are educating our agricultural people, both Conservatives and Reformers. A gentleman who could take the position of the hon.

member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), who would make the statements which he has made, is speaking contrary to the facts in connection with those institutes to-day.

Mr. SPROULE. What was the complexion of the Central Institute which met in Toronto last year? It was forty-six Reformers to twenty-three Conservatives.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). At the outset, each farmers' institute chose two representatives to the Central Institute, and all the institutes I have ever been at chose one Conservative and one Reformer to go to Toronto; so, when the hon. gentleman says the majority are Reformers, he admits that the Conservative farmers will not take as much interest in their own profession as the Reformers do. In that case they can blame themselves. I was much amused to hear the statement that those who fed cattle had an interest opposed to the general interest of the agricultural community. We were told that four-fifths of the cattle exported were exported by brewers and distillers. I have been in that business myself, and for the last four years I have been to the old country, in connection with it, every summer, and I give that statement a most distinct denial. I say that more cattle are raised by the farmers of Ontario and sent to the old country than are sent by distillers and brewers. The teaching which the hon. gentleman desires to send out on this subject is not in accordance with the best interests of the agricultural community. He thinks that the Government should do all they possibly can to keep up the price of coarse grains. The Government has engaged an eminent gentleman to go into the country and educate the farmers on this subject—I mean Professor Robertson. What did he say at the time of the Dairymen's Convention in this city? He said he thought the time was past when farmers should export coarse grains out of the country—that they should, on the contrary, become importers of coarse grains and consume on the farm all products of that nature. Either the hon. gentleman must abandon the system of education he desires to give to the farmers of Ontario, or he must ask Professor Robertson to close his mouth. I was very much amused to hear the member for Compton (Mr. Pope) tell us that he can go to the United States and purchase meat there, and pay a cent a pound duty and bring it into Canada, and yet get it cheaper than he would if he purchased it from the farmers in this country. I have made a calculation to show a comparison between the cost of meat to the farmer, with free corn coming into Canada, and the cost with the sale of his barley and peas to the outside world, and I find the difference to be one cent a pound; that is we could raise beef and pork cheaper to that extent with free corn than we can at present, which would be a proof of the hon. gentleman's statement so far; but, when he stated that our farmers had by so much better a market for their produce than the farmers of the United States, I could not believe him. Any good beef animals which are fattened in the United States are sent to the old country markets. I have watched the markets closely for two years past, and I have found that prime beef cattle are a little higher in Buffalo than they are in Canada. One reason for that is that they are somewhat heavier, and perhaps they fatten them a little more with corn. From the Trade and Navigation Returns, I find that we exported to the United Kingdom last year only $3,674,000 worth of agricultural products. The United States is an agricultural country which competes keenly with us in all agricultural products, and yet we exported to that country $9,123,767 worth. This proves conclusively that the United States farmers must have a better market for their produce than we have, or they could not take that quantity of produce from us, and pay the duty on it besides. Then I turn to the returns in regard to the Province of Ontario, to which I have the honor to belong, and I find that $880,879 worth of agricultural produce is exported from that Province to the markets of Great Britain, against $7,720,457 worth to the markets of the United States; which is a conclusive proof that the farmers of the United States have a better market and realise higher prices for their produce than the farmers of Canada. Why otherwise should the United States take the produce of Ontario and pay the amount of duty which they have to pay at the present time? I hold that this resolution ought to receive the favorable consideration of the Government, and, amongst others, for one particular reason. The Government has sent out circulars informing the farmers that it is about to distribute ten thousand bushels of barley seed. Perhaps it may be doing this in the best interests of the agricultural community, and, if that is so, all the barley raised from that seed will be exported to the old country. It is stated that this distribution is for the purpose of our raising an article for the English market. The only way in which the Government can keep the farmer on a proper basis after that is to give him free corn. If we can get 50 cents a bushel in the Canadian market for barley, and if we could bring free corn into Canada—as we were told during this Session by an hon. member we could—for 30 cents a bushel, then we could receive 50 cents for 48 pounds of barley, and could purchase 56 pounds of corn for 30 cents. Besides, corn returns the fertility to the soil. It is a fertiliser as well as a food, and that is what the agriculturists of this country require in order to maintain the fertility of the soil and meet the keen competition which we have to meet in the British markets. I hold that, if the Government does not give us this little redress in the shape of free corn, seeing that they are going to interfere with the fertility of the soil by sending out this barley, they will be neglecting the interests of the agriculturists. It is not true that the farmers of Canada are, as a rule, opposed to free corn. I have conversed with the farmers in most of the western parts of Ontario—Conservatives and Reformers alike—and I have yet to meet a farmer who stated that it was not in the interests of the agricultural community to have free corn. I was surprised at the speech of the last hon. gentleman, who reproached my hon. friend who moved this resolution with inconsistency, and spoke about the distillers getting free corn if this resolution were adopted. The Government have already told us that the distillers are to get free corn, and my hon. friend (Mr. Fisher) has only tried to place the farmers on the same footing as the brewers and distillers. I hold that cheap production lies at the foundation of the success of the farmers of Canada to-day; and no man, who is thoroughly acquainted with the business of the farmers can show me any other means by which farming can be made successful and continue to be so than by the return to the soil of that which they have raised from it. I believe it is in the interest of the farmers that the Government have taken the step they have taken in finding a seed barley that will suit the English market; and, as I hold it, every enterprise that the Government enters into of that kind ought to be completed in the interest of the class to which it refers. Their scheme will be left incomplete if they do not take it for granted that the farmers want cheap food to feed to cattle in order to keep up the fertility of the soil, and to sell their fat cattle in a foreign market. By the Trade and Navigation Returns I find there are over 15,000,000 pounds of pork yearly imported into Canada at the present time, and I find no other export of any description to counterbalance that. This is something that the farmers of Canada ought to raise themselves, but as long as the farmers of the United States have the benefit of the corn which they can raise cheaply, while we are compelled to pay a duty upon it, just so long are they able to produce the article more cheaply than the farmers of Canada. Just as soon, I believe, as that corn is allowed to come in free, the farmers will take advantage of it. It would require something like 1,300,000 bushels of corn annually to raise the quantity of pork I have mentioned—because I think Professor Robertson told us in one of his addresses that it would require five pounds of corn to raise one pound of pork. It would require, therefore, to fatten the amount of pork that we get from the United States, about 1,300,000 bushels of corn to come into the Dominion, and if it comes in duty free I believe we will be able to meet the Americans on their own ground. I believe, in other respects, we can produce as cheaply as they can; but as long as we have to pay that duty upon corn it is impossible for us to produce as cheaply as they can or to compete with them in the markets of the world in the sale of either beef or pork. We must remember that conditions are continually changing. The Government have found that there is a change going on in Canada to-day, and they have seen that it was in the interests of the agricultural community to import a large amount of barley seed and to spread it amongst the farmers. I hold that the Government ought to go a little further and give the farmers an opportunity of retaining the fertility of the soil, and no action the Government can take will contribute to this very important object in the same degree as allowing the farmers to import corn free. There is no farmer in Canada to-day who looks after his own interest, and understands the interest of the agricultural community of this Dominion, and the keen competition we have to meet in the markets of the world, who does not know that cheap production lies at the foundation of our success, not only as individual farmers, but as an agricultural community; and as the welfare of the Dominion of Canada at the present time depends upon the success of the agriculturists no other relief that can be offered to the farmer will prove so effectual as to give him free corn.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the vote is taken I wish to say just one word. This motion has to be met by the Government in the same way and for the same reasons that the other motions were met that had to do with tariff matters, just on the eve of the Government bringing down a Tariff Bill.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 16) to confer on the Commissioner of Patents certain powers for the relief of Samuel May.—(Mr. Denison.)

Bill (No. 75) respecting the Calgary Water Power Company (Limited).—(Mr. Hickey.)

Bill (No. 80) respecting the Grand Trunk, Georgian Bay and Lake Erie Railway Company.—(Mr. Tisdale.)

Bill (No. 60) to incorporate the Rainy River and Boom Company.—(Mr. Dawson.)

Bill (No. 61) to amend the Act to incorporate the Lake Manitoba Railway and Canal Company.—(Mr. Ross.)

Bill (No. 82) to confirm an agreement between the Montreal and Western Railway Company and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.—(Mr. Desjardins.)

Bill (No. 84) to amend the Act to incorporate the Victoria and Sault Ste. Marie Junction Railway Company.—(Mr. Sutherland.)

Bill (No. 88) to incorporate the North Canadian Atlantic Railway and Steamship Company.—(Mr. Bryson.)

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 113) to authorise the Toronto Savings Bank Charitable Trust to invest certain funds (from the Senate).—(Mr. Small.)

SUPPLY.

Amendment of Mr. Fisher negatived on a division, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Harbors and Rivers, New Brunswick. $20,000

Mr. WELDON (St. John). What is the object of the ballast wharf and landing at Campbellton? Very few vessels go there now, I understand—not as many as in former years.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Altogether, it will cost a little less than $10,000. Thus far, $4,600 has been spent, and this vote of $5,000 is expected to complete it. The first idea was to connect it with a landing pier which was there, but it was found that the landing pier did not belong to us, and, therefore, we decided simply to build a ballast wharf.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Edgett's Landing, for which $2,000 is taken for a ballast wharf, is, I believe, in Albert County.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes. There has been expended $2,384, and this $2,000 will complete the work.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). In 1887, there was a vote of $450 in the Estimates to complete a wharf at Anderson's Hollow. I see in the Auditor General's Report that a balance was paid on that work of $3,356. I suppose that is finished?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I suppose so.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). What will the wharf on the Richibucto River at Kingston cost, and is it nearly finished?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There was a vote last year of $4,000, but there was less than $40 expended up to the 31st of December, so that that vote is still good, and, with the addition of $2,500, will complete the work.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Has any contract been made yet for that work?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; the work will yet have to be done by contract.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Was any application made for that wharf? I am informed that very few vessels go up the river at that point.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The memorandum I have states that the proposed wharf will consist of an approach from the bridge 63 feet in length and 20 feet in width, and a block of crib work built solidly which will answer as a wharf and pier. There will be from 11 to 20 feet of water along the outer base of the work at low water spring tide, which has a rise of four feet. A place for the deposit of ballast is much needed at Kingston, and by a judicious distribution of the ballast unloaded at the pier made ground can be had in a few years. The village of Kingston is situated on the river about six miles above its mouth; it has a population of about 1,000 souls, contains 28 places of business, and a large amount of general business is done there. At that point the river is about 1,200 feet in width, and is spanned by a bridge having a draw, which permits vessels to pass up the river a distance of 16 miles, and a smaller class of vessels can ascend a distance of 22 miles above Kingston.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). That river is perfectly well known to me, for I was born on its banks, and I lived there before the bridge was built. Very few vessels went above the bridge, although Kingston at that time did a larger business than it does to-day. There was quite a large amount of ship building done there. There are several wharves below the bridge, but above the bridge a pier can be of no use whatever except to benefit some private individual. To spend $6,500 on the wharf in question is perfectly useless, and yet the Government only gave $6,000 to Prince Edward Island, where wharves are required which would be of some practical benefit. I protest against this vote until we have some information as to its public utility. Wharves should only be built by the Government in places where vessels are in the habit of visiting, and not where vessels cannot reach. There is a wharf at St. Louis where no vessels can reach, and yet $1,877 have been expended on it. A boat drawing two feet of water cannot get to it. I would ask is that wharf completed?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There was no money voted for that last year.

Mr. WELSH. I know that, but I see in the Auditor General's Report that $1,800 have been spent on it.

Mr. WELDON (St. John).

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That money must be expended and the work completed.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I think this principle of building wharves in rivers which are not harbors is entirely foreign to the principle which should actuate the Government in giving these grants. Practically, this wharf which is built at Kingston is not in the harbor at all. I never knew of a square-rigged vessel going up there, although there was no bridge there at all. Occasionally a schooner may pass there, but it will not be used for any practical purpose at all. I protest against the people's money being squandered in this way when there are other places which really require wharves. With regard to St. Louis, that is a river which no vessel except a bark canoe could go into at all. There is practically no entrance to the river at all, although there may be, as stated last year, nine feet of water near the wharf. The river goes into a lagoon, and all that goes down are rafts and logs. Every deal manufactured on that river has to be floated down to Richibucto, and yet a wharf is put there for the purpose of piling on it deals and boards to accommodate some little mill. The hon. member for Kent (Mr. Landry) is here, and he can tell us what benefit, so far as navigation is concerned, can be derived from this expenditure.

Mr. WELSH. In the Estimates of last year some $400 was appropriated to build this wharf at the mouth of the Miminigash River, alluded to by my hon. friend, but it was withdrawn, and I supposed the work was abandoned. To-day, however, if I understand the Minister rightly, the work is in progress still. I fully corroborate all that the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) has said relative to this wharf at Kingston. Last year only about $8,000 were voted for all the wharves, piers and breakwaters at Prince Edward Island, although $100,000 would be required for that service. The Government are now about to give $150,000 to build a pier at Cape Tormentine, but I see no vote for a pier to connect Cape Tormentine with the Prince Edward Island Railway. There will have to be an equal amount of money spent on the Prince Edward Island side before that pier is of any use, as far as Prince Edward Island is concerned. The railway constructed by my hon. friend from Westmoreland runs down to Cape Tormentine, and he will corroborate my statement that that wharf and railway will be practically useless to Prince Edward Island until we have a harbor on the Cape Traverse side. I do hope that this useless expenditure of public money in building wharves and piers where the hon. member for St. John says they are useless, and I know his statement to be true, will not be persisted in. I would like to hear the hon. member for Kent explain the necessity for the expenditure both on the Kingston pier and the pier at the mouth of the Kouchibouac. I shall oppose the item until I hear from him.

Mr. KIRK. I have always understood that the policy of the Government was to build breakwaters or wharves on the sea coast where they were necessary to protect the lives and property of seafaring men. I never supposed this Government had adopted the policy of building wharves in rivers merely for the purpose of benefiting private individuals. The hon. members from Prince Edward Island and other places have explained that they have not had justice in this matter, but if there is any member in this House who has a right to complain of the course of the Government, it is myself. I represent a county which has a sea coast extending over 100 miles, yet if you take that sea coast, which, with all its indentations and bays, extends over 160 miles, you will find that not one dollar has been expended there during the past seven years in building breakwaters or wharves to protect the fishermen. The coast of the County of Guysboro' is well known by hon. gentlemen who know anything about it as one beset with dangers to the fishermen. We have, it is true, some superior harbors. We have some excellent harbors that do not require any improvement at all, but there are large portions of the county, where improvements are required in order to protect the fishing craft. I have applied from year to year for money to build breakwaters in several places that have been surveyed by Government engineers and reported upon, but I have applied in vain. I still hope that the Minister of Public Works will not altogether overlook the County of Guysboro'. The people there pay taxes as well as other people, and they have a right to fair consideration in the distribution of the public funds, which they never have had under this Government. I have frequently applied for a breakwater at Indian Harbor. The engineer has reported that it would cost $13,000 to construct a breakwater there, and the people there feel that the Government are entirely neglecting them. Some of them are thinking of removing from the place altogether. One of the most enterprising and wealthy shipowners and shipbuilders in the district is about to leave, or, perhaps, has left, and gone to live in another county, but I do not know whether he is going to remain in Nova Scotia at all. I heard he was going to the United States, and that simply for the want of a breakwater.

Mr. SPROULE. Will they get more breakwaters when they go there ?

Mr. KIRK. They will go where there are breakwaters. While the Minister of Public Works has thousands of dollars to expend in building wharves in rivers where no protection is required for craft or where no craft larger than a birch-bark canoe has ever gone, it is manifestly unjust that he should overlook such important public works as those I have spoken of in the county which I have the honor to represent.

Mr. ELLIS. The chief objection appears to be to the useless expenditure of money on the Richibucto River. There is no reason for the construction of a wharf there of the size which is mentioned. What is the position in regard to that wharf at St. Louis now ?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think it is completed.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). What was the cost of that wharf ?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot state that at present.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). There was a vote of $3,800, including a re-vote, and last year there was a vote of $1,000, which was dropped ; and by the Auditor General's Report, I find that $2,000 was expended. What is the use of that wharf ? It is simply used as a piling wharf, and not at all for purposes of navigation. As to the Kingston wharf, $4,000 was granted last year, and $2,500 is asked this year. How much does the hon. Minister expect to spend on that ?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is to complete the wharf.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). For purposes of navigation that wharf is practically useless. It is not in the harbor of St. John, but in the river. Of course, it is in tidal waters, but it is in the River Richibucto above the harbor, and very few vessels go above the bridge at all. There are plenty of wharves there below the bridge, there is a wharf which was built by the Local Government which has been there for years, and I should like to know what object is to be gained by the expenditure of $6,500 on that wharf, which is $500 more than is given altogether for Prince Edward Island.

Mr. WELSH. I would suggest that this item should stand over, until we hear from the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Landry).

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The member for Kent will be here in a few minutes, and we may go on with the remainder of the items in the meantime.

River St. John, River Des Chutes to Woodstock and above Grand Falls, including removal of obstructions between Fredericton and Woodstock ; also River Tobique—To complete.....	$1,000
--	---------

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I am glad to see that the Minister has reduced that vote. Last year it was $4,000, and the year before it was $6,000, and no one seemed to know where that money went. That vote may be required on that river, but I do not think it can be so much required as formerly, because the railway has largely superseded the use of boats on the River St. John. I think this amount will be ample.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman knows how bars are made and banks formed, and we have to keep that portion of the river open.

Mr. GILLMOR. Is this for dredging the river ?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No.

Mr. ELLIS. I object to this whole expenditure on the Tobique, the Madawaska or any other rivers above Grand Falls. These rivers run through the constituency of the Minister of Inland Revenue, and there is no object in this expenditure. The Tobique is merely a stream for driving lumber. There is no towpath at all. The Minister ought to look into the matter. It is shameful that money should be wasted in this way. There is a breakwater at the mouth of the Little River, just above Grand Falls, and you might as well put a breakwater at the mouth of the Rideau River here. It would be better to buy the only house there that this breakwater can protect, and take it away, than to expend this money.

Shippegan Breakwater.....	$10,000
---------------------------	----------

Mr. ELLIS. I would like to have some information about this work. It was begun about ten years ago, and is no nearer completion now than it was then. What was completed in the summer usually goes out in the winter. Really, I do not think the breakwater is wanted.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is a little late in the day to say that it is not wanted. It was begun on the 1st July, 1875, and down to the 1st July, 1889, there had been expended upon it $31,000. This sum is to complete it.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Last year, when the question was asked, the Minister said it would require only $20,000 to complete it.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. $10,000 last year and $10,000 this year make $20,000.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Last year my hon. friend alongside of me (Mr. Ellis) pointed out that the total shipping in 1887 at that point was 560 tons; total duty collected, $622; goods entered, $4,220; for that business we pay $40,000 for a wharf.

Harbors and Rivers, Maritime Provinces generally. $12,000

Mr. KIRK. Will the hon. Minister inform us where the $12,000 voted last year was expended?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. A small sum was spent at Halifax, others at Round Bay, Negro Island, Upper Salmon River, N.B., and several other places.

Mr. WELSH. The $12,000 will be expended in the same way this year. I would recommend the Minister to insert a clause excluding Prince Edward Island from all benefit.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There is no occasion for that, because Prince Edward Island never gets anything.

Mr. LOVITT. I would call the attention of the Minister to the Sandford Breakwater. I think he had better send somebody down to look after it. I am informed that if it was repaired immediately, it would not cost very much, but if left for some time it would cost a good deal more.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman wrote me about it the other day. I gave orders about it.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). For what was the amount spent on the Halifax Graving Dock?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It was to make an examination and report.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Did the company pay for that, or the Government?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Government paid, because it was for our own purpose to see whether the work was done in such a way that we might begin to pay the subsidies that we are bound to pay every year.

Mr. EISENHAUER. I would like to call the attention of the Minister to the breakwaters in the County of Lunenburg. Quite a number of those breakwaters and public wharves are sadly in need of repair, and if they are not looked after soon they will all go to pieces. A few years ago the Government took over the breakwaters from the Local Government, but little or nothing has been done on them since. It would be well to send an engineer down to look after those wharves and breakwaters, otherwise, in the course of a year or two, they will all go away.

Mr. ELLIS.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is the intention to have an engineer go round and visit them all. When there is not a special vote for a work, if some repairs are required, we will take it out of this vote. If there was something very extraordinary or very expensive, which was unforeseen and absolutely necessary, then we would ask a special warrant from the Governor General.

Mr. ELLIS. Has the Minister any information with regard to the breakwater in St. John harbor?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think a representation has been made to me, and if there has been, I am sure the engineer has gone to examine it. If there has been no representation, and if the hon. gentleman says that damage has been done, I will take a note of it and send an engineer.

Mr. ELLIS. I understand the sea runs right through it now.

Harbors and Rivers, Quebec. $131,150

Mr. LAURIER. Chicoutimi, St. Alphonse and Anse St. Jean, $3,800. This is an item that very often occurs.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is the only vote we have to keep these wharves in repair. Last year, I think, we voted $3,700, and the engineer reports that $100 more are required.

Mr. LAURIER. What is this item of $5,000, River St. Francis?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is for dredging the river, and in order to provide a channel five feet deep at the mills, and eight feet deep below the mills at the lowest stage of the water.

Mr. LAURIER. With respect to the item, $5,000, Three Rivers pier, I observe that items of this character occur very frequently.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Four times. In 1887 we expended $285; the following year, $17,480; in 1889; $2,715; last year, $1,000. More money was required to complete the work, and it will be finished this year.

Mr. LAURIER. Perhaps the hon. Minister would explain the item respecting Lévis Graving Dock.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is to make provision for carrying out certain improvements, for construction of fences, additional fire hose, and erection of a house for the dockmaster.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The Minister promised to give certain particulars with regard to receipts and expenditures connected with the dock.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think the hon. gentleman wanted to know the annual revenue and expenditure. For the year ending 31st December, 1888, the expenditure was $5,793, and the revenue $2,349, being an excess of expenditure over revenue of $3,444. Last year the expenditure was $9,002 and the revenue $17,499, an excess of revenue over expenditure of $8,497.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). That arises from the Polynesian having been there for so long a time.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There were several vessels.

Mr. SCRIVER. Under the item of $1,000 for general repairs and improvements, I should like to ask the Minister if his attention has been called to the fact that the wharf of St. Anicet, in the County of Huntingdon, is very much in need of repair. I am informed that, if it is not repaired, the steamer Bohemian, of the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company, will not be able to make its usual calls there during the coming season.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Is it a Government wharf?

Mr. SCRIVER. I suppose so.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will make a note of it.

Piers and Harbors, Ontario..... $125,500

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). How much has the Toronto Harbor works cost up to the present, and how much will they cost?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. From the 1st July, 1875, to the 1st July, 1887, the cost was $536,000. In 1888, $19,000; in 1889, $30,000; and in 1890, $27,000. The vote was only $20,000 last year, but we have received a contribution from Toronto of $10,000, and of course we take from their share when required. $50,000 are now asked to go on with the work, and I am told, by my engineer, that it will likely need $100,000 more.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Will the works at the eastern portion of the bay be then complete, so that we will not be expending $40,000 or $50,000 a year?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We have done some dredging, in order to get the necessary depth of water at the eastern gap, but it is not so deep as at the western gap. The Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company's boats go by the eastern gap, and when I was up there, last year, I saw a number of vessels passing there without any difficulty. We have to guarantee the safety of the channel by piers on both sides, and the question is now under consideration whether we will be obliged to make deeper dredging, in order to put the cribs at the proper level. That may cost a little more than was intended, but it is better to expend it now than to have those piers, perhaps, destroyed later. We want to make a good job of it, in order that the work which has been done so successfully up to the present, may be completed.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). What depth have you in the eastern gap?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Twelve feet, and the channel will be 250 feet in width. The depth of the other channel is, I think, 14 feet.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). The hon. Minister did not give me the answer I desire. I wish to know whether we may regard this as a final completion of the work, or whether we will be asked to spend large sums of money on it every year?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. According to the statement made by the engineer, we will require $100,000 more than this vote; but I do not think that will be sufficient, and I believe we will need $25,000 or $30,000 more than this estimate. However, I cannot speak as to that precisely.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I wish the Minister would tell me how much it will cost, annually, to keep this harbor in repair, after he gets this work done?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The work will be new, and I hope it will stand good for several years. It will be necessary to keep it in repair, the same as all other work, from time to time, and if we are unfortunate enough to have a big gale and damage done, of course we will have to repair it. Just now, an hon. gentleman has very kindly told me that the Negro Point breakwater, at St. John, had been damaged considerably. If I had stated last year that that required only some small repairs, I would be found fault with, because I could not see what Providence was keeping in reserve for us in that way. It is impossible for me to say how much it will cost to keep this work in order.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I asked the hon. Minister what was likely to be the ordinary expenses annually, of keeping the work in proper repair, provided it does not meet with any extraordinary accident? I think the hon. Minister ought to be able to tell me that.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will take a note of that, and try to give the hon. gentleman an answer later on.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). What has the harbor at Little Current cost, and how much will it cost in the future?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Up to the 31st of December last, the works there had cost $61,370. We have still a balance from last year's vote, which, with the $5,000 we are asking now, will carry on the work next year. It is intended by submarine blasting to increase the width of the steamboat channel from 120 to 300 feet, and to make it 16 feet deep at low water. This is necessary to enable vessels to pass there with safety at all times. It is a very important work, as the hon. gentleman knows, and it will require more money to carry it on.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Is the hon. Minister able to say how much money will be required to complete it?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot say. My chief engineer, before he was obliged to leave by illness—he is better, I am pleased to say—told me that $15,000, perhaps more, would be required to complete the work.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). What about Midland harbor? A considerable amount of money has been expended there.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, nearly $36,000 has been expended there. The Grand Trunk Railway Company also contributed $10,000 and the town of Midland $5,000, in 1880, and lately they have each contributed $5,000 more.

Mr. O'BRIEN. This Midland harbor is a work of very great value to the whole trade of Georgian Bay; and, as it has been very largely done by private enterprise, I think the Government are justified in all the expenditure they make upon it. At the same time, I should like to ask the Minister to take into consideration the application made to him for the deepening of the inside channel of Georgian Bay, which is one of the feeders of Midland, Penetanguishene, Parry Sound and various other ports on the Georgian Bay, and the amount of money asked to be expended upon it is very small compared with the amounts expended in other parts of the country. It is a work of very great importance to the lumber interest, because all the barges engaged in that growing trade pass through that channel. The depth is so shallow that if there happens to be low water at any time, many vessels are obliged to take the outside course, which is very much more dangerous in rough weather.

Mr. DAWSON. I can join my hon. friend in saying that it is a matter of great importance that the channel between the mainland and Manitoulin Island should be improved. It affords safety to vessels in the fall of the year when the weather is stormy, because it is a channel that can always be travelled. I would certainly urge the Government to bestow some expenditure on that channel, which is of very great importance to all the trade of Georgian Bay.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Before this vote is passed, I wish to state that early in the Session I moved for a return for some information in reference to the expenditure of money on a survey of Kettle Creek, between Port Stanley and St. Thomas, but up to the present time I have been unable to get any information with reference to it. I would not, of course, complain of an appropriation for a survey, if there was any reasonable excuse for it; but I have no hesitation in saying that it was quite uncalled for, and the Government ought to have known that there was no possibility of constructing a canal between those two points. The only object or motive which could have inspired the action of the people at St. Thomas, or the Government, in the matter, was the desire to make political capital. At the same time the Government knew very well, as I have time and again represented to them, that the harbor at Port Stanley was rotting and wasting away, and the traffic to that harbor on the lake was becoming impaired, because they neglected, blindly and determinedly, to pay any attention to the representations made, and refused to spend a single dollar on that harbor, where an expenditure of money would have been of some use. But when they found that they were unable, by building the harbor, to secure the election of the defeated candidate there, they promoted him to the bench to do him honor for having had the representation made to them which induced them to send engineers up to make a survey for an impossible work. What I complain of is that, notwithstanding the representations which have been made to the Government from London, St. Thomas, and other points, that the harbor at Port Stanley was decaying, and although only a few days ago a petition was presented to them urging that they should do something to preserve that harbor, I find them treating with indifference the actual necessities of the people of that locality. Has the Minister the information I moved for some time ago, and can he tell me what was the expenditure on these surveys? I would further ask him, upon what information and what grounds he sent his engineer, last summer, to make the survey, and what was his object? I require this information and the locality requires it. They look upon the survey and the proposition to make a canal as one of the most absurd things the Government could possibly do, although I am aware the Government is capable of doing many absurd things.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I could have told the hon. gentleman from the beginning, but I was so glad to hear him refresh my memory that I did not want to interrupt him. All the information I have will come down Monday. I inquired about the return, and they said it would be ready by Monday.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I am not to get any information now, but the item is to pass, and perhaps I will be told, as I have been every Session, to wait a little longer and there may be something in the Supplementary Estimates. I have waited without receiving any return for my patience, and I am now tired of waiting. Port Stanley and Port Burwell have been grossly neglected, and yet the Government can spend $6,000 on a public park for the convenience and comfort of the people of Ottawa. The Government have no right to squander the people's money in this way in Ottawa, while harbors in different parts of the country are being allowed to go to ruin for want of a little expenditure on them. If I should find there is nothing in the Estimates for these ports I shall call attention to it, not only here, but in the county I have the honor to represent.

Mr. CHARLTON. I was not here when the item for Port Owen Sound was passed, and I would like to have some information with regard to that vote.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The object of this vote and the vote last year, and the contribution by the town of $20,000, is to enlarge the harbor. Large steamers go there during the season of navigation. The harbor will be enlarged by taking possession of a certain piece of land for a site, to which the town has contributed $20,000, and we are going on with the work. The contract has been given. A basin is to be excavated on the right side of the river, going up. There will be a clear passage, of nearly uniform width, of about 300 feet, and a depth of 18 feet. Between the dry dock and the turning basin, a distance of 1,500 feet has to be provided where the water-way is now 150 feet wide for half the distance, and 300 feet over the remainder.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). If the hon. Minister will turn to the Auditor General's Report, page B-228, he will find for Goderich that David Porter was paid for losses sustained in connection with his contract, $1,378. What was that paid for?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This work was undertaken at the time, on a report made that we might open a new channel in order to give an outlet to the river which empties into the harbor, and later on it was found, by the engineer, that it would be a heavy expenditure and a risky matter. We, therefore, stopped the contract, and paid the contractor for the articles he had bought.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Am I to understand there was a contract for the work and tenders offered?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). After the engineer had made a full report to the Government as to the necessity of the work?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We paid him 5 per cent. on $10,500, as we had to indemnify him for giving up his contract, and we paid him for wood and other things. David Porter is a contractor who has executed a number of works for the Government.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Does he live in Goderich?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not think so.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Certainly, the Government must know.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot keep that in my memory, with all my good-will.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Good-will is very well, but a little information would be very much better.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not see exactly what is required, but, if the hon. gentleman will tell me the object of knowing where Mr. David Porter lives, I will take a note of it, and give him the information to-morrow.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like to know on what principle this loss is calculated. I see there are 60,000 feet of pine timber at $2.50 a thousand, and below I find 89,000 feet at $3. In what way does the hon. gentleman get at those figures?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot say exactly; that is done by the engineer of the Department.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I take it for granted that the pine timber cost more than $2.50 a thousand, so I do not understand exactly what it means, and I should like to know.

Mr. CHARLTON. The amount of $2.50 and $3 a thousand for pine is about from one-fifth to one-eighth of its value.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will obtain the information and bring it down.

Kingston, N.B.—Wharf on Richibucto
River—To complete $2,500

Mr. LANDRY. I am sorry I was not in when this question arose, and the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) spoke about it. When this item came up last year the hon. member for St. John took exception to it, and said this:

“Vessels never go up there. I know that vessels built up there came down passing through the draw, but I never heard of any going up the river, except small schooners carrying rigging for the vessels built there.”

In two or three different places he made the statement that vessels never went up there. The Minister of Public Works promised to give information on concurrence. I asked a gentleman living at Kingston, who is well known to my hon. friend (Mr. Weldon), Mr. William Brait, whose veracity cannot be doubted, to give me that information, and that was given in the House on concurrence, and my hon. friend from St. John said nothing about it. The information was to the effect that ninety-four vessels had passed up through the draw of the Kingston bridge, where my hon. friend had asserted he never knew of a vessel going up, and that ninety-four vessels had gone down laden. If my hon. friend's information on other matters is not better than it is on this, I think the Committee would be very sorry to receive his statements as correct. This wharf is simply to be built inside the bridge.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). What sort of vessels were these that went up through the draw?

Mr. LANDRY. Large and small.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that a square-rigged vessel has ever gone up through that draw?

Mr. LANDRY. I think so. I know that large vessels go up to the bridge, though I have never myself seen them pass through the draw; but I am satisfied that they go through to the opposite side of the bridge, and this wharf is intended to accommodate those vessels. The Richibucto River is a large river, and the Kouchibouguac River is wider, though perhaps not so deep. I think this vote for the St. Louis wharf was taken in 1888, and not last year. When the discussion came up last year, the wharf was under contract, and was actually being built. The vote in 1888 was $3,800. The contract was let for $1,800, and the wharf was built for a little over that sum; so that, while it was apparently a large vote at first, the expenditure only amounted to something over $1,800, and the wharf has been completed for about a year. I presume the vote of last year was a revote. All I can say is that a very large majority of the people of that place had petitioned for that wharf as being important to the locality, that I made representations to the Department, that the Department sent their engineer there, and I suppose he reported to them and satisfied them that it was a necessary public work. With this information before them, the Department very properly asked for tenders. As to Kingston, I think the hon. gentlemen will see that their information was not correct in view of the telegram which was sent by Mr. Brait, showing that the business there justifies the building of this wharf.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I thought the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Landry), knowing the opposition which was made last year to these two grants, would have been prepared now to give us some further information on the subject. I know that when I lived in that locality vessels did not come there at all, and I will venture to say that if there are ninety-four vessels coming there now, they are as small a class of vessels as can be found, and they come there perhaps for cordwood and bark. I will venture to say that my hon. friend, the member for that county, never saw a square-rigged vessel above that bridge. Even admitting that ninety-four vessels come there of all sorts and sizes, of what use is this wharf? They go up the river. If they are going to Kingston, there are plenty of wharves below the bridge. There is the old Jardine wharf and the public wharf below the bridge. They are not obliged to go there at all. Then, when they do go above the bridge, where do they go? They go up the river, twelve or fifteen miles further, to get cordwood or tanbark. What is the good of this wharf? Simply to enable them, perhaps, to land cordwood or tanbark, or the parties who are bringing it down. Are there not plenty of wharves below the bridge? Just a little distance below the bridge there is a public wharf where square-rigged vessels can lie, and then the old Jardine wharf below that. There is more wharf accommodation in Kingston than would supply all Kingston is worth; yet here we are asked to pay $6,000 or $7,000 for a wharf which would be practically useless, except for the benefit of a few individuals who may bring down cordwood or tanbark from the head of the river and pile it there for the purpose of taking it away later on. What benefit is it to the public? My hon. friend says that people petitioned for it. You can get a petition for anything; but, I think, the Government are bound to see whether the public work asked for is to be of any benefit to the public. Then with regard to the St. Louis wharf, on which my hon. friend says they spent $1,800. In 1888, when the Government asked for $3,800, I asked the Minister where St. Louis was. He said that it was in the County of Kent, and it was a general wharf for shipping purposes. St. Louis was a large parish. I did not know where it was situated until I had an opportunity of knowing it the Session before last. The bar at the mouth of the Kennebecasis River would prevent any vessel of any size from passing up it. Except for small boats or a scow, that river is only used for floating down deals that have been sawn in the mills at the head of the stream, or logs that are cut to be sawn in the mills at Richibucto. There is no necessity for a wharf at that point, and the money spent there is simply thrown away. I venture to say that out of these two wharves the Government will not get enough revenue to pay the salary of a man to collect it. My hon. friend falls back upon a statement made last year by the Minister of Finance in regard to a telegram sent him by Mr. Brait. I would like to have the Minister examine the class of vessels that go through that draw. The fact of the matter is, the vessels do not use that wharf, but they go 12 or 15 miles up the river.

Mr. LANDRY. I did not seek for any further information in relation to the St. Louis wharf, because the wharf was under contract and was being built when the discussion came on, and the money had already been voted. Neither did I seek any further information as to Kingston, because when the discussion came on the hon. member for St. John, who had made the objection, as soon as the information was given, made no further reply to it whatever, and I thought it satisfied him; therefore I did not seek for any further information. The hon. gentleman says we must see, when a public work is asked for, whether it is a public necessity. Well, this wharf is like all other wharves. We knew and asserted that it was needed, and what more could we do? It is for the public generally, and not for private individuals. A large number of vessels use it; the people of Kingston themselves use it. As for a wharf below the bridge, it could be of no use whatever, for vessels go through this draw in order to get above the bridge. It is the wharf above the bridge that is of use to vessels. It is true that I never happened to see a ship go through this draw, but I have seen them lying there. They are towed through the draw, and the last two or three years there was a large number of vessels from Richibucto going up to the Kingston bridge. I have seen them going backwards and forwards, although I never watched them going through the draw, but my information is that they do go through the draw. I have seen them towed up and down on several occasions for the last two or three years.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). My hon. friend says he has seen them towed up from the entrance of the harbor past Richibucto up to Kingston. I have been there long before the hon. gentleman ever knew the County of Kent at all, and sixty years ago vessels came up a little below the site of the present bridge, but beyond that they never went. My hon. friend says that because ninety-four vessels go there they must have a wharf. Last year when I discovered that the wharf was above the bridge, I then asserted that these vessels never went there at all. The first bridge was built there without a draw, in 1847. There was no draw in it until a new bridge was erected a few years ago, for the reason that there were shipyards above where ships were built.

Mr. WELDON (St. John).

Mr. LANDRY. Your own friends there wanted it.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I do not care who wanted it. I say that my hon. friend has come here and asked for this vote, and the Minister ought to show this House what public benefit is to be derived from this wharf. To expend $7,000 upon that wharf will be simply throwing the money away. Still it is to be given, because, I suppose, my hon. friend is on that side of the Speaker and not on this side.

Mr. LANDRY. I think it is exceedingly unfair for the hon. gentleman to make an assertion of that kind. I do not know myself whether that makes a great deal of difference.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If you were over here, you would find it did.

Mr. LANDRY. It may be so. If hon. gentlemen opposite cannot get anything when it is needed, I sympathise with them, but surely they cannot blame us when we get an appropriation for a public work that is needed. If they represented more fairly the public sentiment, perhaps they would obtain a little more, but they ought not to find fault with us because members on this side obtain some necessary public works. And, moreover, I do not admit that the constituencies represented by hon. members on this side of the House receive more public money than do constituencies represented by hon. gentlemen opposite. The constituency represented by the hon. member for the City and County of St. John (Mr. Weldon) has received, I venture to say, 100 per cent., 200 per cent., or even 300 per cent. more than my constituency. It may be that the constituency does not receive it on the recommendation of my hon. friend; perhaps he does not represent the sentiment of the county, and the Government give the patronage elsewhere. Let hon. gentlemen opposite criticise the fact that they do not get the patronage, if they like, but it is unfair for those hon. gentlemen to criticise public works, because they are not able to control the patronage of their constituencies. The County of St. John has received more than my constituency, since the last election, by 100 per cent.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) I am astonished to hear the hon. gentleman talk in this manner. The vote now under discussion is for a wharf to be built above the bridge where there is, technically, navigation, but where my hon. friend (Mr. Weldon) has shown that vessels do not go, and we are asked to vote $7,000 for this work. It is a wharf which will be used simply for piling tanbark, and yet, the hon. gentleman has attempted to make this Committee believe that the same measure of justice is meted out to the constituencies represented by hon. members on this side of the House. What is the fact?

Was it not shown yesterday, that for Prince Edward Island, a Province surrounded entirely by water, a Province situated in the middle of the whole fishing fleet, where more vessels enter the harbors, five thousand times over, than enter the place for which the hon. gentleman is receiving $7,000 for a wharf, and for the whole Island, wharves, breakwaters, piers and harbors, only $6,000 were voted, and from these wharves the Government receive from $1,000 to $1,500, reducing the whole amount received by the Island to about $5,000. We have the harbor of Cascumpec, a harbor of refuge for the American and the Provincial fishing fleets, the only one on the north side of the Island, except Rustico, which can hardly be so considered, and the Government have been dredging the rock from the bottom of that harbor and emptying it in the channel, thus making the condition worse than before. The sum of $2,000 has been voted yearly, but it was not sufficient to make the expenditure any benefit. On the south side of the Island there is Wood Island breakwater, which has been lying for years half completed, and the people for a radius of 30 miles have no harbor, except the artificial harbor which is being constructed, and not a dollar can be got. I cannot get a cent for any wharf in the Island from the Government; yet the hon. gentleman (Mr. Landry) has the hardihood to say that we are not treated wrongfully. I say we are treated shamefully. I assert that the administration of the Department of Public Works is a scandal and a disgrace to this Government; and I have no hesitation in using that language. It was proved conclusively last night. The Minister of Public Works knew nothing of the expenditure in that Province; he did not know that the contractor had been allowed in Cascumpec harbor to throw rock taken out of the channel again into the harbor. An expenditure of $10,000 or $15,000 is made on useless work, while we can get nothing. No attempt is made to do justice. Wharves which were taken over by the present Government, as was shown by the hon. member for Prince (Mr. Perry), are going adrift; others are rotting, and no attempt is made to protect the public works existing, much less to give the accommodation the people require. We do not want to build wharves on which to pile tanbark, but we do want harbors of refuge for the immense fishing fleet visiting us every year. We want breakwaters, and the channels at the entrances to harbors deepened, for the protection of the whole Provincial fleet, not for any local fishing boats alone; yet we are denied even that request. And why? The Minister of Public Works cannot deny that these works are necessary, but he refuses to grant our request simply because the people of the Island, in the exercise of their rights, chose to return six representatives who are not in sympathy with his policy. I intend, at a later stage, to bring up this matter at greater length and to show the disgraceful way in which Prince Edward Island has been treated in the matter of public works, but I cannot sit and hear an hon. gentleman, in the face of the debate of last night, and in face of the fact that the whole appropriation for Prince Edward Island is $6,000, $1,000 of which is returned in the shape of fees, tell the Committee that justice is being done, or that the semblance of justice is being done.

Mr. GILLMOR. I think, in the public interest, the hon. gentleman who represents the constituency in which these $7,000 are to be expended, and who asked the Government to make that appropriation, should be able to give to this Committee, a distinct statement as to why public money should be appropriated in that way, and what business is being done at that wharf. Am I to understand that the policy of the Government is to build a wharf in my hon. friend's county on which to pile cordwood and tanbark? In my county we have wharves, but they are private property, and are maintained at the expense of the owners. The Minister should be satisfied that it is in the public interest to construct the wharf in question before he recommends this appropriation. Either the hon. gentleman or his assistant, who has, no doubt, visited the place, should know what trade was expected to be done from that wharf. The hon. member for Kent (Mr. Landry) is a very fluent talker, and he said a great deal, but he has not yet told us what is expected to be loaded or unloaded there, what trade is carried on right above the bridge. If it was to be placed elsewhere, I could understand it. I represent a county on the seaboard, where milling and commerce are carried on, and where passengers are being landed at the different seaports; yet we have no public wharf there, not one to which the Government gives a cent, and, in fact, not a cent of money has been appropriated in my county for many years. Let the hon. gentleman who represents the County of Kent, who must know what is the need of a wharf and what business is being done, tell us whether the people will pile tanbark or cordwood on the wharf, or whether it will be used for the shipment of potatoes. The hon. gentleman must know these facts, and he ought to have satisfied the Government regarding them before they agreed to give an appropriation; indeed, it cannot be possible that the hon. gentleman is ignorant of the facts connected with this matter.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The hon. member for Kent (Mr. Landry) argues that this is a necessary work. I take issue with him. As regards any works that are essential, I am prepared to support appropriations in their favor. With regard to this very harbor, I have never objected to an appropriation for improving its entrance, and I have supported appropriations made. These, however, appear to have been dropped out this year. The hon. gentleman spoke of justice being done to hon. members on this side of the House. Let him compare some of the counties. An appropriation of $10,000 is given for a wharf in Restigouche, and if the hon. member for Northumberland were present he would no doubt be able to show that that work was unnecessary. The County of Gloucester obtains $20,000 for a breakwater. The large County of Northumberland, including Miramichi River, gets nothing, and the application of the hon. member (Mr. Mitchell) for a small pier at Neguac was treated with utter disdain, and no attempt was made to meet his views. Then, with regard to my hon. friend from Kent (Mr. Landry), we find that the building of one wharf, at a place where none but small boats ever go, cost $1,800 or $2,000. This wharf is built close to the bridge, and I maintain that it is not a necessary public work. It is incumbent upon the Government to satisfy this House that this was such an important public work that an appropriation out of public money should be made for it.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). My hon. friend from Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor) asked the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Landry) why he had recommended the Government to expend that money, and I think that the hon. gentleman should give some explanation. If the Government have not the information, the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Landry) ought to have it in his possession. We will be satisfied if he can show us that this money was for a useful public work, but we are not satisfied that a wharf should be built for the convenience of a private individual, or a private company. I do not think it was fair for the hon. member for Kent to tell the hon. member for St. John that his city gets an equal proportion of public money. My hon. friend is not the only representative from St. John in this House at the present time. It is true that, for the first Session or two, the city and district of St. John did not get as many favors from the Government as it is getting now, but there are, perhaps, two representatives from that city, and it may be on account of one of the representatives giving aid to the Government which induces them to bestow the patronage upon that constituency. I think it was hardly fair for my hon. friend from Kent to say, that because there had been certain moneys expended in and about St. John, that was due to my hon. friend (Mr. Weldon). There is some other reason for it, which my hon. friend would likely know, just as well as I do.

General Repairs, Harbors and Rivers,
Manitoba.....$3,000

Mr. WATSON. I wish to ask the Minister where he intends to spend that money?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is no special place named. This money is to cover the costs of small repairs in different parts of the Province, and also to pay for improvements on wharves which have no special vote. It is also to pay for the expenses and salaries of officers who are employed to report on the public works to be done in the Province.

Mr. WATSON. Is it the intention of the Government to make a survey of St. Ann's Rapids on the Red River?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That has not yet been decided upon. There was a survey made there some two or three years ago, but the works required were so extensive that the Government did not think they could go on with them. The matter is being examined into now, at the representation of deputations, some of which were accompanied by my hon. friend (Mr. Scarth), but I am not sure what we may do there. We may remove some boulders or not. Some say it would damage the navigation elsewhere if we did so. The matter is to be examined, but I am not in a position, just now, to say what will be the action of the Government.

Mr. WATSON. This is a matter which the Minister of Public Works ought to give his attention to immediately. It has been hanging for ten years, and year after year, for the last six or seven years, promises have been made to deputations, but nothing has been done. It is of the utmost importance, not only for the city of Winnipeg itself, but for all the country to the south of the city on the Red River, that this should be done. The navigation of the Red River is good for vessels drawing five feet of water, for 260 miles above the international boundary line. It is navigable for river boats from Winnipeg to the international line, and for lake boats, up to the commencement of these rapids. These rapids extend about ten miles, on which there is only about fifteen feet of a fall or a foot and a half per mile, but they are full of boulders which are dangerous to navigation. A very careful estimate has, I believe, been made which shows that for about $300,000 the rapids could be made navigable for boats drawing five feet of water. If that is the case, I think the Government would be justified in making the expenditure. There is a large trade in lumber, stone and fish there from Lake Winnipeg, and not only that, but this route brings a large portion of the Saskatchewan district into communication with Winnipeg. There is about a thousand miles of navigable water here, with the exception of these rapids, and if the obstacles to their navigation were removed, it would be an immense advantage to the city of Winnipeg and to the surrounding country generally. It is estimated that half a million worth of wood would be brought down by that route, and if it could be distributed at the different towns along the river, the saving to consumers of fuel would be about $200,000 a year. The shipments of lumber there are between 10,000,000 and 12,000,000 feet per annum, on which there would be a saving of $3 or $4 a thousand, if it could be delivered by boats at Winnipeg or at a point where there would be railway competition. This matter was brought to the attention of the Minister on several occasions. Some six years ago a very large deputation waited upon him, and went home feeling satisfied, from his reception of them, that this work was going to be proceeded with, in the near future; but nothing has been done yet. The people of Manitoba, like those of the other Provinces, are commencing to doubt the sincerity of the hon. Minister of Public Works, who always receives deputations in a very kind and courteous manner, and leaves them under the impression that their purpose will be served. I did believe, some years ago, that the Minister intended to do this work, but I have some doubts now, after visiting him with all these deputations from the west and hearing his sweet promises. It is in the interest, not only of the Province of Manitoba, but of the whole Dominion, that this work should be done. A great deal of the timber around Lake Winnipeg is being manufactured into lumber, and there is a large amount of refuse which could be used for fuel if it could be transported by water; but as it is now, it only goes to waste; it is left in the woods to rot, and is the cause of very extensive fires, which destroy large tracts of green timber. It cannot be said of Manitoba, as it has been said of Prince Edward Island, that the Government have not sufficient supporters from that Province, as a reason why these improvements have not been made, because four out of the five representatives of Manitoba support the Government; but it appears to me that if they would bring such pressure on the Government as they should, this work would be done in the near future.

Mr. WELDON (St. John).

Mr. SCARTH. I do not know what the hon. member for Marquette means when he says that if the hon. members from Manitoba who support the Government would bring such pressure as they should on the Government, the work would be done. I think the hon. Minister of Public Works will admit that the members from Manitoba supporting the Government, have brought every pressure they reasonably and honestly could bring to induce him to do what the hon. member for Marquette urges with regard to dredging Red River.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Hear, hear.

Mr. SCARTH. I myself have, time and again, called on the Minister with deputations from Manitoba, and we had the Minister's promise that he would look into the matter, and, after doing so and ascertaining what the expense would be, would do what he could in that direction. Not longer than two weeks ago, I visited him in company with the secretary of the Board of Trade of Winnipeg, and I have also sent him a petition from the City Council of Winnipeg in favor of this work. I believe these gentlemen have now come to the conclusion that an expenditure of $50,000 would remove the boulders, and give a depth of five feet in the river between Winnipeg and the lake; and we have pressed the Ministry strongly to let us have that $50,000 to improve the navigation of the river to that extent. I can corroborate everything the hon. member for Marquette has said about the importance of this work being done in the interest of Winnipeg and the whole country thereabout. What he says about the fish, lumber and cordwood trade is perfectly true, and I hope the hon. Minister of Public Works will take into consideration this year the pressure that has been brought upon him, and will give us enough at least to remove the boulders.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. member for Marquette says that he has his doubts now about my wish, at the time he and others came to me a few years ago, to go on with the work or to ask a vote for it. Of course, I cannot give confidence to the hon. gentleman; but I received him and his friends politely and civilly, which, I suppose, was right. He supposed that my civility meant that the work would be done, but I promised nothing, and I will not promise. In such cases I look into the matter, and if I find, after obtaining all the proper data which I can obtain from my officers, that the work can be done, I go to my colleagues, and if they think as I do, I put a vote in the Estimates and afterwards come to Parliament for the money. But I must say that when I saw the reports about this work, that it would cost at least $300,000, I concluded that it could not be done then, at all events. I spoke of it to my colleagues, and they were of the same opinion. Since then, as my hon. friend (Mr. Scarth) has said, he came with others and presented new petitions to show that our friends in Manitoba thought they might content themselves with requesting that the boulders should be removed, at a cost of $40,000 or $50,000. That is a much more moderate sum, although it is still a large one. But when I saw that, I thought I would certainly consider the matter, and see whether my colleagues would find that the financial position of the country would allow that and other works to be undertaken now. If they say so, I shall, of course, have great pleasure in complying with the request made to me. I know it is an important work for that region, but I cannot make a promise now; I have no right to do it without the consent of my colleagues.

Mr. WATSON. I happened to be present with the deputation the hon. gentleman speaks of, and I think the removal of the boulders will be of great assistance. That scheme of improving the navigation of the river was suggested four or five years ago. One proposal was to remove the boulders, another to build wing dams, and another to build locks. The locks would cost half a million dollars; the wing dams would cost some $300,000. I do not know that the Minister has actually yet made a survey, or knows what the work of removing the boulders will cost. The estimate of $300,000 was made by the city engineer of Winnipeg. I do think that the hon. Minister of Public Works has neglected doing his duty in regard to this matter, which has been brought to his attention so often. He should not be surprised that I do not think he intends to do this work even now, because I do not see an item in the Estimates for it. The hon. gentleman received the last deputation long before these Estimates were down, and he had an opportunity of putting a vote in them for the work.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman knows that he could not see a vote in these Estimates. He knows that if the Government wish to ask for that money from Parliament it could not appear in these Estimates.

Mr. WATSON. Will this $50,000 appear in the Supplementary Estimates?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We will see that when they come down.

Fraser River..... $20,000

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is in the direction of completing the work we have undertaken there. We had to close certain channels to throw all the water into one channel, and the result is that now very large vessels can go up the river. We will require $20,000 more to complete the work.

Mr. TROW. Where is that dredging done?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. At the mouth of the river, where the different channels are.

Harbors and Rivers generally..... $6,000

Mr. ROBERTSON. Does the hon. Minister allow his wharfingers to pay for the repairs out of the wharfage?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. They are appointed by the Marine and Fisheries Department. We have given orders that all the money paid to the wharfingers must go into the public treasury, and not into the repairs; and the wharfingers are required, when any repairs are needed, to send us a report so as to save the expense of sending an officer to examine and make a statement.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I see that the amount received for wharfage at Moncton, P.E.I., is only $182. Before those wharves were taken over by the Dominion Government, the Local Government used to receive over $300 revenue from them, and there were then only about half the wharves there are now. Either the collectors' accounts are kept in a very bad condition or the trade has fallen off very much, which would be a sad commentary on the National Policy. I do not believe that the trade has fallen off to that extent.

Mr. FOSTER. The amount of $182.97 is the amount collected over and above the salary of the wharfinger, who is allowed so much in fees. In this case his allowance would be about $150 or $200. The wharfingers receive a percentage of the fees, which differs with the different wharves, and an Order in Council fixes the amount.

Mr. PLATT. Looking through this interesting volume, this is about the only item I can find that probably is intended to reach the much neglected harbor at Picton, County of Prince Edward. There are two Prince Edwards, and my county is likewise an island. It is not the Prince Edward Island we have heard so much about the last two or three evenings, but there seems to be two islands of the same name and in the same relative position, so far as the distribution of patronage by the Government is concerned. The Minister of Public Works is aware that a large delegation has impressed upon his attention the necessity of doing something to the harbor at Picton. He promised to send an engineer to examine the harbor and report, and I believe an engineer did go there. Has he sent in his report, and does it give any encouragement to the hon. Minister to spend some money on this harbor?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I know that orders were given to an engineer to visit the place, and his report may be in now, but I have not had time to look over that and several other reports. I will do the best I can, later on, when I see what these reports say.

Dredging, Nova Scotia..... $40,000

Mr. JONES (Halifax). A good deal of discussion has taken place respecting the expenditure on public works in the various counties represented by supporters of the Government and by hon. gentlemen on this side. I do not think it is becoming my position here, to ask the Government for any favors in this or any other respect. I merely stand here as one of the representatives of the people to perform the duty imposed upon me of pointing out to the Government what, according to my own views, is the best way of disposing of the public funds. I repudiate entirely the idea that members on this side approach the Government as supplicants for expenditure on public works. It is very offensive to me at any time to have to ask the Government in any way for any expenditure. It is merely as one of the representatives, discharging my duty, that I feel called upon now and at other times to point out to the different Departments the way in which I think the money should be expended. Unfortunately, the Government seem still to possess the idea that they not only own the Government at the present time, but that the whole of the revenues of the country belong to them and are to be disposed of according to their ideas, for party purposes and not in the general interests of the country. The Government seem, on all occasions, to be seized with the idea that it is a matter of favor if any money is expended in any county which is not represented in their interest. This is a view to which I, for one, must most emphatically take exception, and I believe that no member on this side of the House ever brings a question before the Government with a view of asking for any favor at their hands. Hon. members on this side hold, as I hold, that, if the counties we represent or the places we recommend require the expenditure of public money in the public interest, that expense should be made in the public interest, no matter who represents that county in the House. That is one of the reasons which induced me to-night to bring to the notice of the Government an application from one of the western counties of Nova Scotia, which was my native county—the County of Digby. I do not wish to interfere in any degree with the duties of the hon. member for that county (Mr. Jones), but, knowing the interest which I take in that county, knowing it to be my native county, the leading men there, on both sides of politics, have sent me a circular which they have addressed to the Government, with reference to the expense of public money at Weymouth, which is my native place. I cannot do better, perhaps, than read this petition which explains, in shorter terms than I could, the grounds upon which the application is made for an expenditure at that place. This memorial says:

“The lumber manufactured within a radius of sixteen miles of Weymouth amounts to at least sixteen millions of feet, and is, in a very short time, capable of being nearly doubled. There are, moreover, large quantities of other produce annually exported from this place, and said exports are annually increasing. The import trade, as the annual Customs returns will show, is also yearly increasing. The port of Weymouth is the most natural outlet and inlet of this whole shipment, yet only about one-third of this quantity is shipped annually from the above named port, and the remainder we are compelled to ship, at a very great disadvantage, from other ports. The reasons for the said diversion of trade are quite plain, and can with your kind assistance be remedied. We ask for no favors when a legitimate claim cannot be sustained, but we feel that our claim is just. The approach to the Sisiboo river is impeded by a bar, and also a stone dam across the channel of the river opposite the bar, in consequence of which, at the highest tides only, is the said river of sufficient depth to allow large vessels to load. The channel of the river leading to the town is also, in consequence of said stone dam, fast filling up, so that, in a very few years, no shipments can be made with safety. By referring to the annual returns of imports and exports for this port, you will find that the total of said imports and exports is by no means a small amount. This amount can be more than doubled were your Government to order a dredge here to work for one season at least at the mouth of the said river and at points in the channel.”

Further on they add:

“We would also most anxiously ask your assistance to another, and by no means unimportant matter, which would arise, partly as an outcome of the removal of the said impediments, but which is absolutely necessary at the present, to further facilitate shipments. We refer to the urgent need of a subsidy, sufficient to locate and build a piece of railway of not more than one-eighth to one-fourth of a mile, on the line of the Western Counties Railway, near the railway station at Weymouth, to be located on either side of the railway, and on either side of river near said railway, as a Government surveyor may determine as the best shipping point, to a point on the river, thus fully justifying our needs.”

I may say in addition to this, if my recommendation can add anything to that which I know will be made by the sitting member for the county, that this town is a very important place in the county of Digby with a large trade, and that the river requires deepening and dredging in order to enable vessels to go up to the bridge where the trade is principally carried on. Although this railway matter is not in the department of the hon.

Minister of Public Works, I may as well, while I am on my feet, refer to that also as being of the greatest possible advantage in connecting the harbor with the present railway station. Now, having said so much on that point, I desire to say a word or two with reference to the expenditure which has been made in the different counties of our Province. It was said by an hon gentleman who spoke this evening, and it has been contended by the Government on other occasions, that the Government have made expenditures as they thought the public interest demanded; but it seems a very singular circumstance that the public interest, according to the views of the hon. gentleman or of the Government, always seems to lie in a county which is represented on their side of the House. This is fully borne out to-night by the statement which I shall be able to submit to the Committee. In the first place, we will take the report of the Minister of Public Works respecting the item of dredging which is now under consideration. Under the head of "Surveys and Examinations," we find that surveys took place in the County of Antigonish at Dunn's Lake, Georgeville, and Monk's Island—three places. Of course, Antigonish has the honor of being represented by the Minister of Justice. In the County of Cape Breton, surveys took place at Belfry River, Big Lorraine, Cow Bay, East Bay and Sydney—five places. That county is represented by a supporter of the Administration.

An hon. MEMBER. Two representatives.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). By two representatives, and I suppose that is so much the better for them. In Cumberland county, surveys took place at Fox Harbor, Joggins, Minudie, Port Greville, Sand River, Tignish, and Two Rivers—seven places—and Cumberland is a traditionally Conservative county. In Shelburne county surveys took place at Barrington, Barrington Passage, Jones' Harbor, Jordan Bay, Green Harbor, Little Harbor, Louis Head, Negro Island, Port La Tour, Roseway Beach, and Round Bay—eleven different places—and that county is represented by the gallant officer who sits on my left (General Laurie). Then we find that in the important county of Guysborough, there were no surveys at all. In Richmond county no surveys were made at all, and in the very important County of Lunenburg but one survey has been made, and in Yarmouth, none. Now, to give you an idea of the importance of those counties, I will give you the amount of shipping that is entered and cleared from those places. I wish the Committee distinctly to understand that I do not object to these surveys being made in the various counties to which I have referred. I have no doubt that they are all needed in the public interest, and I should be very glad to hear that they are all provided for, and that the works will be proceeded with in due time; but I wish to point out, that while those places, not of much importance in view of the trading interests of the country, are so largely provided for, the more important counties have no attention paid to them at all. In Arichat, I find there were 207 steamers entered, according to the Trade and Navigation Returns, and 840 coasting vessels. In Guysborough there were 201 steamers entered, and 635 sailing vessels; while I find that in Antigonish, where these surveys had been made, no steamer has been reported at all, and only 52 vessels have been entered in that county.

Now, Sir, when you come to contrast that expenditure which has taken place in a county like Antigonish, independent of these surveys which indicate a further expenditure, when you come to look at the Public Accounts and observe that expenditures are going on at Arisaig, Bayfield, Blue Rock and McNair's Cove, besides the surveys which are included in these various ports, I think it will be seen by this House that Antigonish, an agricultural county itself, is not a commercial county as compared with those to which I have referred. Therefore, it would appear, I think, that the Government had not displayed that just discrimination in the expenditure of public money which we have a right to expect. I repeat that I do not object to any expenditures made in these counties which have been referred to, and where expenditure is going on; neither do I object to the surveys, but I say it is a scandal, it is more than a scandal, when you see small and unimportant counties with very little coasting and no foreign trade, getting so much public money, and when you compare them with a large county like Lunenburg, with a coasting trade of 182 steamers and 968 sailing vessels, with a foreign trade of 275 vessels—I say that when you consider that fact and realise that these important, and large, and contributing counties, are treated in this way by the Government, it cannot be defended on any ground in this House or out of it, and it reflects no credit on the Government, it reflects less credit on the Minister of Public Works who has charge of that department. The Minister of Public Works told us last Session that when these applications were made to him he sent them all into the Privy Council, and they were dealt with there. As I remarked on that occasion, it was a very singular and happy coincidence for his own friends that when these applications came out of the Privy Council, those of his friends were always granted, and those applications for expenditure in other counties were always refused. Now, I am not asking any favor from the Government at all. I have too much respect for my position in this House and in this country, for one moment to ask any favor of the Government on such a ground as that. I stand here taking higher ground, the ground on which I have based this representation, the ground of the trade of the country, the foreign and domestic shipping of the country; and if that is not a sufficient recommendation to satisfy the Government that such counties as Guysborough and Lunenburg are entitled to a larger expenditure than those counties to which I have referred, then I think no argument will avail with the Government. However, I am not yet without hope that the Government will see that the policy they have pursued hitherto has not been one in the real interest of the country. If they propose to expend money on that branch of the public service, it should be expended on places where it is required. I have no doubt many of these expenditures in some of the counties I have referred to, could have been postponed; I have no doubt, while they may be useful to some extent, at the same time, at these points to which I have referred, they might have been delayed, while these more important places, like Yarmouth, Lunenburg and Guysborough, are actually suffering for the want of those piers and breakwaters and dredging which hon. members in this House have from year to year brought to the attention of the Government. I repeat that neither those hon. members who represent those counties should desire to ask any favor any more than I should; they are discharging their duty in bringing this to the notice of the Government, and I suppose they are relying upon the public opinion of this country, which should be sufficient of itself to induce, if not compel, the Administration of the day to expend public money at such points as are most urgent, leaving those places that are not immediately suffering for the want of the conveniences which are thus provided, to a future day. I hope in that sense the Government will accept the suggestions which I have made, and in the future, at least, that they will adopt a policy that will be more generally approved by the people of this country. They are not the owners of the treasury. The people on this side of the House, and the Liberal party generally, I believe, eat as much, and drink as much, and wear as good clothes as hon. gentlemen sitting on the Treasury benches, and in that way we are entitled to a share of the public money, not as a favor, but as a right. I say I scorn to ask any favor from the Government, I demand it as a right, a right which the people of this country generally have a right to demand at the hands of the Administration.

Mr. KENNY. I also received, from friends in the County of Digby, a copy of the document which my hon. colleague has placed before the House. My hon. colleague has stated, by way of apology, I presume to the hon. member who represents the County of Digby in this House, and as an excuse for what might be called—I hardly like to apply the term to an old parliamentarian such as my friend the senior member happens to be—his violation of parliamentary etiquette. In my ignorance of parliamentary custom, I always supposed that an hon. member, in bringing a matter of this kind before the notice of the House or the Committee of the House, to some extent might be supposed to be meddling and interfering with duties which more properly belong to the hon. gentleman who represents that constituency in this House. But my hon. friend, I must say, has given a very good excuse for his breach of that parliamentary rule. He told us his reason for doing so was that Digby happened to be the county of his birth, and I am sure that reason will have very great influence with the Government and with this House; and we will all be only too happy to find that the Government recognise that that county has special claims, as it happens to be the birth-place of my distinguished colleague. I happen to have been born in another county in that Province, and I must find fault with my hon. friend the senior member, because he has not brought that county, not the least—on the contrary, I consider it the most important—county in Nova Scotia, to the notice of the Government. I happen to have been born in the County of Halifax, in the Province of Nova Scotia, in that county which is represented in this House by my hon. friend opposite and myself; and I regret exceedingly that in the discharge of an important public duty, of which my hon. friend has acquitted himself with his usual ability, and to which I think he has given more than usual attention, he omitted entirely the name of that important county. I consider it my duty to follow the senior member for Halifax on this occasion and to remind him that we all have not had the happiness of having been born in Digby; that some have been born in other counties which are as loyal to the Government as is that very beautiful County of Digby. I have to find fault with the Minister of Public Works. I approached him on this very question of dredging, and I had to find fault that the county in which I was born had been neglected. When I came to investigate the matter I found that one reason given was the fact that the dredge had been employed in the County of Yarmouth, and, consequently, it was not available for the County of Halifax. I do not know that the County of Yarmouth has done any more for the present Government, or been any more loyal to it than the County of Halifax. It is true that Halifax occupies an exceptional position in this Legislature. It may be very unfortunate for Halifax that it is so, but Halifax sends one supporter of the Government and Yarmouth has not done so, and yet the hon. gentleman (Mr. Jones) attempted to convey the impression that the Minister of Public Works is guided by improper motives, by party motives, and he gave us as his reason for saying so that important counties of the Province which return opponents to the Dominion Government have been entirely neglected by the Minister.

Mr. KIRK. There is no question about that.

Mr. KENNY. Yarmouth was not neglected, that is very evident; because when I take up the report of the Minister of Public Works I find on page 17, dredging done in Nova Scotia, Yarmouth, the county which returns an opponent to this Government, receives more than any other two counties in the Province. I know for a fact, that gentlemen in Yarmouth, gentlemen of energy and ability who are a credit and an ornament to our Province, and who do not take the same political views on Dominion matters as I do, have expressed to me their great indebtedness to the Minister of Public Works for the manner in which he assisted them to remove some rocks or mud, which had proved a very great obstruction to the navigation of that important harbor. I do think, as my colleague has brought the Minister to task, that it would have been fairer to have completed his list of dredging done in Nova Scotia and to have mentioned that Yarmouth, represented as I have said, by an opponent of the Government, has really received a larger amount than any two counties in Nova Scotia. I find that the County of Halifax, in which my colleague and myself take an especial interest, has been entirely ignored. I suppose that must be because the senior member for Halifax occupies a seat on the other side of the House, and he is so much more influential naturally in this House than the junior member. That is the only reason which suggests itself to my mind as a consequence of the argument of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Jones). The hon. gentleman in the course of his remarks referred to the expenditure in the County of Richmond, and he stated that there was no report of steamers in Richmond.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I did not say so.

Mr. KENNY. The hon. gentleman referred to Arichat.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I was speaking of Antigonish.

Mr. KENNY. Then I misunderstood the hon. gentleman. As regards the special counties to which the hon. gentleman referred, Shelburne, Cumberland and others, I am not surprised he does not assail the expense of the surveys in those counties, but all he suggests is that it might be better if the expenditure had been postponed. The paternal heart of my colleague took in the whole Province in this matter, and I was glad to find that when he analysed the matter he found no fault with the expenditure, but simply suggested that it should be postponed. I will only say that I hope that the Minister of Public Works will not be deterred by anything that has fallen from the hon. gentleman opposite from commencing some dredging in the county where I was born, and which dredging I consider to be very necessary.

Mr. JONES (Digby). I am exceedingly obliged to the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) for the interest he has taken in his native county, and I can fully endorse all he has said in regard to the necessity of dredging there. I would remind the hon. gentleman that four weeks ago I presented one of the largest petitions ever submitted to this House, signed by a thousand electors, asking that this dredging be done, and now that the Opposition have joined with me in order to make my case doubly strong, I hope the Minister will see his way perfectly clear to put an amount in the Estimates for that work, because he will find no opposition on the other side of the House and none on this side. This work is necessary because our trade is very largely increasing. At present we are building a fine steamer to run around St. Mary's Bay and to New Brunswick, which will be launched in the summer, and it will be necessary for navigation purposes that the dredging work be done there this year. I believe the engineer has reported on the advisability of making surveys again, although they were made about two years ago. I again thank the senior member for Halifax for his support, and no doubt the work will now be done.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). My hon. colleague could not have quite apprehended the scope of my argument, or he would have found, on the principle that the greater includes the less, that my recommendation extended to my own County of Halifax as well as to others, provided there was an absolute necessity for that expenditure. The hon. gentleman is aware that I have never been backward at any time in defending my county, and I have led him in the recommendations, and he was not always willing, but he was compelled to follow in those recommendations. If he had apprehended the scope of my argument, it was: that if in Halifax County there was a public work required, the Government should make that expenditure, and if it is not required, I do not ask it simply to have the money expended in Halifax. But if the Government finds that in the public interest of this country many harbors in Halifax County require dredging, it is their duty to make that expenditure, whether the member for the county may support or oppose it. I do not come to the low level which some hon. gentlemen seem to think proper to take, namely, that simply because they are supporters of the Administration they are entitled to have money spent for political purposes in their own counties, and that counties of more importance, with greater commercial interests at stake, should be discarded until such time as the hon. Minister of Public Works is disposed to look into it. I take the higher stand, that if the work is in the public interest, it should be carried out, no matter who represents the county. That was the ground I took in the observations I made, and I am sorry if I did not make my remarks clear to the usually astute mind of my respected colleague (Mr. Kenny).

Mr. CAMERON. The hon. member for Halifax has taken all the counties in the Province of Nova Scotia under his wing, except the county which I have the honor to represent, and he advocates the dredging of harbors in counties in which he finds a large quantity of shipping. He refers, especially, to Arichat, in Richmond, as having two hundred steamers entering its harbor, and he refers to Guysborough as having two hundred and one steamers entering it. He might have referred to North Sydney as having double that number of vessels entering the harbor. I contend it is not these harbors in which large steamers can enter with facility, that require dredging at all. The very argument he used to secure dredging for these harbors is the one which, in my opinion, ought to prevent the Government from dredging there until other sections of the Province which are greatly in need of facilities for shipping are attended to. It is a remarkable fact to us, who know the Province of Nova Scotia so well, that the south and south-eastern coast is amply supplied with harbors, and that if dredging is done there it is not for the purpose of making harbors, but for dredging in the coves and other places inside of the harbors and rivers. I contend, and I think I do so with reason, that Government dredges should not be employed clearing out rivers and around docks and wharves in harbors, which accommodate such shipping as he has referred to, until places like that part of Nova Scotia bordering on the Strait of Northumberland, in Pictou County, Antigonish, St. George's Bay, and the coast of Inverness, have been attended to. In Antigonish, notwithstanding the dredging that has been done, the hon. gentleman intimated that not a single steamer has entered into this harbor. The reason for that is that there is not a single harbor in the County of Antigonish, except one, into which a steamer of even moderate capacity can enter. I represent a county as important as Richmond and Guysborough put together.

Mr. KIRK. No.

Mr. CAMERON. I beg your pardon, and my county is nearly as populous as the two of them put together, and a great deal more important than a dozen of them. There is not a harbor from Cape North to the Strait of Canso, excepting Port Hood, for one hundred and fifty miles along the sea coast, into which a steamer, of even modern capacity, can enter at all; while I find that wharves are being built inside harbors, in other sections of the Province, and that in Prince Edward Island we have no less than thirty wharves built at the expense of this Dominion, I regret to say that only one has been built in the County of Inverness ever since Confederation. We have had a few piers built outside for the purpose of protecting shipping, but inside the harbors we have but one. Twenty years ago, dredging was commenced in the harbor of Cheticamp, and if there were sufficient water to enable shipping to enter that harbor, there are very few harbors in the Province of Nova Scotia which would be frequented by shipping so much. I am happy to admit that the Minister of Public Works has done some dredging in that harbor, and enabled a large portion of the fishing fleet from North Bay to enter there.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Is not Port Hood a better harbor?

Mr. CAMERON. No. Port Hood is simply an open roadway, and a pier has been erected there which cost $100,000 since 1867. I am sorry to say that the expenditure for the annual repairs on that wharf is enormous, and that alone should convince my hon. friend that Port Hood is not a harbor. There is a shelter on the Port Hood island side, but on the mainland side there is no more shelter than on any other exposed part of the coast. I contend that until such time as the harbors of Cheticamp, Margaree and Mabou, are dredged and improved to such an extent that shipping can enter them, the dredges should not be employed in dredging rivers and at the heads of bays and inside harbors in every part of the Province. If any county in our Province has reason to complain, it is the County of Inverness. Several appeals have been made to the Minister of Public Works, and he has done fairly well, but I regret to say that the dredging of harbors commenced twenty years ago, and which are not half finished yet, is not, to say the least of it, very satisfactory. It has been stated here to-night, that counties which send representatives to support the Government receive greater favors than those who oppose the Administration. I sometimes envy the representatives from Prince Edward Island, when I hear them talk by the hour, and sometimes by the week, complaining that they have not more harbors and piers built in that Island; when I consider that in Inverness County, which is as large as King's and Queen's Counties put together, and as large as Queen's and Prince Counties put together in area, has only one wharf in the whole county, and three piers built by the Dominion since Confederation. Before Confederation a number of piers were built and maintained by the Local Government, but many of these have been carried away by the sea, and since Confederation the works which have been commenced have not yet been finished. I hope the Minister of Public Works will see his way clear next year to have at least two of the harbors in Inverness County dredged.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). He will.

Mr. CAMERON. Well, perhaps so, since it is recommended by my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Jones), who has such very great influence with the Government, and who has taken all the counties of the Province under his wing. The Minister of Public Works will, I hope, take a note of it, and see that Inverness will be well provided for.

Mr. KIRK. The hon. member who has just taken his seat, said that his county is larger than the Counties of Guysborough and Richmond put together.

Mr. CAMERON. In population.

Mr. KIRK. The hon. gentleman must have forgotten the geography of his Province when he made that statement. The County of Guysborough is the largest in Nova Scotia, with the exception of Halifax.

Mr. CAMERON. How many harbors have they?

Mr. KIRK. That is not the question at all. While we have a few fine harbors in the County of Guysborough—indeed, we have two or three which are not inferior to any in the Province of Nova Scotia—yet we have a sea coast of 150 miles, and two or three harbors are not sufficient to accommodate a sea coast of that extent. There are places between those harbors where not dredging so much as breakwaters are required to protect the fishing industry. I agree with a great deal of what the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. Cameron) has said with regard to dredging in harbors. I do not see the necessity of dredging harbors which will admit large steamers and other large vessels; it is in harbors which have shoals in them that dredging is necessary. There is but one harbor in the County of Guysborough for which application has been made for dredging since I have been here in 1882; I refer to the River St. Mary's. Since that time I have made several applications to the Minister of Public Works, and he has acknowledged the necessity of dredging it. In 1882 he sent a dredge there, but it was found to be unsuitable, and it was removed, with the intention, I understood, of sending a more suitable one, but none has been sent since. I have made an application to the hon. Minister this year, to see if he could not accommodate the people by sending a dredge next summer. I pointed out to him that the trade is increasing there, and vessels of the size required for carrying lumber from Sherbrooke cannot be brought up to the mills. I do not think a great deal of dredging would be required. There is another place, a small channel known as White Haven, about three-quarters of a mile long, which requires to be opened up so as to let small vessels through; I do not know whether the work could be done by one of the dredges or not. It was opened up by the Local Government before Confederation, but it has been filled up, and only small boats can pass through. It requires to be opened up so as to admit larger vessels. One hon. gentleman has spoken of the hon. Minister of Public Works having had so many surveys of harbors made in the different counties of Nova Scotia last year. I do not think the mere survey of harbors gives any security that breakwaters will be built. I think the hon. Minister had three harbors surveyed in my county in 1883 or 1884; but not a dollar has been spent on them since. When we look over the report, it is somewhat singular to find so much money expended in counties represented by supporters of the Government, and very little in counties represented by members of the Opposition. The hon. gentleman refers to Yarmouth as a county represented by an Opposition member in which some money was expended; but I understand that that expenditure was begun before the present member was elected. But how is it that in the County of Guysborough, which I have the honor to represent, not a dollar has been expended since 1882, although I have been doing my best to induce the Minister to expend some money in that county. I do not know whether the Government's failure to do so is because I exercise my right here to vote sometimes on questions in opposition to the Government; but at any rate such is the fact. I do not believe it is the duty of the Government to spend money in any county merely for the sake of spending it. I think there has been too much of that done already; and I can point to instances in Nova Scotia where public money has been expended apparently for no other purpose than to satisfy the friends of the Government. Where there is a necessity for the expenditure of money in the public interest, I have no fault to find with the Government for expending it in counties represented by their supporters; but I think it looks rather suspicious when very little is spent in counties represented by Opposition members, though we can present a fair claim. It seems to me there is a great deal in what the hon. member for Halifax says, that a great deal of money is spent to favor those who support the Government.

Mr. EISENHAUER. I cannot say that the hon. Minister of Public Works has overlooked Lunenburg altogether, for he caused a survey of the harbor of Lunenburg to be made in 1889; but nothing has been done since. I would urge upon the hon. gentleman the necessity of doing some dredging there during the coming season if possible. In a private interview which I had with the hon. Minister the other day, he asked me as to the probable cost of the work. I could not give him any idea of it; I supposed he would gather that from the report of the survey. My hon. friend the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) has already alluded to the subject of dredging in the County of Lunenburg, and he has given figures which I had noted down, showing that 182 steamers, 968 coasting vessels, and 275 vessels engaged in foreign trade cleared last year from the harbor of Lunenburg. Further than this, as I have already brought to the notice of the hon. Minister, during the winter season our large fishing fleet are laid up at anchor in the harbor, and owing to their being obliged to anchor very close, during storms they often suffer very serious damage. I press again upon the hon. gentleman the necessity of doing some dredging there.

Mr. BORDEN. As the hon. the Minister of Public Works has been somewhat severely assailed on this side of the House to-night, I feel constrained to do him an act of justice. Having been badly wounded by the Opposition, if there is any balm on this side he ought to receive it. In my county—and it cannot be said that I am a supporter of the Administration—the hon. gentleman caused a survey to be made at seven different points, during last year, and I desire in this public manner to thank him for having done this. I am not aware that I have pursued any peculiar course in obtaining those surveys, for, if I remember rightly, I addressed my letters to him in the usual formal manner, and I am very glad that he has seen fit to give me the benefit of those surveys. But surveys do not make breakwaters, and I hope the Minister will keep on with the good work, and be able to put in the Supplementary Estimates, the grants specially necessary for the harbors, about which I had the honor to write him letters, and have had interviews with him, on more than one occasion.

Mr. CAMERON. I quite agree that the areas of Inverness and Guysborough are about the same, but the population of Inverness is nearly equal to that of Guysborough and Richmond put together. If Inverness were as well supplied with harbors by nature as Guysborough is, not only for seven years but for ten times seven years, I would not ask for a single dollar to be expended there for harbors. The County of Inverness is the best agricultural county in the Province. By referring to the statistics of the census taken in 1881, hon. gentlemen will find that the agricultural products of Inverness alone are equal to those of all the southern counties of the Province, including Richmond, Guysborough, Halifax, Lunenburg, Queen's and Shelburne. If Inverness be such a good agricultural county and has not to-day a single harbor into which a vessel drawing ten feet of water can enter, hon. gentlemen will agree with me that if there is any necessity for dredging in any part of Nova Scotia, it is in Inverness, which has a sea coast of one hundred and fifty miles—longer than that of Guysborough.

General LAURIE. I do not think it right that Shelburne should be the only county in Nova Scotia not heard from on this vote, especially when reference has been made to it by the senior member for Halifax. Attention has been called to the fact that I have done my duty to my county. Well, my county has not been left to be represented by the senior member for Halifax. He points out that I have represented its wants and that they have been enquired into. I am happy to say that they have, and that, to some extent, they have been met, and those wants are justifiable. The hon. gentleman was good enough to call attention to the shipping entered and cleared in some counties, but when he came to Shelburne he dropped the subject, because he found he would have to handle rather larger figures than he expected. According to the returns, Shelburne County shows something like 1,300 vessels entered during the last year; they show further that we sent out of our ports about sixty bankers, manned by 826 fishermen, and that daily along our coast 1,088 boats go out in pursuit of fish, manned by 1,185 men. These men largely contribute to the revenue, and they certainly have the right to have their wants considered. I have represented those wants to the Minister of Public Works, and am happy to say that he has seen fit to have them, in due course, attended to.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Of course it is quite natural that hon. gentlemen should speak in the interests of their respective counties, and they will bear me out in saying that I took no exception to their doing so. I am glad to learn that the gallant general does his duty to his county. That is not what I find fault with, but what I take exception to is those cases in which the Minister of Public Works does not do his duty. If he did his duty properly to the people, we would not have that miserable exhibition, for it is nothing else, every Session—complaints being made of favoritism in the expenditure on public works. There is a great deal in what the hon. member for Inverness said, with regard to the small harbors where fishing boats come in. I admit they require to be dredged, but I did not point at a small harbor particularly. What I said was, that if expenditure was required it should be made, but that it should not be made for political reasons, which is the motive that always influences the Minister of Public Works in every vote he brings down to this House. The hon. Minister stated last year that the dredges he was taking from the Harbor Commissioners at Montreal, he would use in the Maritime Provinces. Will he do so this year ?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. They are still required to complete the deepening of the channel which will take another year. In answer to the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer) I would say that I have taken a note of his remarks, and though I cannot make a promise, will look into the matter, and, if possible, meet his wishes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Hon. gentlemen from Nova Scotia have complained of injustice done to several parts of that Province in the manner in which dredging is done, but the complaint we have to make in Prince Edward Island is that no dredging has been done in any portion of that Province. In 1887, the dredge we had was sent to the harbor of Tignish, and $3,488 were spent in dredging that harbor ; but the work was done so badly that the mud was not carried out to sea but only to the mouth of the harbor and washed back, so that the harbor was worse off in the end than if no expenditure had been made. But that is not the worst. The hon. gentleman sent the dredge to Charlottetown where it was found to be thoroughly out of repair, and he left it there the whole winter without ordering the repairs to be made, although they could have been made then cheaply when men were seeking employment. When the spring sun thawed the ice, and the rivers opened, the dredge which should have been sent to work, was hauled up instead in the yard of one of the hon. gentleman's supporters, and, during the whole season of 1888, she lay idle in the ship-yard while under repair, at an expense of $20,000, with her captain and officers under pay. He knows that during all this time petitions were sent from different parts of the Island asking for a dredge where dredging was urgently required. The season of 1888 went by without a shovelful being taken out by a dredge. In 1889, he sends the dredge to Red Point wharf for twelve days, and then takes her back to Charlottetown and hires her out for the whole season to dredge around the private wharves of private gentlemen. For that he received $1,500, but I should like to know if this country provides a dredge at an enormous cost for the purpose of leasing her out to improve private property, while the entrances to the harbors are filling up with silt to such an extent that no approach to them is possible. The management of that dredge in Prince Edward Island is on a par with the management of everything else by this Government in connection with the Island. It is impossible for any one to defend that management. I do not know what the hon. Minister is going to do this year, but complaints are loud from all parts of the Province, from his own party as well as from the Liberal party, as to the gross mismanagement of this part of the service.

Mr. PERRY. I desire to call the attention of the Minister to a harbor called Ship River. If that were dredged a little, it would be of great service. It is the distance of about 15 miles from the railway, and the people there have petitioned for a dredge to dredge the harbor. It has not been sent there yet, but I hope that the Minister will see that the prayer of the petition is complied with during the coming season. As my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies) has stated, the dredge was, for the best part of last summer, employed in dredging around private wharves, and she realised the handsome sum of $1,525, which the Minister said had been placed in the hands of the Receiver General. I did not know that we had such an officer, but I suppose it means the Minister of Finance. It was understood that the dredge would be sent to Cascumpec Harbor to dredge out the rock that was blasted there. Instead of the dredge being there to take it out of the way, so as to make room for vessels that desired to enter there, the stones were allowed to remain on the bottom, and several vessels were stuck last summer on the rocks, which were lifted by powder or by something else. There were two wrongs perpetrated there. The one was to allow the public dredge to perform work for private property instead of being at Cascumpec, and the other was to allow Cascumpec harbor to be spoiled because there was no dredge there to take away the stone which was blasted out. I contend that this was a gross wrong on the part of the Government. As my hon. friend stated, the dredge left Tignish in August, 1887. She was then sent to Charlottetown and was there for five months without being repaired, and there was no reason why that dredge should not commence work in May, 1888. But even up to June of that year, not a stroke of work had been done in repairing her. My hon. friend is mistaken as to the cost of repairing that dredge. She did not cost $20,000 to repair, but $12,000, and her first cost was only $7,000, so that she cost $5,000 more to repair than the whole of her first cost. It would be amusing to the Committee to see the account of what went into that boat for repairs. Certainly she cost more than twice as much as she should have cost for repairs. Then one whole season was gone. As I said, there was no reason why she should not have commenced work in May, 1888, and certainly there was no reason why she should not have been dredging last summer. We have the harbor of Summerside which requires dredging, we have the harbor of Malpeque which requires dredging, and we have also the great harbor of Cascumpec which is the only harbor of refuge on the north shore of Prince Edward Island. If the Government were manly enough to spend $50,000 or $100,000 to make that harbor safe, and to protect the vessels which come there from Nova Scotia and New Brunswick as well as from our neighbors to the south, the Americans, it would be all right, but the Government seem to be in such a bad humor with the Americans that they will not give them refuge or allow them to spend their money on shore in buying beef, pork, milk, butter and cheese, all of which Prince Edward Island has in plenty. It is not like Inverness in that respect. I was in the County of Inverness a short time ago, and it was very hard for me to swallow the statement of my hon. friend who represents that county (Mr. Cameron), when he said that that was the finest farming county in Nova Scotia. The Lord help the rest of Nova Scotia if that is the finest farming county. It is a very large county with very little in it. It is parrum in multo. I trust that next year, when we meet, I shall be able to congratulate the Minister of Public Works on having done justice to Prince County, and that he will send the dredge to Egmont Sheep River Bay and Harbor and to all the other places on the coast where it is necessary. I find that the dredging in Prince Edward Island does not get its fair share of the $40,000 which the hon. gentleman asks for. The share for Prince Edward Island is very small. I do not desire to rob Nova Scotia or New Brunswick. I have a great many friends in those Provinces, but I am selfish for the good of my own people, and I would like to see that no scheming is done, as my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Kirk) has said, but that the dredging should not be done as a matter of expediency but as a matter of right. The people of Prince County pay their taxes the same as other citizens of this Dominion. They are an honest, industrious people, and they do not come on their marrow-bones to ask favors from the Government. They are not like the Irishman who said he was afraid of justice. All the people of Prince County ask is justice and no favor. I suppose that, if we only get half the dredging which we require, we will still be loyal subjects, and will not take those old muskets in order to fight the Government.

Mr. ELLIS. Last year, I called the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the fact that he requires some better dredges, particularly in the case of rivers where there is a great tidal water. The whole amount he asks for the service is not sufficient to do the work thoroughly, and I should think that double the amount ought to be asked for this particular service. All the tidal rivers, and many of the other rivers throughout the country, are making demands for dredges, which are never met at all. I would suggest that about half the money that is expended on the North-West Mounted Police might be applied to this service with greater results to the country.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think that an item involving an expenditure of money like this, should be allowed to pass until the Minister of Public Works, if he has any explanation to offer to the remarks made by my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island, as to the management of that important branch of the public service, should give them. I call the attention to the fact that the statement made by the member for Queen's were as specific and distinct as they could possibly be. He stated that during the entire summer, if I understood him correctly, instead of having the dredge repaired during the winter, when it could have been done easily and cheaply, the dredge was laid up and was under repairs during the entire working season, by day's work, done in a private yard of a friend of the Government. Now, it is not to the credit of the Minister to sit still if he has any answer to make to such charges as these.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This matter came before the House already, and I answered by saying, "Yes, I did." The hon. gentleman should not say no. He charged just now, that the cost had been $20,000, when his colleague told him just after that it had been only $12,000. I do not suppose he wants to deceive the Committee. It was only a mistake on his part, and I think he should treat me in the same way as I treated him. I did not insult him. If he finds fault with my administration of my Department, let him say so; but he has no right to insult me across the House.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not know what the hon. gentleman means by insulting him. He said this case came before the House before.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, last year.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) These statements never were made to the House.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I beg your pardon. It was made here. I did not suppose this matter would come up again. I was ready at the time; I had my papers to that effect; I had the statement. No doubt the dredge was in bad order and had to be put in order, and the best mode was adopted at the time. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well, that I cannot keep all these things in my memory. But, at all events, I know that this thing came before the House and it was explained. I will find the papers again, I will take a note of it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What time was this brought before the House?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot remember that. Perhaps it was simply on a question put, or on a return made, but I know it was stated then. I will obtain the information in my Department again and lay it before the hon. gentleman. The cost was certainly large, but the dredge had to be put in order, and we did the best we could at the time. As to the remarks made just now by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis), that we have not sufficient dredges, I think myself that we will require a new one. I think that a similar dredge will be required also in Ontario, but I have not been able to obtain the money yet for these dredges. I think I am not mistaken when I say that we had a large dredge in the Lower Provinces that was lost, and which has not been replaced. As soon as I get the money for a new dredge I will have it purchased or built in good time, and the same thing for Ontario. We will require a new one there, but we cannot afford it for the present.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman has not touched the point. The charge made by me was that in the autumn of 1887 that dredge returned from the dredging of Tignish harbor. It was found to be thoroughly out of repair, and the persons in charge of it were kept on wages all winter, but no attempt whatever was made to repair the dredge during the winter months when it should have been put in repair. When spring opened it was hauled into Peake's yard, and the whole summer of 1888 was taken up in repairing that dredge. This is from my own personal knowledge, but if the hon. gentleman is not sure about the facts, I will refer him to his own report, page 114 :

"The Prince Edward.—The whole of the summer of 1888 was spent in repairing this dredge and the attendant scows."

That is in his own report. Now, I ask why was not that done during the winter season, so that she might have been available in the spring of 1888, the only part of the year when a dredge is capable of working?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will say to the hon. gentleman, that it was in 1887. I do not remember the time, but I will take a note of it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There was another point, which is easily understood by those who have anything to do with dredging. If I understood my hon. friend aright, he further stated that, in the succeeding summer this dredge, instead of being employed in clearing out the harbors along the coast, was hired out to a number of private parties in Charlottetown, for which service $1,500, or thereabouts, seems to have been placed to the credit of the Government. Now, it appears to me that prima facie—I wait the explanation of the hon. gentleman—that is an abuse of the machinery at the disposal of the Government. There are a great many people who would like to employ a valuable Government dredge at the rates which were paid, for their own private convenience. I have known other cases, when dredges at the disposal of the Public Works Department, were taken away from places when private parties would have been willing to pay for the purpose of having the dredge a little longer time. It appears to me, on the face of it, to be a very extraordinary circumstance, that the dredge should be employed for this service by a few private persons in Charlottetown during the summer of 1889. The result of that would be, that for two whole seasons the dredge, which was intended to be used along the coast of Prince Edward Island, was either under repair or was employed for private purposes.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In certain cases when a dredge is in a harbor and work is petitioned for by private individuals, which cannot be done at the public expense, we have several times said: We will have the work done, but you will have to pay for it. In other cases, as the hon. gentleman says, the thing has been refused—in Ontario for example. We did refuse it there because there were private dredges that could be hired by the parties, and we did not want to enter into competition with them. I do not remember the circumstance at Charlottetown, but I may say that there was no other dredge there to do the work. If there had been a dredge, I have no doubt the use of our dredge would have been refused.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Can we entertain the hope that we will get the dredge to some of the harbors in King's County during the coming season? I called the attention of the Minister to the fact that the dredge has not been in that county, except one summer, or part of one summer, since Confederation. We pay our share of the public cost of its maintenance, and I think we should share in the work done. I call specially the Minister's attention to Murray harbor, Montague harbor, Sturgeon harbor and Grand River harbor, all of which require much dredging. There is much shipping there, and it is only justice that King's County, which I represent, should have a share in the work done by the dredge. We have been waiting for twelve years, and the dredge has only been in the county one season, or a part of a season, during that time.

Mr. FREEMAN. As this appears to be the time for claiming the use of the dredge, I desire to enter a claim. The senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) has stated that the counties represented by members supporting the Government have the first claim, and as I have the credit of supporting the Government, I presume the Minister will not neglect the harbors in Queen's County,
Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

Nova Scotia. The harbors of the county I represent have only had the dredge, I believe, once since Confederation, and it was there only a short time. We have a "barred" harbor, and large vessels cannot enter without danger, and the trade of the town of Liverpool will be greatly increased if the dredge is there a few weeks next season. I request the Minister to take a note of this. It occurs to me, from this discussion, that the hon. gentlemen opposite are very hard to please. The senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) claimed that they did not get a fair share of the services of the dredge, and that the wants of members supporting the Government were attended to first. When it was shown that Yarmouth had had a large sum of money expended in dredging, they said that it was due to the efforts of the member who preceded the sitting member and who got the favor. When it was shown that Prince Edward Island obtained a larger share than some of the counties in Nova Scotia, it was said that the dredge was good for nothing and out of repair and so on. So they appear to be dissatisfied in any event. I suppose if the Government refuse to listen to the claims of their supporters and give the services of the dredge only to members of the Opposition, they will be satisfied. This discussion bears testimony to this fact, that it is a very good thing to support the Government, and I am very glad to hear it. This being on the eve of an election, I suppose those hon. gentlemen have some object in view in making that declaration. I frequently heard the complaint that the Government make promises just before an election; but hon. gentlemen opposite seem to have anticipated the Government this time. I am glad to hear that the supporters of the Government will have their claims attended to first, and I will look forward to some advantage on that account, and I am quite sure the Minister will send his dredge to Queen's County and to Liverpool harbor next year.

Dredging, Manitoba.....$15,000

Mr. WATSON. Does the Minister intend to expend the money on the same works next year?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot answer that question directly.

Mr. WATSON. I am always ready to give credit to the Minister when credit is due. The work done at a small expenditure on Red River and White Mud River has proved very satisfactory, and I only hope it will be continued, because the water in the lakes and rivers has been very low during the last three or four years, and the work should be continued. Good service has been rendered.

Telegraph Lines.....$49,450

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Will the hon. gentleman state whether the amount asked will complete the work?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The amount of $5,000 will complete the work of the extension towards Pointe aux Esquimaux. Next we want to put a cable across to Anticosti, in order to join the local service there. That will carry the line to the east end of Anticosti. There it will join the new cable, which a company propose to lay between Canada and England.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Does the hon. gentleman think it wise to expend $15,000 to make the connection with Anticosti? I think the direct cable scheme to Canada will be something like the railway project to Labrador, which was thrown out of the Railway Committee to-day. I cannot believe that it will be undertaken unless under a very considerable subsidy, and I hope this House will never sanction such an expenditure when we have so many cables now existing. It is an unnecessary expenditure, and a waste of public money.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This expenditure is only to connect the two lines belonging to the Government. The other question as to extension to the Labrador coast is yet to be determined.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will the hon. gentleman explain if there is connection by cable there, now?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The island is separated from the north coast altogether. We want to have the telegraph system joined together.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Can the hon. gentleman say who owns Anticosti Island now?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I don't know.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Is there a cable there now?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No.

Roads and Bridges..... $45,300

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). This is a very large item and ought to be explained.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is exactly the same as last year.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) These bridges don't seem to require all these repairs.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. They have to be repaired constantly, if we want to keep them in good order.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is the Dominion of Canada under any obligation to keep these bridges in the city of Ottawa in repair?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; there was a bargain made between the city of Ottawa and the Government, some five or six years ago, that the Government should keep these bridges in repair.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Of course, if there is a binding obligation, there is no use discussing this. It does appear to me that, if we were not under a written obligation, it would be a gross outrage to maintain the roads and bridges of Ottawa. You might as well maintain the roads and bridges in Toronto or Montreal, or any city of the Dominion.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). There must be some reason why the Government entered into an arrangement with the Corporation of Ottawa to keep these bridges in repair, and I have not yet heard the explanation of the Minister of Public Works. What obligation are we under to the city of Ottawa, that we should assume this responsibility, and what return are we getting for it?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The whole thing has been explained to Parliament, and all the details given and the papers brought down.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). If there is such an arrangement, it should be brought down.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think the hon. gentleman will find it was brought down in 1885.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Where can the details of this expenditure be found?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. From the 1st of July, 1885, to 1887, we expended $29,000. In 1888, we had a vote of $8,300, and we expended $8,036, and last year we had a vote of $11,000 and expended $13,000, which was made up from the balance of a previous vote.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Do I understand that the hon. Minister will bring down the arrangement that exists between the Government and the city, because, if there is not a binding agreement, I wish to take the sense of the House on voting the money?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is a binding agreement. I will bring it down.

Mr. BOWELL. The whole arrangement between the city of Ottawa and the Government was laid before Parliament years ago, and fully discussed. The Government agreed to take over the Dufferin bridge and certain works in front of these buildings on Wellington Street, to rebuild the bridge across the Chaudière, and to give certain assistance to the city for the construction of the bridge across the Rideau on the way to Rideau Hall.

Mr. WATSON. I would like to ask how far the work on the bridge across the Battle River at Battleford has progressed, and what is the amount of the tender for the contract?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The amount of the contract is $24,500. The work has not progressed satisfactorily, and not long ago I gave orders that the contract should be taken from the contractors.

Mr. WATSON. Who are the contractors?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Kennedy & Heney. The work will, however, be proceeded with at once; and my engineer told me the other day that he expected that the whole work would be completed in four months or so.

Mr. WATSON. How much money has been spent on the work so far?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Nearly $12,000.

Mr. WATSON. I see that there has been an inspector on this work for nearly two years.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The work was begun then, and from time to time timber and other material were brought to the spot, so that the services of an inspector were required. I have no doubt that, at certain periods, he had very little to do, but we could not leave the work without having some one to look after it. The work will now proceed without any interruption until it is completed.

Mr. WATSON. What time was given to the contractors to complete the work under the contract?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It should have been completed eight or nine months ago.

Mr. WATSON. It appears to me that the Government should have cancelled the contract with these contractors some time ago.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There were difficulties about that on account of the site. Complaint was made by the contractors, and I think by the local manager there, that the bottom of the river, where the bridge was to be constructed, was too soft. Therefore, I had to have it examined, and the report which has come to me is that it is being built at the best place. They found that though there was some soft material, they came very soon to hard pan, and that the bridge will have a good foundation. That is another reason why the contract was not cancelled sooner.

Mr. WATSON. Is it to be completed at the expense of the contractor.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We look to the contractor afterwards for the difference in price, but in the meantime we must go on with the contract until it is completed.

Miscellaneous Works not otherwise provided for..... $10,000

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We have a photographer employed by the Department who from time to time photographs the works as they stand. This dispenses with our sending constantly an officer to examine and report.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It seems to me that the amount of $50 charged for photographs of a small work like this, is a heavy charge.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. He has to move about, and his travelling expenses must be paid.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I think this must include photographs of some of the hon. gentleman's supporters.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. They would have been good photographs, no doubt.

Surveys and Inspections..... $15,000

Mr. WATSON. Is it the hon. gentleman's intention to make a survey of the rapids of Red River with a portion of this money?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If we have a survey to make there, we will have to take it out of this fund.

Committee rose and reported resolutions.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 12.50 a.m. (Saturday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 10th March, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

RAILWAY COMMITTEE.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved that Mr. Montague, member representing the County of Haldimand, be appointed a member of the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines, and of the Select Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. He said: This is in place of the previous member.

Motion agreed to.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON PRINTING.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved that the Hon. J. A. Chapleau be appointed a member of the Joint Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

Committee on Printing, in place of the Hon. Mr. Bowell.

Motion agreed to.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 115) to amend section 20, chap. 122 of the Act entitled: An Act respecting certain Savings Banks in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec.—(Mr. Choquette.)

THE MEMBER FOR LINCOLN.

Mr. BOWELL. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire, in view of the motion of which the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has given notice in reference to the correspondence of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert), and the debate that may arise thereon, to lay upon the Table and ask for their insertion in the Votes and Proceedings, a letter from Mr. Stewart Tupper, and also one from Mr. Hugh J. Macdonald, both of Winnipeg. I will read them to the House, and then ask that they be placed in the Votes and Proceedings:

"RIDEAU CLUB,
OTTAWA, 25th February, 1890.

"MY DEAR SIR,—I observe that Mr. Rykert has dragged my name into the correspondence relating to the Cypress Hills timber limit.

"You have already read to the House Mr. Hugh J. Macdonald's telegram denying Mr. Rykert's statements respecting both himself and me. I do not, therefore, consider it necessary to do more at present than to say to you that I was never 'brought' to Ottawa by Mr. Rykert, as he states in his letter of 5th March, 1883, and repeats in his letter of 28th March, 1883, nor was I ever requested by him, or any one on his behalf, to come to Ottawa, and I never acted for Mr. Rykert, Mr. Adams, or Mr. Sands, in Ottawa or anywhere else, in this matter.

"I understand that Mr. McArthur—a partner in my late firm—represented Mr. Sands in December, 1882, when he purchased the limit from Messrs. Rykert and Adams, and I find that the firm received a fee of one hundred dollars for Mr. McArthur's services. I never received one dollar from Mr. Rykert, or anyone else, for travelling expenses or fees in connection with this business, and I can find no charge in the books of my late firm against Mr. Sands subsequent to the purchase of the limit, for which, as already stated, we were paid by Mr. Sands.

"Yours faithfully,
J. STEWART TUPPER.

"The Hon. M. BOWELL, Minister of Customs.

"P.S.—You can, of course, make whatever use of this letter you may think proper."

I have also a letter placed in my hands, dated at Winnipeg, 4th March, as follows:—

"WINNIPEG, MANITOBA, 4th March, 1890.

"MY DEAR FATHER,—With reference to the statements concerning my partner, Mr. Stewart Tupper and myself, made by Mr. Rykert in his correspondence with the late Mr. Adams, respecting the Cypress Hills timber limit, I can only repeat what I have already said in the telegram which Mr. Bowell read to the House. Neither of us, Mr. Tupper or myself, had anything to do with either obtaining or selling the limit in question, nor were we, directly or indirectly interested in it in any way. Our sole and only connection with this limit was as solicitors for Mr. Sands, of Manistee, Michigan, who bought it from Messrs. Adams and Rykert, and even as solicitors, neither of us had anything to do with it personally, the title having been searched and the whole business connected with this purchase having been conducted by Mr. J. B. McArthur, who was at that time a partner of ours. I may add that I never acted for Mr. Adams or Mr. Rykert in connection with this limit, nor in any matter whatever, and never went to Ottawa at Mr. Rykert's request, nor was I ever asked to do so by him or anyone on his behalf; consequently I was very much astonished when I read what he states in his letters of the 5th and 28th March, 1883, about his having 'brought Macdonald and Tupper' from Winnipeg. I can only say that this statement is absolutely without foundation, and that Mr. Rykert would hardly have written about my being in Ottawa in the way he does in his letter of the 12th February, 1883, if I had been 'brought' there by him. It is true that I was in Ottawa in February, 1883; but I was there on other business; and I say, most positively, that it was never even suggested to me by Mr. Rykert, or anyone else, that I should go to Ottawa about this timber limit matter. While I was in Ottawa I met Mr. Rykert accidentally, and he at once began to speak about the harsh manner in which Mr. Sands was being treated by the Government, and asked me to speak to Sir David Macpherson, the then Minister of the Interior, on the subject. I pointed out to him that the fact of my being one of the solicitors of the C. P. R. precluded me from urging on the Minister anything that might militate against their interests, but I added that I should be very glad to speak to Sir David about giving Mr. Sands compensation for the loss he had suffered through the odd-numbered sections having been awarded by the Government to the Railway Company. I subsequently spoke to Sir David Macpherson on the subject, when he promised to give it careful consideration, and thus begun and ended my connection with Mr. Rykert in this matter. I never spoke to you or any other Minister, except Sir David Macpherson, about this timber limit.

"In conclusion, I would say that I never received, or expected to receive, a single dollar from Mr. Rykert, Mr. Adams, Mr. Sands or any one else, for services rendered or expenses incurred in connection with this Cypress Hills timber limit matter, with the exception of my share of the fee of one hundred dollars received from Mr. Sands, by the firm of which I was a member, for Mr. McArthur's services as his solicitor at the time he bought this limit.

"Yours faithfully,
"HUGH J. MACDONALD."

I move, with the consent of the House, that these letters be placed upon the Votes and Proceedings, in the same manner in which other letters have been placed, in connection with this subject.

Mr. RYKERT. I have no objection of these going upon the minutes, but I would have preferred that the Minister had given me an opportunity to read these letters and produce what I have to say in answer to them. I have it at my hotel, and I had no thought whatever that these letters would be brought up this afternoon. All I can say is that I have in my possession, evidence of a most unmistakable character that I wrote to Mr. McArthur on 10th February, 1883, requesting him to send his partners to Ottawa in order to explain the matter to the Government. Mr. McArthur has recognised the truthfulness of the letter and has recognised my telegram, and he wrote a letter to me, and enclosed it to Hugh Macdonald of Winnipeg, asking him to peruse the letter and send it to me if he thought it was right. So hon. gentlemen, when they come to see all the evidence, will find there was some foundation for the observation made in my letter. I am not saying they are not telling what is not the case; I would not do so; but I think what took place has escaped the memories of those gentlemen, for I asked their partner to send them to Ottawa, and explain the matter to the Government. I should like to ask the Minister of Customs if either Mr. Macdonald or Mr. Tupper has sent to him a letter addressed to me, which Mr. McArthur wrote on 18th February, this year?

Mr. BOWELL. I have read to the House all the letters I have received, either from Mr. Tupper or from Mr. Macdonald; I have no others, nor have I any intimation from those gentlemen that they have others. I must say, in justice to myself, that, before laying those letters on the Table, I handed them to the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert), asked him to read them, and told him I was going to lay them on the Table of the House. Had he made a request for delay, in all probability I would have consented to it; but he made no request to me for delay until he could produce any other evidence, and I took it for granted, from the fact that he handed them back without any remark of that kind, that I was quite justified in laying them on the Table.

Mr. LAURIER. In justice to the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert), I think he should have the privilege of putting in those letters any time during the day.

BRESAYLOR HALF-BREEDS' CLAIMS.

Mr. LAURIER. Before the private Bills are called, I desire to refer to the subject of the motion moved by the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister), in regard to the claims of Charles Bremner. I move:

That precedence be given over all other business to the Order of the Day for resuming the adjourned Debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Lister, for the appointment of a Select Committee to enquire into the claims of the Bresaylor Half-breeds for losses sustained during the Rebellion in the North-West, and also in reference to furs taken from Charles Bremner, a Half-breed residing at Battleford; and the motion of Sir Richard Cartwright in amendment thereto.

Motion agreed to.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 58) respecting the Brantford, Waterloo and Lake Erie Railway Company.—(Mr. Paterson, Brant.)

Bill (No. 90) to amend the Act incorporating the Manitoba and South-Eastern Railway Company.—(Mr. LaRivière.)

PROSECUTION OF SALT MANUFACTURERS.

Mr. TROW asked, Whether the Government instructed William Johnston, Chief Inspector of Weights and Measures for the Belleville district, to prosecute certain salt manufacturers in the Goderich district for selling salt in barrels having light weight? 1st. Who were the parties prosecuted and fined? 2nd. What was the amount collected, and how applied? 3rd. How many barrels, in the aggregate, were seized?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Peter McEwen, of Goderich, was prosecuted and fined by the Mayor of Goderich the sum of $10, for selling barrels of salt which did not contain 280 pounds. This is the only case of prosecution of any one residing in Goderich. The Department is not in possession of information as to number of barrels seized from Mr. McEwen, as salt was released. The amount collected was $10, and deposited to the credit of the Receiver General. Archibald Rowe, of Picton; George McEwen, of Hensal; Wm. M. Gray, president of the Gray, Young & Sparling Company (Limited), were also prosecuted for the same cause, and fined the same amount each. The above prosecutions were instituted by Mr. William Johnston, Inspector of Weights and Measures at Belleville.

CAUGHNAWAGA INDIANS.

Mr. DOYON asked, Whether the Department of the Interior has recently received from certain Indians of the Caughnawaga Reserve, now at San Francisco, a petition setting forth that they had been engaged by a circus company to go to California and Australia; that the company abandoned them at San Francisco last fall; that they are in a state of destitution, and ask for aid, out of the Indian Fund, to enable them to return home? If so, what reply did the Government make to the Indians, and what steps do they propose taking?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The Department of Indian Affairs received recently from certain parties, who describe themselves as being Indians of the Caughnawaga Reserve, now at San Francisco, an application that money be sent them to enable them to return home, they having been engaged by a circus company to travel with it, and finding themselves in a state of destitution in San Francisco. The reply made to the Indians was that their application would be taken into consideration, and a letter was addressed to the Indian agent at Caughnawaga enclosing a copy of the application of the above Indians, and requesting his report thereon. A report was received confirmatory of the statement of the Indians in question, as to their having left Caughnawaga on a tour with a circus company. The agent was advised that, unless the band at Caughnawaga would vote that money be sent them from their funds wherewith to defray their expenses home, the Department had no money for that purpose; and the applicants have been informed to the same effect.

COLLINGWOOD HARBOR.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. COOK) asked, What has been the amount expended each year since Confederation, in improving the harbor at Collingwood, and the total amount for said period?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The following expenditures have been made in improving the harbor of Collingwood since Confederation:—

In 1874 (a)	Building a breakwater 700 ft. in	$ 44,437 66
1875 (b)	length with lighthouse	13,030 77
1879		4,104 81
1880	Deepening the entrance to 14 ft.	6,506 98
1881	of water	7,990 00
1882		8,566 10
1883	Building 1,800 ft. of breakwater,	23,932 55
1884	continuing the work of deepening	30,802 27
1885	the entrance, and dredging	26,931 10
1886	a basin at south end of harbor.	23,468 37
1887	Dredging to 16 ft. at lowest water.	4,884 00
1888	Building stone breakwater and	5,003 80
1889	dredging to 16 ft. at lowest	7,281 55 water
	Total	$ 206,939 96

(a.) Including $15,505.00 contributed by Northern Railway.
 (b.) Including $12,763.26 contributed by Northern Railway.

CASCUMPEC HARBOR.

Mr. PERRY asked, Whether any repairs or new work were done to the brush work at Cascumpec harbor, P. E. I., during the winter of 1889? If so, how much money was expended and who superintended the work?

Mr. COLBY. About 300 feet of brush work was placed on the west end of the work already done, to complete the shore front, and the sum of $309 was expended in the work. The work was carried on under the superintendence of the light-keeper at Sandy Island, and under the general direction of the Agent of Marine at Charlottetown.

Mr. DOYON.

CLAIMS OF MISSISSAUGA INDIANS.

Mr. MADILL asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to take any, and, if so, what, steps towards obtaining a settlement of the claims of the Mississauga Indians for compensation for unsundered lands?

Mr. DEWDNEY. This subject is now under the consideration of the Government.

SNOW-PLOUGHS ON GOVERNMENT RAILWAYS.

Mr. McMULLEN asked, Whether there have been any snow-ploughs purchased for the Intercolonial or other Government Railways within the last three years? If so, how many? From whom were they purchased? At what price? Were tenders asked for? Where were they built? How often have they been used? Have they given satisfaction? Are they the same kind of snow-plough that is used by the Canadian Pacific Railway and Grand Trunk? At whose recommendation were they purchased?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There has been six snow-ploughs purchased within the last three years. They were purchased from James Harris & Co., St. John. Three cost $1,650 each, and three cost $1,750 each. Tenders were not asked for. The plough is a patent plough, Harris & Co. controlling the patent. They were built at St. John. I cannot say how often they have been used, but very frequently. They have given satisfaction. They are not the same kind of snow-plough as is used by the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk. After full trial for several years, they were adopted on recommendation of the engineer and roadmasters. They are known as the Russell Eagle Wire Snow-plough. In addition to these, there have been purchased two rotary snow-shovels from Messrs. Polson & Son, Toronto. They cost $13,000 each. They were not purchased by tender, they being patent machines, Messrs. Polson & Son controlling the patent. I cannot say how often they have been used, but not very frequently, as there has been much less difficulty encountered with snow this season than usual. They were built in Toronto. We have not had sufficient heavy work in the snow this season to warrant an opinion as to their utility and serviceability, but they are spoken very highly of by the Union Pacific Railway Company, the Northern Pacific Railway Company and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, who have the same kind of rotary snow shovels in use. They were purchased upon the recommendation of the Chief Engineer and General Manager of Government Railways.

LIGHTHOUSE AT ST. ROCH'S TRAVERSE.

Mr. CIMON asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to provide, during the present Session, for the erection of a pier and lighthouse at St. Roch's Traverse, on the River St. Lawrence, to replace the two lightships now employed for these purposes?

Mr. COLBY. The hon. member will find his answer on page 62, item 185, of the Estimates of this year.

THE QUEEN VS. BOUCHER.

Mr. THÉRIEN asked, Whether the Government have received the account of Mr. Elie Moreau, advocate, of Sorel, for fees in re The Queen vs. Boucher?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The account has been received.

Mr. THÉRIEN asked, Whether the account of Mr. Elie Moreau, advocate, for fees in re The Queen vs. Boucher, has been paid?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It has not been paid.

ALBERTON LIGHTHOUSE, P.E.I.

Mr. PERRY asked, Whether the Government of Canada is actually employing at the present time men and teams breast working Lighthouse Island, Alberton Harbor, P.E.I., under the direction of G. R. Montgomery? If so, what amount is authorised to be expended? What wages are paid for men and teams per day? How much per load for brush?

Mr. COLBY. Mr. Artemas Lord, the agent of the Marine Department, Charlottetown, was authorised on the 30th January last to carry out certain breast working required for the protection of the Sandy Island light. He was limited to an expenditure of $400, and received general instructions to carry out the work in the most economical and useful way. The Department has not been advised whether any work has yet been performed under that authority. For work of a similar character executed last year, Mr. Montgomery was paid 50 cents per load for brush in place, and Messrs. Montgomery and Wells each 50 cents per ton for stone in place.

THE MEMBER FOR LINCOLN.

Mr. RYKERT. I would crave the indulgence of the House while I read the correspondence which I have had in reference to the matter before the House, and ask that it be placed on the minutes with the rest of the correspondence. On 15th of February, I wrote the following letter to Mr. McArthur, of Minneapolis:—

“ST. CATHARINES, ONT., 15th February, 1890.

“J. B. MCARTHUR, Esq.,
Attorney-at-Law,

401 Lumber Exchange, Minneapolis, Minn.

“MY DEAR MCARTHUR,—I have just wired you asking if you recollect my writing or telegraphing you some time during the early part of 1883 in reference to the trouble with the Canadian Pacific Railway Co. over the Sands' limit. You will, doubtless, recollect that they made claim to every alternate section, some time after the sale to Sands, and, as your firm had acted as Mr. Sands' solicitors, I took the liberty of communicating with you requesting that you should ask Mr. Macdonald and Mr. Tupper, your partners (who either at the time I wrote were in Ottawa, or else were expected there), to interview their respective fathers while here, and acquaint them with the facts regarding the claim set up by the Canadian Pacific Railway to Mr. Sands' limit. I wrote you because your firm acted as solicitors for Mr. Sands at the time of transfer and investigated the title thereof for him.

“My reason for so doing is because the Globe has in some way got hold of and published some of my private correspondence with Adams regarding the limit. In one of my letters to Adams, I wrote that I was going to get Messrs. Macdonald and Tupper to see their fathers about the matter, and the truth of my intention and attempt to do so has been denied.

“Would you mind writing me a letter stating your recollection of the facts and the steps which you took upon receipt of my letter, and the report made to you by Messrs. Macdonald or Tupper, or either of them, of the result of their interview with their fathers or any members of the Government about the matter. I would like you in the letter to state that my reason for applying to your firm was because you had acted as Mr. Sands' solicitors.

“I would feel obliged if you would give this your immediate attention and address your reply to me at Ottawa, as the matter has been brought up in the House, and I want to use your letter to corroborate my account of the transaction.

“The correspondence was obtained by the Globe by theft, and they are striving, by putting a distorted meaning upon it, to throw discredit upon myself and some members of the Government.

“I want to show by you, my reason for asking the members of your firm to call upon Sir John Macdonald and Sir Charles Tupper.

“Yours truly,

“J. C. RYKERT.”

On 17th February I wrote again:

“ST. CATHARINES, ONT., 17th February, 1890.

“MY DEAR MCARTHUR,—I find from a memorandum I have that I wrote you on February 10, 1883, of which the enclosed purports to be a copy. I find also that I telegraphed you to attend to the matter referred to in the letter. Will you kindly see if you have any letters or telegram now in your possession? If you have any recollection of the letter and telegram, please let me know. It is likely you will recollect the circumstance. I also received a letter from you enclosing a clipping from a Winnipeg paper, which I have mislaid. I know that you felt as I did—that we were in honor bound to do everything we could to persuade the Government to ignore the C. P. R. claim, and maintain Sands' license.

“Very truly,

“J. C. RYKERT.”

This is the letter I wrote on 10th February, 1883:

“OTTAWA, 10th February, 1883.

“DEAR MCARTHUR,—I presume you have heard before this that the C. P. R. has put in a claim to part of the limit sold to Sands, which is a most unfortunate piece of business. We must, if possible, try to get the Government to compel the company to abandon its claim. It seems to me that if you get Macdonald and Tupper to come to Ottawa and explain to the Government that your firm passed the title for Sands and that they ought to protect the holders of the license, especially when the license was granted before the railway was built anywhere near the limit, they will do so.

“You will recollect reading Sir John's speech in Parliament to Sands, where he speaks of yearly licenses being as good as those for 21 years. I am satisfied, if the matter is explained by those gentlemen that the Government will renew the license. In conversation with several members of the Government I find that they take the ground that the license should not be interfered with.

“Faithfully,

“J. C. RYKERT.”

I telegraphed a few days afterwards:

“Please attend to the matter I wrote about, in reference to claim on limit.”

Then I sent a statement to my partner as to this matter having been brought up in the House, and told him to see McArthur in Minneapolis, and on 19th February, I received the following telegram:—

“MINNEAPOLIS, 19th February, 1890.

“J. C. RYKERT, M.P.,

“Russell House.

“McArthur corroborates everything you say in his letter to Macdonald.

(Signed)

“J. H. INGERSOLL.”

On 21st February, I received a letter from my partner, Mr. Ingersoll, as follows:—

“ST. CATHARINES, ONT., 21st Feb., 1890.

“DEAR SIR,—I returned from Minneapolis this morning. I saw Mr. McArthur on Wednesday, and told him the object of my visit. He had already seen the Globe containing the Adams letters, and had also seen the Globe containing the account of what took place when the matter came up in the House. I stated the object of my visit, and urged him to give me a letter which you could use when the matter came up again in the House.

"He was unwilling to do this, giving as a reason that he did not care to write anything on the subject, in view of the professional relations which formerly existed between himself and Macdonald and Tupper when in partnership. He discussed the matter freely with me, and remembers quite well the receipt of your letter of the 10th February, 1883, and identified the copy which you gave me to show him as being a copy of the original. He also remembers the receipt of your telegram sent him about the same time regarding the matter. He thinks that Mr. Stewart Tupper was in Ottawa at the time, but remembers quite well that Mr. H. J. Macdonald was about to start for Ottawa, in reference to a Bill then before the House regarding the Manitoba and North-Western Railway Company.

"He admitted that he spoke to Mr. Macdonald on the subject of your letter and telegram, but declined to say what took place between them, either before Mr. Macdonald left for Ottawa, or after his return. He said that all their correspondence on the subject had been left by him in their office in Winnipeg. Your letter and telegram were not the first intelligence he had received of the action of the Canadian Pacific Railway in defecting their line southward, as Sands had already written him, stating that they had defecting their line and had made claim to the alternate sections, and complaining bitterly of the injustice of their claim.

"He finally told me that he would be willing to write you a letter and send it to H. J. Macdonald for perusal, and request him to forward it to you, provided he was satisfied with it.

"I prepared a memo. of the heads which the letter should cover, which was as follows:—

"1. That his firm acted as solicitors for Sands when he bought the limit and assured him that the license was all right and would be renewed as often as necessary, and that at that time the northern boundary of the limit was fully 40 miles south of the surveyed line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that he (McArthur) had personal charge of the matter.

"2. That when he learned that the Canadian Pacific Railway had defecting their line southward to embrace the limit, he, acting in the interests of Sands, and upon the request contained in your last letter and telegram of February, 1883, requested his partners—Macdonald and Tupper—to represent to the Government, when in Ottawa, the injustice that would be done to Sands by the action of the Canadian Pacific Railway and to endeavor to secure from the Government a renewal to Sands of the entire limit.

"3. That in so doing they acted simply as solicitors for Mr. Sands, and to prevent an injustice being done to him.

"4. That there was no attempt made by you to influence them, or through them, the Government, improperly, and that they acted simply as above.

"5. That his partners subsequently informed him that they had seen the members of the Government and had represented the matter to them.

"He stated that there was nothing objectionable in it and that it properly stated the facts. I left the memorandum with him and he said he would write to H. J. Macdonald that afternoon and that the letter would be on the above lines, and ask him to forward the letter after perusal. He stated, however, that he would not promise anything regarding what he might say as to the 5th head, and would have to consider what he would say regarding it, as he did not wish to violate the confidence of his partners. I assured him that you did not wish him to be guilty of any breach of confidence, but that all you wished was to have him contradict the assertion made by the enemies of yourself and the Government, that you sought, through him and his firm, to bring improper influence to bear upon the Government, as he was the best qualified of all men to contradict this, and explain why you called upon his firm in the matter."

This was signed by my partner, Mr. J. H. Ingersoll. I received a telegram stating that Mr. McArthur had forwarded the letter to Mr. H. J. Macdonald, to be forwarded by him to me. I do not wish to contradict these young gentlemen; I do not think they would willingly state what was untrue, but I think this matter which took place seven or eight years ago, has entirely escaped their recollection, and I think they would be more likely to forget what took place than I would. I have made a statement which I think I can corroborate, and I think the House will come to the conclusion that I had some reason for the letters which I wrote. I move that these letters be printed in the Votes and Proceedings, with the other letters which have been laid on the Table to-day.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. MULOOCK. Would not this be a good time to go through the unopposed motions?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If there are any motions of importance to be discussed, we had better discuss them now if we intend to do so this Session.

HEALTH DEPARTMENT.

Mr. ROOME moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the time has come when the Federal Government should establish a Health Department with a responsible head, presided over by a Minister or Deputy Minister, for the purpose of preventing the spread of disease, collecting mortuary statistics, and educating the people, as far as possible, in all health and sanitary matters.

He said: In rising to move this resolution, I do so believing that the time has come when this important subject should receive the earnest attention of this House, as well as of the people of Canada. I shall endeavor to express my thoughts on this matter, and the arguments which I have to bring forward, in such a manner that, though I may not be able to properly place them before the House myself, they may, at all events, induce discussion, and I hope that other hon. members may be able to make them more impressive than I can. Looking at the history of Canada since the confederation of the Provinces, observing the vast progress which she has made, the large and various industries which have been built up, the rapid growth of her cities and towns—in fact, looking at the great and increased prosperity of the whole Dominion, and asking ourselves what has brought that about, I have only, I think, to refer to the speech made last Session by the young and talented Finance Minister, in order to prove that not only this Parliament, but previous Parliaments, have brought about this prosperity by spending millions of dollars in building up our great railway system, which extends from ocean to ocean, and which, with her branch lines, joining the great trunk line, gives us now one of the best railway systems in the world. Parliament has also spent millions of dollars in enlarging our canals, so as to join together our great inland lakes and to make a complete chain of communication, so that our producers and our consumers are brought close together, and we are able to compete with the other nations of the world. While the different Parliaments have been spending money on railways and canals, on the erection of public buildings, on the encouragement of immigration, at the same time hardly any thought has been given to the importance of rescuing many persons from untimely graves, by preventing the spread of those epidemics which occasionally appear amongst us. We, in Canada feel proud of our country, believing that we have formed the nucleus of a great nation, and while we boast of our most excellent form of government whereby our laws are strictly enforced, protecting our lives from the hands of the assassin and murderer, our property from thug and robber, we have scarcely any protection against the spread of those zymotic diseases which are constantly amongst us. While we have spent so much time in opening and developing our country,

I think it would not be amiss if we were to expend some time and some money in endeavoring to prevent the spread of diseases and to save the lives of our own people, many of the best of whom are cut off in the prime of life by preventable diseases, to say nothing of the sickness and suffering our children have to endure from disease engendered into the system in childhood, which cripples and deforms them through life, which, if the cause were removed, they would grow up strong men and women. It is not the numerical population which constitutes the strength of a nation, but it is the physical and mental development as well, as we might say :

" 'Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey, Where wealth accumulates, and men decay.'"

Now, Sir, looking at this subject from a practical point of view, it should be the first duty of every statesman to legislate for the health of the people. Let us consider for a moment what would be the object and what could be accomplished by such legislation. England to-day stands foremost amongst the nations of the earth in having given her attention to health legislation, and during the past half century she has passed a great number of Health Acts. Amongst those, I may mention the Public Health Act in 1842, the Public Health Act of 1848, the Sanitary Act of 1866, the Public Health Act of 1872, and the most important Act of all was one amending the Public Health Act in 1875. By such legislation there has been a marked and marvellous decrease in the death rate of England since the first Act was passed. Previous to the passing of the first Health Act of 1842, she had a system of collecting mortuary statistics from the year 1837, and it was by the collection of these statistics that her physicians and sanitarians were able to impress upon the legislators the necessity of some legislation towards the health of the people. According to the Registrar General's Report of 1841, the death rate of England and Wales was 26 per 1,000. Now, in order to show what has been accomplished in England during the past fifty years by such legislation, I shall divide it off into decades of ten years, which will make a fair and just comparison. If I took one year and compared it with another I might be accused of selecting a year in which there was a great amount of sickness and comparing it with another in which there was not much sickness; but in dividing the period into decades of ten years, there can be no unjust comparison. These figures I have had copied from the Registrar General's Report from England. During the years from 1841 to 1851, the annual death rate was 25·4 per 1,000; 1851 to 1861, 22·4; 1861 to 1871, 22·2; 1871 to 1881, 21·4; 1881 to 1890, 19·1 per 1,000. Now, in order to show what legislation has done in England, let me say that in the year 1875, at the time of the passing of this General Health Act, the death rate of England was 22 per 1,000; from 1876 to 1880, it fell to 19·3; 1886, 19·2; 1887, 18·7; 1888, 17·8; 1889, 17·2, showing that since the passing of that Health Act in 1875 there has been a continual decrease of the death rate every year; and I have no doubt that for the next ten years to come, the rate will continue to diminish in England down to 13 or 14 per 1,000. Now, estimating the population of England and Wales at 28 millions and a-half, it implies that during the last eight years, or at the end of last year, there were 500,000 people living in England whose deaths would have been recorded had the death rate continued the same ratio during the past eight years as it was from 1871 to 1881. Having shown what has been accomplished by health legislation in England, let me draw your attention to what may be accomplished in the Dominion of Canada by similar legislation. For the past number of years we have had a system of collecting vital statistics through the Department of Agriculture. When the system was established in 1882 it only applied to cities having a population of 25,000 and over; since that, it has been extended, until now the statistics are collected from twenty-eight centres. In order to make my calculation, I am going to take the mortuary statistics for the Province of Ontario, from the Registrar General's Report of that Province, which I believe are more correct than those of the Dominion. I believe the system adopted by the Province of Ontario is preferable to the system adopted by the Dominion Government, as the Provincial system leaves it in the hands of medical men to report as to the cause of death. I will read from the Provincial Act in regard to that point :

" Every duly qualified medical practitioner, who was last in attendance during the last illness of any person, shall, within ten days after having notice or knowledge of the death of such person, transmit to the Division Registrar of the Division in which the death took place, a certificate under his signature of the cause of death, according to form of schedule I."

When that is carried out they have a pretty correct system of collecting statistics. The system adopted by the Dominion Government collects statistics from the cemeteries, or those in attendance on those cemeteries. Now, if we take any city in the Dominion that is growing rapidly it is to be remembered that people are constantly coming in from the surrounding districts to seek employment, and those who die there have friends or relatives in the country who carry the body back to be buried in the rural districts, so that the cemeteries in the cities do not give a correct number of all those who die there. We find the population of those twenty-eight centres from which statistics are collected by the Dominion Government, to be 840,000. The death rate in those centres for the past year has been an average of 22·2 per 1,000. As there is no report from the rural sections and small towns, we will have to estimate the death rate of the whole Dominion at, say, 20·5 per 1,000, and we will estimate the population of the Dominion at the present time at 5,500,000. In England, the difference between the rural sections and cities, is 1·7, and for Canada I am giving the whole difference as 2 per 1,000, although I believe medical men will agree with me, that in our small towns and villages zymotic diseases are more fatal than in cities, so that in all probability the death rate is as great, if not greater; but I am going to give the difference as 2 per 1,000. So that, if we estimate the population of the Dominion at 5,500,000, it implies that during last year, if death rate had been reduced as low as it was in England and Wales, namely 17·2, there were about 15,000 or 20,000 deaths recorded in Canada last year which might have been saved. Perhaps, some may think that I have not made a just comparison, by taking the twenty-eight cities in Canada and calculating the death rate for the whole Dominion by that. Now, if there should be objection to the mode by which I have made my calculation, I will take the twenty-eight cities in Canada and compare them with twenty-eight of the largest cities in England. The population of twenty-eight cities in England was 9,400,000. There were 179,865 deaths recorded last year, or an average death rate of 19·2 per 1,000. The average death rate in the same cities from 1871 to 1881, previous to the legislation of the Health Act, was 24 per 1,000. In those twenty-eight cities during the last nine years the average death rate has been 21 per 1,000. This implies that at the end of last year 200,000 more people were living than would have been in existence if the former death rate had prevailed for the past eight years as what it did from 1871 to 1882. In twenty-eight cities in Canada with a population of 840,000 the death rate was 22·2 per 1,000. If the death rate had been reduced to that of the twenty-eight English cities, 19·2, no less than 2,520 lives would have been saved, or for the past ten years, 25,200, which might have been saved by proper legislation. Perhaps I might make a still stronger comparison as to what might be done by health teaching and sanitary legislation, by comparing old London and Montreal. Old London, with a population of 4½ millions, had an average death rate of 18·5 per 1,000 for the past nine years. I desire to say here, that there is no reason why our cities in Canada should not be as healthy as old London is to-day. Montreal has a beautiful situation, with its front washed by a magnificent river whose waters flow so rapidly to the sea, and with high lands in the rear; in fact, with all natural advantages for a metropolitan city; yet Montreal, with a population of 200,000, had an average death rate for the past six years of 34·8 per 1,000, or nearly two to one as compared with overcrowded London. There is no reason why the death rate should not be reduced as low, if not lower than London, by proper sanitary legislation. The difference of 16·3 per 1,000 means that there would have been living in Montreal 3,600 persons at the end of last year, whose deaths have been recorded, or 21,000 during the past six years; if continued for the next ten years at the same ratio the number would have increased to 40,000, who might have been saved and continue their lives as respectable citizens. Toronto, with her beautiful structures of fine architectural design, broad streets and a frontage on Lake Ontario, is the pride of the people of Ontario. The average death rate of that city for the last six years was 21·5 per 1,000, or three per 1,000 more than London. There is no reason to doubt that by proper legislation the death rate could be reduced three or four per 1,000; but if the death rate had been as low as that of London no less than 510 deaths might have been prevented for the past, or in ten years more, if allowed to continue at the same ratio, 5,100. In Quebec the death rate for the past six years averaged 30·7 per 1,000. I will make one more comparison, and then I will close, and that is a comparison of the death rate of the city chosen for the capital of the Dominion; chosen, no doubt, for high elevation and picturesque surroundings. The different Governments have spent money lavishly in erecting buildings, in becoming a great nation, but the people of the city have been derelict of their duty in putting in force sanitary arrangements; so that, instead of this being one of the most healthy cities, it is the most unhealthy cities in the Province of Ontario, and one of the most unhealthy cities in Canada. The death rate for the past six years was 28·5 and for the past seven years 33·7 per 1,000, 12·2 per 1,000 more than Toronto, 15·2 more than old London. I repeat that it is the most unhealthy city in the Dominion, excepting Hull, which has an average death rate for the past three years of 37·7, Hull being not only one of the most unhealthy cities in Canada, but one of the most unhealthy cities in the world. The reason I take the records for the past three years is that the health statistics do not go further back. I may say that, three years ago, the death rate was 41 per 1,000. So from the cities of Quebec, Montreal, Toronto and Hamilton we have in this Parliament a large number of representatives, including men of mark and ability, who are willing to spend hours in discussing the advisability of spending a few thousand dollars on some public improvement or some imaginary cruelty to some dumb animals. I trust I have aroused a feeling in their breasts if they are not favorable to Federal health legislation they will spend time in urging on further health and sanitary measures at home. I have now drawn attention to this important subject, from comparisons made between Canada and our mother land, as to what may be done by proper legislation. I have no doubt there will be exceptions taken, perhaps not with the statements and comparisons I have made, but with the propositions I am about to make to carry out such legislation towards educating people on health matters. The first objection taken, no doubt, will be the great expense necessarily incurred in putting sanitary legislation into force, and this will be the more apparent at the present time when we are all talking economy, although we are not on all occasions practising it. But, if I can show that the money spent will be returned to the people tenfold, the objection should be waived. I now draw attention to the financial aspect of the case. I have shown pretty clearly that there were 20,000 deaths in Canada which could have been prevented; take three-fourths of this number, and say 15,000 deaths recorded, and let us consider what financial loss to the country these deaths represent. First, let us consider the expense on the people from attendance, doctor's bills, &c. It has been estimated by our best aid and relief societies that there are twenty cases of severe sickness for every case of death. That means for 15,000 deaths, 300,000 cases of sickness. What must have been the suffering endured during those 300,000 cases of sickness, to say nothing of the poverty and crime which must necessarily have followed. It has been estimated by the best sanitarians that every case of sickness costs $40. Accordingly, 300,000 cases of sickness, costing $40 each, would represent $12,000,000 loss to the people of Canada. Let us go a little further, taking our information from our aid and relief societies. It is computed that each case of sickness lasts twenty days; the total sickness would, therefore, represent 6,000,000 days. Taking the time lost by the sick, and those waiting on them, at $2 per day, there is a loss of $12,000,000 or more, or a total loss of $24,000,000 yearly. There is not only this direct loss, but there is an indirect loss also, for, during the time of sickness, nothing is added to the wealth of our country. There is also to be added another indirect loss from those who have died. It is estimated that each additional emigrant is worth $1,000 to the country, and that of the 15,000 unnecessary deaths 60 per cent.

die between birth and 15 years of age and above 50, leaving 40 per cent. to die between the ages of 15 and 50, making 6,000. Some may contend that $1,000 is too much to place on a man's life, but the Bible says, would not a man give all that he had got for his life, and the unnecessary deaths, computed at that rate, would represent $6,000,000. A second objection, perhaps, which will be raised, is that all health teaching should be left in the hands of physicians. I will admit that it is partly the duty of the physician to assist in carrying out wise legislation on health matters, but his chief duty is to stand between his patient and the grave; and I am proud to say that there is no class of men more willing and ready to take their lives in their hands in going to the bedsides of their patients, and facing the most malignant and fatal diseases, than gentlemen of the medical profession. But, Sir, they are also ready and willing to assist in any efforts that may be made for the prevention, as well as for the cure of disease. There are some who believe that death and sickness will come; it matters not what we do, but that is a mistaken idea. This world is run by fixed laws, and when we violate these laws, we suffer the consequences. The object of the legislation such I now suggest, is to educate our people how to observe these laws, and so to escape the consequence of their non-observance. A third objection which doubtless will be raised, and which will admit of a good deal of discussion, is, "That all health matters and sanitary regulations should be left in the hands of the Provincial or Local Governments." I do not wish it to be understood that I am opposed to each Province having a board of health or some forms of health legislation; far from it. I would be pleased to know that each had such a board and that their laws were strictly enforced. I am satisfied that the board of health in the Province of Ontario is doing a great deal of good, and would do very much more if the people were educated on health matters and the cause of disease. Disease knows no provincial or municipal lines. Therefore, health teaching must necessarily fall upon the Federal Government. I believe it is just as essential to have a Federal head or Department of Health as it is to have a Department of Agriculture, or a Department of Inland Revenue, or even a Postmaster General. Each Province now has a Minister of Agriculture or a similar office; still, they do not interfere with our Federal Minister of Agriculture. Each has its particular functions to perform. The Department of Health could be carried on similar to the Department of Agriculture. The hon. Minister of Agriculture has had established, since he has occupied his office, a Central or Experimental Farm, with several branch farms, in the different Provinces. The object of these farms is to make investigations, so as to instruct the farmers as to the best and most improved system of farming; also the most reliable seeds to sow, so as to produce to the farmers the greatest rewards for their labors; also to indicate the best animals to raise and the best fruits to grow, that farming may be made as profitable as possible. And, Sir, while doing this, is it not just as desirable that there should be a department where useful knowledge could be gathered, useful experiments made, and the knowledge so gained disseminated amongst the people, as to the best modes of preventing disease? During last Session, Prof. Saunders, of the Experimental Farm, informed the Committee on Agriculture that he had imported a variety of wheat from Russia, which he had been experimenting on, and that he believed it was equal in quality to any which we had, and would ripen ten or twelve days earlier, so that it would escape the early frosts of the great wheat-growing districts of the West and North-West. If such proves to be the case it will be worth millions upon millions of dollars to Canada, and the Experimental Farm should be heralded as one of the grandest undertakings the Government has achieved since Confederation. Now, Sir, if we had a similar place where experiments could be made as to the cause and origin of disease, and especially to that dreaded disease tuberculosis, which is on the rapid increase in our country (more having died from it in Canada last year than from any one other disease). It is now becoming an important question, and engaging the attention of the physicians and scientists of the world, whether it is communicable from the domestic animals to man. I believe, to-day, the medical men are about equally divided upon the matter. Now, Sir, by having a place for experimenting ourselves, and collecting the observations of others, it could soon be studied out, whether this disease was so communicable or not, and if it is found to be so, without a doubt it would be the duty of this Parliament to take steps to eradicate the disease from our domestic animals. By so doing they would confer a greater boon on the people of Canada than the introduction of any kind of grain or fruit into this country. Almost every civilised country in the world, except Canada, has some central organisation to look after the public health. In England they have their central local government board, presided over by a president, who in both of the Hon. E. Gladstone's Governments had a seat in the Cabinet. Prussia, Russia, and Austria have their Imperial boards of health. France has a central or federal board, and since it was organised the death rate has diminished in as great, if not greater ratio than in England. In our neighboring Republic they have established at Washington a National board of health, and almost every State has its State board of health. Florida was an exception, and I have no doubt all of you will remember the dreadful scourge of yellow fever they had there two years ago. The Governor of the State was compelled to call the Legislature together in special session to consider measures for the protection of the public health; and at that time they established a State board of health. It will, for long years to come, be a matter of regret to the people of Florida that, from inexcusable supineness and lethargy, her Legislature did not listen to the warnings of danger, given previous to the year 1888, by her physicians and sanitarians. Had Florida been ready to have availed herself of this, with the assistance of the Federal Government, millions of dollars and thousands of lives might have been saved to the State. Let us take warning from Florida, and not let our young and prosperous Dominion be caught in a similar position if an epidemic should approach our shores. Let us be prepared to meet it at every point. Now, Mr. Speaker, let me draw your attention to what would necessarily come under this department, namely: All health matters, such as collecting mortuary, natal and nuptial statistics, reports on prevailing diseases, quarantine, adulteration of food and diseases of domestic animals. In connection with this department there would be required an efficiently equipped laboratory for the investigation as to the cause and origin of disease, and the knowledge gained from those sources communicated to the people monthly, quarterly and yearly. Now, Sir, I think if you will consider the matter carefully, you will agree with me that these subjects would more properly come within the province of the Federal Government than of the Provincial. I must give credit to the Dominion Government for the systematic manner in which they have already carried on the work of collecting mortuary statistics and statistics of prevailing diseases, and sending out monthly bulletins of those statistics; and I am pleased to know that the statistician of the Government, who is making preparations for the taking of the census of 1891, is now preparing books to be sent out to medical men, in which they will be asked to keep a correct record of the deaths of people whom they attend, the causes of death, the cases of sickness, and the length of time those cases have lasted. If this intention is carried out successfully, we shall have some very valuable statistics relating to the causes of sickness and death among our people. Now, in establishing the health department I propose, the subject of the adulteration of food, which is now under the control of the Department of Inland Revenue, and the subject of quarantine, which is now in the hands of the Department of Agriculture, might be taken from those Departments and put under the control of the new Department. Then there should be established in connection with it an efficient laboratory for the investigation of the causes and origin of diseases. Such a laboratory would collect cases from one end of the Dominion to the other, and yet could be carried on at very little more cost than a laboratory for one Province would cost. Now, I have detained the House longer than I intended. I thought, when I rose to my feet, that I would suggest a plan as to how such health legislation could be carried out; but, on giving the matter a second thought, which you know is always best, I have concluded not to. I will be satisfied if I have awakened a feeling on this important subject in the minds of a majority of those present. I have no doubt that the Ministry of the day will devise a plan which will be acceptable to the House and the people of Canada; for I have unbounded faith in our grand old chieftain, who stood foremost amongst our statesmen in bringing about Confederation, and who has so successfully steered the ship of state for so many years. If he takes the matter in hand, I have no doubt but that he will bring forward a scheme by which a federal system of health and sanitary regulations may be established, thereby saving the lives of thousands of our people yearly. Such an achievement would redound to his credit in years to come as great, if not greater, than some of the most important undertakings he has started and lived to see accomplished. I, therefore, move this resolution, seconded by General Laurier.

General LAURIE. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to hear from the hon. gentleman who brought forward this resolution, that he is inclined, to a certain extent, to modify it, as I certainly should not read it as it appears on the paper. I did not intend to support a motion that a fresh department should be created for this purpose. On the contrary, for reasons which I will submit to the House, I think it most desirable that the work suggested by the hon. member should be carried on under the Department of Agriculture. It may be considered somewhat surprising that I, as a non-professional man, should move in this matter, but it will be in the recollection of some hon. members of this House that, last year and the year before, I acted as chairman of a Committee working under the Select Committee on Agriculture and Immigration, to enquire into the communicability of disease from cattle to man and from man to cattle. That Committee, with a view of obtaining as much information as possible, sent out 1,480 sets of questions to medical gentlemen practising in this Dominion, from whom we received 215 replies. Analysing those replies, we ascertained that those medical men believed:

"That from 10 to 50 per cent. of cases of disease and premature death might be prevented by judicious sanitary measures; that consumption is contagious and infectious, and isolation would assist in prevention, but that the chief preventable causes of disease are contagion, impure air and water, unhealthy diet, decaying animal and vegetable matter, bad drainage, general want of cleanliness, and sudden changes of temperature, and the ordinary measures are suggested as palliatives. * * * A few express the opinion that tuberculosis may be transmitted to the human system, as well as diphtheria, by the medium of impure milk and meat; but few have met with actual cases in their own experience of diseases being so communicated. They consider tuberculosis in domestic animals is produced by improper feeding and unhealthy surroundings."

The Committee, in making their report, appended this recommendation:

"We are led further to the belief that our enquiries into the subject entrusted to us would have been much facilitated, and productive of a much greater amount of information, if a system of observing and recording vital statistics were established in the Dominion, and thus preventive and precautionary measures against contagion in any form would be better appreciated and more satisfactorily carried out."

Now, Sir, I do not intend to detain the House by reading statistics or extracts from blue-books at any length. I simply wish, in as few words as possible, to give my views on this subject. It may be, as the hon. member has stated, that the duty of looking after the health of the people belongs more to the Provincial Legislatures than to this Parliament. But the duty of bringing immigration into the country, in order to increase our population, has been largely devolved upon this Parliament, and if it is worth our while to bring people here, surely it is worth our while to keep them alive when we have got them; and, therefore, to that extent, I think this duty is fairly and justly imposed on the Federal Parliament. The hon. mover of the resolution has quoted statistics at considerable length, showing how much the health of people in towns and cities, and even in larger areas, in the countries of the Old World, has been improved by the study of hygiene—the study of preserving health rather than that of simply curing disease. He has shown how many unnecessary deaths have taken place in other parts of the world, and how many he believes have taken place in Canada, which might have been prevented had we some proper system of hygiene. But without statistics it is impossible for us to obtain information as to what our people die from, and as to what steps should be taken to keep them alive. Last year I went across the Atlantic, in the hope of being able to attend the medical congress held in Paris at the end of July last, at which, among other subjects, that of the communicability of disease from cattle to man was to be considered; but, unfortunately, I was detained by some foolish Customs officers in London, and was unable to get there in time. I obtained, however, a report of the proceedings. One of the matters brought before the congress was the report of the French Government Commission of 1888, which ascertained from medical statistics that one-third of all the deaths in France resulted from that fatal disease, tuberculosis. They came to the conclusion almost unanimously that tuberculosis came under the head of preventable diseases, and was most largely communicated by animals to man in some form of food, as in meat and milk, as well as otherwise by bacilli, and was also communicated from man to man. The death statistics of Paris for 1884 showed that out of 56,970 deaths that took place in that city in that year, over 15,000 were due to that disease. Therefore, as the hon. gentleman has shown how many deaths have been already prevented by the study of hygiene and the precautionary system established in France, it might be shown that if that disease had been more fully studied, a large proportion of those 15,000 people might have been preserved from it, and would probably have been living for years afterwards. That question to which I am confining my attention more particularly, because the mover did not attend to that question so much, the communicability of disease from animal to man, is a matter which it is necessary further to investigate. It is necessary that we should obtain this information from statistics. The belief of medical men now is, that disease can be communicated from an animal to a man, but we want to have the facts, and those facts can be obtained only by a record ranging over a number of years. It is certain that there is not so much tuberculosis in this Dominion as exists in other parts of the world, but there is too much of it. We found last year, that cattle suffering from tuberculosis had been imported into this country, and the animals had to be slaughtered. While I was in England, I called on the Secretary of the Royal Agricultural Society, who asked me to see Sir Jacob Wilson, the executive officer of the society, who was knighted last year because of the active part he has taken in connection with the Royal Agricultural Society's exhibitions and his general interest in the subject. I did not see him personally, but he writes me:

"The subject (that is, of tuberculosis) is daily growing in importance in this country, and representations are, I believe, about to be made to the Agricultural Department of this Government, from various towns, urging the necessity for legislation thereon. Whether Her Majesty's Government consider the question sufficiently ripe for legislation, I know not, but it appears to me that, sooner or later, the question must come under their serious consideration. I think it highly desirable that you should have a few minutes' conversation with Professor Brown, the chief veterinary authority to the Government, upon the subject."

That was signed by Sir Jacob Wilson. I called to see Professor Brown, and I found he was much impressed with the same idea, and, after two or three interviews with him, he drafted a series of proposals to the President of the Board of Agriculture, the Right Hon. Henry Chaplin, pointing out that these diseases which were known to be dangerous as being communicable from animals to men should be placed on the schedule, and that those animals which were suffering from them should be slaughtered. I could not see Mr. Chaplin, as he was suffering from influenza, but I saw his secretary. I saw Sir James Caird, and I saw Professor Brown several times. Mr. Chaplin, writing to me, says:

"He is conscious of the great importance of the question, and it is one which will have to receive the careful attention of the Board of Agriculture, when some other matters which are pressing for settlement have been disposed of. Mr. Chaplin is exceedingly obliged for your kind offer of a copy of the report of the sub-committee of the Canadian House of Commons on tuberculosis, which he will most gratefully accept."

I introduce these points now to show that this matter is growing in importance in England, but there is a very serious difficulty in dealing with it in England, which both the Board of Agriculture and the Local Government Board have to face. It is that the Board of Agriculture can only deal with diseases which are communicable between cattle, and the Local Government Board can only deal with diseases in men which are communicable to other men. It is a pity that the two boards should have to deal with these two matters separately when there are so many diseases which are communicable from animals to men. Consequently, while I desire to see action taken to stamp out these fatal diseases, I should be very sorry that the power should be placed in the hands of any other Department than the Department of Agriculture. I think it is vital that the Department of Agriculture should be charged with the collection of statistics in reference to this, and that, having collected statistics, that Department should act upon them, and should have executive authority to stamp out diseases either in animal or in man, which might pass from one to the other or might affect the health of either. I, therefore, think it is desirable, that the Federal Government should have this power under the control of the Department of Agriculture, and should deal with it rather than that it should be left, as has been suggested, to be dealt with by the Provincial Governments alone. I am glad to hear that there is some chance of the establishment of experimental stations to test the communicability of diseases in this Dominion. We have spent a great deal of money on the Experimental Farm, and we have spent it wisely and judiciously, but I am of opinion that there is now necessity to expend some money on experimental stations, in order to endeavor to ascertain the causes and to endeavor to avert the diseases which have afflicted us. I have great pleasure in seconding the resolution.

Mr. PLATT. The full explanation of this subject, which has been given by the mover of the resolution, obviates the necessity of any lengthened remarks from me. The mover of the resolution has brought to the attention of the House, a matter which surpasses in importance many of the subjects which we have had to discuss during this Session or in previous Sessions. I am glad to see that one layman, as he calls himself, has taken an interest in this subject, and expressed his views upon it. I cannot say that I would support the motion as it stands now, but I very heartily endorse the object of the mover. For many years this subject has been discussed in the Parliament of Canada, and, unfortunately, we have failed to see the increasing interest taken in it which should be taken in it, by the people of this country. Great advancement has been made of late years in sanitary science, and in the knowledge of preventive medicine to such an extent that we may hope that, in the near future, we shall see beneficial results arising from steps taken on the part of the Government in the direction which is aimed at in this motion. The objection which is most likely to be taken, and which has heretofore proved fatal to similar motions, has been the difficulty of dividing the responsibility and the work between the Provincial and the Federal Legislatures. I confess that there is some difficulty on that point, but, so far as the foundation of all sanitary work is concerned, there can be no doubt but that the Dominion Government have it in their power; it is, in fact, their duty to lay the foundations for the collection of such statistics. Indeed that has been recognised by this Parliament, and a Department of Statistics has been organised, and for several years a considerable sum of money has been expended for the collection of what is termed mortuary statistics. I have already intimated, during this present Session, that, in my opinion, we have either done too little or we have been doing too much; we should either move forward from where we are now standing, or we should cease to expend $10,000 a year for providing mortuary statistics. It is acknowledged on all hands that the basis of all sanitary work throughout the country must of necessity be statistics, and statistics which are incomplete, or imperfect, or incorrect, are of very little use for any sanitary board. I am sorry to say that the opinion prevails, and not without reason, that the mortuary statistics furnished by the Department of Agriculture are not reliable, and cannot be of very much service to any sanitary board. We continue to collect them from a certain definite number of points, but they give us a very inadequate idea of the ravages of diseases throughout the country generally, or of the number of deaths which occur from certain diseases in various localities. Now, I will take the trouble to compare the death rate, and the number of deaths, as announced in the last return of mortuary statistics furnished by the registrar of the Province of Ontario, with those which have been furnished by the Dominion Government, to show the difference between the results arrived at by those two authorities in respect of the same cities. In the city of Toronto, we find, according to the report of the Department of Agriculture, that in 1888 there were 2,498 deaths; whereas, according to the registrar of the Province of Ontario, there were 2,839 deaths. The rate per 1,000, according to the Dominion Government, is only 14·97, and, according to the Ontario authority, it is 20·3. You see that a great discrepancy exists with regard to the city of Toronto. Then, take the city of Hamilton. The Dominion Government reported 823 deaths, and the Ontario Government, 720; rate per 1,000, according to the former, 18·57, and according to the latter 16. For the city of Ottawa the Dominion statistics returned 923 deaths; the Ontario statistics 958, not a great discrepancy. The death rate was 23·9, according to the latter, and 22·51, according to the former. As we go on through the list we find in the smaller towns, where statistics are given by the two separate boards, and where both authorities collect their returns from officials of cemeteries, there is very little discrepancy indeed; but in the larger cities where those boards strive to arrive at correct calculation, we find a great discrepancy. This throws distrust upon all the statistics, and shows the necessity of organising a new and better system whereby we may arrive at conclusions that will assist sanitarians much more than the present system aids them. I think there is also a feeling that much more should be done in the way of teaching the public, in the way of sanitary improvements, in the way of providing instruction for the people, and assisting in lessening the deaths from various diseases. As I have already stated, they have found in England and elsewhere, that without statistics of a reliable character, this cannot be done. I will read from the annual report of the Registrar General of England, for 1887, in which he says:

“The Registration Act of England came into force in July, 1837, and was opposed by the clergy and the uneducated masses, and supported by the medical and legal profession, particularly by the former. The Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons issued a circular pledging themselves, and asking all their members to do the same, to give in every instance that might fall under their care, an authentic name of the fatal disease. The immediate benefit of medical knowledge to be derived from this action on their part, was a more accurate knowledge, not only of the comparative prevalence of various mortal diseases as regards the whole of England and Wales, but also of the localities in which they respectively prevail, and the age, sex and condition of life, which each principally affect; but a far greater benefit than any foreseen by these medical authorities has, in reality, been obtained from it, namely, an addition of more than two years to the average span of life of the inhabitants of England and Wales. That such an addition has, however, been made, and that it has been the result of the Registration Act that came into force in 1837, is beyond all doubt. For it is the registration of deaths and of their causes that has made sanitation possible.”

I am glad the mover of this resolution has relieved me from the necessity of going over the statistics with regard to the death rates of England and Canada; I am prepared, however, having gone over the same without his knowledge or consent, to verify the figures he has given to this House. Some very interesting things might be stated with regard to the benefits which might accrue from the establishment of a better health board for this Dominion. Previous speakers have stated that we, in Canada, are somewhat behind other countries. That is evidenced by our comparatively high death rate—not so high as some other countries, but the fact that the death rate in Canada exceeds the death rate of populous England, with her great cities, shows that there is something lacking in our statistical and hygienic arrangements. The mover of this resolution has correctly stated that in the twenty-eight cities and towns from which we have reports, the average death rate last year was 21 per 1,000, while in England it was only 17·4. Upon the same method of calculation we find that if we take the previous year and compare it with the last year reported upon, if the death rate of Canada was reduced to that of England, we would save annually 20,000 lives. To show that very much can be done towards saving valuable lives in this country, we have only to look at the large number of deaths that are caused by what we term preventable or zymotic diseases, which principally affect children; and we find that the death rate of children in this Dominion is something amazing. The birth rate of this country is not very much behind that of other countries of a similar population. There are over 150,000 children born in Canada every year—over 400 every day in the year. Taking the whole of the twenty-eight cities reported upon last year, we find there were 18,355 deaths reported, of which 9,645 were under the age of five years, proving conclusively that such diseases as attack children, and which in almost every instance are zymotic or preventable diseases, were the causes of death, giving the very best argument, indeed, for the establishment of a sanitary or hygienic bureau of some kind. The general impression, of course, is that there are few diseases which it would pay the people to look after very carefully. For years the whole community has been terribly frightened of small-pox, while other diseases, which have every year carried off thousands and tens of thousands, have been considered as of small importance. Taking the public records, it appears that not a single death from small-pox was reported last year, while there were from scarlet-fever, 51; measles, 140; typhus, 381; diphtheria, 1,182; or 1,758 deaths from these four preventable diseases in a population in these twenty-eight cities of 700,000. If the deaths were in proportion throughout the rest of Canada, there were 14,000 deaths during the year from those four preventable diseases. A very interesting document came into my hands some time ago prepared by an English authority, entitled "Loss of Wealth by Loss of Health," and if hon. members were to examine the pamphlet carefully they would come to the same conclusion as that reached by the distinguished author of the pamphlet, and they would be of the opinion that we would not be losing money, but saving money, if we expended a much larger sum on a hygienic laboratory in this country. Taking England, the writer shows that the average of sickness among workmen is two and a-half weeks per year. Taking England and Wales, he places the number of working-class families at 4,259,000, the bread-winners of which earn daily wages amounting to £8,819; the loss from sickness, according to this computation, reaches £13,307,000 per annum, or £1,000,000 per day of sickness for these people. Manchester offers a very striking example of what may be done towards protecting the people against disease and saving vast sums on this account. That city has a working population of 92,500, which earn weekly wages of £115,700; therefore the loss to the working families amounts to £20,000 per day, for each day of sickness plus the loss to the employers, and so forth. The cost of the Health Department of Manchester for last year was £87,000 for hospitals, disinfection, drainage, sewerage, and so forth. The saving of life effected is estimated by the best statisticians at 2,301 lives, one thousand of these being between twenty and seventy years of age. The total saving was £300,000, obtained at an expenditure of £87,000. The mover of the resolution refrained from expressing an opinion as to the manner in which we should proceed in order to reach the result at which we wish to arrive. I have not prepared any scheme, and I do not know what scheme may present itself to the minds of the Ministers, if they look favorably on this proposition, but that will be a matter for them to consider and report on at an early date, I hope. Of course, as I have already intimated, I believe it to be the duty of the Government to establish on a firm basis a Department for the collection of such statistics as sanitarians wish to use; mortuary statistics of themselves are not sufficient, we want vital statistics, we want reports of births and marriages, of epidemics and of the ravages of preventable diseases throughout the country, and then we will have a foundation upon which the Provincial authorities may act. I have no doubt whatever that this Government has full authority to institute measures to educate the people on this subject. There is nothing to prevent the Dominion Government spending a large sum in the distribution of weekly or monthly bulletins and reports relating to epidemic diseases throughout the country, and the distribution of literature teaching the people the various methods by which these diseases may be prevented, and also literature relating to the establishment of a hygienic laboratory and bacteriological laboratory for the investigation of these diseases; and in that way they can do a very large amount of work which is now attempted to be done by the Provincial authorities. So far as coercion and the enforcement of different measures are concerned, I grant that this rests with the municipalities, acting under their Provincial Legislature. That portion of the work can safely be left to them, but that is no reason why this Parliament and this Government, acting in concert with the Local Legislatures, and the municipalities acting, in turn, with the Legislatures, cannot very largely increase the efficiency of the regulations now existing in this country. It has been said that this question is always lightly considered by Parliament. I am sorry to say that, in the past, this has been the case; but I trust the time has gone by when the Parliament of Canada will treat lightly such an important question as that now under discussion. In every Province, and in this Dominion Parliament, we find the House almost unanimously adopting measures to prevent death from contagious disease in animals when an outbreak occurs, and this House should not be more negligent in undertaking similar measures when the human family is concerned; and we are well aware that if an epidemic among cattle occurs in any district, an officer is at once despatched to ascertain the cause and, if necessary, to slaughter the infected animals, and, in fact, to take such steps as are necessary to prevent the spread of the disease. We know that disease increases in geometrical proportion; that one case of small-pox brings two, and so on. Even simple isolation, if properly carried out by Parliament and enforced by the municipalities, would, in almost every instance, cut short the ravages of any of the fatal epidemics which have carried off thousands and tens of thousands in this country. I am heartily in accord with the object aimed at by the mover of this resolution, and I hope that the Government, although they may not see fit to grant the motion as now proposed, will take the subject into consideration, and that in future Sessions we will see an increasing interest taken in this very important subject.

Mr. SPROULE. The only excuse I have to offer to the House for occupying its time in discussing this question, is the importance of it. An able writer once said that health is the summum bonum, and that, when lost, no consideration is too great or any reward too high for its restoration. In all well ordered civilised countries where the Government of the state is discharging its duty to the people, one of those important duties is to guard the public health. Governments are said to be entrusted with the protection of the life and property of the people. It is not simply that life is to be protected from the hands of the assassin, but it is likewise to be protected from those lurking diseases which prevail in different parts of the country, and which carry off their victims by thousands. I recognise that it is as much the duty of the state to protect life from these diseases as it is from the dagger of the assassin. England considered this question over fifty years ago, and, owing to its importance, entered upon legislation to remedy the evils and prevent these diseases. From that time to the present over fifty Acts of Parliament have been passed in the direction of establishing health bureaus or hygienic bureaus for the purpose of ameliorating the condition of the people or preventing the spread of disease. It is said to be the duty of the physician to prevent death when presented in the shape of disease, but even before the physician is called in, remedies may be adopted that may prevent the imbibition of disease by the human being, and prevent not only death but sickness and suffering, and the loss of money which follows. England has been legislating on this question for a great many years, and the result has been that she has reduced her rate of mortality something like 23 per cent. That human life in England, in 1842, the average of it was only twenty-two years; it is, to-day, a little over twenty-seven years. England has reduced the mortality of her population about 23 per cent. France has dealt with the same subject in her great hygienic institutions, and the result has been a reduced mortality of over 17 per cent. Germany has dealt with the subject in a very elaborate and comprehensive way, and the satisfactory result has been obtained of reducing her mortality 22 per cent. In Switzerland a similar result has followed. Returning to the continent of America, we find that the Republic to the south of us has been establishing State boards of health in connection with her Federal Hygienic Institute, and in the State of Michigan the mortality, in twenty-five years, has been reduced 17 per cent.; in Massachusetts, 23 per cent., and in the different other States the reduction has been in proportion to the care and attention given to this important subject. The experience of all other countries, therefore, proves to us that the adoption of a broad sanitary system has been beneficial, and is it not time that we, in Canada, should consider the matter? It is true that we have Provincial Boards of Health doing an admirable work; but in conjunction with them, I think we should have a National Health institution, which would direct these hygienic investigations, calculated to prevent, in many localities, the spread of diseases which result from preventable causes. This Government assumes part of that work, to-day, in the collection of its statistics, but we believe that this work should be extended, and that we should not only collect such statistics as have been, so far, obtained by the Minister of Agriculture, but that we should have reports from the various Provincial Boards of Health, and embody these reports in our own—not only reports of vital statistics, but reports of mortuary statistics, also the statistics of births, marriages, and deaths, and reports in connection with these zymotic diseases which are so destructive, not only in towns and cities, but in rural localities as well. The Federal Government now goes a little further than this statistical work, and we have a Department for the purpose of analysing adulterated food. That is really done for the purpose of preventing disease. Therefore, at present, this Government are attending to two branches of this important work, although not to such an extent as we believe they ought to. If, under the Federal system, we are entitled to attend to certain branches of the subject, why should we not go a little further and attend to those which are equally, if not more, injurious to health, than the adulteration of food? It appears to me that it would not be interfering with the rights of the Provinces to do so. Even, though it might be in some way an interference with Provincial rights, I think that some understanding might be arrived at between the Provinces and the Dominion so that they could co-operate with each other in doing this work much more efficiently than it is done to-day. Our sanitary legislation is yet in its infancy; but, notwithstanding that, I believe that great good has been already accomplished. We believe that at least one-fourth of the deaths which take place in the country might be prevented if we attended to this matter on a larger scale, and sought the co-operation of the medical men of the country. If we can prevent one death out of every four which takes place now, it means, as my hon. friend said, a saving of 20,000 lives to the state every year. If we could under such a system, and by a judicious arrangement, as has been suggested by my hon. friend from West Middlesex (Mr. Roome) and from Shelburne (General Laurie), prevent 20,000 deaths in a year, how much better would it be for the state than the importation of 20,000 immigrants? Those now living in our country, acquainted with its ways and manners and customs, are schooled in all which enables them to add prosperity to the state, and to make life a success in the Dominion of Canada. I, therefore, say that the saving of these lives would be of much more value than the importation of the same number of individuals from any country. In addition to that we would prevent a great amount of human suffering, and save to the state the large number of days' labor which is lost every year, by reason of the sickness which results from preventable diseases. If eminent physicians be correct who have cited statistics to prove that for every death in the country, about twenty days' sickness is caused, then we can understand the amount of labor lost on account of sickness. If we could prevent the loss of this labor to the state of which I have spoken, it would be a saving to the state of over twenty million dollars annually, and if we spent five million dollars in the perfection of this hygienic system, I am sure we would be doing all that the country would expect from us at present, and there would still be an annual gain to the state of at least fifteen millions of dollars. Such an institution as I have referred to would give us a much more efficient power to combat these diseases which are destroying human life. If our efforts in this direction bore the same fruits as they have in other countries, there would be prevented a large amount of that suffering which prematurely breaks down the human system.

There is no doubt that every serious case of sickness tends to make life shorter to the patient, and even after recovery the system is not so strong as before to resist the ravages of disease. How important, then, is it not, that the state should establish some hygienic board of health, or some institution which would co-operate with the local boards of health in combatting, as far as possible, these serious diseases which are so prevalent to-day. It is a fact, which every medical man in this House will admit, that diphtheria, one of the most prevalent and destructive diseases we have in the Dominion of Canada, might be reduced 50 per cent. if only proper precautions were taken to prevent its spread, and to stamp it out in any locality where it may become prevalent. If we go still further, as might be done under the hygienic board which we propose, and investigate the local causes which produced that disease, it would mean the analysis of the drinking water, and an enquiry into the local conditions which generated the disease. It would also mean, perhaps, as the hon. member suggested, the establishment of a bacteriological institute here, which would investigate the causes of these zymotic diseases, and the best means for their prevention and cure. I believe it to be a fact that, in every locality where we have a competent board of health, we have not one case of diphtheria, where we had three or four some ten years ago. That change has been brought about very largely by the perfecting of these local boards of health and by compelling the local municipalities, as soon as any epidemic disease shows itself in a locality, to report it to the local board of health, and have it properly attended to by medical men. But we have not a collection of such statistics, showing where the diseases are most prevalent, what the causes are, how they might be prevented, and what might be done to stamp out any disease as soon as it makes its appearance. That might be done with regard to small-pox, scarlet fever, diphtheria, whooping cough, and other epidemic diseases which sweep over the country with such destructive effects. I think the Federal Government should take some action in this matter. I think they have power, under the British North America Act, to do so; and if they have not the requisite power, I think it is high time that steps should be taken to have the constitution so amended as to give them power to co-operate with the Provincial Governments for the purpose of elaborating some hygienic organisation to take charge of this work and effectually carry it out. I think that such a system would effect most important results to the state, that it would save more money than any one has any idea of, more suffering than perhaps one-fourth of the medical men in this country could save, more lives every year than we are bringing in by immigration, and more wealth than would pay a very large share of our national debt.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Speaker, the importance of this subject cannot well be over-estimated; and if there were any doubts as to that, the able and impressive speech of my hon. friend who moved this resolution, supported, as he has been, by the remarks made by other hon. gentlemen, would convince us that it is a subject which should not be overlooked. It has not been overlooked, however, by the Dominion Parliament; and as far as the Government of the Dominion have been able to act under the powers given to them by the British North America Act, very substantial steps have been taken for the purpose of ascertaining the best methods of preventing the spread of disease. The mortuary statistics which have been collected have been very full—as full as, under the circumstances, could well be obtained. When we consider that the reports have been made in a great degree, if not altogether, gratuitously, we must admit that considerable progress has been made. The resolution asks that the Federal Government should establish a health department with a responsible head. Well, we have a health department in the Department of Agriculture, and it would not advance the purpose of the resolution at all to establish a separate department, giving another member of Parliament the title of Minister of Health. The Minister of Agriculture, in the first place, is given charge of the census and statistics, and also of quarantine; and the remarks of the hon. member for Shelburne (General Laurie) show the importance of having these subjects under one head. He has pointed out that in England there are two departments, one looking after the diseases of men, and the other looking after the diseases of animals; but, as it is now ascertained beyond a doubt that diseases are communicable from man to animals, and from animals to man, it is of great importance that the whole subject of health should be under one head. One of the difficulties to be encountered in this matter arises from the divided authority of the Federal Parliament and that of the different Provinces. I think, if I remember aright, that before 1872 there were certain statutory powers given to the Federal Government on this subject; but it was found, from the nature of the division of powers, that the officers who could be best utilised for the purpose of collecting mortuary statistics, and who could really aid most effectually in the stopping of the spread of diseases, were officers of the Provincial Governments—so much so, that Parliament repealed the clauses giving those special powers to the Federal Government. The same reason which induced Parliament then to throw the responsibility principally upon the Provincial authorities exists at this moment. This resolution specifies that, besides preventing the spread of disease and collecting mortuary statistics, the proposed department should educate the people as far as possible in all sanitary matters. Now, when you consider that all county and municipal officers, and the whole educational system of the country are under the jurisdiction of the different Provincial Governments, you will see that in the employés of those Governments are to be found the best men and means for collecting information, for assisting in preventing the spread of disease, and for educating people in sanitary matters. In each of the Provinces, there is to be found an enormous body of educated men in the schoolmasters. Those men would, as a matter of course, be available, and would be only too glad, I have no doubt, to aid in this important and humane object. The Federal Government, on the other hand, have spread throughout the country only a few Custom house officers, excisemen, and such officers, and if the responsibility of attending to this subject were thrown upon the Federal Government only, it would be absolutely necessary to appoint a staff of special health officers at an enormous expense, who would not be able to do the work so well as the Provincial Governments with their extensive machinery. It has occurred to me, after listening to the very able speeches of the hon. gentlemen who have spoken, that the best plan would be—and I would suggest it to my hon. friend before asking him to withdraw his resolution, after having fully impressed Parliament with the subject—to have a convention, to which the Federal Government would ask the various Provincial Governments to send representatives, for the purpose of endeavoring to frame some united plan for exercising the various powers conferred upon them by the Constitution in such a manner that they could unite in one system and carry it out as efficiently and inexpensively as possible. It has occurred to me only since I have heard this discussion, that the general feeling of the House is that that suggestion could well be carried out, and we might combine the Provincial and the Federal Governments in the adoption of some united system in order to carry out this great object as efficiently and as inexpensively as possible. I again say that I think we owe a debt of gratitude to my hon. friend (Mr. Roome) for bringing up this subject, and I think every member, no matter on which side of the House he may be, will agree with me that it has been well and impressively placed before the House, and in such a manner that we cannot ignore it. I now ask my hon. friend to be satisfied with the progress the subject has made in the House, and to agree that his motion should be withdrawn.

Mr. LAURIER. I can agree with almost every word which has been spoken by the Prime Minister on this subject, and I must say that I am pleased to see that he is more and more coming to the true doctrine of Provincial rights. As time goes on, I am glad to see that he is compelled to abandon the heresy on which he tried to govern the country for so many years past. He has now struck the true key on which this country should be governed. I am not, however, prepared to agree to his suggestion that a convention should be held respecting the different boards of health to consider this question.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; what I suggested was that the different Governments might agree to send representatives.

Mr. LAURIER. I would not, perhaps, agree even to that. The subject is a new one, and is one which should enlist the attention of every man in this country. The House must be gratified at the way in which it has been dealt with by all the gentlemen who have spoken on the subject, but there is sufficient legislative power in each of the Provinces to deal with it, and it is now engaging the attention of all the Local Governments. I do not say that the suggestion may not be acted upon at another period, but at present I do not think there is anything more to do than to accept the suggestion of the right hon. gentleman, to let the matter drop, and to rely upon the legislative powers of the different Provinces to deal with the subject.

Mr. ROOME. After having listened to the suggestions of the First Minister, of course I propose to withdraw the motion. I do not altogether agree with the remarks of the hon. gentleman who last spoke. My idea of making a central board was based on the fact that epidemic diseases do not know any provincial lines. I made a comparison in reference to Hull, which is close to the city, and showed that there was no possibility of preventing disease from crossing to Ottawa, though they are in different Provinces. I think it is quite as desirable to have a health centre as to have a central agricultural institution. However, I will adopt the suggestion of the First Minister, that a committee should be selected from all the Provinces to deal with this matter, and on those conditions I withdraw the motion.

Motion withdrawn.

ST. EDOUARD MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. RINFRET (Translation) moved for :

Copies of all petitions, correspondence, &c., asking for a daily mail service for the parish of St. Edouard (post office, "River Bois Clair"), in the county of Lotbinière. He said: In bringing this motion before the House, I wish to call the attention of the Government to the fact that the parish of St. Edouard, in the county of Lotbinière, a very important parish, with a rather large population, is served with mail only twice a week, which is a great inconvenience to the business men of that locality. During last Session I received from the rector of that parish a letter complaining about the great inconvenience resulting from the receiving of mails only twice a week, and suggesting a new mode. Here is what he proposed: The parish of St. Edouard is situated behind the parishes of Ste. Croix and Lotbinière, at about half way between the two post offices.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN (Translation.) At what distance?

Mr. RINFRET (Translation.) About six miles. The mail service is carried out between the parish of Lotbinière and that of Ste. Croix, calling at the post office of Point Platon, a distance of about twelve miles. He proposes that the mail which, from Quebec, passes through Point Platon on its trip from Ste. Croix to Lotbinière, should go back by the parish of St. Edouard on its trip from Lotbinière to Ste. Croix. The whole distance would be about fourteen miles. Of course, the carrying of the mails through St. Edouard, the route being two miles longer, would cost a little more with respect to the courier employed by the Government; but, on the other hand, the Government would not have to pay for the present bi-weekly service, so that I think it would be a saving, and the mail service would be a great deal more convenient for the parish of St. Edouard. I do not know to what extent this plan is practicable, but what I should ask now of the Postmaster General would be to send the inspector there, in order that he might see himself whether the plan would be practicable and of benefit to the public. I hope that the inspector will reach the same conclusion as the rector of St. Edouard, that is to say, that by following the route I have pointed out, he will be able to make the service more convenient for all parties concerned.

Mr. HAGGART. Rivière Bois Clair is now served with mails tri-weekly from Lotbinière. The cost of the service is $78 per annum; the length of the route is six miles. The revenue of Rivière Bois Clair for year ending 30th June, 1889, was $129.50. To make the service over the present route daily would cost about $150, or $72 more than is paid at present. It is proposed, as an alternative scheme, that the present service be done away with, and that Rivière Bois Clair be served by the courier on the daily route between Leclercville and Ste. Croix. The plan is, that the courier shall visit this office instead of Point Platon on his trip east, and shall call at Point Platon on his trip west only. This arrangement would effect a saving of $28 to the Department, as the courier on the Leclercville and Ste. Croix route would be entitled to $50 for his additional travel. But the scheme is open to strong objections. The route between Leclercville and Ste. Croix is one of the links connecting Three Rivers with Lévis, ninety-two miles away, and it is of the utmost importance that all the connections should be maintained. As these connections are sharp, and the unavoidable delays numerous, it is pointed out that to add even one and a-half miles to the length of one of the routes is to expose the service to serious prejudice. There is also an objection made by the Hon. Mr. Joly to this scheme, on the ground that Point Platon, which was established at his instance, and maintained mainly for the benefit of his family, would thereby lose the direct connection which it now has with Montreal.

Motion agreed to.

THE LATE MR. JUSTICE SMITH, N.S.

Mr. JONES (Halifax) moved for :

Return of all correspondence between the Minister of Justice and the late Mr. Justice Smith, of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, relating to his application for leave of absence on account of ill-health.

He said: My object in bringing this motion before the House, is to show the manner in which the judicial patronage of the Government is exercised in Nova Scotia by the present Administration. If this were the first case that is recorded in recent years, perhaps it might have been passed over without such a strict investigation as I think it now demands at our hands. It will be remembered, that when the late lamented Judge Rigby died, the vacancy on the bench of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia was left open for a long time, and it was left open with the object of providing for political exigencies which might arise in that Province. It went on—I am speaking from memory now—somewhere about nine months, I should say, when the political exigency arose in consequence of the return to this country of the present High Commissioner who required a seat in this House. It was well known, and no secret was made of it in Nova Scotia, that the present Mr. Justice Townshend, then a member of this House, had made application for the position on the bench of the Supreme Court, and it was well known that the hon. Minister of Justice had refused that application on the grounds that Mr. Justice Townshend, in his judgment, was not altogether the person he desired to appoint. It was known, also, that Mr. Justice Graham, lately appointed to the Supreme Court, was an applicant at that time, and was preferred to Mr. Justice Townshend in that application. Now, I do not mean to say, from any knowledge I have—I would be sorry to make any insinuations—that Mr.

Townshend was not qualified for the position which he now occupies on the Supreme Court bench, but I am merely repeating what was commonly known among the profession in Halifax, that his application had been refused for a long time by the Minister of Justice. In that case it must be apparent to every one who hears me that this position was kept open for that long time in order to provide for political necessities which might arise, and under the circumstances did arise, as I have related. Last October Mr. Justice Smith made application to the Minister of Justice for six months' leave of absence. Mr. Justice Smith had just recovered from a very severe attack of jaundice, and about the time of his recovery he met with a very severe family affliction, which in his then weak condition, completely unnerved him, and he asked for six months' leave of absence on account of ill-health, stating in his application that if, on his return, his health was not improved, he would tender his resignation. An answer was sent from the Minister of Justice declining to grant him the required leave of absence. It has been usual, I think, as all legal gentlemen are aware, that when a judge makes application for leave of absence, one of two courses is generally followed—either to present the application to the judges, through the Lieutenant Governor of the Province, enquiring whether the judges can conduct the business of the courts during his absence, or to grant the leave of absence with the condition that he must make arrangements satisfactory to the remaining judges of the Supreme Court. Neither of those courses, I am sorry to say, was adopted in reference to Mr. Justice Smith. An answer was sent him declining the request for reasons which I will be able to give to this House. The reasons which the Minister of Justice, in this letter, assigned to Judge Smith, were simply these :

“ OTTAWA, 31st October.

“ HON. MR. JUSTICE SMITH :

“ DEAR SIR,—I received yesterday your letter requesting leave of absence for six months. I regret much the state of health which induces this request, the more so as I do not at present see my way to make the recommendation which you desire. Mr. Justice Graham will be unable to hear most of the cases which will come before the courts at the winter term, which is now approaching, and which will last probably until spring. The health of Mr. Justice Macdonald, I regret to learn, is in so uncertain a state that his ability to attend during much of the term, at a distance from his home, is doubtful. The leave which you ask would place nearly the whole work of the term on the remaining four judges who would be required to sit from day to day for several months. This would be impracticable, and even if it were practicable, nearly all the cases argued would have to wait over for judgment, and no judge would be available for the Chamber work or criminal terms.”

Now, I wish to draw the attention of the House to this fact, that the Minister of Justice laid down the proposition here, that it was impossible for him to grant leave of absence to Mr. Justice Smith, on the ground that the court would not be properly constituted, that is to say, Mr. Justice Macdonald being indisposed, and Mr. Justice Graham, appointed a short time before that, being disqualified from taking part in much of the business going on in consequence of having been engaged professionally in those cases before they reached the court. The Minister says :

“ Nearly all the cases argued would have to wait over for judgment, and no judge would be available for the Chamber work or criminal terms.”

Now, it would appear that the Minister of Justice was willing that the country should be saddled with a pension to Mr. Justice Smith, provided he could get the appointment at that time, and he points out to him the grounds on which he thought it was necessary to have the court properly constituted. Mr. Justice Smith, writing after the death of Mr. Justice James, addressed a telegram to the Minister of Justice in these terms:

"Since the death of Judge James am only judge in town. My medical advisers think I cannot hold the criminal term. A prompt appointment would remove the difficulty."

To this the Minister of Justice replied:

"I understand your telegram to mean tendering your resignation, and if such is the case, I am prepared to appoint your successor without delay."

Of course Mr. Justice Smith did not intend to send in his resignation in those terms, and he made a subsequent explanation to that effect to the Minister of Justice. Since that time Mr. Justice Smith has passed away. His friends think his end was hastened by the act of the Minister of Justice; I should be sorry to say so, but that is the impression among his friends and with his medical adviser. They think that had he been permitted to retire for six months, as was granted to Judge Macdonald before him, and had he gone to a warmer climate and been relieved of the anxiety and annoyance attending him in other ways, his life might have been prolonged for a much longer time. Be that as it may, he had to bear the anxiety and the trouble attending his position. He was not allowed to retire, but he was kept there, when he was not fit to work, but had to attend to his duties from day to day as well as he could, until he brought on a severe illness which terminated his life. That is the position of the case. Mr. Justice Smith died about last January, and I wish to bring to the notice of the House the position which the Minister of Justice occupies to-day, with respect to this matter. He said it was absolutely necessary to have the court properly constituted in order that the business of the country might be attended to. In that opinion he was quite right. I have received letters from two leading barristers in Halifax, who tell me they have great difficulty in getting business attended to, and in order to obtain a quorum of judges they have to change the docket from one part to another, as Mr. Justice Graham has not been able to take part in certain cases before the court. Mr. Justice Hugh Macdonald, I am sorry to add, although able to attend to the duties for a short time, has been compelled to return to his residence at Antigonish, and is in such a bad condition of health it is not thought he will be able to return. Mr. Justice Graham, as was pointed out by the Minister of Justice in this letter, is disqualified from considering a great many of the cases now before the court, and Mr. Justice Smith's position has not been filled. Therefore, the House will observe that at the present moment the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia is three short of its complement. I am not a legal man, but I am only giving statements made to me by reliable gentlemen belonging to the profession, that the business of the court is very much impeded in consequence of the vacancy not having been filled. If the Minister of Justice was able to say to Mr. Justice Smith, when he construed this telegram

into a resignation, that he was prepared to name his successor immediately, I think there is very good reason now for asking the hon. gentleman to carry out his promise. The time has been sufficiently long to enable the Government to consider this matter and make an appointment. It does not arise from lack of applicants, as the hon. gentleman is well aware; but it arises, no doubt, in part, if not in whole, from the difficulty which the hon. gentleman finds in making a choice between two contending candidates, who are now candidates for the Local House. These gentlemen, prominent in their profession, undoubtedly men of high legal standing, either of whom would adorn the bench, are looking for legal preferment as is natural with members of their profession; but they have been nominated, one for Halifax County and another for the County of Annapolis, and, I suppose, the Minister is placed in a rather embarrassing position to know which one to appoint. He feels, perhaps, that if one is appointed it might give offence to the other, and in the critical condition of political affairs in Nova Scotia, with local elections pending, and with these two eminent barristers as candidates, the Minister is doubtless apprehensive that the entente cordiale between those gentlemen and other political friends of the party might run a great risk of being disturbed. Be that as it may, an appointment has not been made, and every day's delay is but adding to the difficulty. The Minister of Justice, in reply to an enquiry I made in this House about a fortnight ago, I think, said he intended to make an appointment at an early day. Every one would suppose that a fortnight would stand in that sense not as a very early day, but rather as a later day, considering the position in which the Minister is placed and the material he has at this command for filling the vacancy. But my apprehension is—I will not say my apprehension, for I have no apprehension and I have no feeling in the matter one way or the other—but it would look as if the course pursued with regard to Mr. Justice Rigby's vacancy is about to be repeated in this case. It would look as if the Minister of Justice proposed to leave this vacancy open until after the local elections, probably in midsummer or later—I am not in a position to speak—until he should see which of the gentlemen had earned the party's favor and had shown that he could render greater assistance to the party. That is the impression which prevails with us. If the Minister would appoint either of the candidates and settle the matter, the public would be satisfied, and neither I nor any one else would have a word to say. The court would then be constituted properly, the business would be properly attended to, and those having business in the court would not be subjected to those great annoyances and delays which now interfere with their business with the Supreme Court. But, if the hon. gentleman proposes to allow the appointment to remain open until the local elections have taken place, it will be rather taking a liberty with the people of Nova Scotia. In his letter, the hon. Minister of Justice says it would be impracticable for the judges then to continue the business. I ask the hon. gentleman how, under the present condition of affairs, it can be said to be any more easy than it was at the time at which this letter was written? The hon. gentleman said, and I repeat the language:

"The leave which you ask would place nearly the whole work of the term on the remaining four judges, who would be required to sit from day to day for several months. This would be impracticable, and even if it were practicable, nearly all the cases argued would have to wait over for judgment, and no judge would be available for the Chamber work or criminal terms."

I would ask the Minister, if that is the condition, how much greater trouble, with only Mr. Justice Macdonald indisposed, and Mr. Justice Graham disqualified on account of his recent appointment, must ensue with the additional vacancy, because by the death of Mr. Justice Smith there was only one judge who was unable to sit then, for Mr. Justice Graham could take part in some of the cases; but now there are three judges, and the bench is left in a position which according to the reports I have from legal sources, in Nova Scotia, is very unsatisfactory to those having business with the court. I think that the Minister should make his choice and fill the position. He has now had sufficient time to make up his mind as to whom he is going to recommend for that position; and I suppose he will have no difficulty, even if these two gentlemen were not available. It is always pretty well known among the members of the profession who is to succeed to the position, and it is also known among the friends of the hon. Minister of Justice, in Halifax, who is to receive this appointment when it is made. I repeat, therefore, that in the interests of justice, and for the despatch of legal business, the hon. Minister will not longer delay, and that he will act on the spirit—although I think it was a very unkind spirit—of this letter to Mr. Justice Smith. I think it was a spirit in which very few men would write to a man suffering under severe disease, and under the circumstances this application was made. I venture to say that very few hon. members in this House, would have made such an emphatic and prompt refusal to a man who was suffering from ill-health, as this letter discloses on the part of the hon. Minister of Justice. That it hastened his end few doubt, and if such was the case, it would be another evidence that the hon. Minister should be guided by the rules which have hitherto determined the judicial patronage and the mode of bestowing leave of absence to judges. If the Minister had followed the usual course, and allowed the judges to decide whether or not they could dispense with the services of their brother judge, the responsibility would be off his shoulders. If he had granted him leave of absence, conditionally, on making an arrangement with the other judges, the responsibility was also off his shoulders; but the Minister took the responsibility on himself to refuse the application, and I repeat again (and I will leave it to any hon. gentleman in this House who will study the matter carefully) that the Minister committed a more than unkind act towards this gentleman who occupied the high position of judge of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia. The hon. Minister has now had sufficient time to consider the matter, and I trust that the early day promised will soon arrive to appoint a judge to this court.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. When the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) commenced his address, I really thought that he was sincere in stating that his object in making this motion was to bring to the notice of the House the administration of judicial patronage in the Province of Nova Scotia.

But, as the hon. gentleman proceeded with his address, and, towards its finish, I ascertained with perfect distinctness that this was not his object, but that it was to fulfil the promise which he made on the streets of Halifax, before coming to Ottawa—that he would bait the Minister of Justice, until an appointment was made in place of Mr. Justice Smith; and that he would do so, not in the interests of the administration of justice in the Province of Nova Scotia, but for the purpose of inducing the Minister of Justice, if it were possible, to get him and his friends rid of one or two inconvenient candidates who are now contesting constituencies in that Province.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). That is all untrue.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I will call attention, first of all, to the particulars which the hon. gentleman has stated, by which he thinks that the administration of judicial patronage in that Province has been so much a matter of reproach. The hon. gentleman called attention to the vacancy which required to be filled on the bench of the Province of Nova Scotia, in the year 1886, and he stated that, for the purpose of serving political ends, the vacancy which existed at the death of Mr. Justice Rigby—the hon. gentleman said, I think, Mr. Justice Ritchie, but I presume he meant Mr. Justice Rigby—

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Mr. Justice Rigby, I said.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman said that, for political purposes, that vacancy was kept open for, as he stated, nine months, and that it was so kept open in order that a constituency might be found for the High Commissioner for Canada, who was then in England, and who, I suppose, he means, was expected to return to Canada before the general election, and who might find a seat if the then sitting member for Cumberland were promoted to the bench. I need not hesitate to give that statement a most emphatic contradiction, and to assure the House that there is not a particle of truth in it. An instant's reflection—if the hon. gentleman has not already reflected on the question—will bring to his mind the fact, that no sane man would believe that statement. The vacancy caused by the death of Mr. Justice Rigby occurred in the month of July, 1886. At that time there was no prospect, nor any indication of a general election. There was no general election decided upon, and no one in this country thought that the High Commissioner for Canada would come to seek a constituency in this House. Mr. Townshend did not expect it, nor did any one. The circumstances connected with that vacancy were not that the position was kept open for nine months for political reasons. As a matter of fact the appointment of Mr. Justice Townshend was made in less than eight months after the death of Mr. Justice Rigby. Two of these months were months of vacation, and three months, down to November, were months of circuit. The circuits were amply supplied, and not the slightest inconvenience was felt in the Province, from the vacancy having been kept open. The hon. gentleman has stated to the House, that then the vacancy was filled by the appointment of the sitting member for Cumberland, Mr. Townshend—a gentleman of whose qualifications I had so much doubt that I had refused to appoint him before. In that particular the hon. gentleman (Mr. Jones) is equally unfortunate in his attempt to arrive at the truth. I had never refused Mr. Townshend's application, and I had never questioned his qualifications for the position he now fills. Mr. Townshend, it is true, was only one of a number of gentlemen at the Bar of Nova Scotia, any one of whom would have fitted the position admirably. Mr. Townshend pressed no claim upon me. He simply indicated, as any professional man of high honor might do with perfect propriety, that if the Government thought fit to avail themselves of his services for the bench, he was willing to accept the appointment. He let the matter rest there, without any reply from me in the negative or affirmative, and without my having down to this moment, thrown the slightest doubt on his qualifications or fitness for the position to which he was subsequently appointed. The hon. gentleman made allusion to another gentleman, who has since been appointed to the bench, Mr. Wallace Graham, and I understood, as well as I could hear the hon. gentleman, that he said, Mr. Graham had been repeatedly refused by me.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). No; I did not say so.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Then I was unfortunate in hearing the hon. gentleman. I believe he also stated that the Minister of Justice was more anxious to appoint Mr. Justice Graham at that time. I do not know that that is material to the question, but if the hon. member for Halifax considers it material, or if any member of the House does, I will be frank enough to say that my personal associations, and my personal and private judgment of Mr. Graham, and the very high esteem I have for him, gave me the natural preference one has for an associate and a warm personal friend. Did that by any means justify his statement that the appointment was subsequently made in Mr. Graham's place? Mr. Townshend was Mr. Graham's senior at the bar; he had been in public life; he had enjoyed, and was then enjoying, perhaps, the largest practice of any barrister outside of the city of Halifax; he conducted a good deal of business in Halifax, where he came to conduct his cases before the full bench; and he had the highest standing at the bar. Of Mr. Graham, he cannot be said, even in the most delicate sense, to have been a candidate for the position. Now, Sir, the hon. member for Halifax stated that Mr. Justice Smith sent me a telegram in September or October, informing me of the death of Mr. Justice James, and he undertook to quote to the House the sense of that telegram.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. gentleman is in error again. I said he applied for leave of absence in October.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am speaking of the telegram which preceded that, and of which the hon. gentleman undertook to quote the sense to the House, and in which the hon. gentleman said: Mr. Justice Smith announced the death of Mr. Justice James, and requested an early appointment on account of his ill-health. The hon. gentleman, I am persuaded, was giving the House the sense of that telegram from memory. If he had seen the telegram—

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I did.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Then the hon. gentleman is not able to avail himself of the excuse I was offering for him. Mr. Justice Smith never sent such a telegram to me, and I never received such a telegram. What Mr. Justice Smith telegraphed to me was that he was just recovering from illness, that he was unable to conduct the criminal court then coming on, and that an immediate appointment was necessary; these are almost the words. I had never heard of the death of Mr. Justice James; as a matter of fact, that telegram must have been dispatched before Mr. Justice James was cold; not a word had then arrived in Ottawa indicating that he had died. I had simply the announcement in that telegram, and when I received it, I considered it with perfect honesty, to be an intimation that Mr. Justice Smith was unfit for his duty and desired that an appointment should be made in his place. I immediately answered him that his telegram was ambiguous, but that if it were to be considered as a resignation, I was prepared to appoint his successor. It was not until hours afterwards that a second telegram came from the same judge saying that I had misunderstood his telegram, that Mr. Justice James was dead, and that it was to that vacancy he had referred. Subsequently, it is true, as the hon. gentleman stated, Mr. Justice Smith wrote me a letter in reference to a protracted leave of absence. Let me say, at the outset, that so far from having the slightest reason to be unkind or ungenerous to Mr. Justice Smith, I had no political or other reason for feeling any such disposition towards him. He had been, it is true, appointed to the bench by our political opponents, but he was appointed long before I had entered public life or had engaged in any affairs which are supposed to create anything like acrimony between political opponents. He had been, before his appointment and for ten years before his death, on terms of friendship with myself. I had done him many services, and I was prepared to do him any service again, unless it was at the expense of the public interest; and Mr. Justice Smith knew that as well as I did. But, in October or November he applied for six months' leave of absence. All he stated to me in his letter, and all I knew of any condition of health requiring leave of absence at all, was the simple statement in that letter that he was rather unwell—I quote his exact words. I need hardly say, after making that statement, that he sent no certificate indicating that his health was seriously impaired, and made no statement of the kind in his letter; he simply said that he was rather unwell, and would like to absent himself from the Province during the winter, and, under those circumstances, requested that I should give him six months' leave of absence. I need scarcely say that no judge applying for six months' leave of absence on account of ill-health makes the application in those terms. He either states what his illness is, or states that there are serious grounds for asking for leave, or forwards a medical certificate in which that fact will appear; because any judge making application for leave of absence on the ground of ill-health knows that the Minister who grants it, or recommends that it be granted, will have to come before the House of Commons and answer any attack such as that made to-night by the hon. member for Halifax, and will have to show the grounds on which that leave is granted, and knows also that light grounds would never satisfy the House that a high public functionary should be permitted to absent himself from his duties for six months in the year. The judge knew perfectly well the responsibility that devolved on the Minister of Justice. Having obtained leave of absence the very year before at his own solicitation, indicating that he desired to visit Europe, he knew perfectly well the grounds he had to offer in order to induce the Minister of Justice to accede to his request; and the letter of Mr. Justice Smith I regarded, and nobody could but regard it, as merely opening the correspondence which might lead to the statements which would sustain his request, if the request could reasonably be entertained. Now, let me call the attention of the House to the circumstances in which the court was placed at that time. By the law of Nova Scotia all the judges have to sit in full bench in January, February, March, and sometimes in April—at all events, until they finish the docket of appeal cases. The duties devolving on the judges during that term are very laborious while it lasts. We have seven judges in Nova Scotia. By the law of the Province four are required to constitute a quorum of that court. It is true, three may sit if a judge is necessarily absent from illness or on duty; but it is always desirable not to diminish the quorum established by law, and it is always a subject of complaint if the bench is reduced below four; and the judges themselves, when their numbers are so impaired, find their work largely increased. We had the obligation to have four judges sitting in appeal every day during the winter, and it was absolutely necessary that there should be another judge for the duties devolving on a single judge in the trial of cases, in dispatching chamber business, in the trial of suits in equity, and to relieve his brethren occasionally. We had the necessity, therefore, for five judges. One of those on the bench, who makes the sixth, as the hon. member for Halifax has just shown, was disqualified from sitting in, I am sure, nineteen out of the twenty cases that would be on that docket, so that his services were practically unavailable; and the only other judge who was available, if we had given leave of absence to Mr. Justice Smith, was Mr. Justice Macdonald, who had come from leave of absence with his health very seriously impaired. I had myself seen him in the summer, and knew him to be in a frail state of health. He was not asking for leave or holding out any indication that he would absent himself from his duty at all; but I knew, and all his friends knew, that while he would go to his duty like a man, he might be compelled by illness to leave his duty. Under these circumstances, if I had acceded to the request of Mr. Justice Smith, based on the ground that he was rather unwell, and had given him six months' leave of absence, I would have run the risk of depending upon Mr. Justice Macdonald's rather precarious state of health for the purpose of having a quorum, or the court would have had to reduce the quorum of judges to three. Otherwise, we would have had no judge in the Province to discharge the duties of a single judge. The hon. gentleman asks why I did not relieve myself of the responsibility of deciding the matter, by asking the Provincial Government what they thought of the subject. It is customary, and it is most convenient, to apply to the Provincial Government to ascertain whether a judge can be spared from his duties or not, because the Minister of Justice cannot possibly be conversant with the state of affairs in each Province. But this happened to be my own Province, a Province I had just come from after a visit during the summer, and I was intimately acquainted with the state of business there in the courts, from conferences with the judges, from conferences with Mr. Justice Smith himself, and from conferences with members of the bar; and for me to have referred it to the Provincial Government, and asked them what they thought of the matter, and whether they were of the opinion that Mr. Justice Smith could be conveniently spared or not, would have been merely an excuse to relieve myself of the responsibility, but would not have been to discharge, conscientiously, the duties which I believe devolve upon me. Then the hon. gentleman suggested that the other course was to leave it to the other judges. I have been humbly endeavoring to discharge the duties of my present office for five or six years, and I never heard of such a course being followed, I have never followed it, and certainly I never will. If I know that a judge cannot be spared under the existing condition of affairs, I tell him so. If I do not know, I apply to the Local Government to ascertain whether he can be spared or not; but I do not leave it to the judges or throw upon them the responsibility of giving one of their brothers on the bench leave of absence or refusing it to him. But I had no ground for uncertainty in this respect at all. The House may remember that a question was asked here by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McDonald) last Session, as to the state of health of Mr. Justice James, and attention was then publicly called to the inconvenience which arose from Mr. Justice James' absence from his public duties, just as Mr. Justice Smith proposed to absent himself from his public duties. I then had letters from that Province, I think I had one from Mr. Justice James himself, stating that he would ask—as Mr. Justice Smith did at the end of the Session—for a prolonged leave of absence on account of ill-health; and just then I received a remonstrance from the council of the Bar Society of Nova Scotia, which was forwarded to me by way of protest against that leave being granted; and more, I had a protest from the judges, excepting the Chief Justice, but including and headed by Mr. Justice Smith, calling my attention to the inconvenience of the absence of a judge under such circumstances. If I had granted Mr. Justice Smith's application for leave of absence in the month of October, I would have been violating his protest and that of all his brethren made a few months before, and that under weaker circumstances from those of Mr. Justice James, who had been suffering from a lingering and malignant disease and was totally unfit for duty, while, in the other case, it was simply a judge stating that he was rather unwell and would like to go abroad for a few months. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Jones), stated that I was willing that the country should be saddled with a pension to Mr. Justice Smith. Well, Sir, I was, and the hon. gentleman knows why. He knows that for some time past Mr. Justice Smith had not been in a position to discharge his duties efficiently, but that he was probably in a position which might entitle him to ask for a pension. He had passed the time when he might apply for a pension; he had been, I think, seventeen years on the bench, and he was a man with somewhat failing health. For the last seven or eight years, he has discharged very little duty in that Province indeed, and, under those circumstances, it would be no reproach on any one, if Mr. Justice Smith made a request for a pension, to say it might reasonably be granted. But it was an altogether different thing to say that, still occupying his seat on the bench, he should be allowed to withdraw for six months on full pay, and should leave the administration of justice insufficiently attended to. The hon. gentleman's argument, at the opening of his statement, indicated that I was very unreasonable and very harsh—nay, he concluded with the statement that it was an unkind letter which I had written—and the hon. gentleman was evidently anxious to use a stronger expression; and yet he stated that he had now in his pocket letters from two or three Nova Scotia barristers, stating, that in consequence of the breaking down again of the health of Judge Macdonald, great inconvenience has resulted, that the judges have had to skip about from one case to another on the docket, and that he thinks a judge ought to be appointed immediately, though only five or six weeks have elapsed since Mr. Justice Smith died. I think the state of affairs which he pictured, but which, I am afraid, he overdrew in order to make a case against me, is an ample proof that he was wrong in stating that I was guilty of undue severity in refusing to dispense with the services of a judge under the circumstances. As to the imputation that I have hastened the end of Judge Smith, it may suit political purposes, or it may suit the purposes of the hon. gentleman at this moment, under circumstances which excite sympathy for one who has passed away, to make such an assertion, but everyone in Nova Scotia, where the circumstances are well known, would treat the aspersion with ridicule and contempt. Mr. Justice Smith has never received at my hands anything but kindness, and he has been assisted and served by me on many an occasion for the purpose of lightening his labors and his duties. Everyone knows—and I say it with as little reproach to his memory as possible—that Mr. Justice Smith's discharge of duty for the last seven or eight years has been of the lightest possible character, and there was nothing unreasonable, under the circumstance of that court commencing the long winter term, in requesting him to remain and perform his duties, when all he could say was that he was rather unwell, or, at all events, form one of the quorum of four who had to preside over the court of appeal during those months of December, January, February and March. The hon. gentleman says, however, that there had been a certain grief which had broken down the health of Mr. Justice Smith. I do not know how that may be. The circumstance to which no doubt the hon. gentleman referred transpired months before the leave of absence was applied for, and months after that event Mr. Justice Smith was attending to his duties fully as well as he had been for several years before. As regards the reproach which the hon. gentleman thinks falls on me for not having recommended a successor to Mr. Justice Smith, I think the period which has now elapsed since his death is not more than five or six weeks. The hon. gentleman's haste with regard to filling the vacancy indicates that he is anxious that an appointment should be made, which he supposes will have to be made in an embarrassing manner and in a manner that will aid him politically. As regards that appointment, I will answer by saying that the two gentlemen upon whom he has fixed attention, to whom he has referred in such complimentary terms with the view of assuring me that either one of them would make a good appointment, and advising that I had better appoint either one immediately, are, as he says, contesting two counties in the Province of Nova Scotia; but he is entirely mistaken in supposing that they are contending candidates for the vacancy made by the demise of Mr. Justice Smith. Those gentlemen deserve all he has said of them; they are both highly qualified, and either one of them, I am sure, would adorn the bench; but they have too high an appreciation of their position as professional men to be "two contending candidates," as he styles them, for a judicial position, I am sure, at any period of their lives, much less now; and they are by no means the only gentlemen in that Province on whom an appointment of that description could be with propriety conferred. But the hon. gentleman has asked the House this question: If it were so unreasonable that six months' leave of absence should have been given to Mr. Justice Smith in the month of October, how can I possibly justify the leaving of that position unfilled now? Why, the hon. gentleman forgets that this is by no means the month of October, and that the long term of four or five months to which I called the hon. gentleman's attention, and during which the judges would have to sit, four of them, every day of the week from ten to four o'clock, has passed by, and the long docket, to which I called the attention of Mr. Justice Smith as having to be disposed of, has been almost disposed of. The Supreme Court of Nova Scotia is now, if not at the close of the docket, very nearly so, and about two weeks ago I had a letter from the head of the bench there regretting very much the absence of Mr. Justice Macdonald on account of illness, but indicating to me that the docket was practically then within reach, and would be dispatched notwithstanding his illness. I had at the same time a letter from Mr. Justice Macdonald stating that he was able to inform me that though he had been obliged to leave the city on account of ill-health, he felt very much better than he had expected to feel. Under the circumstances, the hon. gentleman will see that the confusion in the administration of justice, which would undoubtedly have resulted if leave of absence had been given in the month of November, is not serious at the present time, owing to the fact that the docket has been disposed of, and owing to the fortunate circumstance that Mr. Justice Macdonald's health lasted until the docket was practically within control, and that the spring circuits, which are next on the judicial programme for the Province, have already been provided for.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I listened with a good deal of interest to the observations of the Minister of Justice, and I do not take great exception to much that he said, except the turn which he endeavors to give to the observations I made on one or two points. The hon. gentleman stated that I had boasted in the streets of Halifax that I was coming here to bait the Minister of Justice and to compel him to make an appointment. I can only say this much—not to characterise it with too harsh a term—that the Minister of Justice drew on his fertile imagination entirely for his facts. That is the first time that I have ever heard of any such statement, and I certainly never made it. The hon. gentleman says that I was inaccurate with regard to Mr. Justice Smith's telegram, and then he proceeded to give his version of the telegram in precisely the same sense. I saw the telegram which Mr. Justice Smith sent, or which he told me he sent, and if he did not send it, of course, that is a matter for which I cannot vouch; but when the Minister brings down that telegram with the application of Mr. Justice Smith, we shall be able to see whether the statement which I made to this House is not literally borne out in fact. The hon. Minister says that the circumstances differ very materially now from what they did at the time he refused the application for leave to Mr. Justice Smith. There is just this much difference about it. He says that the long term was from December and January and February and March. Well, if the hon. gentleman's views were correct with regard to the necessity of having the bench complete during the long term, he had two months during which he could have given the bench their full number, that is to say, February and March. But he has allowed February and March to pass over, without giving the bench the appointment which he said in his letter, which I have already read to the House, was absolutely necessary for the proper carrying on of the business of the court. He says that Mr. Justice Macdonald's illness realised the apprehension which he entertained that he would not be able to conduct his work, and, therefore, the position of the bench was precisely what he had expected. Well, that may be true, but I pointed out to him and I think the House will observe, that the condition of the bench to-day is much worse than the Minister of Justice anticipated at that time, because, in addition to Mr. Justice Graham being disqualified, and Mr. Justice Macdonald being ill at his home, there is a vacancy on the bench in consequence of the death of Mr. Justice Smith; therefore, there are three now in the place of the two which he referred to at that time. Then he says, in this matter he has been guided by what was right and necessary in the public interest. I do not mean to attack his administration, I do not mean to attack his appointment of Mr. Justice Townshend. The House will bear me out in the statement that I said not one word but what is complimentary to Mr. Justice Townshend. I believe him to be a man eminently qualified for his position; but the hon. gentleman, I think, touched that point very tenderly, and his explanations were very unsatisfactory, and he cannot justify himself to this House for keeping that appointment over eight months to meet what was evidently the exigency which arose, and which required that seat in Cumberland for the High Commissioner. The hon. Minister has endeavored to draw attention from this letter. His letter is sufficient to condemn him. When that letter is printed in the Hansard and comes to be read by legal men throughout this Dominion, I think they will arrive at the conclusion that the Minister of Justice dealt out very scant courtesy to Mr. Justice Smith, and that the proposition which he laid down in this letter if correct—I am not disputing it; I say the principles which he laid down in this letter in my hand, if correct—places him in a very false position to-day in delaying the appointment of a successor to Mr. Justice Smith, and completing the bench and enabling it to perform the necessary judicial work of the Province. I say I need hardly add another word to it, because the letter itself states most emphatically that it was not practicable and, if it was practicable, nearly all the cases argued would have to wait over for judgment and no judge would be available for chamber work or for the criminal terms. That applies to-day with increased force. Whatever force there was in the hon. gentleman's contention at that time, it has double force to-day under the present condition of the bench in Nova Scotia. I repeat, and I need not further emphasise it, that if the hon. gentleman was honest in his contention at that time, he should lose no time in making an appointment. But I was amazed, and I think the House was amazed, when the hon. gentleman told us that he hardly understood Mr. Justice Smith's point with respect to Judge James' vacancy. I would be very sorry to say that I doubt the hon. gentleman's statement; but I will say this: does it seem probable that the Minister of Justice, watching as he keenly does everything pertaining to the Province of Nova Scotia, knowing that Mr. Justice James had been in a delicate state of health, knowing that he was going to appoint Mr. Justice Graham, a most eminent member of his profession, does it seem probable that Mr. Justice James should have passed away and the Minister of Justice know nothing of it until he received a telegram from Mr. Justice Smith, saying that a prompt appointment would remove the difficulty. I think few members of this House would imagine such an extraordinary circumstance, or that the Minister of Justice was so innocent in that transaction as not to know that Mr. Justice James had passed away, and that Mr. Justice Smith was referring to the vacancy in that connection, because in the telegram which Mr. Justice Smith sent to the Minister, as shown to me, he emphatically stated that since the death of Mr. Justice James he was the only judge in town. Whether he sent that telegram or not I cannot state, but the telegram, as shown to me, looks like an attempt to mislead, and it is hardly treating the party addressed with that respect and dignity which is due to a judge of the Supreme Court. I have brought this matter before the House and the letter of the Minister is the ground on which I have brought it. I am satisfied to leave it in the hands of the House and the country and to legal men, and if they are not satisfied that the Minister is departing in this case from the principle laid down when Mr. Justice Smith made application, I shall be very much mistaken, and let the Minister draw all the comfort from it he can.

Mr. KENNY. The House has recognised that the Minister of Justice has given a full and satisfactory reply to the very extraordinary and, as I consider, unwarranted attack made upon him this evening by the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones). The hon. gentleman has made some extraordinary statements, statements which, I think, will very much surprise his fellow-citizens when they are read in the public press. I am as familiar with current events passing in Halifax as is the senior member, and I say this is the first time in my life I have heard the extraordinary story he has narrated here in regard to the appointment of a successor to the late lamented Mr. Justice Rigby. I say, and I repeat it most emphatically, that, familiar as I am with current rumors in Halifax, intimate as I am with many of the members of the legal profession, I have never heard, until to-night, any such romance in connection with the appointment of the successor to Mr. Justice Rigby, as we have heard from the senior member for Halifax. The hon. gentleman has not been satisfied with the statements made by the hon. Minister of Justice. It is a fact that, immediately after Mr. Justice Smith's death, some half dozen gentlemen in Halifax became exceedingly excited. Mr. Justice Smith died, I think, after the Session of the present Parliament commenced; it was while my colleague and myself were in Halifax. The excitement to which he refers was confined to a very small number of persons, and that number was very much reduced when the senior member for Halifax departed for Ottawa. He referred to the impression which prevailed with us. Who does the hon. gentleman mean? He means a small clique of excited Grit politicians in the city of Halifax. That is the whole source of this present discussion. It is, moreover, because the names of two prominent members of the legal profession who have been associated with this vacancy, happen to be candidates for the coming elections in the Local Legislature. They are very prominent gentlemen, they are distinguished members of the bar and respected members of the community, and they are dreaded and feared by the senior member and his political associates. The hon. gentleman's anxiety is solely to get one of those gentlemen out of the way. This is the whole cause of this extraordinary and unwarranted attack on the Minister of Justice. I well know that the Minister does not require any defence at my hands or at the hands of any hon. member in this House, but I regret exceedingly that any hon. gentleman from the Province of Nova Scotia should make such statements as we have heard to-night. The members of the legal profession in the city of Halifax, the people of the Province of Nova Scotia, and hon. members of this House, well know and fully realise that there is nothing which the senior member for Halifax can say which will lower the Minister of Justice in the estimation of his fellow-countrymen, or in the estimation of members of this House. The appointments which have been made by the Department of Justice, since it was controlled by my friend the present Minister, have reflected credit upon himself, and they have been unanimously approved by the people of the Province of Nova Scotia; and I can only say that the people of our Province are quite satisfied to leave the matter in the Minister's hands, knowing that in his own good time he will make an appointment which will be satisfactory to them.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat wandered so very far from the point which the House is discussing, that I fear he could not have heard the charges made by his colleague from Halifax (Mr. Jones). Into the merits of the larger parts of the controversy between the senior member for Halifax and the Minister of Justice I do not propose to enter, for the simple reason that the version of those two gentlemen respecting the telegram forwarded by Mr. Justice Smith and the answer given to that telegram by the Minister vary so much that an intelligent judgment could not be formed by an outsider. When the papers come down we will have an opportunity no doubt of reading the telegram and the answer, and we will be in a position to form some fair judgment in regard to it. The point in which this House and the public are interested is whether the appointment to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Mr. Justice Smith of the bench of Nova Scotia was unnecessarily delayed; and, if so, was it delayed for party purposes. That, I understand, is the only point of interest to the public in this enquiry. We know that the winter term, which is the largest term of the court in Nova Scotia, commences in December. We have it on the authority of the Minister that the administration of justice in that Province will be seriously impeded if the strength of the court is not at least kept up to five judges. We have it on the authority of the Minister that he would be recreant to his duty, to use his own term, if he granted leave of absence to a judge at the commencement of that term, and by granting that leave reduce the number below five. I do not think I can do better than read the closing words of the letter sent by the Minister of Justice to Mr. Justice Smith, wherein he referred to the leave of absence and argued the question. He said:

"The leave which you ask would place nearly the whole work of the term on the remaining four judges, who would be required to sit from day to day for several months. This would be impracticable, and even if it was practicable, nearly all the cases argued would have to wait over for judgment, and no judge would be available for the chamber work or criminal terms."

Now, we find that the vacancy which existed on the death of Judge James has been filled by the appointment of Mr. Justice Graham. We find, by the statement made by the hon. Minister of Justice, that Judge Graham is unable to hear the arguments in nineteen-twentieths of the cases now on the docket, because he was interested in these cases when practising at the bar; and, therefore, he is not practically an available judge for the present term. We find that Judge Smith, whose leave of absence was refused, died on or about the last of January, and that Judge Macdonald has had to leave Halifax owing to his bad state of health, and is unable to sit on the bench. We find this very state of facts which the hon. gentleman declared would impede the administration of justice, exists there to-day, has existed there for the larger part of this term, and yet the hon. gentleman has taken no steps, and does not now announce to the House that he intends to take any steps to fill the vacancy. I cannot see, in the face of his letter, how the Minister can defend his position. The junior member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) says he is quite willing to endorse any action which the Minister of Justice may take. He has such absolute and perfect confidence in the Minister's integrity and ability, that whether he fills the vacancy or leaves it open, or whether or not the administration of justice is hampered, the member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) is satisfied.

Mr. KENNY. That is what the people of Nova Scotia think.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If the hon. Minister of Justice was right when, on the 31st October, 1889, he wrote that, to leave the bench with a less strength than five judges, would be to impede the administration of justice, then the hon. Minister is censurable to-day, if he has failed to fill the vacancy, and he is doubly censurable if it is true that he failed to fill that vacancy for political reasons.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Will the hon. gentleman permit me to remind him that he has assumed that the two vacancies caused by the illness of Mr. Justice Macdonald, and the death of Mr. Justice Smith, have occurred since last January.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Certainly not; but the vacancies exist. I am assuming that to be true, which has been stated by the hon. Minister himself, and by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), namely, that there are three seats practically vacant on that bench, as Mr. Justice Graham is unable, owing to the fact that he was engaged in many cases as counsel, to take any part.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The appeal business is now practically done.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Probably it may be. Everyone knows that the names mentioned most prominently for the position, are those of two gentlemen who have received Conservative nominations for local constituencies in the Province of Nova Scotia, and, I think, it is fair to hazard the assertion, that if these gentlemen had not been named and had not accepted the nominations, one of them would now occupy the high position of judge of the Supreme Court. I think that is a fair assumption; but whether it is fair or not, and whether they are the only two available men, or whether there are others, on which I am not in a position to give an opinion, this fact is plain—I assume the Minister of Justice wrote that letter carefully, and weighing the responsibility of the language—that this vacancy, which is essentially necessary to be filled up for the furtherance of justice, has remained unfilled. Further, we see it left open for political purposes, as the facts would show on the face of them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There is no doubt of that whatever. There is no doubt of the first fact, and whether they are left open for political reasons or not, it is a fair inference to conclude. I happen to know that these two gentlemen mentioned in connection with the appointment, occupy a leading position at the bar of Nova Scotia. I happen to know that they are Conservatives in their political leanings, and, I believe, in all human probability, one of them would have received the appointment before this if they had not been nominated. That, taken in conjunction with the statement made by the hon. Minister of Justice: "that it was essential for the administration of justice that the bench should be of the full strength of five judges, sitting during the month of February" (the time when the Supreme Court is engaged in this appeal work), convinces me, at least, that there must be some motives other than these which generally actuate the hon. Minister for delaying this matter. The hon. gentleman did not give the House any information which would lead them to conclude that the appointment would be made before next summer. In the letter addressed in answer to the telegram of Judge Smith, the Minister stated that he was prepared to make the appointment at an early date. He does not give the House the assurance that he is now prepared to make the appointment at an early date. Why? Because the elections in Nova Scotia may not take place until the month of May or June, and certainly if there is an appointment to be made before then, it cannot be gathered from any language used by the Minister of Justice; for I watched him carefully and he practically refrained from giving the slightest intimation that he was prepared to recommend that the appointment should be made now. On the contrary, so far as one could gather from his language, the chances are that that vacancy which he said it was so essential to fill a short time ago, will remain open until the political exigencies of the local Conservative party justify him in filling up.

Motion agreed to.

N. W. T.—RANCHES.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. COOK) moved for:

Return giving a complete list of applications as yet made for ranches in the North-West Territories, showing the names and addresses of the applicants, the amount of each application, the Orders in Council relating thereto, the action taken on such applications, and all the correspondence relating thereto.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I must ask my hon. friend to explain to the House the reason why he makes this motion, and the object for which it is made. The application is one which would be very expensive to comply with. He asks for a return of a complete list of applications as yet made (that is from 1871 up to this time), as well as all the correspondence about every ranche that has ever been applied for since we have had the North-West Territories. Why, it would take a couple of years to get that up. I think my hon. friend must show some reason for this motion. I know he only moved it in the absence of another hon. member, and I am quite sure if he cannot give any reason for this extraordinary application, he will consent to let it stand.

Mr. TROW. I have been requested by Mr. Cook to make the motion, but I was not prepared with the explanations which the First Minister asks. I am willing that the motion should stand.

Motion allowed to stand.

SEIZURE OF THE TUG ROOTH.

Mr. CHARLTON moved for:

Copies of all papers connected with the seizure of the tug Rooth at Amherstburgh, in July or August last, having a raft in tow, and bound from French River to Fort Erie.

He said: It seems that the tug Rooth, of Port Colborne, had a raft in tow from French River to Fort Erie, some time in July last. The raft, consisting of about 1,200,000 feet of timber, with the tug, were seized at Amherstburgh by the Custom house officers. The pretext on which they were seized was, that the timber was intended to be exported to the United States, and that the export duties upon it had not been paid. Now, the intention was to land the raft at Point Abino, about midway between Port Colborne and Fort Erie, as it was impossible to enter Port Colborne with a raft of that size. Along the Welland Canal are situated a number of mills, and it seems that the person in charge of this raft desired to land it at Point Abino for the purpose of selling a portion of the timber to the mills on the Welland Canal if possible. He was simply coasting from one Canadian port to another, and the question arises, by what authority did the Custom house officers of the Dominion seize a vessel and a raft in transit between one Canadian port and another? The raft was duly cleared from the Canadian port, French River, to the Canadian port of Fort Erie, and it was on its way to the latter port when seized in Lake Erie, or in the Detroit River, and the owner of the raft, Mr. Joseph Jackson, formerly a member of this House, was obliged to deposit a large sum of money, more than covering the amount of the export duty, although the Government had no proof that there was any intention to export the timber. If there had been any fraud, or if the tug had taken the raft to a United States port, it would have been responsible for a breach of the revenue laws, and could have been seized, and it was worth much more than the raft. The sum which the owner was compelled to pay to the Government was largely in excess of what would have been sufficient to pay the export duty, and the balance is still in the hands of the Government. I think the Government in this case took a most unwarrantable course and inflicted a great injustice on the owner of this raft. The intention was to land it at Port Abino, where the owner was to decide whether he would transport it or any portion of it to the United States, or whether he would sell the whole or a part of it in Canada. I call for these papers for the purpose of ascertaining on what authority the Government made the seizure, and I hope they will be able to show some reason for what seems on its surface to have been an unwarrantable assumption of power and an infliction of a great injustice on the owner of the property.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman's statement is not altogether accurate. In the first place, the tug Roots never was seized, never was detained; there was no interference with her on the part of the Customs officials. The raft should, before leaving French River, have made entry and paid the export duty upon the logs.

Mr. CHARLTON. Before going to Fort Erie?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes, she was going to Fort Erie ostensibly, but was intended to go to Tonawanda. The contention was that she intended to report at Fort Erie, and make her entry there, but that is directly contrary to the law and to the regulations of the Department. No vessel and no proprietor of logs has a right to sail from any port in Canada for the United States via any Canadian port until the proper entry has been made, the timber measured, and the duty paid. Concessions have been made in the past, by some of the officers permitting this to be done, but we have found that, where it has been conceded, great difficulties have arisen in ascertaining the actual quantity that left the original place of departure, wherever that might be. Instructions have, therefore, been given that no raft shall be permitted to leave any part of the Dominion for any other place in a foreign country without the entry being made and the duty paid. This raft was detained for having illegally left French River without having made the proper entry and paying the duties. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) is quite right in saying that a large deposit was demanded by the officer, but, as soon as this came under the notice of the Department, instructions were given to the inspector to make a thorough investigation into the case, ascertain as far as possible the quantity of the logs, exact the full amount of duty, and remit the balance. The reason why the balance has not been remitted is, that there is a dispute between the party who ostensibly owned the logs and the bank at Tonawanda, which claims the money. Our position is, that we must be sure that we are safe in handing over the money. Another investigation has been held by Mr. Mewburn, the inspector, and instructions have been given to pay over to the Blake firm, with which Mr. Lash is connected, the balance, and Mr. Lash the other day expressed himself quite satisfied, because I told him that the money would be paid through his firm and a receipt taken from him, and that they would be responsible if the money was not properly paid over. As to the tug, the Roots, she was never detained, she remained at her own option and could have left whenever she pleased.

Mr. CHARLTON. It seems a very extraordinary thing if the Customs Department are to take upon themselves the authority to determine where a raft or a vessel is bound for, and to go behind the clearance and assume that she is going to some point that she has not cleared for. This raft was bound for Fort Erie, and, if the owner could have sold any of the timber in Canada, he was no doubt anxious to do so in order to avoid the duties. If he could not do that, he would have to go elsewhere, but it is a very curious thing that he should in this way be prevented from doing what he desired. The Minister says that the raft was bound ostensibly for Tonawanda. It was bound ostensibly for Fort Erie, and it was really bound for Fort Erie, and went there, and, if the owner had not been placed in the position he was, the probability is that a portion of the logs would have been sold to mills on the Welland Canal. I think the Government has been guilty of a high handed act of injustice. If a raft cannot leave the Georgian Bay for some port in Canada without being obliged to pay export duties for what the owner desires to sell in Canada, I think the Customs Department is taking a course which is not warranted. Any one has a right to go from one port in Canada to another if he chooses, but, if the owner of a raft takes it to the United States, then let the raft or the boat which tows it be seized. If the owner clears his raft from one Canadian port to another, do not deem that the man is a scoundrel, that he intends to defraud the revenue, that he is a fraud, but assume that he is a British subject and hold him responsible if he violates the law. I think the sooner the Government comes to the conclusion that, when a man clears a raft or a vessel from one Canadian port to another, he is to be regarded as honest in the act, the better. If he violates the conditions of his clearance, then seize him, but do not assume that he is a villain until there is some proof of it. I know that the owner of this raft would have been glad to sell the whole of these logs in Canada, if he could have done so on satisfactory terms. He had hopes that he might do so, and he cleared for Fort Erie, in order that he might find out first, whether he could sell a portion in Canada or not, fully intending to pay the export duties on the logs that he might have to take to the United States. I hope that in future the Minister of Customs will allow coasting from one Canadian port to another without taking such an arbitrary course as this, and will afterwards punish those who may be guilty of an infraction of the law.

Mr. BOWELL. If the case were as has been stated by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), I should say he was strictly correct, and the Customs Department should be condemned for acting as he says it did; but I say there is no evidence in the Department to show that the raft was intended to be sold in Canada.

Mr. CHARLTON. There is the evidence of the clearance.

Mr. BOWELL. No; the object was to evade the payment of the export duty when the raft left French River.

Mr. CHARLTON. You had no right to assume that.

Mr. BOWELL. I had. There was no evidence to show that the owner, Mr. Jackson, who was formerly a member of this House, and whom I do not desire to blame in the matter, intended to sell any part of it in this country. He intended to take it to Tonawanda, and to sell it in the United States. It was intended to save the payment of duty, so that, if anything should occur in the meantime—the breaking up of the raft or anything of that kind—the duty might not be paid. There is no evidence that it was intended to sell one stick of that timber in Canada. The documents show that the raft, the timber, and everything connected with it belonged to the bank at Tonawanda, and that Mr. Jackson had no interest in it except what might be obtained after the payment of the advances which the bank had made. It is the bank that has claimed the refund, and has contested our right to stop the raft en route. The raft should have been seized long before, if the officers had been able to ascertain its whereabouts. All the officers did was strictly in accordance with the regulations and with the law. If that raft had been entered outwards for a Canadian port, without any intention of taking it to a foreign port, the owners had a right to do so, and would never have been interfered with. But the raft was intended for Tonawanda via Fort Erie, and for that reason we acted at once, and the officers acted quite within the law and correctly in the interest of the revenue.

Mr. CHARLTON. If the fact is as the Minister of Customs asserts, that this raft was held by an American bank at Tonawanda, I do not know that it follows even then that that bank as the owner of a Canadian raft had not a right to, and could not in good faith attempt, to tow that raft from one Canadian port to another. I do not know but the American bank had the same rights as the Canadian citizen to go from one port to another, and sell Canadian property taken from one Canadian port to another. I do not think the Minister of Customs has made it at all clear that his Department is free from the charge of having been guilty of a high-handed proceeding in this matter. I say they have no right to go behind the clearance. If the owners of that raft, or the men who held that raft in security, cleared that raft from a Canadian port to Fort Erie, they had a right to do so, and the Minister of Customs had no right to accuse those men, in advance, of fraudulent intent. If they had been guilty of fraud then it was time to seize the raft and inflict the penalties of the law; but to assume beforehand that these men were going to commit a fraud and a crime, and to seize their raft because, forsooth, the Minister of Customs thought they intended to defraud the revenue, is a very high-handed proceeding. I think, on the next occasion, the Minister had better allow the bank at Tonawanda, or Mr. Joseph Jackson, or any other individual who is interested in a Canadian raft, to clear that raft from one Canadian port to another if they want to do so, and if they attempt to evade the law, if they take that raft to some other point to evade the payment of export duties, then let him proceed against them; but wait till they have done that, and do not assume that they are going to do it.

Mr. BOWELL. It will not occur again, for I will not allow it to leave the port.

Motion agreed to.

LIGHT OPPOSITE YAMACHICHE.

Mr. RINFRET (Translation) moved for :

Copies of all petitions and correspondence respecting the placing of a floating light opposite Yamachiche, in Lake St. Peter, River St. Lawrence.

He said : Mr. Speaker, in making this motion, I wish to call the attention of the Government on the great importance which attaches, with respect to the sailing of schooners and light vessels, to the replacing of a buoy called "La Caille," by a floating light. This buoy is situated opposite Yamachiche, at about four miles from the upper light and seven miles from the lower light on the river. It is a very considerable distance between these two lights. The river makes a curve at this point and it frequently happens that ships, after passing the upper light, cannot well see the lower light, especially when winds are somewhat foul. During very dark nights it happens that ships are compelled to anchor at this very place, one of the most dangerous on the River St. Lawrence in times of violent gales. I am told by seamen who have spoken to me about this matter, that several shipwrecks have occurred there, so that I think it my duty to call the attention of the Government on this matter. During last Session, I have spoken about it to the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who said to me he had received no petitions asking for the placing of a floating light there. I am aware that petitions were forwarded since then, since I laid some myself on the Table of this House. I think the Government would do well not to disregard the information I give them, for the change asked for is of the utmost importance for the safety of seamen who are compelled to sail at night time in Lake St. Peter.

Mr. COLBY. I am informed that the Government have no petition nor correspondence on this subject.

Mr. RINFRET (Translation.) I laid some petitions myself on the Table of this House, in the early days of the Session. I think the Government have not had time to consider them yet, but I hope they will send inspectors to the spot who will enquire as to the truth of what is recited in the petitions. I hope that, after investigation, they will comply with the request I have just made.

Mr. COLBY. I will make further enquiry. This is the memorandum placed in my hands by the deputy.

Motion agreed to.

INDIANS OF CAUGHNAWAGA—INDEMNITY.

Mr. DOYON (Translation) moved for :

Copies of all correspondence between the Indian Department and the agent and chiefs of the Caughnawaga reserve respecting any indemnity claimed by the Indians of the reserve, on the ground that the extent of their reserve has been considerably diminished by encroachments.

He said : Mr. Speaker, in making this motion, I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that the reserve of Caughnawaga has been considerably diminished, and I may say by more than half; for I have in my hands the original title deeds of the concessions made by the Kings of France, bearing the respective dates of the 29th May, 1680, of the 31st October, 1680, and of the 15th June, 1717, which give to the reserve of Caughnawaga an extent of two square leagues, besides another concession of two leagues by one league and a half. In order to make the thing better understood, I produce the title deeds and patents of concession I have referred to. I may also add that they even likewise granted two islands and islets, described in these deeds which have also been taken away from them :

By reason of what has been represented to us by the Reverend Fathers of the Religious Society of Jesus, that His Majesty by his letters patent of the 29th May, 1680, registered in the Supreme Court at Quebec, on the 29th October following, having made them a gift of the tract of land called Le Sault, containing two leagues in front commencing at a point of land situate opposite the St. Louis Rapids and ascending along the lake by a similar depth with the two islands, the islets opposite and joining the lands of the Prairie de la Magdeleine, for the reasons set forth in the said letters and subject to the same charges and conditions therein contained, they ask that it will please us to grant them a remnant of land of one league and a half, or thereabouts, in length, commencing at the said tract of land called Le Sault, ascending along the Lake towards the Seigniory of Chateau-Gay by two leagues in depth, which would allow them to attract there still more Iroquois and other Indians, and to increase their number and to extend by that means the light of the Faith and the Gospel. We, in virtue of the power given us conjointly by His Majesty, and to facilitate still more to the Reverend Fathers of the Society of Jesus the means of continuing the care they have for so long and with so much zeal taken for the conversion and instruction of the Iroquois and other Indians, have given, granted and conceded to them, and give by these presents the remnant of land of about one league and a half in length commencing from the said tract of land called Le Sault and ascending towards the Seigniory of Chateau-Gay by two leagues in depth to be enjoyed by the said Reverend Fathers subject to the same charges and conditions contained in the aforesaid letters patent of His Majesty, and they shall obtain from His Majesty the confirmation of these presents. "This day, the fifteenth of June, the Letters Patent of one thousand seven hundred and seventeen, the King being in Paris, having caused to be produced letters of the gift to the members of the Religious Society of Jesus, residing in the country of New France, dated at Fontainebleau, the twenty-ninth of May, one thousand six hundred and eighty, of a tract of land called Le Sault, containing two leagues, commencing at a point of land situated opposite the St. Louis Rapids and ascending along the lake by a similar depth, with the two islands, the islets and shoals opposite and joining the lands of Prairie de la Magdeleine, in order to settle thereupon the said Iroquois Indians, who were settled upon the lands of the said prairie, which were found to be too wet to be sown, and to provide for their subsistence, subject to the condition that the said tract of land should belong to His Majesty all cleared, when the said Iroquois should abandon it, the deeds of gift dated at Quebec, the thirty-first day of October, one thousand six hundred and eighty, granted by Sieurs the Comte de Frontenac and Duchesneau, the Governor-General and the Intendant of New France, to the said Reverend Fathers, in order to put them in a position to settle a greater number of Iroquois Indians, of a remnant of land of about one league and a half in length, commencing from the same tract of land called Le Sault, towards the Seigniory of Chateau-Gay, with a depth of two leagues, to be enjoyed by the said Reverend Fathers subject to the clauses, charges and conditions contained in the said letters patent of the twenty-ninth of May, one thousand six hundred and eighty, and His Majesty having been informed that a change of locality had become necessary for these Indians, seeing that the tract of land in which they were settled was exhausted, and that it was necessary to settle them in another place upon the lands granted for them, and having also been informed that the said Indians were only leaving their former lands for a time and that they intended to return thereto, now, therefore, His Majesty, having taken cognisance of what had been written on this subject by the Sieurs de Vandreuil and Begon, Governor and Intendant of New France, and of the memorials presented on this subject by the said members of the Religious Society of Jesus, and desiring to reserve the said tracts of land as much for the said reverend fathers as for the said Indians, His Majesty, on the advice of M. le Duc d'Orleans, Regent, has anew granted and made a gift to the members of the Religious Society of Jesus residing in New France, of the tract of land called Le Sault, which, in future, shall not only contain the tract of land, the islands, the islets and shoals mentioned in the said letters patent given at Fontainebleau, the twenty-ninth May, one thousand six hundred and eighty, but also the tracts of land mentioned in the said deeds of gift made by the Sieurs de Frontenac and Duchesneau on the thirty-first October, one thousand six hundred and eighty, for the purpose of locating thereon the mission of the Iroquois Indians, called the Mission of the Sault St. Louis, subject to the condition that the said tract of land shall belong to His Majesty when abandoned by the Iroquois. His Majesty commands that the present letters shall be registered in the Superior Council at Quebec, that parties concerned may have recourse thereto, and in testimony of his will His Majesty has commanded me to forward these present letters patent, which he has been pleased to sign with his hand and has caused to be countersigned by me, Councillor, Secretary of State and of his Finance Administration. And when I assert that these concessions have considerably diminished in extent, I refer, in support of that assertion, to the answer to the enquiry I made last Session, of the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Dewdney), reported at page 481 of Hansard, and to the following words at the end of that answer:—

"The reserve contains 12,327½ acres, and the survey of the whole reserve, when all the work is done, will cost $22,000."

I believe that the original reserve must have contained at least 30,000 acres more. My intention in asking the Government to produce all the correspondence and any deeds that may have been made respecting lands taken from the Caughnawaga Reserve, is to ascertain by what right the Government or any other person or society, having the administration of this estate, have, at any time since the original concession of these lands, disposed the Indians of this part of the reserve. What justifies me in concluding that a portion of the reserve has been conveyed to whites in an illegal manner, is the fact that I have here a deed made before a notary by Ignace Mikanawaha, on 16th April, 1819, to a Canadian, Jacques Patenaude, a farm laborer of the parish of Saint Constant;

whereas we know that at no period had an Indian the right to give a valid deed to a white man. The deed in question reads as follows:—

“Before the undersigned, notaries public of the Province of Lower Canada, residing at the village of La Prairie de la Madeleine, in the district of Montreal.

“Appeared Ignace Mikanawaha, one of the principal chiefs of the Iroquois nation of Sault St. Louis, authorised hereunto, by a resolution of all the chiefs of the said Nation, in Council assembled yesterday, the twenty-sixth April instant.

“Who did voluntarily admit and declare by these presents, that he hath given and conceded à titre de cens et rentes seigneuriales, unredemtable, henceforth and forever, and free from all disturbance and impediments whatsoever resulting from acts and promises of the said chiefs, their successors or administrators, to Jacques Patenaude, laborer, of the parish of St. Constant, hereunto present and accepting, lessee, for himself, his heirs and assigns forever, a land and concession situated in the Seigneurie of Sault St. Louis, measuring two arpents in front by about seven arpents in depth, bounded in front by the land of the said lessee, in rear by the limits laid down by M. Archambault; on the one side Alexis Henry to the south, and on the other side Paul Chaperon to the north; without any warranty of precise measurement, but in accordance with return of metes and bounds prepared by M. Archambault, surveyor, which the said lessee declares he well knows, having seen and examined the same, and is content and satisfied therewith, the said lessee to enjoy, use, work and dispose of the said land, himself, his heirs and assigns, on the charges, clauses and conditions following, that is to say: the lessee, his heirs and assigns shall pay each year to the seigniors their successors, administrators and assigns, at their accounting place in the said seigniorie or to their receiver or agent, two Sols Tournois, French money, for each arpent in superficies and one bushel and a-half of wheat, all good, dry, clean and merchantable, for each twenty arpents in superficies; and three Sols Tournois of cens for the whole of the said concession; the whole cens et rentes, seigneuriales payable each year, the first payment shall fall due and be payable on St. Martin's day, 11th Nov. next year; but the lessee binds himself to pay to the seigniors next St. Martin's day for all seigniorial rights, one écu or three livres for each arpent in the place and stead of the aforesaid cens et rentes of the present year only, and shall continue thenceforward, while and so long as the said lessee, his heirs and assigns shall be holders in whole or in part of the said land; with power, nevertheless, to the said chiefs to alter the term of payment; the said cens et rentes to carry profit of lods et ventes seizure and fines, on occasion, together with all other seigniorial and feudal rights, in accordance with the original title deed of the said seigniorie; the said concession to be subject to the common mill thereof, under pain of confiscation, arbitrary fine and payment for the grinding of any grain ground elsewhere; lessees to occupy the said land within a year and day from date hereof, give décount to their neighbors as it is required by them, and make party ditches with them (the said seigniors not being in any way bound thereunto as regards their unconceded land) and suffer all roads, bridges, ditches and discharge for watercourses suitable for public convenience, keep the same in good condition, and help with the other tenants to make roads and bridges on the domaine of the seigniorie and to maintain the same; work and cultivate the said land, keep it in a good condition, so that the said cens et rentes may easily be collected therefrom year by year.

“The said seigniors, lessors, reserving to themselves the right of redemption in case of the sale or other equivalent alienation of the whole or part of the said land, on repaying to the purchaser of the principal money of his purchase, costs, and true outlay.

“Right of reconnaissance and declaration at each change of seignior, by succession or otherwise, at the cost of the holder; nor shall the lessee his heirs or assigns have the right to give, cede or otherwise alienate the whole or part of the said land to any holder in mortmain, nor any community impose cens on cens of the said seigniors the lessors, who shall be entitled to take from the said lands all kinds of timber, stone, lime, sand, and other materials required for building churches, priests houses, mills and other public works. manors or other houses, or enclosures on the domaines of the said seigniorie without in any way paying anything to the said lessee, his heirs and assigns, and if the said seigniors wish to build water-mills, windmills, or saw-mills, they reserve the right, for the building thereof, to take, occupy, or cut lands for the passage of water in such places as they think proper, on paying for the clearing, as estimated by experts, and reducing the cens et rentes in proportion to the land cut or taken, and the lessee shall not nor shall his heirs and assigns have power to build on the said concession any mill whatsoever, under pain, &c. And should the common mill of the seigniorie be burnt, or the dam thereof carried away by flood, in that case only the lessee, his heirs or assigns, shall be bound to give two days labor, in order to assist the other tenants in restoring the said mill or dam.

“To all which clauses, conditions, servitudes and reservations, the lessee hath submitted himself, for himself, his heirs and assigns, hath promised to comply therewith, and the whole thereof will follow out and execute and well and duly pay the said cens et rentes to the said seigniors at the time and place aforesaid; with hypothecary lien on his estate, movable or immovable, and specially on the land above conceded, and the one obligation shall not derogate from the other.

“And if the lessee, his heirs and assigns, fail to comply with the conditions aforesaid, in such case the said seigniors may re-enter de plein droit the said land, and restore it to the domain of the said seigniorie, and dispose thereof in favor of any person as they think proper, and they shall not be bound to adopt any form of process whatsoever in so doing. The lessee shall be bound to have the said land measured by a sworn surveyor, and before planting bounds shall furnish the surveyor's report thereof to the seigniors at his own cost and expense, together with a copy of these presents within eight days.

“And for the execution hereof, the lessee hath elected his domicile on the land herein above conceded, at which place, &c.

“Notwithstanding, &c., for, &c., promising, &c., binding, &c., renouncing, &c.

This deed is sufficient to create a strong presumption that the reserve has been illegally dispossessed and diminished by similar proceedings. Moreover, the present Government has threatened with legal process some of the censitaires who have occupied these lands for many years, and who have not paid any seigniorial rents, for the benefit of the Indians, for over 25 years in many cases. These censitaires who have been threatened by the Government are located at La Prairie, St. Constant and St. Isidore, and are now proprietors of these lands. These threats have not been generally put in execution, but I learn that the Government have prosecuted two of the richest and largest proprietors of St. Constant, in order to make their case a test case. I know not how the matter stands now; but in any case the fact of the farmers who occupy these lands being compelled to pay certain rentes, would not prove that the Indians had a right to sell these lands, whether they were sold by them, or by others who held them for their exclusive benefit; for the deeds of grant from the French kings declare that these lands were given to the Reverend Jesuit Fathers for the benefit and education of the Indians. It is also declared in the said deeds that the said lands shall revert to the Crown only in the event of the Indians abandoning the reserve. It is perfectly clear that the Indians have not abandoned their reserve, for they still occupy it; but they only occupy it in part, having been dispossessed of the rest. Mr. Speaker, I desire specially to call the attention of the Government to these facts. I do not want that the farmers who now hold a part of the Caughnawaga reserve should be dispossessed. In fact I am not sure the thing could be done, even if it were desirable to do it, but I want that justice should be done to the Indians. If their lands have been unjustly taken from them—and until proof to the contrary, I am inclined to think they have—I think it would be but reasonable that the Government should take steps to indemnify them, or at least to ascertain whether they have not been dispossessed in an illegal manner. Mr. Speaker, I did not anticipate that this question would be taken up this evening, and I am unprovided with certain documents which would have enabled me to treat this question more completely. Nevertheless, I submit these explanations, reserving to myself the privilege of bringing this question before the House again, when I shall be in possession of fuller information.

Mr. DEWDNEY. From what I can gather of the remarks made by the hon. gentleman, as interpreted to me by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière), the white settlers have been making encroachments on the Indian reserves at Caughnawaga. Since the notice appeared on the paper, I have had enquiries made in the Department, and I find that there is no correspondence whatever in reference to this matter. Since the hon. gentleman has made these remarks I will, when they are printed in the Hansard, go through them, and I will instruct my officers to enquire further into the matter, and I shall be very glad to confer on the subject with my hon. friend.

Mr. LAURIER. I would call the attention of the Minister to these facts in connection with this matter. It appears that the Indian reserve, such as it was conceded first by the Government of France, covered an area of over 30,000 acres of land, and it appears the reserve has now been diminished to about 12,000 acres. The white people evidently have crowded out some of the Indians, and taken possession of their lands. This may have been done with or without authority. I understand that some of these encroachments have been made with authority, though I do not know what the authority could be. I understand that the Indian Department has taken proceedings a few months ago to compel some of those who are in possession of those Indian lands, to pay the ground rent. Now, I do not see how the Department could sue anybody in possession of Indian land to pay ground rent, unless those parties had derived their title to possession from some concession made by the Government. If the Government are collecting ground rents which are owing to the Indians, these payments naturally go into the funds of the Indians, and would inure to their benefit; but if they are encroachments which have been made without any authority whatever by the whites, the case is different. We know how it is in the vicinity of reserves; the white settlers are very apt to encroach a little every year, and the process goes on so long that the Indians may be deprived very materially of the reserve they originally possessed. If some of the encroachments have been going on, if to-day the Indians are deprived of a good deal of their lands, certainly the Department must take some measure—not to restore them their land, because I suppose that could not be done without a good deal of disturbance—but certainly in my opinion the Department should take some measure to indemnify them for the encroachments they have suffered. It is not fair to the Indians that they should be deprived of the lands which have been conceded to them for their benefit, that the white settlers should be allowed to encroach upon them without any compensation being given to the Indians whatever. This is the idea which my hon. friend has been endeavoring to impress upon the Minister. The Minister says there is no correspondence; there may not be correspondence, but the subject is one which, in my opinion, ought to engage the attention of the Department.

Motion agreed to.

I.C.R.—EMPLOYÉS' INSURANCE SCHEME.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) moved for :

Return showing the past operation of the Intercolonial Railway employés insurance scheme, and specially, (a) the annual receipts and expenditure, including salaries of officials for each year the scheme has been in operation; (b) the amounts paid each year out of the fund to the employés or their representatives, and whether for death or injury; (c) the surplus (if any) now on hand of such fund. He said: I hope this return will be brought down at an early day, because I should like to have it before we pass to the estimates of the Intercolonial Railway. The information is almost at hand, and with a little extra exertion I think we might have it in a day or two.

Motion agreed to.

I.C.R.—OFFICIAL CARS.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) moved for :

Return showing (a) the names and number of officials' cars on the Intercolonial Railway and its branches; (b) the original cost, date and place of building each car, or name of person or company from whom purchased; (c) the cost of repairs to, or expenditure in each of such cars since acquired; (d) the names and salaries and expenses of each employé on such official cars; (e) the annual expenses of providing the supplies to each such car. He said: The return will be interesting for more than one reason. A few years ago we had one official car, and I know that about 1878 that car formed the text of more speeches and orations than I suppose any other similar expenditure ever made in the country. I do not think there were any Conservative candidates from the Province of Quebec down to Prince Edward Island who did not iterate and reiterate the expenditure on the celebrated Brydges car. Since then we have been undergoing a process of development at the cost of the taxpayer, and it has been a very rapid progress. If I am rightly informed, we have not simply one official car by which railway officials can pass from one place to another, but we have six or seven, or at all events a considerable number. These cars have not only increased in number, but also in magnificence, for this is a great country, we are a great people and we have great officials, especially great officials. In comparatively modern times and under the comparatively economical expenditure of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) and his Administration, we had only one great railway official entitled to travel in an official car. Now every railway official must have his car, not only the general manager of the Intercolonial but some of the Ministers, and also some of their families; and, moreover, they must have cars with all modern improvements, black men to wait on them, and so on. We want to know how much the country is paying for these officials' cars. As the elections are coming on it will be interesting to the taxpayers to know how their money is expended. We want to know the number of the cars and the cost. I am told that the expenditure for repairs and the cost of some of these cars will startle even some hon. gentlemen opposite who are accustomed to vote anything which the Ministers ask them to vote.

Motion agreed to.

I. C. R. AND P. E. I. RAILWAY.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) moved for :

Copies of all petitions to the Minister of Railways since 1st January, 1889, from employés of the Intercolonial Railway workshops at Moncton and the Prince Edward Island Railway, asking for an increase of wages; and also for copies of all answers to the same from the Department of Railways or any official thereof.

He said : It will be in the recollection of the House, that some years ago I brought to its notice the unjust discrimination which exists between the pay of the employés of the Intercolonial Railway and that of the employés doing the same class of work on the Prince Edward Island Railway. I endeavored to show to the then Minister of Railways that this discrimination should be discontinued. I understood there was a rule passed prohibiting the employés of the Prince Edward Island Railway under pain of dismissal, from making any application at all for an increase of their salaries. I understand that rule did not apply to the Intercolonial Railway proper, and that applications have been made from the workmen on that railway for increases in their wages. This whole question will probably be discussed later on, and I express the hope that this petition will be brought down before the estimates for the Intercolonial Railway are gone into.

Motion agreed to.

CASCUMPEC HARBOR.

Mr. PERRY moved for :

Return showing the date of commencing the works of blasting the rock in Cascumpec Harbor, in Prince Edward Island, in the summer of 1889, the date at which the work stopped, the names of workmen employed, the amount of wages paid to each diver and to each laborer; also the whole amount expended in blasting said rock up to December, 1889.

He said : I wish to draw the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the necessity, that when the rock is taken out of Cascumpec harbor that the stone will be carried away, and not allowed to remain in the water to obstruct vessels. I hope the Minister will also investigate that matter in which one of the divers received 75 cents a day less than the other. I am sure that the man who got the 75 cents a day less, was as well entitled to it and earned it as hard as the other. Although it is nearly a year since this happened it is not too late to render justice.

Motion agreed to.

MONEYS BELONGING TO THE INDIANS OF CAUGHNAWAGA.

Mr. DOYON (Translation) moved for :

Statement showing: 1st. All moneys in the hands of the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, belonging to the Indians of the Caughnawaga Reserve, 2nd. All the several sources from which the said moneys were derived.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

He said : Mr. Speaker, as in the case of the first motion I brought before the House this evening, I am in want of some of the papers required for a full statement of this matter. However, I wish to make some few observations in order to enable the House to understand the object I have in view in moving in this matter. Some thirty or forty years ago an old missionary had in his hands a sum of several thousand dollars which he managed in the interest of the Indians. I know nothing whatever of the source this money was derived from, but one thing sure is, that the reverend missionary used part of it in the building or repairing of the still existing church, and when he died, as none could be found in Caughnawaga who could properly manage the balance of this sum, the money was deposited in the hands of the reverend gentlemen of the Montreal Seminary. The sum amounted to $3,333, which, at interest at the rate of six per cent., represented a yearly revenue of $200. Up to these last few years this interest was paid to the Indians by the reverend gentlemen of the Seminary. I am informed that seven or eight years ago the Government sued these reverend gentlemen, or asked them to render an account of this sum of $3,333, and never since have the Indians received this yearly sum of $200 which they used to receive. I tried to trace this money in the Department of Indian Affairs; as it appeared to be derived from other sources than those from which other moneys belonging to the Indians were derived, I thought it was possibly entered under a special head in the Report on the Indian Affairs, but I find it nowhere. This is why I ask for the bringing down of the papers relating to this matter. I want to know whether this money was added to the other moneys belonging to the Indians, or whether it was made a separate fund. In either case, the money must yield an interest, whatever that be, and the fact that the Indians received $200 as interest up to eight years ago shows that they are entitled to it, and even if this money was added to the other moneys belonging to the Indians, I want to know what has become of this sum of money, and if they are entitled to receive the interest it yields. It is not through ill-intent that I move in this matter, but I am bound to serve the interests of my constituents, and to comply with their wishes. That is why I enquire about this from the Government, and I hope the hon. the Minister of the Interior will gladly help me in my investigations.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I will take the opportunity of bringing the matter to which the hon. gentleman has referred before my Department, and see if they have heard anything of it. I think that from the memorandum I have got here, the Department knows nothing of the subject. However, it will be easy to find out. If the hon. gentleman will come and see me at the office, and give me the particulars, I will make enquiries to find out where the money has gone.

Mr. DOYON. Very well.

RETURNS ORDERED.

Return showing the number of tenders made or put in for the public work at the Eastern Gap of the Toronto Harbor Works; the name or names of each person or company tendering for the work, and the amount of each tender and the terms thereof, with a statement of the approximate quantities upon which each tender was calculated; and of all letters and correspondence, statements, documents and papers pertaining to the letting of the contract and to any and all of the tenders.—(Mr. Barron.)

Copies of forms of advertisement and of tender, of tenders received of the contract entered into in connection with a steam service between any ports in the Maritime Provinces and any West India ports; also all correspondence connected therewith between any of the Public Departments and any persons interested in the establishment of the said service.—(Mr. Trow for Mr. Ellis.)

Return, in detail, of all expenses attending the passage and enforcement of the "Liquor License Act" of 1883 up to date; 2. The amount of all law costs pro its constitutionality; 3. The names of all the legal firm or firms employed by the Government, and the amount paid said firm or firms.—(Mr. Trow for Mr. Cook.)

Copies of all petitions forwarded to the Government by Messrs. Nazaire Ouellet, Geo. Voyer, Alfred Ouellet, F. Côté, and others, in relation to damages caused to their properties by the Intercolonial Railway.—(Mr. Fiset.)

Return showing the original cost of the Marine Hospital at Sackville, including cost of the site; the number of patients received each year into such hospital; the annual cost of such hospital.—(Mr. Davies, P.E.I.)

Copies of all instructions issued by the Director of the Geological Survey to officers in charge of all surveying parties sent into the field within the last five years.—(Mr. Mulock.)

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 10.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 11th March, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

THE MEMBER FOR LINCOLN.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT moved:

That whereas it appears from certain documents and letters published in the Votes and Proceedings of this House, that John Charles Rykert, member for the County of Lincoln, did, in or about the beginning of the month of April, A.D. 1882, apply to the Government of Canada for a grant of certain timber limits in the North-West Territories, at or near Cypress Hills, in the name of one John Adams, and that, at or about the time of such application, he procured an agreement to be signed by the said John Adams, whereby, in consideration of the services of the said John C. Rykert, alleged to be voluntarily given, in obtaining the grant of such limits, the said Adams agreed to assign to the wife of the said John C. Rykert one-half interest in the limits so applied for, and to pay over to her one-half of all the net proceeds of the sale of all timber thereon or the purchase money derived therefrom, which agreement is in the words and figures following:—

Memorandum of agreement made this third day of April, A.D. 1882.—Between John Adams, of the city of Winnipeg, of the first part; and Nannie Marie Rykert, of the city of St. Catharines, of the second part.

Whereas the above named John Adams has, through the intervention of John Charles Rykert, obtained certain limits in the North-West Territories, at or near Cypress Hills, and has, in consideration of the services of the said Rykert, voluntarily given him, agreed, to and with the said party hereto of the second part, to give to her one-half the proceeds of the said limit, after deducting all expenses connected therewith:

Witnesseth, that the said party of the first part, in consideration of the sum of one dollar to him in hand paid by the party of the second part, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, and in further consideration of the premises, hath agreed, and by these presents doth agree, to assign and transfer to the said party of the second part one-half interest in the limits applied for and to be granted by the Government at or near the Cypress Hills, in the North-West Territory, and to pay over and account to her for one-half of all the net proceeds of the sale of all timber thereon or for the purchase money derived therefrom, after deducting all expenses and charges in connection therewith.

"Witness the hands and seals of the parties hereto the day and year above written.

(Signed) "JOHN ADAMS.

"Witness: (Signed) J. C. RYKERT."

That whereas it further appears from such documents that the application of the said John C. Rykert was successful, and that an Order in Council was, on the 17th April, A.D. 1882, approved granting to the said Adams such limits, and that the said J. C. Rykert in such correspondence claimed and insisted that he was successful in procuring such Order in Council owing to the extraordinary influence he, the said Rykert, possessed with the Department of the Interior and with the Government, as appears from the following extracts from the letters of the said Rykert to the said Adams, contained in such Votes and Proceedings, viz., on the 11th April, 1882:

"I to-day saw McCarthy, and he was terribly surprised to hear that I had got the limit, as he was refused point-blank. He is willing to join with us in the survey, and I go to Hamilton to get Laidlaw to say where he wants the limit. He has written me he will do almost anything if I will assist him in getting his. I will write you from home on Thursday. The Order in Council went before the Government to-day, and it is likely it will pass at once. Instructions will then be given to the surveyor. We are awfully lucky, as the deputy told me that no other man could have forced them to yield."

And again on the 16th April, 1882:

"The Order was passed several days ago. Laidlaw is to meet me in Hamilton to-morrow. He has not yet got his Order, and is now of opinion that I have more influence than McCarthy, who told me he was refused by the Government."

And again on the 21st April:

"The Order in Council has been finally passed, and this although every effort was made to induce the Government to alter their minds."

And again on the 24th April:

"Laidlaw offered to bet me $1,000 I could not get the Order passed for you, as he had been refused in January and again in February."

And again on the 10th May:

"Laidlaw only got his Order passed this week, and he had to get me to help him, so you see who had the influence with the Government after all."

And again on the 1st August, 1882:

"It will be satisfactory to know, after my hard fight with the Government, that I did get what you anticipated. I would not go through the same difficulty again for twice the amount. I never spent such six weeks before as I did while endeavoring to force the Department to do justice. The fact of their having refused McCarthy before had a great deal to do with the delay and refusal. Poor Laidlaw. I am pleased he did not get the start of this child. He thought he was very smart and had all the influence of the country at his back. I think another time they will recognise the fact that J. C. R. is not very easily defeated at anything."

And whereas it further appears that the said limits were subsequently sold, by, and on behalf of said Adams and Rykert, to one Louis Sands, at and for the sum of $200,000, and that the said John C. Rykert did, on the 16th day of January, A.D. 1883, receive from the said John Adams the sum of $74,200 out of the said purchase money, and which sum was payable under the said agreement as and for the share of the said John C. Rykert, or his wife, in the said limits, and that he signed a receipt therefor in the following terms:—

"WINNIPEG, MAN., 16th January, 1883.

"Received from John Adams $35,000 in cash by drafts on the Bank of Montreal, and four notes of Louis Sands for $39,200, payable in one and two years. All payable to the order of Mrs. N. M. Rykert, and in full of the moneys payable to her under agreement.

(Signed) "J. C. RYKERT,
"Her Attorney."

That whereas it appears from the Hanward report of the proceedings of the House that, on the 2nd day of May, A.D. 1883, Mr. Charlton, the then and present member for North Norfolk, did in his place ask: "If the said John C. Rykert did not negotiate the transaction in connection with the timber limits in the Cypress Hills, and if he did not, as agent for other parties, get a timber limit there at $5 a square mile and sell it at $2,000 a square mile, and if he did not get such limit on behalf of one Adams, and if he did not go to Winnipeg in person and sell it to Louis Sands, of Michigan, for $200,000, of which $90,000 was paid in cash, one-third of which he, the said John C. Rykert, put in his pocket?" to all of which questions the said J. C. Rykert categorically replied in the negative, and at once proceeded to make, and did make, the following statement from his place in the House:—

"The hon. gentleman has asked me several questions, and I propose now to answer them. I neither directly nor indirectly drew the money he spoke of, nor put any sum in my pocket except professional fees, and professional fees only. I deny that I negotiated any timber lease for Mr. Adams, or any other person. On the contrary, Mr. Adams had his own agents to negotiate for him; he made his own bargain, and I had nothing to do with it, and did not pocket the money the hon. gentleman has spoken of. On the contrary, I advised Mr. Adams not to dispose of the limit, but to work it. The hon. gentleman on several occasions has made remarks outside the House to the same effect, and I am glad now to have an opportunity to give it an emphatic denial."

That whereas it further appears from the said correspondence published in the said Votes and Proceedings, that certain difficulties having arisen with respect to the said limits, owing to their being claimed, in whole or in part, by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, as being within the Railway Belt, the said John C. Rykert did agree with the said Adams to use, and did inform the said Adams by letters signed with his own hand that he was using, corrupt influences with certain members of the Government of Canada and of the Parliament thereof, and with other officials thereof, in order to defeat the claim of the said Canadian Pacific Railway Company and to secure to himself and the said Adams, or their assignee, the said timber limits, and did further inform the said Adams that he had eventually successfully arranged the matter; all of which appears in the following extracts from the letters written by the said J. C. Rykert to the said Adams published in the said Votes and Proceedings, viz.:—

In the letter of 28th January, 1883:

"I have to go to Ottawa to-morrow night to fight the matter out, which I do not like. I seem to have all the hardest part of it to do. I have Bowell working for me. And if we succeed in beating the railway, we will have to pay the amount we agreed to pay, as you recollect, when we two were in the Queen's Hotel. I have not slept for a week on account of this. We must keep perfectly quiet."

And in the same letter, further on:

"I am engaging all I can to assist me at Ottawa, and we will have to pay them well for it, as we cannot afford to lose this."

And in the letter of the 12th February, 1883:

"I have not yet succeeded in doing anything, but I am pulling wires in every direction. John A.'s son from Winnipeg, McArthur's partner, is here, and I intend employing him to go for his father. I think if you had young Tupper here, and paid him pretty well, he would help us materially. The Canadian Pacific Railway has a great hold on the Government, and we must counteract this in some way."

And in the same letter:

"I am completely sick of it, as it is something I had no right to expect, and which I should not be called upon to undertake. If it costs all we spoke of, we had better do it than let it go."

And in another letter, dated 5th March, 1883, he says:

"I have not yet succeeded in getting anything done in the limit matter. I have brought Macdonald and Tupper from Winnipeg, and hope they will be able to induce their fathers to act promptly in the matter."

"I am almost discouraged at the delay. Sands is writing me daily about it. He knows all about it. Some persons sent him the papers containing the statements. Will make any effort this week, and must do something, if we have to let a note apiece go."

And in the letter of the 8th March:

"I find difficulties surrounding us in every way in reference to the limit, and I find that the Canadian Pacific Railway have certain Ministers working for them. I am afraid it will cost us each six or seven thousand dollars to get this made all right. I have five or six at work with me, and have agreed to pay them well if they succeed. Muckle was here, and told me the limit was all within the belt. I am afraid they will do their very utmost to defeat me. I want to be satisfied that you are sure I am doing what is right, and also that you will back me out in all that I do in the way of payment."

Again on the 28th March, 1883:

"I am having a hard time with the limit matter. It will cost us each at least $5,500 to get this through. I have laid my ropes so that I expect to have it settled in a few days. I have a dozen at work for us. You must be prepared to pay the amount of your share at any time, as it will have to be all cash. When this is settled we must get rid of all the notes and have an end of it. It has completely used me up. The excitement and strain is too much for me. I had Tupper and Macdonald brought from Winnipeg, and they have been working hard for me."

That whereas it is apparent from the said documents and correspondence, that the said Rykert did make use of his position and influence as a member of this House, in the matter of the said limits, for his own pecuniary advantage; and that he did afterwards make a statement, from his place in this House, with regard to his connection with and the obtaining the said limits, entirely at variance with the facts, and calculated to mislead the House and the country; and that he made further statements in his correspondence with the said Adams to the effect that he was obliged to resort to corrupt practices with members of the Cabinet, and members of Parliament, and other Government officials, in order to perfect the title to the said grant of such limits (which statements have been challenged as false by members of the Cabinet, from their places in this House, and admitted by the said Rykert, in his place in the House, so far as members of the Cabinet are concerned, to be untrue).

That the conduct of the said John C. Rykert in the premises is, and has been, discreditable, corrupt and scandalous.

He said: In accordance with the understanding arrived at with the Premier the other day, I propose to call your attention to a certain motion, of which I have given notice. It is as nearly as possible a month since I took occasion to call the attention of the Government to certain correspondence, purporting to be signed by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert), which I thought required our attention. Since that time that correspondence has been placed on our Votes and Proceedings; that correspondence has been admitted to be correct by the hon. gentleman himself in his place, and in certain communications which also appear on our Votes and Proceedings. Now, in the first place, I desire to say that it appears to me that it was the duty of the Government of Canada, under these circumstances, to have taken this matter into their own hands, inasmuch as this correspondence appears to contain statements and facts which seriously affect the honor and reputation of a member of this House, and which appeared to the Government themselves to reflect so seriously on certain members of their own body, that one hon. member of the Government found it necessary to rise in his place and repudiate the apparent construction which might be placed on those letters, in the strongest possible language, while the Premier himself appears to have thought that transaction to involve such consequences that he deemed it right to cause a communication from his own son, repudiating all connection with these transactions, to be likewise placed on our Votes and Proceedings, and made part of the record. Sir, I shall not, at present, attempt to say why or wherefore the Government did not see fit to act on this matter—possibly the causes may appear in the course of this debate; but as they did not choose to act, it is clearly our duty, on this side of the House, to call your attention and that of the House itself, to these facts and to this correspondence. Now, some of these matters appear to me to involve questions of very great gravity. It is not only that the statements themselves seem to reflect gravely on the honor and reputation of an old member of this House, and a man of some prominence in it too, but I believe they reflect on the honor and reputation of the House of Commons, and of the people who sent us here. Sir, it would hardly be going too far for me to say that on the right or the wrong handling of the questions incidentally involved in this motion, depends, I will not say the possibility, but I will say the utility, of parliamentary government, in Canada. The question really amounts to this: Is this House of Commons, from this time forth, to be considered as a place of assembly where the representatives of the people are to meet and discuss matters affecting the welfare of the community, or is it to become, from this time out, a sort of happy hunting-ground for needy and unscrupulous adventurers? Is the House of Commons to be known henceforward as a body composed of trustees of the people, bound to act for the benefit of the people, or are the members of the House of Commons from henceforth to get full license to use their position and influence in this House for the purpose of their own private gain and advantage? These, Sir, are some among the questions which appear to me to be involved in the discussion of the motion now on hand. My opinions on this and on certain kindred questions are well known. Both in this House, on many occasions, on the hustings, before my own constituents, and in published speeches of mine, I have not infrequently called attention to the extent to which, as it appeared to me, the public service was being demoralised, and in danger of being further demoralised under the twofold influence of a corrupt fiscal system and a corrupt Administration. Sir, it seems that things have been going from bad to worse. In a late Parliament it was stated on the floor of this House, and, so far as I can remember, the facts were fairly made out, that out of the majority of 140 very nearly seventy members, or one-half of the whole, had entered into such pecuniary relations with the Government in one form or other, as could not fail most seriously to embarrass their position as free agents and representatives of the people. I have always myself had a very strong prejudice, indeed, in favor of our form of government. I have always regarded what we may call the Cabinet form of government as a great improvement in many ways on the Presidential form of government adopted by our neighbors; but I am bound to say that the events of the last few years have caused me at times to entertain grave doubts indeed as to whether the fathers of the American Republic did not, after all, better understand in some respects the condition of society on this side of the Atlantic, when they saw fit to separate the executive from the legislative function. Still, notwithstanding that, I am of the opinion that there is a better mode than they have adopted, but I am free to admit that, if no remedy can be found for the state of things to which I have alluded, we might do well to consider whether, under the circumstances, it was not necessary for us to adopt somewhat similar precautions. Sir, I think that the facts disclosed in the case of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) show that it is a very bad case. But I am not at all disposed to say that the hon. member for Lincoln is, by any means, the only sinner in this matter; I am not at all disposed to say that that hon. member is the only man who has transgressed all those wholesome maxims and principles on which the vitality and usefulness of parliamentary government depend. More than that: I have said elsewhere, and I repeat here, that I hold a considerable section of the people of Canada, a considerable number of the constituencies of Canada, are far from blameless in this matter. I have always believed that to a very great extent members of Parliament were likely to be as honest as their constituents required them to be; and there was one fact, perhaps one only, which the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) stated in his defence, recorded on the Journals of this House, with which I am disposed to agree: that is, the statement which he made in which he implied, at any rate, that he came here with the full knowledge and consent of his constituents, who were acquainted with all the material facts now stated before they sent him here. And he implied, and I think he implied correctly, that if he was wrong, his disgrace was their disgrace. If he had committed a crime, his constituents were accomplices in it. I am not disposed to dispute that statement. It is well, and it is right it should be understood, that if constituents condone these things, they have only themselves to thank if the members of Parliament fall far below the standard set by our English forefathers for their members of Parliament. Every practical man knows perfectly well that, in most cases of the kind which are now coming before us, the facts are apt, as a rule, to be exceedingly well covered. It is probable that in not one case in ten, or one case in fifty, can we obtain full and complete evidence detailed, as it is here, of all the ways and modes in which members of Parliament can exercise their influence for their own personal gain. Sir, it is very hard indeed, and it will always be very hard for a minority, no matter how resolute and determined, to uncover these things and obtain the requisite evidence, and still harder for them to punish. In fact, Mr. Speaker, unless the thieves fall out, unless there is a quarrel over the division of the plunder, unless these things come before a court of law and are there subjected to the ruthless cross-examination of counsel on both sides, it is the rarest thing in the world to obtain absolute and complete proof such as we have now recorded on our Votes and Proceedings. Here such an accident has occurred. Here there was a quarrel over the division of the plunder. As Carlyle puts it, we have had a glimpse of the workings of Satan's invisible world, and we are now able to understand in some degree how that personage, with the aid and assistance of some of his most favored friends, has contrived to bedevil and to pervert the representative institutions of this Canada of ours. Mr. Speaker, this is a matter which the House and the country will do well to consider. I repeat, that where you have disclosed one transaction of this kind, where you obtain against the accused clear proof and evidence of what has happened in a particular case, you may rest assured there are ten times as many cases in which the evidence cannot be brought forward, however strong and well grounded our suspicions may be. This transaction, after all, is only a sort of peak on which the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) stands self-gibbeted, by his own act, but a peak below which lies a mountain—or, perhaps, I should say a mountain range of undiscovered, but well developed rascality.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is a strong word.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is a strong word, and the transaction is one which deserves the strongest terms in the English language I am able to apply to it, within the limits of parliamentary usage. I say this whole correspondence, from start to finish, reeks of corruption at every pore; I say, with full knowledge of what I say, that I challenge any parliamentary authority to point out to me in the annals of any single English-speaking parliamentary assembly, at all comparing in rank and dignity to ours, any transaction which for one moment can compare with this. If you want to find a parallel you will have to go to the doings, and to the worst doings too, of the ring which, under the name of the Tammany Hall ring, so long controlled the municipal administration of the great city of New York. In all this matter there is one thing, and one thing alone, on which I think the House may be congratulated, and that is: that, at any rate, the facts are clearly established without any possibility of denial or dispute. There is no room for wrangling here over the facts themselves, although you may quarrel, if you like, as to the deductions which I draw from them, or as to the deductions which ought to be drawn. Sir, we have here established, and admitted by the gentleman whose conduct is called in question, first, the agreement made between himself and Mr. James Adams, by which his wife became entitled to one-half of the whole profits arising from the acquisition of the timber limits. We have, next, the Order in Council, obtained by his exertions, granting those lands. We have proof that tenders were not asked, although many applicants were known to be in the market for those limits. We have further evidence, from the hon. gentleman's own mouth, that he knew perfectly well that those limits he was acquiring were likely to prove of great value. We have evidence that, within six months after the passage of the Order in Council, the hon. gentleman sold—he, the representative and trustee of the people of Canada, sold—for $200,000 what he acquired from the other guardians of the public interests for $500. We have, Sir, from the hon. gentleman's own mouth, evidence of what he (I am using his own words) called an "honorable division" of the plunder. We have, from the hon. gentleman's own mouth, ample evidence of the use of influence, the use of his position as a member of this House, and we have a most curious and instructive narrative, showing the hon. gentleman's remarkable skill in wirepulling, and the continuous exercise of the same." We have in the Hansard, recorded beyond dispute, the clearest possible evidence from the hon. gentleman's own mouth, that when challenged with this transaction by my hon. friend who sits beside me (Mr. Charlton), he utterly and entirely repudiated every one of the facts admitted in this correspondence. And, Sir, I come to this, last of all: we have, curiously enough, incidentally, the hon. gentleman's own opinion of the transaction. I shall deal with these several points in due rotation, and, first of all, I desire to call the special attention of this House to the date, and to the terms of the agreement entered into, before the acquisition of this same timber limit, between the member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) and Mr. John Adams. It reads as follows:—

"THE AGREEMENT.

"Memorandum of agreement made this third day of April, A. D. 1882:—Between John Adams, of the city of Winnipeg, of the first part: and Nannie Marie Rykert, of the city of St. Catharines, of the second part.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

"Whereas the above-named John Adams has, through the intervention of John Charles Rykert, obtained certain limits in the N.W.T., at or near the Cypress Hills, and has, in consideration of the services of the said Rykert, voluntarily given him, agreed, to and with the said party hereto of the second part, to give to her one-half of the proceeds of the said limits, after deducting all expenses connected therewith:

"Witnesseth, that the said party of the first part, in consideration of the sum of one dollar to him in hand, paid by the party of the second part, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, and in further consideration of the premises, hath agreed, and by these presents doth agree, to assign and transfer to the said party of the second part one-half interest in the limits applied for and to be granted by the Government at or near the Cypress Hills, in the North-West Territory, and to pay over and account to her for one-half of all the net proceeds of the sale of all timber thereon or for the purchase money derived therefrom, after deducting all expenses and charges in connection therewith.

"Witness the hands and seals of the parties hereto the day and year above written.

(Signed) "JOHN ADAMS.

"(Witness) J. C. RYKERT."

I need hardly tell the House that the John C. Rykert, the witness, is the husband of the aforesaid Nannie Marie Rykert. Now, if it be asked, although I do not know that it matters very materially, why the hon. member for Lincoln kept in the background in this transaction, and why, if, as he and his friends assert, he was perfectly justified in doing what he did—he, a member of this House, in obtaining for $500 property which afterwards sold for $200,000—if it be asked, why his name did not figure in this Order in Council, if not instead, at any rate along with that of Mr. John Adams; possibly a glance at the date of the transaction may throw some light upon it. This bargain was made on the 3rd April, 1882, and a gentleman who stood so close to the Government, and was so much in their confidence, and possessed such enormous influence over them, as the hon. member has informed us he did, could not fail to know that a general election was pending, and that scandalous tongues like my hon. friend beside me (Mr. Charlton), and those of other hon. gentlemen, might put an evil construction upon this very natural and proper arrangement entered into by the hon. member. It is also apparent from this correspondence that the member for Lincoln was determined on one thing, namely, that he would not put one dollar of his own money into this transaction, that he would incur no risk, that all the money that was to be expended or risked was to come out of his partner's pocket, and that he was to have, for the benefit of his wife, one-half of the proceeds. Sir, I might possibly hint, also, that the transaction, in the mind of the hon. gentleman, was rather shady, and the less said about it the better. Now, Sir, as regards the Order in Council and the terms of it. That Order in Council granted, as I understand, to Mr. John Adams this large tract of country for the sum of $5 per square mile, which he afterwards sold—it cannot be too often repeated—for $2,000 per square mile. That Order in Council was passed, and it is clear that no tenders were called for. It is clear also, from the correspondence of the hon. gentleman himself, that there were plenty of applicants for it, and that if it had been put up to tender, beyond all doubt, a very large sum of money—how much, I cannot say—would have been offered for the limit which had been disposed of to Mr. Adams. I note that some parties are disposed to think that, after all, probably the hon. gentleman was not aware that he had got such a very good bargain in this matter. Should there be any such, I would call their attention to a few letters written by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert). You will observe that the Order in Council was granted on the 17th April, and a week before that date he writes as follows:—

“10th April, 1882.

“(Re Limit.)

“MY DEAR ADAMS,—After calling at the office eight or ten times I got the enclosed copy of Order in Council. It will be pushed through very likely to-morrow if the Government is not too lazy. You will see they give us 400 square miles to choose from. If this is not satisfactory I do not know what is. Get your surveyor ready, and I will have his instructions in a few days. They give us six months.

“Faithfully,
“J. C. RYKERT.”

Then comes the postscript, and perhaps, like many others, it is the most important part of the letter.

“If you can get $40,000 let it go, and we will get another. Try McCarthy. Perhaps he will buy.”
McCarthy would not, though.

Mr. MITCHELL. What McCarthy is that?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That, I understood, was the hon. member for North Simcoe; but I am open to correction on that point, if I am mistaken. Then, Mr. Speaker, we find that, on the 24th April, this gentleman who did not know that the limit was of any particular value, writes as follows:—

“24th April, 1882.

“MY DEAR ADAMS,—I have daily gone to the office for instructions and copy of Order in Council. I now enclose order, which you will see gives you the right over 400 miles. This is the largest privilege ever given to select from, and none has ever passed in the same speedy manner. I enclose memorandum of one of the clerks, showing he will prepare instructions in a day or two. I will keep at him daily. Get ready to leave at once. Laidlaw offered to bet me $1,000 I could not get the order passed for you, as he had been refused in January and again in February. You ought to get up company if possible and sell half for, say, $35,000, or the whole for $70,000. If this is done I will go for something else.

“Faithfully,
“J. C. RYKERT.”

And on the 24th July, this gentleman who was not sure that the bargain was worth anything, writes:

“St. CATHARINES, 24th July, 1882.

“MY DEAR ADAMS,—I am in receipt of your favor, and am pleased to learn that the limit has panned out all right, as I was in great dread it would be a failure. I am in a certain sense glad that Laidlaw has failed, as he acted so infernal mean about it. I think if you can get $80,000 you had better sell immediately, or less than that. If as good as you say the C.P.R. can give us at least $60,000 and expenses. You better see them at once, and if they will bite at all tell them I will assist them in getting all the timber within the twenty square miles. It is important to realise the cash, when we can look out for more. Have you stopped them from cutting? This is necessary. I see by the papers that the C.P.R. is cutting timber at the Cypress Hills. I do not think it will pay to work. The cash is very much better. I would not delay at all in seeing the company. Perhaps Muckle can urge them to buy.

“Faithfully,
“J. C. RYKERT.”

We find the value goes up by leaps and bounds, according to the hon. gentleman. First it was $40,000, then $70,000, and then we find it was underestimated at $80,000. On the 1st August, 1882,—because it is really of some moment that we should understand how well posted the hon. gentleman was in these matters—he writes from St. Catharines as follows:—

“I still am of the opinion that you had better sell out boldly and get the cash, if they will pay you $75,000 or $80,000. We would then be in a position to go in for something larger, if possible. That notice in the paper is pretty well got up. I guess I can see who wrote it or dictated it. Can you not get some railway man in whom you have confidence to go to Van Horne and tell him the Railway Company ought to purchase, and that the limit is well worth $150,000. Some such a game as this might take well.”

On the 19th August, 1882, I find another letter dated St. Catharines:

“I see by the report that there are 37½ miles of timber instead of 50 miles. If this is all timber, as it appears to be, you will have a grand future. Would it not be well to make an effort to get up a company, putting in the land at $150,000. We might take stock to the amount of one-third. How would it do to give Wolf, say, $5,000 to get up a company, or whatever you can agree upon. I read Laidlaw's letter. He thinks you are mistaken as to the limit he applied for having no timber. Now that it is well known that you have a grand limit, I think there will be no difficulty in getting up a large company. I want Mrs. R.'s half to bring her in $50,000 if possible. I hope you got telegraph, and that you have sent me the outh.”

I think, Sir, that correspondence will show tolerably clearly—remembering that the Order in Council was passed on the 17th of April—that the hon. gentleman had a pretty good idea that he had got a very valuable property. Sir, it is not often that the hon. gentleman is guilty of the sin—for I suppose he will consider it such—of underestimating a property that belongs to him; but, Sir, it would appear from an important document which has been laid on the Table of the House that, fast as the hon. gentleman raised his price from $40,000 to $70,000, from $70,000 to $80,000, from $80,000 to $150,000, he had not yet measured the full value and importance of his plunder. The following receipt, dated Winnipeg, Manitoba, 16th January, 1883, witnesses the crown of his virtuous efforts, and his success, as he says himself, in making provision for his old age:

“WINNIPEG, MAN., 16th January, 1883.

“Received from John Adams thirty-five thousand dollars in cash by drafts on the Bank of Montreal, and four notes of Louis Sands for thirty-nine thousand two hundred dollars, payable in one and two years. All payable to the order of Mrs. N. M. Rykert, and in full of the moneys payable to her under agreement.

“J. C. RYKERT,
“Her Attorney.”

Now, Sir, this shows, as I have said, and as the hon. gentleman has admitted, that the plunder was “honorably divided.” As to the question of the use of influence by the hon. gentleman, I must refer you to the hon. gentleman's correspondence passim. The hon. gentleman, on the 11th of April, 1882, writing to Mr. Adams, says:

“I to-day saw McCarthy, and he was terribly surprised to hear that I had got the limit, as he was refused point-blank. He is willing to join with us in the survey, and I go to Hamilton to get Laidlaw to say where he wants the limit. He has written me he will do almost anything if I will assist him in getting his. I will write you from home on Thursday. The Order in Council went before the Government to-day, and it is likely it will pass at once. Instructions will then be given to the surveyor. We are awfully lucky, as the Deputy told me that no other man could have forced them to yield.”

On the 16th of April, he writes:

“The Order was passed several days ago. Laidlaw is to meet me in Hamilton to-morrow. He has not yet got his order, and is now of the opinion that I have more influence than McCarthy, who told me he was refused by the Government.”

Again, on the 21st of April:

"The Order in Council has been finally passed, and this although every effort was made to induce the Government to alter their minds."

Then, on the 10th of May :

On the 8th of August he writes :

"It will be satisfactory to know, after my hard fight with the Government, that I did get what you anticipated. I would not go through the same difficulty again for twice the amount. I never spent such six weeks before as I did while endeavoring to force the Department to do justice. The fact of their having refused McCarthy before had a great deal to do with the delay and refusal. Poor Laidlaw, I am pleased he did not get the start of this child. He thought he was very smart and had all the influence of the country at his back. I think another time they will recognise the fact that J. C. R. is not very easily defeated at anything."

Of the hon. gentleman's skill in wire-pulling in every direction, perhaps the hon. Minister of Customs may find it convenient to speak before the debate is over. But there is one particular phase of it which, perhaps, deserves a little notice. As the House will perceive, the hon. member for Lincoln is nothing if not a good family man. The hon. gentleman, judging others by himself, thought the influence of parental feelings was likely to be very strong in certain hon. members of the Government: and finding that there were difficulties—and I give this as an instance to show that the hon. gentleman, as he would say himself, was up to every move on the board—he proceeded to inform Mr. Adams on the 12th February, 1883 :

"I have not yet succeeded in doing anything, but I am pulling wires in every direction. John A.'s son from Winnipeg, McCarthy's partner, is here, and I intend employing him to go for his father. I think if you had young Tupper here, and paid him pretty well, he would help us materially."

Mr. MITCHELL. He draws a distinction between them, does he ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Apparently.

"The C.P.R. has a great hold on the Government, and we must counteract this in some way."

On the 5th of March, 1883, he writes from Ottawa :

"I have not yet succeeded in getting anything done in the limit matter. I have brought Macdonald and Tupper from Winnipeg, and hope they will be able to induce their fathers to act promptly in the matter."

And he proceeds to deliver himself, on the 8th of March, of a statement of a remarkable sort :

"I find difficulties surrounding us in every way in reference to the limit, and I find that the C.P.R. have certain Ministers working for them. I am afraid it will cost us each six or seven thousand dollars to get this made all right. I have five or six at work for me, and have agreed to pay them well if they succeed."

On the 28th of March, 1883, he writes :

"I am having a hard time with the limit matter. It will cost us each at least $5,500 to get this through." And the House will remember that they only made $100,000 apiece.—

"I have laid my ropes, so that I expect to have it settled in a few days. I have a dozen at work for us. You must be prepared to pay the amount of your share at any time, as it will have to be all cash. When this is settled we must get rid of all the notes and have an end of it. It has completely used me up. The excitement and strain is too much for me. I had Tupper and Macdonald brought from Winnipeg, and they have been working hard for me."

Now, I accept frankly and fully the statement made by the hon. Minister of Customs, speaking, I presume, for himself and colleagues, that he did not take, and did not expect or intend to take, one farthing from the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert). I do not believe that, to put the thing mildly, there was the smallest foundation in facts for the statement in these letters to that effect. But, what I do believe, and what I say is the clear and obvious inference from these letters, is that the hon. member for Lincoln designed to impress on his partners the fact that he would be obliged to corruptly expend a large sum of money in Ottawa in influencing Ministers or other parties. That is the construction I put upon it, and I will say that, for my part, knowing Mr. Hugh Macdonald, I believe and entirely accept his statement in preference to that of the hon. member for Lincoln. It may possibly be some consolation to the Minister of Customs, and, peradventure to the Premier, to know that in the course of this, which, I fear, I must characterise as a very fraudulent transaction, somebody overreached himself—and hence the suit which was brought by the representatives of Mr. Adams against the hon. gentleman, and which led to these disclosures that are now staring us in the face in all these proceedings. But there was something more. Cleverly as the hon. gentleman had concealed his facts, he had not absolutely and wholly concealed them. My hon. friend beside me (Mr. Charlton), being a lumberman, had obtained some little information as to the hon. gentleman's proceedings; and in the Hansard report of the proceedings of this House under date the 2nd May, 1883, the then and present member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), rising in his place, asked :

"I want to know if the hon. gentleman did not negotiate the transaction in connection with the timber limit in the Cypress Hills? I want to know if he did not, as agent for other parties, get a timber limit there at $5 a square mile, and sell it at $2,000 a square mile?"

"I want to know if he did not get that on behalf of one Adams; if he did not go to Winnipeg in person and sell it to Louis Sands of Michigan?"

"I want to know if the price was not $200,000; if $90,000 was not paid in cash, one-third of which he put in his pocket?"

In reply to that, the hon. member for Lincoln made the following statement, and I call the especial attention of every hon. gentleman here to the statement. I invite them to compare it with the correspondence, and I leave it with them as honest and honorable men to say what they would think of a man who, in his place in this House, made this statement :

"The hon. gentleman has asked me several questions, and I propose now to answer them. I neither directly nor indirectly drew the money he spoke of, nor put any sum in my pocket except professional fees, and professional fees only. I deny that I negotiated any timber lease for Mr. Adams, or any other person. On the contrary, Mr. Adams had his own agents to negotiate for him; he made his own bargain, and I had nothing to do with it, and did not pocket the money the hon. gentleman has spoken of. On the contrary, I advised Mr. Adams not to dispose of the limit, but to work it. The hon. gentleman on several occasions has made remarks outside of the House to the same effect, and I am glad now to have an opportunity to give it an emphatic denial."

This is the statement of the hon. minister made three months after he had signed the following receipt :—

"WINNIPEG, MAN., 16th Jan., 1883.

"Received from John Adams thirty-five thousand dollars in cash by draft on the Bank of Montreal, and four notes of Louis Sands for thirty-nine thousand two hundred dollars, payable in one and two years. All payable to the order of Mrs. N. M. Rykert, and in full of the moneys payable to her under agreement.

"J. C. RYKERT,
"Her Attorney."

Now, the last point to which I want to call your attention, Sir, is the opinion which the hon. gentleman himself, all things considered, seems to have entertained of this transaction. I find on the 25th December, 1882, under date from St. Catharines, the hon. gentleman writes as follows:—

"ST. CATHARINES, 25th December, 1882.

"MY DEAR ADAMS,—What is the reason that some person writes the full particulars of our business to some parties here? Mercer or some member of the family has written all the facts to Seymour, and he is telling them all about the city. This is very injudicious and contrary to what I asked you to do. It is of the utmost importance to keep the sale out of the papers, or we may be injured at Ottawa. Already they are threatening the Government to bring the matter before the House, and, if they do, it will perhaps hurt us very much. If Sir John knows the facts, he may prevent the transfer being recognised."

He did not do it.—

"Now let me again urge you to see that this is kept quiet. Why does Mercer want to tell all the Seymour family? You might as well publish it in the Globe at once, as they tell all they know on the streets. Let me know as early as possible the day Sands will go up, so that I can be prepared."

On 28th January—and I may observe that the hon. gentleman, in some of the statements on the Table, declares there was no impropriety whatever in these proceedings—he proceeds to write:

"I have to go to Ottawa to-morrow night to fight the matter out, which I do not like. I seem to have all the hardest part of it to do. I have Bowell working for me. And if we succeed in beating the railway, we will have to pay the amount we agreed to pay, as you recollect, when we two were at the Queen's Hotel. I have not slept any for a week on account of this. We must keep perfectly quiet."

And on the 23rd of January the hon. gentleman, in another remarkable letter, expresses the opinion that if these particulars come out there will be the devil to pay in the House.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). Order.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am quoting from matters on record in our proceedings, and I presume I am perfectly in order. However, as the hon. gentleman doubts whether I am, I shall read the statement:

"HOUSE OF COMMONS, 23rd January, 1884.

"DEAR MERCER,—I wrote you yesterday at the Hotel Baltimore as requested. I mentioned the fact that Sands had been to see me, and tried very hard to have the notes renewed. I told him they were in the hands of the bank, and he finally agreed to pay them, which he did five days before they were due.

"I fully satisfied him as to the whole matter, otherwise I am afraid he would have repudiated. So you will find that you have been paid the notes. This is really a grand thing for us. There is the devil to pay in the House about the whole affair, and it is really too bad that I am compelled to bear all the brunt of it."

Now, here arises an interesting psychological problem. When the hon. gentleman spoke of there being the devil to pay, was it second sight on his part, was it a guilty conscience, or was it simply that the fiend had been bought off for a season? I think, Sir, that I have established tolerably clearly from the evidence of the hon. gentleman's own written statement, and by agreements signed by his own hand, all the facts in this transaction upon which I intend to invite the judgment of the House. It now remains for me to deduce certain inferences from these facts. The House has established before it, from the hon. gentleman's own written statements, what he has done. This hon. member, a representative of the people, a trustee of the people, under pay by the people, or, at any rate, indemnified for all charges in attending to his duties here, thinks it consistent with his duty to devote his whole time, during two whole Sessions, to engineering an Order in Council through the House, by which a very valuable property, a property belonging to Canada, the property and inheritance of the whole people of Canada, is bartered away for nothing after an agreement had been made by him with Mr. John Adams, in accordance with which he was to receive half of all the proceeds. Looking on the hon. member as a trustee, I say it is a deliberate fraud on the cestui que trusts, and I say here—and I think no one will contradict me when I make the statement—that, if this had been a transaction between an ordinary trustee and his wards, there is no court of equity that would not have compelled the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) to refund to his wards the whole $200,000, with compound interest. Now, there is another, and a vastly more important side to this matter. I propose to ask your attention, and the attention of the House, to certain propositions which appear to me to underlie the whole theory of representative government. I will lay down the propositions by which I am willing to be judged, and by which I propose to judge the hon. gentleman. I say, in the first place, that every member of Parliament—whether he may admit it or not—is a trustee in the strictest sense of the term. I say he has no right to use his position as a member of Parliament for his own private gain or advantage. I say that, if he does use his position for his private gain, he cannot possibly discharge his duties as a representative of the people, and as a trustee of the people. And I say that, unless those principles are clearly understood and fully recognised, first, by this House, and then by the people who send us here, parliamentary government here or elsewhere is a farce and a fraud. I challenge contradiction of these statements. I do not think I have gone one bit too far, and, if any hon. gentlemen feel disposed to contradict those propositions, I hope they will do so here and now before this debate is over. Now, what is the corollary to be drawn from this? The corollary is, that if any member of Parliament has a transaction of any kind with the Government, the onus lies upon him to show that he made no attempt to use his position as a member of Parliament for his private gain or advantage. This is the case even where the dealings would otherwise be legal. That is the position which I take. Many things have been absolutely prohibited, and wisely prohibited, to members of Parliament. There are many things with which they are not allowed to meddle in any shape or way, but, beyond that, there lies the unwritten law of England providing that no trustee is justified in using his position to the detriment of the cestui que trusts. I apply that in the case of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) as I am willing to have it applied in my own case. If you admit—and I defy any hon. gentleman to deny it—that this proposition is sound, then the hon. gentleman is condemned from start to finish of his whole correspondence, for his whole correspondence shows that from first to last he traded on his position, that he used and abused his position as a member of this House, in order to put money into his own pocket. Now, let us glance for a moment at the defence that has been put forward. The hon. gentleman has made a statement in his place in Parliament, and has published and caused to be put on record, a long letter in which he deals with these transactions. He admits the facts. I render him no thanks for that. Those facts were established in a court of law and could not be denied. But he pleads three things. First he pleads that he has successfully evaded the law. He tells us that he is not brought within the provisions of the Independence of Parliament Act. That may be or may not be. That is a matter for the courts and for lawyers to decide. But what on earth does this House, what on earth does this country believe to be the object of any Independence of Parliament Act? That Act in its terms explains what it is. It is an Act for the better securing of the Independence of Parliament, and for that purpose it prohibits absolutely the dealings of members of Parliament with certain things which might in some cases be innocent; but that law does not abrogate the right of Parliament to protect its own independence or with the jurisdiction of the House in such matters; nor is it just, or right, or proper to imply that the meaning of the Independence of Parliament Act is that, if any skilful lawyer or jurist can evade the exact terms of the Act, its letter and its spirit, he is, therefore, to go harmless and not to be dealt with by Parliament. I say that the terms of the Act do not bar the jurisdiction of this House. I say this House has a perfect right to deal with offenders who have committed discreditable or scandalous acts, and though I shall not detain you now by reading all the authorities that might be cited, I shall refer to the "Parliamentary Procedure" of our clerk, Dr. Bourinot, in reference to the disqualification and expulsion of members. He says:

"The power of Parliament to expel a member is undoubted. This power has been repeatedly exercised by the English and Colonial Parliaments, either when members have been guilty of a positive crime, or have offended against the laws and regulations of the House, or have been guilty of fraudulent or other discreditable acts, which proved that they were unfit to exercise the trust which their constituents had reposed in them, and that they ought not to continue to associate with the other members of the Legislature."

Such is the language of Dr. Bourinot, of the late Mr. Todd, and of Sir Erskine May. That view will commend itself to every lover of representative government in this country or elsewhere. There is one other thing to which I will call the attention of the House. Whenever we meet together for the first time in any Parliament, it is the habit of the Premier to read over to the House the following declaration:—

"That the offer of any money or other advantage to any member of this House for the promoting of any matter whatsoever, or pending, or to be transacted in Parliament, is a high crime and misdemeanor, and tends to the subversion of the Constitution."

Sir, is it the intention of hon. gentlemen opposite to move, when this motion is put, that a rider be added to this declaration to run as follows:—

"But that any member of Parliament may take all and everything that he can lay his hands on, by the use of his influence with the existing Government, whether in the way of land grants, timber limits, railway subsidies or otherwise, either as a provision for his old age, or for other purposes."

Now, Sir, I apply the principle. Had the hon. gentleman taken $100 for his vote in this House, and had that been proved, no man would say but that the hon. gentleman must have been instantly and unceremoniously expelled. I would like to know in what respect taking $100 for his vote is worse than what has occurred? Let any hon. gentleman show me, if he can, the moral difference between a member of Parliament exacting money from a suitor who is applying for an Act of Parliament, in return for his vote or influence, and a member of Parliament exacting money from a suitor for the purpose of obtaining an Order in Council? Show the moral difference, if you can. I say that it is in reality a far higher crime and misdemeanor, that it tends far more to the subversion of the Constitution, for a member of Parliament secretly to use his influence with the Government of the day for such purposes as the hon. member for Lincoln declares he has used his to obtain the grant of a very valuable tract of public land for an utterly nominal consideration; I say that it is ten times a greater crime and misdemeanor, and ten times more dangerous to the liberty of the subject, to do this than to take a few hundred dollars directly for his vote in Parliament. In one case we have some chance of knowing what is done, in the other it is almost impossible for us to know, except by some accident, or to find out what the hon. gentleman has been about. The hon. gentleman relies upon another plea. He maintains that although it is quite clear that the timber limit was extraordinarily valuable, its value at that time was moderate, that it was a mere lucky accident by which he was enabled to realise a profit of $200,000 for what he had paid $500. Now, the letters which I have read from the hon. gentleman, under the dates he has given, show conclusively, that before he obtained that Order in Council he knew right well that it was a very valuable property. The letter of the 10th April contains a statement that he estimated the property at $40,000, a week before the Order was passed; but he has expressly stated in his defence that the great value was caused by the deviation of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which, he says, was known to be likely to take place in May. Now, I have taken the trouble to look up the records; I remember something of that same deviation. It was perfectly well known in the House to many members on both sides, long before the 17th April, that the Canadian Pacific Railway contemplated diverting their line; it was particularly well known to members of the Government. On the 13th April, four days before the Order in Council was passed, Sir Charles Tupper introduced an Act into this House, providing for a deviation to the south, and allowing the Canadian Pacific Railway to find a pass, if they could, within 100 miles of the boundary; so that the statement, that the value of this land was caused by an unforeseen deviation of the railway, has, also, no foundation in fact. It was perfectly well known that the company was going to apply, and both the Government of Canada and the hon. member for Lincoln knew perfectly well, that there was a strong probability, to say the least of it, that the company's line would go close to these limits and make them enormously more valuable. Now, here arises a point to which I call your especial attention. Here is a great public question,—because the deviation of the Canadian Pacific Railway to the south was a matter of great public comment. In what position was the hon. member for Lincoln to give an impartial vote on that subject? It might well have come to pass that the decision of Parliament would have hung on the vote for the member for Lincoln and one or two more—and I ask what position had the member for Lincoln taken himself in to give an impartial vote on the question of the deviation of the Canadian Pacific Railway to the south, when, by his own showing, it would probably put $100,000 at least into the pockets of himself and his associates? Sir, the third defence of the hon. gentleman, the third and innermost line of his entrenchments, is one that deserves a little more than a passing notice. The hon. gentleman admits the fact, he cannot deny the fact, but the hon. gentleman pleads, and with some show of truth, that he is not alone, that others were as bad. Well, I do not know that in the abstract I would dispute that proposition; but I have this to say: If all that was true, if he could show that others were as bad, it would be no defence whatever for the hon. member for Lincoln; but it would be a just ground of censure on others who had committed like improprieties with himself, whether Governments or private individuals, though it would be no sort of defence for him, if it were true. But the hon. gentleman goes on into particulars, and he designates as the offenders who were as bad as he, my hon. friend beside me (Mr. Mackenzie) who presided over the Administration at a previous period, and by way of awful example, my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. Cook). Now, I remember perfectly well what the Mackenzie Government did; I remember the grounds on which we did it, and I am prepared to take my full share of responsibility for all we did in that matter. Sir, what that Government did was this: In 1874, looking at the position of the North-West, finding that we were daily and hourly assailed with petitions from settlers to induce, almost to compel, in some way, lumbermen to go into that territory, to reduce the price of lumber, the excessive cost of which was a great obstacle to the settlement, my hon. friend beside me passed a permissive Bill by which, under certain restrictions and conditions, he asked power, in view of the then exceptional circumstances, to grant licenses without tender. That, so far, is perfectly correct. But the Bill is purely a permissive Bill, and I think, unless I am gravely mistaken, that all that Bill did was to give my hon. friend and his Administration the right to do by an Act of Parliament what his predecessors, in their Administration, had done without any such formality. I think that is the case, and there are proofs of it; but that part of it I will leave to my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills), who is more conversant with those matters than I am. Now, I have this to say: What we did, I declare, was done by us wholly and entirely in the interest of the settler, and not of any private individual whatever. Lumber in the North-West was selling, to my certain knowledge, at $60, $70, $80, $90, and in some cases $100, per thousand. We were assailed by petitions—and my hon. friend is here to testify to them—time and again by settlers in those distant regions, to bring in lumbermen and cause them to manufacture in competition; and it will be found that my hon. friend has the proof here that when he granted those limits, as the correspondence shows, we took excellent good care that a limit was placed to the price of lumber which was to be manufactured. Sir, I note one further thing: I note that while the Prime Minister took away licenses from the hon. member for North Simcoe, he appears shortly after to have granted these identical limits, or as nearly as possible those limits, to other parties on far less stringent conditions than the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) had attached to them. Now, I say that the conditions had greatly altered between 1878 and 1882. In 1882 the country was swarming, as we all know, with parties who were seeking for limits; and I say it was the duty of the Government to have recognised that fact, and when they had a number of applications for those limits, to have put them up at once at public auction, with due restrictions and conditions, and made the most they could of the property of the people. But another thing. Not only was that the duty of the Government, Mr. Speaker, but I find, on reference to Hansard of 1882, that the attention of the Government was called in the strongest possible manner to those facts, and to the extreme danger of such transactions as those in which the hon. member for Lincoln was engaged. On March 27, 1882, twenty days before the passage of this Order in Council, the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) moved, and it is on record, that the condition of the case had altered, and that it was imperatively necessary in the public interest that those limits should be put up to public auction, and my hon. friend showed there were 150 applications for timber limits pending before the Government at the time. To put the case briefly, I say that in 1882 it was the duty of the Government in power, no matter what Government it might have been, to have caused the permissive Bill to cease, and to have had recourse to the principle of selling by tender. Had my hon. friend remained in power, I should say he would have deserved severe censure if he had not done so, and I only apply to the hon. gentleman the same rule which he would, beyond all question, have applied to us under the same circumstances. There is but one other excuse made by the hon. gentleman, or rather made by one of his friends, that may deserve a little notice. I observe that the Statute of Limitations is pleaded, and it is said that, as six years have elapsed, the hon. gentleman should go free. It is a legal maxim, which, I think, will not be denied by legal gentlemen in this House, that the Statute of Limitations cannot apply to cases of breach of trust; but, apart from that point, the hon. gentleman has put himself entirely out of court, for the simple reason that when the attention of the House was called to those matters, the hon. gentleman, as I have stated, rose in his place and solemnly repudiated all complicity in this transaction, solemnly denied all the charges made by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), and on the fact of that denial the House made no further movement in the direction of an enquiry. And now let us consider where we stand. We have got the facts admitted; they are not denied, and cannot be denied. We have the defence of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert). I say no man in his position was a free agent, or could be a free agent; that a man who placed himself under such obligations and assumed such relations to the Government has, ipso facto, ceased to be a representative; that he, ipso facto, became the mere bond-slave of the Government of the day. It is not my intention to dwell further on the language used by the hon. gentleman with respect to members of the Government. That language has been formally repudiated by at least one of them; nor do I myself attach any weight to the statements made by the hon. member. I repeat, it is for the Ministers to take what action and what notice they see fit with respect to that matter. For the same reason, I am not now going to enlarge on the contradictions between the statement of the hon. gentleman and the statements made by Messrs. Macdonald and Tupper of Winnipeg. They contradict each other in terms: the House and the country can judge which is the better entitled to credence. Nor do I intend to dwell on the affidavit of Mr. Sands, in which he imputes serious charges to the hon. gentleman. These appear to me to be private matters, and I am not concerned with them. I take my stand in this matter wholly and solely on the admissions made by the hon. gentleman over his own hand, on the agreement and on the receipt signed by the hon. gentleman with his own hand, and I say that, under these circumstances, our clear duty as members of this House is to punish the offender, or to admit that we are accomplices either before or after the fact. This is not a question of precedent, it is a question of principle in the highest degree. I believe that no precedent can be found for such a transaction as that of which I am now speaking being brought before Parliament, because I cannot conceive that in any other country having representative institutions, when such facts had been published throughout the community as have been published with respect to the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert), the offender would have invited the judgment of his peers. I believe that in any other country public opinion would have at once compelled the offender to retire from Parliament and anticipate the judgment that might be pronounced on him. I say to hon. gentlemen opposite that, on the lowest grounds of self-interest, they should sustain my motion; I say it is to the interest of the whole party that they should sustain my motion. If they fail to do so, with the knowledge of these facts, the offence of the hon. member for Lincoln to a great extent becomes theirs, and by their action they will do more than I or any one else can do to confirm every charge ever preferred against him; and more than that, they will cause honorable men everywhere, in speaking of Canada, to assert that, by their own act, the majority of the House of Commons have declared that Canadians are highly corrupt, and that the House of Commons is, at best, but a place for division of the spoils. And now it may be asked, why, if I entertain these opinions, why, if I believe the hon. gentleman's conduct is such as I have stated, I have contented myself with moving the comparatively mild motion of censure with which this motion closes? I make no disguise whatever of the fact, that, in my judgment, the hon. gentleman's conduct well merits expulsion, but I am well aware that if I moved for expulsion, in all human probability I would open the door wide to endless wrangling; and I am aware that the legal gentlemen on this side of the House and legal gentlemen on the other side would have proceeded to bury all the facts beneath a mountain of precedents from which it would have been very difficult for the community at large to extract the true facts. I have done violence, I must say, to my feelings in contenting myself with the very moderate motion I am about to place in your hands. Now, the facts admit of no sort of denial. You have the bargain with Mr. Adams admitted and placed on record. You have the payment by Mr. Adams likewise admitted and made on record. You have the use of influence by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) admitted and boasted of. You have further on record the denial, in his place, by the hon. gentleman of the facts which are clearly proved out of his own mouth and established by his own correspondence and his signed agreement. Is there, or can there be anything more at variance with the duty of a member of Parliament? How, I should like to know, could the hon. member for Lincoln rise and pretend that, after such transactions as he is shown to have engaged in, he any longer in a position to oppose any act of the Government of the day? How could the hon. member for Lincoln, no matter how clear and convincing the evidence might be, rise in his place and oppose any act of the Government to which he owes his fortunes? How could he pretend to have free power to use his own judgment, or pretend that it was in his power any longer to perform any useful function as representative or trustee of the people? Sir, the point in this whole matter, to which the attention of the people has got to be principally drawn, is this. As I said at the commencement, I do not know by any means that the hon. gentleman is the only offender. The hon. gentleman, I fear, is but a type and a specimen; I fear there are many such in the House. I fear there are many constituencies which are perfectly willing to return members as guilty as the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert), provided only that the member is skilful enough to obtain some advantage for them from the Treasury of the Dominion, or, possibly, provided the hon. gentleman is willing to share his plunder freely among them when election time comes round. But although I do not deem that the hon. gentleman is much worse than some other hon. gentlemen, although I hold he has been a little bolder and more successful, and possibly a trifle more unscrupulous than some others would have been, although I must say I do not consider that in one sense it is quite fair to single him out as a scapegoat, yet, in the interests of the whole community, we must do so, if we would try to arrive at some understanding of the principles on which this Government is to be carried on. In the hon. gentleman's case that is still more important, because we are justified in pointing out to the community that of such, as the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert), are the men whom this Government delight to honor. With knowledge of the material facts, though not of all the facts, the Government sitting opposite to me have thrice selected the hon. member for Lincoln as chairman of one of our most important Committees. Twice further, it is well known to this House, the Government intended to bring forward that hon. gentleman's name for a position of dignity in this House, second only to your own, Mr. Speaker, and only withdrew under threat of exposure. It is also perfectly notorious that the hon. gentleman for many a day has made his public boast, and I believe truly, that he was Senator, designate and elect, as soon as, I suppose, he had got too good for the atmosphere of this House. It is as well for future historians to know—and it is in part my reason for placing this motion on the Votes and Proceedings, that they should have an opportunity of knowing—how majorities are made, and how majorities are paid under the existing régime; how the inheritance of the people of Canada has been squandered and is being squandered; how the independence of Parliament is being secured; what a noble example is being set to inferior legislative bodies; how the Government and their supporters interpret their duty as trustees and wards of the people, and how the right hon. Premier interprets the Duke of Wellington's famous statement: "That it is necessary that the Queen's Government should be carried on." I beg to move the motion of which I have given notice, and I now, Mr. Speaker, place it in your hands.

Mr. RYKERT. Mr. Speaker, according, Sir, to the Rules of this House, and according to the rules of Parliament, I am compelled to make my statement and my defence, in answer to the charges made by the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), and then, Sir, unfortunately for myself, I am compelled to withdraw from the House until judgment is passed on the resolution he has offered. I say it is unfortunate for me, for I would like to have heard, as any one charged with so serious an offence would like to hear, what my accusers may say against me, and then put my answer upon record. After the extraordinary indictment of the hon. member (Sir Richard Cartwright), and after the extraordinary exhibition of temper by the hon. gentleman in preferring that indictment, one would almost be supposed to be afraid to stand up in his place in Parliament to answer the hon. gentleman. But, Sir, when we find that his closing argument gives away the whole of his case, I think, perhaps, it is some encouragement for me to place my case before the House. I have, Sir, from the very outset been desirous that this House should pass judgment upon the charges made by the hon. gentleman. I was not in a position, as a member of Parliament, to challenge his statement at the commencement. I was not in a position to ask that the matter should be referred to a Committee to discuss it, and to examine whether or not I have placed myself outside the bounds of parliamentary practice or discipline. I was not in a position to do that, because there is no direct charge made against me, and day after day, and for months, I was subjected to the abuse poured upon me by the Grit press of this country, which declared openly and boldly that I dare not face the matter on the floor of Parliament. I feel it my duty, as an honest man, and as a man representing the people of my constituency for the last thirty years—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. RYKERT. Yes, I say as an honest man; and the best evidence that I am an honest man is the vote of the people which gave me 500 majority, in spite of the declarations of the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) and the horde of Grit canvassers who ran through my county during the last election, and to which I shall refer before I sit down. I was desirous from the beginning of placing my position upon record. I desired that it should be scanned critically, and that everything that I have done should be carefully weighed by this Parliament; but I was not in a position to do so, because my accusers did not formulate a charge against me. I felt it was my duty, at the earliest possible moment, to answer the hon. gentleman who has, to-day, placed before this House a resolution—I will not say an untruthful resolution, because it would be unparliamentary to say so—but a resolution economical of the truth, and a resolution containing statements entirely at variance with the facts. I felt that it would be my duty at the very first opportunity to endeavor to have these matters fully and properly investigated. It cannot be wondered that the hon. gentleman would place such a resolution before the House. The record of the hon. gentleman himself shows that he is not capable of formulating a proper resolution which the hon. members of this House could consider intelligently. He carries in his pocket a certificate given by the paper which described him as the great mixer and muddler, and he could not be expected to place questions of this kind before the House in a way that even a school boy could understand. The House knows that, even after the lapse of four or five weeks, he has been unable to bring the matter properly before the House. So anxious was I to have this matter investigated, that I appealed to you, Mr. Speaker, and I consulted the clerk, to ascertain what course should be pursued; and having had a large parliamentary experience myself, I felt it my duty to search precedents to find out what should be done, because I felt that if I could in any way bring this matter before Parliament, it was my duty to do so at the earliest possible moment. I also consulted one of the leading parliamentarians of this country, a man of great constitutional knowledge, the Hon. William Macdougall, to see if he could point out a way by which I could speedily bring the matter before Parliament, and I will read the opinion given me by that hon. gentleman, to show that I had no desire to shirk the responsibility of my position, but was ready to meet the charges made against me as a member of this House. He says:

"OTTAWA, 22nd Feb., 1890.

"MY DEAR MR. RYKERT.—I have read carefully the letters, speeches, &c., in your case as they appear in the 'Debate' and 'The Votes and Proceedings.' I am clearly of the opinion:

"1. That no statements and admissions made by you prove or imply corrupt dealings with the Government or any member thereof.

"2. Your professional services in procuring the grant of a timber limit to Adams et al., was not a violation of any provision of the Act securing the Independence of Parliament.

"3. It has been the practice since Confederation, as well as previously, for members of both Houses to promote the applications of their constituents and friends to the various departments of administration, and especially for the purchase of public lands and timber.

"4. I can recall many instances (when Commissioner of Crown Lands and Minister of Public Works) of members of Parliament, in and out of Session, appearing as counsel and arguing in support of the claims of their clients.

"Whether specially retained and paid for the service, I do not know; nor do I know of any rule, order, or statute which then prohibited, or which now prohibits members of Parliament of the legal profession from advising their clients in the matter of such applications. If the Minister or responsible head of a Department favors an applicant, with a member of Parliament at his back. (whether of the legal or any other profession), at the expense of the public treasury, or to the disadvantage of an earlier applicant ready to comply with the conditions of the Department, he is guilty of a gross wrong to the first applicant, and commits an offence against the public. An honest Parliament would treat an offence of that kind with prompt punishment. My experience leads me to believe that applications of the class in question are hindered, rather than promoted, by the interference of members of Parliament, especially where there are prior applicants. The facts developed in the present case corroborate this conclusion. The prior application of Laidlaw, which seemed to cover a part of the territory applied for by Adams, was the first obstacle. Then followed the Canadian Pacific Railway claim. These conflicting pretensions arrested action in the department until removed by arrangement between the applicants. I see no departmental wrong in the ultimate solution, and no evidence of loss to the public treasury.

"As regards the sale to Sands, I fail to discover any ground for parliamentary interference or question on that matter. There was no stipulation against transfer of the right to cut timber by a sub-lessee. Whether he paid too much or too little, was of no consequence to the Department, and is certainly a dispute ultra vires of the Canadian Parliament.

"It seems equally clear that the re-publication in its 'Votes and Proceedings' of private letters surreptitiously made public for a political and party purpose is a waste of public money, and altogether beneath the dignity of Parliament.

"I predict that the Opposition will not provoke a comparison of the timber and land transactions of members of Parliament during the Mackenzie régime and the present one. History, in my opinion, will record mistakes and errors, if not misdeeds, in both.

"Believing that your case presents no legitimate ground for formal accusation in Parliament, I presume you will not need my professional services.

"You are much better able to defend yourself than any counsel unused to parliamentary manoeuvres, and even an old parliamentarian would probably make a poor exhibit in matters of detail in a case so many sided as yours.

"I remain,
Very faithfully yours,

(Signed) "WM. McDOUGALL

"J. C. RYKERT, Esq., Q. C., M. P."

I fortified myself, Sir, with this opinion, which I sought with the view specially of bringing this matter at the earliest possible day before Parliament. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman, in this exhibition of temper, has somewhat insulted members on this side of the House. He seems to think that I am not the only sinner, although I am the greatest sinner. Sir, the hon. gentleman might have discovered sinners on his own side of the House as well as on this, but he does not propose to let the House know who they are. But it is not an evidence that a party is in despair when it is obliged to expose before Parliament private and confidential correspondence which is eight years of age, for the purpose of casting obloquy on the member who has written it and driving him from Parliament. The hon. gentleman says that I am pleading the Statute of Limitations. I make no such plea or defence. I am desirous that the whole matter should be fully investigated and probed to the very bottom; but there are circumstances connected with this transaction which have not yet been brought to light, and which ought to be investigated by a committee, in order that the House may have full cognisance of all the facts. Does the hon. gentleman not know that the whole matter was discussed in 1882? Does he not know that it was discussed in 1887 before the electors of the County of Lincoln, whom I have represented in Parliament for the last thirty years? But now, with his party driven to the last ditch, he thinks he can throw some obloquy on myself by dragging it before the public again. There is nothing more contemptible in an individual than to make public a man's private correspondence, and when we find that this whole arraignment against myself is based on some private and confidential correspondence, which was stolen from myself, it is not worthy of this Parliament to discuss it for one single moment. If hon. gentlemen opposite have any charges to make against my public record, why do they not bring them forward? I have been told repeatedly by the public press, and by parties supporting the other side of the House, that they were going to discuss my public record; but they have ransacked it for the last thirty years, and they have been unable to find a single vote which I gave contrary to my pledges or in violation of the principles of the great Conservative party which I have consistently supported. My whole record shows my consistency as a public man. If to support the right hon. gentleman, leader of the Government, and the Conservative party for the last thirty years, and to endeavor to make this Confederation a great and prosperous country, is a crime, I have yet to learn it; but hon. gentlemen opposite do not point to my public record. I should like the hon. member for South Oxford to name a day for the purpose of discussing our political records, when I should be prepared to challenge the hon. gentleman on his past history, and show what kind of a man this gentleman is who now constitutes himself my public prosecutor. I should like to know how the hon. gentleman would like to hear read his private correspondence with "My dear Boyle," and with Campbell in the city of Winnipeg, with regard to half-breed lands?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Perfectly willing; read away.

Mr. RYKERT. No, Sir; there is no man on this side of the House who would be guilty of making public the private letters of the hon. gentleman. But, Sir, they are well known. There is one thing, however, that I would say: I have never dragged money out of this country or out of my party, and then gone and deliberately vilified and run down my country. I hope the hon. gentleman can say the same thing, but I do not think he could stand up here and say truthfully that he has not done that. This is not the first instance that we have had in this country of private correspondence being exposed; but the records of the English Parliament are barren of anything of that kind. No person in the English House would dare to stand up and make use of private correspondence for the purpose of formulating a charge against an hon. member; he would be hissed out of Parliament, and would not dare to make a second appearance in the House of Commons. But, unfortunately, in this country we have a precedent for the act of the hon. gentleman. This is not the first instance of stolen letters being used on the floor of Parliament, and of the hon. gentleman having allied himself to letter stealers. We well recollect that some years ago, when an attack was made against the right hon. the leader of the Government, based upon the Pacific Railway charges, those charges were formulated upon private correspondence stolen from an office in the city of Montreal; and we know very well that the gentleman who was most prominent in that attack was the same gallant knight who, to-day, has addressed this House. We know he took the most conspicuous part on that occasion, and here, for the second time in the history of Canada, we find that hon. gentleman has again allied himself with letter stealers with the view of driving me from Parliament. It is a very singular circumstance, but we have the fact before us. I have the right to know, when standing here accused and making my defence before my peers in Parliament, who are my accusers? I have the right to know what reputation, as public men, those men have, who are standing here as my accusers; I have the right, before the verdict of this Parliament is passed, to point out that the witnesses who are brought against me are not credible. The hon. gentleman, I am glad to know, has very little sympathy among his own friends in his present course, because I know that members on the other side have expressed their abhorrence of this motion. Every person who knows the political history of Canada for the last thirty years, knows well that I have been made a target by hon. gentlemen opposite, because I have had the courage of my convictions, because I have dared to stand up, in Parliament and out of Parliament, in season and out of season, to defend the acts and the administration of the Conservative party. This is only one of a series of attacks made during the last thirty years. The County of Lincoln bears evidence of the fact that hon. gentlemen opposite, during the past twenty-five or thirty years, have done their best to drive me from public life; but I can say, with regard to my constituency, what the hon. gentleman who attacks me cannot say of any constituency that he has ever represented, that I have represented the County of Lincoln for the past quarter of a century, in spite of all his efforts, while the hon. gentleman has been driven from pillar to post, rejected by every constituency, until at last he was dropped into a hive of Grits in South Oxford. Hon. gentlemen opposite have fought me in the County of Lincoln, and I enjoy the proud distinction of having had two protests against me at the same time, both of which I defeated. It does seem to me that the slander which the hon. gentleman has cast upon the County of Lincoln is not deserved. That constituency, which is not inferior in intelligence to any other in this Province, has, year after year, elected me to Parliament. In spite of what the hon. gentleman and his friends could do, for over a quarter of a century I have represented the people; and they must lack that order of intelligence which they are supposed to have to allow a member so corrupt and dishonest, as the hon. gentleman says I am, to represent them so long, and to return me year after year by acclamation. It was given out at the last elections by these hon. gentlemen, that I was to be driven out of Lincoln; and they came down, twenty-seven of them, headed by the hon. gentleman, bent on destroying me in my county. The hon. gentleman came to Beamsville and made a tremendous speech, in which he talked of thieving and bribery, and all that sort of thing, and he arraigned me on the very question we have before us to-day. He charged me with robbing the country of $200,000 and with robbing a poor old Dutchman of $200,000, and when some man asked him how it was I could rob the country and the Dutchman both, the hon. gentleman was somewhat abashed and could not answer. He could not understand that argument at all. On that occasion, he took the opportunity of informing the electors that I had no right to be elected because I supported this rascally Government. He talked at great length on the blind share scandal, in reference to which the hon. the Minister of Customs came in for a lashing at his hands. I defended the Minister of Customs on every platform in the county. But even if there was a charge made against me, there was no foundation in fact for it. He charged the hon. the Minister of Public Works with having received presents from contractors. He charged the late John Henry Pope, formerly Minister of Railways, with having put in his pocket $166,000. He charged the Government with all kinds of rascality, and then turned round and asked the people how they dared to submit to such a state of things; and for the first time in the County of Lincoln, I had a majority at the place in which the hon. gentleman spoke of 96 votes in my favor, although on every previous occasion I had had a majority there against me. That shows the people thought very little of what the hon. gentleman said. That hon. gentleman and his friends, headed by the notorious Preston, scattered broadcast all over the county this same literature. We saw them going from pillar to post with these same documents charging me with rascality in every shape and form. They called on the people to rise in their might and drive me from Parliament, because, they said, I had violated the Independence of Parliament Act, and had forfeited my position as a member of Parliament; and yet the people declared they did not believe in his word. They charged me with having robbed different persons, and yet the people declared that they did not believe one word of the story. A person who was standing in the crowd asked: Who was that gentleman, who it was, who was roaring and bellowing? And when the people were told that he was the man who had wrecked the Commercial Bank, and had wrecked the Mackenzie Administration, they stood aghast, and said: This is not the man we want; and the result was I had ninety-six majority in a place where in all other elections the majority had always been against me. I have a right to know who are my accusers, and if they are not men who have a record which cannot be attacked, they have no right to come here and attack me in the manner the hon. gentleman has done. If the hon. gentleman had been desirous of treating me fairly, he would have taken up the matter more temperately; and I am perfectly justified in asking what kind of a special record the hon. gentleman has? The hon. gentleman has accused me of treachery and rascality of every description, but I recollect when he was accused of treachery by his own organ and of voting money for his own pocket. He has been accused over and over again of other corrupt practices, all of which I shall take the opportunity of enumerating, perhaps, before Parliament closes. At any rate, I know this much, that the hon. gentleman stood convicted before the people as being one of the most corrupt men who ever sat upon the floor of Parliament.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. RYKERT. Of course the hon. gentleman does not coincide with that, but the records of the House will show it. I stated that this correspondence was of a private and confidential character, and it was either stolen or was obtained by the grossest fraud. This correspondence was in the hands of only five persons. My opponent, Mr. Patterson, distinctly repudiates having given it, as I showed a few days ago in the House. He telegraphed me that it was a gross breach of trust, and that the correspondence should have been destroyed. Mr. Ritchie, who had an interest in the suit which was brought, though—as the hon. gentleman was probably not aware—it was not tried, had a copy of it, and Mr. Mercer Adam had also a copy of it. They all repudiate having had anything to do with this. The only person who was concerned in the matter who has not stated anything in regard to its publication is Mr. S. H. Blake, Q.C.; and, if it was not taken from his office, it was obtained in some way which was not very creditable to anybody. I do not think the exposure of private correspondence should be encouraged, or that it should be received with favor by this House. I think I might fairly claim, if I chose to do so, and chose to screen myself under the technicalities of the law—not by the Statute of Limitations, for the hon. gentleman is probably not versed in law, but by precedent and by custom—that matters which took place so many years ago should not be brought forward under any circumstances at this time; that the hon. gentleman, being in possession of these documents, should have brought this matter up before. I complain of a judgment being rendered which is based on private correspondence, and I think the hon. gentleman cannot find any precedents for this course in the records of Parliament. I would like to know if the hon. gentleman has had under his observation the question of the Times newspaper which was discussed in the Imperial Parliament a few days ago, when it was unmistakably admitted that time was of the essence of the matter. An attempt was made to have the Times brought before Parliament for breach of privilege, for publishing private correspondence, and it was admitted that time was of the essence of the matter. But I do not want to screen myself under any technicality. I have not violated the Independence of Parliament Act, I have done nothing of which I am ashamed, and I have done nothing which would cause my suspension or expulsion from the House; but there are facts and circumstances and documents in connection with this matter which should be investigated, and I shall ask the House to refer the question to the Committee of Privileges and Elections, so that we may have a fair and full investigation, and may see if I have done anything which is contrary to the privileges of Parliament. The hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) must stand or fall by the proposition which he has put before the House. He asks the House to declare that my conduct was corrupt, and yet he admits that my action was not corrupt, that no action was taken by me with the intention of corrupting Ministers. Still he asks the House to say that my action was corrupt. The evidence destroys his assertion. Then the question is whether my action was discreditable or scandalous. I do not think this House, in view of the past record of the hon. gentleman, will make such a declaration, especially when this is a matter which is confined to private conversations. The hon. gentleman has abandoned his argument that members of Parliament have no right to get limits. He has endeavored to draw a distinction between the case of the late Government and the case of the present Government. In 1872, a law was passed by this Parliament, at the instance of the Government of Sir John Macdonald, declaring that no limits should be granted except by public competition. For reasons best known to the hon. gentleman, no doubt importuned by hungry supporters, the law was altered by his Government so that the Governor General was allowed to grant limits to any one to whom the Government might choose to grant them. The hon. gentleman says there was a great difference between the times when the regulations were made. I would like him to tell me how many inhabitants there were on the Saskatchewan or at Edmonton when limits were granted to Messrs. Cook and Sutherland. I think he will find there were no persons there at that time interfering with timber or lumber of any description. The hon. gentleman says that I, as a member of Parliament, had no right to act as agent for Mr. Adams or any one else. He says that I prostituted my position as a member of Parliament in doing so, and yet he says that the Government of Mr. Mackenzie had a right to give limits to Mr. Cook and Mr. Sutherland. He (Mr. Cook) says the statement I made some time ago was false. Upon the occasion when he made that remark I was not present and could not refute the statement made by the hon. gentleman, but if any hon. gentleman will consult the Hansard of 1886, he will find that, upon that occasion, the member for Simcoe (Mr. Cook) referred to by the hon. member who has just spoken, stood up in his place in Parliament and admitted that he got the timber limit while he was a member of Parliament and said he had a perfect right to do so, and that his constituents knew it. I have the speech of the hon. gentleman before me, and defy any one to contradict me. Looking at the resolution proposed, I would like to know what is the offence with which I am charged. I am charged with using my position and influence as a member of Parliament for pecuniary advantage. Will the hon. gentleman show where that advantage occurred? Will he point to the evidence which shows that I have used my position for pecuniary advantage? Does he not admit that I had a right to buy that limit? He admits that members of Parliament had a right to do so four years before. Where is the evidence that I used my position for my pecuniary advantage? Then he says that I made a statement which was entirely at variance with the statement which I had previously made in Parliament. If any one will read the statement which I made in 1883 in answer to the member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), he will find that I stated the facts as they are—the truth and nothing but the truth—and any hon. gentleman will see that my answers were perfectly correct. The hon. gentleman has stated that I was obliged to resort to corrupt practices with Ministers. Well, Ministers deny that statement, and I deny it also. Ministers have unequivocally stated that upon no occasion was any corrupt influence used or exercised towards them, and I have said the same thing. I say the letter which the hon. gentleman has quoted does not bear that construction, but that it shows conclusively that no improper influence was brought to bear upon Ministers to have these matters rectified. The hon. gentleman has referred to the subject of Mr. Laidlaw's limit. Let me again briefly state to the House the facts in connection with that limit. The hon. gentleman is wrong in his dates. He states that, in the month of April, 1882, I applied for a limit to be granted to Mr. Adams in the North-West Territories. If he referred to the documents, he will find that he is just six weeks astray. On the 18th February, I applied for the limit, and on the 6th March, information was conveyed to me that the limit would be granted. That was made by Mr. Adams, and at that time nothing was known of that country. Mr. Adams was in entire ignorance of the position of affairs in that country, in entire ignorance of the value of that timber limit; although the hon. gentleman says he knew the value of it, I say he never knew the value of that limit until months after. It was only after the Canadian Pacific Railway deflected its line and made it valuable, that enquiry began to be made with regard to the value of that limit. That limit was granted by the Government long before that agreement was signed, and Mr. Adams made that agreement upon the day he left Ottawa, some time after having been informed by the Department that his application was granted. At the time that limit was granted the Canadian Pacific Railway was obliged to go to the Yellow Head Pass. On the 13th April, a Bill was presented to the House, long after the Minutes of Council were prepared, asking this House for power to change the line southward, making no particular point except the objective point, that instead of going to Yellow Head Pass they might go to the Kicking Horse Pass, or some other place south of the Yellow Head Pass. This Bill was not passed until 18th May following. Some time after the limit was granted, it was found that the Canadian Pacific Railway, in locating their line, had run some forty miles from that limit, and had commenced to cut down the timber therein, in order to make a bridge at Medicine Hat. As soon as the survey was completed, and as soon as the license was issued, Mr. Adams called upon me, as solicitor, to go to Winnipeg and compel the Canadian Pacific Railway to give remuneration to him for having destroyed that limit. The limit was cut down by the lumber agent of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, who was in league with parties who were interested in that limit; he cut that down ostensibly and with the view of compelling the Canadian Pacific Railway to buy that limit, and when Mr. Van Horne was asked to pay compensation for the destruction of the timber, he agreed to pay it; he made no claim whatever for the limit until long after the limit was sold. In the month of January the limit was sold to Mr. Sands, sold without my knowledge. I did not know who Mr. Sands was, never knew who he was until I saw him in Winnipeg after the bargain was concluded. I went to Winnipeg to act for Mr. Adams, as solicitor, to pass that title, to see that the title was properly arranged; and then, for the first time, I saw this gentleman. When the money was sent to Ottawa to renew the license, I learned that the Canadian Pacific Railway had set up a claim to a portion of that limit. I contended then, as I contend now, that the Government had no right to allow the Canadian Pacific Railway to infringe upon that limit, to interfere with it at all, because, at the time the limit was granted they had no rights there at all, and according to Act of Parliament they could only take such lands as belonged to the Crown, or were not under license of occupation. Although the Canadian Pacific Railway was determined to hold that limit, I used every effort in my power to induce the Government to compel the Canadian Pacific Railway to abandon its claim, and also to renew the license. Now, I wish to explain how I came to make use of the name of the Minister of Customs as having helped me in that transaction. My first intimation that the Minister of Customs had interceded on behalf of Mr. Adams, was a telegram that I received from Mr. Gouin of the Russell House in Ottawa, telling me that Mr. Bowell was interesting himself on behalf of Mr. Adams. That was the first intimation I had upon that point. I made the first use of his name in the year 1882, when I stated he was helping me as regards the issuing of the license. I received in that year from Mr. Bowell a telegram as follows:—

Mr RYKERT.

"Telegraphed you last week that neither Sir John nor Russell were here. Will give it personal attention as soon as Sir John returns; have seen papers; think it is all right."

That was the paper sent down by the Surveyor General in order to have the license completed. That was the first time that I heard that the Minister of Customs was helping in this matter. He did what he had a perfect right to do, and he did it voluntarily, after everything was satisfactorily arranged, after Mr. Lindsay Russell had made his report in favor of the license being issued, and he did nothing more than his duty in that respect. Again, in the early part of 1883, I received a telegram from Mr. Gouin, in the city of Ottawa, stating that Mr. Bowell was doing what he could to have the license renewed. So you will see that in using his name I simply used the information I got from other people, which information was correct. Whatever the Minister of Customs did, was simply done in order to help the matter on, but not with a view of using any particular influence in my favor either one way or the other. I entirely exonerate him from that, as I have always done. It has been stated by the hon. gentleman that I made an effort to defeat Mr. McCarthy as regards the Laidlaw limit. Now, there are facts in connection with that transaction which I have a right to ask this House to consider; there is evidence to be produced which cannot be produced here now—it is utterly impossible for me to go into the whole evidence—but there is evidence to be produced which, I think, will justify me in saying that my whole course throughout that transaction was strictly honorable, and if the hon. gentleman will call for other reports sent by Lindsay Russell in reference to that transaction, they will show that my course was straightforward and honorable, and everything I did was strictly in accordance with law, and I did nothing outside. But the hon. gentleman has been pleased to read certain expressions in my letters, certain garbled statements; and if he had wished to be fair and candid to this House, and desired to do justice towards myself after accusing me of a serious offence and crime, he would have read the whole correspondence, he would have read the letters written to me which show conclusively why I wrote those answers. The hon. gentleman has, upon this occasion, as upon former occasions, endeavored to distort the facts, endeavored to make this House believe that certain things took place that did not take place, whereas I contend that the letters addressed to me and to Mr. Adams, and my replies thereto, go to show why I made the observations I did make. The hon. gentleman says I used an extraordinary influence with the Government in reference to the action to the Canadian Pacific Railway. As I pointed out a few minutes ago, I had fortified myself with the opinion of Mr. Lash, an eminent counsel, in reference to the matter, and I conveyed that opinion to the Minister of the Interior, at that time Lieutenant Governor of the North-West in reference to that transaction, and he entirely concurred in what I had done. Although I am not going into the evidence—because we have not time to do so tonight—I wish to inform the House that I have evidence to show beyond all question that I neither was a suppliant at the feet of the Government, nor tried to influence them beyond what any member of Parliament or any other person had a right to do. I say that everything I did in reference to that transaction was straightforward and honorable. I pointed out to the First Minister, and he will recollect it distinctly, that the Canadian Pacific Railway had no right to that territory, and no right to encroach on the limit; I pointed out to the hon. gentleman that Mr. Sands was willing to put up money as security to indemnify the Government against the action of the Canadian Pacific Railway, if they would only renew that license. That is the course I took, and I will be able to show that fact when the matter is properly investigated; I can show that, instead of my being a suppliant, I put myself in a position to claim as a right what the Government also recognised was a right. It is not my duty on this occasion in making a general defence to read over the correspondence, and I do not think it would be right and fair to the House to do so. But there are facts contained in it which justify me in asking this House to hold its hand and not render judgment until I have had an opportunity of being heard before a proper Committee of this House. The hon. gentleman has alluded to the fact that there has been placed on record a statement showing that Mr. Sands had been robbed. He has placed on record a document to show that I had bribed the surveyor who was sent by Mr. Sands to explore the territory, although he must have known that a document rebutting that statement had been sent broadcast about the County of Lincoln when the hon. gentleman was there. I published during that contest an affidavit made by that surveyor, Henry S. Udell, on February 15, 1887, to the following effect:—

“That he is engaged in the business of surveying and pine land estimating, that he has been so employed for about twenty-five years on Manistee River and in other localities; that he had heard read the affidavit of Louis Sands made 3rd February, 1887, taken before Adolphus Magnon, a Notary Public at Manistee, Michigan, U.S.A., and knows the contents thereof. That the statements made therein, as far as they refer to and reflect upon him calling him by the name of Henry S. Udell, are absolutely false; that, at the request of the said Sands, he went to Cypress Hills limit and estimated and made a report to Sands of the amount of pine timber standing upon said lands; that he made the estimate carefully and honestly and according to his best judgment, based upon his experience; that for such service he was paid by said Sands the sum of ten dollars per day while engaged in the work, and his expenses; that he was not paid or offered any other or further sum by John Charles Rykert or any other person whomsoever, either directly or indirectly, for such service, or for making any report or doing anything connected with said transaction; that he never had any conversation or dealing with said John Charles Rykert. That since mailing said report to said Sands he has done other work for him on other lands, on which reports said Sands has bought and sold said lands so estimated, and satisfied with his work; that the estimate he made of the Cypress Hills limit was true in every particular, according to the best of his judgment; that he has understood from said Sands that there has been a falling in the price of lumber at Cypress Hills, and that fire had got into that limit.”

Although the matter is extraneous to this discussion, and although this House has no power to consider the matter as to whether Mr. Sands lost money or not by the transaction, I wish to place on record this affidavit in rebuttal of the charge of the hon. member, and I ask to place it on record to show that his statement is entirely untrue. I have here a statement made by young Sands on 20th June, in which he states that his father has got a regular bonanza there, and is likely to make money out of the transaction. And when the hon. gentleman opposite and his friends had this evidence cast in their teeth, there was a regular panic among them. Then they turned round and said that it was not Sands that was being robbed, but the Government was being robbed. That was the ground they took. I ask to put in as evidence a letter written by Mr. Sands himself, dated 5th June, 1883, in which he says:

“MY DEAR SIR,—I trust, and I am in hopes still, that you will succeed in getting a license for the whole limit, in which case I will have lost nothing in the transaction.

(Signed) “LOUIS SANDS.”

On 23rd September, 1883, he wrote to me the following letter:—

“MY DEAR SIR,—Let me hear from you if anything turns up. Also, if you can receive for me permission to locate a new limit as you spoke about. I and my family are well, and my business fairly prosperous and good here. Hoping you may have the same blessing,

“I remain,

Yours very respectfully,
(Signed) “L. SANDS.”

I think it is a most extraordinary thing that, if I had robbed Mr. Sands, he should call the blessings of Heaven down on my head. If hon. gentlemen could only have seen the look of consternation on the face of the hon. gentleman and his friends when this record appeared during the election, they would be astonished. I do not intend to go over any more of the facts of the case. I say that the statement which the hon. gentleman has placed before this House is not a correct statement of the facts. I have pointed out its untruthfulness as regards the application for the limit. I have pointed out that, instead of the limit having been applied for in 1882, it was applied for in the early part of February, and in fact long before that time permission was given to go and make a survey of that limit, but the Order in Council was not issued until 17th April. The hon. gentleman further states in his motion that an agreement was signed whereby a consideration was to be paid to J. C. Rykert, and I was to obtain a certain sum for that limit. I have denied emphatically, and I repeat it, that when the limit was granted to Mr. Adams I knew nothing about its value, and in fact I knew nothing about it; and that, after it was granted, it was offered in this city and all over the Province for a small sum, it being believed to be of no value. There is another statement to which I will allude, for when the matter is properly and thoroughly investigated, which I hope it will be, and when all the facts have been obtained so that hon. members can pass an intelligent judgment on the case, I venture to say hon. gentlemen will find that this motion is a tissue of misstatements from the beginning to the end. The hon. gentleman in his motion states :

“The said John C. Rykert did agree with the said Adams to use, and did inform the said Adams by letters signed with his own hand that he was using, corrupt influences—”

The hon. gentleman cannot lay his finger on proof of that—there is not one word of truth in the statement. He says I was using corrupt influence

“—with certain members of the Government of Canada and of the Parliament thereof.”

There is not a word about members of Parliament in this correspondence. There is no evidence that I told Mr. Adams I used corrupt influences; but, on the contrary, there is evidence that I used influence, not as a member of Parliament, but that influence which any one had a right to use, in order to have a wrong corrected. That is my position. I will show to a committee, if one is granted, that everything I have done was in every way honorable. The hon. gentleman, in formulating a lot of charges, has made the statement which in effect is, that I wrote Mr. Adams long after the old gentleman was dead; for he died in 1883. I can show a committee of the House, and I can show the country, that the indictment framed by the hon. gentleman is a tissue of falsehoods and misstatements, and I claim that this House has no right to pass judgment on me on a one-sided statement. If this House is to pass judgment on the evidence, it must be considered as a whole. The hon. gentleman himself admits that I have not been guilty of any corrupt act; I deny that I have been guilty of any corrupt act, and the hon. gentleman admits it, and this House must take the whole evidence. The hon. gentleman cannot take a portion of the evidence and throw aside the balance. Taking the whole evidence, this House cannot say that I was guilty of any corrupt act: it can only do so through a committee; and if the hon. gentleman thinks he can establish this charge before a committee, he is at liberty to do so. I do not propose to follow the hon. gentleman in the statements he has made with respect to hon. members of this Parliament and hon. members of the Government, as to their rascality, and so forth. I do not propose to follow him in his vile abuse of the constituencies, and his declaration that where hon. members have been guilty of offences, the constituencies are equally guilty with them; but what I do say is this, that the hon. gentleman's statement is a most discreditable one. If the hon. gentleman had chosen to make a fair and proper indictment against me, if he had desired to give me fair play in this free country, he would have prepared a record containing all the facts of the case and have had it submitted to a committee of the House, in order that I might have an opportunity of defending myself and of submitting evidence in rebuttal of the charge of corrupt practice. I have not, since I have been a member of Parliament, in any way infringed the privileges of members of this House, but I have always conducted myself otherwise, and the hon. gentleman cannot lay his finger on a single act I have committed since I have been in Parliament in which I have done any injury to my constituents; but the hon. gentleman has dragged in private and confidential correspondence, and has thus been enabled to formulate charges which are not borne out by the facts. Let me have a fair and impartial trial, let this question go before a committee of this House, where it can be properly investigated—that is all I ask hon. members to do. It is not fair or right that this House should seek to condemn me without my being allowed to be properly heard. My proper course would have been to have simply denied the statement and allowed the case to go to a committee of the House, but I felt, in justice to hon. members and to the Ministers, that I should exonerate them entirely from any connection with this matter, in so far as any charge of corruption may be made. I maintain that no man can truthfully say that in any one of these letters I endeavored to act corruptly towards the Government, and no man can point his finger to any evidence which will satisfy the House and the country that Ministers went out of their way in doing anything I asked them to do. I have letters and evidence of importance to place before the House, and in order that I may justify myself, I ask the House to appoint a committee for the purpose of considering this whole matter. I believe, and I am confident, that I can justify my conduct in Parliament; I am not afraid of the hon. member for South Oxford, or of his friends, for I have met them often on the public platform, but I simply ask to be put in a position to place before the country the entire facts in regard to this matter. If the judgment of the House is a condemnation of my course, I shall abide by it, and I will resign my trust into the hands of my constituents if necessary, but before the House resorts to any extreme measure, it should say “we will give the member a fair and honest trial, in order that the people of the country, and the constituents of Lincoln, whom he has represented for thirty years, may see if he has acted improperly or not.” The House should give me an opportunity of defending myself against the slanders of hon. gentlemen opposite, who have accused me of crimes and misdemeanors. I feel proud of the confidence reposed in me for the last quarter of a century by my constituents of the County of Lincoln, and I should be the last man to hold my seat for a minute if the House should decide that I was not fit to retain the trust which those constituents have placed in my hands. I simply ask the House for justice; I ask hon. members to give me the opportunity of defending myself before a committee, where I can have the charges investigated.

Sir. JOHN THOMPSON. The manner in which this charge has been brought before the House, and the manner in which the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) has replied to it, constitute to some extent, a departure from the usual course of proceedings in investigations of this character. I think the House will agree with me, that the usual course of procedure is, that a charge involving the character, or the seat, or the standing of a member, whether in the form of a resolution or otherwise, should be moved and spoken to with restriction to the subject-matter of the charge itself. It is exceedingly rare, if not entirely without a precedent in Parliament, that a speech is made on such a question of the inflammatory and impassioned character of that addressed to the House this afternoon by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), in which he not only stigmatised in the strongest terms—as he had a right to do, with perfect relevance to his motion—the conduct of the hon. member for Lincoln; but in which he stigmatised the conduct of the Government in the severest terms, even as to its fiscal policy. I say that a speech like that, in support of a resolution challenging the conduct and character of a member of this House, is, I think, absolutely without precedent. The hon. member for South Oxford called the attention of the House to what he called the state of degradation into which the country had fallen, into which our system of government had fallen, and the danger into which the Constitution had fallen, by reason, as he indicated, of the line of policy of the Government, tending to debauch and degrade the country, tending to debauch the constituencies of this country; and resulting, as he claimed, in the absolute debauching of this Parliament. The hon. gentleman went so far as to declare, that a great number of the members who composed the last Parliament were amenable to charges which I remember having heard discussed upon the floor of this House with great acrimony, and which most of us thought were amply refuted at the time. I will pass from that. The hon. gentleman sought to attach a stigma, not merely to members of the late Parliament, but to the constituencies themselves, by his declaration that the people of Canada were to blame, inasmuch as the members of this House were as honest as the people desired, or expected, them to be. The hon. member for South Oxford went a step farther, and, referring to the members who compose the House at the present time, made the astonishing declaration—a declaration which, in my humble opinion, ought not be allowed to pass unchallenged—that the incidents which have given rise to the present motion, the incidents contained in the correspondence and documents to which he drew the attention of the House, showed, to use his own words, a whole mountain range of undiscovered rascality. The hon. gentleman went farther, and impugned the past policy of the Government in regard to their management of the timber limits and Dominion lands, for the purpose of indicating that a policy of corruption had been adopted as the settled policy of the Government, and he stigmatised the Government for having granted the application which the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) had made on behalf of his friends for a timber limit of 100 square miles. He called the attention of the House to the atrocity committed by the Government, in having ventured to give without tender, this tract of 100 miles, to the friends of the hon. member for Lincoln, when the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) knows that we have on our desks an Order in Council, passed by his advice and on his recommendation, by which one of his supporters who sits behind him to-night was given 200 square miles of timber without tender or competition of any kind.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON.

I have only spoken of the attack made by the member for South Oxford for the purpose of calling attention to the fact that it is of an unusual character, that it is almost without precedent, if not entirely so, and that it invites discussion, and necessitates considerations beyond the range of the resolution which the hon. gentleman has submitted. I would now call attention to the observations made by the hon. member for Lincoln, in support of his defence. An hon. member charged with an offence against the dignity or privilege of the House, or assailed by a resolution, as to his seat, or his character, or his standing in the House, is, according to the usual practice here, heard in his place in his own defence, and the House generally passes judgment, or orders a further enquiry upon the statement which the hon. member makes from his seat in response to the accusation. I am not here to defend the hon. member for Lincoln. I am not here to apologise for a single expression of the extraordinary correspondence, which is almost, if not entirely, unequalled in parliamentary annals, but I listened to him carefully, and in paying attention as I did, and as I suppose we are all bound to do, to the statements which were made by the hon. member for Lincoln, and on which he expects the judgment of this House; I understood him to appeal to Parliament, to give him an opportunity of being further heard before a committee of the House. The hon. member (Mr. Rykert) stated that there were circumstances connected with this matter which had not been brought to light. He asked that a committee should investigate, not only the correspondence which is before the House, but all the transactions concerning it, and he asserted that he had documents bearing on the question which had not been laid before the House; that there is evidence of others which he can produce, and which would tend to exculpate him, or tend, at any rate, to mitigate what appears to be reprehensible in his conduct or his correspondence; and he has intimated that he has letters or statements of the person whom it is alleged he had more particularly wronged in this transaction, which would indicate that one charge in the resolution at least—the charge of his having used his position as a member of this House corruptly—is a charge which is not well founded and which cannot be sustained. I forbear, at this stage of the debate, to enter on a discussion of the merits of this correspondence or the merits of the charge against the hon. member, or to indicate what my own personal vote on the case will be. The question to be considered now is, what course should be adopted in dealing with this matter calmly and with the judicial responsibility which will now certainly devolve upon the House, notwithstanding the impassioned statements which were made in support of the resolution, and the equally impassioned statements which were made in reply. In consideration of the great field which the hon. gentleman who moved the resolution went over in making his charge, and in making at the same time his attack on the Government, and in view of the statements which were made by the hon. member for Lincoln, in which he earnestly solicited to be further heard in his own defence before a committee of the House, I ask the House at the present moment to pause, to consider the question, to avail itself of the opportunity which can be given in a short time of perusing the statements which have been made by the hon. member for Lincoln in his own defence, with the view of arriving at a proper judgment, deliberately and calmly, and free from the passions with which the hon. gentleman who moved the resolution sought to blind the judgment of the House; and with that purpose, I move that the debate be now adjourned.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I should like to address to the House a few observations with reference to what the hon. Minister of Justice has said, and the allusions made by the hon. member for Lincoln, but as I shall not be able to finish before six o'clock, and as I shall not continue very long, I hope the House will be willing now to call it six o'clock, and permit me to make my observations afterwards.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Mr. Speaker, we have before us, in the resolution submitted by my hon. friend from South Oxford—one question, but we have had in the discussion, in addition to that, the question of the relative merits or demerits of the policy of the present Administration and that of the Administration which preceded it, with regard to the granting of timber licenses. Now, I think it is to be regretted that questions of public policy should be mingled with questions affecting the personal integrity and conduct of a member of the House. But as these questions have been raised by the hon. member for Lincoln in his defence, and by the hon. Minister of Justice in defending the conduct of the Administration—

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The other way.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Well, perhaps I should more correctly say, in censuring the conduct of the preceding Administration, I shall be permitted to make some reference to this question. If any hon. gentleman on the Treasury benches should dissent from the statement of facts I make or the views I enunciate, I trust that that dissent will be expressed, but I trust that that will be an end of the discussion of these questions of policy, and that we shall have an opportunity of returning to the consideration of the very serious question involved in the resolution of my hon. friend from South Oxford. Now, Sir, shortly after the acquisition of the North-West Territories and the establishment of the Province of Manitoba, the Government which was led by the present Prime Minister introduced and carried into law an Act relating to Dominion lands, especially those situated in the North-West Territories, in which Act provision was made for the leasing of timber limits. The 50th section of that Act provided that the right of cutting timber on such timber limits should be put up at a bonus per square mile, varying according to the value of the limit, and sold to the highest bidder on competition, either by tender or at public auction. However, when timber limits came to be leased, the right hon. gentleman's Government found it impossible to give effect to that provision, and a number of licenses were granted—amongst others, to Macaulay and Ginty, Buchanan and Green, Fowler, and Fuller—for I think a period of 21 years, for tracts of land as large as 100 square miles, from which the mills of those parties were to be supplied with timber, and from which lumber was to be cut for the people of the North-West Territories and the Province of Manitoba. Now, the right hon. gentleman's Government did not comply with the provision of the statute which I have quoted. Those limits were not put up at public auction, nor were tenders sought for the sale of them. The sales were made, not under the statute, but wholly regardless of its provisions; I suppose the hon. gentleman found it quite impossible to comply with them. At all events they were not complied with; and I make this statement, not by way of censure at this moment—for I think if I were disposed to do that, it ought to be dealt with by a proper motion and not incidentally on the motion now before us. I say further, that when the Government of my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie) came into power, they repealed this provision—not because they considered it an improper provision, under circumstances where it could be practically given effect to, but because they found it impossible to act upon it in the condition of things then existing in Manitoba and the North-West Territories. There was carried through the House in 1874, during the régime of Mr. Mackenzie, an Act providing that:

"In cases where applications may be made for limits on which to give timber, after a survey of the territory had been made, the Governor in Council may, on recommendation of the hon. the Minister of Interior, authorise the same to be leased for such bonuses as he may deem fair and reasonable."

Now, the reason of that was, that after the Government came into office they found it impossible to act under the law as it then stood. It was before I was a member of the Administration that this change was carried through the House without any opposition. I think the hon. gentlemen who are now sitting on the front benches were members of the House, and they did not oppose the change; and, by giving their assent to the operation of the law which was carried through Parliament, they, as members of Parliament, assumed the responsibility, along with the Government, of the change which was actually made. That change, I say, was made because it was found impossible to give practical effect to the law as the right hon. gentleman had submitted it, and as Parliament had adopted it. It was impossible to get tenders; it was impossible to make a sale in the way proposed; there was no competition. The difficulty was to get lumbermen to erect mills in that section of the country, and to manufacture lumber for the use of the settlers, because, as every hon. gentleman knows, the population there was still very scanty in numbers; it was not exactly known what the future might be; it was, to some extent, a leap in the dark on the part of any lumbermen to make a very large investment in the country, under the circumstances; and so the Government, anxious to supply building material for the population, found it necessary for that purpose, rather to persuade those engaged in the lumbering business to erect mills there than to keep them in restraint by any law requiring competition for the purchase of timber limits. Now, it has been said, and said, no doubt, truly, that we, in this particular case which has been referred to—and which I will discuss more at length soon, the sale of the timber limit to Messrs. Cook & Sutherland—carried this Order in Council after our defeat at the polls; that it was between the 17th September and the 17th October—the period of our resignation—that this Order in Council was adopted. Now, that is true; and I will state by-and-bye what were the circumstances that, I think, justified our Government at that time in so acting. But, in the first place, I would say that the right hon. gentleman who led the Government in 1873 set us the example in this particular, for I find that timber limits were granted to various parties—to Fuller, to Fowler, and others—between the 22nd October and the 3rd November. I think it was upon the 3rd of November that the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues resigned their positions in the Government; and on that day an Order in Council was carried granting timber limits to various parties. I will also say this, because I do not wish to misrepresent the matter, or to create a false impression with a view of promoting controversy, that the hon. gentleman had applications from Mr. Fuller and others for timber limits between Lake Superior and the Red River settlements, and that when this application was made for a timber limit, after some correspondence on the subject, the Government informed Mr. Fuller and others that the Indian title had not yet been extinguished—this was in February, 1873—but that, as soon as it was extinguished, if Mr. Fuller and the other parties chose to go on and erect mills, the Government would then be prepared to consider their application. Well, it was between that period and the resignation of the Government that the Indian title was extinguished; and so the Government, although it was the 3rd November when they carried the Order in Council giving effect to the policy which had been at an earlier period determined upon—that is, at the period while they still enjoyed the confidence of the people as their representatives in Parliament. Now, I will say this, that we did exactly the same thing. When Mr. Sutherland applied for the limit on the upper waters of Saskatchewan, which was during the office of my predecessor, Mr. Laird, the Indian title had not yet been extinguished in that section of the country; and almost the same answer was conveyed to Mr. Sutherland that the previous Government had, some years before, under exactly the same circumstances, given to Mr. Fuller, namely, that the Indian title had not been extinguished, but that, as soon as it was, consideration would be given to the application. After the Indian title was extinguished Messrs. Sutherland & Cook renewed their application. The observation made by the hon. the Minister of Justice, that we granted 200 square miles, whereas in the case of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert), they only granted 100 square miles, seems to me to be altogether beside the question raised by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). It was not a question whether the limit was large or small. Whether the transaction was proper or improper did not depend on the size of the limit. The hon. gentleman will see, if he looks at the Orders in Council brought down in 1882, that some hon. gentlemen, who had limits of very considerable extent, were granted additional limits; and I find that in one case an additional limit of 100 square miles was granted to a party over and above what they had before. That was in the case of Messrs McLaren, Peels, Haggart & Nichol. The hon. the Minister reports that Messrs. McLaren & Co. also asked to have granted to them, in the vicinity of Shell River, an additional limit of 100 square miles. Then, when we look at the limits these gentlemen had before, we find they also had 100 square miles. Now, whether that was too an extensive territory or not depended altogether on certain circumstances. I find in the returns brought down that some lumbermen, who had limits acquired only three or four years before, informed the Government that the timber on their limits was exhausted. Here is a mill, the machinery of which is scarcely worn at all, that will become useless unless an additional limit can be acquired. Now, I remember very well that at the time this limit was granted on the upper waters of the Saskatchewan, a report was made. That report if not ought to be among the papers of the Department. Col. Dennis, who was the Surveyor General at the time, made an estimate as to the proper length of time the timber should last on a limit of 200 square miles, with such a mill as these gentlemen proposed to establish; and, if I remember rightly, it was something between twelve and fifteen years. At all events, it was a period considerably short of twenty-one years for which a lease was granted. It was not in the public interest that the limits should be sold, that large expense should be incurred in the erection of mills where the timber would only supply a mill for a very short time. I wish to notice another thing which has been discussed in the press supporting the Administration, and occasionally by members in this House—the statement which has been made that we authorised Messrs. Cook & Sutherland to acquire the territory of 200 square miles in blocks not less than twenty miles in extent. That matter was well considered. I remember that it was discussed again and again in view of the extent of the timber area in those districts; and that provision was made after full consideration. We found that on many rivers emptying into the Saskatchewan, especially those which were not near its source, the timber was only a fringe extending about a quarter of a mile, sometimes half a mile, and rarely a mile in depth. It seemed to me, and also to the Surveyor General and to the Deputy Minister at that time, with whom I discussed the matter before bringing it to the attention of my colleagues, that it was not desirable that the lumbermen should be encouraged to cut off these areas of timber which formed the fringes along the rivers, but that this timber should be left in a large measure for the supply of the settlers in the way of fencing material and other things which they required, as well as the timber which they might find on their homesteads; and that, therefore, if we said that no plot to be taken by lumbermen should be less than 20 miles in extent, the lumbermen would not infringe on that timber because they would not care to pay the dues on an area of 20 miles when perhaps the timber would not cover more than one third of that ground. The object we had was to force the lumbermen to go into those districts which were generally covered by timber, which were properly timber districts, in contradistinction to these timber fringes which were found along the margins of the rivers. We also found that at that time there was but one mill in the whole of that country. Hon. gentlemen will remember that, at the time this license was granted, the settlement of the North-West was in the direction of Battleford and Prince Albert and other points along the Saskatchewan River. The surveys of the Canadian Pacific Railway lay in that direction across the river in the vicinity of Battleford, and the settlement, in advance of any work being undertaken upon the road, was along the line of country through which it was supposed the railway would run. We had no reason to suppose that the settlement would cease to flow in that direction, because it was not contemplated by the then Government, nor for some time afterwards by our successors in office, that there would be any change in the location of the railway in that district. Therefore, there being only one mill in the district, where lumber was sold in many cases at a price as high as $100 a thousand, it was desirable to induce other lumbermen to locate in that section. At that time the Surveyor General entered into communication with several parties, and he also communicated with Messrs. Cook & Sutherland, each of whom had applied for 100 square miles of timber limit, and both of whom agreed to unite in order to secure a limit between them. It was under these circumstances, when application was made, that the letter I have in my hand of the 6th June was addressed to Messrs. Cook & Sutherland by the Surveyor General. And he says :

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

"SIR,—I have the honor, by direction of the Minister of the Interior, in reference to your application dated the 14th ultimo, for a timber limit of one hundred square miles to be selected and surveyed at your cost in the vicinity of the Saskatchewan between Edmonton and the Rocky Mountains, the same having had the consideration of the Minister of the Interior, to inform you that, under certain conditions, he would be disposed to recommend the same to the favorable consideration of the Privy Council. As the great object of encouraging a proposal of this nature is to cheapen the price of lumber to settlers in the North-West Territories, the Minister would desire to receive an assurance from you that, whereas he understands that at present the price of lumber at the mills in Prince Albert is from $35 to $45, you should agree not to charge more at your mills than from $25 to $35, which he considers would be very profitable rates. In case the limit should be granted to you, a bonus per square mile would be required, in addition to which you would require to conform to the terms and conditions as regards payment of ground rent and royalty, as set forth in section 51 of the Dominion Lands Act, a copy of which is herewith transmitted."

That communication was sent to these gentlemen who had applied for this timber limit, and, when they agreed to the proposition there suggested, the Order in Council of the 7th October, 1878, was adopted. The right hon. gentleman will see that this order was adopted ten days before we retired from office. If that Government had followed the usual constitutional rule, they would have met Parliament. They did not do so. They followed the more recent examples set them by Lord Beaconsfield and by Mr. Gladstone, of retiring on the adverse expression of opinion by the country, without waiting to meet the House. But the hon. gentleman carried his Orders in Council, which I believe were undisturbed, on the 3rd November, which I believe was the very day his Government retired from office, but that was in pursuance of an intention which had been expressed at an earlier period. This Order in Council was also in pursuance of an intention which was expressed as early as the 6th June. It was the year of the election. A great deal of business necessarily accumulates during the period when an election is being held which Ministers may or may not deal with after the election is over. The Government, or, at all events, I, as head of that Department, acted upon this principle: that all business which the Government had before them before the elections were held, which had been considered by me, which I was prepared to dispose of, should, in the public interest and to the public advantage, be disposed of before retiring from office, because that related to matters with which my successor in office was not likely, at all events for some time, to be as familiar with as I was myself. The Order in Council reads as follows:—

"On a memorandum, dated Oct. 4, 1878, from the hon. the Minister of Interior, representing that being of opinion that it would encourage and facilitate settlement in the valley of the Saskatchewan if facilities were afforded for obtaining lumber at a reasonable price, which he learns cannot be done at the present time, he recommends that a timber limit, to the extent of 200 square miles on the Saskatchewan River and its tributaries in the North-West Territories, be granted to Messrs. Cook & Sutherland, the same to be selected by them in blocks of not less than twenty square miles, the bonus payable on the said limit to be at the rate of $15 per square mile.

"And further recommending that the applicants shall have a period of three years within which to make selections of the limit, which shall not interfere with any lands which may be set apart for the Canadian Pacific Railway, or for reserves of Indians or with school lands, or with any other timber limits which may have been previously granted or which may be hereafter granted and selected prior to the selection by said Cook & Sutherland, and shall in all respects be subject to the conditions contained in the provisions of the Dominion Lands Act."

Now, I do not very well see how greater restrictions could have been imposed; I am certain that the restrictions imposed in this Order in Council are very much greater than those which were imposed in Orders in Council subsequently granted. I know that in some of those granted before 1874 under a prior Government, of which the right hon. gentleman was the head, there were no such restrictions, and we provided here, contrary to the wishes of the parties themselves, that the privilege of making a selection should not stand in the way of any other party who might subsequently require a timber limit, prior to its being actually selected, holding that there was no pre-emption right existing over the territories of the Upper Saskatchewan which would prevent anyone else, who subsequently acquired a right to a timber limit, from making a selection simply because those parties had not selected all the lands they were entitled to select. Now, the right hon. gentleman, or his Government, repealed this Order in Council. I do not know by what authority; I do not know whether my friend behind me (Mr. Cook) ever took legal advice in regard to that; but I understood that he had employed parties to explore the country to make that selection on that Order in Council—that he incurred large expense; and I do not think it was in the power of the Government to do what they did, to undo what had been done legally, in my opinion, by their predecessors in office. But, however that may be, I simply call attention to this fact, that after that Order in Council was repealed, or action upon it suspended, the same territories were granted to other parties for a much less sum, and on much less stringent conditions. I think my hon. friend from East Assiniboia (Mr. Dewdney) acquired a limit; I do not know whether he is a lumberman or not, I am not sure as to that; he is here and can speak for himself. Now, we never sold a limit to any one who was not a lumberman; we never sold a limit without the condition of erecting a mill and cutting lumber for the use of settlers; we never recognised the right of any party who is not a mill owner or not engaged in the lumbering business, to acquire a limit, because if we did we were sure it could only be acquired for speculative purposes, and we did not think it was right or ought to be the policy of the Government to encourage speculation in the public domain. Then I find also, in looking over the returns that have been brought down to the House, that those who subsequently acquired limits were allowed to select areas as small as three square miles. Now, I do not think that was in the public interest. I am not questioning the motives or the moral conduct of the Government in reference to the matter at all, I am simply speaking in this respect in regard to the public policy of allowing areas to be obtained of such limited extent, and I think that the effect would not have been in this respect in the interest of the settlers. Now, the next matter for consideration is this: Whether the time had come when this policy of permitting the private sale of timber limits ought to have come to an end. The hon. gentleman had, in his Bill of 1872, expressed what his view of the public policy was; the right hon. gentleman showed that he could not give effect to what he regarded as the ideally perfect—or approximately so—system of public policy with regard to timber limits. He was obliged to make sales in contravention of the terms of the statute, by private understanding with parties, without competition, either by tender or by public auction. When the hon. member for East York came into office he found exactly the same condition of things existing. Now, in this very correspondence, when application was made to me in the first instance, in 1877, for this timber limit, I informed the parties that it was the intention of the Government to sell these limits, if possible, by public auction. That was the answer given in the first instance, but upon enquiry we found that impossible. As far as the territories of the Upper Saskatchewan were concerned, situated remote from any means of communication, knowing that the lumber cut there would be cut only for the use of settlers, that the extent of the market would depend wholly upon the progress of settlement, we found it so much a leap in the dark on the part of lumbermen that we could not get parties to compete with each other, and so we were obliged to press parties to purchase the timber limits and to erect mills, rather than to hold them in restraint. Now, that was the condition of things existing in 1878 in that territory. When the Canadian Pacific Railway was surveyed further south, when the railways were being pushed on westward from Winnipeg, you had a different state of things existing, and that different state of things is disclosed by the correspondence that has been put upon the Votes and Proceedings. I have made a statement with regard to the conduct of the previous Government, and with regard to the conduct of the right hon. gentleman himself, and his colleagues, with reference to these timber limits. We may differ as to what is the proper public policy to adopt with regard to this question. That is a fair subject for a resolution. It is a question to be argued and voted upon, but that is not the question now before us, and I ask the House not to confound, nor to confuse, a question of public policy in regard to the conduct of the Administration, with the question of the personal conduct of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert). They are different questions altogether. If we had the question of the public policy of the Government before us, we might very fairly point out, what is the necessary outcome of the policy which the Government have adopted, and contend that it ought to be changed or modified, or superseded by the policy which we have often held to be in the public interest. The wisdom or fault of the public policy of the Administration is one thing; the personal misconduct and misrepresentations, and the attempt to use his position, as a member of this House, for the purpose of making enormous gain at the expense of certain parties, is a question which this House should not ignore. I do not say that correspondence is reliable, and I suppose the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches would not declare that they have the most implicit confidence in every statement made in these various communications that have been published, and which have been made the subject of the resolution that is now before the House; but it does show that there was existing at that time what had not existed a year or two earlier—that there was competition, that parties were ready to bid against each other for timber limits; that the practice of selling at a fixed price, which was a matter of necessity so far as the Government was concerned, from 1872 to 1880, was a condition of things that no longer existed; that a change had taken place, and that that policy which the hon. gentleman desired to adopt when he proposed, in 1872, the clause in the Act of 35 Vic., which I read, was possible in 1882. That is perfectly clear from what has happened; it is perfectly clear that when the Government sold this timber limit at $5 per square mile, and the hon. member for Lincoln sold it at $2,000, there was a considerable demand for the acquisition of timber limits, and that the condition of things that existed in 1877, and in 1878, did not exist in 1882, so far as that particular district was concerned. Now, that is, in my opinion, a reason for having changed the policy and returned to that policy that everybody admitted was desirable, but that everybody had found at an earlier period was impracticable. I have said this by way of explanation, and by way of defence of what was done. A more straightforward transaction, one, in my opinion, more in the public interest, one more calculated to facilitate settlement and promote the interest of the settler, was never made, than that Order in Council that granted the 200 square miles to Messrs. Cook & Sutherland, on the 7th October, 1878. It was adopted after very careful consideration, it was adopted in the public interest, and it would, in my opinion, if the hon. gentleman had allowed it to go into operation, have operated in that interest. And he will see that his proposal to divide that limit and sell it in smaller areas did not accomplish the end he had in view; for I observe, by the returns brought down, that Captain Moore, who had already a limit of very considerable extent, acquired 100 square miles of the territory proposed to be disposed of; and the sales made to the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Dewd-ney), and to Mr. Farrar of the Mail, then residing in the North-West Territories, were sales to men who were not lumbermen, who had no intention of working the limits themselves, and who acquired them for the purpose of transferring them to someone else. As the hon. gentleman will see, instead of limiting the limit to 200 square miles, there was nothing to prevent 500 square miles passing into the hands of any one party under the regulations adopted. But all this, Mr. Speaker, is beside the motion.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear,

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman says "hear hear," and I am glad he agrees with me. But, of course, he will understand that when the Minister of Justice insinuated that we had acted most improperly in granting this limit, and when the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert), undertook to make the granting of this limit a defence of his action, then it was necessary that I should say something in defence of the Government of which I was a member, and the one chiefly responsible for that particular act. Now, with respect to the motion of the hon. member for Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). The Minister of Justice has proposed an adjournment of the debate. To what end, to what purpose? What is the object of the adjournment of the debate? I listened very attentively to the explanation made by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert), and that hon. gentleman did not controvert anything that was said. Why, if the hon. gentleman intended to controvert anything contained in the letters, and intended to repudiate any of them as being spurious, the opportunity occurred when the hon. member for South Oxford first proposed to place them on the Votes and Proceedings. If the hon. gentleman had said that these letters are not genuine, or that some of them were spurious, then an enquiry would have been proper for the purpose of ascertaining which were genuine and which were spurious. An enquiry would have been necessary under those circumstances; but the hon. gentleman admitted that they are all genuine publications. For what purpose does the hon. gentleman ask a committee? Is it for the purpose of disproving anything the hon. gentleman himself has said over his signature? Is it for the purpose of showing that he did not tell the truth in regard to his own conduct in the matter? Surely not. The hon. gentleman says that Mr. Sands is satisfied with the transaction, and that he is not disposed to charge him with fraud and misconduct in the matter. That question is not before the House. It is not a matter of any consequence what Mr. Sands' views are on the subject; it is not a question whether the hon. gentleman acted properly or improperly in dealing with Mr. Sands. That is not the question at all. One question is, whether an hon. member of this House should, for the purpose of his own profit and advantage, undertake to act as agent or intermediary between the Government and any outside party. I can well understand how a member of this House may be applied to by his constituents to make application for this or the other thing; but I do not understand how an hon. member may undertake to make professional charges for such service. That is a wholly different matter, and that is an important point involved here; it is, at all events, one of the important points involved in this case. There are a number of cases to show that a member is not allowed to promote business in Parliament in his professional capacity. This has been ruled over and over again. It is true that among English precedents we have nothing which says that a lawyer may not act professionally before any Department of the Government. But look at the principle, and you will find that exactly the same reasons which would prevent a member acting professionally before any committee of the House, or in the House itself, applies to a member acting professionally before any Department of the Government for hire or for fee, as he would before a court of law operate here. The reasons for the rule are the same in both cases, and the reasons which influence the action of a member in the one case should influence his action in the other. Take the case of Mr. Isaac Butt, the case of Mr. Bird, discussed by Lord Brougham and Sir Robert Peel, when both were members of the House of Commons, and take other cases which I might mention. In the case of Sir Isaac Butt, Sir Hugh Cairns, who was then Solicitor General, spoke in vindication of his legal brethren in the House, and said:

"That every member of the profession who entertains that feeling of honor, which he believes was common to the whole body, would at once declare that he could not advocate or even vote for any question in the House in which he had been professionally engaged, lest he might unconsciously, perhaps, be biased by the opinion which he had, as an advocate, expressed outside the House."

That is the rule laid down. If you wish to ascertain how far a member should be precluded from acting before any Department of the Government with a view to influencing the Administration for pay, you have just to look at the reasons which prevent a member from acting in Parliament, and you will see they are exactly the same in the one case as in the other. It is true the member has not to vote when he is before a Department. But he may go before a committee of the House of which he is not a member, and undertake to advocate any measure, but if he does it for hire or fee he comes within the rule laid down by Lord Cairns. In this respect the hon. member for Lincoln is within the reason of the rule. Then the hon. gentleman has shown that he himself felt that he was not acting in accordance with what he considered defensible or he would never have substituted his wife's name for his own as the party who was to receive the pecuniary advantage. I am not going to enter into a discussion of the question, but I think it is not in the public interest that the Government should ask for an adjournment of the debate and that they should propose to refer the question to a committee. The facts are before us. The hon. gentleman in his explanation has not proposed to introduce anything to controvert what we have here. This is not in the position of an ordinary case in this respect: if he proposed to produce evidence by way of rebuttal it would be to refute evidence given by some other party than himself. But the charge made by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) is based on the testimony of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert); it is based on what the hon. gentleman himself has said. It is not based on what has been said by some one else. There is no other party giving testimony except the hon. gentleman, whose testimony he may seek to controvert. The testimony to be so given would be testimony against that furnished by the hon. gentleman himself, and it would be an extraordinary state of things if he were allowed to undertake to show that every statement made against himself was an untrue statement. This endeavor, if successful, would only go to prove the charge. We have had the statement made by the Minister of Customs. The Minister of Customs felt that the statements made by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) were untrue statements, and statements calculated to damage him personally as a member of the Administration. He combatted them, he denied them, and the hon. member for Lincoln admitted the accuracy of that denial, and the inaccuracy of the statements made by himself. What, then, can you say when you look at these letters? When you examine their contents, when you listen to what has been said by the Minister of Customs, and to what the hon. gentleman has himself stated as against his own testimony, we must conclude that these statements are false and scandalous; that they are, as they are described in the motion, and that it is not in the public interest that his conduct should in any way be upheld or extenuated. I hope that the Government will neither postpone the debate nor refer the matter to a committee, but that they will deal with the question courageously and honestly upon its merits, as the conduct and character of this House require it should be dealt with. It seems to me that there ought to be no differences of opinion on the two sides of the House with regard to this matter. The character of the House is involved, and the confidence which the country has in public men is involved. I am not disposed to create a greater suspicion, or a greater distrust in the honesty of public men, than that which exists in the public mind at the present time. The way in which to create greater confidence among the people in the administration of our affairs, is that when misconduct is established it should be dealt with as it deserves. If we postpone the debate, or undertake to shelve the responsibility of deciding this question, we will not create greater confidence among the public. I do not think it is desirable to let the hon. gentleman down by degrees, and to get rid of the question by a postponement. In my opinion, the public expect the House to deal fairly with the question, and, as we have it now before us, we ought to dispose of it.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I do not rise for the purpose of expressing a positive opinion with respect to the guilt or innocence of the hon. member for Lincoln. I presume the question as to whether that hon. gentleman has violated the Independence of Parliament Act or not, is one which may be properly relegated to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, if the House so decides. But, Sir, I could not listen to the speech of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, without saying a word or two in respect to the provisions of the law which has brought the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) into the position he stands to-day. When I listened to the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) defending the acts of the Government, of which he was a member in 1877, and defending more especially the acts of the Department of which he himself was Minister, I wondered in my own mind, as to whether the hon. gentleman had not been the party accused by the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) instead of the member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert). The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) and the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) have laid down the proposition, that those timber limits ought to be submitted to public competition—at public auction. That proposition is one in which I entirely and fully concur. But, when the hon. member (Mr. Mills) laid down that proposition, he ought to have admitted that the same principle should have guided the Government of which he was a member, when they controlled the destinies of this country, just as much as it ought to guide the present Administration.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). We tried it and failed.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). What was the condition of things in regard to these timber limits when the hon. gentleman and his friends came into office? I will read, with permission of the House, the clause of the Act of 1872, having reference to that particular matter. The 50th section of the Dominion Lands Act reads as follows:—

“The right of cutting timber on such limits shall be put up at a bonus per square mile, varying according to the situation and value of the limit, and sold to the highest bidder by competition, either by tender or at public auction.”

In addition to that the 51st section of the Act provides as follows. I shall only read the first subsection, which has reference to this matter:

“The purchaser shall receive a lease granting the right of cutting timber on the land for twenty-one years, and containing the following conditions, with such others as shall have been embodied in the notice of sale, that is to say:

“The lessee to erect a saw mill or mills in connection with such limits and lease, and subject to any special conditions which may be agreed upon and stated in the lease, and such mill or mills to be of capacity to cut at the rate of a thousand feet, broad measure, in twenty-four hours, for every two and a half square miles of limits in the lease, or shall establish such other manufactory of wood goods as may be agreed upon as the equivalent of such mill or mills, and the lessee shall work the limit, in the manner and to the extent provided in the lease, within two years from the date thereof, and during each succeeding year of the term.”

Now, the hon. member for Bothwell has stated to the House that the Government found it impossible to carry out that condition, as they could not obtain competition for these timber limits, and that, as a matter of fact, between the time of the passage of this Act and the time when the hon. gentleman's friends came into power, the then Government did grant timber lands to lumbermen in the Lake of the Woods district, without competition. I say that, if that was done by the Government, it was done in violation of this Act, and done contrary to law.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). Was it not done contrary to law?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman will see that the Act of 1872 was repealed, and the Act of 1874 enacted.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I am not speaking of the acts of the hon. gentleman and his friends when they came into office. I am speaking of the statements the hon. gentleman made in reference to the acts of the present Administration, when in office prior to 1873; and I say that if such licenses were granted, they were granted in defiance of this Act, and in violation of the law. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) says that, finding that condition of things to exist when the Administration of which he was a member came into office, they deemed it necessary to modify the Act in such a manner as to enable them to grant leases without public competition. The hon. gentleman has stated to the House that this change was made in the Act for the purpose of enabling the settlers in the North-West Territories, and in Manitoba, to obtain cheaper lumber than they could obtain under the Act of 1872. But what did the hon. gentleman and the Government of which he was a member provide for by the Act of 1874? They provided this:

"The 51st section of the said hereinbefore first cited Act is hereby amended by inserting after sub-section 9 the following as sub-section 10:—

"Provided further, that in cases where application may be made for limits on which to cut timber in unsurveyed territory, the Governor in Council may, on the recommendation of the Minister of the Interior, authorise the same to be leased for such bonus as may be deemed fair and reasonable,—such leases to be subject, nevertheless, to the foregoing conditions of this section, except as to that part of sub-section one which provides for the erection of mills, which provision, in respect to limits in unsurveyed territory, may, if considered expedient by the Minister of the Interior, be dispensed with."

Thus, instead of amending the law so as to provide the settlers with cheaper lumber, they took power by this very Act to grant licenses without imposing on the lessees of the limits the condition which had been imposed by the previous Administration, that they must erect mills within a certain period of time and of a certain capacity. So the hon. gentleman, by his own Act, has taken out of his mouth the defence he has made here to-night for modifying the law as it was modified in 1874. Now, he says that, in compliance with that law, and having in view the interests of the people on the Saskatchewan, the Department of which he was the head, in 1877, agreed to grant to Messrs. Cook & Sutherland 200 square miles of limits in the Saskatchewan district; and he states—and the hon. member for South Oxford made the same statement—that that grant was made for the purpose of giving to the people of that district cheaper lumber than they were able theretofore to obtain. But the hon. gentleman read the Order in Council on which those licenses were authorised to be granted, and there is not in that Order in Council a single word restricting those gentlemen as to the price they were to charge to the settlers for the timber they proposed to grant to them out of the public domain.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Yes.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I should like to ask the hon. gentleman if there is a single word in that Order in Council restricting them as to the price they were to charge to settlers? On the contrary, the Government of which the hon. gentleman was a member granted to those gentlemen a valuable concession, in the shape of timber lands on the Saskatchewan River, and further, made a provision in the Order in Council by which those gentlemen could select those lands in blocks of twenty square miles, and by which they could select all the best timber lands on the Upper Saskatchewan.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I should like to know whether any other construction can be put upon that Order in Council? The ordinary course is to lay out the timber limits in blocks of 25, 50 or 100 square miles, as the case may be; and the purchaser has to take the lands just as they are, paying, not only for the areas covered by timber, but for the barren areas and those covered by water; but the Order in Council which my hon. friend authorised as Minister of the Interior gave those two gentlemen power to select, in blocks of twenty square miles, the best timber lands to be found on the North Saskatchewan, and to take only lands covered by timber. The hon. gentleman has also stated that it was desirable, in the public interest, that those timber lands should be granted only to gentlemen engaged in the lumber trade; but it is a rather singular circumstance, that the Government of that day were able to find, amongst all the lumbermen of this country, only two gentlemen who met the conditions required—of being lumbermen—and were at the same time active supporters of the then Administration.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Not a bit of it.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). My hon. friend says: "Not a bit of it;" and yet the fact remains that one of these gentlemen was a member of this Parliament, actively supporting the Administration, and that the other gentleman, though not a member of this Parliament, was also an active supporter of the Administration. In view of these facts, I say that the defence which my hon. friend, with all the specious sophistry of which he is a master, and which he exhibited in so high a degree to-night, makes of this transaction, which he contends to have been in the public interest, was no defence at all; and whilst I agree with that hon. gentleman, and with the hon. member for South Oxford, that the condition of things which existed at the time the hon. member for Lincoln was enabled, without any violation of the law, to obtain a concession of timber lands, ought not to continue—ought never to have existed; but I say that those hon. gentlemen are the men to blame for having placed the law permitting it on the Statute-book. While I do not exonerate the present Administration for continuing that law on the Statute-book, I say it does not lie in the mouths of hon. gentlemen opposite to attack the present Administration for continuing on the Statute-book the law which they themselves placed on the Statute-book. I have only a word more to say on this matter, and it is this: I regretted, when the hon. member for South Oxford delivered his speech this afternoon, that he did not confine himself to the matter under consideration, but went beyond it for the purpose of accusing other hon. members of this House of corruption, and the people outside of this House of condoning corruption. If the hon. gentleman desired to accuse the hon. member for Lincoln, either of having violated the Independence of Parliament Act or of having been guilty of conduct that was scandalous and unjustifiable, he ought to have confined himself to that accusation, and have omitted reference to other members of this House until they should be accused directly of some violation of their duties as members of Parliament.

Mr. CHARLTON. The question under discussion seems to have drifted away somewhat widely from the starting point when my hon. friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) introduced his resolution this afternoon. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken seems to imagine that the question under discussion is as to whether there is any precedent in the action of the Mackenzie Government for the course adopted by the present Administration in dealing with timber limits. Now, it appears to me that, if my hon. friend from Renfrew (Mr. White) has succeeded in establishing the fact, if such a fact existed, that the Mackenzie Government had been guilty of wrong in this matter, and had pursued a policy which was wrong, the existence of that would not justify wrong on the part of the First Minister.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew.) I do not pretend to say it would.

Mr. CHARLTON. It is useless to discuss the question upon this basis. If the grant of a limit of 200 miles on the Upper Saskatchewan, in view of the circumstances under which it was made, to two lumbermen for the purpose of securing the manufacture of lumber in the North-West, happens to have been wrong, that does not justify the Government that followed in granting 23,000 or 24,000 square miles to a hoard of camp followers, not one or twenty of whom were lumbermen at all; and the Government cannot be justified by this sort of special pleading. I find, however, that when we attempted to condemn that policy, on the 4th May, 1886, by a motion which I made in this House, when I laid before the House the fact that hundreds of Orders in Council had been granted—550 I think in all—when I laid before this House and the country, the fact that over 23,000 square miles of timber limits had been granted by the Government, that numerous members of Parliament had applied in their own names and obtained limits, that other members of Parliament had applied and obtained limits for their friends, I find that the hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. White), voted against that motion condemning the policy of the Government in that regard.

Mr. COOK. He was in sympathy with them, because he had timber limits himself.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). That is not true.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. White), informs us to-night that he is in favor of the policy of inviting competition by public auction for the purchase of timber limits, that he does not approve of the conduct of any Government which pursues the opposite policy; and yet, he did approve of their conduct in following the opposite policy when, upon the crucial test of the motion I made condemning the policy of the Government, he was found voting to sustain it. I propose to say a few words to-night about this matter. I should not have done so if the discussion had not taken the direction it has since the motion was introduced by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). I may say with regard to the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert), that his conduct in this matter is scarcely defensible. I do not think any particular attempt has been made to defend it. The hon. the Minister of Customs, in a very frank speech, and a speech which did him honor, the other day, did not attempt to justify the conduct of the hon. member for Lincoln. The hon. the

Mr. CHARLTON.

Minister of Justice to-day has not attempted to justify it, and I do not think it is justifiable in any sense. His letters, of course, were private letters. It is unfortunate for the hon. member for Lincoln that they were made public, and I can sympathise with that hon. gentleman to some extent, in the circumstances in which he is placed; but I want to point out one thing. I want to point out, that the conduct of the hon. member for Lincoln is a natural result of Government teaching, of the Government policy, and of the Government example. I want to point out that he is an apt scholar, who has graduated in the school at the head of which stands the Ministry of the day, and the chief teachers in which have been the members of this Government. Now, as to the political practices of that school, take their whole history of the management of affairs of this country since 1878. Take the Gerrymander Act, take the Franchise Act—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question.

Mr. CHARLTON,—take the squandering of an empire, the granting of timber limits, the absurd land grants, the colonisation grants, the mineral grants,—the whole of this enormous amount of swag—playing ducks and drakes with an empire—all these things used for political purposes. Why, the hon. gentleman graduated in this school, and it is the natural result of the teaching of the Government which we see in the transaction brought to light to-night. I propose to call attention to some of the things done under this Government, some of the things that the hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. White) voted were right and refused to vote were wrong when a motion was made in this House in May, 1886, concerning them. I found, on examining the records of the Department of the Interior, that there had been timber limits granted, upon the personal application of members of this House and the Senate, to seventeen different members of those different bodies. I found that Mr. Montplaisir had received a limit at Rainy Lake; that C. C. Colby had received a limit on the 3rd January, 1883; that the Hon. G. W. Howland had received two limits; that M. K. Dickinson had received a limit; that John White, M.P., had received two limits; that the Hon. Wm. Muirhead had received two limits; that Jno. Rochester had received one limit; that L. McCallum had received one limit; that Duncan McMillan had received one limit; that J. B. Daoust had received one limit; that H. A. Ward, M.P., had received one limit; that C. E. Hickey was an applicant, in connection with his partner, Wm. Brodeur, for one limit; that Wm. W. Elliot, ex-M.P., had received one limit; that the Hon. A. W. Ogilvie had received one limit; that Oscar Fulton, ex-M.P., had received one limit; that David Blaine, ex-M.P., had received one limit; that L. H. Massue had received one limit—total, seventeen limits granted to members of this House, and the other House, comprising an area of 850 square miles; granted without competition and upon which, on a motion condemning the policy of the Government, the hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. White) voted that the policy of the Government was right. Then we had a list of members of the Local Legislature, seven in number, who had received limits from this Government, upon their own application, amounting to 350 square miles.

Then we had a list of members of the Senate and House of Commons who had made applications for friends, and we had the results of these applications. We had, for instance, the member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) who had made application, first, for his son-in-law, Mr. Symonds, and received a limit for him; and for James Robb, and received a limit for him; and for S. S. Fuller, and received a limit for him; and for Graven Smith, and received a limit for him; and for William Morten, and received a limit for him; and for Jas. P. Ward, and received a limit for him. I find that he secured six limits for his friends, comprising an area of 300 square miles. Then we had Mr. Hector Cameron, an applicant for friends, who received three limits, and Mr. McCallum, who applied for three limits for his friends and received them; and Mr. C. C. Colby, who applied for one limit for friends, and received it; and J. Royal, who secured for his friends two limits; and J. C. Rykert, who received for his friends the modest amount of one limit;—

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). Was that his friend Adams?

Mr. CHARLTON—and John Costigan, who made application for his friend Major John Lewis, was granted an extension of time; and the Hon. G. W. Howland, who secured three limits for his friends; and John White, M.P., who made four applications for his friends and was granted four limits; and T. S. Sproule, who applied for two limits for his friends, and was given them; and Duncan McMillan, who made six applications for his friends, and was granted them;—

Mr. SPROULE. My applications were not for Conservatives at all, but for Reformers.

Mr. CHARLTON—and Geo. B. Orton, who was granted six applications for his friends; and J. B. Daoust, who secured one limit for a friend; and F. Vanasse, who made two applications, and was granted two limits; and the Hon. Mr. Pope, who made one application and was given one limit; and Hon. John Carling, who applied for his friends in four applications, and secured four limits; I find that A. Boulton, ex-M.P., made three applications and secured three limits; Joseph Tassé made three applications and secured three limits; F. E. Kilvert, M.P., made five applications and secured five limits; H. A. Ward, M.P., made three applications and secured three limits; John Bryson, M.P., made two applications and secured two limits; Hugo Kranz made one application and secured one limit; Sir Adolphe Caron made one application for his brother-in-law, Mr. Sharples, and secured one limit; J. S. MacCuaig, ex-M.P., made one application and secured one limit; Thos. Farrow made three applications and secured three limits; John Small, M.P., made two applications and obtained two limits; S. J. Dawson made one application and secured one limit.

Mr. DAWSON. It is utterly and absolutely untrue.

Mr. CHARLTON. I have the Order in Council to that effect.

Mr. DAWSON. You cannot produce any proof that I got a limit.

Mr. CHARLTON. I had a denial of that kind from the Postmaster General—before. Then we have the Hon. Thomas White, who made one application, and secured one limit. Thus, on the application of members of Parliament, or ex-members, for themselves or their friends, we find there were 3,550 square miles granted. Then, among the supporters of the Government, I find a great cloud of witnesses as to the liberality of the Government towards their friends. I find that Nicholas Flood Davin obtained one limit. Joseph Gibson, a Tory candidate for South Oxford, obtained one limit. R. S. White, of the Montreal Gazette, obtained one limit. F. W. Gibbs, a son of the Hon. T. N. Gibbs, received one limit. Charles J. Campbell, a brother of Sir Alexander Campbell, received one limit. Col. David Tisdale received one limit. James McKnight—my own county seems to have been particularly successful in this matter—a Tory candidate there, received one limit. William Wilson, another Tory candidate in that county, received one limit. John Wilson, chairman of the Conservative Association there, received one limit. Alexander McColl, a Tory aspirant for political honors in North Norfolk, received one limit. J. C. Boyd, an election worker of great efficiency, who is known as "Coon-skin Boyd," received one limit. W. H. Teeter received one limit. Frederick Cope received one limit. James Robb, a law partner of Colonel Tisdale, received one limit. Chas. P. Young received one limit, and so on through a long list of 550 Orders in Council which were issued up to the end of February, 1885, granting 25,300 square miles of timber limits, making a total of 16,192,000 acres which were granted by this Government, in almost every case to its own favorites, a great many granted to members of Parliament for their own use, a greater number granted to their friends for purely speculative purposes. Those limits were taken, I venture to say, with the intention on the part of most of the applicants to do what the member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) has done, to make a profit out of them, granted without competition, granted in the face of repeated protests from this side of the House that the policy of the Government was wrong and wasteful of the public domain; and yet we now have a member rising in his place and justifying this wholesale granting of the public property on the ground and with the paltry excuse that 200 square miles were granted by the previous Government to two lumbermen who were to work them on the western waters.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). The hon. gentleman entirely mistakes the position which was taken by me. I did not justify the course of the present Administration; but I said that those who introduced this law and gave effect to it should be the last to condemn the action of the present Administration.

Mr. CHARLTON. On the only occasion when the hon. gentleman for Renfrew (Mr. White) was asked to pronounce a verdict as to the conduct of the Government, when a motion was made condemning the conduct of the Government, the hon. gentleman justified the conduct of the Government by his vote, and how can he now defend it?

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. He will find that, on a motion made by Mr. Blake that it was expedient that this course of action should cease, that the policy of granting timber lands by private arrangement should cease, I voted with the hon. gentleman.

Mr. CHARLTON. I have not looked at these records; but when this motion was before the House to which I refer, the hon. gentleman's course stands on the records. As to this conduct of the Government in reference to timber limits, which is now condemned by such a supporter as the hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. White), a course which the Government has itself admitted to be wrong by bowing to the demands of the country and introducing a more healthful system, the system of competition, I may point out that the Government did, in 1882, institute what was known as Colonisation Plans No. 1 and No. 2, and the influence of those plans was very greatly to aid the Government in the elections of that year. Under the operation of Colonisation Plan No. 1, within one year and eight months there were applications received from 251 individuals for 2,295 townships. Among the applicants for these colonisation grants of land were 23 members of this House supporting the Government, whose applications aggregated 135 townships. The conditions were the sale of these lands to those applicants at half the price which was charged to the hardy settlers who were going into the North-West. Although the profits which were anticipated were not made, yet the influence upon the political fortunes of the Government was very marked, this policy having been adopted on the eve of the elections of 1882, and, until it was proved that the speculation would be a failure, the Government reaped the advantage. Then we had the policy of the Government in regard to pasture land leases, leasing lands in great blocks, the only restriction being that not more than 50,000 acres should be granted to one man. These were leased without competition at one cent an acre, when probably four or five times that amount could have been obtained if competition had been asked for. I say that the whole policy of the Government in regard to the leasing of timber limits, in regard to their colonisation plans, in regard to their dealing with mineral lands, in regard to their pasture land leases, was all of a piece, and was calculated to have the most corrupting influence upon their followers and upon the public at large; and I say further, that the conduct of the member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) is but the natural outcome of the action of the Government, and that the Government is responsible for that and for numberless other cases of the same kind. I felt it to be my duty to rise and to condemn the conduct of the Government in this matter; for, I think, it deserves the most serious condemnation of the public. It has debauched public sentiment, it has debauched the followers of the Government themselves, and it will be a shame and a disgrace to Canada as well as to the Government when its history is written.

Mr. TISDALE. I had no intention of taking part in this debate, until I was informed that the hon. gentleman had introduced my name in connection with this matter. I understood that the motion of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) was made for a specific object in reference to the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert). But, I find, so far as the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) is concerned, it is an old arrangement that he had published largely at the expense of this Parliament years ago, and, so far as I am concerned, I had the honor of contesting that question with him in my election. I have only this explanation to make in regard to that matter, that I did apply, with a number of other gentlemen, for timber lands in the North-West. We formed a syndicate there, and we applied for a quantity of timber lands as lumbermen, as competent lumbermen, I believe, and with capital at our backs, and the intention was, if there had been timber on these limits, to construct a branch railway from the Riding Mountains to the Manitoba and North-Western Railway. We ascertained, and I suppose many other gentlemen have ascertained, who have endeavored to operate in timber limits in the North-West, that it was a dream. We obtained several hundred square miles under the regulations, and we obtained a railway charter from the Manitoba Legislature, and when we sent out an explorer to ascertain whether there was sufficient timber to pay for operating mills, as the regulations required, we found on all the limits about 4,000,000 feet of lumber. Now, the hon. gentleman has not only been answered by me, but he has been answered by the electors of the riding which I represent. The hon. gentleman knew, further, that those limits, years ago, were cancelled. He may, if he sees fit, drag in the names of parties after he has been corrected, but I want to say this in regard to him. Under the policy of the Ontario Government, which was the matter discussed as contrasted with the policy of the Dominion Government, he and his brother have been enabled to get a limit for which the Ontario Government got less than $5,000, for which they would not take a profit of $100,000 today. I regret that the hon. gentleman saw fit to drag these things into the discussion, because I believe that in this House, as in any other place, we had better stick to the question. I had no desire to make allusion to these things at all, but if he will bring them up, after being corrected, and after knowing all the facts, he must stand the consequences. I believe that hon. gentlemen on both sides in this House have a desire to stand well in all matters of business, or timber limits, or anything else, with which they have been connected, and I say that it was uncalled for on the part of the hon. gentleman to bring up these charges. The hon. member has, as it were, compelled me to rise and to contradict the impression that he sought to convey to the House that there was something improper in what I had done. I was desirous of lumbering; I am lumbering now to an extent, probably, equal to that of the hon. gentleman; and if I could have found a profitable investment in the North-West Territories under the regulations of the Dominion Government, that would have enabled me, with those associated with me, to invest my capital there, I would have done so instead of lumbering, as I am now, in the State of Michigan, where I can find a profitable investment, because, after all, that is what business men are looking for. Now, in regard to the matter under consideration, I wish to say that I have not sufficiently read or considered the evidence presented to this House to be able to say, if the matter comes to a vote, how I ought to vote. Accusations have been brought against the hon. member for Lincoln, and in my opinion the least this House can do is to allow him, what a man charged elsewhere would be allowed, a proper tribunal, where the evidence can be presented which he says he has in his possession, whether it is true or not. I say in all fairness, in all sense of judicial responsibility, and in all sense of justice, we should give him every opportunity to produce the evidence that he says can be produced in this House. I do not care on which side an hon. member may be charged with anything improper, I say we owe it to ourselves and we owe it to the hon. member who may be charged, to allow him a chance to produce his evidence— whether he can produce it is another matter; if he cannot, so much the worse for him. I say then that, in my opinion, we should delegate this question to a committee, and give him the opportunity he asks for.

Mr. CHARLTON. I rise to a personal explanation. I was called out for a few moments and did not hear the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale), but I understand he has stated that I got a timber limit from the Ontario Government on private terms.

Mr. TISDALE. What I stated is this: that you took advantage of the opportunity which the Ontario Government allowed for acquiring timber limits in the North-West. I did not say or insinuate that you had, in any way, acquired a limit except according to the regulations of the Ontario Government; but I did say and I repeat, that, under the arrangements of that Government, the ill-advised arrangements of that Government, you had been able to acquire a limit on which you, or your brother, taking the Government's price at which you had acquired it, made a profit of more than $100,000. But I never did say, and I will have to live a long time yet before I will say, on hearsay evidence, and I would not insinuate, that you had acquired it in any improper manner. I say you acquired it under their regulations; and I say that the Ontario Government, in dealing with their timber limits, on the figures they have quoted in discussions throughout the country, if they had held those limits, instead of disposing of them as they did, against the protest of John Sanfield Macdonald and the old leaders of the coalition Government, could realise from 40 to 50 million dollars more than they did realise.

Mr. CHARLTON. The statement made by the hon. member for South Norfolk, as I understand him, is that I acquired, under the regulations of the Ontario Government, a timber limit for a small sum, upon which I made $100,000.

Mr. TISDALE. Do not mistake me.

Mr. CHARLTON. Now, with regard to this matter I will say that upon one occasion I was the purchaser of a timber limit in Ontario at a public auction, where there were hundreds of men gathered together, after an advertisement of the sale for several months, and where the limits sold at an extreme figure. My brother and I bought one limit at about $5,000 more than it was worth, and another limit we paid full value for. Besides that I acquired some property at private sale.

Mr. TISDALE. Timber limits.

Mr. CHARLTON. Yes, timber limits that had previously been bought from the Government at public auction by the parties from whom I purchased, and I never acquired any timber limits in the Province of Ontario that I did not pay full value for. I never went to the Province of Ontario to get a timber limit at $5 a square mile without paying any bonus, making private application, and not being obliged to compete with somebody else. With regard to the policy of the Ontario Government, they have placed under license a little over 8,500 square miles, or about one-third the amount of territory placed under license by this Government between 1880 and 1885. They have received as bonuses upon that 8,500 square miles of land, over $3,000,000 in cash, besides the actual rental, and every dollar of bonuses they have received is so much more money than the Dominion Government have received at all in granting limits; and the policy of the Ontario Government with reference to timber limits, is a careful and conservative policy. They have brought very little land into the market: their last sale of any consequence was several years ago.

Mr. TAYLOR. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. CHARLTON. The policy has been attacked.

Mr. TAYLOR. If you rise to a personal explanation, you must confine yourself to it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member must confine himself to an explanation.

Mr. MULOCK. I desire to ask the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) if he wished to give the House to understand that he purchased limits by private sale from the Ontario Government, or at public auction when they were sold to the highest bidder?

Mr. CHARLTON. I purchased on one occasion, at private sale, from an individual who held a limit which had been bought at public auction, and I purchased on another occasion a limit at public auction.

Mr. TAYLOR. You made $100,000 out of it.

Mr. BOWELL. It is not my intention at this time to enter into any discussion of the question before the House, but I desire to say a few words in defence of my late colleague, the Hon. Thos. White. If the hon. gentleman's statements in regard to other members of this House be as untrue, as uncharitable and as incorrect as the references made to the late Hon. Thos. White, very little reliance ought to be placed on any statement he has made. This same statement was made while that gentleman was alive and sitting on the floor of Parliament. He gave a full explanation, which satisfied every reasonable man, not only in this House but in the country. The whole head and front of that gentleman's offending was the sending in of an application when he was an independent member of Parliament recommending a gentleman to the Government, saying he was a respectable man, and that if anything could be done to assist him in his application, he (Mr. White) had every reason to believe he was well worthy of it.

An hon. MEMBER. And a Grit, too.

Mr. BOWELL. And he was a Reformer at that. That gentleman with whom Mr. White had personal acquaintance, applied to the then hon. member for Cardwell to forward his recommendation, and he did so. That is the whole charge which could be brought against the conduct of that gentleman, who is not now here to defend himself. I repeat again that, possessing that knowledge, I do think, with due respect for those whom that gentleman has left behind him, the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) should not, if he had any truth, honor and sense of fair dealing, have introduced that gentleman's name.

Mr. CHARLTON. I have no desire to cast aspersions on the conduct of any one, more especially on the conduct of one who has passed away. In searching these returns, when I found that Orders in Council had been issued to and applications had been made by members of Parliament, I had to make notes of these matters in preparing the record.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman heard the explanation, and is as well acquainted with it as I am.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The debate has wandered so very far from the subject-matter of the resolution moved by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) that I venture to ask the indulgence of the House while I try to bring it back to the subject-matter of the resolution. If the hon. gentleman, whose conduct has been impugned on this occasion, had sought to lead the House away from the subject-matter of the resolution, and to mislead the judgment of the House, he could not have found a counsel who could have given him more astute advice than that followed by some hon. gentlemen to-night, because an onlooker could not tell what we are now discussing. Parliament has been asked by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) to affirm a resolution that an hon. gentleman has been guilty of conduct, disgraceful, discreditable and corrupt. The evidence on which that resolution was based was evidence printed in the Votes and Proceedings three or four weeks ago. That evidence has been before the House. It has been read by every hon. member, and has been perused, no doubt, by the entire reading public of Canada. That evidence is evidence furnished by the hon. member whose conduct is impugned. The hon. gentleman was very properly given every opportunity to meet that evidence some time ago. He published in reply to that evidence a very long letter in one of the city newspapers, and his defence is published in the Votes and Proceedings side by side with the charges made against him. At a subsequent stage, when the hon. gentleman thought he had obtained further evidence either to excuse or palliate his offence, he came before the House and very fairly asked the House for, and the House very fairly granted him the privilege of inserting further correspondence in the Votes and Proceedings, in order that the House, before it was called upon to decide the question and pass judgment, might be seized of the whole facts. I think I am in the judgment of the House when I state that no application has been made by the hon. member for Lincoln with respect to the charge brought against him which has not been acceded to by the House. After a period of three or four weeks, during which the charges have remained on the Votes and Proceedings, the House was asked by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) to declare that that evidence, embodied in our Votes and Proceedings, and embodied in the letters of the hon. member, also in our Votes and Proceedings, is sufficient to warrant it in concluding that the hon. gentleman's conduct was discreditable and disgraceful. We are now asked not to pass judgment on these letters; we are asked by the Minister of Justice to say that this debate should be adjourned, and I call the attention of the House to the fact that that is not a proposal which comes from the incriminated party. That proposition comes from the Minister of Justice, and I must say it strikes my mind at least that when a very serious and grave charge has been made affecting the honor of a member of this House, and when it has been before the country three or four weeks, and the House at the end of that time is asked to pronounce judgment on it, if any hon. gentleman seeks to secure further delay, the onus lies on him to offer some reason why delay should take place. The Minister of Justice did not in my hearing present any reason, further than that we were sitting in a judicial capacity, and we should act wisely, calmly and without passion. I hope we are prepared here to act calmly, wisely and without passion; but I also hope we are prepared to act with proper regard to our dignity and the respect which we ask the people to pay to the highest assembly in the Dominion of Canada. The hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. White), with a singular inappreciation of the question before the House, asks us to say whether the conduct of the hon. member for Lincoln is within the Independence of Parliament Act, and he suggested it would be well on that point, that a reference should be made to some committee, either the Committee on Privileges and Elections or some special committee. Why, the hon. gentleman must know that the question before the House is not whether the Independence of Parliament Act has been violated or not. The conduct attributed to the hon. member for Lincoln never was alleged to be within the Independence of Parliament Act. That Act does not deal with thousands of acts which may be committed by members of the House of a discreditable and corrupt character, and may deserve the severe condemnation of this House; but such acts neither come within the letter nor the spirit of that law. The Independence of Parliament Act merely provides that no member shall hold an office in the House to which emolument is attached, certain special exemptions being made. It goes on further to provide that no member of Parliament shall be a party to a contract under which the public money of Canada is paid to him. But does the hon. gentleman mean to intimate that there are no other acts disgraceful, discreditable and corrupt, and that, forsooth, because they do not come within the terms of the statute it never was intended that the conduct of members of Parliament who may have been guilty of such acts should not be dealt with? The question of reference to a committee is not now before the House. The Government as a Government, I understand, have not dealt with this question, nor has any individual member except the incriminated party moved that the case be referred to a committee. But we have heard the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert), in the course of his defence this afternoon, suggest to the House that this would be a proper course to take, and I propose to offer a few observations to show that, in my humble opinion, it would not be a proper course to take. The hon. gentleman who asked us to take that course asks us to take it on the ground that, with respect to a charge which has been proclaimed against him outside the House, and which has not been preferred against him in the House, and which is not embodied in the resolution now before the House, he could give, if the matter was referred to the committee, a quantity of exculpatory evidence. That charge now before us is not that he had been guilty of defrauding Mr. Louis Sands in the sale he made to him of a timber limit. This House is not dealing with the question whether the member for Lincoln acted honestly or dishonestly with Mr. Sands. We are not dealing with the question whether he defrauded Mr. Sands or not. That branch of the case is not before Parliament, and is not contained in the resolution, and the House is not asked to pass judgment upon it. Therefore, there is no use in the hon. member whose conduct is attacked, asking that the matter on which he is attacked be referred to a committee, in order that he may give evidence in reference to some other point, on which no attack is made on him at all. The question before this honorable House is, whether the charges preferred against him are true, and whether the evidence contained in our Votes and Proceedings is sufficient to justify us in voting that they are true. If that is so, there can be no necessity or excuse for deferring it to a committee, and a reference to the committee would merely be an excuse to shelve the question. The reason for that is that the evidence on which the hon. gentleman is held, in this resolution, to be guilty of conduct discreditable and disgraceful, is not evidence which comes from a third party. It is not evidence which depends upon the recollection, or letters of a third party. The whole evidence consists in correspondence signed by the hand of the hon. member himself, in an agreement to which the hon. gentleman himself is a witness, and in a document signed by his own hand, acknowledging the receipt of his part of certain moneys. The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) does not come into this court, and declare that any one of these letters is a forgery, or that it is incomplete. He does not come into court, and declare that some letters, throwing light upon the particular charges preferred against him, have been omitted, but he acknowledges frankly and fully, not only in the defence he made here to-day, but in the defence he made in the Ottawa Citizen newspaper, and also in the explanation he made in this House, when the charges were first formulated, that every letter there, purporting to be signed by his own hand, that the agreement purporting to be signed by him and that the receipt showing he received some $74,000 of money, are all proper, and correct, and right. My hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Weldon) reminds me that these charges were made as far back as the 13th February. It would be very discreditable to this House, if it proceeded with undue haste in this matter, or in the absence of evidence which might throw light on the conduct of the hon. gentleman, or which might excuse or palliate that conduct; but, when we are enquiring into the whole question, and when we are informed by evidence which we cannot refuse to respect, that the whole case is before us, we have one duty to perform, and that duty is to pass judgment upon it, according to the best of our conscience. It may be that some hon. gentlemen can see nothing wrong in the conduct of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert). If so, let them stand up in their places and defend it; let us hear what defence there is for it. The hon. member for Lincoln spoke this afternoon, and I followed his remarks very closely, in the hope that he might be able to state some facts which, if they did not entirely excuse him, would, to a certain extent, palliate his conduct, which to my mind seems to be disgraceful in the extreme. But I listened in vain. The hon. gentleman after indulging in some vituperation, which, under the circumstances, might possibly be excusable, passed on to speak of the charges made against him. He said he was not going to take advantage of the Statute of Limitations, and to plead that so long a time had elapsed since these transactions, that we could not fairly attack him to-day in the House. He told us in one breath that the elections had taken place in his constituency, that the matter was placed before his constituents, and that they had condoned his conduct. That was told us on the assumption that the electors had had before them the facts we have before us here. In the next breath the hon. member for Lincoln told us that the documents before us were stolen documents, and private documents, and that Parliament should not deal with them. In the first place, it appears that the electorate passed judgment upon him at the last election, in ignorance of these documents, and, therefore, no condonation, if that could be said to be condonation, can be pleaded by the hon. gentleman. In the next place, I care not from what source the documents came, or where they were obtained; I want to ask the simple question are they genuine, and are they now before the House, and if they are, we cannot escape the responsibility of passing an honest and square judgment upon them, by attacking the quarter from which the documents were obtained. What does it matter to me whether or not these documents were purchased with money, by some persons who had a bad motive in so doing? Put the case as strongly as you like in reference as to how they were obtained, the question which we must answer is: are the documents genuine? Do they disclose a state of facts which show the conduct of a member of this House to be discreditable? And, if so, we must pass an honest judgment irrespective of the quarter from which they come. An hon. gentleman has said there are no precedents upon which Parliament can act. I do not agree in that. Parliament has acted upon private letters; and the members of this House and the people of the world have been reading the most notable precedent that ever occurred in British history, where a gentleman was attacked in Parliament on account of an alleged private letter, which letter turned out, after a costly investigation, to have been an infamous forgery. I refer to the alleged Parnell letter. An investigation was held before three judges of the land, and the gentleman accused was cleared of the charges, which would have resulted, if proven, in his expulsion from Parliament. Happily for Mr. Parnell, happily for the British Parliament, happily for free government, the letter was shown to be an infamous forgery, and that gentleman's character, to-day, stands clear before the world. What have we in the case now under discussion? We have private letters, the authenticity of which is not denied; we have a correspondence, the completeness of which is not attacked, and, therefore, I hold that we are in a position which not only solicits but demands from us the judgment: guilty or not guilty. I will not occupy the time of the House much longer, for two reasons. In the first place the hon. gentleman who opened the debate this afternoon in an exhaustive and lucid speech, brought before the House the more salient points contained in these letters. It appears to me that they divided themselves into two charges. One is that the member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) being a member of Parliament, improperly made use of his position, and the power which attached to that position, to obtain for a gentleman with whom he was in partnership, a valuable timber limit, and that he prostituted the influence which his position as a member of Parliament gave him to obtain public moneys. That is the first charge and the question is, do hon. members believe it? We have got the evidence of the hon. gentleman's own statements contained not only in one letter, but in dozens of letters, and the extracts from them, embodied in the resolution before the House, shows that the hon. gentleman boasted to his colleague, Mr. Adams, that he, and he alone, had influence sufficient to obtain this timber limit, and that others had applied for it who were not members of Parliament, but they had been refused; that he had taken the Department of the Interior by the throat, and such was his influence over the Department, and over the Government, that they could not resist it; that J. C. R. was too powerful, quoting his own words, and that he had done, in obtaining that limit from the Government, that which no other man in Canada could do. Sir, no honest man can read that correspondence without coming to the conclusion that the hon. member made use of his influence in what I call—speaking in a parliamentary sense—a corrupt way, to obtain that timber limit. Argument would be wasted on any one who should deny it. I have not heard any one on this side, or on the other side of the House, or any one in the public press, or any one outside of the House, whose opinion is worth listening to, contend that the hon. gentleman's conduct in the matter could be defended. What is the next charge made against him? We find, that after the hon. gentleman obtained this timber limit, the moment he finds that it has any value—because, be it remembered, when he applied for it in the first instance, he considered it was of no value at all, and his services were then granted gratuitously—before the Order in Council issues for it, he stipulates with his partner that he shall be entitled to half the proceeds. That agreement is under his own hand; there is no questioning or denying it; we have only to read it to see what it means. That agreement, drawn up by the hon. gentleman himself, sets forth that, in consideration of the services of the said Rykert, voluntarily given him, Adams agrees to give to Rykert's wife one-half of the proceeds of the said limits; and the witnessing part of it states that, in consideration of the sum of $1 paid, and in further consideration of the premises, Adams agrees to assign and transfer what he had promised for the services of the said Rykert, voluntarily given him. We find in that agreement that the hon. gentleman had become a partner of the gentleman to whom the limit was granted; we find that he afterwards sells that limit, and signs a receipt for $74,000 of hard cash as his share of the proceeds; and we find the hon. gentleman coming back and standing up in his place before the assembled Parliament of Canada, in the year 1883, and telling them, without hesitation or reservation, that the charges against him in respect of that limit, are one and all baseless. The hon. gentleman then said he rejoiced in the opportunity which was afforded to him by the action of the hon. member for North Norfolk, to assure the House and the country that he had nothing to do with that matter from beginning to end, that he had not pocketed a dollar of the money, that his hands were clean, and that he stood here in the same honest and independent position as other hon. gentlemen who sat to the right and the left of him; and to-day we are confronted with the fact—which would never, perhaps, have been disclosed but that those papers were obtained by somebody, and published—that instead of the hon. gentleman's statements being true, he had in his pocket at the very time he spoke $74,200 of the money. Sir, can conduct of that kind be excused? Do you want to refer that to a committee to ascertain the fact? The hon. gentleman tells us himself: "I did get the money, I signed a receipt, my statement in the House was untrue." What more do you want? What do you want to delay for? What do you want to seek for or to cover up by delay? Why seek to avoid responsibility by postponing this matter at all? I was asked by an hon. member the other day—it does not matter on which side of the House he sat: "How can you justify voting for that resolution which charges a member with being guilty of corrupt conduct?" I said: "I suppose you believe the man's own statements;" and what does he say: "When we come to the second part of the charge made against him, that in connection with the claims made by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, what do we find? We find him coming to Ottawa, and writing to his colleague that it was necessary to spend a very large sum of money for securing the claim he got; we find him stating that six members of the Government were in sympathy with and acting for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and that he was going to obtain the services of six others, and that it would take $14,000 to accomplish this object; we find him afterwards suing his partner for his proportion of the money which he had alleged he spent; and we find the members of the Government rising up and declaring that every word of this statement is absolutely untrue from beginning to end. We find the hon. gentleman himself admitting that the charge he had preferred against the members of the Cabinet was untrue; but he does not deny that the $14,000 which he had spent was spent for the purpose of improperly influencing the officials of the Government. That charge stands on record to-day, and, if it is true, it is corrupt conduct. If he went to the Department of the Interior and, as he said, pulled wires, the pulling of which cost $14,000, in order that the Government might be improperly influenced, I say that that conduct can only be characterised by one word. He admits to-day that the statements he made with reference to the members of the Cabinet were untrue, that the money was not spent to buy them, but was spent to buy some who had influence with them. Is that conduct to be condoned or excused? Does the hon. gentleman deny it? If he did, I should vote for the reference of this matter to a committee, or vote for delay; but it is all admitted, and what more do you want? I do not know that the conclusion which I draw will be the conclusion drawn by others from that correspondence; but, whatever conclusion they draw, the evidence is complete before them. I will not weary the House any longer. It appears to me that not alone the member for Lincoln, but the Parliament of Canada is on its trial to-day. A member of that Parliament is accused of conduct which, if true—and it is admitted in its salient points to be true—deserves condemnation. Parliament may shirk its responsibility, and may refuse to condemn conduct of this kind, but if it does so, I venture to say that the verdict of the country and the verdict of history will be opposed to the vote of Parliament. Sir, the responsibility resting upon us in this vote is a very serious one. The integrity, the honesty of the people's representatives is at stake, and if we condone, if we excuse or palliate such conduct as we find embodied in the resolution before us, and in the Votes and Proceedings of this House, then, I say, there will be an end to free government in Canada.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I rise to make a personal explanation. My hon. friend from North Norfolk accused me of inconsistency in taking one position to-day on the question of granting timber lands and a different position on a former occasion. If the hon. gentleman had taken the trouble to examine the records of Parliament, he would have found that my position to-day is exactly the same as the position I took on former occasions. It will be found, on reference to Hansard, that on 27th March, 1882, Mr. Blake moved this specific resolution:

"That in the opinion of this House the existing system of granting timber limits is liable to result in gross abuse, and in the cession of valuable interests in the public domain for inadequate consideration to favored individuals. That it is expedient to apply the just principle of public competition to the granting of timber limits."

There was a distinct proposition laid down by that resolution submitted to Parliament, and I voted against my own political friends in favor of the principle there laid down; but the motion that I voted against was this one, moved by Mr. Charlton in amendment to the motion to go into Committee of Supply:

"The practice of members of the House applying for and becoming personally interested in the disposal by the Crown of those public resources, which are dealt with by the Executive, or by Parliament on its recommendation, has grown to alarming proportions, is in its nature liable to abuse, has in fact been abused, and should be checked, in order to avoid lasting injury to the public interest and to restore and maintain the independence of this House."

Against that resolution I voted. There was no proposition there to change the law as it stands on the statutes at all. It was simply a declaration that members of Parliament had been influenced in their votes in this Parliament by the operations of the law. But when the proposition was laid down, as it was by the then leader of the Opposition (Mr. Blake), in 1882, to change the system in regard to the granting of those timber limits, and to put it upon the basis which I thought then and think now it ought to be placed upon, I voted for that resolution.

Mr. MACDOWALL. As the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) has already stated, this discussion has taken a very wide range. The question before the House has not been very strictly adhered to, and as it has not, I may be pardoned if I go possibly a little beyond the mark. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) produced a list of timber limits granted to members of this House and the Senate, with which he endeavored to bring a serious charge against the Government. I can say, as a representative of the North-West and as a resident there, that the granting of these timber limits has really had no effect at all. As the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) has said, if, when a timber limit was granted to him and his friends, he had found he could make profitable use of it, he would have invested his capital in setting up mills and carrying on a large lumber business. But the lumbermen found there was not likely to be a profitable market out there, and that I am afraid to say has been the cause of preventing many of them from giving practical effect to their grants of limits which were consequently cancelled. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) who read out this list of limits granted, omitted to read the list of the limits cancelled. I think that all the limits have been cancelled on which no serious work was done, or money expended. But when the hon. gentleman went so far afield, and when he raised this question, he raised a question of the deepest interest to the people of the North-West, namely, why was it that when those limits were applied for and when they were granted, there was not a profitable field for those who desired to invest their capital? The Parliament of Canada has itself to blame for this, because the members of that Parliament had stated over and over again, in this House and out of it, that we were the landlords of the North-West. This House passed resolutions referring to the Irish question and the treatment of Irish tenants by their landlords, a matter with which they had nothing to do; yet, although they acknowledge that they are the landlords of the North-West, they have never had the manliness to come forward and deal with that question in a proper way. I maintain that when the people of Canada bought the North-West at such a low price, they also bought the responsibilities of governing it; and I think that, when the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) brought those charges against the Government, he should have looked about him, for those charges could not only be brought against this Government, but against the previous Administration, neither of which did anything rightly to develop that country. We have heard brilliant speeches in this House about the future of the North-West. I maintain that its future is as bright to-day as it ever was. I believe in the possibilities of that country, and the probabilities are as great to-day as when these speeches were made; but we must have a proper means of developing that country. You cannot expect an engine to go unless you give it fuel and keep the steam up, and you cannot expect a country to be developed when the landlords do not take proper methods to develop it. With regard to this question, I will now adhere, as the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) did, very strictly to the point, and for my part I will not commit myself to any expression of opinion as to the merits of the case, but I believe a motion to refer it to a committee will have the support, not only of members on this side but of those opposite. You know, Sir, that it is only a few days ago when a very serious charge was brought against one of those in a very high station in the employ of the Government, and members of the other side were endeavoring to get a committee of enquiry into the matter. If they think it necessary to have a committee to enquire into the one case, they ought to give the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) an opportunity to bring his evidence before the committee. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) says that the conduct of the hon. member for Lincoln can only be characterised by one word. Well, in so saying, he is prejudging the case before the House. None of us know what the nature is of the defences of the hon. member for Lincoln, and he should have an opportunity of pleading his own case before we proceed to criticise his conduct, and I understand him to say that he has evidence to lay before us. The hon. member for Queen's has also said that this question has put Parliament upon trial. If that is the case, I think the proper way for members of this House to defend themselves is to do it in a straightforward manner. Why not give every man that justice which is meted out to every British subject, and should be meted out to every member of the House of Commons.

Mr. BERGIN. From the moment that the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) introduced his motion, I had no doubt as to the object proposed. But any doubt I may have had has been set at rest to-night by the speeches of the hon. gentleman and of those behind him. The animus is plain and unmistakable, and the acerbity with which the hon. gentleman read his motion, and pressed his resolution shows that he had at heart, as much the destruction of the character of the Government, as that of the hon. member for Lincoln. The hon. gentleman, the moment he passed from the consideration of the letters, entered upon a tirade, in his usual vigorous style, against the policy of the Government in connection with the timber limits. The hon. gentleman spoke with an appearance of horror of corruption that would impress all who had forgotten his history and the history of the Administration of which he was a prominent member, with the belief that he was sincere and honest in his professions of horror at corruption; but we, who remember the career of that Administration, those who remember the position in which six or seven supporters of his Government were placed, those who remember that the Speaker of this House, after it had been shown, by his own receipts, that he had received thousands and thousands of dollars of the public money with the knowledge of the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), those who remember that Mr. Workman, Mr. Jones, Mr. Vail, and many others were driven from this House for actions of this kind—and remember that their conduct was justified by the hon. member for South Oxford—will be astounded to find that that hon. gentleman would refuse to the gentleman who is accused to-day, a committee of enquiry into his case, before which he says he can produce verbal and written evidence to show that he is not blamable. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) was the member who had the case of the Speaker of the House at that time sent to the Committee on Privileges and Elections in order that he might disprove the evidence given by himself in his own receipts, parallel to the letters in this case. That case was sent to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and it was kept there until the end of the Session, and was not tried by this House. This is the kind of justice which hon. gentlemen opposite would deal out to the member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert). They gave this opportunity to the men whom they had purchased—shall I use the words of hon. gentlemen opposite, and say the men who were bought and paid for by the Administration, they kept them in their seats until, by the expression of public opinion and by the honest expression of parliamentary opinion, they were obliged to leave them. The hon. gentleman says he regrets—and I believe him, it was the most sincere portion of his speech—that he could not move for the expulsion of the hon. member for Lincoln from this House; and what reason does he give? Ought he not to hang his head in shame when he is obliged to acknowledge that the legal men on that side of the House would have brought forward precedents to show that it was impossible to carry any such motion. He proves by the authority of the gentlemen learned in the law on his own side of the House that it would be impossible for him to carry out that which would have done him little credit. Mercy is a virtue which he does not appear to know anything about, but it is a virtue which, if he had shown he had any possession of, would have done him a great deal of credit. My hon. friend the member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) has, I admit, been somewhat unfortunate in some of the expressions contained in his letters, but he has told this House that he could show that some of the expressions were not used by him, that some of the words or sentences had been misplaced or transposed, and that the sense in many cases was very much altered. If we desire to be fair and just, I think we ought to give the hon. member for Lincoln the opportunity before a committee of this House to show that he is not the guilty or dishonorable man that hon. gentlemen opposite try to make him out to be. While describing the member for Lincoln as a bond slave, the member for South Oxford carried it a little further, and insinuated, if he did not boldly state, that every member on this side of the House is also a bond slave. He said that the majorities on this side of the House are made and paid for by limits, by subsidies and by other means of that kind. I, for one—and I know I speak for every member on this side of the House—repudiate any such doctrine as that. We are made—I was going to say of the same material, but I will say a little better material than that of hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, and yet there is not a gentleman on the other side except—I will not particularise the exception—who could, I think, be bought by a limit or a subsidy or anything of that kind. I do not think this system of throwing charges of corruption across the floor without particularising any one is conducive to the honor of Parliament or to its good name either in Canada or abroad. Following the hon. gentleman came the member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) with a very labored argument, which was most effectually disposed of by the hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. White), in support of the timber policy of his Administration. He concluded briefly by giving his reasons why the member for Lincoln should not have the advantage of a reference of this case to a committee. The member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) did not specify the sort of committee which he desired. He did not state whether he desired a special committee or a reference to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. All he asked was British fair play, that a man against whom these charges were only brought before the House by a motion to-day, should have a little time to meet his accusers, and to show that his case was not that which his accusers stated it to be. The member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) gave us a very unfair and a very disingenuous statement of the policy of the late Administration. Like the gentleman who preceded him, he was not giving his attention to the question before the House, but was attacking the policy of the present Administration. In the course of his remarks, he exonerated the member for Lincoln—if anything he could say could exonerate any one—because he said that the conduct of that hon. member was the outcome of the Government practice and teaching, the Government being the teachers; and, with that classical language which always distinguishes that hon. gentleman, he characterised us on this side as camp-followers, and stated that we were looking for swag in the shape of mineral lands, timber lands, &c., &c. He read a long list of members of Parliament and of the Senate who, he says, had been corrupted by timber limits and mineral lands granted them by the Government. Well, I suppose there can be no great sin, at all events, committed by a member of Parliament who, at the request of a constituent, makes application for a timber limit. I will not say in all cases, but in the majority of cases, the man who applies for a timber limit from the Government, in the North-West, intends to go there and to work that timber limit, to make money out of it, and whilst doing so, he will be certainly advancing the interest of the North-West. In good faith, I believe, nearly all those applications were made. They were made in the interest and at the request of his constituents; and I go this far, that if a member of Parliament refused to make application for a timber limit for one of his constituents who had gone to the trouble and to the expense of searching out timber limits in the North-West, he would not be discharging his duty to his county or to his constituency. As to the boodle—or the swag—I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon—that has been made out of these timber limits, I believe there is scarcely a record of a limit in the North-West out of which any elector of a constituency of Ontario has made a single dollar. So far as I have been able to learn, those gentlemen have gone to the expense of prospecting these limits, and they have received letters and memoranda from men in the North-West who were looked upon as good wood rangers &c., advising them there were timber limits in such and such quarters. They applied to the Government, limits were granted them after making visits to Ottawa at great expense. They organised sur-vveying parties and sent them up there, and when they reached it they found the limit was an arid waste, without a tree or a shrub; and this is the sort of swag which, it is said, corrupted members upon this side of the House. I do not intend to discuss the question of timber limits granted to gentlemen upon the other side of the House. I assume, as I am positive is the case with gentlemen upon this side of the House, that they acted in good faith in asking for limits in the interest of their constituents. A most monstrous doctrine was laid down by the hon. member for North Norfolk a little while ago, when he would forbid members of Parliament from being promoters of colonisation companies in the North-West. Some men, in becoming shareholders in colonisation companies, may have had no purpose whatever of improving the North-West Territories. There may be men who have joined such companies without having that idea; but the majority of men who join these colonisation companies intended not only, perhaps, to make some little profit upon the money they had invested in shares, but they hoped to colonise the North-West and thereby to add to the prosperity of the whole Dominion; and when the thirty-five members of Parliament and Senators who, he says, became members of these colonisation companies did so, they did so in the interest of the country, and I have yet to learn that members of Parliament, because they have the honor to occupy seats in this House, are to be debarred from taking any steps towards promoting the prosperity of this country. I think if there is one class in this country, more than any other, who ought to engage in such efforts to promote the interests of the country it is the members of Parliament, and they should show the outside world, by investing their limited means in these companies, if they can, that it is the interest of the capitalist to forward the interest of the country in that way. Perhaps, however, the best practical commentary made upon the speech of gentlemen opposite was that made by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), who very properly and very truthfully said that although he had been listening to the gentlemen on his side for some time previous to his addressing the House, he had been at a loss to know upon what subject the House was being addressed. Why, there can be no difficulty in knowing that they were all speaking as to the policy of the late Administration; they were defending the policy of the Mackenzie Government; they were not attacking the member for Lincoln or the statement that was laid before the House. It was quite evident that the whole thing was a preconcerted and a preconceived attack upon the present Administration, and I think about as ingenious and adroitly carried out as any attack I have witnessed for many a long day. That hon. gentleman says we are asked not to pass judgment on the letters before the House. Well, we are not asked to pass judgment upon present evidence, upon the letters now before the House, but we are asked to give the hon. gentleman who is accused an opportunity to put in such evidence as he says he has to show to the House that he is not guilty of the acts charged in the resolution of the member for South Oxford. He says that no reason has been given for the adjournment of the debate. He tells us, also, that we ought to act without passion, without prejudice, calmly, in discussing this question before the House. Well, I think he did not give us a very forcible illustration of a man discussing a question dispassionately, calmly, and without prejudice. As strong a partisan speech as I have listened to in Parliament for many a day was his speech upon this question, and he supplied, in the course of his speech, strong reasons why this matter should go before the Committee of Privileges and Elections. That committee is composed, I believe, almost entirely of legal gentlemen, with trained minds, who will make a judicial decision in this case, and he supplies a strong reason why it should go before a board of that kind. He says the question before the House is not a breach of the privileges of Parliament. Well, the hon. member for Lincoln, in the opinion of the hon. gentlemen opposite, committed no breach of the independence of Parliament, for which he is arraigned to-day; and if it is not a question of the violation of the principles of Parliament, the conclusion is irresistible that the conduct of the hon. member was not in his character as a member of Parliament, but in his character as a member of the bar of the Province of Ontario. A reason given by the hon. gentleman why a committee should not be given is, that no one but the hon. member for Lincoln asks for that committee. If the man accused, and the man who sees that every technical objection will be taken that can be taken to prevent his having fair and impartial trial, cannot ask for a committee, I want to know who should ask for a committee? The hon. gentleman has endeavored to induce the House to understand, moreover, that the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) in his statement that he had further evidence to adduce, wished to confine that evidence to matters that occurred outside this House and not embraced in the charge before the House. I could not help thinking, when I observed the heated manner in which those two hon. gentlemen opposed the granting of a committee to the hon. member for Lincoln, that they had not so much in view the honor of the House and the independence and dignity of Parliament as they had the destruction of the character of one of the most able members on this side of the House, and, perhaps, the man most dreaded by them during elections. If they could besmirch the character of the hon. member for Lincoln, deprive him of the opportunity of presenting before a committee evidence which he could not possibly present before this House as now assembled, why, they would destroy his political influence as well as his private character, and he would cease to be the great factor in the Dominion elections he is to-day. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) says he does not care in what way the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), came into the possession of these documents. He does not care whether they were stolen or not, he does not care that they are private letters, but what concerns him is that those letters be genuine, so that he may—I do not think it will be a parliamentary expression, perhaps, but it will be a thoroughly literal interpretation of his words—hang him. He says do not give him a committee—hang him. I am not about to say that the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) is as pure and as incorruptible as are hon. gentlemen opposite, judging them by the acts of the previous Administration, but I venture to say this, that the hon. member for Lincoln has not knowingly or wilfully violated the independence of Parliament, and if he has not violated the independence of Parliament, that part, at all events, of the charge brought against him by the hon. member for South Oxford, ought not to be considered. Again, I venture to say that the hon. member for Lincoln has not endeavored in any way to corrupt the Administration of this country. There is nothing before us to show that he did so, and, therefore, so far as the Government are concerned, or any member of the Government, the hon. member is not guilty, and he has exonerated them from any corrupt charge. Then, again, it is said that the hon. member for Lincoln obtained these limits by corrupt practices. There is no evidence to show that he obtained these limits by corrupt practices. The only evidence there is to show it is, and the only evidence that can be construed into anything of that kind, so far as I have seen, is a statement by the hon. member that he would require to use sums of money in the endeavor—

Mr. MITCHELL. To corrupt the members of the Government.

Mr. BERGIN. The hon. gentleman says "to corrupt the members of the Government." I do not think it would be worth while for the hon. gentleman to attempt that. The members of the Government are incorruptible. No man knows it better than does the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), who was for many years their colleague, and who would not have been one hour in their Government if he believed them to be corruptible.

Mr. MITCHELL. So I said when the matter came up. I, however, saw you were at a loss for a word, and I thought I would supply it.

Mr. BERGIN. Such being the case, it would be a piece of cruelty, a breach of parliamentary courtesy, and a breach of parliamentary law, to deprive the hon. member for Lincoln of a committee. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) says there are two charges before the House, one of which is that the hon. member for Lincoln, as a member of Parliament, got a limit for his partner. I submit there is no evidence before the House to show that, when he obtained that limit, Mr. Adams was partner of the hon. member for Lincoln. On the contrary, I think the evidence goes to show that he was not a partner. The member for Queen's finished his oration by asking us at once to decide this question. He says, why delay? The evidence is before you; the hon. member has been convicted by his own statements; you must hear no explanation from him, you must not allow him to supplement this testimony or bring any verbal testimony forward, or present anything before a committee which would enable this House to understand really and truly the position in which the hon. member for Lincoln was placed and the character of his acts. I say that British fair play demands that we should not hurry this man to his political or professional death, but we should consider carefully what we have already before the House, and what he says he is prepared to submit to a committee. If the statement of the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) be correct—and I take it to be correct as he is a lawyer in good standing and one eminent in his profession—that the hon. member for Lincoln has in no way violated the independence of Parliament, then his conduct in this matter was absolutely blameless, he was acting solely in his professional capacity and not in his capacity as a member of Parliament, and this is a matter with which we have nothing to do and one with which the Journals of the House ought not to have been encumbered. For these reasons and for many others which, but for the lateness of the hour, I would have submitted to the House, I propose to support the motion for the adjournment of the debate as proposed by the hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not intend to occupy very long the time of the House in discussing this very important question. I very sincerely regret that the House should be called upon to deal with such a very important subject as that discussed this afternoon and to-night. It is very much to be regretted that any member of Parliament should have so far forgotten the dignity and responsibility of the position he holds as a member of Parliament to have permitted himself to be drawn into the transactions into which the hon. member for Lincoln has been proved to have been drawn, and he has placed on paper himself over his own signature the evidence that a corrupt act, an act that is undoubtedly one that is improper for a member of Parliament to do, should have been committed by him. But in my humble opinion the action of the hon. member for Lincoln is only an outcome of the policy that was adopted by hon. gentlemen opposite in 1882. You cannot possibly expect that members of Parliament will apply for timber limits, merely for the curiosity of being recognised as owners of the limit, and for no other purpose. It has been said that these gentlemen applied for the purpose of erecting mills, and becoming lumber manufacturers in the North-West; but, if we look at the list of names presented to this House by the member for Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) any one who states that these men intended to become lumber manufacturers will assume a very serious responsibility. I do not think any one of them ever had the most remote idea of lumbering in the North-West. I sympathise somewhat with the hon. member for Lincoln, because he has been virtually led into a trap by the policy of the Government. The temptation was held out, and he appears to have been more susceptible to it than perhaps a great many others. At all events, he had not taken the trouble to cover his tracks, and the whole thing has come up in the light of day. I do not know if the hon. member for Lincoln is going to permit himself to be a scape-goat for the Tory party. He may possibly have to submit to a position of that kind, but knowing what I know of the man, my impression is, that if he is forced into that position, he will open the bag and let the cat out, and there will be a bigger racket than even the one now before the House. The whole policy of the Government has been to secure the absolute, and blind, and continuous support of their followers, and, if necessary, that the resources of the country should be divided up amongst them in order to secure that. It appears that the hon. the First Minister was quite willing to discharge that particular duty. Why, Sir, when you take the history of the transaction in the timber limits, the coal lands, the ranching grounds, and the North-West lands, the hon. the First Minister appears to have performed the duty of the farm-yard hen, of scratching up all the corn and dividing it amongst his flock. I am not going to say that every member who follows the right hon. gentleman is guilty to the same extent as the hon. member for Lincoln, but I do say, that it has been clearly proven to the House that there were no less than twenty-three who were willing to be guilty as the hon. member for Lincoln was. It is not many years ago since we had this question up before the House, and the hon. member for one of the Hurons, who, I regret to say, is not a member of the House now, had in his possession certain documents filed in a law case in the city of Winnipeg, where a certain law firm had quarrelled, and the result was found that "two worthy sons of two worthy sires," as he called them, were mixed up in this very timber limit business. It was shown that, in some cases, they had stipulated that in consideration of the powerful influence they could exercise in Ottawa, they were to have 25 per cent. of the profits in some cases, in other cases more, in others less. I ask any man if the action of these two men is any worse than the action of the member for Lincoln? I ask any man if the actions of these two men, using their influence with their fathers, who held high positions in Ottawa, was any worse than the action of the hon. member for Lincoln, in securing a limit and selling it to the best advantage? I do not think so. It is clearly shown that these young men exercised their power for that purpose. The hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Bergin) has said that we, on this side of the House, charged that hon. members opposite were bought and paid for. The hon. member for Stormont is the very last man who should have used that expression. It will be remembered that at the time of the troubles in the North-West, that hon. member discharged the duties of Surgeon General of the North-West contingent; and I find from page 540 of the Auditor General's Report that he drew $1,861.40; 153 days pay at $12.50 a day, while he was sitting as a member of this House, and discharging the duties of a representative in Parliament. That is the man who gets up to defend the conduct of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) and throws back in the teeth of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House the statement that hon. gentlemen opposite are bought and paid for. I would like to know if it was not a breach of the independence of Parliament, on his part, to accept from the Government, pay for acting as Surgeon General, while at the same time he was sitting in this House? I have simply to state again that this matter under discussion is only the legitimate outcome of the policy that has been adopted. I say that during the last Parliament and the present one, it has been undoubtedly the practice, and most unbecoming—if I am not permitted to use a stronger expression—that the Government of the day have kept themselves in a position to corrupt their followers as they have done. When they found that there was competition for timber limits in the North-West, they should immediately have altered the policy that had been laid down, and placed these limits on the market to be purchased by the highest bidder. It is no argument to say that the law was passed by a previous Government. I believe that the previous Government passed that law to suit the circumstances of the time ; but the moment that this Government found it did not suit the existing condition of affairs, they should have changed it. But even if it was considered an imprudent law, it was their duty to amend it and put it in such a shape that the abominable transactions which have taken place would not take place. But it appears to me that the hon. First Minister made up his mind to hold office at all hazards, and for the last eight or ten years every resource of this country has been brought into action for the purpose of securing that object. The credit of the country has been subjected to an enormous strain, and our indebtedness has been increased by a million a month while he has been in office. Every advantage which any follower of his might demand has been granted to him, and the result is that we have this exhibition of the abominable and corrupt condition in which the affairs of this country have been carried on for the last ten years. I hope the day is not far distant when the people of this country will open their eyes and see the unfortunate gulf of corruption which they are drifting into, and will hurl the men from power who are permitting this thing to go on from year to year. It is time we had a change, and it is earnestly to be hoped that the people of this country will not permit this condition of things to last much longer. Now, I think it is unfair to ask this House to consent to an adjournment of this case. The facts are all before the House. The hon. member for Lincoln has had four weeks in which to lay his evidence before the House ; not a document nor a letter has been refused ; every piece of evidence which he had to bring before the House, he has had the fullest opportunity to bring ; and if we consented to an adjournment, and the case came up again, it would probably be sent to a committee, where it would lie and rot, because the Government would have a majority on that committee, and they would so direct their men there that it would not be brought back to the House. I say we should not consent to a delay, for the credit of this country and the honor and dignity of this House require immediate and prompt action in this matter, so that we may clear ourselves of the stigma which undoubtedly will rest upon us if this matter is allowed to pass over without receiving from this House the punishment which it justly deserves. I sympathise with the hon. member for Lincoln to some extent, for he has no doubt been tempted into the action he has been guilty of, but having permitted himself to be drawn into it, he has to bear the consequences ; and if he consents to be made the scape-goat of the Tory Party, he must bear the consequences. I trust that the House will deal with this case as it deserves, and if any other case should come up, if any other man's letters should fall into the hands of some one who will publish them, I hope the same punishment will be meted out to him which ought to be meted out to any one guilty of the same offence.

Mr. HICKEY. I understand that when I was out of the Chamber, the hon. member for North Norfolk said that I had been an applicant for a timber limit. I wish to say that I never made an application for a timber limit in the North-West or in any other part of this country. The same statement was made by the hon. member for North

Mr. McMULLEN.

Norfolk a few years ago, before the last election, and it was brought up against me in my county, where I challenged the men who brought it up to give any proof of it, and they offered to get an affidavit from the hon. member for North Norfolk, but it was never produced. I did write a letter urging the Government to see what they could do with reference to a claim Mr. Brodeur had made, and that is my only crime. It is well understood everywhere that a person who tells a half truth is guilty of an untruth, and is a scandal-monger and a first-class liar ; but it would not be parliamentary to apply that term to the hon. member for North Norfolk for having circulated untruths throughout the country and in this House.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). Before the question is put, I feel bound to say a word upon it, for I am not in a position to give a silent vote without being misunderstood. I had hoped, when the hon. member for South Oxford about four weeks ago gave notice of his intention to submit the charges made against the hon. member for Lincoln to this House, that he had risen to the height of his great argument, and had undertaken to defend the dignity of this Parliament, and to establish on a higher plane the purity of public life in this country. I followed the movements made by that hon. member—made once, twice, three times, four times—which satisfied us that he was following this matter up, and firmly intended to deal with it. But, after having heard that hon. member's speech, and the most regrettable speeches of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) and the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), I regret that those hon. members have by their unfairness striven to drive me, and it may be some other hon. members, from the path of duty and the path of honor. I confess that, more than anything that has come within the range of my knowledge since I have been a member of this House, this matter has given me pain. It is a painful thing for a member of this House to have to deal with a brother member in the way of punishment, especially one who is following the same political leader ; but there are painful political duties which, as brave men, we must face, and from the discharge of which we must not be deterred, even though we may be called upon to inflict pain upon one whom we should gladly save if we could. Insinuations against other hon. members were hurled across the House by hon. members opposite, notably by the hon. member for South Oxford—unjust and unfair insinuations, which I indignantly repudiate. I say that there are on this side of the House a large number of men as honorable, as high-minded, possessing as high a regard for public duty, as that distinguished gentleman himself ; and it was unworthy of him, and the high position he occupies in this House, to throw the wretched taunts he did across the floor. But to come to the question before us. I regret that I am not in a position to vote for the amendment of the hon. Minister of Justice. I read with due care the letters signed by the hon. member for Lincoln ; I heard that hon. member ask for delay that he might put in more letters which would be explanatory and would weaken the charge against him ; those letters were put in and placed on record ; I heard the hon. gentleman's statement in that connection weeks ago ; I heard the hon. gentleman only yesterday ask for permission to put in additional documents, and the courtesy of the House was extended to him and he was allowed to do so, and to-day we heard the full explanations of the hon. member, and I am compelled to say that when the hon. gentleman now tells us that he has additional evidence, I can hardly take that statement on its face, and I am therefore obliged, though much against my feelings, to vote for the motion of the hon. member for South Oxford. I quite agree with every word uttered by the hon. member for South Oxford towards the close of his speech, when he spoke of the duty of a public man in discharging a public trust. I am persuaded that in this statement the overwhelming majority of this House and the country are with him. I do not think he stated his case extremely. I think he stated it accurately; and it seems to me that it is a crime of crimes in politics for a member of this House to go to his people on the hustings, as we all must go, and ask for their votes and promise them his best support, and afterwards take advantage of his position to make money for himself. I cannot but expect that an indignant people, and we may fairly hope an indignant House, will scathe and blast one who has so prostituted his position. I feel the more keenly this because I hope in this young country of ours in the north, that the reputation of our public men, which is the best and most precious property we can possess, will be kept clean and pure. We know what has followed from the opening of campaigns of calumny and slander in the great Republic to the south; we know that in these later days that Republic is not distinguished by the splendid names in Congress which shone there thirty or forty years ago; we know that high-minded and proud men who are careful of their good name are unwilling to be forced into public life and be borne down by that pitiless storm of calumny and slander which assails them in that country; and in voting in a straightforward way for the motion of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) we will be doing in this country what we can to preserve the dignity of Parliament and the purity and good name of the people's representatives.

Mr. CHARLTON. I rise to an explanation in answer to the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Hickey). The return to my motion for the names of those who had acquired timber limits was received in 1886. There are some 400 or 500 pages foolscap to examine. I went through these returns and selected out the correspondence and Orders in Council making grants to various members of both Houses. I did this in discharge of a public duty, and endeavored to do it impartially; and among the Orders in Council, I found one for C. M. Hickey, M.P., coupled with the name of Wm. Brodeur. The Order in Council was granted for a timber limit of 50 miles on a lake in Manitoba, and was dated 30th April, 1884. I was governed by the document.

Mr. HICKEY. I would like to remind the hon. gentleman that that is his own language. I do not believe that any such Order in Council was ever issued. It is not right to say it is an Order in Council. It is some time ago since this happened, and I have not looked the matter up, but I know I never made an application. All I did was to urge the application of Mr. Brodeur on the Government, and they would decide as to whether he should have it or not.

House divided on motion of Sir John Thompson that the debate be adjourned:

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

Mr. TROW. The hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron) and the hon. member for East Durham (Mr. Ward) have not voted.

Mr. BARRON. By accident I did not hear the division bell, and, therefore, was not in the House when the motion was put. The hon. member for East Durham (Mr. Ward) was in the same position as myself, so we paired with each other. I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. WARD. After I attempted to vote and my vote was not taken, I made the arrangement with the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron). I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. BROWN. I was paired with the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock). I would have voted for the amendment.

ADJOURNMENT.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is the right hon. the First Minister prepared to say when this question will be resumed?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. the Minister of Justice explained his reasons for moving the adjournment of the debate. They were that, upon considering the serious nature of the charge and the serious consequences to the hon. gentleman originally concerned, and the importance of considering what the precedent would be, sufficient opportunity should be given to the members of this House, after having heard the statement of the hon. gentleman who moved the motion, and the statement of the hon. gentleman accused, to read the statements, and to form their judgment as to what their vote would be. The Minister of Justice took occasion to say that he would not even say how he would vote. He would not in any way commit himself to the defence of the hon. gentleman accused, but he said, as a matter of justice and reason, that opportunity should be given to every member of the House to read the debate in Hansard, so that he could make up his mind fully acquainted with all the circumstances. We will say Monday for the closing of the debate.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not think Monday ought to be taken, because it is a private members' day.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We cannot give a Government day, as we have given one already.

Mr. MITCHELL. This is a proper motion to be taken on a Government day, and I do not think the only day private members have next week should be taken.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I would call the Prime Minister's attention to a statement in the Toronto Mail as follows:—

"WASHINGTON, D.C., 10th March.—The report reaches here to-day that the Canadian Pacific Railway has in contemplation the stoppage of traffic on its line to the seaboard through Maine, owing to the decision of the United States Senate to refuse a continuance of bonding privileges."

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We have no information of that kind, or of any kind. The first Mr. HICKEY.

I heard of it was from a gentleman in the corridor just now, who asked me if I had seen the article.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 12:30 a.m. (Wednesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 12th March, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 116) respecting the Department of the Geological Survey (from the Senate).—(Mr. Dewdney.)

Bill (No. 117) further to amend the General Inspection Act, chapter 99 of the Revised Statutes (from the Senate).—(Mr. Costigan.)

Bill (No. 118) to amend the Steamboat Inspection Act, chapter 78 of the Revised Statutes (from the Senate).—(Mr. Colby.)

EXPERIMENTAL FARM REPORT.

Mr. BERGIN moved the adoption of the third report of the Joint Committee on Printing of both Houses of Parliament.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Explain.

Mr. BERGIN. The report refers principally to the printing of returns of the House; and it also authorises the publication, in pamphlet form, of 100,000 copies in the English and French languages, in the usual ratio, of Professor Saunders' report on the Experimental Farm, it being an appendix to the report of the Minister of Agriculture.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not know anything about the merits of the recommendation respecting the printing of the report of Professor Saunders, but I understand that 100,000 copies are to be printed. It might be well, before the report is passed, that members of the Printing Committee should state what the cost would be, and also give the House some information as to the nature of the report. It appears to be a large order, and we should like to have further information, in order that we know what we are doing.

Mr. BERGIN. I am not in a position at this moment to state what the cost would be; but, I may say that the Printing Committee ask power to print this document, on the recommendation of the Committee on Agriculture, it having been stated by the Committee that the matter is at present in type as a portion of the Minister's report.

Mr. DAVIN. We were informed, and I believe informed correctly, that this report is in type, and that the only cost would be presswork and paper. The cost of the 100,000 copies would have no reference to the cost of composition; the cost would be only that of placing it on the press and the paper used, and the expense could not, therefore, be much.

Mr. MITCHELL. The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture is in his place, and perhaps he could give the House some information as to the value of this report, and whether it is worth while to give it a circulation of 100,000 copies throughout the country.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). The Committee on Agriculture and Colonisation consider this to be a very valuable report, and one that it is very desirable should be circulated largely throughout the country. It was upon a motion, passed unanimously in that Committee, that the Printing Committee were asked to go to the expense of having 100,000 extra copies struck off, as it was represented to the Committee that the type was still standing, that the only extra cost of furnishing this information to the public through that means would be the presswork and paper required.

Mr. MITCHELL. Might I ask how voluminous the report will be ?

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). It would be about 142 pages, including index and all.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not mean to say that the report of the two Committees are not deserving of consideration ; but, I really think, that in a matter of this kind the House ought to know what the cost will be, and I might suggest that this report be delayed for twenty-four hours, in order that we may ascertain approximately, at any rate, what the cost would be.

Mr. CARLING. The House last year ordered 60,000 copies, which were printed and circulated through the country.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is it printed at the Government printing office ?

Mr. CARLING. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. The cost could be ascertained in the course of twenty-four hours, and then we would know what we are doing.

Mr. BERGIN. I will communicate with the Printing Bureau at once.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the objection taken by the hon. gentleman is a little ungracious, when such an important committee, as the Standing Committee on Agriculture, comprising a hundred members and embracing nearly every hon. gentleman in this House at all conversant with agricultural subjects, have thought it so valuable that they unanimously desired that it should be printed. When we consider the quantity of documents that are printed of comparatively little value, I think it might be as well to allow this to pass without opposition. However, as the hon. gentlemen have asked for it, it would be as well to have the cost.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My objection is not taken to the thing itself. It is a question of principle I raise. I desire to know before I vote on this, what the cost will be, and that, I think, we have a right to know.

Mr. AMYOT. Is it generally understood that a certain proportion of these documents will be translated and printed in French.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is contained in the report.

Mr. AMYOT. In spite of that, of late years we have received them in English. I have piles of these documents in English, in my office, and as I have not one single English-speaking elector, they are of no value. If we want our farmers to have the benefit of them we should receive them in French.

I received lots of those documents in English, and I have a great admiration for that language, but my electors cannot use it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The report recommends that it be printed in English and French.

Mr. AMYOT. I hope the hon. gentleman will recommend that the recommendation of the Committee will be executed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The officers of the House will attend to that.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I would suggest that when these pamphlets are printed, a list be supplied by each member of the names of parties he wishes them sent to, and then they could be distributed from the House. There is great delay and expense, when they are forwarded to members for distribution.

Mr. TROW. It is unnecessary to do that, because members can send all these documents, free of postage, from their residences. If there were wrappers put on each pamphlet, and they are then sent in bundles to the members, that is all that is necessary.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Hear, hear. That was done last year.

Mr. MITCHELL. Besides, we have not that confidence in the administration of affairs by the Executive, which should lead us to make this suggestion. I have no doubt that the Minister would execute the commission all right, but it establishes a bad precedent, and it is better we should address them ourselves, and give some work for hon. gentlemen to do.
